Regeneration of India.

A consequence of the American rebellion, which few would have ventured to predict, is the regeneration of India. The check given to the exportation of cotton from the United States, compelled European manfacturers to seek their supplies elsewhere; and the encouragement to industry thus given has awakened the slumbering energies of Egypt and Hindostan. Both countries have become successful growers of cotton on a large scale, within the short space of three years. The effect upon British India is marvellous, though the extent of the change wrought was not quite appreciated till a few days ago, when the Indian Budget was presented to the Imperial Parliament. It then appeared that India within a brief period has exchanged a large deficit in her revenue for a surplus of several hundred thousand pounds per annum; that almost every form of industry is prospering as never before; that agricultural labor is better rewarded and an increased number of acres are under cultivation; while railways and other internal improvements are pushing forward with energy. All this is ascribed primarily to the stimulus imparted by an active cotton trade, although manufacturer and trader alike still complain of the inferior grades of fibre, which no skill, thus far, has been able to remedy, and which operates to deter the permanent investment of capital in India, from fear of successful rivalry in other countries. Nor is the advantage realized so much the result of great production as of augmented prices. In 1860 the exports of cotton to Great Britain from India amounted to 1,833,000 cwt.; and then came the sudden advance in the price of cotton, owing to the disturbances in the United States, and in 1862 the exports amounted to 3,505,000 cwt. In the central districts of Nagpore and Berar the area under cultivation has increased 200,000 acres in 3 years. This is a rapid growth, but it does not realize the extravagant expectations which many had formed. India is absorbing large sums of money as payment for exports, but there is no corresponding disposition to spend it. The natives are extremely backward in appreciating the wants of a civilized existence, such as sugar, tea, wine, tobacco, &c; so that in the last five years England has sent to that country fifty millions sterling in silver, and 25 millions in gold, a large portion of which is consumed in personal ornaments, though much of the bullion has been coined

The tea grown in India has improved in quality, and the plantations have increased in extent. The quantity of this article exported in 1862 and 1863 was nearly 3,000,000 lbs.—Another important product on is the cinchona plant, the seed of which was procured from South America as an experiment, and has been cultivated on the Neilgherry hills with extraordinary success—the bark taken off being found to produce quinine equal to the best, and much superior to that obtained from the old plantations of Java. One effect of this renewed activity in India is to create a competition for labor between agriculturists and the public works. Lines of railways are being constructed through the whole of the provinces north of the Ganges. It is not strange that Englishmen, contrasting the present condition of India with the gloomy foreboding on the part of the Sepoy mutiny, are inclined to indulge in congratulations that at last a plan has been hit upon which is destined to develope to the utmost the industrial capacity of that vast country.

A Plaintiff and His Legs.

In the London Sheriff's Court on the 2nd, a Mr. Warren brought an action against a photographer, named Anderson, to recover 10s 6d damages, alleged to have been sustained in consequence of the defendant not taking a dozen correct, full length photographic portraits of the plaintiff. Plaintiff, on being sworn, stated his grievances and produced the portraits.

His Honor—'Let me see them.'

They were handed up, and his honor looked alternately from them to the plaintiff, and remarked at last,

'Why, really, Mr. Warren, I do not see how you can complain. I think they are exceedingly well done. In fact, if anything, I think the defendant has made you too good-looking.' (Laughter.)

Upon this the plaintiff, to the great astonishment of everyone in court, quickly left the witness box, leaped over the barrier in front of the clerk's desk, and jumped on a chair. His Honor looked considerably surprised at this, but he was still more startled to see the plaintiff drawing himself up straightly, and holding his arms tightly by his side, as's,

'There, your honor, do you see anything there amiss in my legs?' (Roars of laughter.)

His Honor (laughing) 'I do not see anything the matter with the portraits. Perhaps Mr. Buchanan will look at it.'

Mr. Buchanan thought it was a very good portrait.

Plaintiff—'But the legs—the legs—that is what I complain of.'

Mr. Buchanan—'Perhaps while you were being taken you drew your coat over your legs in some way.'

Plaintiff—My legs are all right, but he has made one shorter than the other. (Laughter.) I showed the portrait to a lady and she did not approve of it at all.'

His Honor really did not see any just grounds for this action. In fact the plaintiff had not even a leg to stand on. (Laughter.) The photographs were exceedingly well done, and the plaintiff must be non suited.

Defendant asked for costs, which were allowed.

Sally, said a house maid to her fellow servant. I've a sweetheart—such a nice young man. He's a profession.

Oh, Jemima, don't use such a wicked word. Oh, but it ain't a wicked word at all, it's a business.

Business, Jemima? what business?

Guess, Sally, what it is, it begins with H.

I know, Jemima—it's a hossifer.

No, it ain't though, its something much better than a hossifer.

Then it's a horange merchant—that's it Jemima.

Oh you hateful thing, to think of anything so vulgar. He's a hockshioneer.

If you want to kiss a pretty girl, why, kiss her—if you can. If a pretty girl wants to kiss you, why, let her—like a man.

The Custom of "joining hands in matrimony," is said to be taken from the practice of pugilists shaking hands before they begin the fight.

☞ Never, probably, did the commercial letters from Britain contain more earnest instructions to realize and remit for property held on British account The high rate of discount there and the great demand for money and difficulty of obtaining it, will cause British capital to be recalled from all parts of the world until the home money market is again easy.—Owing to the numberless companies formed in England for the improvement of almost every country under the sun, British capital has been flowing out at a rate which could not last, and the return tide is now setting in. This will affect the value of money everywhere. The financial pressure and consequent fall in prices is causing some heavy failures in Britain to be reported by almost every steamer.—Montreal Witness.
