SCOTT DEFENCE SHOWS HAND

Yesterday Afternoon's Session Devoted to Powder Marks on the Victim, etc.

BLOOD ON THE STEPS

Effort is Being Made to Show That the Old Man Was Killed Close to the House at the Doorway.

Mrs. Scott, who yesterday afternoon faced her second trial on the charge of murdering her father-in-law, Harvey Scott, in September last, maintained throughout the afternoon's session the same composed manner that marked her behavior during her former trial.

She followed the testimony of the various witnesses, though without any apparent interest, and seemed totally oblivious to the curiosity which she aroused.

She was dressed as at the previous court in a simple white waist, with a black collar and black hat, which set in relief the whiteness of her face.

As the afternoon wore on she evidently grew weary, and her head drooped, but when the court adjourned shortly after 5 o'clock, she stepped from the box steadily enough.

A New Line.

Evidence that came out last night towards the close of the trial shows the direction the defence is going to take. Several witnesses were called to testify that they had observed bloodstains on the steps of the house, and one of the witnesses, John Macfarlane, give it as his opinion that these stains were due to the head of the injured man striking the steps.

From this testimony, which Mr. Meredith took great pains to obtain, it is evident that an effort will be made to prove that the murdered man was making an attempt to enter the house at the time he was shot, which would, of course, give added weight to the self-defence plea.

The Evidence.

Herbert C. McBride, the architect, was the first witness called. He was asked to prove a plan of the premises where the murder took place.

Joseph Vining, of Nissouri, testified that he was driving on the road in front of the Scott home when he met the prisoner the morning of the tragedy. She was crying.

"I asked her what she had done," said the witness, "and she replied 'when you get up to the house you will see.' I drove in and she followed. I drove up to Harvey Scott's home, and tied my horse; then I met Alfred Scott and his son. The three of us went to the house, where we saw the body of Harvey Scott lying on its back, about two feet from the door, his feet pointing in a southwesterly direction. There was a bullet wound behind his ear. He was dead at the time.

"Then I went into the house, where Mrs. Scott was, and she said, 'If I'd got some of the money I would have been a long way from here by now.'"

The witness stated that he had not been present on any other occasion when the prisoner had said anything. He had been present on another occasion when Dr. Armstrong was there, but the prisoner had made no remarks.

Cross-Examined.

In answer to Mr. Meredith's cross-examination, the witness answered that he had known the deceased for 40 years. He had always seemed "a man of cruel and hard temperament."

Q.—You are an executor of the deceased's will? A.—Yes.

Q.—He deeded a farm to Alfred's son, $1,000 to his widow, and $500 to Wesley Scott? A.—Yes.

Q.—He had given another farm to Alfred Scott previously, hadn't he? A.—Yes.

Q.—What condition was Mrs. Scott in when she made the statement about the money? A.—She was crying and raving. I do not think she was responsible for what she said.

Q.—Do you know if the deceased had a bitter feeling towards the prisoner? A.—Yes. He did have.

Q.—How long have you known the prisoner? A.—For eighteen years. She bore a good character, and was quiet and industrious.

Widow of the Deceased.

Sarah Scott, the widow of the deceased Harvey Scott, was the next witness. She stated that her husband was 75 years of age, and had suffered from gangrene, or rheumatism, which necessitated his using a cane.

"On the morning of his death, I went out to the barn," she said. "After I had got through milking, I saw my husband at the southeast corner of Wesley Scott's place. Mrs. Wesley Scott was there also, and I could hear that they were quarrelling, though I couldn't hear what they were saying. When I was feeding the calves, about five minutes later, I heard a shot. I saw Joseph Vining coming down the road, and in consequence of what they told me, I went to my house and got a sheet and covered the body.

"I went to the door of Wesley Scott's house, and asked Mrs. Scott, who was sitting at the table, 'Who did this?' She replied, 'I did; he's out of the road, and I'll soon be out of the road, too.'"

Mr. Meredith Examines.

"How long had you been married?" asked Mr. Meredith. A.—Twenty-two years.

Q.—You were not on good terms with the prisoner? A.—I was not unfriendly or friendly, but I haven't spoken to her for eight years.

Q.—You know that your husband had a dislike for the prisoner? A.—Yes.

Q.—Your husband sometimes went down to Wesley Scott's fence with a gun, didn't he? A.—Sometimes—probably three or four times.

Q.—When did you last see him with the gun there? A.—Five or six weeks before his death. The gun was under his arm.

"He wasn't accustomed to go shooting, was he? He was too lame?" asked Mr. Meredith.

There was a murmur of amusement throughout the courtroom at this question.

Judge Was Annoyed.

"If this disturbance occurs again," remarked his lordship, "I'll clear the courtroom."

"Will you swear that you didn't tell Mr. Vining that it was scandalous the way the old man was going on?"

"I don't remember," replied the witness. And despite Mr. Meredith's repeated questioning she would not change her answer.

Alfred Scott, brother of Wesley, and son of the deceased, told of meeting Joseph Vining on the morning of the tragedy, and of going to Wesley Scott's house and seeing the body of his father.

"I stepped into the doorway after I had called Mr. Vining," he said. "I didn't speak to her, but she said, 'Alfred, I've nothing against you; you have always been civil to me. You can all have your money now.'"

The body was lying with the head about four feet from the door, said the witness.

Miss James Testifies.

The evidence of Minnie James, who resided with Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Scott, was only a repetition of her evidence given at a previous trial. She told of seeing Harvey Scott at breakfast, and later in the direction of Wesley Scott's house. She saw the little dog, and heard a rolling.

She had never seen the deceased go down towards Wesley Scott's house with a gun.

Wesley Scott always took his meals at Harvey Scott's, even though he might have had a meal at his wife's house once or twice.

After she came into the barn she saw Harvey Scott sitting at the dog at Wesley Scott's. She thought that he was in a temper, though she said that she did not think he was in a great passion.

Constable James Gunn told of seeing the body of the deceased lying in front of Wesley Scott's door. He testified that there was no woman of better character than Mrs. Scott; she was a quiet, God-fearing woman.

Dr. Armstrong.

Dr. J. R. Armstrong, of Thorndale, who conducted the post-mortem on the remains of Harvey Scott, told of the injuries he had discovered. The body was that of a healthy man. The nature of the injuries he had observed would have caused instant death, and he did not think there would have been any movement after the wound was inflicted. The body would have fallen immediately.

The doctor testified further that he had asked Mrs. Scott to give him the revolver she had shot Harvey Scott with, and the prisoner had gone into a back room and taken the revolver from a dresser, and given it to him. There had been one chamber used.

Powder Marks.

Under cross-examination, Mr. Meredith drew out the information that there were signs of powder marks around the wound.

"The powder marks being there would mean that they were very close together?" asked Mr. Meredith.

"Yes. I should think the pistol must have been fired within four feet."

High Constable John A. Hughes testified that Mrs. Scott had pointed out a stick that was presented in court, saying that it looked like the stick the deceased had carried.

W. D. Stanley testified that he had known Mrs. Scott for 30 years. Her character, he said, couldn't be better. She was a quiet, respectable woman of good family.

John Taylor swore that there was blood on the step three inches in circumference, and spread out. It was fresh blood. The blood would be three or four inches from the centre of the step.

Q.—How long have you been conversant with firearms? A.—About 50 years. I have been a member of the Thorndale Rifle Club, and have taught rifle shooting.

Close to the Victim.

Q.—How far do you think the revolver was from the man when the shot was fired? A.—About 12 to 18 inches.

"Did you make any experiments to prove this?"

"I refuse to permit this question," said his lordship.

John Macfarlane also was a member of the coroner's jury. He testified that he had seen blood on the steps. The blood was about the centre of the step.

Q.—How long have you known the prisoner? A.—I have known her by reputation, about 17 years. She bore the very best reputation.

Q.—How do you think the blood got there? A.—I think his head struck the step.

Q.—But his head was about two feet away. Did you see any blood between the step and the body? A.—I don't remember seeing any.

Character Was Good.

Solomon Vining testified that he had known the prisoner for 18 years, and had known of no blemish on her character.

Joseph Vining was recalled.

Q.—Did you have a conversation with the wife of the deceased on the day of the shooting? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did she state that the old man's character was scandalous of late? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did she say he had attacked her the night before? A.—She said that he had been pitching into her.

The court was then adjourned till 10 o'clock today.
