Secrets of Health and Happiness

Ways to Have as Perfect Teeth As Savages Possess

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG,
A. B., M. A., M. D., (Johns Hopkins University.)

DR. HIRSHBERG

Would that we moderns could possess teeth as perfect as those of the ancients and savages. As skull after skull of some ancient Egyptians are dug up, many of them show a set of 32 pearly teeth, often without the sign of decay. These men had no dentists, no means for beautifying their teeth, but only the natural methods of chewing, to keep their teeth in perfect order. No superabundance of acids or sweets worked havoc upon the hard enamel of their teeth to make clear passage for bacteria to the dentine or soft part of the tooth, and there set up a den wherein they could eat away tissue and expose the nerve membrane and help bring about pain and distorted features.

The simple life of the savage has passed away. His simple customs and food have been replaced by the complex life of civilization. Pickles can now be purchased in abundance at the corner grocery store by school children, and even adults sometimes permit themselves to eat pickles, and thus allow the acid in close contact with the hard enamel of the tooth to act as a veritable poison against its well being.

Like pickles, candy, too, is eaten in abundance, and the excessive sweets soon become acid in the mouth.

The teeth of the savage were firmly set in his jaws. This was perhaps as much a result of heredity as of natural, unconscious care. He ate natural, unseasoned foods, and the process of chewing cleaned the enamel of the teeth so that little if any tartar could form upon it to attract particles of food and hold them on the surface of the teeth until decay set in.

Beware of Tartar.

Tartar is nothing more or less than a rough coating spread across the surface of the teeth. It appears as a result of a poor method of brushing or of no brushing at all, of too much sweets, of acids in the food, and, in general, of uncleanly tendencies. If not removed, tartar becomes a breeding place of bacteria, and these lift their heads and start their ravages when the tiny bits of food, too small to be seen by the naked eye, at first begin to decay. The heat of the mouth is the incubator for the bacteria, and nourishes them to a healthy, happy state and a free life, and makes them thrive at the expense of your own vitality and well being.

It is not only the teeth which now decay, and it is not only with them that trouble begins. The breath becomes offensive.

Decayed teeth not only affect digestion, but they also result in abscesses, gum boils, red, flimsy, unhealthy-looking gums, and probably sore mouth and lips. This is the beginning of a general breakdown of the healthy human.

Consult Your Dentist.

Prevent decay and then you will not need to make repairs. Use as a base for a tooth powder an alkaline that will not scratch the enamel, which will neutralize the acid in the mouth. When properly used, with a small, soft toothbrush of varying-sized bristles, the teeth will feel perfectly smooth and the tongue will slide freely across them without encountering the slightest obstruction. When the teeth feel like this they are about as clean as they can be.

Never use a horizontal movement in brushing the teeth, for that merely scrubs their surface and wears away the enamel, especially the enamel of the canine teeth or the eye teeth. Brush with an up-and-down movement, so that the bristles can penetrate the crevices and thus remove food particles.

Baking powder is a good alkaline for the purpose. It is cheap and effective as an acid destroyer, cleanser and gum protector, because of its hardening qualities.

If, in spite of your careful habits your teeth decay because of natural wear and tear, have them repaired at once, for decay of one tooth starts several more in that direction. Have them attended to at once.

Avoid using toothpicks. They make the gums bleed and enlarge the spaces between the teeth by wearing away the enamel. Use a brush after each meal or dental floss to remove all food particles that may lodge between the teeth. A thorough cleaning of the teeth should come just before bedtime, so as to minimize the evil influence of bacteria during the long hours of slumber.

Keep your teeth and mouth clean, and you may possess "ivories" as perfect as the pearly white sets of the savages.

Answers to Health Questions

S. M. B. Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for perspiring hands.

A.—Of course, the thyroid glands may be the cause. Whenever there is profuse perspiration, however, try alum water, tannic acid or ichthyol ointment. As a trial, use a little nutgall ointment or formaldehyde water on the hands; it may check the moisture. Frequent washing with castile soap assists.

M. D., London, Ont.: Q.—Kindly advise me what causes rheumatism?

A.—Some underlying bone disease, infection, flat foot, loose joint, torn ligament, enlarged gland, fallen arches and a raft of other deformities or defects, are the causes of rheumatism.

M. S. Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for a pain in upper part of my back between the shoulders.

A.—It is due to posture—bending over too much. Change your chair and poise. Join the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium and swimming pool.

J. R. M. H., London, Ont. Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for lumps in my limbs from knee to ankle?

A.—You must have a thorough examination made before proper treatment can be given.

MRS. W. B., London, A.—It is evident that you neglected to inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a treatment that is necessarily confidential.

L. L. H., London, Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for cold hands.

A.—This may be due to overexercise or overexertion, or they may be in a perfectly normal condition. Have a complete examination of the heart, lungs and other structures made.

E. J. H., London, Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for goitre?

A.—There are various kinds of goitre; some require no treatment, but most of them require an operation, which is the only cure. They are seldom inherited, and their causes are not known.

E. M. H., London, Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for flabby cheeks?

A.—Bathe your face in warm water, to which about ten or twenty drops of benzoin have been added. This will tend to give your skin the proper tone. You should do something to counteract the sluggishness of your liver. Plenty of outdoor exercises and a light fruit and vegetable diet are excellent correctives of this condition.

A CONSTANT READER, Q.—Will you please write an article on hyperacidity?

A.—There have been many articles on this subject. Others will follow. This state is caused by hot things, peppers, fried foods, seasoning, condiments, soups, and germs. Do not take cod liver oil for this, but whites of eggs are better. A diet should be enforced, in order to attain a cure.

A SUBSCRIBER, Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for sleeplessness and restlessness in a 13-months-old baby?

A.—Give her only boiled milk, spinach, prune juice, carrot juice, oatmeal gruel, zweiback and water. Put her in her crib promptly at 6 p.m., whether she sleeps or not. She is no doubt made nervous by keeping her up.

ADMIRER, Canada. Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for freckles?

A.—Freckles are often a sign of good health and inheritance. You should be proud of them. Many envy girls who are freckled. Some so-called freckle remedies contain irritants such as mercury. These cause serious local as well as other trouble. Commonly no matter what is used freckles usually return, and if the skin peels it is better to stop the use of all remedies, because more harm may be done than benefit received. As a trial, try a little of 1 dram salicylic acid to 1 ounce of alcohol.

MY SOLDIER HUSBAND
ADELE GARRISON'S CONTINUATION OF REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

What Lillian Had To Add To the News Madge Received.

I ran down the walk to our gate with little regard for dignity, for my one thought was to get into telephone communication with Lillian as soon as possible. So absorbed was I that I neither saw nor heard an army motor car until it was almost upon me. My own name called shrilly in familiar tones, accents, startled me into consciousness of my immediate surroundings, and I saw little Mrs. Durkee leaning out of the car and signalling frantically to me. The driver halted just beside me, his engine pounding steadily.

"Jump in, quick!" little Mrs. Durkee said breathlessly. "Mrs. Underwood has been trying to get you over the telephone, and when she found it was hopeless, she phoned me and asked me to rush over and tell you while she exhausted the possibilities of your neighbors' phones. Has she got you yet?"

I had given the directions of the nearest drug store to the driver, jumped in the car and been carried half a block before voluble little Mrs. Durkee stopped talking long enough for me to answer her.

"No, I haven't heard from her," I said at the first opportunity. "I've been trying to get her, and was just going to the nearest telephone when you dashed up. Has she news—do you know?"

Mrs. Durkee hesitated a bit oddly.

In Anxious Haste.

"She said she had good news of Dicky—that was all she took time to tell me." The little woman paused again for a moment, then her impulsiveness evidently overcame her caution, and she went on hurriedly.

"But she was awfully cut up about something—I could tell by her voice. It was faint and tired, as if it were an effort for her to speak, not at all like her usual tones. You know, she is usually rather—well, not exactly loud, but you know—"

"Yes, I know what you mean," I returned mechanically, reassuring the stammering little woman. But my fears had flashed out again at her reference to Lillian's strangeness of voice. I was frantically glad when the driver drew up before the drug store. I flung the door open and was inside the drug store before little Mrs. Durkee had put her foot upon the step of the machine.

When I finally heard Lillian's response over the telephone I mentally confirmed Mrs. Durkee's impression. Lillian was suffering, I could tell that, although the news she gave me made me oblivious for the moment of everything except the one glorious fact:

Dicky WAS safe, after all.

"Not a Word."

"I also have a cablegram from Dicky," Lillian said when I told her of my message, "but it is as laconic as yours. However, both Allen Drake and Major Grantland have a little fuller information. Their correspondents agree that Dicky is all right save for an injury to one arm. They don't say just what it is, but I should imagine it is a wound of some kind. He is safe inside the American lines, and has written several letters. That doesn't sound as if he were seriously hurt, does it?"

"No, indeed!" I breathed a little prayer of thankfulness. Then, as my thought flew fast to my husband, there rose to my lips the query which I knew would mean so much in his future:

"Do you know which arm is hurt, or whether it will have to come off?"

"For heaven's sake, Madge, don't imagine all sorts of horrors when there's probably nothing much the matter. I have told you every word that has come across the ocean. We shall simply have to wait for Dicky's letters now for the explanation—of—everything."

She had begun to retort with something of her old vigor, but at the last her voice trailed into the listless faintness which Mrs. Durkee had remarked. I pondered it uneasily for a moment, then questioned Lillian again.

"Are you sure you've told me everything, dear?" I asked.

"Everything that concerns you," she returned, and although the words sounded bitter, there was no tinge of it in her voice.

I drew my breath sharply. In my joy over Dicky I hadn't realized that the news of him had completely upset my theories concerning Harry Underwood.

"Please, Lillian," I said softly. "If it concerns you it does me. Is there any news of Harry?"

She hesitated for a moment.

"Not a word," she said quietly. "But can't you guess what must have happened?"

Jimmy Coon and His Friends
The Adventures of the Little People of the Great Forest.

COUSIN BRUIN ENTERTAINS HIS GUESTS.

Now those great hunters and travelers slept the clock 'round. The Bears rolled up in their beds in their big stone house; Jimmy Coon, Teddy Possum and Father Coon curled up in the hollow tree; Chatterbox slept in a crotch of a big Oak tree, and they all slept so fast and so hard that it seemed like just a minute, and when they yawned and sat up and came out of their beds, the moon was shining as bright as day, and they thought they hadn't slept at all, and couldn't see why they felt so rested.

"Well," said Cousin Bruin, "now we need some exercise; we will all go to the concert."

"Not I," said Mother Bruin. "I have some house-cleaning to do; I am behind with my work, and when you are all off, I will have a little peace and can get a lot done."

So this procession started off, the bears leading the way down the mountain trail, and their guests trailing along after them. Down they went, over the pine needles, and sometimes an owl was heard away off, and soon they came to a big pond, and Uncle Bullfrog and his troupe were giving a concert, but Cousin Bruin shook his head, when his guests thought that this was the great concert he had spoken of, and said: "No, nothing so common as that. We can hear frogs any time. We have something better than that."

And soon they saw the glint
