President Garfield Assassinated.

TWO BULLETS LODGED IN HIS BODY

ARREST OF THE ASSASSIN.

Intense Excitement over the Event.

HIS LIFE HANGING BY A THREAD.

Washington, July 2.—Probably no event in the history of the United States of America, since the murder of President Lincoln, sixteen years ago, has so shocked, not alone American people, but, judging from the tone of the thousands of telegraphic despatches which pour into this city, the people of the whole civilized world, than the cruel and wanton, and as present indications show successful, attempted assassination of President Garfield. When the rumour was first circulated that such an unexpected deed had been done, it was received with general incredulity; but, soon the truth was forthcoming, and grief was expressed by every political opponent as well as every political friend. A rush was made for the newspaper offices, where every scrap of information placed upon the bulletin boards was eagerly read; the railway depot, the scene of the tragedy, was soon surrounded, and the White House, too, was another centre of interest for the excited people. At the railway depots so intense became the excitement all business was almost suspended, stores in the city were closed, and merchants found but few customers. Up to a late hour this evening throngs of people sorrounded the Executive Mansion where the President lies dying.

GARFIELD'S MOVEMENTS.

President Garfield has for nearly a fortnight past been with his family taking a little recreation at Long Branch by the seaside. Of his doings there, and his chance meeting with General Grant, the public have been informed. A few days since the discharge of executive duties compelled his attendance at the capital. This morning he intended to return to his wife and family at Long Branch. For that purpose he entered the depot of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway, arm in arm with Hon. Mr. Blaine, Secretary of State. The two passed thus through the ladies' room.

ASSASSINATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

A man approached the President and fired several shots, two of which took effect. One lodged in the right arm and the other penetrated the abdomen above the right hip, and lodged in the bowels. Mr. Secretary Blaine, on hearing the shots fired, rushed after the assassin to arrest him, but appeared to change his mind, and returned to the President, whom he found prostrated. The shooting occurred in the presence of sixty ladies, whose screams of horror at seeing such a dastardly crime perpetrated in their presence, did as much to alarm those in the vicinity as the sound of the pistol shots.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT OF THE SHOOTING.

New York, July 2.—The Post's Washington special says: The first ball aimed at the President entered immediately above the kidneys, left side. The President was stunned and turned around, when the villian shot the second time, the bullet striking the front shoulder, passing out beneath the shoulder blade. Those who stood immediately around the assassin and President, say the man shouted in a tragic tone, "I am a Stalwart; it had to be done; Arthur will now be President." Benson, ex-chief of the Secret Service, standing near, rushed to the assassin as he was about to raise the pistol, with three chambers still loaded, to shoot Blaine it is thought, throttled him and threw him to the ground. Guitteau was immediately overpowered by the maddened mob. The police hurried him off with great speed to the jail to prevent him being mobbed. The news reached the street immediately, and an excited, angry crowd instantly filled every street leading to the depot, and would certainly have hanged the assassin to a lamp post if the police had not been active in their movements. The President meanwhile instantly sank to the floor. Strong hands carried him immediately to an upper office room and a mattress was obtained from the Pullman sleeping car store room, upon which he was laid, bleeding profusely. Doctors were summoned by telephone and telegraph. Dr. Bliss speedily appeared, and was soon followed by a score of the most prominent physicians of the city. Bliss at first said, "It's a safe wound." After he had watched the President a few moments, he said in great thoughtfulness, "It is not necessarily a mortal wound." Soon after Col. Robert Ingersoll was admitted, and the President stretched out his hand and in a voice not strong said, "I am glad you have come." Ingersoll said, "Are you in pain?" The President answered, "I feel a prickly sensation in my feet." One physician said the prickly sensation is not a good symptom, as it might indicate that a spinal cord had been touched. The shoulder wound is not dangerous. The only fear is from the wound below the kidneys. It has not yet been ascertained whether or not the ball passed through the body directly, or whether it struck the vertebral and glanced round the intestines. Upon that it is probable the life of the President depends. Ingersoll says that the President was clear in his mind, but a little dazed, and his hands were cold. No member of his family was near. Telegraphic communication was immediately made with Long Branch, bulletins were sent to them every minute after. About 10.30 a. m. the physicians decided to remove the President to the White House. An ambulance was in readiness and he was removed. It was thought better to remove him while his strength would permit. The pistol found in the assassin's hand is a murderous looking weapon; it was a five chambered heavy navy revolver, 44 calibre. It makes a hole as large as a musket ball. The balls remaining in it were designed for self-defence, or, as some think, for Blaine. Those who stood near say Guiteau made a movement when stricken down as if to shoot Blaine. The latter was calm and collected, but intensely pale. Guitteau immediately upon being taken into custody assumed to be insane. The assassin drove to the depot in advance of the President and stationed himself in the doorway of the ladies' waiting room in the depot. When Garfield fell the assassin remarked: "I have killed Garfield. Arthur will be President, and I am a Stalwart." An eye witness states: "I was coming down Pennsylvania avenue, when I saw a carriage coming up the avenue, and the horses running so fast I thought they were running away. Just as the carriage arrived in front of me a man put his head out of the window and said, "Faster, faster, faster, damn it." After hearing this remark I thought there was something wrong and ran after the carriage. When it reached the depot a man jumped out and entered the ladies waiting room. He had not been there more than three minutes when the President arrived, stepped out of the carriage and entered the ladies' room. The President after passing through the door was just turning the corner of the seat when the assassin, who was standing on the left of the door, fired. The ball struck the President in the back, and he fell forward. I ran into the depot and just then the man fired again while the President was falling." While the President was staggering on the floor of the ladies room he was surrounded by Windom, James and Blaine; Mrs. Hunt, Miss Windom and Mrs. James were also near the President. General Sherman ordered an ambulance to carry the President to the White House. The greatest interest centers in the possibilities of the President's recovery. All the conditions of his physique naturally aid him, for the President is in the prime of life, and usually enjoys excellent health. He always lived a regular abstemious life, and is of a rugged powerful frame.

A LETTER BY THE ASSASSIN.

The following is a letter taken from Guiteau's pocket: "July 2nd, 1881. To the White House: The President's death was a sad necessity, but it will unite the Republican party and save the Republic. Life is a flimsy dream, and it matters little when one goes. A human life is of small value. During the war thousands of brave boys went down without a tear. I presume the President was a Christian, and he will be happier in Paradise than here. It will be no worse for Mrs. Garfield, dear soul, to part with her husband this way than by a natural death. He is liable to go at any time, anyway. I had no ill will towards the President. His death was a political necessity. I am a lawyer, theologian, and politician—I am a Stalwart of Stalwarts. I was in New York with Grant and the rest of our men during the canvass. I have some papers for the press, which I shall leave with Byron Andrews and his co journalists, at 1420, New York avenue, where all the reporters can see them. I am going to jail.

(Signed) CHAS. GUITEAU.

The papers referred to above have not yet been given out for publication. Byron Andrews, who is the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, says while it is true that a package of papers are in the hands of the police, accompanied by a note addressed to himself, he has no personal acquaintance with Guiteau, and never heard of his existence until this morning.

ANOTHER LETTER.

The following letter was found on the street shortly after Guiteau's arrest, in an envelope unsealed, and addressed "Please deliver at once to Gen. Sherman or his first assistant in charge of the War Department." To Gen. Sherman: I have just shot the President. I shot him several times, as I wished him to go as easily as possible. His death was a political necessity. I am a lawyer, theologian and politician. I am a stalwart of stalwarts. I was with Grant and the rest of our men in New York during the canvass. I am going to jail. Please order out our troops and take possession of the jail at once.

Very respectfully, CHAS. GUITEAU.

Gen. Sherman gave the letter the following indorsement: "This letter was handed me this minute by Major Wm. J. Twining, U. S. Engineers, Commissioner of the district of Columbia, and Major Wm. G. Brock, Chief of Police. I don't know the writer; never heard or saw him to my knowledge."

WHO THE ASSASSIN IS.

Charles Jules Guittean, who shot the President, is a native of Illinois. He is the son of L. W. Gitteau, who for many years, up to the time of his death, which occurred two years since, resided at Freeport, Illinois About twenty-five years ago the father, accompanied by Charles Jules, then about 16 years old, left Freeport and joined the Oneida community of New York. The father remained with the community a short time, and returned to Freeport. The son remained in the community, and next turned up in Chicago as a lawyer. When a boy, and up to the time of his arrival in Chicago, he was known as Charles Jules Guitteau, but changed his name, dropping Jules soon after reaching that city. He visited Washington two years since, and lectured on Second Adventism, to which, at that time, he professed to be a firm believer. Gentlemen who met him then pronounce him a lunatic on the subject of religion.

A BAD RECORD.

Chicago, July 2.—Chas. J. Guitteau is the correct name of the would-be assassin. He lived here several years, and acquired an unenviable reputation. He was at one time on the point of marriage with an estimable young lady, but his character became known just in time to prevent such a calamity to the lady and her family. Guitteau left town immediately after this for some months. He seemed to have no visible means of support, but preached or lectured on religious or social subjects, upon which he was an enthusiast. He started here as a lawyer, but failed utterly; then he tried to lift himself into notoriety by lecturing on religion one evening each week. His card in the newspapers is produced to-day, and is a curiosity. He bored the newspapers by trying to get his manuscript printed. After failing as a lecturer, he began life as a tramp of the respectable order, and was branded by the Hotel Keepers' association as a dead-beat. He is 35 or 40 years old, and his whole appearance was that of a dandified man of small mental calibre; was unusually fond of notoriety, and would go to almost any length to get his name in the papers. He was arrested here once for embezzlement. It was at first supposed that Guitteau was the well known Socialist of that name, and at noon the papers appeared with his full history, but it was subsequently learned they were on the track of the wrong man. It seems that there were two Chas. Guitteaus in the city, both lawyers, and both, from known fanaticisms of character, capable almost of any mad act. Guitteau is described by lawyers as having been a "shyster," whatever practice he had being in the lower criminal courts. He was regarded as weak minded, and at one time was a fanatic on temperance and delivered a lecture at the Methodist church on the subject. Failing to pay the Tribune for its advertisement of the lecture, that paper wrote him up as a fraud, and was sued by him for libel. The suit never came to an issue. He wrote a phamplet on the second coming of Christ, which was published as a curiosity. Very little is known of the man, and that little unfavorable. Occasionally he was seen with a brisk go-ahead air of business about him that was calculated to inspire confidence. At other intervals he was to be found in a deplorable state of shabby gentility, haunting beer saloons and holding forth on the philosophy of things in general. He exhibited no tangible symptoms of insanity, but was at all times a somewhat eccentric, nervous, excitable individual. At one period of his career he succeeded in loafing about several respectable families who occasionally took boarders. These he usually managed to swindle out of their pay, and when things became too hot in the city he would skip off and be lost sight of for a long time, reappearing again in some new character. One of his peculiarities was to follow and persecute with his attentions respectable young ladies to whom he might obtain casual introductions. At one time he was in an ugly predicament with the attorney of a young lady whom he thus pestered beyond endurance. The attorney throttled him in his office and threatened to give him a horse whipping if he didn't promise to desist, and the promise was given. He has not been heard of for quite a while in this region. It is said his father is president of the Second National bank of Freeport. His family is of Italian descent, but Guitteau always claims to be American born.

A Milwaukee dispatch credits him with a similar career in that city.

MRS. GARFIELD'S GRIEF.

Mrs. Garfield was grief-stricken when she received the sad news at Long Branch, and notwithstanding that judiciously worded despatches of a hopeful tone were frequently forwarded to her, her grief became almost hysterical. She left Long Branch for Washington shortly after noon, and reached that city about six o'clock. At seven Blaine telegraphed to Vice-President Arthur at New York that the President was able to recognize and converse with his wife, but that in the judgement of his physicians he was rapidly sinking. Throughout these trying hours the President's mind was perfectly unclouded, and when conscious he conversed freely with those around his bed side. Previously to his wife's arrival the President slept quietly.

IN A FATAL SHOT.

New York, July 3.—A Herald's Washington dispatch says: At half past eight o'clock, when the physicians saw great retching going on, they determined to make an effort to ascertain the exact location of the ball, and treat the patient accordingly. They began by administering stimulants, but nothing would stay down. However, the hyperdermic injection was given, and the examination was proceeded with. It was found that the ball had fractured the eleventh rib and passed into the liver, but could not be traced further, though it is supposed to have lodged in the locality of the spinal column, the result of which would be hemorrage of the liver. Now that the ball has been located in the liver it is thought there are but slight chances of saving his life, as there are only thirteen cases in the medical books where persons recovered after being shot in the liver. Dr. Townsend says: After I made an examination of the wound the President looked up and asked me what I thought of it. I answered "I did not consider it serious." He continued, "I thank you, doctor; but I am a dead man." When we arrived at the White House, and just before he was removed from the ambulance, he asked me to call Major Brock to clear the hall, as there might be another assassin around. Mrs Garfield, when in the sick room, did not betray the slightest evidence of emotion. The President spoke to her in a whisper audible at the other end of the room; but the physican decided that it would be unwise to allow the interview to last beyond a few minutes, and persuaded Mrs. Garfield to leave for the time being. When she left the room she completely broke down and sobbed aloud most piteously. Mrs. Garfield pleaded for a second interview with her husband, which was acceded to by the physicians. The room was cleared, and she with some other members of the family, remained half an hour with the President. During this period the first favourable symptoms were exhibited, and from that moment up to 12 o'clock everything looked brighter.

THE NEW YORK PRESS ON THE ASSASSINATION.

The Herald says: Should the President die his fate will be a national calamity. No demonstration could make the fact plainer than it now is, that the assassin was crazy and acted under an insane impulse in his conception that to have refused him office was an outrage that called for the sacrifice of life. Only madness, it might well be thought, could conceive of the assassination of the President as a remedy for any imagined evil under a system of government like ours.

The Tribune says: Garfield has been shot down, not by any political faction, but by a spirit which a political faction has begotten and nursed; but for that spirit there was hardly a man in this country who seemed at sunrise yesterday more safe from the murderous assault. Garfield was immensely more popular yesterday than when the ballot of the nation made him President. Booth put into his bloody deed the malignant spite of thousands of beaten rebels. His deed stands in history as a cap sheaf of the rebellion. So the spirit of faction, which fired the shot yesterday, gave in that act a most complete revelation of its real character. Never again will any man cry "I am a Stalwart of Stalwarts." Never again will the blind and furious fanaticism of faction seem to sane men a thing to boast of. This horrid flash of light which shows how narrow is the dividing line between factious frenzy and Mexican assassination will bring an end, let us hope, to a most shameful phase of partisanship of this country.

THE MURDERER'S FEELINGS—HE IS ONLY SORRY THAT HE DID NOT KILL GARFIELD.

The Herald's special says that the rumour that Guitteau is one of a number of conspirators is scouted by every man of common sense. Being told yesterday that the President was suffering great pain, Guitteau replied:—"I am very sorry to hear that. I wish I had put another ball into him, for that would have ended his suffering. I had contemplated the thing six weeks, and what I did I was forced to do by inspiration from God. I did it for political purposes, and through patriotic motives. I conceived the affair myself, and executed it myself. I am alone responsible. No soul on earth knew of it but myself. I considered it a political necessity to retire Garfield and thus save the Republican party. I had no murder in my heart, for I had nothing against the President personally. I helped to elect him. I have no fears of future punishment. What I did was for the benefit of the Republican party and the public. I have no fear but I will be liberated. I am a Stalwart of the Stalwarts. I know Arthur and Grant very well. I had no such thought as that my act would make a martyr of me. I know it was necessary for some one to retire Garfield, and I made up my mind to do it, and save the country and party. I am truly sorry that my act has caused him so much pain, but I knew of no easier way to rid the Republican party of him than by a bullet. My only motive was to have a Stalwart for President. This is the first rest I have had in six weeks. This thing has been on my mind, and I could not sleep. Now it is over, my only wish is that he may not recover and make my act fruitless. My mind would be perfectly at rest if he died, and I do not fear any consequences."

DONEGAL.

Whooping cough is prevalent here.

Mr. A. Buchanan had a valuable cow killed by lightning the other day.

It is our unpleasant duty to have to record the death of Miss Sarah Thompson, which took place at the residence of her uncle, Mr. Wm. Buchanan, on Tuesday 21st ult. Miss Thompson was in delicate health for some time previous, but nothing of a serious nature was expected. She was attending to her usual duties until Tuesday at noon when she became seriously ill, and about 11 o'clock on Tuesday died. A large concourse of friends followed the remains of the young lady to her last resting place in the Methodist Cemetery.—COM.

CARTHAGE.

EXAMINATION.—The regular half-yearly examination of the pupils attending Carthage Public School was held on the 28th. The pupils were examined by Messrs Waddell and Davidson, teachers in adjourning sections, and acquitted themselves in a manner highly creditable to themselves and teacher.

PIC NIC.—The people of Carthage and vicinity pic-nicked in Mr. Harvey's grove on Dominion Day. A large concourse of people assembled to partake of the enjoyment of the day. After ample justice had been done "all the delicacies of the season," the assembled multitudes were treated to a "feast of wit and a flow of soul" by Rev. D. J. Caswell of Millbank, Mr. R. M. Munro of Milverton, Mr. M. H Dowd and others. Mr. H. G. Hamilton performed the onerous duties of Chairman, in a manner highly creditable to himself. All present enjoyed themselves heartily.

BRIL.—Several of our energetic citizens have been at work for the last few weeks trying to raise money for a town bell, and I am glad to say that they have met with success, and a new bell may be seen and at times heard by the weary traveller as he approaches our ambitious little village.—COM.

TROWBRIDGE.

PIC-NIC.—The Trowbridge public school picnicked in Mr. Jackson's grove on Tuesday last. The parents and friends of the school turned out in considerable numbers. Quite a number of ladies and gentlemen from Listowel were also present. An abundance of good things were provided, and an enjoyable time was spent. The speakers having failed to connect, the addresses were omitted—a matter not deeply regretted by the young people. Mr. Rutherford, the teacher, is deserving of much credit for the amiable and energetic manner which he displayed in providing for the pleasure of the picnickers.

Mr. Christie's new barn is about completed. It is one of the finest bank barns in this neighborhood. Mr. Merritt of Listowel, is the contractor, and he evidently understands his business.

Mr. Wm. Gibson, of Listowel, has erected a commodious two story brick cottage on his farm east of this place. He expects to occupy it in a few weeks.
