Havelock Coy, master of the supreme court, has named February 22, 1911, as the date for the sale by public auction of the Alexander Gibson Railway and Manufacturing Company's properties. The sales come as the result of an equity suit brought for foreclosure of mortgages amounting to about half a million dollars or more on the property.

In accordance with the ruling of the court, the sale has to be advertised for four months in papers in counties in which the company's property is situated and notices must be posted in the court houses of the counties, and also posted in each parish in which the company's property is situated. On account of the property being of such immense proportions, the matter of advertising is a big proposition. The advertisement, which will include a description of the property, will occupy almost three full pages in a seven column newspaper, and posters to be posted in court houses and in various parishes will be as big as circus bills.

It is likely that the advertisements of sale will make their first appearance in newspapers in three counties, York, Carleton and Northumberland, within a few days, and notices will also be posted in a few days in fourteen parishes in which property is situated.
