INCONSISTENCIES OF MR. ROSS ASSAILED.

but did as they were told, and so Mr. Ross' metaphor was a good one.

This was a critical juncture in the affairs of the province. The character and reputation of the whole province is at stake. The important question is whether the province is to be ruled by men who act at the dictation of the machine, and whether it will endorse the iniquities and nefarious practices that characterized the last election. It was a question whether the people or the manipulators of the ballot boxes will rule. Elect the men who hold power by stealing ballots, and other countries will say Ontario is indifferent whether it has representative institutions or not. The speaker believed that thousands of Liberals deprecated the actions of these men, the actions of office-seekers and office-holders. The government is responsible, because it has condoned what these men have done. The Ross people are pleasing their favorites. They legislate in the interest of corporations who, it is natural to suppose, make due return at election time. They have violated the proper functions of a legislative body, which is to pass legislation in the interest of the people, and to remedy wrongs.

Mr. Foy discussed the Assessment Act, and dealt with finances at length, attacking the surplus, which, he claimed, was purely a myth.

Mr. Whitney's Address.

When Mr. Whitney stepped forward he was presented with a magnificent bouquet by little Miss May Vanwych, 6-year-old daughter of Allan Vanwych. He acknowledged the compliment by bestowing a kiss on the little donor, and then said: "I wish to concur in the remarks of Mr. Foy with reference to the great affliction which God has been pleased to bring down on the people of the United States. The peculiar enormity of the crime comes forcibly to every British subject, who has a regard for law. The murdered President proved conclusively that he was able to take his country into a war and bring it out again, and bring into closer accord the great nations, whose duty it is to march forward, spreading civilization, giving light, liberty and the pursuit of happiness to their people."

Mr. Whitney was pleased with the warmth of the reception. "We are welcomed by an audience," he said, "that the whole Ross aggregation could not bring together. They have been hunting in pairs, and out of 20 or 30 meetings they held there were not more than three of them at which there were more than 300 people."

He then went over the subjects touched upon in his Toronto address a few weeks ago, elaborating one or two somewhat, and wound up an address of over two hours by exposing Mr. Ross' position on the questions of Imperial Federation and preferential trade. On these subjects he said:

Imperial Federation.

Mr. Whitney referring to Imperial Federation and preferential trade said: I observe that Mr. Ross has been addressing public meetings and writing to the newspapers in England with reference to Preferential Trade and Imperial Federation. And I observe also that The London Times attacks the correctness of his "statistics" and the conclusions to be drawn from them. I am afraid that it is not the first time Mr. Ross' "statistics" have been found to be wrong, as well as his conclusions. The Times says:

"A letter written by Hon. G. W. Ross, Premier of Ontario, and published in The Times of Monday, Sept. 9, has been criticized on the ground of inaccuracy and illogical arguments. Mr. Ross quoted incorrect emigration statistics. He said that 726,000 people emigrated from Britain between 1891 and 1900, of which number 90,000 went to Canada. As a matter of fact, the number of emigrants who left Britain during this particular period was 2,661,834, of whom 328,411 went to the Dominion."

The Times, commenting on the statistics given by Mr. Ross, says in another issue that it is quite evident that emigration does not follow the flag, since it accepts a foreign or friendly flag without the slightest reluctance or regard to Imperial interests or associations.

Vacillation.

Whatever may be the fact with regard to his "statistics," he certainly varies and changes his "conclusions" from time to time, as I shall try to show. In 1897 he advocated preferential trade. In a speech at Toronto he said:

"It may be said that under no circumstances can we look forward to such a change in the free trade policy of Great Britain as would warrant us in hoping that her laboring classes would submit to the taxation of their food in any sense or form for the benefit of the colonies. On that point I am not so sure. The reasons I have already stated would go a considerable distance to satisfy the laboring classes of Great Britain that a trifling increase, putting it at the very worst, of the cost of their food supplies has some compensating advantages."

He dismissed the "trifling increase" with a wave of the hand, but we shall see how he regarded it later on for the purposes of the Laurier campaign. Hear him further:

"In order to make my position clear, it might be worth while to give in detail a few of the considerations which might very properly influence Great Britain to give the products of Canada and of her other colonies a preference over the products of foreign nations.

"1. The commercial advantages to the colonies under such a preference would greatly strengthen and increase their attachment to the Empire. Commercial interchange means much more than simply buying and selling; it carries with it social and business relations, and leads to a better knowledge of the political institutions of the countries concerned in such commerce. Nothing would conduce more to a permanent union of her colonies than a better understanding in Great Britain of Canadian sentiment and feeling, and no better way could be found of increasing that acquaintance than by increasing trade."

Ready to Flop.

Very clearly put and very good doctrine, too. But a little later, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier—the destroyer for the time being, of preferential trade—needed his services, the services of the more or less crippled "right arm" of the Ottawa government—Mr. Ross was ready to "flop," and he did "flop." At Glencoe, on Sept. 27, 1900, he quoted speeches of several British statesmen in opposition to preferential trade, and commented as follows:

"Who stands in our way? Is it not the leaders of both parties in Great Britain, and in face of their opposition, how can we prevail?"

And waxing warmer in his onslaught, he declared:

"Britain imports annually about $900,000,000 worth of food products, of which Canada supplies about $70,000,000. Now what is the proposition? In order to give a preference to the $70,000,000 worth of food supplies which Britain consumes, she is asked to impose a duty upon the entire bulk of her food supply. Suppose we put that duty at 5 per cent.—and a lower figure than that would not be worth considering—5 per cent. on $900,000,000 would mean that the British workman and consumer would be taxed $45,000,000 a year for his food supplies, in order that the $70,000,000 coming from Canada would be enhanced in price. Is the British workman prepared for this? Do not let us be deceived by the glamor of the proposal. To us it is certainly inviting, but to the heavily-burdened British taxpayer it would be considered an enormous price to pay."

The "trifling increase" had grown to $45,000,000, against which the British workman would surely rebel and which caused this formal recantation.

In a speech at Manchester on July 30 last—the published report of which is not very clear—Mr. Ross merely squints at Imperial Federation, and, mindful, no doubt, of his Glencoe utterances, avoids the subject of preferential trade altogether, just as he carefully refrained from alluding on the platform to the remarkable bill he introduced for the purpose of taking away from the people of Ontario for three years at a time the power to impose taxation on the property of corporations.

An Imperial Idea.

Now then, gentlemen, in my opinion, a properly thought out scheme of preferential trade, framed with reference to the situation, the requirements and the resources of "all the British possessions beyond the seas," would inevitably bring great results to the Empire as a whole, and to the colonies individually. And let me suggest to Mr. Ross that the adoption of such a scheme would be the ideal plan to attract emigrants, both from the Old Land and from Europe. As soon as the prospective emigrant realized that, by virtue of the relations between the colonies and the Empire, Canadian products would command the first place and a higher price in the British market than the products of other countries, would not the problem of immigration to Canada be solved?

And it simply rests with the colonies to bring about this desirable state of affairs. Listen to Mr. Chamberlain, as quoted by Mr. Ross himself, before he "flopped":

"I want to impress upon you my personal conviction that, if a proposal of this kind came to us from the colonies, backed by any considerable support on their part, it would not be met by a blank refusal by the people of this country."

Well, now let us see Mr. Ross' latest proposition. Here it is:

"I say to you, here in Manchester, that we are willing—I think we are willing—in Canada to impose a duty of 5 per cent. on all importations from any foreign country, excepting the colonies of the Empire, the money to be applied as a war tax, or as a defence fund for the defence of the Empire. Will you reciprocate that? Will you impose a 5 per cent. tax on all imports from foreign countries, excluding the colonies, as a defence fund for the defence of the Empire? Surely that is a practical basis. [No! No!] You say "No." Work it out and see. That is the thought I give you to-day. I am not the originator of it, and I have only one object in putting it forward. I say, if the commerce of the Empire is to be defended, there must be a tax such as I have described, and that's the logic of it all. But if you think that that is not the solution, let us try and find some other solution."

You will observe that, as soon as one hard-headed Englishman cried out "No! No!" he dropped the proposal like a very hot potato indeed, disclaiming the paternity of the idea, and brought his speech to a close. And no wonder. His suggestion was put in such a form that no Englishman of the present day could accept it. The value of foreign goods imported by Great Britain in the year 1900 was $2,012,583,369, and Mr. Ross asks free-trade England to impose a duty of 5 per cent. on these imports—such duty amounting to over $100,000,000—asks her to do that which all her great men believe would simply ruin her as a nation and a people, in order to induce the colonies to contribute a like duty, which would amount to about $7,000,000! According to his Glencoe deliverance, the British workman would not submit to a 5 per cent. duty on merely food products from foreign countries, amounting to $45,000,000, and, therefore, is it likely he would submit to a similar duty on all foreign imports, amounting to over $100,000,000? Mr. Ross' earnestness in this matter may well be doubted. I am afraid the garments in which he is masquerading are borrowed, and, therefore, not a good fit. His proposition is not in line with the true idea of Imperial Federation, nor is it—probably it was not intended to be—a proper basis on which to build up a system of preferential trade.

Require No Bribe.

We Canadians require no bribe to induce us to take up willingly our share of the burdens of the Empire, nor will we haggle about terms at all. There can be no mistake as to the spirit which actuates our people. The response of His Majesty's Canadian subjects with reference to their manifest duty in this respect will be warm and ready, and the spirit in which they will stand by the grand old Mother of Nations across the sea will be the spirit in which Ruth showed her devotion to Naomi in the beautiful Bible story.

"Ask me not to leave thee, nor forsake thee, for where thou goest, I will go, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. And where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried. The Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

This is the spirit always fostered and encouraged by the great British-American Imperialist, Sir John Macdonald, whose last war cry to the people was the Imperial slogan, "A British subject I was born; a British subject I will die!" and whose fervent hope and aspiration was that, in the near future, the Dominion of Canada would take her place as one of those outlying and auxiliary kingdoms, which will, as time goes on, become the buttresses and bulwarks of the British Empire all round the world. And the people of Canada to-day are to a man imbued with the same hope and the same aspiration. Great changes come quickly in these latter days. Already Sir John's aspiration has been practically accomplished, and nothing remains to be done but to watch the development of the Imperial spirit, as it goes on from day to day, with accelerated pace, and sooner even, perhaps, than we expect, will come a practical solution of the question and the crystallization of sentiment into permanent legislation by the Imperial and Colonial parliaments.

A Vote of Thanks.

A vote of thanks was proposed by R. Johnston, M.P. for Cardwell, and seconded by Richard Blain, M.P. for Peel, and the meeting broke up with the usual cheers.

Messrs. Whitney and Foy afterwards attended a tea meeting in the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Methodist Church, and were escorted to the depot by the band and a goodly number of citizens.

SIMCOE OLD BOYS.

Complete Arrangements for Their Visit to Barrie on the 26th.

The Simcoe Old Boys' Association held a meeting at the Temple Building last night. Dr. Beattie Nesbitt presided. The plans were completed for their visit to Barrie, Sept. 26-27. The Old Boys will be accompanied by the Highlanders' Band. Barrie is making great preparations to receive them.

A resolution was adopted, abhorring the dastardly crime in which President McKinley fell by the hand of an assassin, and expressing sympathy with Mrs. McKinley and the people of the United States. Copies of the resolution will be forwarded to President Roosevelt and Mrs. McKinley.

SECOND DEATH RESULTS.

Mrs. McMillan of St. Catharines Died Yesterday Afternoon.

St. Catharines, Sept. 19.—Mrs. McMillan died at the hospital this afternoon, the second death as the result of yesterday's accident at the Niagara-street crossing, where one of the Niagara Central Railway electric trolley cars struck a carriage, injuring four women. Mrs. McMillan was slightly improved this morning, but she never regained consciousness, and at 2.30 o'clock passed away without having uttered a word. She was the wife of Capt. McMillan of Allanburg, and was related to Dr. Vanderburg of Merritton and William Upper, proprietor of the Imperial Hotel, this city. Mrs. Thomas, another victim, is still unconscious, and does not know that her daughter, Miss Lottie Thomas, who was injured at the same time, is dead, she having passed away last night. The sad accident has cast a gloom over the entire community.

An inquest was opened this morning before Coroner Goodman to inquire into the death of Miss Thomas. County Crown Attorney Brennan appeared in the interests of the Crown, while Mr. Gow, of Blake, Lash & Cassels of Toronto, watched the case for the N., St. C. & T. R. Company. Several witnesses were called, and the inquest adjourned.

Fixing Up the Coachman.

He is a fashionable tailor, and his $16 made-to-order suits are the best value in Toronto.

WONDERS OF ELECTRICITY.

A Greatly Pleased Audience Heard Mr. Clark at Massey Hall.

At Massey Hall last night some 1000 or 1200 people heard a lecture and witnessed experiments which they will never forget. The wonders of electricity were explained and demonstrated by Mr. W. J. Clark. Stereopticon pictures were shown of Michael Farraday, Sir Humphrey Davy, Crookes, Edison, Morse, Henry, Tesla, Hertz, Marconi and other celebrities, and the progress of invention in telegraphy was lucidly explained by Mr. Clark, who is a capital lecturer. Drawings were given of the apparatus used in the early days and showing the development until the X-ray machine is a reality. And Mr. Clark promises much more to come. The X-ray machine was at work, and everyone present was allowed to have a look at the bones in his or her hand. The view was very clear and eminently satisfactory. Then moving pictures were explained, and views, serious and humorous, were given, much to the delight of the audience. The Aoukophone, by which the deaf are made to hear, was also exhibited practically, and this was the most interesting development of the evening. A score or more of deaf mutes were there and eager to be put to the test. First came a bright looking young lady, who nervously took the chair, and when Mr. Clark applied the little cap to her ear and said "Hello," she gave a little start. It was evident she heard, and her face took on a pleased expression. Then a phonograph was connected, and the young woman heard probably the first music in her life. The next subject was a little girl of about 10, who was very much frightened, and her mother (or guardian it may have been) had almost to force her into the chair. But the child heard. Next a middle aged man, stone deaf, tried, but could hear nothing. Another young lady heard, and showed her delight; then a man, who had evidently been able to hear early in life, put the cap to his ear, and exclaimed, "I can hear first rate." Other men failed to hear, while more young women heard and showed their pleasure. A feature was a little speech from a deaf man from the Belleville Institute, who, in most peculiar voice, thanked Mr. Clark and expressed a hope that he would visit the Belleville institution.

The promised picture of the Duke of Cornwall was telegraphed from Montreal and proved a good outline. The tissue paper on which the pictorial message was received was handed around, and in the small size was more correct than the larger picture thrown on the canvas by the stereopticon. But enough was shown to prove that photography by telegraph is a coming development. The entertainment lasted until after 11 o'clock, and was greatly enjoyed by the thoroly cultured audience.
