A Novel Suit.

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS VS. THE BISHOP OF ST. JOHN.

A rather novel case came up before Mr. Justice Palmer in Chambers yesterday afternoon—one for which the learned Judge could not find a precedent. It was an application for an injunction by D. A. O'Sullivan, agent for the plaintiffs in the case—of which the proceedings yesterday constituted the first step—of the Corporation of the Brothers of Christian Schools vs. the Rt. Rev. John Sweeney, Bishop of St. John. Mr. O'Sullivan, counsel for the plaintiffs, is of Toronto, where a number of the plaintiffs now reside, and Messrs. Allen & Chandler acted as solicitors. Mr. R. F. Quigley opposed the application. The matter in dispute is the disposal of a legacy made by the late Rev. James Dunphy. The Christian Brothers claim that it was bequeathed to them for the support of a school in which children professing Roman Catholic religion were to be educated, and was so appropriated, until His Lordship Bishop Sweeney refused to allow them to teach in St. John, and, in fact, turned them away from the place. The defence was clearly stated by Bishop Sweeney before Judge Palmer yesterday and is given below. The injunction applied for was to restrain Bishop Sweeney and the Attorney General from promoting the act (assented to yesterday by the Lieut. Governor), to have the trust money in dispute vested in him for the benefit of St. Patrick's Industrial School.

The application came up for hearing at two o'clock and the object was to have the injunction order telegraphed to Fredericton before the Lieut.-Governor should assent to the bill, that he might be prevented from doing so. Even had the injunction order been granted—which it was not—it is hardly likely that it would have been of any good, as Judge Palmer did not give his judgment until nearly five o'clock, and the House was prorogued two hours before.

Judge Palmer said he would consider it altogether as an ex parte application. He explained that Bishop Sweeney was present at his notice. It was not at all necessary for him to notify him to appear, and he only did so as he wanted to hear all the facts about the case he could, not to influence his judgment on the application in any way, but to aid him in considering the matter fairly, for, not having any precedent to be guided by, and owing to the extraordinary novelty of the case, he felt himself placed in a very embarrassing situation. He said he was willing to hear the Bishop as well as Mr. Quigley on any matter in connection with the case they desired to bring up.

In opening, Mr. Quigley called His Honor's attention to the bill entered by the plaintiff's in the suit. He said Mr. O'Sullivan, who signed himself "agent," is unknown here, and he would prove that the material facts that he had sworn to in the bill he did not know of his own knowledge. If by proving this, the application would be dismissed he would ask time to make affidavits to that effect,

His Honor said that it might be better if Mr. O'Sullivan would put his case first and he would hear Mr. Quigley afterwards.

Mr. O'Sullivan then proceeded. He said that he could swear of his own knowledge to a number of facts, and in others he had received information from the Brothers and had no doubt of the correctness of them. As to the Court's power to issue the order applied for, he believed it had the power to do so, and in support of his contention quoted the case of the Grand Trunk Railway vs. the Credit Valley Railway, Grant's report, page 538, and 5th Chancery Appeals, page 671. He held that no person having rights which can not be enforced in a court, should be permitted to promote a bill in the Legislature to obtain such rights; and if in this case rights could not be got in the court, the logical sequence would be that there was no right to apply for legislation. If there is an equitable use of the right to go to the Legislature, the promoters of the bill in question should not have that right.

Mr. Quigley replied to the arguments of Mr. O'Sullivan, and in opening made the following quotations: 2nd. Daniel's Chancery practice, page 1620; Steel vs. the North and Metropolitan Railway Co., 2nd Chancery Appeals, page 237; in re London, Chatham and Dover Railway Arrangement Act, and ex parte Hartridge and Allender, 5th Chancery Appeals, page 671; Heathcote vs. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 2nd Magnaghten & Gordon's reports, page 100. He said that the law put forth by Mr. O'Sullivan is good enough, but the facts of this case do not apply to the law. If there had been a broken agreement, a breach of faith, or a fraud perpetrated, then the order for injunction should be granted.

His Honor said that was the point that presented itself to his mind and that would be the only case in which he could grant an injunction. He repeated that he would allow Mr. Quigley to go as far as he liked in bringing out facts.

Mr. Quigley then placed the bill of counts in the Bishop's hands and asked him to contradict the false statements in it.

His Lordship said in the first count relating to the Christian Brothers' right to the fund, he never considered that they had a right to it, as the will left the money to the free schools taught by the Christian Brothers. About the count in reference to the bill they got passed in 1877, he had no knowledge of it. Brother Tobias, at the time of presenting the bill, told him that he was going to apply for a bill, but it would not affect His Lordship's diocese, as it only applied to Chatham. The bill passed the Lower House without dissent, but when it got in the Upper House, a member was kind enough to send him a copy of it, and he at once saw that it was clearly intended by it that the Brothers should have the administration of the fund. His Lordship stated his objection to it and the section was altered. In regard to the invitation to come here, he stated that he wanted to establish good schools here for poor children. The legacy of £100 he considered would help him to meet the expense of keeping the Brothers here, but he looked upon it only as a component part of the amount required to pay the cost. He went to Montreal and engaged the Brothers to come down. Not a word was then said about the £100, but he agreed to pay them $200 each a year, and the entire cost of supporting them was about $4,000 a year. They say they were put to great expense when leaving Montreal. In fact, when they started, he advanced them $200 each to pay their expenses with. They say, in a manner, that they were turned off in disgrace by His Lordship, who did not want them longer and would not have them. The truth was, when the Board of School Trustees offered to take their schools, in order to come under the system, they should have undergone examination to receive certificates as teachers. This they were afraid to do. His Lordship tried to get legislation for them that they might teach without, but he did not succeed. They would not be examined as the Sisters were, so consequently he had no more use for them. Then they wanted to establish a High School, but he had not considered them competent persons to take charge of it. They wanted to buy one of the most expensive properties in the city and build a College, and scour the city for 20 years to pay for it. He would not agree to that proposition, for there was already a good College in the Province. They never considered the legacy at the time he made the agreement with them to come here. They would not have come for $400 a year, and he would not have wanted them at that. It was false that that was all they were to have when they came here.

His Honor said that what had appeared to him to be the strongest point in favor of the application was that the legacy which had been given for the purposes of schools, had not been appropriated to that use, because the Brothers had not been allowed to have the schools. His opinion on that point had, therefore, changed.

Mr. O'Sullivan held that as it was clear there was a dispute between the parties, the injunction should be granted, so that the matter might be argued out fairly. He said His Lordship would not be injured by the delay, while if the bill was assented to an irreparable injury would be done his clients, as they would not have as much influence in the Legislature as His Lordship if they applied hereafter for an appeal.

After addresses by both counsel, Judge Palmer gave his judgment, regretting that so very important a matter should have required so hasty consideration. While he believed that the Court could restrain a person from going to the Legislature, he felt that
