In response to a question that is highly relevant in this six and five age concerning the ex-Chief Secretary of the Privy Council Office receiving a much more substantial pension increase, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that authority was based erroneously. We have checked the Order in Council which has adjusted the former Principal Secretary's glorious renumeration and departure scheme. The authority for his recent appointment on December 10 as a special adviser under Order in Council was supposedly gained from Appropriations Bill 1981-82.

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member really feel that it is reasonable to continue debating that question? I have just pointed out to him that a point of order is not to be used to continue to debate a question which the Hon. Member might wish to debate. While I hope he has an opportunity to debate it, he cannot, under a point of order, continue to discuss it. He has been doing so since the very beginning of his intervention.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, Vote 1, Privy Council Estimates, 1981-82, contains this statement at the end of that vote: "—and the establishment of positions of senior adviser to which persons may be appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office during pleasure." That authority, through this Appropriations Act, was used by Order in Council to grant Mr. Pitfield this new position and high salary.

As you are aware, this question of legislating through Appropriations Bills has been a subject of debate on points of order in the House since 1969 when these new rules were imposed through closure. There have been continuous and ongoing discussions. Speaker after Speaker in his rulings, including yourself, Madam Speaker, has indicated that it is wrong and inappropriate to use Appropriations Bills to legislate.

The defence mechanism that has been available to protect Parliament in this regard has been in the form of the labours of some Members of Parliament, including myself, who have read through this enormous document Vote by Vote by Vote in an attempt to establish whether there is, in fact, an effort to sneak through legislation. We have been doing this for years.

Mr. Smith: State your point of order.

Mr. Andre: My point of order is very simple. I will try to make it sufficiently simple for the Member to understand, which is difficult. At some point we have to establish some mechanism whereby this House can have better protection from that kind of abuse.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am being very patient with the Hon. Member. He seems to be impatient with me. I must remind him that he is now debating a question which might be legitimate, but there is nothing before the House that allows him to discuss that particular matter just now.

The Estimates have been passed by both Houses. If the Hon. Member had a complaint concerning this particular matter, he should have debated it at that time. The matter he is raising is not a point of order. I cannot allow the Member to continue to debate that matter. I am afraid that I cannot hear him any longer.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, this item was raised precisely because this morning the research staff associated with the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, after going through voluminous Orders in Council, discovered this point. I raise this matter today for that reason.

Madam Speaker: That is fine. If the Hon. Member has just discovered something that he wishes to debate, he can try to debate it on other occassions. However, this has nothing to do with the Standing Orders, and therefore it is not a point of order. The Hon. Member may not continue to discuss it. If he has discovered that issue this morning, he may debate it and express his concern but not at this particular time.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I have been searching for a number of years for some mechanism whereby this institution can, in fact, have some ability to protect its rights. As you well know, this particular issue has been raised at the appropriate times, many times, yet there continues to be—

An Hon. Member: What is your point of order?

Mr. Andre: The point of order is very simple. We have finally returned the Standing Committee on Procedures and Organizations to active use. If you share the view of others, which I hope you do, Madam Speaker, that it is, in fact, beholden upon this institution to show its mettle, if you will, from time to time and to prevent this from happening, I humbly request that the Chair suggest that this subject be referred to the Committee on Procedure and Organization so that mechanisms can be put into place which will prevent this kind of abuse in the future. I would then not have to rise on points of order four times a year, every time the Government brings forward its Estimates.

Madam Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member has been preoccupied by this very matter and has raised it at appropriate times in the House. The Hon. Member will remember that I have heard him for quite some length. He has been quite successful in obtaining some kind of redress for that particular situation. I would urge him to continue to proceed from one success to another with regard to this particular matter. However, he cannot do it now and I think he knows that. I will recognize another Member.

MR. SIDDON—CALL FOR STATEMENT FROM MINISTER ON TAXATION OF BENEFITS OF NORTHERN RESIDENTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order on a matter relating to an announcement made outside of the House by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on December 2, 1982, in collaboration with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). This announcement and press release refer to a promise made by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on October 27 when he gave his economic statement at which time, quoting from the press release, he said, "The Minister had promised full details of his plan to the House of Commons". This important initiative which will lead to the taxation of the benefits of northern employees—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. What is the Hon. Member's point of order? He must know that statements made outside of the House do not constitute the basis for points of order. That goes without saying. Matters happening outside of the House are not covered by the Standing Orders. I do not see how the Hon. Member can rise on a point of order concerning this particular case.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, reading from the Minister's own press release, I quote the relevant section which indicates that the Minister had promised full details of the plan in the House of Commons. Since the implications of this announcement are so devastating for Canada's mining industry, I think it is important that the Minister should come before the House of Commons to make such a statement and then grant opposition Members an opportunity to question him and seek further clarification of such an announcement. As is set out in his press release, he promised to do that. I am trying to make a point that the Minister should come before the House.

Madam Speaker: That may be a legitimate complaint but it certainly is not a point of order.

MR. TAYLOR—PARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a very innocent point of order. I come from Drumheller which is nestled in the Canyon of the Red Deer where the dinosaurs used to roam. I find nothing objectionable about the word dinosaur.

Madam Speaker: I would simply ask the Hon. Member in what Standing Order we provide for innocent points of order.

• (1640)

MR. DANTZER—PROPER FORM OF ADDRESSING MADAM SPEAKER

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I believe concerns every Member of this House and yourself. Your Honour may recall that last week two Government Ministers, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), who is responsible for the status of women, announced a policy barring the use of sexist terms in and around the House of Commons and the Government. I think I am correct in quoting the Ministers as saying that they did this because these terms perpetrated myths and stereotypes and created faulty perceptions and inappropriate behaviour. They said that women should be treated with equal respect and dignity, without reference to physical characteristics or reference to the female gender. I am sure that every Hon. Member wants to carry out what is a good policy. However, every time Hon. Members speak in the House, they use the words "Madam Speaker", and it seems to me that that title is a female gender word which might perpetuate myths and stereotypes and create faulty perceptions. I was wondering whether Your Honour would consider our use of the term "Speaker" or "Speakerperson" or, perhaps, in a friendly way, "Speak". Would Your Honour consider this and advise us as to what we should do in the future?

Madam Speaker: I wish I could answer the Hon. Member in French concerning this particular point of order. In French, it is quite clear that there is no reference to gender in the way in which I am addressed—Madame le Président. Le Président—being a substantive, which is considered to describe the function. When the function is fulfilled by a woman, one says "Madam". When it is fulfilled by a man, one says "Mister", so the function itself is absolutely neutral. However, the English language does not allow for that kind of distinction. I would be pleased if Hon. Members called me "Madam Speaker".

MR. KILGOUR—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a matter that was raised previously as a point of order. I appreciate the fact that Your Honour asked the Clerk if the word "dinosaur" was on the list of unparliamentary terms, and I think he replied, "no". I would simply say very quickly, because you have heard a lot this afternoon, that the word "animal" is on the list, the word "pig" is on the list, and something else which bothers me is "black sheep", which is also on the list. This, of course, is a very serious matter. A dinosaur is defined as being any of an extinct group of saurian reptiles. Surely, if the furry dog and the squealy pig are unacceptable, it is far worse to call us dinosaurs, and I would respectfully ask that you enlarge the list to include the word "dinosaur".

Madam Speaker: I will give it much consideration.

MR. NIELSEN—POINT OF ORDER RAISED PRIOR TO ADJOURNMENT OF HOUSE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: You should be ashamed for rejecting your—

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) is an expert at gross abuses of the Rules of the House, so I bow to him every time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I wish to raise two point of order at this time stemming from the proceedings in the House last night prior to and at the time of adjournment. I would like to deal with those points singly and in order reversed to that in which the irregularities took place.

My first point of order relates to the manner in which the House was adjourned last night. As you know, Madam Speaker, Standing Order 6(3) states:

> At 10:00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, at 6:00 o'clock p.m. on Wednesdays and at 5:00 o'clock p.m. on Fridays, Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

Clearly, Standing Order 6(3) provides that the House will adjourn at 10:00 p.m. on Tuesday nights. Furthermore, Standing Order 7 states:

> At the ordinary time of adjournment of the House, unless otherwise provided, the proceedings shall be interrupted and the business under consideration at the termination of the sitting shall stand over until the next sitting day when it will be taken up at the same stage where its progress was interrupted.

As Your Honour will note, Standing Order 7 states that unless otherwise provided, the proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted at the ordinary hour of adjournment and shall stand over until the next sitting of the House. This procedure is borne out by rulings such as the one to be found at page 3712 of Hansard for October 15, 1980, where the following exchange and ruling by the Acting Speaker are reported as follows:

> MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH): May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?
> MR. COLLENETTE: Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that it is now six o'clock, or has the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) called it six o'clock?
> THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. ETHIER): The Chair recognized that it was six o'clock and therefore cannot recognize another member from the floor.

I submit, however, that in this case there was just such a provision as referred to in Standing Order 7 which would have resulted in delaying the normal adjournment of the House and that provision was contained within Standing Order 34(1) which stipulates that the proceedings of the House will be interrupted either by a call to order by the Speaker or on a point raised by another Member of the House. It is very brief and I will read that for the record as well. It states:

Any Member addressing the House, if called to order either by Mr. Speaker or on a point raised by another member, shall sit down while the point is being stated, after which he may explain. Mr. Speaker may permit debate on the point of order before giving his decision, but such debate must be strictly relevant to the point of order taken.

In this case, Your Honour recognized that I had risen before you had adjourned the House and I refer the Chair specifically to page 215—

Madam Speaker: Order. Just for the record, no, I had not recognized that. I said, "The Hon. Member says that he has risen before. I had not seen him, but if he says that he has risen before, I will take his word for it". I had not recognized that, just for the record.

Mr. Nielsen: I will be reading that excerpt from Hansard into the record to support my point of order, Madam Speaker, and the judgment can be made on the basis of the evidence which will be then available. I was referring to page 21588 of Hansard, where this exchange is reported in the right-hand column:

MADAM SPEAKER: I did not see the Hon. Member rise before I adjourned the House.

MR. NIELSEN: Yes.

MADAM SPEAKER: But apparently he had risen. Will the House allow me—

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No, no.

I think it appropriate, at this stage, to review the events of last night, commencing at page 21587 of Hansard. I specifically draw the attention of the Chair to that page where the time is noted, as it is in all of our issues of Hansard. From time to time, the time is noted by the Hansard reporters as they are recording our proceedings. Your Honour will note that immediately following the vote itself, the list of the Members having been recorded, the time is noted as being 22:05, which was, of course, five minutes past ten. That time bears direct relation to the Standing Orders which I have already cited for the Chair with respect to the hour of adjournment. Then the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) rose on a point of order, which was heard, and then Your Honour said:

The Motion is lost. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has the floor—

That specifically relates to a decision of the Chair when the then Acting Speaker, Mr. Ethier, was in the Chair, and when it was drawn to the Chair's attention by Mr. Collenette that that was an impossible procedure, and he certainly had the positive reaction and decision of the Chair on that point. Concerning the point at which I rose to take part in that exchange immediately following your statement from the chair, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is recorded as making probably the most intelligent contribution to any debate that he has made in the House in his whole career when he said:

Madam Speaker—

That was the extent of his contribution. The exchange continued:

MR. NIELSEN: Madam Speaker, Madam Speaker—

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

AN HON. MEMBER: No way.

MADAM SPEAKER: —and it now being ten o'clock, the House is adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

MADAM SPEAKER: Order, please.

MR. NIELSEN: I rise on a point of order. Point of order. You cannot, Madam Speaker, with great respect—

• (1650)

Then on the following page we find the following:

MADAM SPEAKER: Order, please. The Hon. Member—I am not sure whether the Hon. Member rose before I adjourned the House—

SOME HON. MEMBERS: He did. He did.

MR. NIELSEN: Yes.

AN HON. MEMBER: Yes, two of them did, Madam Speaker.

MADAM SPEAKER: —but it seems from the protest—

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

AN HON. MEMBER: No way.

MADAM SPEAKER: Therefore, if the Hon.—

MR. NIELSEN: I cannot be heard until they turn the mike on.

That is another point of order that I would like to get into some day. It goes on to read.

MADAM SPEAKER: Let us not get excited.

MR. NIELSEN: Madam Speaker—

MADAM SPEAKER: I did not see the Hon. Member rise before I adjourned the House.

MR. NIELSEN: Yes.

MADAM SPEAKER: But apparently he had risen. Will the House allow me—

There were some noes, and therefore the House rose.

As a result of my rising, prior to your statement that the House was adjourned—and the adjournment is recorded, incidentally, in Hansard at 10:08—the adjournment, in my submission, should not have taken place. Had you so directed the House, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), a debate on my point of order might have taken place before you delivered your opinion on that point. I will not burden the House with reading Standing Order 34(1) again; I have already placed it on the record.

Why was it important that my point of order be heard at that time? I would like to refer you, Madam Speaker, to the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne at pages 78 and 79, and specifically to Citations 233.(1), 235 and 237. Those Citations are as follows:

233. (1) Points of order are questions raised with the view of calling attention to any departure from the Standing Orders or the customary modes of proceeding in debate or in the conduct of legislative business and may be raised at virtually any time by any Member, whether he has previously spoken or not.

Mr. Smith: How many of the points of order today did that?

Mr. Nielsen: I cannot be blamed for the lack of comprehension of the candy-backed Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Citation 235 of Beauchesne says:

235. Any Member is entitled, even bound, to bring to the Speaker's immediate notice any instance of what he considers a breach of order. He may interrupt and lay the point in question concisely before the Speaker. He should do so as soon as he perceives an irregularity in the proceedings which are engaging the attention of the House.

This is what I attempted to do last night. It goes on:

The Speaker's attention must be directed to a breach of order at the proper moment, namely the moment it occurred.

Again this is what I attempted to do last night. It goes on:

A point of order may be taken after a debate is concluded and the Speaker is about to put the question to a vote or after the vote has been taken—in fact, at any time, but not so as to interrupt the Speaker when he is addressing the House. Even the provisions in Standing Orders that action must be taken "forthwith" or "forthwith without debate" with respect to certain proceedings do not bar a Member from raising a point of order when a serious irregularity occurs.

The last Citation from Beauchesne which I mentioned, No. 237 on page 79 reads:

A point of order against procedure must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place.

I have one last submission in that regard, Madam Speaker, one last precedent. You will note that Beauchesne stipulates that a Member is:

—entitled, even bound, to bring to the Speaker's immediate notice any instance of what he considers a breach of order. He may interrupt and lay the point in question precisely before the Speaker.

Those are the words of Beauchesne. Furthermore:

—a point of order must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place.

That very valid ruling was established on February 20, 1911, and will be found at page 190 of the Journals for that date. I will quote briefly from that precedent. This is the Speaker rendering a ruling with respect to certain Senate amendments to a Bill to amend the Inspection and Sale Act, which was then before the Commons. He said, amongst other things:

At that time I stated to the Honourable Member that his objection was taken too late; also, that the Bill itself was not before the House but only the Senate amendments.

At the suggestion of some Honourable Member I allowed the matter to stand until to-day.

Here is the relevent portion of it:

After careful consideration of the subject, I see no reason to change my opinion. The time at which an objection is taken to any procedure of the House has always been considered as of importance, and some objections which might have very fairly prevailed, had they been taken at the proper time, have failed on account of delay. There is no special precedent upon this particular case, but there are abundant precedents to the effect that an objection to procedure must be taken promptly and before the matter has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place. This, I consider, to have been the case in the present instance, the Bill having passed its three readings and Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons before this point was raised. Any other ruling would lead to very undesirable complications.

I rose last night, Madam Speaker, to draw your attention to what I considered to be a breach of the procedures of this House, in accordance with this Standing Orders, the Citations in Beauchesne to which I have referred, and generally in accordance with the long-standing practices and procedures of this House. You recognized that I had risen before you adjourned the House, that is my position, that is my interpretation of the evidence that I have placed on the record. I mean no disrespect in taking that position, because I can obviously see from your expression that you do not agree with me. In any event, that is my position, that I was recognized before you adjourned the House. The House was nonetheless adjourned before you heard the point of order. Certainly my point of order that I wished to draw to your attention was not heard. As a result the proceedings may have passed beyond a point at which my point of order might have been in place.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that this particular breach of procedure may not simply be grounds for a point of order, but for a question of privilege, my personal privilege, since I was prevented from performing from what I consider to be my bounden duty and obligation, as a Member of Parliament, in drawing what I considered to be a breach of the procedures of this House, immediately to the attention of the Chair.

I am not laying blame at any doorstep. Procedures are often breached in innocence around this place by many like the Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Smith), from a lack of knowledge of our practices and procedures and the legitimate traditions of this place.

An Hon. Member: From ignorance, in short.

Mr. Nielsen: In any event I submit that there was no recognition, no authority, with respect, at the point where you said at page on 21587 of Hansard:

The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has the floor—

I suggest to the Chair that that statement, to have any effect, goes beyond the authority of the Chair at that moment. Certainly the time, in Hansard, and the application of our Standing Orders would make that abundantly so.

• (1700)

If it were any other way, it would result in serious complications because the process which is open to all Hon. Members on this side when the Chair attempts to recognize someone is taken away from them. The Standing Orders provide, for instance, that such a motion as was moved yesterday can be moved by any Member, and the processes that were followed last night denied the right of Members to exercise that particular right under the Standing Orders.

At the very least, we start at square one with respect to the determination of that vote. I suggest that had I had the opportunity to do so, I would have suggested to the Chair last night that the adjournment would have occurred after the Chair properly heard the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary South, and that was it.

MR. NIELSEN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOTE TALLY BY CLERK

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): The other point of order I have to address to the Chair concerns the vote itself. I believe it to be a serious one. It is the first time I have seen a departure from the practices in this place. Perhaps it was because of the absence of the Clerk or for whatever reason, nonetheless it happened. Again, I lay no chastisement or blame at any doorstep. I simply feel it is my obligation to address the point to the Chair, and for the Chair to take note of it for whatever action may be deemed necessary.

I want to refer the Chair to Citation 233 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

Points of order are questions raised with the view of calling attention to any departure—

That Citation is already on the record. I have already drawn the attention of the Chair to it. In this particular instance, my point of order was related to the method in which the result of the division was announced to the House. I would like to draw your attention to Citation 217 of Beauchesne's, pages 74 and 75 of the Fifth Edition where it is set forth. I will not read it all as it is rather lengthy. It reads in part:

217. When the debate on a question is closed, and the House is ready to decide thereon, the Speaker says: "Is the House ready for the question?" If it is evident that no Member claims the right of speaking, the Speaker proceeds to put the question by reading the main motion, and then the amendment or amendments in their proper order. He then takes the sense of the Members of the last of these by saying: "Those who are in favour of the motion (or amendment) will say 'yea'. Those who are opposed to the motion will say 'nay'." When the supporters and opponents of the question have given their voices for and against, the Speaker says: "In my opinion, th yeas (or nays) have it." Should five or more Members rise to request a recorded vote, the Speaker says: "Call in the Members." The Sergeant-at-Arms ensures that the bells are rung; the Whips take steps to assemble their Members. Except under S.O. 9(2) there is no special time fixed for calling in the Members. It generally takes at least ten to fifteen minutes to get them, the Speaker remaining in the Chair, although order is not strictly maintained. The signal for taking the division is the return of the Government Whip and the Opposition Whip. The Whips march up the aisle and bow to the Speaker before returning to their seats. The Sergeant-at-Arms remains by the Bar, also bowing to the Speaker before resuming his seat. The Speaker then calls the House to order, rises and reads the question, adding: "The question is on the main motion (or amendment as the case may be). Those who are in favour of the motion (or amendment) will please rise." Led by the Party Leaders, Members starting from the front benches rise separately and a Clerk Assistant, standing, calls out their names. The Clerk records their votes on a printed list, repeating each name as he places a mark against it. The Members should sit down after they have heard their names distinctly repeated by the Clerk. Members are taken, by Party, in rows with the Party Leaders called out first as a matter of courtesy. When all the "yeas" have voted, the Speaker says: "Those who are opposed to the motion (or amendment) will please rise", and the votes are recorded as above. When the "yeas" and "nays" are taken down and counted, the Clerk rises, bows to the Speaker and declares the votes in both languages, saying: "Yeas, pour . . . ; nays, contre . . . " The Speaker then says: "I declare the motion (or amendment) carried (or lost, as the case may be)."

I would point out at this stage that we have to be concerned with our procedures last night in this specific regard. It goes on:

If a division takes place on an amendment to an amendment, the Speaker will immediately put the question on the first amendment,—

The rest of the Citation is not relevant. I draw your attention in particular to the words of that citation which read:

When the "yeas" and "nays" are taken down and counted, the Clerk rises, bows to the Speaker and declares the votes in both official languages, saying "Yeas, pour . . . ; nays, contre . . . "

It is at that point that the Speaker then declares the motion to have carried or to have been lost.

Hon. Members on this side of the House, including myself, did not hear the announcement of the tally of the vote by the Clerk and are therefore in some confusion as to whether or not the division was properly concluded and, therefore, whether the House was able to adjourn at the time it did last night.

If I might have your attention for just a moment, Madam Speaker, may I point out that in my responsibilities now I have a habit of watching the Chair, listening to everything that is said and watching very carefully. I must admit that I did not see, let alone hear, the Clerk read the results of the vote last night.

Mr. Cousineau: Horseshit.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Cousineau behind the curtain just used a very obscene word. I hope it did not get in Hansard.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: I would, except for the fact that Beauchesne's clearly states that the vote is declared in both official languages, be of the opinion that the declaration of the Clerk is merely for the purpose of informing the Speaker. However, the fact that the Clerk is obliged to announce the vote tally in both official languages and the fact that ordinarily the Clerk would make his announcement into a microphone so that his announcement is audible to all Members of the House both indicate to me that the purpose of the declaration goes beyond that of merely informing the Chair.

In my submission it is important that Members of this House be aware of the tally as communicated by the Clerk in order to ensure that the vote has been properly tallied and that no error is made in announcing the results of the division. Indeed, I remember an occasion when the House Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rose on a point of order to draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that he was tallied twice in a vote, a privilege that some of us would like to have on occasions from time to time in this House. Indeed, the decision rendered by the then Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier) on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) is another analogy. In our proceedings last night, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) rose to put the record straight.

The proper time for bringing such an error to the attention of the Speaker is at the time the error occurs. That is at the time that the breach of proceedings takes place. Because Members on this side did not hear the vote tally, they could not ensure that an error had not been made. Although I had risen to draw this matter to your attention, the House was adjourned and thus this is the first opportunity I have had to question the validity of the proceedings that took place last night. I submit, Madam Speaker, that I should have been given that opportunity last night. Although I do not question the accuracy of the tally conducted by the Clerk, I am led to ask whether or not the division was validly completed, given, if the Chair so finds, that this departure from custom was a fact, and whether it was possible to adjourn at all last night.

One last citation which I should like to quote from Beauchesne, Fifth Edition, at page 76, Citation 223(2), reads:

> A Member must be in his own seat should he wish to vote and should remain in his seat until the division is complete and the result announced.

I did not hear the result, and there are many Members on this side who did not hear the result. Citation 223(2) of Beauchesne refers to Hansard for February 16, 1976, page 10986, where the following exchange took place, and that was the occasion which I have already mentioned where the Hon. Member for Grenville-Carleton, as he was then, drew the attention of the Chair to the fact that he thought—well, I will read his words:

> Mr. Speaker, I think that inadvertently I was counted twice. I do not want to overdo my welcome among my colleagues. I think that I was counted twice because I shifted from my seat. The first vote only should be counted.

I do not know why he did not want the second vote counted. In any event, that Citation is there for the reference of the Chair. Clearly, Madam Speaker, it is not only necessary for a Member to be in his seat to give the question, but he must also be in his seat to hear the result of a division announced, and I question whether a division is complete before Members have heard the results announced and have had the opportunity to question those results. Secondly, if a division is incomplete, until such time as the results have been announced to the Members, it is my submission that it is contrary to the rules and practices of this House to adjourn the House. Those are the two points of order.

I have tried to be as brief as possible, but unlike the "candy-backed" Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), I believe they are points of order which are of substance and deserving of very careful consideration by the Chair, particularly in view of the next order of business to which we will be moving immediately following the Chair's decision on the first point of order which I raised.

With respect to the first point of order, the effect of that, if accepted, would be that, after your declaration that the motion had been lost, that was as far as the Chair could go. The hour of adjournment had been reached and passed. The Chair, I submit, at that point, was functus. It had no further power to make any further decisions such as the one which was raised last night, thus denying Members their undeniable right of access to certain actions under the Standing Orders, of which they may still wish to avail themselves today.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I had absolutely no intention of rising on this point of order, but having listened to the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I feel there are two things I want to say with regard to his comments. First, it is true, I think, that the count was not audible to the House of Commons last evening. I, in fact, noticed that myself at the time and would have perhaps raised it had it not been for the fact that there was a sufficient amount of turmoil and I felt we probably required no more at the time.

With regard to the question of whether the Clerk did in fact rise and read the count, although I could not hear it—and I make that point—there is no doubt in my mind as I watched that the Clerk not only rose, but he stood to the right as I am facing the Speaker, to the right of the Speaker, to speak to the Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: This way?

Mr. Deans: No, no, below the dais, but to the right of the Speaker. The Clerk who did it is sitting at the Table at the moment. I did in fact see the Clerk rise, but I did not hear the count. Therefore, on the one part of the point of order, if it is indeed out of order for the count not to be heard, then, quite clearly, the point of order is valid. That is a question, of course, on which I cannot make judgment since I am not the Speaker.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have not entered into the debate on all of these points of order and privilege this afternoon because I did not want to lend them any credence because they are obviously a filibuster. But with regard to this point, I think it raises a question of the actions of the Table officers, and I think the Table must be supported. I had trouble hearing what the count was, but I certainly observed the Clerk turn toward you, Madam Speaker, and I could see his lips moving.

An Hon. Member: Did you hear the count?

Mr. Smith: I think it is a safe and reasonable assumption that he was giving you the count. There is an old rule of law, Madam Speaker, which says that those who seek equity must approach the court with clean hands.

An Hon. Member: Like the Citizenship Court.

Mr. Smith: If the Clerk could not be heard it was because Members opposite were raising such a fuss that he could not be heard. I would submit, Madam Speaker, that this is one of the most spurious points of order I have ever heard in my time in Parliament, and I regret it has cast reflections on the carrying out of the duties of an officer of the Table in whose ability and integrity I have the utmost confidence. I am sure I speak for all Members on this side on that point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I would just like to take a moment or two to share with you my opinion of what happened last night. The sound system was not functioning. We did not hear the vote. In fact, what happened is that it was not really until we saw Hansard today that we factually knew who won or lost the vote last night.

With respect to the position taken by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I would like to underscore the theme of what he was making reference to, and that is that we need in this parliamentary concept the utmost concern for process, and that process, in its very definition, becomes the standard by which a Parliament should be able to function. What happened last night is a question essentially of whether or not a Parliament can move to some other business while there is a question about its order. That question was being raised last night, and I put this to you, Madam Speaker, because you will be giving this some consideration: how could we move to any other form of business, be it adjournment or be it unanimous consent to move from one Bill to another, when in fact there is a question of order.

It would seem to me, as long as there is on the floor of the House some question about the process by which that House is conducting itself, namely, the rules by which it chooses to operate, that if there is a question about that process, then, by the nature of our Standing Orders, attention must be given to the fact of whether or not we are in order.

To be outside of order and then to move to some other activity is simply, I believe, a defiance of the rules of order themselves. Therefore, the specific question of the events of last night are in question, as is also the hypothetical event of moving to any other state of order than the one which might be before us.

With that in mind, Madam Speaker, I would also find it necessary to bring to the attention of the House, through you, that while we had before us last night a question of order at the time of adjournment, what has happened now is that nearly four hours of business have passed since that question of order was before us. I say this to underscore the necessity of considering points of order or questions of privilege at the time when they are submitted rather than putting them aside to some later period of time. As was indicated earlier, and I will not recite the Standing Order, we have a duty and obligation, when we believe there is a question of order, to bring that question of order to the attention of Madam Speaker or Mr. Speaker, depending on what the case may be.

I have extended the argument of the Hon. Member for Yukon because I think there is not only the question of the specifics which face you now, but the whole general hypothetical question of whether or not the House can shift from any form of business to some other form of business while there is on the floor of the House a question of whether or not it is in a state of order.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, in my riding today there are 15 per cent unemployed and one in 13 workers in British Columbia will soon be going on welfare. My people want this House of Commons to deal with some real business and to get some Government action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Let us get moving. This is ridiculous. I saw the vote last night. We did not hear the vote back here, it is true, as the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) said. But as the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said, we saw the vote being put by the Clerk, we saw it read, and we all know that the Government was not defeated. If it had been, we are sure it would have raised hell and we would have got that vote recorded. So let us move on. We know what the vote was, we know what is happening, and there is a big need in the country to get going.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, we are no longer operating with privacy in this Chamber and no longer can we conceal from the public what takes place in this Chamber.

Mr. Blais: Don't you have any unemployed at home?

An Hon. Member: Canagrex will not solve unemployment.

Mr. McCain: I think what I have just said, Madam Speaker, should caution those who are treating the procedures of this House so lightly, frivolously and so carelessly to mend their ways and be responsible to their constituents in the performance of their duties.

I did not hear, Madam Speaker, nor did I see any lips move for the presentation of that vote to this House in the traditional way. When I left this House last night the first person I met had been watching the proceedings on television. The first question asked of me was: "Don't they announce the vote in the House of Commons? What kind of a procedure do you have? Did you win it or did you lose it?" No one made any remarks as to the results of that vote, and I have never seen that happen before.

Madam Speaker: Excuse me. Just for the record, and you will see it in Hansard, the Speaker said "the motion is lost".

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, I am not quarelling with that, but I am told by a viewer that there was no awareness as to who won or lost the vote. Perhaps in the noise your voice did not carry through the audio system. But I do think we have to give some consideration to conformity with good manners and the rules of this House.

I would just like to say in closing, Madam Speaker, that when the Hon. Member from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), perhaps most notorious for his filibustering and time-wasting speeches, rises in this House in the frivolous manner in which he just did, this House does not gain in stature or in reputation with those who know it.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, all I said when I got up was that there are 15 per cent unemployed in my riding and there are going to be one in 13 workers in British Columbia on welfare next year. It is about time the Conservative Party paid some attention to that, and I wish the Member would shut up!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, no Member of this House is entitled to tell any other Member, from his position in his seat, to shut up. I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that that should be retracted forthwith, without comment.

Madam Speaker: Well, Hon. Members in the course of debate often use expressions which are a bit extreme. We have heard them before in the House. Even if Members do use such expressions, the Speaker does not stop them. Members have their freedom of expression. The Hon. Member has had his say and I will allow him to have his say to the end.

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, perhaps it is not uncommon to hear interjections from Members sitting in their seat to go back and forth, some of which I deplore and very few of which I have been responsible for. But when a person in this House is recognized by the Speaker, and when in his official position as a Member he is speaking in this House and tells another Member to shut up, I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that that in fact is a question of privilege, and I am within my rights to suggest that that Member should retract that statement and apologize to this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have heard that very often in the House. Perhaps it is not the best way to continue debate, but I have heard it several times in the House and despite any opinion which the Hon. Member might have on its propriety, it has been accepted in the House. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, just to assist you in your ruling on this point of order, you will recognize that I sit very close to the Chair and I was unable to hear the Table deliver the numbers to you. Usually, if I sharpen my ears, I can hear Madam Speaker speaking to the Table officer with the microphones off, so we are in very close proximity. I did not hear Madam Speaker say that the motion was lost, and I hope you will give the position taken by the Hon. House Leader your due consideration.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that this whole debate evolves around the doubt that we have in each other. I think the House should operate, and always has, under the assumption that everyone speaks the truth and no one intends to mislead the House. Today we have heard Members speak of irregularities, others on points of order, and others on questions of privilege. Now I have heard my friend, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), talk of the ignorance of some of his colleagues concerning the rules and procedures. Certainly no one could accuse our good friend, the Hon. Member for Yukon, of being ignorant of the rules.

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) always does.

Mr. Ethier: On the contrary, I would like to compliment him on his knowledge of the rules and procedures. But I might touch on one point that was not mentioned this afternoon. It was totally omitted by the Hon. Member for Yukon and, as a matter of fact, by all Members of his party. That, Madam Speaker, is abuse. I am referring to the abuse of the rules, the abuse of the privileges of Hon. Members, the abuse of the position and the titles that certain people hold, such as Leaders of Opposition, House leaders.

Mr. Nielsen: Ministers of Agriculture.

Mr. Ethier: And again the abuse of the confidence and trust that Members have in each other. On this, Madam Speaker, I bring you back to the motion before the House yesterday which the Hon. Member for Yukon is complaining about. I submit to you that this motion was moved, perhaps in good faith—I am sorry to see my friend from Yukon leave the House because it concerns him.

Mr. Jarvis: I will tell him. I am taking notes.

Mr. Ethier: When the Hon. Member for Yukon moved under Standing Order 29 that the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) be recognized, it was an error. To do that the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre had to have been rising in his seat. I can tell you that he was not in his seat, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Yukon did not want to mislead the House. I know he is too much of a gentleman for that. I am certain he would want to correct that wrong.

At the time you recognized the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), Madam Speaker, I was sitting in my seat listening quite attentively to what the Hon. Member for Yukon was saying because he mentioned me on a couple of occasions with reference to the time when I was occupying the Chair. I know very well that the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre was not seeking the floor. It was a mistake that the Hon. Member for Yukon made, and all I ask is for him to correct yesterday's wrong. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to leave misinformation on the record. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) was rising to speak to the question of privilege which I had raised, and I saw him rising in his place at the point when the House Leader was raising Standing Order 29.

I just want to correct the record in terms of what the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) raised. The Hon. Member for Calgary South was in his place.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, in spite of the words used, I am sure the Hon. Member was referring to myself, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, rather than the Hon. Member for Calgary South.

I was most certainly in my seat. I was most certainly trying to be recognized. I was recognized by Madam Speaker. It was at that point, after that occasion, that the House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party moved under Standing Order 29. I am sorry, but the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) is simply erroneous in his observation that I was not properly in my place at that point in time.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I too would like to say a few words in this regard. It was unfortunate last night that we could not hear it. As you are aware, I think I am close enough to you that I can hear, usually. Actually, it is the first time in my ten years' experience in the House of Commons that I have not heard the vote.

There is one point which should be made, that is, who was contributing to the noise at the time so that it could not be heard? Madam Speaker, you should not be criticized, nor should the people at the Table. Another point which cannot be overlooked is that when our House Leader was standing and tried two or three times to get your attention and the attention of the House of Commons, you were prepared to give your attention to that. You tried, you did everything in your power, but the Members of the Government would not allow you; they shouted you down. Let it be recorded that it was Government Members. Why would we shout down our own House Leader when he was trying to get the attention of the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: I do not know whether Hon. Members opposite were supported by the New Democratic Party—they care less for democracy anyway; we have seen it happen before—but it certainly was not us on this side who did not want our House Leader heard. It was Hon. Members opposite. They would not allow you, Madam Speaker, to adjudicate the proceedings in the House of Commons, as usually happens. This has to be recorded fairly and squarely.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I had hoped that you would soon conclude that you have heard enough on this point to rule because what is going on here today is quite disgusting. We are talking about the reputation of a very devoted servant of the Table. It is fine to have tricks up their sleeves to try to prevent the House from dealing with the business with which it should be dealing; that is one thing. But they should not drag into disrepute the ability of a very devoted servant of the Table to carry out his functions. They all know that he announced the vote, and I think they should drop this and quit these gutter tactics.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, Members of the Official Opposition admitted very clearly today that they have a hearing problem. I would like to ask through you, Madam Speaker, whether they have learned to read, because in Hansard the yeas and nays are recorded.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members have had a chance to express their views on the last two points of orders raised by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I listened very carefully to his presentation and to that of other Members. I had the feeling last night that I carried out the procedure as it should have been done. It happens very often that we see the clock at a certain time and we do not see it when it strikes exactly ten o'clock. I know that I acted according to that practice.

As for giving the floor to the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), I felt—and I think Members will feel the same way—that I was carrying out an order of the House; we had just voted on that particular motion. There are other considerations. There was another point of order raised about Hon. Members not hearing the Clerk calling out the count of the vote. I will look at that too, to see whether there is any irregularity in that particular instance.

But I think it happens very, very often in the House that Members do not hear the count because often when the count is given there is considerable noise in the House. It seems to me that it is probably sufficient for the Speaker to announce whether the motion has been defeated or adopted, and I certainly did that last night.

I will take the Hon. Member's points of orders under advisement because I want to look at all his arguments and review all the procedure to ascertain whether all procedures have been followed according to our rules.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-666, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to extend in legislation the spirit of paragraph 7 of the House of Commons resolution of June 6, 1973 on official languages by ensuring that a public servant or employee of a Crown corporation, hired prior to the day of the coming into force of the Official Languages Act and still employed without being rehired since that day, is able to continue to occupy his position or compete for any other position without his ability to perform in his second official language being taken into consideration as a criterion of merit.

Also this Bill would restore the merit system in the Public Service, Armed Forces, RCMP and the 480 Crown corporations. It would stop the dead-ending of qualified public servants in their positions because of their lack of aptitude to learn the French language. It would run counter to the Bill of the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), Bill C-398, which is intended to force bilingualism on the private sector by the imposition of fines and jail sentences for non-compliance.

Clause 2 would prevent the Government from forcing compliance of the Official Languages Act on the private sector without first seeking enabling legislation to that effect by way of a full parliamentary debate in the House of Commons, rather than employing the Liberal practice of resorting to Orders in Council and secret directives.

Also this Bill would correct the discriminatory aspects of the Liberal Government's bilingual policies which are now under investigation by the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

Madam Speaker: I remind the Hon. Member that statements at this particular stage of presentation of a Bill should be kept very short. It does not allow for a full explanation of the Bill, only of the purpose of it.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Madam Speaker: First reading of Senate Public Bills, Government Notices of Motions, Motions.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—CONSIDERATION OF BILL C-87 UNDER NOTICES OF MOTIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday if you look at the record, the Chair called Government Notices of Motions, at which time the Minister rose and my motion was dealt with, and so on. Today the process was reversed. There might be something that happened between last night and today of which I am unaware that would cause that reversal. But it seems to me the debate arises in the same place today as it did yesterday, namely, on Government Notices of Motions. That is where it started yesterday. That is the stage at which the Standing Orders tell us we should be at today.

Madam Speaker: This debate has now been transferred under Government Orders, and the debate will take place when we reach Orders of the Day.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like some clarification. Quite clearly, the debate commenced on Government Notices of Motion yesterday. We never got to Motions at all. Today there has been a change. Perhaps there was an inadvertency either today or yesterday, but it is important. Other Members on this side of the House would like to know what is the proper procedure.

Madam Speaker: I will read to Hon. Members the Standing Order to which I am referring. It is Standing Order 45(2). It reads:

> When a debate on any motion made prior to the reading of the Orders of the Day is adjourned or interrupted, the order for resumption of the same shall be transferred to and considered under Government Orders.

This is the Standing Order I feel applies in this particular circumstance.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I submit another Standing Order for the Chair's consideration. I quoted it earlier today, namely Standing Order 7. But before reading it, let me just refresh our memories as to what occurred last night. The item was called under Government Notices, at which time the Minister and the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) rose at the same time, at which time I presented my motion that the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre be heard. The bells rang. The vote was taken and the House was adjourned, as I have already described.

Standing Order 7 stipulates:

> At the ordinary time of adjournment of the House, unless otherwise provided, the proceedings shall be interrupted and the business under consideration at the termination of the sitting shall stand over until the next sitting day—

That is exactly what happened last night. The proceedings were interrupted by the Chair declaring the adjournment of the House. The Standing Order goes on to state just how it will be dealt with the next sitting day as follows:

> —when it will be taken up at the same stage where its progress was interrupted.

It seems to me that is where we are at now, and we should be taking up discussion of the Bill at the same stage at which we were yesterday. In effect, we were frozen, zap, at the time when the Minister rose. That is where he should have been recognized under Government Notices, in my submission.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, last evening when the House adjourned you had recognized the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). You made the comment at that time that you had recognized him for the purposes of giving him precedence when the Government Orders of the Day would be called under Standing Order 45(2).

Standing Order 7 must be read with Standing Order 45(2), and Standing Order 45(2) must take precedence. It is very explicit that when a matter is dealt with prior to the Orders of the Day on the first day, once it is reached and the debate has been called upon that particular motion, if that motion is not completed and the vote has not been reached on it, then that motion has to be transferred under Standing Order 45(2) to Government Orders. That is a standing practice. For the hon. gentleman from the Yukon to advance any contrary argument indicates that either he is not serious or he is still using dilatory tactics.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, to re-emphasize the point which the Hon. Minister has just made, if you look at page 21583 of yesterday's Hansard, you will see that the Minister moved his motion. His motion is there. It does not say he tried to move it. The motion has been moved. The question has been put. The matter barely got started but it did get started and it has been transferred, quite properly, to Government Orders and will be called as Government business.

Madam Speaker: I have to agree with the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister that the rule to be applied is Standing Order 45(2). The one quoted by the Hon. Member for Yukon applies to the stage of a Bill in a motion that only has one stage. Therefore, the Standing Order that applies is Standing Order 45(2). The Minister will have the floor when we reach the Orders of the Day.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,276 and 4,474.

[Text]

4. (a) Was the company required by the Commission to furnish an audited annual statement of its financial position and, if so, on how many occasions did it do so (b) did the company fail to provide a required audited annual statement and, if so, what action did the Commission take?

5. (a) Was the company required to make monthly statements on its financial position to the Commission (b) did the company fail to do so and, if so (i) on how many occasions (ii) what action did the Commission take?

6. (a) In 1981, did the Commission set a security requirement of $700,000 by letter of credit from the company and, if so, on what date (b) what amount of security requirement had the Commission set for the company previous to this date (c) was the security requirement reduced and, if so, what reasons did the Commission give for reducing it?

7. Did the Commission engage the services of one Clay Blackwell of Winnipeg to investigate certain aspects of the private grain trade in Canada and, if so (a) on what date (b) was the engagement subsequent to the Commission or any of its commissioners learning formally or informally of possible financial difficulties in the private grain trade or of explicit financial difficulties with Econ Consulting?

8. (a) Were actions taken by the Commission explicitly in regulating the private grain trade in Canada after receiving Mr. Blackwell's report and, if so, what were the actions and the date on which they were taken (b) did any action apply to Econ Consulting and, if so, in what way?

(a) Did the Canadian Wheat Board formally decide to terminate its business relationship with the company following the 1980-81 crop year and, if so, on what date (b) was the Commision advised, either formally or informally, of the reasons for the actions taken by the Board and, if so, what action did the Commission take?

10. On what date was the Minister of Agriculture advised of the financial difficulties of the company in his capacity as Minister responsible for the Commission and what actions did he take in regard to either the policies or the personnel of the Commission?

11. (a) Has the Minister met with the representatives of the creditors of Econ Consulting (b) has the Minister given any undertaking to reimburse the creditors of the company for proven losses and, if so, what levels of financial compensation has the Minister discussed with the elected representatives of the creditors?

12. Subsequent to the suspension on February 8, 1982 of the grain dealer's licence of Econ Consulting by the Commission, what actions did the Commission take to restore public confidence in the private grain trade in Canada?

13. Is the Commission considering holding public hearings on the subject of the Econ Consulting bankruptcy, as is permitted under Section 80(1)(b) of the Canada Grain Act?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Agriculture and the Canadian Wheat Board as follows: 1. Yes.

2. No, but the Canadian Grain Commission was aware that the President of Econ Consulting Limited had shipped grain produced on his own farm and had also provided advice to other producers on how to ship producer cars.

3. Econ Consulting Limited's licence was renewed four times; i.e., for the 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81 and 1981-82 crop years. The Commission considered the proposed operations of the firm, reviewed financial information provided by the firm and available from other sources such as Dun and Bradstreet reports, the liability reports of the firm during previous years, the absence of producer complaints and the ability of the firm to post the required security when determining whether to renew the licence of Econ Consulting Limited.

4. (a) No. Grain dealers are not required to submit audited financial statements. Econ Consulting Limited was required to submit annual financial statements prepared by chartered accountants. (b) Not required as indicated in 4(a) above. However, Econ Consulting Limited did provide monthly grain liability reports as indicated in part 5(b).

5. (a) Econ Consulting Limited was required to submit monthly grain liability reports. (b) (i) (ii) Monthly grain liability reports were received for every month that Econ Consulting Limited held a grain dealer's licence until December, 1981. Thereafter, Commission officials were reviewing Econ Consulting Limited's grain liabilities on a more frequent basis until Econ Consulting Limited's licence was revoked February 8, 1982.

6. (a) The Commission set a security requirement of $700,000 on September 17, 1981. (b) $900,000. (c) The security requirement was reduced on the basis of reduced grain liabilities reported by Econ Consulting Limited and assurances given by the firm that liabilities would not increase beyond $700,000. Econ Consulting Limited reported grain liabilities of $511,000 as of September 30, 1981.

7. (a) Clay Blackwell of Winnipeg was engaged in November, 1980 to review and prepare a report entitled "A Study of Surety Arrangements of Licensees". (b) The engagement of Clay Blackwell was not related explicitly to financial difficulties of Econ Consulting Limited but to general concerns of the Commission about the financial position and surety arrangements of all licensees.

8. (a) For the 1981 crop year, the Commission increased its surety requirements of grain dealers, increased its own inspection program, developed formal liability audits of selected licensees by the Audit Services Bureau, Department of Supply and Services and strengthened its procedures and capabilities for testing the financial liability of licensed grain dealers. (b)

All of the above measures applied to Econ Consulting Limited, and all grain dealers.

9. (a) Econ Consulting Limited was advised by letter from the Canadian Wheat Board on July 15, 1981 that its handling agreement with the Board, which was to expire October 1, 1981, would not be renewed for the 1981-82 crop year. (b) The Commission was informed by the Canadian Wheat Board on September 9, 1981 that Econ Consulting Limited's handling agreement with the Board would expire October 1, 1981. There was no suggestion this termination was based on any concern for the financial soundness of Econ Consulting Limited. The Board and Econ Consulting Limited were involved in a number of administrative and legal disputes which were widely believed to be the reason for this development. Econ Consulting Limited had been the only non-primary elevator licensee to receive a modified Class A handling agreement so it appeared this experiment had not worked.

10. The Minister was informed in December, 1981 of the Commission's concern about Econ Consulting Limited and was advised of the efforts the Commission was making to get the level of surety increased.

11. (a) Yes. (b) No.

12. The Commission has worked with the trustee to clarify the situation for creditors and to establish the identity of those creditors with valid claims under the Canada Grain Act. It continues to monitor the financial position of other licensees.

13. No.

BANKRUPTCIES/RECEIVERSHIPS IN OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Question No. 4,474—Mr. Mazankowski:

In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 to date, how many companies in the oil and gas industry, including drilling firms, rig servicing companies and trucking firms, declared bankruptcy or went into receivership and, in each case (i) what was the name of the firm (ii) what were the declared assets at the time of filing (iii) what were its outstanding debts?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The following is the list of bankrupts identified in departmental records as having operated in the oil and gas industry. Please note that the statistical system is such that it is impossible to separate tankers from other trucking firms.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Can the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) tell me why it is that Questions Nos. 4,411 and 4,465 have not yet been answered? I would ask him specifically in terms of Question No. 4,411 whether that one has not been answered because of the sensitivity of the question which asked whether or not the Minister of Finance had used income tax documents in order to secure the favours of a group of business people, to whom he submitted a letter? Is that the reason why that is being held back, that there was a breach of income tax confidentiality?

Order Paper Questions

As far as Question No. 4,465 is concerned which contains some very plain, simple questions dealing with the value of Petro-Canada's assets at the present time, the number of persons working with the company and in particular the amount of dollars which Petro-Canada is spending in advertising. All of these are simple questions, the answers to which could be compiled in a month or two. Question No. 4,465 has been on the Order Paper in excess of half a year. Why has that group of questions not been answered within Question No. 4,465?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to advise the Hon. Member exactly why they have not been answered. We on this side of the House are not afraid of answering sensitive questions. We have answered over 82.6 per cent of all the questions put on the Order Paper during this session. But based on the representation made by my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), I will be delighted to look into the matter and do the best I can on his behalf. It will be a pleasure.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) say the same thing three times to me. I wonder whether he is still delighted and still trying to find happiness in giving me the answer to Question No. 2,329 which has been on the Order Paper for more than a year and a half. I cannot understand it. The question is not that difficult. It refers to President Reagan's visit to Canada. Surely all of those records are complete now unless defeated Liberal candidates were invited and no other defeated candidates. I do not know why the Government is holding up the answer.

Second, there is Question No. 4,542 which has been on the Order Paper for a month only. That is not very long. A CRTC hearing was held in Edmonton. All the records are available. What is holding up the answer?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member has drawn this matter to my attention. I will be very pleased to look into it with holy haste.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, as the Parliamentary Secretary is so receptive and responsive to questions on the Order Paper that have been there for some time, would he look into Question Nos. 4,429, 4,430, 4,431? They have to do with Petro-Canada's activities in looking for oil in foreign countries.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, needless to say, I will be very happy to look into this matter on behalf of my friend, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Crouse: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is in such an amiable mood, I would like to ask him why it has not been possible for me to get an answer to Question No. 4515 which deals with an incident which happened in a place called Cherry Hill, Lunenberg County, Nova Scotia. The question spells it all out. The Government went to work and built a skidway on a piece of land without even ge'ting clearance to the title of that land. When the man who owned that land came back from a holiday, he found that the Government of Canada had built a skidway on the land. The Government said to him, "It seems we have made a mistake." If the Parliamentary Secretary is checking, it is question No. 4,515.

The Government then offered this man $2,000 or $3,000 for his land. He then pointed out that he did not only have land to sell. He said that when someone builds something on another person's land without their permission, that person not only has the land to sell but the land upon which the facility has been constructed as well. This man was asking for approximately $50,000 from the federal Government.

For this reason, my constituents are rather anxious to find out whether, when they seek a loan from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, everything has to be cut and dried or else they are refused the loan. This is a case where, without bothering to check to see who owned the land, the Government moved in and built a skidway. My taxpayers work hard for their money. Fishing is not particularly good in Atlantic Canada, especially in Nova Scotia. They are worried when they see tax money spent in this fashion which does nothing to benefit them.

In the long run, the Government said that it would solve the problem by tearing up the skidway. I would like to know what happened. It is a very simple matter to which I would like to have an answer.

While the Parliamentary Secretary is checking into that particular question, I would like to inquire about a question I asked over a year ago of the Minister about the situation that exists in a place called Woods Harbour in Shelburne County. Under Question No. 4,518, I asked what the Government will do about dredging in that area. It is a very important matter because if one were to visit Woods Harbour, one would see a large fleet there of well over 100 ships. When the tide is at the halfway mark, those draggers and long liners are sitting on the bottom. If a fire breaks out in one of the inner draggers, it is impossible to move the fleet out of the harbour. Millions of dollars of valuable inshore draggers and long liners would be completely destroyed. The Government of Canada should dredge that area. When will I get an answer?

Madam Speaker: Order. I do not think there are any specific rules about how long one can take to ask for information on a question on the Order Paper, but common sense says that it should be short.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would like to say that it would be a pleasure for me to pursue this matter on behalf of my good friend, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). I have held him in esteem for many years. I attended university with his daughter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: I would be happy to look into the matter for him.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I have two questions, one of which was asked over a year ago. I have raised this on two other occasions. It concerns Question No. 3,441 which was placed on the Order Paper in November of 1981. The question is:

Did the Minister of Supply and Services, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development take a JetStar flight to Winnipeg for the official opening of General Aluminum Forgings Incorporated on October 30, 1981, and, if so, in each case, other than the Minister and the aircraft crew, who was on the flight?

This information is readily available. I have raised it on two other occasions. I would like to get a commitment from the Parliamentary Secretary by next week.

Also, Question No. 4,175, which was placed on the Order Paper on March 24 of this year, regarded the Government's hiring teams that are going into universities and schools across Canada. It is quite an important question. I want to know when these hiring teams are going to the University of Winnipeg and the University of Manitoba and just exactly who they will be hiring there. I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secretary would make inquiries and come back with some kind of an answer next week.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into this matter on behalf of the Hon. Member. Sometimes questions which may appear quite simple and straightforward at first glance turn out to be somewhat complicated because the answer involves several Departments. I will certainly pursue this question with great dispatch and see what I can do to come up with an answer.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, in the spirit of co-operation shown by the Parliamentary Secretary, I have inquiries regarding Questions 2,107, 2,108 and 2,109. These questions go back to February, 1981, and regard the transportation of grain and some conflict in statements between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and his assistant in the other place. In the spirit shown by the Parliamentary Secretary today, I look forward to receiving those answers.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to look into that matter on behalf of the Hon. Member. So as to expedite the time of the House, I will assure Members opposite that all outstanding questions on the Order Paper will be looked into.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: I say this in the spirit of Christmas and I trust that they will reciprocate in the spirit of Christmas the remaining three or four minutes that we have today.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary, who has indicated his relationship to everyone on this side of the House, is doing an extraordinary job. Since I go back almost as long with him as he does with the daughter of the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse)—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Bosley: I would like to ask two specific questions of my old friend, the Parliamentary Secretary. Would he consider answering Question No. 3,340 which is dated November 6, 1981? It concerns the Canadian subsidization of wheat sales to Russia which is still an issue of some concern.

As well, perhaps on behalf of a Member who is no longer able to ask his question since he is in the ministry, it might be appreciated if question No. 2,157, which is in the name of the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), which still has not been answered and for which he can no longer request an answer, could be answered also.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), with whom I had the pleasure of working for many years as a fellow alderman on Toronto City Council, has brought these matters to my attention. I will be very happy to look into the first question. It may take me a few hours to do so. As soon as we are able to leave the House in a couple of minutes, I will immediately see what I can do to deal with that.

With regard to the other question which he raised, it is a little more complicated in nature. I believe that inquiries have been made by our office in regard to it. I will have to look into it to see whether or not I can do something to expedite the compilation of that answer.

As I said a few moments ago, sometimes these answers involve several different Departments. When they do involve several different Departments, it can be very frustrating when you have an answer from one Department on your desk and sometimes the answer from a second Department will arrive on your desk, and sometimes the answer from a third Department will arrive on your desk, and sometimes the answer from a fourth Department will arrive on your desk.

Some Hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Smith: Sometimes these answers involve as many as 25 different Departments.

An Hon. Member: Which ones?

Mr. Smith: Sometimes it involves the Department of Defence when the question involves use of aircraft. Sometimes it involves the Department of Transport when the question involves the use of aircraft. When a variety of different Departments are involved in forming an answer, it takes quite a while to do so. I am not quite sure which Department it is in this particular case.

Order Paper Questions

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. Perhaps this little interruption will allow the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to find out which Department it is.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

TRADE

ADMINISTRATION OF FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the bureaucratic mess which exists in the administration of the global import quotas for footwear, which inadvertently leaves the door wide open to permit importers of one kind of footwear to swamp the market with other kinds, a fact which can easily be rectified by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but which has been ignored or misunderstood, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Government take the necessary steps to rectify this situation which has jeopardized the loss of thousands of primary and related jobs in our already hard-pressed footwear industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR STAMP TO COMMEMORATE UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS' BICENTENNIAL

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of Canada Post and the Minister responsible for Canada Post refusing to issue a bicentennial stamp to commemorate the bicentennial celebration of the United Empire Loyalists settlement in Lower Canada in 1783 and Upper Canada in 1784, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House ask Canada Post to issue a bicentennial stamp to recognize the significant contribution this migration has made to Canada's heritage.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PAKISTAN—REQUESTED RESTORATION OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise on an urgent and pressing matter under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Government know, President Mohammad Zia-Ul-Haq has ruled Pakistan for five years by martial law. His Government has been accused by Amnesty International of massive violations of human rights, including arbitrary arrests, floggings and execution of political opponents. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the Prime Minister ask President Mohammad Zia-Ul-Haq during his visit in Canada to end martial law in Pakistan, to release all political prisoners and to restore democratic elections and an independent judiciary as requested in a petition by over 400 Canadians, which I will now send to the Prime Minister.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

APPLICATION TO FARM MACHINERY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs' (Mr. Ouellet) threats to prosecute users of imperial measurement, and in view of the fact that many hydraulic parts for farm purposes are of SAE standards, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs not engage in threats to prosecute distributors and users of agricultural parts which conform to SAE standards.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

ECONOMIC INITIATIVES PROPOSED BY TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The economy of the Yukon is on the verge of total collapse. In September of this year the Government of the Yukon issued a series of detailed proposals for recovery which were presented to the Western Committee of Cabinet on September 10. Since then no response has been forthcoming from the federal Government. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

That the federal Government move immediately to support the imaginative initiatives proposed by the Yukon Government before the Territory is reduced to a complete economic disaster area.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REACTION TO INTRODUCTION OF CLOSURE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, because legislation to enact a bill entitled Canagrex is before the House of Commons with the vice/vise of closure, and since the Bill would create yet another Crown corporation when the Auditor General has just stated that 480 Crown corporations are a subgovernment without accountability, and because Clause 14 of the Canagrex legislation gives the Government extraordinary powers of control over farm management, production, and sales, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this Parliament warn the Government that whenever it introduces closure simultaneously, on two stages of debate, and before any debate on the said stages has taken place, and does so while debate on another issue is taking place, it should continue to understand that there will be a parliamentary price to pay.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE HONOURABLE MEMBER FOR YUKON

CONGRATULATIONS ON TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION TO HOUSE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, today marks a quarter century of service by a parliamentary pugilist who is loved by the Tories, feared by the Speaker, barely tolerated by the Liberals, and ignored by the NDP. This gentleman is nevertheless universally admired for his knowledge of procedure and his ability to use it to frustrate his opponents. Many the hapless MP has had his verbal breakaway stopped short by our parliamentary Eddie Shack.

Given this auspicious occasion, I would like to take this opportunity to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Members of this House extend their unanimous congratulations to the Hon. Member for Yukon on 25 years of distinguished service to his Party and to our nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: With this reservation, that the Speaker is not afraid of him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you for that.

BANKS AND BANKING

CUT IN SERVICES TO RURAL COMMUNITIES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Banks across the country are cutting back services to their communities while maintaining the spread between interest rates and loans. Several branches in one-back towns in my constituency have closed. The others have restricted their hours of operation. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That the Government instruct the federally chartered banks to cease their current practice of cutting services to rural communities by closing or restricting branch operations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, since Canada's new Charter of Rights and Freedoms enshrines freedom of association under Section 2(d), I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House agree that the right of free association for the purpose of discussing terms and conditions of employment applies to all people in Canada, including employees of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

AIR CANADA

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST EMPLOYEES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Air Canada is offering management personnel a golden handshake of up to two years' salary for voluntary separation, but refuses to make an offer on similar terms to its other employees, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House instruct the minister of Transport and the President of Air Canada to remove their discrimination against Air Canada employees who made Air Canada successful.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES LEGISLATION ON OIL DRILLING RIG EMPLOYEES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the enactment by the U.S. Congress through an abuse of procedure, adding to a commercial fisheries bill enforcing the Pacific Fisheries Agreement by the U.S. with Japan, certain provisions affecting Canadians and other non-U.S. personnel who work on U.S.-owned oil drilling rigs engaged to drill in offshore areas outside the U.S., which provisions remove the right of non-Americans or their survivors to seek compensation in U.S. courts for injury or death caused while working on U.S. rigs outside U.S. waters when there is compensation available by law in the country of the victim, legislative provisions already objected to by Canada and other countries but enacted under lobbying pressure from U.S. oil rig and insurance companies, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Government of Canada protest in most vigorous terms to the President of the U.S. and to the U.S. Congress with respect to the enactment of the said legislation and that the Government request President Reagan to veto the legislation, and that if such a Canadian protest is ineffective and the legislation becomes law, that Canada take the necessary steps to refuse permission for U.S.-owned oil drilling rigs to operate within Canadian territorial waters and the Canadian 200-mile economic zone until such time as the legislation is revoked.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

PROPOSED UNITED STATES COUNTERVAILING DUTIES ON CANADIAN LUMBER

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question was for the Minister of External Affairs. In his absence, I would like to address it to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the proposed imposition of countervailing duties by the United States on our lumber exports, to the tune of 65 per cent of current market prices. These initiatives by the United States are a clear reflection of this Government's policies of economic nationalism and anti-Americanism.

• (1415)

Has this crucial problem, in light of the importance of our lumber industry in Canada, been discussed in Cabinet? Understanding that the Ministry of Trade is giving every possible assistance to the industry defending itself before the tribunal that has been established in the United States and the International Joint Commission, what other steps is the Government taking directly to protect our industries from this crippling imposition of countervailing duty on our lumber?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister responsible for International Trade and myself both made public statements on this when we were in British Columbia about ten days ago. In sum, what we are doing is co-operating with the industry and the Province in presenting our case to the United States tribunal to indicate that this is not a question of hidden subsidy or of dumping, and that the complaints by the United States lumber industry, are unjustified in this particular case.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, recognizing that the administration in the United States does not have direct jurisdiction over the Commerce Committee that has been studying this question and will make its recommendations on March 7, and in light of the importance of the industry, a 65 per cent imposition of countervailing duty would spell the demise of the lumber industry in Canada, an industry on which, not just in British Columbia, but throughout Canada, we rely very heavily in terms of our exchange rate, our foreign earnings, has the hypothesis been considered, in the event that such a duty would be imposed, of the steps the Government could take in terms of taking a shot in what would obviously be a trade war? Has the Government considered any reciprocal action in the event that this duty would be imposed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, not is only the Hon. Member's question hypothetical, since he asked what would we do if such and so happened, but it seems to me he is taking a very pessimistic view of the rights of the Canadian industry and workers on this particular occasion.

We know that the difficulties in the United States arise from the fact that stumpage fees or payments have been put rather high by the authorities down there at a time when they thought there was going to be a boom in industry. They are stuck now with these high stumpage rates, whereas Canada has lower stumpage rates.

We think that the sound reasoning of this will prevail, as indeed, thanks to Government representations, it has prevailed recently in the case of the trucking industry, in the case of the uranimum limitation of imports to the United States and so on. These are all areas where the Government has been making representations and where the results have been encouraging from the reaction of the United States. We hope it will be the same in the case of the lumber problem.

APPROACH TO UNITED STATES OFFICIALS—REQUEST THAT GATT CONSIDER ISSUE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I will direct my final question to the Prime Minister. Have any direct approaches been made to the administration of the United States with regard to this matter, and has any approach been made to GATT? May I ask the Minister of External Affairs has this matter been discussed at the recent GATT talks? Could we ask GATT to consider this matter concurrently with U.S. commerce committees and the International Trade Commission?

Two questions: has an official approach been made to the administration in the United States, and has GATT been asked to concern itself with this question?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, yes, indeed, we have discussed this question with the American authorities. Secretary of State Shultz is fully informed about the Canadian views. The matter was discussed with him when he was in Ottawa, and last week we discussed the matter further in Brussels. Therefore the United States is fully apprised of our views and fully aware that we do not accept the notion that there is any subsidy involved in the system of stumpage that exists in Canada. If there was a process under way now in the United States and, of course, at a certain point there was a determination that a subsidy did exist which we found unjustified, we would then consider taking the matter to the GATT.

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

ALLEGATIONS MADE BY MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, now that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism has seen the light and withdrawn that ill-conceived manual, I want to clear up the other matter that I raised yesterday in the House of Commons. Therefore I direct my question to the Secretary of State.

It was revealed yesterday that the Minister of Labour made some very serious allegations about the Court of Canadian Citizenship and its judges. According to a letter written by Judge Alice McKeown, then national co-ordinator of Citizenship Judges, to the then Secretary of State, Toronto judges met on January 8 of this year to discuss the "very serious allegations" made by the Minister of Labour and they unanimously passed four resolutions refuting the Labour Minister's allegations, and stated that the court's credibility had been seriously undermined, especially in view of the widespread circulation of the Minister's letter. Has the Secretary of State followed up on the accusations made by the Minister of Labour? If so, were the findings of the investigation relayed to the Minister, and was Judge McKeown's letter, with the Toronto judges' resolutions attached, as requested by Her Honour, distributed to the METPAC group, the Liberal organization in Toronto, that received the Minister of Labour's original allegations?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the contents of the letter that was sent to my predecessor at the Department of the Secretary of State. It is correct that the Toronto judges met, that they were advised of the points raised by the Minister of Labour in his letter, that the issues raised by the National Co-ordinator were brought to the attention of the then Secretary of State, and consequently, it did not seem to serve any purpose to pursue the questions raised, since the judges had answered satisfactorily the questions raised by the Minister of Labour in his letter.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Minister has not answered the question. He did not answer whether the findings relayed to the Minister of Labour, and the resolutions from Her Honour, as requested by Her Honour.

I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Labour, who was quoted as saying he did not know what happened to his recommendations, that he just let them hang there and did not follow them up, and in view of the answer just received from the Secretary of State, it is obvious that the Minister of Labour has misled us, has seriously undermined the credibility of the Citizenship Courts and has destroyed the morale of the Citizenship Court judges. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he will do the honourable thing for a change and demand the resignation of the Minister of Labour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Because many Members on both sides of the House have invested much time in negotiations with our counterparts in the United States Congress, and especially since farm income is projected to drop by 17 per cent this year from last year, is the Minister prepared to help set up a meeting with our U.S. counterparts, on grain sales, giving special attention to the fact that neither of us should sell below our farmers' cost of production as we are now doing, especially since we control about 70 per cent of the world's export grains?

• (1425)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I have looked back at the history of these relationships and I found that, traditionally, separation has existed in negotiations on subjects of this nature between parliamentarians or Congressmen and representatives of Governments. Therefore, what goes on between parliamentarians is their own business. I can only say that continuing that tradition would be a wise thing to do. Discussions of this kind can always be useful, but it has been found wise, I repeat, in the past not to mix the governmental and parliamentary or Congressional representatives.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER FACILITATE PARLIAMENTARY DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. That is an interesting suggestion, but the Minister knows that Members of this House have a very difficult time arranging for those types of meetings because we simply do not have the tools with which to do that, particularly the financial tools. I wonder if the Minister would at least give us the ability to organize such a meeting through the offices of his Department, or the Department responsible for the Wheat Board, in order that we can have the financial tools to set up such a meeting, which is most important at this time because Government officials are failing to come up with this type of agreement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not want to be rude, but meetings of that kind have been held in the past; consequently, ways and means were found, obviously, in the past to hold them. I can only refer to the past as indicating how it can be done, but I will take the question into further consideration.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISING OF CHRISTMAS MESSAGES BY QUEBEC LIBERAL MPs

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications, if I could get the Minister's attention. We have learned that in the past 24 hours the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has made both broadcasting and producting time available to Liberal Members of Parliament in the Province of Quebec for the dissemination of television messages over the Christmas period. I have subsequently checked and confirmed that this has not happened for Members of the Opposition in Winnipeg, Edmonton, or in any other part of Canada. I see the Liberal Member from the Province of Quebec sees this as a joking matter. He is laughing. I assure him the people of Canada do not like this abuse of the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I have not finished. Considering that the television producer has said that this kind of partisan decision is not normal for the CBC, or at least until recently, my two questions to the Minister are this: Who made this decision and, second, will the Minister take immediate steps to ensure that this partisan Liberal practice at the CBC stops?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question, which once again shows he has no idea of what the situation is in that particular part of the Province of Quebec. The station in Matane was formerly a private station which traditionally—and this is done by many other private stations throughout Canada, including the Western provinces mentioned by the Hon. Member—offered air time to Members of Parliament so they could broadcast Christmas and New Year's messages and thus reach their constituents in remote areas, as the Hon. Member may have understood. In any case, this year again, the stations in question decided to invite Members of Parliament to broadcast their messages for the holiday season. The President of the CBC discussed the matter with me this morning, and after this review of the situation, it seems that the President of the CBC will either have to offer the same services to all Members of this House or otherwise give orders to drop a tradition that started in one area of the Province of Quebec.

REQUEST THAT LIBERAL PARTY PAY FOR PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the President of the CBC reconsidered the policy as soon as he read newspaper reports and realized that what was going on was revealed to the public. That is what happened. But considering that the decision the Minister talked about is no longer a private decision, considering that other Liberal Members of Parliament—I repeat, other Liberal Members—have used a number of hours of production time, or requested production time already from the CBC, I would like to ask the Minister, in addition to correcting bad judgments in the past, since production of some programs for Liberal Members has already been done, will the Liberal Party, just for once, show a little integrity and pay back the CBC the money that went for those programs.

• (1430)

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the CBC would be delighted to offer the same services to Members of the New Democratic Party, elected in the Province of Quebec. Although it is unfortunate for the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, the people of Quebec are far too intelligent to elect his members. I may add that the service is not only offered to local Liberal members but also, and it is the same service to which the Leader of the New Democratic Party is objecting, to bishops, parish priests and other locally known people. If I understand correctly, he objects to the fact that in this particular area of the Province of Quebec, mayors, bishops and other moral, religious and civil authorities are able to offer their best wishes to their fellow citizens.

Mr. Andre: You would not know right from wrong if it hit you over the head.

Mr. Clark: Go forge an order.

RAILWAYS

SCHEDULED ABANDONMENT OF LINE FROM FERRLOW JUNCTION TO DINOSAUR, ALTA.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I am sorry you have had so much difficulty with those noisy Liberals.

The Minister of Transport will know that the railway line from Ferrlow Junction to Dinosaur, a distance of 103 miles, has been scheduled for abandonment on August 31, 1983. Is the Minister aware that, in the middle of that 103 miles of line, Gulf Oil has made a large oil strike which some claim is the equivalent of the Pembina Field, and other reports are that it is probably one of the largest oil strikes in western Canada? Would the Minister have his office alerted to that because it may be necessary for the Minister involve himself personally in the saving of that railway line for the moving of equipment to the oil field?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will get myself further informed on that subject. But it is a traditional event that, when a branch line is about to be abandoned, suddenly there are boundless resources found around it which would seem to justify not abandoning the line. It is a customary pattern in Canadian economic life.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I am quite aware of the alternative courses of action which are available for defending that railway line, and those actions are already underway. I want the Minister to be ready himself.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER HOLD DISCUSSIONS WITH GULF OIL

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, with that in mind I am wondering if the Minister would investigate this matter and, having done so, whether he would consider calling to an in-camera discussion representatives of Gulf Oil with respect to the size of that field and its development potential, with a view to having the Commission recommend to the Minister whether or not that rail line ought to be preserved?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will make sure that this particular circumstance was taken into consideration by the Canadian Transport Commission when the decision was made. There is an appeal procedure to the Minister, and I will do everything I can to make absolutely sure that fairness and justice are carried out in this particular matter.

METRIC CONVERSION

POSSIBLE PROSECUTION OF GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has been very diligent recently in saying that he is going to prosecute those who do not use the metric system. Is he indeed going to prosecute government Departments which do not use the metric system, particularly those Departments that are his responsibility and which are not using the metric system?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that legislation was passed, and regulations were approved following its passage to govern certain aspects of the metric system as it applies to the sale of gas, the sale of furniture and the sale of food that is weighed and sold in retail stores. These are the three areas where the legislation is in force, and these are the only areas with respect to which warnings were issued.

WEIGHING OF MAIL IN POST OFFICES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, does the Minister intend to use the same diligence with post offices which are not using metric scales in the weighing of mail, since they also come under his responsability, and post offices in Ontario do not have metric scales?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hang them!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am going to check the allegation made by the Hon. Member, and if the law is not being complied with, steps will certainly be taken to ensure compliance by all those concerned, including the Post Office.

TRADE

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS ON EUROPEAN AIRBUS PROJECT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. Will the Minister give us the status of negotiations with Airbus and the Government's proposal to build a factory in Quebec? Secondly, has he considered the effect of such an enterprise on other airplane manufacturers in Canada and their Canadian parts suppliers?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will be aware of the fact that negotiations for the location of industries in Canada is a subject matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It would be better that the question be directed to him in relation to the negotiations for the establishment of a plant in this country.

REASONS FOR SELECTION OF AIRBUS PROJECT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, as the Minister responsible for International Trade, would the Minister tell the House why the Government decided to go with Airbus instead of giving encouragement to manufacturers in North America, such as McDonnell-Douglas, Lockheed and Boeing, to the plants of which Canadian suppliers have already been supplying parts?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): The Hon. Member asks a question which again might be better directed to the Minister of Industry. Let me, in a general and brief manner, indicate to him that in any such negotiations involving either the Department of Industry or, in a smaller manner, the Department of Trade, we are concerned with what is the best commercial advantage to Canada in maximizing job opportunities for Canadians. He can be well assured that the Minister of Industry has that goal very much in mind in negotiations on this matter.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS EXPORTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. I have before me the text of a letter from the Reagan White House, specifically from the assistant to the President, to 75 Congressmen, revealing plans to intensify pressure on Canada to reduce the price of natural gas which we export to the United States. As well, I have a quote from the Minister to the Energy Committee last week where he said, "So should we have a more flexible approach for prices? I say no for the time being because I want to make sure the Canadian producers get the maximum possible price, maximum possible income".

Would the Minister confirm there are United States-Canada energy talks planned for early 1983, and would he give this House his iron-clad assurance that he will take the same position he advanced in committee and not cave in to American pressure to lower our natural gas prices?

• (1440)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not know of any specific plans for meetings with officials in the United States about this problem at this time. Of course we are willing to talk with them, but the statement I made in committee remains, that is, we will try to get the maximum return for producers in Canada. Of course, if some Congressman can make noises in the United States it is his privilege, but the policy will be one that will benefit Canadians first.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, this is not some Congressman speaking; it is the text of a letter from the office of the President of the United States.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER HOLD DISCUSSIONS WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister is confused in this. Yesterday a Bill was introduced by U.S. Congressman Thomas Corcoran to cut off Canadian gas exports if a new, lower price could not be negotiated. In view of what was said in the letter from the President about negotiations, and in view of what has been said about pending negotiations, would the Minister be prepared to discuss the matter with representatives of the British Columbia industry before any such negotiations take place? In British Columbia, for instance, $200 million is at stake. Would the Minister be prepared to discuss the matter with the industry, which will tell him that if he lowers the price we will not sell any more gas and therefore will not get any more money. In the event of discussions coming up, would the Minister commit himself to discussing this with the industry, especially in British Columbia?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, that is what we are doing all the time. We talk with the industry. I have been meeting with the Association of Producers in Canada and I have received papers from some producers in western Canada. I talked with the Minister from B.C., and on Monday I will meet with the new Minister of Energy for Alberta. There is a lot of consultation.

Of course, Madam Speaker, I do not get scared because a Bill is introduced in the House of Representatives in the United States. I have been around for 20 years and know that many of these Bills never become law in the United States.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I would remind the Minister that there is a Bill plus a letter from the President of the United States.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL OIL PRICING AGREEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, let me put this question to the Minister apropos of his discussions with the Provinces. The Minister is aware that our gas prices are tied to our oil prices and that the National Energy Program, which he must administer, was premised on oil prices going up. In fact, under the control of OPEC, world oil prices are going down.

Will the Minister guarantee to the Canadian consumer that in his discussions with the producing Provinces he will not change the provision that the Canadian consumer will not have to pay any more than 75 per cent of world oil price at the pump, no matter what the world oil price goes to?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, that is the policy as voted by the House of Commons, and I will respect the House of Commons. We do not have to introduce a Bill on that subject at this time.

I think the policy is quite clear. We have a Canadian price for old oil, we have the international price for new oil, and we have a blended price for Canadian oil. For the old oil it is 75 per cent of the international price. The policy remains the case.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

SETTING OF FREIGHT RATES FOR TRANSPORTATION OF CANOLA PRODUCTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will have received a telex from the three prairie Ministers of Agriculture urging him to rescind the very exorbitant 40 per cent increase in the minimum compensatory freight rate as it applies to canola products. They have asked him to use his good offices to rescind this increase until such time as a review of the costing order is conducted, as recommended by the CTC, and until such time as the CTC could hold a full hearing on the whole issue of minimum compensatory rates as they apply to canola products. Is the Minister actively considering taking action as requested by the provincial Ministers of Agriculture?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as former Minister of Transport, my hon. friend will know that, under an order of Cabinet of 1976, canola crushers are given a rate which is the minimum compensatory rate. He also knows that under the Railway Act, Section 276, the minimum compensatory rate cannot be less than the variable cost incurred by the railways in transporting such goods. I have a legal opinion on the subject. Consequently, there was no way the CTC could prevent the increase of the rate by 40 per cent for a period of two years. There was no way anything other than that could be done under the law.

The reference to a review by the CTC is, I understand, only on procedural matters and will not have a direct effect on the final rate.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Since the CTC recognized that there were serious reservations about the costing order and the procedure under which the cost was arrived at, it has included in its decision the recommendation that this review should take place. All the Ministers are asking for, and all that we are asking for, is that the Minister of Transport take cognizance of that fact and use his good offices to ensure that a proper costing order is put in place and that the producers and the Provinces have a fair hearing on this matter.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat what I said earlier. The information

I have is that this review on the procedural matter is not of importance in the establishment of the rate itself. I think my hon. friend will have to wait for an announcement, which will come one day, on our own western initiative. It might provide possibilities for making savings on the transportation system as a whole that would be of importance to the crushing industry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BRANDT COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This week, when he met members of the Brandt Commission in Ottawa, did he give support or a commitment by the Government concerning the principal proposal emanating from the Ottawa meeting of the Commission, namely, that a world conference on international financial institutions should be held with a view to enlarging the facilities thereof, in order to meet the mounting world crisis of debt?

Did the Prime Minister consider a commitment to the publication of a strategy for international economic co-operation, bearing in mind that the last such strategy of the Canadian Government for 1975-80 has expired and we are left with no published sense of direction of where Canada is going on this issue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the meetings that I had with members of the Brandt Commission and several of its special advisers, as well as other guests. I want to tell him that no specific representations were made to me on behalf of the Commission at that luncheon, which was at a very large round table. We had discussions on many subjects relating to North-South but I was not asked to provide, on behalf of the Government, any answers to any specific recommendations which they would presumably be making in a statement some time next week, perhaps, which would eventually be published in six or eight weeks.

At the time I met with them they had not finished drafting their position paper and therefore did not ask me anything specific such as the Hon. Member has mentioned.

APPOINTMENT OF CIDA PRESIDENT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister could turn to the second part of my question on the need for a published strategy on international development co-operation. The lead agency, namely CIDA, has been without a president for some seven weeks, Mr. Marcel Massé having been moved from that position. Can the Prime Minister indicate the reason for such a lengthy delay? What criteria is he employing in looking for a new president of CIDA, bearing in mind that it is passing through the most crucial period in its entire history, at a time when the human need is greater than ever before, and the resources of Canada are more constrained than ever before?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the criteria would be to find the person best able to deal with the problems which the Hon. Member refers to, although he seems to have put into his question some allegation about Canada's role and participation which are unfounded.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, since it concerns Government priorities. As he will be aware by now, welfare rolls in the country have mushroomed. In British Columbia one in every 13 people will be on welfare before the end of the winter. In Quebec welfare cases are growing at twice the rate of the rest of the country. In cities across Canada welfare cases are increasing. In Winnipeg, there has been an increase in cases of 131 per cent above last year. We now have soup kitchens. The Government's programs to date have had about the impact of a wet noodle.

When will the Prime Minister be prepared to take some action that will put people back to work instead of forcing them onto welfare, in light of the Prime Minister's own acknowledgement at the Liberal Convention of November 5 of the need for a public works program right across the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member's concern with the question is other than purely rhetorical, he will know that the Minister of Finance is meeting this day with the Ministers of Finance of the Provinces to discuss the very serious unemployment problem that we have.

PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I am very much aware that the Minister of Finance is meeting with his counterparts from the provinces. What I want to know is where the federal Government stands. Going into these federal-provincial meetings, top federal officials have acknowledged that the economy can now afford a full scheme of public works. Why will the Prime Minister not implement his promise to the Liberal Convention of a public works program to rebuild the infrastructure in communities right across the country so that people can work rather than live off welfare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, since the statement made by the Minister of Finance in late October, our Ministers have been meeting with provincial counterparts precisely to discuss ways in which we could assist job creation in areas which are partly under provincial jurisdiction. These meetings are ongoing; and some successes have already been achieved. I repeat that the Ministers of Finance are meeting today to discuss that very type of subject.

INCOME TAX

REVIEW OF TAX ASSESSMENTS FOR YOUTH FOR CHRIST WORKERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. A well known non-profit national organization, respected for many years for its work among young people with severe social problems, has historically been given tax advantages to help its cash flow problems. This organization is known as Youth for Christ. The Tax Department has now decided to reassess the taxes of the workers of this organization as far back as two years and if necessary will garnishee up to 50 per cent of their wages for outstanding taxes. Why has there been this change in policy within the Tax Department concerning these youth workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I am not aware of the particular case referred to by the Hon. Member. Once I have looked at the facts and obtained further information, I shall be able to give him a more satisfactory answer.

ATTITUDE OF TAX OFFICIALS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister would he also give these faceless officers, who telephone these workers, a few lessons in human decency, and tell them not to laugh at these people who are hard-pressed when it comes to their income. They are trying to negotiate their position. Is it a policy of his Department to go after individual workers who have very few resources with which to defend themselves rather than contacting national headquarters? Is it because they fear that national headquarters might have some corporate lawyers who could defend the workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, in my previous answer, I indicated to the Hon. Member that I was not aware of the facts of the specific case to which he was referring. The Hon. Member will understand that since I am not aware of what happened, I can hardly make any kind of judgment, either with respect to the conduct of departmental officials or the circumstances mentioned by the Hon. Member.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

LEGALITY OF LEVY ON MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. A difference of opinion exists between the Canadian Dairy Commission and the Auditor General's Department on the legality of the levy that is taken from milk producers. The Auditor General has sought the advice of two legal firms which claim the procedure is illegal. The Canadian Dairy Commission has the advice of the Department of Justice which thinks the procedure is legal. On whose side is the Minister of Agriculture?

An Hon. Member: All sides.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am on the legal side.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Towers: That is a really intelligent comment from a stupid Minister of Agriculture, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, with regard to the investigation that is taking place in the Dairy Commission concerning $30 million misappropriation, in view of the fact that the RCMP are now investigating this matter, can the Minister of Agriculture tell us when the RCMP are going to report?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I will not refer to the kind of a Member I think the Hon. Member is. He made mention of the kind of Minister he thought I was, and that is his right, I guess.

Justice lawyers have advised us properly in many, many instances. I can think of only one or two instances when they have advised us improperly—maybe what they thought was properly but it turned out not to be the right advice. When the Hon. Member talks about what the RCMP are doing, I answered that same question in the House some time ago. It is not my duty to put pressure on the RCMP. They do not come under my Department. They are under a different Department and they report to a different Minister. They do not report to me.

Mr. McDermid: Thank heavens for small mercies.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF CANADA PACKERS' PLANT IN CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Small Business in the absence of the Minister responsible for Regional Development. Canada Packers in Charlottetown has recently announced that it plans to close its plant next September. The plant is Prince Edward Island's largest private sector employer. Will the Minister tell the House whether the Government of Canada has received any kind of overture from Canada Packers Incorporated for Government assistance with the building or expansion of any facility, similar to the one in Charlottetown, elsewhere in Canada? In the event it has, will the Minister agree that it is utterly senseless for the Government of Canada to be assisting industry, in effect, to transfer jobs from one part of the country to another, rather than creating new employment?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the situation. I am not aware that any representation has been made, but I will certainly consult with my colleague and report to the Hon. Member.

QUERY RESPECTING NEGOTIATIONS TO KEEP PLANT OPEN

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Regional Development I will direct my supplementary question to an Acting Minister, probably the Minister of Veterans Affairs who has special Cabinet responsibility for this particular area. Is the Government of Canada pursuing with the Government of Prince Edward Island, and with Canada Packers, options for keeping open Canada Packers' plant in Charlottetown instead of having it close in September as scheduled?

Madam Speaker: I am sorry; I was a little distracted by documents being presented to me. I have the impression that the Hon. Member was asking a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs because he comes from Charlottetown. It is not his ministerial responsibility. That question should be addressed to another Minister.

Mr. McMillan: Madam Speaker, in the event, may I address the same question to the Minister responsible for Small Business, although the Minister for Veterans Affairs has particular responsibilities for negotiations concerning Canada Packers on Prince Edward Island.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Department knows about the problem of Canada Packers in Prince Edward Island, and as I already pointed out to the Hon. Member two weeks ago, contacts have been made and there are ongoing programs that can help both the company and its employees. Discussions are being held at the present time, and as these evolve, it will be possible to inform the Hon. Member further. The Department is aware of the situation and is taking all possible action to help the people concerned.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF PACIFIC FLEET RATIONALIZATION PLAN

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister has challenged the fishermen in British Columbia to come up with recommendations that are alternatives to Doctor Pearse's commission of inquiry recommendations, particularly those concerning a reduction in the fleet. Would the Minister now be prepared to release to the public the Pacific fleet rationalization plan which might help in that attempt to meet some alternatives? He has had this report for one month now.

MR. NIELSEN—POINT OF ORDER RAISED PRIOR TO ADJOURNMENT OF HOUSE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOTE TALLY BY CLERK ASSISTANT—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: At this time I would like to rule on the two points of order which were raised by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) yesterday concerning events which occurred in the House on Tuesday evening last. In order to proceed in a logical manner, I propose to review and reply to the events in a chronological sequence.

On Tuesday, December 14, 1982, after the motion concerning Standing Order 75C was moved, the Hon. Member for Yukon moved. "That the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre be now heard". Following the taking of the yeas and nays on the recorded division, the Clerk rose, bowed to the Speaker and declared the votes in both official languages, as is the custom, after which I declared that the motion was lost.

Many Members have argued that, because they did not hear the announcement of the tally, they were confused as to whether or not the division was properly concluded. The important aspect here is the declaration by the Speaker concerning the fate of a motion and not really whether or not the announcement of the tally by the Clerk is heard by all Hon. Members. It might be that for technical reasons the announcement is not audible to all.

In the case before us, I can state to the House that the Clerk did announce the result, that I did hear the announcement and that I acted accordingly by declaring that the motion was lost. It was at that time that an Hon. Member could have risen to challenge the procedure. However, no one did so.

As a consequence of the decision of the House I stated, as found at page 21587 of Hansard, that:

The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has the floor—

As I do on other occasions, such as when a Bill is referred to a Committee of the Whole, I then say "Pursuant to Standing Order 54, I do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole", announcing the consequences of a motion that had just been put to the House. I was not, at that time, recognizing the Minister for the purpose of making a speech. In any event, I continued my statement by declaring:

—and it now being ten o'clock, the House is adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

I refer Hon. Members to a very similar incident which occurred on March 24, 1981, as reported at page 8568 of Hansard.

After I had announced the adjournment of the House, the Hon. Member for Yukon brought to my attention that he had been attempting to rise on a point of order. As I indicated yesterday, I had not seen him rise. I accept the procedural argument that a point of order should be raised at the earliest possible opportunity. However, the fact remains that the House was adjourned before I became aware of the Hon. Member's attempt to raise a point of order. Nevertheless, I asked the House to allow me to recognize the Hon. Member but it refused, and therefore there was nothing more that the Chair could do.

In summary, after a careful review of the events, I am satisfied that all procedures were followed according to our established rules and practices. The question of the validity of a division is of fundamental essence in our proceedings. By bringing this point forward, the Hon. Member has given me the opportunity to elaborate upon it. This, I appreciate. Therefore, I must rule that the Hon. Member has no point of order.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on the usual Thursday point of order which concerns House business. May I ask the Government House Leader what we will be doing this afternoon and this evening, and what the business will be for Friday and the remaining three days of next week. May I ask him at the same time to inform us whether he intends to bring forward a motion for the purpose of changing the composition of the striking committee of the House so that it might commence discussions before Christmas as to the committee numbers and composition prior to our departure on December 22, and in anticipation of those committees commencing work under the new experimental rules immediately upon our return in January.

I would also like to say to the Minister that should we divide on the Standing Order 75C process that is now before the House this afternoon in sufficient time, we would be prepared to deal with Bill C-98, the Agricultural Products Standards legislation, and to pass it before the hour of adjournment this evening.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, with respect to the striking committee, I will take the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Yukon under serious consideration. As a matter of fact, he knows that we have begun discussions. I intend to continue these discussions during the remainder of the day, if possible, and if not, as soon as possible.

Concerning the Business of the House for today, we will call the motion under Standing Order 75C in the name of the Minister of Agriculture. That will be followed by the third reading stage of Bill C-98. I understand that we were supposed to deal with Bill C-136 but an agreement could not be reached between the Minister and his critics. Therefore, we might call Bill C-136, which is to rebate interest for small business, later this week. Therefore, we will deal with Standing Order 75C on Bill C-85 today, followed by Bill C-98, and I understand that this Bill will go through before the end of the day. I have the same commitment from the NDP as well. Tomorrow we will deal with Bill C-132, which is the capping bill relating to Family Allowances.

[Translation]

Next week we will continue the study of Bill C-132. I understand that Bill C-131 is expected to be reported to the House within the next few hours. In that case, and if we can do so, we will continue the study of Bill C-132 and Bill C-131, which concerns Old Age Security. Assuming that those two bills could be referred to committee before the end of the day on Tuesday or Wednesday, we would then consider Bill C-136, if we can reach agreement. Otherwise we will go on with Bill C-139 relating to income tax. All that is, of course, subject to changes, in which case I will give reasonable notice. There is a possibility that Bill C-85 could be called for debate before Christmas, but in light of what I have just said, it is highly unlikely if the debates go on smoothly and if we do get practical results with the other bills.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NOWLAN—REMARKS OF MR. TRUDEAU DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Madam Speaker: I have a notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I gave you the required letter and I will be very brief. I have checked yesterday's Hansard. As Your Honour knows and can see from page 21596, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in reply to one of my questions, said:

> I suspect the Hon. Member has made those quotations up as he makes up a lot of his questions.

It submit that it is clear from that reply that the Prime Minister was certainly inferring that I fabricated quotes that I read to him in the question. I believe that under the rules of Beauchesne, that is certainly most unparliamentary. I also gave the Prime Minister a letter earlier this morning indicating that I was going to try to catch your eye and raise this matter today. He may have other business and perhaps that is why he is not here.

However, I do believe that this goes a little too far. If the Prime Minister wants to disown the authorship of the article written by Pierre Elliot Trudeau in April, 1963—

• (1510)

Madam Speaker: Order. I do have to interrupt the Hon. Member because I thought he was rising on a question of privilege, but he gave me notice of a point of order and a question of privilege. He raised the point of order.

On the point of order, I am afraid I must tell him that "made up" are not considered to be unparliamentary words and that if he is assimilating them to "fabricate" or to other words which are considered to be non-parliamentary, that he cannot do. That is stretching it a bit. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) used the words "made up", which is acceptable, and therefore the Hon. Member does not have a point of order. However, I will hear his question of privilege now.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I will not trespass any further on a point of order because, quite frankly, there are larger things to do in the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—REMOVAL OF MR. GAUTHIER FROM MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES COMMITTEE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I come to my question of privilege in a very serious way. I gave Your Honour a fairly lengthy written explanation and I will try to be almost as short in my verbal explanation of what I consider to be a collective question of privilege from all Hon. Members in this House in view of what happened in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee when the appearance of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was terminated, as far as being a member of that Committee was concerned, having been a Member of that Committee, I understand, almost from the day of his election. Obviously, the Hon. Member himself is perhaps the one who should have raised such a question of privilege. I also understand the narrow definition of "privilege". Privilege can only be raised here in a responsible way if a matter affects the discharge of a Member's duty, or the carrying out of his duties.

I was in the House when the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier made one of the most considered, constructive speeches on Bill C-133. Frankly, I think it was one of the best speeches which have been made in this Parliament since we began the session almost two and half years ago. As a result of that speech, my duty to my constituents was affected in a very positive way, frankly, because instead of quoting many times from the article which I used as the basis for a question yesterday, showing how the then writer and philosopher, Mr. Pierre Elliot Trudeau, now the practising politician as the Prime Minister of this land, castigated, in the most penetrating way—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: —the docile sheep of—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Nowlan: I'm almost—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I want to continue.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's question of privilege concerns the fact that a Member has been removed by a Committee. The Hon. Member, I think, gave me some clue as to what the answer to his question of privilege might be when he said that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier did not raise it himself, probably because he realizes that the matter of appointing members to committees falls under Standing Order 65(4)(b), which I will read to the Hon. Member so he will know that this question does not fall within the purview of a question of privilege. It states:

Changes in the membership of any standing, joint or special committee may be effected by a notification thereof, signed by the Member acting as the Chief Government Whip, being filed with the Clerk of the House who shall cause the same to be printed—

Therefore, the changes do not concern the Speaker. The changes do not fall under the purview of a question of privilege.

The Hon. Member is capable of performing his duties, at any rate. It would have to be the Hon. Member himself who has been affected by the matter raised in his question of privilege. He just told me that he has been affected positively by a speech, which means that he has been able to perform even better than before because of that particular speech. Therefore, I must unfortunately rule that the Hon. Member—no, the Hon. Member may not reply.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member explained to me his question of privilege. It concerned a Member having been struck out of a committee. That is of no concern to the Chair and certainly is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, with respect, I have not even mentioned the Standing Order which you referred to because I do not think it is relevant. That is not my point; and as Your Honour well knows from the three-page letter I submitted—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: —I am talking about implied threats. I am talking about implied threats, which matter is not covered in any Standing Order. That is why I want to be heard for two minutes.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not care about the Standing Order that you read. That is not relevant. I agree with you, it is not relevant.

Madam Speaker: Well, the Hon. Member should care, because those are the Standing Orders which have been determined by the Members themselves, and it is quite clear to me that the matter of appointing members to a committee does not concern the Chair. There has been reference to it this afternoon. There is a striking committee which deals with that, and it does not concern the Chair. The Hon. Member might not like what is going on in this committee, but it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, can I ask the Chair—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: There is such a thing in this House as judicial notice of the affairs and activities of this House.

Madam Speaker: Order. I must say to the Hon. Member that he is in the habit of constantly standing up every time—

Mr. Nowlan: Because you cut me off before I start.

Madam Speaker: —I make some kind of remark to him.

Mr. Nowlan: I was almost finished.

Madam Speaker: The Chair cannot function if every occasion will be seized upon as an opportunity to go into debate with the Chair concerning matters that Hon. Members raise. I do my best and I do study the questions beforehand. I am quite sure that in this case the Hon. Member does not have a question of privilege, and I ask him to abide by that ruling.

MR. ANDRE—USE OF PART OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR FOR GIVING OF ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a small point of order, to place it on the record. This is now the longest session of Parliament in history, and one of the consequences is that Private Members' Hours on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays are no longer in place.

Mr. Nielsen: Since March of 1981.

Mr. Andre: Since March of 1981. The only time left for Private Members' Hour is on Thursday and Friday afternoons. That, I think, impinges on the rights of Private Members.

It strikes me as being non-conducive to harmonious relationships in this Chamber for the Government to choose part of the remaining Private Members' Hours for use in Royal Assent. I would simply like to state for the record that it would show far more sympathy for the backbenchers and would be much more conducive to a harmonious atmosphere if that sensitivity were borne in mind the next time His Excellency is asked to give Royal Assent to a Bill.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, concerning the point of order raised by the Hon. Member, I share, in some small measure, the frustration of the Hon. Member, but probably as a Member who is charged with the specific responsibility of dealing with such legislation as the Income Tax Act. The Hon. Member has indicated that this is the longest sitting of this Parliament—

An Hon. Member: Whose fault is that?

Mr. Cosgrove: —and indeed, it is the longest. There is legislation waiting; for example, legislation flowing from two budgets introduced in the House. I know that all Hon. Members are probably anxious to deal with the matter so that when they return to their constituents during the break over the Christmas period they will have some answers to give those people who are asking for refunds under the income tax provisions.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMPUTER CRIME

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-667, to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act in respect of computer crime.

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to address those issues related to computer use and abuse which have traditionally prevented the courts from adequately coming to grips with the growing problem of computer crime.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BANK ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CONSUMER PROTECTION FROM FRAUD

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-668, to amend the Bank Act (power of Inspector).

He said: Madam Speaker, for many years I know Members have been concerned about the fact that the Inspector General of Banks has no real power to initiate a prosecution if there is internal fraud within a bank. That is, the consumer is not protected against internal fraud. The passage of this Bill would empower the Inspector General of Banks to inspect within the banks for fraud so that the consumer would be protected.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,178 as amended; 4,488; 4,501 and 4,548.

RCMP—PAYMENT TO WITNESSES

Question No. 4,178 (amended)—Mr. MacKay:

1. Is there a general RCMP policy concerning payments to witnesses in criminal trials and, if so (a) what are the details (b) does the policy involve payments beyond expenses incurred in connection with court appearances?

2. Is there a general RCMP policy concerning payments to informers and, if so, what are the details?

3. Is it the policy of the RCMP to withhold from the criminal courts the fact that the accused persons are paid informers of the RCMP?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. (a) Witnesses called by the Crown in criminal cases are entitled to fees and expenses in accordance with the tariffs set by provincial laws or regulations. See also payments to informers in part 2 below. RCMP policy provides for compliance with the schedules and tariffs including Section 772 of the Criminal Code to facilitate these payments.

(b) No, the general policy does not involve payments beyond expenses incurred in connection with court appearances. There is, however, additional policy which deals specifically with the Force's Witness Protection Program and is separate from those witness entitlements provided for by provincial laws or regulations. Payments made in this program pertain only to relocation and cost of living expenses for a witness and family should the life of the witness of his/her family become endangered as a result of co-operation with the Crown or agreement to testify. The payment of moneys or benefits are not authorized to any person simply in return for their testimony.

2. Yes, there is RCMP policy concerning payments to informers. This policy deals with the following: (a) the amount of payments: These payments are authorized at varying levels of authority within the RCMP in accordance with Treasury Board directives. (b) the criteria for payments: In each case the criteria for payment is established by the levels of authority responsible for authorizing payment. They must be satisfied that the expenses are fair and just in relation to the assistance rendered or information received. (c) the selection of recipients: Not all informants or witnesses receive payments. Payments occur only in those circumstances which dictate the need.

Force practice requires, without exception, that where a person was paid for information germane to proceedings at which he will be a witness, full disclosure of all details will be made to the Court.

In Security Service matters, it is not in the interests of maintaining internal security to make public policy concerning payments to informers.

3. No.

CNR—ADVERTISING BUDGET

Question No. 4,488—Mr. Siddon:

1. What amount did the Canadian National Railways spend for advertising in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82?

2. What amount did CNR budget for advertising in the fiscal year 1982-83?

3. What percentage of CNR's fiscal year 1982-83 advertising will be devoted to (a) newspapers and magazines (b) radio (c) television (d) trade show or convention exhibits (e) any other?

4. Did CNR declare a deficit in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 and, if so, what was the extent of that deficit?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: As Canadian National's fiscal year coincides with the calendar year, references to years 1980-81, 1981-82, and 1982-83 have been altered in the relies to read 1980, 1981, and 1982 respectively.

1. (a) $9,601,000, (b) $11,351,000.

2. $10,170,000.

3. (a) 36 per cent, (b) 10 per cent, (c) 37 per cent, (d) 2.3 per cent, (e) 14.7 per cent.

4. (a) No, (b) no.

RESTAURANT AT VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 4,501—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. On what date was the tender let to improve the restaurant facilities at the Victoria International Airport?

2. How many entered bids and which company was the successful bidder?

3. (a) What dates were given in the tender for the beginning and the completion of the work (b) was this undertaking honoured?

4. (a) For what amount was the contract (b) what provisions were made for cost or time over-runs (c) were there cost or time over-runs?

5. On what date will the restaurant be completed and fully operational?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Tender advertising commenced January 22, 1982 with tender close on February 10, 1982.

2. Six companies entered bids and the contract was awarded to the low bidder, Wakefield Construction Ltd. of Victoria on February 17, 1982.

3. (a) The tender documents stipulated the work was to commence within seven days of award of contract (i.e., by February 24, 1982) and that work was to be completed within 130 calendar days from award of contract (i.e., by June 29, 1982). (b) Contractor was on site February 22, 1982 but work was not completed by June 29, 1982 because of delays in delivery of material and rescheduling of construction work to minimize interference with ongoing restaurant operations. This delay was compounded by the construction industry lockout during the month of August.

4. (a) $215,500. (b) No special provisions other than the principles contained in the General Conditions of Contract were applied to this project. The General Conditions of Contract provided for and outlined procedures for assessing, granting and penalizing cost and time over-runs on contract work. (c) There was an over-run of $21,200 on the cost of the contract resulting from designer/site supervisor requested design changes required to rectify conditions encountered during the excavation and construction phases. There was a time over-run because the contractor incurred delays in excess of contract expectations while accommodating the smooth ongoing operation of the restaurant facility during the construction period.

5. Except for minor deficiencies, the above-referenced contract work on the Victoria Restaurant Facilities is complete and the restaurant is and always has been in full operation. The outstanding work still to be done to complete the contract is related to the installation of an electrical transformer. Manufacture and delivery of this transformer is taking longer than anticipated and the completion of the outstanding work is now expected by mid-December, 1982.

Mr. Smith: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that I have had a question on the Order Paper since December 2, 1981. It is a long question but a very simple one to answer. It has to do with the number of employees working in the Solicitor General's Department across Canada. I do not know why it has not been answered. It might be the fact that the Solicitor General does not want us to know that there are possibly more employees in the Department than there are guarding the inmates. At any rate, it has not been answered, it is important for me to know and I hope that the fact that my daughter did not attend school with the Parliamentary Secretary will not inhibit his desire to answer the question.

Secondly, on December 14 I placed a question that relates to a dish being bought by the Department and installed at Elbow Lake Detention Centre. As Members know, the Minister of Communications is somewhat in the glue over his policy regarding satellite dishes, one has been purchased for a minimum security facility. I would like to have that particular question answered.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to look into this matter on behalf of my hon. friend, who is a co-Member of the Parliamentary Prayer Group with myself. I might say to him that we are not afraid to answer a comprehensive question on that matter, as we answered one for the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West which must have weighed ten pounds when it was tabled.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, while the Parliamentary Secretary is still with us I would like to refer a question to him, No. 4,502. While this has been on the Order Paper for a much less period of time than that of my colleague's, it is one that relates to a Bill which is before us for consideration now, Bill C-95, and to the amount of moneys received by the federal Government under a 1979 federal-provincial agreement with respect to lotteries.

I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would give attention to that item and have it answered so that it can be part of our deliberations now. There is a related question, No. 4,531, and we would appreciate the answer to that one as well.

Mr. Smith: I would be happy to look into both of these matters.

Mr. Greenaway: Madam Speaker, I thought the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council used the term "ten pounds", and I was worried that he might find himself in serious trouble with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs! I wonder if he could correct that statement and put it in metric measurement for us, so we can understand what he was talking about.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, it should read 4.37120 kilos!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, being a recipient of this package, I weighed it and the Parliamentary Secretary is wrong on all counts.

Madam Speaker: The remaining questions will stand.

Time Allocation

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan:

That, in relation to Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, up until this time I have witnessed the clear intent on the other side—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where are your friends? Have you no friends? There is nobody sitting near you.

Mr. Whelan: —that they have no intention of letting Bill C-85 move through a speedy reading.

An Hon. Member: You threatened to resign. That really frightened us.

Mr. Whelan: It has been said publicly in some quarters of this House that they will even present, if at all possible, a vote on third reading. For this reason, Madam Speaker, and because this legislation is so vital to the continued growth of agricultural export development in Canada, I neither apologize nor regret moving time allocation. I repeat Madam Speaker, time allocation. So many people have used the terminoloy "closure"—

An Hon. Member: It is the same thing.

Mr. Whelan: This is not closure. Time allocation in the Mother of Parliament is automatic with practically all Bills. There is an order put through in this form if they cannot agree, but 99 per cent of the time they agree on time allocation for second reading, committee stage, and so on, and then for bringing the legislation back into the House. It is all agreed before a Bill even moves into the House for second reading. One would think that the Government was creating something different, some kind of a monster, but time limitation is used in the Mother of Parliament practically all the time.

In Canada, one would almost think when we suggest moving into the twentieth century with parliamentary procedure that we are doing something that is undemocratic. It would be hard to convince anyone in the Mother of Parliament at Westminster that that was undemocratic.

Mr. Andre: Their Ministers resign when they transgress.

Mr. Whelan: They do this, as a matter of fact, every day, and when we suggest doing something like that here, it is looked upon as being something so different. Time allocation functions in Britain and they have used the rule that they abide by about 99 times. What is regrettable is the frustration caused by the attempt to pass this important legislation which will assist agriculture export extension.

In recent weeks we have seen the Conservative Government of Ontario set time allocation on legislation vital to the public good. As I have said, in the British parliamentary system time allocation is a correct and needed mechanism, and we should use it here more often.

Someone accused me the other day—I heard the things they were saying while I was sitting here—of knowing nothing about democracy. I have been elected ever since I was 21 years of age. I used to run an election campaign every year. For someone to tell me that I know nothing about democracy is a little bit much; in fact, it is more than much. I have served on different boards. I have been re-elected to this House several times since 1962, in fact in every election up until 1980. To say that I know nothing of democracy, after seeing some of the things which are done in this House which leave something to be desired, is unjust.

I wonder if some Members understand how democracy works when we see what is attempted here. With regard to Canagrex, efforts to get agreement on this Bill have been stymied, mainly by the Official Opposition who made statements concerning the legislation that in most instances were completely unfounded. I am utterly appalled with regard to what they have said about Canagrex and what it is intended to do.

Some provincial Ministers of Agriculture have been quoted as to what they believe Canagrex is going to do. I suggest that they check the laws, rules and regulations in their provincial legislative assemblies governing their Crown corporations. Over half of them have the power to buy and sell. That is true in every Province in Canada.

In the letter which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), he quoted the Auditor General. However, he did not quote him as far as he should have. The Auditor General is quite happy with what we are going to do about Canagrex. The Members of the Committee are aware of that. In fact, it was said several times in Committee.

In Committee, there were 14 amendments made to the 41 Clauses of the Bill. It has been said that this Minister of Agriculture is uncompromising, that he will not bend, he is inflexible, he is stubborn, he is bull-headed. How often have those kinds of concessions been made? If Hon. Members want to quote the Auditor General, let us hear what he had to say about the Department. Talking about the Department of Agriculture he said:

We found no serious deficiencies in the Department's planning and management activities.

That is what the Auditor General told Parliament in his Annual Report tabled in the Commons last Tuesday. Also, at a press conference he had praise for Canagrex because it is the first time the Government is willing to allow the Auditor General to conduct a full audit of a Crown corporation when he considers it necessary.

I talked to the Auditor General about that. That amendment was brought in by an Opposition Member on the agricultural Committee, the NDP member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). It was accepted by myself as something that would put aside any suspicion of the administration of the Crown corporation Canagrex.

I do not understand why members opposite do not say that the Auditor General has approved it. The Auditor General told me that not only will it be the first time in Canada for any federal or provincial Crown corporation, but the first time for any Crown corporation in the free world that that will be allowed in legislation.

We hear a lot of talk about how badly run the Crown corporations are. One would think that we thought up all the Crown corporations. It was the Conservatives who thought up Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and many others. They are not suggesting that these be abolished.

The Tory opposition to the amended legislation really counfounds me—

Mr. Lewis: Everything does.

Mr. Whelan: —particularly when the Conservative agriculture critic, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), indicated to the Committee that he felt the amendments we had made were reasonable. At that time the former Minister of Agriculture endorsed the proposal which included the buy-and-sell philosophy which has recently been at the centre of controversy surrounding Bill C-85. After four gruelling months before the Standing Committee and after the Government accepted the 14 amendments to the original 42 Clauses, the Hon. Member for Elgin said:

> Madam Chairperson, obviously these amendments appear to be quite acceptable to us . . . Hopefully, I am extremely optimistic that we can make considerable progress and that we can accept the very reasonable option that I think you have put forth. I am going to ask you to understand my position at the moment, and perhaps we might have some further discussion.
> I think really we have dealt with the contentious issues of the Bill and that is a very reasonable offer that you have put forth, but one that I would like to move forward on at the moment and accept and move forward with the clause-by-clause study. I am telling you that once we get a decision from caucus and if that is a positive decision, then I do not think we have to worry about the time frame.

Lo and behold, the Hon. Member for Elgin was not successful when he want to caucus. He may have been more successful yesterday. All that changed quite dramatically when some of his colleagues, who unfortunately seem to lack faith in the current agriculture critic of the Official Opposition, kicked and screamed against the amended legislation, adding to what Mr. Kirk referred to as "paranoia" about the Bill.

Mr. Mazankowski: What did he say?

Mr. Whelan: Kirk, David Kirk—

Mr. Nielsen: What did he say?

Mr. Whelan: The secretary manager of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. All remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Whelan: This is a sound piece of legislation, legislation that has been asked for by the farm organizations—

Mr. Mazankowski: Twenty-five farm organizations oppose it.

Mr. Whelan: What the Hon. Member is scoffing at is the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—

Mr. Mazankowski: They are split on it.

Mr. Whelan: There may be some disagreement within the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: There may be some disagreement in the Opposition Party. There may not be unanimous consent on our side. In a democracy you cannot always expect unanimous consent.

Mr. Taylor: Half of the nation is opposed to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Minister but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) began his remarks by talking about the Mother of Parliament and how we should learn from procedures in the Mother of Parliament. Oh, how I wish that could happen! Oh, how I wish in this country we had a Government of Ministers with the same sense of responsibility as exists in the Mother of Parliament! There there is ministerial responsibility in a real way. When a Minister gets caught misinforming, mismanaging or somehow failing to fulfil his responsibilities, he resigns, as Lord Carrington most recently demonstrated. When have we seen any such behaviour from this sleazy crew? For him to stand up and suggest that the Mother of Parliament is a lesson for us only to the extent of the use of closure shows abysmal ignorance of what Parliaments are supposed to be about.

A respect for conventions and practices is very much at the root of what parliamentary democracy is all about. From that Minister, his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard), you have respect for no traditions or practices. The letter of the law in its precision is the only thing that counts, and that is not always followed. Reliance on that does not create the kind of atmosphere that allows the proper conduct of a parliamentary democracy.

How can the Minister have such gall, after the way he introduced the motion under 75C in the middle of an income tax debate, a debate on a subject having nothing to do with this Bill, and after his House Leader had informed our House Leader and the House Leader of the NDP that their legislative priorities consisted of a whole string of legislation and C-85 was not on any of the lists, except well, well down? After clear indications from the Government that Bill C-85 was not something they hoped to get through before Christmas, the Minister of Agriculture in the middle of an income tax debate stands up and gives notice under Standing Order 75C, in our opinion, totally wrongfully.

Admittedly, the Chair has made judgment on that and said it can be done, but I humbly suggest that it should be examined by the Procedure and Organization Committee of this House. Because if this, what only can be described as "sneaky behaviour" is allowed to become the practice and the norm and is accepted in this House, then the kind of day we had yesterday and the day before are going to become part of the norm as well. I am sure no one wants that.

What was especially sleazy about that notice was that it came within days of the Government House Leader indicating that the Government was certainly interested in parliamentary reform. They were going to co-operate with the spirit of reform, with the spirit of working together to make this institution more meaningful, efficient and effective. But within days of what we thought was a sincere statement of Government policy, we have the behaviour I have referred to from the Minister of Agriculture.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared at this point to suggest that the Government House Leader was misinforming the House. I strongly suspect the Minister of Agriculture was freelancing and for that reason we have not seen the Government House Leader in the House during any of these last few days of rather interesting procedural discussions, which one would think the House Leader of the Government would be very much a part of. I suspect that the Minister of Agriculture, having crawled out of that limb all by himself, was left there on the limb all by himself, and at this moment I do not see a single Minister in the House except for the Minister of Agriculture, which indicates that the rest of his cabinet colleagues do not really want a whole lot to do with him.

This issue of closure which we are debating now on this particular Bill is an affront to the House in the manner in which it was introduced by the Minister of Agriculture. It is an affront to the spirit of parliamentary reform which had been so enthusiastically endorsed a few days earlier by Members on all sides. It is an affront to very, very significant sectors of the agricultural community of this country who find this Bill, in its present form, offensive. It is an affront, Mr. Speaker, to listen to Members of the Government speak about the need for us to be unified, for Canada to work together, to co-operate to overcome the economic problems of this country on the one hand, and on the other hand for the Minister of Agriculture basically to thumb his nose at the major portion of the agricultural industry and say: "I do not care what you think. I want this Crown corporation and I am going to force it through even though I have to trick my own House Leader. I want this Crown corporation."

One wonders if he wants it for the benefit of a little red star on his report card, or for the prospect of there being another high-priced position within a Crown corporation which can perhaps be occupied by himself or his friends at some future date, beyond, as we know, the reach of any parliamentary scrutiny, as evidenced by the Auditor General.

And it is also an affront, Mr. Speaker, to do this just one week after the introduction of the Auditor General's Report on just how out of controls things are in regard to Crown corporations. The Auditor General described it as a hole in the taxpayers' pockets. Money is being spilled to the tune of who knows how much—we are not allowed to find out. No one can find out, not even the Auditor General. But within one week after that condemnation of the way in which Crown corporations are managed in this country, we have this Minister coming forward with closure to force through yet another Crown corporation, and who knows how many more subsidiaries of that Crown corporation are going to be created.

The socialists say a Crown corporation is a good thing and Parliament has no right to know what the Crown corporations are doing, how much they are going to be paid, that we have no right to say whether they can create subsidiaries or how many subsidiaries could be created. The socialists love Crown corporations. The more the merrier. And heaven forbid that the people of Canada should ever be allowed to find out how much these corporations are spending, how much the senior executives are getting, whether they are doing a proper job in fulfilling their mandate. Heaven forbid that Parliament should ever be allowed to investigate and find out. That is what the New Democratic Party are agreeing with. They agree wholeheartedly with that philosophy.

Well, we do not, Mr. Speaker. We accept and believe, and, indeed, have demonstrated that the Auditor General is exactly right, as his predecessor six years ago was exactly right, when he said there is a need for parliamentary oversight. There is a need for the public to know, through their elected representatives, just what Crown corporations are doing, because they are now, in terms of staff, larger than the Government, larger than the official Civil Service. They spend $30 billion-plus per year. For the Minister of Agriculture to say we should respect parliamentary democracy and look to the Mother of Parliament, for example, and on the other hand continue to turn a blind eye, or, indeed, condone the kind of abuse which the Auditor General talks about, is an affront to this House and to this country.

These last two days, Mr. Speaker, were not the way in which I, or my colleagues, would in fact like to see this place operate. We would like to have Parliament be a Parliament in the traditional, classic sense, with some ability to find out what Government is doing, with the authority to control Government spending and to oversee Government operations in a real sense. We have been successfully denied that for years and years and years. The introduction of Standing Order 75C is an affront to this House which we simply cannot tolerate. If The Government tries it again, it is going to have a lot more days like the last few days. I see you are standing, Mr. Speaker; thank you.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise and speak today on this attempt by the Government to limit the debate on Canagrex. I want to begin by saying that it is true that we favour Canagrex. We favour it because we believe it will better serve the vast majority of farmers in this country who have been unable up to now to gain access to markets outside the country for their produce. We believe that Canagrex will serve that kind of purpose.

It was for that reason that I thought the Conservatives were supporting Canagrex when the Bill was first brought forward, because they also spoke on much the same lines—the value of trying to increase the opportunity for Canadian farmers to find markets for their produce outside the country. In fact, if I recall correctly, there was even the hint of a suggestion that this was indeed a Tory Bill reincarnated, that the Conservatives had been intending to bring forth just such a Bill had they lasted longer than the nine months they were in office in 1979.

That is my recollection of what was said and I stand by it. I believe it to be true. I want, however, to deal with one aspect of what was said by the Member who preceded me. One of my colleagues asked me how you call someone a liar in the House of Commons. I told him you cannot. I then tried to think of a way of explaining what was said that was wrong, and I want to put it this way. We have steadfastly demanded accountability from Crown corporations. We in this Party, recognizing the key and crucial role which Crown corporations can and must play in the future development of Canada, on every single occasion where we have been present and voting, on every single occasion where debate has taken place, have insisted that there be measures of accountability included in the legislation which set up the Crown corporation. We did not always have control, but on this particular Bill the Auditor General has said in his own Report, the Annual Report just tabled, that in singling out Canagrex he did so as a model of accountability.

He pointed out that there were two particular aspects of it that he found most acceptable. One was that there is a sunset Clause calling for a full review of Canagrex by Parliament in five years' time, and I think the majority of people believe that is not a bad thing to have happen. More importantly, there is a Clause in the amended Bill, which we will be dealing with in the next few days when it comes from the Committee, requiring a mandatory audit by the Auditor General whenever he deems it necessary. Do you know where that amendment came from, Mr. Speaker? It was moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). That amendment was accepted by the Government because it believed that accountability was important. That amendment came from the NDP, and for any Tory to stand in his place in the House and attempt to leave a false impression that somehow or other we are responsible for the non-accountability of Crown corporations is absolute nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that my concern with this Bill is not with its substance. I believe the Bill will provide an opportunity for Canadian farmers who are currently unable to reach world markets. They will be able to improve their productivity, their sales and cash flow, and thereby improve their standard of living. That is what we favour in this country.

I want to say, however, to the Minister with regard to 75C, that I sincerely regret it has been brought in. I believe that if there are Conservative Members in this House who still believe that there are important things to be said about Canagrex, that there are still important points to be made, that we could have and should have negotiated a sufficient amount of time to allow those points to be made. My position has always been that where there are Members of Parliament who feel strongly enough about a topic, who feel that there is need for further discussion, who think that the public's view has not yet been adequately expressed, then it behooves the House of Commons to try and find that time. For that reason and that reason alone, I find myself unable to support the move by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to close off the debate.

I say that we will indeed support the Bill. We will do so because it is a good Bill and it is supported by any number of farm organizations from coast to coast. It will indeed provide all the things I have said. It is so accountable as to be a model in the eyes of the Auditor General, and I believe that with another two or three, perhaps four, days of debate, passage of the Bill could have been achieved without the use of 75C. If that could have been accomplished, then we could have had a House much more supportive of the measure, we could have had a community much more supportive of the measure, and with that we would have had a measure which undoubtedly would have had much more success in the future. That is what my worry is and for that reason alone we will not support 75C. But we say to the Minister that the Bill will provide a very necessary vehicle and one that we are happy to see in place.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in this short debate on time allocation for Bill C-85. Mr. Speaker, it is very important for the House to realize how vital Bill C-85 is to an entire sector of our agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I hear Members saying that this is closure, that we want to prevent people from having their say, and agricultural groups from pressuring the Government and discussing the alternatives proposed in this bill.

The fact of the matter is that we have worked in committee for at least eighty six hours during which thirty groups were heard and had an opportunity to express their views, and no one prevented them from doing so. Mr. Speaker, you will agree that after eighty-six hours and after hearing thirty different groups, everything has been said about this bill that had to be said. I think it is high time we all realized that this legislation is so important that it should be passed as quickly as possible. Time allocation will, in fact, help all Members to reach agreement on certain terms.

There is a lot of talk about provincial legislation. Here again, there is a tendency to ignore what is happening elsewhere, except for the Federal Government, and in time, this will create a serious imbalance in our country unless the Federal Government takes appropriate action.

I listened earlier to the Member for Calgary who said that the Auditor General tended to criticize all corporations because they were ineffective, and so on. However, the Auditor General happens to have congratulated the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who had the courage to ask for a full audit of the future Canagrex Corporation. The Auditor General congratulated the Minister for having done so and invited other Departments to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, as far as this legislation is concerned, I think we should realize that in this country we have an agro-food sector that is extremely effective and is exporting more and more. Now, if we want to compensate for the deficit on our trade balance, we are going to ask our farmers to increase their exports even more. Today, however, farmers lack the necessary tools to break into new export markets. When we see what is happening in the United States, Mr. Speaker, I, for one, am worried. I am worried that soon we will no longer be able to compete on world markets, because the United States is being very agressive. It is taking an increasingly large share of the market and is trying to sell its agricultural products all over the world, not without a great deal of difficulty, however.

Hon. Members are aware, Mr. Speaker, that Eastern Canada has a number of farming operations for which marketing is a real problem. It is a fact that in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes, we could be more agressive in seeking out these markets. We could then ask farmers to produce more, which would reduce production costs. By producing more, we can keep average production costs down. Some Hon. Members were saying: This is one more corporation that is going to cost the Canadian people $13 million. Mr. Speaker, if we ask our farmers to export several billion dollars worth more than they are exporting at the present time, the entire agricultural sector is going to benefit. The private sector seems to be afraid that it will now have to compete with a Crown corporation for its markets.

If we take a careful look at the objectives of the Canagrex corporation, it is clear that the purpose is not to eliminate but to co-operate with the private sector. Personally, if I were in the private sector, I would use the corporation to get rid of some of the problems we have to cope with in the export sector, because procedures are very complicated and it is a very difficult area to deal with. That is my perspective on the matter. It is therefore to be hoped that the private sector will take a closer look at this legislation and use it for its own benefit and that of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, of course this legislation is not totally unopposed. But when we consider those who met with us those who made representations, it is obvious that a great majority of the people who deal with farmers who defend the rights of farmers, namely the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Quebec UPA, and both the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Federations of Agriculture, have all received this bill enthusiastically and want the government and the other legislators to come to an agreement on this legislation to give it further study and speedy passage. Everyone will certainly agree that the farming community, as with the case of the potato growers, is having serious problems. The same situation prevails throughout the country this year and we could perhaps be more competitive on the export market. However, many producers are left to cope for themselves and have neither the capacity, the resources nor the knowledge to tackle the export market. Once again, we have to realize that Canagrex is not just another bureaucracy. It will not be useless. It will not harm our dealings with other countries. The United States, France and Mexico have now come up with a legislation of this type because many governments are trying increasingly to deal with each other, as governments.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate all the members of the Committee on Agriculture on both sides of the House who for months worked on this legislation. We are satisfied with many clauses of this bill, and we hope that further consideration will be given to those contentious clauses and that to the satisfaction of our farm producers all concerned will agree to give passage to this legislation which will put their productivity once more to the test. Later on, we could also ask Agriculture Canada to do a bit more research on this because of the increased productivity of our farmers with a view to developing more profitable varieties, better suited to the climate of our various regions, and I believe that when this legislation has been implemented, we shall realize that all our fears were perhaps not as well-founded as we thought.

[English]

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) extolled the merits of the Mother of Parliament at the same time as he proceeded to treat the standards of the Mother of Parliament, and any other Parliament, with contempt. Had he been a Member of the Mother of Parliament, by this time he might have been asked to vacate his portfolio and perhaps even his seat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Just a moment, my good friend from New Brunswick. As I understood it, he stated that the agriculture critic of the Opposition Party had agreed that all the amendments that were necessary had been introduced and that the buy-and-sell provision was correct as it stood. Let me quote from the proceedings of the agriculture Committee on June 29, 1982 when our agricultural critic stated as follows:

> However, we are adamantly opposed to the buy-and-sell provisions of the legislation contained in Bill C-85. These powers are too broad and too ill defined. They could be used to supersede or usurp the powers of our agricultural marketing boards.

He went on to say unequivocally that we do not support the breadth of this Act as it applies to marketing.

I was interested to listen to the remarks of the Member who spoke for the NDP. While supporting all those instruments which would put us in a totally regulated society, I suppose he or one of his colleagues will speak in this House in support of Lech Walesa who is suffering a total loss of personal freedom by virtue of Government control.

This Bill represents incorrigible Government control of agriculture.

Mr. Blaikie: Why don't you tell the truth for a change?

Mr. McCain: When this Bill was introduced, no one was in any hurry. It was introduced on December 8, 1981 but did not come before the House until January 25, 1982 and second reading was completed by February 5. The meetings to which Members of the Government have referred were held and were necessary because of the outpouring of objection to the legislative fashion in which proper principles were being put in place.

The Federation of Agriculture supported the Bill but it qualified its support and no attention was paid to that qualification. The Horticultural Council supported it and I challenge Hon. Members to read its report and the qualification that is mentioned. The amendments it proposed are not reflected in the Bill. The Bill was dreamed up and presented as if it were the wish of agriculture as a whole in Canada when in fact it is not.

The last Member who spoke for the Government mentioned the potato industry. It has terrible troubles, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps this is only a sympton of the troubles it would have if the Government were to manage its affairs, as it could under this Bill.

All the time that was spent considering the Bill in Committee was necessary because of the outpouring of agricultural opinion from organizations all across the country. All of them asked for qualifications and amendments to the Bill, which are not now included.

When the Bill was introduced we agreed to it on division. It contained three principles at that time. First, that there should be export credit for agricultural exports; second, that there should be better consular representation in the foreign markets to stimulate better sales; and third, that the Government of Canada should, through the Department of Agriculture, have the authority to intercede and become the agent of Canadian business in the foreign market, where necessary.

We support these three principles and have supported them from the first. Our position of support for the Bill should not be confused with the stipulations our critic made about how it could be made to work better.

We never agreed that there should be joint ventures. This would permit the Government to put up 99.99 per cent of all the money required to establish a processing plant, to buy land, to grow or rear agricultural products, or to participate in the production, processing and marketing of products. That capability is in the Bill at present and we object to it.

We agreed that there should be an agency but we never agreed to a Crown corporation with broad powers. The fact that it will be audited, as the NDP has boasted, is not particularly relevant. An audit is not conducted until after the fact; it is the management before the audit takes place that is important. If it is to be managed as the CDC has been managed, then we do not want any part of it under this or any other Minister.

The CDC was the subject of comment in the Auditor General's report in 1976. It was also the subject of an extensive report of the Public Accounts Committee which made recommendations. None of these was fully implemented under the direction of the Minister. In 1981 the Auditor General found exactly the same faults with CDC as he had found in 1976.

In the Public Accounts Committee we have found that we cannot get information from the Minister that would enable us to issue a report this year. More than six years have passed since the CDC came under criticism by the Auditor General. What possible use are his reports to the farmers of the country if there is a six-year delay in the implementation of his recommendations? I support the amendment, Mr. Speaker. However, it is ridiculous to think that it will give Canagrex the management which Agriculture Canada deserves, desires and needs.

The Minister of Agriculture misled this House in his statement with respect to what our critic has said. I prove that by a quotation. If the Minister respects the Mother of Parliament, upon his return to this House he will apologize and retract an unmitigated error in his statement to this House. The Minister has tried to mislead this House, which knows better; but if he is quoted abroad or if he makes that statement on the hustings, he certainly does not respect the Mother of Parliament, any other Parliament, or the methods under which Parliament conducts itself.

There is a second misleading statement. Farmers think, as the Hon. Member from Quebec just said, that this is the end of their difficulties. Do not forget that this Bill stipulates that Canagrex must not and cannot lose money. Let me repeat that: Canagrex must not and cannot lose money. Canagrex has a budget of some uncertain terms, but somewhere between $5 million and $10 million, and it is to engage in all the business of the world on that budget. It can scarcely manage its own affairs, let alone salvage the farmers in this situation. And Canagrex cannot lose money?

Time Allocation

May I ask the Member from New Brunswick who just chirped up a few moments ago, how can Canagrex pay to the farmers of New Brunswick under the terms of this Bill a profitable price for potatoes which are selling at a horrible loss? Yes, Canagrex might help siphon potatoes out of this country and into another market, but not at a profit, Mr. Speaker. I say do not mislead the potato farmers either of New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island into thinking that this is the crutch of profitability for them or for any other aspect of agriculture. That is a deceptive part of the Minister's statements as he has talked to farmers and of the propaganda of the Government as a whole.

I charge that this Minister has, by virtue of the power of the purse and the authority of the Ministry, frightened many people into outward support for this program. The PEI Potato Marketing Board unequivocally opposed the buy-sell clause in this structure when its representatives came to Ottawa. When they were questioned on their way out of Ottawa after having had meetings with departmental officials, they left very timidly and had no further comment. Why does the Minister exercise such power over agriculture in such a deceptive way?

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I deeply regret that a bill as important as this, which the House should have adopted a long time ago, must be dealt with under such difficult circumstances, and that the special procedure of time allocation should be used so that Hon. Members will take a stand on this particular bill.

Mr. Speaker, Canada must give itself this export mechanism if it is to compete successfully with other world countries that are taking positive measures to develop their export markets for farm produce. In this respect, I should like to refer to part of a statement made last year by Mr. William Tenkins, a former dean of the Nova Scotia College of Agriculture, last year:

> In the Atlantic provinces, the export of farm produce is like a war. It is every man for himself, a most elementary and almost chaotic marketing approach.

Mr. Speaker, I was amazed to hear an Hon. Member from the Maritimes speak the way he did following 86 hours of debate both in the House and in committee, after the Committee on Agriculture that I have the honour to chair sat for nearly four months, heard over thirty witnesses on this issue, including some noted representatives of the farming community. I could not believe my ears when I heard the Hon. Member question the credibility of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Also as recently as November 1982 the Canadian Federation of Agriculture submitted to us a document from which I quote:

> The Canagrex issue is of serious concern to CFA. In our view, such an export corporation should have all the flexibility needed to promote Canadian exports, take the risks of joint partnership, provide specialized advice when required, carry out desirable or essential interstate negotiations, share in the risks and support of long-term expansion work, meet advertizing needs, give guarantees and allow its employees to assume the responsability, when need be, of actively exploring marketing prospects.

Mr. Speaker, looking back on what we have been going through here over the last three days, today everything is fine, we can at last deal with the issue at hand but yesterday and the day before every attempt was made to hinder discussion on the Canagrex legislation now before us. We wasted time, it is outrageous to have to admit that $2 million were squandered that way. And I ask you in all honesty, Mr. Speaker, is it not your contention that Canadian farm producers would have preferred that the Canadian government spend those $2 million on crop diversification, advertising promotion, as proposed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, support to research and international trade missions to sell our Canadian farm products? As I see it, our image would have been better had we made better use of those tax dollars, instead of wasting two afternoons on questions of privilege on other matters totally irrelevant to the sad economic situation we are now facing. Life may be somewhat less difficult in Canada than elsewhere in this world.

We enjoy freedom here, thank God, and I hope this endures. But if we go on trampling freedom as we did for two days, preventing members of Parliament from speaking to the subject of interest to them and to our Canadian constituents, we are making a mockery of the democratic work of Parliament as accepted in a responsible society. I wonder how our people will judge us today. Freedom has been abused, and abusing freedom leads to anarchy. I have a feeling that for some time we have been going through a situation verging on anarchy, Mr. Speaker. I would like to refer again to the submission of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and I quote:

> There is increasing co-operation and help between industry and governments throughout the world, as they strive for a larger share of the international market. Canada must follow suit.

Mr. Speaker, when the Federation makes such important statements, I have a feeling it is blaming us for lagging behind international realities. It is true that in Canada some groups with government assistance are better organized than others. Of course, big export corporations get all the services they need, but there is a group of agro-food products that are not sold or are undersold because perhaps they are not as well advertised or potential buyers are not as well informed of what we could offer them. The legislation we are now trying to discuss sensibly, and logically, will in no way hinder the work of organized export groups but would provide other groups with the opportunity to organize themselves better, and receive such services they are entitled to and which have been available to the others for quite some time. I see no reason why there should be a kind of emergency debate situation now, considering there has been such filibustering and not much rationality or Christmas spirit in our approach to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that farmers have always worked the land, long before the advent of radio, television and electronics. Have we reached a point where we must support agriculture despite the opposition? Because the Government may very well be more enlightened than the opposition and because good decisions ought to be taken, we have to put up with a filibuster which is tantamount to an abuse of power on the part of members opposite. That is why I am upset because, if we look at cold facts, the export of food products does represent one of the most important markets for Canada. If we examine the economic situation of some other countries where the social and economic climate is worsening, we find that the first link which breaks up is the badly or insufficiently exploited agricultural sector.

So I am wondering why we are debating this emergency motion designed to limit debate on this vital and essential sector of agriculture which feeds the world. We should keep that in mind. As we are having this irrational debate when the situation is so urgent, I am wondering where we are going. Here is a piece of legislation to promote the sale of agricultural products throughout the world, therefore a measure from which, individually and collectively, Canadians stand to benefit, so I wonder why there should be any question about it. A parallel can be drawn between this bill to establish a corporation called Canagrex and the criticism levelled at other existing Crown corporations.

I find it almost mean that the Opposition should not at least have had the courage to experiment with a Crown corporation which would be all set to promote Canada's agricultural products on international markets, to help our farmers grow a wider variety of better quality products, and to sell on international markets the products which are already of very good quality and which we can make even better still. Mr. Speaker, I thank you and I hope that Hon. Members will show less partisanship and less aggressiveness in a debate on such an important issue as agriculture.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where to begin. Parliament has been affronted by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who stood in his place to speak on an income tax Bill which is of such importance to the farmers of this nation who are having extreme difficulties making ends meet this year. We came to the House to hear what the Minister was going to do for farmers who are in an industry which is on the brink of destruction. But what did we see? The Minister snuck in a motion of closure in a speech which I would be embarrassed to send out to the farmers in my constituency. He has moved closure on a Bill called Canagrex. The introduction of closure should only be used in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Whelan: It is time allocation. That is different from closure. Use the right terminology.

Mr. Schellenberger: It should only be invoked when it is of grave importance for the Government to have a Bill that will assist in its program to aid farmers and the agricultural industry. Instead, the Minister has moved closure because he could not negotiate not only with the parties in this House but with farmers in all parts of the country to get approval for his Bill.

The Conservative Party has been consistent in its views on this Bill from the outset. We have stated consistently that we are in favour of export credits and of facilitating and promoting agricultural products. We in this Party, as well as some 23 agricultural organizations across the country, are opposed to the Minister forcing his will upon the nation by means of closure without the opportunity for debate on second reading or the chance to dicuss the many amendments to remove "buy-and-sell" from this Bill. One of those agricultural organizations is the Canadian Cattlemen's Association which represents farmers in every region of this country. It has demanded to be excluded from the provisions of the Bill. I wonder if the Hon. Member who just spoke, who is the Chairman of the Agriculture Committee, understands what she heard in that Committee from the many groups who appeared to say they wanted those changes.

The Minister has been unable to get agreement. If we review his record over the past ten years, we see that he has passed ten Bills in the House, only one of which is different from what has been previously passed in Parliament. The remainder have only been changes to Bills that have been brought in by previous Ministers. The only substantive Bill introduced by the Minister was the beef import law which he was forced to introduce by the cattlemen across this nation.

We have seen a Minister who has been unable to deal with the significant problems faced by agriculture in this country. His function has been to cross the country putting out fires for the Government because he is incapable of bringing forward consistent legislation that farmers agree with. The Minister has brought forward his pet peeve. While the Minister talks about obsessions, he has an obsession regarding Canagrex.

Let us talk about the agreement which the Minister is unable to achieve. On July 13 and 14, 1982, there was a federal-provincial conference at which all Ministers of Agriculture in the country were present. As a result of that conference, eight out of the ten provincial Ministers indicated their opposition to the majority of this legislation.

Mr. Whelan: That is not true.

Mr. Schellenberger: The other two Ministers said there were certain parts of the Bill which they did not approve of. The Minister is running roughshod over the provincial Ministers of Agriculture in Canada because he cannot get an agreement. As well, he is running roughshod over 23 agricultural organizations who want changes to this legislation. He is using his big club of closure.

Mr. Whelan: Time allocation.

Mr. Schellenberger: Closure. That is what it is.

When it came time for the Standing Committee, which spent a considerable length of time on this legislation, to discuss it with provincial Ministers, Members of the Liberal Party opposite said no and voted down my motion to hear from the Ministers of Agriculture from Saskatchewan, Alberta and other Provinces who wanted to appear. When the Saskatchewan Stock Growers wanted to appear, the Liberal Members said no again and they were supported by the NDP Member from Saskatchewan who was there. Once again, the NDP has tied itself to the Liberals on this question. It is poor treatment for their farmers as well as for our farmers.

Let us consider what is happening in the agricultural industry in the rest of the world. If we consider which countries are successful in trading their goods, we will see that it is always those countries which have private trading corporations which are successful. The most successful country is Japan, which has private trading houses consisting of some 80,000 people who are in different parts of the world selling their products. In our country we are lucky if we have ten people doing this job. If the Minister wishes to spend money in a more beneficial way, he could send people around the world selling our agricultural products and get importers and exporters together so as to get contracts for our farmers to sell their goods. Instead, we see a Bill called Canagrex, which is an organization similar to what exists in two other parts of the world. Canagrex is similar to what exists in the Communist countries and to Agrexco in Israel, which is a totally socialist country that produces most of its agricultural products on collective farms.

Farmers of many groups, particularly on the Prairies, are saying that the Minister of Agriculture, who is supposed to represent all Provinces in all regions of this country, should allow this motion to be debated. It was only debated for one and a half hours on report stage. He should seriously consider the amendments which were put forward by this Party to eliminate the "buy and sell" provisions. We will not have adequate time under closure fully to debate those.

We are receiving telephone calls in our offices, and the phones are literally ringing off the hooks, from people saying; "Stop this Minister until we have time to get to him and try to drill some sense into his head with regard to the Bill". That is what people in the regions are saying and they have had tremendous patience with this Minister. Many agricultural commodity groups and farm groups in this nation have had tremendous patience with this Minister. They really felt that he would do something for them. As I have pointed out, in the last ten years he has done very little other than go out and speak to them in an attempt to put out the fires instead of bringing forward constructive legislation to deal with the very serious problems facing the agricultural industry.

A Government is judged not only by the things that it does, but also by the way in which it uses its power. Agricultural groups and farmers across this nation will judge this Minister of Agriculture and the Government by their actions. It will be judged on its actions on a substantive agricultural Bill which will have tremendous implications if closure is used to push it through.

We in western Canada know about a Bill which has substantial powers. The Minister has said: "We will never use all of the powers in Section 14; no, no, we will not use them". Let us consider what happened to a very aggressive industry in western Canada as a result of a Bill which had much power which was never to be used. The former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), got control of that Bill and destroyed a very excellent energy industry in western Canada. Many farmers and exporters in this nation now look at this Bill and they see the same kinds of powers in it, whereby a Minister can run rampant over the many organizations, small exporters and the private sector in this nation if he wants to. The powers are there. We are asking this Minister to remove those powers. If he can prove to us and to the farmers of this nation that they are necessary, then he can have them back. That is a reasonable request.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this motion today because the time has come to bring the debate to a close. I must refer to the meeting with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in the month of November when it said: "We are informed that estimates totalling $500 million worth of export opportunities, to be effectively exploited, require the kind of facility and capability that Canagrex provides on concrete information and industry assessment". I suggest to Your Honour that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the major farm organization in Canada, is making a very serious request of Parliament to get on with the business and, as the Ontario Federation of Agriculture said not long ago to the Official Opposition, pass the Bill and stop passing the buck.

I must take issue with the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and also the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) when they stated that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had destroyed the oil industry in Canada. I am sorry if they have not been kept abreast of what is happening in the oil industry in Canada because in 1982 the number of oil wells drilled and completed amounted to the second highest on record in the last six years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect to the Parliamentary Secretary, what he is saying does not appear to be relevant to the motion that is before us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I am simply correcting an impression left by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin.

I would also like to point out that the requests of the Opposition Parties in Committee, as indicated by the first Hon. Member to speak for the NDP, for amendments with regard to accountability to the Auditor General had been met. As a matter of fact, the Auditor General points out in his Report involving the Canadian Dairy Commission that "a comprehensive audit was conducted at the request of the responsible Minister". Here was a Minister who acted responsibly when he sensed that there could be a possibility that something was wrong. He immediately requested a comprehensive audit. We accepted the amendment proposed by the NDP to ensure that Canagrex would be operated as a businesslike organization and that it would be held accountable not only to the public, but also to Parliament itself. The Auditor General went on to commend us for including that amendment so that we could be assured that the operation would function well.

One thing has disturbed me from the time this Bill passed second reading stage. I believe the Hon. Member who raised this matter yesterday under the provisions of Standing Order 43 was quite correct when he said; "All of a sudden, there is a change of heart in the Official Opposition". In order to meet those fears, we amended the Bill so that Canagrex could not in any way enter into agricultural production except in the case of a joint venture or at the request of Governments, Canadian companies, co-operatives, marketing boards or associations of other Canadian enterprises. We met that request to ensure that this could not possibly happen.

Another story which is being circulated is that Canagrex will take over land through the provision to own property. We have plugged that loophole. There is no possibility of that happening.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ferguson: The only way it can possibly own property is for its headquarters or warehouses.

Mr. Mazankowski: Macdonald said you'd never buy a service station, either.

Mr. Ferguson: We have met the objections of the various Members of the Opposition but they still want to stall because they realize the potential of this Bill. It could provide more markets for our export products and bring back our previous level of prosperity.

The "Food Market Commentary" for September, 1981, stated:

> In fruit and vegetable canning and flour and breakfast cereals, foreign-owned plants control over 60 per cent of the shipments. That extent of foreign ownership raises the concern that such firms might not compete aggressively against their parent firms in third markets.

Another reason that we must proceed with this Bill and get it into effect is that our own producers, in the downturn of the economies of countries of the western world, may be left out in the cold by some of these foreign-owned parent companies.

I would also like to take issue with some of the points raised by some people with regard to what has been happening in the area of trade. The Annual Report of the Canadian Export Development Corporation, just tabled a few weeks ago, stated:

> Those who lost market share. This applies to Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, Italy and Sweden.
> Canada appears to have undergone the largest relative decline; and this happened at a time when the world market for these products had grown approximately five-fold.

If the existing system was doing so well and the market had increased by approximately five-fold, why did Canada's exports decline?

Mr. Lewis: Because of the Minister.

Mr. Ferguson: A statement released by the executive director of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association states:

> —our export performance as an industry is impressive and, if not fully satisfactory, would not be improved by Canagrex.

However, I cannot understand for the life of me why the Association would make such a statement, because we are in a deficit position as far as the production of dressed beef is concerned. We imported $178 million worth of dressed beef while we exported $142 million worth in 1981. We are also in a deficit position concerning our exports of live beef. We imported $133 million worth and exported $110 million worth. However, in comparison, consider what the horse meat people have done. They have a net export figure in the amount of $41 million. What in the world is wrong with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association which would allow this to happen?

Consider the hog producers. We have exports of dressed pork amounting to $349 million and imports amounting to $42 million. There is something desperately wrong when this type of thing can go on.

Mr. Taylor: The Liberal Government is wrong.

Mr. Ferguson: The Liberal Government has nothing to do with it. We must go on and consider what is happening. People are waiting for this legislation. The Minister has been criticized for bringing in time allocation with regard to this particular Bill, not by closure but, rather, by Standing Order 75C.

Mr. Lewis: They snuck it in.

• (1640)

Mr. Taylor: It was snuck in.

Mr. Ferguson: They call it sneaking it in. I don't. I have a telegram from the Ontario Flue-Cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board. It reads:

> —an 11 million pound export sale . . . hinges on the passage of this Bill plus the possibility of a further ten million pounds export sale.

Surely when we see opportunities like this in front of us, we should be taking action as the Parliament of Canada to make sure that we exploit the potential we have as Canadians. We should work together to improve not only the economic position of the Canadian farmer but the spin-off effects which are going to resound through our whole economy. The increased sale of agricultural equipment will put workers back to work in the farm machinery industry, and help the farm machinery dealers in the tight squeeze they find themselves in at the present time. I believe we have the potential here in Canada. We are respected as an exporting nation.

Producers from western Canada have the Canadian Wheat Board. In his book "The Merchants of Grain", the author, Dan Morgan, describes the Canadian Wheat Board as "the most sophisticated marketing system of any country in the world". We do not have the advantage of that in eastern Canada so we need a mechanism that we can use, as eastern Canadians, to gain our share of world markets for the products we produce. Surely the Members of the Opposition would not begrudge us that opportunity.

I want to point out again that under this legislation there is no way Canagrex can get involved with any product that comes under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission. I cannot understand what all the fuss is about. Let us get on, pass the motion, debate the Bill and finally pass it.

Mr. Friesen: On a point of Order, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out that if it was not for the attendance of the Opposition, we could call for a quorum.

Mr. Mazankowski: That shows how much interest they have.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that:

That, in relation to Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this privilege of being able to speak on this Bill which was brought in by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to move closure on one of the most important issues—

Mr. Whelan: Time Allocation.

Mr. Gustafson: —ever facing this House of Commons. That is because now a move to control the food industry in Canada follows the precedent set in this House during the national energy policy debate.

The urgency of bringing in closure, and the methods that have been used by the Minister of Agriculture, I am sure he will live to regret some day.

If you follow closely the parallel that has been used, first under the national energy policy where the Minister of Energy moved to control energy, not only in Canada but particularly in western Canada, which is so important to the farmers—

Mr. Whelan: He is talking about oil.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again I must call the attention of the Hon. Member to the subject matter.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to show the relevance of the closure that was used in this case to the methods used under the national energy policy. As we all know, energy and food are of the utmost importance, and closure used in this case will assist in the control of a very, very important industry in the farming community.

The Minister knows that many of the farm groups are opposed to this. I have a list of some 25 groups that I would like to put on record as opposing this move of the Minister on Canagrex. They are the Consumers' Association of Canada; the Alberta-Canada All Breeds Association; Alberta Cattle Commission; British Columbia Cattlemen's Association; Canadian Cattlemen's Association; Canadian Export Association; Canadian Meat Council; Canadian Seed Trade Association; Flax Growers Western Canada; Manitoba Canola Growers Association; Manitoba Cattle Producers' Association; Palliser Wheat Growers Association; Saskatchewan Canola Growers' Association; Saskatchewan Stockgrowers' Association; Western Barley Growers' Association; Western Stockgrowers' Association; The Shipper and Exporters Association. This list points out:

The latter group includes the three Prairie wheat pools and United Grain Growers who, combined, represent hundreds of thousands of Canadian producers.

And the Minister of Agriculture rises in the House and brings in closure to force upon the farmers of Canada and the groups of people represented here, in a non-democratic way, control of food products in Canada.

Mr. Whelan: Time allocation.

Mr. Gustafson: Probably nothing has ever happened in this House that could have more impact on the control of food in Canada. This is a country where we have taken food for granted because it has been abundant, and we should be thankful for it. But one way to assure that we will not have that abundance is to give the Government control of our food industry in Canada, a state-controlled Crown corporation—

Mr. Whelan: You are talking about Alberta now.

Mr. Gustafson: This is what the Auditor General of Canada warns against; more Crown corporations that will bring in Government control and lose control for the producers of this country.

I want to go on record as being a Member of Parliament who stood in this House and said to this House and the Members on the other side, the Liberal Members, and to the people of Canada, that I am a Member who stands up for producer control, not Government control, not state control.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: I have numbers of letters whose names are not mentioned in this previous list. Here I have the letter from Landis Seed Canada Limited. The letter was addressed to myself, "Mr. Gustafson, Member of Parliament, House of Commons":

> We are writing to you to express our serious concern with Government's intention to form Canagrex. We see this as an unwarranted intrusion upon the private sector by Government.

Another letter is protesting this direction. I also have an article from the Toronto Sun:

> —Bill C-85. This Bill is a monstrous equivalent to the National Energy Program—which gave us higher gasoline prices, more taxes and a bigger national debt—only this time it is the nation's food resources that Trudeau wishes to nationalize.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gustafson: I hear the NDP groaning. It was very interesting to note, as with the national energy policy, that the NDP were the first to rise and support this Government-state Crown corporation that will be invented here to take control of the food industry. The Canadian people should note this carefully. In the Province of Saskatchewan there is a great deal of concern about Crown corporations and the effect they are having upon that Province.

• (1650)

I can see why the NDP are so concerned. They like Crown corporations control. They like state control, Government takeovers and these types of moves. The Conservative Party wants to go on record as opposing the direction being taken by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and his tactic of using closure to accomplish this.

In yet another letter condemning the type of action being taken, the Canadian Seed Association at its meeting in Pointe au Pic, Quebec, on July 7, 1982 passed the following resolution:

> That the general assembly of Canadian Seed Association express its opposition to the creation of yet another state trading corporation.

They expressed their indignation. They are opposed to the Minister of Agriculture forming, under closure in this House, another state trading corporation or Crown corporation.

The more important factor to be addressed is food. The farmers of Canada have a good record of production. That record of production is recognized world-wide. However, the minute a Government moves to take control of the production with directions that come from the Government halls, there is a decline. The Minister knows of other areas in the world that are equivalent to North America, but they cannot even feed themselves.

The record shows that as Governments get involved in the affairs of producers, the producers lose control; the production is moved to the point where they cannot produce the requirements for their own country. That has been proven time and again. The Minister sits and shakes his head, after bringing in closure on the Canagrex Bill that will harness the producers of Canada, making them non-productive.

I see that my time is up. I am sorry because much more could be said on this subject. I again warn the Minister of Agriculture against this move of bringing in closure on a Bill that the farmers of Canada do not accept and I put that on the record here today.

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to address this motion. I want to mention a few justifications for bringing in closure—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Finally the truth comes out.

Mr. Bossy: —or time allocation. The Opposition call it closure. I must say that it is actually time allocation. I will clear that up.

The final passage of this important piece of legislation is long overdue. Long overdue is the creation of an organization to assist and expand the Canadian agri-food market. Long overdue is the passage of Bill C-84 through this House and into the other House. Long overdue is Canagrex becoming a reality.

I remember first hearing of a federal corporation such as Canagrex in the early 1970s. I was a cash crop farmer at that time. I wish to bring to the attention of the House a few words of the former Minister of Agriculture for whom I have tremendous respect. When he first became Minister of Agriculture in 1979, one of his first statements to the press was:

> The Progressive Conservative Party campaigned on a pledge to concentrate on expanding markets for Canadian agricultural products.

The Hon. Member said that he, and I quote:

> —wants to act quickly to complete efforts started by former minister Eugene Whelan to establish an export marketing body for agriculture.

Time Allocation

He further made the statement that he will, and I quote:

—implement, with possible changes, the Agricultural Export Corporation announced by the Liberal Cabinet during the election campaign as a tool to sell Canadian food abroad.

Underline the word "sell". He further stated concerning the agriculture export corporation, which would have powers similar to the Canadian Wheat Board, that he would refer it to that part of his ministry, but after talking with ministry officials, he thinks that may be impossible. He said that, because of the business nature of that structure, it may be necessary to have a Crown corporation. He further said:

I won't quibble over that.

On November 9 we were again briefed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which I respect as a very strong spokesgroup for the farmers of Canada. They were very emphatic about their support for the establishment of a Canadian agriculture corporation known as Canagrex. We have had representations from another national body, the National Farmers' Union, in which they very much supported the establishment of that corporation.

Another very strong body of representatives for the Quebec agriculture group, the UPA, very much supports this Crown corporation being formed. The Flue-Cured Tobacco Growers Association, which represents the entire tobacco area, totally supports the establishment of a Crown corporation, as does the White Bean Growers Association. I could go on and on listing such respected organizations who speak on behalf of the farmers.

I question very much what has happened in this House to deprive us as Members of being able to speak on a very important subject which the farmers want, and that is the formation of their own Canadian agriculture export corporation. The Conservative Party has now questioned the credibility of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. They are questioning the credibility of these people in speaking for the farmers, but it seems strange that the only time we hear about agriculture in this House is on behalf of those people who are not farmers themselves.

Time is very limited to speak on this, but I hope that on final reading I would have a chance to bring forward further proof that the Canadian farmer wants this corporation. It is time now to speak for the farmer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to have put some pressure on the Hon. Member, but it is past five o'clock and we should be entering into Private Member's Hour.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Private Bills, Notices of Motions and Public Bills.

There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of Private Bills, the House will now proceed to Notices of Motions, Papers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

All items preceding No. 88 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all agreements, correspondence, notes and other communications relating to the requirement by the Foreign Investment Review Agency that Tate and Lyall Limited reduce its shareholdings in Redpath Sugar Limited.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I rise on what will probably be the last opportunity to discuss a motion for the production of papers, I do not discern any noticeable period of mourning for the end of this antiquated procedure. And I would hasten to say that when I call it an antiquated procedure it is because of its ineffectiveness and not because of its intent. The intent when originally conceived was that it would be a means by which a Member would be able to pressure the Government to produce documents, and the reason for the production of documents is to give information. The Member, in effect, is seeking information.

As a Member of the Committee which has introduced the new regulations which come into effect after the New Year, and which will see all Private Members' business discussed on Wednesday afternon, it is abundantly apparent to me that the probability is that the Members will choose as their subject their Bills and motions, and it is unlikely that motions for the production of papers will be discussed in the coming year.

I should at this point distinguish or record the essential difference between the Bills or motions of Members and motions for the production of documents. A Bill or a motion is a representation. The Bill is an attempt either to introduce legislation or to change legislation; the motion itself is an attempt to put pressure on the Government to take some course of action. The motion for the production of papers, of course, is a desire of Members to obtain information.

As I have said in committee discussions, we can then proceed via a question on the Order Paper to obtain the information which we seek. However, I am sure that the Members of the Opposition particularly will immediately say it is sometimes not as productive as it should be, that questions are not answered, information is not forthcoming, and I cannot help but agree, because reviewing the Order Paper I see that I have questions going back over a year. These questions are important to me particularly, and I believe probably to other Members.

I have complained many times that one of our problems at the present time with the Public Service is that we have been unable to introduce Public Service legislation. Over a year ago I did ask for information pertaining to the Public Service Employment Act and that question still remains on the Order Paper unanswered. And I am repeating, I suppose, some of the complaints of the Opposition, almost on a daily basis now, concerning questions. But may I emphasize that whenever I rise at this time on Thursday afternoon, it is to seek information, and as such I do not believe that it is putting too much pressure on the Government. Thus it is disappointing to me sometimes that we do not get a more positive reaction.

As I look over some of the subjects we have had an opportunity to discuss in this period, I find that the range of subjects has been quite considerable and, of course, I am referring only to my own motions. I will let others speak about their own motions, but just on motions for the production of papers I note, for example, we discussed at some length the Department of Public Works and its restructuring. That is something which has been discussed, to my knowledge, for the last 15 years or so and many of us feel that it is time to come to some conclusion on that particular issue.

We discussed the Automotive Agreement in a motion for production of papers. We were looking for information for the parts dealers. They were complaining they did not have ready access to information which should be in the public domain. We sought papers in connection with trade, tourism and cultural exchanges between Canada and the Caribbean area. On my part, because of my interest in trade with the Caribbean area, I felt we should have a lot more information on what we were doing, the moneys we were spending, and the efforts we were making to encourage trade and tourism in that area. On another occasion we discussed construction and health standards for day-care centres, particularly as applied to provincial responsibilities. Once again, we were seeking information from the Government on what they considered to be their federal involvement, their federal responsibility.

An Hon. Member: Is that the Confederation Building?

Mr. Herbert: No. I will come to the Confederation Building a little later. On another occasion, Mr. Speaker, we discussed the Canada Assistance Plan at some length. We were looking for the standards for the programs and the conditions for federal participation in a revised Canada Assistance Plan. On yet another occasion, one of my motions dealt with the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, residential mortgages and home foreclosures, a subject of common interest, and again we were seeking information.

We discussed day-care centres in the Public Service—and we can now bring in the Confederation Building day-care centre, if you wish. We mentioned it on this particular occasion. But here we were looking for information on Treasury Board involvement, the number of day-care centres which were being proposed and the kind of money which was likely to be spent. There was no question we were opposing the principle; we were just looking for information on how far the Government intended to go and what kinds of moneys they were likely to spend.

We discussed on one Thursday afternoon the popular subject in Quebec of the Dorval and Mirabel Airports. I do suggest here that although some of the information we were seeking might not have been forthcoming, that particular discussion had some bearing on the eventual decision not to destroy Dorval Airport which, Mr. Speaker, is of particular interest to you in your constituency. As a result of this, I felt there was some success achieved on that occasion.

Another one of particular interest in my own riding which we discussed one Thursday afternoon is that of generic drugs. This is of particular interest today in light of the fact that Ayerst is leaving Quebec, going south of the border. We know that Hoffmann-La Roche is closing its doors in Quebec and giving up its pharmaceutical operation. Therefore, the subject of generic drug production is very much an issue today, and once again we ask the Government for information in order to be better aware of the Government's position and also to have more information for our own use.

Going back to the Canada Assistance Plan, on another occasion we discussed the benefits to the Province of Quebec where, as everyone knows, the federal Government pays 50 per cent of the benefits paid under that Plan.

On another occasion we discussed post office regulations and delivery to residences. We know that the post office is always a topical subject for discussion.

Another occasion on which we discussed the Canada Assistance Plan in a motion for the production of papers dealt with New Brunswick. We used that Province as an example of one of the less wealthy Provinces where there is difficulty in providing even the 50 per cent of the costs of this Plan. It was on that occasion that I continued my representation that we think sincerely about dividing that Plan that is two-thirds social assistance portion and one-third social service portion, and give greater emphasis to social assistance since the federal Government has a considerable impact on the cost of social assistance.

Another topical subject for discussion was the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation where we were requesting information because we were dissatisfied with what were getting from the CBC. This was brought to the fore recently by a little anger which I expressed over the fact that the President of the CBC would come before the Committee asking for an additional $7 million in Supplementary Estimates and presented neither a written nor a verbal explanation to the Committee as to why he needed the additional money. I will use this particular moment to express my disappointment at the attitude of the Crown corporations referred to in the Auditor General's report towards providing information willingly to Members of Parliament. It is my belief that we should not have to ask; the information should be provided.

I was looking at the Supplementary Estimates to which I just referred, and if one looks at the page under "Privy Council" we see four items; and if you read the details given under "Explanation of Requirements", one can judge that the Members are getting something of a con job. I do not mind if that is all that is left in the Supplementary Estimates, but I feel that subsequently we should be given more detailed information.

More recently we discussed the Enterprise Development Board. That is topical at this time because of our particular need to improve and support the industrial sector and the export drive.

Today we are discussing the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Why do I bring this up again when I have discussed it over many years? In fact, the same motion has appeared in previous Parliaments. Once again, it is because I am seeking information I am unable to get from the Government.

Now, I will be fair and put on the record, in case the Parliamentary Secretary does not have the time, that this information is not disclosed under the provisions of the Act. Now, Mr. Speaker, what worries me is that an agreement has been signed between Tate and Lyle and FIRA. The intent was that Tate and Lyle would divest itself on its interest in Redpath Sugar. It so happens that the conditions of that agreement have not yet been triggered. That is a perfectly logical explanation, but it brings into question the way FIRA operates and whether agreements such as this should be put in the public domain so we can have a better knowledge of the original intent. I suggest, as I have previously, that it certainly brings into question whether the original intent was not to ensure that the share price would be such that the parent company would get back a certain sum of money with the end result that whoever buys those shares will have to pay a higher price. But the point is, Mr. Speaker, that in all these representations, in looking for papers we are looking for information.

I do not want to be unreasonable. If the Government was to say it cannot answer this question because it is far too costly or because it will mean releasing secret information or something of that sort, I would not mind. But too often it is just a silent approach. We are not told, yet I do not believe we should even have to ask. I suggest that it would be a lot easier, particularly for Government backbenchers, to support Government policy if we were provided with the information which makes it easier for us to support Government policy.

In the Committee of which I am a member presently discussing Bill C-133, changes to the Superannuation Act, it would have been a lot easier for many of us on that Committee as Government Members to have produced arguments if we had all the information at the start which we now have finally obtained.

So in conclusion, on this last occasion to discuss documents, I plead with the Government, whether it be the present Government or succeeding governments, to try to help Members by producing information freely rather than making it necessary for us to point out the difficulties under which we operate when so little information is made readily available to us. I regret that this procedure will be terminated and I am using this last opportunity to plead with the Government to help the Members to do their job.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kilgour): The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is not here. Is the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) speaking in his place?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Thank you very much, Mr. Acting Speaker. I might congratulate you on your elevation to the Chair. Since you are such a non-partisan member I am sure the decorum of the House will be very much improved, as the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) says.

Mr. Blaikie: Tongue in cheek.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to support motion No. 88 proposed by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). It is a motion to produce papers regarding a transaction undertaken by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. I do so in the spirit of trying to encourage the Government to make available more information on what goes on in this country. I believe this Government is far too secretive about the transactions of its departments, agencies and many of its Crown corporations.

I cannot help but agree with the Liberal backbencher who has just spoken when he says there is no reason for this kind of secrecy. All too often we see memos stamped "strictly confidential", and it is information that is not that sensitive, information which could be very useful, not just for Members of this House but for many citizens in many organizations in our country.

I also want to say a word or two at this time as to why it is important to have information about FIRA made public.

[Translation]

That is also important, Mr. Speaker, because we now have very high levels of unemployment in Canada. About one and one-half million Canadians are out of work. Our rate of inflation is also very high, and we may be one of the industrialized countries most severy affected by the recession. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that many problems are the same the world over, and that all European countries, and even Japan and the United States and other countries, are having a great many problems, but here in Canada, the recession is more severe because our situation is quite different. In fact, it is unique.

• (1720)

Of all the industrialized countries, we are the only one that has such a high incidence of foreign investment and foreign ownership.

I have read about the debates that took place at the end of the Second World War when Japan, France and Germany were virtually destroyed. The people in those countries decided that they were going to rebuild so that their own people would control the economy and make the important decisions. They are all strong countries today. They control the principal parts of their economy, they do a great deal of processing and manufacturing and they control their financial institutions. We do not accomplish all those things in Canada. There is a higher incidence of foreign investment in resource manufacturing and other sectors of our economy than there is in any other industrialized country.

I think that was one of the problems, Mr. Speaker. Many studies show that because we have so much foreign investment we do not have as much control as we should have and we have more unemployment than we should have.

Just a year ago Statistics Canada published a report which showed that foreign firms import about four times as much as Canadian firms. In other words, a foreign firm has more of a tendency to import from its parent company in Japan, the United States or elsewhere, than has a Canadian company. If we had Canadianized our industry as other countries have done in the last 50 or 100 years, we would not import as many manufactured goods today.

Research and development is another problem, Mr. Speaker. We spend less on this than almost any other industrialized country because so much research is done by parent companies. We spend about the same proportion of our GNP on R and D as does India, Egypt or Ireland. We spend a lot less than the European countries, Japan and the United States. It can easily be seen that those countries are making greater strides in modernizing their industries and in being competitive than we are. We must Canadianize if we are to have more R and D in this country.

A good example is the case in Montreal of the Ayerst Laboratories which moved to the United States because that is where their parent company is located. The Montreal facility is being closed although it is the major pharmaceutical research facility and laboratory in Canada. Unless the Government acts, it will be lost.

That is why it is so important that motions such as the one before us today are approved by the House. We must have more information about what FIRA does and does not do. I maintain that it does not have as many teeth as it should have. It is not as strong as similar agencies in other parts of the world. If we had more information about it, perhaps it would be easier for us to stand up for Canada, as other countries stand up for themselves.

Another example is the Bowater plant in Newfoundland. In the last couple of years Bowater made about $40 million-odd profit in this country and sent over $30 million of it to the parent firm in Britain. Canadian workers are efficient and productive so the company made a good profit, but because it is owned by foreigners the profits are invested elsewhere. Then, all of a sudden the plant in Corner Brook is closed down through no fault of the people there.

Another example that has been used by many Conservatives is the Iron Company of Canada in Schefferville, Quebec. They have spoken of Brian Mulroney as the man who closed down a town. Despite the fact that the company has made a lot of money in Canada, it decided to close down the Schefferville operation and invest its money elsewhere.

There are many other examples that show why we must become more Canadianized, Mr. Speaker. The United States firm of Price-Waterhouse conducted a study of 73 countries which concluded that Canada has fewer barriers to international investment and fewer regulations governing international investment than almost any other country that was studied. We should take notice of that, Mr. Speaker, and be as nationalist in a positive sense as other countries are.

In the United States there are all kinds of regulations and rules that screen foreign investment. A foreigner cannot buy a radio or television station in the United States because of the regulations. There are many other areas in which Canadians cannot invest in the United States.

These are some of the areas that should concern Members of all political stripes, Mr. Speaker. In Japan, France and Germany, governments of different stripes have decided that their own nationals will control their economies.

The motion asks that certain papers concerning FIRA be made available for a particular case study. I should like to remind the House of a promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1980 when he was Leader of the Opposition and Leader of the Liberal Party. Just before the election campaign he said: "We want to expand and strengthen FIRA, not weaken it". In April of the same year in the Speech from the Throne he said:

> My ministers believe that the stake of Canadians in their own economic destiny must be strenghened . . . the Foreign Investment Review Act will be amended to provide for performance reviews of how large foreign firms are meeting the test of bringing substantial benefits to Canada.

The Prime Minister made two other promises about FIRA, but when I questioned him in the House ten days ago, he admitted that he had not kept them. I would encourage Members of the Liberal Party to put pressure on their Leader, who was elected in part because of the promises he made, to keep those promises and to do in this country what has been done in most other countries.

I fear that we are backing down on FIRA because of threats made by the Reagan administration. The matter has been taken up at meetings of GATT in Geneva. The United States claims that FIRA is too restrictive and instead of standing up and fighting for it, trying to explain and strengthen it, the Government has crumbled to the pressure and has started to pull the teeth from FIRA.

Canadians want more control over their economy and over their destiny. I think many people wish that we had Canadianized a lot sooner and a lot faster—that we had done what the United States, Japan or western Europe has been doing for the last 20 or 30 years, and that is control our own destiny. Canadians have the ability and the confidence to do this. They have a vision of what Canada can be like.

I encourage the Government to produce these papers and make more and more information available. I encourage them to end some of the cynicism that exists in Canadian politics by making sure that election promises are implemented. In February, 1980 the Prime Minister, as Leader of the Liberal Party of the day, said that he would strengthen FIRA by doing three specific things. Two weeks ago in this House he admitted that he had not kept that promise. I call on Hon. Members opposite to be men and women of their word and for the Liberal Party to be a Party of its word and to implement its election promises. I think that would improve the attitude of Canadians toward politicians in all three Parties.

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, the topic we are discussing today has already been the subject of many a debate. It seems this is the fifth time a motion of this kind is being proposed. I must admit that, initially, I would be inclined to agree that perhaps more information should be accessible to Canadians, on a wider variety of subjects—I would almost say on just about everything. I do not think this is feasible. With the previous speakers, I deplore this, but at the same time I understand there are some things that can and others that cannot be said.

When it is said that the information requested cannot be provided because of confidentiality as understood in Section 14 of the Foreign Investment Review Act, and that such information may not be disclosed without the explicit consent of the parties who provided the information to the Government, it seems to me, first of all, that the Government must observe any undertaking it has made. I also think that the confidentiality of transactions that have already been examined and submitted for approval to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, must be preserved, if only to protect the companies themselves, for obvious reasons which include the existence of competitors and the possibility of plagiarism, and so on. This is not to say that in the long run, Section 14 should not be amended in some way to enable Members, and therefore all Canadians, to be better informed. However, as regards relations between private companies who are already being asked to submit very confidential information, to see whether their intended investment in Canada will benefit Canadians when the Agency has made a decision, I feel that any commitments made to these companies must be met, and that if we decide to admit them as entrepreneurs in Canada, we must realize that a commitment has been made not to disclose information they have submitted.

As for certain Crown corporations to which my colleagues referred, I think a clear distinction should be made between the private company which establishe commercial relations and Crown corporations which are subject to certain regulations that could certainly be the subject of discussion or debate. However, I do not want to give the impression that I am particularly well informed as a backbencher. On the other hand, I think that the appropriate time for discussing the matter of being better or more fully informed is certainly not when a motion is being proposed regarding commercial transactions between two private companies which submitted their applications for scrutiny by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. I would have liked to hear a far more extensive debate regarding Crown corporations which operate with funds allocated to them by the Government of Canada.

I am not as sympathetic to the motion before the House, which asks the Government to publish information submitted in good faith to a Government agency that has extensive responsibilities and which, I feel, is acting very responsibly, and towards which the Government was bound not to disclose this information. Where the Member of the New Democratic Party referred to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, saying that during the last election campaign, a commitment was made to amending the regulations in the interest of Canadians, I think it is in the interest of Canadians that not all information should be made public. If we want a company to be interested in getting established in Canada, we should by all means create conditions that are favourable to such a move. If one of those conditions is to respect commitments to these companies that submit documents for consideration, something we have a right to demand, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that in the final instance, these companies will become new corporate citizens. The Government does not give me the right to demand what the intentions of these companies are in coming to Canada. What we want to know is whether these companies will be good corporate citizens and whether they will operate for the benefit of Canada. I think that is what FIRA is doing. Now, if we feel that the powers vested in FIRA are exaggerated or too extensive, this should be clearly indicated in a motion. It seems to me, however, that in the present case which concerns transactions between Redpath Industries Limited and the other companies mentioned in the motion, these transactions do not warrant a motion of this kind nor an amendment to Section 14. As I said before, I would have preferred to see a debate on areas or companies for which we are responsible and which we ourselves created under an Act of Parliament.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, till further notice, I shall certainly have to speak out against this motion as it is formulated, but I agree that while certain things should be said, they are not. Unfortunately, this motion is not the proper vehicle for changing this state of affairs.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate, because I believe it is the fourth time I have had occasion to speak to a motion by the Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for the production of papers according to certain laws, must remain confidential. Today, production of papers is being requested in connection with the Foreign Investment Review Act, and here again, I think we must be extremely circumspect as to the approach used in dealing with such cases. The fact remains that when a corporate citizen asks a government to examine its case, the company is not particularly anxious to have its file become the subject of public debate, and for a very simple reason. At the risk of repeating myself for the fourth time for the benefit of the Member for Vaudreuil, I would say that there are two basic aspects to this kind of discussion. First of all, there is the matter of completion between private companies. There is not a single company that is anxious to publicize its industrial, development or investment strategies. Therefore, a government cannot publish information provided by a company on the understanding that its confidentiality will be preserved. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Member for Vaudreuil that Parliament itself passed the Foreign Investment Review Act, and that if the Government were to table such documents, it would be failing to comply with legislation passed by this Parliament. It would therefore be a glaring contradiction within our parliamentary institutions, and I think there is not a single industry or company or citizen who would still trust Parliament if it were to ignore the legal principle of absolute confidentiality, which is the very basis of this institution, and I think this is something that should not be taken lightly. If the element of trust were lost when papers are tabled here in the House, I have the impression that there would no longer be many people or countries that would be anxious to deal with the Parliament of Canada. A second aspect, equally fundamental, is that of competition, as I pointed out earlier.

There are various programs sponsored by Federal departments where a detailed study takes place before a decision is made. The FIRA program is one, and there are others administered by DREE, by the Department of the Secretary of State, and by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Until a decision is made, documents may not be made public. There are two more reasons for this. First of all, as I said earlier, the Act prescribes that all documents shall be kept confidential. Second, and this is perhaps the most important part, the company or corporate citizens submitting an application demand that the confidentiality of their files will be preserved. Similarly, personal income tax returns are treated confidentially by the Department of National Revenue.

The same method is applied to industries, that is, the method applied in the case of a private corporation or, as I said earlier, in the case of a private citizen. It is not a case of preferential treatment, since both private citizens and corporations are treated exactly the same. I would like to repeat something that has already been said here in the House by the Minister of International Trade under the Government of the Right Hon. Joe Clark, and I am referring to Mr. Michael Wilson who was the Minister at the time. He clearly indicated that the confidentiality of documents had to be preserved. I would like to quote the Hon. Member to be sure of his exact words, because I think it is important to recall what was said at that time. On November 22, 1979, to be exact, the Minister of State said that he was surprised, and I quote:

—that the Hon. Member would ask that the Government ignore the specific requirements of an act passed by this Parliament.

He went on to comment, and I quote:

> That provision was purposely incorporated in the Foreign Investment Review Act to safeguard the commercial interests of investors who are obliged to submit their investment proposals for review under the act.
> When an investor files notice of his intentions, and in any discussions that may occur later, he usually, if not invariably, imparts to the government through the agency a good deal of highly confidential information regarding his plans and intentions relating to the investment he is proposing. Therefore, he has the right to expect that information of that sort will not become known, prematurely at least, to others, notably potential competitors.

I could quote several other passages. I think these quotes are necessary because, as I said earlier, this is the fifth time we are dealing with a formal request for production of papers here in the House. I think that if the Minister were to give way to such pressure or such requests, departments would be unable to properly analyze files while safeguarding the very real interests of a company, the very heart of a company, that is, its balance sheets, investment plans, markets and technology. I think that is elementary, and I hope the Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) is listening so that we will not have to deal with such motions again. After all, we would all like to make the time of the House more productive, instead of repeating the same thing over and over again. Of course, I could have read the first four speeches I made on the subject, but I decided against it, out of respect for the House and also because it is useful to discuss other aspects that are perhaps more important to Canadians, instead of always dealing with the same topics arising from motions or requests that, for all practical purposes, always amount to the same thing.

On the other hand, I would like to go back, if the House will allow me, to what was said earlier by the Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Côté). I know that a great deal was said about FIRA and the Foreign Investment Review Act. Some say it is too hermetic and too confidential, and that the regulations are not sufficiently known. However, only yesterday, someone came to see me at my office in my capacity of Parliamentary Secretary, to tell me that the Act was still too permissive. Clearly, there is more than one way of looking at the matter. I believe the problem is a medium-term one. What I would suggest, along the lines of what was said earlier by the Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata, is to submit certain proposals to parliamentary commissions on industry, trade and commerce. These would concern aspects that should be improved and would be submitted by the people interested in improving them and in establishing the appropriate mechanisms.

That is a very good idea, which would enable us to review past achievements and in the light of our experience of the past few years, to make a truly objective assessment and to take the necessary corrective action. It is a fact that in any organization such as FIRA, there is room for improvement, but I am practically sure that Hon. Members have interesting suggestions to make in this connection and that a parliamentary committee sitting at the time when the estimates are considered and the votes discussed would probably provide an ideal forum to carry out this study and take into account the suggestions made by the Hon. Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Côté). I know that FIRA has been criticized from all quarters for some time. I think we should go beyond criticism and try to improve existing mechanisms in order to better meet the need of Hon. Members. I know that it is very difficult to trust an organization blindly, whether it be a government, a department, a corporation, for there are cases such as the Iron Ore and the mining companies which the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party who spoke before me mentioned and to which I will return later. But it remains nevertheless that a file should be kept confidential, otherwise it would never be possible to deal seriously and responsibly with the moral or physical entity that submitted it.

I have just referred to the previous speaker from the New Democratic Party who referred to mining companies. I too wish some corporations would disclose part of their figures, and I even asked the House permission once to examine their five-year projections, in order to ascertain their intentions over a longer period of time, because it must be realized that in communities such as those in Gaspe or on the North Shore problems are created each time a corporation operates in complete secrecy, changing its structure as it sees fit, because everybody is taken by surprise. I feel that some checking is required to remedy such situations. It is incredible how those people feel insecure because no planning was provided for some developments. In as much as certain papers are asked to be tabled in the House, I would like personally to see the scope of the debate extended for the benefit of some companies which will remain unnamed because I think everyone acted in good faith but I think that the legislator should be well informed in order to make responsible decisions. There are companies which would derive some advantage in publishing their investment plans although not in every detail because what is valid for the government is also valid for companies. However, I do not think it would be wise for companies to make public the whole of their financial operations or of their investment projections, but the government needs a minimum of information to act responsibly on behalf of our citizens. And a recession such as the current one leads us to reflect on those matters.

Moreover I would like, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that in another debate on Private Members' Business, we could deal with the whole issue of confidential public papers not only when the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned but also in the case of the private sector and some other government levels. I am referring to the federal and provincial governments because especially in the Far North, Northern Quebec or Northern Ontario, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is extremely interested in their development and I think that the Department would find it advisable to meet more often with private businesses and state quite clearly what sort of development is to be expected in those areas.

I am very much amazed at all the work which is being done in certain economic departments here in Ottawa, and in the ten provinces, and invididual private corporations, but the time might be ripe in my view for some kind of pooling, which would allow for better planning and much more responsibility to those regions and everyone across the board. This could be the subject of an interesting debate in this House, because this would enable us to describe the work everyone is doing in his own area but which should be considered in the overall context. Certainly madam Speaker would be quite happy to have a very animated debate on the subject. Certainly we would enjoy the Chair's full cooperation to discuss all that.

To come back to the motion of the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), I would appreciate his stating in writing what he would like to know from this particular company, because the phrasing of his motion is rather general. It reads, and I quote:

> That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all agreements, correspondence, notes and other communications relating to the requirement by the Foreign Investment Review Agency that Tate and Lyall Limited reduce its share holdings in Redpath Sugar Limited.

Clearly this is a request of a general nature, but I would like written specifics that would be useful to the Hon. Member. Because such a general request amounts to asking for all the documents, and this is why the Agency has turned down his request for the sake of confidentiality as I explained earlier, or of mere competition. But if the Hon. Member requires specific answers or documents to carry out his work in a more enlightened and relevant way, the department and the Agency would be pleased to make them available to him. I would just like to mention for the benefit of all Hon. Members that, as concerns DREE, for instance, a lot of material must be submitted when a company applies for a grant including public interest information and there is no objection to that. However, and I want to emphasize that often the companies are requesting that no part of these papers be made public. In this case, the company might be willing to cooperate with the Member and provide some information, and this was done in the past by various Departments. However, the Hon. Member has made a general request for the tabling of all the records and it is to this that the Department and the company object.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil, who is listening very carefully, that it is the company which requests confidentiality. The Department looked into that because when such an answer has to be given to a Member who obviously is very interested in his motion, the Government takes the trouble to check with the company involved to make sure the answer given by the Department meets the intentions of the company. In this case, I did what I had already done four times before concerning other motions of this type moved by the same Member and requesting the tabling of documents which are considered privileged by the Department and the company.

Mr. Speaker, since I have very little time left, I would like to take a few minutes to tell the House about the intentions of the Foreign Investment Review Agency for the next few years because recently people have been asking the Department whether the Agency really does allow foreign investment in Canada, in view of some suggstion to the contrary. Many people say that if such were the case, the Agency does nothing to promote the use of foreign capital for the development of our country.

I just want to tell the House that after looking into the matter we have found that most of the foreign companies which agree to abide by the social requirements of Canada and to reinvest in this country are then authorized to locate just about anywhere in the country. The Agency is particularly careful not to let a foreign company settling in Canada undermine existing industries. The Agency is very cautious in this regard. I believe that my time has expired, Madam Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan:

That, in relation to Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in the debate this evening. I want to say first that I was absolutely shocked the other night when I heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), while speaking on an income tax Bill, give notice of closure.

The Minister talked about the length of time that we had spent on this Bill. He talked about some 82 hours. However, he did not say that most of that time had been spent in Committee where we were listening to witnesses from across Canada express their views on Canagrex. He did not say that of the 30-odd organizations which appeared before the Committee, well over 20 did not agree with the legislation, either in part or in total. He attempted to give the impression that the farmers and organizations across Canada are completely supportive.

The Minister talked about democracy, the mother of parliaments, and the fact that in Britain there is a time limitation on debates. If one examines the records, one will note that at the report stage of this Bill, the stage we are now at, there has been a total of 90 minute's debate. In the report stage, there are some 14 amendments to the Bill that have to be discussed and examined, yet the Minister talks of the mother of parliaments and time allocation and democracy. Is this democracy that he is talking about?

A short time ago I received a document. It has not received general distribution. The document is entitled "Canagrex:

Responding to a Need". The document was prepared at the taxpayers' expense during the summer when the Minister felt there were problems with the Bill.

This is the propaganda document that was distributed to a limited number of organizations and people to try to convince them to put pressure, I assume, on their Members of Parliament to pass the legislation. I do not know how many thousands of dollars this document cost, but it is pure propaganda. It even contains some news items about Canagrex.

Can you imagine a Minister of the Crown spending the taxpayers' money to try to sell a Bill that he is unable to sell, spending thousands of dollars on this document? He did not give Opposition Members the opportunity to spend taxpayers' money to tell their side of the story. He did not allow us the same privilege that he had. If a Minister of the Crown has to spend thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money on propaganda to promote a Bill that is in the process of being discussed in the House, there must be something wrong with that Bill, but that is what he has done.

After 90 minutes' debate, the Minister comes into the House and says there has been too much debate, time will have to be limited. It is interesting to note that when this Bill was in the Standing Committee on Agriculture, it was pointed out to the Minister and Members on the Governement side that there are two Departments doing exactly the same work that it is proposed Canagrex will do, Industry, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs.

We tried to find out why the Minister was trying to press Canagrex and set up a third organization to sell. In Committee I proposed that we invite representatives from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or perhaps the Minister and that we invite representatives from External Affairs and perhaps the Minister to tell us what they are doing. The Committee could then say that as there are three different organizations that will be involved in selling agricultural products, maybe we should discuss this, maybe we can end up strengthening Industry, Trade and Commerce and there will be no need for Canagrex, or maybe we can strengthen External Affairs and there will be no need for Industry, Trade and Commerce or Canagrex. What happened? Members on the Government side said we could not invite those people, they might give evidence that would indicate that Canagrex is not necessary, so let us set up a third organization at taxpayers' expense, they will all be in competition and then we will do a proper job.

Mr. Gustafson: Triple the cost.

Mr. Neil: As my learned friend says, "triple the cost".

The Minister talks of democracy. He would not allow those witnesses. He would not allow the only two organizations from Saskatchewan that requested to be witnesses. They were turned down. He said that we have already representations from Saskatchewan. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture gave evidence and it represents many organizations in Saskatchewan. It is an umbrella organization. But, Mr. Speaker, there were two organizations from Saskatchewan involved in agriculture which requested permission to attend, and the Minister said no. At least, Members on the Government said no, and, obviously, when they said no, they were acting on instructions from the Government.

• (2010)

I see my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, so I will simply close by saying that Hon. Members on this side of the House are shocked, and I am sure the people across Canada will be shocked, to learn that the Minister of Agriculture of this country would try to force a Bill of this kind on the people of Canada without adequate debate in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, speaking to the motion before us this evening and which we will be voting on in a few minutes, I am always amazed to hear Hon. Members on the other side of the House, especially those of the Official Opposition, say that they did not have enough time to debate a bill when actually they wasted hours and hours on several occasions before the Committee on Agriculture with their procedural arguments. During some of the meetings which I attended, they kept introducing motion after motion to have this or that witness heard, debating the motions and urging that a group be heard when that group had not even asked to appear before the Committee. I take it with a grain of salt when I hear them complaining that they did not have enough time to debate a bill, or that the Committee should have spent more time on one clause or another. Mr. Speaker, we did spend several hours on second reading of this bill, and so did the Committee on Agriculture. We spent hours listening to witnesses who had asked to give evidence before that Committee, and indeed they were heard. Members opposite say that they were not given the chance to hear certain organizations which wanted to give evidence, as a result of rather shady deals they wanted to make. As I just said, those organizations had not asked to be there, so the Opposition resorted to delaying tactics to bog down the Committee proceedings. They told the Committee that if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) could agree to the presence of a certain individual or group, they would refrain from introducing this or that amendment. I see on the other side of the House some Members who were at that meeting and who, one after the other, did introduce three or four motions and asked that they be debated separately. In the end, we had not made any progress. Mr. Speaker, I have not been a Member here for very long, but there is no way I can describe their approach other than to say that they used delaying tactics to prevent a Bill from being reported to the House. However, what I find interesting about the situation of agriculture, and especially as concerns the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which we met early in November, is that the Federation told us:

The Canagrex issue is of serious concern to the CFA. We believe it desirable for such an export corporation to be fully flexible to promote the development of Canadian exports, to accept the risks of joint endeavours, to provide specialized advice as need be, to negotiate between states in the many circumstances where it is desirable or essential to do so, to share the risks and support long term development projects, to meet advertising requirements, to provide guarantees and enable its employees to accept upon request the responsibility of looking actively for market opportunities.

We have learned—

These are the words of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which asked us to give passage to Bill C-85 concerning Canagrex and which told us:

We have learned that the projections—

On pages 10 and 11 of the brief presented to us in early November 1982, the Federation said:

We have learned that the projection for an export potential of $500 million which, to be fully developed, requires facilities and services such as those Canagrex can offer are based on factual data and an assessment by the industry.

The industry and the governments work together and cooperate increasingly throughout the world as more and more emphasis is placed on attaining an adequate share of the market. Canada must follow suit.

This is what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture told us, Mr. Speaker. The Federation, which represents the farm producers of all Canadian provinces including Quebec and Ontario, recommends that the Government proceed with the Canagrex Bill. This organization says that the Canadian Government must follow the example of other countries and make it possible for Canadians to export their farm products and it believes that Canagrex would provide the means to develop our export potential and that we should proceed with this bill. Following our discussions in committee, where so many amendments were proposed by the Minister, the Official Opposition finally wanted to move another amendment which would have eliminated any possibility of the Canagrex Bill being effective. Mr. Speaker, it is because of the numerous empty speeches made by Members opposite, merely delaying tactics, that the Government must now ask the House to vote on a time allocation motion, which will make it possible for a few Hon. Members to debate the bill, because the Official Opposition is so divided on this bill that it refuses to let farm communities across Canada know how divided it is and how difficult it is for its members to stand as one behind their official critic on the Canagrex issue. That is also the reason why, under the present House procedure, we had to proceed in this manner and make it possible for Canadians involved in agriculture who clamour for Canagrex to have the bill passed as soon as possible, following the numerous discussions and meetings held by the Committee on Agriculture chaired by my colleague the Hon. Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Côté), a committee which has heard witnesses as well as the representations some Hon. Members were eager to make. And whenever we meet representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, they say: Let us go ahead, we fully support Canagrex. Quebec farmers, through their Union des producteurs agricoles, have appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and told about their situation, and I know that the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the only Progressive Conservative Party Member from Quebec in Ottawa was present at the committee meeting at the time and told us: We endorse the principle of Canagrex, but next to him three of his colleagues were shaking their heads. That is why they refuse to vote on this bill. If they will not debate this Canagrex bill, it is because they are divided, but a federation which represents all farm producers throughout the country is telling us to go ahead. Mr. Speaker, this is why—I see the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is smiling. On a few occasions he came to the committee on Agriculture, and put forward a few motions, always with a smile of course, but he also wanted that such or such a group be heard. I know you understand French, my friend! He wanted to move that such or such a group be heard, although he had not been requested to do so.

Mr. Speaker, this is why in my view the situation could not go on, and when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) gave this notice, and I see another Hon. Member opposite is saying the same thing, Mr. Speaker, I think it was necessary to proceed this way. Canadian farmers represented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture wanted and still want the Canagrex legislation, and this is what the Government and Liberal Members will do to enable Canadian farmers to have a bill they have been demanding for so long.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party does not condone in principle the use of closure or of Standing Order 75C, whatever title the Minister might want to give it. He may call it time allocation. We think there has not been adequate time to deal with this Bill. We think 90 minutes was not an adequate amount of time for a debate of this Bill.

Having said that, I think we should also make it quite clear that we do not condone some of the activities which have occurred on this side of the House on the part of the Official Opposition. Such activities as staying behind the curtain when the bell rings, or raising points of procedure for two or three days. We have wasted more time in not dealing with Canagrex than we would have spent had the House Leaders come to an agreement and handled the Bill in the way Bills are ordinarily handled. We think this House has always operated, when it is operating properly, with a spirit of confidence. That is because the House Leaders have confidence that their Parties will back them up. This has not always occurred on this particular Bill. In fact, it has not occurred very much on a lot of Bills. We see time and time again a Party open up debate, present one point of view and then switch half way through. This has been the trade mark of the Official Opposition during this past session.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That will never happen with the NDP, we can tell you that. Once they are wrong, they are always wrong.

Mr. Althouse: Fine.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You never change your mind no matter how wrong you are.

Time Allocation

Mr. Althouse: I simply want to remind the House of the enthusiasm with which the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) greeted this Bill. He is now portrayed as the man who is going to save the country from Canagrex, this horrible, horrible Bill. Here is what he thought of it when it was first introduced on December 8, 1981. At page 13834 of Hansard he said:

> Madam Speaker, we on this side are delighted to give our consent to the introduction of an idea initiated by the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) when he was in office. We in this Party express our gratitude to the Minister for perpetuating the idea of the Hon. Member for Elgin in this legislation.

It was not just the Hon. Member for Yukon who set the tone. The Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) was also quite appreciative of the Bill. His main criticism was that it did not provide as much money as the plan he had proposed. He was going to spend some $60 odd million, while the current Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is doing a chintzy $14 million spread over three years. That was the chief criticism. When we heard from the spokespeople for agricultural regions from the Official Opposition, they followed the same line. They made it quite clear that they were in favour of an agency which could sell farm products. There was no hesitation about the buying and selling option which is now the cry of the Progressive Conservatives. They were talking about how the agency had to be able to buy and sell, it had to be able to complete the sales, it had to get out and do the job for Canada. How can we continue to have confidence in an Official Opposition and in the function of this House if they continually reverse their position? The only way in which this House can work is when the position of the spokesmen are borne out by the votes and backing of their Members. The Hon. Member for Elgin got jumped on by his Party, and I do not think anyone needs to have any second thoughts about that. He was badly done by, and because of that, this whole operation has gone on. We spent 80 some hours in committee, much of it not doing anything constructive at all.

Mr. Whelan: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Apologists for the Liberals.

Mr. Althouse: I am not an apologist for the Liberals. One of the speakers, I believe the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), pointed out today that no one prevented anyone from presenting his point of view. I would just remind that Member and Members of the Official Opposition that that was not totally true. There was the Ontario Soybean Board, Peter Epp and his people, who were invited to our Committee twice in order for the Committee to hear what they had to say, but the Official Opposition engaged in procedural debate through both of those periods and that group has yet to present their point of view. They refuse to come back because they are not going to be treated that way again.

Much has been made by some of the Conservatives in particular of this being another Crown Corporation which we are not going to be able to control. I would like to point out to those Members that this is Bill C-85 and they should read it. If they did, they would have noticed that Clause 29(4) gives the Auditor General the ability to conduct a comprehensive audit.

An Hon. Member: Fourteen.

Mr. Althouse: It provides for a capital budget and it provides for more reporting to the House and Committee than any other Crown corporation.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 8.26 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 75c have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

The question is on the motion of Mr. Whelan.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Whelan), which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: The motion is carried.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-98, to amend the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Some Hon. Members: Never.

Madam Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) moves that the Bill be read—

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: You would like us to shut up over here, I know.

Mr. Clark: Jackboot democracy, Liberal style.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, your eyes were diverted to what you were reading when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) rose to debate the first order that you read.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, he rose. He was up, I saw him and so did we all here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: We would like to start at that stage of the measure, with the assurance that I gave the Government House Leader today that that measure will pass by ten o'clock tonight, before the hour of normal adjournment, but we want the Minister to open the debate as usual, and for participation on this side.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it was the intention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to make a speech on third reading. That is what he intends to do once you have put the motion, as you were about to do, we are therefore respectfully prepared to listen to you.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: She read it.

Madam Speaker: For the benefit of the Hon. Member for Yukon, the debate is to take place only when the third reading is proposed, and I was reading the second formula in order to introduce the third reading.

Mr. Whelan moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, it is with concern for consumers—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. After two days of high-jacking by the Tories on this closure motion, 24 of their Members are missing. That is just for the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That of course is not a point of order. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture has the floor.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, when I am talking about the industry I am referring to everyone who produces, transports, trades or sells perishable fruits or vegetables. That includes in Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I wonder if the Hon. Members would want the House to revert to its usual calm, so that we could all hear the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Whelan: That includes something like 200,000 people across this country.

These people are responsible for providing Canadians with a wide variety of fresh fruit and vegetables year round. It is a big job when you consider that most of the produce they handle is highly perishable. Last year they imported and distributed $1.1 billion worth of fruits and nuts, and some $600 million worth of vegetables.

Their job has been made easier in recent years by advances in refrigeration and cold-storage methods, and by improvement in the transportation system. Unfortunately, the legislation that regulates the industry has not advanced as quickly as the industry itself has.

The fruit and vegetable industry is in need of tighter regulations—regulations that will help ensure that costly delays and interruptions do not occur in the delivery of fresh produce, from the producer to the consumer.

That is why we have before us for third reading, Bill C-98, a Bill to amend the Canadian Agricultural Products Standard Act, commonly known as the CAPS Act.

This Bill has received first and second reading in the past month and passed through the committee stage last week, where the Canadian Fruit Wholesalers Association and the Canadian Horticultural Council spoke in support of the Bill. The speed with which this Bill was passed, Mr. Speaker, is to be noted. It won all Party agreement in just three meetings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, which speaks for the soundness and the importance of the proposed amendments.

Bill C-98 is an important Bill for the industry. It is important because it would give the CAPS Act the legal power necessary to regulate the terms and conditions under which the fruit and vegetable trade in Canada can operate efficiently for the benefit of producers and consumers.

One of the most significant amendments concerns a board of arbitration to resolve disputes between buyers and sellers of fresh produce. When one Party is unhappy with the arrival condition of a shipment, if they feel that the shipment is not in as good a condition as it should be, and when the buyer rejects the delivered goods the arbitration procedure is recognized by the industry as an effective means of handling such disputes.

The board of arbitration has continued to operate on a voluntary basis in settling disputes since the previous legislation was declared invalid in 1974. But without legal powers, the board has not been able to do its job effectively. There have, for instance, been cases of parties ignoring decisions which the board could not enforce.

You must realize that when you are dealing with highly perishable products that must travel long distances, it is necessary that an arbitration board be able to act quickly and with authority. Otherwise, the products spoil while the squabbling goes on. While they are arguing back and forth trying to negotiate, trying to deal, trying to do all kinds of things, the fresh produce deteriorates until, in some instances, it is not marketable.

The board of arbitration would give dealers an avenue of recourse. It would examine complaints about quality, packaging, storage, transportation and preservation of fruits and vegetables on the basis of standards and regulations made pursuant to the amendment of the CAPS Act. These regulations are currently being drawn up by a committee composed of both industry and Government members. Therefore, we can be sure that any new regulation will be practical enough for the industry to follow.

As you are probably aware, the United States is our major trading partner in fruits and vegetables. We are their largest customer. The United States operates an arbitration system to handle complaints where Canadian shippers are involved. It is only reasonable that Canada should provide a similar service to settle disputes with our biggest trading partner.

Three other amendments to the CAPS Act concern the licensing and bonding of dealers in fresh fruits and vegetables.

Bill C-98 would amend the Act to provide for the licensing of such dealers and, secondly, to establish regulations setting out the terms and conditions surrounding a dealer's licence.

The third amendment to the Bill, approved last week by the Standing Committee on Agriculture, would require that all individuals and firms requiring licences would have to post a bond to cover any order or decision that might be made against them by the board. This amendment, I want to point out, was approved just last week by the Standing Committee after discussion with officials of the Fruit Wholesaler's Association and the Horticultural Council. An amount of $100,000 for the bond has been suggested, but the sum is still being discussed.

Members of the Canadian fruit and vegetable industry import hundreds of millions of dollars worth of perishable produce from all over the world each year. Thanks to them, Canadians can eat fresh spinach, bananas and melons and many other products all year round.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I understood the Minister correctly, he stated that if one were to appeal to the board of arbitration to settle a claim, a bond would have to be posted. Did I understand him correctly? If that is so, I was not aware that that would be—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I am not sure why the Hon. Member is rising. I thought he was rising on a point of order. Obviously the Hon. Member rises to put a question to the Minister. Perhaps we should inquire whether the Minister wishes to receive a question at this time. That would be in order.

Mr. Whelan: I was stating that if anyone wanted to be a licensed dealer, he would have to apply for a bond. The $100,000 was discussed between the traders, the Canadian Horticultural Council, that type of thing. I do not know what the Hon. Member got from what I was saying. I was talking about how the bond was being proposed, that it be $100,000. I suggested no such thing as the Hon. Member has mentioned.

Members of the Canadian fruit and vegetable industry import, as I said, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of perishable produce from all over the world each year. It is an important industry. However, the Canadian horticultural industry is attempting to replace many of these imported products with fruits and vegetables grown in Canada. My Department strongly supports their efforts. If we really want to encourage import replacement, we must make sure that the domestic goods arrive at the retail store quickly and in top shape. It must be high quality or we will not be able to sell our produce.

In conclusion, I must stress again that we are talking about highly perishable products. Whether these products are grown in Canada or on the other side of the world, they must be moved quickly. Nobody, neither the producer, the dealer nor the consumer, can afford handling delays which could be avoided by tighter regulations. Tighter regulations must guarantee that the produce arrives in a condition that is saleable and the consumer will be satisfied with it.

It is obvious that the proposed amendments regarding licensing, bonding and a board of arbitration would give members of the horticultural industry in Canada greater confidence in shipping perishable products long distances. These amendments to the CAPS Act would held reduce the element of risk involved in the marketing of fresh fruits and vegetables and for export.

I urge the Members of this House to support Bill C-98, a Bill to amend the Canadian Agricultural Products Standards Act.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I have just observed that there are 23 Members on the Government side. In the numerous times I have spoken, never has such a great number of Government Members stayed behind. I am pleased that word got out that I would be speaking tonight. Perhaps it is because you are all waiting breathlessly for the apples that you have ordered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. King: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, they are all waiting with anticipation for their apples. Let me assure them that they do not need an appeal process against the quality of British Columbia apples.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. King: Yes, please applaud.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. King: In his address to the House on November 26 in support of Bill C-98, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said:

> It is only reasonable that we should try to reduce some of the element or risk through the provision of a good arbitration service so as to make it fair and operate in a very smooth fashion.

We agree fully and, in a display of co-operation and awareness of a situation which has needed to be corrected since 1974, we have undertaken to pass as quickly as the Government of Canada will permit Bill C-98, the amendment to the CAPS Act.

The purpose of the amendment is to give the board of arbitration established under the CAPS Act binding powers when ruling over disputes regarding the condition of a product shipped and received, a dispute between shipper and receiver of fresh fruits and vegetables in national and international trade.

The House and the nation should take note that when legitimate, worthy legislation is advanced by this Government, the Opposition responds in a thoroughly constructive and helpful manner. On the other hand, when the Government puts forward legislation unworthy of support, which goes against the grain of our Canadian experience and tradition, the Opposition will again respond in an equally thorough, constructive and helpful manner. In this instance we will accept our responsibility to resist, and explain to the electorate the reason for that resistance.

This is why the closure motion on the Canagrex Bill, C-85, brought the response which was demonstrated today. We resent the closing off of debate, limiting the ability of those in opposition to the measure to communicate to the general public the implications of that Bill.

The amendment to the Canadian Agricultural Products Standards Act is long overdue. The original Act, passed in 1934, was called the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act. My involvement in agriculture goes back quite a way. I remember when that Act was brought in. My father was active in the fruit industry, both the politics and the practical end of fruit growing in those days. The Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act brought a degree of stability and value to the industry that had previously been missing.

I grew up on a fruit farm in the Okanagan Valley. As I said, my father was active in the practical side of fruit growing and the politics of the fruit industry. In those days it was a struggle to market a product that we grew in British Columbia and had to ship many miles across the country and to Europe. Presently we ship across the Pacific. The type of regulation brought to bear by the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act was an absolute imperative to the progress of that industry in British Columbia.

I can remember as a boy when my father was involved in protests, when fruit was shipped out of the Okanagan on consignment with no way of knowing what the ultimate return would be. There was a battle cry in those days when trains were stopped by the farming community. The battle cry was, "A cent a pound or on the ground." One reason we have upgraded the industry is that we had an act which provided uniform standards for the commodity we grow so well in the Okanagan Valley. We have an industry there now that produces values in the area of $150 million annually, which is a boost not just to the local economy, but to the Canadian economy as well. That is my background. I am a man of the soil.

An Hon. Member: A great Canadian.

Mr. King: That is right, a great Canadian. These are my credentials for speaking on an amendment to an Act which has great implications for agriculture in general, but very specifically for the British Columbia tree fruits industry. The question might be asked, why has it taken so long to get this amendment to this stage? I do not know. You might have to ask the Minister. We have been willing to act judiciously and quickly on this matter, and they are demonstrating this willingness today.

I have in my possession a copy of a letter addressed to the Hon. Yvon Pinard, House Leader, House of Commons—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Again, I caution Hon. Members not to use proper names but to use the name of the riding of the Hon. Member or his portfolio.

Mr. King: Thank you. It is addressed to the House Leader of the House of Commons, and I will not read the salutation. It is dated September 20, 1982, and is under the letterhead of B.C. Tree Fruits Limited, the Sun-Rype Products Ltd. It is over the signature of the Director of Operations, B.C. Tree Fruits Limited, and it reads:

With reference to the introduction of Bill C-98, an Act to amend the Canada-Agricultural Products Standards Act in March, 1982. It is our understanding that the House will not deal with this piece of legislation prior to adjournment and, therefore, the Bill will have to be reintroduced in the next session of Parliament.

B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd./Sun-Rype Products Ltd. would like to express their deep disappointment that this Bill has not been dealt with to date and request that you give positive consideration to dealing with this legislation as soon as possible.

I have also a letter from the Canadian Horticultural Council which expresses the same kind of concern for immediate passage. Therefore, the question can well be asked, if there has been a void in the legislation since 1974, why has the Government not moved more quickly to fill that void?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I apologize to the Hon. Member. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member allow a question?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Will the Hon. Member accept a question from the Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. King: Well, I did not know that we had brought the new ruling into vogue so quickly. I thought that was next year. Next year I will be pleased to.

British Columbia Tree Fruit Growers know from experience the advantages of having an established appeals procedure in the event of quality or condition claims against shipments. We are forced by our circumstances of living in an area remote from markets to ship our cherries, apricots, peaches, pears and apples great distances. Soft fruits are sold from Quebec to the Pacific Ocean. Apples are sold throughout Canada and the United States, and in fact the market is world-wide now, all the Pacific Rim countries and Europe. We have the advantage of a superlative product which withstands the rigors of travel well, but for various reasons claims from time to time do arise. A method of arbitration of these occurrences is a great advantage for both producer, seller and the market. The B.C. Tree Fruits industry will not necessarily make use of this provision of the amended Act because their volume of trade is sufficient so that representatives of the industry at the marketplace are able to assess and adjudicate claims. While this is true, it is deemed by officials of those industry companies that it is a significant advantage to the stability of the Canadian fruit and vegetable marketing trade to have such a mechanism in place.

We agree with the good faith shown in providing a parallel system of adjudicating complaints to that which applies in our major trading partner, the United States, through their Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act.

While we support fully the legitimate aim to produce more of our own food within Canada, it must be recognized that trade is a two-way affair and that foreign traders in Canada must be afforded equal treatment to that which applies to Canadian producers selling in their country. For this reason, and for others, we are pleased to note that this amendment to Bill C-98 corrects an omission which was produced by a decision of the courts of Canada in 1974. It has been a long time coming and we are pleased to see that it is here at last. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to spend a few minutes reiterating the support of my Party for this Bill, which we stated in second reading stage and which carried through in Committee. I was pleased to see that the one shortcoming which had been identified in second reading stage, namely, the lack of a provision for bonding procedures, was included by an amendment in the Committee. I am also pleased with the co-operation and apparent consultation with the various affected Parties on this particular Bill. The Horticultural Council of Canada and the Fruit Wholesalers Association seem to have good contact with the people in the Department responsible for drafting the Bill, and the co-operation shows in the final result.

The Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) asked a very good question. He asked, since the problem has been known since 1974, why has it taken so long to deal with it? I think Hon. Members should be aware, as all we new Hon. Members are, that things do not move very fast around here. Last year we passed a meat import Bill which had been floating around since 1971. We got that out of the way in only ten years. I should point out that this is a problem which has been around since 1974. It has taken us only eight years. We are catching up. I hope we make such progress in the next part of this session of Parliament. The procedure which we are putting into law is a procedure which was carried out unofficially by the trade and was tested in the courts in 1974. They did not stop carrying out those same voluntary procedures after 1974, but what we will have now when this Bill is completed will be a reinforcing of the procedures which were carried forward. It ratifies the arbitration committee and sets up another board of review for those cases which might be challenged by that committee. Also, it will leave a situation where buyers and sellers will be operating under bonds, and if one party or the other is perceived by the arbitration board or the review board to have done something wrong, the bond will cover the expenses and will ensure that the party who received the shoddy goods will be reimbursed for them.

So I think it is a very fair, very brief Bill, something which is just a bit of housekeeping that the House has looked after. We picked up the only shortcoming immediately visible. We think it will work and we are prepared to let it go through very quickly this evening.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's remarks tonight give rise to some concern following the good natured fellowship which was experienced in Committee meetings. There were some suggestions made there, among which was that the bond for the dealer was expected to be in proportion to the need of the dealer to protect his customer, the receiver or shipper, whichever the case may be. I think we have to recognize that a minimum $100,000 bond is going to impose some very serious hardship in the community in which you and I, Mr. Speaker, live. If that is to be the minimum, then I have to submit to you that we have not been dealt with in good faith in that Committee. When it was proposed that the size of the bond should be proportional to the need, and when it was pointed out that many of the big guys in the business today, both shippers and receivers, started with a small cart on a corner and the need was not for $100,000, there was absolutely no objection raised by the Minister, his Department representatives or from any member of the Committee. A $100,000 bond as a minimum is too much. Let us go back and act in good faith in this. I am very, very disappointed that, having dealt with this Bill as we have, we would be confronted with that kind of a statement at this stage of the debate.

I would love to sit down and have the Minister explain what he said. He said the bond would be $100,000, without qualification. If he would care to explain it, I would be happy to let him rise on a point of order, or in whatever way you would allow him to clear that up, without my losing my right to speak, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I suppose the Minister would be allowed to respond at this time by unanimous consent. I draw to the attention of the House that we are not following procedures under the Committee of the Whole, and it is a very unusual request. By unanimous consent, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has the floor.

Mr. Whelan: Well, Mr. Speaker, how the bonding system would work was clearly explained in Committee. There is no hardship on anyone. You have to be a licenced dealer to buy and ship produce. They are going to be bonded, and we said the maximum would be $100,000. That is what they are still looking at. I used that terminology in the Committee and I have not changed it one iota here in the House tonight.

As I have already stated, there would not be a need to have a bond posted in order to have a complaint heard by the board of arbitration. You do not have to have a bond posted to have that complaint heard. Any ordinary citizen can have a complaint heard, and he does not need to have a bond. Only as a condition of obtaining a licence would applicants be required to post a bond. If they are going to be a licenced dealer, they would have to post a bond.

Mr. McCain: If I have misunderstood the Minister I apologize to him, Mr. Speaker. But may I suggest that he take a look at the "blues", because my understanding was that the size of that bond was to be a minimum of $100,000. If that is the case, my objection stands. If it is the maximum, that is a different situation altogether and I accept that.

We also suggested, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee should have the right to have a look at the regulations as submitted for the control and performance of this Act in the hands of the Government. I hope the Minister will accede to that request in view of the harmony with which this Bill has been considered in all stages.

I think once again, Mr. Speaker, we must draw to the attention of the House and the industry that this Bill has been some eight and a half years in the process of development and presentation to this House. I submit to you that that does not do anything good for the record of either the Minister or the Government in whose Cabinet he sits. However, I think it does point out one thing. There has been a great deal of complaint about the amount of time consumed on the Canagrex Bill. That Bill, unlike this one, was in conflict with public opinion. Like all other Papers and all other Bills presented by a Government which conflicts with public opinion, that public opinion must be heard, as it was heard. That was not needed in this Bill. I cite this Bill, Mr. Speaker, as an example of what a Government should do. It should not delay for eight years—that is taboo and irresponsible—but it should react to public opinion as expressed to it by letter, by wire or by personal conversation in presentation to it. None of that can be attributed to the Canagrex Bill. But this Bill, in contrast, did respond to representations made across the board by the fruit and vegetable industry. Therefore, it became very simple for this House as a whole to consider this Bill. I guess I would have to say, and I believe I would be permitted to do so in response to remarks already made on this Bill tonight—I will not deviate from the subject matter any further than those who preceded me—that on our left once again they are stating that we changed our position on Canagrex from day one.

Mr. Deans: You did.

Mr. McCain: They cited the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), they cited the agricultural critic of this Party. The principles attributed to this Bill, Mr. Speaker, in its announcement, were totally supported by this Party.

Mr. Deans: Methinks thou doth protest too much.

Mr. McCain: But the vehicle or the method of implementation of these principles was objected to from day one and never espoused in any way, in any direct statement by any Member on this side of the House. The principles, yes, and on those principles we still stand firm in our support. They are necessary. But when anyone from any Party can pick up the words which were quoted this afternoon by the agricultural critic of this Party and say what was said tonight in this House—

Mr. Deans: You cannot stand the truth, that is your trouble.

An Hon. Member: Well, you do not know the truth when you see it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I have been following the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) attentively. I cannot presume, of course, to know the future course of his remarks, but as I understand it, the Hon. Member was referring to another Bill before the House previously. If I may suggest, perhaps we should return to the matter at hand.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I was responding to remarks made by the previous speaker from the NDP Party. If his remarks were tolerable, I plead with you: please let me respond.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member may feel obliged to respond to remarks which may have escaped the attention of the House earlier, but that does not legitimize any right to respond to them at this time. The Chair has brought to the attention of the Hon. Member that he should, as much as possible, relate his remarks to the Bill now before the House.

Mr. McCain: Well, there is a very distinct relationship. This is a Bill which in principle is totally supported, but one whose principle is implemented in an unacceptable way. No Member of this Party has said anything else with respect to Canagrex. What was stated here this afternoon absolutely and totally denies the remarks which have been made by several speakers from both your left, the NDP, and your right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I challenge that gentleman to read the "blues". If he reads the "blues" for today's remarks, if he reads the comments in the press release of the Hon. Member who is our agricultural critic, and if he reads the publicity which this Party has sent out, he will retract that statement tomorrow or he will live with the guilt which has to be his. Read it. Read it and then repeat it if you can.

Mr. Deans: I read it and I repeat it.

Mr. McCain: Read today's "blues".

Mr. Deans: You cannot weasel out of this one!

Mr. McCain: Read the "blues" of today and the comments of the agricultural critic of the Conservative Party—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. McCain: At no time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet: Sit down and respect the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I am not suggesting that the words of the Chair are pregnant with wisdom, but certainly Members should heed the caution expressed earlier by the Chair that there is some wisdom in attempting to adhere to the matter before the House so as to avoid controversy which may go beyond the scope of the Bill now before the House.

Mr. McCain: In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me simply say that I do want to see the regulations. I trust that the Minister will continue to act with the good faith he has used—after eight and a half years, mind you—and that the Committee will be able to see the regulations before they are made public. The Committee should have an opportunity to give this some consideration. I believe this would be in the best interests of the industry. The Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) has clearly put forward the need for this. It is a need which should be considered. This should not be applied with a heavy hand.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have just a couple of comments on Bill C-98. It is an important Bill. Perhaps it is not important to a large number of people but it is important to the people in the industry, as the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen has so ably pointed out.

We have here an example of how the Opposition co-operates with the Government when it brings forward good legislation. Time and time again we hear that the Opposiiton wants to obstruct matters in this House, but when the Government brings forward good legislation, we do co-operate.

The only sad thing about this legislation is that it has taken eight and a half years to come before the House. If the Government had demonstrated any wisdom we would have been happy to pass such legislation a long time ago.

We do not hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) saying that he is happy to see the Opposition co-operating on legislation, but we do it all the time. The press does not pay any attention when legislation is passed that is good for the industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I apologize to the Hon. Member but the Parliamentary Secretary is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to my friend opposite that they indicated that the Canadian Horticultural Council had strongly supported Bill C-98 as well as Bill C-85.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. In my opinion, this is surely not a point of order but a matter for discussion.

[English]

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, that is an example of how the Government does not respect the Chair. That was obviously not a point of order and the Hon. Member knew that before he rose to his feet. I would suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that he should be careful or he will filibuster the Minister's Bill and not see it passed by ten o'clock, if he does not watch out. That would be an example of the Government filibustering its own good legislation.

Let me close my remarks as a demonstration of good faith and common sense on this side so that the Bill may be passed before ten o'clock this evening.

We in the Opposition would have been more than happy to pass this legislation a long time ago. We feel that it is too bad there has been a loophole in the law that has had to be filled on an ad hoc and, some might say, on an illegal basis for many years.

As soon as the Bill is passed we look forward to it being used by—

Mr. Whelan: You never had a vehicle to do it with before.

Mr. Mayer: I hear the Minister of Agriculture blustering away there as usual, trying to filibuster. He says we never had a vehicle. That may be true. It is unfortunate that we have not had a Minister for the last ten years. That is the main vehicle that we should have had that could do something for Canadian agriculture.

We hope that the Bill will meet the needs of the people who appeared before the Committee and who spoke to us privately. I hope the Minister will see fit to bring forward legislation in the future that is of genuine benefit to the industry. If he does, let me assure him that we on this side will certainly recognize good legislation and will be more than willing to co-operate with him to see that it is passed so that we do not have to wait another eight and a half years to put through legislation like this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest we see the clock at ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EMERGENCY MEASURES—GOVERNMENT PLANS. (B) ROLE OF PROVINCES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, for the past 15 months or so I have been asking various Government Ministers questions dealing with the emergency planning orders that were passed by order in council in May of 1981. At first the Government denied the existence of these orders. Once they were found to be there, it said, "We have to do our planning". I think all Canadians will recognize that when it comes to emergencies, an orderly Government will plan for them.

Things became a little more ominous when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) met with some of the provincial Ministers in June 1981 and told them in a speech that if the emergency plans were not completed, the Government might have to act extra-legally. That in itself was ominous enough but in the intervening 15 months we have found out, more and more, what the Government meant by acting extra-legally.

Setting aside the order itself, which empowers a Solicitor General in wartime to depopulate prisons in order to make room for political hostages or political prisoners, and setting aside the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has total control of all the information agencies in the country—setting all those things aside—the President of the Privy Council only talked about acting extra-legally when it came to an emergency. We now find that the Government has made plans to act extra-legally if need be in order to design the order itself.

I want to bring to the attention of Members of the House the fact that about a month or six weeks ago a package came to my office. It contained the confidential memo sent to the President of the Privy Council from Mr. Snarr, the gentleman he appointed to head up the emergency planning agency. That memo outlined some pitfalls in federal-provincial relations that came to Mr. Snarr's attention through letters he received from some of the provincial Governments. Strategy was outlined as to how they might circumvent some of the problems. For the record I want to read some of the concerns which some of the Provinces have voiced.

First, I have a letter dated August 19 which came from an official of the Province of Alberta. It reads, in part:

> The most obvious examples of such emergencies are situations of war or situations of transition from war to peace. Alberta is seriously concerned however, that the proposed federal legislation will not necessarily be confined to emergencies of an overriding national concern but that it also contemplates federal authority in what may be very localized situations.

On page 2, the letter continues:

> It is my recommendation that a clear statement be made as to the temporary nature of the proposed legislation and that the legislation be confined to dealing explicitly with national emergencies that threaten the safety of Canada as a whole. Moreover, because of the extraordinary and constitutional features of the contemplated legislation, I would propose that full and complete consultation be undertaken with the provinces before the legislation is introduced to Parliament.

I have a copy of a letter sent to the President of the Privy Council, from a Minister in the former NDP Government of Saskatchewan. In part, this letter reads:

> It has come to my attention that certain agencies and departments of this and other provincial Governments have been directly approached by federal officials with the intention of initiating joint planning processes. In the case of Saskatchewan and other provinces, this was done without the knowledge or consent of the Minister or officials responsible for emergency response and planning.

The letter continues:

> Indeed, the discussion paper which we agreed to (No. 1—Joint Emergency Planning) specified that each province would "determine the form and nature of the planning mechanism best suited to its individual requirements", and that the "Provincial Emergency Measures Directors and the Regional Directors of Emergency Planning Canada will jointly facilitate and co-ordinate the planning of the joint emergency response arrangements."
> This proposed arrangement seems to have been overlooked in the recent actions of numerous federal departments.
> As you are aware, I and other provincial ministers attending the June 5th meeting in Ottawa had serious reservations about the form and possible scope of Planning Order PC 1305.

And the letter continues:

> It now appears that federal emergency officials have seen no need to consult with their provincial counterparts, or to act in manner consistent with the agreement of Ministers, in initiating joint emergency planning processes. Numerous contacts have been made in Saskatchewan by federal emergency officials, and by line department officials, in reference to joint planning exercises or activities under P. O. 1305. In none of these instances has the provincial emergency staff been contacted by federal staffs in accordance with our understandings.

Finally, I have a letter from a Minister in the Government of Ontario in which it is stated that that Government is concerned and suggests that:

> —the effect of suspending rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter of Rights ought to be brought into effect only in the clearest case of an emergency.

Further on in this letter we find:

> The examples under which a state of emergency could be declared, as outlined in your statement, are far too broad and vague for Ontario to consent to federal pre-emption of its constitutional authority in such circumstances. I realize, of course, that further discussions could make our joint and individual interests much clearer than unilateral statements of our intent.

Mr. Snarr writes on page 3, paragraph (b) of his memo to the President of the Privy council that he proposes that the strategy regarding relations with the provinces should proceed and that they should:

> —continue within the federal Government, our planning for NEAs, but in dealing with the provinces we would "soft-pedal", peacetime activation and for the time being concentrate on wartime interfaces between NEAs and provincial government facilities—

• (2205)

In paragraphs (d) and (e) he says they would continue the Joint Emergency Planning Program and the funding as long as the Provinces would co-operate. If they would refuse to co-operate, however, they would withdraw that funding, take it over by the Government departments themselves and initiate those programs under the federal aegis; all that in the name of federal-provincial co-operation.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not here tonight to deny the authenticity of this particular document, or to dwell on the questionable ethics of making free use of classified material in the House. What I propose to do is to remind Hon. Members why the Access to Information Act we recently passed specifically removes such forms of privileged, communications from its general thrust.

In the intense and sometimes difficult world of federal-provincial relations, Ministers frequently receive advice from their officials in memoranda, such as the one in question, in which various options were outlined. Ministers are, of course, free to make use of this advice or to disregard it as they see fit.

In the case at hand, we are dealing with a document that is now some 14 months old. Despite what the Hon. Member has intimated, the memo has not seen the collapse of federal-provincial understanding in emergency planning. On the contrary, a number of events have taken place since October of 1981.

First, a federal-provincial conference of officials in January, 1982, began the drafting of a intergovernmental Memorandum of Understanding on Emergency Planning covering both general principles and specific tasks.

In October of 1982, the federal Government and the Province of New Brunswick signed the first such memorandum, and discussions are continuing toward this end with eight other Provinces and with the two Territories.

Third, senior federal officials have held bilateral consultations on emergency planning with both Territories and with the Provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario and New Brunswick.

Fourth, applications for cost-shared projects under the Joint Emergency Planning Program have been received from both Territories and nine Provinces.

There have been 31 joint projects approvals under this particular program since October of 1981, including at least one from each Territory and every Province except Alberta.

Federal and Territorial officials will meet again in Winnipeg in February of 1983 to continue this important work.

I believe that these demonstrate that whatever options may have been outlined in the document under discussion, the course which has actually been followed has been one of free and open co-operation with the Provinces.

The practical reason why tactical advice prepared for Ministers is privileged in our Act is that it is all too easily misunderstood and misinterpreted. I believe that the present case is a classic example and I have to question whether the Hon. Member in raising this matter at the present hour is helping or hindering progress toward a more constructive working relationship between the federal and provincial Governments in the area of emergency planning.

Adjournment Debate

ENERGY—COST COMPENSATION REQUESTED FOR HOME OWNERS IN NOVA SCOTIA. (B) EQUALIZATION OF ENERGY COSTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on November 26, 1982, I addressed a question in the House of Commons to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) concerning the cost of energy in the Maritime Provinces, particularly in the Province of Nova Scotia.

My purpose in questioning the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on this point was to present to him the problem that exists in the Province of Nova Scotia, and particularly in the Province of Prince Edward Island with respect to the tremendous burden on the consumers of home heating oil and other forms of energy which are utilized to heat homes. I was attempting to make the case for federal Government assistance to people in the Maritime Provinces, particularly the Province of Nova Scotia; for special aid to assist the residents of Nova Scotia in bearing these tremendous costs which have increased dramatically over the past few years. I welcome the opportunity now to make the case for special federal assistance to residents of Nova Scotia with respect to energy costs. I can only hope—perhaps forlornly—that my colleague from Nova Scotia, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) will carry that message back to the Minister in the hope that some action may be taken before this winter passes.

In October of 1980, when the Government introduced its National Energy Program, it was stated that the Government would involve itself in the construction of a pipeline extension so that natural gas would be available in the Maritimes, particularly in Nova Scotia, by 1983. The importance of that promise made in the National Energy Program was that that natural gas was to be made available to Nova Scotians and other residents of the Maritimes at the Toronto city price, which would have amounted to substantially less than the cost of heating a home in Nova Scotia with oil or electricity, the basic methods of home heating in that Province.

That premise was reaffirmed several times in this House of Commons. This very year, 1982, in the National Energy Program update issued by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the promise was repeated. The Government again said that it had a commitment to the extension of reasonably priced natural gas service to the Maritimes. Therefore, the Government did not forget the promise it made in 1980, even though it did nothing to implement the gas pipeline extension; it repeated the promise in 1982.

What we are concerned with now is the implementation of that promise because the Government has not succeeded in extending the gas pipeline. It can only fulfil its promise by providing financial aid to make up for the harm incurred by Nova Scotians and other Maritimers because of the failure to extend the pipeline.

In specific terms, that harm amounts to this. Home heating oil in Halifax at the present time, by way of example, is $1.46 a gallon. It is known that the price for natural gas available in places like Toronto is approximately 67 per cent of the price of petroleum products, particularly home heating oil. Consequently, if that kind of price regime applied to consumers of home heating oil in Nova Scotia, the effective price would be 99 cents a gallon; that is to say, equating natural gas to home heating oil in relation to price, we would find that Nova Scotians would be paying a price of 99 cents instead of the current price of $1.46 a gallon for oil.

This means, in general terms, and I hope Your Honour follows my point, that instead of paying $1,168 a year over the winter months to heat the average home in Nova Scotia, a Nova Scotian family would be paying something like $792 if they had available a price equivalent to the natural gas price. That would mean a savings per family of $376 per year. If one multiplies that by the number of homes in Nova Scotia, over 200,000, one is talking about $80 million.

The point is that because the Government did not fulfil its promise to extend the natural gas pipeline to the Maritimes, particularly Nova Scotia, this very winter Nova Scotians will be paying $80 million more to heat their homes, and that is a conservative estimate because it includes only those people using home heating oil.

Therefore, what I want the Government to do is to consider this situation, consider the promise it made to Nova Scotians, consider the fact that that promise has been broken, and remedy the situation by providing equivalent financial aid.

In these days of cutbacks in Government expenditures, one might ask, where will the Government get the funds to provide this assistance? The fact is that, through the Petroleum Compensation Program, which the Government introduced, allegedly to help Nova Scotians and people on the East Coast to cushion the effects of increases in the cost of oil and home heating oil, as Your Honour knows, the Government provides a compensation program. That compensation paid in respect of oil imported to the East Coast of Canada cost over $3 billion in the last two fiscal years. Of course the price of foreign oil and the price of Canadian oil have come closer together. The price difference has now narrowed. The Government will spend substantially less this year and in the following years than it has in the past two years. This expenditure of approximately $3 billion will be reduced to something in the order of $1.5 billion.

So, Mr. Speaker, the $1.5 billion that the Government is saving in the payments it has been making through the Petroleum Compensation Board in respect of imports of oil should now be available to assist consumers with this increase in cost they are incurring, to heat their homes and for other energy purposes.

That is my request to the Minister, and I hope his Parliamentary Secretary will convey the message to him. Since the Government is saving $1.5 billion and since it has broken its promise to deliver natural gas to Nova Scotia, causing consumers there an expenditure of over $80 million a year, some of this money should be used to offset that expenditure.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has raised the particular question, what assistance is the federal Government giving or going to give to the consumers in the Province of Nova Scotia?

I suggest at the outset that the Hon. Member for Halifax West must be running scared to be raising issues of this nature. He knows very well the reasons the pipeline is not proceeding as quickly as we would like. He knows that the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia has indicated, in agreement with the Government of Canada, that if there is a delay in construction of that pipeline, so be it, because they are now finding natural gas in commercial quantities off the coast of Nova Scotia. Hopefully it will be possible to bring this on-stream in the construction of the pipeline, and I am surprised that a Consservative Member of Parliament from Nova Scotia would be in disagreement with the Conservative Government of that Province.

The Hon. Member referred very briefly to the Oil Import Compensation Program. I suggest to the Hon. Member that he ought to take note of the facts. It should be noted that from January 1, 1974 to December 1, 1982, the Oil Import Compensation Program made payments to Nova Scotia totalling over $2.6 billion, yet he has the audacity to ask us what the Government of Canada is doing for Nova Scotia!

I suggest to the Hon. Member that, in addition to the Oil Import Compensation Program, we should look at the Cape Breton Development Corporation which is being subsidized by the Government of Canada. That Crown corporation and the coal miners who work for it are getting substantially less for the product, which they sell primarily to the Nova Scotia Government, thereby keeping heating costs down. So it is the coal miners in Cape Breton who are subsidizing, to a large extent with the assistance of the Government of Canada, the Nova Scotia Power Corporation.

I suggest, with all due respect, that the Hon. Member for Halifax West, who is running scared obviously because of the political boundary changes which may occur in that Province, ought to embrace his Tory Premier and look at the facts. What he ought to do is to say to the Premier of Nova Scotia that the coal miners of Cape Breton ought to receive a better price for their coal. That is what he ought to be saying. But The Hon. Member refuses to acknowledge those facts. I can only say that I will take his representations under advisement.

NATIONAL PARKS—BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—ROLE OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. (B) REASON FOR REQUESTING DELAY IN DEVELOPMENT PROJECT. (C) REQUEST THAT BULLDOZERS BE REMOVED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this part of the Late Show tonight depicts a tragedy. A beautiful park, developed with taxpayers' money over a period of ten years by Parks Canada, with benches for people to rest, with bridges over the stream, with paths for quiet walks so that all could enjoy nature, the birds, the 100 year-old trees and the animals, was destroyed, desecrated by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) in charge of national parks. The Minister allowed men with chainsaws to cut down the trees, bulldozers to tear up the paths so his friend, the Hon. Judd Buchanan, could build an apartment building on the site.

The Minister, knowing he had done wrong, steadfastly refused to investigate. When the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was asked to freeze the project until a full inquiry was held, the Minister shook his head violently when the Deputy Prime Minister looked at him before answering the question in the House of Commons. He then meekly replied that he could see no reason to investigate. The head of any responsible Government would at least have looked into the matter before condoning it.

What were the Minister's excuses? First, he alleged he had telegrams from the Chamber of Commerce supporting his decision. In fact, he received one telegram over the name of the Banff-Lake Louise Chamber of Commerce which was sent by one or two men without the knowledge of the membership of the Chamber of Commerce, and one telegram, with the knowledge of the Chamber of Commerce, rescinding the first telegram. The Minister calls that support!

Second, the Minister alleged he had the support of the Banff Community Society when in fact that society on at least two occasions told the Minister it supported affordable housing, but asked that any decision to build in the park be held back until at least there was full public disclosure. The Minister conveniently forgot to mention that.

Third, the Minister misled the House by stating that the area had been zoned for multi purposes back in 1970 and that the people knew about it. The fact is it was so zoned and Parks Canada started the development of the park, but the Minister well knows that the people were not told in 1970 that a 76-unit apartment building was going to replace the park. It was only in late 1982 when a leak was published in The Crag and Canyon that the people found out about the under-the-table deal. Yes, it is true that near the end of 1981 it was discovered what was afoot, but the Deputy Minister in a letter stated emphatically that Parks Canada and Treasury Board had not approved the project. This again is a Government misleading the people.

Fourth, the Minister did not refer the case to Treasury Board, alleging that departmental officials did not consider it necessary. The people of Canada have been led to believe that Treasury Board decides whether a project should or should not be approved, which is a check on departmental expenditures. The Minister's action in this regard is hypocrisy of the worst kind.

Fifth, the Minister likewise deliberately avoided referring the matter to the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office (FEARO). The Minister justifies his actions because affordable accommodation is needed in Banff. Everyone agrees that affordable accommodation is needed, but no one wants it in the only treed park in the townsite. No one wants it in the park. The Minister admitted in committee that he had no guarantees from the developers that the accommodation will be affordable. They said it will be as affordable as possible, but $600 and $800 per month is not affordable accommodation.

In summary, this matter was carried out without letting the people know what was going on. It was done under the table and a park was destroyed. It is a tragedy that will forever stand to the dishonour of a man who dares to continue to be the Minister of the Environment in charge of National Parks.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has appeared in this House on numerous occasions to answer questions on the issue of the Banff land exchange. In addition, the Minister appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on the afternoon of December 2 to respond to the Hon. Member's questions. On all occasions he provided forthright, complete answers to all questions directed to him. Yet the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) continues to repeat the same questions as though he had not heard the answers at all. If the Hon. Member were truly interested in finding out the true facts of this case, he would have listened to the answers which are already part of the public record. Despite having repeatedly received full and complete answers to the very questions he poses tonight, he continues with his repetition of worn out, unsubstantiated accusations.

I can see no useful purpose in repeating once again answers to questions the Hon. Member has asked. I would therefore refer him to the pages of Hansard and the minutes of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry meeting of December 2 where he will find all the answers to his questions.

And as always, the Hon. Member would seem to use his parliamentary privileges to lay false charges. If he has further questions to ask or if he has any valid allegation to make, the Minister will be pleased to reply and give him all the information he requests as the Minister has always done in the past. The Hon. Member, in my opinion does not want to understand and he goes on asking the same question. Considering that he has been given all those replies, I do not feel it necessary to carry on with this discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

At 10.25 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

DISASTERS

BREACHING OF DYKES IN DELTA, B.C.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the widespread and costly damage to agricultural crops and private property at Westham Island and East Delta, British Columbia, which has occurred in the past 48 hours due to a series of breaches to the Delta dykes, due to high winds and tides more than two feet above normal, and whereas the federal Government has consistently failed to meet its obligations to upgrade these dykes, in spite of repeated warnings of flood danger, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That the federal Government now recognize the seriously deteriorated state of certain dykes in Delta, British Columbia, by undertaking to meet its obligations to help the farmers in that particular area.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED EXAMINATION OF MANAGEMENT AND EARLY RETIREMENT ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, Air Canada is apparently so overstaffed in its executive suites that it is making sweetheart, voluntary separation arrangements with 500 of its management personnel at a cost to the company of at least $21 million, together with untold costs to its presently unfunded pension plan. At the same time those people in the machinists' union who do aircraft maintenance and repair are being laid off and dumped on the unemployment lines. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House direct the Government to appoint immediately a special committee of this House, first, to examine the management of Air Canada to find out why Air Canada has 500 surplus management people in the first place, second, to determine the extent to which the sweetheart deals with its boardroom types affect the quality of Air Canada pensions and the company's profitability and, third, to determine why Air Canada is not prepared to make realistic early retirement arrangements for all its work force, particularly its machinists.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR REGISTRATION OF MICMAC INDIANS AT CONNE RIVER, NFLD.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, officials of the Department of Indian Affairs have admitted that the Micmac Indians of Conne River are eligible to be registered as Indians under the Indian Act. The Minister admits that only political considerations have prevented him from registering them so that they could receive direct funding from the federal Government. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this House instruct the Minister that his top political priority should be to do justice to the Indian people and to proceed immediately with the registration of the Conne River Indians.

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATORS OF CANADA—EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY TREATY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) stated in St. John's, in The Daily News of December 7, that "Canada has been burned in the fisheries treaty with the European Economic Community and may break the contract to get out of it", that Canadian officials were under the impression that the tariff reductions negotiated in return for allotting EEC member countries the right to take 15,000 tonnes of fish from Canadian waters would be applied in Great Britain, where Canada exports fish products, but instead the EEC allocated the rights to West Germany which buys almost no fish, so that Canada got the raw end of this deal. He also said that the treaty was "a great disappointment", so that "one of the remedies is to terminate the treaty". I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That this savage indictment by the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, of the former minister, now the Minister of Public Works, and of the officials responsible for the negotiation of this fisheries treaty signed in January, 1982, over the objections of the Government of Newfoundland and the Canadian fishing industry, be followed up by disciplinary action, including the dismissal of the Minister of Public Works and the officials whose negligence and incompetence caused this great disappointment and caused Canada to be burned at the same time Canada suffered a snow job from the negotiators for the European Economic Community.

TRADE

ADMINISTRATION OF QUOTAS ON FOOTWEAR IMPORTS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) has succeeded in angering all sectors of the footwear industry in Canada, namely, manufacturers, importers and retailers, by the inefficient and incompetent way in which quotas were reimposed on imports, and by failing to realize that Canadian jobs are as much at stake in the retail as in the manufacturing end, and by failing to advise what the new quotas were prior to the expiry of the appeal period, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That this House direct the Minister of State for International Trade to meet again with representatives of all sectors of the footwear industry in order to resolve the serious problems which will bring disaster to all sectors of the industry, failing which this House direct that the Minister should get the boot.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTION LIBERAL MEMBERS DISCUSS BILL C-133 WITH PENSIONERS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee has agreed not to report Bill C-133 to the House until the last sitting day before Christmas, and this means that third reading of the Bill will not be conducted until the House returns in January. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

• (1110)

That this House urge the Members of the Liberal Party to return to their ridings over the Christmas break and actually talk to the Public Service pensioners, such as those demonstrating outside today, so they can find out first hand the damage that this Bill will do both to their standard of living and to their faith in the justice of Government.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF BEEF STABILIZATION PLAN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Canadian beef industry has been at rock bottom for some time with no relief in sight, a condition that will force more and more beef farmers into bankruptcy and ruin, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Agriculture meet with his provincial counterparts as soon as possible to implement the beef stabilization plan mutually agreed upon by the Provinces, which will help to stop further bankruptcies, until such time as a more permanent plan for a more orderly production and marketing of beef cattle is devised.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

VENUE FOR FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since the purpose of the First Ministers' Conference, scheduled for March, 1983, is to identify and define aboriginal rights, which have only recently been recognized as sufficiently important to be entrenched in the Constitution, and since these rights were not, until recently, even recognized by the federal Government, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko):

That it is inappropriate to hold the First Ministers' Conference in Ottawa and that the conference, if it is to have credibility, should be held either in northern or western Canada.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, today's press tells us that the Prime Minister, dissatisfied with the treatment that he has been receiving at the hands of the private sector network, CTV, has cancelled his annual one-hour interview, by Mr. Bruce Phillips, that has become a regular feature of Christmas seasonal television over the past 14 years. In an effort, presumably, to ensure a more favourable, even if less objective, reception, the Right Hon. Prime Minister has instead arranged for a half-hour session on the publicly-owned CBC network.

It has been a hard year for the Prime Minister and the Members of his Party. We here all understand that, and we have no desire to embarrass him unnecessarily in public. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That in the event that the scheduled CBC interview does not work out to the Prime Minister's satisfaction, he should be encouraged to repeat the experiment, for a quarter-hour period, the interview being conducted by either Senator Davey or Mr. Jim Coutts.

Mr. Whelan: It sounds like you wrote that, Eric.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL S-31

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, whereas yesterday in its report, the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs judged that Bill S-31 is unconstitutional because it gives the Federal Government powers it does not have, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the Government withdraw Bill S-31 which imposes unwarranted restrictions on the investment plans of provincial governments.

THE SENATE

PARTICIPATION IN STUDY OF REFORM

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I think that many of us who are concerned about Canadian federalism, and especially the role of the Senate in our political process, were genuinely pleased with the announcement yesterday that a motion will be introduced in the other place to establish a Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform. As many Hon. Members know, a motion calling for the establishment of such a Committee is already on our Order Paper and in fact was debated in this House on June 4 of this year. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

• (1115)

That this House endorse the Senate's initiative and express its intention to co-operate fully in any Committee set up to deal with this very important question of Senate reform.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, my question had been intended for either the Minister of Justice, his Parliamentary Secretary or the Government House Leader. Since there does not appear to be any Minister of consequence across the way, I would like to reserve my right to await the arrival of one of these Ministers.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member could have done that simply by not rising.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

FINANCE

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING OF FINANCE MINISTERS—SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. At their meeting yesterday the Finance Ministers spent some considerable time, I understand, discussing the question of increased spending with a view to creating jobs. I want to ask the Minister of Finance what size of an increase in the deficit the Government is contemplating, and will this increase in the size of the deficit be handled by the federal Government, the provincial Governments, or will it be combined? What is the Minister doing to cut waste in spending, such as the 50 per cent increase in government travel, as well as the 17.1 per cent increase in the administrative costs of Government that I have referred to on a number of occasions in the past?

I ask these questions because it is important that Canadians have some understanding of how big the deficit is going to be, and that it is done in a way that reduces the amount of waste that is present in government spending today.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we indeed had a very constructive and positive meeting yesterday of Finance Ministers. The Finance Ministers agreed that their respective Governments should all pull in the same direction to ensure recovery in 1983 and try to reduce the level of unemployment that we have at the present time. All of us agreed that in the preparation of our respective budgets we would look at ways of improving the economic environment. There have been press reports in that regard.

My friend referred to some of the indications which came out of that meeting. I can tell my hon. friend that we did not discuss the scale of any particular deficit, or increase or decrease in the deficit. We had a general discussion in that regard. There will be further consultations between Ministers. If the Hon. Member is patient, at the time of the budget he will see the size of the deficit planned for 1983. At the present time I am not in a position to indicate to him whether the deficit will increase, decrease, or remain the same.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, again the Minister of Finance neglected to address my question of government waste and the ability of the Government to cut down on spending.

CONTROL OF EXPENDITURES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, yesterday there seemed to be some discussion of increased spending on public works and transportation. Obviously the purpose of the increased spending is to create jobs. How does the Minister reconcile this objective with the Income Tax Act and the regulations before us today, which will reduce the capital cost allowance and introduce nine separate disincentives for small-businessmen to increase their spending and thereby increase jobs? Is it the intent of the Government to take that job creation capacity away from small business and centralize it in Governments where bureaucrats can control the whole process in the country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend should not be surprised if it is not possible within the limits of the Question Period to answer the three or four questions he decides to ask at the same time under the pretext of asking one question. Therefore I will go back to some of the points he raised. The first one was control of expenditures. The Government has established very strict control on expenditures over the years. In fact, as my hon. friend knows, the Government has appointed a Comptroller-General. That followed on recommendations from the Auditor General and from the Lambert Commission a few years ago. He is an outstanding person who came from the private sector. He has helped very considerably in ensuring that all Departments are exercising very strict control over their expenditures. The President of the Treasury Board has indicated he is reviewing all government expenditures in all Departments to ensure that they are being put to the best possible use.

As far as the question relating to the Income Tax Act is concerned, I remind my hon. friend that the measures put forward in the Income Tax amendments include many provisions which would be of significant benefit to small business in this country, particularly the increase in income eligible for the low level of income tax rate from $150,00 to $200,000, and the global deduction increase from $750,000 to $1 million, as a whole, in terms of the low tax rate from which the small business people are going to benefit.

This is only one amongst many measures included in that Bill which are benefiting the small business sector. I hope my hon. friend will recognize that and support this Bill so it can get passed soon in order that small business can benefit from it.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INQUIRY RESPECTING LEGISLATION AFFECTING THE DISABLED AND WOMEN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice and is in relation to the amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which have been in the possession of the Minister and the Cabinet of the Government for some considerable period of time. Why does the Government continue to hide this Bill relating to the disabled and women, rather than making it public immediately?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I do not know why my hon. friend would speak about hiding the Bill. I have given him a copy of it.

An Hon. Member: Have you tabled it?

Mr. Clark: Where is my copy?

Mr. Nielsen: Where is mine?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, he is the critic in this area. I have now obtained authorization to enable him even to show his copy to his colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Democracy limps.

Mr. MacGuigan: This is a Bill which has not yet received first reading, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member, I understand, has been discussing the content of it, as he was authorized to do, with his colleagues.

Mr. Clark: No, he was not. That is a falsehood.

Mr. MacGuigan: I think the question—well, I don't know whether he has discussed it with his colleagues, Madam Speaker. I cannot say. But I authorized him to discuss the subject matter with his colleagues.

Mr. Clark: You did not. That is a falsehood.

Mr. MacGuigan: And to come back and say whether or not they would be prepared to—

Miss MacDonald: You are making that up.

Mr. MacGuigan: —give the Bill second reading without debate, as the New Democratic Party has agreed to do.

REQUEST THAT BILL BE TABLED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the obsequious response of the Minister only makes me understand that I will never again take his word on anything.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is absolutely mistaken. He has misled the House on the facts. The fact of the matter is that some weeks ago when this matter was first raised—and the Minister knows this—I suggested in public and in the Committee that he immediately table this document—

Mr. Nielsen: This Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —this particular Bill. The Minister has neglected or refused to do this. Today the Prime Minister has received a telegram from the representatives of COPOH, the disabled group, indicating that they agree with the position we have taken, that the legislation should be tabled immediately, so that all Canadians, not just a certain select number, would be able to see the contents of the Bill. I ask the Minister again, will he not now, in a sense of fair play and respect for the disabled people and women in this country, table and give first reading to this Bill so we can get on with the business of dealing with it expeditiously?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am at a loss to understand what the hon. gentleman's grievance is. We are not introducing further legislation in this session. That is the basic—

Miss MacDonald: Why not?

Mr. MacGuigan: —policy at issue, because we want to complete the business which is before the House, and we hope that the Opposition will co-operate with us in doing that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Who is the House Leader over there?

Mr. MacGuigan: I offered to the Hon. Member, as he well knows, if we could have second reading without debate, that this matter could go to Committee. I gave him a copy of the Bill so he could discuss the substance of it with his colleagues.

Mr. Clark: But not to show it to anyone.

Mr. MacGuigan: I do not know, Madam Speaker, whether he has discussed it with his colleagues. We do hear of more tumultuous happenings in the Conservative Caucus, and perhaps they have not been able to discusss this. But, Madam Speaker, we made an offer in good faith to the Opposition, and we would like to see them get on with this legislation.

• (1125)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is, as the Minister knows full well, that there was an embargo placed upon me against revealing any of the provisions of that Bill to anyone, let alone members of my caucus. He knows that, and he continues to persist in misleading this House. I simply want to say to the Minister that we have been waiting two and a half years now, and our Party need make no apology for our stand on behalf of the disabled and women of this country. We have stood for their rights and for progress in human rights legislation, and we will continue to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): What harm is there, Madam Speaker, in the poor beleaguered Minister simply taking 20 seconds of House time to table this Bill by way of first reading so that all Canadians can see precisely what the Government has on its mind?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I asked the Hon. Member not to show the Bill to his colleagues. I authorized him to discuss the contents with them. If the Opposition does not have confidence in its own critics, that is a problem for them, not for us. But it is a problem for the country and and for the disabled if this Bill is not given speedy passage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Show it to us.

Mr. Clark: How can we pass what you will not produce? There is no bill!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Clark: This is one more step in closure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

FINANCE

MEETING OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS—PRESENTATION OF JOB CREATION MEASURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. We learned from the meeting which took place yesterday that all provinces have decided to co-operate with the federal Government in job creation programs. For that, all Canadians can be thankful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: However, with 1.5 million unemployed I am a little concerned about the timing and would like the Minister to clarify that.

One report said that there would not be another meeting until about a month from now. If that is the case, and considering that it will require a number of weeks after that meeting to create new jobs, it could mean that we will be well into the Spring before any new job creation measures have any effect. Therefore, will the Minister indicate a little more precisely to Members of the House of Commons and, more important, to the people of Canada, when we can expect some new job creation measures?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, before talking about implementing new job creation measures I think it would be quite helpful if the Opposition, instead of dragging their feet, would support the adoption of the Income Tax Bill, for instance, which will provide for creation of new jobs by the private sector. It would remove the uncertainty still surrounding those measures as long as they are not passed by Parliament.

Secondly, we have announced job creation measures, specifically one involving $500 million of additional expenditures by the federal Government, which has now been supplemented by about $200 million of provincial expenditure. We now have around $700 million of expenditures committed to that particular program. That program is being put into effect at the present time. It will have its impact in the months of January, February, and March. So there are things taking place.

I invite my hon. friend to look at what is happening at the present time. Let us support the programs being implemented, and support the legislation before Parliament which will help remove uncertainty and ensure that recovery will take place speedily in the country. We are working on additional programs and projects, and as soon as they are ready to be proceeded with they will be announced, put in place, and implemented. But in the meantime let us get going what is already before Parliament, let us implement the programs for which money has already been voted.

DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I hope the Minister will agree that this is an extremely serious situation. There are news reports, probably on the front page of every newspaper in Canada today, which try to suggest, to the unemployed particularly, that there are reasons to believe that there is going to be early action. What I heard from the Minister—if I heard him precisely, and I think I did—was that he is not prepared to tell us that we are going to get any new action at all. He is saying that the people of Canada have to rely on the measures announced by the Government many weeks ago. I say to the Minister that that is not good enough.

• (1130)

In the press today, with reference to the need for additional funds, the Minister is reported by the press today as saying, "The question is whether we can allocate more funds, and this is the question I will address for my next budget." If he is not prepared to spend more money until the next budget, will he at least tell us when we are going to get that budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that there will be a new budget early in the new year. I have indicated that for sure this budget will be brought in before the beginning of the next fiscal year. In due time I will be able to announce exactly when the next budget will be presented.

As far as the premise of the question of the Hon. Member is concerned, my purpose is not to try to satisfy him. I could come up with a budget tomorrow morning, and the day after he would come to me and say that we need a new budget with new measures. That has been the game of the NDP ever since it has been in this House. It will continue to be that way as far into the future as we can see. I could agree with everything he said, and he would come back the next day and say it was not good enough.

We are trying to do everything we can, and we will do it in co-operation with the Provinces. It is too bad if the NDP is not happy. It will just have to keep on being unhappy. That has been the history of that Party ever since it came into existence.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, we can see that the Minister has finally lost his smile. We have hit a sensitive chord. He is trying to do a snow job on the people of Canada.

PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL JOB CREATION FUNDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister to respond to the following question. For six weeks now we have put forward a proposal that would enable the Minister to spend $2 billion more on job creation, not three or four months from now, but right now. We have indicated where he could get that money.

Considering that the Minister and the Prime Minister have said in recent weeks that they will consider that proposal, will they now tell us what their decision is? Will they now go to where they can get that money and put it to work to create jobs for Canadians who need them now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has put forward a proposal. I requested him to write to me—

Mr. Broadbent: You got the letter a month and a half ago.

Mr. Lalonde: —about this particular proposal. It took weeks before he sent that letter to me.

Mr. Broadbent: Then it was lost in your Department.

Mr. Lalonde: He should not be surprised not to get an answer the next morning.

I have also said that the suggestions he put forward were going to be considered in the preparation of my budget. That will be the case. Those suggestions will be given serious consideration and I will give the answer in the budget.

In the meantime there are hundreds of millions—as a matter of fact, billions of dollars—being put forward by the federal Government for job creation directly and indirectly. There are measures before Parliament at the present time which will help remove uncertainty and will create a better environment for the private sector. I would invite the Hon. Member to support those measures, rather than claiming additional measures when he is not even ready to support those that are before Parliament now.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION AFFECTING WOMEN BE TABLED

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and it concerns the proposed amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act. As I understand it, some of these amendments will apply to the rights of women. As the official spokesperson for the status of women in my caucus, I have been denied the right to see that proposed Bill.

I want to know whether the Minister denied that same right to the Minister responsible for the status of women, or if it is only to selected people to whom he is denying that right. If that is not the case, why will the Minister not table that Bill in the House so that we can all see how it applies to the rights of women—rights which some of us have been pressing for, for a long time?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it is customary for a Minister to deal with his opposite number in the Opposition. Perhaps the Hon. Member missed the point that I made earlier in my first answer to the first question, that I have now obtained the permission of the House Leader to allow the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West to show the Bill—

Mr. Clark: To show the Bill? Table it!

Mr. MacGuigan: —to anyone in the Conservative caucus who is interested in seeing it. The conduct of the business of the House is not for the Opposition to decide, it is for the Government to decide.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, that is not good enough. That is not the way legislation is handled in a parliamentary system.

REQUEST THAT BILL BE MADE AVAILABLE TO WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I want to say to the Minister that the last time a Minister of Justice in that Government dealt with women's rights, he betrayed women. He made a secret deal to deny them equality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: How do we know that the Minister of Justice will not do the same thing? Why will he not make that Bill available, not just to a limited number of people, but to all the women's organizations across the country so that they may know they are not being betrayed again. Why will he not table it?

An Hon. Member: Table it.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member now knows that she can see the Bill. She knows that if her Party considers the Bill to be noncontroversial, as we believe it to be, and as the NDP believes it to be—

An Hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. MacGuigan: —this Bill could have immediate passage before Christmas.

An Hon. Member: Put it on the table.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND COUNCIL OF YUKON INDIANS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with respect to certain press reports and television and radio broadcasts which I have reason to believe lack in some accuracy, to say the least.

It was reported widely last night and this morning that the final agreement in principle has been reached between the federal Government and the Council of Yukon Indians. It is my understanding that the CYI and the Government have reached agreement on a number of items—I believe it is in the order of 30-odd agreements—but that there is still a like number to be negotiated and completed. Can the Minister tell the House whether any agreement was reached yesterday with CYI and, if it was, could he enlighten us as to the major features of that agreement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, may I thank the Hon. Member for Yukon for his question. I think he will be very happy with the reply.

When I indicate what the reply is to the House and to the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, I should like to pay my highest regards to the Yukon Government for its involvement in the result and to the Leader of the Yukon Government, Mr. Pearson, and his sister, Mrs. Haines, who are in the gallery. I want to let them know how much I appreciate their assistance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): On the principal elements, the most contentious and troublesome elements, agreement was reached between the CYI and the federal Government negotiator, Dennis O'Connor, last night. I have discussed this element with Mr. Pearson and we are aware of the fact that the monetary compensation, which is always the most difficult element, was settled at $183 million in present value. The current value, stretched over 20 years, is about $540 million. The $183 million present value is broken down to $130 million for the aboriginal rights—in other words, lands to which they gave up aboriginal rights in return for compensation although they get other lands—and $53 million for the buy-out of certain federal programs that they are taking up front in cash.

As the Hon. Member will readily appreciate, those two elements are the most significant and troublesome and, because we have been able to reach agreement on them, we have a sound basis for optimism that we will reach final agreement very soon.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister will want to correct his "blues" with respect to his description of Mrs. Haines, who is the assistant to the Government Leader, not his sister.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am sorry; that is correct.

TRANSFER OF LANDS TO YUKON GOVERNMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, will the Minister assure the people of Yukon that their legitimate desire to obtain an assurance or agreement to a process whereby the management and control of lands now held by the federal Government will, in a reasonable and logical fashion, be met, and that the lands eventually will be transferred to them through their elected Government? I am speaking now of the balance of lands that will remain after the native land claims have been settled.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I am in too happy a mood to get into an acrimonious debate with the Hon. Member.

• (1140)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I just tell him that eventually could be a long time. Let me say that in the meantime I have noted the comments by the Leader of the Government in the Yukon. I think they lay out a welcome proposal for discussion of transfers of land when required, because it is our policy, as indeed it is the policy of the Yukon Government, that that land should be for Yukoners. To interpret that as some undertaking that we will transfer all the lands in the Yukon from Crown lands in the right of Canada to commisioner Crown lands would be misleading. I have no mandate from my colleagues.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, get it.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): This Government is not authorized to make that type of commitment.

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES ON LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. As the Minister knows, the future of the Canadian lumber industry is being unjustifiably threatened by the ongoing countervailing duty hearings now being held in Washington. I want to make it clear that I, and my colleagues in this Party at least, know well that the future of our number one export industry, its employees and the communities that depend upon it, is too important to be made a playground of partisan politics and loud retaliatory posturing. We will not engage in that kind of action.

Recognizing that there is a provision in the appropriate American law which allows our Government to intervene directly in these proceedings, has the Government or will the Government undertake to deliver a clear and careful but unmistakable message, either by directly intervening or by a diplomatic note, to the United States administration for the attention of the U.S. Department of Commerce, clarifying the deep and serious concerns of the Government and of the people of Canada on this important matter?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his assurance of concern on what is unquestionably the most serious threat to Canadian exports that has occurred in very many years.

The value of our lumber exports to the United States amounts to over $2 billion. The countervail threat is a particularly serious one. It is a little difficult to come to grips with it because of the fact that it is not an action by the administration of the United States, nor is it a Congressional action, but rather an action taken by a part of the lumber industry under existing statutes. As a consequence, this Government has made very strong representations of our concern to the United States. I have personally discussed the matter with Secretary of State Shultz, with Secretary of Commerce Baldridge who will be here again next Monday when the matter will again be mentioned to him, and also with Special Trade Commissioner Brock.

We are working very closely with the provincial Government, with the lumber industry and the unions, in co-ordinating a reaction to the threat. The Hon. Member can be assured that every step is being taken to protect Canadian interests, but I say that this is a very serious matter and it remains a matter of concern as the hearings go forward. We are absolutely confident that the Canadian position is just—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Regan: There is no commitment of subsidy, but we are watching it very closely.

Madam Speaker: I must say the answers are unusually long this morning, but the questions are not any shorter.

Mr. Kristiansen: I thank the Minister for the length of his reply, but he did not answer the specific question which I was asking. There has been a change in tone in the hesitation which the Canadian industry previously expressed; that is our understanding.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE DIPLOMATIC NOTE

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, is the Minister seriously considering, or is the Government now considering, the sending of a formal diplomatic note to Washington expressing our Canadian concern?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, if the length of my original answer seems long, it is because this is a serious and complicated matter, and I am sure Members of the House would want it given full attention.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: In relation to the supplementary question, may I say to the Hon. Member that we believe the steps and representations which are being taken at this stage are the most effective and the most appropriate ones. I think he will find that both the companies and the unions involved believe that the actions we are taking are the best ones at this stage.

TELEVISING OF MEMBERS' CHRISTMAS MESSAGES

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who is responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corportion, and it concerns an article published yesterday in the Montreal newspaper La Presse, Canada's largest French newspaper. The article, signed by a journalist who was unfortunately misinformed, appeared under the heading "A present from Radio-Canada to Liberal Members in the regions". It says that only Federal Liberal Members from Matane and the North Shore—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please put her question instead of quoting at length from a newspaper article.

Mrs. Côté: Could the Minister inform the House what the CBC has decided to do, since the invitation is extended both to Federal Liberal Members and Provincial Parti Québécois Members from Matane, Rimouski and the North Shore, and all of us have accepted the invitation?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the journalist to whom the Hon. Member was referring was as misinformed as the Leader of the New Democratic Party. If they both had the common sense to call the CBC and ask the appropriate questions, they would soon have been told the facts. The two stations concerned were formerly private stations which always invited Federal Members and Members of the National Assembly to broadcast their Christmas messages, and as I said yesterday in the House, the CBC had the choice of either extending the same privilege and services to all Members of the House or putting an end to this practice at the two stations that were formerly private stations. CBC senior management was not aware of this tradition which had existed in previous years, and when the President of the CBC was informed, he decided to put an end to this practice of the two CBC affiliates.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

PAYMENT OF GRANTS UNDER CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PROGRAM

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have given notice to the Minister responsible for CMHC of my intention to ask him a question with regard to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program. Is the Minister aware of the letter dated November 18 from senior counsel of CMHC in which it was acknowledged that the regulations required under the National Housing Act prescribing the circumstances under which grants can be made to Canadian home buyers under the Program have never been issued, and that the payments which have been made of some $300 million, to almost 100,000 Canadians, are likely illegal? What steps does the Minister propose to take to rectify the situation and to prevent what could be a very serious problem for hundreds of thousands of Canadian families?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I was informed that the Hon. Member gave me the courtesy of notice, just as I arrived at my office before Question Period. I was also informed that the authority for the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program is taken from Section 34.15 and Section 34.16 of the National Housing Act which permit loans and contributions not exceeding such amounts as are prescribed by regulation. Of course I will follow up on the Hon. Member's question, but I would tell him right away that if the benefits of the Program are such that there is a technical problem, I am sure the House will allow us to rectify it very quickly.

Mr. Beatty: The Act also requires that there be an Order in Council issued, specifying the circumstances under which such contributions can be made. Those circumstances have never been specified by Order in Council, thereby making this $300 million illegal. I have written to the Auditor General to request an investigation by him of this.

METHOD OF PAYMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that CMHC contrived an elaborate means of getting around the Act, which provides at the present time that contributions can only be made where a loan is taken out, and that CMHC decided to try evading the Act by contriving, in essence, a phoney loan to the tune of $3,000 which was automatically forgiven upon endorsement of the cheque, can the Minister tell me whether he has asked for an opinion from his legal counsel as to whether or not such an invention constitues a fraud against the Act?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member, who is a responsible Member of Parliament, would not want to smear a corporation which has really done a great deal to help Canadians, especially in the crisis of a year ago when interest rates were very high.

• (1150)

Mr. LeBlanc: As the Hon. Member knows, getting legislation through Parliament is an extremely long process.

Mr. Beatty: Just break the law.

Mr. LeBlanc: The Hon. Member is heckling, saying break the law. I would hope that he leave it to the responsible people to make the decision if the law has been broken—

Mr. Clark: Parliament.

Mr. LeBlanc: —to the judges, but that he would not take it upon himself to run a kangaroo court.

TRADE

EFFECT OF FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS ON RETAILERS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. He recently told my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, that the Government reimposed import quotas on footwear in order to protect the jobs of Canadian manufacturers. But what is happening in Vancouver is that retailers are having to close their doors and lay off people because the quotas are not sufficient for them to continue their operations, and they cannot buy the products here in Canada. Canadian manufacturers do not want to make speciality shoe products because there is not enough of a market for them. How does the Minister justify putting Canadians out of work under a program designed to save Canadian jobs?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her expressed concern in relation to the employment of Canadians in the retail business.

Mr. Epp: Give us an answer.

Mr. Regan: I want to say to her that I recognize that this is a very difficult matter. The Government decided, considering the need to protect Canadian jobs, the quantum that would be allowed by way of imports. It then becomes an extremely difficult matter to satisfy the importers, the wholesalers, the retailers and the different groups who are involved.

It is certainly a fact that the limitation encourages Canadian manufacturers to try to make additional shoes available, but the quota is of such a nature that there should not be a case of any store being forced out of business.

Mr. Crouse: They are.

Mr. Regan: We are in the position that they are receiving—

Madam Speaker: Order. Ministers must make an effort to keep their answers a little shorter. It has been going on and on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

JUSTIFICATION FOR SYSTEM

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the same Minister. He seems to live in a naive world.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Miss Carney: In fact, the quota in some cases is only 50 per cent of what is needed to carry on a business—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Miss Carney: —and these people cannot buy their stock in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order. Hon. Members on the other side are correct. The Hon. Member should now go to the question. When I ask Members to be brief, I mean on both sides.

Miss Carney: My question is this: how can the Minister justify a system in which people were allocated their quotas in November and the appeal date was set two months earlier, in September?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, again I thank the Hon. Member for her supplementary question.

Mr. Andre: Just answer the question.

Mr. Regan: The Hon. Member must remember that her colleague, the Member for Joliette, was among the strongest of voices asking for quotas to be applied. She is inaccurate in her information. There is no appeal period as such, but if the Hon. Member knows of people who are having a particularly difficult problem, while there are only so many that can be distributed, I will be happy to examine or re-examine specific instances for her if she would bring those to my attention.

HUMAN RIGHTS

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY COMMITMENT TO PASS LEGISLATION AFFECTING HANDICAPPED AND WOMEN

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Nielsen: Lots of luck.

Mr. Deans: I want to put to the Minister of Justice that it would be a shame to allow petty partisan differences to stand in the way of the passage of the human rights amendments that affect both the disabled and women. The Bill obviously cannot be dealt with unless it is introduced. Will the Minister take it as an article of faith, at least from us, that we will pass that Bill before Christmas if he brings it in for first reading today?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I entirely agree with my hon. friend's view of the importance of this and that it is not a matter for petty partisan politics.

Mr. Nielsen: Table it.

Mr. MacGuigan: In fact, in our exercise of management of the House, and because of the assurances the Government gave to the Opposition some months ago that they had our legislative program for this session, and so as not to introduce new Bills which will compete with our present legislative program until it is complete, we have said that we cannot use House time in this Session although we can use committee time for further legislation.

Mr. Nielsen: Just 20 seconds.

Mr. MacGuigan: Because we understood there might be a possibility of unanimous agreement to get this Bill through without House time, only using committee time, we provided copies of the legislation to the Opposition critics to see if we could get that kind of agreement. We have the agreement from the New Democratic Party. Perhaps my hon. friend would care to address that same question to our colleagues in the Conservative benches.

Mr. Deans: I am not allowed to ask them questions.

Mr. Crosbie: Wait a couple of years.

REQUEST THAT BILL BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I want to say to the Minister that, although it is true that the Government provided a list of legislation, that legislation provided to us was not the only legislation with which the Government proposed to deal. In fact it introduced other legislation during that period.

Given that we now know that this Party at least does not intend to cut the incomes of pensioners in this country before Christmas, or at any time, and given that we only have four days left before Christmas recess and there appears to be some degree of unanimity with regard to the human rights amendments, will the Minister introduce the Bill? We will give our commitment that it can go to the Committee quickly and we will give a further commitment that the Bill will be passed by Christmas.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the Hon. Member is unable to ask the question of those who should be answering it, because of the rules of the House.

Mr. Crosbie: Table the Bill.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is an effective rhetorical device for him and I welcome it, but the question should be put on the table. We welcome the assurances which we have received from his Party. We would wish to have similar assurances from the Official Opposition so that the Bill could indeed be passed before Christmas without debate.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW BILL S-31

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question which relates to a Bill that has been introduced since the presentation of the list of the Government's legislation, namely, Bill S-31, is directed to either the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who will know that the Senate has now raised several constitutional and other objections to the Bill. Will the Minister or the Acting Prime Minister tell us, in light of those objections, whether the Government will now freeze discussion on that Bill or withdraw the Bill, one or the other, until there has been the opportunity for full and formal consultation between the federal and provincial Governments?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition ought to know that the report tabled in the other House was a committee report, and that consideration of the second reading stage of the bill is expected to take place next week. Consequently, the conclusions drawn by the Leader of the Opposition are probably premature. As for consultations with the Provinces, these have started, since I have already met with the Minister from Alberta. During the next few weeks I shall be meeting as well with the Ministers from other Provinces with an interest in the bill.

[English]

Mr. Clark: The Provinces which he has consulted so far have told the Minister to withdraw the Bill or freeze it. I would certainly urge that action upon the Minister. I am encouraged that he says it is premature for him to give that commitment. I trust he will give that commitment soon.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me ask the Acting Prime Minister a question, concerning House business. If the Government is worried about its House business agenda, why is it prepared to introduce a Bill which threatens federal-provincial relations yet refuses to table a Bill which respects human rights?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is referring to the business of the House, a subject for which I have an abiding concern. Obviously, if he had not let the bells ring for a whole day this week, and if he had not allowed his Members to raise futile points of order the next day, of course we could have accomplished a lot more in the House than what we shall probably be able to do now before Christmas. As regards Bill S-31 to which he is referring, he knows perfectly well that the Bill was not introduced in the House of Commons but in the other House, and I fail to see why he is bringing up the point he just raised, because up to now, at least thirty-one bills have been introduced in the Senate and it is an entirely normal procedure. So when we say Bill S-31, this presupposes that before this bill, thirty other bills were introduced in the Senate, and that is why this bill is numbered 31.

Under our parliamentary procedure, the Senate is perfectly capable of being the first authority to examine a bill, and the Leader of the Opposition ought to know that once it has approved the bill, it cannot receive royal assent but must first be considered by the House of Commons as well. If we look at the Commons Order Paper, we see that the bills listed under the heading: Government Bills (Senate) are those bills which have the letter S- plus a number. Madam Speaker—

• (1200)

[English]

Madam Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TABLE BILL AFFECTING HANDICAPPED AND WOMEN

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Well, we are all encouraged to know that the Government House Leader can count to 31.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I would ask him not to blame me for the stupidity of the Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, earlier this week the Minister of Agriculture introduced the practice which, in effect, meant that the House of Commons was not allowed to debate legislation. Now we have the Minister of Justice introducing the idea that we cannot see legislation before it is adopted. Let me ask the Minister of Justice, who has disappeared—

An Hon. Member: He is right there!

Mr. Clark: Has he resigned?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Go back, go back!

Mr. Crosbie: We don't want you!

Mr. Nielsen: Just like his Bill, disappeared!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, he is just like his Bill. One minute you see it, one minute you don't see it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Let me ask the Minister of Justice whether—

Mr. Crosbie: Don't send us your turkeys!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Even if it is Christmas!

Madam Speaker: Order. I wonder if we will ever get through this Question Period. Briefly, because the time allotted Question Period has passed, I recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Will the Minister of Justice table the Bill relating to human rights today so that this party, all of its Members, and the Canadian public, all of its members, may study the contents of the Bill so that we can all come to a decision based on seeing the actual Bill, and see if it will be possible for us to move quickly with the legislation before Christmas? Will he table the Bill today to let all of the people in on it, and not act like someone purveying dirty pictures—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Clark: —who flashes them to everyone and then runs and hides?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, in its management of House business the Government very reasonably does not wish to introduce legislation which will compete with legislation which is already before the House in this session.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Because of the importance of this matter we made an offer to the Opposition to try to get its co-operation. As the Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, all Members of his Party are entitled to have a look at this. We can still make an arrangement if—

Mr. Clark: That is not true.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is true, because I have said twice this morning that I have now received the permission of the House Leader to—

Mr. Nielsen: So, why don't you table it?

Mr. MacGuigan: —allow the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West to show the Bill to other Members of his caucus, and this could then lead—

Mr. Nielsen: So, why don't you table it, then?

Mr. MacGuigan: If the Opposition finds the Bill to be as unexceptionable as we believe it to be, then this could lead to an arrangement which would ensure speedy passage before Christmas.

Mr. Clark: Well, for God's sake! Or a point of order—

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Question Period is over.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Point of order!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

MR. HNATYSHYN—REQUEST TO TABLE HUMAN RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order on the basis of remarks just made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). I have in my hand the proposed Bill, which has been printed for some period of time, respecting the amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act. I would like to ask Madam Speaker, that the House give unanimous consent that I table the Bill—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —so that everyone in Canada can read it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Agreed, agreed!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member must know that that is not a point of order and that there are no precedents for doing that kind of thing.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I rise on the point of order, Madam Speaker. The House can do anything it pleases with unanimous consent. I think that principle has been well established from the beginning of the existence of this place. Now we are asking the unanimous consent of the House to table the Bill in the possession of my hon. friend. We ask that unanimous consent be given.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, after question period I was informed, and this is in connection with the document circulated by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), of which I was aware before question period, that one of the parties opposite is quicker to respond than the other. The Bill was handed to the Opposition critics of both parties. The Minister of Justice did so out of courtesy, because we usually prefer to introduce a Bill in the House before having it printed and circulated on both sides of the House. On this side of the House we are very concerned about matters such as human rights and, more particularly, the rights of the handicapped and women's rights. The Minister of Justice therefore thought it appropriate, with a view to speeding up debate, and also considering the fact that we are near the end of the session and have a long list of fiscal and financial measures to consider, to hand his critics a copy of the Bill.

New Democratic Party Members then responded to the effect that they were prepared to let this Bill be referred to committee without debate. It seems the Progressive Conservative Party's response was more negative, since they wanted to be able to give the Bill a public airing first. However, our point is that since the Bill has not yet been introduced in the House, and in view of the limited amount of time at the disposal of the House of Commons and its very heavy workload before the end of the session, we would expect if they really thought it was important . . . If the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is really interested in women's rights, she will perhaps let me finish what I am trying to say. If she is really interested in the preservation of women's rights and the rights of the handicapped and in the contents of the Bill, all she has to do is ask the Progressive Conservative Party critic for his copy of the draft bill. All she has to do is take advantage of this opportunity given today by the Minister of Justice, and after doing so, perhaps she could then rise in the House and tell us why she objects to having this Bill referred to committee without debate. We shall then be able to judge just how serious the Progressive Conservatives are about their concern for human rights in this country.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on the point of order, Madam Speaker. There are two matters here. One is that the Government House Leader has told only part of the truth. The part of the truth that he did not tell is that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) made it clear to the justice spokesman here that the justice spokesman here was not to show the Bill to any other Member of Parliament. That is the part of the truth that the Government House Leader declined to tell.

However, what is of more interest to us is that the Government House Leader has now indicated that what is in the possession of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is an avant-projet. It is a draft Bill. Therefore, he is asking us to speed into second reading, speed into committee without debate in this House, what is only a draft Bill. However, we have seen draft bills from the Government before and we know that they very often change. This Parliament would be acting with the utmost irresponsibility if we were not able to see a Bill before we judged it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My point is this: first, there is a question as to whether or not the Bill given to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West is the real Bill. The Bill on which the Government intends to proceed; and if that is the case will the Government give unanimous consent to allowing this real Bill to be tabled, so that all Canadians, not just a select few amounting to some 280 Canadians, can see it? Why not let the public know what the Government is doing?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1210)

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the argument of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is absolutely ridiculous. We are talking about the draft Bill because no Bill has been introduced in the House, and it cannot be a Bill before it is introduced.

An Hon. Member: Then introduce it.

Mr. Pinard: If the Opposition do not like our courtesy of consulting them in advance before introducing legislation—

Mr. Nielsen: Courtesy from you?

Mr. Pinard: —we will simply not go on with that kind of courtesy in the future.

Miss MacDonald: It is the responsibility of the Government.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, on the point of order, you can almost now identify what is about to happen. This Bill will not get passage because of the positions being taken. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) says that we must have the Bill before us in its final form before he is prepared to give it consideration. I wish he had had the same view when the six and five legislation was brought on.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Deans: However, I say to him that from that point of view I agree with him—

Mr. Epp: Or you, on the Constitution.

Mr. Deans: I agree with him. The Bill should be tabled for first reading.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I put to both sides, for Heaven's sakes, think of the people involved—

Some Hon. Members: Oh oh!

Mr. Deans: —and stop posturing. Bring the Bill in, put it through for second reading, send it to committee right away and let us deal with it before Christmas.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I think we can solve this one quite rapidly. Does the House give its unanimous consent? That is the usual procedure for a Bill being tabled by a Member of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You hypocrite.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member did not get unanimous consent.

Mr. Epp: The Minister does not want his own Bill tabled. That is how sure he is of his own Bill.

PETITIONS

MR. WENMAN—RECONSIDERATION OF BILL C-10

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise to present the following petitions in the House of Commons to fulfil a Private Member's obligation to give as direct access and direct representation as possible of his constituents to this Parliament. Equally important as to whether I personally support the view of petitioners or not, is that through the act of presentation I preserve and extend the ancient privilege of direct presentation of petition to the Crown, through Parliament.

I have the duty, Madam Speaker, to present these petitions from residents of Fraser Valley West who are concerned about proposed legislation, namely, Bill C-10. The nature of the petition is to oppose interference in the affairs of churches or voluntary organizations by Government, particularly any action or legislation that might empower the courts or any governmental body to force churches or voluntary organizations to retain in their employ or membership, those whose moral or ethical activities, characters or lifestyles are contrary to the beliefs held by the said church or organization.

The purpose of the petition is to preserve the concept of the sanctity of the separation of church and state, and therefore asks that Parliament deny approval to, or further proceeding with, Bill C-10 or any future Bill that proposes to interfere in church affairs.

MRS. MITCHELL—CALL FOR END TO ARMS RACE

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition which was scheduled for two days ago when there were considerable procedural difficulties.

It is my duty to present a petition signed by 430 individuals of the Vancouver East riding. The purpose of the petition is to express strongly that world military expenditures now exceed $500 billion per year and the human race is faced with the choice between halting the arms race and proceeding to disarmament, or facing nuclear annihilation.

The nature of the petition is to call upon Parliament to call for U.N. adoption of suffocation to stop the arms race, including those elements in our minority report on security and disarmament.

MR. WENMAN—CANADIAN HOMEOWNERSHIP STIMULATION PLAN

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of home owners and realtors in Fraser Valley West who are concerned that the federal Government has not been adequately addressing the housing and mortgage difficulties of Canadians.

The nature of the petition is to express their disaffection with the application of the Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan in the lower Vancouver Mainland, and other suburban city areas. The CMHC, contrary to the intent and spirit of the legislation as passed by this House, has arbitrarily excluded high growth urban areas solely based on membership in an artificial geographic boundary—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is really debating the question, he is not presenting a petition. I would ask him simply to read what the petition is about and the purpose of that petition; any intervention at this particular stage has to be limited to that.

Mr. Wenman: The purpose of the petition is to ask the federal Government to apply the CHSP equitably in high growth suburban areas as well as city cores, specifically in the lower Vancouver Mainland, and include Langley in the "census metropolitan area" definition to ensure that all lower

Vancouver Mainland residents receive equitable treatment under the Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan or, failing this, institute mortgages as an income tax deduction.

MR. WENMAN—PROPOSED CHANGE IN MANUFACTURERS' SALES TAX

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present this petition from many concerned residents of Fraser Valley West who are opposed to the proposed change in collection of federal sales tax from the manufacturer to the wholesale level.

The nature of the petition is to indicate that this change will have a very substantial effect on the rate of inflation and the cost of living in this country and that the total amount of tax collected will be greater, as well as the cost to administer the changes, and that increased costs will be passed to the retailer and then to the consumer.

Mr. Pinard: That is enough. That is another debate.

Mr. Wenman: The purpose of the petition is to convey their opposition to the proposed change of level for the imposition of the federal sales tax, and to ask that this proposal be withdrawn.

MR. WENMAN—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition expressing concern over the issue of gun control legislation.

The nature of the petition is to express objection to Bill C-451 as an unnecessary piece of red tape which could serve to restrict the rights of law-abiding citizens while having no effect on criminal elements.

The purpose of the petition is to ensure that Bill C-451 not only dies, but is dead and will not be resurrected again.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to House business. I notice that the report of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs was tabled today, thus allowing the House to be seized of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Could the Government House Leader give us an indication, since we will be dealing with Bill C-132 today, when we might expect to be dealing with Bill C-131?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I announced yesterday that we would be dealing with Bill C-132 today and Monday. There is no change for the time being, even if Bill C-131 has been reported today. If I were to change my mind, I would let

Hon. Members know in due time. We will be dealing with Bill C-132 today and again on Monday. It will be followed by Bill C-131.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-132, to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

That Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 14 to 17 at page 1.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is best to begin today by explaining to Members the purpose and intent of the amendment which I have moved. This Party is convinced that the Bill to put a 6 and 5 per cent capping on the Family Allowance is wrong because it is punitive to that segment of Canadian society—children—who are least able to defend themselves. It is our intention as a Party, if forced to it, to vote against the implementation of Bill C-132.

I have moved an amendment to the Bill in the belief that it will make the Bill less punitive than it now is. The intent of the amendment is to remove the capping from the year 1984. It will unfortunately leave in place the capping for 1983, which is unacceptable to our party. Even if this amendment is adopted, we will still vote against the Bill in total. However, it makes the Bill only half as punitive as the Minister wants it to be because it would restore indexing for the year 1984.

All Members of this House, whether they are in the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party of Canada, should be very reluctant in the present economic circumstances to do anything that cuts the income of those Canadians who live at or near the poverty line. We should be especially careful about an intention to cut the incomes of those Canadians two years ahead of time. The present economic circumstances are such that there is absolutely no sense of certitude about the Canadian economy for the year 1984. We have very little certitude about what the economy will be like in 1983, but we are really out to lunch when we begin to think that we know what our economy will be like in 1984. It is not inconceivable that we might have runaway inflation by 1984. It is not inconceivable that the effect of this legislation, if Members do not vote for my amendment, will result in a 5 per cent capping in a 20 per cent inflation world.

Sometimes it is too bad that all Members of the House of Commons cannot attend a committee. If they had been at our Committee, they would have seen that other than the Minister herself, every outside group of witnesses who appeared advised us clearly not to do this. Perhaps the most compelling and graphic presentation was made by a group who represents low-income citizens in Ottawa.

To put the matter in perspective for all of us on the Committee, they told us the following. In a self-help manner, they have organized a transportation system to take members of this low-income group to grocery stores which have the lowest priced food. They told us that if they were to schedule that transportation for the day before the Family Allowance cheques arrived in the homes, nobody would use it. These are low-income Canadians. Therefore, the day before the Family Allowance cheque arrives, there would be no one to use the transportation system.

They deliberately put that transportation system in place for the day after the Family Allowance cheques arrive. Therefore, their transportation is used. Mothers of this nation who live at or near the poverty line each month take their Family Allowance cheque to the lowest-cost grocery store they can find and buy the maximum amount of nutritious food for their children.

That is the purpose to which the Family Allowance cheque is put. That is the purpose which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) asks us to ignore. In a world riddled with uncertainty and inflation, the Minister of National Health and Welfare of this country asks us to cut the Family Allowance cheques which mothers use to buy food for their children.

When the Minister appeared before the Committee, she told us that the Government must do this, that old age pensioners and families must lead in the fight against inflation. I wish the Minister had been in Committee to hear some of the witnesses, in particular the labour union groups who to varying degrees have considerable economic expertise in their research organizations.

The group we heard this morning was speaking to the pension Bill, but they put the Family Allowance payments into perspective for us. They told us that the saving would amount to .05 per cent of the federal budget. That is one-twentieth of 1 per cent. In gross national product terms, that is 1/100 of 1 per cent. For anybody to believe that that kind of expenditure difference will have any impact on inflation is just incredible. In national terms, that amount is so tiny that it will not affect inflation one whit, one iota or one little bit.

The Government's case for the necessity of this Bill is further eroded when the Minister comes before us and says that inflation is reducing, that it is coming down. A number of spokespersons for the Cabinet stand up in this Chamber whenever they have the occasion to tell us that their program is working, that inflation is coming down. Stop and consider that statement for just one minute. It is a true statement; inflation in this country is coming down. However, the second part of the Minister's case is that therefore we need to take money away from families and pensioners. That statement collapses because we have not done it and yet inflation is coming down. We do not need to take money away from pensioners or from children.

Inflation is coming down for another set of reasons. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that on this particular piece of legislation, and the pension Bills which follow, the backbenchers on the other side will collectively begin to meet in the corridors and in their offices and start to exercise some sense of social responsibility. The Liberal backbenchers have an obligation to join with the Opposition in telling the Cabinet they are doing something wrong and we will not tolerate it. They do not have to bring the Government down and cause a general election; they just have to tell the House Leader that they will not stand in this Chamber and vote for this legislation. A quiet word to the Minister and this legislation will not come before us, and on January 1, 1983 those cheques for pensioners and families will go out under the present system, fully indexed.

Our parliamentary tradition, the very basis for the existence of this Chamber, is the belief that in all the ridings in this country people vote freely and democratically for someone to represent them here. Out of the Hon. Members of this Chamber we choose a Cabinet. Cabinet Members come from the Party that has the most seats in the Chamber. But the obligation is on all of us Commoners, regardless of Party; the Government proposes, but it is the backbenchers who dispose. We, the backbenchers of this House, either approve the plans of the Cabinet or make our disapproval known. And it is possible, Mr. Speaker, in the next four days for the backbenchers on the Liberal side of this House to meet quietly, to think through this problem, and to communicate to their House Leader and the Minister their disapproval of these three pieces of legislation which take money out of the pockets of children and senior citizens, which take food out of the bellies of children and the senior citizens of this country.

A growing proportion of Canadians live at or near the poverty line, and when you live there, Mr. Speaker, the little money you get in a world so full of inflation is needed for survival, not luxuries. It is needed for good health, good nutrition, good medical care, good shelter. That is what the money is needed for, and that is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare is asking us to take away from these people.

All of us who represent constituencies in this Chamber know what is happening in our communities. I come from the community of Calgary, Alberta, and for a number of years now it has had the reputation of being one of the most economically advantageous places to live. I was looking over some newspaper clippings yesterday which reported that welfare rolls in the City of Calgary from October to November went up 11.9 per cent. That is in one month, Mr. Speaker. From October to November unemployment went up from 9.5 per cent to 11.4 per cent. That is almost 2 per cent in 30 days. The vacancy rate in my City in the last 12 months has changed from two-tenths of 1 per cent to the highest in the country, at 8.2 per cent. What that tells us is that the unemployment rate in that community would be somewhere near 20 per cent if all those Canadians who had moved to Calgary had stayed there. But they have not; they have returned in many, many cases to the family home in other parts of the country, and thus have reduced our unemployment rate to 11.4 per cent and increased our vacancy rate to 8.2 per cent.

If that is happening in my community, which has been one of the leading communities in terms of economic growth in this country, then what is happening in the economically disadvantaged parts of this country? We all know about Sudbury. Close to 30 per cent of the people who live in Sudbury, Ontario, are unemployed today with little, if any, prospects of employment tomorrow. What does that tell us about family incomes? Our unemployment statistics told us we used to have one million unemployed and we now have one and a half million unemployed. Statistics show that welfare caseloads are going up at an average rate of 10 per cent a month.

What does all that tell us about family incomes? It tells us that family incomes are falling dramatically. The money which parents have to put food on the table for their children has decreased dramatically, and in the midst of that kind of situation, the Minister of National Health and Welfare stands up in this Chamber and brings forward a piece of legislation which provides that in a time of maximum difficulty, we will cut some more money from those families. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his last budget decided to take on average $300 more out of the pockets of Canadians who are working.

Consumer spending is cut through those kinds of tactics, and as we cut consumer spending, we notice an increase in unemployment, and then an increase in the number of people who have to go on welfare because their unemployment insurance has run out. These are the people who have taken the consequences of what the labour unions were calling before our Committee "perverse fiscal policy". They used "perverse" in many senses because it is a word which has many meanings, but the clearest cut sense in which they meant it is that it is perverse in the sense of being opposite to what it should be.

With a million and a half unemployed Canadians, what Government needs to be doing today is encouraging Canadians to spend, to buy, to create jobs. Instead we have a Government that, through taxation policy, through the six and five cap on pensioners and families, is cutting down on spending. As they do that, Mr. Speaker, they encourage the creation of more unemployed and it is inevitable that a higher and higher proportion of Canadians will be living at or near the poverty line. There are more in that situation today than there were a month ago, and there will be more a month from now than there are today.

In the midst of all that, the Minister of National Health and Welfare says to the Members of this Chamber: Take some more money away from that growing number of Canadians who are forced to live at or near the poverty line.

Mr. Breau: What nonsense.

Mr. Hawkes: A Member who has not been at a single committee meeting, or heard a single witness, hollers at me across the floor "what nonsense". It is not nonsense.

Mr. Breau: Read the Bill.

• (1240)

Mr. Hawkes: You read the Bill. You do not have to be in committee. I will give you one piece of the Minister's own testimony: The Government is going to save some money, she said, with each of these pieces of legislation. Not large amounts, but we are going to save some money. Well, if the Bill is designed to save the Government money, where is it coming from if it is not out of the pockets of families? How can the Government save money if it does not come out of the pockets of families?

Mr. Breau: Why don't you be honest? You just said there are more people at the poverty line—

Mr. Taylor: Stand up and make a speech.

Mr. Hawkes: The Member will have a chance to stand up and try to refute the testimony. The money is coming out of the pockets of families today. Not only that, it is going to come out of the pockets of families way into the future. It is eroding the base of universality. If the Member says he has read the Bill, surely he recognizes at least that much.

In 1985, when we return to indexing, we will do so on a smaller base. If he has any familiarity with the mathematics of compound interest, he should understand that the eroded base will be taking money out of the pockets of families in this country in ever increasing amounts year after year after year. In ten years' time the amount will be enormous; in 20 years' time it will be horrendous. That is the impact of this legislation, which I gather the backbencher on the other side intends to vote for and will be answerable to his constituents.

Mr. Breau: I always am.

Mr. Hawkes: You know what would have been better, Mr. Speaker? If Members of this House would read an article in The Financial Post of December 11, they would see it points out with some clarity that there are three major financial elements to the system currently in place to provide support for families. One element is the Family Allowance, another is the Child Tax Credit, and the third is the income tax deduction. For a family with two children and a taxable income of about $26,300, those three elements provide more than $800 for each of those two children. That is taxable income, Mr. Speaker. That means a gross income of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $35,000.

Now, in a just and humane society surely we would think that the poorest people would get at least as much, a little over $800 per child. But under the current system, that is not what happens. The poorest segment of Canadian society, those families who do not even have enough income to pay income tax, get less than $700 per child. Those Canadians with family incomes in the neighbourhood of $35,000 get over $800 per child out of our system, and those with not enough income even to pay tax get less than $700.

If the Government wanted to save money, Mr. Speaker, if it wanted to be just, then we would not have this Bill before us today, because of those three elements of that system which affect family incomes, the fairest one to poor people of this nation is the Family Allowance. The other two elements are not nearly as fair. But we have a perverse Government, supported by what I am beginning to suspect are a perverse group of backbenchers. Of those three programs available for redistribution, savings or whatever, the Government attacks the only one which has justice in it, the only one of those three elements which maximizes benefits to the poor and gradually reduces the benefits as family incomes go up.

What rational explanation can backbenchers on the other side give to their constituents for cutting spending on the most socially just part of those three elements? How can they go back into their ridings and say: "We want to save a little money, but we will continue to give more to the rich or to the better off than we are going to give to the poor"? What sense of perverted Liberal thought is involved in this Government bringing forward this Bill? How can they go back to their ridings and defend this Bill as somehow making a contribution to reducing inflation in this country when it is an insignificant amount of money relative to our gross national product and when it is one-twentieth of 1 per cent of federal expenditures?

Members on this side, in committee and in this Chamber, have continually pointed out to the Government other areas which would have more impact on reducing inflation and would save the Government more money than this legislation. I would like to bring to the House's attention just a couple of them. Last night in committee I handed out an analysis which shows that in the year just finishing the hidden interest cost subsidy to Petro-Canada, one Crown corporation, is $514 million. Can I repeat that, Mr. Speaker? The hidden subsidy, which does not show up in the Estimates, to one Crown corporation, in one calendar year, is $514 million. There are direct subsidies in the Estimates to that same Crown corporation in excess of $400 million. At that point we are remarkably close to $1 billion, and here we are spending days of House time to approve a measure which will take about $80 million away from families and children. In a couple of days we are going to be asked to approve another measure which takes another $80 million away from pensioners. We do this with the certain knowledge that at the same time we are directly subsidizing one Crown corporation to the tune of $400 million and indirectly for another $514 million. Those amounts are ten to 15 times as great as we are going to save by cutting the Family Allowance in this fashion. Where is the logic in that Mr. Speaker?

When we look at the Minister's Department and at the Auditor General's Report on that department, we do not see massive savings because we are not too sure of what the Auditor General is telling us. However, he does tell us one thing, that in the year just passed the Department overpaid the Canada Pension Plan by $7 million and that the amount is growing yearly.

How did that come about? It happened because they were calculating benefits on gross figures rather than on net contributory figures. It was a simple arithmetical error. As I understand it, the Government is going to continue to honour this through the life of those individuals who are first-class senior citizens. Because of a departmental mistake, there was an additional cost of $7 million in the year just passed.

Other parts of the Auditor General's Report show that the Department of National Health and Welfare does not have adequate systems to investigate whether payments to pensioners and families go to those legally entitled to them. We do not know whether there is fraud in the system and, if so, the size of the fraud.

These are the questions which the Auditor General brings to our attention. Before any of us are persuaded that we should take this $60 or $80 million out of the pockets of families, surely we should first of all look into the system that is in place.

Mr. Waddell: Why did you vote for the six and five?

Mr. Hawkes: I hear the NDP interjecting. That is the Party that in 1979 defeated the budget that was the fairest one for poor people in the decade of the seventies. They threw a Government out of office and now they want to know why we voted for the six and five.

In June, 1982 the NDP was the only Party in this House to vote against cutting their own salaries. They wanted to keep their salaries and that is how they voted. Members of this Party agreed that Members of Parliament should be involved in the war on inflation and should vote for a measure to reduce their incomes. The NDP voted to retain their salaries.

Mr. Waddell: We voted against six and five and for the children.

Mr. Hawkes: The NDP does not seem to realize certain facts, Mr. Speaker. There was a piece of legislation, to be followed by others, which laid down a principle. The only group to be affected immediately by a reduction in income was Members of Parliament and Senators. This Party voted for that so that we could turn things around in the country, but the NDP voted against a reduction in salaries. That is on the record.

As the Bills on six and five came before the House, we committed ourselves to fighting them piece by piece. I would ask the NDP where their amendment on the Family Allowance Bill is. Where were they this morning when there was a vote on a similar amendment on pensions? They were out to lunch, Mr. Speaker. There is a lot of talk but nothing in a legislative sense that makes the world better for anybody.

A Party that defeats a Government that has just brought in a budget that is the fairest for poor people in a decade is guilty of a hypocrisy that will be an albatross around their necks for the rest of their lives. They gave us inflation and they gave us a Government that is attacking pensioners and attacking families.

Mr. Kristiansen: Are you calling the voters stupid?

Mr. Hawkes: Every time I see an 8.2 per cent vacancy rate in my city, my blood boils. A high proportion of Canadians are unemployed today and are living near the poverty line because we have a Government that did not understand one sector of our economy. I do not think it understands many sectors but it really messed up the energy sector.

In the month of May we imported 400,000 barrels of oil a day at somewhere near $40 per barrel. That means $16 million per day went out of the country to create jobs in Mexico and Venezuela. At the same time, in western Canada there was that much oil in the ground ready to be pumped at a cost of $25 per barrel. Just the other night I heard that in this month of December there are 100,000 barrels of oil per day still shut-in in western Canada. At $40 per barrel, that means $4 million per day is going out of the country. Consumers could have that oil for $2.5 million per day and collectively would save $1.5 million per day. The other $2.5 million would remain in the Canadian economy to create jobs. In 20 days at that rate, we would not need to cut the Family Allowance and in 40 days we would not need to cut the pensions.

Not only did the NDP throw out that budget that was fair to poor people but subsequently it has consistently supported energy policies which have driven the nation into bankruptcy.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member knows that that is not a truth. We never supported the National Energy Program. We have said that consistently in the House and have voted that way. The Hon. Member should tell the truth of the House. I agree on the energy subject.

Mr. Hawkes: The Hon. Member agrees with me on the $514 million hidden subsidy given to Petro-Canada? He agrees that it is bad and should go to pensioners? Would he take it away from Petro-Canada? What a remarkable reversal of NDP philosophy! I hope it continues. If any Canadians are living high on the hog, it is those in Crown corporations, including Petro-Canada. They waste more money in a week than would be saved by this Bill.

Last night another Crown corporation, Air Canada, was in the news. The President was quoted as saying, "We are going to rent space or buy it for $30 million. We do not want the $20 million space." He said: "The difference is that we are going into a Buick instead of a Pinto".

That is the attitude of Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker. At a time of economic difficulty when a Crown Corporation is laying off 1,200 employees, it is going to buy a Buick for space instead of a Pinto. The Crown corporations are not controlled by this Chamber; they report to Cabinet Ministers and the NDP put those Ministers in place. They are guilty, they are culpable and they have to share that guilt.

If this Bill becomes law and money is taken out of the pockets of families and out of the bellies of children, I hope Members of the NDP will experience some sleepless nights for helping to create a monster.

It is well known that Members of the NDP will do what they think is politically expedient. That is a well-known facet of their behaviour. But we appeal to the 10 or 15 Members out of the 147 Liberals on the other side to vote for an amendment that would make this a one-year Bill instead of a two-year Bill. We ask them to say that 12 months from now we will examine conditions in 1984 instead of trying to guess about them in 1982. That is all the amendment asks Liberal backbenchers to do. It would not bring down the Government. It simply protects Canadian children and families so that the Parliament of Canada can examine their situation at a time closer to the reality of the situation. That is not an unreasonable request. I hope that 15 Members on the other side will go along with it and vote with us on the amendment.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may call it one o'clock, since I would like to have the floor when the House resumes.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) had been recognized by the Chair.

[English]

The Chair, however, will recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—DISTRIBUTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of the permission granted today by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) in connection with the proposed amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act.

This matter is now reaching preposterous proportions. Your Honour will understand and recall that the background of this matter is that at first the Minister refused to disclose the Bill to anyone, including myself. Second, he admitted today that he allowed me to see the Bill and to have the Bill as long as I did not show it to any other person. Today in Question Period the Minister stated that he had consulted with the Government House Leader and that it would be possible for me to have each Member of our caucus, 102 Members, provided with a copy of the legislation. Specifically that was the commitment and undertaking made by the Minister of Justice.

Over the lunch hour I attempted to have copies made of the Bill for that particular purpose by the House of Commons printing unit. House of Commons printing has refused to print this document, on the basis that it is a confidential proposed Bill of the House of Commons and that it is against the policy of the printing branch of the House of Commons to print any Bill, let alone proposed and confidential Bills. Then I got in touch with the law branch, and it would not allow me to have copies of this Bill for distribution to my colleagues on this side of the House.

My point of order is simply that I am being stymied in attempting as quickly as possible to apprise all my colleagues of the actual content of this legislation. Either the Acting Government House Leader should stand in his place and agree, within a matter of minutes, to provide me with 102 copies of the Bill so that I can circulate it, not to staff, not to any other person, but directly and only to Members of Parliament; or the House should make a ruling so that the printing branch will allow me to have the Bill printed and I can distribute it to my colleagues on the basis on which it was given to me by the Minister of Justice.

I raise this matter as a point of order because I am not able to carry out the important role I have to play in view of the statement made by the Minister of Justice on behalf of the Government House Leader. I ask Your Honour for your intervention and assistance in this situation which has arisen because I cannot have copies made in the House of Commons printing branch.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this is a point of order. It seems to me that there is a photocopy machine, certainly in the offices of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I do not know what is preventing the Hon. Member from using it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You tell me where I can get it printed.

Mr. Smith: Perhaps if he were to use it, he would not try to score little points as he is trying to do today. I regret that he has taken this approach because my primary concern is to get that Bill through.

I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) was trying to accommodate him as the official critic of his Party by giving him a copy of the Bill. I regret that the whole issue has taken on the tone it has as a result of the position of the Hon. Member. I suggest that he go up to the fourth floor and use the photocopy machine of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to be absolutely clear. The Acting Government House Leader refuses to give me sufficient copies, but he is giving me permission to take this Bill outside the House of Commons and to put it in other hands, hands other than those of Members of Parliament for the purpose of reproducing it.

Mr. Mazankowski: He just gave you that permission.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I want to make it quite clear, because I am not aware who has photocopy machines. My material is done in the normal way by the House of Commons printing service. I will not go around asking every Member of Parliament whether they have photocopy machines in their offices.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point. It amazes me how things can get so twisted. I say to the Acting Government House Leader that it is really not good enough to suggest that someone should find his or her own way to reproduce a document for Members of the House of Commons.

I do not want to engage in a battle over it. If it is the Government's desire, as I understood it to be, that Members of the House should be given access to the document and given an opportunity to look at it in the hope that we might be able to come to an agreement for its quick passage, it would not be unreasonable for Members of the Opposition and, for that matter, Members of the Government Party to think that the Government of Canada, with its vast resources, could find a way to produce a copy of the document for each Member of Parliament.

I do not like to become involved in these questions but it cannot be acceptable that it is the responsibility of the individual critic for any Party to obtain the duplicating machine to copy a document which is, in essence, a Government document for which approval to distribute among Members has been given by the appropriate Minister.

In an effort not to prolong matters or make them any worse, and in the interest of trying to resolve the unnecessary dispute over passage of this legislation before Christmas, I would ask that we consider the matter no further and that the Government Deputy House Leader might consider, in light of what has been said, whether copies of this particular Bill may be made available. If copies are available, would it be possible for every Member to receive a copy of the Bill in an envelope marked "Confidential"?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, the point just raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) of course makes eminent sense. My colleague for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was absolutely correct in his point of order.

It would be an abuse of the privileges of Parliament to pursue the course of action which has been suggested to us by the distinguished Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has offered the distinguished spokesman for the Government a solution. To believe for one moment that these Bills are not already prepared and quite capable of distribution within the next ten minutes is quite unthinkable to me. If, in fact, that were to be the case, then the distinguished Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) has an onus to satisfy Members of this Parliament through whatever other actions he deems necessary in achieving the purposes of the agreement which was reached in the House earlier.

I simply repeat to the Hon. Member that if he suggests to the House that this draft Bill—I will cede that point at this time—is not already in printed form adequate for distribution not only to Members of this Chamber but throughout the usual distribution system which involves 4,000 or 5,000 copies, then everything that was said earlier today by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) becomes somewhat of a sham.

I can only appeal to the commonsense of the Parliamentary Secretary in the hope that we can resolve this within the next very few minutes and be able to give a response to the Government before the day is over.

Mr. Smith: As Members opposite know, I am a very reasonable chap. The Minister of Justice is a very reasonable chap. I suspect that if the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West had gone to the office of the Minister of Justice and asked for copies of the Bill that he indicated would be available, he may well have received them. I do not know whether he has done that. I do not happen to have copies of the Bill. Of course, I can make inquiries. I do not have copies here. It is not up to me to usurp responsibilities of the Minister of Justice.

With respect to giving a direction to those who operate the reproduction facilities in the House, that is something that falls under the jurisdiction of the Speaker or the Management Services Branch. Certainly it is not a matter in which I can issue instructions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are the Acting Government House Leader.

Mr. Smith: I can make inquiries on his behalf. Perhaps we can resolve the matter. Had the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West gone to see the Minister of Justice, I suspect that he would not need to rise in the House on this point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am talking to the Acting Government House Leader.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to enter into the debate but I have no idea what is in that document. I would caution all Members therefore that we should be careful about widely distributing copies of it in case it is not already in both official languages. If it were in one language only, I could envision perhaps some discriminatory practice against some Members, particularly on this side of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I hope I am not revealing too much of what is in the copy which I have when I tell the Hon. Member that it is in both official languages. It is printed as a Bill ready for introduction.

I thought that the proper and courteous way of proceeding was to deal with the Government House Leader, who has responsibility with respect to the distribution of Government legislation and proposed Government legislation. I meant no discourtesy to the Acting House Leader by asking him the question; I asked because it is his responsibility. I agree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, I do not want to waste the time of the House; I just want to get it distributed and dealt with. I do not want to waste any more time of the House.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, what the hell is going on here with all this phoney jockeying around between the Government and the Official Opposition? The Bill is available but apparently there are not enough copies.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I cannot get any copies.

Mr. Benjamin: We are prepared to give unanimous consent for the House to revert to motions so that the Government can present this Bill for first reading. Even if the Government is not satisfied with the contents of the Bill, it can always leave it to die on the Order Paper. The Official Opposition can then be put on the spot about unanimous consent for first reading. I am beginning to wonder if either one of them wants it dealt with quickly. First reading can be dealt with right now with everyone getting a copy of the Bill.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, having heard Question Period and the subsequent debate today, I simply want to make the observation that it appears to me that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) went to the Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) because of his known expertise and concern in this matter. That seems to me to be a laudable gesture. It is a process which I think we would want to encourage, that we should go to other Members, in an informal way, to ask those Members who have a known conscience and ability for their preliminary input.

Let us make it clear that what is binding on the Member at this time is his promise to the Minister of Justice that he would keep this Bill on a confidential basis. He made that promise of his own free will to the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice recognized that promise because of the previous stature and reputation of the Hon. Member.

I believe that the Members in the New Democratic Party have made a good point. A valuable process has been initiated by the Minister of Justice and he has received co-operation from the Member for Saskatoon West. This process of consultation before the introduction of a Bill to Parliament is very valuable. However, I suggest that the debate which is ensuing here is beginning to threaten that kind of co-operation. On a personal note, I must ask the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West why he feels he wants to threaten such a valuable process by dragging it into the open ands making a big issue of it. So why is the destroying the opportunity for future consultations by going through this charade? I do not understand. I respect the Hon. Member and I respect the process, but I do not know why he is trying to damage it now.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you bring the Bill in, if it is so good?

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in over 40 years in legislatures and three years here, I have never seen anything so ridiculous. The Government is being completely hypocritical. It says that it wants to introduce the Bill and proceed with it, but it refuses to introduce it. The Minister tells the Member to make the copies available; however, the Government will not make the copies available. What is the Government trying to pull off, anyway? Hon. Members opposite stand up and say a bunch of baloney, such as we just heard from the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). If the Government does not want the Bill introduced, why does it not say so instead of being so blatantly hypocritical?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let's get copies of the Bill. That is all we want.

Mr. Fisher: We don't have to do anything.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I detect on the other side of the House a great enthusiasm for me to speak on this issue once more. To be very brief, I will make inquiries on behalf of Hon. Members opposite with the Minister of Justice and perhaps we can resolve this matter.

I would like to say, however, that the Minister of Justice is acting in good faith. Perhaps there is a misunderstanding on this point but, as Your Honour knows, I have been the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped and, as a result, I have had a number of conversations over several months with the Minister. Quite frankly, I want to assure Hon. Members opposite that he has always dealt with me in good faith. I regret that there appears to have been some misunderstanding which has developed. I will make inquiries of him and hopefully we can resolve this matter.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise an issue with regard to this proposed Bill. I know the Parliamentary Secretary has said that he will make inquiries as to how it can be reproduced, but I want to advise him that I have just received a call from the Chairman of the organization for the handicapped in my constituency who has been following this matter and has asked me, as a Member of Parliament, to bring with me a copy of the Bill when I return to Kingston later today, as members of that organization would like to see it. I would like to know that, when I receive a copy of this Bill, I will not be bound by any restriction preventing me from showing it to those people whom it will so deeply affect. I would like the assurance that when this business of reproduction has been straightened out as far as the Bill is concerned, I will be in no way abusing any kind of privilege which might be extended to me as a Member of Parliament if I show this Bill to the organization for the handicapped in my constituency over the weekend.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of rising again, but this Bill is now being placed in jeopardy, there is no question about that. Whether or not this Bill passes will, to some extent at least, and I think to a great extent, be determined by the atmosphere which exists in the House. There is no way in which I or anyone else can do anything about what the Official Opposition does, but I want to put it to the Government that if it is the intention of the Government to introduce legislation dealing with the Human Rights Code which will benefit the disabled and women in some way, I say to the Government put it out now. Introduce it.

Mr. Fisher: What if it could be improved?

Mr. Wilson: What is Parliament for?

Mr. Deans: I heard an interjection from an Hon. Member who asked, quite legitimately, "What if the Bill could be improved?" Mr. Speaker, you know, as I know, that that is what the parliamentary process is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I put it to the Government that that legislation will receive approval in principle if the Government introduces it for first reading now. If there is any improvement to be made, it can be made in committee. We are prepared to have the Bill sent to committee on Monday. We are prepared to have the Bill dealt with in the House on Wednesday. If this is important legislation, and I happen to think it is, and if providing the kind of protection which these amendments would provide is something that we in the House of Commons would want to see, then please, for God's sake, stop this game playing and introduce the Bill.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for me to respond. I am not in a position to move the Bill, obviously. However, as soon as this debate is resolved I will have a discussion with the Minister of Justice. I would confirm what the House Leader for the NDP has said, that in fact not only did the official critic for the Conservative Party have a copy of this Bill, but the NDP critic had one, too. Quite frankly, they were quite co-operative and agreed that it could go into committee. For reasons I will not go into, this was not possible with the Official Opposition. However, I will make inquiries and see to what extent we can resolve this matter.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I would make a further comment or observation for your edification or for that of the Parliamentary Secretary. For many years, a number of us in this Chamber have felt that the practice of acceptance of first reading and referral of subject matter, which, in essence, is the content of the Bill, at first reading prior to its being dealt with in principle at second reading, was the most useful course of action for this Chamber to take.

In every instance that I can recall going back 17 or 18 years, I say with some modesty that Government always extended Opposition Members the courtesy of informing them of the content. There has never been any aberration from the application of that principle. We have debated the subject matter from time to time, but what the Government is attempting to do here is simply to make available to select Hon. Members of this chamber the content of the Bill. There is no objection to dealing with the Bill but, rather, there is an objection to the process.

This practice has always been carried out in the past by Ministers of Transport, Ministers of Justice, Ministers of External Affairs, Ministers of National Defence, Ministers of Energy, Mines and Resources and Ministers of Fisheries and Oceans. I am not exaggerating. The staff of the Parliamentary Secretary can verify the fact that over the last 25 years there has not been an aberration. It is not a common practice but the practice has been there, and perhaps we should pay a little bit more attention to it.

Let there be no misunderstanding about the fact that the subject matter, the content, was wide open and public. There was no attempt to hide it or impose intervention by way of exception in any way. It was always wide open. It was a recognition on the part of Government that it was not infallible and that, in fact, good concepts could be bettered if they were widely broadcast to a legitimately interested community. In the discussion which would take place in detail on the subject matter, amendments which could be construed as substantive could be proposed, and then the matter would go before the House for second reading debate. However, it should not be narrowly restricted to one or two Members, or even to 102. There are other Members of this Chamber whom I am sure have not seen this matter, and if they had the benefit of the half or three-quarter of an hour before the House adjourns for the day, I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary could in fact achieve what it is that he seems to want to achieve. But do not make the mistake that this Chamber will now accept, or ever has in the past accepted blindly such a proposition. It is the principle that we are talking about, not the end. The implication left by that holier-than-thou friend of mine from that little mountain—Hamilton, or wherever it is—that the only people in this country concerned about the subject matter or content of the Bill under question are those to my left is a crock of nonsense.

If the Parliamentary Secretary can in fact get himself geared up to go outside, I think he will find that there are about 4,000 to about 6,000 copies of the Bill printed and awaiting distribution. It awaits some significant action on his part. I trust he is enjoying signing his letters, because I am making two very serious points.

This is a common practice. Do not try to obfuscate it by the fog that you are trying to put over the top of it. We have always been open about these matters. Why not proceed in that manner today? There is nothing wrong with first reading and reference of the subject matter to committee before second reading and acceptance in principle. Just simply let us take a look at it. It is the easiest thing in the world to do. That is the process, in any event.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, one point that has not been raised today, and the Deputy Government House Leader has ignored it, is whether you do not feel as Speaker of this House that you have an obligation to see that all Members of the House are treated equally.

I would submit, sir, to you, and through you to the Deputy Government House Leader, that we have been asked to have this draft bill reproduced in the office of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), on his machine; but that does not take care of every Member of this House. More particularly, it does not take care of an individual Member, a Private Member, not belonging to a party. He has as much right in this House to be informed on this Bill as the rest of us have. I think we should expect that when the Deputy Government House Leader comes up with some solution it should take into account every Member of the House and not just those who happen to belong to a Party.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, it could be that when you have heard my presentation you may rule it a matter of privilege rather than a point of order.

I have been listening very carefully both in Question Period today and to the subsequent debate this afternoon. I believe you could very well find that someone's privileges are being trampled upon in this whole affair. I am speaking on behalf of the handicapped and women. I happen to be a member of both those groups, I personally, and as a handicapped person and as a woman, I am outraged that both groups should be used as the tool of a cheap political ploy.

The handicapped and the women of Canada have waited for many, many years to have their rights readjusted. I think we can wait another couple of days, particularly if our dignity is going to be absolutely destroyed and torn to shreds by what is happening today in this House.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, just one small contribution. I would like to remind the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader that if they were to go through the normal distribution process and use the normal printing press, the cost to distribute the Bill would be considerably less then the cost will be if we are forced to use xerox machines. That money could be used to provide services to the handicapped. Those on this side of the House would rather see the money saved by using the normal process put to that use.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair does not have a motion in front of it. Some Hon. Member may choose to rise and put a motion, in which case the House will deal with it as it sees fit.

We do have a point of order explored at some length by Hon. Members. I do not think it should be the responsibility of the Chair to interpret the agreement that was reached during Question Period today between the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

I concern myself very much with the point made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I think it would put the Chair in the position of being the interpreter of an agreement that occurred in the House and, quite obviously, because there is disagreement now, the Chair is not well advised to try to put new clauses into an agreement that has been reached.

I do have, I believe, in the name of the Speaker, the authority to order a document printed, but I am very loth to do that because, again, the agreement which took place in the House seems to have some limitations on it.

My hope is that the offer made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) might be accepted by the House for a few moments, and that he might be able to resolve the problem on an organizational and practical level.

If it cannot get resolved that way and if some Hon. Member wants to rise to put forward a motion, of course the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for that purpose. In that case, if I may, I will recognize the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 21697).

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we were discussing Bill C-132 and more specifically an amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). Because the Member for Calgary West is so confused about the facts, he is conveying grossly misleading and false impressions to the House and to the Canadian public and I think these must be corrected. I say that maybe for the first time in ten years since I have been elected to this House, it is difficult for me to understand that a Member with a PhD, who has worked in the field of social sciences, would misread the Bill so grossly, but I will take the time to explain to him what this Bill is all about. Of course, I will have to invite all Members to vote against the amendment of the Member for Calgary West, because it would defeat the purpose of the very objective of the Government, which is to reduce inflation, to cut it by half.

Among other things, the Hon. Member repeated very, very often that the Bill by which we will limit the indexation to 6 per cent, and to 5 per cent the year after, for Family Allowance recipients who do not need the Child Tax Credit will affect the poor in the country. It is totally misleading and really I would like to be able to use a stronger word to say how wrong it is for him to dare say things like that.

The Bill, of course, is part of a package, and the other Bill, C-139, its complement says very clearly that all Canadian mothers who receive Child Tax Credit, even a part of the Child Tax Credit, even a dollar, of a Child Tax Credit which means that they are at the very end of the scale for those who qualify, they may have a family income of $40,000 a year, will receive not 6 per cent but full indexation in this coming year, in their next month's cheque.

[Translation]

This means, for instance, and I want to stress this point, that any Canadian mother, if she has only one child and if her family, that is she and her husband have earned $26,330 in 1982, or any mother who falls in that category or any mother who has more than one child and whose income is over and above that amount will be entitled to a child tax credit or a partial credit which will be increased by $50 for each child to compensate for our small cut in the indexation.

• (1440)

Today's Hansard has not yet been printed, but I took notes when the Hon. Member was talking. He stated that the number of those people living at or near the poverty line and the number of welfare cases would increase. He repeated often the incredible phrase that this Bill takes food away from the bellies of children. The Hon. Member comes from a rich Province and probably the wealthiest city in Canada, Calgary. The Hon. Member surely is joking when he says that someone with one child earning $26,330 a year, the maximum at which people receive the full Child Tax Credit, is living at the poverty line. There will be a reduction of $1.40 a month on their cheque. For a person earning more than $26,000 a year, how can anyone who is honest suggest that it is taking food away from their table? That and other stupidities are what we have had to listen to.

This matter is very serious. I want families to understand what is going on. After having listened to the Hon. Member for Calgary West, Canadians will wonder what is happening. What will happen is this. Of the 3.6 million mothers in Canada who receive Family Allowance, two-thirds, or 2.4 million of them, those in low or middle-income families, next year will receive the fully indexed value of the Family Allowance and Child Tax Credit. I want to assure everyone in the House of that as it is very important. This is a very generous Bill.

Mr. Hawkes: What about 1984?

Miss Bégin: The same is true for 1984. In each of these two years they will get the full value of the fully indexed Family Allowance and Child Tax Credit. I repeat, that will go to two-thirds, or 2.4 million mothers.

What about the other third? The other one-third or 1.2 million mothers are in high-income families. I am not suggesting there is anything wrong with high-income families. However, we had to make a choice. Those earning between $30,000 and $40,000 a year, depending on the number of children they have, will be asked to contribute along with other Canadians, including Members of Parliament and Ministers who have cut their salaries. This one-third is being asked to contribute in a modest way to the economic recovery through the six and five program.

I have more than once tried to explain to the Hon. Member for Calgary West that the six and five program is not for savings, as he suggested this morning. Although I have often explained that to him, he does not want to believe it. The purpose of six and five is to mobilize Canadians and public opinion toward the fight against inflation.

[Translation]

The rate of inflation was expected to be 12 per cent and 10 per cent in the next two years. We have decided that our collective target to reduce and control inflation would be to cut those rates in half and bring them down to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the year after. Of course, in any fight against inflation or in any economic endeavour, the psychological element is a key factor and that is why we have used our legislative powers to face up to our responsibilities with a view to controlling inflation. Bill C-132 therefore reduces the increase for next year. Instead of being a full indexation as expected, it will amount to only 6 per cent the first year and 5 per cent the year after. Bill C-139 provides that any Canadian mother who receives a full or partial child tax credit will be entitled not only to the usual full indexation of the child tax credit which was, as you may recall—

[English]

Depending on the number of children, families will qualify for a full or partial Child Tax Credit. Last year a mother receiving a full Child Tax Credit received $261 non-taxable per child. The Child Tax Credit is asked for by mothers at the beginning of the year. The Child Tax Credit for this year would have been $293 non-taxable per child. Mothers will be surprised to hear that this year it is going to be much higher. It will be $343 non-taxable for the child for the year. As I explained, there will be an additional $50 for all mothers who receive the Child Tax Credit, regardless whether they receive a full or partial Tax Credit.

Why is this being done when it costs so much? We want to ensure that the small reduction in the Family Allowance indexation will not hurt in any way, shape or form the low-income and middle-income families. That is very important. That is why I can easily deny the false statements made this morning. This is why I say to those Canadians who are listening to the debates or will read about them that nobody earning less than $26,330 will receive less next year or the year after than they normally would have received.

Let me explain to mothers that if inflation had been as high as we thought it would be, they would lose $1.40. In other words, their Family Allowance cheque will be more than it is now, although slightly less than they anticipated. If we had full inflation such as we have known, they would lose $1.40 on their cheque; but the more inflation is brought down, the better off they are. For example, inflation is around 8.5 per cent and it is coming down. That is good news. Mothers will lose less than $1.40. They will just lose a few cents. Therefore, the quicker we bring inflation down, the smaller the gap will be. There is no gap at all, in fact, if we succeed in bringing inflation down to 6 per cent—and I should not say "if"; it is "when" we succeed. We are coming towards that goal of only 6 per cent inflation, which is not ideal but is far better than what we have had in past months.

[Translation]

It is a fact that the inflation rate is coming down—the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has just explained all that—but nobody will admit that it is due to the government's 6 and 5 per cent program. Hon. Members opposite, because of party politics, just cannot admit that the government may have succeeded in its psychological campaign to mobilize all Canadians, and they will say: Indeed not! Economists say that there is another reason, but it is not because of the government's 6 and 5 per cent program. Well, maybe it is quite fair for a politician to play politics, but I, for one, have no use for that little game, because Canadians are not any better off in the end. What I find interesting is the fact that the inflation rate has come down. I think everybody will agree with me on that. Since the month of June when we started the 6 and 5 campaign, in other words, over the past six months, the rate of inflation has gone down. In fact, it has gone down over a sufficiently long period to warrant the conclusion that a real trend has been established that will continue to bring about permanent and beneficial change for all families, and I would emphasize the words beneficial and family. In committee, the Hon. Member asked a great many questions, and then he said: How do we know what you are saying is true? We have no guarantee that the child tax credit will be fully indexed and that it will be increased by $50 for all mothers receiving the child tax credit. So I told the Hon. Member, who still does not seem to understand, that he should read the House Order Paper more carefully, because then he would have known that on December 7, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tabled in the House Bill C-139, which provides for amendments to the Income Tax Act. Perhaps he does not understand that the child tax credit does not fall under my Department's jurisdiction. It is a fiscal measure which must therefore be amended and supplemented by a special bill, which happens to be Bill C-139.

[English]

I say that because his Leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), has said recently, and it is reported, among other things, in The Globe and Mail of December 9, that he would oppose this Bill. Well, if the Conservatives decide to oppose this Bill, they will make two-thirds of all Canadian mothers lose their Child Tax Credit or see it delayed. That is what it means. I do not quite understand why The Hon. Member did not address that point and explain why the Conservatives would delay the passage of a Bill which will increase the Child Tax Credit. That is key. I want to stress that this Bill should be passed as rapidly as possible by this House.

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would not want the Minister to grossly, or in any other way, mislead the House. I wonder if she can tell us how many pages of this thick Bill deal with the Child Tax Credit and how many things there are in it which must be opposed by any responsible Opposition? She is trying to indicate that there is only one piece of legislation dealing with the Child Tax Credit, and that is just not correct.

Miss Bégin: No, that is not what I said. I said that that Bill, however, is the tool which deals with the increase in the Child Tax Credit and I have asked the Hon. Member for Calgary West if he has the permission of his Leader to assure Canadian mothers that there will be rapid passage of that Bill. He did not answer my question, which is a very simple one, because his Leader said he would oppose the passage of the Bill. These are the negative consequences. I have just listed them, in case he had not realized that. He did not know in committee last week that this Bill existed. He did not know in committee that this Bill contained a provision amending the Child Tax Credit and increasing it by $50 on top of the full indexation. I have explained why that special additional $50 is given to all mothers receiving the Child Tax Credit.

An Hon. Member: For one year only.

Miss Bégin: For one year, which is enough to cover the two years of small reduction in indexation. And that, of course, is based on this generous, I must say, forecast of inflation figures which I gave often in committee last week and which has been printed in the proceedings of the committee. They are the figures which the Department of Finance and my Department anticipate for inflation. We calculated what would be missing for Canadian mothers if inflation was that high compared to 6 per cent. We found that the figure for the two years would be a little less than $50, so we are adding $50 to the Child Tax Credit for all to make up for that small reduction in Family Allowances.

In the amendment of the Hon. Member for Calgary West to Bill C-132, he does not say if he would also reduce that special $50. He wants to do away with capping Family Allowances indexation to 5 per cent in 1984. That is his Bill. But the point of the $50 is that probably half of it, roughly $25, belongs to 1984, although we are giving it this year. Does he also want to reduce that, which is, of course, what he should be doing to be in line with the calculation and to respect our objective of fighting inflation and reducing it to 6 per cent and 5 per cent? He has not said what he would do. I think this is wrong. I am convinced Canadian families will benefit more than anybody else from the dollar being worth more, instead of its constant erosion by inflation.

In other words, the faster we reduce inflation, the better it is for any mother or any family, because the family budget reflects the purchasing power of the dollar. This is the ultimate goal. If the price to pay to reach that goal is to ask Canadians who can afford it to take a little reduction in their increase of Family Allowances cheques, I do not think we have to apologize for that. All mothers with a family income of below $26,330, or more if there are more children, and all the other mothers, by the way, who get only partial Child Tax Credit—and that can go up to at least $40,000 income—will not suffer at all and will not have to pay a penny to that campaign. We will not apologize, because we are doing for Canadians what we really think is best in the long run to fight inflation and get it under control.

The Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), using a trick well known to all politicians, tried to create division among the Liberals by calling on Liberal backbenchers to rebel and to vote against the Government. Clearly, the Opposition does not understand why its campaign to influence public opinion never got off the ground. It is clear that, as regards both Bill C-131 and Bill C-132, the so-called public opinion campaign which the two Opposition parties tried to organize never got off the ground, never had any success and in fact has no connection with real public opinion. Every family has members who are jobless, either a husband, a wife, a child, a brother-in-law or a niece who lost their jobs or who need a job because he or she is twenty years old. They know perfectly well that once we set our priorities for creating employment or protecting existing jobs, and we decide to fight inflation and to bring it down by half, let us say to 6 per cent, and after that to 5, we shall not stop until inflation has been beaten.

The public knows perfectly well that it stands to benefit most from this policy in the long term. For instance, last June, the day after our hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance, brought down his budget, I started to draft, with my officials, the insert that was sent with all cheques. This special message was received and probably read by all mothers in August or September, I do not remember exactly. In any case, the insert described in detail how family allowances and child tax credit would be affected by the Government's decision as announced in the June 28 budget. I immediately sent the news to all Canadian mothers. I knew I could reach this group, and that they would read the insert because it would help them understand the facts. The insert was straight to the point, without any political partisanship, since that was not the point of the exercise. Its purpose was to explain: Your cheque is so much today. With full indexing for inflation, it would have been so much. It is going to be a little less. It will be higher than it is now but a little less so. However, everyone receiving the tax child credit will continue to benefit from full indexing and, in addition, receive another $50 in compensation for the next two years.

Canadians read this. They wrote us a lot of letters. They did not write silly letters but letters in support of our policy, whatever their family situation. The same applies to Bill C-131. We did not receive tons of mail, but we did get many letters which, in fact, I receive when I visit my own riding or when I visit other ridings in Canada to meet people in connection with my work—people who invite us for one reason or another. So I would like to ask the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) to stop urging our backbenchers to rebel against the Government, because it is of no use. These Members are very proud to see that inflation is going down. The truth is, none of them over there are listening. They are all busy going through their papers. It was quite a different story this morning, however—

• (1500)

He will not have the slightest success in appealing to the Liberal backbenchers to organize a revolt. They will not have it. Liberal backbenchers—

Mr. Nickerson: Do what they are told.

Miss Bégin: —are pretty pleased that we decided to mobilize all Canadians to fight inflation. They are pretty pleased and excited, as is every Cabinet Minister, to see that inflation in the last six months, since we started the six and five campaign as we call it, has decreased month after month. We are pretty pleased; it is fabulous.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I have also studied social sciences, as did the Hon. Member for Calgary (Mr. Hawkes), and he should recognize the importance of the psychological element in any economic objective or goal. He should recognize that, and if he was "normal", he would be happy. Why is he not happy to see inflation go down? I wish I understood that. Suddenly, with his Leader, he votes in favour of six and five, but when it comes to concrete application, he disappears in the woods. He is no longer there. Then he hates six and five. Can he explain to us the reason? I mean, does it take a Ph.D.? Where is the logic in all of that? I do not get it.

Unfortunately, you have to take the bitter pill when it is a bitter pill; it is not always a candy. You have to be in favour of six and five. You are in favour of it when it suits the bosses, but you do not seem to be in favour of it when it is more difficult to take one's responsibility and go and explain to Canadians that it also means that rich families will have to make a little effort as well. Where is the logic in that? I do not understand whom you represent. I do not understand who elected you. I do not understand how you have the guts to speak up publicly, because this measure gives more money to poor people, and you know it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I do not understand how you dare stand up and speak for at least 40 minutes—I would be very pleased if this was a case where parliamentary reform was retroactive. You go on and on and on, frightening the poor families in the country, when this Bill C-139 will not only give them their full indexation on the Child Tax Credit, but another $50. So what is your exact constituency? I do not understand, but I know Canadians. I know Canadian mothers. We all know Canadians on this side. I mean the every-day Canadian, the Canadian who does not want to continue with inflation. The mother whose budget every month is eroded. She is quite pleased to see the slight decrease in inflation month after month for six months, and we are very pleased.

I will finish with one plea, Mr. Speaker. I will ask our Members to defeat the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), and to go on with the work of bringing down inflation once and for all.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in favour of this amendment, although certainly against the Bill. It is a very short Bill with one clause and two sub-clauses, and only one sub-clause is involved in the amendment. But to address this, I think we have to look at the nature of the child support programs at the federal level. There are three direct support programs, and I suggest we consider them from the point of view of three principles. One is universality; another is the progressive or regressive nature as to whom the money goes to; the third is recognition of the role of parenting given by the different programs.

First of all let us consider the Family Allowance. This is the only universal program of the three child support programs at the federal level. It is one in which payment normally goes to the mother, in other words, to the prime parent, the person who is doing most of the work in raising children. That is very important. That is one of the reasons that women's organizations across the country have supported the Family Allowance, and indeed want it to be expanded, never mind being cut back. Since it is taxable, it is a progressive measure. It goes out univerally, but there is a means of taxing it back from better off families. Indeed, that could be improved if we were concerned about measures of economy, but certainly we can respect the principle of universality and taxing back at the same time with this very important program.

The next one is the Child Tax Credit, Mr. Speaker. Supposedly it goes to the worst off families, although the cut-off point goes up to $26,000 odd for the full-tax credit. It is a selective program and therefore does not have many of the benefits the universal programs do. It is also normally paid to the mother of the child, the prime parent, and for that reason it is a just and good program and something my Party would like to see expanded further.

Then there is the third program, and this is the one the Minister does not like to talk about. When she is pressed on it in committee, she still does not like to talk about it. That is, Mr. Speaker, the child tax deduction. This is not a universal program, it does not benefit everyone, and in fact it benefits most the richest families in the country. There is a lesser benefit to the middle-income families, and it does not benefit at all the poor families because they are not paying any income tax whatsoever. So it is a regressive program, and one which is continuing absolutely untouched by the reforms and "deforms" which have been brought before us by the Government. Another feature of the child tax deduction program is that it is paid largely to the parent who does not do most of the work of looking after the child. It is paid to the parent who claims the Family Allowance who, in most two-parent families, is the person who makes the higher income. In other words, it goes mainly to the father of the family, and he is making a higher income because his wife is at home looking after the child. It is a very unjust program which gives the benefit to the person who needs it least and who deserves it least by virtue of the fact that he or she do not have the prime parenting role. One might want to dispute how those roles ought to be shared, but the fact is that it is the mothers who do the prime parenting, whether full time in the family or in the work force.

In Bill C-132 and the amendment that is before the House, we have a change in an economy measure brought in by the Government which is going to attack the progressive and universal Family Allowance Program which benefits the prime parent most. It attacks the best program in a number of respects and leaves untouched the worst program of the three.

Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Mobilization has been given as the reason that the Minister and the Government have brought this measure forward. But mobilization for what, Mr. Speaker? My colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) asked this question in Committee but he did not get much of an answer.

What do we want mothers on Family Allowances actually to do? The Minister has not answered that question. The Hon. Member for Spadina suggests, with some reason, that what we are talking about is immobilization, rather than mobilization. This is a measure to frustrate people. Mothers are going to receive a smaller Family Allowance cheque and they are going to feel guilty about it. This is a psychological program that is supposed to upset them. It is supposed to stir them up—to do what? Nothing positive, according to the Minister. I think we have to assume that it is supposed to make them sit back and worry, feel unhappy and be a little more docile so that the Government can do what it wants with its programs.

I did try to explore with the Minister the savings that might result from this program. It is part of six and five, and we are supposed to be putting more money into job creation. We are supposed to be concerned about the deficit and all these other high principles.

When the Minister first explained the Bill, she let it out that the savings would be in the order of $70 million in the two years, 1983-84. Her computation did not include a very important factor, however, and that is the taxing back of the Family Allowance. If that is cut back, then not very much money will be returned through income tax. We dispute what the exact measures are that account for that. The Government admits that the real savings of the program outlined in Bill C-132 are only $15 million for two years. According to our computations they are only $10 million for two years. Either way, Mr. Speaker, it is a very significant figure. If they want to argue the case on the basis of necessity and having the money available to do other things, this is a trivial amount. Surely we could find ways of getting the money that would be less harmful to the people of the country than this.

In the Minister's speeches she has expressed the pious hope that the matter could be dealt with in graph form so that we could see more clearly the implications of the program. She brought a graph to one committee meeting and I have a copy in front of me. It is very revealing. Some Liberal backbenchers stumbled around and talked about the distortion in the graph. The problem is that there is a serious distortion in the system through which we hand out benefits.

You will see, Mr. Speaker, that the curve goes up. Lower income families start at this end and higher income families at this end, and the total benefits are the top line. The line goes up so that the total benefits are highest for families at the $30,000 per year level, then they begin to go down. It is only around $35,000 per year that we find the benefits reduced to the level that a poor family receives something from public money funnelled through the federal Government. The benefits are lower at $10,000 per year and under than they are for families in the $10,000 to $30,000 range. That is shocking, Mr. Speaker.

One of the reasons for this is that the child tax deduction program is so highly regressive. It only benefits families with enough income to pay income tax and benefits most those families paying a high rate of tax. The Minister is aware of this because it was discussed in committee. It is a well known fact. When she was pressed on the matter, she answered, "It is not my Department. We are not concerned with tax reform. Equity is not at issue here." She completely removed herself from responsibility by saying it belonged to another Department. Mr. Speaker, she has colleagues in Cabinet, such as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Surely that is what Cabinet is for. There are three programs, each coming under a different ministry. Surely Cabinet Ministers are paid well enough so that they will do the job properly. They should consult with each other and bring in legislation which is consistent and which makes sense.

Instead of that, we are faced with extremely unfair measures, one of which is an attack on the universal system and leaves untouched the most regressive and selective system, the child tax deduction.

I want to make some partisan remarks about the role of the Conservatives in this, Mr. Speaker. It is very nice to see them supporting us on a Family Allowance measure, but we have to recognize that they are rather late converts to the cause. Family Allowances were introduced in the 1940s by the Liberals. They had been a CCF measure and had been advocated by this Party and its predecessor Party for many years. At that time the Conservatives fought against Family Allowances, but they were introduced because our predecessor Party had advocated them. The Liberals came to the conclusion it was a good program to swipe from us. When they brought it in, we supported it.

The Conservatives had interesting arguments to oppose Family Allowances. At different times it is the Conservatives who attack Family Allowances with the Liberals defending, and at other times it is the Liberals attacking with the Conservatives on the opposite side. The point is that one cannot rely on either Party for consistent support for Family Allowances. They both support the program out of expediency only. At a time when they can see they can score some political points they are behind it but when they do not see that, they are not behind it. This Party is the only one that has consistently supported Family Allowances, and it will continue to do so.

I want to make one final comment à propos the remarks of a Conservative Member of the committee and the Minister's response to them. The Minister gave a very spirited response to the accusations of the Conservative spokesperson that this was an attack on poor families. I suggest that her very strong defence that it is not an attack on poor families, but is more selective, and is an attack on richer families with greater protection for the poorer ones, hangs her on another point that she has tried to avoid and that is, the question of universality.

She is right in her claim that there has been an increase in the Child Tax Credit, the selective program to make up for the reduction in the Family Allowance. But she did not address the question that the base of the Family Allowance has been reduced and that all families will suffer because of that. On the selective question she says there is no attack on universality. She says that even though the Family Allowance Program is universal and even though this one is being reduced, this is not an attack on universality. In committee she went so far as to say that if so much as $1 remained in the Family Allowance per year, there would still be a universal program. This is rather revealing, Mr. Speaker. It is rather shocking and disturbing to think that a Minister could even talk in those terms. It is a pretty specious argument, but there it is.

The Minister emphasized the increase in the selective measure to offset the universal program. I think she has to admit that the real problem with the Bill is that it is an attack on universality. This is an important social program, a universal one, that gives recognition to mothers of families. The Government is attacking this program. It is not the first time the Government has attacked this program. Limits have been placed on it before. In fact, Family Allowance would be up to $40 per month per child if indexing had been continuous since it was introduced. We have had attacks before; we are very skeptical and we are very concerned about this one. It is not a measure which will save a lot of money this year because of the increase in the Child Tax Credit. It will ruin the base. It is the thin edge of the wedge for attacking universal programs, and it is a very backward step for that reason.

Let me conclude by saying that I am not very satisfied with the approach either of the Government or the Conservative alternative. The amendment is one which should be supported because it limits the cutback to one year. For the same reason that half a loaf is better than no loaf, half a cutback is better than a full one. Certainly that is not what we want. This is a very mean Bill. We must defeat it because people will suffer very definitely from it. It is the thin edge of the wedge to destroy other important social programs. I urge support for the amendment, but the most important thing to do is to defeat the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few remarks on Bill C-132. I have followed it through the debate. I have read committee reports to understand better just what the Minister is attempting to do in the Bill.

It is an innocent enough Bill. We are used to having large Bills around here, but this one has only one clause which in effect reduces the Family Allowance expected by parents in the country over the next two years. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) moved an amendment. The basis upon which he moved it was that he felt—and I agree—that it was impossible to predict just what inflation would be like in 1984 and that, therefore, to project the program that far ahead was unfair to families. Also he stated that in effect the Bill should not be passed in the first place because it was an attack upon Family Allowance, upon something which mothers in particular use in planning their budgets each month. To say that Family Allowance cheques buy a certain amount over six and over five and will not have any effect upon family budgets is not the case. Many people, particularly today, find that they have to budget very close to meet their monthly and yearly expenditures.

To have even $1.40 per month per child removed, as was stated, can affect the income of a family. To a great deal the family is affected psychologically because it is not the only factor which is being removed. At the same time the family has to face extra heating costs because of a program in which the federal Government takes a substantial amount of tax from oil and gas, with no credit going back for heating costs. Also there are increased property taxes which the family faces every year, as towns and cities find it impossible to meet the demands placed upon them.

In the last economic statement, which was possibly a small budget, the federal Government added a tax upon those people working as they pay more for unemployment insurance and other measures brought forward. To say, "We have brought this Bill forward; it seems like a small amount, so we should not really consider it, we should pass it through quickly because these people will be doing their part to help in the fight against inflation", is just not so. It is also a psychological factor. It takes away from the income of people who cannot afford it, people who expect a cheque every month to assist them with family income.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West used the figure of some $80 million as the amount being taken away from families. If we consider the tax back, perhaps only $10 million to $15 million will be removed. I am sure there are hundreds of ways Members of Parliament could find to save that amount of money, so that we would not have to deal with this Bill at all and we could leave the Family Allowance as it is. For example, let us look at the report of the Auditor General. We could find hundreds of millions of dollars which could be saved. In their committee work Members of Parliament have probably found other situations they could recommend at which even the Auditor General has not looked. Crown corporations alone have some $3 billion in losses. If we look at the Department of Energy, with which those of us from western Canada are so familiar, there are hundreds of millions of dollars being used by Crown corporations such as Petro-Canada in very questionable expenses, such as the purchase of British Petroleum service stations, expenses which will not really help our citizens at all. There are examples of expenditures which could be avoided. Those funds are very readily available and could be used in place of the few million dollars the Minister is attempting to save in this Bill.

The argument for the Bill cannot by very strong. I was looking at how the Minister attempted to explain the breakdown of the Family Allowance and the Child Tax Credit. I looked at the proceedings of the committee because I wanted to refresh my memory on how they were calculated. In order to find out just where is the cut-off on the Child Tax Credit, I looked at the evidence of the expert witness, as reported in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs wherein the following was reported:

MS. DULUDE: I believe that $26,000 is the amount—the cut-off point—at the present time. But this $26,000 is not a net . . . Let us see—

MR. HAWKES: It is taxable income rather than gross income.

MISS MACDONALD (KINGSTON AND THE ISLANDS): No. It is graduated between $26,000 and $40,000. It diminishes from $26,000. Under $26,000 you receive the full amount.

MS. DULUDE: It is graduated over . . .

MISS MACDONALD (KINGSTON AND THE ISLANDS): It is $26,330.

MS. DULUDE: Between $26,000 and—

Then the following appeared:

A WITNESS: It is mainly from capital deductions, not—

MS. DULUDE: Yes, but I do not know what the cut-off number is.

A WITNESS: If you manage to take advantage of all the deductions, you can get up to an astronomical income and still have less than $26,000.

I decided that I had better go back to my notes because I understood myself better before I tried to find out exactly where the Child Tax Credit was cut off.

Most Members of Parliament—and perhaps all of us—agree that the Child Tax Credit is a good thing, but the difficulty with it is that it comes only once a year. For many families it is important to receive cheques once a month; they depend on them. It is very easy, when one receives the $343 lump sum once a year, to find some major item needed by the family on which to spend it. But what happens the next month if one is faced with a breakdown in a refrigerator or something of that nature and one has not set aside some of that money in the family budget? If we are to be progressive, the best thing we could do is to find a way to pay out the Child Tax Credit monthly instead of once a year.

If we look at the Family Allowance, we find that it has been quite a game over the last few years. In 1974, the amount was raised to $20 from the previous amount in the neighbourhood of $7. In 1979, through indexation, it rose to $25.68. Then the Child Tax Credit was brought in and the Family Allowance was reduced back to $20, whereupon indexation again took over. Inflation had been running at a very high rate at that time. As a result, the amount has increased again. Today we must deal with another Bill which will once again reduce the amount of Family Allowance which mothers have come to expect. This makes it very difficult for parents to predict what they will be receiving from their Family Allowance each month. The Government has played this game too often.

I follow the performance of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development very closely. The Indian people of this country suffer from poverty more than any other group. They must plan their monthly budgets very closely. They have come to depend on various types of assistance, such as that which they receive for the purchase of books or the payment of tuition for the children they send to off-reserve schools. Yet this year, in order to find some savings in his Department, the Minister has said that he has no legal obligation to provide that assistance and is therefore no longer paying for off-reserve expenses for Indian children. This results in an immediate increase in the budgets of those Indian families. They will now have to deal with the reduction in Family Allowance.

Another example of reduced assistance is the noon hot lunch program which had existed in this country for a number of years. It is an essential program to children on reserves who are often sent to school without lunches. In 1978 that program was suddenly cut in an attempt to save money. In 1979, the Conservative Government reintroduced the program, but only temporarily since the program was cut again as soon as the Liberals returned to power.

These examples show how difficult it is for families to plan their budgets. Statistics Canada figures show that there are some 900,000 Canadian children living in poverty. I am not sure if that figure includes Indian children because Statistics Canada do not include Indian people in its figures for the unemployed. They are simply passed over. Therefore, I wonder if this is the case as well when Statistics Canada determines which children in Canadian families live below the poverty line.

The total amount in benefits for children over the next two years will be reduced. Despite what the Minister says, these benefits will be reduced because in our current economic situation, while we hope that inflation continues to drop, the inflation rate will likely be more than 6 per cent and 5 per cent. Inflation will be higher than 6 per cent and 5 per cent because of the Government's large expenditures which are uncontrolled and allowed to run rampant.

The Minister has said that if we do not pass Bill C-132 quickly in order to get this additional money to mothers under the Child Tax Credit, we are holding back that money which is available to them. Again, as Members of Parliament we are being put in the position of having to decide between the pros and cons of this Bill. While the Child tax Credit is a beneficial measure which should be passed quickly, there are a number of measures in this Bill which are totally unacceptable to Canadian families and businesses across the country. Members of Parliament must make the decision on whether to support the Bill for its one or two positive measures or to oppose it because of its 10 or 20 clauses which are unacceptable. Of course, we must find it unacceptable to pass the Bill because of its many destructive measures which will hurt Canadians more than the Child Tax Credit will assist families.

I took the opportunity to review the Committee's Minutes of Proceedings, because I thought they would contain a message from a Liberal Member besides the Minister in defence of this legislation. I discovered the remarks of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) whose remarks took up quite a few pages in his attempt to defend this Bill. I would like to review some of his statements because I thought they really defended the Bill. In the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs Committee, at page 51:23 he said:

> I know in any situation where there is a—it is not really a loss; rather than a loss, it is just not a gain. I think we should be careful in setting this out in its proper perspective. It is not as though there is nothing coming to families under the legislation.
> It is at six and five. If of course the inflation rate reduces, it will probably be less of a burden than it otherwise would be. But at least six and five is something; and this is not the only group affected.

He went on to say:

> At the same time, what are we talking about? We are talking about, what, 4½ cents a day per child . . . Is that right?—for those who are actually affected.

I believe that this is a defence of the Bill by a Member who is not really sure himself of what effects it will have on Canadian families. I reviewed all of his defence and could not find one clear statement about how he felt the Bill was not hurting families. I found that he was often convoluted and ended up by saying that it would affect Canadian families. As I reviewed these Committee's Minutes of Proceedings, I found that not only was I confused by the Minister's statement about how this Bill will not hurt the family, many Liberal Members were equally confused.

The Hon. Member from the NDP who just spoke raised a very interesting situation. This situation with regard to the draft that was inserted in the back of Issue No. 51 of the Committee's Minutes of Proceedings was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Calgary West as well. It points out the very interesting situation that the greatest benefit from the three sources of family income assistance, the Child Tax Credit, the Child Tax Exemption and the Family Allowance, goes to those families earning between $10,000 and $34,000. A family must earn over $34,000 before the total benefits begin to diminish. We find that a large amount of the benefits which is supposed to go to the poor families does not, in fact, go to them.

This raises a question which many Members of Parliament have been asking themselves for some time. When programs are established for the purpose of assisting those in the greatest need, why do we find that a great amount of the money being set aside for those families does not reach them but goes to families who do not really need that tax credit? I have held the opinion for some time that we should reconsider whether those families earning over $34,000 a year should receive those funds and whether that money which is going to those families earning over that amount should be given to those earning under $10,000. I can name many families in my constituency who are earning less than $10,000 a year and could benefit from that extra amount of money.

Family Allowance was initially introduced for two reasons. One was to help families, mothers in particular, raise their children and provide a source of separate income to the mother, particularly in poorer families, where perhaps the husband did not spend enough on the care of the children. The mother always had a certain amount of money which she could set aside through the Family Allowance to provide the basic physical needs for her family. Those were excellent reasons for setting up the Family Allowance Program. We find now that many hundreds of millions of dollars are going to people who do not need this assistance. This is assistance which should be going to those who live below the poverty line. It is not going to them under the present program. Therefore, all Members of Parliament will have to deal with this question. They must ask themselves, "How will we improve our programs so that those people who are really in need will, in fact, receive the moneys that we set aside and those who are not in need will not receive those moneys?"

There are many things that can be said about this Bill and why we should not deal with it. The Minister states that we need to take money away from children and pensioners in order to solve the inflationary problem and that, in fact, because of the six and five program, inflation is coming down. I will grant the fact that there is a certain psychological advantage to saying that everyone is participating in a program and therefore we are all helping to bring inflation down. We must ask why inflation has been dropping as was stated previously, even though this Bill concerning pensioners and Family Allowances has not yet been passed. Why is that? It is because the economy of this country is in such terrible shape. Businesses are going bankrupt. There are 1.5 million unemployed, and we are not even including Indian people in that figure. Money is not in demand as it once was. Banks are having trouble even lending their money. With all of these situations, the expenditures in this nation for goods have dropped off tremendously. Factories are closing, businesses are laying off people who are superfluous to their needs, and it is no wonder that, with the economy slowing down in the manner it is, inflation is dropping. We should seriously consider whether we need any of these pieces of legislation being brought forward.

It has also been stated that each month, in many communities across this country, 10 per cent more people are applying for welfare than in the previous month. What does that tell us? It tells me that there are many more families in this country which have a need for every dollar they can get, and one dollar per month per child is important to them because there is not much money coming in any more. Family income is dropping. Therefore, we in this Party, particularly, are asking the question: is it so important that we save $10 million, $15 million or even as much as $80 million as a result of this Bill when we could very easily find hundreds of millions of dollars elsewhere? This could be done if we as Members of Parliament really looked, and then we would not have to deal with this legislation.

I therefore say to Hon. Members: search very well when and if you come to vote on this Bill. Consider the amendment of the Hon. Member for Calgary West because it is a very positive amendment, one which deserves support from all sides of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to improve on the speech that my Minister made this afternoon.

Mr. Nickerson: No, it is not.

Mr. Baker (Napean-Carleton): Go ahead and try. You have lots of scope.

Mr. Schroder: I think she gave an excellent speech. She covered many points. The only problem is that the Opposition has taken hold of the idea that it does not want to be confused by the facts, as usual.

I would like to refer to the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) to the effect that the psychology of inflation may be working. While I must confess that I am not an economist either, I find that the complex issues with respect to inflation are difficult to comprehend. It strikes me that one of the most important things we can say is that the psychology of inflation is working in the six and five program.

I, too, attended the committee meetings where various witnesses testified that times were tough. I had a great deal of difficulty in sorting things out, because the Conservative Members of the committee were certainly all over the map.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We are a national Party.

Mr. Schroder: I think that the Members representing labour unions and other organizations will take great solace in knowing that it is very clearly shown on the record that the Conservatives support the labour unions, the labour people, and this idea that the rich should be soaked and that there is no sense of responsibility on the part of all Canadians to try to keep this psychology of inflation working.

I heard that the problem was that people were having difficulties because of inflation, especially because they were finding high prices in the food stores. I have heard a story about an organization providing a service whereby people were picked up and taken shopping, but that before people received their Family Allowance cheques they would not avail themselves of the service because they did not have any money. I would like to suggest that reducing inflation will be of far more benefit to those people than Family Allowances.

We must also remember that the Bill will really not take anything away from anyone, particularly those people who are considered as being those most in need. I think the Minister has gone to great lengths to explain this fact. This is one of the facts which the Opposition seems to have difficulty in absorbing. In fact, in some cases, depending on how one uses statistics, some of them may even be better off.

The psychology of inflation really involves a sense of credibility, a sense of understanding. Both Opposition Parties have been suggesting that certain social programs which have been of great benefit are being undermined by the six and five program, and that it is too bad that we must do something to interfere with them. All of those social programs were introduced by the Liberal Government, and that speaks for our record.

One of the witnesses in committee, while making a presentation on behalf of the Canadian Council on Social Development, emphasized the fact that most people recognize the worth of social programs which have been inaugurated by the Government and greatly enhanced by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). Terrance Hunsley, the Council's executive director, said, "Although our Council has not hesitated to criticize individual iniatives of the Government, it is also true that our social programs are presently proving their worth in softening the impact of the recession." Spoken in rather quiet words, I think that was a very glowing report of the sensitivity of the Government to the requirements of the most needy in this country.

Mrs. Mitchell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Hon. Member would entertain a question related to his last point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): Would the Hon. Member entertain a question?

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I will entertain a question at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, wait until we change the rules.

Mr. Wilson: Then you won't want to speak, Jim.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We will never hear from you again.

• (1550)

Mr. Schroder: The amendment to this Bill, of course, is to change what is a two-year Bill to a one-year Bill. In other words, there is a certain degree of inconsistency here which I find difficult to understand. First, the Official Opposition voted to support the six and five program. That means that they have in general terms, I suspect, appreciated the merits of this program and its purpose, which is to try to reduce inflation so that everyone, not just the needy, but everyone in this country will be better off. Let us get that straight. We have support in some quarters besides our own Government for the six and five program.

Now we get an amendment which proposes that we only do half this program that is supposed to have impact on reducing inflation. We have an amendment which is introduced to say: let us not try to get inflation down to 5 per cent, let us quit at 6 per cent. I see the rationale which is that they want to convert what is a super-program based on 6 per cent inflation then being reduced to 5 per cent inflation, to say, OK, let us go to 6 per cent inflation only.

The other thing that really disturbs me is that they say, "When the total package comes in we are going to vote against it anyway". They are sort of flip-flopping back and forth.

We can use figures to prove anything, and one motive of the Opposition appears to be to frighten those people who will be most affected by this legislation. In reading the testimony and listening to debate, one of the things that has impressed me is that it is almost as if the motive of this program were to save money. Questions which one can find in the testimony so far, and in some of the speeches of the Opposition, seem to say, how much does the Government hope to save from the 50,000 pensioners?

In the June Budget, the former Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), forecast that limited indexation would reduce expenditures on the Old Age Security Program by $105 million by the end of the 1983/84 fiscal year. Now we have every reason to believe that these savings will be much less, because the six and five program is working.

Why is the Government so pleased about these reduced savings? Here is the flaw in the reasoning which we see there, because the objective of the six and five program was not to save money. It was to reduce inflation to 6 per cent by the end of 1984. The less we save because of the limited OAS indexation, the happier the Government will be, because that will mean a lower rate of inflation and, most important, there will be better prospects for pensioners, and for innumerable other Canadians.

Another suggestion on this idea that perhaps the Government is not saving as much money as it had hoped to save, is that the Government will only save about $10 million from the Family Allowances and the Old Age Security Program, because of the six and five program. I hope we save even less than that $10 million because that will indicate that the six and five program has really worked and that pensioners and families with children will not have to give up as much as we originally forecast, which is not very much.

Again I remind you that the purpose of the six and five program was not necessarily to save money. I want to emphasize the fact that this is a short-term program. It is a temporary short-term program and it is meant to achieve the longer range goal which is to reduce inflation.

One of the other major problems that I have with the Opposition is the fact that they are twisting these programs to suggest that universality is in doubt. I think that if you have listened to any of the Minister's speeches, if you have read any of the testimony, certainly from the Government side and if you have listened to some of the other speeches, you will recognize that that is not and never has been in question, and that the program of universality is the key to the social programs that are supported by this Government.

This program is meant to reduce inflation; there will be no loss to those people most in need; the Child Tax Credit will be fully indexed and that group of people who are making up to $27,000 a year will not be touched. If the program works as we trust it will, and we do get inflation reduced to 6 per cent and 5 per cent, not only will those people who possibly are going to feel a little pinched because their incomes are suffering, mostly from inflation, but all Canadians will benefit because we will have reduced inflation by 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

I am worried that so much of the propaganda produced by the Opposition is going to have a detrimental effect on this anti-inflation psychology, which one of the Members admitted in his speech earlier appears to be working and which is a state of mind. I think that we must continue to enforce that psychology so that all Canadians, those who are in the higher income brackets and those who are needy, will find that inflation will come down. They have lowered their inflationary expectations, and therefore will be better off because of that reduction in inflation.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that earlier this afternoon in my absence points of order were raised by the Opposition which had to do with prospective amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act. I do not think this has been a very edifying spectacle today in which procedural points have been used for political purposes to try to frustrate something which is extremely important to the disabled as well as for the women of this country.

This has not been a struggle about first reading. It has been a struggle about third reading. I will have other motions to make, but I would at this time like to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof. I would like the permission of the House to introduce this Bill for first reading at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-141, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When shall the Bill be read a second time?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to challenge the Opposition to show that they can rise above the kind of partisanship in which they have been indulging today. I challenge them to give second reading to this Bill now without debate so that this can proceed now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Listen to the howls from the opposite side. This will be the test of their partisanship and whether they are able to rise above that. I challenge the Opposition to give second reading to this Bill now without debate.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that this is Private Members' hour, unless there is some special exception. I have a Bill which I am yearning to present.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would have to proceed to Private Members' hour. Normally when we have some activity going on in the House as at this moment, it might be a good idea to see whether there is unanimous consent to recognize, for example, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on the point of order. Does the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) insist that we proceed to Private Members' hour or may I recognize, for example, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on a point of order?

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite pleased to see the Chair recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I should start off by congratulating the Minister for a long delayed recognition of the proper way in which to introduce any piece of legislation in this House, particularly a matter affecting the rights of two important groups in our society.

The fact is that the Minister has come in and has tabled a Bill. This will now give the people of Canada an opportunity to see the contents of the Bill after it has been published. It meant my having to go off the Hill to publish at my own expense copies of the Bill for distribution to Members of Parliament, an unprecedented situation in terms of parliamentary traditions, practices and courtesy. We can, in the spirit of co-operation for which we in this Party are known, consider this matter at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Demoratic Party, I want to say we appreciate the fact that the Minister has finally put this Bill before the House. We certainly agree to its introduction, as we will agree to its second reading and reference to the Committee because we are most—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Further, on behalf of my Party, I would like to say that I am thoroughly sickened by the posturing and the simulated indignation that has gone on in front of the people of Canada over this issue by both the Liberals and the Conservatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It may be that the House is ready to dispose of the matter. The Minister was seeking unanimous consent for second reading and reference to a committee. I believe the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) made it clear that the answer to the question as to when it shall be read a second time would be at the next sitting of the House. There is not now unanimous consent and we will now proceed to Private Members' hour.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just before going to the Private Members' matter standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), I would advise that there have been consultations among representatives of the three Parties and also with the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey. I believe there is agreement for us at this point to deal very quickly with two Bills seeking to change constituency names. The Bills in question are Bill C-647 standing in the name of Saint Michel (Mrs. Killens) and Bill C-620 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Missisquoi (Mr. Bachand). Our agreement is to pass these Bills now at all stages without debate. I want to thank very much the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey for his courtesy in providing the minute or so necessary for this procedure.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With whom were these Bills cleared? Was this cleared with our House Leader?

Mr. Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the House Leaders of both Opposition Parties.

Mr. Taylor: Okay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely Public Bills, Notices of Motions, Private Bills. I have, as the Parliamentary Secretary indicated, two Bills which reflect changes of names of constituencies. We will proceed with ladies before gentlemen.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE THE NAME OF THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF SAINT-MICHEL

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel) moved that Bill C-647, to change the name of the electoral district of Saint-Michel, be now read the second time and by unanimous consent referred to a committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE THE NAME OF THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF MISSISQUOI

Mr. André Bachand (Missisquoi) moved that Bill C-620, to change the name of the electoral district of Missisquoi, be now read the second time and by unanimous consent referred to a committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Bachand moved that the bill be read the third time.

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since I have not read the full details of the Bill, could the Parliamentary Secretary, the Chair or the sponsor, give us the new name of the constituency which is being changed?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I had thought that the two Hon. Members who evidently are proceeding to change the names of their constituencies might wish to identify them themselves when I finish with the two Bills, as a courtesy to the House.

[Translation]

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank with all my heart the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) for gaving me a few moments to speak on behalf of my constituents. To reply to the question of the Hon. Member, my constituency will in future be called Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic.

Mr. Bachand: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that the name of my constituency will be changed from Missisquoi to Brome-Missisquoi.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, before you proceed to Private Members' Hour, I wonder if I might bring to your attention the admissibility of this particular Bill, C-218. I would hope you would make a ruling as to whether or not it is admissible, but before doing so, I wonder if you would hear me, and perhaps we would be courteous enough to give the Hon. Member an opportunity to say his piece. Then perhaps, at the conclusion of that, you would make your final ruling, because I am sure you will want to check with officers at the Table, as well as with other precedents.

I refer the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, to Standing Order 62(1), which reads:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that this particular Bill involves the expenditure of public moneys, therefore, it ought not to be classified as a private Member's Bill. I think you ought to take note of Clause 6 contained in this particular Bill. Therefore, I do not think we can actually debate this particular Bill today. However, Mr. Speaker, prior to making your ruling, I am sure you will want to give opportunity to the very courteous Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) to have his say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has raised an appropriate point of order. There is standard phraseology used by the Chair which I will use in a moment to alert Hon. Members that a Bill may in fact infringe upon the rights of the Government. I will read that and then I propose to indicate how, if everyone is agreed, we might proceed. It reads as follows:

> Before proposing the question for the second reading of Bill C-218, An Act to amend the Atomic Energy Control Act, the Chair ought to express strong reservations as to the procedural acceptability of this Bill which seems, in some of its clauses, to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown as far as the power to expend public funds is concerned. Having entered this caveat, the Chair intends to allow debate to take place on the motion for second reading. Should such debate come to an end, then the Chair will have to rule on the procedural acceptability of the Bill.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL ACT, 1980

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey) moved that Bill C-218, An Act to amend the Atomic Energy Control Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): With respect to the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), I believe the suggestion made is appropriate, and that the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) should be heard. If no other Members at that time rise to speak, I will rule on procedural acceptability of the Bill. Obviously, I have warned the Hon. Members that we will be finding the Bill out of order. If some Hon. Member rises at that time and asks for a final ruling on the Bill, I think the Chair would be obligated to do that as well. We will proceed in that fashion.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the consideration which has been shown by the Chair, and by the Hon. Member opposite, in approaching this Bill. I will say that I recognize there could be some difficulties with this Bill under the references which have been given. Indeed, it does propose an establishment of a board. This board could be seen to replace a board which is now in place and its members could in fact be renumerated at the same level, in spite of the fact there are additional members on that board. That is one argument which I would be prepared to put forward.

I would like the opportunity to explain the real reason for bringing forward this Bill today. At a time when, perhaps, we might have chosen to speak of other things because of the difficulties which are being faced by the Canadian economy, I think this Bill allows an opportunity for taking into account some of the considerations which are in front of the Canadian people now in nuclear energy and matters relating to nuclear energy, and also those facing the nuclear industry.

To explain the Bill, I would like to say that much of the substance has been presented before by way of the Bill which the Government presented in 1977, which was called the Nuclear Control and Administration Act. This Bill was not enacted, and it died on the Order Paper. The Bill at that time was designed to bring into focus the development and concerns which have become evident since the first passage of the Atomic Energy Control Act, and that Act was first passed in 1946. There was one amendment in 1974. However, from that period of time we have not had major revision or review of the process to deal with the whole nuclear question in Canada. Since this Act was presented to Parliament, that is, the Atomic Energy Control Act, nuclear-generated electricity has become a very important component of our electrical system, particularly in Ontario where it accounts for approximately one-third of the total electrical power generated. Spectacular advances in the use of nuclear materials in industry and medicine have added significantly to the broad application of nuclear materials throughout Canadian society.

Bill C-218, as presented to the House today, also contains some revisions as suggested by the Canadian Environmental Law Association, and changes by myself and others. The Bill was first re-drafted nearly three years ago, and is a sister Bill of two other private members' Bills, that of the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) and that of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan). In the context of today's economy, unemployment and serious nuclear industry problems, the Bill needs revision again in co-operation with the interested parties. This Bill includes proposals which would see a nuclear control board created composed of people without vested interests in the nuclear industry. It establishes a radioactive decontamination fund, requires site approval as a first step in the establishment of a nuclear facility, requires disclosure of unclassified documents, and makes the Minister responsible for the board report to Parliament on a regular basis.

The Bill is as complex as the subject, and I readily admit to limitations in being able to fully determine the legal, jurisdictional or other implications of some of the suggested changes.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Hillsborough, the Conservative critic for the environment, and I would not support any measures which would threaten the economic viability of the industry, or act as roadblocks for future development. Evidence now available in connection with acid rain, carbon dioxide, and other environmental disruptions, as in coal electrical generation or the James Bay hydro development, suggest that nuclear energy has distinct advantages. No industry, no energy form, no economic activity is without its price in environmental impact. Indeed, the first point I would like to make is that we have really not had the opportunity in Canada since 1946 to consider in a public or parliamentary forum what our nuclear energy future should be, and what relative advantages and disadvantages there really are to the nuclear energy option.

In 1980 the Porter Royal Commission dealt with nuclear energy in Ontario and made a valuable contribution to the understanding of nuclear energy in Canada. Today we really have the worst of all worlds; a mature industry that has produced a very effective high cost technology for Canada's energy needs and is also exportable but is in desperate condition, and a public that has serious concerns and mistrusts, if not in the form of energy, then in the traditional processes which have been involved in dealing with it. I think both the industry and the public are capable of dealing with our nuclear program in a productive way, in the interests of the economy, environment, and our energy future. It is with that hope that I introduce Bill C-218 for the consideration of the House.

I would like to add to my introduction of this Bill an interim plan of action to deal with what is an emergency situation in the Canadian nuclear industry. Over 36,000 Canadian skilled jobs are at stake, in addition to the important energy considerations. Continued energy research and development for future medical, energy, environmental and economic advantages are also at stake, and we cannot afford to dream of future success unless we move swiftly and competently to deal with the problems we are faced with today.

The essential components of this plan of action are, one, the nuclear industry itself must be rationalized to ensure short-term viability; two, the Government must also similarly rationalize its approach in co-operation with the nuclear industry and the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources, External Affairs, and Industry, Trade and Commerce and others; three, there must be full Government support and open discussion of our nuclear waste management program; four, domestic reactor facilities must be promoted as part of an over-all Canadian industrial strategy; five, our Canadian energy policy must be directed in both research and development for the use of the nuclear fuel source for our transportation needs and for the heat energy that can readily and cheaply fuel our industries. An example is the proposed Bruce Energy Centre; six, we should develop an effective strategy for the export of nuclear electricity to the United States; seven, Canada is in as good a position as any country to promote adequate international safeguards through an aggressive position with the IAEA. While we continue this important and difficult task we must maintain bilateral safeguards to protect against the abuse of our technology while promoting export sales of the Candu to world markets which have a viable financial status, and as part of an industrial development export strategy in countries where the sale of reactors alone is of questionable value, and where cost considerations are otherwise marginal.

I hope the Government, while it is occupied with the immediacy of the problems brought forward by the public concerns and with consideration of the nuclear industry's status, can provide the necessary leadership and action. Bill C-218 would allow us a framework to deal with an outdated Canadian statute and, I hope, in the long run serve the needs of both the Canadian public and the nuclear industry.

I ask for concurrence so that at least the subject matter of the Bill can be referred to the appropriate Standing Committee of the House.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some remarks regarding the speech by the Hon. Member. I am glad he brought this Bill forward. There are certain aspects of the Bill that I disagree with, and certain aspects of his speech that I disagree with, and I am going to go over them in a minute.

The Hon. Member and his party, and I and my party, share a concern that—and I will try and put it politely—there is a really scandulous situation happening in Canada. We have criticized the United States for many things, but this situation could never happen there. What I am speaking of is really a cover-up going on in the Canadian nuclear industry, and an unwillingness to debate what is happening. The Conservative Party and the NDP have different views about the nuclear future, but we have in common the desire to have a full and open public inquiry on this issue. It is really a scandal that we in Canada have had nothing but whitewashing of this issue.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) stood up at the beginning of this debate and tried to block the Bill because it involved spending public funds. If I did not know the Hon. Member, that would add to my suspicion and the suspicion of the others in Canada that Government strategy is one of sweeping the whole nuclear problem under the carpet. We have a vast problem here in Canada with the nuclear industry, Mr. Speaker. We have not faced it as a people or as a Parliament. It has continually been kept out of the mainstream of our political process, but it is boiling around the periphery, if you like.

Let me just give you an example. Speaking in terms that anyone can understand, that is in terms of money, it has been said by some that you can do two things with money: you can either burn it or give it to AECL and they will dispose of it for you. We have spent $825 million for three heavy water plants which the Government wrote off numerous months ago. Its representatives came into the energy committee with this kind of estimate for the write-off. One of the plants has been mothballed and two others are stockpiling heavy water at a cost of $1 million a year in the hope that a number of Candu's can be sold abroad. But we are not selling Candu's abroad, even though we are prepared to sell them to almost anyone. I am sure if General Zia wanted another Candu reactor today, we would sell it to him in a minute. We are prepared to sell nuclear parts to Argentina, to Korea, or any kind of regime we can in order to get rid of those Candus. We are going to Romania, which is virtually broke. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on these international trips, is spending about one third of his time trying to sell Candus. It is really quite an incredible situation when you think about it. Maybe that is the right thing to do. I do not think it is, but we should be debating the future of our nuclear industry and the Candu in the House of Commons, not just during the short time we have in private Member's hour.

I will give you another example, Mr. Speaker, of money which has been wasted. There is a $25.7 million loan on AECLs first Candu reactor operating at Rolphton. That has also been forgiven. There was $87.5 million given to the ill-fated Gentilly I reactor in Quebec. It was built on the basis that Hydro-Quebec would purchase the station when it proved safe and reliable. This experimental reactor never did prove its worth, Mr. Speaker, and it has been mothballed.

I do not know how to say it in French, but if it is the same as in English, I would say that it is a lemon.

[English]

In other words, it is a lemon and $87.5 million went down the drain. These amounts of $87.5 million, $25.7 million, $825 million are not peanuts, Mr. Speaker. There was another $81.5 million spent on the Douglas Point nuclear reactor, built under a similar agreement with Ontario Hydro. It is expected that we will lose $130 million on the Candu sale to Argentina which we made in 1976.

• (1630)

In a question to the Prime Minister in the House I raised the matter of Canada shipping nuclear rods to Argentina at the height of the Falkland crisis. I wondered what policy we had that would allow us to do that at a time when our ally, the United Kingdom, was at war with Argentina. That was an instructive experience, Mr. Speaker. It indicated that we will do almost anything to save the industry.

Let me suggest that we have to deal with this issue. I am sure that the Member who will speak for the Liberal Party will point out that a Nuclear Industry Review has been published. But Mr. Speaker, that was an in-House review. At the time I described it as an "enigma wrapped in an ambiguity". It had all the markings of a speech of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren). It does not say anything; it does not deal with the problems.

The New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party demanded an open inquiry. Judging from the letters that the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) and others have received regarding nuclear matters, the Canadian public is interested in the subject. For the young people of today it is not just a financial issue but, rather, an ethical issue. This whole matter of the nuclear future may be one of the great issues of our generation. It concerns our energy future.

The ethical issue is whether to develop nuclear energy without having a means of disposing of the waste. We cannot deal with the dangerous waste. We have no way of disposing of it properly, yet we are prepared to go ahead with the development of the industry. In my view, that is immoral. It is passing a problem from our generation to a future generation and asking it to take the responsibility or to absorb the result.

It is claimed that the reactors are safe and that there are no problems with them. But people know otherwise, Mr. Speaker, and I point to the Three Mile Island incident. The problem is not that a couple of people might die but that a whole generation could be killed. I know that is over stating the case, and I admit that, but I want to point out that there is the issue of the waste of money as well as the ethical issue.

The Hon. Member who introduced the Bill tried to deal with some of these problems in Clauses 28 and 32, the problem of the disposal of nuclear waste still exists.

I have a letter on this subject from the citizens of Massey, Ontario, sent by Isabel Hobbs and David Rietkoetter who write:

> We are frustrated and angry because the federal government denied our right to veto A.E.C.L. plans by changing the Canada/Ontario Agreement of 1978, just prior to their arrival here.

They write of a ten-year program for storing nuclear waste in deep-rock storage. Every community is concerned because nobody wants nuclear waste stored in the backyard. You would not want that, Mr. Speaker, no Member would. So we have a nuclear waste storage problem.

Why are we developing nuclear energy if we have waste storage problem? Should we not solve some of these problems before we develop the energy? It seems to me that that question has to be examined, and that we must have an open inquiry on the subject. The Bill does not go far enough in dealing with it.

The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) spoke about the jobs that are at stake. That is a real problem and there will have to be trade-offs. There are other ways of dealing with the issue of jobs at stake. Perhaps the energy industry could be diverted to other, safer areas such as conservation. Just imagine how many jobs could be provided if every house in Canada were retro-fitted, Mr. Speaker. A lot of energy would be saved and nuclear would not be needed. I know it is easy for me to say that, Mr. Speaker, coming from British Columbia where people do not like nuclear energy. The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody will probably confirm that the citizens of British Columbia do not want a nuclear industry to be developed.

As the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey pointed out, 30 per cent of the energy produced in Ontario is generated by nuclear means. I do not advocate that we do away with it altogether, but I advocate that we consider whether the production should be expanded. He also referred to the export of electrical energy. In the publication "The National Energy Program Update 1982" at page 67 the following appears:

> It would be prepared to consider some form of support for future nuclear plants, even if—initially, at least—they are built to serve the export market. In the case of a possible Lepreau 2 plant, the Government of Canada is prepared at this time to work with the New Brunswick Power Corporation and to provide immediate financial support to pursue an arrangement with U.S. utilities that would allow Lepreau 2 to be built in the immediate future.

A proposal has been made to build nuclear plants in Canada. We cannot sell the Candu abroad, so it has been suggested that we should keep the industry going, build them in Canada, and export the power to the United States.

When I was in Washington I spoke to some energy officials who thought we would be crazy to do this. They said, "Why would you assume all the risks and probably end up having to subsidize the plants? You would be subsidizing American consumers and what would you get out of it? Perhaps you could keep the industry going in the direction it is going now." I say that is the wrong direction, Mr. Speaker, and there may be other directions that we could take.

Perhaps the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill has received a copy of the letter from the Maritime Energy Coalition in Fredericton over the signature of Mr. Allison Connell written to the Leader of this Party, in which he states:

> The Maritime Energy Coalition, representing many people of the Maritime region on matters of energy development and usage, has well-founded reasons to entertain the gravest doubts concerning the safety of the Point Lepreau Nuclear Generating Station.

The letter then goes on to deal with safety problems. I do not know all about the issues of the safety of that generating station, Mr. Speaker, but I know that letters come from all over the country expressing concern about the safety of nuclear power and about the disposal of nuclear waste.

I want to add a third point and that is the cost of the subsidy to the nuclear industry. I gave four examples that amount to over $2 billion. I have the figures in front of me. We have spent $2.5 billion on Atomic Energy of Canada Limited since it was formed in 1952. From 1947 to 1979 we spent $3.5 billion on this industry. We have to decide whether it is worthwhile to continue to pour money into the industry or whether there are some other alternatives.

• (1640)

In Clause 28 of the Hon. Member's Bill he tried to deal with the problems of nuclear waste, to which I have already made reference. Also in Clause 32 of his Bill he dealt with the matter of hearings. We want a full inquiry into the nuclear industry; we want an open inquiry. If the industry has nothing to hide, then why is it hiding? Why does it not press the Government for a full inquiry so that we can bring together all these forces? In the end—and I am sure Hon. Members would accept it if they believe in the real power of democracy where issues are debated in the open—we may obtain a nuclear policy.

I am looking at the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey and wondering whether he has seen the review of the nuclear industry. It is a real sham. I had other words to call it but I cannot remember them; they were much wittier.

The Hon. Member talked about the power of and the role for inspectors in Clause 38 of his Bill. I point out that the Government is now doing research on making fuel bundles safe so that they cannot be removed. Even if this worked, it seems to me that we still cannot be sure that an Argentinian or—and I will say it today—a Pakistan or whatever could not take fuel bundles out of Candu reactors and make nuclear bombs.

If another country in the world, perhaps not a stable one, used bundles from Canadian reactors to make nuclear bombs, as I suggested Argentina might do, and it used the bomb, think of the consequences to Canada. We know that even a friendly country like India took our uranium and made a bomb. I love India, but I regret that policy.

Let me conclude by saying to the Hon. Member that his Bill is interesting. The consideration of the subject matter is long overdue. I agree with some of the things he has said; I differ with him on others. But the Member and I agree that these are the real issues: the issue of nuclear waste disposal, the issue of expanding Candu sales, the issue of our nuclear future in Canada at the expense of other alternatives, the issue of the money which we have put into AECL, and the issue of openness. These are vital issues of our generation. They are really important matters about which the public knows, and is demanding an inquiry. The Government stands condemned on this issue. It is really one of the big sleeping issues in Canada today, and the Canadian public must somehow find a resolution. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing in this Bill because it suggests one method. It suggests a small step, but it is one way of forcing the Liberal Government to come forward with an open inquiry into the future of the nuclear industry. If the Government is in favour of nuclear, if it is confident about its policy, if it has reasons for writing off the $325 million, the $87 million, the $25 million, the $81 million and the other $130 million, and if it can justify these expenditures, then what is it afraid of? Let us have an open inquiry. Let us take this Bill and add to it. Let us develop a new nuclear policy for Canada which makes a little sense.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my remarks, I want to say that I appreciate the courtesy which the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) afforded Hon. Members on this side of the House by allowing two other Bills to precede his particular Bill. I appreciate the comments he made, but I should like to reflect upon the substance of his remarks. I will certainly reflect upon them and bring them to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). I hope also that we have an opportunity to hear from the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose). If time permits, we will.

Mr. Jarvis: No way.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody is one of the more articulate spokespersons on that side of the House, notwithstanding the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis).

I listened carefully to the assertions of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Of course he is always full of challenges and inquiries, whether they be predicated upon one or two letters. I share some of the concerns which he raised. I hope when we return to the House in January that he will have a number of questions to ask before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works when the Minister attends or, indeed, during Question Period. I know he will take advantage of the opportunity provided by the House orders, setting aside Opposition days, to discuss this particular subject matter which is of great urgency to him and his Party. I know and I am confident that he will do that, because he believes it to be such a serious issue.

As in the case of most regulatory processes, the nuclear regulatory process in Canada has developed from a parochial, introspective set of procedures in which a very few persons were involved, to one which provides for public consultation and relies extensively upon the co-operation of federal and provincial agencies having public and occupational health and environmental protection responsibilities. Quite clearly the process is not without its critics, and continued effort will be required to ensure that further improvements are made.

Many of those involved in the Canadian nuclear program like to refer to the country's nuclear safety philosophy as somewhat unique. In reality, there are several unique features such as that of primary reliance upon the ingenuity and competence of operators to ensure a high standard of safety and environmental protection. However, many of the fundamental principles were derived on the basis of world-wide experience. It is the Government's intention to continue to maintain an awareness of new developments and to take these into account, as appropriate, in future regulatory proceedings.

The inter-relationships among health, safety and security; national and international aspects; and occupational, public and environmental protection aspects present a complicated array of overlapping subject areas. The Atomic Energy Control Board has been actively seeking to clarify these. Improved working arrangements have been achieved with the Federal Departments of National Health and Welfare, Environment, Labour, Energy, Mines and Resources and Transport. With the first four Departments mentioned, these arrangements formally recognize respective responsibilities and the current practice of AECB of taking into account the standards set by other departments with regulatory interests.

With the continued application of the AEC Act, a number of improvements in regulations have been undertaken. The following subjects have been identified for this work and several documents have already been produced for public comment, covering physical security; administrative aspects including licence review, revocation, and inspection powers; radiation protection regulations; transport packaging regulations; mining regulations; and rules of procedure.

The joint regulatory process established by the AECB with federal and provincial agencies and departments concerned with health, safety and environmental aspects of the nuclear industry, has proven to be very effective in addressing regulatory requirements. Thus, although all the ambiguities in nuclear regulation may not yet have been eliminated, the major areas of concern have been recognized and are being dealt with on a continuing basis by the single federal agency, the Atomic Energy Control Board.

This Bill before us provides a general statement of the federal role and of the responsibilities of AECB, but in doing so it necessitates detailed discussions between certain federal departments and the AECB on the definition of their respective roles. In particular, it is important to identify those areas where mandates or actions of other federal Departments present real or potential overlaps with the mandate of the Atomic Energy Control Board under the proposed Act. For example, the extensive emphasis on the environment in this Bill, a change from the current focus on people, presents a jurisdictional issue requiring considerable consultation and thought.

In recent years there have been a number of highly visible discussions and debates on aspects of the regulation of the nuclear fuel cycle. These have arisen in Royal commissions, in legislative select committees and in other prominent ways. A common factor has been the questioning of the thoroughness and responsibility for regulatory control, usually with emphasis on occupational health and safety. Questions have included the following: is the regulation sufficiently intense? Could it be improved by change of statutory responsibility? Is the legislation clear, or is it confusing to those being regulated? How much federal involvement should there be?

With a profusion of statements on the situation stemming from a variety of viewpoints in governments, industry and in labour, it is not surprising that misunderstandings occasionally arise. I am concerned that this Bill is a reflection of that type of situation.

The Bill removes a significant degree of discretion from the Government of the day by specifying the Minister of the Environment as the Minister responsible for Part I of the Act, that is, the regulatory section. One must remark that apart from the administrative constraint this imposes on the Government, the choice of portfolio is not obvious. The Bill, after all, covers health, safety and security as well as protection of the environment.

It is noted that a major increase in the number of board members is proposed, more than doubling the present total from five to 13 and expanding the number of full-time members by at least four times and possibly nine times. Without quibbling about the additional cost of such an expansion, I would have to question the rationale for this. While it may be desirable to enlarge the board to cope with new responsibilities, I fail to see why nine, 12 or indeed a baker's dozen would necessarily be an improvement over some other number. Surely the existing board should be asked to advise on this in light of the tasks to be addressed today and indeed in the future.

In this Bill there are no clauses dealing with renumeration of permanent and temporary employees, nor with continuing employment of existing staff, the status of the board as a separate employer, or the status of employees under Public Service legislation. Surely it would be unreasonable to create a regulatory tribunal which could not keep and pay the pool of expertise which now exists or which would end up in some sort of personnel limbo for want of specific staffing references in its governing legislation.

There is an important new approach introduced here which warrants considerable thought. This Bill would have the effect of transforming the nuclear regulatory body from a strictly technical licensing body, to a populist judge of social and economic parameters having political overtones, for instance the requirement to consider alternatives to a proposal. Surely we do not want to detract in any way from the decision-making prerogatives of municipal and provincial Governments, nor do we wish to abrogate the political responsibilities of Parliament. I suggest, with respect, that we need a strong, competent, technical tribunal to sort out the technological imperatives while others, Members of this House included, discharge their responsibilities in the more subjective areas of socio-economic and political affairs.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) be prepared to answer a question?

The Hon. Member just made reference to the responsibility of others, namely us, for these social and economic issues. Would he tell the workers in Cape Breton-East Richmond, specifically at Port Hawkesbury at the heavy water plant there, what their future will be? A lot of heavy water has been stored there. There are no Candu sales. It seems to be coming to the end of its period. Will those workers be laid off or will they be kept in this limbo of thinking they will be laid off today or tomorrow? What is he proposing to say to be fair to those workers in that important part of the country?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I would gladly attempt to answer the question asked by the Hon. Member. But first let us be candid with one another. It has been the official position of the NDP, as voiced in the House and in national conventions, that they are opposed to the nuclear industry. Hon. Members from that Party have even suggested quite specifically that two heavy water plants in this country, namely those at Port Hawkesbury and Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, be closed immediately.

Mr. Waddell: I never said that.

Mr. Dingwall: I am not suggesting that the Hon. Member said that, but that is where his Party stands. The Government of Canada, in attempting to deal with that particular problem, has met with union spokespersons, with management of both those facilities over a period of time, with both myself, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). We have told them very clearly that this is a very difficult situation in view of the fact that there are no sales of Candu reactors in the immediate future. However, there are some prospects in the nuclear industry, particularly for Candu reactor sales, which may prolong the health of those two plants. We said very clearly that the matter would be before Cabinet and various alternatives would be reviewed, and that when a decision is reached they would be the first to be consulted whether there is a shut-down or not or there are, indeed, alternatives. That has been the approach and sensitivity shown by this Government to those plants, unlike that of the NDP which proposes to shut them down. There have been no alternatives coming from them.

At a nuclear facility, where do you draw the line between protection of the workers on the site and protecting the public just beyond the boundary fence? Depending on how you read it, this Bill seems to propose a termination of, or at least a partial withdrawl from, nearly a quarter century of rather remarkable performance by the board in regulation. This fine record has gone hand in hand with the intimately associated protection of the general public and the environment from radiation hazards. Lacking an unequivocal statement of responsibility for workers' health and safety, the board could become no more than a builder of safety walls, unconcerned with what went on behind them. Can you imagine a health authority simply slapping a cautionary quarantine sign on a dwelling's door without ensuring medical attention for the occupants? This remote, outside-in approach, is not in the public interest and does not reflect the experience gained from the regulatory performance to date. That is what I am suggesting the Hon. Member is attempting to do in this particular Bill.

I am sure Members of this House are concerned that a number of provisions of this Bill fly in the face of the principles established by the Access to Information Act now awaiting proclamation. The conflict is understandable since the Bill was drafted more than two years ago, but it is one more indication that additional consultation is desirable on the appropriateness of certain sections. There is no point in itemizing information access provisions, including, I note, a somewhat draconian penalty for board staff obstructionism, when a well thought out law on the subject is already on the books.

In conclusion, I have indicated privately to the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey that I would certainly reflect upon a number of the suggestions which he has made today. I hope there will be other opportunities to discuss this particular subject matter, whether it be in committee or in the House on an Opposition day. I know that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway will want to rise and speak because it is such an important matter.

In closing, I just want to say that the sudden concern of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who now sits with the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody, for the workers in Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury appalls me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not have the sense of the Members' will as to whether or not the Chair was being asked to give a ruling. However, we have come to five o'clock and I have to take into consideration that this may be part of the plan.

It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

LEGALITY OF MILK LEVIES CHARGED AGAINST PRODUCERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my motion, under Standing Order 43, seeks to redress the standoff between legal opinions obtained by the Auditor General and the Minister of Agriculture. The latter states that the Department of Justice has advised him the levies imposed by the Canadian Dairy Commission are legal, while the Auditor General has two independent opinions, one from Gowling, Henderson, of Ottawa, and a second from Borden, Elliot, of Toronto, which state the opposite. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture is reneging on his responsibilities that the Prime Minister appoint a member of the judiciary to investigate and report on the legality of the milk levies charged against producers, and the legality of the Dairy Commission's method of spending these levies.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

TAX ON FUELS USED IN PRODUCTION OF FOOD

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that inflation remains high in Canada and that food costs are a major factor contributing to inflation, and since farm bankruptcies are up 49 per cent in the first 11 months of this year over last year, and the United Grain Growers have estimated that farm producers' income will drop by 28 per cent this year from 1981, and since farm fuel costs have accounted for 53 per cent of the increase in farm operation costs, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to give appropriate consideration to decreasing federal tax on fuels used in the production and transport of food products.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO EMPLOYEES OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Since Section 15(1) of Canada's new Charter of Rights and Freedoms protects individuals from discrimination of all kinds, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That to the schedule in the Human Rights Act covering Government institutions be added this institution, to protect the employees of the Parliament of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, in recent weeks the Prime Minister has provided Canadians with several "soul-searching" discussions wherein he has admitted that we have serious problems in Canada and that his Government is partly to blame. Last night in his Christmas message we were told by the Prime Minister that he knows that the Liberals would not win if an election were called, and that his Government will simply try to get the country out of the present mess and not worry about getting re-elected. Therefore I move, under Standing Order 43, seconded by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

That since the Prime Minister does not feel that his Government would be re-elected, that this constitutes a lack of support by the people of Canada for his Government's policies, and he should immediately resign and call a general election.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

LEGISLATION TO CONTROL EXPENDITURES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas the Auditor General in his report described the extent of government activity in business as "an enormous iceberg" of which only the tip is dimly visible; whereas the proliferation of Crown corporations has become a "sub-Government" employing 263,000 people; whereas it has become obvious that the Liberal Cabinet and some Crown corporations have become co-conspirators in spending money without parliamentary control, which has raised a number of questions such as: 1. Should the Government be trying to do the things it is with Crown corporations? 2. Should some Crown corporations continue to exist? 3. Should a sunset deadline on Crown corporations be imposed?—I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That action be taken under the Inquiries Act immediately to recommend to this House legislation to control Crown corporations so that money extracted from the public through taxation is not used to pursue goals desired by politicians and bureaucrats to stroke their own egos.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DISASTERS

FLOODING IN LOWER FRASER VALLEY, B.C.—FUNDING FOR DIKES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the Fraser River flooding, and move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House express its concern for the victims of flooding in the lower Fraser River valley as well as its concern for the state of water management and flood control in the area; and that this House calls on the federal Government to increases its funding and support for the Lower Fraser Diking Agreement and the long term projects of the Diking Agreement Management Board.

HEALTH

MANUFACTURE OF SUBSTANDARD MEDICAL DEVICES—NECESSITY FOR CONTROLS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that time and time again there has been evidence that numerous medical devices, including contact lenses and pacemakers, have not always lived up to their expectations and at times have caused serious illness and death to their recipients because of malfunction, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Department of National Health and Welfare move more speedily and more expeditiously to correct and eliminate all substandard medical devices and exert more stringent controls on the manufacturing companies to make them more responsible than they have been up to now.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise today on the subject of the public acknowledgement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of failure last night, on the CBC. I congratulate him on his lofty detachment that enables him to view the bitterness of the Canadian public without any sense of depression or guilt. Perhaps we could call that the Clifford Olson approach.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince-Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House inform the Prime Minister that, while he may be sorry for those who do not have jobs, the Canadian public at large is sorry that he has one, and more specifically the one that he does have, namely, the Prime Ministership.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas last Wesnesday in this House, and last evening in his televised interview, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tried to defend Cruise missile testing in Canada by arguing that the Cruise moves too slowly to make it suitable as a first-strike weapon, and whereas the threat to future arms control agreements posed by the Cruise missile is not that it may or may not be a first-strike weapon, but that it is so difficult to verify its numbers that it renders arms control agreements, in the words of one U.S. navy official, meaningless, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That the Prime Minister take the time to inform himself of all of the ramifications of Cruise missile deployment on arms control agreements before he makes any more public utterances on the subject.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

If so, that the Solicitor General report to the House in due course when and if he is satisfied that the untimely death of Mr. Leroux was accidental?

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF MORAL AND ECOLOGICAL ISSUES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that this House is at present taking no steps to follow up on the Science Council of Canada report on regulating the regulators, and in view of the fact that this House must immediately take steps to address such questions as genetic engineering, test-tube reproduction, embryo research, and the legal definition of death, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House show some respect for future life on this planet and immediately convene a special committee to advise Parliament on scientific, technological, moral and ecological issues.

Regulations on complex scientific issues cannot be left to definition by the profit motive or the marketplace alone. We are on the edge of an ethical frontier which includes the introduction of new life forms which may be self-propagating biohazards. I urge all Members to support such a committee in principle.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

LOCATION OF PROPOSED GENETIC ENGINEERING AND BIOTECHNOLOGY CENTRE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada is considering placing an application for the establishment of an International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology in Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That this House request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to propose on behalf of Canada that the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology be located at Innovation Centre in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF TAXATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and of the Minister of State for Economic Development, I wonder if I might direct this question to the Prime Minister. As we witness the tragedy of 1.5 million Canadians unemployed, the Government is floundering around looking for make-work projects. At the same time, industries such as the petrochemical sector, which could provide some 50,000 jobs for Canadians, are virtually on the brink of collapse as a result of the Government's ill-conceived and misguided energy tax policy. The problem is that it puts the Canadian petrochemical plants at a very serious competitive disadvantage. May I ask the Prime Minister when his Government and Cabinet will act to redress this very serious situation which has already cost some 8,000 jobs and has forced the Canadian petrochemical industry to operate at 50 per cent capacity?

• (1415)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is seriously misinformed. If he looks around in the other countries he would see that the petrochemical industry in most countries, particularly in that of our neighbour, is in as bad or worse trouble than it is in Canada, and that is due to world demand, not to any tax policy in Canada. If the Hon. Member were a little more open-minded he would look at the whole industry, and not just focus on the effects of the Government of Canada's actions.

PROPOSED LOCATION OF PLANTS OVERSEAS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): The Right Hon. Prime Minister is obviously not being kept informed of what industry officials are saying. As a matter of fact they will point out that the main problem is Canada's lack of competitiveness as a result of the heavy up-front taxes, which are in the vicinity of 40 per cent to 50 per cent. The Vice-President of Union Carbide Canada Limited said, and I quote:

> Our industry cannot withstand this level of front-end taxation because our international competitors are, by and large, being subjected to much lower front-end taxation levels.

He went on to say:

> The petrochemical industry is at present in danger of being taxed out of existence—

Those are the facts, Madam Speaker. Furthermore, if the petrochemical industry were in such danger in the international marketplace, why is it that today Canadain petrochemical industries are actively seeking to establish their facilities in places where the fiscal environment is not as hostile, for example, in places like New Zealand, Indonesia, Saudi Arabia and Malaysia? Why is the Prime Minister overlooking that very important component, when Canadian companies are actively seeking to establish their facilities in other countries of the world?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Government is fully aware of the difficult situation existing in the petrochemical industry at the present time.

Mr. Clark: Oh, come on!

Mr. Lalonde: The Leader of the Opposition got up on the wrong side of the bed this morning. Did he have some more leadership problems this week-end? Perhaps we can leave him to his problems and get back to more serious matters. The petrochemical industry is a subject of considerable concern to the government. We have had substantial discussions with the industry during the last few months, and the fact is, that the industry is experiencing the same problems that are facing the petrochemical industries the world over. In Europe and Japan, the same problems arise and even the American petrochemical industry has started to sell its products at extremely low prices. The Government is looking into these problems, and it should be understood there are no simple answers and no instant solutions. We shall be meeting again with representatives of the industry. The Government has created a task force within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which will be submitting recommendations very shortly.

[English]

INDUSTRY'S FUTURE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): With all due respect, Madam Speaker, we have been receiving these kinds of answers for the last six months. Perhaps it is time to stop the debate and start acting. The fact of the matter is that the petrochemical industry has tremendous potential. It has the potential of producing a $10 billion trade balance and generation of at least 50,000 jobs by 1985, and the Minister again suggests that he has to sit around and talk it over with the industry. He still has not answered the basic question. Why is it that Canadian petrochemical companies are now actively seeking to relocate their plants in other countries of the world?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would invite my hon. friend to examine this with great care.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will.

Mr. Lalonde: I am happy he says he is going to examine it with great care, because there are not many other countries in the world where you can establish today—

Mr. Epp: He just mentioned four of them.

Mr. Lalonde: —a new petrochemical plant and really make money with it.

Mr. Epp: He gave you four.

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, but have the companies moved? Are they planning to invest? Or is it just, you know, word of mouth? Because the fact is that today there is a surplus of petrochemicals the world over. The problem is not that this country cannot produce, the problem is that there is no demand, or the demand is not high enough. If you go abroad and invest in another plant, you will not be able to sell any more because the problem is low demand and extremely low prices at the present time. So I challenge my hon. friend to go abroad and open a new petrochemical plant. I wish him good luck; he will probably be bankrupt before he leaves the country.

• (1420)

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance is indicating that if in fact the world economy were booming and competitors were having difficulties, then Canadian policy would be just right. But those are not the circumstances which exist today.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the former Chairman of Dow Chemical, Mr. Clifford L. Mort, in a recent speech in Toronto indicated that the National Energy Program was a disaster for oil and gas producers, but an even worse disaster for chemical producers. In partical recognition of that disaster, last spring the Minister, and particularly the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan made changes which have benefited oil and gas producers, but so far no changes for chemical producers. In view of the fact that thousands and thousands of jobs and hundreds of millions of dollars of export earnings are involved, why has there been such reluctance to make the necessary changes to save this very important industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am very interested in my hon. friend's speech. He is repeating the same speech, with no more foundation than it had before.

Mr. Jarvis: Too bad you did not listen to it two years ago.

Mr. Lalonde: I remind my hon. friend that had his energy policy been implemented those same companies would today be operating with feedstocks at 100 per cent of international prices. That industry is operating today with feedstocks which cost around 85 per cent of international prices. It does benefit from a real advantage, thanks to the National Energy Program which my hon. friend is so quick to condemn. The industry has saved a minimum of 15 per cent on the cost of its feedstock by our program compared to his proposal at the time.

Mr. Clark: Nonsense.

Mr. Lalonde: That is a fact of life.

As far as the industry is concerned, I remind my hon. friend that other industries have similar problems of lack of demand, whether it is copper, zinc, asbestos or nickel—you name it. You can name all kinds of basic products in this world for which demand is lacking in every country. The petrochemical industry is facing the same particular problem. There is no magic solution to the problem my hon. friend has raised.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, certainly pretending you are an ostrich and shoving your head in the sand is no solution to these problems.

REPORTED INTERNAL STUDY OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister indicated there was an internal study of the petrochemical industry being conducted by the government bureaucracy. In a recent book entitled "The Sorcerers Apprentices" by Peter Foster, the author indicated that the National Energy Program was catastrophic in its effect, at least in part due to dependence upon the advice of the same officials who are now preparing this report for the Minister. To prevent that kind of catastrophe from happening again, would the Minister make a commitment to this House to table that report, and refer it to the appropriate standing committee, to give an opportunity for critical examination of its premises so that we do not have another dozen projects go down the tube because of false assumptions and then have thousands and thousands of Canadians out of work, with bleak prospects, while the Minister stands and rings his hands over international circumstances?

We are talking about action here in Canada to address a Canadian problem; let us have some made-in-Canada solutions, not prayers that the rest of the world will save us.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my wish for the Hon. Member in 1983 is that he should improve his reading, to begin with. Secondly—

Mr. Andre: You table it and I will read it.

Mr. Lalonde: Secondly, I am surprised that his big recommendation, after having made representations on behalf of the petrochemical industry, is for more study by a parliamentary committee or whatever he wants to set up. He does not want action; he just wants more talk and more study. I am sorry to have to recognize that.

JOB STIMULATION PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, I thought, with admirable candour admitted last night on television that the current government job creation programs were not expected to make "a major dent" in the unemployment problem. We in this Party agree with that statement. We are really interested in the 1.5 million unemployed. What does the Prime Minister intend to do about it? Is he satisfied with the job situation which prevails, and when will he bring in some job stimulation programs?

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the latter part of the question, the answer has already been given several times by the Minister of Finance and by myself. We have brought in some job stimulation programs to the tune of $2.5 billion, beginning last June and in the Minister's October statement, whereas the Hon. Member's own Leader suggested a job creation plan of some $1.8 billion. On that we are merely inviting him to catch up with us.

In so far as making a dent in the figures of high unemployment is concerned, that is something we have said before and that is something which the Minister of Finance recognized in his October statement. It will be difficult to bring those figures down because, even with our job creation programs which will bring people back into the labour force, from a statistical point of view the figures will not appear all that different. The important thing is that they will create jobs for Canadians now, and they are in the process of doing so.

Mr. Rose: I think the Prime Minister knows that my Leader called for a program in addition to the one that already exists, which the Prime Minister has said will not put a major dent in the unemployment situation.

GOVERNMENT LEADERSHIP

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, this morning I checked, and at this festive time of the year all major charities are being over-subscribed, up to about 30 per cent, including the United Way and the Salvation Army. Each of those institutions reports that gifts and donations are up. The people of Canada are prepared to share and care, but they are awaiting leadership from the Government. If the Prime Minister will not move, will he at least admit that his Government is mean spirited, since he refused to permit anything beyond the piddling program which is before us at the moment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member describes $2.5 billion as piddling, then I wonder where is his sense of proportion. I point out to him that even if he were to follow his own Leader and add, as he said, another $1.8 billion, it would not put a serious dent in the unemployment figures. The Hon. Member knows that, or he should know it. Further, he would have to ask himself where he would get this additional $1.8 billion since his Leader does not want to increase the deficit. That is a problem with which I am sure they are still struggling over there.

MANPOWER

DESIGNATION OF THREE QUEBEC CITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance in his capacity of Minister responsible for the Designated Areas Committee. The Minister is no doubt aware of the demonstration held today by the towns of Rock Island, Stanstead and Beebe. The purpose was to prove to the Canadian Government that these towns exist and that even if they are on the Canadian-American border, they want to be part of Canada. However, they want a clear, detailed and speedy reply to their application for designation under the federal Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program. Could the Minister give them the assurance that their application is well-founded, and when does he intend to answer this urgent request, submitted first to his predecessor, subsequently to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and now directly to the Minister?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the representation made by the Hon. Member is a very important one and is being considered by the Cabinet Committee responsible for examining the designations in question. The Cabinet Committee is now chaired by the Minister responsible for Economic Development, and I shall immediately bring to his attention the representation made by the Hon. Member and ask to have this file examined as quickly as possible.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS IN 1983

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is he aware of the problems facing students who are now beginning their annual search for summer jobs? Many mines and secondary industries that have traditionally provided summer jobs for students have announced summer layoffs, hiring freezes, and summer shut-downs. What action is the Minister planning to ensure that there are employment opportunities for students in the summer of 1983?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. There is no doubt that it is a very serious issue. Due to the general economic state in the country, many private employers will not be offering the same number of jobs.

As the Hon. Member knows, each summer we do have a summer employment program for students. Last year we had close to 60,000 students hired under that program. Certainly it will be our intention to repeat that program next summer. We will be establishing a level of funding as soon as the Minister of Finance is able to develop the arrangements and computations which he needs in his budget.

I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be continuing that particular program next summer, as well as the major placement program we provide each summer. The funding will be announced when the Minister of Finance is in a position to do so.

Mr. MacDougall: I hope that the funding will be in operation in sufficient time to allow students across Canada the opportunity to apply for these jobs soon enough.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On several occasions the Minister has said in the House that he would hope to be able to make the Government's position known on the statutory rate for the movement of grain before the Christmas adjournment. Could the Minister inform the House whether he will be able to meet that commitment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, Cabinet is still looking at the question and hopefully will make a decision very soon. The proper announcement will be made then. It is too early for me to comment on the exact date.

Mr. McKnight: Just from what the Minister said, I understand that the answer is no.

REPORTED PREPARATION OF MODIFIED PROPOSAL

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Transport if the reason for some of the problems he is having in formulating his policy is that his assistant in the other place now has a new policy which is a modification of the statutory movement, a modification of the Gilson recommendations? If a statement is to be made, will it be made by the Minister of Transport or by his assistant in the Senate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my understanding of the Cabinet system is that all of its members are free to make their contributions until the Cabinet itself makes the decision. Then Cabinet solidarity applies.

Mr. Clark: Another Trudeau absurdity.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

FORMULA GOVERNING INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would ask him whether or not there are negotiations going on at the present time between the Farm Credit Corporation and his officials in the Finance Department to see whether or not a change can be established in the formula under which Farm Credit Corporation interest rates are being administered, as far as farmers are concerned?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, consultations are taking place between my officials and officials from the Farm Credit Corporation quite frequently and regularly. This matter is being kept under review constantly.

CURRENT TERMS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, as the Minister may know, farmers who are applying for Farm Credit Corporation loans are paying at the present time in the neighbourhood of 15.75 per cent under the formula which has been set from October 1 to April 1. With interest rates dropping at the present time, of course farmers are paying more than they would in terms of the money market itself. Is a change being contemplated and, if so, will it come before Christmas?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to read the press releases which I have sent to his office, he will see one from a week ago Thursday that shows that farm interest rates for long-term mortgages are 13.25 per cent, and for those farmers in dire need, for the two-year mortgage, the interest rate is 9.25 per cent, which is the lowest rate it has been for many years.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN CONSULTANTS' FEES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He will probably know by now that the increase in moneys used by his Department for consultants in 1981-1982 increased to $10 million from $5.5 million the year before. The number of consultants used by his Department last year was 962 compared to the 629 who were used the year before. When this was questioned, the Director of Contracts and Policy Services said, "I am surprised at that kind of jump," and "my feeling is that the figures are wrong." Has the Minister checked to see if the figures are wrong and, if they are, how are they wrong?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, I have checked. If my memory serves me correctly, the figures are substantially correct. It is true that there is a disparity as compared with the previous year, but on an over all basis over the last decade it is not a great variance at all.

Mr. Shields: Over the last decade, it is not a great variance, but it is a 50 per cent increase in 1981-1982 as compared to 1980-1981.

SURVEY OF SURPLUS STAFF

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. One contract was awarded to survey surplus departmental staff. Did the consultant find that there indeed was a surplus departmental staff in the Department? If so, how many were there and, in light of the results, can the Minister think of any way in which he can reduce his Department's expenditures?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, one of the matters which has been marked with some approbation by the Standing Committee is the very substantial number of man years that my Department has reduced itself by over the last year to two years. It is several thousand man years. I can get the precise figure for the Hon. Member.

SOCIAL HOUSING BUDGET

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for CMHC. Given the agreement arrived at last week by the Minister of Finance and his provincial counterparts on the need to increase expenditures on capital works, and given as well the recent statements by the Prime Minister that housing should be one of the sectors to receive additional funding, what assurances can the Minister give the House that priority be given to federal housing initiatives and especially to increases in the social capital housing budget of CMHC, both as a means of job creation and of alleviating the very critical shortage of housing, especially affordable housing?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member to her role as NDP critic of housing matters. I would suggest that the implication of her question is somewhat complicated. On the one hand, the job creation aspect is served very effectively in the area of housing, not only new housing but in housing repairs, as we have seen by the utilization of the CHRP Program.

In the area of social housing, there is no doubt that there always is an increase in the number of people who want to have access to this budget. It is one which has been consistently improved or increased, but it is perhaps not the quickest or most economical way of creating jobs. For that reason there is a conflict between the two programs.

Ms. McDonald: I would be interested in seeing the comparisons of what other programs might be better creators of jobs.

PROPORTION OF CORPORATION'S BUDGET

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I would like to return to the point about social housing. The Minister has pointed out that the amounts have remained consistent since 1979, but he is surely aware that there were major cuts between 1978 and 1979, and indeed from 1975 on. Would the Minister comment both on comparisons between recent years and those earlier years and the proportion that social housing has been given out of CMHC funding, that is, a proportion relative to profit making for housing?

• (1440)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would have to check the facts. Perhaps my memory is failing me, but it seems to me that in this Program, the figure of 25,000 units per year was set in 1979. In fact, some years this figure has been slightly exceeded.

FINANCE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—PAYMENT OF TAX ON COMPOUND INTEREST

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that he had a relatively successful Canada Savings Bond sale. Many of those bonds were compound interest bonds. During the sale the Minister did not make any effort to advise people that they would have to pay income tax on the compound interest every three years. What program has the Minister in place to ensure that those people who bought bonds in good faith, thinking they could compound the interest over the term of the bond, the full seven years, will be able to pay tax on the bonds every three years, and how will they know what tax they should pay?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the taxpayers in question are in exactly the same situation as other taxpayers holding bonds and receiving interest payments. They are in no different position from the average taxpayer and they will come under the same provisions as the other taxpayers in similar situations. The previous Minister of Finance announced measures which will become part of the Income Tax Act, which is before the House. As soon as it is passed it will obviously have the full endorsement of the House. These matters are fully public. There has never been any secret about them. They are part of the general taxation regime.

Mr. Blenkarn: I suppose the Government feels that all people who buy these bonds read the Ways and Means Motions.

ANNUAL NOTIFICATION OF ACCRUED INTEREST

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Finance will advise the House whether he is planning to send out T-5 slips every year to Canada Savings Bond holders to indicate the amount of interest accruing on their bonds so that they will know what interest to declare, if they want to pay that interest annually, and so they will know on what interest they must pay tax every three years. Will he give the House an undertaking that, whether the interest is taken up and collected by the bondholders or not, he will send those bond holders T-5 slips, or something of that nature, every year so that they will know where they stand with respect to accrued interest?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I take the suggestion of the Hon. Member as a representation which I will study with my officials and with the Minister of National Revenue.

THE CONSTITUTION

PROPOSAL TO GIVE POWER OF VETO TO QUEBEC MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who was quoted in a Montreal newspaper last week as favouring a form of constitutional veto for the Province of Quebec to be exercised through Hon. Members of this House who are from the Province of Quebec. Is that the position of the Government with respect to a veto for the Province of Quebec and, if so, would it also be contemplated that Hon. Members of this House who are from the Province of Ontario would be entitled to exercise the veto for this Province? Would it, indeed, be the general practice that Hon. Members from all provinces will be entitled to exercise the constitutional veto for the Provinces from which they come?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, that is not the policy of the Government. It was raised with my Department by one of my colleagues—

Some Hon. Members: Seatmate.

Mr. MacGuigan: —and, as a result of that, it was an idea which was scrutinized.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gamble: The Minister has not denied, at least, that it seems to be his idea as the Minister of Justice, and I must say that that astounds me, because discord and disharmony in this country surely grow from creating a situation where Canadians from one part of the country are treated differently than Canadians from another part.

APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTION TO LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. John Gamble (York North): One of the additional suggestions which has recently been made as a consequence of the judgment of the Supreme Court, in this case by the Premier of the Province of Quebec, is that Section 23 of the constitutional resolution which was passed about a year ago in this House should not apply at all to the Province of Quebec. We know that that particular paragraph has been watered down so that the language of educational rights therein applies, in part only, to the Province of Quebec. Could the Minister tell the House whether it is his intention or the Government's intention to dilute further in any way the application of that Section of the Constitution so that it will not apply at all to the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member has suggested, the Premier of Quebec has written to the Prime Minister on this general subject, and the Prime Minister will be answering in due course. However, the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members know that the Government has already taken a strong position with respect to Section 23.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF DEVELOPMENT AT SHOAL LAKE ON WINNIPEG WATER SUPPLY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It relates to a situation at Shoal Lake, from which the residents of the City of Winnipeg get their water supply, a water supply which does not need much filtration or extra expense to make it suitable for consumption. As the Minister knows, there has been an attempt to develop some industry at Shoal Lake, primarily the construction of cottages, and that has raised fears in Manitoba in terms of the diminution of the quality of water for the City of Winnipeg. Has the Minister received any assurances from the band at Shoal Lake that raw sewage will not be dumped into Shoal Lake and, specifically, into Indian Bay, which was done this last week?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. I spoke with Chief Redsky of the Shoal Lake Band. He is not dumping any raw sewage into the water. In previous years he had disposed of garbage on the reserve shoreline. He is not doing that any more. He is taking it across the ice and dumping it in an area very close indeed to the dump where Winnipeg dumps its own garbage. He felt that, by doing that, perhaps it would minimize the complaint emanating from the Mayor of Winnipeg. However, I can assure you, Madam Speaker, the bottom line is that the chief of this band has not the slightest intention whatsoever of polluting the Winnipeg water supply.

Mr. Epp: It is rather ironic that he would compare the two to three employees of the City of Winnipeg at Shoal Lake to the number of residents at Shoal Lake, that is, the Indian Band, and the amount of garbage that would obviously be generated in each situation. I think that is a rather interesting position which the Minister takes.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF WATER QUALITY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): I would like to ask the same Minister a supplementary question. In view of his responsibilities and the response that there has been in Winnipeg, and while there is some feeling that there should be some economic development, especially in view of the fishing industry which collapsed at Shoal Lake earlier, will the Minister give his personal assurance that, before any development takes place at Indian Bay, specifically, the quality of Winnipeg's water supply will not be decreased?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, we have already made a very substantial amount of money available to the band to ensure that that very thing does not happen. We are also investing many person years in an attempt to carry on enlightened discussions and negotiations with the Mayor of Winnipeg to ensure that the Indians are not short changed with respect to the worth of that particular property, inasmuch as there seems to be so much objection to any development taking place there. Unfortunately, as far as I am concerned, the Mayor, for political reasons, seems to be more interested in whipping up antipathy toward the natives than finding a fair and equitable settlement for the natives.

WILDLIFE

COMMERCE IN ENDANGERED SPECIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I see him sitting there, leaning on his arm. I am sure he is aware of the increasing illegal pressure on wildlife which is due, in part, to tough economic times, but also to poaching for trophies and to international purchase of parts for various superstitious purposes. In recent years there has been a dramatic rise in poaching.

My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some Hon. Members: He is over here.

Mr. Fulton: No, that is the Minister of State for International Trade. My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is sitting over there!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: I know you were very interested in the question.

In recent years the rise in poaching by non-Canadians, particularly in national parks, has risen to incredible levels, with such things as bighorn ram heads bringing $35,000 and grizzly bear gall bladders bringing $3,000 and up. What steps is the Minister taking to toughen up on the trade and commerce in Canadian wildlife, in particular, to stop the illegal international traffic in endangered species, covered by the Import and Export Permits Act?

• (1450)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all, the Import Export Permits Act is under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Secondly, this is the first time that particular situation has been brought to my attention. I will look into it and get back to the Hon. Member.

EXPORT OF FALCONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): That is very interesting, Madam Speaker. In the last couple of months I have corresponded twice with the Hon. Minister, and he sent me back very lengthy letters, so he certainly knows what I am talking about.

My supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister who, I know, has personal knowledge and personal interest in certain endangered species, in particular the gyrfalcon. The only gyrfalcons that have been exported, in Canadian history, were the two taken by the Prime Minister to King Khalid in 1978, or 1980, despite objections from his Minister of the Environment. Seven permits to capture and export gyrfalcons were given this year in the Northwest Territories, and two of those young birds are now on their way for sale in the Middle East.

Since the Canadian Wildlife Service, along with Industry, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs, is responsible for the international convention, and since the Canadian Wildlife Service vociferously objects to the export of these two young gyrfalcons, will the Prime Minister personally intervene and stop the export and trade in this endangered species until such time as there is a scientifically acceptable population survey here in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the more recent cases that the Hon. Member refers to, and I certainly will take his question as notice. But as regards the one bird, as I recall, that I took to the Middle East as a gift to the King of Saudi Arabia, my recollection is that it was a bird which was born in captivity, was bred, was part of a breeding plan; and it was taken out of the country with the complete authorization of the relevant authorities.

AIR CANADA

SITE OF NEW HEADQUARTERS—MINISTER'S TELEPHONE CONVERSATION WITH CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who will be familiar with reports on the weekend that he had telephoned some of the directors of Air Canada, prior to the decision on Air Canada's headquarters site selection, to warn them of an R.C.M.P. investigation. Would he confirm whether ot not that was the case? If it was the case, will he tell the House what he told the directors?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, indeed it is. I phoned the Chairman of the Board of Air Canada, and I had someone phone the President of Air Canada, to tell them about this particular inquiry. I did so with the approval of the R.C.M.P.

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to know from the Minister what he told the Chairman, and what he instructed others to tell the President. I would like him to tell us also whether that R.C.M.P. investigation is still in progress, and what it concerns.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport and I have had discussions concerning this matter. I have taken the appropriate steps, and I do not believe it would be appropriate for us to give further detail on it.

DECISION ON SITE LOCATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to know what the Minister of Transport told the directors. I would also like to know whether the Minister of Transport suggested that the decisions on a site location should be frozen or delayed until the conclusion of the R.C.M.P. investigation.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot answer in a direct way because I would be indicating what the inquiry is about, and I am under firm instructions from the Minister of Justice not to do so. I just want to proceed in a negative fashion—I did not give instructions on how to vote. I have already indicated what I did, to the Member for Joliette, on a previous occasion.

I was asked at one point if the 14 criteria that had been retained by the Board of Air Canada were sufficient for the decision-making process. I was more or less asked if there was a fifteenth or sixteenth criterion that the Minister of Transport, on behalf of the Government, would like to indicate. After reviewing, after consulting, after hearing some representations, I said, no, the 14 criteria are good enough as far as the Minister of Transport is concerned. It is on that basis that the decision was made by the Board of Air Canada.

TIMING OF DECISION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the position of the Government of Canada that the Board of Air Canada should make a decision on this question of a site selection which is, if I understand what the Minister has said, itself the subject of an R.C.M.P. investigation? Is it the position of the Government that that decision should have been taken before the conclusion of the investigation, and can the Minister tell us what are the reasons why that decision could not have been delayed until after the R.C.M.P. investigation was concluded?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Government, through the Minister of Transport, might have given a directive of some kind to the Board of Air Canada, if it had wanted that criterion to be taken into account.

I have just indicated that the Board, on its own, asked the Minister of Transport, is there another criterion that the Government would like to add to the 14 already indicated. This is the situation. I cannot answer the question in a direct fashion because I would be indicating what the inquiry is about and—I should stop here.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT OF FISHING BETWEEN INDIANS AND PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. On Friday, after months of negotiation, the federal Government refused to sign a tripartite fishing agreement with the Province of Ontario and the Indian people of Ontario. The agreement recognizes the priority of Indian harvest fishing and makes provision for Indian participation in conservation and management.

If the federal Government agrees with the principles in the agreement, why did it not ensure that there would be no legal roadblocks to signing it? Can the Minister assure the House that these problems will be solved and the federal Government will be able to sign an agreement before the House resumes in January?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in this matter and I know he was following it very closely. It was unfortunate that my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, and I could not sign the agreement.

The latest draft of that agreement, which we had a very short time ago, had provisions in it which independent law officers of the Crown felt were not appropriate for the federal Government, inasmuch as portions of them were unconstitutional, therefore not binding. We did not feel it was right to mislead the Indians into signing a document or posturing to sign a document that our own legal advice indicated was not binding. We hope that that can be clarified, as the Hon. Member suggests, and we will be able to sign the agreement probably some time in mid-January. This will be as a result of close co-operation between my officials and the officials of my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries.

COMMUNICATIONS

PROVISION OF ENGLISH TELEVISION SERVICE TO NORTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. At this time of the year I would like to repeat my inquiry with respect to radio and T.V. English network service to northern New Brunswick as well as ask for any indication he can give the House as to plans for expenditure for the new production facility for CBC English television as well. I am wondering if he could indicate his disposition to discuss this with the new President of the CBC, to see if we can have in the not too distant future, hopefully in 1983, maybe at this time of year, an announcement from the Minister of something for this part of the country.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's interest in extending CBC English language services in New Brunswick is of course well known. The Hon. Members on the other side laugh, Madam Speaker. They are obviously ignorant of the fact that there are not adequate English language services from the CBC in New Brunswick. The subject has been raised a number of time by Members from New Brunswick on this side of the House, particularly by the Minister responsible for New Brunswick.

I would like to indicate to the Hon. Members that I have raised this matter personally with the new President of the CBC, and he has indicated to me his continuing concern with finding ways to improve the English language CBC services in New Brunswick.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he has his red meat strategy ready and if it has been passed through Cabinet. If not, is he prepared to respond to the request of the provincial Ministers who have put together a national stabilization program for beef, and discuss this with them and in some way assist the beef and pork producers across Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we had hoped to meet the Ministers before the festive season. It appears we will not be able to do that, but we hope to meet them in the first part of the year to discuss the program.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Acting House Leader regarding House business. In the absence of the Government House Leader, I direct it to him because presumably he is authorized to speak on behalf of Cabinet.

Now that Bill C-141 has been dragged over the kicking and screaming protests of the Minister of Justice last Friday into the public limelight, and now that all Members have had the opportunity of studying the Bill over the weekend, we would like to make the offer to the Government that, if they were to bring that Bill on for second reading when the appropriate time arrives in our Routine Proceedings, we would be pleased to give the Bill second reading without debate so that it could be sent to the committee for study.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I welcome this change of heart by the Official Opposition to put the interests of the disabled and women first. It is my intention at the appropriate time on motions to so move.

Miss MacDonald: Will you come to the committee?

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Friday, December 17, 1982 and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

SEARCH AND RESCUE

TABLING OF EVALUATION REPORT

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I am pleased to table in my name and on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), in both official languages, the report of an evaluation of search and rescue in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Statements by Ministers.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the tabling of the last document. I understand that that document was cleared by Cabinet on September 7, 1982. Is there some explanation as to why the release of that document has been kept over all of this fall until just prior to the Christmas recess?

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, the reason is obvious. We had to refine some of the recommendations in order to determine just what we were going to do about them. Also, there was the question of translation as this report involved about 500 pages. This is why, therefore, it is being tabled today. I will be ready to answer questions tomorrow if Members have questions on the document.

SCALE OF PRIVY COUNCIL CLERK'S SALARY AND PENSION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I believe you called for statements by Ministers and at that point the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) left the Chamber.

I wrote the Prime Minister last Friday in relation to the ongoing dispute over the apparent increase in salary for pension purposes of the former Clerk of the Privy Council. I had asked the Prime Minister to deliver a statement on motions today that would clarify the situation. Do I take it from his departure at the calling of that item that the Government does not intend—I see the Prime Minister is returning.

The Prime Minister will have my letter in which I asked that he make a statement on motions relating to the increase in salary for pension purposes of the former Clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. Pitfield. It may have passed his notice, but that item was called on the agenda of the House and he left the Chamber. I wonder if that was by inadvertence or whether the Prime Minister intends now to make a full statement on motions.

Madam Speaker: Order. I had not called that item yet. I was about to call it. We have finished Tabling of Documents. I had not called that item. Statements by Ministers.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I had not intended to make a statement on motions, but since this is the time to answer questions by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), I would say that I had hoped he would ask questions during the question period today. I had hoped that he would have asked some on Friday.

A statement on motions is a time-consuming operation and this is a very complex matter. I am happy to make a statement on motions if the Leader of the Opposition does not want to have an exchange of questions and answers. The difficulty I have with a statement on motions is (a) it is very complex, and (b) I am the one who gets the questions. I would like to ask the Leader of the Opposition some questions about his letter which, in my view, is full of inaccuracies. However, if the Leader of the Opposition indicates that he is not prepared to ask questions, I will make a statement on motions.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, since the decision is left in my hands, and as one who respects the tradition in this House of the Government making statements on motions, I will look forward to the Prime Minister's statement on motions, followed naturally by questions, tomorrow or Wednesday. I should state that I must be absent at the funeral of the late Senator Smith tomorrow; therefore, it would suit my convenience to have that statement on motions on Wednesday. However, if it has to be made in my absence, it will certainly be acceptable for the Prime Minister to rediscover the practice tomorrow.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I would prefer making the statement today if I could have some assurance that the exchange will not last more than half an hour; I have obligations that I cannot postpone. Why not have the statement today, and if the Leader of the Opposition has to come back to it on some other day, I am sure we can find time.

Mr. Clark: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the statement is as follows. As regards salary, Mr. Pitfield, in accordance with the Government's six and five program, received a salary increase of 5.99 per cent on July 1, 1982. I wish to state in the clearest possible terms that there has been no other salary action of any type relative to him since April 1, 1981. That is the matter of salary. Therefore, any accusation, suspicion or innuendo that there was something of an increase beyond the guidelines is based on a misconception and a misunderstanding. That should be clear.

I would hope that the same headlines which indicated that Mr. Pitfield got an increase beyond six and five, if my statement proves to be unchallengeable, will carry now the fact that the salary increase was fractionally less than 6 per cent on July 1, 1982. That was effective July 1, 1982. The order was passed in recent weeks, but it is effective as of July 1, 1982. There was no other increase since April 1, 1981. That is relatively clear and simple.

As to the pension arrangements, they are somewhat more complicated, but I think I will be able to explain it either in my statement or in answering questions. I would read the following three paragraphs.

As to his pension arrangements, on June 5, 1979 the Government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition passed an Order in Council setting the salary for pension purposes of Mr. Pitfield at the mid-point D-M 3 salary range. Under the former salary administration plan, the mid-point was the job rate. The Order in Council passed on November 5, 1982, some weeks ago, setting the salary for pension purposes only at the job rate of the D-M 3 had the net effect of simply adjusting the wording of the 1979 order to bring it into line with the current salary administration plan.

To put that in as simple words as possible in order that there be no misunderstanding, our Government is endeavouring to provide for Mr. Pitfield precisely those pension arrangements which the Government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition provided for him in 1979. In other words, the same arrangement, beginning with the mid-point, that was provided by the Government of the Leader of the Opposition is provided by my Government, so the pension arrangements have not changed.

I sent the Leader of the Opposition a letter responding to his questions in the House on December 15. On Friday, December 17, the Leader of the Opposition raised additional questions in a letter to me. I will, if necessary, deal with it and answer the questions, but I hope that the preceding words I have spoken set the record straight.

I would like to make it clear, Madam Speaker, that the arrangements provided for Mr. Pitfield are, in the light of precedent, less generous than those which might normally be provided to other Deputy Ministers who have separated from the Public Service in similar circumstances. I have myself verified, Madam Speaker, the previous arrangements of Order in Council appointees and I can state, and this is quite verifiable, that Mr. Pitfield's arrangements are less generous, and sometimes substantially less generous, than those provided in similar cases to other departing Deputy Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for making a statement on motions. May I say in passing that I hope it becomes a practice to which the Government has recourse more often by its own choice, because it is very clearly a practice which can help the progress of this House by providing information.

Our concern has to do with the very confusion which the Prime Minister has indicated is inherent in the arrangement. He has given us today in his statement on motions two assurances. One is related to actual salary level and he has indicated there was not an increase in salary level since the increase which became effective on July 1, 1982 to Mr. Pitfield, as to other Deputy Ministers. It would be interesting for us to know whether there is any other form of remuneration available to Mr. Pitfield which is not classified strictly as salary, or indeed, available to any other D-M 3 level employees of the Government of Canada.

But I understand what the Prime Minister is saying, he is saying that any adjustment in the remuneration level of Mr. Pitfield was an adjustment which did not affect salary received but affected only pension received. In other words, it was an adjustment for pension purposes. Let me now come to that. The Prime Minister has talked about the job rate. The job rate, as he correctly said, was, under the previous classification, at the mid-point of what is called the decile levels of the Public Service, at about the fifth or the sixth point. It is not clear in my recollection exactly what the mid-point was as then defined in 1979. However, by a change in policy by this Government on April 1 of either 1980 or 1981—at least some several months ago—there was a change in definition of the job rate. The job rate which had previously been at the mid-level of the decile range now became the top level of the decile range. It moved from the middle to the top.

Mr. Pitfield, as we understand it, was being paid at the eighth decile level for salary and pension purposes up until the issuance of the November 5 Order in Council. After the issuance of the November 5 Order in Council, he was being paid at the top level, at what was called the "job rate". That is to say, there was an increase for pension purposes as a result of an action directly and explicitly applying to Mr. Pitfield. There was an increase in the remuneration for pension purposes from the eighth decile to the tenth decile.

It may be that no new money came to Mr. Pitfield now, but the question I want to have clarified is whether in fact there was an increase in remuneration to Mr. Pitfield from the eighth decile level at which he was being paid prior to November 5 to the tenth or top decile level at which he was being paid as a result of that Order in Council which affected him exclusively after November 5. That is the question which remains open.

While it has been drawn to light in regard to the case specifically of Mr. Pitfield, it also underlines the fundamental importance of having available here on the floor of the House of Commons a very clear understanding as to just what is being paid the senior public servants of the land, and just exactly what pension entitlement flows from the payments available to those public servants. That is a matter which should not be shrouded in secrecy in this House of Commons. That, indeed, is a matter which should be crystal clear to Hon. Members of the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister has indicated that, to his mind, it is not clear. Certainly to my mind it is not clear. The exchange of letters between us, I think, has not served particularly to clarify the matter. The Prime Minister can clarify the matter to some degree by first giving us a commitment to make much fuller and clearer information available to Parliament as to the salary level, the remuneration level, any other remuneration and the pension basis of public servants; and also he could indicate to us whether in fact the effect of the Order in Council of November 5 was to move Mr. Pitfield's remuneration level from the eighth decile for pension purposes to the tenth decile, or in any event to some decile level higher than the eighth decile level.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, today the Opposition says the matter is not very clear. It is certainly somewhat complicated because there has been a change from one system to another, and I will try to explain what that was. I must say en passant that the Leader of the Opposition is now expressing the hope there will be some further explanation. I would have hoped that he would have seen fit to seek those explanations before making the public accusations he did against a very senior and respected civil servant having left the service of the Government of Canada after more than 24 years or 25 years of service. But somewhat belatedly the Leader of the Opposition is now seeking those explanations.

I think I will attempt to explain them, Madam Speaker, in the following way. Until the administrative reform of 1981, there was a salary range which went from one to ten deciles, and that range encompassed the whole of the remuneration of a given public servant, an Order in Council appointee. If the servant was performing in a fully satisfactory way, he was at mid-range, at the fifth decile; if he were giving exceptional performance, he would be put at the seventh, eighth, or in some cases the ninth and, perhaps, even the tenth decile. But fully satisfactory was at the fifth decile, halfway through the full range.

In 1981 a reform was brought in, on the recommendation of the Business Council on Senior Appointments, chaired at that time, I believe, by the Chairman of the Toronto-Dominion Bank—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Lambert.

Mr. Trudeau: —Mr. Lambert, although there was a change. Maybe the new Chairman was appointed by then, I am not quite sure, but on the recommendation of that committee, Madam Speaker, a range was instituted which was in two parts. The scope of the range was about the same. In other words, it was from a certain minimum to a certain maximum. The total scope of the range was comparable to the system before, but the new system was brought in on a recommendation that the range be split in two, and that the deciles apply from zero to ten but up to mid-range; so that one who was performing in a fully satisfactory fashion would be at the tenth decile. But that was mid-range of the total range.

Anyone who was performing in a way which was more than fully satisfactory, exceptional or outstanding, whatever it was, was given a bonus, and this bonus covered the second half of the range. Indeed, Mr. Pitfield was scheduled at the equivalent of the former eighth decile, which in the new system meant the tenth decile, plus a bonus of three out of five. It was an exact equivalent. That is why my statement earlier, Madam Speaker, that we translated into the new system a classification which permitted us to reward people by putting them in fact eight-tenths or seven-tenths of the way up into the full range is unchallengable. But it was no longer the seventh or the eighth decile, it was the tenth decile plus a bonus of one, two, three, four or five. Mr. Pitfield in fact was classified at the equivalent of the eighth decile under the old system, but under the new system it meant the mid-point plus a bonus of three out of five.

Now, for pension purposes, Madam Speaker, Mr. Pitfield would have been perfectly justified to say: "Well, this is where I am classified as I retire and I would like my pension to be based on that". But in order to prevent the kind of accusation which unfortunately was made against him anyhow by people who seem intent on destroying his reputation without foundation or knowledge, he voluntarily took a sacrifice and said: "Well, I do not want to be classified at mid-range plus three out of five, putting me at the equivalent of the eighth decile; for pension purposes. I want to be classified mid-range". Mid-range, of course, is the tenth decile now, but had the Leader of the Opposition read my letter a little more carefully, the one where I thought I would make it simple for his understanding by talking of apples and oranges, he would have seen that the tenth decile is mid-range. It is not eight tenths of the range, it is mid-range.

So rather than blame Mr. Pitfield for having gotten somehow more than his due, though I would want to point out that his due in this case would have been no less than many other distinguished public servants leaving at that time in their career, he voluntarily took a reduction to the tenth decile, being once again, under the new system, mid-point in the range.

Now, I am sorry that the Leader of the Opposition has a research group in caucus which did not understand that, which did not ask for the explanation. I am sorry that the Leader of the Opposition did not himself ask for the explanation before pursuing his vengeance—I know not why—on a distinguished civil servant precisely after he left the Civil Service. But that is the case and I hope the Leader of the Opposition will now try to understand it. I am at his disposal to answer other questions if he has any.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the reason we pursued the Order in Council after the announced resignation of Mr. Pitfield was that the Order in Council was passed after the announced resignation of Mr. Pitfield. While the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has introduced the practice in the House that we should approve Bills before we see them, we find it difficult to raise questions about Orders in Council before we see them. I should say simply en passant that my duty in the House of Commons is to ask questions of public interest to the people of Canada regardless of the personalities involved, and that is a duty I intend to carry out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Now, let me ask, just for further clarification, what were the bonuses being received by Mr. Pitfield prior to November 5, the passage of the Order in Council, and afterwards? Secondly, will Mr. Pitfield be eligible for a higher pension as the result of the Order in Council passed on November 5? Higher, that is, than his previous pension.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the answer to the latter question is clear, Madam Speaker. It will be less high—substantially less high—than had he received a salary based on his place in the range which was eight-tenths of the total range. The tenth decile plus three. So that when the Leader of the Opposition accuses Mr. Pitfield of having increased his salary for pension purposes, precisely the opposite is what happened; he decreased his salary for pension purposes.

Now, obviously, salaries of all civil servants and indeed Members of Parliament, increase over the years. If the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is asking if the pension based on his recent salary arrangement will be higher than at some previous time in the past, I suppose it will; but certainly it is less high than Mr. Pitfield would have been entitled to under the salary arrangements he had at the moment of his departure.

Now, as to the moment of his departure, the Leader of the Opposition indicates that the Order in Council was passed after. That is true, Madam Speaker; it was after Mr.. Pitfield announced his resignation. But this was not true only for Mr. Pitfield. The Order in Council of November was really dealing with a whole group of top civil servants retroactively to July 1, and Mr. Pitfield was one of them, one of those who had not received their salary increase on July 1 or indeed since. The increase, therefore, given by that Order in Council of November was one which properly was due to them on July 1. Once again, it was less than 6 per cent and it was preceded by no other other increase except the one I mentioned a year and a bit before.

Now, as to the question of other arrangements, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition mentioned bonuses. Well, I explained to him that in the new remuneration system there is a bonus added to the mid-point. If that is what he is asking, yes, there was a bonus added to Mr. Pitfield's mid-point salary, the "job rate", as it used to be called. It indeed was given to many, many other civil servants who performed above the mid-point range. That bonus was explained in my first answer. I do not know what other arrangement the Leader of the Opposition has in mind.

Mr. Clark: Well, I apologize for taking the time of the House on this matter but it is, as the Prime Minister is demonstrating, very complex. Is the pension entitlement of Mr. Pitfield based exclusively upon his remuneration level in accordance with the decile range, or is that pension entitlement based in addition upon bonuses? Because if it is based exclusively on remuneration and not on bonuses, then setting aside payments that come as the result of bonuses and moving up in the decile range for remuneration would have the effect of increasing pension eligibility.

Question number one is: Is the pension calculation, the pension entitlement, based exclusively on the decile level of remuneration or does it also take account of bonuses and any other payments that might occur?

Question number two: Did the pension entitlement of Mr. Michael Pitfield increase as a result of the November 5 Order in Council from what it was prior to the November 5 Order in Council, taking into account the natural increases which occur in pension entitlements? But was there an increase due explicitly and exclusively to the November 5 Order in Council?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Leader of the Opposition reads the blues and reflects on them, he will see that I have answered both questions in my previous answer. He asks if the pension will be based purely on salary—or is that the word?

Mr. Nielsen: The salary plus.

Mr. Clark: Is it salary or salary plus?

Mr. Trudeau: Purely salary, or salary plus bonus? I answered quite clearly, Madam Speaker, that under the present arrangements the situation of an Order in Council appointee within a range is always salary plus a bonus if there is performance above "fully satisfactory". Therefore, there is a bonus. This bonus, in Mr. Pitfield's case, under the Order in Council passed, had the effect of putting him at eight-tenths of the total range. So three-tenths of that was a bonus; five-tenths of that was the decile system.

• (1530)

This is what Mr. Pitfield would have been entitled to have under the law as a pension—the mid-way plus three out of five. I repeat, Mr. Pitfield gave up that bonus for the purpose of pension arrangements. He voluntarily sacrificed his pension, made it lower in order to avoid the kind of accusation which has been forthcoming nonetheless. Had he stayed at eight out of ten, it probably would not have led the Leader of the Opposition to the confusion of saying that he is at the tenth decile. The Leader of the Opposition does not understand that the tenth decile under the new system is the equivalent of the fifth decile under the last. That is as clear as can be; it may be a bit subtle but it is clear.

The Leader of the Opposition was also asking whether the effect of the order of November was to increase the salary for pension purposes.

Mr. Clark: No, pension entitlement.

Mr. Trudeau: For pension entitlement. The answer is yes, Madam Speaker. Had Mr. Pitfield not been generous and self-effacing, he would have used his legitimate salary as of April 1 and have said: "I want my pension based on that." Therefore, the Order in Council establishing his salary as of July 1 last would have been the salary as the basis for his pension, because he left after that salary had taken effect.

But once again the question is hypothetical, since Mr. Pitfield said: "I don't want to have my pension based on this new increase of salary; I want my pension based on the mid-point in the range", which is the tenth decile under the new system but the fifth decile under the preceding one, I repeat for the third time.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister, if I understood him correctly, has said—and we will check the "blues"—that Mr.

Pitfield's pension entitlement did go up. That is what we have been alleging; that is what we have been trying to determine.

Mr. Trudeau: No.

Mr. Clark: I would like to know by how much it went up. I would also like to ask a very simple question: Is any pension entitlement based upon bonuses?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it did not go up. It could have gone up, had he not renounced it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who is "he"?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Pitfield. I will repeat exactly what I said, though I do not think it will be to any avail because I have already said it three times. Mr. Pitfield's pension entitlement would have been at the eight-tenths of the total range had he not voluntarily sacrificed it and brought it down to mid-point of the total range. I do not see how the Leader of the Opposition could stand up again and say that he was always alleging, and that he was right, that Mr. Pitfield has taken a salary based on that increase. He has not. He took a pension arrangement based on the mid-point in the range as would "fully satisfactory" public servants, but without any bonus.

I hope the Leader of the Opposition will not go on and repeat that his pension arrangements were based on some bonus. They were not and they are not. They are based on the mid-point in the range which is established before one begins to pay bonuses. Once again, this is a sacrifice on his part. I know of no other public servant, nor indeed do I know any Member of Parliament, who would reduce his salary when he leaves in order to reduce his pension, which is what Mr. Pitfield did.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am sure that everyone is sitting calculating their decile levels all across the country at the moment. I am sure that everyone in the country is grateful to Mr. Pitfield for his generosity. Would it be possible for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to tell us in dollars and cents how much pension Mr. Pitfield will be able to get from the Canadian Government as a result of the service he has given, let us say if he were to draw it down now and if he were to wait until it matures? Might we get something which people sitting in their livingrooms watching this debate might understand so that we can make a judgment about it?

Perhaps while that is being done we could bear in mind that Mr. Pitfield—

Mr. Gauthier: It is 35, the same as you.

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much; that was very helpful. We might bear in mind, in spite of his best effort on behalf of the country, that Mr. Pitfield has managed to do quite nicely from the public trough. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) gave him a fairly substantial sum to go away, and he seemed to find a good use to put it to. Perhaps now that all of this has happened and he has departed, maybe now for the last time, I am just wondering if we could find out what is our indebtedness to Mr. Pitfield in dollars and cents.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I would point out that, like other public servants and contrary to Members of Parliament, Mr. Pitfield will not draw his pension until he reaches a certain age; I believe some ten or 12 years from now. Therefore, what his pension will be in those years I suppose depends on whether he will live until then and how much he will live beyond that. The Hon. Member shakes his head in some understanding. I would point out to him that if the Hon. Member should decide to depart this Parliament for the good of this place, he would get his pension right away.

Mr. Deans: No, no.

Mr. Trudeau: I would only be prepared to put it in dollars and cents if it is asked in a genuine spirit of understanding and without the type of scorn which was in the Hon. Member's voice.

I would say further that I would not do it only for Mr. Pitfield, but if the House wanted to know the arrangements of all departed public servants, it might be something which I think would be contrary to Government policy and which I would be prepared to discuss with Members on the other side for their personal information. It has not been the practice—nor do I intend to instal it—to put precise dollars and cents on private arrangements, on the arrangements of departed public servants. That has been the practice. I do not propose to break it on behalf of one particular public servant.

If the Hon. Member were interested in all those who left, perhaps under previous Governments, then he might be able to ask the Leader of the Opposition what arrangements were made for Mr. Pitfield and Mr. Hood at the time of their departures. I would be prepared on a confidential basis to tell the Hon. Member. I am certain that it would not be more generous, comparatively speaking, than the Hon. Member will get when he has served 25 years in this place, as Mr. Pitfield has for the Government of Canada.

Mr. Deans: I was not being scornful; I just found the whole process somewhat bemusing. I say to the Prime Minister that we are talking about public funds to a public servant, and I think they should be a matter of public record. It is not fishing. It is not a matter of trying to embarrass Mr. Pitfield more than he is already embarrassed. I did not start this thing; I asked simply in order that the public of Canada understand it.

Can the Prime Minister tell us what will be, in dollar terms, the benefit which Mr. Pitfield will receive from the arrangements he has been able to work out with two successive Governments? More important, perhaps, would the Prime Minister at some other point—not necessarily today—care to table the documentation which justifies the changeover that took place with regard to the method of payment and the calculation of payment to senior public servants? I think that would be very helpful in trying to understand more clearly just what is the policy of the Government of Canada with regard to paying, both during the lifetime of work and after they have retired, the benefits which people who work for the Government at senior levels expect to receive.

Mr. Trudeau: Oh the last point, tabling the documents, I would point out to the Hon. Member that they were tabled. Whenever the Lambert Commission or its predecessors or successors made reports, they were tabled in the House. It was as a result of that report that the implementation of this new system was brought in—the recommendation for introducing a bonus system to cover the top half of the range. The Order in Council instituting this is available. It is published. I would hope that if the Hon. Member is earnest in his desire to understand the Opposition, he will join the Leader of the Opposition in a briefing by some of the accountants and people with the Treasury Board who are responsible for applying the system.

• (1540)

As far as the precise figure that the Hon. Member is speaking of is concerned, I would point out to him that there is no great mystery in the general area. It is the precise figure which, by tradition, has never been published. It would be, for salary purposes, within the range of a D-M3 level which is—my memory is not clear on this—somewhere between $90,000 and $110,000.

Mr. Nielsen: One hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. Trudeau: No, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is joking. It is $90,000 to $110,000 or $115,000, I believe. That is the range and I can give the precise figure of the range to the Hon. Member. He can determine for himself what eight out of ten of the range would approximately put one at, or what half of the range would put one at. He would then know what the salary for pension purposes was. Knowing that, he would just have to look at the Public Service Superannuation Act and relative Acts and calculate what it was. Obviously, in this case I have already gone beyond what we have done in the case of other civil servants because I have indicated the precise place and the range. That was necessary for the purposes of the exchange with the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I will try to terminate this with two questions. First, I recognize the Prime Minister's concern about practice as it relates to publishing specific figures, but he must bear in mind that a specific Order in Council was passed in relation to this particular public servant.

Mr. Trudeau: No.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister says no. My reading of the Order in Council of November 5, which I think he has in front of him, is that it refers quite explicitly to Mr. Pitfield.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, in light of the unusual importance of this matter, since he understands that it is a question that speaks not to the reputation of an individual but the reputation of the Government, if he would be prepared to be specific and tell us in dollar terms what the salary of Mr. Pitfield is after the Order in Council and what it was before the Order in Council; what the bonuses to Mr. Pitfield were before the Order in Council and what they are after the Order in Council; as well as what the pension entitlement for Mr. Pitfield is as to salary and/or bonus both before and after the November 5 Order in Council. I would like first to have that set of figures tabled.

Second, am I correct in my assumption that if Mr. Pitfield receives his pension at age 60, in 1997 he would be getting 48 per cent of whatever a D-M 3 at his level would be getting in 1997—

Mr. Nielsen: Which is $150,000.

Mr. Clark: Which could well be $150,000 or more, because there will be escalations. Can he indicate that that assumption is correct, that Mr. Pitfield at age 60 would be receiving 48 per cent of whatever a D-M 3 at his decile level would be receiving in 1997?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, in answer to the last question, I would point out that there was no particular arrangement for Mr. Pitfield in that regard. He comes under the Public Service Superannuation Act and related Acts and they apply to all departing public servants at their various levels of service. Once again, I do not know what the figure is. As I told the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party, the Leader of the Opposition simply has to have his caucus research group look at the law and make the calculation. I do not know what it is.

With respect to the two previous questions, they were asked textually by the Member from the NDP. I am sorry that the Leader of the Opposition was gathering his thoughts to ask exactly the same question. If he refers to my answers, they apply exactly to the same questions asked by the Member of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Clark: I asked you to table it. Would you table it?

MR. DARLING—PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned Members of the Katrine Leisure Club senior citizens organization, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the proposed increase in postal rates, which will have risen from 17 cents to 32 cents in little over a year, imposes a significant hardship upon pensioners whose incomes are already greatly restricted, and who depend upon correspondence with old friends and distant family members as a substitute for most other forms of entertainment; wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to oppose this change, and to demand that the Canada Post Corporation reorder its priorities so as to better deploy the resources they already have. And as in duty bound your petitioner will ever pray.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING VOTING RIGHTS OF CIVILIANS EMPLOYED BY THE CANADIAN FORCES ABROAD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) asked for leave to introduce Bill C-669, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (civilian Canadian Forces electors).

Some Hon. Members: Explain!

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the aim of this bill is to amend the Canada Elections Act so as to allow all Canadian citizens working abroad for the Canadian forces, in whatever capacity, to cast their vote. Several hundred Canadians working on Canadian military bases abroad are unable to exercise their voting rights which are, as you know, guaranteed under Section 3 of the Constitution of Canada. The bill is therefore aimed at expanding the General and Special Voting Rules in Schedule 2 of the Canada Elections Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING FORFEITURE OF PROPERTY ILLEGALLY ACQUIRED

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-670, an Act to amend the Narcotic Control Act (forfeiture).

He said: Madam Speaker, very briefly, the Bill would authorize the forfeiture of the assets of drug traffickers. It is very similar to legislaton passed by the United States Congress in 1978 which has proved highly effective in that country.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the Government would be prepared indeed to move that Bill C-141 be put through all stages today without debate. However, since I understand that it would accommodate both Opposition Parties better, at this time I move, seconded by the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet):

That Bill C-141 be read a second time without debate and that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for consideration.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, if the motion is in the standard form, simply moving second reading and reference to the committee, that will be acceptable on the assurance that we have already given, that there will be no debate on this side.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, you will recall that on Friday last we offered to accommodate the Government in this regard by having it do exactly what it is doing now. Therefore, I can hardly now withhold unanimous consent, having asked the Government to do what it is doing. I might say in passing that the content of the Bill is very much in keeping with suggestions made by my hon. colleagues.

• (1550)

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,522 and 4,533.

[Text]

LIQUIDATION OF BEAVERLODGE PLANT AND EQUIPMENT

Question No. 4,522—Mr. Wilson:

1. Did Eldorado Nuclear Limited select an American firm to assist in the liquidation of the Beaverlodge plant and, if so, for what reason when there are plenty of qualified and competent Canadian used-equipment dealers and plant liquidators?

2. What form of bidding process was undertaken to obtain a plant liquidator firm?

3. Were there bids and, if so, what were the results of the bids?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Eldorado Nuclear Limited reports as follows: 1. Yes, ENL did select an American firm to assist in the liquidation of the Beaverlodge plant and equipment.

The American firm submitted a proposal which was clearly superior to other proposals received for the following reasons: (i) The firm included an "up front" advance payment; (ii) The firm accepted the cost of transporting the equipment from Uranium City to an Edmonton marshalling and display area; (iii) The firm provided a guarantee to purchase at Eldorado's option all the remaining equipment unsold at the termination of the agreement for 40 per cent of the established minimum price; (iv) The firm undertook at their cost to prepare equipment for resale including cleaning, painting and reconditioning as required; (v) The firm agreed to use Canadian labour throughout and to give preference to Canadian firms for any services required.

2. In its search, Eldorado contacted several mining companies, suppliers of used equipment and consulted trade journals. Due to the extensive publicity given to the mine closing, Eldorado also received numerous calls from companies interested in disposing the equipment. From these discussions, seven companies, capable of handling a project of this size were selected for further discussion. These were invited to visit the mine site to view first hand the scope of the work required. All but two accepted and spent a couple of days at the mine.

The companies were then invited to tender their best possible proposals, covering all areas of concern. One company dropped out of the bidding due to their inability to meet the deadline. Of the remaining six bidders, four made personal presentations to Eldorado staff in Saskatoon to explain or clarify their proposals, while the other two expanded on their submissions by telephone. All bidders were asked at this stage if this was their best proposal and were given an opportunity to make final changes or improvements.

3. Following the procedure outlined in part 2, all bids were thoroughly analysed. The best proposal was made by an American firm.

The other proposals were rejected for the following reasons: (i) One firm offered the lowest commission rate. However, the firm proposed to hold an auction at the mine site and offered no guarantees as to sales revenue. The logistical problems of holding an auction sale at the mine site and the risk of receiving low returns on expensive mining equipment led Eldorado to conclude this was not the best method of liquidation; (ii) One firm made an interesting proposition based on a combined public auction/private sale concept. The firm was not prepared to risk any of their own money in the venture and expected to rely on Eldorado's personnel to complement their lack of expertise in the mining field; (iii) One firm submitted a proposal similar to the successful bidder and had the experience and personnel to do the job. However, the firm expected a 25 per cent commission for their marketing contribution and was not prepared to take any risk; (iv) Two other firms did not have the resources and skills to do the marketing job required for the project and made no provision for warehouse and storage facilities.

BUILDING USE STUDY OF ROY THOMSON HALL

Question No. 4,533—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a "building use study of Roy Thomson Hall, Toronto" conducted on behalf of the National Research Council and, if so (a) for what reason is this subject of interest to the Council (b) to what use does the Council intend to put the information gained by the study (c) on what basis was the contractor selected and what expertise does the contractor have in this area (d) what amount did the study cost and what were the major expenditures?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows: A study has been undertaken on the "building use study of Roy Thomson Hall, Toronto", by The Behavioural Team of Toronto, on behalf of the National Research Council acting in co-operation with the Ontario Ministry of Citizenship and Culture. A final report is due on February 28, 1983.

(a) The study is of interest to the National Research Council as part of its over-all program on the study of building performance under actual conditions of use, particularly of public assembly buildings.

(b) Studies of crowd movement, egress, etc., demonstrate the interaction between people and the building and indicate any design deficiencies, unsafe conditions, etc. This information helps in the prediction of crowd movement in emergency conditions (such as fire) and provides a data base for building codes. It also assists the architectural profession in improving the design of hallways, stairways and ramps, doors, amenities, etc., to provide greater safety for building users and better access for handicapped persons.

Due to the considerable length of time in the development of the Roy Thomson Hall and the many specialists contributing to it, the building incorporates a number of features and concepts which are not traditional to other Canadian halls. It was considered appropriate to make a close examination of the performance of this building under actual use by the public in order to assist future concert hall designers and increase scientific knowledge related to building use.

(c) Research programs employing social science principles and procedures for the use of architects and engineers is a fairly recent endeavour, and few companies or individuals have the background and experience to effectively undertake such studies. The Behavioural Team has had considerable experience in studying crowd movement and building performance generally, has been involved with the Roy Thomson Hall project since early 1978, is a local (Toronto) firm and was chosen for these reasons.

(d) The study was preceded by a small contract for $5,000 to develop a work plan, detailed estimate of costs, etc. The main study will cost $32,000 of which $25,000 is the share of the National Research Council. It was a very labour intensive study so the major expenditure is the cost of labour (92 per cent of the total) for the senior consultant in the firm and technical assistants.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House resumed, from Friday, December 17, consideration of Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 21697).

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, in rising to address Bill C-132, which is now before us, and the amendment that stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), I would like to refer back to a phrase—a quotation of a former member of this House, a one-time leader of my party, who said on a number of occasions: "Whenever they say," 'it's not the money, it's the principle of the thing', you can always be sure it's the money".

We have heard much talk during debate, during report stage and earlier in second reading, especially from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), with respect to the fact that she believes that the principle of universality and all of the principles involved in making payments to the mothers and families of this country should remain intact. But, all she is doing is taking money away while she disputes the fact that the money is leaving. However, when we look at the minutes, either of the debates in this House or of the committee, it becomes very clear that not only will the amount of payments to families across Canada and, indirectly, to the children of this country be reduced, but also it will be reduced and transferred in such a way that the moneys they do receive will come at a time when they do not need them. At least, they will not need them anywhere nearly as much as they do on a regular basis.

The Minister has also been engaged in considerable playing with figures and principles. While much of what she says sounds fine in so far as statistics or figures or abstract theories are concerned, when one gets right down to it she must be very confused or else she must think that the people of this country are very confused if they are to believe the kind of things that the Government has been saying. In the minutes of the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs dated December 7 of this year, the Minister went so far as to say that if as much as one dollar remained in the Family Allowance payment per year, that would still be a universal program. I do not know if that suggests that there is something more in store for other programs which the Minister claims will still be universal or whether universality will or will not continue in the old age pension and Old Age Security systems or in a number of other Government programs.

What does this spell out for the future? If one dollar in the Family Allowance scheme means that it is still a universal program, then if one dollar is left at some point in the basic old age pension system, will it still mean, in the Liberals' view, that that is a universal old age pension program? Just what do we have left? The Minister may not be the universal soldier, but she may well be regarded as being the universal "pass the buck" artist, if her description of universality stands. I would suggest to her that she ought to consider very closely that old phrase of Tommy Douglas; "It's not the principle of the thing, it's the money". At least, that is what is important to those hundreds of thousands of Canadian children in Canadian families who have relied upon the Family Allowance system for a certain portion of their regular income.

Unlike the Minister and, so she says, also the Hon. Member for Calgary West, I did not study the social sciences in an academic way in any academic institution. Thus, I do not suffer from the ivory tower handicap from which those who consider problems only from the top down suffer. I have, however, studied the social sciences from the ground floor, from the street level of society, and that living experience, coupled with a fair smattering of reading in the behavioural sciences, has not only allowed me to—in the Minister's own words—"recognize the importance of the psychological element in any economic objective or goal", but it has also allowed me, in other words, to see through this old style "now you see it, now you don't" shell game as being the PR con game and flim-flam that it really is. That is exactly what we are getting here. The Minister and the Government had admitted to the fact that this but a sword in their arsenal in their war on inflation, and if that is not a PR con job, if that is not a shell game, then I for one do not know what a shell game is.

If one looks at the impact of this measure, Bill C-132, a measure to partially deindex Family Allowances in Canada, and considers its impact through the eyes of Family Allowance recipients in these hard economic times—and the timing here is crucial—one cannot help but realize that it is not only a bad and unwise measure, but that it is also a measure which is occurring at the worst possible moment, both for those who normally receive it and for the economy of the communities in which they live, as well as for the economy of the country.

The Minister says that those who, in her own words, "really need help" and are eligible for the Child Tax Credit will receive an increased tax credit at the end of next year. She says that the amount of the credit will make up for what they will not receive every month as a result of the cuts in this Bill. However, the problem faced by the economy and many small businesses, as well as low-income families and mothers, is a lack of consumer purchasing power and a lack of cash flow now and in each and every month, and the receipt by families of a payment with their tax returns once a year in one, single-shot crack will not help. That method has failed. Only regular income coming in at the time that they must pay their bills will help them, particularly in the kinds of situations in which many Canadians find themselves, hopefully temporarily, at this time.

Family Allowance received every month can add up to quite a bundle. A family with three children receives approximately $80 a month. Family Allowance received every month is often the only regular cheque that many families receive, especially when breadwinners are laid off and on UIC or out of UIC. Thousands are being dumped off the UIC rolls every month or are on welfare. Worse yet, many are not even receiving welfare. As has been reported in this House, this is turning into a chronic situation in many communities. Many times the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has pointed out that in the major community in his constituency, Kamloops, many people are having to go to food banks or soup lines because they fall in between the unemployment insurance system and social assistance programs. That is the only cheque that these families and many others get, and they count on it.

For a family who is "in need", as the Minister likes to describe it, a little lump sum once a year is of little help, and it is of no help if the breadwinner, as we hope, has his or her job back by the time, in the next year, that they would get the little extra that is going to be added on to the Child Tax Credit. Thousands of people every month are running out of unemployment insurance benefits but their house payments, their car payments, or just their regular bill payments, continue. That goes on and on.

Statistics released at the beginning of this month, Mr. Speaker, show that now more than one-third of the unemployed are heads of families. We now have a number of unemployed equal to the whole combined labour force of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Manitoba, fully one-half of the Provinces. Those figures also show that more than one-quarter million men and women have been unemployed for over a year. We have it on recent authority from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and from the musings of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on television last night that things are not likely to get much better; in fact, he has stated that things are likely to get worse. That means that more people who will not be eligible for a tax credit in the coming year are going to find themselves out of work and relying on unemployment insurance or worse. Just at the time that this plague is becoming chronic and people, who are used to decent incomes and good average incomes, will often end up with no income at all, the Government implements a measure which even in the best of times would be unjust.

One out of every 13 people in British Columbia will be dependent on welfare by the end of this winter if the current economic slump continues. Those figures are from statistics released by the Government of that Province. One of the problems has been that people have had to go on social assistance because the bureaucratic bungling of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has meant that either there is delay at the time they try to establish their unemployment insurance claim, or if they go on one of the quickly thought-up make-work projects that he has put them on, they end up by being dumped off the UIC rolls. It is at times like these that families, children and mothers across this country need all the help they can get. Why then has the Government, even if it could argue that at some perfect time within its odd rationale of the concept of universality or fairness that it would be better to do it the way it has, why has it chosen this time to do it? Simply for some cooked up propaganda campaign to persuade people of the glories of six and five? It is a hell of a price to pay—

Mr. Cullen: Your language!

Mr. Kristiansen: It is a heck of a price to pay. For people who are so sensitive to a little bit of language, they show remarkable insensitivity, Mr. Speaker, to the problems that hundreds of thousands of Canadians are facing. Somebody ought to tell that bunch over there to get their priorities straightened out a little, because that kind of nonsense, polite as it may be, just does not serve any logical social purpose.

Mr. Nielsen: Was that the Member for Sarnia?

Mr. Cullen: "Sarnia-Lambton".

Mr. Kristiansen: These families need cash every month. If they expect to get a Child Tax Credit to make up, in sum total, for the amount they are going to lose by this reduction in the expected increase in Family Allowances, that Tax Credit is going to be based on last year's income, but last year or this year they may in fact have been earning an income that placed them above the level at which they would be eligible to receive a Child Tax Credit.

This is not only a recession, or a depression, which the Minister of Finance called it, that affects only the people at the bottom rung of the economic ladder in society. This is a recession/depression that has caught hold of and dragged down many people who thought they had it made and felt secure. Surely people in that kind of situation and their families are undergoing enough difficulty without having a Government that is going to chip, chip, chip away at what little income they have left, just when their economic world is being pulled out from underneath them.

Another aspect that I want to touch on briefly is that this is an time when many Canadians, especially over the last 10 or 15 years, have been making noises, with a lot of justification, calling for the establishment of various and sundry financial schemes and Government programs that would allow women who are raising families, the homemakers of the country, to be able to regard some income as being theirs—whether a salary for homemakers, pensions for homemakers and/or other reallocation of income. Why do we now choose this time to destroy the only program in existence that at least leads towards some financial independence for many of the women who are raising families in the country? It is contrary to anything that has been said by the Minister responsible for the status of women or other Ministers in that field, and by many other organizations across the country. Why destroy the basis of the only program that provides direct income to the practising heads of families?

The Government loves to set up commissions and conduct pension and income studies. We have had, it seems to some of us, dozens of them over the last few years. What is the purpose, however, of talking about new schemes if they now set out, for just the picayune amount of money and savings involved, to dismantle the one program that does provide some basic and minimal incomes for the family.

I just want to recap for a moment—I see the Minister has come back into the House—to ask her again even at this late date to reconsider. When she suggests that the same basic floor income is going to be provided by means of the Child Tax Credit, that just does not do the job for people who have seen their incomes fall and who need that cash flow and purchasing power on a month to month basis. They need it to pay their grocery bills, and it does not help to have it come one year later or two years later when what they are short of is cash at the end of the month.

Miss Bégin: What about one month later?

Mr. Kristiansen: They are not getting it one month later. No one is getting it one month later. If the Minister wants to come out from behind the curtain we can have an exchange, but we can find many, many people who will not be eligible for a Child Tax Credit this year because of their previous year's income and who have now found themselves laid off. Those people number in the hundreds of thousands and they will not get that money.

Perhaps most Liberals come from Provinces where so many people have been unemployed for so long that they do not recognize that the status of a lot of people is changing. There are other parts of this country that have different political histories and economic histories. It has not been until their gross mismanagement of our economy in the last few years that those people have had to face these kinds of problems.

The Government would have done far better to put to work the kind of ingenuity it has obviously taken to work out this half-baked scheme, with the amount of money involved in preparing it, and rather put that imagination, drive and Public Service time allocation into figuring out what could be done to increase the purchasing power of families being cut off unemployment insurance. Perhaps it could have extended benefits. This would help to ensure that we do not have the absolute paternalism which Liberal and Tory Governments have been responsible for in this country almost since its inception.

That is the point at which I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party and most social democrats and democratic socialists the world over disagree with the fundamental philosophy of the Liberals and Conservatives. We want a society with laws that give strength to people and their democratic organizations so that they do not have to rely on any Government or major corporation for hand-outs. Given the power and the ways to devise their own means of livelihood and their own structures in society, they can take control of their own destiny and get rid of the hand-outs for which this Government has been so famous, but which are done in such a terrible and wasteful way.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act. Recently I spoke on Bill C-91. I felt very strongly about that Bill. It seemed to give the Government powers which it should not have and it could have a serious effect on property owners in this country.

I feel even more concerned about the possible effects of Bill C-132. It is not to a great degree a threat to property owners in this country. Rather, it affects those people who cannot afford to buy property, people who are tenants, quaking in their boots that the next knock on their door might be the landlord waiting with an eviction notice.

It will be yet another slap in the face from the cruel hand of fate for single mothers, many of whom work at low-paying jobs and who perhaps do not know if there will be anything to eat for supper. Perhaps it will be the last straw for some unlucky woman abandoned by her husband and left with the responsibility for the care of her children. Such a Bill will do no harm to the lobster crowd. The Kraft dinner people will bear the burden of this, the latest in a shoddy series of so-called restraint measures by this Government.

It is not the children receiving video games under well-laden Christmas trees who will suffer this year. Rather, it is those mothers who cannot even afford the Christmas tree, let alone the gifts to surround it who will suffer. By effectively eliminating the increase in Family Allowance payments, our great Santa Claus from Sussex Drive is guaranteeing a colder, harsher Christmas for years to come. he can rest assured that Kraft dinner will be the item of choice for future dinners and that thousands of underprivileged children will continue to be nattily dressed in hand-me-downs. I understand that the price of such garments does not rise with the index of inflation.

In the last two weeks we have seen a colossal demonstration of insensitivity to the needs and wishes of the poor, the elderly and the members of the Public Service by the reintroduction of Bills C-131, 132 and 133. Although the Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition have the utmost respect for the idea of restraint, we often find ourselves wondering why such measures often seem to be at the expense of the underprivileged members of our society.

What kind of credibility does the Government have when it takes away pension money which has already been paid for? Who can believe in an administration which attempts to limit wages of hourly paid civil servants—

Mr. Nielsen: They need it for advertising.

Mr. Fretz: That is right—but ignores large increases at the management level? When the Liberals attempt to skim off a few dollars from a program which needs them desperately, such as mothers' allowance, it does not leave much credibility to be damaged.

If indeed the word "restraint" is to have any meaning, the Government must show first and foremost restraint in its own dealings. Perhaps then the public would more easily accept programs such as six and five. Perhaps they would more easily comprehend why it is sometimes necessary to limit spending on social assistance programs. However, the average Canadian is bound to feel bitterness toward a Government which is endeavouring to cut back on spending, if he sees in the paper and on television gross examples of waste and overspending.

Need I mention the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) spends over $150,000 per year on travel expenses? Of course, that does not include the salaries of his army of speech writers who must work long hours along with his printing staff, making sure that every Member of Parliament receives double-spaced copies of every glowing word he ever said.

It is no secret as well that over $60 million per year is set aside for the translation of documents. This is not only largely unncessary but almost unconscionable in light of the poverty which afflicts many thousands of unseen and voiceless Canadians. Certainly if I require translation of a document, or if some other Member does, there should be facilities available; no one would argue that. However, to have every single word ever uttered translated into the other official language is absolutely absurd.

I could go on to list the examples of waste and excess in every facet of Government administration, but I would not want to keep Members here until past midnight. The examples speak for themselves and I need not pursue this fact any longer. To sum up my thoughts on the issue of priorities in spending, I would like to suggest that this Government follow the philosophy: "Do as I do, not do as I say". By showing a good example of fiscal responsibility, the citizens of this country will be encouraged to do so as well.

I am glad that I am presenting this speech at a time when the yuletide spirit is rampant in the streets and I can allude to Christmas symbols to illustrate my argument. One could compare Bill C-132 to a Christmas tree standing in the corner all bare and neglected, no ornaments on it, presenting a not very satisfying appearance. But add a few decorations and some tinsel, place a star on top, and you have a delightful spectacle. The star on top of the Christmas tree is the Child Tax Credit proposal for compensating those whose Family Allowance cheques leave them financially less well off than in the past.

No, the Government is not just leaving that bare tree for us to ignore. It is dressing it up so that we will buy it and love it. Fortunately, there are some insightful people around here who see the Child Tax Credit for what it is, a fraud. Let me explain why it is a fraud. In this latest thrilling little diversion offered by the entertainment committee of our Liberal counterparts to pacify the militant objectors to the Government's tinkering with mothers' allowance, a nice little $50 increase per child in the Child Tax Credit in the next two years is offered. This means that in the tax year 1982, the value of the Child Tax Credit will go from $293 to an astonishing $343 per child. Therefore, the Government reasons, the poor people who can least afford to pay their taxes will not have to pay out as much in tax.

The richer families in the higher tax brackets will benefit less than the poor from this amendment. Anyone making less than $26,000 will receive the full Child Tax Credit. However, there are two negative factors involved in this. The first one is that there will be another mountain of paperwork in deciphering the mathematical complexities of relating income to the amount of Child Tax Credit receivable. Add this puzzle to the other 295 pages of the Income Tax Act amendments and we should make work for a few thousand unemployed accountants across the country.

Second, the over-all cost of the program—in other words, the net result of enriching the Child Tax Credit and partially deindexing the mothers' allowance—is that the Government will spend $95 million more than it would have in 1983 and 1984 had it not touched the programs at all. Where will this $95 million come from? It will come from the middle-class citizen, as usual, the one who does not have the accountants and lawyers to find all the loopholes. He will pay, but he is also the one who will vote this Government out of power in the next election.

Changing a program with supposed beneficial results should not result in an added expenditure of $95 million. Why even attempt to change the program to begin with if the net result is going to be an added burden for the taxpayer? When the amendments to the Family Allowances Act were discussed about two weeks ago by one of our Liberal colleagues, he mentioned that inflationary trends in modern society are partly due to psychological factors. He added that that is why the central Government should take action to implement measures that will have a psychological impact, that much of the six and five program is in fact psychological.

My question to the Hon. Member is this: Is poverty psychological? Is hunger psychological? Does living at a standard well below the poverty level constitute a psychological phenomenon? I think not, and I think most Hon. Members in the House would agree with me. I think these very sad, and not only sad but real, problems are vividly and tragically lived out in countless households across this country. There is nothing psychological or abstract about these problems.

We need real, concrete and effective means of dealing with this poverty. Reducing Family Allowance cheques sent out to provide needy children with the necessities of life is not the way to go about it. We are talking about the future of this country. The well-being of our children, Mr. Speaker, must be our number one priority, and when you restrict increases in such assistance, you are in effect cutting allowances in real money due to the inflationary factor.

There has been much talk about stopping inflation. However, the battle against this much talked about enemy must start with those who are responsible for it. Are the mothers and children of this country responsible for inflation? Emphatically not. I think it is the high rollers in comfortable political boardrooms and people in overpaid Public Service posts who are playing monopoly with the taxpayers' money. It is they who are indulging in fantastic expenditures which are not warranted or approved by this Parliament.

Not only that, but this Government, to an unprecedented degree, is allowing the development of parasitical Crown corporations. Hundreds of millions of dollars are involved here. Why cannot the cutbacks start in these areas? Then, and only then, will the taxpayer heed the Government's restraint preaching with an attentive ear. We must attack the inflationary beast in its vital organs, not scratch its ear with Mickey Mouse programs such as this. Let us impose strict controls on Crown corporations and their spending bazaars, and allow the flourishing of independent business with its spin-off effects of competition, low prices and employment opportunities which Canadians want. That is what we need.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the great sayings of that inimitable builder of our country, Sir John A. Macdonald. He said: "The great reason why I have always been able to beat Brown is that I have been able to look a little ahead, while he could on no occasion forgo the temptation of a temporary triumph". Bill C-132 is but a temporary triumph. I implore the Members of this House to look ahead a little and reject the policies contained in this Bill in order that we may yet win the battle against inflation somewhere down the line, but not crush the underprivileged in order to do so.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I would like to go on record as saying that my Party will be supporting the amendment which is now proposed of dropping the 5 per cent limit on this Bill in 1984, but that we will not be supporting Bill C-132, which intends to put indexation of six and five on Family Allowances. We are fast approaching Christmas time, all of us here are aware of that, and it is unfortunate that during the very week of Christmas we are discussing a Bill which is going to cut back what has become, I believe, almost a sacred event of Canadian family life, the program of Family Allowances.

In the Christmas story as it was told by Dickens over 100 years ago, he outlined the problems of his age, but he did it in the course of a story about a Christmas Day in England. He was a critic of the free enterprise system of the times and he demonstrated that system through the person of Scrooge. He indicated the people who were making the money for Scrooge through the family of Cratchitt; and the little crippled boy, Tim Cratchitt, who was part of the Cratchitt family, represented the poor, the weak, the outcasts of society in England at that time.

During this time the Members of the House of Commons and many people across Canada will rejoice again in the story. It is a great parable. It is done in modern literature, it is done on television, it is done as a movie, but basically it was a parable about the disparity which existed in English life 140 years or 150 years ago. In this week just prior to Christmas we are playing out in another form part of that story. We have around us the great evils of recession and unemployment which are biting into and injuring the families of so many Canadians, but here in the House of Commons we are discussing Family Allowances; one of the basic ways in which families can stay part and parcel of Canadian life, and this Bill is going to cut back in a regressive way the income of Canadian families.

We are discussing the children. Christmas is a children's time. These are the children who some day will sit in this House of Commons, the children who some day will take over the jobs in our country, the children who will build the economy of this land. They are the ones we are talking about today. These are the ones who will have to plan the pension plans for you and me and for a lot of other people. I have discussed pension plans with some of my nephews and nieces and they tell me they are not interested in planning pension plans for me.

At a time like this it is important that our children understand the importance of having all sectors of society well looked after, beginning with them. In the England of 150 years ago of which Dickens spoke, the beginning of the industrial revolution, there was no consideration whatsoever for the care of families built into the system. If you worked in a coal mine or factory at that time, you received a certain income. It did not matter whether you were married with ten children and supported a sick grandmother, there was just that one little salary. That free enterprise system never addressed the problem. It was only then that people in Government decided that that injustice really could not continue, that there would have to be some kind of a social system so that children, people who did not have a job, the aged and the sick would be looked after no matter what happened in the economic system. That happened because of visionaries, people who saw that the economic system could not address the problems of all people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I happen to be in my fifties and I suspect there are a lot of other people here in their fifties. My mother never received a Family Allowance cheque for me, but I do remember when the first Family Allowance cheque came into our family. It was a very important event, and it remained so every month afterwards because, as far as I can remember, it was the only money that my mother ever received directly for all the work she ever did in our family. I always look upon my family as one of the great privileges of my life. I come from an extremely happy home, one where there was great understanding and where we shared everything. But my mother never received any money directly except for this Family Allowance cheque, which made a difference in our family. It meant that we were sure in those difficult economic times that we were going to be receiving a certain amount of money each month on a certain day.

The basis of this idea, which was introduced by the CCF around 50 years ago, was to address those problems which became more clearly identified during the 1930s, problems similar to the ones identified by Dickens in his own time. So this legislation, which was finally brought in by the Liberal Government following World War II, is good, basic legislation in the sense that it addresses the needs of children and wives and mothers who receive no other basic income.

But today, Mr. Speaker, the kind of family life which I had the great privilege to grow up in is not shared by many people. I am not blaming anyone, but there has been a change in the basic moral and cultural values of our society so that today there are many families which are divided, and single parents are part and parcel of our society. I do not think there is a greater amount of happiness because of this, but it is part and parcel of our society. Because of that, the question of Family Allowances is much more important now than when there was a stable basic family unit. Today, because of so many changes in our society and in our times, it is extremely important to remember that the old family structure from which many of us come and want and hope for others is not present. That is a fact. So a change which will affect the income of single parents, mothers who are looking after one, two or three children on their own, somehow or other goes against the very basic principles that were set out by this House of Commons over the years for the protection of women, children and families.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that there are many people sitting on that side of the House who really do not believe that this six and five legislation being proposed should apply in the area of Family Allowances. I suspect that my colleagues over here in the Progressive Conservative benches likewise do not want to see it happen. It is eating away at the basic principle of universality, whether we like it or not. It seems to me that mobilization of six and five presumes that suddenly the world will become six and five. But it does not happen.

I have no children of my own, Mr. Speaker, so I do not have to buy a lot of things which mothers and fathers have to buy. Therefore, I do not really know the cost of a lot of things. However, I picked up the phone and called a few places to see how six and five is affecting mothers. I called a store to see about the cost of shoes. the salesperson told me that there was a minimum 10 per cent increase on children's shoes. I phoned a grocery store to find out about milk. Two litres of 2 per cent at $1.95, up from $1.79 on November 1, or 9 per cent. That is not six and five. Now, shoes in winter, milk every day, these are necessary things but they are not six and five. But it is Christmas time and winter time, and part of that for Canadians is skating in winter time. So I phoned a sporting goods store to see what the cost of a pair of skates is. Well, the man said that skates are up about 30 per cent from last year. That is not six and five. The six and five principle being used in all these Bills is to sort of mobilize the idea that inflation will be cut back. But then to put it on the backs of mothers, the unemployed, senior citizens and retired civil servants, to say that is where the cure is, is basically wrong.

So, Mr. Speaker, the reason we are protesting against the Bill is that we feel that a section of society, the Crachitts of the world, the underprivileged, are being used as a scapegoat to bring about something which is way beyond their control.

Now, if you remember the Christmas story, Scrooge was converted. Right now, during Christmas week, we still have the hope that the Scrooges across the way might be converted and realize that all this six and five being laid on the backs of the poor could easily be turned back. The Scrooges should listen to the ghost of election 1985.

An Hon. Member: Is that when it is?

Mr. Ogle: Well, I am not sure.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw my remarks to a close at this time by indicating that my party, as has been expressed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), will be seriously taking into consideration this amendment. We will support it because it is cutting off part of the whole procedure. Second, our caucus will be voting against Bill C-132 because we do not believe in playing Scrooge at Christmas time.

• (1640)

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973. Of course, we all know that it is another part of the six and five restraint program announced in the June budget.

We in the House may agree that Canada today is facing some very serious economic problems. We are facing a situation where the present Government of Canada has created the present economic situation. Its vast amounts of waste and expenditures have created a massive deficit that this year alone equals the total 1974 budget of the federal Government.

There is something fundamentally wrong when Members on all sides of the House are asked to address a reduction in Family Allowances to families in need. There are poor people in the country who depend upon the Family Allowance. Mothers in the low-income group look forward to these benefits. I am referring to single mothers; treaty Indians living on reserves, some of whom are in very abject poverty; our native people, some of whom are unemployed and living in real poverty situations. But the Government, with the support of backbench Liberal Members, introduces an attack on Family Allowances which go to these people in need. Something is wrong with the thinking of any Government which would allow this to happen.

Why did the Government not look at the Family Allowance Program and work in a system which would take these benefits away from people earning $30,000, $40,000, $50,000, $60,000 and $100,000 per year? Why in God's name would the Government not look at that situation and redirect the funds? In essence, it would save more than it will save by attacking people in need by reducing their Family Allowance benefits, reducing their expectations in terms of Family Allowance payments, or reducing the real purchasing power of those cheques by $5 and $10 per child over next year and the year after.

As Members of Parliament we represent constituents, the majority of whom are living on low incomes, yet the Government is attacking that group. It will not matter a whit that it introduces six and five on Family Allowance payments to families with incomes of $30,000 per year. It will not even be noticed by people earning $50,000, $60,000 or more per year. It will really affect families with net incomes below the poverty line. Those are the people who are being attacked.

Make no mistake about it, we will not hear a hue and cry from people in the upper, the middle-upper or middle-income levels. The hue and cry and hurt will be felt in low-income groups. I ask all Hon. Members to think about this for a minute. They should travel with me to Athabasca, Slave Lake, Paddle Prairie, East Prairie or Fort Chipewyan. In the case of Fort Chipewyan, its residents pay double the price for a quart of milk as those in the cities of Ottawa, Toronto, Edmonton or Vancouver. By introducing this six and five, the Government is taking away two or three quarts of milk per month from children of low-income families. There is something fundamentally wrong.

We must address the problems as they exist. Certainly we must restrain Government spending; I am in agreement with that. Why is the Government not looking to areas where it could actually save money without attacking people in the low-income levels? Every piece of legislation in the restraint program attacks elderly people, people on fixed incomes, people on Government pensions or senior citizens. We should be making every effort possible to ensure that they live out the remainder of their lives in comfort and without worry.

What does the Government do? It introduces legislation to cut back on the fixed incomes of some of our senior citizens, and we now see it attacking Family Allowances. I am not in agreement with the present structure of the Family Allowance. For example, I do not believe that my wife should be receiving a Family Allowance cheque from the federal Government when I am perfectly capable of handling the expenses in my home. Then we get into the universality of Family Allowances; yes, there is a real problem there. If we do not have a universal program, then we have somebody sitting there trying to determine whether a person is in need, is a worthy recipient, meets a means test or something like that. I do not agree with that either, but there is a middle-ground somewhere. Certainly, if we had co-operation in the House and sat down in an all-Party committee, we could come up with a solution to the problem.

There is no way that someone earning $40,000 or $50,000 per year should be receiving Family Allowance, but there is a real case to be made for families living in poverty or below the poverty line and for low middle-income earners. The $25 to $30 per child means that some children will drink milk, orange juice or perhaps have some fresh fruit. The Government is attacking families who cannot afford to lose $2, $3 or $4 per month per child over the next two years.

We have heard the Government described as Scrooge. I believe that the Government has serious difficulties; I truly believe it. When I look at its deficit figures and its runaway spending, they worry me. I think we have to be responsible, but there are ways to reduce the deficit and bring money into the coffers of the federal Government without attacking those people for which the Family Allowance was set up to help. Why is it that every policy in the restraint program hits hardest lower-income groups? Why is it not hitting the senior civil servants and some of the high-income earners in the country? Those people are willing to share, so why not take away or reduce the Family Allowance from the upper-income earners? The Government is wrong in proceeding in this way.

We should set up a tribunal or a House of Commons committee with a view to drafting legislation for the control of Crown corporations in order to examine those 300 or 350 corporations to find out how much money they are wasting. Let us determine whether they are accomplishing what they were set up to do. We should determine how much money is being spent on Crown corporations and how much of that money is being wasted. The Auditor General has said that the ability of the Crown corporations to run holus-bolus in the country without any controls has caused a hole in the pocket of the taxpayers of Canada. Indeed, it would appear that there could be collusion between Ministers of the Crown and Crown corporations so as to allow these Crown corporations to do as they see fit to meet the aims and objectives of either a Minister of the Crown or the corporation itself.

Let us remember that it is the taxpayers, including we as Members, who are paying for the Crown corporations' existence today. These corporations employ 263,000 people across Canada. Excluding the RCMP and the Armed Forces, there are more people employed by Crown corporations than by the federal Government itself. All Hon. Members in the House of Commons who represent the constituencies of taxpayers who are footing the bill have absolutely no control over those Crown corporations in which millions and millions of dollars are involved.

Instead, the Government introduces a six and five program that attacks the mothers, and the families in the low-income group by nailing them and reducing their Family Allowance by $3 or $4 per month over the next year and the year after. Where is the priority of this Government? I am sure that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) does not agree with this. I am sure that she would not agree without strongly voicing her opinion to her Liberal caucus.

As I have indicated, I believe that a reduction of $3 or $4 in Family Allowance benefits does not concern those earning in excess of $30,000 per year, but it does concern many of my constituents who live in isolated communities. I have visited some homes in those isolated communities. Believe me, there is no turkey for Christmas and there is no meat on the table. Last summer I visited an elderly lady in one of those isolated communities. She is a grandmother who is supporting three grandchildren on her pension and Family Allowance. Although she was supporting three children, she could not receive social services or welfare because she received a pension. I do not exaggerate for a moment when I say that there was not even a crust of bread in that house when I visited her. All that the children were eating was relish from a gallon jar that she was able to pick up. She could not afford any more since it was three days until her cheques arrived.

Those are the kinds of people we are allowing this misguided Government to attack when we permit it to cut back on Family Allowances for lower-income families. I see some Members smiling who believe that this is simply rhetoric. It is not rhetoric. This is exactly what is happening in the country. It is wrong and all Hon. Members know that it is wrong.

There is another way to deal with the problem. A system can be devised whereby the universality of the program can be maintained with those in the upper-income bracket being taxed 100 per cent on their Family Allowances. This money can be returned to the Government. When tax returns are submitted at the end of the year, it can be determined whether the taxpayer is entitled to the Family Allowance.

Let us provide the aid where it is needed. We should determine how much money can be saved from Crown corporations. As well, we should review our own operations in the House of Commons to determine what savings can be made here. One can see the waste that occurs here every day. One only has to walk up and down the halls of the House of Commons to see the thousands of dollars which could be saved every week on the amount of printed recycled paper which flows through my office and I am sure through the offices of all Hon. Members.

When a business gets into trouble and does not have enough revenue to cover its expenditures or to pay its bills, it looks at ways to cut back in all areas. It does not simply disregard areas which may only save $20 or $30 but considers everything. A business reviews its expenditures and then curtails its expenses. That is what we should be doing, determining how we can curtail expenses in every department. We cannot curtail expenses by attacking Family Allowances, particularly for those in the lower-income levels. Those families depend on that monthly cheque.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 21697).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am rather saddened to have to rise to speak to Bill C-132 and the motion which was moved by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). One would have thought by this time, considering the arguments made by Hon. Members in the House and by the groups which appeared before the Committee, that the case would be very clear to the Members on the Government side that this mad money grab is an act which should be stopped and considered quite disgraceful. This is the time of year when we look forward to joining with our friends and families. It is a time for children, a time when we reflect on the year past and what is coming up. It is the time when we reflect upon the values of our society, of ourselves as individuals, as family units, and as communities and neighbourhoods. It is not the time of year when the Government ought to be trying to jam legislation through the House to grab money out of the hands of the mothers and children of Canada. If there is a Scrooge in this country today, it would have to be considered as being the Minister of National, Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

Mr. Nielsen: The Grinch.

Mr. Riis: Here is an individual who is presumably suggesting that the mothers and children of Canada are some of the critical inflation creators in this country, or that, by cutting back on the income to children, we can make significant savings for the Government of Canada.

Let us examine those two premises. First, we find that the amount of money that we are considering, in 1982 terms, amounts to $26.91 per month per child. In other words, the children of Canada receive a cheque through their mothers, on a monthly basis, up until age 18, for $26.91. The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that this must change, that we must reduce the money going to mothers and children in Canada. I would ask, why on earth would anyone put forward that proposal?

We hear from Hon. Members opposite and the Minister herself that, well, this is part of the Government machete to hack away at inflation in this country and that, in fact, by introducing the six and five program to Family Allowances in Canada, it will cause a significant dint in the rate of inflation. Does anyone really believe that the mothers in Canada, who receive $26.91 a month for each child, represent that group in society which has created and fueled this inflationary rate?

When one considers the statistics put forward by Statistics Canada, one finds that 900,000 children in this country are living below the poverty line as defined by the Government. The mothers of Canada and their 6.7 million children under the age of 18 have not created inflation in this country. If we are serious about the inflation creators, we must start considering some of the sloppy Government spending which the Auditor General brought to our attention a few days ago. We must also consider Government agencies which have now been unquestionably identified as the major creators of inflation and which have allowed increases to occur far beyond the rate of inflation, far beyond the typical wage and salary settlements of workers across this country. We must consider how the banks fell over themselves in the pell-mell rush to encourage people to spend and to borrow in the late seventies, in 1980 and in 1981 and, as a result, made massive profits, embarrassingly large profits, and then said, of course, that it was in our best interests to have interest rates of 20 per cent to 22 per cent. They said that was the best thing to happen to Canadians, that same year that the banks of Canada made such massive profits.

We must consider the corporations which borrowed beyond their means and, indeed, individual Canadians who borrowed beyond their means, jumping at a chance to expand their operations without having the necessary capital-debt ratio in hand. I suspect that many of us in the House know of individuals who ran out and borrowed beyond their means to cash in on this inflationary mad dash in an effort to make quick profits. Among these were real estate operators who were flipping properties, daily in some cases and weekly in others. These were the individuals who fueled the rate of inflation, not the mothers and children of Canada.

For the life of me, I cannot imagine why on earth the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be fighting inflation on the backs of Canada's mothers and children. However, I suppose one could make the case, if one stretched logic to unimaginable limits, that, indeed, by capping the increases on Family Allowance payments and by readjusting the Child Tax Credit limit, it would save the Government of Canada money.

However, when one carefully considers the data and calculates what savings will accrue to the Government of Canada, it becomes very interesting. The reduction in Family Allowances will indeed save the Government $320 million over the next two years. However, the increase in the Child Tax Credit will cost the treasury $250 million. If one also calculates the tax loss which will result in the reduced incomes based on the Family Allowance cutbacks, one finds that, indeed, there will be a tax loss to the Government of Canada amounting to about $60 million over the two-year period. Calculated together, we find this six and five capping on Family Allowance will save the Government $10 million over the next two years. That is the financial saving, $10 million over the next two years! That is the price of the wings of one F-18, the value of keeping three or four Senators in place, or the cost of one of the small grants to the multinational oil companies.

One could go on and on concerning the ways and means of seeing this $10 million saving in some context. Good grief! The Government probably spends that amount in three or four weeks on advertising or propaganda, yet that is not where we are seeing the cutbacks. We are not seeing the cutbacks in areas where Government spending could be drastically reduced. Yet we are seeing the Government cutting back on the money going to Canada's mothers and children.

It becomes obvious, then, that the six and five inflation argument is invalid, that the mothers of Canada have not created inflation. If we consider the savings to Government argument, we find that that no longer is appropriate. Obviously, a $10 million savings is hardly reason to bring this kind of program into place. One must closely consider the rhetoric we have heard, particularly from Hon. Members opposite. They say: "We must all share in this six and five program together; it is something we are asking all Canadians to embrace". It is one thing to ask a person with an income of $90,000 to participate in the six and five program, but quite another to ask a single parent trying to raise two or three children and not receiving any decent maintenance payments to restrict her income as well.

The participation in the six and five program of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, herself or any other Minister, will only result in an increase of their salaries next year of $5,400. How many mothers in this country would love to have that as a total package? I think the greatest irony of all is evident when one considers one of the individuals who has been touring the country, talking up the benefits of the six and five program and the need for sharing and caring together, Mr. Ian Sinclair, the chairman of the board of Canadian Pacific Enterprises. He said: "I will volunteer as well; I am prepared to reduce my salary next year to only a 6 per cent increase". For him, of course, that will mean that he will receive an increase of $46,000 next year. But he is prepared to share.

There is no fairness in the way this program has been introduced. Certainly, one can say that as a result of this unfairness, it is the lowest blow of all. It is the lowest political blow that a Government could conflict to ask those who are powerless in terms of lobby groups and so on, those who do not have an effective voice in Parliament in many respects, the children of Canada, to bear this kind of burden.

However, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said: You should not be too concerned, those of you who are opposed to this particular Bill, because we are going to give a $50 bonus in 1983, an increase in the Child Tax Credit; just for one year we are going to give that $50. When one looks again carefully at what that means to the average mother receiving Family Allowance payments for her children, it will result, when calculated, in an increase in 1983 of $34 a year; but in 1984 it will result in a loss of $35 per child on a permanent basis. In 1985 it will be a $38 loss per child, and in 1986 a $41 loss per child.

The question has to be asked, will full indexing ever reappear? What happens after 1985? Are we going to see the reintroduction of full indexing? Of course, there is no promise that that will necessarily happen. There is nothing in the Bill that would give that assurance. What about the Child Tax Credit of $50? Are we actually going to see a $50 increase in 1983? That $50 increase requires that Bill C-139 must pass in its entirety and it has barely been introduced in this House. So really the Minister is asking us to buy a pig in a poke. She says they are going to get a $50 increase, but in fact only if that legislation is reintroduced in the House, goes through all the stages, remains intact and passes some time in 1983.

I think one of the most moving experiences that we have had, looking at this particular Bill, was when we heard the various groups come before the committee and give their testimony, to try to bring some sense to the Members of this Government, to indicate clearly what the impact of Bill C-132 would be. I was particularly moved by one piece of testimony, and I want to read just a small part of it. A woman said: "We also need to keep in mind the number of families who have separated, not officially and on paper, but who are living on their own with their children. They may have no maintenance payments, any money they get may be very sporadic, and they are in great difficulty because they do not qualify for any other social benefit program because on paper they are still married and thereby should be receiving part of the father's income, though they may not be receiving any money at all.

We also hear that women in a household receiving Family Allowance presently with spouses maybe in the $40,000 or $50,000 range do not have any financial problems. Again I want to point out a portion of another piece of testimony:

—you cannot assume that because a husband is well off, his wife is well off. If the husband makes $40,000 a year, it could be that the wife is living in poverty; legally, she has no right to the money her husband is making at all, while they are married. This is the law of Canada. Every province in Canada says the husband has to support his wife at home, but he does not have to give her any cash—except in Manitoba where she can have pocket money.

Mr. Speaker, this is the time when as older Canadians our thoughts turn to children and grandchildren and future children. I know as a parent with young children, seeing the costs that accrue today to keep children in winter boots, mitts, winter jackets and hats, and to keep them prepared for their studies at school, they always have to have a little extra here and there. For so many families today that really count on that Family Allowance cheque arriving to get them through the month, even if this Bill results in a single dollar reduction in Family Allowance, that is going to be catastrophic in many family circumstances.

I am thinking of the argument that Members have put forward that with the Child Tax Credit mothers will get $350 at the end of the year. The point is that there are so many families now in this country on unemployment insurance benefits. Many are on walfare because they do not qualify for UI benefits, or they have exhausted UI benefits and cannot wait until the end of the year after they file their tax returns to get these few hundred dollars. That money is not going to make any difference; they need the money now. As a result, as my hon. friend from the Kootenays indicated, people in this country, now more than ever before, are receiving hand-outs from churches and from various giving agencies and societies. It is a tragic situation for tens of thousands of Canadian families, and especially for the tens of thousands of Canadian families where there is only a single parent.

At a time when the families of Canada have never been under so much strain, when mothers are struggling in so many cases just to provide the very basic necessities for their children, when this is the time of year when our thoughts turn to brotherhood, to sharing, caring, loving, this Government is bringing in legislation that is going to be taking money out of the hands of Canada's mothers and children forever. In spite of what many Members opposite have indicated, the base rate on which deindexing will occur for the rest of time will be lower than before the six and five program was introduced. What we are saying is that the mothers and children of Canada will be receiving less support from their Family Allowance payments forever as a result of this callous, thoughtless and uncaring piece of legislation.

We are going to be voting against this particular Bill, and we are going to be speaking against it for as long as we can. In the few hours before us between now and Christmas, I ask Members opposite to think of what this Bill is doing. It is not going to reduce the rate of inflation in this country; it is not going to save the Government money; it is not a fair program. Would some Member opposite please explain why we need to introduce this program now, before Christmas, or at all?

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat ashamed that in 1982, in a country with the resources that we have, that I have to stand up and defend Family Allowances, the universality of Family Allowances and the whole principle that the children of Canada should take priority in this country for Government expenditures.

I would like to consider why we are in this position. The situation, I think, was signalled approximately a year ago when a parliamentary delegation went to Europe and I had the pleasure of being with that delegation to visit a number of European organizations. One of those organizations was the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. I suppose the signal was given then, and maybe I was remiss at the time in not really seeing the significance of the presentations that were given to us by people associated with the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

One of the things we were told at that time was that for Canadian, U.S. and West German workers in the western industrialized nations, the benefit packages were too rich. We were told we ought to consider our role with regard to world competition and how those benefits affect the prices of commodities in world trade. Those packages which include holidays, benefits for health care and working conditions were not the cause of unemployment in the western world.

Today some nations have taken action to reduce those benefits to workers. We must consider whether those benefits such as pensions, holidays, working conditions and Family Allowances led to the decline in trade in the western world or whether there were other factors.

Who is controlling the destiny of workers in the western world, Canada in particular? Is it Government, Government policy, the financial institutions which are becoming so powerful, or the multinational corporations which have access to and expenditure of capital? Is it the Federal Reserve Bank in the United States or the Bank of Canada which has led to the situation where Members of Parliament are now in this House to debate whether the Family Allowance increases should be kept to six and five over the next two years? Is it Government policy or is the policy which led to the high unemployment in the western world a policy generated in the United States by the Federal Reserve Bank and the administration there, supported in Canada by the Conservative and Liberal Governments?

That interest rate policy has driven a great number of businesses into bankruptcy, caused massive unemployment and the loss of homes, farms and fishing vessels. That policy, which was to cool inflation by high interest rates and monetarism, has carried western nations, including Canada, to the point that we now have such difficulty that we do not know how to balance budgets and put people back to work. In fact, we are starting to attack those least responsible for inflation more than anyone else.

I have talked about the old age pensioners whose pensions will be deindexed over the next two years to six and five. As well, we are attacking the retired public servants, RCMP personnel and Armed Forces personnel who paid for their pensions and made extra contributions. The Government is attacking them because it does not know where else to go. Obviously the federal Government has no indication and cannot indicate to Canadians how long we will be faced with high inflation and high unemployment.

Bills C-131, 132 and 133 have attacked the basis of social programs in this country. They have put into question the principle of universality which this Party fought for and so adamantly supports.

Public servants were the first to feel the wrath of the federal Government under Bill C-124. Their salary increases were capped at six and five with the whole-hearted support of the Conservative Party. The atmosphere in Canada allows Governments to attack programs which in the past have been very beneficial in an electoral sense to the Liberal Party. They were brought in at the insistence of the public and in some cases at the insistence of the New Democratic Party in a minority Government situation.

I sense in my riding a certain amount of support for the six and five program. That is because people are afraid of losing their jobs. They have gained the impression that the only way out of the situation is for Canadians to sacrifice even more. It is not bad enough that we have 15 per cent unemployment in the area I represent or a national average of 12.7 per cent. What is even worse is that those who are employed are afraid of losing their jobs. They are rightfully afraid because of growing unemployment in this nation.

In my Province of British Columbia there are an estimated 100,000 people on social assistance and far more than that are unemployed. There is a growing fear in Canada, caused by high unemployment, high inflation and uncertainty, about the plans of this Government to alleviate the problem.

There is a willingness and an acceptance of the fact that by and large public servants do get too much money, that their salaries should be controlled, that senior citizens do not need total indexation any longer and that Family Allowances are no longer as important as they once were. Mothers who count on the Family Allowance cheque will have to sacrifice in this battle against inflation. We are proud that there is a willingness in our communities to create employment through makeshift and temporary programs. They are making the best of the little bit of money that goes into those communities which suffer very high unemployment.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) likes to indicate that unemployment is coming down because of the six and five program. Inflation is not coming down because of some mythical six and five program which only affects those segments of society such as public servants, Family Allowance recipients and old age pensioners. The six and five program is not working because of the Government's advertising campaign. It is working because the forest industry in British Columbia and the mining and manufacturing industries across this country are on their knees. there is massive unemployment and a massive lack of confidence in the Canadian economy. Those who are lucky enough to be working are putting their money in the bank and saving it because they are uncertain about their job security. We have a recession, if not a depression, in this country.

I am not sure whether the Government knows how to get out of it. The six and five program is simply a PR gesture to satisfy those who are unemployed. It wants them to think it is doing something. However, it is not creating employment or confidence.

The amendment to Bill C-132 before us will be supported by my Party, not because it is all that important and gives the Government one year on this program, but because it might be a slight improvement to the Bill.

This attack on universality and on Family Allowances could only come about now because Canadians are grasping at anything to improve the economy of this country and the situation in their households. It could never have been imposed by this Government unless Canadians had such fear that it would not go away. I am somewhat surprised at my colleagues to my right whose amendment we will be supporting. I am surprised at the lack of force with which they are fighting this Bill.

I saw the Conservatives stand up and protect the rights of the multinational corporations, and the bells in this House rang for 15 days. They made horrendous noises about how dictatorical the legislation before us was, and in fact made some improvement in terms of having a very massive energy Bill split up because of their determination to protect the profits of their friends in the oil industry. Certainly, that is something which they can use this House to do, and they did it well. I saw last week similar actions to protect the agri-business in Canada under Canagrex, and through points of privilege the Conservative Party was able to delay and waste two days of the time of the House. I hardly see the same kind of determination on Bills C-131, C-132 or C-133, which Bills they are supposedly opposing, but really they are not making any concerned effort to support those witnesses who came before committee to indicate what the damage to the recipients of Family Allowances, old age pensions and superannuates' pensions would be. I do not see the same determination from the Conservative Party regarding that. They are giving some lip service to supporting universality of these programs, however, they are really not too serious about it. Their position, I think, was adequately indicated on Bill C-124 on Public Service wages and in their eargerness to have those capped at six and five. Therefore, I do not think they are really fooling anyone in this Party as to their real motives on these particular Bills.

The Family Allowances which goes to mothers is used by them to provide for young children, whether in the form of food or clothing, or maybe even to provide their children with some social experience they would otherwise not be able to have. I think it is important that children in our country be not only well fed, well clothed and well sheltered, but it is important for them to have some experiences, whether cultural or recreational in terms of sports or arts and crafts. Mothers should be able to have within their own income some access to money to provide an opportunity to take their children to swimming lessons, or art lessons outside of school, and to provide those kinds of experiences which children of parents with higher incomes accept as something natural in their homes. That is not always true of low-income families. It is certainly not true of single-parent families where mothers, if they are working, are normally not in highly paid occupations and have to scrape any kinds of money they can together to provide for their children. The principle of universality in Family Allowances is something that we in this House of Commons should not have to be debating. It should be sacrosanct. The mother's allowance, which is basically the only income she has in many cases, goes to the upbringing of her children.

I would just say, Mr. Speaker, that I will be very pleased to stand up and vote against Bill C-132. I will be supporting the amendment that is before us, although I am not enamoured with it or its intentions, or its eventual contribution if, indeed, accepted, but at this time the Government has an opportunity to change its mind on Bill C-132. It is not a Bill which is going to gain a great deal of revenue for the Government, but it is going to do irreparable harm to the principle of universality and it jeopardizes the whole concept of universality, not only for Family Allowances, but for pensions. And if the Government gets away with the Bill before us now, there is nothing to stop it from whittling away at other social programs and cutting back on expenditures just at a time when this society needs these programs to support families, senior citizens and all Canadians. I would implore the Government to reconsider what it is about to do under Bill C-132.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to speak this afternoon.

An Hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Collenette: I notice that the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party are charging me with being part of a filibuster, but we have just listened to three or four NDP Members in a row. It had not been my intention to speak, but after listening to such gall and hypocrisy from the NDP I felt compelled to get on my feet.

Mr. Smith: The truth must come out.

Mr. Collenette: We are prepared to vote on this measure, Mr. Speaker. We are prepared to vote on it before six o'clock. We are prepared to vote on it at eight o'clock. But, obviously, the NDP is trying to prolong matters.

An Hon. Member: Of course we are.

Mr. Collenette: They are force-feeding Canadians with a lot of drivel, and it is time someone got up and refuted it, and I hope some of my colleagues will do the same, if they persist this evening. First of all, we have had the allegorical meanderings of people like the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) going back to Dickensian England. To compare Dickensian England with Canada today is absolute nonsense. In Dickensian England they did not have universal medicare. They did not have universal old age pensions or family benefits. They did not have a generous system of unemployment insurance benefits.

An Hon. Member: They did not have Liberals, either.

Mr. Collenette: I am waiting for the Hon. Members of the NDP to start talking about poor houses and forced labour, and the chimney sweep going down the chimneys at the age of eight. This is what they are trying to sell Canadians on.

Mr. Nielsen: You will get us there.

Mr. Collenette: What they are trying to sell Canadians on, Mr. Speaker, is that conditions in Canada are much worse than they really are. We have a serious economic crisis. We have real problems in this country. But for the Opposition Parties to use such hysteria, such hyperbole, as they are doing in the debate on Bill C-132 on Family Allowances is really to do a disservice, I believe, to Canadians. I think it is about time that some Hon. Members in this House set the record straight. We heard from the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East, a great man, a great humanitarian. I have great respect for him, but he had the unmitigated gall to say that family breakdown in Canada today is due to the six and five program—

An Hon. Member: He did not say that. You were not listening again.

Mr. Collenette: —which is only just now being implemented. I agree with him that there has been a breakdown in family life in Canada in the post-war era, and it is something that we all lament, but what it had to do with, Mr. Speaker, is the inflationary avarice, which we are trying to end by the six and five program. It is the rapid rise in expectations, the inflationary psychology, which has contributed a lot to social instability in this country, and we are trying to rectify that by the six and five program.

The Hon. Member who spoke last—I think he represents Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller)—at least was honest and admitted on the record that his constituents support this program. I would submit that his constituents are somewhat more intelligent than he is, because they realize that the six and five program is essential to reduce inflation and to try to restore some economic balance in this country.

The Members of the NDP talk about universality. We have dealt with this red herring throughout this debate. This Bill has nothing whatsoever to do with universality. Universality is not under attack. Not at all. What will happen, Mr. Speaker, is that next June, on the anniversary of the six and five program being announced in this House, we will see inflation down to 6 per cent. The recipients of Family Allowances and old age pensions will not have lost anything because inflation will have been brought down to the 6 per cent level.

Now they say: why introduce it? Because, Mr. Speaker, the Government had to show a way of bringing inflation down. How could we do it? The only means at our disposal, without provoking needless confrontations with the Provinces and other elements of Canadian society, was to show the way in our own jurisdiction as best we could. If any of the Members opposite can tell me next June that women and children in this country have suffered as the result of the six and five program because inflation will be down to 5 per cent, then they are better than I.

Inflation is coming down, Mr. Speaker. The Governor of the Bank of Canada gave a speech in the last couple of weeks where he said that inflation is now running at about 8.5 per cent. That is only about 2.5 per cent away from the 6 per cent. We will be there next June, Mr. Speaker, because in fact inflation is coming down more rapidly than we thought. The six and five program is being adopted by the private sector across this land. It is being adopted in the daily lives of individuals. People are restraining their expectations.

Now let us talk about the universality aspect from another angle. I said this is not a debate about universality, but the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has talked about universality and he does not want it in social programs. He is at odds with his Leader who has been stomping across this country saying the Progressive Conservative Party does not believe in ending universality. But one of his own Members this afternoon has just torn that to shreds. This is again an example of the Official Opposition being at odds with itself. It is another example of their having two or three policy positions, pulling them out of their hip pocket and delivering them in speeches depending on their audience. That is what the Conservative Party is doing, not just on the six and five program but on every issue in the country. They are pandering to the biases of respective communities. They are not consistent in their logic. They hope to form a government on that? My goodness, I would think that the Canadian public has more intelligence than to accept that kind of faulty logic.

However, Mr. Speaker, while we have the spectre of the Official Opposition arguing against this program, in the amendment before us at report stage we see that there has been tacit acceptance. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has accepted the 6 per cent solution. Then why not, Mr. Speaker, continue it to its logical conclusion and make sure inflation is squeezed even more by continuing this program for another year? In fact, I would give some of my time to the Hon. Member for Calgary West to stand up and defend his logic. I know he has spoken once, but with unanimous consent let him try and defend his faulty logic.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in my speech I made it clear that my Party would vote against 6 per cent at third reading stage; because of procedural limitations we could only deal with the 5 per cent year—in report stage. We are encouraging Liberal backbenchers to get rid of the 5 per cent year because it will be 1984. We do not know what the economic situation will be in 1984, and surely the other side should have enough conscience to take that uncertainty away. We intend to vote against the 6 per cent and the 5 per cent on third reading.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to give a preview of our new rule changes by yielding the floor to the Hon. Member to allow him to demonstrate some true cut and thrust, but all we got was just a flapping in the air. The Hon. Member did not defend his logic. He said he was going to vote against six and five at third reading stage, yet in this amendment he wants to restrict it to one year. I do not see the logic. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is accusing me of a filibuster but it is quite obvious that a Member of his own Party is seriously engaging in meaningful debate on this particular issue. I think it is rather insulting for his House Leader to accuse me of filibustering and thereby intimidating his own Members from getting up to participate in this debate. Shame on him.

Mr. Nielsen: You will not let us vote.

Mr. Collenette: Shame on him. I do not think I need to speak any longer, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: I have made my point. I have always noticed in my years in the Chamber, Mr. Speaker, that when you provoke a storm on the other side it is because the point that you are making is hitting the truth.

Mr. Riis: Remember why you jumped up, David.

Mr. Collenette: If I was talking a bunch of nonsense, if I had nothing to contribute, there would be silence in the Chamber. It is obvious that we have them on the defensive because of the faulty logic which has been used in this debate.

Anyway, to summarize, the six and five program is the best damn program to come along in a long time. It is the first step in economic recovery in this country.

Mr. Riis: Talk about Family Allowances, Dave.

Mr. Collenette: It in itself will not do the trick. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of the Government have acknowledged that, and that is why we had the economic statement on October 27; that is why we will have a budget in the new year as well as a speech from the Throne. The six and five program is but the first step to economic recovery in this country. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, when I spoke earlier on second reading, the Opposition Parties do not want the six and five program to succeed. The NDP in particular thrive in an inflationary society. You know why? They have no concept of economic reality. They have never been in a position of government in this country and are never likely to be. So they can throw good economics to the wind. They do not have to think about responsible economic policy.

Miss Jewett: You do not know anything about the West.

Mr. Collenette: It is because they thrive—listen to this roar, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: We are trying to drown out the drivel.

Mr. Collenette: It is because I have hit a sore point.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member, in the spirit of parliamentary reform to which we both subscribe as Members of the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, would submit to a question?

Mr. Irwin: Take the easy ones first.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware, given his remarks about the NDP never having been in government, that there have been NDP governments in B.C., Manitoba and Saskatchewan—

Mr. Cullen: All defeated.

Mr. Blaikie: —and whether or not he might want to repent of this particular Ontario view of reality.

Mr. Collenette: I am glad the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) asked a question because it just substantiates the point I have made. He has resorted to the picayune to point out—

Miss Jewett: Picayune?

Mr. Collenette: —to point out a mere oversight. Obviously the NDP has been in power in some of the Provinces. I was talking about the federal Government. But the fact that they have picked up on that small oversight just substantiates my position. I defy the Hon. Member to ask a substantive question about what I have said in my speech. Let him stand up and ask a decent and intelligent question.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, first of all it is the first time in my life I have been called picayune. Secondly, if I could find anything of substance in the Hon. Member's speech, I would have asked a substantive question.

Mr. Collenette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is about time that I wrapped this up.

• (1750)

Mr. Collenette: I do not think Hon. Members know what they are doing to me. Here we have the whole phalanx of the NDP. If only our viewers at home were permitted by the rules to see this panoply of tired Socialists imbedded in the rhetoric of the 1930s who are not willing to face the challenges of the 1980s. If the people at home could see this tired group, they would know that the policies advocated by the Government in this program and in this Bill are the only sane and rational ones, and that the Opposition in this country is flailing around. It is not really serious about attacking our policies. It is making small points—I call them picayune—but it does not address the major issues: to get inflation down, to get Canadians back to work, and to get the economy going again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, if the previous speaker suggested that there was a particular Party here interested in sandbagging, holding up or otherwise blocking this Bill and that it was the New Democratic Party, he was absolutely right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: He accused us of lack of idealism, vision, lack of imagination, lack of brains, lack of everything. From where I come, in terms of the Liberal Party there is a distinct lack of Members. It is because of his expression of attitudes like this that there are no Liberal Members in the West. There is no one in the West, as far as he is concerned, who is not picayune.

Tragically, on every street corner in this festive season—and he talked about getting people back to work—as we indulge in lights, Christmas trees, Christmas cards and Christmas cheer, we find in virtually every community across the land that radio stations and newspapers are launching plaintive yet urgent appeals for help for the very people that Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133 are designed to cripple. This what the Liberal Party is doing, and everyone should know it.

An Hon. Member: They are Grinches.

Mr. Rose: I do not know about that. I am sorry the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) is not here, but let me point out that appeals have been made frequently over the radio by the same right-wing hotliners who fought every progressive attempt to build a social system in the country so that the poor could at least reach up to the poverty line. They fight all year, every year, against progressive social legislation, and then they get on the air at Christmastime and beg for charity. They beg and beg and beg because they do not believe in Government intervention or Government intrusion into these matters. They would rather go into an orgy at Christmastime of giving, and guilt-tripping, begging and saying what nice fellows they are. Yet when it comes to supporting a social system that would prevent poverty, unrest, unsettlement, tragedy, crime and all other things which plague society, they are not there then as they do not believe in social support systems because there is no money in it.

What they really need to remember is that problems exist in our social system which private enterprise or private charity, no matter how well-intentioned, cannot solve. They have not learned that yet. I hope they will learn it by suffering along with the people who are frequently held down by their archaic attitude.

There are Sally Ann officers in front of every liquor store, there are Santa Clauses on every street corner ringing their bells for donations to help the needy, and tonight ironically the House has chosen these festive days to cut back on the old, young, weak and unorganized. We shouldn't be proud of ourselves for that, all in the name of beating back inflation! What nonsense, what drivel.

The general public knows what it is like out there. The people whom I represent, and the people whom Members on both sides of the House represent, know how tough times are. They need a little encouragement and leadership from their Government. When it comes to their own personal donations, commitments and generosity, they are right there. I did a little checking today; I did some telephoning. While the Liberals are cutting back on Family Allowances, which is often a major source of income most women have, the Salvation Army has found that its street contributions are up 30 per cent over last year and that its mail-in contributions are up 38 per cent. The Scrooges over there are cutting everyone back by 5 per cent. People instinctively know that if their Government is cutting them back, they have to give, through their own resources and initiatives, not because of any drive or advertising, gifts to the Salvation Army rather than Christmas gifts to one another. Donors should be congratulated for it.

Let us put that in the light of what we are doing with the three Bills which we have been debating for the last couple of weeks. My Party will not let them through before Christmas; we are determined not to let them through before Christmas if there is anything physically we can do to prevent their passage. The United Way, on a national level, indicated that its contributions are up 5 per cent over last year but that in places like Ottawa, where the recession has not hit quite as hard, they are up 20 per cent and 30 per cent, while total corporate donations have not increased at all. Representatives of the Kamloops food branch, according to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), indicated that it is going very well. The food bank cannot qualify as a complete success, but many people are donating food and money. The sponsors are really pleased that they are getting such a tremendous and positive response. The community services of Mission City in my constituency reported as late as Friday that its donations are running at $1 per capita, which is more than double the giving of last year. More support is desperately needed.

Mr. Benjamin: They cannot get to everyone.

Mr. Rose: Charities certainly cannot get to everyone, and no one should pretend for one minute that they can. We should congratulate those people who give their money, talent, effort and energy so that others with less can have more. While they give more generously, why should the Government be so cringingly parsimonious? It should not. It is unacceptable.

It is fair to admit, as the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) said, that there is probably not a great deal of fuss being generated by the deindexing of the OAS or Family Allowances. In fairness, we should be prepared to admit that there has not been a great deal of fuss. I think there are a couple of reasons for the silence. One reason is that people who receive Family Allowances and old age pensions will get a raise in January. The only difference is that it will not be as big as it should be. They will not really know what happened to them because they have not taken the time, nor are they able in many instances, to study what the differences will be to them as individuals. Further, they will not know until it catches up with them. Nobody told them that they were supposed to get $10 or $11 more next year and that they will only get $6. No one told them, but they will find out.

The second reason is that there has been a very strong propaganda battle launched against indexing itself over the last number of years. I think there is a powerful lobby led by some political interests. I think there is also an investment lobby and an insurance lobby, financed by those people who control the investment plans and the private pension plans. These interests do not want indexing because they would be forced to provide it in their plans. They have mounted a tremendous attack on indexing. I think some people have responded to this lobby and feel that if indexing is not illegal perhaps it is only slightly immoral. These are two reasons there has been no real, large public outcry so far over what the Government is attempting to do—to scapegoat low income people.

I would like to develop that subject in somewhat greater depth, if I may now call it six o'clock and reappear here in a later reincarnation at eight o'clock this evening.

Family Allowances Act, 1973

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock and the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) requiring two hours in order to reincarnate himself, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at 6 p.m., the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) had the floor.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise, again after being interrupted by the dinner hour, to the thunderous applause of my caucus behind me.

What I was attempting to say earlier is that I agree that there has not been a massive outcry against the deindexing of the various pensions, perhaps with the exception of the Public Service pensions. I was advancing the argument that I believe the outcry did not occur for two reasons. First, parents or pensioners have not yet realized what has happened to them and therefore they are unaware of the consequences. Second, I believe that there has been a somewhat powerful and significant lobby operating against indexation in Canada which has fostered the belief that indexing is somehow unclean or perhaps even mildly immoral.

I think that the savage attacks on the indexed pension plans by open-line hosts, employers and others, are shoddy and fraudulent. I believe that full indexation is crucial because without it our incomes would fall in proportion to the inflation rate. I first learned about the word indexing from Robert Stanfield when he was the Leader of the Tory Party. He recognized, as did his Party, that unless indexation was provided each year, incomes would fall in proportion to the inflation rate, which is unfair. Simply put, without indexing, the dollar that I or my constituent received last year is really only worth 90 cents this year since the inflation rate is running at approximately 10 per cent. In five short years, with the value of a person's dollar being reduced by 10 per cent, the dollar would only be worth 65 cents. This means that the dollar is shrinking to the point where people earning the same income fail to receive the same purchasing power. Therefore, I am opposed to deindexing on a matter of principle.

Indexation is the only way one can protect oneself from the ravages of inflation. That is why I and my Party are absolutely opposed to the Government's capping proposals under Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133.

The main argument against indexed pensions seems to stem from the opinion that while Public Service pensions, whether federal, provincial or through Crown Corporations pensions, are indexed, the majority of private pension plans are not. I suggest that this is no valid argument for being against indexing. First, approximately half of working Canadians do not have any pension other than the Canada Pension Plan or the old age pension. The majority of the other half of working Canadians are working in the private sector and are denied indexed pensions. Rather than wiping out indexing in the public sector, I believe that Parliament should be making a pronounced effort to require indexing to apply in the private plans. I do not believe in the logic that, since indexation exists in the public sector and not in the private sector, it should be eliminated from the public sector. Instead, we should be encouraging indexation in the private sector. This is where the problem presents itself. Many private pension plans exist on an actuarial assumption that if one spends his entire working life investing in the high cost dollars, due to inflation, one should happily retire and be paid back, in cheap dollars. We do not believe that that is acceptable or equitable.

I do not want to involve you in this, Mr. Speaker, but I can see that you accept the logic of my argument. If I cannot convince any of the Members across the aisle, I am quite certain that I have reached you and the general public. I am pleased that you have nodded sagely in this matter, as you do in your rulings on many occasions.

I am concerned that this Family Allowance legislation is not an isolated example. The Family Allowance legislation, Bill C-132, which we are debating tonight, is only one in a package which includes the deindexation to 6 per cent of Old Age Security, the Family Allowance and the public service pension.

The first and probably least publicized Bill, C-131, deals with people on old age pensions, such as my mother. My mother does not receive the supplement.

Mr. Benjamin: Or the Family Allowance.

Mr. Rose: My friend says nor the Family Allowance, but that is irrelevant. The full impact of the 6 per cent limitation on old age pensions next year has not hit pensioners yet. In 1984, the pension of senior citizens will be cut back by $77. The following year it could be $219. This is a total cutback of approximately $300.

When we consider that the base pension has been diminished, when indexation is reintroduced following this two-year period—there is no assurance that it will happen—we will see that senior citizens will have lost a total of approximately $1,000 per family. Of the approximately 2 million people on Old Age Security, over half receive the supplement. In this light, one can readily appreciate that this program will cause great difficulties for close to a million people, and not just a few thousand.

Let me return to the Family Allowance legislation. The Family Allowances will be given the same treatment as old age pensions. There has been some kite-flying that there will not be a means test openly applied to the universal Family Allowance; it will continue to be paid to everyone who has children, regardless of income. However, what are the results of capping the increases in Family Allowances in 1983 and 1984? If you face an increase in the cost of shoes for your children of $10, you will receive $6 to help meet that cost. For many people who depend almost entirely on Family Allowance—not entirely but, rather, immeasurably—capping is, in a time of inflation, a very severe blow. Therefore, if shoes for the children cost $10 more next year and one only receives $6 in terms of one's increase to meet that cost, that will mean, according to the figures of our research department, a total of $102 for a family with two children over the next two years. Who is the person who will be hit most by that, the single parent? Perhaps it will be the low income people, of all kinds, some of whom are native people in Indian reservations, and it is at this group that the Government is stricking. Therefore, it is another example of hitting the poor. It is not the poor who fill out income tax forms for tax credit, by and large. Some of those people cannot fill out any form. Some people do not have either the knowledge or the counselling to assist them in applying for the tax credit. Anyway, this is the second element in the package.

The other element in the package involves hitting the retired public servant. I would like to tell Your Honour of someone who has been affected by circumstances which are very dear to your heart. We received a letter from a retired public servant in a community known as Maple Ridge, which I represent. This man has served his community, not only in his capacity as a civil servant but also as a volunteer, with great distinction. He wrote, "Over the years I contributed 6.5 per cent of my salary, plus 1 per cent for special funds, to cover the cost of indexing." To me, he wrote, "This is a breaking of faith. This is a breaking of contract, and this is the kind of thing that makes me very cynical of my government".

I would like to tell Your Honour in the one minute remaining to me that we will oppose this Bill for all the reasons we have discussed. This cut against the poor, the old and the unorganized will not bring inflation down, any more than will the admission of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last night when he said, "I do not think that our job creation program will bring unemployment down". Therefore, what I am asserting here is that what the Government is doing here is scapegoating. What we should be doing, when, for example, one out of 13 people in my Province is facing welfare this winter, is to provide a massive job producing program so that people can get to work, pay taxes and collect wages instead of welfare. Then they would begin to purchase again and contribute to society. This is a much worthier objective than cutting their throats, as this Bill would tend to do. Therefore, we will vote against it, and I thank Your Honour very much for your kind attention.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in speaking against Bill C-132 at report stage, the Bill which would cap indexing of Family Allowances to six and five, as part of the Government's over-all six and five program, I would like to refer to a point made by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) earlier this afternoon when he mentioned the irony of the fact that we are debating this Bill to cap Family Allowances at a time of the year, Christmastime, when so much effort is being put into the raising of money for charitable purposes to aid the many families who ordinarily require that sort of help, and also to meet the needs of the greatly increasing number of families who are requiring it. It seems to me that we have a good opportunity to reflect on the difference between two different world views, if you will. I hoped that we, as a society, had transcended one view, which relies mainly on charity and on voluntary contributions for the alleviation of poverty caused by our economic system. The other view holds that we ought to build mechanisms into our social and economic structures to prevent people from reaching that state where they need help. Of course, even that which we have done so far, in terms of developing the welfare state, has still not created a society in which we have—

Mr. Rose: Insulated.

Mr. Blaikie: —families who need no help at Christmas time. However, it seems to me that we are retreating from the second world view with the six and five program, with the ongoing debate about retreating from universality and with the entire politics of despair, as I like to call it, the politics in which the Liberal Party and Government now wallow, the politics which has it that we have reached the limit of our ability to share; that the pool of funds which we have available for social purposes has reached its limit and that we must now do what we can with what we have left.

What has really happened is not so much that we as a society have reached the limit but, rather, that the Liberal Party has reached the limit of what it is willing to do, because in order to share more in our society it would have to challenge certain financial and economic interests. It would really have to be in favour of fundamental economic change, and that is what it is not able to do and that is why we have the six and five program. That is why we have this attempt to create what is called "a better investment climate", and that is why the Conservatives support the six and five program—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: —because they believe in an investment climate. They believe in catering to the profitability of the multinational corporations and others who make their decisions here in Canada based on profit alone. That is why, overall, they support the six and five program. That is why, in particular, they are only putting up token resistance.

Tonight we are speaking on a Bill which will affect Family Allowances. I say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to those who are watching, that the reason they see one New Democrat after another speaking on this particular Bill—

Some Hon. Members: And a Tory amendment.

Mr. Blaikie: —and Tory amendment, is that the Progressive Conservatives have caved in on this matter—

Mrs. Mitchell: Exactly.

Mr. Blaikie: —as they have all along, putting up only token resistance to the six and five program. This is a reflection on the Tories, because what is it that really irritates the Progressive Conservative Party—

Mr. Clarke: You!

Mr. Blaikie: —besides me? And someone said that I really irritate them.

Mrs. Mitchell: That is a compliment.

Mr. Blaikie: That is a compliment. Indeed, I hope that it was entered into the record. However, the Conservatives become really irritated not when pensioners' income is affected, not when the income of mothers and children through Family Allowances is affected and not when the income of superannuates is affected through Bill C-133. The only time these Conservatives really get up on their hind legs in this House to tie up the place and, I think, to an inappropriate degree, almost to the point at which one could suggest that they do not have enough respect for Parliament, is when the interests of the multinational corporations or the investment community are affected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Then they really become fired up. However, do they become really fired up concerning pensioners, mothers or children? No, not at all.

Recently the Conservatives threw an ideological tantrum over Canagrex. Some say that the big to-do over Canagrex had more to do with what will happen, whatever that may be, in Winnipeg in January than with Canagrex. However, it was amazing to watch. It was another example of the two faces of the Tory Party with regard to the six and five program. They support six and five in principle. They voted for Bill C-124. However, when it concerns these particular little Bills, when it comes to pensioners and Family Allowances, oh, they are against them. They think they can have it both ways. I will say one thing for Members of the Liberal Party. They decided they will have the six and five program and they have been dumb enough to carry on with it. They are stubborn and they think they are right. They are actually wrong. Nevertheless, there is some consistency in their program. This is unlike the Conservatives who, of late, have become absolutely frantic for power, frantic that power must not escape them as it escaped them once before in the last election. So they are saying anything to anybody, whatever they think will be pleasing to the ear of the people in whose company they happen to be.

• (2020)

With reference to Canagrex, at one time they supported Canagrex; now they do not support it. They changed their mind, apparently, on the basis of the recommendations of the Auditor General that there was not enough accountability of Crown corporations in spite of the fact—

Mr. Stewart: It is communism.

Mr. Blaikie: Someone said over there that Canagrex is communism. I would like that on the record.

An Hon. Member: John Wise.

Mr. Blaikie: —that the Bill that was first introduced by a Progressive Conservative agricultural Minister is communism. What we have just heard from that Hon. Member is the kind of philosophical garbage we have had to listen to, day in and day out.

I do not know what the people to my right would do if they were in another country where there was no elected Government. You can only throw around words "dictatorship", and "communism", and all this sort of thing, for so long before you cheapen the use of the language, Mr. Speaker, and I think that is what is happening in this Parliament. If we ran into a real dictatorship we would not know what to call it because the Conservatives, in their frantic rhetorical search for power, have cheapened every concept that was ever developed in a political science textbook, in the last three or four weeks. Anything they do not like is communism. Anything they do not like is a dictatorship. I do not have any more use for this Liberal Government than anyone else, but I have some respect for the English language. I wish that some people over here on my right would show some respect for the English language and some disciplined intelligence for a change, instead of just ranting on like a bunch of idiots.

Mr. Speaker, I was trying to show that on six and five, as in other areas, we have a case of schizophrenia. In fact it is almost a multiple personality when it comes to the Progressive Conservative Party. We have three or four Parties warring within the bosom of one caucus over here so you can hardly tell just who is speaking for them. There are those who are against universality—and there are many in the Progressive Conservative caucus—and who are against indexation of pensions, period, never mind capping them at six and five. Many of them have been against the indexing of pensions all along. Yet we have them standing up and saying how angry they are that the public service pensions are being capped at six and five when they did not want pensions indexed in the first place, and everyone knows it. How long do we have to put up with this?

We have two faces of the Tory Party on universality, on indexing of pensions, on foreign policy. Who speaks for the Progressive Conservative Party? Is it the Hon. Member for York Peel (Mr. Sinclair) or is it the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald)? Is it the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) or is it someone who shares the views of the Member for York-Peel?

It is important, in a democracy, that Parties have identifiable and consistent positions so that the voters can at least have a stable target to shoot at, or something to choose. With the Progressive Conservative Party, talk about a moving target! It is moving all around.

Two days before the Progressive Conservatives tied up this House on Canagrex they voted for an amendment of ours to a motion of theirs that said that this House affirms the past and future role of Crown corporations in Canada as an important instrument of developing an independent and socially responsible Canadian economy.

Two days after that they tied up the whole House on the issue of Canagrex, which would be a Crown corporation with a budget of some $4 million.

Now you tell me, Mr. Speaker, who is playing games around here. Over here they are so desperate not to vote with the Liberal Government that they will vote for anything.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I have the distinct recollection from my memory of Standing Orders that reflecting on past votes is not in order when one is debating, even an amendment. I would respectfully request the Chair to call the Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) to order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has been taking a broad range of an argument concerning the position of one of the Opposition Parties. The Chair has been following the argument, but the Chair cannot in all honesty rule remarks out of order at this point.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have some understanding of the Standing Orders and I understand that it would be unparliamentary to reflect on the motive of an individual, but to reflect on the reasons why a whole Party might vote the way they do seems to me to be fair ball, and exactly what I was trying to do.

I was talking about the six and five program, one Bill of which we have before us today, and how the Progressive Conservative position on the six and five is illustrative of a general malaise, a general sickness, which afflicts that particular Party at this point, and that is that they cannot make up their minds, it seems, on anything, except when it comes to a Crown corporation. Then they really go right off the wall to try to stop it.

Would it not be wonderful if members of this Party on my right, who, because they are the Official Opposition, have so much more ability to pressure the Government in many respects, procedurally and in other ways as well, could get as excited about protesting the Cruise missile as they do about Canagrex. When we were asking the other day when the umbrella agreement and the agreement on the Cruise missile was going to be signed, were they tying up Parliament, demanding to see the nature of that agreement? No, instead they were tying up Parliament on Canagrex.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, I think the Member is straying from the subject of the amendment to the motion before us.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I prefaced every paragraph with the following, that in speaking of six and five, I was trying to show how their position on this Bill which we are debating tonight is illustrative of a general problem. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that as much as you can you will bear with me. What I am trying to do is to draw certain analogies with the position that my colleagues on the right are taking on this particular Bill.

Where do they finally come down on this? I think in the final analysis it will have to be for the Canadian people to judge whether they want to vote for this gaggle of voices, this "Tower of Babel" that has come to be known as the Progressive Conservative Party, which holds every position in the book, from one end of the spectrum to the other, and allows different people to go traipsing about the country saying whatever they like. Something is wrong there, no leadership or something, because they cannot seem to get their act together. One person says one thing and another person says another. But enough of the Tories, Mr. Speaker.

We are opposed to this Bill C-132 because it does erode universality, in spite of many of the arguments that have been advanced by the Government and advanced by Members of the Government who probably really genuinely believe in universality. I think they have convinced themselves that this does not erode universality, but it does. Whenever you act in such a way as to cause the Canadian people to perceive a universal program as something which has to be curtailed in order to solve the economic problems of the day, you are in effect eroding the concept of universality. This is because you are eroding the confidence which Canadian people rightly have in universal programs, as part of the larger social and economic fabric of the country. That is why we are opposed to the capping of the indexing at a political and a conceptual level, apart from the fact that, as many have said, we are opposed to it because of the needless, negative economic impact it will have on families.

We hope, as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) said earlier this afternoon, that there might yet be hope, as in the story of Tiny Tim and Scrooge, when at the end Scrooge was converted.

I have not been around here long enough to give up hope entirely. I was going to say, in the combined efforts of the Opposition, but it is really not a combined effort any more, because the Tories are not even here tonight. In fact, there are only two Tories in the Chamber. Let that show on the record. I hope that others will take up where I have left off.

• (2030)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, tonight we are speaking on a report stage amendment to Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973. This Government Bill will in fact limit Family Allowances to a 6 per cent increase this year and a 5 per cent increase the year after that. We have spoken against this Bill. It is consistent with what we have spoken against with regard to the other six and five Bills.

We fought Bill C-124. We kept the House here in July and August to fight Bill C-124. We fought Bill C-131 which would restrict old age pensions to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the following year. We continue to fight to prevent he passage of Bill C-133 which will limit pensions of retired civil servants to 6 and 5 per cent increases.

When I say we are continuing to fight, I mean exactly that. Since day one we have been the only ones fighting this legislation. We fought Bill C-124, the original six and five Bill which limited wage increases to Government workers to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the following year. The Bill restricted the right of those workers to bargain. It broke signed collective agreements which this Government had signed with its own workers.

As I said earlier, we fought that Bill in July. We kept the House working through July and into August. Here we are on December 20 fighting Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973. This Bill will hurt the women and children of this land. It will not hurt the millionaires, but it will hurt the vast majority of Canadian women and children. This is the only income which many women in this country receive in their own name. For many children, it is the only money that is earmarked for their food, clothing and education. That is very important.

I have made a very big deal about the fact that we are fighting. I wish to make a strong point about the fact that we alone are fighting to prevent this legislation from passing before Christmas. We are the only Party in this House that is fighting this legislation. As would be expected, the Liberal Party is supporting this legislation. We cannot expect much more from the majority of the Liberal backbenchers. As Mr. Speaker well knows, the majority of Liberal backbenchers will support any legislation introduced in this House. Mr. Speaker knows that better than most people.

We have been told by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that he will fight this legislation. We have been told by the Tory critic, who is in the House tonight, and by other critics in the Conservative Party that they will fight this legislation and the Act to restrict the old age pension to 6 and 5 per cent increases.

The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Blaker) said at a rally on Friday that his Party would never allow Bill C-133 to pass. He said they will continue to fight to ensure that the legislation is never passed. When I look at the number of speakers who have spoken today, I notice there has been one Conservative Member and one Liberal Member, and I am the seventh New Democrat to speak today. The only reason this legislation has not passed and become the law of the land is that the NDP Members are fighting it. We would like to see the Conservatives get up and fight the Liberals for once.

We do not pretend to fight, we do fight. We do not believe in the rhetoric of fighting the Government. We believe in the action of fighting the Government. When we say we will vote against a Government Bill, we show up in this House to vote against it. As you well know from where you sit, Mr. Speaker, every time a six and five Bill has come forward, with the exception of Bill C-124, the Tories have said they were against it, yet when we have the vote in this House, the Conservative Members were absent in sufficient numbers to ensure that time after time the Liberal Government would get its way. That is the truth of what is happening in this House.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) referred to Canagrex. He spoke of the fact that the business of this House was held up for two and a half days last week because the Conservatives had a great issue of principle. They believed there should not be another Crown corporation even though, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill mentioned, it was actually a Bill of the Conservative Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise). It was his Bill, and all of a sudden they are leading the fight against that Bill.

They also held up the Bill on the issue that it was another Crown corporation that would not be controlled by anybody. They forget that the NDP Wheat Board critic introduced a series of amendments which would put that Crown corporation under the restrictions of the Auditor General and that that Crown corporation would be reviewed by the parliamentary Committee responsible for that area. They forgot all about that.

We had the unusual, and I cannot use the word hypocritical, but the unusual situation of the Leader of the Opposition getting up in this House and saying that he is fighting it because it is another Crown corporation, even though it was a suggestion by his own Minister of Agriculture. He said that the measure would not be controlled by Parliament even though this is something that the Auditor General has sought. He said that even though we in the NDP and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) ensured that amendments would be passed to make sure it came under the control of Parliament and under the control of the responsible Committee. What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that we will fight where it is necessary, where people are being hurt. We will not make speeches or stall the business of this House to make completely false statements, but that is what is happening with the Official Opposition of this House. They pretend to be fighting, but they are only fighting on Bills they themselves introduced, Bills which they see some political motivation in now opposing.

• (2040)

We will fight, we will speak, and we will introduce motions and amendments, which is our right, where people are being hurt. We will fight for the old age pensioners, for those who receive Family Allowances, for those who have a contractual agreement, a verbal one, but nevertheless a contractual agreement with this Government that they are entitled to indexation of their Government pensions. It is only this Party, Mr. Speaker, in the House of Commons, which will prevent Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and Bill C-133 from passing prior to Christmas.

If I may digress for a few seconds and speak about a similar Bill which is also before this House, it is Bill C-133, because it is relevant. It is part of the same package.

Mr. Clarke: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. Clarke: I accepted your ruling, Mr. Speaker, on the comments of the earlier speaker, but the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has referred to false statements of Members of this Party, and I am sure that is unparliamentary. Now he is introducing a totally different Bill into the debate which is on an amendment to Bill C-132. I would hope you would call him to order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The second point of the Hon. Member is well taken. The first point with respect to reflections in general on Members of another Party, it seems to me, has been part of the tradition of Parliament for many years. But the second point which the Hon. Member raised appears to have some validity. Would the Hon. Member for Churchill please take note.

Mr. Murphy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Basically, why I wish to refer to Bill C-133 is because I believe—

Mr. Clarke: Order.

Mr. Murphy: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain that Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133 are not only consequential but are part of the same package, and I wish to explain how we are approaching it, which is not just as one Bill but as one of three Bills which are part of that same package. What I wish to say, and I will be very short, Mr. Speaker, is this: we in the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) and myself, have managed to get the agreement of Conservative and Liberal Members to prevent Bill C-133 from coming back to this House prior to the Christmas break. That is constructive criticism, that is constructive fighting, and that is the type of work which should really be going on in this House of Commons. We have the unanimous agreement of a parliamentary committee studying one of the Bills which brings in the six and five legislation. We not only got the support of the one or two Conservative Members who showed up finally at that meeting, but we got the support of all the Liberal members who showed up for that committee meeting. We had a quorum and we all agreed that that Bill will not come back and will not be voted upon until after Christmas. That is constructive criticism and the way this House should be working. It should not be a matter of rhetoric where the Conservatives say they are going to take the Government to the wall, and then only one to four of their Members are in the House. That is not constructive criticism. It is not a matter of having only one speaker today, December 20, in opposition to a Government measure. If what the various critics for the Conservative Party have said that they would be fighting this Bill, were true, they would have more than one speaker up today. They would be fighting this legislation, because it only takes a few more speakers to kill this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: I am sure the Hon. Member would not like to mislead the House. There has been more than one speaker for the Conservative Party today, and we have spent more time in the two days of this debate than the New Democratic Party cumulatively have spent so far.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West has made the point that there was more than one speaker of his Party today. The Hon. Member for Churchill has the floor.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be in the position of giving the wrong impression in this House. If there were two Conservatives who got up today, I am certainly willing to give the Conservative Party credit for putting up two speakers to our seven.

An Hon. Member: One was invisible.

Mr. Murphy: I do wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we are the Party which has one-third the membership of the Conservatives, and, therefore, if we put up seven speakers, they should have put up 21. It is not the other way around, that we put up seven and they put up two. And all the previous speaker had pointed out is that the Conservatives have put up two speakers. As my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), our critic on this particular piece of legislation, has pointed out, we are not debating the Government Bill, we are debating the Conservative amendment to the legislation, and they are not even here to speak on their own amendment. They are invisible in this House. And if they continue that, they will be invisible after the next election.

I do not want to spend all my time talking about the absenteeism of the Conservatives, or about the fact they speak big, but not very often. I want to talk about the legislation itself. I am not speaking directly to the amendment, I am speaking to the proposed legislation. This legislation, which my seatmate, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle), talked about as being a measure which he would expect from Scrooge at Christmas, is also a measure which shows that the Government has come down to a very low level in terms of its Government's policy. It is an example of a Government that no longer talks about economic leadership. It is an example of a Government that no longer talks about providing social justice.

I have mentioned in this House a couple of times, and I am ashamed of it now, but out of pure honesty I will say it, that I voted for the Liberal Party in 1968 because of what it was saying in 1968. Some of my colleagues said that that will probably kill me in Western Canada, and they are probably right, but let me tell you that in those years the Liberals talked about social justice, about a just society. But we look at this legislation now and it is the exact opposite of the platform of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at that time. This legislation is not about those who can afford to sacrifice. It does not talk about those who need help getting help. Instead, it is a program which talks about taking from those who receive Family Allowances, those who receive old age pensions, those who are entitled to Government pensions because they paid for their pensions in the years they worked for the Government. It talks about those people making sacrifice. That, Mr. Speaker, is not a just society, which is why the Liberal Government is losing more and more credibility across Canada.

We do not need Liberal backbenchers and others saying it is up to the NDP to defeat this legislation or prevent it from going to committee. We are certainly willing to do it, as I spent the last 15 minutes saying, but it is up to every individual whatever his or her position in this House to fight this legislation. If the Liberals really believe this, they had better fight against it and make sure that the old age pensioners receive their pensions and do not become victims of Senator "Scrooge" Davey's effort to kill Christmas. Let every Liberal remember that.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment to Bill C-132 which attempts to reduce the effect of the six and five program on Family Allowances. I think that most Canadians know that the Government is attempting to reduce the indexation of those programs to a level of 6 per cent in 1984, and 5 per cent in 1985. The Family Allowance program has been with us since 1944. It is a unique program because it recognizes the cost of parenting and the role society ought to play in that cost. The program was a good idea, but it has had some problems and I want to spend a little bit of time reviewing those problems.

There have been a number of articles in the press recently the conclusion in which has been that it costs approximately $500,000 to raise a child in today's society. That is made up of the actual out-of-pocket expenses, extra hours of unpaid labour, and it includes the income forgone by the mother when she stays home to raise the children. The recognition of that contribution, and in recognition of the great asset society has in its children, we have the Family Allowance Program. It is not a great deal of money, but it has made the point that society is taking part in the raising of children because they will be assets to the economy in the future.

From 1945 to 1973 the amount per child was approximately $7.50 per month. In 1974 it was upgraded considerably to $20 per child, while at the same time making it a taxable benefit. In addition, it was indexed so that we now have a Family Allowance in the $27 per month range, although there have been interruptions to that indexation. I believe it was 1976 that indexation was stopped as an economy measure. This time it is being stopped to fight inflation. Without these interruptions it would be almost $40 per month instead of $27, and now we have a proposal to reduce the indexation to near six and five for the next couple of years.

I am not convinced, Mr. Speaker, that doing this will do anything to fight the inflationary psychology, which is the government's argument. I will just quote briefly the Minister of National Health and Welfare's (Miss Bégin) explanation of the Government's argument. In a committee hearing she said the idea was to mobilize all Canadians in fighting this battle against inflation. So apparently we are in a war on inflation. A few years ago we were simply wrestling with it, but now we are mobilizing all Canadians, right down to the new-born babies. Everyone is in the act. The Minister said this:

> The government's philosophy in the Cabinet discussion, which is what you want to understand, was made like this: In the June budget, we decided we had reached the time where the phychological dimensions of the too-high inflation we were witnessing in Canada had to be recognized and dealt with by another psychological weapon, which was a sword—

I never studied psychology very extensively, Mr. Speaker, but I do not recall the sword being a great weapon in the understanding of psychology. Apparently it is now with the six and five program. She goes on:

> —and I know the words might make you smile—a sword of a national campaign of solidarity of all Canadians, mobilizing all Canadians toward cutting in half the forecasted rates of inflation of 12 and 10 to 6 and 5. It was an arbitrary—to my knowledge—choice of common purposes for Canadians to try to embark all partners into, as I said—

Well, anyway, the mobilization has gone on and I am not sure just what it is doing. It seems to me that it is having a very real effect on the incomes of the very low income people. We are told later on, in a testimony she gave, that there are about 900,000 children who are living in poverty, whose mothers need every cent of the child allowance to give them food—not just clothing or education or trips to the movies, but food. These are the people we are mobilizing to fight inflation.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, to be a phony war. We are fighting inflation at the same time that we are increasing unemployment. It is very likely that a great many of those 900,000 children are being raised by single parents, usually the mothers, who are on welfare. A reduction affects such people in a very real way. Along with its fight against inflation, the Government has been reducing expenditures on items which create jobs. Some people who have fathers in their families are finding that their fathers are unemployed as well. The Government is busy fighting inflation, but at the same time it is creating a situation where the demand of 20 per cent to 25 per cent of the population is being cut to the point where adequate nutrition is difficult to obtain. Also this group is faced with reducing some of its other wants and is having problems finding enough jobs.

Many witnesses appeared before the hearings of other committees. They told us that what was wrong with the country was the lack of demand, yet the Government reduces the incomes of people who will create some of the demand. It is a very backward way of going about it from an economic point of view. From a social point of view, it is abhorrent to reduce incomes, no matter how slightly, for people attempting to live on these kinds of income.

I see no justice in it. I see no way that it can be justified in terms of philosophy or rational thought. It makes no sense from an economic or social point of view. It is a reversal of a longstanding policy which has attempted to assist and recognize the role women play in raising children.

I should like to refer to some of the testimony by the Ottawa-Carleton Low Income Support Service group when it appeared before committee to reinforce the effect this reduction will have upon low-income people. It pointed out that monthly Family Allowance cheques are extremely important to the people it represents and that any reduction, even $1 per month, would be keenly felt. For those who need these monthly payments just to get by, the increase in the Child Tax Credit, while welcome, will be received in a lump sum at the end of the year and will not help them to meet their monthly expenses. The reduction in the Family Allowance benefit will hurt these people very much. The following testimony appeared:

> We also need to keep in mind the number of families who are separated, not officially on paper, so again for those mothers who are living on their own with their children, may have no maintenance payments and any money they get may be very sporadic, and they are in great difficulty because they do not classify for any other social benefits because on paper they are married and thereby should be receiving part of the father's income and, indeed, may not be.

Some further testimony reads:

> I guess what I could basically talk about is a case example based on a single female self-support parent with two children under the ages of ten who lives basically on $7,000 a year through the provincial federally-sponsored social assistance system which is called family benefits allowance. Under that system, the woman receives a cheque once a month. Now that cheque once a month, I mean basically trying to exist on $7,000 within the Ottawa-Carleton area with the current housing shortage, etc., and the price of food, is impossible at best. That family allowance cheque is not a frill. It is something that puts food on the table and also that family allowance cheque is not something that pays for Christmas presents or for extras. It is absolutely for food.

I think we have made the point that the allowance is absolutely necessary for a large chunk of the Canadian population. The allowance has been attacked a number of times for a number of varying reasons. When it comes right down to it, the main reason for it was to attempt to save money.

During second reading debate we heard the Minister contend in the House that the Government would be saving $320 million over the two-year period for which Bill C-132 would exist. However, deducted from that amount was $250 million, the two-year expenditure on the Child Tax Credit. Thus the real saving is only $70 million. The Government should take note of the fact that forgone revenue, such as the gross payment on Family Allowances, was not included. The federal Government should also take into account that it will be losing those tax revenues. As a rule of thumb, the Department of Finance uses an average marginal rate of between 18 per cent and 20 per cent. If we multiply the $320 million, which the Minister said the Government will be saving, by 18 per cent to 20 per cent, we will find that the federal Government is only losing about $60 million over that two-year period. In reality, the savings from this program will be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $10 million. It is hardly worth the disruption caused, the avoidance of the recognition of the part women play in raising families, or the extra stress which very low income families will be placed under by living in an inflationary world and having their Family Allowance benefits reduced.

For those reasons we will be voting against this Bill. We will support the amendment before us at the moment to set it back, inadequate though it may be since it assumes that the Bill will pass. It simply reduces some of the effects of the Bill. We will support the amendment as a stop-gap measure, but we will oppose the Bill in any way we can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to join my colleagues in this debate. We are now discussing the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), and considering the proposition of the Government to limit the allowances, which have been indexed to this point as part of Government legislation, to whatever the consumer price index will be in any given year. The amendment itself has been well-explained. It simply suggests that we should not go for a two-year period, that we should only approach the first year, and that we omit the second year of the program. That is very reasonable and rational. On any criteria we choose to use, whether it is the Government deficit this year, the expenditures or almost any economic performance, the Government does not have any idea what will happen six months from now, let alone a year from now. It makes consummate sense that we look at a program such as this on a one-year basis. I strongly support the amendment and urge the Government to consider it seriously.

The six and five program is one which has a number of interesting ramifications. As far as I am concerned, the most important and interesting ramification is that this type of legislation would not be necessary if the consumer price index and inflation were not at their present high levels. The main reason for this legislation is the level of inflation and the consumer price index. Measures such as this would not be necessary if inflation were at 6 per cent or 5 per cent, as it is and has been in other countries.

An important fact for Hon. Members to understand is that we are faced with this situation today because the Liberal Governments have led us to this point as a result of their many and various programs which they have introduced since the late 1960s. The consequences of these programs are beginning to catch up with all Canadians, including mothers, children, farmers and businessmen, because we now have to pay for the Government's ill thought out programs over the years which can be no longer maintained. One might say that we have been caught with our hand in the cookie jar. We are now faced with legislation that is designed to withdraw from programs that were introduced at a time when we could afford them.

It is important to note that the main cause for this inflationary increase has been the Government itself. It accounts for the major portion of the inflationary increase that we have seen in the last few years. Its control over spending and price increases have been the main cause of the increased rate of inflation with which the present programs cannot keep pace.

As a result of this Bill and others which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin) is responsible for introducing in the committee and the House, I am interested to know what her priorities are. It appears that we will save approximately $15 million in this specific program. Although the absolute figure may be somewhat higher, the real saving to the Government, after all calculations are made of what the Minister is achieving through this legislation, is $15 million.

I sat at the committee hearings and listened to the Minister discussing her priorities. In answer to a question from a Member on the committee about whether or not she supported the purchase of BP by Petro-Canada—a $600-million purchase—she very clearly stated that in her mind it was more important than maintaining the same level of indexation on Family Allowance.

Miss Bégin: That is a complete lie.

Mr. Gurbin: The Minister suggests that I may not have been telling the truth. The Minister is a very good politician. She has her own sense of morality and ethics and she will have to read her own words in the committee minutes if she wants to know whether she said that.

Miss Bégin: It is a complete lie. Is that clear enough?

Mr. Gurbin: She may not be concerned if she said that because I do not think she is concerned about very many of her statements. She recently said in the House that she was having negotiations with provincial ministers which were ongoing negotiations. Every provincial minister to whom we have talked has denied having any kind of negotiation with the Minister for some time, except in a negative manner.

This Minister's priorities become clear when she states that in her view it is more important to purchase BP for $600 million to support Petro-Canada's purchase of other oil interests at a greater cost to Canadians, including those from whom she has taken money, than maintaining indexation. Since she has established her priorities in this way, I must question whether she is the most appropriate Minister to act on behalf of the welfare systems in Canada. We have a good welfare system in Canada, but if the Minister responsible for it allows her priorities to support the purchase of a $600-million gas station rather than a Family Allowance system, for which support had been promised by her and others in her Party, I question whether the people of Canada are in the best hands. This is matter which Canadians must seriously question.

The third matter I would like to discuss concerns universality. I have heard the Minister often speak about her concept of universality and dedication to it. I do not know what dictionary the Minister uses because the concept of universality has been gone for a long time. Universality no longer exists in the national health care system, and its concept is disappearing from tax credits. It has disappeared from the Guaranteed Income Supplement. The Minister is supporting in words something to which none of her actions recently have lent any credibility. It may make good political sense to argue for the concept of universality while introducing measures at the same time, particularly this one and the Old Age Security measure, which completely deny that concept.

I realize that some of these programs are not ones we can easily afford, but this brings us back to the question of priorities and the orientation of the Government. I do not believe that the Minister should indicate her support for universality while gradually eroding the base of that universality through measures such as we see before us at this time.

The final point I would like to discuss deals with the pressures being felt by Canadians who receive various forms of social assistance. I originally indicated that one reason for these many pressures is inflation and high interest rates. There are many families experiencing these pressures since many more Canadians have fallen below the poverty line, and the Minister has guaranteed that many more will follow as a result of the measures she is introducing now and the ones she has supported in the past. This pressure comes as a result of various forms of legislation which she has continually supported. For example, she has supported legislation introduced under the National Energy Program. This does not involve legislation for the purchase of service stations. She can support that, if she wishes. It concerns legislation that increases the Government's share of what Canadians pay at the gas pump. Presently, 35 per cent of what Canadians pay at the pump goes to the Government of Canada. That accounts for approximately $12 billion. This amount, which Canadians are paying into the Government coffers, I assume, is used to buy gas stations, among other things. This was done to pay for many years of mismanagement and, I am sorry to say, misrepresentation by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to that constituency which she has an obligation to serve. I believe she is clearly eroding the universality that she professes to support. I think that even she must admit to that fact. I think that this is legislation which, at the very least, should be minimized by the amendment which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West, has entered.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am feeling the urge to rise in support of the amendment to Bill C-132 as proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), which seeks to remove the 5 per cent cap on the increases to Family Allowances in 1984. I must confess to being at least partially moved by the activity to my left, from the region of the NDP.

An Hon. Member: We'll keep you moving, too.

Mr. Clarke: I suppose I was really a little bit upset and amazed, more than anything, by comments by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He seems to be much less interested in the debate since he has disappeared, along with his Leader and most of his caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Who? What is this nonsense?

Mr. Clarke: I am pleased to see that—

Mr. Keeper: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Hon. Member would explain what he meant when he said that most of our caucus is gone, when there are more New Democrats in this House than there are Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clarke: I was planning on explaining that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Where are all the Tories? Explain that!

Mr. Clarke: And I do not indulge in false statements, as does the NDP, nor alleged false statements, either, and unless the Speaker cocks his head in wonder at my comments, I challenge the NDP concerning what its Hon. Members said in reference to false statements coming from this side of the House. Your predecessor in the chair, Mr. Speaker, indicated that that was acceptable parliamentary debate. Anyway, I do plan on explaining that I speak in facts whenever I can—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clarke: Twelve NDP Members were in their seats, and that was after the acting House leader—

Some Hon. Members: Thirteen!

Mr. Clarke: —the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans)—that was before the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain came in. Then, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deans: I was listening, too.

Mr. Clarke: —that fits in with what I said, that most of the NDP caucus disappeared along with their Leader, and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill had been telling us how righteous he and his colleagues were, yet even though they want to agree and several NDP Members have stated they want to support this amendment, they have been here all night, preventing this amendment from coming to a vote in the House.

I am sure there are Hon. Members opposite, those on the Government benches, who will agree, because they have been sitting there faithfully, waiting to vote, that the vote has been prevented from coming to the floor of the House because of the NDP.

Mr. Deans: We prevented it.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the NDP talk a lot. What do Members of the NDP talk about? They talk about the Progressive Conservatives, what the Progressive Conservatives say and where the Progressive Conservatives are. I am glad to say that I have been joined by quite a number of my colleagues and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clarke: —it might be worthwhile to put on the record the fact that about 60 per cent of the Progressive Conservative caucus is involved in a very important meeting in this very building, and if the NDP would allow the business of the House to come to the floor of the House and be voted upon, I can assure the House that my colleagues would be here.

I also sat here and listened to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), another one of those self-righteous people who has disappeared from the House. He sat here and heard himself speak, or, I guess, he stood here and heard himself speak, and got himself into totally irrelevant remarks.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member who has the floor, notwithstanding his lack of knowledge of the rules, knows full well from previous experience that although one may make reference to a lack of Members in total, one may not make reference to the absence or presence of individual Members in the House.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that he also knows that the two Hon. Members to which he referred are both in committee at the moment, fighting mightily against the Government's legislation, trying their very best to keep the Government from passing in committee, legislation which we frankly know is unacceptable to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: And so I would ask Your Honour to rule.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any rule—

Mr. Deans: Well, it is there.

Mr. Clarke: —which the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain says should be there. However, the Speaker is nodding his head, and I should accept his ruling to that effect. However, I may say something about what the Hon. Member for Churchill said when he was in the House—

Mr. Deans: Before he went to the committee.

Mr. Clarke: Before he left. He was referring to Family Allowance and how necessary it was for food, education and clothing of, presumably, the children whose mothers or single fathers received this benefit. Because I suppose I should declare my conflict of interest, I would like to say that Family Allowance cheques come into our household and, of course, the Liberals, in their usual tricky, clever way, made sure that that amount in my hands was taxable. Therefore, although it is my wife who receives the benefit and, when she is home she carries out the duties of a mother and does not earn income, it is taxed back from me as if it were received by me.

I want to return to that very important point that was mentioned earlier. However, I was forced to make a comparison between the amount of Family Allowance on an annual basis, $322.92, and food costs, which were mentioned by the Hon. Member for Churchill. I suppose that $26.91 might just cover the milk bill of an infant. It certainly would not cover the milk costs of an older child who perhaps has taken to milk in a big way.

Referring to education, and I suppose we must start somewhere, if a working person wants to send a child to a daycare centre, we have a very good one here on the Hill, and I am also becoming an authority on the costs of daycare. I can tell the House that it amounts to $312.50 a month. Therefore, the Family Allowance for an entire year would barely cover one month of daycare on Parliament Hill. Of course, if one is discussing education for children one can say that once they get into the public school system there is no cost, so the Hon. Member is full of feathers and wet behing the ears, as usual. Concerning the cost of children's clothing, this has been mentioned by some other Members in the House, and the relationship between food, education and clothing, as the Hon. Member for Churchill said, is totally irrelevant to this debate.

The Hon. Member for Churchill said that the NDP was also the only Party in this House that was fighting this Bill.

Mr. Deans: That's right.

Mr. Clarke: Right now we are discussing the amendment, which I notice that not all Hon. Members have addressed, and I also note that this is our amendment. I hope, although there has been no evidence of it, that the NDP will have many amendments to bring forward—

Mr. Deans: No, you can't amend something that is unamendable!

Mr. Clarke: —if its Members will allow this to come to a vote.

Mr. Deans: How do you amend something that is totally wrong?

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I notice, and again I speak in facts, that on Fridays the Party over to the righteous left had one Hon. Member to speak on this very important amendment. They could not get anyone else up on Friday, but today they complain that we are not putting anyone else up. The logic of the New Democratic Party is, as usual, just not there.

• (2130)

Again, the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), did not talk about the amendment. He referred to the Bill a couple of times, but he also spent his time talking about the bad performance of the Tory Party, and asking where all the Members were, I think I explained, Mr. Speaker, there are over 60 Members of this caucus in another meeting in this very building.

The Member for Churchill made another false statement, Mr. Speaker, and I say that without fear of contradiction. The Member for Churchill, when called to order on it, admitted that he had made an 100 per cent error in that he had said that precisely half the number of speakers from the Progressive Conservative Party had spoken as was the fact. When this was later pointed out to him, he admitted to that.

If the Party to my left is so indignant and wants to prolong the debate, how is it that in an hour only three or so of them spoke? They must know the rules of the House. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) was trying to tell us what they were, and they should know that short speeches and no amendments is not the way to delay a Bill, if that is what they want to do. Maybe they would like to take lessons from the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I am sure he could give them some ideas.

I want to say a word about restraint, because that is what this Bill which is being modified by this amendment is all about, the six and five. That is restraint, and certainly the Progressive Conservatives are for restraint. I think we have indicated that in our actions in the House, and we have also argued in favour of fewer Crown corporations, for example, less Government expenditure, all of these things that add up to more restraint and lower deficits, which would bring us to a position of lower inflation. If we had lower inflation, then of course we would not have the need for this kind of a capping Bill.

I made reference earlier to the taxing back feature of the Family Allowance Program, and for greater clarity I just want to say that although the mother or principal caretaker of a child gets the amount of money, the amount is deemed to have been received by the person in that household earning more, the higher earning parent, usually the father, but that is immaterial, really. Therefore the maximum benefit from the Family Allowance plan goes to the families and the children and the mothers that need it the most. I think that is fair; I think that is the way it should be.

Having said that, if we analyse what capping does, it means that the higher income people will pay less income tax because they will have less income on which to pay tax. This obviously means—and I can only think that the Minister did not realize this when the whole program was accepted—that the lower income Canadians are the ones who are going to be penalized by this measure, not the higher income Canadians who are suffering already from the tax back feature of the Family Allowance payment.

I have heard it said that the whole capping procedure is going to save $320 million, and then another figure has been introduced into the debate which indicates that it will cost $250 million this year for the higher tax credit that has been given to parents, and a net cost of $70 million is what is being quoted. But that ignores the tax back, Mr. Speaker, and my figures tell me that, considering that the higher income earners do not receive the Child Tax Credit and do pay tax on their Family Allowances, the estimated saving will be something like $15 million. This Government could lose that in about a day and a half, as I recall, the way things go over there.

I think the ultimate aim of my intervention on this amendment of my friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary West would be to try to persuade some of the Members opposite to allow the next session of Parliament—if indeed it ever comes, and that is becoming doubtful now as we carry on through two and half years in this session—to decide what financial mesures should be taken in 1984. If inflation is bad, or if it abates, then maybe the cap should be a different amount. Perhaps it should be higher in 1984; perhaps it should be lower in 1984; perhaps there should not be any cap in 1984.

In fact, in debate in this House in recent days, I have heard Government Members say that they have noticed, they have been told and they are convinced, that the rate of inflation is actually coming down. The other day, talking about the old age pension capping, the Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) was telling us about how supportive his mother was of that legislation. He said in that debate that inflation was coming down. I said in that debate: if it is, why do we need to bother with the 6 per cent cap on indexing of either the old age pensions or, in this case, the Family Allowance? You cannot have low inflation and a desperate need for a cap. They just do not add up; they are not compatible, those two situations.

I can only conclude therefore that the Members opposite do not really believe what they say when they say that inflation is coming down, or else they do not believe that there is a real necessity for this Bill, because I really think that the Government itself can probably add still, and those two things do not add up together.

I just want to say finally that I appeal to those Government Members to reserve for themselves the right to decide next year, one year from now, what the program for capping Family Allowances—or any other program, but in this case we are talking about Family Allowances—should be in 1984. Let them decide one year from now, not try to decide now, especially in view of the predictions they are making for such a rosy future.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I might say that it is a real pleasure for me tonight to speak following the Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) and the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), who must surely both together be God's Christmas gift to the insomniacs of Canada.

I cannot believe that 60 Conservative Members would be at some other meeting, except maybe at the meeting in Winnipeg, or some other meeting, to get rid of you know who. As a matter of fact, the story is around in Toronto today, I do not know if you have heard it, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) rushed to Toronto last weekend to hear The Who concert. He thought it was for him. He heard there was a retirement party, and he wanted to be at it.

The Member who last spoke did say—and I take this seriously, as I do all his speeches in the House, at least the ones that I can remember—that Family Allowances would be taxed back. He gave himself as an example of a parent who was receiving Family Allowance. Anybody in Canada who is not a millionaire or not in a really high tax bracket can tell you that we have a disgracefully inadequate and unjust tax system, that the poor and the middle income people pay most of the taxes in this country, and that the big companies, especially the oil companies and the taxpayers who earn a large amount, do not pay a fair share. I do not see how he can rely on the kind of a taxation system that we have. Besides, the Canadian Council on Social Welfare has said that the budget specified that the 50 per cent rise in the Child Tax Credit received in 1983 is a one year temporary increase, and that the $50 will not be carried over to subsequent years. It seems to me we have a terribly bad taxation system, and it is not going to be helped here.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), whom I know very well because he represents a neighbouring constituency, said that the NDP should have a lot of amendments. How can you have a lot of amendments to a Bill that is entirely wrong? He said that the Conservatives had amendments, and that the logic of the NDP was bad.

I offer this to Hon. Members and to the people of this country. What kind of logic is it for the Conservative party to vote for six and five because they thought the polls reflected what is that people wanted to deal with the terrible problem we face? Suddenly they realize that six and five means penalizing the children, the old people and the poor people of this country. When these Bills started coming down, Bills C-131, C-132 and so on, suddenly they draw back and have to vote against them. Who is logical and who is hypocritical? The Conservatives are illogical and hypocritical in dealing with this. They are trying to get off the hook with this amendment because they want to support the 6 per cent freeze. I have heard some Conservatives say that they would even like to see rollbacks.

I am criticized by my thick-headed friend to my right who says that the NDP voted against the salary increase. Let me put that to rest. We voted against the six and five, and in the six and five Bill salary increases were dealt with. Logically, and it is reflected in this amendment, you had to vote against six and five or support these other Bills all the way down. That is where the Conservatives were illogical. I challenge them on that. They are illogical, hypocritical and not fit to be the alternate Government in Canada.

These are tough times. All Members will agree, including the heckling Members on my right and the silent Members, as they say in French, "les navettes", across the way. The Liberal backbenchers from Quebec who take no part in this Parliament will be replaced, and God help us, in the next Parliament by Péquistes, and then we will have problems. They do not take part and they are prepared to vote against Family Allowances and against helping the poor people in the Province of Quebec. I suspect even they would agree we have tough times.

We have 12.4 per cent unemployment and the growth of our GNP is down. Hon. Members do not have to take that from the socialists. I refer them to the Financial Post, not exactly a socialist paper, of December 18. It reads:

> By the third quarter of this year, real GNP was down 6.9 per cent from its peak in the second quarter of 1981. By November, the jobless rate had risen to a seasonally adjusted 12.7 per cent from 7.1 per cent in the summer of 1981, and almost 600,000 jobs had fallen by the wayside.

If one reads this paper, one will see stories about those who are out of work, students, those in the manufacturing industries, people out of work all across the country. I repeat, Members opposite recognize that there is a problem. The Members to my right, as much as they are misguided in their nineteenth century philosophy, recognized that there is a problem in this country.

Willy Brandt, the former Chancellor of West Germany, former Mayor of Berlin, head of the socialist party, a respected Chairman of the North-South Committee on the problems between the developed and developing world, was here last week.

Mr. Brandt made a good point that all Members should consider when thinking about this amendment, this Bill and the six and five policy. He said that workers and ordinary people are prepared to sacrifice. The people in my riding are prepared to sacrifice, but they want the sacrifice to be just. They want it across the board.

We have been given what I call the Coutts-Davey phony program of six and five, a grasping at straws. As we in this Party said, it will first fall on the public servants, then Public Service pensioners, the old people, and now even the children will have to bear the burden. Under this system, it will be the consumer, the worker, the retired public servant and the children who bear the burden. Is that fair and just? That is what this Bill is about.

This is not complicated. Family Allowances are indexed to help people keep up with the rise in the cost of living. According to the Financial Post, not some socialist phamplet, we are going to have an inflation of about 8.9 or 10 per cent. Therefore, families will have to pay 8.9 or 10 per cent more for the boots, clothes, ski suits and everything else for their children while their Family Allowance has been restricted to 6 per cent.

One does not have to be a financial genius to know that if the inflation rate is 9 per cent and the Family Allowance is restricted to 6 per cent, there will be a 3 per cent gap and people will lose. Instead of being better off, they will be poorer. The answer of the Government is that they are helping to fight inflation. Do we want to fight inflation on the backs of the children and retired Government employees? Is that where we want to fight inflation? I am not an expert in this area.

Miss Bégin: It shows.

Mr. Waddell: I heard the Minister. I am giving very simple facts. I acknowledge that. However, I know a little bit about energy and I know that there will be a 30 per cent rise in the cost of energy. I stood up in this House and asked the Energy Minister (Mr. Chrétien) about capping the price of gasoline at 6 per cent. I suggested six and five for that. He said that could not be done. However, they say we can cap the Family Allowance.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I see that clause 1 of this Bill would limit the indexation of family allowances to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. Prices will go up 9 per cent, but we are going to increase the indexation of family allowances by only 6 per cent. As an ordinary citizen of Vancouver, I figure that as a result, families in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada will lose money. I am saying to the Liberal Party that they are being unduly harsh with families in Quebec and that they are creating difficulties for them.

Miss Bégin: And as well for families with a $30,000 income. Does the Hon. Member want a kleenex?

[English]

Mr. Waddell: The Minister knows that it is difficult for the family. She knows she had to agree to stay in Cabinet. The two great socialists sitting there, at least they think of themselves as socialists in the Cabinet, they are great socialists. I put this directly to the Minister. She is sitting there with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc). They pride themselves as being sort of on the left of the Cabinet. Let me put this to the Minister directly. They have agreed to $8.7 billion in the next five years going into petroleum incentive program grants to the oil companies. They have agreed to a 30 per cent raise each year in the price of heating fuels, which will affect old people. I notice they are not heckling me any more. They have agreed to that raise in the price of heating fuels, which will hurt families with children.

• (2150)

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) entertain a question?

Mr. Waddell: Certainly.

Miss Bégin: I thank the Hon. Member. I wish he would tell me why he is against a bill which will increase the rate of indexation, but only by 6 per cent, for one-child families with an income exceeding $26,330 and up to $40,000. I am aware that the New Democratic Party now represents very wealthy people who are protected by strong unions, but not ordinary Canadians. Is he against a bill which will limit to 6 per cent the rate of indexation for families earning more than $26,330? Is that what he has the nerve to tell Canadians this evening?

Mr. Waddell: In French!

[English]

Maybe I will explain it in English. There are a number of reasons. One reason is you are taxing it back. That is what I said in my speech, if you had listened at the beginning. There is not a fair system of taxing it back. Another reason is the child tax rates for one year, on a one-year basis. Another reason is that these families will be affected, and they need the money also.

I want to put a question to the Minister. Why would the Minister agree to a program that would give Dome Petroleum $500 million? The Minister has to decide this in Cabinet. You have to get your priorities straight. Why would you give Dome Petroleum $500 million and take away from the families of Canada? I do not understand that.

I would like to ask the Minister this: if you really wanted to have a program which would deal with inflation, why not control prices? Why go after wages? If you go after wages you are going the reactionary route. You should go after prices. That is the route you should go. I would like to ask the Minister another question. If she wants to ask me questions, I will give her a chance. The Financial Post, again, as I said, not a great supporter of my particular position usually, has this to say, and I quote from the issue of December 18 on page 10:

> Listen to consulting economist Michael McCracken, president of Informetrica Ltd., urge Ottawa to stimulate the economy through tax cuts and increased government spending. Says McCracken: 'Further delays run the risk of triggering a major falloff in business investment, a collapse of private and public institutions, and a tearing of Canada's social fabric.'

As the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) pointed out, why would you cut back on giving income to families if you wanted really to prime the economy, because that is the way of priming the economy? If you give them money, they are going to spend it. Instead, you make a choice. You choose to give money for Dome. You choose to give $8.7 billion in grants. You choose to give that kind of bail-out to different companies, Chrysler and other companies. That is the policy you make. The Minister, it seems to me, is hung on that policy.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that people are afraid in this system, in this economy, and they do want solutions. They want security for their kids and they want solutions. We all agree that there is trouble in the country, that there are economic problems, and we have to make some choices. And the Minister has to make some choices. It really cuts to the heart of our politics where we are going to make the choices. I just got back from Vancouver this morning. Yesterday I was with a group of Philippino people, new immigrants to Canada. It was called the Philippino Diamond Society. There were no judges there. They were a very sincere group, and every one of the speakers there echoed the remark which Pope John Paul made in Manila, and that was that our great hope is in our children. I think most people would agree on this. So then why do we penalize our children? Why, as Willy Brandt said, are we fighting inflation on the backs of the people who can least afford it? Why do we not have a just solution for this? Why, if we are going to stimulate the economy, do we restrict giving money to the very people who it would help by letting them go out and buy things? Why do we give it to the Michael Pitfield's of this country? They are not into the six and five program because they are rich and established. Frank Scott, a great poet, once wrote this poem. He talked about the Canadian dream and he said this:

> Hidden in wonder and snow, or sudden with summer,
> This land stares at the sun in a huge silence
> Endlessly repeating something we cannot hear.
> Inarticulate, arctic,
> Not written on by history, empty as paper.

What Mr. Scott is saying is that we can fill in that country. We can create a country and we can create a just country in which we all bear the burden. That is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) started out with in 1968, and now he has fallen into a system where we are faced with this Bill today, with an inadequate Conservative amendment which basically says, "Let's fight inflation on the backs of the children of this country." We in this Party stand here together. Let us all in this House tonight say, no never, and vote against it.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be here this evening because I feel that it is really crucial to be involved in this debate. It is by participating in this debate that we hope to buy time so that the Government will wake up and withdraw this Bill rather than keep on trying to ram it through the House of Commons. Bill C-132, is an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, the essence of which is an application of the Government's six and five policy, its so-called economic policy which it is attempting to merchandise all around this country. The central point which has to be made about the application of the six and five, is that the six and five should not be applied to Family Allowances because, first of all, as an economic policy it is a sham, and as a social policy, as applied to the Family Allowances, as applied to pensions, as applied to Public Service pensions, is socially destructive. The six and five so-called economic policy is no substitute for an equitable social policy as it affects Family Allowances or pensions, and it is no substitute for real economic policy.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you want me to call it ten o'clock at this point, and we can reconvene tomorrow afternoon?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has agreed to call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

METRIC CONVERSION—APPLICATION TO MILK PRODUCERS. (B) INCREASE IN COST OF MILK

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a couple of points relating to a question I asked in the House. I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) how he could justify a price increase in milk, which resulted in a 40-cents per package increase, at a time when families were having a difficult time putting enough food and milk on the table to feed themselves.

• (2200)

The businesses that packaged the milk were also experiencing some financial difficulty. They expressed some concern about this added cost due to the fact that this Government is forcing metric by Order in Council on not only the three sectors, but on the milk producers as well. The Minister's answer was nothing; he did not even discuss milk he discussed a petition which had been presented in the House of Commons and I will deal with that at a later date.

What I would like to deal with now are some of the facts which would substantiate a concern on the part of the people of Canada over the likelihood of an increase in the price of milk because of our change from quarts to litres. I would first like to refer to an article from the Toronto Star under the headline "Metric Conversion May Boost Milk Price". Dean Archer, a chairman of the Ontario Dairy Council, is quoted in this article. He said:

> It is going to cost us a lot of money to make the change—
> Those expenses are going to have to be either swallowed or passed on to the consumer. And it's been my experience that if they're swallowed today, they'll just be passed on at a later date.
> He also said "We really don't know whether we'll succeed," in the fight against the . . . legislated change to metric.
> He said the new milk packages will probably cost about 40 cents more—

Even if the increase is not passed on at this point in time it will mean a price increase at a later date. Then his last remark here:

> Shoppers sure aren't going to like that—

That was the chairman of the Ontario Dairy Council.

Let us take a look at the industry. I have here an inter-office memo signed by one of the commissioners of the Metric Commission, a Mr. S. Volk, sent to Mr. Boire, who was Executive Director of the Metric Commission. The document states:

> I called Mr. Lowe, President of Beckers Dairies to review information contained in the above newspaper article.
> Mr. Lowe stated he had never seen or heard of the article. He was extremely upset that metric conversion was being forced on his industry by federal bureaucrats, including MCC and Agriculture Canada. He contended there were no benefits for the consumer resulting from the conversion of milk. It was his belief they were being "cheated and ripped off" with the conversion of milk and food products.

He tried to explain that it was a voluntary process and he used as an example the Ontario Dairy Council. Well, there is nothing voluntary about it, Mr. Speaker, because the Ontario Dairy Council is the group I just quoted which is complaining about being forced to go into metric packaging.

He goes on to say that he has since resigned, and due to pressures from the Metric Commission he is resigned to the inevitability of metric bag milk. The president then went on to say:

> Yes, and it's all because of metric conversion.

It continues:

> Judging from the extremely hostile reaction my call solicited from Mr. Lowe, he is not a strong advocate of metric conversion.
> He concluded his remarks stating he could supply the names of all the company presidents who are against conversion—with whom he dialogues daily—and maybe he should be "hollering from the rooftops more often".

It is grossly unfair of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to call a press conference and say that the move to metric is voluntary except in three sectors, that of gasoline, home furnishings and measured, weighed-out grocery produce because it is obviously mandatory in the milk packaging industry as well.

• (2205)

It should also be noted how grossly unfair it is for the present Government to indiscriminately allow people to use imperial measurement in some parts of the country and at the same time to harass and threaten the same type of retail outlet in another part of the country. It should be noted that in Eckville, Alberta, it is okay to sell in gallons, which they do. Consumer and Corporate Affairs banded the weigh scales and then removed the bands after a period of time and allowed the retailer in Eckville, Alberta, to go ahead and sell in gallons. He is still selling in gallons today, two and a half years after he started to do so.

It is unfair that they threaten prosecutions in Toronto, Etobicoke and Mississauga for selling in gallons, while allowing it to occur in the Province of Alberta. I suggest that that is probably because the Premier of Alberta has asked his Attorney General to defend anyone who is prosecuted for using imperial measurements.

It is grossly unfair of the Government to threaten to prosecute in the Province of Alberta against a retail carpet dealer who has the nerve to sell her carpet in both metric and imperial measurements, while at the same time to ignore dozens of retail outlets in the City of Toronto which advertise daily in the Toronto papers with floor coverings in 12 foot widths and prices per square yard. Sears Limited of Canada has advised the Metric Commission in writing that there are the dealers in Richmond and in Vancouver that have been selling and are continuing to sell in yards, while at the same time the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said he would proceed to prosecute maybe a dozen, maybe only ten, who are violating the Order in Council.

Not only has Parliament been misled, but the people of Canada have been misled by a Minister who refuses to acknowledge that the process of moving to metric in Canada is difficult at a time when the United States is moving back to imperial. They just converted 19,000 Shell service stations in the United States back to gallons; they just completed it this week. Chevron and Amoco are following suit. Why do we not get the true story out to the people, that an irresponsible Minister refuses to admit the inevitable, that it is too difficult for Canada to be forced into metric at the consumer level at a time when the United States is going back to imperial?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Hon. Member that just because the United States is doing something does not mean it is right. Continuously we hear Members opposite telling us about the horrors of creeping republicanism and how we have to be aware of not becoming too American-like; and now he is saying that just because the Americans do it, it is right. Just because they had 17,000 stations which converted to the metric system and are now converting back, does it mean we have to follow the same process in Canada?

To get to the subject of this evening's discussion, the Hon. Member quoted a number of people in the dairy industry in Ontario. I think it would be interesting to check the accuracy of all those statements, because we know that a number of statements which he has made in the House have proven not to be entirely as originally stated. We must certainly be talking to different people because the information I have is that in the mid-1970s the participants of the dairy industry in Ontario agreed to convert to metric. They chose metric container sizes for the conversion. The industry committee which planned the conversion agreed that the single-quart container would be replaced by one litre, the two-quart container by two litres and the three quart container by four litres.

The key to the planning process for metric conversion in every sector of the economy has been for the industry to ensure a cost efficient and economic conversion. In the case of the dairy industry, because the majority of three-quart sales were at the time in the form of returnable plastic jugs, the industry wanted to be able to use up its stock of three-quart jugs before switching to the four-litre size. Therefore, the conversion to the four-litre size was delayed.

It is not as if we are imposing a draconian change or rule or sudden cost upon the industry. This is something which goes back probably eight or nine years. The conversion, furthermore, of all other container size of fluid milk in Ontario was finished by 1979. That is, the one-litre and two-litre containers have been in use for three years. It is now only four years later that the conversion to four-litre containers is being completed. The date for the conversion, or deadline, is April 1, 1983, again allowing milk processors and dealers sufficient official notice of this long awaited change.

If you understand the simple economics of increasing the volume of the container size, you will realize that if four litres is 17 per cent larger than three quarts, there must be a corresponding increase in the cost to the consumer. I thank you for the opportunity to set the record straight.

FINANCE—ENERGY TAXES PAID BY FARMERS. (B) APPLICATION OF FARM EQUIPMENT PURCHASE TAX CREDIT

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to get further elaboration on a question which I posed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on December 7. The basic issue I raised in the question concerned the amount of money that was coming from the agricultural sector, that is the farmers across Canada, into the pockets of the federal Government as a result of the increases in energy prices which had taken place since the February, 1980 election.

Just for farm fuels alone, gasoline and diesel fuel, at least an additional $300 million has come out of the pockets of Canadian agricultural producers and into the federal treasury. The Government has argued that this is not taxation but another form of revenue. However, that was not the point of my question. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has given that answer.

The essential point is that this money is being taken at a time when the agricultural sector is facing a great amount of pressure. It is possible that the net farm income will go down as much as 30 per cent in some sectors and decrease by 15 per cent over all. Bankruptcies will probably reach 400 this year which is a level that has never been approached before.

Despite all these occurrences, the Minister of Finance responded by talking about the prices that the Conservative Government of 1979 was considering. He also went on to deal with other matters. These did not concern the point of my question. Matters concerning the Conservative Government of 1979 are irrelevant at this time. Certainly, we did not have a signed energy agreement, which the government has pointed out.

What is important is that the Minister of Agriculture has promised energy rebates. Our agricultural sector is presently paying approximately 40 per cent of its energy costs to the federal treasury. That sector is in difficulty and needs to be considered as a primary producer similar to the petrochemical industry. There were questions asked today concerning that industry which is currently not building plants or creating jobs for Canadians because the up-front taxation that the federal Government is taking from the feedstock prevents that industry from being competitive in Canada. That industry is looking elsewhere. Because of the world recession and over all problems in the petrochemical industry, it will not be expanding in the near future.

The manner in which the Government establishes prices at this time for the agricultural sector and petrochemical industry, which produces fertilizer for agriculture, can have an influence on the regeneration of our economy. If we cut them off, if we make it impossible for them to be competitive or put additional pressures on them so that they fail, we will not have that recovery in the economy. We will continually depress our economy with resulting loss of jobs, loss of the productive ability we should have in Canada, and we will never get anywhere. We are, therefore asking the Minister of Finance to consider the energy tax rebate for agriculture which the Minister of Agriculture repeatedly promised, particularly during election time.

I was asking the Minister of Finance whether or not he would respect the promise of cheap gas and oil which he made to all Canadian consumers. His response was that he knew it was hurting, but he would not do anything about it. He went then into a long diatribe about what might have been otherwise, but that is really not the point. I would like to hear what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) has to say.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the reminder from the Hon. Member that no one likes taxes, and I agree with him. No one does like taxes. However, I would hope that someone in the House would apply somewhat better logic, and would to distinguish between tax forgiveness on the one hand and genuine economic activity on the other. We will not automatically create a regeneration of economic activity by forgiving taxes. The Hon. Member has used that argument but I must differ with him on that point.

The role of farmers, across Canada, is of course very important. I visited his riding and had an opportunity to listen to some very concerned and sympathetic people who discussed with me the difficulties they were having raising beef. It seemed to me, as I listened to them, that their problems were not with taxation but, rather, with high interest rates and low consumer prices. I asked whether relief from taxes would give them the relief they needed to survive, and their answer was no. They needed higher prices and some shelter from the economic storms that were hitting everyone.

If we were to follow the line of thought the Hon. Member has just given, we would have to start distinguishing between the activities of Canadians. We would have to say that farmers are a deserving group and should, therefore, be forgiven taxes. However, what about medical doctors? Are they not a useful, important group in our society? They must drive cars. Are they to be forgiven the fuel taxes on their vehicles if they drive to see a sick patient or to a hospital? Many people obviously do these important jobs. What is much more important here is to zero in on the economic problems from which the people are suffering and to try to solve those problems.

Let me point out to the Hon. Member to some of the activities of the Government. The $400 million extra injection into the Farm Credit Corporation is one good example of how we have attacked a basic problem by trying to shelter people from high interest rates, giving them relief under that Corporation. That, it seems to me, is a much better cure than a hodge podge on the tax system which discriminates in favour of one Canadian and against another, or chooses to artificially set taxes for one activity with none for another.

I thank the Hon. Member for reminding me of the importance of the farm community, but I must tell him that the cure he has proposed is not to be a genuine cure for the problems of the farmers.

REQUEST FOR FREE VOTE ON ISSUE OF CRUISE MISSILE TESTING. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ALLOCATE DAY FOR DEBATE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in response to a question of mine in the House of Commons, said he would welcome a debate on the Cruise missile test plans, yet he refused to allocate a Government day for that debate. He suggested that the New Democratic Party might use an opposition day for such a debate. I think he knew we had no opposition days left before the end of the year. The urgency of the debate is such that I do not believe we can wait until some time in the new year whenever that might be, and whenever the Conservatives might agree that we have such a debate on an opposition day.

• (2220)

The Government has been assuring us, through the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), that the new weapons agreement being drawn up in secret with the Pentagon is about to be signed—the framework agreement—and that the Cruise missile testing within that agreement has been agreed upon in principle, and the details will be worked out. This is imminent. In fact the Minister of National Defence said a couple of months ago in a letter to me that it would be within a few weeks. It could very well take place, therefore, during the Christmas adjournment. It was for this reason that I urged the Prime Minister to set aside a Government daysince we, as I say, do not have the NDP opposition day left before the end of the year. We have alrady used an opposition day on the Minority Report on Security and Disarmament. That debate did not deal with Cruise missile testing. The Prime Minister on that occasion said, as indeed he says will be true on every opposition day, that he will treat it as a vote of confidence and, therefore, will not allow a free vote.

The purpose of having a Government day with a resolution presented by the Government to the House delineating the framework agreement and the cruise missile testing agreement under it, is that the Government would not have to regard a vote on that as a vote of want of confidence. This would accomplish what the Prime Minister says he wants to accomplish, namely a debate, although I must says I have my doubts. He says he views the Cruise missile testing matter as extremely serious. This would give us the opportunity to have a debate.

I reminded the Prime Minister that the last time such a measure of magnitude in the field of defence was being undertaken, and agreement sought with the United States, was the NORAD agreement in 1958. This weapons testing agreement, nuclear weapons testing in particular, is the most significant matter, in my view and I think the view of all Members of the House, to come before us involving Canadian-American relations in matters of defence. At that time the Government of the day, under Mr. Diefenbaker, first of all said no to the Liberal opposition request for a Government resolution to bring the matter before the House. On May 19, 1958, Mr. Pearson, then the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said:

> Is it the intention of the government in respect of this very important intergovernmental agreement to follow the normal procedure of giving the house an opportunity, by the submission of a resolution, to express its views?

The then Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) in answer to that question replied:

> —I would say no.

The next day, however, May 20, 1958, the Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Diefenbaker, did agree that on a matter of this importance there should be a Government resolution, that the matter should be debated and should come to a vote. That indeed, is what happened. That is the precedent I asked the Prime Minister to follow, and he has refused.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) was certainly not here this evening when her own colleagues candidly announced that they intended to use all the time remaining before the Christmas adjournment to debate and indeed to filibuster the Bill now before us. Of course, as she was absent all evening, she may not have heard her colleagues, say this, but if she had heard them, she would have realized that the members of her own Party have decided to use the time remaining until the Christmas adjournment in two days to oppose a Bill which is important to the Government. How can she come before us this evening and seriously ask for a day to discuss the Cruise missiles when all her colleagues vigorously oppose discussing anything but the Bill introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin)? I believe that she is speaking from both sides of her mouth, which is quite natural for NDP Members. She tells us—

Miss Jewett: We asked for last Wednesday.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, she asked for last Wednesday and she could well ask for next Wednesday also. We had a chance to discuss this issue during the oral question period and on many other occasions, and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) invited the Hon. Member to use an Opposition day on our return to discuss this issue, and I am convinced . . . The Hon. Member says that her Party does not have any allotted days, but her House Leader could certainly confirm that the NDP will have allotted days next year which they can use—

Miss Jewett: Not before the adjournment.

Mr. Lapierre: I understand that. They will not have any before the adjournment, Mr. Speaker. I am under the impression that the Hon. Member will not get to Christmas at the same time as everyone else. Mr. Speaker, her Party has decided to delay passage of a Bill and resort to filibustering tactics and the Hon. Member is asking us on behalf of her Party for time to debate that issue.

Right after the Christmas break she should ask for a debate on this matter and we shall be happy to consider it. If it is a priority for her Party at that time, we shall be quite willing to debate this issue ad nauseam during an allotted day as the Hon. Member probably wishes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock. I wish to thank all the Hon. Members.

At 10.28 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SUGGESTED ANNUAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Failure on the part of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to announce, on a regular, yearly basis, payments to western farmers with regard to the western grain stabilization and the Canadian Wheat Board payments leaves western farmers with a great deal of uncertainty with respect to their year end business and the operation of their farms. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That this House request the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to make regular yearly announcements pertaining to the Canadian Wheat Board payments and the western grain stabilization payments, thereby taking the political manipulation out of the system, by using a reasonable business practice.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONDOLENCES TO FAMILY OF LATE HON. RÉMI PAUL

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday, it was with a sense of shock that we heard of the sudden decease of the Hon. Rémi Paul, Justice of the Provincial Court in Quebec City and illustrious citizen of Louiseville, in the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière. Rémi Paul was a member of this House from 1958 to 1964, under the Hon. John Diefenbaker who was then Prime Minister of Canada, he represented the same riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière I have the honour of representing today. Mr. Paul is particularly well remembered for his frequent attendance in the House, his speeches and as Vice-Chairman of Committees of the Whole. After a very busy career of more than seven years in the House, Mr. Paul was called to represent his fellow citizens in the Quebec National Assembly from 1966 to 1974, where he was appointed Speaker. Quebec remembers him especially as the Minister of Justice when the Hon. Daniel Johnson was Premier of Quebec. In 1974, Mr. Paul was appointed to the Provincial Court and became known as a conscientious and humanitarian judge, which will not surprise those who knew him. The people of his riding will remember him as a Member who was very close to his constituents and entirely dedicated to their cause. In him, Quebec has lost a great citizen who used all his talents given him by Providence to serve the people.

Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and by the entire House:

That this House offer Mrs. Rémi Paul, her children and relatives our heartfelt condolences on this very sad occasion.

Madam Speaker: The feelings expressed by the Hon. Member on behalf of the House will, I am sure, touch the hearts of the family of our former colleague.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MANITOBA PAYROLL TAX—EFFECT ON HOSPITALS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, a 1.5 per cent payroll tax introduced by the NDP Government of Manitoba is severely affecting the operation of Manitoba hospitals. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House direct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to launch an immediate inquiry into the devastating effects of this cruel and harsh NDP hospital tax, to ensure that health care will not deteriorate and to make certain that hospital staff will not have to be laid off because of this additional NDP hospital tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

PRESERVATION OF HISTORIC RAILWAY BUILDINGS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, on November 25 Canadian Pacific's West Toronto station was demolished. This loss to Canada's heritage and the way it was carried out underline the urgency of establishing legislative reform to protect historic railway buildings. Canadian Pacific argues that it is exempt from provincial or municipal regulations pertaining to heritage buildings, but the Canadian Transport Commission states that there is no relevant federal law concerning this matter, either. In view of the fact that the CTC already protects the natural environment, which is threatened by railways, but balks at protecting the built environment because its mandate must be clarified, and because it is important to have a way to halt the demolition of historic railway buildings which are valued by the community, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin):

That the federal Government bring in legislation clarifying the CTC's right to hear argument on the social value of railway property and to block destruction of those assets if necessary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

GARRISON DIVERSION

RESTORATION OF UNITED STATES FUNDING—REQUEST FOR DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, which I believe will receive unanimous consent of the House. This week the Congress of the United States restored $4 million to construction funding for the Garrison Diversion unit, a project which could devastate the marine environment of Manitoba and cause damage to the fishing and tourist industries. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) and the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael):

• (1410)

That this House reaffirm its commitment to oppose the construction of the Garrison Diversion unit as originally authorized, and direct our ambassador in Washington to convey to the United States Government our dismay and disappointment that this project is still proceeding.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion moved by Mr. Murta, seconded by Mr. Epp?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE STUDY OF FAMILY FARMS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is aware that there have been some 400 bankruptcies in agriculture in 1982, and hundreds of other farmers who just simply sold out. Production costs are continuing to climb at an unbelievable rate, and yet the price of the final product is staying stable or, in fact, in many cases falling. Countless numbers of farmers across the country have lost money in production this past year. They are being told that in 1983 they should plant the crop on which they will lose the least. They are also being told by their financial institutions not to count on operating funds for next year's crop. Between now and spring the family farm in Canada faces the greatest risk to its existence in the history of this country. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That immediately upon the resumption of this House, in January, the Government strike a special Committee of Agriculture to hear witnesses from the industry and arrive at a program to save the family farm in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDING FORMULA—AGENDA FOR FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, the amending formula under Section 38 of the Constitution Act, 1981, permits constitutional change affecting provincial powers without (1), the agreement of any of the three most western Provinces, which are British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan and, (2), without the agreement of the three large Atlantic Provinces, which are Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, and, (3), without the agreement of Quebec which represents one integral part of the duality of this nation, and, (4), without the agreement of Ontario, which represents 35.5 per cent of the population of this nation. This formula may, in the future, be divisive to national unity. Therefore I move:

That this House request the Prime Minister to place for discussion on the agenda of the Constitutional First Ministers' meeting in March, 1983, the amending formula under Section 38 of the Constitution Act, 1981, and that every effort be made to change the amending formula in this Section to require two-thirds of the Provinces having 80 per cent of the population instead of 50 per cent of the population of the Provinces, and that the opting out feature be deleted.

I do not have a seconder, Madam Speaker, so I do not want you to put the motion.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE LATE DR. LEN COWLEY

EXPRESSION OF CONDOLENCES

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House express its sympathy to the family of the Late Dr. Len Cowley, Assistant Deputy Minister of Atlantic Fisheries Service.

I am sure that we express the sympathy of all the Members of the House of Commons who have dealt with him on matters relating to the fishing industry. He will be greatly missed for his outstanding contribution and his dedication to the East Coast fishing industry. I ask unanimous consent on this motion.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the House, through the voice of the Hon. Member, has expressed feelings which will very much touch the family of the late Dr. Cowley.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE PHILIPPINES—OPPOSITION TO REQUEST FOR EXTRADITION TREATY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Many Canadians of Philippino origin, and others, have protested against President Ferdinand Marcos' oppressive dictatorship in the Philippines. Producers of opposition newspapers, clergy and lay leaders of the Churches, and officers of labour unions, have been intimidated, arrested, and held without trial, even though martial law was supposedly lifted. Marcos has asked Canada for an extradition treaty so that he can bring back residents of Canada to the Philippines to be arrested for opposing him. Now Prime Minister Trudeau (Mr. Trudeau) has announced that he will visit Marcos in January. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

• (1415)

That the Prime Minister assure this Parliament that when he visits President Marcos he will refuse to discuss an extradition treaty and will ask President Marcos to release political prisoners and cease intimidation of church leaders, union leaders and opposition leaders.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SEARCH AND RESCUE

CROSS REPORT—LACK OF CONTINGENCY PLAN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence who yesterday tabled in the House an interdepartmental report on search and rescue in Canada, called the Cross Report. Among other things it describes search and rescue as confused and poorly managed, and in some very strongly worded recommendations it speaks to the fact that Canada lacks a contingency plan to deal with a major marine or air disaster.

Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister of National Defence, who I presume is the lead Minister in this area, is this. The Ocean Ranger went down last February with the loss of 84 lives. Off Nova Scotia we will have four rigs with anywhere up to 1,500 men, and off Newfoundland we will have three rigs with anywhere up to 900 men. Given all that, why do we not have in place at the present time a contingency plan to deal with an emergency at sea or in the air?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to correct the Hon. Member when he said that the search and rescue operation was confused and that the people manning it were not competent or were badly trained. I think the Cross Report, if you have read it, says completely the contrary. The people are very devoted, motivated, well trained and competent people who are risking their lives on many occasions for search and rescue operations. I think that is what it said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: As far as the East Coast is concerned, I know the concerns of the Hon. Member because he has questioned me in the House quite a few times on this subject, and I have written also to him quite a few times concerning search and rescue on the East Coast. He asked at one point why we would not put fixed wing aircraft in Newfoundland. This I will answer in a moment.

On the second question about our SAR resources on the East Coast, I think in the Cross Report it is well stated on many occasions that the facilities and the capabilities of search and rescue on the East Coast are well located. The Report does not suggest relocating any of our facilities at the present time.

As far as fixed wing aircraft are concerned, following an answer in this House a few months ago I have pursued this request with my Department and other qualified people, asking them what would be the advantages of fixed wing aircraft in Newfoundland. The consensus was that this would not be advantageous, that it would be much more advantageous if they had an increased helicopter capability. That is what we have done. There are now three Labrador helicopters. Among these three are the new Labrador helicopters which have been updated with increased capabilities and which will be much more useful in the Eastern region than could a fixed wing aircraft.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the Minister is trying to put words into my mouth. I did not describe our personnel in search and rescue as incompetent; neither did the Report. What the Report says, and what I say, is that this Government has been incompetent in managing search and rescue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is the point of the Report and that is what the Minister has failed to address in his reply.

PROVISION OF FIXED WING AIRCRAFT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Report refers to, and I quote:

—better fixed wing aircraft coverage is needed for the far reaches of the area—off Newfoundland, the Arctic and offshore to 30 degrees west longitude.

That is in the report and that is quoted from the Minister's own officials in SAR and the RCC in Halifax. In addition, Judge Soper, in his report on the sinking of the Patrick Morris, released in April, 1971, asked for wider dispersal of aircraft and personnel. The Minister's own commanding officer at the RCC Centre in Halifax in December, 1980, said we need more fixed wing aircraft in Newfoundland, and more personnel. Given these facts, why does the Minister insist on flying in the face of the recommendations of his own personnel and not provide more dispersal of fixed wing aircraft and more personnel to man the RCC?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I never said, as the lead Minister for search and rescue, that there would not be a possibility for improvement if we had more resources or more capabilities. I would like to stress the fact to the Hon. Member that the Cross Committee was asked by the Government to evaluate the present situation of search and rescue in Canada and to tell us exactly how we should best handle it. He has referred to 1971; well I am referring to 1982 and to this Government at the moment. We are acting on the three identified issues of search and rescue—that is: improving management, prevention, and the operation itself. I think it is indeed a very positive step forward to try to refine and improve the search and rescue operation across Canada.

When he asked a previous question about a major system by which we could prevent a major disaster at sea, I think the Hon. Member could look at the Prinzendam case where all our resources were sent to try to prevent any loss of life. The Prinzendam was a success as far as our search and rescue effort was concerned. Many of the incidents which have occurred in the last ten years have been success stories for search and rescue.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the Minister will know that the principal recommendations contained in the Cross Report, which he tabled yesterday, were contained in a document by Mr. Cross that was released to Cabinet on February 1, 1982, immediately following the sinking of the Ocean Ranger. These recommendations were contained in that report to Cabinet in February of this year.

NECESSITY FOR FUNDING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister is threefold. First, why did the Government not act on the recommendations of February of this year, by Mr. Cross? Second, can we now expect that there will be a single envelope to finance search and rescue and that there will be an increase in expenditure to provide the additional equipment and personnel recommended by Cross? Third, will there be a single Minister responsible for search and rescue to try to bring management into this chaos which is costing Canadian lives?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as far as the last sentence of the Hon. Member is concerned, I would like to correct it also. In the Cross Report it was indicated that in the incidents which have happened so far no increased capabilities or facilities could have saved any lives. In other words, it was telling us that search and rescue reacted, and acted very well, in all incidents, and that additional lives could not have been saved if our SAR authorities had more capabilities and more facilities. I do not think there has been a cost in lives due to search and rescue competence or incompetence. As far as the Hon. Member's other question about—

Mr. McGrath: The budget.

Mr. Lamontagne: —the budget, it is obvious that the Cross Report stated that the lead Minister and the administration were well co-ordinated and that they should have their own envelope as far as resources are concerned. The question of the envelope for search and rescue; this is something we will have to discuss with Cabinet soon, before the end of this fiscal year. I will recommend, instead of having part of the budget come from DND and MOT, that we have a budget which is strictly search and rescue and independent of any other envelope.

REQUEST THAT CONTINGENCY PLAN BE DEVELOPED IMMEDIATELY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, thank you for the privilege of asking a short supplementary question. Will he, as the lead Minister, act now to put in place a contingency plan which can address a disaster at sea or in the air before more lives are lost?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been at the press conference this morning, he would know that General Manson answered that question, saying that they were already working on such a plan which could be implemented in the case of disaster.

MINES AND MINING

PLAN TO TAX NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. Now that the plan to tax northern benefits has received scathing criticism from a number of respected organizations, including the Canadian Mining Association, Northern Chambers of Mines, and mine workers, will she give a commitment to the House and to the tens of thousands of unemployed mine workers in Canada that she will fight the Government's plan to phase in this new burden on the troubled mining industry? Or on the other hand, does she still support this regressive plan which the President of the Canadian Mining Association has compared to "throwing an anvil to a drowning man", when the man needs a life preserver?

• (1425)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I do endorse the plan, and I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he have further conversations with people in the mining industry who have accepted the fact that the plan is fair in that the moratorium does last for another year and the taxation benefits will be phased in to allow for contract negotiations.

REQUEST THAT PLAN BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, it appears that the Hon. Minister does not read her mail. Whatever the magnitude of this tax, it is taking revenue from northerners and the mining industry of Canada.

My supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. The President of the Mining Association has said that this plan will reduce exploration and new mine development, erode the ability of northern minerals to compete on world markets, result in premature closing of existing mines, create labour unrest, and an exodus of people and capital from the North. In other words, this is a plan to depopulate the North. Will the Minister of Finance accept the advice of the President of the Mining Association and withdraw his December 2 decision to tax the mining industry out of existence?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I disagree totally with the assessment of the President of the Canadian Mining Association. The plan has been announced. It is a generous plan in so far as certain people of the North are concerned in comparison to others. The plan is here to stay and it is not going to be changed. I suggest that the President of the Mining Association should go on to something else.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSION INCREASE DUE TO SUPERANNUATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. According to the law as passed by this Parliament, retired federal employees would be entitled next month to an increase in their pensions equivalent to the increase in the cost of living. It is reported that the President of the Treasury Board told reporters yesterday that the Government of Canada intends to break the law of Canada by restricting pension increases to some 6.5 per cent. Under what authority does the President of the Treasury Board act when he says the Cabinet of the Government of Canada is going to break the law of Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I did not at any time say that this Government intended to break the law. What I did say to the parliamentary committee and reporters was that there are two lines of precedent that could be looked at. One line of precedent suggests that when a Bill of the kind we are talking about receives second reading and approval in principle by the House, the Government could proceed with the ultimate action depending on the final decision by Parliament. The other line of precedent suggests that the measure would have to be passed completely.

In any event, it is certainly not our intention to break the law. The cheques are not ordinarily sent out until after January 25. This House resumes on January 17, and I understand it is the intention of the Government House Leader to ask that the Bill be given priority. I suggest, therefore, that my hon. friend's question is quite hypothetical.

Mr. Broadbent: I suggest to the Minister, Madam Speaker, that respect for the rule of law is not hypothetical, and, given the past practice of this Government, that it is, indeed, a very relevant question.

REQUEST THAT INCREASE BE GRANTED UNDER EXISTING LAW

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to obtain the assurance of the Minister that he is now telling the House that, unless the Bill in question, and I refer to the Bill pertaining to the pensions of retired federal civil servants, is passed through all stages and becomes the law of Canada, the Government will adhere to existing law? That is to say, until that event occurs, will the Government maintain the law and provide the pension increase under existing law to which those retired civil servants are entitled?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is certainly our intention to respect the rule of law, and our intention not to send out cheques involving amounts in the area recommended in Bill C-133 until that Bill has been passed into law. I would suggest to my hon. friends that they do everything possible to co-operate in allowing the House to make a final decision on the Bill so the concern he is attempting to develop will be, as I said before, totally hypothetical.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: I want the Minister to know that Members of this Party are opposed to all three Bills and we will debate them in terms of all the time that is required.

REQUEST THAT INDEXING OF PENSIONS RESPECT RULE OF LAW

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My final question is for the Minister of Justice. Will he give some assurance to Parliament and, more important, to the people of Canada, that the Parliament of Canada, as represented by the Cabinet, will maintain the principle of the rule of law? Will he, as Minister of Justice, assure the House that increases for family allowances and retired federal civil service pensioners will be increased next month according to existing law? Will he give us that assurance?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. gentleman that any advice that I give to Cabinet will respect the rule of law.

GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR JOB CREATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It appears from the Minister's response to questions that I put to him last week, as well as from other statements arising from the provincial Finance Ministers' meeting, that any announcement of federal Government action to create new jobs will take place after a budget next year which is expected some time in late February or March. Why is the Minister delaying any action on job creation until half way through what will undoubtedly be the worst winter of unemployment since 1933?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would remind my hon. friend that the Government has put forward several billions of dollars in projects involving jobs, some of which are direct job creation, and some for job creation by the private sector. Some of those jobs will result from the implementation of Bills that are currently before the House—

Mr. Siddon: Where did the jobs go in the first place?

Mr. Lalonde: —in particular from the Income Tax Act that the Opposition has refused to debate up until now. The Opposition has dragged its feet and has let the bells ring rather than debate this Bill so that Canadian taxpayers will get their refunds and the companies will get their benefits.

I suggest to my hon. friend that, before asking for more, he should at least let Parliament decide on what has already been announced and is awaiting Parliamentary approval.

Mr. Wilson: The Minister of Finance knows full well that we have not refused to debate that Income Tax Act. If he or his predecessor had brought that Bill forward when it should have been brought forward in June, July, or September or October this year, it would have been passed by now. He also knows that that Bill will reduce the number of jobs in this country instead of increasing them.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING OF FINANCE MINISTERS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, it is clear that the Minister is opting for more high visibility programs which make it appear that jobs are being created, rather than looking to the economic benefit of acting now to create jobs that are desperately needed today. Since there is no definite date for another meeting of provincial Finance Ministers, and since this meeting, if called, will not take place until some time in February, will the Minister today show some concern for those who are without a job and set a specific date for the next Finance Minister's meeting with the Provinces so that he can put forward a direct action plan to create jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would just remind my hon. friend that, at the time we were supposed to debate the Income Tax Act, the Official Opposition decided to resort to the childish game of hiding behind the curtains rather than being in the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —to debate the legislation. They decided to waste time by letting the bells ring again. It is up to them to decide whether they want to do it or not, but they should have the honesty to recognize what actually happened in the House when the Official Opposition refused to assume its responsibility and debate the legislation that is before the House.

As far as the programs are concerned, I indicated in my October 27 statement that $1.1 billion of expenditure will have a considerable job creation impact. Out of this expenditure there is a special program called NEED, to which we have allocated $500 million and with which the Provinces have co-operated so that we will have more than $700 million allocated to this very Program and its funds will begin to be expended in the course of this winter.

I invite my hon. friend to look at the facts and see that programs are being implemented at the present time to come to the rescue of those unemployed in the country, and I invite him to show real concern and attention to the problems of these people by beginning to get Parliament working to pass the legislation that these people need.

TRADE

PURCHASE OF F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—MANUFACTURE OF COMPONENTS IN CANADA

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When Canada ordered its $5 billion fleet of F-18 fighter aircraft, we were to get approximately $3 billion in industrial offsets. This was to create 24,000 aerospace jobs based on the United States production run of 1,366 planes. Is it not true, if the U.S. production total is lowered, that the contractors' obligation to buy F-18 components and assemblies in Canada, and their over-all industrial benefits obligations, will be proportionately lowered? Would the Minister comment on the present status of that proposed $3 billion offset package and if the expected creation of 24,000 jobs is assured?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I believe my colleagues, the Minister of Supply and Services and the Minister of National Defence, indicated in a press conference several weeks ago that, with respect to industrial offset benefits as a result of the purchase of the F-18 aircraft, we already were ahead of our initial forecast and it is fully expected that we will meet the guidelines that we set down for ourselves before we purchased the aircraft.

POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN SIZE OF PURCHASE BY UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister, or for the Minister of National Defence. In a press interview last week, the U.S. Chief of Naval Operations said that the American production target was now unrealistic and that the number would likely be reduced to a total of 700. What impact will this reduction have on the Canadian industrial offset package and on the $5 billion contract that we offered the United States on a controversial airplane? Why did the Government agree to accept an offset package based on a specific production total, and why did the Government not negotiate for a firm and fixed amount? How many jobs will be lost now?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the alleged statement of the officer of the U.S. Naval Operations cited by the Hon. Member. I will check that statement and get back to him.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON AMNESTY FOR ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week my colleague from Sarnia-Lambton asked the Minister whether or not he would accept the recommendation made by the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council for a limited amnesty with respect to illegal immigrants resident in Canada. In view of the concern which this recommendation has generated in the country, especially in Metropolitan Toronto, can he assure the House that the Government will not accept this recommendation?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, let me first indicate that, in response to that particular report, I have appointed a special adviser who will undertake consultation with a number of groups since the report contained a number of recommendations concerning enforcement actions, and others related to the control of illegal immigration. I would underline that at the present time the Government has no plans for amnesty. It was simply a recommendation from the Advisory Council. We would not take any kind of action until the special adviser reports back to me in April.

GARRISON DIVERSION

RESTORATION OF UNITED STATES FUNDING—REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the bi-level government delegation to Washington, headed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Manitoba NDP Minister of Natural Resources, to oppose continued development of the Garrison Diversion Project has obviously failed, due to the fact that the U.S. Senate has just reinstated $4 million of interim funding to proceed with the project, will the Minister tell the House what he will do about this failure, and what his immediate plans are to try to get the message across to the U.S. Senate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, it is true that the funds which have been removed in Congress have now been restored by a joint meeting of the Senate and the House. But I think the Hon. Member can draw some comfort from the fact that there is an explicit assurance in the provision of those funds that none of the money will be used in a way that will affect the flow of waters into Canada, affect Manitoba waters or the Manitoba fisheries. That seems to me to be the important objective that has been sought by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and by his counterpart in Manitoba. That has been the aim of the Government of Canada for many years in opposing the development of the Garrison Diversion in a way that would have an adverse impact on Canadian waters or fisheries. That will not happen as a result of the funds that have been added to the project.

Mr. McKenzie: I hope the Minister will consider another representation to Washington.

REPORTED STATEMENTS MADE BY NORTH DAKOTA OFFICIAL

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the Attorney General of North Dakota has stated that the Garrison Diversion Project will not be stopped by the Canadian Government and that the recommendations of the International Joint Commission will be ignored. Has the Minister made representations to the Government of North Dakota to protest these outrageous statements?

• (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have not considered protesting these statements which I would regard as unacceptable, as the Hon. Member does.

I think it is important to bear in mind that the new Bill to which he has referred includes a very definite stipulation that none of the funds can be used for the construction of project features affecting waters flowing into Canada. That really looks after the concern of the Hon. Member, at least at this point, and the concern of the Canadian Government. We would have been much happier if the funds had not been reappropriated, but there is a provision that provides they will not be used in the way I have described.

PENSIONS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW BILL C-131

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. Due to the kindness and thoughtfulness of my colleagues in my caucus who thought I should ask two important questions today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: At least it will be for the first time.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has been recognized for the purpose of asking a question. I wish he would proceed.

Mr. Benjamin: I just wanted to make sure you could hear me. It is also because my mother is in the Gallery today, on her 78th birthday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: In the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I direct my question to the Prime Minister. I would like to know, 2.4 million Canadian pensioners would like to know, and my mother would like to know why he is going to reduce the increase in her Old Age Pension, and would he give an undertaking to the House that he will ask his Cabinet colleagues to reconsider, repent and relent, and withdraw Bill C-131?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would want his mother to know the truth about this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It is reassuring that he would ask the Government to speak the truth so that his mother can understand it. I want to point out to the Hon. Member that there is no intention of reducing the Old Age Pension.

Mr. Benjamin: Reducing the increase.

Mr. Trudeau: On the contrary it will continue—yes, those were the words which the Hon. Member used. The Government will continue to increase the Old Age Pension. We intend seeing it increased by a rate of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984 and since we hope that inflation will be at 6 per cent or below in 1983 and at 5 per cent in 1984, hopefully, with the co-operation of all Members and of the provincial Governments, we will be able to establish a 6 per cent rate of inflation, in which case the old age pensioners will be reimbursed for the exact amount of CPI.

POSITION OF WIDOWS OF RAILWAY PENSIONERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, a minor correction to the Prime Minister—I said a reduction in the increase of the pensions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to know, and thousands of railway pensioners would like to know, and my mother, a widow of a railway pensioner, would like to know, whether or not he will prevent the railways from cutting off widows' pensions at age 70 and cancelling their railway passes.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite sure that the Hon. Member's mother is a very intelligent person and also that she negotiated very hard, either herself or her representative, with CP on those pension terms. I might meet her afterwards to get to know more about the actual agreement that exists between CP and herself, her group of employees. All this is to say that the Government does not tell CP what pensions to give. This is the result of a collective agreement, I presume, and consequently we have no right to intervene in these matters and force CP to pay more or pay less.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR CANADA DECISION ON LOCATION OF NEW HEADQUARTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will recall that on December 9 of this year, regarding the new Air Canada headquarters building, I asked the Minister whether he had asked for an investigation, considering the enormous difference between the two tenders. The Minister's answer was that the fourteen criteria established by Air Canada were enough for him to let Air Canada go ahead. Yesterday, he admitted to the Leader of the Official Opposition that he had warned the President of Air Canada of an RCMP investigation. In the circumstances, could the Minister inform us today, considering the fact that he had already warned the President of Air Canada that the RCMP was going to investigate the contract, could he inform us why—and I think that the Canadian people have the right to know this—he did not recommend, as I asked him to, that Air Canada suspend its decision made on December 9 of this year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, of course I would like to tell the Hon. Member today what this investigation is about, and he would probably understand . . . But whatever I say, it will be misinterpreted. I am under orders by the Minister of Justice not to divulge the purpose of this investigation, and I intend to follow these orders.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. Now it seems that there are figures that prove there is a difference of $12 million between the first and second tender. For the Prime Minister's information, the Minister had warned the President of Air Canada that the RCMP was going to investigate. I asked the Minister, on behalf of the Canadian people, to ask Air Canada to postpone this very important decision. In the circumstances, will the Right Hon. Prime Minister, in the interests of Canada and after informing the President of Air Canada, suspend the President of Air Canada until the RCMP investigation is able to shed some light on this particular contract?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there is one rule I have always followed since I became Prime Minister, and it has always served me well: Never interfere in any way with investigations being conducted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would take the same position and let the RCMP continue its investigation without our intervening of interfering.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF RESPONSIBLE MINISTER

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell the House what his intentions are with respect to the implementation of recommendation No. 130 of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, which calls for the designation of a Minister of State for the status of disabled persons, who would be directly responsible for the affairs of disabled persons, in addition to his major portfolio?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am considering that question. The Hon. Member will know that a great number of the recommendations, I believe two-thirds of them, have already been acted upon. We are examining what we should be doing and how to respond to the other one-third, and as we are doing that I would consider the opportunity of designating a Minister, as the Hon. Member suggests.

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, if I could just remind the Prime Minister, we appreciate the work that has been done by his various Ministers, and particularly by the Secretary of State, but we recognize the fact that he is able only to co-ordinate the efforts of his various Departments. It now being almost two years since the report came out we hope that the Prime Minister will be willing to recognize the fact that disabled people have been waiting for some while, and would he make this change as quickly as possible?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member is asking the same question in another form. I will eventually consider designating a Minister. However, the Hon. Member recognizes, in his question, that the co-ordination has been proceeding well. I do not think, from the point of view of the disabled, that it is all that important whether one Minister or another is responsible for that particular area of government concern. The important thing is that we have acted and will continue to act on that report.

PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN QUEBECAIR AND AIR CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns Quebecair. Could the Minister give the House a progress report on the discussions being held by Air Canada and his Department with representatives of the Government of Quebec and Quebecair?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to say that discussions between our negotiators and provincial spokesmen have been sufficiently realistic to pave the way for negotiations on restructuring Quebecair rather than creating a new company, Quebecair 2.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

THREAT TO JOBS IN PHARMACEUTICAL LABORATORY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. On November 1 I asked the Minister about a decision made by the foreign owned or American owned Ayerst Company to transfer its pharmaceutical laboratory facilities from Canada to New Jersey, thus threatening about 300 jobs in our country, and which would also mean the loss of about half of Canada's pharmaceutical laboratory facilities. At that time he said he would look into the matter. This morning, seven weeks later, the workers were told that the federal Government would be starting a feasibility study which might run about two or three months.

Can the Minister assure and guarantee the House, either today or tomorrow, before we recess for the Christmas holidays, that those 300 jobs will remain here in Canada and not be transferred to the United States through the manipulations of a foreign-owned company in this country?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I believe the situation is somewhat more complicated than described by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville. However, I will look into the allegations which he raised with respect to representations that were made to the workers this morning. I, in fact, met with some representatives of the laboratory in question, together with another institution in the Province of Quebec which is interested in integrating some of the activities of the laboratory with its own. The matter is also being examined, I understand, by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and if there have been any developments I will be happy to convey them to the Hon. Member.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

AVAILABILITY OF CONTINGENCY PLANS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, concerning which I gave him notice a few minutes ago. Did I understand the Minister correctly, when he was responding to a question from the Hon. Member for St. John's East a few moments ago, to say that there were contingency plans in place whereby the SAR system could meet major marine disasters similar to the sinking of the Ocean Ranger oil rig off the coast of Newfoundland last February, which claimed 84 lives? Are contingency plans now in place?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I did not say that they were in place. I said that ICSAR, which is the interdepartmental committee, when asked at the press conference this morning if there was such a plan in existence for major marine disasters, stated that it recognized the need for a plan and that it was already working on it to make sure that it is better than what is now in existence. There is not necessarily a contingency plan in existence, but there are of course some facilities that we can use. For instance, concerning the Prinzendam, we used every resource available to try to save the lives there, and we succeeded. However, ICSAR recognizes that this is not enough, and it is indeed working on a plan to improve our capabilities in this regard.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad to hear that because, as the Minister well knows, that was one of the observations made in the report, that such a contingency plan is absolutely essential.

TIME NEEDED TO FORMULATE CONTINGENCY PLAN

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): In view of the fact that at 1 p.m. Major General Manson confirmed to reporters, at the press conference of which the Minister spoke that, in fact, no such contingency plans existed, and he did not mention anything about consideration currently under way to bring into existence such contingency plans, would the Minister say what time frame we are considering to the point at which such a plan will have been completed to meet the major disasters which will undoubtedly recur in the regions of the East Coast as well as the West Coast?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, in answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Yukon, I must tell him that most of the 58 recommendations of the Cross Report have been accepted by us as being very logical and should be implemented. Many of them have already been implemented during the last six months or so.

Mr. Nielsen: Where is the contingency plan?

Mr. Lamontagne: And we intend to look immediately into the others which have not been implemented.

Mr. Nielsen: When will the contingency plan be ready?

Mr. Lamontagne: Well, the Hon. Member for Yukon knows very well that it is very hard to put a time frame on a recommendation like this, but I can assure him that two members of ICSAR, the chairman and the vice-chairman of ICSAR, which is the Interdepartmental Committee on Search And Rescue, are very much aware of the urgency of having a plan such as this just in case such an emergency happens.

PROVISION OF HELICOPTER FACILITIES AT MASSET, B.C.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the interesting aspect about the report on search and rescue which is in front of us is that it really means no advancement at all to the system we have in place. The title has been changed and minimum presentation has been reorganized but, in my opinion, the report is really a sham.

The statements by the Minister are largely self-serving. In the winter, the disaster involving the Prinzendam would have seen 500 people at the bottom of the sea, and it was largely a question of luck. There are some very notable and very serious problems. Would the Minister give us a commitment as to when he will put the helicopter base and equipment at Masset, which will fill a very large gap? Will he give us an assurance that he will not take that resource from some other base in Canada, robbing Peter to pay Paul? Would he give us an indication of what kind of resources he will put along the Gulf of St. Lawrence which will prevent death in the water, such as on the Hudson Transport? Will he hire enough people to—

Madam Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think that if saving lives were a matter of luck . . . We have a saying in French that luck is always on the side of those who know how to play, and I think there must have been a lot of knowledgeable people in Search and Rescue.

[English]

I know that the Hon. Member is interested in the West Coast, coming from Comox-Powell River. I can tell that he probably has not read the report at all, because, by the question he has asked, he is not aware of what we have done in that area. I can tell him that there have been many improvements in the SAR capabilities on the West Coast. For example, we have a third hovercraft which we did not have last year. We have a 600 class cutter and two—

Mr. Skelly: Those cutters have been taken away. It's not true!

Mr. Lamontagne: Well, even if the Hon. Member does not want to hear the answer, he might as well listen to it. There have been improvements to the different Coast Guard vessels, and there is also a new helicopter in Comox, which is one of the new upgraded SARCUP versions of helicopter. Therefore, I think that, as far as the West is concerned, capabilities have been greatly improved so far as search and rescue is concerned.

Oral Questions

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP FOR BICENTENNIAL OF UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your recognition. I direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who is responsible for Canada Post. I wrote to the Minister in September of 1980 concerning the issuance of a stamp to commemorate the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists in Lower Canada in 1783 and Upper Canada in 1784. It would be most fitting to mark this important migration, since it played such a significant role in the development of our nation, as the migration consisted not only of English people, but also of Mohawk Indians, Germans, Swiss, Dutch, French and Spanish people. I would like to ask the Minister why a commemorative stamp has not been issued to mark this bicentennial in 1983 and 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I take the representation of the Hon. Member, and I will be discussing the matter with the Canada Post Corporation. I understand that the program for 1983 is now complete. I understand that the members of the advisory committee saw fit to retain this proposal for 1984. Therefore, the Hon. Member should expect that such a commemorative, will probably be in the 1984 program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SERIOUS CONSIDERATION

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): My supplementary is to the same Minister, Madam Speaker. I appreciate his remarks, but I would just like to say that is why I notified him in 1980, in order to give him enough lead time to consider the stamp. I would like to suggest to the Minister that it seems very disappointing that, in 1976, Canada Post issued a bicentennial stamp recognizing the American revolution, so I would certainly hope that this Minister, as soon as possible, would make this representation. I also ask the Prime Minister to make representation to Canada Post that this be given serious consideration. Could I get that commitment?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, of course I shall transmit the Hon. Member's representations to the Canada Post Corporation.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, that is exactly what I indicated this morning to my colleague, subject to change with reasonable notice.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. MURTA—S.O. 43 MOTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I would just like to make sure that Hansard records that earlier on under motions under Standing Order 43, I raised a matter and received unanimous consent of the House. The motion was seconded by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) and also the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael). Therefore, it had all-Party agreement.

Madam Speaker: That will be recorded in Hansard.

MR. GURBIN—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MISS BÉGIN

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which relates to the proceedings of the House last evening. During the course of my speech in the debate on Bill C-132, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) made two comments, both of which I believe are unparliamentary language or represent unparliamentary language. On the first occasion her words were: "This is a complete lie", the second intervention was: "It is a complete lie. Is that clear enough?"

First, on the basis of its being unparliamentary language, I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be asked to withdraw those interventions. Second, I would like to reserve the opportunity at this time to prepare a case for a question of privilege, which I think is substantiated by the comments I made which caused the Minister to react in the manner she did.

Madam Speaker: This does come under the heading of a point of order. The Hon. Member is making a point of order and I think we can deal with it on a point of order. There is no necessity to bring up a question of privilege once this particular point of order has been settled.

I have Hansard here and indeed I see it is confirmed that the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) did use those expressions twice. I have to say that these matters should be dealt with at the time at which they occur. It is very difficult for the Chair to adjudicate these matters the next day because it has to do with the proceedings, the normal operations of the House. In the course of these operations, when these things occur I would like Hon. Members to raise them at that time and not 24 hours later. However, that being said, I have to agree with the Hon. Member that this kind of language is considered to be unparliamentary. I suppose the Hon. Minister will probably want to withdraw those words.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, in the parliamentary spirit, although what I said was true, I will withdraw the words I used.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: And—

[Translation]

—I will say that the Hon. Member is a sophist, which happens in the best of families. I therefore take back what I said.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, when unparliamentary expressions are used, the practice in this place is for an absolute, unqualified withdrawal. It was hardly a withdrawal by the Minister when she said "although the words I used were true, I will withdraw them". That is not good enough in keeping with the practice of this place. The withdrawal should be total and unqualified.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bégin) has clearly shown that she knows the rules of parliamentary courtesy. She said that she took back her words, and I think the example in question was set by Members opposite. I think Members who said withdrawals should not be qualified are not exactly paragons themselves. In the case of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister indicated that the Member could have remained closer to the truth but she withdrew the expression she used, and, I think, thus complied with the Rules of the House.

[English]

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I appreciate what you said at the beginning concerning the interventions. Those interventions had to be confirmed by Hansard before I could present my point of order, and this is the first opportunity since Hansard was printed to find out whether it was reported. There are many statements made during the course of debate which may or may not be represented in Hansard; therefore, we had to check on that before we could make representations.

Madam Speaker: I understand that, but if those words were heard during the course of the debate, they should be dealt with immediately. I am just warning Hon. Members that these matters should be dealt with at the time they occur. There are two conditions for disallowing unparliamentary language. The idea of disallowing unparliamentary language is because it could create some kind of commotion in the House. Obviously, if these words were not immediately heard, or did not insult the Hon. Member at the particular time, there was no commotion. However, I take the point; the language was unparliamentary. As for the prefacing, I have heard several prefacings of this nature when I pleaded five or six times for Hon. Members to withdraw certain language, which they finally did. Therefore, I have to be fair to the Hon. Minister. I have accepted it in other cases and I have to accept it in her case.

PETITIONS

MR. TAYLOR—CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): I have great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of some 603 Canadians living in the riding of Bow River, in the Province of Alberta. This petition requests the reinstatement of capital punishment.

This petition is from the High River-Okotoks area of Bow River constituency. Two young women were mutilated and their remains set on fire in this area and the petitioners feel very strongly that capital punishment should be reinstated for deliberately planned murder and where a person is found guilty of same beyond the shadow of a doubt. When the ultimate crime, namely murder, occurs, then the ultimate punishment, namely death, should be enacted.

My petitioners humbly pray that the House of Commons will reflect the thinking of the majority of the people of Canada and reinstate capital punishment.

MR. MURPHY—OPPOSITION TO BILLS C-131 AND C-133

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of hundreds of Canadian citizens who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to thus present a grievance common to your petitioners, and they ask the House honourably to provide a remedy. The petition is that Bill C-133 and Bill C-131 will reduce the pensions of senior citizens through the capping of indexing of pensions of public servants and old age pensioners; and the undersigned humbly pray and call upon all Members of this House to oppose this legislation.

MR. DOMM—IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I have a petition with 3,699 signatures on it from people right across Canada. It comes from an organization known as "Operation Humbug", which is against forced metric. I present this petition to you, Madam Speaker. This is prompted because the petitioners who have been petitioning this House have been accused by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) of forging signatures. The signatures on this petition bear a printed name, address and signature. If this is not sufficient for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I am prepared to supply the phone numbers on the next petition.

• (1510)

I present this petition on behalf of petitioners from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. The petition says:

> We oppose the imposition of the metric system and request that this system be continued on a strictly voluntary basis.

That is the same motion as in the petition presented by the 135,000 petitioners just a short time ago.

MR. SARGEANT—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed by 1,714 people in Manitoba who are opposed to the Government's plans to test the Cruise missile in Canada.

Cruise missile testing has been the subject of much debate outside Parliament. In fact, on October 30, 1982, 15,000 people marched on the streets of Ottawa to protest the proposed testing of this vehicle of annihilation. Canadians have made their views clear on the steps of Parliament; they urged the Government to refuse the Cruise. Unfortunately this matter has never been debated inside Parliament. As the representative of the people of Selkirk-Interlake and as the New Democratic Party spokesperson on defence issues, I am pleased to be able to table this petition against the Cruise missile in the House today.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I also wish to present a petition today calling upon the House to oppose the testing of the Cruise missile on Canadian soil. I am presenting this petition to express the views of over 560 residents of Kootenay East-Revelstoke, who feel that the Cruise missile is a new and dangerous weapon in the nuclear arms race and as such is a threat to all peoples and nations of the world. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon this House to oppose the testing of the Cruise missile on Canadian soil.

MR. WENMAN—THEORIES OF EVOLUTION AND CREATION

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, like other petitioners I, too, rise and present my petition with the words that I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of concerned residents of the Lower Mainland of British Columbia. The purpose of the petition is to ensure that a balanced portrayal of two competing theories, namely evolution and creation, be given fair and representative time in our public institutions, and specifically on the CBC.

MR. TAYLOR—CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of 37 Canadians who reside in various places in the constituency of Bow River. The petition requests capital punishment be reinstated for crimes of first degree murder where a person is found guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt. The Government has a responsibility to reflect the thinking of the people in its legislation, and these petitioners pray that the Government will bring a Bill to the House of Commons reinstating the death sentence for anyone found guilty of deliberating taking the life of another human being.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. SHIELDS—PARLIAMENT OF U.S.S.R.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I wonder if there would be any possible way to find out how many petitions are presented in the Russian Parliament concerning deployment of the SS 20 missile?

Madam Speaker: I am afraid I cannot help the Hon. Member. He might ask a question on the Order Paper or somewhere else.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have notice of a motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 26 by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the House has just had presented to it petitions coming from thousands of Canadians opposed to the testing of the Cruise missile on Canadian soil. Just before I move the motion, Madam Speaker, I would say that this matter is of considerable urgency because a deal of some kind has been negotiated between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America, the details of which will be announced before Parliament comes back after the Christmas recess. It is therefore our view that such a matter of profound importance ought to be debated here in Parliament.

Under the provisions of Standing Order 26, Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House to discuss a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the advisability of the Government of Canada concluding an agreement with the Government of the United States of America to test Cruise missile weaponry in Canada.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has given the Chair a statement, as required by Standing Order 26, of the matter proposed to be discussed. The Hon. Member argues that the matter is a genuine emergency because he has been advised that the text of the agreement has been agreed upon, that the House will recess tomorrow and that, in the past, international agreements have been debated in Parliament.

I cannot quarrel with the two last statements, but I do have some difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that there is a genuine emergency because the text of the agreement has been agreed upon and the House will adjourn tomorrow. My predecessors and I have consistently defined "genuine emergency" as a sudden occurrence. That condition is not met in this case.

The matter of an agreement for the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada has been raised in this House under various forms on numerous occasions. More particularly, on April 29, 1982, the Hon. Member proposed a non-confidence motion under supply calling for, inter alia, no Cruise missile testing in Canada, which was voted upon and lost.

I would refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 288, which reads as follows:

> The Speaker is bound to apply to motions made under S.O.26 the established rules of debate, and to enforce the principle that subjects excluded by those rules cannot be brought forward thereon, such as a matter under adjudication by a court of law, or matters already discussed or appointed for consideration during the current session, whether upon a substantive motion, upon an amendment, or upon an Order of the Day.

Although I recognize the importance of the subject, I cannot find it to be appropriate for debate under Standing Order 26.

In relation to the fact that the House will recess tomorrow, may I finish my ruling by quoting to the House in part a decision rendered by my predecessor on July 24, 1975, on page 7905 of Hansard for that year. At that time he said:

Finally, I must also note that the hon. member suggested that a factor involved is the impending adjournment or recess of the House, if that is in fact a reality, and therefore this is a matter which places before the House some problems of critical proportions. Surely the hon. member realizes that if I were to apply that standard to every matter of national importance put forward under that condition as a subject for debate under Standing Order 26, it would be a rather anomalous and difficult situation for the House to deal with. For those reasons, I feel that special time ought not to be set aside for this subject matter.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,325, 4,435, 4,524 and 4,534.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL DEEP SEA TRADE

Question No. 4,325—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For each of the past five years for which statistics are available, what was Canada's international deep sea trade in terms of (a) dollar value (b) tons of cargo loaded and unloaded in Canadian ports?

2. For each of these years (a) what was the government's best estimate of the total freight charges for Canada's international deep sea trade (b) what percentage of Canada's international deep sea trade was carried in Canadian registered vessels?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) The value of Canadian deep sea trade totalled $24.2 billion in 1976, $25.9 billion in 1977, $30.5 billion in 1978, $38.4 billion in 1979 and $48.5 billion in 1980.

Deep sea trade is defined here as including all Canada's international trade except with the United States; it includes all modes of transport, including air, with other countries. It should be noted, however, that air cargo data are considered to be relatively minimal. On deep sea exports, air cargo represents less than 10 per cent of the value of the trade. A split of imports by mode of transport was not available at the time this reply was prepared.

(b) Deep sea trade loaded in Canadian ports, including transshipment, in metric tons, amounted to 71.9 million in 1976, 73.6 million in 1977, 75.5 million in 1978, 92.2 million in 1979 and 101.5 million in 1980. The deep sea trade unloaded in Canadian ports, including transshipment, in metric tons, amounted to 26.9 million in 1976, 29.0 million in 1977, 29.1 million in 1978, 26.8 million in 1979 and 28.9 million in 1980. In this case, deep sea trade is defined as all Canada's international trade except with the U.S. and covers only waterborne movements.

2. (a) The Government did not make any estimate of this kind. Statistics Canada collects data on earnings and freight payments for purposes of constructing the Canadian balance of international payments. These data, however, exclude freight payments to non-resident operators for export, and for resident operators for imports and therefore, do not fully answer the question raised.

Taking these limitations into account, it is noted that gross payments on imports to foreign ocean shipping operators recorded in the Canadian balance of international payments amounted to $561 million in 1976, $611 million in 1977, $615 million in 1978, $759 million in 1979 and $829 million in 1980.

Gross payments on exports to Canadian ocean shipping operators amounted to $189 million in 1976, $200 million in 1977, $231 million in 1978, $328 million in 1979 and $370 million in 1980. These two sets of figures both exclude payments collected within Canada/U.S. trade. The table below provides more complete data.

(b) In terms of tonnage, Canadian registered vessels carried 0.2 per cent of our deep sea trade in 1976, 0.3 per cent in 1977, 0.2 per cent in 1978, 0.5 per cent in 1979 and 1.0 per cent in 1980. Statistics on Canadian registered vessels only, underestimate Canadian participation in deep sea trades since Canadian companies own and/or charter ships registered in foreign countries.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, a couple of times now I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council for an answer to my question related to the Public Service Bill which is in committee today. I have been assured that I would be getting that information; I have been assured by the Minister that I would get that information. Given that the debate of clause-by-clause study of Bill C-133 starts in ten minutes, when are we going to have that information?

● (1520)

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I assured the Hon. Member that I would make inquiries on his behalf, and I did that. At such time as I receive the answer from the Minister, I will of course deliver it to the House.

Mr. Murphy: We were promised by the Minister in committee that we would have that information. The committee meets in ten minutes. Will the Parliamentary Secretary assure us that the Minister will keep his word and provide that information to us before we have to vote on the Bill?

Mr. Smith: I would be delighted to convey the concerns of the Hon. Member to the Minister.

Mr. Neil: Madam Speaker, in connection with question No. 4,101 which has been on the Order Paper since March 2, it is a very simple question to the Department of Agriculture requesting information as to the names, the courses and so on of individuals who have been given extended leaves of absence to further their education. I cannot understand why it has taken so long for the Department to answer.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would be delighted to look into the matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North) moved:

That Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be amended by adding immediately after line 27, at page 5, the following new Clause:

"3. The special (1983 & 1984) supplements to GIS shall be included in the OAS benefits in 1985 and thereafter OAS shall be fully indexed."

He said: Madam Speaker, this is the third time I have had the opportunity, if one cares to call it an opportunity, to speak on Bill C-131. On the first occasion I indicated to the House that I was not very happy with the prospect of speaking to what I consider to be a very rotten Bill. It is a very unpleasant task to have to waste the time of the House speaking to a Bill which should never have come before it.

Before dealing with my proposed amendment, I would like it clearly understood by Hon. Members that having brought forward this amendment in no way indicates that my Party or I will support the Bill when it eventually comes to a vote. We are certainly not in favour of Bill C-131. No amendment whatsoever, could improve the terrible burden it places upon the elderly. This amendment can only perhaps relieve the burden after a period of two years.

The Bill as it now stands before the House mentions nothing about what will happen in 1985. In order that the House understand the intent of my amendment, I should like to read it again. I really propose to add a Clause 3 to the end of the Bill which is really a wrap-up Clause that defines what should happen at the end of 1984 when supposedly full indexation will be brought back. My proposed Clause reads as follows:

The special (1983 & 1984) supplements to GIS shall be included in the OAS benefits in 1985 and thereafter OAS shall be fully indexed.

Under its six and five program and under Bill C-131, the Government proposes to reduce the indexing to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983. Presumably the inflationary index will be considerably higher than that. At this moment it is just below 10 per cent. If it stays there, presumably old age pensioners will lose purchasing power to the extent of 4 per cent. The Government is saying that it does not want people under the poverty line to lose any purchasing power, so it is adding that 4 per cent to the GIS for the two-year term of the Bill.

The result of that will be to decrease the importance of OAS. At the end of two years, if inflation continues at its present rate, we will find that the importance of the GIS program will be much more than it is now and, correspondingly, the importance of the OAS program will be reduced and indexing will continue in 1985 based upon a reduced OAS and an increased GIS. Therefore, all people just above the poverty line will continue to be indexed on a reduced OAS. It will have a long-term, tremendous effect not only upon elderly people but upon everyone in the country, because ultimately they will receive that much less.

At one time the OAS was a very basic part of our retirement program. Canada was proud to have such a program which was universal in its application. Every person could look forward to receiving that pension when they reached age 65 whether or not they had other pension plans. In 1964, OAS accounted for about 20 per cent of the average wage and salary in the country, but its importance has been downplayed. It has not kept up with inflation or with general salary levels. The rate is now below 14 per cent. Therefore, we can see that that basic program has been decreased in importance. This horrendous Bill C-131, sponsored by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), will further reduce the importance of that program.

By my amendment I am really trying to stop this from happening. My amendment cannot possibly completely solve the damage the Bill will do, but to some extent it will help overcome the damage. I do not see how any Government Member can fail to vote for the amendment because it does exactly what they have been saying. On several occasions Hon.

Members and I have attacked the Bill in the House for eroding universality. The Minister of National Health and Welfare became very upset when we did that and was quick to defend it. If she is correct in what she says, if she is honest in what she says—and I am sure she is—and if she wants to help the elderly of Canada—and I think she wants to do that even though she obviously lost her battle in Cabinet—she will support this amendment, as will all Government Members, because it will do what they indicated they wanted done.

Certainly the proposed Bill C-131 affects OAS and universality. To some degree my amendment will correct that imbalance and put the entire pension system in 1985 back on the track on which we are now. That is why I am putting forth the amendment at this time.

Certainly Bill C-131 places us in a very unhappy situation. What is happening here, and most people who attended committee hearings can identify with this, is that through Bill C-131 we are not only saddling the elderly with a reduction in their capacity to spend, but also with the imposition of a regressive tax, particularly those over the age of 65. Several groups have estimated how much the imposition of Bill C-131 will cost each senior citizen. It will reduce the indexation to 6 per cent, and the amount a senior citizen loses will depend, of course, on how you calculate the average inflationary indexation for this year and next year. There are those who have calculated that every pensioner will lose as much as $300 in the next two years. There are others who say they will lose only as much as $50 a year.

Let me take the figure of $100 per year to show how regressive this tax is. First of all, Old Age Security goes to everyone 65 years of age and over. A fairly well-off senior citizen who pays income tax at the top rate will receive only 50 per cent of that indexation. If that person is entitled to $100 in the coming year, he will receive only $50 with the other $50, being taxed away. Under this scheme we are reducing the amount of money a wealthy pensioner would receive by $50.

By comparison, what are we doing to that pensioner who is existing at just above the poverty level? None of the increase to his Old Age Security would be subject to taxation, so that individual would be losing the entire $100. What we are doing to the poor pensioner, therefore, is taking $100 in purchasing power out of his pocket. We are taking only $50 in purchasing power out of the rich pensioner's pocket.

I find this a very unfair approach to retirement income in this country. Surely this is the first time this Government has ever done anything like this. In the past it has not been that bad in terms of its support for the retirement income policy, and when I say "in the past" I mean in the last two years. What has happened in the last two years is almost beyond belief. This Government has attacked every aspect of retirement policy through its taxation and budgetary policies, and now we have this series of Bills before the House. It is for that reason I suggest the Bill is rotten and really regressive taxation at its worst. I hope that before debate is completed the Minister will see fit to withdraw the Bill.

I should now like to refer to another point. I listened very carefully to Hon. Members during this debate, and I have noted that in respect not only of this particular Bill but the ones on Family Allowances and civil service pensions Hon. Members in the NDP to my left have continually referred to Conservative support for the six and five formula. Rather than talking about what this particular Bill will do to pensioners, Hon. Members of that Party have spent much time talking about the inconsistency of Conservative Members who supported the six and five formula and are now objecting to Bill C-131.

Perhaps we should explain to the Canadian public that this Party supported Bill C-124, which started the six and five formula, because it limited indexation for MP's salaries and the salaries of civil servants. Basically what it did was identify to a large degree the fact that Government spending in this country was increasing at a higher rate than inflation. In fact, federal, provincial and municipal spending on services and salary has been feeding inflation to the extent of 14 per cent to 17 per cent. It seems to me that Bill C-124 was perfectly logical because it did attack that feeding of inflation in all those areas where the federal Government could impose that legislation.

I often wonder what prompts Members of the NDP to argue vigorously in support of raising salaries and pensions while at the same time refusing to cut their own salaries.

An Hon. Member: It has nothing to do with salaries.

Mr. Dantzer: I guess that follows real socialist philosophy, because that philosophy is apparently based on back alley slogans such as, "What is yours is mine, and what is mine is my own". That is the kind of socialist philosophy they seem to support. I have had discussions with other people trying to find out why those Members are making this attack on our position in respect of Bill C-124, first of all because we supported it, and secondly because we are now fighting for senior citizens in this country.

I guess it really boils down to the fact that they are reading the opinion polls. They have discovered they are losing out badly, according to those polls, and they have now decided it is better to have policies than slogans. They are very concerned, like the Liberals, and are attacking us as the front runners. Presumably their whole policy regarding the fight against inflation is to spend more money.

They are very much like their socialist counterparts in France who elected a socialist President some time ago. They started off by taking over the banks and spending more money in order to fight their way out of the recession. They found that a little more difficult than they first thought. That is the policy apparently advocated by the NDP to our left.

Let me talk about the misery index. Let me point out to Members of the NDP that as a result of following that policy in France, the misery index there is only slightly less than it is here in Canada where our Government has been following a similar policy. The misery index in Canada is around 22 per cent, composed of a 10 per cent inflationary rate and an unemployment rate of about 12.7 per cent. In France this misery index is almost as high as ours, being about 18.3 per cent. I point out, therefore, how totally wrong the socialists are in trying to solve the inflationary situation in this way. That is really why those Hon. Members are so upset about any kind of rational policy to put this country back on its feet.

While the six and five policy might have been reasonable, its application to pensioners is the most unreasonable thing this House has ever been exposed to. This is really rotten legislation. It bears no relation to inflation. Pensioners do not cause inflation. About 57 per cent of pensioners live at just about the poverty level. Most of them do not get more than $9,000 or $10,000 a year.

What causes inflation, as everybody should know, is the expectation of higher wage settlements every year and higher prices. It is the result of gouging through certain price rises and the anticipation by the public of what is going to happen in the future.

It is my belief and the belief of my Party that the six and five policy made sense because the Government was taking a lead in this fight against inflation by using its impact on the economy. I do not remember when this Bill was first brought before the House, but it was before the House, was referred to the committee and is now back at report stage.

It reminds me of the battles we had over the energy legislation when it was discussed in Parliament. The energy legislation was introduced and then discussed at length in the committee. The committee heard from a great number of delegations, none of which had anything favourable to say about the legislation. Some of these independent delegations were from other parts of the world, such as Norway and Sweden. Not all the members of those delegations were directly connected with the oil industry. While no one said anything positive about the legislation, the Government simply proceeded to push it through. If we review what has happened to our energy industry in the last year, we can see that those delegations predicted exactly what would happen. The outcome was not unknown to the Government. It was not new to anyone who knew anything about the energy industry.

This is exactly the same situation with Bill C-131. People who are involved in the welfare system, both federally and provincially, as well as other groups who are knowledgeable in this area, have pointed out how bad this legislation is. These measures will not have an effect on the six and five program or reduce inflation, but will only once again place a heavy burden on senior citizens. One of the most unpleasant aspects of Bill C-131 is that once again women are being affected more than anyone else. This is a shame to me because one of the deficiencies of our current pension system is that it does not include women in a retirement income scheme in an equitable manner.

We know that Ontario will not approve the drop-out clause provision in the Canada Pension Plan which allows people to drop out to raise a family and not have their retirement income affected too drastically. As well, we know that there is a problem for homemakers who are not involved in the pension scheme at all. Why does the Government not concern itself with these issues? It is not sufficient for the Minister to say that a green paper is forthcoming, because that does not solve those problems either. Surely we must be putting our energy toward finding solutions to those problems instead of talking about this terrible legislation which is before us now.

We should also be concerned about the involvement of women in private pension schemes. Women are in and out of the work force more often, change their jobs more often and are normally in lower paid jobs. Women are not in the work force for the same period as men. All these factors affect their retirement income. We certainly should be discussing survivorship, portability and vesting. These are the subjects we should be concerned with when discussing pensions in the House. We should not be talking about reducing indexing as a means to solve inflation.

I do not have to tell the Minister about the problems being faced by women under the OAS Program. There are 50,000 women who are under the poverty line and the Minister has publicly called it a national scandal. She is right. This legislation does not help that situation because it affects those people who have modest incomes. For example, it affects single people who have incomes of $8,600 and married people with incomes of $14,500. This means that approximately 35,000 pensioners will have their purchasing power reduced and will consequently qualify for GIS. The Minister herself has said that the GIS is a main support program for our elderly. It is a welfare program. Why should most of our elderly citizens be on welfare? It calls into question this Government's philosophy of what retirement income is.

We begin to have hope that the situation might change as a result of the Government's statements, but it does not follow its statements with action. For this reason we cannot afford Bill C-131. We cannot afford to break the contract which has been established between each generation whereby the following generation promises to look after their elders who have worked hard during their lifetime.

We should be discussing the shortcomings of the Canada Pension Plan. We are reaching a critical year, 1985, when the expenses under that Plan will exceed the revenues. What will happen at that time? What will happen to the people who have paid into the Plan and expect to receive a pension? By 1985, a few years from now, expenditures will exceed revenues. Inflation and unemployment may bring on this occurrence sooner because unemployed Canadians are unable to pay into the scheme. We will reach another critical year in 1993 when the expenditures under the Plan will exceed the revenues plus all the interest payments. We should be concerned with this dilemma instead of debating legislation to index the pensions of senior citizens who are in the lowest income scale and can least afford a cutback.

We should talk about another critical period in our pension scheme which will occur in approximately the year 2003 when our Canada Pension Plan will be bankrupt. This should be of great interest to people who are in their thirties and forties since they will be turning 65 around that time. These are all matters which should be discussed in the House of Commons instead of talking about reducing the purchasing power of those people who can least afford it.

Bill C-131 is bad legislation. It taxes the poor in a regressive manner and it taxes women unduly. It does nothing to stop inflation and breaks the great tradition of a contract which has existed between the generations in this country. We are breaking our contract with our senior citizens to look after them when they are older. This is pointless legislation which I ask the Minister to withdraw so that the House may consider more important matters.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I feel rather hesitant to rise today to speak to Bill C-131. My colleagues and I consider it to be a disgrace that Members of Parliament are rising in the few days before Christmas, 1982 to attack those people who have essentially been the victims of inflation. They are the senior citizens of our country. They are the victims as a result of the introduction of a Bill which will limit the indexation of Old Age Security to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984.

I point out that this reduction will only be experienced by those who receive the Old Age Security as opposed to those who receive both the Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. While pensioners will receive an increase in January of 1983, it will be less than what they would normally receive. The senior citizens of Canada will lose out in two respects. Those receiving the old age pension will have reduced incomes in 1983 and 1984 by a collective amount of approximately $300. This is assuming that inflation will remain approximately at the present rate or somewhat lower. Not only will senior citizens lose that $300 in the next two years, but the result of this legislation will have a snowballing effect for years to come.

While full indexation is supposed to return after 1984, there is no reason to believe that this will happen other than what we have heard from Hon. Members opposite that this is the Government's intention. We have experienced too often how the Government's intention can change. However, if full indexation does return in two years, the base upon which that indexation will accumulate will be less as a result of this legislation. Consequently, senior citizens in Canada will be receiving less income than they would normally receive for the rest of their lives.

This legislation, which will take money out of the hands of senior citizens of Canada, will directly affect more than a million senior citizens, and far more than half of those will be women. They will have their disposable incomes reduced as a result of the passing of Bill C-131. I have just done some calculations, assuming that inflation rates for Canada will be in the 10 per cent-9 per cent range over the next three or four years. If that is the case, more than a million senior citizens in Canada will lose nearly $1,000 each over the next four-year period.

I listened with interest as Members of the Government said that they had not received much mail from senior citizens on this measure. They have not been subjected to a lot of lobbying and so on. They have not heard an outcry across the country. I think there is a good reason for that. First of all, I think we all recognize that senior citizens are not well organized, as are other groups in society, such as the Canadian Rubbermakers Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Bankers Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I could go on and on about very effective organizations that lobby Members of the House on a regular basis to keep them abreast of their concerns; but the senior citizens of Canada do not have that lobbying opportunity. Consequently we have not been hearing the orchestrated outcries that we so often hear. We have not received the strong delegations to Ottawa, raising the concerns that senior citizens obviously have regarding the decreased incomes that they will be experiencing. Also I suspect that senior citizens are rather patient people. They have had hard times before. They have gone through two world wars. They have gone through the depression years. They are patient. I suspect that they find it difficult to believe that the Government of Canada will actually bring in legislation that will reduce their incomes.

I believe that most senior citizens, if we were to sit down and have an informal chat, would find it difficult to believe during these difficult times—and I think we have to admit that this country is poised on the brink of a depression, and in some areas of this country we are well into depression-like conditions—that the Government is going to reduce their incomes. I suspect that many just do not believe that it is happening. When they receive their cheques for January, 1983 and they notice there is a slight increase in those cheques, they will think that indeed their fears were unfounded. But if they look carefully at their cheques they will find that although they receive a cheque in January for $249.23, had this Bill not been introduced, had this deindexing not occurred, they would have received a cheque for $251.73, marginally larger.

I think it begs the question: Why is the Government introducing this legislation? Why is the Government introducing the six and five legislation that will apply to senior citizens? I suppose one could assume that the Government must be blaming senior citizens for being one of the causes of inflation. It must be saying: "These people must be curtailed in their spending". Presumably that is what the six and five program is all about, to curtail spending, to reduce incomes so people will purchase less. So the Government has said: "We have identified one of the culprits of inflation; they are the senior citizens of Canada and they must be restricted".

This raises some interesting questions because just a few days ago we had tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) a report called "Better Pensions for Canadians". I would just like to quote from page 55 of this Government Report:

> . . . inadequate incomes are too common, particularly among single elderly women. Employer-sponsored pension plans are not available to enough Canadians, and those who do participate in these plans often receive little pension income because poor vesting and a lack of portability hinder pension credit accumulation.

Then it goes on, Mr. Speaker, to say:

> . . . many ordinary Canadians, women in particular, will continue to face a significant decline in their standard of living when they retire.

We are talking about people who have very marginal incomes, and at the same time we are saying that those people on these marginal incomes must be the cause of inflation in this country. We are blaming senior citizens for these incredibly high inflation rates.

A single person receiving Old Age Security as well as the Guaranteed Income Supplement in 1982 received $5,695. That is about $15.60 a day. When we calculate that income and compare it, using data from Statistics Canada, we find that means that 15 per cent of single pensioners fall below the poverty line in the rural parts of Canada, and 37 per cent fall below the poverty line in metropolitan Canada, cities such as Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, Ottawa and so on.

Thirty-seven per cent of single senior citizens are living at below the poverty line as defined by Statistics Canada! That is hardly the group in society that is causing and fueling inflation in Canada. Especially hard hit, of course, are women who have to rely on pensions that were designed by men, for men, with men in mind. Few women collect from the Canada Pension Plan at all since they did not contribute. They were busy at home being full-time homemakers, with no pay, and as a result no pension benefits. In 1980, two-thirds of the single, widowed or divorced women over the age of 65 lived on incomes of under $6,000 a year, or $475 a month.

As Members of this House, we have agreed that anybody who spends more than 30 per cent of their income on shelter is in a difficult situation and requires assistance and support. It does not take much imagination to recognize that if your monthly income is $475 and you live in a typical city in this country, you are probably paying out closer to 70 per cent or 80 per cent of that income in shelter. Indeed, therein lies, I think, a very clear problem facing the elderly in our country.

Just as an aside, so many of our elderly in Canada require social assistance to get by. People have said that the measure of a country and the measure of the effectiveness of a government of a country is how they treat their seniors, how they treat those who built that country. It is interesting to compare Canada to some other countries that I suspect we would all agree would be much more progressive in terms of how they treat their elderly. In Sweden, for example, how many senior citizens rely on some form of social assistance to get by? Zero, absolutely none. In Norway the same thing. No one relies on social assistance if they are over the age of 65; they are well taken care of. If you are living in West Germany, 2 per cent of the senior citizens of West Germany have to depend on social assistance to help them get by.

In Canada I think that we can consider GIS is in fact a form of social assistance. What percentage of senior citizens in our country rely on social assistance to get by? Nearly 50 per cent. That is a very sad comment on how we treat the senior citizens of our country, particularly now when legislation is brought forward saying: "You folks are getting too much; we have to cut back a bit".

● (1600)

In countries like Sweden, Norway and West Germany, it is considered to be the right of pensioners, a basic human right, if one has worked hard and successfully until age 65, to at least expect to live out one's life in dignity and receive a decent pension. That is something that we still have not achieved in a country as rich as Canada. What is obvious, then, is that the senior citizens of our country did not create or fuel inflation. As a matter of fact, if we consider the real culprits, we must say that it was the federal Government itself.

I noticed with interest today that the latest inflation statistics have been released, and who are the big culprits who are still fueling inflation? They are interest rates and energy costs which directly reflect the policies of the Government. They are the two major inflation creators in this country, not the senior citizens. Why, then, do we have the six and five program? Perhaps it is to save money for the Government. We know that the Government is desperate and out grabbing money from every conceivable source it can find, and it sees this as a chance to save money. However, when one looks at the amount of money which will be saved over the two years of this program, one finds that it will amount to about $50 million a year.

I suspect that there would not be a single Hon. Member of the House who would be prepared to rise and say; "Rather than take $50 million out of the hands of the senior citizens of this country, why not take it out of some of the Government's advertising funds? Why not take $50 million out of some of the grants to the large multinational oil companies? Why not take $50 million from some of the hand-outs or bail-outs that have been given to firms like Dome, Chrysler, Canadair and de Havilland?"

A few months ago, when the then Minister of Finance introduced some new tax legislation, he said: "We will reduce the tax for upper income Canadians by 10 per cent". Let us ask the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to go back to that tax rate. As a result, he could easily collect $50 million rather than by taking it out of the hands of senior citizens. Therefore, it becomes clear that saving $50 million by this desperate grab is unnecessary. It is not required at this time. There are other sources from which the Government could derive the kind of saving in which we are all interested.

I suppose, then, that we might ask why on earth, if it will not really save money, if there are better sources and if senior citizens were not the cause of inflation, the Government is introducing this Bill relating to six and five which will take money from the senior citizens of Canada. On November 19 the Minister of National Health and Welfare passed a handy little memo around to all Hon. Members to help us understand what Bill C-131 was really all about. It stated: "The Government is asking all Canadians who have the means to lower their expectations over the next two years in order to help bring inflation down to six and five per cent. By some degree of sacrifice on the part of all Canadians, we can bring about economic recovery in Canada." That is interesting. The Minister is calling for fair sacrifice by all.

Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that the limit to 6 per cent of the wages of some senior public servants in Ottawa means that they will receive in excess of a $6,000 increase in one year? That is more than many senior citizens receive all year long in total, yet many senior public servants will receive in excess of $6,000. A typical Minister on the Government side, when his or her income is capped to 6 per cent, will receive a $5,400 increase. That will be the sacrifice of Ministers.

It has been very interesting to read that various corporate leaders have been asking senior citizens and others to join with them in the six and five program. I noticed that Mr. W. L. Light, the President and chief executive officer of Northern Telephone Limited, only received a 47 per cent increase in 1981, but he said that he is prepared to take a 6 per cent capping of his salary for 1983, which will give him an increase of $32,000 in 1983. Ian Sinclair, the Chairman and chief executive officer of Canadian Pacific Enterprises, has been going around the country saying that the private sector must support the six and five program and that we must all share and sacrifice together. That will be very difficult, because when his salary is capped to only 6 per cent next year he will only receive a $46,000 increase in one year. One could go on and on, listing a whole number of the top income earners in this country who are asking everyone to rally around the six and five program and share and sacrifice equally.

When Hon. Members opposite and many senior employees working with them are asking at least 1.2 million pensioners to take a cut in the incomes that they would normally expect, one must remember that they will receive increases in income next year amounting to in excess of $6,000, and there is no way that one can describe that as being fair and equitable. Some people are being asked to sacrifice a bit more than others. We cannot blame the senior citizens for creating and fueling inflation in our country, so we must dispose of the option of the six and five program. The Government cannot say that we will save that amount of money on the backs of senior citizens because there are all kinds of places where it could find $50 million a year if it were interested in cutting back.

We cannot suggest for a moment that senior citizens should share because, as the Minister's memo itself states, those who have the means to lower their expectations over the next two years ought to. I suspect that when one finds that most or a good portion of the senior citizens of our country are living below the poverty level, one cannot say that they are probably the ones who can really afford to sacrifice for the six and five program. Basically, it is an unjust, inequitable, cruel program, one which asks people to make totally different kinds of sacrifices.

I cannot for the life of me understand why we are debating Bill C-131. For that reason, at a time of peace and co-operation just before Christmas, when one thinks of those other than oneself, I would ask the Government to think of the senior citizens of Canada and to retract this insidious piece of legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I was just checking the record of November 18 wherein it is reported that Your Honour gave me the floor to speak against the amendment to Bill C-131 proposed by an Hon. Member of the Conservative Party. I was just checking the official figures of the rate of inflation which I gave to the House that day, which is exactly a month ago.

This morning, Canadians were awakened by the good news that, for the first time in ages, inflation is no longer a dougle-digit figure. Inflation is down again. A month ago, when I made the speech on that Bill, I gave the official figure which at that time had gone down from 12.7 per cent inflation a year ago last November to 10 per cent in November, a month ago. It is now below 10 per cent, in a one-digit figure only.

That is the very context of our series of Bills implementing the program that we call the six and five program. That is the very reason why I must oppose the proposed amendment of the Conservative Party. I do it very easily, and I will explain why I say that. I must say that it is a very badly worded amendment, since our Government Bill contains no reference to so-called "special supplements". However, I think the intent of the amendment presented by the Hon. Member opposite is clear and easy to undersand. The Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) proposes an amendment today to ensure that in January, 1985, two years down the road, the old age pension would be exactly as high as if there had never been a six and five program. I believe I can sum up his amendment very easily that way. Change the Government Bill in such a way that it is like there never was a six-five program. In other words, less than half the pensioners in Canada will get a smaller increase than they would have anticipated. They will get an increase next month, but it will only be 6 per cent instead of the full indexed inflation rate.

The Hon. Member wants us to change our Bill drastically, that it is like money put into the bank, and in two years' time they will get the full amount as if our Bill had never existed, as if the six and five program had never existed. There is no need to say I would have to oppose that. It indicates a total misunderstanding of the purpose of the so-called six and five program. Often the Hon. Member who just spoke from the New Democratic Party, as well as the Hon. Member for Okanagan

North, have referred to this Bill, which will limit the indexation of those who do not need the supplement, less than half of the pensioners, as a money-saving measure.

I have once more to indicate to them that this is not the case. It does save some money, but the very purpose of the Bill—I have said this often and I apologize for having to repeat it once more to these two Hon. Members—which the Conservatives are trying to amend today, and they want to change its intent completely, is to cut down inflation by half in the next two years.

[Translation]

When we wanted to control inflation in 1975, we decided to take drastic action which was very hard on all Canadians, namely, to control prices and wages through the Anti-Inflation Board. Hon. Members will recall that the program lasted three years. What happened at the end of those three years? While the program lasted, everything went according to plan, but as soon as controls were lifted, unfortunately—and I do not remember the exact figures—there was a sudden inflationary upsurge of prices and wages. That is what we want to avoid. I shall therefore have to explain to the Hon. Member for Okanagan North why I cannot accept his amendment. We are asking all Canadians who, because of specific programs, come directly under Federal jurisdiction, to participate in the 6 and 5 program, that is, to reduce their own expectations. Again, I am referring to all Canadians who are not in the lowest income groups. We have passed bills under which this is mandatory, and one of these measures, which has been in effect since July 1 of this year, if I remember correctly, applies to all Members and Ministers. The same is being asked of many other Canadians affected by Federal programs, including mothers and senior citizens who are not in low income groups, and all taxpayers through the tax system. Next year, basic personal exemptions will be increased by only 6 and 5 per cent. There will be an increase, but only an increase of 6 and 5. Why we are doing this? Because, once and for all—and I think that is why I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the Member for Okanagan North—we want to take the bull by the horns and reduce inflation rates by half. To do this, obviously, all Canadians must be involved in a national campaign, as it were. We cannot do this alone. We cannot ask one group in our society to reduce its spending and expectations to 6 per cent. To get results, everyone must work together and be prepared to support a program of shared responsibilities and shared efforts to put the economy on the road to recovery. I often heard a lot of socialist laughter in committee when I used the expression to mobilize Canadians. Nevertheless, it is not a laughing matter, because we have here a psychological factor that is very important if we are to maintain a healthy economy. It is hard to introduce this psychological factor unless we succeed in mobilizing all Canadians.

I am sure the Member for Okanagan North will agree that by May or even by mid-June or June 20 or 22, a few days before the Minister of Finance brought down his budget at the end of June, no one in Canada had even heard of 6 and 5. No one knew what it meant. We launched this concept of bringing down the rate of inflation, which was expected to be 12 per cent next year and 10 per cent the year after, to half those amounts namely, to 6 and 5. We decided to do this by reaching Canadians through an organized campaign and by using all the tools of our Federal jurisdiction. For instance, the 6 and 5 program will apply to all prices that are federally regulated. I am thinking of telephone and cable rates, for instance. These services are going to keep price increases down, to 6 per cent.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: With all due respect, would the Hon. Minister receive a question at this point? It is a question of clarification more than anything.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the Minister wish to entertain a question?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to do so at the end of my speech, if there is time. As I was saying, we also decided to reduce increases in prices that are federally regulated. We are doing so in order to bring the greatest possible pressure to bear on the inflation rate. This morning, people woke up to the happy news that for the first time, inflation is down to a single digit. Only last month, on November 18 when I spoke in the House, we had an inflation rate of 10 per cent. It has now been reduced to a single digit. Now we are expecting to reach the magic figure of 6 per cent by the end of 1983. The amendment proposed today in the House is a way of telling Canadians not to worry. I am, of course, referring to retired Canadians who do not need the supplement. Do not worry. We are going to reduce your increase to 6 per cent. You thought you were going to get a bigger increase but it will only be 6 per cent. Next year, it will only be 5. However, all this is money in the bank. If the inflation rate continues to rise, at the end of the two years, in other words, in January 1985, you will get back the entire amount deducted during 1984 and 1983. All excess indexation is going to be put in the bank and when this ridiculous 6 and 5 plan is done and over with, you will get your money back. What on earth can they be thinking of? This is utterly absurd! First of all, it does not help anyone. The Hon. Member seems to be genuinely concerned about people on low incomes. However, this group is entirely protected under our legislation, because they will be getting full indexation of their pension and pension supplement. There are also those who are in the so-called grey area and are not particularly well off. What will do them the most good? They will benefit if inflation is brought under control, because it means the value of their dollars will be safeguarded. It also means they will get more for their dollar. Since inflation dropped this month to a little over 9 per cent, these people are going to lose only a little over 3 per cent on next month's cheque. They will get a bigger cheque, but not as big as anticipated. However, we hope to give them—and I suppose Hon. Members are going to laugh if I use the word present, but I am going to use it anyway, for want of a better word—we think that by the end of 1983 and the end of 1984, we will be able to give them a rate of inflation that has been cut by one-half. That is what we expect to be able to offer. We think that in the long run, senior citizens stand to benefit most if inflation is kept as low as possible. That is the basic philosophy behind this Bill. We want inflation to be lower than it has been during the last few years. As I said earlier, an attempt was made to bring inflation down by controlling prices and wages in 1975, but that had just about the same effect as the Hon. Member's amendment would have. As soon as controls are lifted, there is a general scramble and the inflationary spiral starts again. That is what is wrong with the Hon. Member's amendment.

• (1620)

[English]

In his amendment the Hon. Member for Okanagan North says let us give them only 6 per cent and 5 per cent; all the pensioners do not need the supplement, but that is money put in the bank. We will give them that full amount back in 1985.

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, in her speech the Hon. Minister misinterpreted my amendment. My amendment asks only that the supplements paid into GIS be transferred back into OAS, nothing more and nothing less. That will cost the Government no more money. The monies presently in GIS because of the supplements go back into OAS, and are then invested on that basis. So that all the monies being lost will not be replaced, just that amount.

Miss Bégin: With all due respect, I think the Hon. Member just contradicted himself. I started to say, and I regret I have to say it, that the amendment presented is very badly worded. What I have just expressed is the legal opinion that I received. In trying to correct me, the Hon. Member stated that it was not costing anything and then two minutes later said it was going to cost something but not too much. That is the whole point of the argument. That is why I oppose the amendment, because it would cost millions of dollars and would not bring inflation under control.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, occasionally on the floor of the House there are negotiations. If the wording could be amended to reflect the intent of the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), is the Minister indicating that with unanimous consent we could agree to such a wording change? Members of our Party would be happy to do it, and I am sure the NDP would as well. If that is what the Minister is implying, we accept that offer and I think you can get something like that from the NDP.

Miss Bégin: That is not what I said, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) should know better, but I think he is playing politics once more, on the backs of seniors this time. The Hon. Member for Okanagan North has indicated clearly that this Bill will cost money. That is the very simple question I would put to him: Does this Bill cost money? The answer is yes, the Bill will cost millions of dollars. I have a figure of some $65 million which this Bill will cost. Even if it is less than that, it will still cost Canadians millions of dollars to tell seniors who do not need the supplement that after two years of a national campaign to bring down inflation to six and five, well, that was money in the bank; now take the inflationary money and spend it.

That is not the purpose of this Bill and not the purpose of this package of bills which affect as many Canadians as possible to make sure we cut in half the rate of inflation. Now, the Hon. Member may not be pleased with good news, but this morning for the first time in a long time we have single digit inflation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: That is what counts. That is what we want, what the seniors want. I repeat, all seniors who have need of a supplement are fully protected and will receive full indexation of their pensions. That is what is important.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would explain why, if inflation is down, this Bill is necessary?

Miss Bégin: I will answer at the end of my speech if there is time, Mr. Speaker. I will try to explain once more to the Member what I have said often in committee and in this House.

Again, the six and five rate of inflation, half of what we had six months ago, is exactly what we want to see happen. So we are not going to tell Canadians, "You know, do not worry, these crazy Liberals, they have in mind this idea to just put the money in the bank and we will give it to you a little later". We are not going to accept an amendment that does that.

This is not a game we are playing. It is a serious mobilization of all Canadians, including seniors who will not cheat on their responsibilities. During the four weeks of debate on this Bill in committee and in the House I heard unbelievable speeches from the Opposition, trying to make everyone cry for the seniors. Well, my job is to be the special voice of seniors. There are many voices in favor of seniors on this side of the House, of course, but the very special voice of seniors in Cabinet—

Mr. Dantzer: Then speak up.

Miss Bégin: I know seniors, I see them, discuss with them, meet their leaders and receive representations with one purpose in mind: improve their lot. That is the name of the game. What will improve their lot most of all? Bringing down inflation. That is the cost of the food they have to purchase every month, the things which affect their every-day life. They agree, if they are not in need, to be like any other Canadian part of the national battle to bring down inflation. We have signs that it is going to happen.

That, Mr. Speaker, gives me a chance to answer the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) of the NDP, who asked a very cute but irresponsible question. She is not irresponsible herself; I suppose it is because she did not think enough about it. She said, well, if inflation is coming down, why implement our program? It is because we want it to continue; we want this to make sense to Canadians and have inflation go down to 6 per cent. I mean, it is extraordinary. We announced our policy, I think, on June 28 in the budget of the then Minister of Finance. That was six months ago. We have made every possible effort to bring down prices under federal regulation, salaries when we could, and benefits like those we are talking about today for those mothers or seniors who do not need any supplement, in order to bring inflation down to half what it is now. We are succeeding. But once more, the New Democratic Party does not live because of success; it lives because of failures. I do not understand that. I am very pleased when I wake up in the morning and hear the CBC tell me that for the first time in years inflation is no longer double-digit.

Mr. Riis: There is a depression in the country, and prices come down during a depression.

Miss Bégin: That proves that as a responsible Government we must implement this Act. We seem to be on the right track and we must continue. I think that is very important.

Now, it will be a pleasure for me to answer the question, if he still has one, of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Minister providing this opportunity to clarify an issue she raised. She indicated she felt it was appropriate for senior citizens to be asked to share in the six and five program equitably with other Canadians. Again, that is a sacrifice that Canadians ought to be making in this war on inflation.

I would ask the Minister to explain from her perspective the fairness of a program which results in Cabinet Ministers and Members of Parliament receiving thousands and thousands of dollars by way of increases in their incomes as a result of the program, yet senior citizens are receiving only a few hundred dollars increase. Can she explain how she perceives this to be a fair and equitable program?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I could try, but it is not easy with an NDP Member who uses rhetoric and ideology instead of facts. The Hon. Member mentioned the fact that in our society everybody does not get the same salary. Well, that is not my fault. If socialism is to give everyone the same salary, I am a socialist at heart but how is that done? I have never heard in my whole life someone give an explanation of that in a free country like ours; I just never heard of it.

I see the Hon. Member rising; surely he will have the courtesy to let me finish my explanation. He criticized the fact that Ministers make more than backbenchers in the Opposition. That is a fact of life. Doctors, engineers, architects and many professional workers make much more. For example, the NDP unionized the membership in the City of Hamilton and other large industrialized cities. They make much more than when I became a backbencher ten years ago. I am very pleased about that.

Everybody is capped. I have not made the exact calculation; I did not even know that I would be receiving a small increase in January. But I do know that the Members and Ministers of the House, as a pro rata of our salary, accepted a capping more than other Canadians because we started on July 1, six months before other Canadians. I think that is part of the game and I accept it fully. Beyond that point, if the Hon. Member is displeased because salaries are different in society, that is the kind of society we have and it is a free one.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Minister has a few moments of her time remaining. Would she permit one further point?

Miss Bégin: A question, yes.

Mr. Riis: The Minister, in her response, was looking for a way to make the six and five program more equitable, to allow a greater amount of sacrifice of a more equitable nature. If a person were making $100,000 per year, would she not consider that that person might pay a higher percentage of the inflation-fighting program and someone making $10,000 per year might not be asked to make any sacrifice at all? In other words, there could be a scale and, depending upon one's level of income, one would then pay or be deindexed or whatever as a reflection of the difference in incomes.

Miss Bégin: This is exactly the intent of my Bills which are being studied in the House right now. We have used a device different from the one proposed by the Hon. Member. By the way, the Member made one omission; he forgot to speak of somebody who does the job, the income tax department. The income tax department, first of all, does some equalization, but of course it does not make the salary of everyone the same.

The philosophy of six and five applied to pensions and to Family Allowances—and I realize that today we are talking about the pensions Bill—is that we wanted all Canadians not in need to share in the struggle against inflation. For pensions we had the natural mechanism at our disposal, namely the supplement or the so-called GIS. That is why we made very clear that all seniors who receive the supplement, even partial supplements, are not being asked for any sacrifice and receive, of course, the full indexation which protects those most in need in society. That is the way we achieved the same objective.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-131 constitutes a direct attack on our 1.2 million senior citizens. Seldom has this House seen a piece of legislation as poorly conceived and makeshift and small-minded, and which could have such disastrous consequences, as the Bill we are considering this evening.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is a clear indication that the Government has no sense of priorities and that it is totally incapable of managing the economy. In fact, the Bill should never have been introduced in the House. It is absolutely inconceivable that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) should introduce a Bill like this in the House. I wonder what she told the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when this proposal was made. As far as this bill is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister does not know where she is going.

[English]

Seldom in this Chamber have we had occasion in such a short period of time to stand and try to defend average Canadians who live at or near the poverty line. For anyone, a Minister of the Crown or a backbencher on the Liberal side, to believe that the Government has not at the very least attacked the senior citizens of the country in terms of their psychological comfort is to deny reality.

I was in Winnipeg some two weeks ago and appeared on a hotline radio show with the critic of the New Democratic Party. The subject was health, and the host kept trying to get questions from the listening audience on health. For two solid hours every person who phoned in did so because they were worried about their pension incomes. For the Minister to try to suggest to the House that pensioners are not concerned about their incomes and their standard of living is to mislead the House, because they are. Canadian families are upset about the Government's intention in relation to the Family Allowance; and senior citizens, those in our population who are 65 years of age and older, are concerned about the attack on their pension income.

We heard in committee several attempts by the Minister to reassure its members that the incomes of senior citizens were not being attacked. That is simply not so. When we listened to the parade of witnesses who came before the committee, we were struck by the quality of their testimony and by the concerns they presented. I remember one witness who said that every Canadian who was 15 or 20 years of age should be concerned about Bill C-131.

The Bill is flawed in many ways, but in one way it clearly affects future generations of Canadians. I am referring to the fact that in the Bill before us there is no provision to restore the base of the pension. Liberal Members opposite would like to rob pensioners for the next two years, but having robbed them they have no intention of restoring the base so that future pensioners will no longer be robbed. Instead we have a Bill placed before us which robs Canadians into the future as far as any of us can see, and it robs Canadians to whom we owe the greatest debt because they helped settle the country. Their labour, their initiative and their concern has made the nation what it is today. The people who built this Chamber in which we now debate brought their skills, energies and talents and worked their lives out on behalf of this country. I assume that most of them have now passed on. Many others who have done the same have now reached an age at which they are no longer members of the work force or of a bargaining unit of any kind. They no longer have the skills to offer, and in terms of income they are defenceless. Yet this Minister brings forward a Bill which says to those defenceless people: "We are going to rob you for the next two years and then we are going to rob succeeding generations for the next ten to fifty years down the road". That is the intent of this legislation, because the Bill which deals with taxation will be difficult to amend.

I commend the Hon. Member for Okanagan North for trying to correct this long-term robbery. That Hon. Member has moved an amendment which would restore the Old Age Security base so that once again on January 1, 1985, 50 pensioners would receive what they are entitled to today through full indexation. This would reduce the potential effect of inflation. Surely that is a reasonable amendment, one which Members on all sides of the House could support. It is not the kind of amendment that could bring down the Government.

We heard the Minister stand in the House and suggest that the amendment was badly worded, encouraging Liberal Members to vote against it. When we challenged the Minister to prepare a better worded amendment, indicating that if she did so we would give it our unanimous consent in order to restore the indexation base, she quickly backed down. That was one of the most disappointing things I have experienced in my three and a half years as a Member of this Chamber. If the Minister's problem was with wording but she accepts the principle of the amendment, surely she should at least attempt to seek unanimous approval for a newly worded amendment that would make the proposition acceptable to the Government. To do otherwise forces us to reach one inescapable conclusion; the game of politics is being played by the Minister of the Crown and not by Members of the Opposition.

I have stood before in this Chamber talking about the responsibilities of Government and Members in times of economic difficulty. That responsibility is more difficult to carry out in such times than in times of economic growth, development and surplus. Day after day, week after week, month after month and now year after year, we in this Chamber have been treated to a series of perverse choices, perverse in the sense of stubbornness and because the choices are exactly opposite to those that should be made.

Yesterday a Member of this Party pointed out that the Minister had indicated to the committee that this Government's spending priority was to purchase service stations to protect jobs. She said that was a greater priority than providing money in support of families, senior citizens and medical care. The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) rose on a point of order and put on the record that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) had made such a statement. She is reported in Hansard as having said that the Hon. Member was lying. The Minister withdrew that remark, but not graciously. She said that she stood by the truth of her statement.

Let me read into the record a few short paragraphs from what was said before the committee, and to facilitate cultural communication let me do so in my second language:

[Translation]

MR. HAWKES: That is correct. But you are a member of Cabinet. You give us as your excuse in here that there is no money, and I say there is lots of money, $70 billion, $80 billion is being spent. It is a question of priorities. I believe members of all sides of this committee would prefer to see money in the voluntary sector; prefer to see money in hospitals, rather than money into service stations—

MADAM BÉGIN: No. I am sorry. I will stop you right here.

MR. HAWKES: —and that I think is where the government is going wrong.

MADAM BÉGIN: Job protection for me is key and comes first, and that is job protection.

MR. HAWKES: Buying service stations is job protection?

MADAM BÉGIN: Yes. I am very sorry, but making sure that a company continues happens to be called job protection.

[English]

That is a quotation from the evidence before the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on December 7. The Minister told the Committee that the Government's priority was to create or protect Canadian jobs. The comments relate to the use of a Crown corporation to purchase service stations at a cost of $650 million. I refer to the purchase by Petro-Canada of British Petroleum. The Minister indicated it was the Government's choice to purchase these existing service stations rather than provide more money for the support of families, senior citizens and medical care. She said the Government was doing this to protect jobs. Where is the evidence that jobs needed protection in the area of service stations? Where is the evidence that the purchase by Petro-Canada will, in fact, protect those jobs which were not threatened in the first place? Surely that is a distorted sense of priority.

Day after day during the Question Period we have heard the Minister of Finance say the Government is going to spend $1.8 billion on job creation. I suggest the Government could have spent this $650 million on job creation had it not purchased these service stations. The money could have been put into job-creation projects, used for pension increases or to increase Family Allowances. Instead the Government purchased these existing service stations at this time when we are experiencing a $24 billion deficit. Minister after Minister has stood in this Chamber and told us the Government does not have the money to do those things that are socially correct and just. This perversity of stubbornness boggles the mind.

A few days following that statement in committee by the Minister I handed out a sheet to all Hon. Members which indicated a hidden subsidy to Petro-Canada last year of $512 million. That hidden subsidy does not appear in the Main Estimates. That amount was given to this one Crown Corporation so its executives could fly first class and its employees could have plush offices with thick carpets and fancy new equipment. There are enough savings to be found from that one Crown Corporation to make this Bill unnecessary. The Government would not even have to consider cutting the pensions of senior Canadians because sufficient control of that Crown Corporation would provide enough savings to the Government.

The Auditor General has told us about several hundred other Crown corporations that are out of control. We can find specific and clear subsidy to those Crown corporations in the Main Estimates which amounts to approximately $2,000 million. Yet we are debating a piece of legislation that proposes to take a few dollars from the pensioners' pockets and make it harder for them to buy nutritious food or enjoy any kind of recreation. It is asking seniors to make the sacrifice and lead the fight. It is focusing its attention on making a saving which will amount to $100 million a year at the most. In the meantime, there are $2,000 million in subsidies to Crown corporations alone. The logic of the Government is perverse.

In terms of economics, the Minister is making a spirited defence about the need for pensioners to lead the fight on inflation and be soldiers in the war against inflation. She stood in her place some 20 minutes ago to say that inflation is at 9.8 per cent. While we are pleased to see inflation coming down, it is decreasing even before the six and five cap is being put on pensions and Family Allowances and other benefits. Inflation is coming down because there is a surplus of money which people are not borrowing. Jobs are not being created and people are not buying cars, furniture or homes. Consumer confidence has been destroyed. There is a surplus of goods which is causing inflation to come down. Since inflation is decreasing before the six and five, why do we need it? Why is it necessary to attack pensioners and families? The Minister's argument that this is a necessary element in the attack on inflation is destroyed by her own admission that inflation is coming down when none of these caps exist.

After we discuss this Bill today and tomorrow and then go home for Christmas, surely the delay before we return gives the Government an opportunity to reconsider these measures. It simply does not need to bring back the Bill before the House, and then we can proceed as we should with full indexation for pensions and Family Allowances for those people who live on or near the poverty line. These are the people all Members of Parliament should be concerned about. The solution to the majority of their problems is for the Government simply to do nothing and let the Bills die. It can make use of the energy of its backbenchers and its Cabinet Members to review the $2,000 million subsidy to Crown corporations, the hidden subsidy of $512 million to Petro-Canada that does not appear on the books and review the expenditure pattern of the Government. It will find large amounts of money which it can use to help the people in this country who need it and take that money from those who waste it and spend it unproductively.

I hope the Government and the backbenchers of the Government Party will reconsider its intentions during its caucus meeting tomorrow with respect to these Bills. The Government can find the money elsewhere; it does not need to take it from the pockets of pensioners and families.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-131, to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Dantzer (p. 21795).

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues for a few moments this afternoon and comment on the amendment and some of the presumptions about the particular Bill before us this afternoon.

Given the intervention by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), I thought it important to point out that there is no question that families and senior citizens across Canada are very anxious in terms of their pension and Family Allowances. If I can rely on what is relayed to me in my constituency office and in my mail, it seems to me that the paramount concern among the senior citizens of Canada is not Bill C-132 and C-131 but what inflation has done to their spending power and to the money which they have put away and receive from their pensions and GIS. Judging from the mail I have received, the prime concern among the retired in this country is that their Government take steps to ensure that their savings and pension incomes will be secure from the constant erosion month after month of their buying power through inflation. That spending, in their view, cannot be continually protected by increases or indexation; they want us to fight the battle against inflation on their behalf.

If there is a solidarity among the seniors of this nation, it would seem to me that that solidarity is to be found in their commitment to join with other Canadians and the Government in this fight. I do not find a willingness among pensioners in my riding, and I doubt that other Members find this in their ridings, somehow to exempt themselves from this fight. The Hon. Member for Calgary West tried to make the point a few moments ago that, since inflation is in a downward trend as announced today, these capping Bills have had no influence since they have not yet come into effect.

I suggest that a mentality and an environment to fight inflation was created from the very moment that the announcement to undertake a six and five program was made in this country. There was a commitment then, and a growing commitment now, that people want to join in this fight. They see the object of the fight as being worthy and worthwhile. They consider it reasonable to be asked as individuals to join in and do their share.

Quite frankly, if there is any group in my constituency who wants to do their share and more, while no one is asking for them to do more than their share through these Bills, it is the senior citizens. They have given and have shown that they know what it is to share both in the good times and the bad times. When they come to see me in my constituency, quite frankly many of them tell me: "Notwithstanding the difficulties that we have in terms of spending and the money that we have available to us, we find that, having gone through difficult times, the likes of which young people in this country have not yet seen, we are able to deal quite nicely with the money that we have coming in, with the money that we put away toward our retirement".

It seems to me that one of the presumptions that we hear in this House from much of what is said is that the seniors who Members purport to represent somehow believe that there is an obligation on the working people of this nation to look after them in their retirement. That does not represent the view of people in my riding. Quite frankly, I do not think it represents the view of seniors in most ridings. There is an understanding, I think, among the seniors that they are expected, as are we all, to put something away for themselves, in addition to the pensions that will be made available after their working lives are over.

It is true there will be some who will have more difficulties than others in so doing and it will be necessary to have targeted programs that will somehow benefit some more than others. But if there is the presumption behind what Members are saying in this debate and in other places that the only means of income is to be these pensions, and that Government has the obligation to look after all Canadians when they reach the magical age of 65 and from that point on, then I feel this does not reflect either the situation that exists or indeed the belief that senior citizens generally have.

I think the last two speakers from the Opposition who have gone before me basically seem to miss the point that six and five as a program, as an idea, has as a goal the reduction of inflation by Canadians generally sharing in the war against inflation, and in reducing expectations in order to achieve that goal. The mere fact that there is already a movement downward in terms of the inflation rate indicates, in my view, an acceptance by the public generally of the concept, and indicates a support for the activity that the Government launched itself into when it first announced the program. Obviously the movement made in terms of our own salaries in this place was a part of that, and was a necessary part in the sense of showing that we were in earnest in requiring that this be done.

The Member for Calgary West now says the fact that the inflation rate is going down has nothing to do with the thrust of Government, but rather has to do with the lack of people seeking money out of the money markets. As an aside, I find it passing strange that when inflation was increasing it was the fault of Government, in the view of the Member for Calgary West, and had nothing to do with the demand for money and for credit. But when inflation is falling, of course it has nothing to do with what Government has done to try to promote this concept, but rather has to do with the private sector and its demand for money.

It seems to me that the basis of the speeches that have been given by the Opposition Members this afternoon is a presumption that in fact inflation will continue at double-digit figures, 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent, and that it is in the interest of those who speak to see that inflation rate maintained. I believe that in their heart of hearts they know that the presumption behind this program is that if we can be successful—and I as a Liberal stand here optimistic that we will be—in getting the inflation rate down to six and five, then the fact is there is no loss, there is no erosion, there is no request that actual dollars be taken out of pocket of any individual, because they will be indexed at a rate that truly represents the rate of inflation, and no loss is suffered at all. It is in the interest of every person on this side of the House that those targets be achieved, not in a purely political sense—although I do not divorce myself from that. That would be nice, and of course it is something that I desire. But more than that, it is important that we get the rate of inflation down to six and five so that those persons who have savings of their own have savings that are meaningful. Those persons who looked after themselves by arranging private pensions, regardless of how small they may be, will be better off than if pensions had gone on beyond the six and gone to ten, and those other rates that we have experienced.

It seems to me that the legislation that we have is a statement of optimism in the sense that we believe that this nation wishes to achieve those goals and wants to get down to six and five. I believe the amendment that has been put is a statement of the pessimism that is represented on the other side of the House in the sense that they would not believe that six and five are achievable. Indeed, they would state that it is in their interest that it not be achieved. I think it is important as well—this was repeated by the Minister and I want to repeat it too, however briefly—that we are not talking about a reduction in the sense of the delivery of money to individuals. We are talking about establishing a cap on an increase. We are talking about increased funds in the hands of pensioners. We are not talking about somehow trying to take away funds. I become just a little bit concerned at the rhetoric that we throw about in this House and that I am sure must be delivered in constituencies abroad, suggesting somehow, as the Hon. Member for Calgary West did, that a robbery is taking place. Implicit in those words is the removal of money. When we are talking about an increase it is playing with the truth to suggest that somehow we are taking money away.

I am satisfied that my constituents want to participate in this program and believe that in fact—

Mrs. Mitchell: How dare you!

Mr. Daudlin: How dare I?

Mrs. Mitchell: Arrogance!

Mr. Daudlin: How arrogant. Well, when persons can sit in their place and suggest that it is arrogant to represent what people are indicating in my constituency, then I suggest to them that they are so out of touch that they had better return to their constituents and find out what they are saying, rather than presume to speak when they do not have any foundation wherewith to talk. But it is the kind of thing we expect from across the way, and I suppose I should not rise to the bait.

Let me just suggest that if indeed I am correct, and I believe that I am, people across this nation are not so selfish and self-centred as to believe that whenever a program comes forward to try, on a national basis, to come to grips with an issue, they are going to stand up and suggest that the program is good so long as it does not touch them. I am content that in my constituency and across the breadth of this land people are saying: "We wish to be involved. We recognize this as a national issue and we don't want to be exempted. We want to be treated fairly and equally and we will do our share."

It is from that deep sense of conviction and from having spoken with my constituents that I am satisfied that I am neither arrogant nor non-representative when I stand and tell the House that the majority of the people in my constituency are telling me: "Go forward with this program; it is working. Distribute it fairly and equally, see that in fact we get to the six and five, continue the reduction in inflation as reported today. We are satisfied that it is working. We want you to do more, dont't let up."

We should ensure that the legislation is passed and that in fact the targets which the people believe are achievable, and which we believe with them are achievable, are accomplished. In that sense we will benefit all Canadians.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and happy to be able to rise this afternoon to speak in favour of the amendment put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). It is rather disturbing that I must rise again, on the twenty-first day of December, to speak with regard to a Bill which is not in the spirit of Christmas but, rather, one which takes away from a segment of our populace something which they would have and could have if it were not for the application of this particular Bill. Someone has even used the terms "robbing" or "theft". The Bill, I suggest to Your Honour, is not in the spirit of Christmas, and the amendment which has been brought forward by my colleague is one which can only do the very least which can be expected for our senior citizens, a group of people which has been trampled upon by Bill C-131.

Put simply, the amendment asks the Government to put into words, into some form of substance, what it has been saying. If, as the Government Members claim, this Bill seeks only a two-year sacrifice on the part of our senior citizens, then let it cast that limitation in stone and not leave them in a position of doubt, or in any doubt whatsoever, as to the nature, time and extent of the sacrifice that it is asking this group whose working days are over to bear. No doubt they are being asked to bear a load which they should not be asked to bear when it comes to fighting inflation.

As is often the case, examples speak much louder than words or any other form of argument, and should this Bill pass without my colleague's amendment, senior citizens receiving the Old Age Security will be limited to a 6 per cent cost of living increase in the year 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984, regardless of what the inflation rate might be. In 1985 it has been said that full indexation will be restored. That is the issue which is before us this afternoon.

The Minister, in rather harsh words, has ridiculed the amendment brought forward by my colleague in our attempt to minimize the impact of this Bill on senior citizens. Today she pointed out, with some personal pride, that inflation is below 10 per cent. For whatever reason the inflation rate has been reduced to a single-digit rate, it is still more than the rate of six and five.

In response to the comments of the Hon. Member who spoke previously this afternoon, I want to say that, of course, senior citizens are not so selfish that they are not concerned with the affairs and problems of other Canadians. They want to share the fight against inflation with all of us, but they want all of us to fight that battle of inflation equally, and they should not be in the forefront of the Government fight against inflation. The point, which I emphasize again, is that the inflation rate is not yet down to 6 per cent, to say that they will not suffer any loss is an absolute absurdity.

The level of assistance which the Government is fixing for senior citizens is below the present level of inflation and below the level anticipated by any Hon. Member in the House for the next two years, so that there will be a cost to our senior citizens. It has been emphasized again, so many times, that costs among our senior citizens vary. The application of a flat percentage rate on income leaves a disparity in purchasing power which, as was mentioned here this afternoon, amounts to the difference between the Minister and myself as a backbencher. That 6 per cent rate has a bearing on my purchasing power. However, our concern and that of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North, is with the great number of persons who are at or near the poverty line. It is this group of people whom we want to protect by means of this amendment.

This amendment seeks to put those seniors, in the year 1985, in the same position as they would be if this Bill were not implemented. If the Bill is implemented, then they will be hurt for years after 1985 by reason of the application of the six and five formula which Government Members so proudly echo and present to the public across the country. This amendment calls on the Government to restore the Old Age Security recipient to the position he would be in as of January, 1985 if the Bill does not go into effect. What could be more fair than that? We have asked the senior citizens to bear the sacrifice for two years, but the Government should at least put them back in the position, as of January, 1985, that they would be in without the Bill. In other words, the amendment would write "Paid" on the senior citizens' invoice, and would let those senior citizens carry on without the drag of the continuing, battered, damaged luggage of the Trudeau years through the rest of their years by reason of the Government's action here at Christmas time in 1982.

Surely the amendment is in keeping with the Government's intentions, as has been expressed by all. It is a two-year program, it is said. However, I have not heard one statement from any Government Member to the effect that senior citizens would not and should not go on hurting after that two-year period; and if I am wrong, I would like to know which Government Member believes that Old Age Security should be permanently reduced. We on this side would not want to leave the impression that the amendment would be the end of our opposition to the Bill.

I had the opportunity of speaking in opposition to the Bill at second reading and, after reading the minutes of the committee meetings which have taken place from that time until today, I am even more strongly opposed today than I was then. At second reading I made the point that the money being taken from senior citizens could and should come from a wholesale war on Government waste, and that point still stands. We have yet to see any meaningful program of effort on the part of Government to cut the frivolous advertising, the parties, the JetStar extravangances or the public relations exercises.

While the Government asks senior citizens to take six and five, all MPs received a large binder of high quality reproductions of very dusty old news or press releases issued on the six and five program, which binder itself has no greater use than to gather dust on the shelves of so many. And at what cost? It was at the cost of thousands of dollars which, much more readily and to a greater national benefit, could have gone on to protecting our senior citizens. Rather than imposing the Bill which is being proposed today, the Government should cease wasteful spending.

Last June, when the six and five program was announced, we on this side were hopeful, anticipating that the Government was serious in its attempt to fight inflation and bolster the economy. We thought that that restraint would be the order of the day, that it was only the forerunner of many such programs still to come. However, how badly we were mistaken! We should have known better. The six and five program is nothing more than a slogan to sell the Liberal Party, with selected, specific segments of our economy being asked to carry the brunt of the Government's attack on its program of restraint. Bill C-131 is a heinous example.

Senior citizens are not organized in this country, at least not as well as they might be. They do not have a union to lobby and fight on their behalf. They are not going to get any tax compensation, as will be the case for the Family Allowance recipient. In other words, the Government has picked on one of the most defenceless segments of our society, and that, Mr. Speaker, is offensive to us on this side of the House.

I would like to indicate why I feel this Bill should be withdrawn, and if the Government refuses to withdraw the Bill why my colleague's amendment should pass and why it is so important that it should pass. It was learned in committee that the June forecasts about this measure were wrong. This is not the first time this Government has goofed, has been found to be wrong. We all remember the 1980 forecast of cheap gas and low interest rates, not to mention the great disparity in the budget deficit proposals and forecasts. This is just one more of this Government's goofs. Last June, and I emphasize this, the budget forecast a saving to the treasury of some $105 million by limiting the Old Age Security increase to six and five. Now the Government claims that the saving will be only $84 million. That is $32 million next year and $52 million in 1984.

This amount may not be much in the Government's program of expenditure, and if it is not much, then why do they want to introduce the Bill at all? But I want to emphasize with all the force at my command that $84 million, when broken down, has a great impact on the standard of living of senior citizens. It would only take our Party one hour to eliminate the waste from departmental spending and make up that $84 million. Where is the sense, Mr. Speaker, of putting senior citizens through this kind of misery when far more could be saved by practising a modicum of in-House restraint?

In committee the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) argued that senior citizens would not be hurt and that the sacrifice which was being asked of them was small. We heard that said again today. I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the jury is still out as to the amount of the sacrifice and how small the impact of this Bill will be on those persons. The point I want to make is there is fear, frustration and anger present among the senior citizens. These senior citizens continue to see their rents go up, food prices rise, gas and oil prices move upward, at the whim of a greedy Government and in response to its own scrambling to make ends meet. Our seniors among us see a Government imposing a six and five program on them for propaganda purposes. They see themselves not only as being abandoned, but abused for political purposes. As the saying goes, "It's not just the money".

What kind of Government is it that would want to leave the impression, as they do with this Bill, that senior citizens can fend for themselves in these difficult times? The Government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare can talk all they want, but what will be the perception which this Bill will leave across our country? Eighty-four million dollars is a paltry sum, yes, to the Government; but compare that to the toll it will take on our senior citizens.

There is another important aspect of this amendment. With an aging population, the federal Government has to be concerned with pensions. Two weeks ago we saw the introduction of the green paper on pension reform, which is an indication that some action is being taken to begin the difficult task of meeting the needs of people in crisis. And fundamental to any pension program is its protection against the ravages of inflation. At second reading, I quoted the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as being aghast at any thought that any pension program should not have an inflation program included, and this was part of his statement to the pension conference a very short number of years ago. In committee, witness after witness made the same point, expressing some concern at the message that this would give to the private sector. And after all that was said, here is the federal Government throwing indexation out of the window unilaterally, as in the case of Bill C-133, and giving the lie to every utterance which has been made on pension and pension reform and the necessity for protection against inflation. If it is all right for the Government to adjust pensions mid-stream, then why not the private sector? The Government's response to that is yes, these are extraordinary times and this Bill is of limited duration. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector might be tempted to use that very same argument. There is every incentive here for them to do so. If the Government can do it, why cannot they?

Contrary to what Government Members are saying, the effect of this Bill is to reduce Old Age Security in perpetuity if they do not adopt the amendment put forward. No one knows for certain just how much they might be asked to bear. We do not know what the rates of inflation are going to be in the future, but we all know that senior citizens will be suffering the brunt of this restraint program today and in the next two years, and unless we adjust this Bill they will continue to suffer the disadvantage of these two years.

Therefore, there is only one way to guarantee that the sacrifice is for two years only. There is only one way to guarantee that neither the public nor the private sector will change the rules mid-stream, and that is to adopt the amendment put forward. The message to the private sector should be clear, and it is that this Bill is part of an over-all response to an economic crisis, that after the duration of that response these pensioners will be returned to the status they would have enjoyed in 1985 if it were not for the implementation of this Bill. With this amendment in place, there would be no long-term advantage to cutting pensions, and it would go a long way towards soothing the legitimate concerns of senior citizens. It would demonstrate a modicum of good faith at a time when there is very little faith in this Government's program of words and actions.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not voice my objection to the concern and anxiety being shown by this Government to find an acceptable accommodation with Public Service pensioners, when no such concern is present for those citizens being hit by this particular Bill. I recognize that there are difficulties, there are technicalities, which permit such a distinction to be made; but surely the principle is the same. Public servants are paying into a superannuation account on the understanding that their pensions will be fully indexed, and taxpayers are remitting tax in the belief that Old Age Security would be fully indexed. In both instances it was the Government of Canada which indicated that such would be the case. I defy any Government Member to go out and tell any old age pensioner that there is a distinction they should be prepared to accept between themselves and a federal public servant now on pension. Why should they? How can we justify treating old age pensioners differently because one worked for the federal Government, and one did not? Yet here are two Bills which seek to break promises made, one Bill receiving the benefit of brinkmanship negotiations, and the other being raced through Parliament these few days before Christmas, and without any effort being made by the Government to act in good faith with respect to old age security recipients. We on this side believe that all pensioners have protection against the ravages of inflation, and therefore we argue that both C-131 and C-133 should be withdrawn.

The amendment, Mr. Speaker, is one of the bright aspects of this whole debate. The Bill is mean and underhanded, and if the Government is sincere about being honest with Old Age Security recipients, then it should adopt that amendment, and I am looking forward to the vote which might be taken on it.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in opposition to the Bill before us and to make some comments, although very brief, on the amendment, I would just like, first of all, to comment on the words of the last speaker, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), when he said it was unfortunate that these pensioners do not have a union to represent them. While that is true in the narrow legal sense of certification, representation and right to collective bargaining, pensioners across the country should know now, as they should have for years, that a number of unions in the country and the Canadian Labour Congress strongly support the cause of Canada's pensioners. Not only do they have unions defending their interests. Prior to 1926 and 1927, when the first minimal old age pension was introduced by two independent labour Members of Parliament, J. S. Woodsworth, and I believe it was Mr. Heaps, they were able to strike a bargain with the then Prime Minister, William Lyon Mackenzie King. They agreed to support the Government in return for the first old age pension legislation in Canada. So pensioners have had not only hundreds of individual unions and central labour bodies supporting them, but they have also had the full and continuous support of at least one political party. Pensioners have also had support from the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. I would like to read one very brief paragraph from that organization's submission as regards this Bill and the Bill dealing with the partial deindexation of Family Allowances. It says:

> In both these cases, family allowances and old age pensions, the scenario is the same. On one hand, reductions are made in the real value of benefits of a universal nature which have been advantageous mainly to women and, on the other hand, payments are made to those who belong to low-income families. The CACSW fears that through such measures, a gradual transformation of our income security system is sought in order to force adults to become increasingly dependent on each other within the family and to become eligible for benefits from government income security programs only if they prove they belong to a low-income family.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with attempting to strengthen the family, but there is something terribly wrong in forcing people into situations that they might not otherwise choose to be in. This Government, Mr. Speaker, in one way or another, is now attempting to force people off a secure and independent means of living and back into a situation which they would not individually and freely choose.

I mentioned that pensioners have the full support of the Canadian Labour Congress. I have before me a letter from Dennis McDermott, president of the CLC, which presents in great detail the arguments of that Congress and working people all over the country on behalf of our senior citizens. I would like to quote from it briefly. It reads:

> At first blush, the effects of Bill C-131 are quite straightforward. Canadians over 65 whose incomes are high enough that they are not entitled to full or partial benefits under the Guaranteed Income Supplement program will simply be denied the full indexing of OAS benefits. Canadians over 65 whose incomes are low enough that they are entitled to at least some GIS benefits will also have their OAS indexing capped. But for this latter group, supplemental GIS payments will be made that will make up for the capping of the indexing payments under OAS.
> These apparently simple arrangements will have several particularly negative effects during 1983 and 1984, and these negative effects may be further accentuated after 1984. In brief these negative effects are:
> (1) the pension system as a whole will become even more of an income-tested system;
>
> (2) the value of Old Age Security benefits will be reduced even further in relation to pre-retirement earnings;
> (3) promises made to Canada's elderly will be broken.

I would like to dwell on the last sentence of that letter for just a moment, the matter of broken promises to Canada's elderly. In a brief presented to the committee dealing with Bill C-133, the Letter Carriers Union of Canada had something else to say about the trust in the Government. I think this is particularly important in light of the Government's apparent launching of an over-all review of Canada's entire pension system. If people do not have any faith in the ability of the Government to keep its word, what is the sense of all the talk, dollars, time and thousands of pages of printed matter? What is the sense of discussions concerning whether or not the pension system in the future will be believable or whether people can count on it for the security they require from any pension system?

• (1740)

The Letter Carriers' Union of Canada presented a brief to the Committee dealing with Bill C-133 in which it indicated:

According to past custom, it has been the invariable practice of former Presidents of the Treasury Board to consult the Advisory Committee on all matters affecting public service pensions. On this occasion, the President has not done so—

This comment referred to the time when the Public Service superannuation fund was launched, at which point the Government asked that it be excluded from collective bargaining and, in return, the Government of the day promised to make no unilateral changes to the pension plan. It broke that word. It regarded that commitment as a scrap of paper. It was torn up. Later in the brief the union continued:

If the government proceeds with the unilateral appropriation of funds from its former employees and those who are soon to retire, the terms "pension rights", "pension credits" and "entitlements" will cease to have any meaning whatsoever. The raid by the Treasury Board, Canada's largest employer, on the pension fund of its employees provides a truly frightening example for the private sector.

Also it provides a terrible example for the rest of the public sector and for people dependent upon the basic Old Age Security Program and the Canada Pension Plan. Over the past few years all of us have heard grave doubts voiced about the viability of the Canada Pension Plan and its ability to provide the pensions which the Government, Parliament and Canada as a country are committed to providing. If the Government demonstrates once more that its word cannot be believed, where will it leave us?

The Minister talked about the psychological impact of her programs. There is a psychological impact here—total destruction of faith on the part of any Canadian who wants to believe that when his or her representative in Parliament or in Government makes a commitment for the future, in fact it will be kept. They cannot believe that any longer. We have had many examples in Bills C-124, C-131, C-132 and C-133 of a Government which breaches contracts, commitments and its word. I cannot call such activity by its proper name here, but I believe people know what it is. It is not very pleasant.

Finally in its brief the union indicated:

If the Government succeeds in raiding the employee pension fund, how long will it be before it uses the same tactic again?

It concluded:

The Government proposal indicates that Canada is a very bad credit risk.

That is another reputation which we do not really need, particularly at this moment in our history.

I referred to those comments even though some of them were outside the narrow scope of the legislation immediately before us in order to talk about the crisis, the problems and the psychological war, the one the Minister does not intend but which is being waged here.

I should like to refer to an editorial which appeared in The Vancouver Sun on December 17, 1982, entitled, "Question of integrity". It referred to upcoming revisions in the Canada Pension Plan and in part read:

It could be argued that the integrity of the Canada Pension Plan was endangered from the time of its inception in 1966—from the moment the federal government compromised the ideal of pay-as-you-go and made it possible for provinces to borrow an amount proportional to the contributions paid by their residents.

But that wouldn't get us out of the crisis we're in today, with every province in debt—and indebted to the CPP for something like $22.4 billion in loans—or protect us from the crunch expected within two years when, without any payback by the provinces, employers and employees will be looking at higher contributions.

Once again the warning is clear. The Government has been in power for almost the entire period, except for that nine-month interlude, encompassing the building of the Canada Pension Plan and all the years since then. It has so mismanaged the affairs of the country that just one or two years down the road we may well face a time when we will have to tax people double in order for them to receive the benefits for which the Government has told them they have already paid.

Is what the Minister and the Government doing today just part of the so-called psychological war? Is it just a wish to find another sword in the arsenal for the six and five war against inflation, or is it a set-up for something broader? I am sure the Minister will say that we have to believe her. Many people believed her and the Government, and it is not doing them much good right now. The Government seems obsessed with this war against inflation and with talking about restraint. Conservative, New Democratic and Liberal Members have said that there is nothing wrong with restraint. We believe in restraint; we also believe in freedom. When the Government sets a goal around which society can unite and it invites people to participate, that is one thing; but when they are conscripted into an army to become involved in a Dieppe raid as part of its so-called war against inflation, that is another story. It is conscription; it is not asking people to join voluntarily in a united national cause. For them to pretend that some people do not like compulsion or Governments which break their words is pretty phony from that bunch over there.

I should like to refer to an article entitled, "They still worry about inflation?" which appeared in the December 7, 1982 edition of The Gazette of Montreal. Don McGillivray, the columnist, wrote the article from which I should like to quote four paragraphs because it carried a message about the war against inflation and how it perverted much of what has happened in the country. He wrote:

It will seem grotesque, a few years from now, that in the eighteenth month of the 1980s depression some people were still arguing that the main foe was inflation.

It will seem even more grotesque that these people were not a collection of economic flakes and nuts but ministers of finance and governors of central banks.

We know what has happened to the unemployment figures in the last few months. He continued:

A worldwide economic slump that has continued for a year and a half without an end in sight is the kind of crisis Canada faced in the 1930s.

Although Gerald Bouey, the governor of the Bank of Canada, talks about past years as the time of the Great Inflation, this crisis far outranks anything Canada has faced in the past decade.

Inflation was a puzzle that defied solution.

But it was not destroying jobs, homes, companies, industries and even countries the way this depression is.

I want to reinforce that paragraph and Mr. McGillivray's message. As long as people within society—pensioners, mothers, families, workers and small business people—were keeping their relative positions to each other, not suffering unduly and seeing themselves fall lower on the totem poll of society, as long as the purchasing power of Canadians was keeping its relative position in terms of the economies of other countries—and that is what indexing was all about in terms of its impact upon people keeping their relative positions in society—then who really gave a damn? Certainly there was a concern because it could get out of line, but as long as we were able to keep that relative position, no one was really being hurt. If Government had done its job a little better, no one would have been hurt.

• (1750)

To go on:

But the menace of depression is much more real. We don't have to go to other countries for examples. We've had depressions in Canada at least four times in our history.

If unemployment near 2 million after an 18-month downturn is not enough to get the Government to fight the slump on an emergency basis, what will it take?

Three million unemployed?

Two years of depression?

Four million in three years?

The excuse that Canada can do little on its own is no longer good enough.

The depression is a common foe and it should be fought unitedly by the industrial countries.

But Canada should both be doing more to fight it at home and be urging other countries to unite against it.

The depression is now gathering momentum as rising unemployment undermines consumer demand.

It's being fought—like the U.S. fought the war in Vietnam—with an attitude of "business as usual".

And if we think that's good enough, we should remember how the Vietnam war turned out.

I see my time is expiring, Mr. Speaker. I would end by saying that, while my colleagues and I have had a quick look at it, I am sure we will be supporting the Conservative amendment in this case and opposing, of course, Bill C-131. We really wish and I want to address this last comment to the Conservative Party to my right—that they would turn out to vote on this occasion. On the last two votes we had on this Bill it was more as if we were discussing the original six and five program they supported, because in each case the Government was sustained by fewer Members than the number of Conservatives who were absent from the House, and that was on both occasions, on December 10 on the six-months hoist and on second reading of the Bill itself. I hope they will show up and I hope they will keep that commitment because that may lend some credibility to those thousands of Canadians who wondered how the Conservatives could support the six and five legislation in Bill C-124 in the beginning and then disclaim responsibility for its offspring. We hope they will show up, we hope they will be united and we hope, finally, that some of the Members on the Government side will look to their consciences and decide to preserve what little credibility that Government has retained by voting to help us defeat this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on this amendment which is just another way of saying that members opposite are in favour of the six and five program. But, of course, those who do support the amendment fail to say whether they will vote for Bill C-131 after we have disposed of the amendments at the report stage. In fact, they are saying that they are more or less in agreement, but that in 1985 they will go back to the basic old age pension of 1984 as if the six and five program had never existed. In other words, members opposite are playing games again by saying that they are in favour of the principle, but that Government spending must come down. They accept the principle, but they have said on many occasions that Canadians must lower their salary demands. They agree that Bill C-131 will not restrict or limit the indexation for all old age pensioners, but only that it will limit to 6 per cent the indexation of basic old age security pensions without affecting in any way those who get the supplement. They will continue to benefit from full indexation and they will also get an increase to offset their loss due to the capping of the indexation of their basic pension.

Mr. Speaker, I took part in the debates on other bills related to the six and five program and I pointed out that some opposition members are less than honest when they keep saying that we must have budget cutbacks, lower incomes for Canadians and less Government spending but, the moment we mention a specific item which will indeed affect Canadians, they claim they are against it. I would suggest that they are being dishonest when they take that approach, because one is either in favour of or against Government cutbacks. How can they possibly advocate less Government spending without at the same time cutting down some of the programs designed for individual Canadians? For years, this was the position of the Progressive Conservative Party. The Conservatives always said: The federal budget is too high; Government spending must come down. We now have Bill C-131 which limits very reasonably Government spending and has no impact whatsoever on those who depend on the supplement, but the Opposition, especially the Progressive Conservative Party, now says: A restrictive policy is required, a Conservative policy designed to restrict expenditures and incomes in Canada, but no one should be affected. It is somewhat like people who say: I want to go to heaven, but I do not want to die. Of course, the New Democrats do not say that. They say that no program or income should ever be capped in Canada. They probably do not understand that inflationary trends in a modern society such as ours are partly due to psychological factors.

Like all other government levels, the federal Government is an important factor in the incomes of Canadians because of the statutory programs which provide certain benefits for certain people under specific conditions, but governments are also an important factor because of their own spending. Increased Government spending stimulates the economy and means more income. Less spending means less income somewhere in our society. Government action is therefore an important psychological factor in the economy, and this is the reason for the six and five program, Mr. Speaker. This does not mean that those who support this Bill are determined to take away something from somebody; it means simply that the Government of Canada will provide leadership to the country because it recognizes that it plays an important psychological role and wants to convince Canadians that it is possible to reduce inflation at least to six per cent in 1983 and five per cent in 1984. We are convinced that this is possible, and because we are, we are willing to take a risk and ask those who receive certain social benefits to make sacrifices without affecting the poor, since Bill C-131 will have no effect on those who receive the supplement. We are therefore saying that, without affecting the poor who really need assistance, increases will be capped at six per cent.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it is six o'clock and ask you to recognize me again at eight o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8.05 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when the House took recess at 6 o'clock, it is basically dishonest for a political party to always advocate budgetary cutbacks and less Government spending and to oppose legislation which has a specific impact on a special group because this Party believes that, by so doing, it can score political points.

[English]

It is very important that the recipients of Old Age Security realize that all we are doing with this Bill is to indicate that indexation will be limited to 6 pe cent and 5 per cent in the next two years. There is no cutback on Old Age Security. There will be an increase of 6 per cent on January 1 and 5 per cent the year after.

Not only will those whom the legislation has described as being in need, which means those who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement, receive the full indexation, they will also be compensated for the fact that the indexation will be reduced to 6 per cent. Therefore, it is very important that the recipients of Old Age Security realize this.

I indicated earlier that it was not totally honest for the Members of the Conservative Party to attack any specific measure that is designed to restrict public expenditures or restrict income to Canadians when it is specifically before the House. But then, all I have heard for years from the Progressive Conservative Party is that there should be less Government spending and less social spending. They say we should balance the budget and reduce expenditures in Canada but as soon as you bring a specific measure, they cry wolf. They say, my God, this is going to affect these people, those people and the other ones.

We cannot have a restrictive fiscal policy, if we want to be honest, that is not going to affect anyone. Of course it is going to affect people. What they are trying to do is to say we are for the principle of six and five per cent because that has an element of restriction of public expenditure and also of income. They say we are for that principle but when it is specifically going to affect anyone, we are against it.

I understand that position. If I were in the Opposition maybe I would see some advantage in doing that also. My purpose in speaking this evening is to assure those who receive Old Age Security that what they hear in these debates, that the Government is cutting back on Old age Security, is not true. They alluded, in the debate on Bill C-132 and the debate on Bill C-131, to the fact that there are so many people living at the poverty line, and the Government is going to take something away from people living at the poverty line, but in fact nothing at all will be taken away from people who live at the poverty line with any of the measures arising out of the six and five program. Absolutely nothing will be taken away from poor families by Bill C-132, or from retired people who rely only on old age pensions, if they receive the supplement. Nothing will be taken away from them and they will continue to be fully indexed. It is important that they see the difference between this and what the Official Opposition sees as a way to gain political points.

I do not speak of the NDP, because that Party's position has been well known. It is that Governments should never do anything about inflation, should never take anything away from anybody, should always give more. I do not object to that position, philisophically or intellectually, because sometimes I think Governments should do even more than what the NDP proposes, but it is important for the Canadian public and for those who are recipients of Old Age Security to see the politics in their position. The NDP has always been consistent in saying that we should spend more, we should do more, regardless of what the income to the Government is going to be, we should go into an unlimited deficit. Well, the Canadian public knows better and they know that the Government has to be responsible.

Even the members of the labour unions whose leaders support the NDP—obviously not all the members support the NDP—are for the six and five program. Their labour leaders have tried since last summer to arouse public opinion, to start demonstrations against the federal Government's wage limitation package of last summer and against these specific measures, and they have not been able to. So even those people realize that in this time of high inflation it is important for the Government to bring in factors that will affect the psychology of the nation, and this is what the Government is doing. It is saying that because the Government spends a lot in the economy there is a need to restrict the increases in some pensions, to loosen up some resources of the Government, in order to divert them to job creation programs and economic development programs. In fact what we are asking Canadians to do is that we all together share in an action, a program of helping those who do not have any protection and helping those who are losing their jobs, who are exhausting their UIC benefits and who have to go on welfare. We are asking all Canadians to restrict themselves to an increase of 6 per cent and 5 per cent, not accept a cutback, so that the Government can try to help those who cannot help themselves.

While the Opposition may speak about the recipients of these pensions being aroused, I speak to many of them when I am in my constituency. These people understand that the Government must act to bring some discipline in the economy, to show leadership, and this is what the Government is doing, it is showing leadership.

Of course we cannot ask the NDP to show leadership; that would be asking too much of the NDP to show leadership in anything. They do not believe that a Government has to make some tough decisions, some tough choices or the Government has to choose amongst difficult options. Whenever the NDP has had a few months to make decisions, to choose between options, they have shown that they could not last more than a few months. That is what happened in the minority Parliament from 1972 to 1974. They supported the Government in confidence motions until it was impossible for them to live with the responsibility of making decisions. At one point, they could not accept that responsibility, so we cannot ask them to be responsible on this measure.

The Official Opposition tried to be on both sides of this issue. They say they are for the six and five program but that it should not affect anyone. They say they are for the six and five program, but in this amendment they say they are for it for the first year; they do not know about the second year, and for the third year they do not want a six and five program.

There is a need for the Government to have a coherent message, to be clear in what it does, and I believe it has a duty to the Canadian public, the Canadian electorate, the Canadian taxpayer, to say nothing but the truth.

What we have to signal clearly in this fight against inflation is that the Government is determined that inflation will be brought down to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. And we are getting there. The inflation figures for the last three months and for the last six months show that we are very close to the 6 per cent world. We need to continue on this crusade, this national program, because inflation is partly made up of psychology, and the inflationary push has a psychological factor in it. For that reason it is imporetant for the Government of Canada and all the provincial Governments—

Mr. Fulton: To rip off the elderly.

Mr. Breau: —to say that we should restrict the increases in our income to 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

Somebody over there is saying "to rip off the elderly". That is a very irresponsible statement to make because we are saying there will be an increase on January 1 of 6 per cent to the basic old age pension. Those who are in need will continue to have the full indexation through the GIS, and they will be compensated for the limitation in indexation to the Old Age Security. How can that be called a rip-off, unless one only wants to make political statements to score political points? I do not think that Members of Parliament who are responsible should try to score political points on the backs of pensioners, on the backs of people who are retired. Hon. Members opposite should try to gain their political Brownie points with some other issue than by trying to play with the fears and emotions of people who are retired and those who live on old age pensions. They should be telling them that all we are doing is asking those who are not recipients of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, therefore those who are not, as defined by the legislation, "in need", to make a sacrifice and to accept an increase of 6 per cent instead of the full indexation which would be between 10 per cent and 11 per cent on January 1. Those are the facts. I believe that the matter is important, and that is why I wanted to speak—

• (2020)

Mr. Kristiansen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Breau: —to say to these people—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would permit a question either now or at the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. Breau: Yes, I am just about to conclude my remarks, and I will gladly accept a question after I conclude them.

I think it is important to tell the Canadian public the facts on this issue. What we are trying to do here is to apply some psychology to the nation by showing leadership, by showing we are determined to bring down inflation—

An Hon. Member: Brainwashing!

Mr. Breau: —in the 6 per cent and 5 per cent world. We also want to try to loosen up some fiscal resources of the Government of Canada to help those who are unemployed and those sectors of the economy that need assistance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Kootenay West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was referring to the Government's attempt to motivate the country. Why is it that when the national government wants to motivate people toward its goal, it does so by penalizing the relatively poor in society by means of Bills C-124, C-131, C-132 and C-133, but when it wants to motivate the relatively richer parts of society, ed2045;-1 it provides incentives, grants and rewards? Why is there a double standard?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, if I am permitted to answer, I think that the Hon. Member is grossly misleading the Canadian public by suggesting that—

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: —by these measures, we are hurting the poor more than anyone else, when there is no more divisive a factor in society than inflation. The most divisive factor—

An Hon. Member: In Canada, it is the Liberal Party.

Mr. Breau: The most divisive factor in a society, the one which pits the rich against the poor, weak groups against stronger groups, is inflation. What the Government is trying to do is to show leadership to convince Canadians to bring down the inflation rate to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. There is nothing which is more damaging to the poor than an inflation rate of 10 per cent, 11 per cent, 12 per cent or 13 per cent.

Concerning the measure that we are taking, the Hon. Member is grossly wrong when he says that we are hurting the poor more than the rich, because in all of the legislation which has been brought forward in Bills C-131 and C-132, we do protect the poor. Only those who are not in need will be limited to an indexation factor of 6 per cent. Therefore, the Hon. Member is grossly wrong when he suggests that these measures are hurting the poor more than the rich.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when I listened to the Hon. Member who spoke from the other side of the House, I came to the conclusion that the diagnosis of the condition of Canada is reasonably correct, but the cure which is being recommended is, in my view, only very partially correct. Canada is ill, or one might say that Canada is sick.

Mr. Schroder: The prognosis is good!

Mr. Taylor: The very bad diseases of Canada today are inflation and unemployment.

An Hon. Member: And the Liberals!

Mr. Taylor: And they are serious problems for the body politic called Canada. Tonight, I want to deal with some matters. I will not deal with the diagnosis, because I think we all agree that we have a sick country, with over 1 million people unemployed and with inflation far higher than it should be.

Mr. Schroder: It is going down!

Mr. Taylor: We must check what the Government is doing, because it is the Government's responsibility to deal with these particular problems. In the first place, inflation is an increase in the quantity of money and credit. The money supply and the credit supply are increased in relation to the available goods and services. One definition is "too many dollars chasing too few goods". I am not sure that that is entirely applicable today. Certainly, there is an increase in the quantity of money and credit in relation to the available goods and services. In other words, there is too much money in the country. As a result, the prices soar. The market will bear more, so prices rise. I will not state it so simply that it sounds as though one pushes a button and solves the problem. I realize the seriousness of the problem, but I think that unless we get right down to the fundamentals and understand what we are trying to do, we are not likely to find a solution which will be workable.

One cause of inflation and, consequently, high unemployment, is unbalanced budgets. It does not happen overnight, but Governments which go on spending more than they have, not having the courage or desire to increase their revenue in order to have the money to spend, create a condition which helps to make the country ill. That is exactly one of the things which has been going on. Since the advent of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), we have almost ceased hearing about balanced budgets. However, each year the expenditures continue to rise, without the money to pay for them. Therefore, it is no wonder that we finally came to the place where the country could not stand that type of thing. The Government was aggravating the illness, making no attempt to try to clear it at all by raising the revenues which could have been raised in those better years.

If there is no increase in wages for our workers, and producers push up the prices, what happens? Producers simply sell less because the workers are unable to buy goods without increased wages. In that type of situation, there is a reduced output. When there are fewer goods and fewer people are buying, more workmen are put out of work as they are not required.

When we start to point our fingers at the cause, let us not point them at the workers of this country who have been trying to make both ends meet. In my view, it is completely unfair to say that the workers are the cause of inflation. They are affected as a result of inflation. They must have enough to eat, and either they receive increases in their wages, or else they go without many of the things that they would otherwise buy. If they go without, that means there are fewer and fewer demands and more and more people being put out of work. Nor can one blame the producers or the sellers. One cannot point one's finger at the producers, farmers and miners who create wealth in this country and say that they are the cause of inflation. They have been producing. One way of fighting inflation is to increase productivity.

There are two commonly known methods of dealing with inflation. One is to draw off the surplus money through taxes or through the method the Government is using with regard to Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133. This is an indirect form of taxation. It is trying to draw the money off because the Government has come to the conclusion there is too much money, but I say the cure is wrong because the money is being drawn from the wrong places. Certainly, if there is too much money out there and the price of goods is soaring, then there is a way of taking that money out of circulation, but not from the poor, not from those who are already suffering, but from those who can well afford to pay part of this cost. The other method, and the one which I prefer, is to increase production. This Government has done everything but try to increase production in this country. It has kicked free enterprise in the face right and left. It has made it difficult to invest money, or even to make any kind of profit out of an investment. More and more businesses fail. They go down the tube. Therefore, more and more people are thrown out of work because the employer does not have the money to pay them. We can increase production or—

• (2030)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Schroder: I have been listening very carefully to the Hon. Member's speech and I fail to see much relevance in it to the amendment which was proposed by the Opposition.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the trouble with this Government. They do not know what they are trying to fight. Surely it is inflation they are trying to fight. If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knew what he was trying to fight maybe he would not have helped bring in these three Bills of which he is so proud.

The Government is not attacking the problem. Every one of its speakers over there says inflation is a problem, but unemployment is also a problem. They forget about that, and it is a worse problem than inflation, or just as bad. The Government is not facing up to the issues. It is trying to solve inflation, and the only solution it advances is six and five.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rises on a point of order.

Mr. Schroder: Inflation is the very thing which this program of six and five is attempting to fight, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would find out what a point of order is, I would not mind so much his constant interruptions. If he would just listen for a while, he might just accidentally learn something.

There are two methods of dealing with inflation which I would like to pound into the heads of the Hon. Members opposite. I think maybe what we should try to do is to cross a pigeon with a woodpecker so the message would not only get over there, but it could be pounded into their heads after it gets there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: You asked for it. You got it. If you want to hand it out, you had better be willing to take it. I would like to continue now, Mr. Speaker, because my time is limited and I cannot waste time on these trivialities which the Parliamentary Secretary is raising.

The Government says the solution is six and five. It is a partial solution. It will draw off some money, but it is taking money from the wrong places entirely. If the money was coming from the proper place, it would have a greater effect than the present six and five program. I supported the six and five program when it was affecting the wages—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Don't clap until you hear the whole story. I supported the six and five program when it affected the wages of Members of Parliament, Senators—none of us is going without—when it affected the wages of judges, certainly. I approved of that.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member's speech and I have heard not one mention of the amendment which is being discussed tonight by Hon. Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I ought to resolve the problem of the Hon. Members. In view of the Bills which are before the House, and the debate which has gone on with respect to what is in shorthand known as "six and five", and the economy generally of Canada, the Chair has been disposed, not only myself but other occupants of the chair, to accord the widest latitude to Hon. Members who wish to debate the issue. Accordingly, unless there is a very finely argued point of order, I will allow the right of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) to continue in the manner in which he is now proceeding.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, almost every Member in the House, including the Minister herself, spoke about the motion and the amendment. Surely to goodness the Parliamentary Secretary, if he is half awake, would have recognized that.

I want to deal now with some of these problems which are arising because the Government has not created the right cure. The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) said there would be no cutback. Those were his words. But, Mr. Speaker, it is okay if you have a large enough income and, when part of the increase you expect each year is not forthcoming, you can still get by. But I want to tell the Hon. Members of this House that there are thousands of people who are in the old age pension bracket who need every cent they are receiving in order to continue to live. I imagine there are thousands in this country who are very close to getting the Guaranteed Income Supplement, but they do not qualify. They are in a pretty tough position and they need all the money they get. They do not need it reduced, they need more.

When the Government says it is only taking 4 per cent or 5 per cent off, that they are going to get 6 per cent this year instead of 10 per cent or 11 per cent, is that not a cutback? Of course, it is. And if anyone thinks they should be able to get by on that, I invite them to visit these people in their homes. There is more than just the fuel, the hydro, the telephone and the groceries which have to be paid for, but year after year the blankets wear out and they eventually have to have more blankets. I do not suppose that ever occurs to people with large incomes, but it certainly occurs to people who have to make every dime count. Their dishes break and they have to get more dishes. The curtains wear out and they need curtains. their blinds wear out and they have to replace them. Their carpets wear out, and they do not change their carpets one-tenth or one-twentieth as much as they do in this building. these things wear out and they all cost money. This is something which people forget; there are always eventualities. I know a person whose hot water heater went on the blink just this week. They had no hot water. The people who look after the repair of hot water heaters were contacted, and they informed this person it was going to cost $60 for a service trip just to find out what was wrong with it.

You tell me these people can do with less because they happen to be superannuates, or they happen to have children for whom they are getting the Family Allowances, or they happen to be old age citizens who do not get the GIS. But even if they get the GIS they still run into these eventualities. There are other things which happen also. Light bulbs burn out. Sometimes the door will not close and you have to find some way of closing a door in the wintertime. There are a countless number of things which cost money. I want to say that the senior citizens of this country, families and the superannuates, the ex-army personnel, the ex-RCMP personnel, the ex-public servants, have these things happening and they do not have enough money to meet all their needs at any one time. They still need to have a little credit. Because they are honest and the grocer trusts them, they are able to get a little credit. Now we are going to say to that group: we want you to bear the brunt of fighting inflation. Well, they did not cause it all. It was caused mostly by Government. There is no government in this world which has caused inflation faster than the present Government of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Not one in any country of the world. They have lived off the fat of the land and increased the deficit instead of lowering it. If this Government were reasonable and sensible—

• (2040)

Mr. Schroder: It is.

Mr. Taylor: —and would diagnose the disease we are trying to cure, it would come to the Leaders of the other two Parties and say: here is our problem. Our country is ill. Do you agree with the diagnosis? I think everyone would agree that inflation is a disease and unemployment is a disease. Well, can we work out this problem together? There are countless ways of fighting inflation, but not on the backs of the aged, the retired, or the children; do it on the backs of those who can afford it and who will not even miss it.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member entertain a question?

Mr. Taylor: I will be glad to, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member could perhaps wait until I am finished, and I will be glad to try and answer his question then.

What we have to realize today, Mr. Speaker, is that this little pittance they are going to take from the senior citizens of this country, out of the pockets and mouths of the kids, is just a drop in the bucket compared to what they could get if they went into a few other avenues in which this Government operates. I heard of a little girl who got hurt the other day, Mr. Speaker. She came from a home where they did not have very much money. She was taken to the hospital, and when she came to she was in a room where everything was white. The nurse was standing over her and holding a glass of milk. She said to the little girl: "Would you try to drink a little milk?" The little girl took the glass of milk and started to drink, and then she said: "How far down may I drink?" Mr. Speaker, that little girl had never had the pleasure in her whole life to drink a whole glass of milk. Now we are going to take from that type of child the little bit they have—

Mr. Schroder: It is not true.

Mr. Taylor: —and let those who have all kinds get away free. Well, if you want to fight inflation, let us do it together, but not on the backs of our kids or those of the aged.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be a great defender of the social programs introduced by Liberal Governments. Can he tell us how many social programs the Progressive Conservative Party introduced? Can he name one program which has been produced by the Tories in the last 100 years?

Mr. Mazankowski: Go to Alberta and see what they have.

Mr. Taylor: I will be very glad to. For years we asked the Liberal Government to look after the widowed spouses of senior citizens, but the Liberals could not find the money. We found the money and we did not kill an industry to do it. We put people to work, and you would do a lot better if you would do the same thing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, not too long ago I made an intervention on this Act, not because, like other Members of this House, I do not feel this is an area we would rather not have to touch, but to try to make the point that this was part of an over-all program to help bring down inflation, which in turn helps to distribute the wealth of the country more equitably, among all the people of the nation. It also helps to put us in a position not only to enjoy the good life today, but to be in a better position in the very near future, as the world begins to come out of the desperate slump it is in, to be more in line with the rest of the nations of the world. It would be very handy if Canada lived in a vacuum and we would sink or swim by our actions alone. But all thinking Members recognize that this is not so.

However, Mr. Speaker, we have a particular series of Bills before the House on which it is very easy to get up and say, I am for apple pie, motherhood and this kind of thing. Yet the last time I spoke I brought into this discussion my mother, who happens to be a senior citizen, and a Member opposite said: I bet your wrist will be slapped when you get home to see Mom. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have seen Mom since then. She said: "You know, son, I live in a senior citizen's apartment dwelling and I am enjoying my apartment and my way of life. Yes, I would like to have an increase higher than 6 per cent", because, do not forget, we are still speaking of an increase in the new year for senior citizens. "But", she said, "I can understand that I am not on the supplement and I, too, should be part of a battle which encompasses many sectors of society, both by law and the involuntary way by those people who cannot find jobs, and those people who voluntarily come along with the idea of the six and five program". In that vein, a labour leader said to a group of us on the weekend, "I have frozen my salary. I did not take a 6 per cent increase or 5 per cent increase; I have frozen it absolutely. That seems to me to say that even the labour movement recognizes that we all have to make sacrifices and join together in some kind of restraint to help bring inflation down, to help spread the wealth of the country more equitably.

Mr. Kristiansen: That is voluntary.

Mr. Masters: So we say that this Bill is part of the over-all six and five program to help fight inflation and it requires the assistance of everyone to be effective. I believe the results of the last while show that in fact inflation is coming down. I regret very much that in debating on behalf of those people affected by such legislation, Members opposite, inadvertently, I think, are feeding the expectations of inflation forever. It will never, ever change by a point or two downwards because Members opposite keep telling us every day: no, it will never get down to 6 per cent so you, no matter who you are, if you are in business you had better ask for a 10 per cent increase for your product. If you offer a service, you had better ask for 15 per cent because inflation is never going to come down. So it goes, Mr. Speaker, that we hear the gospel of inflation as a fact of life from Members opposite.

I am sure that is not what they want. I am sure they know that we have to bring inflation down and that we have to be in a competitive position with the rest of the world. Current statistics indicate that we have not been doing very well but that now we are beginning to. I honestly believe, as I support the Bill, that we will see a time when the six per cent inflation rate will be the norm rather than the abnormal. But, for goodness sake, it cannot happen by itself. It has to happen with all of us urging people to get behind this country of ours and to bring their expectations into line so that the common good is served.

There are times when we forget what are our Party affiliations in the interests of the people of the country. Senior citizens have a great feeling for the country because they helped build it. Also they have a great feeling for their children and their children's children. They would rather not have to accept less of an increase, but they will. They still say to me that they respect the fact that the Government is doing what it can and that they will join with many other sectors which have voluntarily and involuntarily joined the fight against inflation. They are willing to do their part, to accept their responsibility.

This piece of legislation, as unpalatable as it might be to some of us, is part of the great psychological battle we are fighting to demonstrate unequivocally to the people of Canada that we must have a lower inflation rate. It will be lower if we all accept it, but it will never go down if the leaders of the country keep going around telling people day in and day out that they are living in a dream world, that this will never happen, and that they have to prepare themselves for higher and higher inflation. This is the exact message which has been coming through this debate day in and day out, that inflation will not come down. They do not want it to go down; it is not in their political interests for the inflation rate to go down or for other things to happen in the country. I make a friendly, passionate plea to Hon. Members opposite and to the people of Canada that these are difficult times, but there is a glimmer of light ahead if we all work together to help bring down the inflation rate. If we work together we will enjoy even more this great country of ours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the Conservative amendment to Bill C-131. I must say that I have some concern about the amendment. Of course we do not want the Bill to be before the House. In fact, we think it should be withdrawn. There is no time like the present to do it just before Christmas. We understand that the amendment is really a grandfather clause which attempts to restore indexing at the same rate as it would have been in two years' time had there been no Bill C-131.

I am surprised that we have not heard Liberal Members supporting the amendment. It is one thing they could really support. This afternoon we heard the very jubilant Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) announce that inflation was now down to 9.7 per cent in Canada and that the Liberal program was working. Of course this is good news, especially just before Christmas. I am sure most elderly Canadians also felt the same way. These same Canadians, if they were aware of Bill C-131, unfortunately did not have enough time for their organizations to study the Bill. So often there is no adequate time for them to know, to react and to have input in Bills such as these, especially if they live in western Canada.

However, many of them know about this Bill which is designed to cut the indexing on their pensions in the new year. I am sure they sighed a big sigh of relief this afternoon when they heard that inflation was going down. I am sure they thought that now the Government, thank goodness, does not have to use Bill C-131 to fight the war against inflation or to use senior citizens and their pensions to fight the war. Certainly we can assume, even by Liberal logic, that if inflation is coming down there is absolutely no need for the Bill. I asked the Minister this afternoon that if that was the case, why did she feel the Bill was necessary. Of course those of us who were present heard her ridicule the question, as if I were insincere about it. I was certainly very sincere. I do not have the "blues", but she certainly passed it off as a ridiculous statement to think that she should withdraw the Bill penalizing senior citizens by cutting the indexing of their pensions. She continues to believe that the six and five will somehow win the war on inflation. I cannot grasp the logic of this Liberal policy.

It would have been good sense to withdraw the Bill because it costs a lot to prepare Bills and to go through the administrative procedures of processing and implementing them. I appeal to the Government—and I know the Conservative Party on my right shares our concern in this regard—to withdraw Bill C-131. Inflation is down. It will do nothing to reduce inflation further. Why should senior citizens be penalized in this way? However, I want to tell senior citizens that unfortunately the Government and the Minister in charge of the Bill are not logical. They do not act in a rational manner. They are not even humane at Christmastime. The Government intends to proceed with its very punitive Bill, and we oppose it very strongly.

I happened to hear on the radio today that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is doing his Scrooge act as well. He has declared that he will go ahead regardless of whether or not the Bill is passed. If we have our way, it will certainly not be passed in the House before Christmas, but he will go ahead in his own arrogant way and take this money out of pension cheques and the Family Allowance cheques in January. Imagine that. Certainly I think this would be illegal; it is extremely arrogant and very typical of the Minister of Finance.

I feel very strongly that the Liberal mismanagement of the economy should not be put on the backs of pensioners, families and workers in Canada. We will not let the Tories off with being very nice about the Bill. Anyone who has followed the history of the last few months in the House would know that, if it had not been for the Conservative Party agreeing and supporting the Liberal policy of six and five restraint, we would not be in the position today of having to defend old age pensioners. They started by approving Bill C-124—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: I do not want to hear any more nonsense from that hypocritical Party saying that we voted against that Bill because we did not want our own pensions to be affected. It is absolutely ridiculous and shameful. I find myself quite speechless when I think of it, if you can believe it, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know how many of these same Tories a year or so ago accepted a huge increase in their salaries as Members of Parliament. Also I would like them to know that I did not accept that, nor did I vote for that Bill, so let us not hear any more about it. If the Tories were sincere about old age pensions, Family Allowances and the effect of this six and five restraint program, surely they would also be concerned about the public servants in this country. It seems to me that the Public Service is really a group to be almost pitied because public servants have no rights at all as far as speaking out on their own behalf on such matters is concerned. They are intimidated. They work for the Government and unless they are pensioners they do not even dare show up on Parliament Hill to demonstrate against such Bills as these. It is shameful that the Conservatives did not stand and speak out on their behalf in opposition to Bill C-124.

• (2100)

Let me now again refer to Bill C-131 and the amendment before us. I want to summarize again very quickly why the NDP opposes this Bill and will oppose it after we vote on the amendment.

We believe that old age pensions should not be subject to the six and five index cut in 1983 and 1984. I might also point out, as Liberal Members have not done, that there is absolutely no evidence we have been able to find that these cutbacks will be recovered after the two-year period. The Minister did not affirm that fact at the committee. That is why we have some interest in this amendment. We oppose the six and five restraint policy of this Government in general because it victimizes public servants, imposes an unfair cutback on the indexing of old age pensions, and also imposes the same kind of restriction on the Family Allowance payments to mothers and children.

The principle is the same in all these Bills. It is simply a Liberal policy of making the most vulnerable people pay. Under Bill C-124 the civil servants, who have no free right to speak out in protest, were the victims. Children have no voting powers, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not even process the recommendations of the committee to set up a secretariat for children which could at least speak out on their behalf. I am sure such a secretariat, had it existed, would have protested Bill C-132. We have spoken at other times about the unfairness of these Bills to women.

Bill C-131 is perhaps the worst Bill because it threatens to undermine the whole concept of universality of old age pensions. Again the Minister ridicules that suggestion, but I would remind her that practically every organization which had witnesses appear before the committee reaffirmed the position we have been espousing since the Bill first came before us, that is, that it does undermine old age pensions and the universal aspect of them. The Bill sends a signal to pensioners that their pension cheques will no longer be indexed to the real cost of living.

In British Columbia there are something like 285,000 old age pensioners, about 48 per cent of whom will qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. They are the very poor with little or no other source of income. I expect the majority of the other 52 per cent who receive the old age pension and qualify only for that part of the program are also finding it pretty difficult to stretch their incomes. Indeed, many of them are still living below the recognized poverty level. I have some facts which I will present in a moment that point out that they are finding it difficult to meet the high cost of living, those things they have to pay for out of their budgets. The cutback in the index will definitely take money out of the pockets of the pensioners, most of whom are on fixed and marginal incomes. They are not the very poorest of people, but they are certainly poor by most standards.

We observed some attempt today to get some facts on the cost of living in Vancouver, a part of which I represent. A very small, modest one-bedroom apartment there rents for a little lower than before, but still upward of $286 a month. Utilities cost $60 a month, and for people who have a home, property taxes are up. A telephone costs over $10 a month and food runs at about $180 a month. I think that is a very conservative estimate, if you will pardon that expression. Single pensioners, particularly, who do not have two cheques to cover these costs, with overheads of $540 a month minimum, are finding it very difficult. Most old age pensioners have very little left from their cheques, even if they do have supplementary pensions, so let us not kid ourselves that this cutback is hurting only the people who are not in need. That is a myth, and if the Liberals think that old age pensioners with these kinds of costs with low incomes are not in need, that shows their insensitivity.

The Minister also admitted that the savings from Bill C-131 and Bill C-132 would be relatively small in terms of cash to the federal Government. She has said that this is really not the major concern, but rather it is a means of fighting a psychological war. The Government is fighting this psychological war through old age pensioners in an attempt to bring down inflation. I still cannot figure out the rationale for that particular war. It seems to me what we need is a little psychoanalysis of the Government.

Fiscally the Bill will save only about $84 million over a two-year period. That is the best figure I have been able to get. That seems like a lot of money, particularly to an old age pensioner, but if we consider it in terms of federal budgets it is not a lot as we in this House know. It is not a lot in terms of people in need. It is not a lot in terms of senior citizens who have contributed a lifetime to raising families, building communities, developing our resource industries and, indeed, building Canada. It is certainly not a lot when compared to the expenditure which I quoted earlier in a former speech in terms of fighter planes, amounting to billions of dollars. Let us also consider the $500 million give-away to Dome Petroleum. If we want to find money in the kitty we should consider these areas.

The Liberal Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) said earlier that the Liberals are really helping senior citizens through the six and five program to cut back on the indexation of pensions. Can you imagine that, the suggestion that the Government is really helping senior citizens by cutting back on pension indexation?

The Hon. Member also said the Government is showing leadership. It is certainly typical of Liberal leadership: no price controls, no tax reforms to tax back the universal program, which is the best way to make it work, from those who earn over $100,000 and pay absolutely no income tax. Of course, there is no economic strategy. The only leadership the Liberals are showing is in how to hit the public servants who do not have a voice to speak out on their own behalf, the children who do not have a voice on their behalf, the mothers at home raising those children and the senior citizens. I must say that is some kind of leadership.

The other day I spoke about how unfair this Bill is to elderly women who make up over 50 per cent of our old age pensioners. By far the greater proportion of those women are living below the poverty level. This is truly a tragic situation. Because they are poor they are isolated and lonely, not getting out very often, and thus are doubly discriminated against by age and sex. Most of them do not have the Canada Pension Plan or private pensions. They live longer than their husbands so they end up living as widows, single people, with the high costs coming out of one pension cheque. I have said many times in this House that we have heard this story over and over again from the women we visited during the work of the task force on older women. We heard the same story in every Province of Canada. Elderly women are in a desperate situation. Some of them receive the GIS and some are in the marginal group. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they are very poor and do not have the money at the end of the month to put the necessary nourishing food on the table which they need. One woman spoke on a hot line show saying that she had to pay $200 for special medication. In that particular Province she had no means of getting this money back. Even if they have extra income, it is usually below the poverty line. It is much more difficult for single people to pay these costs from a single cheque.

I would also like to say that the Green Paper on pensions does not address this problem at all. There are no recommendations, much less solutions, in that Paper to deal with the poverty which elderly women are suffering from now. Women in two generations from now will not have an adequate pension plan.

As I asked previously, why are the Liberals placing this restraint program on the backs of elderly Canadians and Canadian families? Only a little money will be saved.

I can quote the Minister herself who said to the Canadian Congress on Pensions last spring. She said that senior citizens must have an adequate income and pensions which are fully indexed. She said:

> Many women who previously had little more than a vague, often unreliable notion of what to expect from Canada's pension system have been jolted—

She went on to say:

> It is therefore incumbent upon us to move quickly in meeting the challenges of pension reform.

She then said:

> All pensioners should be protected from inflation; women must be treated more equally.

Of course, Bill C-131 denies those statements. Its effects will achieve the very opposite to what the Minister was advocating last spring.

I have a story which I do not have time to elaborate on about a woman who has several small pensions and must work hard to make the pensions meet her needs. She finds it important to even save 30 cents on coupons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to her has expired. She may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not seem to be unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois) on a point of order.

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert to presenting reports from Standing or Special Committees, for the purpose of tabling a report on Bill C-141.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that will be agreeable.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, that will be agreeable to the NDP also.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent we revert to presenting report from Standing and Special Committees.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, in both official languages.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and the motion of Mr. Dantzer.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, with your leave, I wish to rise in the House this evening to speak to Bill C-131—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Returning to presenting reports of Standing and Special Committees, may I suggest that you accept the report and ask whether it should be read again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is perfectly right. Is it the desire of the House to proceed to report stage of this Bill at this point?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has made it quite clear on several occasions that we on this side of the House are prepared to deal with all remaining stages of this Bill certainly tonight, and if the House is disposed to do that, we would certainly consent to do so on this side of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs had the courtesy to request our consent to revert to this stage of our proceedings so that we could provide the unanimous consent necessary to present that report tonight. Obviously, the Parliamentary Secretary has not had the courtesy of consulting the Chairman, a Member of his own Party, of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs because we had agreed between ourselves that we would extend that kind of courtesy to our collective caucuses tomorrow and would anticipate no real difficulty in dealing with the report stage and the third reading stage tomorrow. At least the Members of the House are entitled to that courtesy, which we intend to give them. I would suggest that at the next sitting of the House we will deal with the report and third reading stages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has received the report of the Committee. There apparently is not unanimous consent to proceed to report stage and third reading stage at this point. Therefore, the House will revert to the item of business we were at before we reverted to Routine Proceedings to deal with the report of the Standing Committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, we are lucky to have experienced Members like the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to remind us of the subject at hand, and especially of various points of parliamentary procedure. I wish to thank him for his comments. To get back to what I was saying, I was asking you, Mr. Speaker, to give me the floor this evening, because my youthful ears were shocked by what they heard from Members opposite. The Members of the Official Opposition and the Members of the New Democratic Party are wallowing in rhetoric aimed at condemning what they seem to think is an unconscionable betrayal of Canada's senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it is really sad to hear Hon. Members who come here just to try and scare Canadian pensioners. Imagine someone who is receiving a pension and is listening at home to statements being made by the likes of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) or the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell). Of course these people are going to be scared. When I visit my riding, pensioners tell me: Pierre, it seems they are going to cut off our pensions; Pierre, it seems you are going to take our money away from us. Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely unconscionable and inconceivable that a so-called political party with a so-called socialist philosophy, set up by and for so-called intellectuals, should try to scare senior citizens just because the Government has said: Next year, inflation is going to be 6 per cent instead of 12. On the Oposition side, they are protesting so strongly against the capping of indexation at 6 per cent that pensioners think their entire pension is going to be cut off. When I go to senior citizens' clubs in my riding, my answer to them is: Do not worry. The Liberal Government of Canada which introduced unemployment insurance, old age security and health insurance is not going to cut off your pensions. The Liberal Government of Canada which continues the philosophy of the Government that introduced the guaranteed income supplement is not going to cut off your income.

• (2120)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do hope the Hon. Member will entertain a question, particularly in light of the inaccurate statement he is making. Would he entertain a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) entertain a question?

Mr. Gimaïel: As soon as I finish my speech, Mr. Speaker, and only if the Hon. Member refrains from further comments.

To get back to this gang of Members headed by the Member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), I can see them running down the street, talking to pensioners and telling them they are in trouble. And as I was saying, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Come on, Fulton, you communist, everybody knows about that.

[Translation]

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the Member just lied to the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean has the floor.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I must admit that since my understanding of English is fairly poor . . . Let us say that I did not realize the Hon. Member just informed me that I was lying. Let us just say I did not realize this. To get back to my speech, Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to tell the senior citizens in my riding—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Nice speech!

Mr. Gimaïel: —that a Liberal Government that introduced policies such as the guaranteed income supplement and old age security pensions is certainly not going to make any cuts in those programs. I want to tell senior citizens in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean and elsewhere in Canada, if they are listening, that unlike what the Members of the New Democratic Party would have them believe, or even the Progressive Conservative Members, for that matter, who actually voted with the Government in favor of the 6 and 5 policy, the Canadian Government is actually going to increase the guaranteed income supplement—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There has been an allegation in regard to unparliamentary language on behalf of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Did the Hon. Member for Skeena accuse the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) of lying.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker. He admitted it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Such language is obviously unparliamentary, and I invite the Hon. Member for Skeena to observe the customs and practices of this House and to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Fulton: When I hear an appropriate withdrawal from the Member I will do so as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member for Skeena to withdraw. If the Hon. Member for Skeena has remarks concerning unparliamentary language by other Members of the House, the Chair is prepared to entertain whatever he considers to be appropriate at that point. But the Chair at this stage requests the Hon. Member for Skeena to withdraw remarks that are unparliamentary.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I could get some direction from the Chair, Mr. Speaker. The Member perhaps could stand in his place and admit that what he said was completely unfounded, false, and in fact was a lie to the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Skeena withdrawing the unparliamentary language that he used? The Chair invites the Hon. Member for Skeena to withdraw language that is clearly unparliamentary by the standards of this House.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the House would not want to be misled in the way that the Member addressed the House of Commons a few moments ago. He raised the situation, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is incumbent on that Member to withdraw what he said first.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena, by his own admission, has used language that is unparliamentary. The Chair repeats a request to the Hon. Member for Skeena to abide by the practices of this House and withdraw expressions that are clearly unparliamentary.

In regard to allegations of other Members, the Chair has indicated that the Chair is prepared to hear representations and to deal accordingly, but at this stage the Chair requests the Hon. Member for Skeena to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Fulton: I will withdraw what I said in the interest of this House of Commons, but I would hope, although I recognize that he is a Liberal Member, that he will do the same, although he probably will not have the same depth of character to do the same thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has withdrawn. Is there an allegation that there has been unparliamentary language on the part of the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean? Is the Hon. Member for Skeena alleging unparliamentary language?

Mr. Fulton: What I am alleging, Mr. Speaker, is a falsehood. I do not doubt that the Member will not withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, but after all he is a Liberal Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The suggestion by the Hon. Member that there be anything other than impartial treatment by the Chair is totally unacceptable. The Chair will attempt to deal with all Hon. Members in regard to matters that are raised concerning unparliamentary conduct.

Again the Chair repeats, is there any evidence of language by the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean that is unparliamentary?

Mr. Fulton: All that I said, Mr. Speaker, was that it was flatly false.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this stage the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean.

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I will try to gather my thoughts and get back to the thrust of my speech. I was saying to senior citizens that, contrary to what certain Members would like them to believe, there is no question of cutbacks by the Canadian Government, the very Government which first came up with those various formulae such as the old age pension guaranteed income supplement. Quite the opposite. In 1983, the guaranteed income supplement will be fully indexed to the inflation rate. In addition, all senior citizens who receive the guaranteed income supplement will also get an extra amount which will compensate them for the difference between the 6 per cent increase in their basic pension and the actual increase in the cost of living recorded throughout the country. Now then, Mr. Speaker, why scare people who are asking for nothing more than security in order to be happy? Why should anyone make those people suffer by telling them that their monthly pensions might be reduced? Your pensions are going to be reduced! That Government is taking the bread out of your mouth! That is inhuman, Mr. Speaker.

It is quite proper for a politician to play politics, but not on the backs of poor people, not on the backs of those who are most in need of Government assistance, not on the backs of those who built our nation. The only thing the Government is asking from those who receive only the basic pension, who have other sources of income and who get at least $9,000 a year is to accept that their pension be indexed at 6 per cent this year instead of 7 per cent, 8 per cent or 9 per cent. It might very well be 6 per cent because, according to the news I heard this morning, for the first time in many months the rate of inflation for the past twelve months was 9.7 per cent, that is below the double digit bracket. And if we keep following our policy, I think that the rate of inflation will drop to 6 per cent or even less within a year. It goes to prove that we are being falsely accused of taking money away from the needy. The target of the Government, supported by Members of the Official Opposition who voted in favour of the six and five program, is to lower the rate of inflation which strikes hard at poor people. Mr. Speaker, does it make any difference to a millionaire whether the rate of inflation is 12 per cent rather than 6 per cent? Not really. Offhand, I would suggest that a millionaire does not know the price of a pound of butter. On the other hand, a senior citizen who has to live off his pension and the man who draws unemployment insurance benefits do know the price of a pound of butter, and they do know what 12 per cent means, Mr. Speaker. It is precisely to fight against misery that the Canadian Government has launched its six and five program. The Government will do its utmost to lower the rate of inflation which harms the poor and often is a boon to the rich. We want to bring it down to a level where poor people will at least be able to cope. Mr. Speaker, as a young Member of Parliament, I cannot accept that people come here to scare our senior citizens who are already worried enough as it is. Look at them, Mr. Speaker, look at the NDP Members, at these minions of Mr. McDermott, come and see them in committee supposedly fight for a few dollars that the pensioners must give up if they want a lower inflation rate tomorrow. I asked them recently: Are you thinking about the 15,000 residents of the Lac-Saint-Jean constituency who are now unemployed? Are you thinking about the young people of 20 who are having problems?

Mr. Speaker, the only way that we can really protect the most needy is to break the inflation spiral and create jobs, more jobs and still more jobs, and this is what the Government is trying to do. One of the main problems of Canada in the last ten years was that there were not enough Liberal governments in the Provinces. For ten years, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government, which is a Liberal Government, has been fighting against flag-wavers in Quebec; it has been fighting against governments much more willing to increase their own powers at the expense of their own people than to defend them. That is the main problem. True liberalism, the liberalism which helped to build Canada during the past 100 years, cares more for man than for an ideology or for symbols. You know, Mr. Speaker, that to be a Liberal Member of Parliament does not mean that you belong to a union. It means that you are the representative of union members, pensioners, workers and unemployed. As for the New Democratic Party, it simply belongs to the unions. This is quite obvious in the various committees, Mr. Speaker. There is always a union advisor behind them. They call each other brothers and comrades. This is really something. We simply have to read last week's minutes of the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I believe he is straying from the subject. I invite him to come back to it.

• (2130)

Mr. Gimaïel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I commend your great wisdom. Naturally, my great desire to help the senior citizens who will benefit from this six and five program causes me to stray from the subject under discussion. I admit it and I thank you for calling me to order.

What I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, is quite simple, and that is that since liberalism is a philosophy which has brought about policies designed to help individual citizens, it is impossible for a Liberal Government to remove benefits, and I am thinking particularly about senior citizens when I say so. The facts are quite the opposite. What the Liberal Government has done this year, what it has done in the past and what it will do in the future is to help those who have built this country, those who have given us everything, and this is what we want to do as effectively as possible, not by giving them a few cents more this year, but by defeating inflation once and for all and getting rid of an inhuman way of life which caused the most needy to be told: If butter is too expensive, do not eat any! Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to imagine that these people who have given so much to our country can today be the victims of prophets of gloom who would have them believe that their income will be cut this winter. That is not true. Why? Because when I myself, took on the duties of a Member of Parliament, when I was elected by my constituents, my only wish was to protect those constituents, especially the most needy, against any action detrimental to their interest and to their welfare. That is what I want to do and what I shall do as well as possible, and to do so, I cannot tolerate that anyone try to scare my constituents. I have already pointed out that, under the National Health and Welfare programs, and the Minister is here in the House, the Canadian Government will pay $21 billion this year to the provinces under cost-shared programs, and I want all senior citizens to realize that all these programs are indexed.

When an elderly person is treated, the Government of Canada pays at least 50 per cent of the bill. When an elderly person is attended by his or her physician, it is the same thing. When a senior citizen receives assistance from the Quebec Department of Social Affairs, for example, the Government of Canada pays at least 50 per cent of the bill. I want this fact to be known. And I want to say to all those individuals, it is not true, the Government of Canada means you no harm. If the Government of Canada has enough courage to say to its own officials, to those, and I hope you will allow me to say so, Mr. Speaker, who had to put up throughout the year with the strong pressures of a shaky economy—You know that the officials who work in our regional offices had to put up with the pressures brought to bear by the many unemployed who went to see them, people who needed a job or some assistance. Those people were asked to make sacrifices and they accepted. Why? They did so because they knew they could help their fellow citizens, the underprivileged, and contribute to reduce the inflation rate.

This is why they accepted, and if the government had the courage to ask them, it was not easy. I did not find it easy myself when I asked my own staff to agree to salary cutbacks and it was not easy either when I cut my own salary. Why was all that done? Because we no longer want our senior citizens to deal with the tremendous problem of inflation. We also realize that those people in need should not be given the bare minimum during a period of runaway inflation. Assistance should have a degree of stability. And I want to say to our senior citizens: Do not worry even though some would have you believe that there will be no spring nor summer next year. It is not true! The Government of Canada, that is the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) said during a televised interview, "This year we will launch a fight against poverty". If the Liberal Government has set up social programs to help the needy, it will surely not remove them when more Canadians than ever need help. On the contrary, and this is what is going on now. That is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been doing all along with his six and five program, and that is what we are doing now.

As to the Hon. Members who have voted in favour of the six and five program and who, for petty political reasons, are now voting against each and every clause or bill to amend the existing programs, I do not understand them. How is it possible to support a comprehensive policy and then vote against every specific bill? Only through cowardice, Mr. Speaker. Cowardice! It is always easy to hold back and say: I am in favour of this principle, but I cannot accept the fact that it may affect me. It reminds me somewhat of what is going on in the Province of Quebec. While they are imposing a 20 per cent cut on everybody, we are granting an 8 per cent increase. That is just about what the PQ members are saying nowadays. It reminds me also of the stand taken by the Progressive Conservative Party here. They say that they are in favour of the six and five program, that they are against inflation, but don't you dare change anything, you Government Members. That is not the way to build a country, Mr. Speaker, and especially not the way this country was built in the past. And there exist today a tremendous country called Canada, in case some people may have forgotten. Tremendous, indeed!

We are faced with problems today. As you know, because there is inflation, some people find it strange and wonder who is to blame. Ever since I came here, Mr. Speaker, a great many things have happened. I remember hearing Hon. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party say and even shout in the House that the Federal Government would not pay for Alberta oil, that it was not paying enough and should pay more for it. Is that not inflation, Mr. Speaker? Because of the problems we are faced with today, we must tell our senior citizens who are getting only the basic Old Age Security Pension, not those who are getting also the Guaranteed Income Supplement: You must accept an indexation capped at 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year of your Old Age Security Pension. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing that says that the inflation rate will not drop to 6 per cent in 1983. As a matter of fact, I am under the impression that the Government's policy is so successful that it might drop even lower. That is what is really great about it. I am dealing with the Canadian people openly and honestly, and I ask my colleagues here to stop frightening the disadvantaged. Let those who have built Canada enjoy a secure old age and retirement, where life will be as pleasant tomorrow as it is today and where they will be able to lead a peaceful and rewarding life.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to impinge on the speaker's time, but I did ask if I could place a question before the Hon. Member. I do hope I will be permitted at least a short—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time has expired. In fact, he has been allowed two minutes extra in compensation for interruptions. Is there unanimous consent of the House for the Hon. Member—there does not appear to be. The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin).

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, there are several themes which are being promoted by different groups in the House as we listen to speeches on Bill C-131 which we have before us now, the effect of which really is to limit the increases which would have been experienced by people receiving Old Age Security to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in two successive years.

The theme we are receiving from the Government Members is that we are somehow trying to create an impression in the minds of people which will frighten them, or will concern them. Indeed, I think there are some basic issues which are of major concern, and those issues I would like to approach in just a moment. On the other hand, we are getting another kind of theme from the New Democratic Party, which is a little bit extraordinary. I see Members of the NDP standing up and criticizing this Party because we supported the six and five program. Indeed, that is true. The Conservative Party has supported in general the six and five program because who would not want inflation to be down at that level and interest rates down to that level? Who in their right minds would even suggest that that is not what would be good for the country at this time when we are experiencing the current economic distress? But I would like to make very clear to the NDP and the Government that what we have supported in the six and five program was the general thrust. We did not give a carte blanche to policies like this, or to policies which would affect the Family Allowances for children. Those types of specific policies, I believe, are a separate issue, and those are things we are very much opposed to, and are in fact debating now. But I find it passing strange that the NDP would stand up on the one hand and talk about not supporting the six and five program, when the only specific thing that program did when it was first introduced, apart from any other legislation which we are getting now or that we will get, was to reduce the salaries of Members of Parliament. And the NDP voted en bloc against that.

I would like to approach this, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of some of the basic issues which we are being presented with by this type of legislation right now. This Bill proposes to reduce the amount, which has been committed by the Government and which was expected by people who are receiving Old Age Security across Canada over the next two years, by an amount that will be equivalent to approximately $300.

I think we have to take several things into consideration. First of all, the population is aging, some us faster than we would like. The fact is that in the last ten years there are over 700,000 fewer Canadians under the age of 20 and 800,000 more over the age of 60. Therefore, we are seeing a basic change in the population in Canada. This is an important factor in how we look at our programs and our social needs in Canada in the coming years. One of the major social problems which we face is the persistence of poverty. At this point in time at least 15.5 per cent of our population can be described, on the basis of certain income levels, as being below the poverty line.

We went through a period of time in the sixties and seventies when there were programs at the provincial and federal level which reversed that trend, where instead of increasing the number of Canadians who could be defined as living in poverty, we reduced that number. We went through a period of time then when there were many more families which had two people earning incomes, a wife starting to work or a husband starting to work, so there were two incomes coming into the family. There were the boom times of the seventies which all of us fondly remember where we reversed the trend of poverty. Now it is swinging the other way for a number of reasons. The economic policies which we have experienced over the last ten years, I would suggest, are one of the most important reasons for that. Apart from that, I think we need to be aware and accept the fact that we are dealing with people who are living in poverty in Canada and that number is going to increase unless we make some very basic changes.

In one of the counties which I represent they are looking at a welfare budget next year which will be 50 per cent higher than the welfare budget this year. In this year alone there are 500 more welfare cases than there were last year. Those changes are not something I am talking about in an abstract way. Those are things which are actually happening at the grassroots level of communities all across Canada. On the basis of national poverty levels, I believe there is an estimate that over 500,000 more Canadians during this next year or so will be facing the need for welfare assistance. That is a large number of people, Mr. Speaker, and it is an important factor in how we approach the eighties.

Another effect of this aging population is that we are looking at the need for significantly increased medical services. This is a question which I think is important and it can be addressed in several ways. It can be addressed by the federal Government trying to administer in a variety of ways the health care system in Canada. There is no question but that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has this kind of thing on her mind. It can also be addressed at the community level and at the individual level in a different fashion. But these are the needs and the circumstances which have arisen because of the aging population. There is one thing which the Minister said in a press release which I would like to read into the record. It reads:

> The budget takes as a given that Canadians who are not in need are entirely prepared to share in serious sacrifices which are required to bring our country out of the economic crisis.

In a broad way, I do not doubt at all that Canadians en masse would support programs and efforts to take this country out of the kind of circumstances we have today, but I think the essential point is that we are dealing now in this Bill, and particularly in this amendment, with a certain segment of Canadians to whom a commitment has been made by this Minister of National Health and Welfare and this Government, in fact by the Parliament of Canada. Now, for whatever reason, we have another proposal which is being championed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and which I find extraordinary, which will decrease that commitment. It is not a question of whether it is 3 per cent or 5 per cent, or what that percentage is, but the commitment had been made. People had made financial plans, understanding things to be a certain way as far as the commitment which the Government made is concerned, and now they are presented with a Bill which is going to change that commitment.

I would argue strongly on behalf of the group in our country which is in danger and which does have to make a disproportionate amount of sacrifice if we impose this kind of measure on them, that that commitment is clearly not going to be met by the Government. Now, we hear discussions about this being on the backs of those people. As I go through the areas I represent I think those are precisely the people who would be prepared to make sacrifices. I have to agree with the Government on that point. But I do not really think we can accept some of the Minister's arguments when she talks about the way she is first of all targeting in on those people who really need it. If she uses any kind of logic at all, she cannot deny the fact that what she is really doing is pushing more people into poverty, the people she made a commitment to.

We can get into a lot of political rhetoric at this time, Mr. Speaker. We hear it a lot, and strong political arguments are made by all sides. It is Christmastime and everyone likes to be generous at this time of the year, and we probably have but another 24 hours before most of us will be heading back to our constituencies. However, I think we are leaving while the Minister is reneging on a commitment made to Canadians who have contributed to this country and are now in a very vulnerable position. Now, $300 over two years is not much, but those people will be denied the security of knowing it will be there if needed.

I am not at this point, Mr. Speaker, arguing whether it is right or wrong to have universal programs, but I think it should be made very clear that the Minister has already given up the concept of universality. She can no longer argue that she supports universality. GIS is not a universal program. Health care benefits are not in a universal program. Whether they should be or not is a different argument, but I do not think she should go out and talk about these programs and the social welfare system in Canada as though it were a universal system. Clearly it is not.

The third thing I think we need to do is to consider the priorities of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and her Government. This measure might save $100 million. That is a significant amount of money, but we must balance that off against other initiatives the Liberal Government has taken. As an example, the amount of advocacy advertising by the Government to promote the six and five program, which is in part a political response to a very serious economic situation, will eat up a considerable amount of the saving. What have we got to show for it at the end? Another high profile reflection of the Liberal Party. I think that is a serious concern, Mr. Speaker, because it extends not just into the six and five program but into the manpower programs, energy programs; indeed it is all around us. It has made the federal Government the largest single advertiser in the country. And all of us have to question seriously the priorities of a Government which decides that it will renege on a commitment for the sake of putting forward advertising slogans in an effort to explain itself, when in many cases the explanations lack even a reasonable degree of accuracy. Those points have been made by many others, but I think it is a serious question which should be answered.

I am going to close my remarks by asking the Minister a question. I wonder if she really believes that she is making any significant contribution to the economic recovery of the country, a contribution to the things which need to be done to create the kind of economic climate we want in Canada? Is she really fulfilling her responsibility to older people by proposing legislation like this? I suspect she will not answer that question directly. I suspect she will continue to suggest that this is a good thing on behalf of Canada. However, I think there is a serious question concerning the kind of Cabinet measures she is supporting now and which it appears she will support in the futures. I think she has in fact, given up her constituency and that her constituency is very poorly represented in Canada today.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief comments on Bill C-131 before I call it ten o'clock. It is an important Bill, and simply because it does not affect a lot of people does not mean it is not important to the people it affects. There are some measures in the six and five program worthy of support in the sense that through them we try to impress upon people that inflation in many ways is psychological; that if the expectations are that inflation will come down in the future, in fact you may be able to do something about it. Inflation is what this Bill is all about, and the story is told that if we could give everyone a pill before they went to bed this evening to make them think there was going to be a depression in the morning, they would wake up and create the worst depression imaginable. Conversely, if you could convince people that tomorrow inflation was going to be at an end and economic good times were going to return, that expectation and belief would bring about the kind of economic recovery we all long for.

However, it is unfortunate that this six and five program is extended to cover people who, in large part, are unable to defend themselves against the worst effects of inflation. I refer specifically to the pensioners, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I have seen figures which indicate that the Government anticipates saving anywhere from $40 million to $80 million by applying the six and five to the Old Age Security Act. But if you take that $40 million figure and equate it to total Government expenditure, we would save $1 out of every $2,000 the Government spends. Bill C-131, Mr. Speaker, would save approximately $1 for every $2,000 the Government spends. That is really not a lot of money when you consider the kind of people we are going to extract that $1 from. That to me is a sad commentary on how the Government chooses to fight inflation. It is even more lamentable when you consider the fact that in large part the people who are going to be adversely affected by this Bill are the ones who are in most need of the money.

I see you rising, Mr. Speaker; may I call it ten o'clock?

METRIC CONVERSION—COMPULSORY ASPECT OF LAW ON ADVERTISING. (B) REQUEST THAT MEASUREMENTS BE PERMITTED IN BOTH IMPERIAL AND METRIC SYSTEMS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being branded a dinosaur, as I was the other day in the House by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger), I want to deal with the Liberal Government's unholy zeal to force-march Canadians into metric conversion. My point in rising one more time on this subject is not only to express my disappointment and frustration at answers which I have received from the Government in recent months concerning the compulsory aspect of going metric, but to represent those Canadians who are genuinely concerned about their own democratic rights. These people number in the millions and they deeply resent the callous trampling of those rights by the federal Government.

Specifically, I have tried to obtain answers from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to questions which I placed to him on April 2, 1982, on July 30, 1982, and just last week on December 15, 1982. All three questions were designed to get some honest response from the Government on a fundamental misleading of the public about the compulsory, mandatory nature of going metric, and metric only. It is my view that misstatements by the Minister and his Metric Commission to the people, to the press and to Parliament about the manner of metric conversion must be exposed for the misrepresentations they are.

Let me cite three examples of flip-flops by the Liberal Government and a breaking of his word by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with respect to metric conversion.

Example No. 1—the White Paper on metric conversion, tabled in the House of Commons by the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin), indicated that the metric process shall be voluntary. Page 5 of the White Paper specifically indicated:

> No legislative action is contemplated which would make mandatory the replacing of inches and pounds with metric measure.

That was the basis on which the Government of the day received unanimous consent in the House. Members of Parliament of that day were clearly under the impression that metric conversion would be voluntary, and nobody objected to that democratic process. Well, how voluntary is it? Ask hundreds of thousands of small businesses and retailers across the country and, Mr. Speaker, you will learn how the Government disregarded and belied the spirit of its own White Paper.

Incidentally, it may interest the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who, I notice, is in his place with his carefully prepared answers to the points I am raising, that the same White Paper agreed that it was of major importance that Canada keep pace with the United States in converting to metric. The Liberals have changed their minds on that too, if we are to listen to the Hon. Member when he said, as reported on page 21774 of yesterday's Hansard:

> —just because the United States is doing something does not mean it is right . . . he is saying that just because the Americans are doing it, it is right.

Of course the Parliamentary Secretary was referring to the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

This brings me to example No. 2 of what I regard as false and misleading advertising. The Metric Commission persists in peddling the big lie that Canada must go metric because the United States is going metric. Exactly the opposite is true. The Americans have wound down their Metric Commission because of too much consumer resistance to changing to the new system, and Great Britain has slammed the brakes on metric conversion for the same reason. We are not going metric to join our major trading partners; we are going metric because the Government and the Metric Commission are telling us to go metric.

Speaking of the Metric Commission, I have been alarmed for some time about this huge bureaucracy which has become a law unto itself. It has spent hundreds of millions, indeed well over a billion, of Canadian taxpayers' dollars to force us into a system we have not asked for, do not need and cannot afford. The Commission spends hundreds of thousands of dollars on snazzy, flashy propaganda. As one Member of Parliament, I want to see a fully independent investigation of the activities of the Metric Commission over the last decade, at least. If the Auditor General's people are too busy to look into it, then the Government should appoint a judicial inquiry into the Metric Commission's service or disservice to Canadians.

Let me come, finally, to example No. 3 of the Government's flip-flopping and breaking its word to Canadians about metric conversion. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has consistently left the impression with retailers, manufacturers, Canadians generally and the House of Commons specially, that the Government would not prosecute those who choose to retain imperial measurement if that is what consumers desire. The Government got its fingers burned over the Kasparian case in Calgary when Section 7 of the Weights and Measures Act was found to be faulty and prosecutions seemed to be out of the question.

● (2205)

We now have the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs saying, "That's it, boys—we're giving you one last chance. It's metric only from now on".

This is the Government which refuses to prosecute spies, but now says it will prosecute service station operators, including Members of Parliament, who dare to sell gasoline by the gallon.

I come back to the voluntary, democratic conversion to metric that we on this side want to see. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will address these specific questions. Will the Government agree to a tandem system of measurement in both Imperial and metric labelling on all packaging and advertising? Will the Government finally agree that Canadians need and deserve a freedom of choice and information when purchasing goods? Is this too much to ask in a democracy?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the second night in a row I have the opportunity of addressing this problem. The Hon. Member does not like the word "dinosaur". Perhaps Neanderthal would suit him better.

I should first of all like to correct one misstatement made again by the Hon. Member opposite. The Minister at his press conference on December 13 pointed out that an error had been made in the Kasparian case in that charges against Mrs. Kasparian were made under the wrong section of the Act. It is unfortunate that this area has been capitalized on by Members of the Opposition in that they have implied that the Act itself is in question. This is not so. The Act is not at all in question. This is a matter, as I said, of charges being laid under the wrong section.

Furthermore, I wish to advise the Hon. Member that the present regulations regarding the use of metric units in the retail sale and advertising of home furnishings, gasoline and diesel fuel, and individually weighed food products, were adopted at the express request of the volunteer committees representing these three sectors of our economy.

It is true also that the vast majority of manufacturers and retailers in Canada wish to continue with the sole use of metric units in trade.

The Hon. Member addressed a specific question to me. He asked whether the Government would agree to a tandem system of labelling. I would say that the Member and his Party are also concerned that consumers be able to verify price increases. To allow both systems, for example, in the area of retail scales would put the consumer into a much weaker position. If one week grapes or potatoes were sold in Imperial units and the following week they were sold in metric units, clearly a shopper would not be able to tell from week to week whether there had been an increase or a decrease in the price of those units.

I would suggest that if Hon. Members opposite were really interested in promoting the interests of the consumer, there are certain propositions they might make which could be deemed reasonable and could be discussed in a reasonable fashion. The manner in which most of them conduct themselves, by going on the kind of witch hunt they have been engaged in in recent months, certainly does not lead to a reasonable or satisfactory conclusion of this matter.

INCOME TAX—REVIEW OF TAX ASSESSMENTS FOR YOUTH FOR CHRIST WORKERS. (B) ATTITUDE OF TAX OFFICIALS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to discuss a serious topic after having listened to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). We have heard the old adage now and again that if you have a weak argument, you should talk louder.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, I raised a question with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) that is very serious for me. I raised a very important issue in regard to the role of National Revenue and charitable organizations. I am concerned about the intention of the National Revenue Department to go after charitable organizations such as the one I mentioned last week, namely Youth for Christ. I might say at the outset that I was pleased with the way the Minister responded to me. It was very evident to me that he did not know what was happening out there. He was interested to make sure that justice was done.

I am pleased to say tonight that he has already responded to me by mail and has given me a partial answer to my question and a commitment that he will be working on it in the future to make sure that these people are not hard done by the Government. I am pleased to tell the House that that has happened.

I am also concerned about the principle involved. I say again that I am sure the Minister will deal fairly with these particular cases. One of the principles concerned is that the federal Government seems, in that case, to be making a major and costly effort to collect very minimal taxes from very low income people. It will cost the taxpayers in cost effectiveness much more than it is worth. I understand you cannot apply it universally. However, when it comes to low income groups, particularly this bracket, it seems to me to be counterproductive to go into a re-assessment policy in order to collect taxes that historically should not have been collected.

Second, these community workers in question are very effective in the community dealing with those young people who have either been in trouble with the law, in trouble at school or perhaps have become school drop-outs. At any rate, they are not facing a future of being productive and creative citizens in our country.

The workers who have been among these young people have been very effective in working with them. I suggest that these community workers who are being paid by voluntary gifts through charitable donations through the organization will be driven out of this work, if the cost of their work increases dramatically because of increased taxes, and they will move into something else where they can earn more to keep body and soul together. This will either leave that work vacant and undone or make the Government do the work.

It seems to me that it is usually better in these situations if people do the work on a voluntary basis rather than have a Government agency do the work. The net effect of vacating the field and leaving it to the Government would be detrimental to this kind of community work that is presently being done by voluntary agencies. The net effect of that would be an increased cost to the community. If we consider this in pure cost effective dollars, I believe that it is counterproductive to go after voluntary agencies like this to see how much more tax money we can extract from them.

The question I raised last week was another policy question; if the Department of National Revenue feels that it must reassess its policy with respect to these workers, why not begin by approaching the officers of the national organization? Why approach individual workers who are overloaded with work, underpaid and sometimes hard pressed to pay the attention necessary to fight this additional battle? Why should they be strung out further when National Revenue, if nothing else, could go in compassion to the national organization and discuss a policy with it so that youth workers could concentrate on youth work rather than on defending themselves from the National Revenue officers.

The question that I would like to leave is an over-all question that I mentioned last week, and that is the matter of courtesy of those faceless officers who work in the large centres and deal with the telephone requests that come to them. It seems to me that I have heard this complaint more than anything else from individual taxpayers, regardless of whether they were community workers or not.

When a taxpayer calls a National Revenue office he feels that he deserves a courteous response, and in some cases he gets anything but that. I would simply urge the Minister to reinforce all of those faceless—and I do not blame them for being faceless—workers manning the telephone banks in the National Revenue office to be sure that they feel the sense of pain, the sense of pressure that the taxpayer feels when he is calling them.

I want to end by thanking the Minister, and the Parliamentary Secretary who has been working with the Minister on this, for taking a personal interest in this matter and getting us on the road to solving this, so that these community workers can do the work they have been called to do and want to do, rather than defend themselves from the Government.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, he is satisfied with the comments of the Minister, so I have no further comment to make. I understand that he is satisfied, and hopefully that will answer the question.

TRADE—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS ON EUROPEAN AIRBUS PROJECT. (B) REASONS FOR SELECTION OF AIRBUS PROJECT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, this evening I want to discuss the Government's proposal to build a $500 million plant in Quebec to manufacture parts for the controversial A-320 for Airbus Industries of France.

It is one thing to bail out domestic companies such as Massey-Ferguson and Chrysler, which are well established firms and whose loss could greatly damage our economy, but it is another thing to dish out hundreds of millions of sorely needed dollars to a foreign consortium manufacturing a product for which I intend to show the market is mediocre at best, at the expense of aircraft manufacturers operating here.

I have already brought up the matter in the House and I have received what I feel is an evasive reply. I get the feeling that the whole Airbus affair has been shrouded in a veil of secrecy, which to me is totally unacceptable.

When I asked a question in the House on this matter of the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Regan), who ought to be up to date on such issues as this, it did not please me to have the buck passed to another Minister. On many occasions I have stood here to comment on the increasing lack of accountability and the diminishing respect for the Members of this House of Commons. We have heard little mention of this project in the House of Commons and we want clear, forthright answers as to the status of the dealings with Airbus Industries and some convincing statistics to show that this is really beneficial for all concerned.

In The Citizen this morning I read of another project which, if not nipped in the bud, could join Airbus Industrie as the next example of wool being pulled over the eyes of the Canadian public. It involves radar systems for modernization of airports across Canada, and shows just how cosy the Canadian and French Governments are getting.

Five companies bid for the contract of a new and modern system of radar in 30 airports across this country. An interdepartmental committee reported to Cabinet its recommendations for the two finalists in the competition. An obscure French company called Thomson was not one of the finalists. However, upon the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) return to Canada from France this fall, he ordered a review of the choice of finalists. So do not be surprised if, in a few years, one comes flying into Toronto on an A-320 which is guided into the airport on a Thomson radar system.

• (2220)

As the Member of Parliament for Erie, where a major manufacturer of aircraft components is located, I must ask the Government what the effect of locating a new aircraft factory in Canada will be. Who will its suppliers be? Furthermore, if Airbus grabs a portion of the market from Boeing and McDonnell Douglas aircraft, plants such as Fleet Industries will almost certainly suffer.

The plant in Fort Erie, in my riding, employs upward of 1,000 people. Loss of business for this operation means unemployment and layoffs in many related sectors. In other large manufacturing centres, such as Malton, the results of competition with the A-320 could indeed be catastrophic.

The decision to subsidize Airbus is an unwise one in the light of current economic realities in the air transport industry. Flights are being cut back due to the high cost of fuel and the lack of demand. Is this a good time to introduce a new airplane? Consider the new aircraft just put out by boeing, the 767. Here is a fuel efficient aircraft which is effective in the medium range market, for which the A-320 is also designed. McDonnell Douglas will be offering similar designs in the very near future.

If one considers the volume of business that these companies do with Canada, it would be wise to stop and think about taking measures which would reduce this cash inflow. Boeing alone bought $147 million worth of Canadian aircraft components in the year 1981. Thus, we have the case of an aircraft which will be competing with at least five other models, the redesigned DC-9, the 757, the 767, the 737 from Boeing, and the latest entry from McDonnell Douglas which will be the D-3300. Therefore, there is a possibility that the A-320 will not even make it in the marketplace, and if it does not, that is another $500 million down the drain. If it succeeds and takes the profit away from the competition, we will lose anyway because of increased unemployment and lost business in the parts manufacturing plants.

The latest blow to independent entrepreneurs is the appearance of Airbus which will be, in effect, a Government subsidized product, competing against private companies. Airbus has been nurtured to the tune of $5 billion by European Governments. Thus, it will not have to bear a price tag necessitated by manufacturing costs. Its prices can be as low as it wishes. Thus, other manufacturers will have to lower their prices to compete. Any profit which Canadian companies are making now will be nullified by this giant company, and we will all feel the effects in increased costs and poor growth in the industry.

Before jumping into the deal with Airbus, I hope that the Government will consider the possible effects of its decision. Both McDonnell Douglas and Boeing may decide to cut back on production if they feel that the Government support to Airbus would result in a favoured position for Airbus products. In other words, Air Canada, a Crown corporation, might be pressured by the Government to buy Airbus products. The resultant unemployment could more than offset the newly created jobs in Quebec by Airbus.

In conclusion, it is my hope that the Ministers responsible will assess the facts in an unbiased and nonpartisan way so that the decision made reflects the wishes of the Canadian people and will benefit the workers and taxpayers of this nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to point out to my hon. friend opposite that the Canadian Government will indeed take into consideration all the concerns he expressed earlier, namely that we make sure there will be a good market for this operation, that the work will still be done here in this country, and that it will be a successful financial and industrial endeavour.

I would point out now that recently there has been a meeting with the de Havilland and Airbus Industries. The talks were very warm and generally speaking relatively good progress has been made; furthermore both parties so far seem to be satisfied with the negotiations. Of course, in such dealings, a lot of things have to be taken into consideration and as was pointed out earlier by the Hon. Member, a number of airlines now experiencing financial difficulties have decided to wait another year before officially introducing the Airbus, which means that in fact negotiations may progress somewhat more slowly than originally expected.

Another point that perhaps should be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that very soon there will be other meetings between Airbus and de Havilland on the commercial aspect of the operation and the industrial aspect as well for the actual manufacturing of certain components of the Airbus 320 Aircraft, following which the Minister of course will be in a position to report to the House on the exact status of the negotiations.

I would also like to point out at this stage that we have no intention of casting aside the North American partner as far as aircraft manufacturing is concerned. Not at all. It is simply a matter for the Canadian Government to expand its market and developing its technology with a view to allowing our young and not so young workers to work in a field of high technology on what clearly is state-of-the-art jobs, both at the computer and avionics levels, what I would like to stress is that once more we shall continue manufacturing in Canada various components for the DC-9, such as the fuselage and wings, and ensuring that with both Boeing and McDonnell Douglas we will still contribute to industrial exchanges in an effort to promote avionics on the North American aircraft models.

But this does not preclude finding other markets in Europe and other continents provided it remains consistent with the spirit outlined earlier by the Hon. Member, namely to first ensure that we will safeguard the existing market and second that jobs will be going to the workers of this nation before those in other countries.

Therefore I would like to reassure the Hon. Member at this point. All his concerns are being taken into consideration and when the study of the matter is more advanced, the department and the Minister will be pleased to brief the House for the benefit of interested Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEW BRUNSWICK UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, as this will be the last chance the Government will have in 1982 to indicate that it has the slightest interest in such New Brunswick constituencies as Saint John and Northumberland-Miramichi and the thousands of unemployed and about to be unemployed living in complete despair there, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That the Government provide them with some hope, particularly as they are represented by Government backbenchers, by releasing the long-awaited reports on shipbuilding policy and on the future of Chatham-Newcastle after the closure of CFB Chatham and the subsequent destruction of those related 3,500 jobs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

DOUBLE LABELLING OF HAZARDOUS MATERIAL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, it has been widely reported in the press that a number of crop wipe-outs last spring were caused by the federal law that forbids the use of non-metric units of measurement on labels, in this case those on containers of agricultural chemicals. Further crop damage is predicted for the coming spring if these federal regulations remain in force.

We have already established that the welfare of the country, or of individual Canadians, is of absolutely no consequence to the Government if it conflicts with Government plans or policy. Nevertheless these are the things with which we here have been elected to deal, and I am certain that there are those on the Government side of the House, even, who share this sense of responsibility. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this mindless, headlong rush into metrication be tempered with a little sober second thought, and specifically, that double labelling on all potentially hazardous material be not only permitted but encouraged.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED NOMINATION OF SANTA CLAUS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I might say I have just this moment received a letter from a well loved citizen residing north of here, who has asked me to bring to the attention of this House a situation of some gravity. He writes:

Dear Bill:

I will be brief. My whole operation is in jeopardy. Canada Post has delayed new orders, the banks have repossessed my sleigh, the elves are on strike because of six and five, I can't collect unemployment benefits because I'm a seasonal, part-time worker, and Mrs. Claus wants to move to Florida; but, with a deindexed pension who can afford it?

This Government has really taken the HO out of my HO! HO! HO! The Prime Minister promised a Royal Commission but there seems to be a waiting list. Mr. Ouellet won't lift a finger until I metrify the odometers on the reindeer and, to top it all off, Herb Gray threatened to make me a Crown corporation: Santa Canada.

Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That we listen to old Saint Nick's message and appoint him to the Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

BILINGUALISM

APPLICATION TO ONTARIO

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, from the perspective of our new Constitution which enshrines official bilingualism both for Canada as a whole and for the province of New Brunswick, and secondly, in view of the bilingual status of the province of Manitoba, and in view of the fact that Ontario has a larger French-speaking population than either of the above-mentioned provinces, making it essential that this community be guaranteed certain services in its own language, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That this House go on record as urging the Government of Ontario to make a firm commitment to one of the fundamental pillars of this nation by acting to make that province officially bilingual.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

LOCATION OF PROPOSED BIOLOGICAL RESEARCH CENTRE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, with no decision as yet having been made as to where Canada might build the UN sponsored centre for biological research, and since Brock University has ready and available a fully equipped laboratory suitable for that purpose, and since it is located in an area which has above the national average of unemployed and has an abundance of skilled and technical help, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That Canada should not lose this opportunity to become a world centre of research and development in biological technology but take advantage of the facilities available to it through Brock University as the basis for a proposal to be submitted to the United Nations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DISASTERS

FLOOD DAMAGE IN DELTA, B.C.—FUNDS FOR DIKE REPAIRS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given the widespread flood damage to private property and farm lands which occurred last weekend in Delta, British Columbia, caused by a severe winter storm which breached or impaired several dikes, including one recently constructed to a 200 year storm standard under the Fraser River Flood Control Program, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the federal Government respond immediately to an urgent appeal from the Council of Delta municipality by undertaking to meet the costs of repairing all of the damaged dikes, including the reconstruction of dikes protecting Westham Island, and that funds be allocated from the federal NEED Program so that essential jobs may be created promptly to carry out this urgent project.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HIRING PRACTICES—CALL FOR APPOINTMENT AND PROMOTION BY COMPETITION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, as Standing Order 43 is about to become an extinct species, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House urges the Special Committee on Standing Order and Procedure to amend S.O. 83 and 85(4) to include appointment and promotion by competition.

Currently Standing Orders 83 and 85(4) both employ the stark phrase that the Clerk and the Sergeant-at-Arms "shall employ at the outset of a session" without providing these House officers with any enlightened procedures to guide them in carrying out their orders.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY—WITHDRAWAL OF MULTICULTURAL RECRUITMENT MANUAL

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas I would ask the Members on all sides of the House to support unanimously my motion to congratulate the Government of Canada. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House congratulate the Government of Canada for seeing the error of their ways and withdrawing the very distasteful multicultural recruitement manual of the Liberal Party of Canada which suggested the use of judges of the courts of Canadian citizenship as a tool for recruiting members for the Grit Party, but at the same time understanding that, in this time of need, in that organization, they would grasp at anything in order to bolster sagging party fortunes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—FORMER LEADER'S STATEMENT ON IDEOLOGY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that this may be one of the last motions moved under this provision, and given the subject matter, I am sure there will be unanimous agreement for this motion. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House notes with agreement the profound observation made by the former Leader of the Conservative Party, the Hon. Robert Stanfield. The observation accurately describes the political situation in our time in Canada. His words were as follows, and I quote:

"I understand the efforts of a socialist to ridicule Liberals and Progressive Conservatives because we do not differ ideologically. But for a Conservative to take such bait and set out to establish ideological differences where none exist or ought to exist, . . . let me say simply and without personal offence, that such a Conservative is misguided."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXPRESSION OF BEST WISHES TO STAFF

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, in the spirit of the season I am sure that this Standing Order 43 motion will receive the unanimous consent of the House, since it probably will be the last if not next to the last such motion. I move, hopefully seconded by the Government House Leader, or perhaps even the Acting House Leader for the NDP:

That since Standing Order 43 will no longer exist after one minute to six this evening, this House extend its sincere best wishes to all of the support staff of the House of Commons, including Hansard reporters, the Table, the protective staff, the maintenance staff, and all others of those who are required to put up with us, and have had to, throughout this very trying year.

I also include you, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: That is the way to deal with that kind of Standing Order 43, with applause. The Hon. Member for Red Deer.

Mr. Pinard: You have to put that motion.

An Hon. Member: You did not put the motion, and it is debatable.

Madam Speaker: I did not think it was a serious Standing Order 43. The Hon. Member for Red Deer.

BYE-BYE "43"; HELLO "18(3)"

CHANGE IN STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise for the last time with a lament for Standing Order 43 and to add my own humble, personal and minor footnote to its passage. A leaf in the history of this hallowed Chamber vanishes with this day to give way, we hope and trust, to a more efficient and expeditious vehicle for expressing grievances. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House indulge this humble person by entertaining the passage of this motion which eulogizes the "43":

O "43", my "43", 'tis sad that you are leaving,
I know Madam Speaker sorely will be grieving;
I know she will pine; I know she will mourn,
Weep not, dear lady, a new House rule is born.
The "43" was a child of its times—
Motions, grievances, couplets and rhymes;
Now we'll have 90 seconds and anything goes!
Good luck, Madam Speaker, and be on your toes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For the last time and, for me, as a farewell to motions under Standing Order 43, is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: No!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

OECD UNEMPLOYMENT FORECAST—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who knows that at two o'clock today the OECD report was officially tabled. In view of the fact that that report shows that unemployment in Canada will likely hit 13.25 per cent in the beginning of next year, meaning a jump of a further 60,000 people out of work, and a rate of unemployment of 13.25 per cent compared with a 24-nation OECD average of 9.5 per cent, would the Minister of Finance tell us whether he would be willing to bring in, at the earliest possible opportunity, a new budget, so that this tragedy which is being inflicted upon Canadian workers may be brought to an early halt?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a forecast. As he knows, a lot of forecasts made in the last few years have been proven wrong on the optimistic side. This one is particularly pessimistic. We hope that it will be proven wrong as previous optimistic forecasts were proven wrong.

As the Hon. Member also knows, a number of forecasts have been made by private Canadian institutions over the last few months. These forecasts all indicate that unemployment in Canada will remain high in the next year, that we can expect a gradual decline of unemployment during the course of the year, and a gradual recovery. The forecasts for recovery vary between institutions, but up to now all institutions which have made forecasts in Canada for the next year forecast a positive rate of growth.

I have indicated that I am considering bringing in a new budget early in the new year, before the beginning of the fiscal year. I certainly intend to proceed with that plan, but I stress to the Hon. Member that no budget by itself could radically change the situation which we are experiencing at the present time, not only in Canada but in most industrialized countries. This will have to take place as part of a broad policy, not only in Canada but in other countries, involving not only budgetary policies but all other elements of the economy.

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION—CHAIRMAN'S REMUNERATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who stated that perhaps forecasts will not become reality. Let us deal with reality, because OECD deals with reality and points out that in real gross national product terms Canada had a negative, a minus 5 per cent reduction last year, even behind Turkey, for example, which had a better record; in fact Canada had the worst record of any OECD country—24 out of 24. In view of the fact that that is costing every worker in Canada $100 a month in current dollars, would the Minister of Finance indicate, first, what is the depression proof wage level being offered to Donald Macdonald to head his commission? Is it $800 a day? Second, would the Minister of Finance at least ask that commission to commence its activity at the earliest opportunity with a view to its advising the Minister on what course he should take to avert a still worse calamity in this country than is developing, and as to what he should do?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, Royal Commissions do not come under my responsibility. The Hon. Member's question in that regard should be addressed to the Minister responsible for the Privy Council Office, namely, the Prime Minister.

As far as the Hon. Member's second point is concerned, the commission has been set up. Meetings have been held already. Last week Mr. Macdonald met with provincial Ministers and myself at the conclusion of the federal-provincial conference and there was a very helpful and fruitful exchange of views with regard to the activities of the commission. I understand the commission is still in its organization stage. It is planning to proceed expeditiously with its plans of action, but again I think it would be raising false expectations and hopes to believe that this commission could come forth with recommendations for action in the next few months. That is the responsibility of the federal and provincial Governments of this country together with people in the private sector, both labour and management. That responsibility we are ready to assume. We have assumed it up to now, and we will continue to take the responsibility for it.

PURPOSE OF PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING VISIT TO FAR EAST

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. No doubt the Prime Minister is familiar with the OECD report to which I have referred, which lists his country, Canada, as number 24 out of 24 in terms of 1982 performance. Will the Prime Minister indicate why he feels that now is the time for him to take still another trip? In what way will that trip help the unemployed of this country?

Statistics Canada's figures issued this morning show that some of our industrial sectors are operating at only 51 per cent capacity and, on average, are operating at only 67 per cent. The OECD report has indicated that our downturn has been due to the postponement or cancellation in part of major energy projects in Canada. In that context, would the Prime Minister indicate how he might be able to do more to help the unemployed than by taking another trip?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is somewhat involved and speculative. I am sure if I did not take a trip I might be able to do a great deal—that is the suggestion by the Hon. Member—in helping the economy. I am glad to see him recognize the earnestness with which I apply myself to that task when I am in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As to whether what I do week after week is more than I will be doing when I go to the ASEAN countries and Japan, Madam Speaker, is a matter entirely for speculation. I cannot satisfy the Hon. Member on that, but I would want to point out to him that the ASEAN countries have been growing over the past several years at a rate of about 6 per cent. Trade with the Pacific Rim countries has now overtaken trade by Canada with Europe. If the Hon. Member were at all informed about the reality of the economic development of those countries and the potential markets for Canada, I am sure he himself would be suggesting that I make the trip a little longer so that I could spend more time with the businessmen who have asked me to meet them there to discuss Canada's trade relations with those countries.

• (1425)

INDUSTRY

CLOSING OF RCA PLANT IN MIDLAND, ONT.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who, I believe, is engaged in conversation. If I could have him stand down, I have a question with respect to the electronics industry. The Minister will know that RCA in Midland, Ontario, the last electronic picture tube manufacturer in Canada, will shut down completely by the end of the year. That plant closing alone represents a loss of 1,200 jobs to the Canadian electronics industry. What efforts has the federal Government made in the past two or three years to support and strengthen the electronics industry in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with respect to the particular plant in question, the RCA plant, my officials are working with Ontario Government officials to see if we can find another buyer for that particular operation. I have already met with one of the prospective buyers and hopefully we will be able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion for the people involved in that plant.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister will know that the shut-down procedures have started already.

FUTURE OF ELECTRONICS INDUSTRY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Canada's import-export deficit in the electronics industry increased 15 per cent from 1980 to 1981. All the while the people in that industry are predicting that it could mean up to 100,000 to 150,000 jobs for Canadians in that industry by the end of the decade. What we want on this side is for those jobs to be in Canada and not offshore. What steps is the Canadian Government taking to ensure that those jobs are created in Canada and not offshore?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, as do all Members of the House, that one-third of our total gross national product is dependent upon what we export abroad. Consequently we do not have the same flexibility that many other countries have with respect to having import regulations that keep products out of this country. He will also know from some of his own colleagues in the House, from the East and the West, that when we have taken steps, for example, in prohibiting cars from Japan coming to this country, they have requested that we eliminate those barriers and let those cars come in. Let us have some consistency from his Members on the other side.

BANKS AND BANKING

INCREASE IN PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who has been somewhat less than forthright with Parliament since he has not given us all the good news for Christmas. While Canadians from every region and virtually every walk of life are struggling during this depression period, the chartered banks of Canada have racked up fourth quarter profits that rank among the highest in their history. Return on fourth quarter average equity is in the 14.6 per cent range, with assets having grown similarly.

Will the Minister rise today and tell the House that he will meet with the chief executive officers of Canada's chartered banks and ask them to moderate their profiteering and join with the rest of Canada in trying to get the economy back on track?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as a matter of fact I have already met with the banks. I discussed this subject in general terms a while ago. In those discussions I even indicated that, bearing in mind the fact that the banks had known such a bad year up to the last quarter, and a bad year last year, the first thing that would happen would be for the NDP to rise up and point out those horrendous profits that would happen. I can say that in the course of the next year, as recovery comes, you will see the NDP on the other side of the House rising every day to say, "Is it not terrible that this or that corporation has had profits rising by a thousand per cent?" They will have gone from $1 to $1,000. That will be a cause of scandal for the NDP. Therefore I am not very surprised at that type of reflection at the present time.

The banks, like other institutions in Canada, such as the manufacturing sector and the industrial sector generally, have known a bad year. We should be encouraged by the signs that the financial institutions, the manufacturing sector and the industrial sector, I hope, will show profits in the course of the next few months because this will mean that they would be able to invest and expand the economy and be able to create more jobs for Canadians and deal with the problems of unemployment that we are facing.

Mr. Broadbent: Banks are laying off all over.

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR CONTROL ON INTEREST RATE SPREADS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the Minister would be interested to know that the banks are laying off people, rationalizing their operations, and cutting off branch offices. And many people in Canada would be pleased to know that banks, in this troublesome year, have made profits in excess of $1.5 billion. I recognize that the banks have experienced large loan losses, but their profitability is so high largely because their consumer loan rates are as much as double what the banks are paying their depositors. Of course we all know that their credit card charges are at usurious rates of between 24 per cent and 34 per cent. In light of those facts, would the Minister of Finance consider controlling the interest rate spread, as we suggested in our minority report on bank profits?

• (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, a committee of the House was set up during the course of the year to study bank profits. That committee studied the whole issue extensively. However, at the end, when the NDP thought its doctrinaire views would not be endorsed by everyone, and when it saw that the facts did not fit with its ideological stance, it decided to boycott the committee and refused to look at reality and examine what the facts were.

Mr. Broadbent: Say it with a straight face!

Mr. Lalonde: Therefore, when there is a Party which refuses to play by the rules of the House and respect the facts of life, I cannot give the assurance that the Hon. Member has requested. I cannot do that.

PUBLIC CONTROL OF BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, we all recall that at those hearings into bank profits, the banks, because of their exorbitant and rather embarrassing profits, said that those profits were a fluke and that they would never happen again. During these difficult economic times, those profits are occurring once again.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We've got two flukes; two flukes in a row.

Mr. Riis: I would ask the Minister of Finance to give Canadians a real Christmas present by introducing, in the tradition of the Swiss and Austrian banking systems, amendments to the Bank Act so that there will be real public control over Canada's banking system and so that it will operate in the best interests of Canada and Canadians as opposed to shareholders.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in fact, this question has been considered by Parliament for a number of years. Every ten years, the Bank Act comes up for review. Last time, Parliament considered the Act for, I think, at least two years if not longer. During that review, all Members of Parliament had an opportunity to discuss the Bank Act, and substantial amendments were made. The important thing is to provide for greater competition between financial institutions in Canada. The last amendments to the Bank Act took a step in this direction by allowing into Canada a number of foreign banks that are on the market and compete with existing banks. In addition, other financial institutions such as trust companies, caisses populaires and credit unions are also on the market and competing with the banks. The way to solve the problem my colleague imagines exists is not to bring in more Government regulations but to ensure that there is more competition among financial institutions, and that is the position taken by this Government.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

OPERATION OF MANDATORY SUPERVISION PROGRAM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. As he knows, the Chairman of the National Parole Board, through his policy of gating, has signalled to the country that there is a real probelm involving the security of Canadians as a result of the early release program known as mandatory supervision. It is a problem which Bill S-32 does not address. I would like to ask the Minister whether he has encouraged and supported the Chairman of the National Parole Board in his policy of gating, and whether he has planned any additional or alternative measures, other than Bill S-32, which would provide some sense of security to Canadians in the event that inmates are released before they have been rehabilitated.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Indeed, Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to hear the Hon. Member noting the gating procedure which the Chairman of the National Parole Board recently began exercising. Far from saying that there is a problem with dangerous offenders being put out on mandatory supervision, I think the Hon. Member should recognize that there is a solution, that the solution is in the hands of the Parole Board, and that it is being exercised.

With regard to his second question, I supported the procedure of the Chairman. I am satisfied, from the law officers of the Crown, that that procedure is lawful, and although it is being challenged in the courts now, the law officers of the Crown are taking a position in support of it.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENT APPOINT COMMISSION

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Madam Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Prime Minister. I want to say it the way it is, the way I hear it in my constituency, or no matter where I go, concerning the fact that we are almost reaching two million people unemployed in Canada and the Government is doing nothing new to resolve the problem. The situation is not only serious, but it is also critical, and even more urgent than if the country were in a state of war. Canadians are asking why billions of dollars have gone across the border to the United States and why thousands of businesses have folded and have also gone across the border. Sir, I want to say to you that what has been said to me is that the Royal Commission—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Kushner: —the Macdonald Commission—I am still in the question—is nothing but an election tool to provide the information before the election—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member must ask a question.

Mr. Kushner: I am concluding my question—that it will provide the information before the election and report back after the election. What a waste of money, as it is providing information only for a political party. My question—

An Hon. Member: No question!

Mr. Kushner: My question is directed to the Prime Minister so that he may consider it over the Christmas recess. Will the Prime Minister be prepared to set out a commission, an unbiased commission, for which Parliament was elected, which would be appointed by three parties here in Ottawa, in the House of Commons, to report back within four months? Because we cannot wait any longer, Sir, than four months at this time.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order!

Mr. Kushner: I am now proceeding with the question.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Central Nova.

Mr. MacKay: My question is directed to the Solicitor General. On March 26 of this year, I put on the Order Paper a question concerning the RCMP policy in respect to paid informers.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are not going to answer that question, Prime Minister?

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary East looks puzzled but, of course, I cannot force an Hon. Member to answer a question, and therefore there was no answer to his question.

Mr. Kushner: Yes, the question, Madam Speaker—I asked the Prime Minister—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Central Nova.

Mr. Kushner: My question was, is the Prime Minister prepared to appoint a commission—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kushner: I know he doesn't want to do it.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member should—

Mr. Trudeau: Should listen to the Speaker.

Madam Speaker: —take comfort in the fact that sometimes the question is more important than the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Napean-Carleton): Usually.

Mr. Clark: As a rule.

Mr. MacKay: That's a very good point, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: In that spirit, I would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POLICY ON PAID INFORMERS—DISCLOSURE TO COURTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Solicitor General that on March 26 of this year I put a question on the Order Paper concerning the RCMP policy in respect of paid informers. On November 5 the Solicitor General gave me a written answer claiming that, "without exception", the fact that a witness is a paid RCMP informer is fully disclosed to the courts. A few days ago, on December 15, the Minister sent me an amended version of this policy which restricts full disclosure to cases where the information is "germane" to court proceedings.

May I ask the Solicitor General to tell the House who is the judge of what is germane and what is not germane to a case before the courts, and whether or not his amended policy—and this is a matter I have discussed with the Solicitor General many times—was made retroactive because of the circumstances surrounding the court proceedings against the murderers of the two City of Moncton police officers in 1974?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I can clearly state that the policy is that when a witness has been paid for the evidence that he gives in the case at hand, full disclosure of that fact is made to the court and of all of the circumstances involving the payment.

MONCTON MURDER TRIAL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, will the Solicitor General be more forthcoming with regard to the details of the co-operation of the two murderers with the RCMP prior to the Stein kidnapping and the murder of the two Moncton policemen, details of which were apparently kept from the court by the RCMP witnesses?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I looked into that case with very great care, because of the letter I received from the Hon. Member. I reviewed it with the Commissioner of the RCMP and I am satisfied that the policy which I have just described was not violated in that case.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SASKATCHEWAN POTASH INDUSTRY LAY-OFFS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. I am sure the Minister is aware that last Sunday some 1,200 workers were laid off in the potash industry in Saskatchewan. Nine hundred more will be laid off by the end of February. I have here with me quotes from sources in the potash industry in Saskatchewan saying that this is happening because the provincial Conservative Government decided to scrap the export wing of the publicly-owned Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, a decision which was supported by the Liberal Government across the way. In light of that, is the Minister aware that by the end of February half the industry in our Province will be closed down, and, if he is aware of that, what specifically is he going to do as Trade Minister to regain some of those markets which we have lost?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member, of course, describes a serious situation which exists at a time when that many workers in any one industry are subjected to lay-offs. I do not think it is fair for him to attribute the cause of lay-offs in today's potash market to the actions of the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan. Mind you, defending Conservative Governments is not my long suit, but I want to say through you, Madam Speaker, to the Hon. Member, that my Department is prepared to work with the potash industry of Saskatchewan to do everything possible to identify and develop markets in these difficult times, and if the Hon. Member would like to discuss with me the particulars of that, I would be glad to do so after the Question Period.

URANIUM CITY LAY-OFFS—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO RESIDENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. When the Minister was the Minister of Energy he was involved in the shutdown of the Beaverlodge Mine in Uranium City in North Saskatchewan one year ago this month. Although the Eldorado Nuclear mine and millworkers received adequate compensation from the $42 million close-down package, nothing has been committed for other Uranium City residents hit by the closure. Can the Minister mark the anniversary of this occasion, and this season, by offering a compensation and relocation package to these residents, or must the citizens of Uranium City continue to suffer because the Government of Canada and the new Government of Saskatchewan cannot agree on this particular question?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the decision by Eldorado to close its operations at the uranium mine was taken by the Corporation, a decision which had to do with the viability of the mine itself. It was a corporate decision which made sense and was recognized as such by all parties concerned, affected or interested. I remind the Hon. Member that, in taking that action, the Corporation has taken steps, together with the Department of Manpower and Immigration, which have been more generous than in any other closing of any mines by any private sector institution in the whole of Canada in the meantime. As a matter of fact, one of the problems was that the former New Democratic Party Government of Saskatchewan was running away from its responsibilities and not playing the full role of a provincial Government in that operation.

The federal Government has done everything it could through its departments, and also Eldorado itself, as a federal Crown Corporation, has done everything which could be expected of them as good corporate citizens to help that community in terms of relocation and help to the various citizens of that city. I submit that, if there are further steps to be taken, they should be taken by the provincial Government.

FINANCE

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. During these troubled times when small business failures are at an all-time high, small business development bonds, for all intents and purposes, have become a myth. The Royal Bank of Canada, by directive from the head office to its branches, is refusing small business development bond applications for businesses in dire straits. In fact when a business applies to another bank it is told that there is an agreement between the banks that they will not take customers from one bank to another. Is the Minister aware of this? If he is aware of it, what is he going to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall be pleased to bring the Hon. Member's representations to the attention of the Inspector General of Banks, with the request that they be forwarded to the authorities of the Royal Bank of Canada.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INVESTIGATE SITUATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The question to which I am trying to get an answer from the Minister is this: is he truly going to make a small business development bond available for small business in dire straits? If he is, when is he going to do this? And is he going to look into charging the banks with collusion?, because it is obviously collusion, when one bank refuses a small business development bond application and then when the applicant goes to another bank he is refused because there is an agreement among the banks that they will not deal with each other's customers. That must be collusion. Is the Minister going to look into that with the idea of maybe laying charges against the banks?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has failed to keep up with events. In June of last year, my predecessor announced that the Small Business Development Bond would be continued. The program is in effect at the present time, it is operational, and as I indicated earlier, the Hon. Member's allegations will be brought to the attention of the Inspector General of Banks.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

VARIATION IN BENEFITS BETWEEN ECONOMIC REGIONS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The Unemployment Insurance Commission uses economic regions established by Statistics Canada to determine regional unemployment statistics. Burlington is included in the Toronto economic region, which also includes the townships of Rama and Mara near Orillia. I do not know the relationship between Burlington and those townships, but the net result is that if you live in Hamilton and become unemployed you need only work ten weeks to apply for further unemployment insurance benefits, and if you live in Burlington, you must work 14 weeks to be eligible for further unemployment insurance benefits. Does the Minister condone this discrimination by reason of place of residence?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member really does not represent the situation properly. There is no discrimination at all. What we have done is divide the country into some 40 economic regions and in each of those regions we try to design according to the economic and geographic circumstances, and they then trigger the kind of applications to the Unemployment Insurance Act. We do make adjustments to those figures where we can, where there are changes or shifts in the population or economic circumstances. I would be glad to receive representations, but the Hon. Member would have to recognize that when you change one boundary it does affect the boundaries of someone else. If he would like to write to me about that, I would be glad to respond.

CONTRAST BETWEEN BENEFITS PAID IN HAMILTON AND IN BURLINGTON

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, to give one example out of hundreds who have complained: two employees who are electricians by trade, members of the same union local, working out of the same hiring hall, are laid off. One lives in Burlington and one lives in Hamilton. Both pay the same unemployment insurance premiums, but one can be temporarily employed for ten weeks and be eligible for further unemployment insurance benefits because he lives in Hamilton. The other, when laid off, must lose four weeks of unemployment insurance benefits because he lives in Burlington. That is discrimination by reason of place of residence.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I really would like to respond to the Hon. Member's inquiry, but it is not discrimination. Those boundaries have been set. They have been in place in the Burlington-Hamilton area for years. With the kind of recession we are facing, obviously some of the conditions change, but it only happens in those areas where there is a large metropolitan area, and there are surrounding communities which have an overflow of workers which may commute from one town and work in another. We do try to rationalize it as much as possible, and I am prepared to look at the problem, but I would have to caution it is not an easy one to resolve. We are looking at a general review of the unemployment insurance program, and I would be glad to respond as much as I can.

THE JUDICIARY

INDEPENDENCE OF PROVINCIAL JUDGES—REFERRAL TO ONTARIO COURT OF APPEAL

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. The Minister is aware that two Provincial Court judges in the Province of Ontario have decided that they are not competent, given their independence, to hear criminal cases in this Province. The Attorney General of the Province has referred the matter to the Ontario Court of Appeal for consideration. This involves the Charter of Rights enacted by this Parliament. Is it the intention of the Minister of Justice to intervene in any way, whether actively or by way of a watching brief, in those proceedings, and, if so, how?

• (1450)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, the situation involving federal judges and their relationship to the federal executive is entirely different because we act according to Acts of Parliament which establish the remuneration, retirement benefits and other provisions concerning judges. Therefore, Madam Speaker, there is really no federal aspect to this question and I do not believe it would be proper for me to express an opinion here. I am inclined to think it would not be helpful to have representation in the case, but I will be consulting my Department further on that.

QUERY RESPECTING FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, in his consultations would the Minister consider that the statute causing some difficulty for these judges is an Act of this Parliament, and that alone would give him jurisdiction? It may very well apply in a number of other Provinces across the country, and indeed can cause chaos in the administration of justice. Would he raise those three concerns with his officials before he accepts any device on dismissing federal intervention in this case?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I promise to consider the matter carefully. That statute to which my hon. friend refers is, I believe, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and that certainly reflects the will of the people in this place, but it also was adopted by the provincial Governments, and as part of the Constitution it can no longer be looked upon as a statute of this Parliament alone.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF AMERICAN MOTORS PLANT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who will know that American Motors has announced it intends to close indefinitely its only Canadian operation next spring. That closure will affect the employment of some 1,200 people. Could the Minister tell the House whether it is his intention to sit down with the officials of that company to determine what their plans are in the future for that particular plant, and particularly for the 1,200 jobs about to be lost as a result of that company's decision?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as a result of the announcement of the lay-off, my officials have been in touch with officials of American Motors. Apparently sales of the three models presently produced in that plant are down substantially. Company officials have indicated that in the interim they are going to improve their manufacturing facilities, but at this point in time they have not indicated what new products will be produced in that particular operation.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF HIBERNIA OIL FIELD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy and is with regard to the Hibernia oil field development off Newfoundland. The Minister is probably aware that the world oil price as set by OPEC appears to be slipping. That is going to put the whole Hibernia development in danger.

There are two parts to my question. One, can the Minister give the latest price per barrel required to develop the Hibernia oil field? Secondly, is he now prepared to accept my suggestion that he and Mr. Marshall, the Newfoundland Minister of Energy, set February 1 as the final deadline to resolve their dispute so that we do not again miss the development of another megaproject?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): On the first question, Madam Speaker, I cannot give a price at this time. I do not know what the evolution of the price will be. Of course there is a certain price at which the development is no longer economic, but I hope that will not happen because we do think it is important to develop that oil off the coast of Newfoundland. In terms of my negotiations with Mr. Marshall, I have met him three times so far, and I am planning to have another meeting next week. I will do my utmost to have an agreement with Newfoundland in the shortest period possible.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ADMISSION BY EX-RCMP CORPORAL—CONSIDERATION OF PROSECUTION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It has now been several weeks since an ex-corporal of the RCMP security service named Morrison made public admissions about his part in betraying Canadian secrets for money. That, of course, resulted in the recall and disappearance of a potential double agent for Canada. Will the Minister indicate whether an imminent prosecution of Morrison is being considered by him in his role as Attorney General?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have indeed asked for an opinion on that matter from my Department. It has not yet come forward to my attention so I am not at present advised on all the factors that should be taken into account in making a decision on prosecution.

POSSIBLE AVENUE OF PROSECUTION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as I suspect and, as I am sure the Minister suspects what the answer is going to be from his officials, I wonder if I could give him another alternative. Is there any way that the Canadian Government could lure Morrison to the United Kingdom where they do expose and prosecute Canadian traitors?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, that is about on a par with the hon. gentleman's criticism of his former colleague, at that time the Attorney General and Minister of Justice, who, he said, was uninformed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MANUFACTURE OF COAL CARS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I have one question for the Minister of Transport or for whichever Minister can respond to a potentially urgent situation facing the city of Hamilton. Canadian National is planning to build 970 coal cars. What amount of that work will the Government of Canada guarantee to a company such as National Steel Car which has had to lay off 1,400 employees, if, as, and when the coal car contract is decided?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I met with CN authorities this morning and inquired about that particular subject. The decision has not yet been made. Either CN will build the cars itself or it will buy from any one of the four or five traditional manufacturers.

PENSIONS

GREEN PAPER TAX PROPOSALS

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Recently a green paper was tabled which called for special tax changes affecting pensions. Specifically it called for a new system for fair, more comprehensive and flexible limits on tax-assisted retirement savings. Will the Government reveal those plans prior to the beginning of the sittings of the special task force which it is going to set up?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I indicated that the Government was winding up a number of studies on the subject and that these would be made available to the Parliamentary Committee as soon as possible, once the studies are finalized. I am not in a position to inform the Hon. Member exactly when the information contained in the Green Paper will be available to the Committee, for the simple reason that I also do not know when the Committee is going to start a sitting.

[English]

Mr. Dantzer: Madam Speaker, the Minister will know how essential those proposed tax changes would be for the successful work of the committee.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

PREPARATION OF ACTUARIAL REPORT

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I understand the last comprehensive actuarial report on the Canada Pension Plan was done in 1978. I also understand a new report will be completed early in 1983. I would like the Minister's assurance that this report also will be available by the time the task force begins its hearings?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall be glad to ask my officials for a progress report on the study, and once again, I shall be pleased to submit to the Committee any information of a public nature that might be useful.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Come on over!

Mr. Clarke: Madam Speaker, I am glad I was able to catch your eye.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NEED FOR STUDY

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver-Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, concerning the Canada Pension Plan. I know the Minister is aware of the report on the disaster dates, if I can call them that, for the Canada Pension Plan, culminating in the year 2003 when the fund will be exhausted. I hope the Minister of Finance is aware of the fact that the Auditor General has for the last six years referred to this in his report, and if I may just quote the sentence, he said "A decision on long-term financing arrangements needs to be made in the near future". Also the Public Accounts Committee Report to the House in 1978 recommended that an examination of the Canada Pension Plan be made by a House of Commons Committee to avoid all these problems. Can the Minister tell the House what has happened to any of these recommendations, because it is such an important topic right now?

Petitions

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can see by the colour of his coat that my hon. friend expects a Liberal Government at least until the year 2003. I would like to give him the assurance that, in my next 20 years as Minister of Finance, that will be an issue of high priority. The issue will be studied, I hope, by the parliamentary task force that is being set up, and that task force will examine the green paper that the Government has released recently.

The issue of the financing of the Canada Pension Plan was also raised at the last federal-provincial meeting of the Ministers of Finance. We spent some time discussing it. It was agreed, however, at that meeting, that next year, 1983, would not be an appropriate year to raise the contribution to the Canada Pension Plan, or to the Quebec Pension Plan. Taking into account the situation of the economy, it was felt that this was not an appropriate time to raise, however slightly, the contributions to the public pension plan.

The issue will be addressed, however, by the parliamentary committee and we have agreed that the Provinces and the federal Government would follow those discussions and there would also be discussions on the subject during the course of the year, between officials.

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-141

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, for quite some time many people in the country, including especially members of disabled and women's groups, and many Members of the House, including I think all Members on this side and Members of the NDP, have hoped that we would be able to give complete passage through both Houses of Parliament to Bill C-141, the amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Mr. Clark: That is the Bill you would not table.

Mr. MacGuigan: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition can show what he wants to do by what his Party is now prepared to do.

Last night we got this Bill through committee, and the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition suggested that the House today give report stage and third reading to this Bill, without debate. We hope that we may have unanimous consent from both Opposition Parties to do this.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I did not expect this kind of underhanded tactics from the Minister of Justice today. First they want us to pass second reading without even knowing what is in the Bill, without even having an opportunity to read it. Now they want us to pass it through report and third reading stages, without even having a word to say about it.

Had he been in consultation, which I am sure he was, with his colleague, the Government House Leader, he would have known the extent to which we are prepared to co-operate in getting this legislation passed. He would have known that we were prepared, and are prepared now. If he is listening he might consult with his colleague, the Government House Leader. We are prepared to deal, on this short day, with all remaining stages of that Bill, and see to it that it passes today.

I have had some consultations with gentlemen in the other place, and they assure me that it presents them with no problem if they get the Bill today.

In that spirit of co-operation, we make that offer to the Government.

The alternative would be to go on to Bill C-131 today, which is a lost day in any event because we know that that legislation is not going to pass today. If the Government is really sincere about wanting the human rights legislation, they will call it as the first order of business today. It will be dealt with today and dealt with, as I said last night, expeditiously.

There is another alternative. If they wish to call the human rights legislation first, I still assure the Government House Leader that we will deal with it expeditiously to the point where there will still be time remaining in the day to go back to Bill C-131, if that is the Government's desire.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that we in this Party find some parts of the Bill to be offensive, particularly Section 14(2), which is particularly patronizing to the disabled, we are prepared, as I have said on a number of occasions starting as early as last Friday, to see this legislation become law before we leave today.

I do not much care whether it is as a result of having a debate this afternoon for one or two hours or whether, in this most unusual circumstance of having only two or three hours left, it is by agreement among the three Parties to pass it without debate, but we are prepared to do either of those two things, provided that in the final analysis this piece of legislation is passed and becomes the law of Canada, in order that the women and the disabled persons who are affected by this Bill are able to get the benefit from the human rights code that we in the House of Commons believe they should have.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, two of the three Parties of this House are prepared to give report stage and third reading to this Bill immediately, without debate. It is quite clear, in the light of the words of the Hon. the House Leader of the Opposition, that what has up to now been what one could perhaps describe as reluctant co-operation from his Party, is actually subterranean opposition. All the mouthings that we heard last week from the Members of that Party, including the Leader of the Opposition, were just that. They were empty mouthings. They have no intention of putting this Bill through before Christmas.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, this intervention just shows that my description of the Minister's tactics a moment ago was certainly true. He is trying to make political capital out of a Bill, which he sure as heck should not be doing.

If he had been listening carefully, as I listened, to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, he would know that two of the Parties in this House, namely the two on this side, are prepared to pass that Bill into law today.

We say it would be an abdication of our responsibility not to say a word about human rights in this House. We think, too, that it is setting a very dangerous precedent. In all my time here I have never seen it occur before that a Minister of Justice asks us to give second reading to a Bill without even giving us an opportunity to see it. Now the same Minister is asking us to pass it entirely, without our saying even a word on it. That is an abdication of our responsibility, were we to agree to it.

We feel that it is eminently reasonable for the Government to bring that Bill forward as the first order of business today. He has our absolute undertaking that it will be law before the end of this day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The Government loses nothing; it gains everything by having another piece of legislation. Even more important, if the Government abandons its stubborn political position and adopts this reasonable suggestion, it will benefit those who are most in need of benefit under that legislation—the women and the disabled of the country.

• (1510)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am just asking Hon. Members to please not debate the Bill now. It has not been put to the House. I can allow a few questions back and forth on what the order of business might be in the House, but I cannot allow Hon. Members to debate this matter.

It is becoming obvious to me that there is no unanimous consent as to the manner in which this Bill could be passed through the House today. Unless some other Members have something specific to say on the manner in which we could proceed to put the Bill through the House today and try to seek unanimous consent on a particular proposal, I will not allow any debating of the question.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think I have something new to add to all this. We will see if there is good faith on the other side. First, they must know that the Bill has been debated in committee for two days, so Members of Parliament had an opportunity to speak on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: What I am suggesting is that the minute we reach report stage of Bill C-131 which is before the House today, if it is before six o'clock, we will be glad to call Bill C-141.

Mr. Nielsen: I never expected that sneaky approach by the Government House Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: He well knows that what we are debating now on Bill C-131 is an amendment of the Hon. Member for Okanagan North and that the Party on my left, as is its right, is quite vociferous on Bill C-131. If we pass the amendment, we move on to report stage of the Bill, and the NDP really controls when we will vote on the amendment.

I am afraid that that suggestion is not acceptable. What is acceptable to us—and this is something new again—would be that we deal with the human rights Bill expeditiously and bring Bill C-131 back immediately thereafter.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate the House Leader of the Official Opposition recognizing that it is we who stand in the way of decreasing old age pensions. We have been trying to get that point across for a while; he made it well for us. I cannot trade the incomes of old age pensioners for human rights. I cannot do that, and no one in this Party can do that.

We put to the Government that we are prepared, albeit reluctantly, to pass the Bill dealing with human rights without debate. We are prepared to pass the Bill with a limited debate. We are prepared to enter into discussions to determine how limited the debate should be. But we are not prepared to sell the incomes of old age pensioners for human rights.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it is very clear that there is an agreement between two Parties to pass the Bill without debate and that the Conservative Party does not want that legislation to become law today. Therefore the order of business remains Bill C-131.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, on this matter, the Minister of Justice knows that there has not been a word of debate in this Chamber on that Bill. He knows that he has an assurance of passage of the Bill today with debate. Will the Minister of Justice or the Government House Leader tell the House of Commons why the Liberal Government is afraid of debate on the human rights Bill?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, we are so little afraid of debate that we had two days of it in committee. The position the Opposition is taking now is not even consistent with what the House Leader of the Party said last night. They are asking us to expect the Senate to be generous, to dispose of all stages of this Bill today. I do not know how much time they will allow them—five minutes, ten minutes, maybe an hour. But they are not prepared to be generous themselves. I think the disabled of the country and the women of the country will know what lesson to draw from this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Members at this point are obviously debating. It is clear to the Chair that there is no unanimous consent over the manner in which this Bill can be put through the House.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SIMMONS—RECOGNITION OF LIBERAL MEMBERS ON S.O. 43 MOTIONS

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I noted that all motions under Standing Order 43 moved today and all questions asked today came from Members to the left of Madam Speaker. I noted also that several Members to Madam Speaker's right rose to move motions under Standing Order 43 and that several rose to ask questions, including myself, yet not one was recognized either to put a motion under Standing Order 43 or to ask a question.

I submit that the Chair's failure to allow Members from this side of the House to move motions under Standing Order 43 or to ask questions constitutes a breach of my privileges. I am prepared to move the appropriate motion, if Madam Speaker finds that I have established a prima facie case.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have a question of privilege. The Hon. Member must recognize that the power of the Chair is to recognize or not to recognize Members. I try to make it balanced from day to day, so I cannot accept the Hon. Member's point.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in this respect, may I say that the Hon. Member wishes that in future, Wednesdays will be a little more generous to Members on this side of the House. I think they have various issues they would like to bring up as part of their duty to their constituents, and it would be perfectly normal to have at least one, two or three Members recognized each day.

Madam Speaker: I have noted the comments of the Hon. President of the Privy Council, but that is what I do in any case.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—ALLEGED MISINTERPRETATION BY MR. MACGUIGAN

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order because the Minister of Justice has misled the House.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon has the floor.

Mr. Simmons: I have a point of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member afterward. I have given the floor to the Hon. Member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Justice misled the House; it appeared that he did it deliberately because I noted that when he said what he did, he had Hansard in his hand. I have just reread Hansard as to what I sait last night, as reported on page 21821. Among other things I said that we:

> —would anticipate no real difficulty in dealing with the report stage and the third reading stage tomorrow. At least the Members of the House are entitled to that courtesy, which we intend to give them. I would suggest that at the next sitting of the House we will deal with the report and third reading stages.

Nothing could be more clear than that. There were no ifs, ands, buts or wheedling. I said that we would deal with both those stages at the next sitting, intending that that sitting of course would be today. But the Minister has left an entirely different impression of what I said last night. I would hope that perhaps he would acknowledge that what I have read from the record is an accurate reflection of what actually was said in his absence from the House last night.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, of course the Hon. Member has read the words as they are. The question is how they are to be interpreted.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: In all the discussion of this issue, the consistent proposition which we put forward is that we deal with this Bill without time in the House but taking time in Committee. The Hon. Member in that context said that we will put this through tomorrow, that is today, and it seems to me that the normal interpretation of those words is exactly the interpretation I have given.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't mislead the House.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's has risen—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why don't you have the courage to bring it in?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Clark: You don't like democracy.

Mr. MacGuigan: Why don't you listen to your own Member for Saskatoon West?

Mr. Clark: You don't want us to listen.

Mr. MacGuigan: I asked you why you would not listen to your own Members.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark: You are as crooked as Fleming.

An Hon. Member: Respect the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Out, out!

• (1520)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) rose a moment ago on a question of privilege. The Chair advised him that he did not have a question of privilege and took note of his remarks. Does the Hon. Member have another question of privilege?

MR. SIMMONS—RECOGNITION OF LIBERAL MEMBERS ON S.O. 43 MOTIONS

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I submit that is for you to decide when you have heard the point I wish to raise. I have not been given a fair opportunity in this House to raise questions. That, Madam Speaker, is not balance. You may call it balance. It is not balance, it is imbalance.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Simmons: You trample on them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have dealt with that particular matter. Should I remind the Hon. Member that any Member who wishes to speak may rise and endeavour to catch the Speaker's eye. He who is first seen has the right to speak.

Mr. Simmons: Look at this side of the House.

Madam Speaker: That is how the right of the Speaker is described by any of the authors who deal with this question. If the Hon. Member has a formal critique about the way the Chair conducts Question Period, he may make it on another occasion. I am telling him now that he does not have the basis of a question of privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-141

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would like to return for one brief moment to the question of the human rights amendments. I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council, and I hope the House Leader for the Official Opposition listens, that if it were to be decided by the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Government House Leader to call the order with regard to the human rights amendments, and if the time allocated between now and 4.15 p.m. were to be allocated for the purpose of dealing with it and that it be divided equally among the three Parties, we would be prepared to deal with that on the basis of one speaker per Party, with the appropriate motion to be put to dispose of the order by 4.15 p.m.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain advances that suggestion as though it were entirely novel and unique. It was almost precisely that suggestion that I put to the Government House Leader a moment ago, namely that he call as the first order of business the human rights legislation. It is now almost 3.30 p.m., which leaves us two and a half hours remaining today. That is certainly not an overly generous time period to debate any measure in this House. And if we are through with the legislation with some balance of time left in the day, the Government House Leader can recall Bill C-131. That is exactly what I suggested to the Government House Leader a moment ago.

Mr. Deans: That is not what I said.

Mr. Nielsen: We are still prepared to do exactly that, Madam Speaker. Once again, I appeal to the Government House Leader to proceed in that fashion because he will find Bill C-141, the human rights legislation, will in fact get passed today if the President of the Privy Council will simply reconsider the position which his Minister of Justice appears to have taken. Call the human rights legislation first and we will deal with it quickly. We have to because there is only two and a half hours left, then recall Bill C-131.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Clearly, Madam Speaker, both Hon. Members are trying to make political points at the expense of women and the handicapped. That is most unfortunate. There is only one solution and that is unanimous consent for passing the Bill without debate. There is consent on this side of the House, and if unanimous consent is not given, we shall proceed with consideration of Bill C-131.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for proceeding with passage of the Bill without debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FLIS—EQUAL RECOGNITON OF MEMBERS UNDER NEW RULES

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I sent you a note stating that I had a question of privilege. It arises from the proceedings under Standing Order 43 today. I was one of the Members trying to get your attention so that I could put a motion. I am not complaining that you did not recognize me, Madam Speaker, but there were five Members on this side of the House who wanted to move motions under the provisions of Standing Order 43 who could not.

I give you advance notice of my question, Madam Speaker, so that you will have time to make a decision . On January 17, 1983, we start under the new procedures, which will not include provision for Motions under Standing Order 43.

Mr. Skelly: What kind of Party do you have there?

Mr. Flis: I hope that your interpretation will be that all Hon. Members will be given equal opportunity to speak on Members' statements because Members' statements are different from motions moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and different from questions. You are right, Madam Speaker, in stating that we on this side of the House have easier access to Ministers and, therefore, you give us less time for motions under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and for questions during the Question Period. I agree and I accept that. But I think under the new procedure where each Member is given the privilege of putting a 90-second statement regarding some concern in his or her riding that he or she wishes to bring to the country's attention, I hope that your interpretation will be different than it has been for Motions under Standing Order 43, and that every Member in this House, whether the Member belongs to the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party or the Progressive Conservative Party, be given equal opportunity to make those statements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has in fact stated one of the problems which the Chair faces. There were at least five Members on this side of the House wanting to be recognized today, so we can see that the competition was very great to move the last motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Just about everyone wanted to move the last motion under Standing Order 43. It is a privilege of the Chair to recognize one Member or the other. I am afraid Hon. Members have to accept that. That is the authority given to the Chair.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION ON CANADIAN HOMEOWNERSHIP STIMULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, while the House is still infected with the Christmas spirit, I have a matter relating to the House business upon our return. Perhaps I could have the attention of the Government House Leader. He will recall that on Friday I raised the matter of the Government giving out $3,000 grants under the Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Program, which procedure may not be in conformity with the Act, and so the Government may have given out some $300 million in grants illegally.

My colleagues have authorized me to indicate to the Government House Leader that if the Government were prepared to bring forward legislation early in the New Year which would legalize these payments retroactively and did no more than to legalize these payments, then we would be prepared to give that legislation speedy passage through the House. Is that acceptable to the House Leader?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will take good note of the suggestion made by the Hon. Member. I will refer the matter to the Minister responsible. But certainly the first Bill that will be called when we come back will be another piece of legislation, which I will announce later on.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FLEMING—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY REMARK OF MR. CLARK

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): I understand the rules require that if I believe I have a question of privilege arising from a comment made in the House that I have to give notice at the earliest possible moment. I believe there was a comment made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to me which breached the rules of the House. I will check Hansard and raise it again if that is appropriate.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member may raise a question of privilege now if it flows from the deliberations of today's proceedings. However, if the Hon. Member needs to check Hansard in order to ascertain whether those comments are really what he thinks they are, he may do that. But he would then have to give me written notice.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, perhaps when the heat of the moment has passed, the Right Hon. Member will respect the rules of the House, if not reasonable respect among Members. I believe the Leader of the Opposition made a reference to myself and to another Minister as being crooked. That is unparliamentary language. I regret that both because of the rules of the House and because of the basic respect that still generally operates in this place among Members we can refer to Hansard for September 23, 1971, at page 8,127 and September 24, 1971, at page 8,137 and to Beauchesne. I simply hope, because the language is unparliamentary, that the Right Hon. Member might withdraw it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would like the Hon. Minister to tell me whether he is certain that those words were spoken.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The Chair did not hear them. But I have to take the Hon. Member's word. Perhaps it would be better to check Hansard.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, that is why when I first rose I said that I would wait for Hansard. I checked with at least four colleagues of mine here who heard what I heard. For the benefit of the House and to save time, the Right Hon. Member opposite surely knows what he said, and he might indicate that.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, this is the first time I have seen a Minister so sensitive about these matters.

• (1530)

He is in very good company. I hear the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) saying "oh, oh." He is in very good company because the whole Cabinet is as crooked as a dog's hind leg.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Was the Hon. Minister for Multiculturalism referring to the Hon. Member for Yukon or another Hon. Member?

Mr. Fleming: No, Madam Speaker, I was referring to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

An Hon. Member: He cannot speak for himself.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what I said was that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) is as crooked as the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism can decide for himself, knowing himself, whether that is an insult or not.

Mr. Cousineau: Shame on you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have to take Hon. Members' words at their face value. If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says that what he said was "as crooked", what is unparliamentary is "crook". Perhaps we should look at Hansard to check those words.

When the debate has calmed down, perhaps Members will remember to use language in the House that is acceptable in the House, as language should be acceptable outside of the House. I do not see why, simply because there is a list here, certain Members go to the limit of what they can say in the House. I would ask Hon. Members to speak in a language that is acceptable to everyone.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, in that spirit, I am quite prepared to amend my statement to say that the Minister of Justice is as honest as the Minister of State for Multiculturalism.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, with respect to the proceedings, you said that you did not hear. The Right Hon. gentleman got up and repeated the words for you. There was no misunderstanding. He is not being—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Harquail: Just a moment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Tilt. Let us move to adjourn now.

Madam Speaker: Will Hon. Members please not make matters more difficult than they ought to be. The question has been dealt with by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in fact correcting his statement. Since the Chair cannot be sure whether one word or the other was used, the statement stands corrected and we will look at the "blues" when we reconvene to see whether there is any unparliamentary language recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, if that is the state of that Party, good luck in Winnipeg.

Mr. Nowlan: At least we do not have Senator Pitfield.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, we have had our good luck in Winnipeg, and we will have good luck in northern New Brunswick when the next election is called.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUBJECT OF SALARIES AND PENSIONS OF SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) a question relating to a reference to committee. The Government House Leader will know that today, the Government of Canada appointed to the Senate of Canada Mr. Michael Pitfield—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: —keeping intact his pension arrangements, which have been a subject of controversy in the House. In light of the very genuine controversy about the pension arrangements made available for Mr. Pitfield and the pension arrangements and the confusing nature of pension arrangements and bonus arrangements—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This certainly is not Government business.

Mr. Nowlan: It is Government fraud.

Mr. Clark: My question relates to parliamentary business. In light of the discussion on motions between the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and myself earlier, this most unprecedented action by the Government today, and the confusion about the exact remuneration level and the pensions paid to senior public servants at a time when this Government is trying to cut back the pensions available to senior citizens, would the Government House Leader agree to make a reference of the entire question of remuneration, pay and pensions of senior public servants to the appropriate standing committee of the House immediately upon the return of this Parliament in January?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition used the word confusion. As far as I am concerned, if there is any confusion, it is in the mind of the Leader of the Opposition. Not only confusion, but also small-mindedness. Mr. Pitfield is a Canadian citizen and an honourable man who has done absolutely nothing wrong and to whom the Government is tremendously indebted, and the Leader of the Opposition is using a question about the business of the House to blacken the reputation of an individual who has served his country well and will continue to do so. I think that is extremely small-minded, Madam Speaker, and in the light of the explanations given in the House Monday by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I think the Leader of the Opposition is totally confused and small-minded, and that his question is unworthy of this House, and I shall certainly not spend any more time answering it.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask whether you could clarify previous remarks made about unparliamentary language. In view of the fact that Mr. Michael Pitfield has just been appointed to the Senate as an independent from Ontario, could you inform me whether it would be unparliamentary for me to use the word "obscenity" in the House?

Madam Speaker: The Chair does not rule on hypothetical questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I merely wish to point out to the House that when the Chair mentioned earlier that five Members on the Government side rose during the period set aside for motions under Standing Order 43, there were at least 15.

Madam Speaker: That reinforces my argument. When 15 Members ask to be recognized, it is impossible to recognize all fifteen.

PETITIONS

MR. GASS—DISCONTINUATION OF SATURDAY MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, this afternoon I have the duty and responsibility to present a petition signed by 548 residents of Cardigan, 606 residents of Egmont and 1,171 residents of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island. The purpose of the petition is to protest the Government's intention to discontinue rural mail delivery on Saturdays, thereby denying 17,450 householders of mail, newspapers and other materials, and to close rural post offices on Saturdays, a move which will affect some 25,300 people.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition, you will find the petition in order and exercise the discretionary powers vested in the Office of Speaker of the House of Commons to allow discussion and referral to committee of this issue at the earliest possible time.

MR. BRADLEY—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-10

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 119 members of the various churches in my constituency of Haldimand-Norfolk who are very concerned about the provisions of the Non-Profit Corporations Act, Bill C-10. The purpose of this petition is to protest the Government's proposed changes in Bill C-10 which allows a court of law to interfere in the affairs of the church body. The nature of the petition is to urge the Government to drop the provisions of Bill C-10 which would infringe on the rights and privileges of the church to take a moral stand on matters concerning membership of that church body.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find the petition in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the Office of Speaker of the House of Commons to allow discussion and referral to the committee at the earliest possible time in order that the sanctity of the church in Canadian society can be preserved.

POINT OF ORDER

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a matter which I believe could impinge upon the rights of all Hon. Members of the House.

Mr. MacKay: It better not.

Mr. Harquail: It relates to this: the rules—

An Hon. Member: We could have passed the Bill by now.

Mr. Harquail: —of the House are in fact the instruments by which we operate in this House. When there was not clarity earlier, the hon. gentleman in question rose and repeated the word which was very clear to me. I do not understand—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has ruled on this particular incident and I would ask the Hon. Member not to raise it again.

Some Hon. Members: Down, down!

Mr. Lewis: Ask Senator Pitfield.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must tell the Hon. Member that that question has been ruled upon and cleared and therefore the Hon. Member should not comment on it.

Mr. Harquail: I am just trying to clearly understand why in other circumstances Hon. Members are called upon to withdraw or are forced to leave the chamber. Why is it—

Mr. Nielsen: Leave.

Mr. Harquail: —can you clarify why—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member reads Hansard when it is ready, he will realize that the statement has been corrected, and since it was not quite clear which of the expressions had been used, the Hon. Member had corrected his statement. Therefore, the incident was closed.

SENATE REFORM

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have had consultations with the Opposition House Leaders, and an agreement has been reached for giving unanimous consent to the following motion which is being put in response to a request from the Senate to form a Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to consider the reform of the Senate of Canada. The text of the motion is quite long, although if Hon. Members insist, I shall read it. Otherwise, if my colleagues whom I gave copies of the motion agree, I will ask for the unanimous consent of the House to have the motion agreed to without further proceedings.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I would normally be delighted to give that consent. However, all Members of Parliament are entitled to hear it. I have not had the opportunity of distributing copies to my colleagues, so I would ask that it be read.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard moved, with the unanimous consent of the House:

That a Message be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this House doth unite with the Senate in the appointment of a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons to consider and report upon ways by which the Senate of Canada could be reformed in order to strengthen its role in representing people from all regions of Canada and to enhance the authority of Parliament to speak and act on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country;

Senate Reform

That the Committee include in its final report recommendations concerning the method of selection, powers, length of term for Senators, distribution of seats and other matters that the Committee considers relevant to the reform of the Senate;

That 10 Members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the House as members of the said Committee;

That the Committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such sub-committees as it may deem advisable or necessary;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House;

That the Committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the quorum of the Committee be 10 members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the Committee be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, whenever 5 members are present, so long as both Houses are represented;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional, clerical and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Joint Chairmen; and

That the Committee present its final report no later than December 1, 1983.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether, just prior to the unanimous consent of the House, whether the Government House Leader might explain how we can be expected to go along with such a farce as appointing Michael Pitfield to the Senate when the institution, in all probability, should be abolished rather than attempting to perpetuate a farce like that.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think that that is not at all relevant to the particular motion. Does the House give its unanimous consent?

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, point of order!

Madam Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River rising?

Mr. Skelly: Yes, I was, Madam Speaker. I think, unfortunately, that this matter is absolutely related to the matter before us today.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member can debate it when the time comes. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I sit in this House as an independent—

Mr. La Salle: We know that!

Mr. Yurko: I do not take orders from any House leader. Several events have occurred today concerning which no one sought my opinion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: All you have to do is rise!

Mr. Yurko: I have risen, Madam Speaker, on several occasions, but you have not recognized me. I just wanted to say, concerning the motion which was put to the House by the House Leader of the Government side, that I feel very privileged to have the opportunity of standing up, as an independent Member of this House, to make this motion unanimous. I agree with it totally. There is a motion by myself on the Order Paper to set up that type of committee. Therefore, I just wanted to indicate to the House that I agreed to the unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I just want to point out to the Hon. Member that it seems to me this is the first time he has risen today.

Mr. Yurko: No, it has not been.

Madam Speaker: Well, I did not see him at any other moment.

Mr. Nielsen: He has had a real blind day today, hasn't he? Everybody was up!

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Pinard) agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: There are two additional motions which have been discussed among House leaders which seem to have met with unanimous consent. We will most likely be seeking unanimous consent later today for those two motions because we are working on the membership of those special task forces which will be organized later. Therefore, I simply want to give notice to the House leader of the Official Opposition and to the independent Member that we do not want to play games later on. We will be making further requests for unanimous consent. I would be delighted to give copies of those motions to the Hon. Memberr for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) later on.

Mr. Nielsen: We will certainly be prepared to provide that unanimous consent later on with respect to the setting up of the task force on Indian self-government. With respect to the other motion—

Mr. Pinard: Pensions.

Mr. Nielsen: —dealing with the task force on the Green Paper, we have already held some discussions and we will reserve our consent on that motion until I have had the opportunity of speaking with the Government House Leader again.

This repatriation resulted in the company being 100 per cent Canadian owned.

TAX DISCOUNTING

1. Is the Government considering measures to regulate individuals and companies involved in the tax discounting business?

2. In 1981, to the knowledge of the Government, did 60,000 taxpayers take advantage of tax discounting, for which the tax buyers received a profit of $4.95 million, and, if not, what records does the government have of the extent and profit for tax discounting during 1981?

2. For the 1981 taxation year, approximately 61,500 Canadians discounted their income tax returns using the services of tax discounters. The gross value of the discounters' share of the income tax return was approximately $6,519,000. It is unknown how much of this amount represents profit. Discounters, like any other legitimate business, have operating and overhead expenses which are not known to the Department.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Point of order!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Central Nova.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the last matter which was raised. It concerns question No. 3750 on the Order Paper, which I placed on the Order Paper on February 9, 1982. As mentioned by my colleague, that series of questions concerned diplomatic personnel from Communist countries stationed here in Ottawa and our diplomatic personnel working in eastern Europe. Since that time, the Parliamentary Secretary has promised to look into this outstanding business on two separate occasions. On November 25, I made note of the fact that the Solicitor General himself assured me in the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee that he would try to answer these questions promptly.

I believe that the delay in answering these questions which are straightforward must be deliberate on the Government's part. I would ask that the Parliamentary Secretary, in the spirit of Christmas, give us some assurance that, by the time we return in the New Year, these questions will be answered, because I believe they will reveal some very interesting matters, and it is in the best interests of the country that we know the truth about these matters.

• (1550)

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there is certainly no reluctance on my part to seek the answer to these questions. I can again convey his concerns to the Ministers involved and, hopefully, we will be able to resolve this situation.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I once again ask the Parliamentary Secretary why, with respect to Question No. 2,042, asked by myself in January, 1981, which was: what was the total cost of the Prime Minister's December, 1980, January, 1981, road tour? That was two years ago. And what percentage of the total cost of the trip will be paid by the Canadian taxpayer? These questions to this date have not been answered. I reiterate, Madam Speaker, surely with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) now warming up for another trip—he owes it to the people of Canada to say what his trip around the world two years ago cost.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into this matter on behalf of the Hon. Member. I have done so once or twice before, and I understand that there is at least one Department which has not reported yet, but I will do my best to see if we can resolve this.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, when the Parliamentary Secretary spends his Christmas break looking into that matter, I was wondering if he could also look into why questions Nos. 3,216 through to No. 3,220, which were all asked on October 23, 1981, have not been answered? These questions deal, for example, with the Prime Minister's trip to New York in March, 1981, his trip to Algeria in May, 1981, his trip to Washington in July, 1981, his trip to Australia, Korea, the Philippines and Fiji in September and October, 1981 and his trip to Mexico in October, 1981. These questions have not been answered. Again, I reiterate, we asked: what is the total cost and what portion of that total cost is being borne by the taxpayers of Canada?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas, I would be delighted to spend my break looking into these matters on the Hon. Member's behalf.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary Question No. 4,567, which deals with actions on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) where she threatens the Confectionery Manufacturers Association of Canada, asking them to cease the manufacture of certain products and put Canadian jobs at risk. The tone of that question is to inquire whether or not that Minister has that legal authority. Those jobs are still at risk. There is a sense of urgency in getting a public explanation of her behaviour so that those employees do not feel their jobs are threatened. I would urge the Parliamentary Secretary to provide a public answer as quickly as possible so as to protect those Canadian jobs.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would be happy to look into that matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I have placed under Notices of Motion for Production of Papers on June 11, 1980, that an Order of the House do issue for copies of all papers and studies done for any Department or agency concerning the economic impact on Canada of a one-year delay in the development of the Alsands project in Fort McMurray, Alberta and the Imperial Oil Project in Cold Lake, Alberta. It is my understanding that a number of discussions are taking place to revive these projects, perhaps on a smaller scale, and I think it is vital at this time, particularly with high unemployment, that these studies be made available so that all Hon. Members of this House will have at their fingertips the number of jobs which will be created when activity does resume in the tar sands in Northeastern Alberta. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, would he please make every effort to perhaps make this a personal Christmas present from him to me, so that we can get this on the road?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the Christmas present I might give to the Hon. Member is to outline to him that what he should do is to ask that that motion be called when you reach Motions later today, and ask that it be transferred for debate.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STUDY ON STATE-TO-STATE CONTRACTS TO PURCHASE PETROLEUM

Motion No. 116—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any studies prepared for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on state-to-state contracts to purchase petroleum or petroleum products.

[English]

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) I would give the following answer: no study has been done by outside consultants for Energy, Mines and Resources on state-to-state contracts, to purchase petroleum or petroleum products. I would ask, therefore, that the Hon. Member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Shields: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the other Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 21, consideration of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and the motion of Mr. Dantzer (p. 21795).

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity last evening to begin work on my remarks on Bill C-131, but before I start I would like to say a few words about what has transpired in the House in the last hour. I think all of us, including myself, would have to admit that the last hour was not spent in as desirable a fashion as we might have wished for this House of Commons. In many ways, we are looking at reform of the rules of the House, and I would submit, Mr. Speaker—I see you sitting on the edge of your chair. I do not know whether it is in anticipation of what I am going to say or whether you are going to rule me out of order in terms of context. Very briefly, we are looking at reform of the rules, and I would submit that one of the biggest reforms which all Members have to look at is a change of the attitude which we bring to this place. I would hope when we go home for Christmas and our constituents tell us about the many kinds of problems they are having in the real world, we will come back and carry on the affairs of the nation in a better fashion than we have in the past. I feel that is particularly incumbent upon the Government because it is the Government and it behooves it to set an example.

Which brings me to the concern which I have over Bill C-131, and particularly with the amendment to it. I see you are nodding your head, Mr. Speaker. I do not know if you are agreeing with me. I would suspect that you are, but probably you are hoping that I will return to the topic of the Bill.

Bill C-131, and particularly the amendment to it, which was moved by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), 15 a good amendment. I believe it is worthy of consideration and I would hope it is accepted by the Government, because essentially what it does, as I understand it, is it keeps the base under which the pensions will be calculated in the future moving through this inflationary period at the same rate it would have without Bill C-131. If in fact the Government has faith that the six and five program is going to work and that inflation will come down, then really it loses nothing in terms of Government expenditure if it accepts the Hon. Member's amendment. On that basis, I would submit it is a good amendment and it is one which would demonstrate that we in Canada have some responsibility and concern with the welfare of the senior citizens of this country who have been responsible for the kind of country we have been fortunate enough to be born in and live in. That is a very large debt which all of us owe to the people who have settled this country.

In many ways, they are the people who should be considered first and foremost when we are talking about Government expenditure.

I tried to point out last night that this is a very small amount of money relative to the total amount of money which this Government spends. I also pointed out that the highest figure I heard which the Government is proposing to save is something in the order of $80 million, although I do not think anyone knows what kind of saving there will be to the Government. It is roughly equivalent to the kind of money this Government, including Crown corporations, is spending on advertising, much of which is questionable advocacy advertising. It attempts to influence people's positions and attitudes. It is not informative advertising, specifically announcing Government programs so that people can take proper advantage of them. It is used by the Government to advocate its own position.

• (1600)

I submit that if the Government is serious about some of the expenditures it wants to cut back to get its deficit under control, there are other and more productive areas in which to cut back. This would create a better attitude amongst taxpayers because they would know the Government was spending its tax dollar more prudently.

Roughly $1 out of every $1,000 of Government expenditure is the largest potential saving under this Bill. The smallest potential saving is only $1 out of every $2,000 in Government expenditure. You have to remember that many of the people affected by this Bill are those who have homesteads on the land, they built log houses or sod houses, and they have had to chink the log houses against the winter weather. It is unfortunate the Government chooses to attack those people. I would much sooner see the Government concerned with productivity so that we can afford to have better pensions and social care assistance for our citizens. It seems to me that is the first responsibility of the Government.

There are many things the Government could be doing. One of the first things we should be looking at is the taxation system so that we encourage people to become more productive instead of penalizing them and thereby discouraging them from adding to our productivity. Instead of people being encouraged to look after themselves in their retirement years, they become more dependent on Government social assistance programs. Some of the tax regimes we have in place penalize people who try to look after themselves in their retirement years. The proposal in the November 12 budget whereby life insurance plans were going to be taxed on a three-year basis if they had some accrued value is one of those.

This Bill is really about inflation, Mr. Speaker. We would not have it if there was no inflation. When you look at the size of the deficits this country has been chalking up, you really wonder if anyone has been in charge of the economic ship of state in this country for the last ten or 15 years. We are at a point now where $1 out of every $4 collected in taxes goes to service past Government debt, and that money is then not available for social assistance programs which we all talk about in this House. It is money that is not available to provide Old Age Security benefits. Those are the kind of things we need to look at, and I submit, through better management of Government expenditure we would not have such a large Government debt and we would not be taking away from the private sector some of those savings I submit would be better used and better invested by individual Canadians to make this country more productive, enabling us to better distribute a larger pie among Canadians.

The Government is on the one hand saying that the six and five program is going to bring down inflation, but on the other hand it brings in legislation which forces people to accept some of the six and five restraint programs. That is almost an admission that the program will not succeed. If we were very confident that inflation was going to come down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent in the next two years, then we would not need legislation to force people to accept lower benefits from Government programs. If inflation is less than 6 per cent in the year Bill C-131 applies to, then the increase in the Old Age Security will be 6 per cent. So by the Government bringing in legislation such as this, in many ways it is admitting that the program is of questionable value. If inflation does come down to the level advocated in the six and five program, there really would not be a need for Bill C-131.

I received, as I think the rest of the Members of this House have, a very elaborately bound book with fancy leather like index tabs. It is about an inch and a half or two inches thick—I do not know what that is in metric, but it is a fairly thick binder. It outlines and extols the virtues of the six and five program. I wonder what the cost of that binder was and whether the money would be better spent by the Government in other areas or simply not spent at all. There are areas where this Government could, if it were serious, cut back on expenditures so we would not have to penalize the people affected by Bill C-131. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, the whole concept of the Government becoming more and more involved in regulating our daily lives, telling us what we can do, is counterproductive in many ways.

The province I come from, Saskatchewan, only became a Province in 1905, and there are people now living in that part of the country who were alive at that time. They are going to be affected by this Bill. I am sure of that because I know some of them. It seems to me that at that time there was a lot more room in this country for people to go out and work, sacrifice and achieve things on their own and keep some of the rewards for their own efforts and expertise. But what has happened in the interim is that governments have become so large that if you take the three levels of Government and look at the amount of taxes they take away from individual Canadians, it means that in many areas of the country you virtually work from the beginning of January until some time towards the middle of June for one level of Government or another. It seems to me that that is a kind of disincentive to the average taxpayer in this country to go out and work; he knows the Government is going to take such a large chunk of what he earns away from them and then redistribute it through various Government programs. That is a disincentive to individuals to produce. When that happens we have to back up and take a look at the basic direction in which we are going.

Frankly, I do not understand some of the socialist thinking that goes on in this country. The average wage earner in this country, if he looks at where his money goes, will find his biggest cost is not fuel, food or rent, it is supporting one form of Government or another. That is the biggest deduction he has from his pay cheque each month. I fail to see why the socialists think the Government should take over more and there should be more taxation. It seems to me that the individual taxpayer in this country is perfectly capable of deciding where that money should be spent.

• (1610)

If you did leave one of those Canadians, those wage earners, those people who are productive, a little more money in his paycheque at the end of the week or at the end of the month, he would certainly spend that money. It would be recirculated through the economy, because we do have a circular economy. What is an expenditure for one of us is an income for the next person. If you did leave some additional income with Canadians, they would certainly spend it. They would not go home and burn the money in their basement after supper. They would recirculate that money. That is exactly what Governments have been trying to prevent, it seems to me, in the past number of years, in this country, when they take a larger and larger share of Canadians' earnings away from them, and redistribute it. This applies to all levels of Government, municipal, provincial and federal Government, all of them. If you look at some of the gross debts in this country and relate them back on a per capita basis, by and large, the federal Government does not set a good example. So when we say they are all involved, it does not mean that they are all equally complicit in this exercise. It simply means to me that the federal Government probably is setting a poor example for the various levels of Government.

I have heard many Government programs described, and one of the most humorous descriptions that I have heard, and an apt description in many ways, is that Government programs and Government grants are like taking a blood transfusion from one arm and moving it to the other arm, and spilling half of it on the way over. That is the problem we have with many Government programs, they get so large and so hung up with bureaucratic control and red tape that they lose sight of the purpose for which they were put in place in the initial stages.

Let me close by simply saying that I think the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North is a very good amendment. It simply says to me that if the Government is serious and thinks it can bring inflation down to the 6 per cent range this coming year and the 5 per cent range the year following, the amendment will not cost the Government Treasury one cent. All it does is to keep the base against which future increases in the Old Age Security payments are calculated intact and keeps them moving through 1983 and 1984, as if this Bill had not been passed.

If in fact the Government believes that it can bring down the inflation rate in 1985 and 1986 to acceptable levels, and I assume by that that we are talking in the 5 per cent to 6 per cent range, the amendment will not cost the Treasury Board one single dollar.

I simply say in closing that if the Government believes its program is going to succeed, the Government would have no choice but to support the very well thought out and well put amendment by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North. I know I will have no trouble in supporting the amendment when it does come to a vote.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable patience the last two days to the discussion on Bill C-131, the Act that I feel is attacking senior citizens in this country, whether Members on the Government side believe it or not.

They seem to use as their argument that by reducing the anticipated increases in old age benefits to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the following year, they really are not cutting back. In fact, the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) last night stated that we over here are using this as a political tool, I think was the phrase he used, to gain political points on the backs of senior citizens. That could not be further from the truth.

The amendment today introduced by the Member for Okanagan North, (Mr. Dantzer), indicates very clearly where we on this side of the House stand. The amendment only states in simple terms that the base for the senior citizen and the pensioner will not change.

I was particularly alerted by the remarks made by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) last night. She said it was the duty of the Government to cut down inflation to six and five in all areas of the Government. That was used as justification for the attack on the senior citizens, people who are on fixed income and least capable of defending themselves.

She said there was an orchestrated campaign across the country to familiarize people with six and five. She said, and I am paraphrasing now, that a couple of months ago nobody knew what six and five was. I ask the Minister only one question. How much money was spent by the present Government to advertise six and five across the country, because the six and five program is a costly cop-out, and that is really all it is?

The six and five program is not lowering inflation or even beginning to, in this country. It is the policies of the Government that killed initiative and industry in this country, created unemployment and caused the situation where we have more unemployment in Canada today than we have had since 1932. That is what has caused the inflation rate to go down. Prior to the six and five program setting up wage limits on increases for public employees, private sector employees were receiving 3 per cent and 4 per cent increases, or no increases, or roll-backs in salaries, because of the economic times. The market looks after itself in those areas, and all Hon. Members know that. They know that the six and five was planned in caucus, or by strategists, to focus the attention of Canadians on something else, to try to put across the nation that the Liberal Government was doing something, when in actual fact it is not doing anything. They are not living up to their responsibilities. They are not facing the hard issue, and that is the massive Government intervention in the economy, and the massive spending that costs nothing but dollars.

They have not faced up to the fact that the Crown corporations in this country, quoting the Auditor General's report, have created a hole in the pocket of the taxpayer and are costing the taxpayer of Canada millions and millions of dollars annually, with no control from the Government or this House of Commons.

We hear nothing of that and we will not hear anything of that. We will only hear chirping across the country, a massive advertising program across the country, at a cost to the taxpayers, six and five, six and five, six and five.

The Minister made a statement last night that the interest rate is lower than in past years. It is lower because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who was then Minister of Energy, killed the economy in western Canada which was the oil or the lubricant to the economies of central Canada. His policies were responsible for driving people, investment and entrepreneurs out of the country and creating an atmosphere where there is absolutely no trust in the present Government. That is what has caused the massive unemployment across this country; and all Hon. Members in this House know that to be true.

The Minister again last night said that we have to make sure that we cut inflation to six and five in every area of Government that the Government can enforce. She said, seniors are fully protected. Seniors are not protected when you limit their base of income, and it falls below inflation, because the purchasing power of the dollar drops when inflation goes up. It is another insidious Government tactic.

• (1620)

Probably the most clear statement of the thinking of the Minister of National Health and Welfare last night was when she said "seniors will not shirk from their responsibilities." This is absolutely sad. It is indicative of the way the Government is going around, sending letters, publishing documents, talking to senior citizens and telling them to do their duty. These are the very people who built the country. They are the very people who, with their bare hands, cleared land and built the country. They are the people who, in any other society in the world, are revered because of the contribution they have made to their country. Certainly I agree with the Minister that seniors will rise and will not shirk from their duties because they know what duty is all about. But I think it is absolutely immoral for the Government to approach senior citizens along this line and say these kinds of things. These people have sacrificed all their lives raising families, putting them through school and university, often going without winter coats to keep the children in school. I know how my mother did without so that I could have fresh fruit on the table. I know how my grandmother did without so that my mother could attend nursing school. I know that is part of the history of the country. It is immoral for the Government to attack senior citizens at this point.

But the Minister said that they had to have six and five in all areas which the Government controls. Let us look at some of the areas. Wage levels—Treasury Board announced on October 21 that 500 editorial employees of CBC would receive 11.5 per cent increases in their salaries ranging from $12,000 to $38,900. These people will receive 11.5 per cent increases in their salaries, yet the Government is limiting the indexing of the OAS for senior citizens who earn approximately $6,000. People on fixed rates of pay are generally low-income earners, while some 200,000 Government employees will receive 9 per cent or 10 per cent; if they are bumped up in category, the six per cent is added on and they receive 9 per cent or 10 per cent. These people can afford to bite the bullet a bit, but the Government attacks people on fixed incomes with the imposition of 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

Let us look at TransCanada Pipelines which just obtained a new levy for transporting natural gas. It was increased to 11.9 per cent on August 1. This will have a cumulative effect over the next two years with price increases of a further 93 cents per gigajoule in semi-annual steps of 23 cents and 24 cents per gigajoule. This will be a cumulative increase in the price of natural gas to consumers of 49.2 per cent. The same senior citizens who were encouraged to convert to natural gas are being told that their base pay will be limited, that it will not reflect inflation any longer so that they will have a minimum to live on or their purchasing power will not be eroded. They are being told that it will be nailed at six and five and that they will be charged an increase of 49.2 per cent in the cost of natural gas because the transportation costs of natural gas by TransCanada Pipelines have risen. We can depend on such things happening more and more.

Let us turn to rents under the direct control of the Government. The Minister said that the Government is responsible to Canadians. Also she said that they know and will do their duty, that they will limit every area to six and five, every area that they possibly can, every area under their control.

CMHC is the main renegade in this area. It is a federally-owned Crown corporation. Let us look at its increases—35 per cent in Coldbrook, Nova Scotia; 22 per cent in Churchill, Manitoba; 15 per cent in Winnipeg where CMHC administers the 180-unit Pine Hill Apartments; and 12.5 per cent for federal housing in the Northwest Territories. I put to Hon. Members that the people occupying those CMHC homes are the very ones who are being nailed here today; many of them are senior citizens. This is federally-controlled housing, it is immoral.

The very significant aspect about the figures I just gave is that most of the increases in rent apply to housing for public servants or those on fixed or limited incomes. Is that how the Government really attempts to nail six and five? It is nailing the people who have the least voice in the House of Commons; that is whom it is hitting.

The federal Government talks about limiting to six and five, yet it turns around and increases the taxes for unemployment insurance levied against employers, including small employers, by 50 per cent next year. There are record bankruptcies and record failures in the small business sector, yet we have a Government saying that it will limit to six and five and increase the levy for unemployment insurance by 50 per cent. Who is kidding whom?

The Government of Canada is falsely going across the country and chirping six and five. It is a well-orchestrated campaign to sell Canadians on something which is just not so. Let us look at the passenger fares of VIA Rail. Were they increased by six and five? No way. There were 10 per cent increases in fares between Toronto and Montreal and between Toronto and Ottawa. The very people about whom we are talking today, the senior citizens, are the ones who predominantly use VIA Rail between those points. They are faced with a 10 per cent increase and a real purchasing power decrease.

I do not know what the decrease will be; none of us know because we do not know what will be the inflation rate in the next year. Mark my words, inflation will rise next year because it will be getting close to election time and the Minister of Finance will increase his deficit without decreasing his expenditures. He will try to heat up the economy and say to Canadians that they should look at the jobs which the Government created for the unemployed. He will not mention that this was a result of the Government's disastrous policies of before, but he will say, "Look at what we are doing; boy, are we leaders!" Then they will go into an election campaign. We can depend on it—inflation rates will go up next year. The real purchasing power of the senior citizen will go down.

• (1630)

I believe I have said all that I want to say except for one thing. I am getting sick and tired of listening to Members of the New Democratic Party standing up day after day on this Bill and accusing the Conservative Party of not caring. Because our Party voted on Bill C-124, which was a Bill to restrict Government spending to six and five per cent, the NDP has been twisting the meaning of that vote in an attempt to convince the Canadian public that our Party does not care, that we are only using this Bill for political purposes. Their Members have been questioning the motives of everyone who speaks on this Bill from our Party.

All I want to say to Members of the New Democratic Party is that they are not the only ones who have a licence for caring in this country. I care and all Hon. Members care when they go home and visit senior citizens' homes and the New Horizon drop-in centres. We talk to the seniors and we know instinctively the contribution they have made to our country. I am ashamed to go home and say to our seniors that we know they will come to grips with this matter and take part in the program, that they know their responsibility. I say we have a responsibility in this House to see that our senior citizens, the people who contributed to our country, who built it and made it what it is today, do not want in their golden years. I plead with Hon. Members: "For God's sake, let this amendment go through".

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few remarks on Bill C-131. For us in this Party the issue is very simple. The Government is introducing limitations on the indexing of Old Age Security to 6 per cent in 1983 and to 5 per cent in 1984. The immorality of this becomes very clear when you compare this Bill, which takes money away from our senior citizens, with the appointment today of Michael Pitfield to the Senate.

The New Democratic Party is opposed to this Bill. We are opposed because we have a long history of struggle for decent pensions. What we want to see is some pension reform that will help our seniors have a better life, not something that will project them backwards.

For us the issue is simple, but for the Tories the issue is not so simple. If we go back to last summer when the Government introduced its six and five program, the Leader of the Tory Party said that this was a step in the right direction. The Tories are hesitating now when they see where the next step leads. The Tories are doing a hesitation waltz with the Government.

It was interesting to listen to the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) who was, ostensibly, opposing this Bill also and supporting the amendment. But he could not do so without introducing a few gratuitous comments about the whole failure of the idea of redistribution, nor without suggesting that somehow seniors should be able to look after themselves a little bit better on their own.

The reason for this Bill was given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). She said that the budget takes as a given fact that Canadians who are not in need are entirely prepared to share in serious sacrifices which are required to bring our country out of the economic crisis. In that short statement there are two serious misconceptions. The first is when she suggests that seniors who will be affected by this Bill are not in need. Second, she pretends that this mean, chiselling act directed at the elderly will somehow help to bring Canada out of its economic crisis.

In one respect the Minister's statement is right on. It finally recognizes that Canada is indeed in an economic crisis. I think it was President Nixon—it could have been Gerald Ford—who a few years ago visited a large American university where the agricultural faculty had managed to raise a 75-pound turkey. This poor, helpless creature had been forced-fed with hormones, steroids and other additives until it was so big that it could no longer walk. It could hardly stand. Nixon looked at the bird for a while and then reached deep into his bag of cliches and came up with this one: "This is the sort of thing that has made America great".

In a funny kind of a way, there is truth to that. This helpless 74-pound turkey symbolizes the Canadian economy as it has developed over the last few years under the Liberal Government. The way the Canadian economy has developed has made America great. Over the last few decades, the Liberals have adopted an economic policy through which they felt they could manage to provide welfare measures and redistributive measures, such as the Family Allowance, Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, by having an economy which was based, first, on the export of our natural resources and, second, on branch plant manufacturing.

Today that 74-pound turkey can no longer support even its own weight. With two million people unemployed, goods and services are no longer being produced, tax revenues are down and the deficit climbs. What is the Government's response to that? The response is to cut back on the money that would have been paid in Family Allowances, in public servants' pensions and in Old Age Security.

These measures represent an insidious erosion and undermining of the right of seniors to live in dignity and to share in the wealth that our society has created and which they have helped to create. The New Democratic Party has a policy of full support for the principle of full indexation. Indexation is a very basic principle. It simply means that seniors with pensions should be able to buy the same basket of groceries in 1983 that they could buy with their pension in 1982. Bill C-131 will not make that possible because it says that regardless how high inflation goes—and no one expects it will stay as low as 6 per cent—pensions cannot increase by more than the 6 per cent factor.

It is important for us to realize that cutting back on pensions will not do anything for our economic crisis. There are no new jobs in this proposal. There is no increased production, nor is there any increased tax revenue. There is only a minuscule, miserly reduction in the $23.6 billion deficit. If the Government took the $105 million it claims this proposal will save over the next two years and applied the $105 million to this year's deficit, it would reduce the deficit from $23.6 billion to $23.5 billion. Our senior citizens are being punished. I suggest that rather than solving the economic crisis, Bill C-131 will make it worse.

In my riding, which comprises the southern part of Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands, which is one of the more attractive places to live in Canada, there are some 11,000 people over the age of 65 who receive Old Age Security. I presume that roughly half of them do not get the Guaranteed Income Supplement. This means that between 5,000 and 6,000 senior citizens in my riding will receive less next year under Old Age Security than they would if the Government was not pushing this legislation through the House. At a time when our forest industry on Vancouver Island is reeling from massive unemployment, the income of senior citizens is the only factor that promotes any kind of economic stability in our area. The majority of these people have modest incomes.

As I said, Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands, are good areas to retire and many pensioners were able to get modest homes. They do not have to live in extreme poverty in most cases because of the past struggles of people like the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Seniors do live in poverty in the large cities but this is not true in most cases in our area. However, very few are in a situation where they do not need to count the nickels and dimes and dollars very carefully every day in order to have enough at the end of the month to meet their expenses. This Bill will make it that much more difficult for them to meet those expenses each month.

This is an insidious Bill because its effects will not be noticed immediately. Slowly but surely it will undermine the income of these people and of seniors who will follow to the point where they will have a lower place in the economic spectrum than they already occupy. We want to see their position improved, not degraded.

It is estimated that even with 10 per cent and 9 per cent inflation which has been estimated to occur next year and the year after, approximately $300 will be taken from seniors over the next two years. This is money which they should receive in order to keep up with inflation. The Government has said that inflation is coming down and that we will be living in the wonderful world of six and five. If it is true that inflation is really coming down to 6 per cent as the Government pretends, then Bill C-131 is unnecessary.

It is a fact that pensions have followed inflation. The whole idea of indexation is to allow pensions to follow inflation. It is completely wrong to suggest that pensions themselves have fueled inflation. On this basis, cutting pensions is in no way the answer to fighting inflation. Bill C-131 is penalizing the very people who need the money the most if inflation is not reduced to 6 percent. They are the very people who are having the most difficulty keeping up with inflation. This Bill is forcing the victims of inflation to pay for it. Therefore, this Bill is either unnecessary or unjust.

We want to stress that by capping indexation for the next two years, the Government is not only reducing pensions in 1983 and 1984, but also reducing the base on which future indexation will take place. For this reason we support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), which will include the amount to be lost from the pension base in 1983 and 1984 in the base for 1985 and following years. In other words, the purpose of this amendment is to ensure that even though the incomes of seniors will be reduced in 1983 and 1984, the base will continue to be built up by full indexation so that if and when indexation is restored in 1985 it will be operating on a full base.

Perhaps we should question whether there will be a reintroduction of full indexation. When one considers that this Bill is essentially doing nothing for the economy in terms of cutting back the deficit or making money available for other projects, perhaps the Government is simply introducing six and five now as the thin edge of the wedge and we will see a gradual and continuing cutback of the amount of money that is paid out through Old Age Security. On that basis, this Bill is mostly regressive.

The Government has pointed out that people who are in the lowest income brackets would have their Guaranteed Income Supplement increased by the amount that Bill C-131 takes away from their Old Age Security. While this is a positive measure, it involves two serious shortcomings. First, it penalizes most heavily those seniors who are just above the line in terms of having an income which disqualifies them from the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Bill C-131 cuts their pensions and they cannot make it up through the provisions to beef up the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Second, this Bill, through its provisions to compensate for the Guaranteed Income Supplement, signifies a growing reliance on the means test. When old age pensions were first introduced in the late twenties, they involved a very stingy and chiselling type of means test. We eliminated that test and we do not want to see it reintroduced.

At present, more than 50 per cent of Old Age Security recipients also receive all or part of the Guaranteed Income Supplement which involves a form of means test. As a result of eroding the Old Age Security, Bill C-131 will force more people into the economic situation where they need the income supplement with the attendant means test. This means that the Government is moving away from the whole concept of universality. In future when the Minister of National Health and Welfare speaks about universality, when Canadians hear her they will hear her in much the same way they hear President Reagan speak about peace, Gerald Bouey speak about the problems of unemployment or the Tories speak about Party unity. In other words, they will hear these words as nothing more than lip service.

In conclusion, I suggest this Bill is not the answer. It penalizes our senior citizens and does nothing for the economy. At a time when our economy needs a transfusion of new blood, as it were, the Government comes in with medieval leeching practices, feeling that perhaps the answer to the sick economy is to draw more blood out of it. Over the next two years it will be taking $105 away from senior citizens.

• (1650)

The answer should be found, perhaps, in a new doctor, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) hesitated to suggest the other night. Yes, we do need a new doctor. We are tired of being leeched. We would like to see a doctor who could do something to build up the health of the economy instead of tear it down. We need a Government which will get our economy moving and provide opportunities for people to work again, thus providing revenue to the Government. When that happens, we will see our deficit come under some kind of control, and the Government will not have to penalize our senior citizens as a phony excuse for saying that it is doing something about the economy.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-30, an Act to amend certain Acts in relation to Canada Day, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Dantzer (p. 21795).

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to make some comments with regard to Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Many of my colleagues have addressed the House on this matter and, I believe, have made very salient comments indeed on this Bill. I think it is now time that Hon. Members of the governing Party participate in a lesson in history. In the early 1920s, some 63 years ago, a generation of young Canadians, men and women, were celebrating victory in World War I, the first war to end all wars. Unfortunately, their efforts in the late twenties, in the business of rebuilding the economy, suffered a great blow in the depression which followed. Those who were fortunate enough to survive began rebuilding from the virtual ashes of our country.

Then in the late thirties and early forties, they again answered the call to arms and defended our freedoms and rights in the trenches of Europe and the rest of the world. All that kept some of our soldiers sane were their dreams. They dreamed of coming back to their loved ones and settling down in homes of their own. They were prepared to give their lives for their rights to liberty and justice. They were the people who guaranteed us the rights we have today.

When the Second World War ended, it was supposed to end all wars. Returning veterans and their colleagues who had supported them at home once again set about the task of rebuilding. Our Governments since then have realized the importance these people played in developing the institutions and, indeed, the bureaucracies of today.

The social security system was set up to protect our aging nation builders. These people are the ones whose incomes do not deserve to be protected against inflation, as the Government is now telling them through this Bill. Recently I had a conversation with a retired Department of National Defence employee. He was indignant that he will be hit twice by this Government's last gasp efforts to play the role of the Grinch who stole Christmas. His comment was; "I worked 40 years to be robbed".

May I remind the House that most senior citizens today are quite a happy group of individuals. According to a recent survey, what they prize most is housing. Some say that this is because they spend more time indoors. I think it goes much deeper than that. The dream I mentioned of the soldier in the trenches was just to earn a living so as to own his own home for his family. This was the dream of all Canadians up until a few years ago when our population became so mobile. The current administration has stood idly by and allowed the cost of living to rise so rapidly that most younger Canadians have given up that dream. It existed, however, for all or more of our working lives.

Those who now own their own homes or are in comfortable accommodation are not expecting overnight solutions to our economic problems. They know from experience that there are no magical spells by which any Government can cure a depression. People realize, too, that there are more senior citizens per capita in Canada today than ever before. The baby boom was turned into the senior boom. They know there is strength in numbers.

The Government must admit that it is not keeping inflation down to the proposed 6 per cent and 5 per cent, partially due to the cost of imported foods which comprise a great portion of the goods in our shopping carts. This is uncontrollable and also partially due to the fact that senior citizens themselves have allowed for some salary increases above 6 per cent or 5 per cent. Senior citizens are quite willing to pay their share to keep the country, which they built, growing. They have done so in their working years and do not expect any less now. Now, however, they are forced to accept cost of living adjustments below that allowed, in some cases, to federal Government employees.

I would like to refer back to the example of the shopping cart in the grocery store to which we must all go once a week or more. Our lifestyle has changed because we are now importing far more food than we did years ago. It has become very essential in the diet of senior citizens. They are being penalized as a result of the worth of the Canadian dollar in comparison to the American dollar, the cost of importation, the cost of handling, transportation and oil prices.

We must also remember what the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) said yesterday with respect to a number of senior citizens. He said that the fact is that in the last ten years the number of Canadians under the age of 20 years has dropped by over 700,000 and the number of Canadians over the age of 60 years has grown by 800,000. We are seeing a basic change in the age of the population in Canada. This is an important factor in how we consider the programs and social needs of Canada in the coming years.

One of the major social problems we face is the persistence of poverty. At this point in time, at least, 15.5 per cent of our population can be described, on the basis of certain income levels, as being below the poverty line. Must senior citizens be forced to accept such low cost of living adjustments? This they might well pass off as being the antics of a Government which will go eventually. Many others have come and gone in their lifetime. They are constantly reminded, however, of the inequities demonstrated by the Government. The Government has estimated that it will save approximately $100 million by deindexing Old Age Security payments, yet its deficit is 230 times greater. Obviously, such saving will not even be seen, it will be spent so fast.

My constituents from Lindsay, Keswick, Haliburton and many other parts of my vast riding have written to me many times concerning metric conversion. I defy the Minister responsible to prove to me that the cancellation of the metric conversion program would not result in a much greater saving to the public purse than will be accomplished by Bill C-131, and with much less harmful effects. It is my opinion that being forced to metric conversion is one of the easiest ways to confuse people in the marketplace.

• (1700)

Metric conversion, as I said earlier, is very, very confusing, not just in the gasoline stations but in the grocery business itself. By forcing people to go metric on January 1, the cost of the scales and the other measures which will follow will certainly add to the cost of the shopping basket. Regardless of what some people would like us to believe, this is a very costly experience for Canada. I have been told that it has cost us over $1 billion thus far in the implementation of the metric system, and what are we going to gain? Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his campaign promises in the late election, promised that he would wrestle inflation to the ground. Congratulations, Mr. Prime Minister.

Mr. Whelan: It is halfway down now.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): It is coming down, I grant you that, but it is taking a long time. Using our economy as a ring mat, the Prime Minister claims to have brought inflation below the double-digit level. The ring mat has been our economy and it is now torn to shreds.

With this Bill, the Government is putting our senior citizens, the builders of our nation, in the same position as its intended foe—down for the count. I pray that the Government will see the error of its ways before the House resumes in January. If not, the Prime Minister will be carving his mark in history as "Pierre, the Terrible", the Prime Minister who forgot his heritage and destroyed his ancestors.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity on the last day of the session of the House before the Christmas recess to take part in this debate on Bill C-131. I would like to make some comments by way of rebuttal of some remarks which have already been made, and indicate where I feel some of the error lies with this piece of legislation. I make that comment having regard to the fact that I was one of the first Members on this side of the House who supported what has been referred to as the "six and five solution". I do not know that one should automatically assume that, when a piece of legislation is presented to the House which has merit and happens to have contained therein a particular formula, a simple snapping of the fingers to resurrect that formula when applied to any other piece of legislation should result automatically in someone concluding that Hon. Members will support the legislation in a sort of "knee-jerk" reaction to the Bill which is introduced.

Very clearly, Bill C-124, which began the process, was a Bill designed to meet a certain set of circumstances which affected, among other people, Members of this House of Commons. Members of the House have been entitled to an indexed form of remuneration increase on an annual basis, and I found it extremely difficult to sit here and vote in favour of a constant increase in my salary as a Member of Parliament while my constituents suffered from lack of employment.

I also found it quite easy to justify the imposition of a form of restrained growth in salaries for members of another privileged class, the Public Service, and there is no doubt but that they are. They have an opportunity to continue to serve the public without the same general fears of possible loss of employment which are imposed upon members of the private sector. We have seen hundreds of thousands, possibly two million of those persons who no longer have employment at all, and yet within the Public Service we know that security of employment must be given some monetary value. Quite frankly, I felt no hesitation at all in supporting Bill C-124.

I do, however, have substantial reason for opposing Bill C-131, despite the fact that it also has a six and five formula appended to it. The reason is very simple. We are dealing in this piece of legislation with an element of society which has withdrawn from the work force. We are dealing with a group of Canadians who no longer are in a position to make up in the long run what might be lost today. We are dealing with people who have paid their dues to society, who have contributed to the very essence of our nation, who have contributed to the fact that we are here today in this place, free and secure. These are the people to whom we, as a society, have an obligation, and that obligation transcends any consideration of monetary restraint. They are indeed, in my mind, the most deserving class in society to whom we, as Members of Parliament, should pay tribute for their contribution to our society, and regard in a special fashion when it comes to dealing with rights to which they have become entitled.

In terms of the actual consequences of this legislation, we were advised just this week that the inflation rate has declined and that decline now is measured at 9.8 per cent on an annual basis. The income increase under this Bill is fixed at 6 per cent. So we are now looking at a 3.8 per cent decline in an increase. I use those words because that in fact is what it is in terms of today's dollars. But in terms of constant dollar valuation, there is clearly a reduction in the purchasing power of those pension payments which are made available to our senior citizens as a consequence of this legislation. For that reason, and for the reasons I have earlier described in terms of our obligation to this segment of society, I am opposed to the Bill and will vote against it.

I would like to mention some of the concerns which I have had with respect to the Government's defence of this legislation. I recognize that it is part of a program designed to dilute the expectation for constant inflationary increases in society. The Government also regards it in some way as an indication of its grappling with the control of the public purse, hopefully achieving a reduction in federal expenditures, and they have done so at the cost of a particular segment of society, as I have indicated. If you analyze the growth of the inflationary pressures, you find that the chief culprit is not simply the Government. It is Government in the sense that one of the large component factors in the increase in the consumer price index is the cost of energy. Cost of energy is reported to have accounted for an 18.2 per cent increase over the year. With that kind of an increase, controlled by Government, one can well understand how there is a reduction, as reported in the press recently, of the inflationary pressures. That reduction is retarded because Government is still intruding in a fashion which in itself creates the very inflationary pressures they have come to blame on society at large.

• (1710)

We are also aware of the recent increases in excise taxes imposed on those evil products of tobacco and alcohol, taxes which were not restricted to six and five but which are running at almost 14 per cent. Now, I know that not everyone needs a smoke or a drink, but I find it a little hypocritical for the Government to come before the public and say: "We expect you to do your part, while we do not do ours". An example is the Government saying that it has begun to restrain the demand upon the public purse, yet we see the kind of treatment accorded another group of special people, the senior bureaucrats, and in particular a certain Senator Michael Pitfield who a short time ago was awarded a special pension arrangement which will see the extraction from that same public purse of some $100,000 over a period of years to be added to Mr. Pitfield's pension plan.

Mr. Jarvis: He is an independent Senator.

Mr. Gamble: I can understand that is the kind of designation they have given to him. However, having regard to the way in which he served so faithfully the current Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), he has been rewarded in a fashion which I am sure most Canadianss would like to tap into but which is not available to them, certainly not to the people affected by Bill C-133. The Government suggests it is about to restrain its expenditures and endeavours to convince Canadians that the process is one which will achieve a reduction in inflation for the benefit of all Canadians, and then turns around and says except, of course, with respect to the privileged few in society. For them they are prepared to make some different arrangements. Those are the kinds of things which surely make the public sit up and take notice and regard Government actions with a great deal of disbelief.

Now, I listened with some interest to the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) when he commented disparagingly upon the part our Party has played with respect to this legislation. I say that our Party has been very straightforwd in its condemnation of what must be regarded as special treatment for special people by the Government. That special treatment should be accorded to those most deserving in society, that group I have just identified.

I find it rather interesting that the NDP has consistently adopted a policy of spending money, indexing everything, without regard to the source of funds. Their lack of recognition of the need to take that into account is clearly best demonstrated by the public recognition of that failure and their regard among the general public as most recently displayed in the public opinion polls. If I could pass on advice to Members of that Party who wish to in any way enhance the public's view of their performance, let me suggest they be more reasonable and sensible and account for the fact that they are constantly deciding to spend and index without paying any attention to the consequences of their actions. I believe that once you spend a dollar, the dollar cannot be spent again unless you borrow it and pay interest on it. That is a policy which has, unfortunately, been adopted by the Government.

Now, last month there were two Bills before this House, Bill C-129 and Bill C-130, dealing with rather substantial amounts of money. The first Bill dealt with the advancing of no less than $1.7 billion to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and I heard not one whisper from Members to my left as to how that money might well have been redirected to helping the very people whom they are now complaining are not receiving these funds. Members of this Party spoke about that, about how this money was leaving Canada for international financial institutions without any hope of control by this Parliament or the Government over how the money was to be spent. How that money was to be spent was beyond our control. I could not conceive for one moment why Members of the NDP were not jumping up and down in their place demanding that that subtantial sum be directed to the payment of the indexing of pensions plans for senior citizens.

Immediately following that Bill's passage, we were confronted with Bill C-130 which provided for the incurring of an obligation in the aggregate amount of $117 million. In this case the funds were to be paid at the discretion of the Government to a number of international banks. Once again, there was not one whimper of objection from the NDP. The policy that that Party has regretfully followed is best illustrated by the fact that when money is being spent, regardless of for what, they favour it. However, when there is a curtailment in expenditures with a view to controlling the deficit and reducing the cost of financing the national debt, the Members of that Party consistently clamour against the legislation. It makes it extremely difficult for a prudent public to be able to distinguish between what actions they adopt as correct and what actions they adopt as incorrect.

I favour the position of opposing legislation which has the effect, unreasonably, of extracting funds from the Consolidated Revenue Fund which will not benefit Canadians. I favour legislation where we have a good moral or business reason for favouring the expenditure. In this case, Mr. Speaker, I certainly favour the position of opposing this specific piece of legislation encompassed within the confines of Bill C-131, for the reasons I have given.

• (1720)

In opposing this legislation I am perfectly consistent with the views I have expressed about helping Canadians first. Among those Canadians we should help are those who have served their country long, who are no longer in a position to contribute in the same fashion as others to their welfare and have become entitled to special protection from this place and other Canadians.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting here for several weeks listening to this debate and it behooves me to try to respond a little to some of the things that have been said. When we keep hearing people from both sides talking about how much of a Grinch we are, how we are so tight and cruel and so on, I have to respond because I think the facts are just not in that order. That is not the situation. This Government, one that I have been involved with for ten years, has been very, very supportive of Canadians in general, and particularly those Canadians who need more support than other Canadians. To say this is untrue is, to my mind, totally false and quite hypocritical.

I particularly find hypocrisy in the Tory Party very difficult to accept. I have heard Members from the other side rant and rave about Government spending and talk about their great model. I remember one of the Members from British Columbia and also the Opposition critic for finance preach that Reaganomics is the answer. They said that this was the approach that we should all take, that we should get Governments off our backs, and they talked about the great economic views of the President of the Unites States, views that we have come to know as Reaganomics.

I would just like to refer to a couple of articles dealing with Reaganomics, because this is the argument that has been made about this Government and its spending. It is an argument that, if the Tory Party believes in it, means they are really hypocritical in dealing with this Bill.

The first piece was from Houston dated June 15 and appeared in the New York Times. It says:

> President Reagan returned to the Oval Office today for the first time since the start of his European trip two weeks ago but then flew here this afternoon for a rousing defence of his economic policies and some partisan blasts at his critics.
>
> The occasion for Mr. Reagan's rally was a $1,000-a-plate dinner for 3,500 cheering, applauding Texans.

The next article is dated a few weeks later, July 19, from Newsweek, as follows:

> Last April the Texas Department of Human Resources issued a pamphlet entitled "Dead Broke in Texas?" warning newcomers not to expect much in the way of public assistance. It points out that the average welfare and food-stamp recipient in the state gets only $34 a month under each program and declares that qualification requirements are much "stiffer" than in other states.

That, I think, tells us a little about the Tories' way of speaking when they espouse Reaganomics. A one thousand dollar-a-plate dinner and 3,500 people show up—and the average welfare recipient in that city was receiving $68 a month!

It is in that context that I have to stand up and defend what we are doing. There are two basic pieces to this legislation, Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and Bill C-133, that have to be understood. The first piece has to be that in June of this year we put into play a program called six and five. It would not be of any value to have a program if we were going to say that we were going to have six and five for this but we were not going to have six and five for that; that we are going to make all kinds of exceptions, but somewhere along the line the program is called six and five. We hope to have a 6 per cent inflation rate and we are going to adjust Government spending to a 6 per cent inflation rate in the coming year and 5 per cent the following year.

To me, if we decided that we would exempt this group and that group, we would do two things. One is that we would deny the six and five; and, number two, if we were to say we will include this group but leave out that little group, then we would get away from a notion that I think is very important—universality. I will come to that later. I want to defend universality which is part of this kind of thinking here.

The second reason I think it is important that we have a total type of program and why this is not going to create a lot of hardship is simply that the inflation rate, in my opinion, is going down much faster than people believe. I do not for a minute say that six and five was the only or even the principal cause of this. I do say that the inflation rate in this country is coming down at a faster pace than people believe.

We unfortunately have a method of arriving at an inflation rate which I think is totally inadequate. It basically deals with the inflation rate in the past rather than the future. The Americans have a different system in that they tend to project more into the future and take a single month and annualize it more than we do. When we say the inflation rate this month is 9.8 per cent, we are talking about the month of December through November in 1981/1982; so in that inflation factor we are carrying several months, four, five or six months when the rate was in excess of 11 per cent, and in some of those months in excess of 12 per cent. The actual inflation rate since the announcement on June 28 of the six and five program is about 7.5 per cent, not 9.8 per cent as was announced last week.

One might say that if you annualize those 12 months you get 9.8 per cent; but the fact is that anyone who has looked at this thing at all realizes that there is a distinct decline in inflation rates, not just here but all around the world. Basically, we can expect this decline to get smaller.

One of the factors that would lead me to believe that there would be a further decline is that in that 7.6 per cent is included one of our two annual increases in energy rates. That is now completely built into these figures. We have had, as I say, roughly a 7.5 per cent inflation rate since the last budget.

To look at next year, there are certain other factors that would probably cause the inflation rate to drop below 6 per cent, the most significant being the energy factor itself. We are coming very close to a situation where we are at 75 per cent of world price. We have some additional rounds built in, but these rounds will disappear if the world price comes down. The world price is conceded to be $40, but the spot price is considerably below that. One could expect the world price of oil to decline considerably and that we may not have any significant increases in our price. As a matter of fact, in early January one could expect a 1.5 cent per litre decline in oil prices, which was just announced by the Government. That decline may actually represent the major shift in the whole year.

• (1730)

We can see the evidence in terms of wages and other things. For example, when I go into a grocery store to buy meat today, I am paying less than I was paying some months ago. This varies from time to time, but certainly there is evidence that the inflation rate is coming down. Therefore, the factor about which we talk when we say that people will lose a great deal will not exist because the rate will come down.

I have some sympathy with the last Hon. Member who said that, if the rate was to be 6 per cent or less, why do we need the Bill? We brought it in for one particular reason—to create the psychological climate which would cause this to happen. Once one moves in that direction, one follows through.

I am not convinced that the months of discussion on these three Bills was all that necessary, because in general people on fixed incomes who will receive the 6 per cent will be as well off as they were when they received 11 per cent. I say this because the inflation rate is coming down. If I were a betting man, I would bet very strongly that the inflation rate next year—and certainly going into the new year—will be down below 6 per cent. That idea can be justified economically on many grounds. One should look in that direction and see, therefore, that the Bill will not do damage to individuals.

There is another factor which I think we should be debating. I have been bothered that a great deal of the debate around here has been centered on a very small fraction of the inflation rate; probably one-half of 1 per cent or even no percentage point. The debate has been on that rather than the whole notion of universality. When I talked about the Reagan administration and the Tory defence of Reaganomics over the last year or two, I used this example to show that we as a Government have not contemplated and were not contemplating any move which would take away the factor of universality.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Does the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) want to ask a question?

Mr. Deans: No, Mr. Speaker. I am rising on a point of order, if I may.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the Hon. Member's comments and I do not want to detract from them in any way, so I will be very brief in what I want to ask. I wonder if I might, on a point of order, ask the Acting Government House Leader whether there has been any opportunity to reconsider Bill C-141, whether it might be possible, even at this late hour on this day, to consider bringing it forward now for passage, or whether we have again missed the opportunity to deal with this crucial and important matter.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Minister of Justice indicated that we were prepared to deal with all remaining stages of the Bill today without debate. That is still our position, so the question should really be asked of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we can see what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is doing—

Mr. Deans: We are just trying to get the Bill passed.

Mr. Nielsen: —and who is playing politics with this matter. Our position was made quite clear in a very generous offer to the Government today.

With respect to what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain referred to as a lost opportunity—

Mr. Deans: I did not say that.

Mr. Nielsen: I think he will find those words in the "blues"—I might remind him that the Canadian Human Rights Commissioner has publicly said that as long as that legislation is passed before the session ends, he is happy; and so are we.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a further point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I think the procedure of interrupting the Hon. Member who has the floor is rather unusual. Of course, the Chair is in the hands of the House.

Mr. McRae: I would be glad to yield.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I appreciate that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan cedes the floor to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to allow the Hon. Member to complete his remarks, if there would be time after them to deal with another matter which will require us to revert to motions. I did not want to see the Hon. Member interrupted twice, but if there will be time following the completion of his remarks to deal with the matter, I will not interrupt him now.

Mr. Deans: Do it now.

Mr. Nielsen: It will only take a second.

Task Force on Indian Self-Government

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to proceed with whatever it is he wishes to do?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I seek leave of the House to revert to motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent for the House to revert to motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, there is unanimous consent for the purpose of presenting a motion dealing with the setting up of a task force on Indian self-government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I gather, then, that there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: It will not be necessary to read the balance of it.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Dantzer (p. 21795).

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have given up a couple of minutes to have the foregoing motion adopted, because it is extremely valuable. I hope good things come out of it, as I know good things have come out of the Committee which has been working on it of late.

To return to Bill C-131 and the amendment before the House, the notion of universality has not been debated to this point. Of course, I am speaking about Bill C-131 specifically, but generally my remarks apply to the other three Bills. Universality is the fundamental issue. There is a large, particularly vocal segment of our population in particular industries that would like to see the notion of universality dropped. Some people would like to see it dropped in all cases; some groups would like to see it dropped in certain cases. In one sense they see that Government money goes into these kinds of things. Those who think that the Government can cut its spending without touching big programs are foolish, because basically 70 per cent of our money is transferred to other Canadians. The big areas in this regard are Old Age Security, Family Allowances and other major expenditures of Government. This is the case for all Governments, whether they be provincial or federal.

The point of universality is that we all benefit from a universal program. It seems to me that this is a fundamental matter with old age pensions. We have to say to Canadians that everybody is involved, whether or not they are well-to-do. If they are well-to-do and have large incomes, we can tax some of it back; but the point is that 90 per cent to 95 per cent of Canadians base their future on the old age pension. They base it on what they can see, on the OAS and the GIS. The supplement is not universal, but they base their futures upon the basic pension which is part of their retirement program. It is extremely fundamental that it be retained.

It is the same when we are talking about the Family Allowance. Some people need it very badly. We have arranged that in terms of the Child Tax Credit. The basic situation is that most families, particularly when one member of the family is at home, usually the woman, find that this is the major source of income and require it to maintain the family and to give the woman some freedom. It is extremely important these programs be retained in their original shape.

In a Party convention here a month ago, someone praised me for speaking in terms of Family Allowance universality because it was necessary, and then said: "But, of course, I think there are a lot of senior citizens who do not need it". It is that kind of thinking that puts the programs in some quandary. Sure, there are some senior citizens who do not need the old age pension, and sure there are some families who do not need the Family Allowance. But if you are going to have these kinds of social service programs, you have to keep them in all cases. The real pressures that are on us today to get rid of universality because it is not necessary are what really concerns me. I wish we had spent far more time supporting the need to keep these programs in a sound way and in play and not to take away parts of them. I wish that is what the debate were about rather than whether or not we are dealing with a six and five or a seven and six, and so on, which seems to be what we are talking about most of the time.

Mr. Hovdebo: Are you going to vote against this Bill?

Mr. McRae: I believe that we as Canadians have a sound program. There are areas in which I would like to see more done. I would like to see universality of the portability of our pension programs expanded. That will be another debate that will occur here in the next few months. I think much more can be done by the Government than has been done to provide Canadians with a decent retirement income, an income on which they can depend.

In closing, I have to say I do not fear these Bills, partly because they are in the name of universality—we have made sure they are for everyone—and partly because I do not think Canadians are going to suffer from any of these Bills simply because inflation is coming down. In the meantime, I think it is important that we all get out and support the kinds of programs we have in place, improve them—there is no question they can be improved—and maintain the notion of universality. Let us not hack away at these Bills.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member who has just spoken entertain a question?

Mr. McRae: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, how can one expand universality without going into the galactic and cosmic? I thought universality was all-embracing. Perhaps the Hon. Member could explain.

Mr. McRae: Sorry, I missed a word, Mr. Speaker. I heard the word "galactic" and then a word disappeared.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It was cosmic.

Mr. McRae: This is a semantic question. I assume universality means that in general a program is available to everyone, regardless of income. There are several programs of that kind in existence on which I depend. We also move away from universality, I admit, when we put out a guaranteed income supplement. I deplore that. To what extent? How does one get enough money to do all of these things? Therefore, there are some people who need more support and we have to do it that way. But still, I do not think there is any reason why we should abandon universality in the kind of programs we are talking about. For instance, I support the Child Tax Credit because essentially that is money going to very low-income families. But I also support the notion that all families should receive the basic Family Allowance.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a certain amount of sadness to speak on this Bill to increase the number of people who will be below the poverty line. I would like to have given the pensioners of Canada a better gift than this just before Christmas.

Before I go into my remarks on the Bill, I want to follow up on the position taken by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). He spent a considerable amount of time on universality, which he says the Government supports. I maintain that the Government has eroded the universality idea in every approach it has made in the Bills the Government has put before the House through Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and Bill C-133. The Government has failed in all of these Bills. It has failed on possibly the most important subject of universality, namely the subject of medicare. The Government has done this by allowing doctors to bill separately. The Government has allowed the undermining of the universality of medicare. The Government has made it selective as well as universal.

In Bill C-132, the Family Allowances Bill, the Government has also eroded the basic principle of universality. The Government has said: "Okay, everyone will get the Family Allowance, but we will also put in a Child Tax Credit". The Government is reducing the amount of universal Family Allowance and increasing the amount of the Child Tax Credit. The Government is plunking down on universality and is for selectivity. That is the basis under which the Government is operating.

Third, we are talking about the old age pension. The Old Age Security Act is a universal program. In this Bill, the Government is undermining and eroding that principle. The Government is reducing the amount of the Old Age Security, which is the universal part of the program, and it is increasing the effectiveness of the Guaranteed Income Supplement. I am not entirely against this, but if you are going to do nothing, doing it selectively is better than nothing. However, the basis of universality is being eroded by this Government right now. It is part of every Bill this Government has put forward in its series of six and five Bills.

The Bill before us is the one which limits the indexation of old age pensions to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. This is kind of an insidious Bill. The people being affected by it do not really know what is going to happen to them. The limitation does not start until January. We hope now it may even be February or March if we can keep the Government from passing it. Many seniors do not even realize that a cutback is coming. Seniors will still get their pension cheques, but unless they are very up to date, seniors will not know that they will not be getting as much as they should have been getting. The difference between the December cheque and the January cheque and the January and February cheque will be less than it should have been. If they were going to keep their purchasing power at the level it was in December, they should have been getting more.

This Bill will reduce their incomes by close to $300 over a two-year period. Unless the amendment is passed, which we will support while voting against the Bill, the base of the old age pension will be reduced from now on. Not only will those who only receive the old age pension have the base reduced, but those receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement as well will be affected because their pensions will be lower in the future. Over one million pensioners will be directly affected and unless compensation is provided for the Guaranteed Income Supplement to a greater extent, all old age pensioners will be affected by this Bill.

Before I proceed to my main area of concern, I would like to return to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble). He talked about the so-called financial responsibility of the New Democratic Party since it has not been in power federally. I suggest that in the Province of Saskatchewan, where there has been either a CCF or NDP Government for approximately 38 years, when the NDP was in power during the last 11 years it did not have a substantial deficit. It had probably the most responsible fiscal policy of all Governments in Canada.

This year there is a Conservative Government is Saskatchewan which has added a $220 million deficit to the people of Saskatchewan. That is more than the total accumulated deficit of Saskatchewan Governments for the last 77 years. The Progressive Conservative Government accomplished this in one year. That is an example of the fiscal responsibility that the Hon. Member for York North was talking about.

It is interesting to note that the most negative reaction to all three of these Bills has come from the National Council of Welfare, which is a direct adviser to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). The Minister said on June 29:

> The budget fully protects the lowest income Canadians and the working poor.

The Council issued a statement repudiating those remarks. It said:

> We disagree. The June budget social policy aspects will adversely affect thousands of low income Canadians.

We have seen how well the Minister accepts the advice of that group which advises her.

Another critique on the effects of the budget was issued by the Canadian Council on Social Development. This is another group that is well qualified to make statements on the effects this kind of legislation will have on Canadians, particularly low-income Canadians. That group stated on July 26:

> The budget contains many negative measures that will cause hardship and suffering to many Canadians who do not have the resources to protect themselves.

This comment and the previous comment about the budget were made by organizations who feel themselves responsible to outline the effects of this legislation.

In the face of this massive repudiation, one would think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would heed those remarks. These were remarks from two of the foremost national welfare agencies in Canada which were speaking against the budget from which these Bills arise. How can the Minister in all conscience face the House of Commons when she knows that the people who advise her and have the best insight into the effects of this legislation are telling her that it is wrong? Her programs have been torn to shreds. Her important constituency advisers have repudiated her, including the one appointed by the Government. Her defence to her own program has been thoroughly discredited. She has nothing left to lose in terms of credibility.

The only universality being practised by Members in the Government benches is their urge to cling to power. That urge to stay in power is the universal feeling the Government Party continuously clings to.

We can examine the results of this Government's attempt to stay in power. We should consider the arguments made by those two agencies, the National Council of Welfare and the Canadian Council on Social Development. If we look at their remarks on these Bills, we can see that they point out that a single pensioner can lose the Guaranteed Income Supplement if they have an income of $6,123. Once a pensioner earns that amount, the Guaranteed Income Supplement is lost. These Councils also point out that a pensioner who earns $9,200 yearly will lose the maximum of $388 by the end of the restraint period. These peole will be living on incomes which are below the poverty line. Nothing that the Government says or does will help them climb above that poverty line. Even those who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement are living below the poverty line at this time by $500.

Regardless of what is said about the effects of this Bill, it will ultimately take food, heat, clothing and other amenities away from these pensioners. They will be making the same kind of sacrifice as people earning larger incomes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! The Hon. President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: I thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to offer our sincere best wishes to all of the staff of the House of Commons, the Table, and to you, Mr. Speaker, your assistants, your superiors and our colleagues on both sides of the House. I hope that these holidays will be productive and that everyone will come back in to shape to end the session on January 17. On behalf of the Government, I therefore wish everyone a Merry Christmas.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the wishes extended by the President of the Privy Council. I want to thank all the staff of the House of Commons who have worked for us and our country. Finally, to all my colleagues on both sides of the House, I wish a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year!

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My colleagues are asking me to state my remarks in French, but I have decided to wait until next year to do that!

I also want to join with the Government House Leader and the spokesman for the Conservative Party in wishing to all who serve us and to those who are interested in what we do, and whom we serve, the very merriest of Christmases. I hope that in the year 1983 we will be able to better fulfil and live up to their expectations, that there will indeed be prosperity in the land, and that everyone who is currently faced with difficult times will find their wishes fulfilled.

I want to say to the people who serve the House of Commons that without them this place could never operate. Their contribution is one which provides the public of Canada with what it requires. I would say to Hon. Members on all sides that we in the New Democratic Party hope that they enjoy the brief respite from the work of the House of Commons, that they will enjoy their time with friends and families and their visit with constituents, and that when they return we will be able to get down to the business of the nation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: As far as House business is concerned, when we come back on January 17 I want to put on the record that we will be dealing with Bill C-133 on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Fiday and so on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before I read the adjournment motion, if I may I would like to thank all Hon. Members for the good wishes they extended to the Chair and all its occupants and reciprocate by wishing everyone in the House of Commons Hon. Members and staff, the season's greetings—

STANDING ORDERS AND PROCEDURE

OPERATION OF EXPERIMENTAL PROCEDURES

Madam Speaker: As Hon. Members know, a number of new procedures become effective today for an experimental period of one year.

There are two areas in particular where the discretion of the Chair will be a significant element in the successful operation of the provisional rules. The first of these areas is a fundamental one which will directly affect the debating practices of the House. The introduction of a ten-minute period during which questions may be asked and comments made concerning the speech of the Hon. Member who has just spoken is likely to bring about a radical change in the way in which our debates are conducted. These ten-minute periods will be available to Members during most key debates, including those on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Budget, allotted days and the second and third readings of Bills.

The second area is the procedure, provided for in provisional Standing Order 21, which will enable Hon. Members other than Ministers to make statements of not more than one and a half minutes on matters of concern. A period of not more than 15 minutes has been provided for this purpose preceding the Question Period. This procedure has replaced the former Standing Order 43 and will operate in quite a different way. It is intended to provide Hon. Members on all sides with an opportunity to voice serious issues of international, national or local concern. The element of "urgent and pressing necessity", which was theoretically a requirement under former Standing Order 43 and which was not particularly applied, has been removed. There will be no need to move a motion and the unanimous consent of the House will not be required in order to make a statement. That statement will last exactly one and a half minutes and the Speaker will interrupt any Member who goes beyond that time.

I do apologize in advance because I know it is hard for Hon. Members to know exactly what you can say in 90 seconds. I know that very well because I was trained on television and radio to say very important things in a very short period of time. It will take time for Hon. Members to get used to that and I apologize ahead of time, but I will interrupt everyone when 90 seconds have elapsed.

[Translation]

Since the application of these two rules of procedure will be largely left to the discretion of the Chair, I would like to inform the House of the general guidelines I intend to follow, unless the House should indicate otherwise.

First, a few words about the ten-minute question-and-answer period. During those ten minutes, the Chair will try, as much as possible, to give priority to Members representing a party other than that of the Member who made the speech. However, backbenchers on the Government side will also be entitled to ask questions following a speech by a Minister. The Chair will cut off any questions that are likely to be too long. Questions should be just that, and not speeches. If I may be allowed to give Hon. Members some advice, the shorter the question, the greater the element of surprise, and the easier it is to make things difficult for the Member to whom the question is directed. In my opinion, the best questions are short, but of course, Hon. Members must be the judge of that. In any case, the Chair will not allow Members to use this period to make speeches. Only questions will be allowed.

Furthermore, the ten-minute period should not be monopolized or almost monopolized by one and the same Member. The ten minutes are to be used for debate between a number of Members sitting in the House during this time. The period is to be reserved for questions and comments about the speech preceding this period. I believe that in this connection, the Chair will probably have to take a stricter approach as far as the principle of relevance is concerned. The Chair has always been fairly flexible in this respect, but when only ten minutes are allowed for debate, it is clear that both the questions and the speech itself must be relevant in the strict sense of the word. Questions will therefore have to be concise and preferably consist of one sentence. Need I add that questions should not be preceded by a long preamble.

The Chair will try to recognize as many Members as possible and will give the Member whose speech is the subject of questions or comments an opportunity to answer, as they are put, all questions raised during this ten-minute period but it may be more practical, for instance, to have the Member answer all questions during the last two minutes. In any case, we shall have to experiment a bit with the new procedure before we know exactly what the best solution is for all Members.

Now a few words about the guidelines I intend to follow with respect to Members' Statements. As far as possible, the Chair will try to apportion opportunities to make such statements as fairly as possible, among the various parties represented in this House. In fact, that is the intent of this parliamentary reform, that is to say, such statements should be allowed in direct proportion to the number of Members in each party in this House. I shall therefore try to provide for fair allocation of time for statements under the provisions of Provisional Standing Order 21. All questions raised must be on matters of concern, but they do not necessarily have to be matters of urgent and pressing necessity. The time set aside for Members' Statements should not be used to make personal attacks. I think that in the previous application of Standing Order 43, the Chair had to consider the content of the motion, but in this case, and in this particular form, Members are being given an opportunity to raise matters of concern. It is clear that personal attacks are not considered to be matters that should be raised and that are important, in the opinion of the House, at this point in the proceedings. This also applies to congratulations, and I always find it rather embarrassing, because usually, the people Members want to congratulate certainly deserve congratulations, and I give the impression of thinking that these people are most underserving of congratulations. So this is a little embarrassing for the Chair, but I think we should get some agreement on this. The reform is very clear about the matter that congratulations, however important they may be, have no place at this point of our parliamentary proceedings, and I therefore intend to interrupt any members who try to extend congratulations or recite poems or make jokes. I apologize to the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), whose poems I find quite delightful, but all this is over and done with, and I can no longer allow myself this kind of entertainment. In fact, I believe the Hon. Member was doing it for my sake, because he realized I enjoyed his efforts.

There will be no requirement to move a motion in order to make a statement under Provisional Standing Order 21, as we said before.

I trust that I have correctly interpreted the wishes of the House in preparing these guidelines, and in any case, the Chair will do everything in its power to apply them in the spirit in which the House has adopted its new rules—on an experimental basis, it is true—and that is why we shall be able to consult with one another as the proceedings of the House unfold under the new rules and find out whether they are still appropriate to our needs. Of course, the Chair is counting on the co-operation of all Members of this House in order to attain the desired results.

• (1110)

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I shall not waste the time of the House, but I should like to raise three points at this stage in the proceedings. First of all, I wish to thank you for your comments which I found very helpful in understanding how the House is going to operate. I shall now deal with my three points, one by one.

The first point I wish to raise concerns parliamentary procedure and the new rules that will be applied.

On November 29, 1982, the House passed a Government motion, which may be found on page 5400 of the Votes and Proceedings, proposing temporary changes in the Standing Orders appearing in Appendix C of the Third Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I shall not read the motion in its entirety, Madam Speaker. We all know what it entails, and as you said just now, the House must streamline and accelerate its proceedings. However, I should like to quote a paragraph which I feel is particularly relevant to my point of order. The paragraph in question appears on page 5400 of the Votes and Proceedings, and I quote:

> That the Clerk of the House be authorized and instructed to print revised and re-numbered Standing Orders of the House incorporating the temporary Standing Orders and any technical or consequential amendments necessary.

Madam Speaker, we all have a revised and renumbered copy of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. The new rules include the old and the new Standing Orders as well as certain technical and consequential amendments. Madam Speaker, with due respect, these words were not in the Committee's Report as tabled in the House. I wish to emphasize the words: technical and consequential amendments. If we carefully read Appendix C of the Third Report of the Special Committee, which is what we had to use during the Christmas holidays, we can imagine what could go on here, especially if we read it in both official languages, because in that way it is sometimes easier to understand the Standing Orders. If we do this, we see that it is quite clear the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) was very wise in the wording of his motion of November 29, 1982. I shall give two examples which gave me a bit of trouble. I am referring to Issue No. 7 of the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, where we read on page 7:39, in Standing Order 38A(1), in the French version, and I quote:

> 38A(1) Entre le 60e et le 90e jour de séance de la première session d'une Législature, lors d'un jour désigné par un ministre de la Couronne ou le 90e jour de séance si ce jour n'a pas été désigné, etc—

And in English, Madam Speaker:

[English]

> —sixty and ninety sitting days of the first session of a Parliament on a day designated by a Minister—

• (1115)

[Translation]

It is not clear in English, Madam Speaker, to say the least.

[English]

Before this first sixty—

[Translation]

In French, it does not say between the 60th and the 90th. The English does not correspond with the French version, and I suppose the Clerks noticed this and made a technical amendment.

At the bottom of the same page 7:39, we read that Standing Order 45(2) is deleted and the following substituted therefor:

(2) When a debate on any motion made between 2:00 o'clock p.m. (11:00 o'clock a.m. Fridays) and prior to the reading of an order of the day is adjourned or interrupted, etc—

Madam Speaker, perhaps you could explain the expression: between 2:00 o'clock p.m. and prior to the reading of an order of the day, since in my opinion it is somewhat confusing. I noticed when I read the Standing Orders, which were not distributed until last Friday, that a change was made to make things a bit clearer.

Madam Speaker, like myself and so many other Members, you have consulted with your advisers on the subject of these technical and consequential amendments. In any case, on Friday, January 14, all Members received a copy of the revised and amended Standing Orders. I do not know how many Members read them. This morning and yesterday, I had a chance to look through the new edition and to absorb the essential points.

Madam Speaker, my point of order arises first of all from the very little time allowed Members to prepare for the debate which, I have been told, is to start this afternoon on Bill C-133, and to do so according to the new Standing Orders. More specifically, I would like to ask the Chair to consider interrupting the debate temporarily, to give Members a chance to talk to the Clerks and find out whether this new edition of Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders contains a number of technical and consequential amendments which might, for many of us, provide some clarification. Madam Speaker, I do not know whether I may continue my comments and raise a point of order under Standing Order 75(9) under the old rules, which allowed a Member proposing an amendment to speak for forty minutes at the report stage. Standing Order 75(9) prescribes, and I quote:

When debate is permitted, no Member shall speak more than once or longer than ten minutes during proceedings on any amendment at that stage—

I was reading the wording of the Standing Order as it appeared in the issue of the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures.

Madam Speaker, that is clear: ten minutes at the report stage, but what worries me, and I wish you would provide some clarification on this point, is the practice according to which, for the purposes of debate, the Chair may combine amendments. If there are Members who, like me, for instance, have two amendments to propose at the report stage, I would like to know whether, if you combine them, I will have ten minutes to discuss two amendments which I consider important. Madam Speaker, I know that until today, there has been no ruling, no decision and no request made to the Chair about this matter. We used to have twenty minutes. Today, I only have ten. My speaking time is therefore very limited, and I wonder if you could inform the House whether, if you proceed according to former Standing Order 75(10)—I believe it provided for combining amendments or changes—you will give Members who are proposing more than one amendment a chance to speak for at least ten minutes to each amendment, even if the amendments have been combined.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, and this is the last point I wish to raise, I wonder whether you could perhaps give a ruling on the obligation for Members to present amendments to a bill at the report stage within twenty-four hours after the report is tabled. You may remember that on December 22, we adjourned at six o'clock. In my humble opinion, this was followed by a very long week-end, so that today, on January 17, we resumed debate at eleven o'clock this morning. Madam Speaker, I should therefore appreciate if you could inform the House whether the precedent set by Mr. Jerome in 1977 or 1978, which provided that in case of a week-end Members had until six o'clock on the following Monday to table amendments if a bill was reported to the House on a Friday, still applies. The week-end I am referring to started on Wednesday, December 22, but it was a very long week-end, since we are resuming our activities on January 17th, while we may still have some amendments to present. However, at this stage, Members cannot propose amendments to Bill C-133, which, according our information, will be called in a few minutes, unless you decide that we are entitled to propose amendments until six o'clock this evening.

• (1120)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, in order to assist you in any remarks that you might deem advisable to make with respect to the intervention, perhaps the Hon. Member is unaware of the meetings that took place between the Government House Leader, myself and the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, other officials and party representatives, together with the Clerk of the House, in order to examine the technical and consequential changes that have been proposed by the Clerk, under the authority which was given to him by the motion which was passed.

One matter in particular that was mentioned by the hon. gentleman who has intervened with respect to the reference to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization concerning the words "between 60 and 90 days" was picked up by the Clerk and he has, as I had requested, written to the clerk of the Special Committee that presented the third report in order to clarify the intention of the Committee. To my knowledge, the Clerk has not yet received a response to that letter. However, I am sure that these minor matters will be picked up as we go. The experimental changes, as were the last ones, will be the subject of interpretations and will present problems, both minor and major, as we proceed through the experimental period. I would suggest that if the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members are patient, they will find that these things will iron themselves out in time.

With respect to the other matter raised by the hon. gentleman concerning the filing of amendments at report stage, my colleague from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) will be raising that as a specific point of order, upon which no doubt the Chair will want to hear him and perhaps others as well before coming to a decision.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have assumed that the latter point made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is a point of order which would arise in the event the Government called Bill C-133. I presume that you will not be ruling on that matter but will be prepared to hear arguments after that matter has been called, if indeed it is called.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: In response to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I must point out that if there are discrepancies between the English and French texts, I feel confident that agreement will be reached so that both texts are identical, but I have the impression that the Clerk did ask for clarification about the two versions because it is obvious that they are not the same. It is a matter of knowing which of the two is official and he is waiting for an answer about that. We will simply have to wait. Should a practical problem arise in the House in the meantime, the Chair will make a temporary ruling until a reply is received from the Committee. Both versions of the Standing Orders must, of course, be identical. The Hon. Member quite properly pointed out that it is sometimes necessary to read both versions to get a clear understanding of the meaning.

However, I think I can rule immediately on the regrouping of the amendments introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. Under the old Standing Orders, the amendments were regrouped because they could be debated at the same time, that is, the subject matter of the amendments was the same and the Chair would acknowledge that amendments related to the same subject matter ought to be regrouped and I believe that the time allocated for amendments was 20 minutes, not 20 minutes for each regrouped amendment, but 20 minutes for the two, three or four amendments or for the series of amendments. Therefore, nothing is changed. Henceforth, as we used to proceed in the past, the allocated time will be ten instead of twenty minutes when the Chair regroups amendments, not ten minutes for each amendment so regrouped as the Hon. Member was perhaps trying to suggest.

As for the bill which may be called this afternoon, I personally believe that I would be well advised to wait until it is before the House, and if it should be necessary to raise points of order, Hon. Members will seek the floor and I will rule at that time. In my opinion, it is too early to debate that question.

• (1125)

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to bring to your attention and flag your comments with respect to Standing Order 21 which refers to statements by Members. I believe you stated that you would distribute time for those statements based on the percentage of Members in the House. While that might work out to be fair and equal as between the Government and the Opposition now under Standing Order 18(3), I wonder if you should perhaps reserve your ruling since a circumstance may arise in the future where a Government would have many more Members and the period for statements would then turn out to be a great advantage to the Government in power. I would think, rather, that the opportunity should be almost equal as between the Government and the Official Opposition, with any third parties or independent Members having a percentage share.

I would simply like you not to make a ruling on that at this time, or alternatively, if you are to make a ruling, for us to have some debate on that point.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the point that I wish to make is that if the decision is to be made that the distribution of time is to be made equally across the floor of the House, those Members which form the Cabinet should be deducted from the total number of Members.

Miss MacDonald: And Parliamentary Secretaries.

Mr. Deans: My hon. friend says Parliamentary Secretaries as well. I make the point that Cabinet Members do, in fact, have a time in the proceedings when they are able to make statements under "Statements by Ministers". In making the calculation I would urge you to consider that there already is a provision for Cabinet Ministers to make statements in the House, and therefore the total number of Cabinet Ministers should be deducted from the total number of Government Members.

Mr. Nielsen: And Parliamentary Secretaries.

Mr. Deans: My colleague from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) says Parliamentary Secretaries too. I suggest you should consider that in addition to the point I am making in order to set out clearly a degree of fairness for Members who are deemed to be other than Members of the Cabinet.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I wish to join with my colleague from the NDP in making a point of order with specific reference to the numbers. The rules provide that Cabinet Ministers shall not be included in the Members making statements for the very reason he has stated, that they have their opportunity. It is an opportunity that is not used, much to the dismay of our side. Cabinet Ministers do not take that opportunity to make statements.

In view of the ample opportunity for Parliamentary Secretaries to make statements in support of Bills during the adjournment debate and in speaking engagements, I would ask you also to consider whether they should be subtracted from the number of Government Members when you are making your calculation as to what is fair for the ordinary Members who want to bring a statement to the House that they feel important and should be made.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am opposed to any form of discrimination. I do not see why Parliamentary Secretaries and Cabinet Ministers should not be allowed to make statements during the 10 or 15 minutes preceding the Oral Question Period. Our new Standing Order refers to members, without excluding either Parliamentary Secretaries or cabinet ministers. Now, my hon. friend from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is saying that ministers for that matter have every opportunity to make statements following the Oral Question Period. I suggest his point is not valid, for if ministers are allowed to make statements at that time members of the opposition in turn may reply to them and ask questions. There can be no comparison. I respectfully suggest, therefore, that no distinction be made at that stage of our proceedings before the Oral Question Period with respect to Cabinet Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries.

• (1130)

[English]

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I just want to reiterate what the Government House Leader has said in response to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). As Parliamentary Secretary, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I had the right to stand and make a motion as well. I feel that perhaps your Honour should reserve ruling on this matter so that we would have an opportunity to research the situation further. I feel that as an elected Member of Parliament, even though I am now a Parliamentary Secretary, I should have the right and privilege of making a statement during the time allotted to Members.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Not to waste time, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member took the words right out of my mouth. I resent being treated as a second class Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: You earned it!

Mr. Flis: I am already denied the opportunity of asking questions in the House and taking part in standing committees, and I would resent it very much if I were—

Mr. Clark: You are paid $5,000 a year!

Mr. Flis: —denied the privilege of making a 90-second statement on issues which are very urgent to my constituents who elected me, who put me into the House to speak on their behalf.

Mr. Clark: Give up the $5,000!

Mr. Paproski: Resign as Parliamentary Secretary!

Mr. Nielsen: Cry-baby!

Madam Speaker: I know that Hon. Members did not have time to read the new rules, but I think if they read them they will find that it is quite clear that at two o'clock, Members other than Ministers of the Crown may make statements pursuant to Standing Order 21. So that obviously excludes Ministers but includes, as in motions under Standing Order 43, Parliamentary Secretaries. So there has been no change in the spirit of these particular rules.

As for the matter of distributing statements on both sides of the House, perhaps I did not make myself quite clear. As I read the report which was presented to the House, it seems to me that the intention was to distribute these statements evenly between the two sides of the House. That would mean, in my interpretation, that one or two might be missed because we never know exactly how much time we have but it will be as close as possible to an equal number on both sides of the House.

Concerning the matter of the proportion, that is probably where I was not clear. When I mentioned proportions, I did not say why it would be necessary to apply proportions to certain of these interventions. The proportions would be, of course, between the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party and would have to be established according to the number of Members each party has in the House. I think that is, in general, quite a fair rule, as it is used during Question Period and can be applied to this particular part of the procedure.

Hon. Members will know that once in a while one side intervenes more than the other because of the particular timing, but it might be easier to remedy that situation because each Hon. Member will have 90 seconds in which to speak and we will know exactly how many 90 seconds there are in the time allotted to dealing with statements under this particular Standing Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I merely wish to draw your attention to the fact that at the time they went to press, they omitted the fact that the House would not meet either on New Year's Day, Good Friday, the day set for the celebration of the birthday of the Sovereign, St. John the Baptist's Day or Dominion Day. I suggest it should read Canada Day now.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that word and that phraseology was left in at my specific request.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: And obviously agreed upon by all other Leaders of the Parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to re-open the debate, Madam Speaker, but I should say that I am always anxious to meet the wishes of the Hon.

Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). In this case, however, I suggest to him that he may continue to use the expression Dominion Day, but that as a law abiding citizen, he should know that there is no such thing as Dominion Day any more. What we now have is Canada Day.

Madam Speaker: But the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) should know that this issue was not at all raised in the report tabled in the House. The Committee had not requested a change of name for that particular holiday. Therefore, the change could not be proposed by the Clerk of the House as a result of the Committee's suggestion. If the Committee wishes at some later date to deal with this issue and submit a proposal to the House, a change could be made. But the Clerk of the House was not in a position to carry it out.

[English]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise with respect to a completely different point of order with reference to the appearance of the new version of the so-called Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders. I note some contradiction between the words "permanent" and "provisional" as found in a title for Standing Orders. I would like to express my disappointment that, even after a notification of at least five years' duration, there is still no index in the Standing Orders.

Mr. Nielsen: It is coming.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My recollection is that at least five years ago, in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, there was a request by myself and others as well that there should be attached to the Standing Orders an index, which is different from a table of contents. I managed, through the courtesy of the Table, to obtain an index which had been prepared by the reference branch of the Library and which gives the reference by Standing Order number to the various subject matters which are dealt with in the Standing Orders. I had hoped that in any new edition, and in this one, because it is a completely new edition, permanent and provisional though it is, there would be an index included at the end.

Just as an example, length of speeches figures nine times on the little index that I have in my possession. There have been changes in the length of speeches. For example, on the Speech from the Throne or on second or third reading, there may be different times concerning the length of speeches. That is all to be found in the table of contents if one looks seriously enough.

However, it would be so much simpler if, in the index, there were items to be found such as "Speeches, length of" or something of that sort, in reference to each of the various chapters or Standing Orders. I do hope that another edition of this volume of Standing Orders, be it permanent or provisional or permanent and provisional, will not come out without an index. I implore the Chair to lean on the Table that that be done.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, in fairness to those who helped prepare these permanent and provisional Standing Orders, it should be pointed out that the matter of an index was raised when we met with the Clerk of the House, during the adjournment. We were explained this involved a tremendously long work, and since there was limited time could not be done in the context of the changes made. However, I want to commend all those who helped prepare these Standing Orders, because they did a really tremendous job, even though it may not be perfect, and no doubt some aspects will be debated later on. However, within the time available, those people succeeded in setting down the old and new Standing Orders. They even included a table of contents. They also added a concordance, at our own request, in the margin. We have the comparison between the old and new sections, and it would be inhuman to demand at this point that an index be prepared for what is in fact an experiment, to last one year only, because no doubt other changes will be made. Therefore, I would ask the Hon. Member to be patient, understanding and thankful to those who endeavoured to serve Hon. Members in the best possible way, I congratulate all those who took part in that work, and I hope that the changes made will not face too negative a reaction. I appreciate that some Hon. Members may be unwilling to accept change, which raises all sorts of questions. But this is a matter of parliamentary spirit, an experiment to be made, and I think this is more than a minimum and we should proceed as soon as possible.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the index is at least partially prepared in this paper by the reference branch of the Library of Parliament. It is there; it is ready. The only thing that is lacking is a concordance between the old Standing Orders and the new Provisional and Permanent Standing Orders. That should not take more than five years. It has taken at least five years to get even that much of it in print. I do implore you, for the assistance of all Members of Parliament, to provide that there be an index in the next edition of that little green book, whatever it is called.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order regarding Standing Order 21. You mentioned a time period of 90 seconds, and I wonder whether it was Your Honour's intention, in order to help bring this House into the computer age, to instal a seconds clock, as is done in certain professional sports.

Madam Speaker: Just for the information of the Hon. Member, we will have a manual seconds clock. It will be 90 seconds, I can assure the Hon. Member of that.

[Translation]

Regarding the point of order which was raised by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) and the comments made by the president of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), I note he commended the staff of the House for the tremendous work they have done since the report was tabled in this House and during the parliamentary recess. I would join him in this, because I know that this was a huge task, for which I am very thankful. They recognize as much as I do that this new book of rules is not perfect, it had to be put together fairly rapidly. Although the staff had very little time available, it is quite near perfection, but quite perfectible also. I could not agree more with the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich as far as the index is concerned. This book of rules is most difficult to consult. It is not possible to get along with only a table of contents when working with such a complex book of rules. An index should be provided that for instance would give an idea, under certain captions, of the motions that may or may not be debated, the length of speeches, the times and hours of adjournment and so forth, because we know what an index is. This is an absolute necessity, we must be in a position to use the Standing Orders fully and rapidly. So the index will be prepared, but there was not enough time available for the clerk and his staff to prepare it before this book went to press. However, the index prepared by the staff of the Library of Parliament will be updated including the changes, albeit provisional, which were made to the Standing Orders, and it will be made available to the Hon. Members as a separate item, so they use it pending publication of a final version of the Standing Orders of the House.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I am sure there will be from time to time clarifications of your earlier comments. One that comes to mind, and perhaps you can address your attention to it, is the term "quoting poetry" or "reciting poetry". Within the context of a Member trying to make a 90-second statement, I think it would be in order to quote poetry if it is part of the statement that the Member is trying to make, rather than reciting, as the "bard of Red Deer" did on various occasions, his own poetry. I think there might be some latitude allowed there. In order to make a point, I suggest that there could be some brief quotation from poetry which fits in with the statement which the Member wants to make.

Madam Speaker: In these 90-second statements, if the Members says "as the poet said" and gives me one sentence of a quotation, I can accept that. But these statements may not be made in verse, no matter how pleasant they are to listen to. The idea is that these statements lasting only 90 seconds must be crisp, precise and concise, so the Member may have time to put a lot into those 90 seconds. Members will find out that one can put a lot into 90 seconds if the language is very strict and concise. I can accept a quotation of a line or two, but I guess that would be all.

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House proceeded to consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported, (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to rise on a point of order with respect to the calling of this legislation today and with respect to the right of Members of Parliament to file amendments prior to today but subsequent to the report of the Committee on December 22, 1982.

As the House knows from looking at Votes and Proceedings for December 22, 1982, the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates reported out Bill C-133 without amendment. We then broke for Christmas recess and we are back today, on January 17, 1983, and this is the first order of business called. The question arises as to whether or not it can be called in the event that there are amendments yet to be filed.

I want to tell the House that on January 11, 1983—before we came here—I delivered by hand to the deputy principal clerk of the Journals Branch two report stage amendments which he did not accept. I am not quarrelling with that, but he did not accept those amendments.

Mr. Nielsen: I will be.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There may be others who will feel that he ought to have accepted them at that time and that they ought to have appeared on the Order Paper. In any event, he did not accept them and they did not appear on the Order Paper. Those amendments are still there and I would like them to be considered by the House. They are substantive amendments to the Bill.

The first one is to curtail the length of the application of the Act itself; the second one was put down for the purpose of assuring that after the period of limitation of indexing has been run, a superannuate, a person on a pension, will not have suffered any diminution of his pension rights as a result of that curtailment for the two-year period set forth in the Bill.

• (1150)

Those are the two amendments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has one somewhat the same, but I felt it was important, the report state being what it is, that all Members of Parliament be able to express themselves, and that is what I wanted to do with respect to the appropriate amendments to this Bill. I want to have those amendments considered by the House, Madam Speaker. They were not accepted by the deputy principal clerk.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

I am now suggesting on my point of order that, under the rules and practices of this House which go back for some period of time, those amendments should be accepted; and equally by the practice we ought not to consider Bill C-133 until the appropriate period of time has passed for those amendments to be filed, printed and dealt with in the normal way.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier gave us the precedent with the judgment of Mr. Speaker Jerome on July 15, 1977, and that was the precedent for a report stage on a Friday, the Hon. Member being allowed until six o'clock on the following Monday to file his amendments. That is the weekend principle, and I think that a weekend principle applies as well.

Therefore, I have another case which I would like to bring to the attention of the Chair. It is the judgment of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux given on Tuesday, October 6, 1970, and it dealt with the case over a summer adjournment of the House of Commons. The only difference between these two is the weather more than anything else, but it was a long adjournment. I am going to read briefly from the judgment of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, if I may. It appears at page 8841 of Hansard and reads as follows:

The report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture was tabled in the House on Friday, June 26 last, as appears in Votes and Proceedings for that date. This was the day on which Parliament recessed for the summer.

In this case we recessed for the Christmas adjournment. He continues:

As is the usual practice, distribution was made of those Votes and Proceedings the following Monday, June 29. The House met after the summer recess on Monday, October 5. Again, as is the practice, during the week before the resumption of the business of the House on October 5, the Order Paper was distributed to hon. members. That Order Paper carried as a government order the entry dealing with the report stage of Bill C-196. According to the Notice Paper appended to today's Order Paper, a number of motions standing in the name of hon. member for Crowfoot and other hon. members were received prior to 6 p.m. yesterday, October 5. Standing Order 75 deals with the report stage of public bills following their consideration in committee.

Hon. Members have referred the Chair to sections 5 and 8 of Standing Order 75. Perhaps for the record I may be allowed to quote sections 3 and 5 of the relevant Standing Order.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux went on to do so, and then he continued:

The question for the Chair to determine is whether the requirements of the relevant Standing Order have been met. Section 3 of Standing Order 75 is clear that a committee report cannot be considered by the House until 48 hours have elapsed following the presentation of the report. How is this requirement to be interpreted?

There is another Standing Order which requires 48 hours notice. The unquestioned practice of the House has been that the 48-hour notice requirement is met when that period extends over a weekend or over two sitting days. For example, a notice tabled at six o'clock on Monday may be dealt with at two o'clock on Wednesday. Similarly, a notice filed at six o'clock on Wednesday can be dealt with by the House at eleven o'clock on Friday. A notice filed Friday afternoon can be dealt with on Monday afternoon at two o'clock, in spite of the fact that two sitting days have not elapsed . . .

I am sorry I am using a precedent which dates back to April 14, 1913, but I thought we should go back somewhat to indicate that this has been the practice for many years now. This precedent confirms my interpretation of the Standing Order, an interpretation which was accepted before the ru''ng of 1913 and which has been followed since then. The ruling can be found in Beauchesne's third edition at page 827.

If the 48-hour requirement is met in the circumstances I have just outlined, it has certainly been met if the report has been filed on a Friday and the report is brought forth for consideration on the following Tuesday, even if there has been an extended recess between the two days. I appreciate the point raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot, that it would have been unfair and contrary to the spirit of the Standing Order to have attempted to proceed to the report stage yesterday—

"Yesterday" was the day the question arose.

—since in practice there would not have been the proper time in which to file amendment motions. On this basis I suggest the report stage could not have been proceeded with yesterday. In fairness to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), this is a point which was made very clearly by him.

I quote this precedent, Madam Speaker, to indicate that I was denied, rightly or wrongly—and I am not making an accusation when I use the word "denied"—the right to file an amendment on January 11. I filed formally on January 11 an amendment which is important to me as a Member of Parliament and, incidentally, important to the Party. I believe I ought to have time to file that amendment, or I should have the unanimous consent of the House to file the amendment. We could argue about the procedure later on.

In any event, it appears that the Standing Orders of the House indicate that Bill C-133 cannot be considered, at least to the detriment of my right to file an amendment. That is my whole point. I am not arguing to hold up for an extra day the consideration of Bill C-133, but if it means that I cannot file my amendment or that my amendment is not now acceptable and will not be printed, then I am quite prepared to say that the Government business should stand. The Government House Leader said there are 17 other pieces of legislation which he has. One other of them should be called today so that my amendment can be filed in accordance with the practice set forth by Mr. Speaker Jerome in 1977 and Mr. Speaker Lamoureux in 1970. That is the point I wish to make.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest and also, I must admit, with sympathy to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). On the one hand, the old Standing Order 75(5)1, that 24 hours must elapse before consideration at the report stage and that there has to be at least 24 hours, notice for the amendments, but this does not prevent the House from proceeding to the report stage on a Monday if a bill is reported on the previous Friday. On the other hand, the Hon. Member tells us that he attempted to give notice of an amendment to a bill during a recess. He also referred to a few precedents, namely a precedent dating back to 1939 which is so mouldy that it is difficult to read, and one more recent of a ruling given on February 15, 1977, which also seems relevant to the discussion.

The situation is therefore that Standing Orders prescribe the procedure to be followed on the one hand, and the Government has dutifully followed this procedure by calling Bill C-133, today which is now under consideration. I would like to refer you to former Standing Order 75(5) which has now become Standing Order 79(5) and which gives the procedure to be followed. I suggest that the Government has complied with this procedure. The rule states:

> If, not later than twenty-four hours prior to the consideration of a report stage, written notice is given of any motion to amend, delete, insert or restore any clause in a bill, it shall be printed on a Notice Paper.

We received the report from the committee on Wednesday, December 22, 1982 and this is now January 17, 1983. The prescribed 24 hours have elapsed and we have indeed respected fully the intent of the Standing Orders. Nothing in our written rules says that we cannot proceed on a Monday when a bill is reported on the previous Friday.

As for the complaint first raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I must say that I have not quite as much sympathy, not for him personally because he is a very good friend, but with his argument, because in fact he has suffered no prejudice as a result of this situation. He himself gave notice of two amendments at the proper time, on the day when the bill was reported. I have here today's Order Paper and, on page IX, we see two amendment motions, Nos. 4 and 5, in the name of Mr. Gauthier. Therefore, without prejudice to him even though the bill was only reported around 3 o'clock on Wednesday, December 22, he managed to give notice of two amendments in good time.

The situation is somewhat different in the case of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) since he tried to follow the new Section 79(5) of the Standing Orders by giving his notice 24 hours before the debate was resumed. However, since this was during an adjournment of the House or by analogy, if we refer to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome, during a weekend, his notice was refused. With all due respect to the officers of the House, I would personally challenge that decision. It seems to me that there was nothing to prevent the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton from giving his notice during the Christmas adjournment. First, it was a matter of common knowledge that, because of the urgency of the situation, we would proceed today with consideration of Bill C-133. This was not only a matter of common knowledge, but I had personally announced it in this House on December 22 for the information of the opposition Members. We subsequently had the opportunity to speak about this and I have had no indication from either the Opposition or the Government Members, including my hon. friend for Ottawa-Vanier, that they did not want us to proceed with this Bill today until this point of order was raised a few minutes ago. I therefore believe that the only actual prejudice resulting from this if indeed there is any, is that mentioned by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. In the circumstances, since the Standing Orders are not quite clear, that is since they are completely silent about the right to give notice during an adjournment, I believe that we would be ill-advised to object to the request made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton concerning these amendments, of which he tried to give notice before Bill C-133 was called today, on or about January 10 or 11, 1983. I believe that, legally, we could do so if we were to refuse the tabling of these amendments, and I suggest that we can nevertheless proceed now with the report stage of the bill. On behalf of the Government, in any case, I have no objection to the amendments of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton being considered when the debate is launched later today on Bill C-133.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, we are being asked to consider not only the letter of the rules, but also their intent, just as we must look both at the letter and at the intent of a ruling. If I may, I would like to point out that Mr. Speaker Jerome said in his ruling: "I believe that we shall not be able to proceed on Monday with the report stage of the Bill because the Bill was reported only today, on Friday". I draw your attention to the fact that this ruling was made on Friday July 15, 1977. Two days ahead of time, at the very moment that the Bill was reported and the Government indicated its intention to proceed with the Bill on the following Monday, the objection was raised. This was done at the very moment the Government announced its intention to proceed with the report stage on the following Monday so that both sides of the House have reasonable notice of the change in the order of business. The situation is different today. The point of order was not raised on December 22, but at the very last minute when Bill C-133 had already been called, but in spite of this difference, we would be willing to allow the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to give notice of his amendments. In his ruling, Mr. Speaker Jerome had given notice to both sides of the House of his intention to prevent the House from proceeding with the report stage on the following Monday. As you can see, the situation is different in this case. No one rose on a point of order on December 22. On the contrary, several members gave notice of amendment motions. The Minister did so, an NDP Member did so, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) did so and all this on December 22 before the adjournment. We then have the case of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. I shall not repeat what I have already said. We are willing to agree that those amendments be added to the list. However, this consent notwithstanding, even if it were refused, I respectfully submit that the fact that we announced on December 22 our intention to proceed today with Bill C-133 was a matter of common knowledge and that no one rose on a point of order on December 22 when this House was informed of our intention to proceed today with consideration of Bill C-133. I therefore submit that in these circumstances, we are quite justified in proceeding with this Bill as soon as possible today.

• (1200)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, if I heard the Government House Leader correctly, notwithstanding the fact that the amendments the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) wishes to propose do not appear on the Notice Paper today, the Government is prepared, at the appropriate time in the report stage debate, to have those two questions put and to allow us, should we so choose, to divide on them.

In addition, if I understand it correctly, the position of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is that he still has an amendment to propose. I, therefore, on behalf of this party am prepared to extend the same courtesy to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier with respect to his amendment, nothwithstanding the fact that it does not appear on the Notice Paper.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They should be on tomorrow's Notice Paper.

Mr. Nielsen: As my hon. friend says, if the debate goes beyond today they should certainly appear on tomorrow's Notice Paper.

I want to endorse completely what the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton has had to say with respect to the precedent set by Mr. Speaker Jerome, but I also want to raise what I consider to be an equally important and related point to the whole process of filing amendments, perhaps not only at the report stage. It involves the nature and extent of the responsibilities of Table Officers. I do not wish them to take anything I am about to say in a personal way at all. I think we have some of the finest professional talent at the Table that I have seen here in many years in the House. However, the submission I am about to make to the Chair is going to require the Chair to clarify and perhaps reconfirm the duties of the Officers in the service of the House, and I intend to back up my submissions by appropriate citations from our precedents.

There is no doubt, in my submission, Madam Speaker, that among the duties the House Officers have is the task of receiving Members' notices of amendment and ensuring that such notices are printed on the Notice and Order Papers. Citation 139 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition outlines the procedural duties of the Clerk. Subsection (6) reads as follows:

> He prepares and issues a daily Order Paper for each sitting of the House and, as required, a Special Order Paper.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, Citation 141 outlines the duties of the Clerk Assistant, and in Subsection (2) this appears:

> They receive the notices of questions, motions and amendments which have to be entered on the Notice Paper. They also receive amendments from Members proposing to amend the motion before the House at that time. It is their duty to see that these are drawn according to the rules of the House and to refer to the Speaker, the Clerk or the interested Member any that appear to be out of order.

That is as to content, Madam Speaker, of the draft submitted by the Hon. Member wishing to file the amendment, and not with respect to the interpretation which Table Officers may from time to time place upon the Standing Orders with respect to the time of filing. That is a very important distinction.

Clearly it is the duty, in my submission, of the Table Officers to receive notices no matter what form they take. They also have the duty to ensure that such notices are drawn according to the rules of the House. However, they do not, in my respectful submission, have the authority to reject notices which in the view of the Table Officers are in an improper form. Indeed, where irregularities occur, it is their duty to notify the Member concerned and/or the Speaker of their belief that a given notice is not in proper form or fails to meet some other requirement of the rules. It is not, however, the duty of the Table Officers to make a decision on such a question. That authority resides in the House itself, and through the House in the hands of the Speaker.

Citation 120 of Beauchesne illustrates the point I am attempting to make. At page 39, under the heading "Procedural Duties of the Speaker", it reads as follows:

> Foremost among his many responsibilities, the Speaker has the duty to maintain an orderly conduct of debate by repressing disorder when it arises, by refusing to propose the question upon motions and amendments which are irregular, and by calling the attention of the House to bills which are out of order. He rules on points of order submitted to him by Members on questions as they arise. Many powers have been vested in the Speaker by virtue of the Standing Orders.

It is my submission that the rules and practices of the House are open to continuing interpretation both by the Speaker and by the House. This fact is underlined by Citation 11 at page 6 of Beauchesne. I draw your attention to that citation but I shall not quote it.

Finally, it is well established that the final authority in determining the proceedings of the House is the House itself. This point is emphasized by Citation 13 of Beauchesne. It was raised by my friend a moment ago and was anticipated by the Government House Leader when he gave an indication that the Government was prepared to have the question put that the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton would have proposed in his amendment.

My point in support of that raised by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton is that the Table Officers are obligated to accept notices which Members wish to file as long as they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders and their practices as to form. In my submission, they have no authority to reject those notices, as appears to have been done in this case. The decision as to the acceptability of those notices should be made in this House by Members of this House, according to our long-established practices.

When notices appear on the Order Paper and they appear to any Member to be irregular for whatever reason, then it is the duty of the Member to raise that matter as a point of order, if he so wishes, for decision by the Chair.

What we have here, with the greatest respect expressed as to the conduct of whatever Officer or Officers at the Table rejected this notice, is that a judgment was made as to the interpretation of Standing Order 79(5). With great respect to the Government House Leader, he has somewhat misinterpreted that Standing Order, according to my reading of it—and it has not altered under the experimental rules—which gives a Member of Parliament a right to file a notice of motion at report stage as long as it is done 24 hours before the order is called.

If my memory is correct, in this case it is the submission of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton that the notice for filing was made on January 11; certainly it was well before that 24-hour requirement. In my submission, it would be undesirable as well as improper for either this House or the Speaker to expect Table Officers to make judgments on the merits with respect to any notice filed.

Briefly, I believe the Table is obliged to accept notices proposed by Members, and it is up to the Chair or the House to raise questions as to the irregularity at the time the order is called.

Madam Speaker: On this particular point of order, I should like to say that, strictly speaking, if we were to read the Standing Orders and apply the strict wording of them, we could proceed today. In consequence of that, the Government was obviously not at fault in wanting to proceed with Bill C-133 today. However, because of the time at which this particular report was received by the House, namely on the last day we sat before the Christmas recess, and, this being the first day we have reconvened, the interpretation is quite legitimate that, in the course of what is considered to be a weekend or, by analogy, some period of recess for the House, strictly speaking, we could take the report which had been deposited on the last day of the sitting.

This particular Standing Order does not make clear what happens when the sitting days are not consecutive to the one on which the report was received by the House, namely, when between that time and the time the report is to be considered there is either a weekend or a recess of the House. This has been interpreted by my two predecessors in two precedents, one of which was quoted by the Hon. Members who have intervened.

This point requires an interpretation. In this particular case, because the report was tabled late on December 22, and exceptionally we are reconvening much earlier than was normal, which would have been at two o'clock. So the time involved has been much shorter. I think the two precedents would have to inspire my ruling.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has offered to give his consent to the amendments of the aggrieved Members being received by the House. I think that would have to apply to all Members but I do not know whether other Members have amendments. I suppose the idea expressed by the President of the Privy Council would be that all amendments which Members want to table would be accepted, not only those which would be proposed by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). Under unanimous consent I think we could do this and that is one way of solving the problem. If the House gives unanimous consent for the acceptance of these particular amendments, then we could quite easily proceed today.

I want to reply to the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who raised the matter of the duty of the Officers of the House in receiving and printing amendments brought in by Hon. Members. He argued that under Standing Order 79 the Officers of the Table ought to have accepted the amendments and that the only latitude they have is to refuse amendments because they are not acceptable as to form.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that the Officers of the House have not been able to print the amendment brought in by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton because they were acting under Standing Order 47. They did not on their own deny the right of the Hon. Member to table the amendments; they recognize that they must receive the amendments proposed by Hon. Members. However, they do have to be guided by the rules, and Standing Order 47(1) reads as follows:

> Such notice shall be laid on the Table before six o'clock p.m., or before five o'clock p.m. on a Friday, and be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

That was a hang up; simply because those amendments had not been presented before six o'clock on the day of the adjournment. That was the only basis. They quite rightly could not print the notice of amendment in today's Order Paper, so they did exactly what they were supposed to do according to the Standing Orders.

• (1220)

Therefore, perhaps I could ask the House to give its unanimous consent to accepting the notices of amendments.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to your ruling. I wonder whether you might explain one part of it in order that I could make a clear judgment about it. If unanimous consent were not forthcoming—which I am not suggesting is the case—is the Speaker ruling that, because the 48-hour notice period was during an adjournment of the House and therefore the Friday to Monday rule came into effect, the Government cannot proceed with this piece of legislation today, that we would have to deal with a separate piece of legislation and allow the 48 hours to apply to the presentation of the amendments?

Madam Speaker: I did not rule. I commented on the different interventions made by the Hon. Members. I would not rule on a hypothetical situation. I said that the time had been exceptionally short and that the two precedents would inspire my ruling, but the situation as it stands now is hypothetical. If the House gives its unanimous consent, then we do not have a problem before us. Again I ask the House whether it gives its unanimous consent to accepting notices of amendments to Bill C-133.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, in your proposal you say that you are asking for the unanimous consent of the House to allow Hon. Members, and not just the Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), to give notice of amendments before three o'clock this afternoon. Are we therefore to understand, and I would like to be quite clear on this, that even if Members have the right to give notice of amendments, this right does not determine the acceptability of the amendments? They could still be rejected? I would like to clear up this point about their acceptability.

Madam Speaker: That is exactly what I mean. Members may give notice of an amendment, but if the amendment is not acceptable as to form, obviously, and we normally do so if that is the case, it could be rejected. The same rules apply as before, and the only point being discussed now is whether the House is willing to give unanimous consent to allow Members who wish to do so to give notice of amendments.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to assure you that there is no intention on the part of myself or that of my colleagues to deny unanimous consent, but I want to be clear on something. I am concerned that, by going the route of unanimous consent, we are weakening the right of a Member to insist upon his or her opportunity to present an amendment, taking into account the precedents laid before the House by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). In any future discussions similar to this, we would once again have to go the unanimous consent route, since there was no clear ruling on whether the 48-hour notice period had been properly observed and the opportunity given to a Member to do what the normal practice and precedent would allow.

If it is in the opinion of the Speaker appropriate for a Member to challenge the legislation being brought forward at this time, and given that the 48-hour notice was not properly observed for the presentation of amendments, I would prefer that we go that route and then give unanimous consent to bring in the amendments, rather than give unanimous consent and not have a ruling on the position very well put by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Not necessarily, Madam Speaker. If at some time in the future, you were to ask for the unanimous consent of the House and failed to obtain it, you could then make a ruling based on the circumstances. But today, we have a very specific situation which is different from the one with which the Speaker, Mr. Jerome at the time, had to deal in 1977, when the point of order was raised at the appropriate time. We have here a new aspect which was not dealt with in that ruling, and on which you will not have to make a ruling today, if you obtain the desired unanimous consent.

[English]

Madam Speaker: May I make it quite clear to the Hon. Member that it is difficult, at his request, for me to rule on a particular situation which has not yet arisen. If unanimous consent is not given, then I will deal with the matter. I do not think the right of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton would be weakened if we went through the route of unanimous consent, because his right and that of all other Members to give notice of amendments is quite clear in the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders. It is not weakened in any way. We have here a particular situation which we have abundantly discussed and that all recognize. In order to allow the Hon. Member to exercise his right to give notice of amendments, we would need unanimous consent. Will the House give its unanimous consent to allowing Hon. Members to give notice of amendments before 1500 hours?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have been listening carefully, and I think we have a problem here which I am unable to resolve. The Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has two amendments which are stangely similar, at least as far as I have been able to ascertain, to my own two amendments which are on the Order Paper. If between now and one o'clock, we have time to start the debate on Bill C-133, are you going to let the Member for Nepean-Carleton, and this is purely hypothetical, discuss amendments or changes to Bill C-133 and give him ten minutes to speak to the same subject as I would? I asked for a debate on this point in the House. If so, I want to get back to my ten minutes' speaking time I mentioned earlier. If you allow the Member for Nepean-Carleton to table amendments that are strangely similar to mine and if you give him ten minutes more to speak to an amendment, I should also be entitled to ten minutes for Amendment No. 4 and ten minutes for Amendment No. 5, on a guaranteed basis, and the two amendments should not be combined to allow a total ten minutes' speaking time for both.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, if I may say so, I think you dealt with that point. I believe it was you who said, in the course of discussion this morning, that the rules with respect to grouping would still apply. The Chair would have to take some part of lunch hour to review the amendments and decide whether or not my amendments should be grouped with those of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. I would not mind that, if that is the way the Chair decided. I do not think that departs from the understanding in any way or that my friend is prejudiced in any way.

My point was that I did not think I should be prejudiced because I happened to be the one in the firing line in this matter, or that any other colleague in the House should be prejudiced by the rule. I hope there will be unanimous consent. Then I could march up to the Table and present my amendments, joined by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier in presenting his.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: To answer the question raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I feel that it all depends on how the Chair decides to combine the amendments. If the Hon. Member's amendment and that of the Hon.

Member for Nepean-Carleton were combined, in that case, the ten-minute rule would apply.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I am not trying to stop the amendments, but I am trying to find out how the procedure could possibly work. We do not know what are the amendments. They are not on the Order Paper; they cannot be grouped now. We will proceed with the Bill immediately. It is entirely possible that some amendment may well be moved that will apply to a section with which we will proceed right away. It would appear to me to be an inconsistency or, for that matter, it would be depriving Parliament of the proper opportunity to deal with matters legally before it in an orderly manner.

I suggest that we give unanimous consent for the presentation of the amendments, but that the Bill simply cannot be proceeded with until the amendments are put on the Table, until those amendments are properly grouped and the groupings are then made known to Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there is a very easy way around this if we were to allow the House to start working now. It would be to start with Motion No. 2, in the name of the Minister, which needs a Royal recommendation and therefore cannot be joined with any other amendment coming from the Opposition. The Minister confirmed that he had no intention of moving any other amendment. Therefore, if we were to start debate now on Motion No. 2, this could be done and Parliament could start work right now; we would not have to waste half an hour.

• (1230)

Madam Speaker: I think I have to agree with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). This is not unusual. Parliament has proceeded in this way before. Groupings have been made by the Chair so that debate may commence. Grouping at some point will be given by the Chair if it is necessary, and amendments will be dealt with consequently.

Does the House give its unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

We do have a certain number of amendments. The Chair did proceed to the grouping of those for which it had notice. The grouping is as follows: Motion No. 1, in the name of the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), goes beyond the scope of the Bill in that it introduces a method of determining pension benefits not contemplated by the Bill as adopted by the House at second reading. I refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1). Furthermore, the motion seems to extend the objects and purposes as set out in the Royal recommendation. Once again I refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(7).

Motion No. 2 is procedurally acceptable and will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 3 seeks to introduce into the legislative process elements which are not part of that process. In effect, the motion, if adopted, would place a condition on the coming into force provision of the legislation based upon an agreement between a Minister of the Crown and certain persons or groups of persons. The Chair is not aware of any procedure whereby members of the public could exercise the powers which are exclusively vested in Parliament. For this reason, I regret to say that the Hon. Member's motion is not acceptable.

Motion No. 4 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 5, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), seems to be contradictory to the Bill as agreed to by the Committee. The Hon. Member proposes in his motion a method of indexing pensions as though the Bill was never enacted. In this regard I would like to cite, in part, paragraph (2) of Citation 773 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition as follows:

> An amendment must not be inconsistent with, or contradictory to, the Bill as so far agreed to by the committee—

For this reason, I regret that I must rule Motion No. 5 out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, if I understand correctly, you said that Amendment No. 5 was rejected by the Chair. I have not had enough time to look into all aspects of the matter, but it seems to me that in this House it has been the practice to allow Members to defend their amendments or changes before the Chair rejects them. I might have wished to make a few comments in support of Amendment No. 5, and if that is not the case—

Madam Speaker: Motion No. 5 was ruled out of order because the Hon. Member's amendment is not acceptable as to form. It is contradictory, and in fact nullifies the provisions of the bill. It is, in fact, a new bill. Consequently, as the Hon. Member is aware, it cannot be allowed to proceed. The amendment is not acceptable, either in form or substance. It entirely contradicts the bill proposed by the Government. I could therefore not accept the amendment nor can the Hon. Member speak to this amendment.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, could I also raise a point of order at this time with respect to Motion No. 4? With respect, I would like to suggest that this is also a motion which would require a Royal recommendation. I say this because presumably the Hon. Member's intent in moving it was to provide for the benefit index base to catch up to the level it would have reached without Bill C-133.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, Madam Speaker, that is wrong.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

Mr. Gray: I am arguing that this would require a Royal recommendation since it would increase the base from that provided in Bill C-133 for further indexation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member may have an argument for some other amendment but certainly not with respect to Motion No. 4. All that Motion No. 4 says is what the Bill says, but it underlines and underscores it. The Government has told us, the Bill tells us, that this program is to be in effect for two years. All that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has said to the Government is: "Put your money where your mouth is". The Bill is to last for two years. If the Government is arguing about that, then I suspect perhaps there is something sinister in what the Government is considering by extending the period beyond that. That is all the amendment says. I believe I moved that amendment in committee for the Hon. Member because he could not, having been thrown off the committee by someone. I think the amendment should stand.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members are debating that particular motion. I have ruled on it and I would hope the House will accept my ruling, debate Motion No. 2 and vote on it if necessary.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-133, An Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be amended in Clause 2

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion before us gives effect to the modification to Bill C-133, which I said I would be putting forward in my speech on second reading of the Bill. The Motion substitutes the benefit indices shown for 1983 and 1984 for those originally proposed in the Bill. The effect of these revised figures is to provide for pension increases under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act at 6.5 per cent in 1983 and 5.5 per cent in 1984, instead of 6 per cent and 5 per cent as originally proposed.

As I mentioned in my earlier remarks to the House, the Government has decided that this modification should be made as a result of representations primarily from Members of the caucus supporting the Government. Those Members pointed out, and I shared their concern, that there is a difference between the indexing arrangements made for retired federal public servants and the public programs to which the six and five limits are being applied; that is to say, the Old Age Security and Family Allowances Programs. The difference is that public servants have made some direct contributions toward the cost of indexing and these moneys are set aside in the Government accounts under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account until they are used to pay for an individual's pension increases. Old Age Security and Family Allowance payments are financed entirely from general revenues contributed by the taxpayers of Canada.

It was argued that to cap the portion of indexing payable from the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account would, in effect, mean that the employees' own contributions were being taken away as part of the Government's restraint program. Since the program is intended to apply to Government expenditures coming from general tax revenues, this did not seem appropriate.

Accordingly, I am proposing that the restraint measures should be applied to that portion of indexing which is currently being directly financed by taxpayers in the same way as for Old Age Security and Family Allowances. We are accepting the principle that the restraint measures should not apply to that portion of indexing of Public Service pensions coming from direct contributions by the employees and the matching employer contributions.

I might explain, Mr. Speaker, how this principle has been translated into the 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent increases that will result from the indices proposed in the amendment. Hon. Members are likely aware that the indexing program has only been in effect and employees have only been contributing for this benefit since the early 1970s. Each individual's contributions are recorded and used to provide his or her own indexing benefits, which means that many pensioners have already received back all of their accumulations in pension increase payments. Subsequent benefits to these pensioners and benefits for those who never contributed because they retired prior to 1970 are payable directly from the Consolidated Revenue Fund which comes from moneys provided by the taxpayers generally across Canada.

Looking at the historical data, we find that the ratio of indexing paid directly by taxpayers from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to that paid from amounts set aside in the account is over 90 per cent to less than 10 per cent. We have estimated, as well, the possible ratios over the next few years, taking into account the fact that new retirees have contributed over longer periods and have paid more for their pension indexing while inflation rates are declining. We have concluded that it would be reasonable to cap 90 per cent of the indexing at 6 per cent and that the other 10 per cent of indexing for which advanced contributions have been made will not be capped but will be at the full 11.5 per cent level that would have been payable in 1983. On this basis, 6.5 per cent can be paid in 1983.

For 1984, the same approach using estimated full indexing of 8.2 per cent based on the 7.5 per cent inflation rate projected for 1983 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his October economic statement, will be used to allow an increase of 5.5 per cent. In passing, I would also like to say that all indications are that inflation will be very much lower than the projection of the Minister of Finance in his economic statement last October.

Inevitably, these calculations cannot be precise since they must involve estimates and assumptions about the future, but I believe they have been made on a reasonable basis. More importantly, they do recognize the principle which I stated earlier, that employees' savings should not, in effect, be subject to the capping as part of the over-all six and five program.

I suppose it could be argued that instead of sharing this added amount to be paid as indexing among all beneficiaries, it should only be paid to those who still have a credit in the account. However, this would mean that those who retired over the last few years could receive full indexing until their credits were depleted, at which point they would suffer an actual reduction in their pension cheques. It would also mean that the added one-half of 1 per cent would not be available to those who have been in retirement for some time and who are more likely to be in need, as compared to those who have retired in more recent years when higher salaries were in effect. It is unlikely that this latter group would seek to maximize their own position at the expense of others.

I would also like to explain that there is no provision to actually charge the additional .5 per cent to be paid to all beneficiaries to those who still have a credit in the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account. We recognize the principle that an amount equal to what would have been paid from the account will be paid, and the added cost of $6 million in 1983 and $12 million in 1984 will be borne by general revenues. This will reduce the projected savings available under Bill C-133 for reallocation to other programs in the area of job creation to $60 million in 1983 and $105 million in 1984.

I have gone into considerable detail on what might be called the mechanics of the modification I am proposing. I have done so because I wish to be very clear that the Government has not changed the application of its restraint program. We are, instead, recognizing the nature of the contributory benefit arrangement that has been established by Parliament for public servants and are endeavouring not to interfere with the contributory aspect of that arrangement. This is consistent with the fact that indexing under the Canada Pension Plan for which only direct employee and employer contributions are made has not been included in the restraint program.

During committee consideration of this Bill there has been comment to the effect that the financing arrangements for the indexing of pensions should be on a different basis and that the proportion being charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund could be lessened by combining the pension accounts, and so on. In response, I want to reiterate what I said in my speech on second reading, that these fundamental and longer-term pension policy issues should be addressed in the context of the debate on national pension reform.

We are now concerned with a temporary measure that relates to a broad economic program to restore the Canadian economy, bring down inflation and interest rates and provide a basis for the maintenance and creation of jobs. This proposal should be looked at in that light. Polls continue to show that the need for this program is clear to the great majority of Canadians. I believe that although there has been an active campaign to express the understandable disappointment that many superannuants feel, as they consider the matter, I would like to think that they also will come to understand what the Government is striving to achieve through the six and five program; that is, to improve the economic situation for them and all Canadians. Therefore, I would ask the House to support this amendment.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that what first must become evident from the statements which have been made by the Minister today is that he has virtually wasted the Christmas recess, because he had an opportunity during that period to engage in some broadranging consultation. He has not done so. For the Minister to say that federal superannuants or serving members of the Public Service are disappointed with this Bill is, to say the least, an understatement.

I, too, want to repeat what I said at second reading stage. It is treachery, it is regarded as treachery and will be regarded as treachery. It will not be regarded by the Public Service as just a matter of disappointment. I suggest to the House that this issue and its effects will spread much further than among Members in the national capital area. If the Minister had taken time—which he obviously did not—to read the submissions that were made by the private sector actuaries as to the possible effects of this measure in terms of private sector plans reflecting the cost of living, and if the Government learned anything from it, it ought to have learned that it has embarked on a very dangerous precedent which will not be forgotten.

There has been a second breach of faith. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) was not President of the Treasury Board when the statement was made in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee by the former President of the Treasury Board, who has gone on to something else, that the Government had no intention of dealing with pensions except as part of a national pension review. I accepted that. The public servants accepted it. Their organizations accepted it. That was the second breach of faith within this Bill which was heralded in that budget of a Minister of Finance who has long since passed on to his just reward. I have always been told to speak kindly of the dead and I will. This Minister has lost the opportunity to redeem himself.

What is a Member of Parliament to do with respect to this bonus of 5 per cent for two years? I suppose it is closer to the 11.5 per cent than 5 per cent or 6 per cent so we are bound to accept it. But I do not want anyone in the House to assume that, by accepting this little crumb, this little pittance, from the President of the Treasury Board, he or the Government will ever be forgiven for putting the retired public servants into the trenches in the Government's war against inflation.

The Government speaks out of both sides of its mouth on this issue. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and this Minister's predecessor mentioned during CTV's "Question Period" this great fight against inflation. The Minister mentioned this morning that they are winning the battle against inflation since the rates are going down and will reach 6 per cent and 5 per cent. This is taking place even without this Bill being in place. This is occurring as a result of other economic policies of the Government which are impacting upon the recipients of Old Age Security, Family Allowance and the supplementary benefits.

If those things are already taking place, then I must ask myself, why is Bill C-133 necessary at all? The Government has so run down the economy of Canada that even its legislation cannot speed the process any further. I did not make this point on second reading, but I say to the Government now that one of the things it ought to have thought about over the Christmas recess, when I had a chance to consider this situation, is why it is doing this when it is not in place. That is something the public should certainly think about. Already the Government is saying that its objectives will be reached, not because of Bill C-133, not because of changes in the old age pension, not because of changes in the Family Allowance, but, rather, by reason of its economic policies which have thrown people out of work and killed investor confidence. That is why inflation will go down.

Therefore, Bill C-133 is not even necessary at all except for one purpose, and the Minister put his finger on it when he said that the polls revealed the necessity for it. I would like to see the polls tabled some time. I would like to see how the questions were couched. I think I could guess. The question would have been: "Do you think those big, fat, happy, lazy public servants and those who are on pension should be cut off?" The answer would be "Yes". And the second question, "Do we have any more sympathy for federal superannuants than for the serving public servant"? Of course, the answer to that question would be "No". That is the poll he speaks of.

Mrs. Mitchell: How did you vote on Bill C-124?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I voted in favour of Bill C-124, and the Hon. Member knows it. If the Hon. Member wants to go out and talk to the serving public servant, the serving public servant said: "Yes, I am prepared to do my share". However, public servants are not prepared, any more than any other person, to see senior citizens, old age pensioners and retired public servants in the front line of this Government's fight against inflation. That is it.

Mrs. Mitchell: Inconsistent!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I should know better than to rise to what is an unbaited hook.

An Hon. Member: It's your guilty conscience.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is the situation. Therefore, I will now say to the Government that Hon. Members of this Party will, of course, vote for the amendment which amounts to the 30 pieces of silver which are being set forth to bribe a wee bit of support out of the Liberal caucus, to apply just a little bit of cosmetic to the situation, enabling the Government to say: "We did do something for you". However, I say that the breach of faith which was apparent in the budget and in the introduction and second reading of this Bill still exists and that no amount of cosmetic will improve the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has given the Chair notice of his intention to move his motions and has given the Chair an opportunity to examine them. The Chair has some misgivings as to the procedural acceptability of the motion to amend Clause 1 of the Bill. The reservations which were expressed in relation to Motion No. 5 must also apply in this case and therefore, regrettably, the Chair must also rule this motion out of order.

The Hon. Member's other motion is procedurally acceptable, and for purposes of debate will be grouped with Motion No. 2. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 2 would dispose of this motion. A negative vote on Motion No. 2 would necessitate the question being put on the Hon. Member's motion.

Mr. Murphy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour just made a ruling on a number of amendments. We do not have copies and without that information we are really not sure what is being discussed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has attempted to set the record straight in order to assist Hon. Members in anticipating the debate following the debate on this particular amendment.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully like, at the very least, to reserve the right to raise a point of order with respect to what Your Honour said about the acceptability and grouping of the amendments. I understood Your Honour to say that one of the amendments of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was acceptable and would be grouped with Motion No. 2.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has made a decision on the matter.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect to what Your Honour said with regard to the amendments, in the interest of understanding what you ruled in order and what you ruled out of order, and given the fact that we have not seen the amendment, wonder whether you might be prepared to read the amendments—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the Chair has attempted to make it easier for Hon. Members to understand by putting into Hansard, at this stage, certain decisions. I think that when the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has an opportunity to consider subsequent amendments and debate, the record will be quite clear.

Mr. Deans: Well, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain does not have a point of order.

Mr. Deans: How do you know?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Are you challenging the Chair?

Mr. Deans: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At the suggestion of the Hon. Member, and in the interests of clarifying Hansard, I will read the motion to the House with unanimous consent.

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton), seconded by Mr. Epp (Provencher), moves:

That Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be amended in Clause 2 by striking out at page 2 the year "1984" and the figure "275.69" opposite the year "1984".

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, could I respectfully ask a question? My Motion is before the House with the Royal recommendation because it affects the revenues and expenditures of the Government. I would respectfully like to inquire how one could group the resolution of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton with mine. I know it does not have the Royal recommendation and is directly in the same line of activity, although with opposite effect to my resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For purposes of debate, the Chair has ruled that the Motions should be grouped. The Motion in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is based on the assumption of a Royal recommendation. The adoption of a Royal recommendation would, in the opinion of the Chair, make it possible for purposes of debate to consider the other amendment at the same time. This is a grouping for purposes of debate only.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) just finished making representations on Motion No. 2. I take it that since Your Honour has grouped his amendment with Motion No. 2, he will not be able to speak again on this grouping of two amendments.

Some Hon. Members: Wrong.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, I am asking the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The grouping is done for purposes of debate. The Chair has indicated that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 2 would dispose of this Motion. A negative vote on Motion No. 2 would necessitate the question being put on the Motion of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. This is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Gauthier: I am sorry to insist, Mr. Speaker, but you have not answered my question. My question to you relates to the fact that since the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton has spoken on the grouping of two amendments, he cannot speak more than once on the grouping. Therefore, he has—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has answered the Hon. Member's question very precisely. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 2 will dispose of the Hon. Member's Motion. A negative vote on Motion No. 2 would necessitate the question being put on the Hon. Member's Motion. I believe that deals with the point raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

THE ECONOMY

DECLARATION OF CANADIAN CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity, and I am in fact the first Member to do so, to make a statement under the provisions of Standing Order 21 of the new Standing Orders of this House.

The Catholic Bishops of Canada declared recently that the present economic situation constitutes a "moral disorder" in our society. Their political comments on unemployment, inflation, industrial strategy, social responsibility and the role of the unions and capital are very interesting. They are proposing major changes in our values and priorities. Finally, the bishops want to promote public debate on the subject. Madam Speaker, it is my earnest wish, and I hope that this will happen, that a Committee of the House would invite the bishops to come and study with us the possibilities for—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

INCREASE IN STABILIZATION LEVY PAID BY PRODUCERS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, during the Christmas recess I received a large number of representations from grain producers expressing concern about the maximum levy payable under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. With low grain prices, and continually increasing input costs, the income of producers is being very seriously eroded. The latest increase of 33⅓ per cent means that the levy has increased 140 per cent since the program was instituted in 1976. The grain producer has no choice but to pay. He is locked in. He cannot opt out. He is at the mercy of the Government. And many producers want the freedom to opt out.

Despite excellent suggestions made by the Official Opposition in debate and in committee, in 1975 and 1976, the then Minister, the Hon. Otto Lang, stubbornly turned a deaf ear. We therefore have a situation where the Government, by Order in Council, without debate in this House, has increased the levy 140 per cent. We also have a situation where farmers—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF PHYSICIAN TO COMMISSION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, the practising physicians in this country by virtue of their training, their daily exposure to the physical and social needs of the people, and by the special trust which the public have in them, are right well suited to act as members of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. The insight which a physician could bring to the Commission is especially needed at the present time when the rights of the handicapped are being extended into so many human activities. A physician's special knowledge and understanding of the many complexities of the obstacles in the way of the handicapped qualify members of this profession for such a post.

My particular concern at this time is that, since the inception of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, those responsible for the appointments to the Commission have never selected a medical doctor to be a member of that important body.

LABOUR RELATIONS

IMPACT OF WORK STOPPAGE AT WEST COAST PORTS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): The costs of last fall's 17-day closure of British Columbia ports are now being realized. Our trading partners attach great importance to reliability of supply and, as a result, bulk commodity sales were lost, not merely deferred as was hoped. The grain loss alone has been estimated at $150 million by Wheat Board officials. In addition, the work stoppage resulted in the loss of $2.7 million in container revenue to the Port of Vancouver. The ports of British Columbia have lost the good will of their customers and a major battle in attracting new business.

The Hope Report listed eight major areas of contention between the employers' association and the union. These longstanding differences precipitated work stoppages and resulting federal intervention in 1970, 1975, 1979 and 1982. These contentious issues were once again ignored by the Government in November's back-to-work legislation and by the two parties in the last minute agreement which they were able to forge. Once again I implore the Government to strike—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Some Hon. Members: Sixty seconds!

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a statement today on the discussion paper entitled "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis" which was issued recently by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. First, let me say that I agree wholeheartedly with the Bishops' message and believe that it offered Canadians both a comprehensive analysis of our economic conditions and an ethical standard for establishing priorities for an economic recovery program.

The human suffering and tragedy associated with a 12.8 per cent unemployment rate can no longer be tolerated. I am certain that all Members of the House support the Bishops' suggestion that being out of work, particularly in a country as rich as Canada, is a moral problem. In their words, "It is through the activity of work that people are able to exercise their creative spirit, realize their human dignity and share in creation". A person without work is a person without purpose.

We in the New Democratic Party support the Bishops' call for a basic shift in values which would see the goal of serving the human needs of all people in our society taking precedence over the maximization of profits. Our economic recovery strategies must incorporate the ethical principle that labour, not capital, must be given priority in the development of an economy based on justice. We add our voices to those of the Bishops in a call for community discussions of the issues raised in their statement, and call upon the Government to allocate ample time in the days ahead to allow the House to debate adequately the unemployment issue in an effort to identify answers and solutions to this most serious and destructive human and economic problem.

SUGGESTION COMMITTEE INVITE BISHOPS TO TESTIFY

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Desmarais), I also refer to the Catholic Bishops' statement pointing out the moral implications of high unemployment. I, for one, would like to make clear that I support the right of the Bishops to make such a statement and agree that more focus must be directed to the serious problem of unemployment, which is at near record levels in all parts of the country. While we might disagree with some of the economic analysis and solutions put forward by the Bishops, I believe we should accept their challenge and discuss the matters in their statement at greater length. Consequently, I would urge the Minister of Employment to meet with this Committee of Bishops and, in addition, that under the new rules the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration invite the Bishops to testify before them.

INCOME TAX

MINISTER'S PROPOSAL ON SPOUSAL DEDUCTION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the Minister responsible for the status of women has proposed that the income tax deduction for non-working spouses should be drastically cut or eliminated altogether. Her proposal has caused a great deal of anxiety for the thousands of Canadians who would lose this deduction if her plan were to be adopted. Contrary to the Minister's statement, most working spouses who claim this deduction earn less than $20,000 per year and are not, to use her word, "affluent".

The Minister's statement that non-working, childless women contribute nothing to society can only be termed misguided or ill informed. Surely all Members of this House will agree with me that the vast majority of non-working spouses have made and continue to make a tremendous contribution to Canada. I am referring to the hundreds of thousands of non-working spouses who make up the army of volunteers at the Red Cross, the United Way, hospital auxiliaries, and thousands of other volunteer organizations too numerous to mention. The direct saving to the Canadian taxpayer by our army of volunteers defies calculation.

The disguised attempt by the Government to increase its revenue by close to $1 billion by eliminating spousal deductions during these very difficult times of economic instability and high unemployment across Canada is causing anxiety and concern which must be cleared up immediately. The Government must clarify its position on this ill-timed trial balloon and remove the anxiety it has caused.

LIBERAL PARTY POLICY ON SPOUSAL DEDUCTION

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, I want to make it clear that I, and the great majority of my constituents, strongly support the long-standing Liberal policy of providing tax exemptions for spouses who do not work outside the home—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parent: —while at the same time providing opportunities through the tax system for those persons who work outside the home and also care for children. I would urge the Government to make clear as quickly as possible that, while it might wish to do more for the parent who is employed outside the home, it will not penalize those spouses whose work is in the home.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the time allotted for this brief statement amounts to roughly seven one hundredths of a second on behalf of each of 1,200 workers at the International Harvester farm implement factory who have been told they will be laid off indefinitely at the end of April. Throwing out onto the streets another 1,200 families means yet another kick in the teeth to the Hamilton-Wentworth area as a direct result of the Government's economic policies. Because of high interest rates and low commodity prices, farmers simply do not have the cash to re-invest in new equipment and cannot afford to go into more debt.

The farmers will be working their land again, the farm implement business will come back, and International Harvester may survive. But the 1,200 laid off workers are still faced with making ends meet until the market warrants rehiring at International Harvester.

This latest addition to the Hamilton area's unemployment rolls underscores the urgency of having the federal Government designate Hamilton-Wentworth under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. The Government has recently seen fit to designate communities such as Sudbury and Port Alberni under ILAP, and cities like Brantford and Chatham have been given six months extensions on their ILAP designations. The Hamilton area is hurting just as badly as those other communities, particularly in the steel and farm implement machinery business. Surely the indefinite closing down of International Harvester is enough to convince the Government to help Hamilton-Wentworth under ILAP.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER CORPORATION CUT IN PRODUCTION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, Canadians just learned in a week-end interview with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) that Chrysler is reneging on its commitment to Canadians by slashing production and, therefore, jobs in Canada. This is in complete violation of the funding agreement the company had with the Canadian Government in return for bailing it out of bankruptcy in 1981. Without that agreement, Chrysler would not have received any help from the U.S. and thus massive unemployment would have resulted in both countries.

The workers of Chrysler Canada, in good faith, agreed to freeze their income demand in order to make the company viable again. We in the NDP insist that the Government accept nothing less than that Chrysler live up to its commitments to the Canadian people.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LEGAL AUTHORITY FOR CUT IN FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who will have received a letter from me asking that she publish the legal opinion of the Department of Justice which has led the Government to decide to issue family allowance cheques for less than the law requires. I understand the Minister has been in touch with the Minister of Justice, and I wonder if she will table now in the House of Commons, and make available to Parliament and the people of Canada, the legal opinion on which she is basing this action which we consider to be illegal and unjustified?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, while I was away, my office staff advised the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that all legal questions were to be directed to my colleague the Minister of Justice. I am now able to confirm that the January Family Allowance cheques which recipients should receive within the next few days will be increased by 6 per cent, while Old Age Security Pension cheques for that month because of the difference in the phrasing of the legislation will be increased by 11 per cent, and then increased by only 6 per cent thereafter once the legislation is passed by Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Even the Minister of Health should know that when she gets the opinion she is responsible for tabling it in this House, or for defending the Government's refusal to table it in this House. The Minister of Communications tells me they are not tabled; of course they are tabled. One was tabled on November 30 by the Minister of Justice.

REQUEST THAT LEGAL OPINION BE TABLED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice, in committee, indicated that he would not table legal opinions which reflected on an individual. This legal opinion does not reflect on an individual; indeed, it reflects upon the rights of this Parliament to legislate before the Government acts, and it deals specifically with the needs of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who may be denied what the law now accords them because this Government is acting illegally.

Will the Minister of Justice table that legal opinion?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition well knows, there is a long-standing tradition in this House of not tabling legal opinions of the Attorney General. The fact is, though, Madam Speaker, that I am perfectly prepared to enunciate the salient points of that opinion for the Right Hon. Member. I can tell him that the adjustments contemplated by the Family Allowances Act are annual adjustments, not monthly adjustments. In addition, the legislation does not require that the monthly payments should be of equal amounts.

Of course, if Bill C-132 is passed during the 1983 year, the amount paid under the new scheme will be exactly the right amount. If it is not passed during 1983, there would then have to be an adjustment at some stage to the monthly payments.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, let me interpret what the Minister of Justice has said. He has said that if this Parliament does not approve the Bill by the end of 1983, then this Minister's action to deny payments due to family allowance recipients across the country is illegal. That is what the Minister of Justice has just now said in this House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT TREATMENT OF LEGAL OPINIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I ask the Minister of Justice, Madam Speaker, to have the courage to place upon the Table of the House of Commons the full legal opinion which has been received. He did it once with regard to the legal culpability of RCMP officers, so may I ask him why he is prepared to table a legal opinion which may prejudice members of the RCMP but is not prepared to table a legal opinion which attacks the payments made to recipients of family allowances across this country. Why the double standard?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the right hon. Gentleman well knows the traditions of this House and I am sure that in most circumstances, when it is to his advantage, he wants to respect them.

As has already been indicated, this is as exact an interpretation of the statute as we can give. It is not our interpretation, for instance, of the old age security legislation, but it is the interpretation which my legal officers give to the family allowances legislation.

• (1420)

DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT OF LEGAL OPINIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. He will know that he himself, in a committee of the House of Commons, tabled a legal opinion regarding the position of certain members of the RCMP in respect of the McDonald Commission. He tabled that legal opinion. Now the Government is acting in a way which we believe to be illegal and which the Minister himself has admitted will be illegal if Parliament does not pass the Bill before the end of 1983.

Why would the Minister table a document that prejudices officers of the RCMP when he refuses to table a document—when he hides a document—why is he hiding a document that the Government uses as the basis for denying payments that should be made to recipients of family allowances across the country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Gentleman attempts to make something of the question of illegality. There is no illegality involved. What we are involved in is an interpretation of the legislation. The legislation does not require payments on a monthly basis. It does not require equal payments. If there is any problem with this legislation, all it requires is a simple adjustment to the payments before the end of the year. That would satisfy any problem of legality which may arise.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—QUERY RESPECTING PROGRAMS TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure he is aware that unemployment levels in the country continue to rise at an alarming rate. We now have 12.8 per cent unemployment in the labour force, or over 1.5 million people unemployed, and the level continues to go up by 50,000 every month.

In the past couple of weeks most of the Minister's statements have dealt with the NEED Program which primarily accounts for about 4 per cent, at maximum, of those who are unemployed. Surely, in the face of the massive unemployment in the country, the Minister has some programs and policies which deal with the great bulk of the people, the other 96 per cent, who are unemployed. Would the Minister identify those programs and indicate when he is going to bring them forward?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is very broad. He knows of a number of programs that we have in place in addition to the NEED program. We have the direct employment programs under the Canada Development Projects. There is a program presently available under the work-sharing program and Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. In fact, Madam Speaker, I can point out to the Hon. Member that, on a rough assessment, in 1982 the direct employment programs of this Department provided jobs for close to 200,000 Canadians, so we have been making a major effort to assist those in need. Other initiatives have been taken by other Departments to help with housing, and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has a program to spur economic development.

We still say that the ultimate solution to the problem is to provide a framework by which the private sector can begin growing again. Interest rates must come down in order for that to happen, and they are coming down. That has to be the basic strategy. In the meantime we will try to provide the complementary programs to help the people who are most in need, at a time when they need the help.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I do not think anyone would be surprised that, while we hear the Minister talk about his programs, the unemployment rate continues to go up. Indeed, even the Government prolongs the time taken to make decisions that could create jobs for people.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN ARMED FORCES' RECRUITMENT LEVELS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. For a number of months a proposal has been before the Minister with respect to increasing the recruiting levels in the Armed Services, and I think this has received the general agreement of most people connected with the program. What it needs is a commitment on the part of the Government, and an allocation of funds on the part of the Minister, to bring the program forward.

I would like to ask the Minister if he is willing to increase the recruitment levels in the Armed Forces in order to provide jobs and training for Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24. Will he provide the necessary funds? If the answer to those two questions is yes, when will he bring the program forward?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as a Member of Cabinet I was also very concerned about the figures on employment at the end of last year. My Department was asked by the Department of Employment and Immigration to put forward different programs that could relieve some of the unemployment that currently exists in the country. At the moment we are collaborating very closely with the Minister of Employment and Immigration, because he is responsible for job creation. The Department of National Defence put forward different suggestions and programs in this regard and has told the Minister what we could do and how we would do it. We could do something quickly and efficiently. It all depends, of course, on the amount of financial assistance we can receive from his Department or from the Minister of Finance. As far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, it is ready to act promptly and efficiently on the issue at hand.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON BISHOPS' STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. During the Christmas break, Canadians experienced two significant events. On the one hand they learned that unemployment had risen to the record 12.8 per cent level, and at the same time the Canadian Catholic Bishops presented the people of Canada with their historic statement on the economy. Speaking for this Party I can say that we accept the Bishops' morality and their economic analysis.

Considering that the Prime Minister of Canada, that economic genius, dismissed the Bishops' statement out of hand, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us precisely what is wrong with what the Bishops had to say, either in terms of their moral analysis or in terms of their economic prescriptions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it would certainly not be correct to say that the Prime Minister dismissed the comments of the Bishops out of hand. As far as the Government is concerned, it has devoted its attention and its programs to the alleviation of unemployment in the country. The total economic strategy of the Government has been directed to reducing inflation so that economic growth could resume in Canada and so that jobs would develop and unemployment decrease.

There is a fundamental interconnection between unemployment and inflation, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration has pointed out, and that is, namely, that as inflation comes down interest rates come down and economic recovery will resume.

I am sure we are quite alive to the concern that has been expressed by the Social Commission of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops because its concern with unemployment is a concern that has been shared by this Government for some considerable period of time.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I hope the Deputy Prime Minister reads the Bishops' statement, because it was precisely the analysis that the Deputy Prime Minister has just given us that the Bishops tore to shreds in their document.

GROUNDS FOR BISHOPS' STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask another question that comes from the statement of the Bishops. They point out—and they use the language with care and seriousness—that in their judgment Canadians are living in a state of "moral disorder". They give precise reasons for saying that, and they attribute the cause to the Government of Canada, among other agencies.

Considering that the Bishops pointed out that the top 20 per cent of Canadians, in terms of wealth, have more than 40 per cent of the income, and that the Government does nothing about this but, in the meantime, attacks pensioners and recipients of family allowances with cutbacks, would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that such a wrong set of priorities really does justify the Bishops' statement that we live in a state of "moral disorder"? If he disagrees, would he tell us why?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the job of a Minister is to deal with Government policy, not to reach judgments on every view that is expressed by every group in the country, even such an exalted body as the Social Commission of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops.

• (1430)

It is the judgment of the Bishops that there is moral disorder in Canadian society and throughout the world. That is a judgment which they are entitled to make. I am sure that, as the Government, we are entitled to make judgments on economic policies which we think are in the best interests of the country. We are prepared to debate these economic policies. Indeed, for two and a half years, as Minister of Finance, I took the view that if unemployment were to come down in Canada, if we were to succeed in providing jobs, we had to bring down inflation. That is our policy. It is the policy which has been followed by the Minister of Finance. It is a policy which has been followed by every western Government that I know. Every Government which subscribes to the International Monetary Fund subscribes to that economic analysis. That is our economic view.

The Bishops have taken quite a different economic analysis, and they are quite entitled to do so. We are quite entitled to defend our policies, as we have done for some years now. I think they will prove to be correct and will bring about the restoration of jobs in the country more rapidly than the rather dilapidated nostrums which the hon. gentleman puts forward.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, if the Deputy Prime Minister looks at the record, he is right that inflation has been going down, but unlike what he said, instead of the unemployment situation improving, it has been getting worse. Every Canadian knows that but the Deputy Prime Minister.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON BISHOPS' STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since the Deputy Prime Minister indicated in his answer that he would like to have a debate—and presumably the Prime Minister, who has never participated in an economic debate in the House since the 1980 election, might agree with him—and considering that the Bishops precisely called for a debate on values and on economic prescriptions, will the Deputy Prime Minister agree to take action which will lead to a debate in the House on the return of the Prime Minister that will allow the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, and myself to debate the bishop's report fully and frankly?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is a bit phony. We have been debating these questions in the House of Commons since the very beginning of this Parliament. I must say that every day we have debated these issues; we have had prolonged debates. For the Hon. Member to say, "Let's start debating the issue now when the Prime Minister comes back", where has he been?

Mr. Broadbent: Good question.

SPOUSAL DEDUCTION PROPOSAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the uproar which has been created by the Minister responsible for the status of women and her comments with regard to the spousal tax exemption, when she said:

—those families who are able to use the spousal deduction are at the top end of the income scale. It's only the more affluent families in our society that allow a woman to stay at home—

The Minister will know that in the 1980 tax returns those who were able to make use of the spousal deduction—75 per cent of them making that claim—earned $25,000 or less, including the working poor, the elderly, single parents; hardly what one would call the affluent. Is the Department of Finance giving serious consideration to the proposal either to reduce or eliminate the spousal tax exemption? Does it support that proposal or oppose it?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member would not have addressed that question to the Minister who is purported to have made that statement. I must admit that I have heard the Hon. Minister responsible for the status of women answer that question a number of times over the last couple of weeks. The answer is that the Department is not considering it, but I invite the Hon. Member to direct her question to the Minister responsible.

Miss MacDonald: I thought that the Minister speaking on behalf of the Minister of Finance, who I understood dealt with taxation matters in the House, would be able to address himself to that question.

ASSUMPTIONS UNDERLYING PROPOSAL

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, since he is unable to do so, I direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister who is also a former Minister of Finance. Does the Government accept the untenable assumptions under which the Minister responsible for the status of women put forward her proposal—first, that only affluent families benefit from the spousal tax exemption and, second, that women who work in the home and are childless make no contribution to society? I should like to know from the Deputy Prime Minister whether those assumptions are Liberal Government policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the view of the Government of Canada is that all Canadians make a contribution to our society, whatever their status in our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I do not believe that the assumptions as stated by the Hon. Member reflect carefully and fully the very thoughtful views which have been expressed by the Minister who, in my view, raised some issues which require considerable examination by the Parliament of Canada and by the people of Canada.

Miss MacDonald: They were straight quotations.

Mr. MacEachen: I hope they will not fall for the oversimplistic analysis of the Hon. Member.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN DEPOSIT INSURANCE LIMITS

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, all Canadians have become concerned recently about the issues surrounding the security of their deposits in financial institutions as raised by the issues of Greymac, Seaway, and Crown Trust. My question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Is he considering an increase in deposit insurance limits as they now stand, since they have not been changed since 1967 and do not reflect the level of inflation? If he is proposing to do this, how much would the limits be? When would this be done? Finally, will it be applied to those people who have deposits in the three institutions affected by Ontario and federal Government actions of recent weeks?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I can confirm that the Government will introduce legislation which will be effective immediately. It will increase the amount of protection under the certain circumstances which the Hon. Member raised, from $20,000 to $60,000. The amount is in line with the recommendations of the Committee on Finance which the Hon. Member obviously knows. That increase to $60,000, as I said, is effective immediately. It applies to all depositors and all corporations which fall under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. Generally the amount reflects the inflationary rise in the economy since 1967 when the $20,000 figure was struck.

Oral Questions

EFFECTIVE DATE OF PROPOSED NEW LIMITS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I understood him to say that this would be effective immediately and that it would apply to all depositors to institutions under Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act provisions. Does that mean that depositors who currently have money on deposit with the five institutions—Crown Trust, Greymac Trust, Greymac Mortgage Corporation, Seaway Trust, and Seaway Mortgage Corporation—are also covered, or is it only for new depositors from today forward?

• (1440)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, to my knowledge there is presently no claim against the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Bill which is already drafted is effective as of today. It is intended to cover any circumstance in the future where any claim may be made under any circumstance so that would, of course, include the corporations specified by the Hon. Member. Presuming that they meet the provisions of the legislation, and presuming that they meet general legislation, yes, they would be covered.

REQUEST THAT PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL BE SENT TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister of State is aware that there are two Private Members' Bills before the House right now, one in the name of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and the other in the name of the Hon. Member for St. Catharines, both of whom are Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament. One of these Bills will be before the House this Wednesday, and is designed to raise the amount stipulated from $20,000 to $100,000. In order to show the sense of urgency that all Canadians are expecting from the Government in this very serious matter, will the Government agree to allow the Bill, which will be presented by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands this Wednesday, to go immediately to committee so that it can be debated, dealt with, and thus address the anxiety of so many Canadians about their deposits—their life savings in some cases—which today are at risk in some of these institutions?

Mr. Nielsen: In the spirit of reform.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I believe the Government has done better than that. We have just indicated that we will introduce a Bill which is effective as of today. It would be my hope that the Hon. Member, who is a member of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which reported on bank profits and recommended the $60,000 limit, together with his colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel, and his colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South—

Mr. Wilson: I am the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre.

Mr. Cosgrove: —would stand behind their recommendation for $60,000. We want it immediately. We have taken their advice. I do not know why, for example, the Hon. Member is referring to some other Member of his party who has some other idea on the subject.

Mr. Wilson: Come on now.

TRUST COMPANIES' ASSETS—INVESTIGATION OF TORONTO APARTMENT SALES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary to the questions asked of the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister knows that on January 8 the federal Government seized the assets of Seaway Mortgage Corporation and Greymac Mortgage Corporation. Does what the Minister is announcing today mean that the Government has determined there are insufficient funds in these corporations, that is, assets in the corporations to cover their liabilities? Could the Minister tell us the results of those investigations, and would the Minister also confirm that the RCMP is investigating the Toronto real estate transaction?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada acted under the Loan Companies Act subsequent to the action of the Province of Ontario which moved under provincial jurisdiction to take control of the assets of the three trust companies. Subsequently, because the two mortgage companies involved under federal jurisdiction were associated companies, and because they had been associated in transactions with the companies that were taken control of by the provincial Government, and for a number of other reasons the Superintendent of Insurance moved to assume control of the assets of the two mortgage companies that have been the subject of publicity of late.

I think that neither the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the Province of Ontario, nor myself, nor officials, would want to go into a great amount of detail on these issues at this time because, as the Hon. Member may or may not be aware, the corporations involved have served notice both on the federal Government and on the provincial Government that they intend to hold the Governments responsible for any loss arising out of these actions. Therefore I think at this time it would be prudent, on the advice of counsel for the Goverment, not to go into detail.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, the Minister wants us to consider a Bill right away, but he will not go into any detail about the investigation which has been going on for about nine days or so.

NATURE OF RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Would he agree with me that increasingly in Canada money is coming from criminal activity? For example, money from narcotic drugs is coming here and distorting areas of Canadian business. Would the Minister tell this House whether the RCMP is investigating the Toronto transaction and, more precisely, the origin of the money put up for the transaction, the people behind the numbered companies and the so-called foreign investors with their Swiss accounts? Is the RCMP investigating this transaction? Can the Minister tell the House whether the RCMP is investigating some of the matters I have mentioned and, if so, when can we get a report to this House?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can confirm that an RCMP investigation is under way. It would be high speculation to suggest what precise grounds were being investigated, and it would be entirely improper for me to confirm or to describe what are the grounds of the investigation.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE DELIBERATIONS ON APPLEBAUM-HÉBERT REPORT BE TELEVISED

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Since 1983 has been designated the International Year of Communications, can the Minister tell the House whether he will support the request of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture which is now examining the Applebaum-Hébert report so that the proceedings of that Committee may be held before TV cameras and, if at all possible, right here on Tuesday and Thursday evenings when the House is not sitting?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, Canada intends to participate fully in the activities of the International Year of Communications as designated by the United Nations and I will soon have the pleasure of announcing the events which will take place in Canada to celebrate that year.

As to the suggestion of the Hon. Member, I think it is very commendable, but I would have to discuss it with the President of the Privy Council and Leader of the Government in the House under whose jurisdiction this matter falls.

NATIONAL GALLERY

APPOINTMENT OF ARCHITECT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for the National Gallery of Canada who, I believe, is the Minister of Communications. The Gallery has announced that it will not be holding an architectural competition but will, in fact, simply appoint an architect for the new gallery.

Mr. Jarvis: Arthur Erikson strikes again.

Mr. Bosley: Could the Minister tell us whether the Government supports that decision and whether the reason for the support of that decision is so that Arthur Erikson, or someone similar, can get the contract? Or is it because there was a competition already and an architect whom the Government does not like won that competition some years ago?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members know that the Government has decided to go ahead and build two large museums in the National Capital, namely the National Gallery of Canada and the Museum of Man. As for all questions related to the construction of those museums, we have set up a Crown corporation responsible for making recommendations to the Government on the way to spend the funds and, of course, on the architects best qualified to carry out the projects. The construction corporation has made an analysis of various architectural firms and paid a visit to 78 of them across the country, from Charlottetown to Vancouver. I expect it will make recommendations to the Government which will have an opportunity to examine them and, naturally, the client—the Canadian Government—will make the ultimate decision about the selection of architects.

[English]

REQUEST THAT OPEN COMPETITION BE HELD

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Communications. There has been in the creation of institutions of such importance as the National Gallery a tradition in Ottawa that open competitions normally be held in order to make sure that public money produces the finest possible public buildings for the people of Canada. May I ask the Minister why that process will not be followed in this case? Why does the Minister prefer a procedure which is already tainted as a consequence of the embassy which is being built in Washington, and why will the Minister not recommend to his own Government that the open competitive process be used rather than another Liberal architect getting another job?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): As the Hon. Member is undoubtedly aware, Madam Speaker, in 1978 the President of the Treasury Board tabled in the House the policy concerning regulations for the selection of architects for the construction of public buildings. The Government has established other selection criteria which, when compared with others, are rather similar and whose objective is the same.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF INTEREST ACT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. As he is aware, the Interest Act in Canada has not been amended for some 20 years. Section 10 of the Interest Act, by subsequent practice, is now completely outdated because we do not have mortgages of over five years' duration. Is the Minister proposing to introduce any amendments which would reduce the five year qualification down to one year in Section 10 of the Interest Act?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have had occasion to review a whole series of questions with the officials of the corporation during the past two weeks. That question did not come up but I will certainly make a point of discussing it. If it is feasible and advantageous to mortgage holders, I hope we can bring it forward.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ACTION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): According to CMHC research, it appears that there are some 707,000 Canadians who are presently trapped in mortgages of 17 per cent or higher. Now that the mortgage rate has come down, if the rule was changed to one year from five years it would alleviate much of the difficulty for those Canadians. Realizing that so many Canadians are trapped, will the Minister bring this forth with his officials on an urgent basis in an attempt to bring about an amendment?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I will obviously give the Hon. Member's suggestion the attention it deserves.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST THAT FULL INDEXING OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES BE RESTORED

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the recent statements made by the Minister responsible for the status of women. Unfortunately the Minister, in her very thoughtless remarks about tax deductions, insulted women who work hard in the home, with no pay and no pensions, and who certainly contribute to society in many ways. She ignored single women who need tax deductions, low income families who need tax credits, and also ignored the high unemployment which prevents many women from working.

Since the Deputy Prime Minister said earlier today that he cares for all Canadians, I would ask him if this also includes high priority for children and women and, if so, will he reinstate full indexing for family allowances and ensure the full indexing goes out on this month's family allowance cheques?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot give that assurance, but I will remind the Hon. Member that we have demonstrated our concern for the children of this country by the steps we have taken to enrich the child tax credit substantially. It is along those lines that the Minister for the Status of Women was thinking when suggesting possible ways of further enriching support for the children and women of this country.

EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of these same statements made by the Minister who is supposedly responsible for the status of women, which presumed that all women have the choice to go out and work and therefore need child care costs, would he explain the statistics, as far as unemployment for women is concerned, affecting women now and in the future? Will he tell the House that there will be jobs for all women who want to go out to work in the workforce?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would certainly hope that we could provide the setting in which that employment would take place. To that extent we have introduced a number of new measures over the past year, particularly the new National Training Act which is designed to help women, along with all other Canadians, retrain for new technologies and jobs.

I should say that I had a very successful meeting with the provincial Ministers of Labour and Employment on Friday in which we agreed to co-ordinate our efforts in this area in a very co-operative fashion. I think we can maintain that spirit and reach the goal that the Hon. Member is seeking to achieve.

COMMUNICATIONS

PRODUCTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC SHOWS FOR PAY TV

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. It concerns the CRTC requirements for Canadian content and artistic control in Pay TV, requirements which would ensure that talented Canadian writers and actors have the opportunity to work and establish their reputations.

We are now finding that some companies are producing in Canada, for Pay TV, shows which are written in the United States, thus excluding Canadian writers, and many are soft porn shows which exclude serious Canadian actors and actresses. If this is accepted as meeting the requirements for Canadian content, the companies are then free to buy all of their serious programs outside Canada, which effectively closes the doors on opportunities for Canadian actors, producers and writers. Has the Minister discussed this matter with the CRTC, and does it propose to bring in clearer standards and regulations?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think that two issues are involved in the Hon. Member's question. One is the question of obscenity and pornography. Quite obviously the Government of Canada did not uphold the decision of the CRTC to issue licences to Pay TV operators in order for them to turn the Pay TV system into one which promotes pornography or obscenity in Canada.

With respect to the question of Canadian content, I think the question raised by the Hon. Member quite clearly points out the necessity to tighten the rules for Canadian content. Some 18 months ago, in the area of capital cost allowance, the Government tightened up the Canadian content definitions in a rather stringent fashion. The CRTC held an issue hearing in the month of December on the whole question of Canadian content. I discussed the matter with the Chairman of the CRTC this morning. The Chairman of the CRTC shares the concerns expressed to me by many Members of the House. He has previously informed me that he expects to have a decision on the Canadian content hearings issue made public within the next month or two at the latest.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

AUTHORITY FOR PAYMENT MADE TO CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Many Canadians would like to know whether the $90,000 payment to Clifford Olson was made under what amounts to be an illegal document. Will the Minister tell us whether he has made a decision and whether he will sue to recover what is still available from that $90,000? Will he also agree to table the "black trust deed" that was entered into with Mr. Olson, signed on behalf of the Government of Canada, and approved by the Ministry of Justice?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I told the Hon. Member some weeks ago in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that I would look carefully into this matter. I have had the opportunity to do so. Given the fact that the original payment was made entirely under the authority of the Attorney General of British Columbia, I have come to the conclusion that any legal action which is instituted to recover the moneys paid over should be instituted by the Attorney General of British Columbia.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OBTAIN LEGAL OPINION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that his own officials advised the entering into of this agreement—it was signed on behalf of the Solicitor General's Department—would the Minister not agree to obtain an outside legal opinion in order to determine whether or not his earlier legal opinion was bad, in view of the obvious conflict or interest?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman knows that the original decision was made by the Attorney General of British Columbia without the knowledge of either the Commissioner of the RCMP or of my colleague, the Solicitor General. Therefore, if any legal opinion is to be obtained, I should think it would be the Attorney General who would want to obtain those legal opinions.

USE OF WRITS OF ASSISTANCE ISSUED TO RCMP

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Justice. Now that there have been at least two Ontario courts which have ruled against the validity of the use of writs of assistance, I wonder if the Minister of Justice or his Department has issued instructions to the RCMP, through the Solicitor General, that these writs—in Ontario in any event—are not to be used and, if he has done so, why have the same instructions not been issued to the RCMP in the rest of the country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I have not yet had the opportunity to review the effect of the decision of Judge Belanger. I hope to be in a position to do that shortly.

LEGISLATION TO ABOLISH WRITS OF ASSISTANCE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, while the Minister is reviewing the matter, with the very great public image that exists across the country against the use of these very arbitrary writs by the police, would he look at the Order Paper where there have been draft bills on it for two years now, standing not only in my name but, I believe, in the name of other Members of the House of Commons, to abolish the use of these writs absolutely?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I will of course be reviewing the whole subject while I consider the question of an appeal of the Belanger decision. I might say that I, myself, suggested possible alternatives to the present procedures, in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATE OF DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING QUEBECAIR

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I imagine he can tell the House today where matters stand concerning Quebecair.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Member that the discussions are still going on between Quebecair and Air Canada and the representatives of both governments. We must however wait for the financial statements of Quebecair to be audited, which should be done around February 15. We shall then be in a position to compare these financial statements with the various commitments the Quebec government is willing to make. A quick computation will then determine whether the project is feasible, and the other discussions now under way will continue, concerning for instance the routes which Quebecair has renegociated and will keep for itself.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, if I understand the minister correctly, contrary to the statement he made in the House a few months ago, to the effect that Quebecair I would no longer exist, the government will now do everything in its power to save the existing Quebecair company instead of creating a new one.

Mr. Pepin: I have already replied to that question in the House and I have already confirmed what the Hon. Member of Joliette has said. There is nothing new in this. However, I stated at the time that I was not giving a blank cheque and that everything would be based on an audit of the financial statements, and this is what is happening at the present time.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid on the Table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by the Hon. Members on Wednesday, December 22, 1982, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

STANDING COMMITTEES

APPOINTMENT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. To comply with the spirit of Section 69(1) of the New Standing Orders and after consultation with my colleagues opposite, I believe that if you were to ask unanimous consent for the following motion to be agreed to without debate, you would receive it, which would allow us to reorganize the committees of the House without delay.

[English]

Consequently, I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

> That, notwithstanding any temporary or permanent Standing Order or any other order of the House, the Striking Committee shall consist of Messrs. Daudlin, Deans, Kempling, Nielsen, Parent, Pinard and Turner.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Yes, Madam Speaker, we would provide our consent to the moving of this motion now without debate. I assume, of course, that it will be the intention of the Striking Committee to prepare and report to the House within the ten-day time bracket which is now provided for in Standing Order 69. We will be reporting to the House within ten days from today.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, according to Standing Order 69(1) we must make that report in the first ten sitting days following January 1, and to allow this organization to take place within that ten days we have prepared for a meeting this afternoon at 4.30 p.m. in Room 112-N. We will have a clerk there to facilitate our proceedings, if this is acceptable to my colleagues on the other side.

Madam Speaker: In that case, is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: For the sake of the record, I wonder if the Government House Leader would please indicate the business of the House as far into the week as he is now able, assuming completion of the report stage of Bill C-133.

Mr. Pinard: I will consider my colleague's request and give him my answer later this afternoon when we meet. If we have completed report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-133 before the end of the week, it is quite possible that next Friday will be an Opposition day, as I indicated to him earlier today; but I will give him confirmation later today or tomorrow.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NEIL—TIMING OF STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, when I came into the House this afternoon, I was of the opinion that Standing Order 21 provides that any Hon. Member may make a statement for a period of up to 90 seconds, or one and a half minutes. I had prepared my statement accordingly but I was cut off about three-quarters of the way through. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), was timing my statement, and he tells me that I was cut off at the one minute point. Therefore, the important part of my statement is not on the record.

The Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook), who followed me, was also cut off. I took out my stop-watch and timed his statement. He was cut off by Your Honour after 62 seconds.

I just want to bring this to Your Honour's attention. I wondered if perhaps you had been making use, up until that point in time, of a metric clock or something.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Neil: However, I would suggest, although I do not want to make an issue of this matter, as someone from the other side pointed out this morning, that it might be advisable to have a digital clock on the wall so that an Hon. Member knows exactly how much time he has left in which to speak, because it is very difficult to time oneself. Most of us, I think, do our utmost to stay within the time limits but we were not even permitted our time limits today.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is quite right. He was short-changed by about 30 seconds and so was the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and two Hon. Members on this side of the House. I had to rely on a signal which was given to me by one of the officials in the House who was operating—

Mr. Nielsen: On metric!

Madam Speaker: —a stop-watch, and he had some difficulties with his stop-watch.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Swift!

Madam Speaker: However, he caught on to the system quite quickly and for the rest of the period I think all Hon. Members were given their 90 seconds.

As for a digital stop-watch on the wall, I wonder if Hon. Members would just let me deal with that suggestion, because I do not think it would look too nice. We already have three clocks on the wall and to add a fourth one would perhaps not be a very good idea. Therefore, I will look after it and I think Hon. Members will be satisfied. However, I thank the Hon. Member; he is quite right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I wonder if, in the spirit of good will, we should not allow the four Hon. Members who were short-changed to make their statements now. I am sure that, with unanimous consent, we would allow that to happen.

Mr. Ouellet: Tomorrow!

Madam Speaker: I really do not know what to do. I feel awfully sorry for Hon. Members, but what should they do? Should they make their statements all over again or just the last paragraph? I suppose it would amount to the last paragraph. However, it is not quite fair because some Hon. Members on the other side of the House were also short-changed and they have left the House.

Could not Hon. Members try to make a more complete statement on another day? I think that would be the easier thing to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-U.S. TAX CONVENTION

Question No. 3,766—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Do arrangements exist between the Canadian and the United States Governments to determine the identity of Canadian residents with term deposits in United States banking institutions who do not report and pay income tax on the interest they receive from the deposits and, if so, what are the arrangements?

2. In each of the past four years, how many Canadian residents were (a) investigated in this regard (b) caught not paying the tax due to the Government?

3. Will the government take further steps to determine how many non-payers exist and to determine what the loss is annually to the federal treasury?

4. (a) Is it Government policy to close any loopholes that exist to ensure that proper taxes will be collected (b) would such a collection enable the government to collect less in taxes from those taxpayers who make honest declarations?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Under the provisions of the Canada-U.S. Tax Convention, term deposit interest payments made to Canadian residents from United States sources are not reported annually from the U.S. Internal Revenue Service. Negotiations are presently under way with the U.S. Government to have this type of payment included in their annual report.

2. Revenue Canada-Taxation does not maintain separate statistics on the reporting by Canadian residents of United States term deposit interest.

Order Paper Questions

3. The determination of exigible Canadian income taxes and identification of those who have failed to pay those sums is a continuing ongoing principal objective of Revenue Canada-Taxation. Investigations are conducted to determine world income, from all sources.

4. (a) It is policy to ensure that proper taxes will be collected and existing third party information reporting processes are considered adequate in this regard. (b) Taxes collected are at rates established by law.

STUDY "ENERGY COSTS AND FERTILIZER PRICES DURING THE EIGHTIES"

Question No. 4,535—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a study conducted on behalf of the Department of Agriculture regarding "energy costs and fertilizer prices during the eighties" and, if so (a) what were the terms of reference (b) to whom was the study contracted (c) for what reason was it not done internally by the Department (d) what amount did the study cost (e) what conclusions and/or recommendations were reached (f) what action will be taken or has been taken as a result of the conclusions or recommendations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. (a) See "Statement of Work" below. (b) Deloitte Haskins and Sells of Guelph, Ontario. (c) The type of specialist resources were not available during the period the study was to be carried out. (d) $11,000. (e) None, since final report has not as yet been completed. (f) No action can be taken until final report has been received and reviewed.

Statement of WorK

Title: Energy Costs and Fertilizer Prices During the Eighties

Background: Fertilizer is becoming one of the most important and costly inputs in the crop production sector of agriculture. Farm sector expenditures for fertilizer has increased by 620 per cent for the period 1971 to 1981 and now exceeds $1 billion annually. There has also been an increase in terms of fertilizer's share of total farm operating expenses. Before the dramatic rise in energy prices in 1973, fertilizers accounted for approximately 5.5 per cent of operating expenses. In 1981, this figure had increased to 9.4 per cent.

While potash and phosphate fertilizer materials are refined from mineral deposits, nitrogen fertilizers are manufactured with natural gas being the originating feedstock. With rising costs for natural gas and other energy inputs required for its manufacturing, the price of nitrogen containing fertilizers will continue to escalate during the rest of this decade. With increased agricultural production targets being a part of Canada's agri-food strategy, and higher nitrogen application rates being one immediately practical way of achieving this goal, it is imperative that price projections and anticipated levels of supply should be available for the information of both the fertilizer industry, the farming community and government analyses. Such information would be required by the Directorate for presentation at the annual Outlook Conference.

Requirements: The final report should contain information on the following:

(1) North American nitrogen fertilizer capacity. The location, capacity and level of technology used for both existing and new plants presently under construction or expansion should be included. (2) Energy inputs required for production. A section on the various direct energy inputs required for the production of a tonne of ammonia and urea and their relative importance in overall production costs. (3) Price projections for energy inputs. The latest available price projections for natural gas, electricity and other energy inputs required for the production process. (4) Trading patterns for nitrogen fertilizers. A regional accounting of trans-border nitrogen fertilizer movements. (5) Supply and demand projections for nitrogen fertilizers. The emphasis should be on the North American supply and demand situation but some projections on the world situation is also warranted. On a Canadian level, projections should be on a regional basis as well as nationally.

(6) Nitrogen fertilizer price projections. Only ammonia and urea prices need to be considered as these are the major nitrogen fertilizer materials.

Methodology: The proposed methodology for determining future levels of supply and demand is to use a simplistic approach rather than a full scale econometric model. A number of regression equations should be developed which use presently available data series and the most recent price projections to determine the probable course of future fertilizer prices.

Relevant reports which can provide guidance and/or information in completing this study include: (1) Challenge for Growth, (2) Global 2000, (3) Canada West Foundation, (4) FAD and OECD food production projections.

In addition to the pure statistical work, there should be a close linkage to the fertilizer industry. The issues addressed are of vital concern to individual companies and some of the larger corporations have personnel involved in this area. Close co-operation is seen as a way of avoiding duplication of effort and improve the quality and relevance of the results.

MRS. SUSAN WARNER

Question No. 4,541—Mr. Stewart:

1. Did a Mrs. Susan Warner, Field Officer, Classification PM-2, in the Barrie office of the Department of National Health and Welfare's Income Security Program, attend a French language training course at the Ontario Studies in Education in Toronto between September 14, 1981 and August 11, 1982 and, if so, what did it cost the Government in (a) wages (b) accommodation (c) expenses for Mrs. Warner during this period?

2. Was a Mrs. Judy Kelly employed to fulfil Mrs. Warner's duties while the latter was taking the course and, if so, what was the total amount paid in wages to Mrs. Kelly during this period?

3. Based on statistics from the Barrie office, what percentage of the total yearly transactions require (a) written (b) spoken use of the French language to provide service?

4. From 1974 to 1982, how many French language forms available in the Barrie office have been filled out by applicants?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, Mrs. Susan Warner, Field Officer, in the Barrie District Office, did attend French language training during the period September 14, 1981 and August 11, 1982.

(a) Cost to Government in wages: PM-2 Salary range: $22,698—25,571

(b) Accommodation: $845 per month for 11 months 9,295

(c) Expenses: $600 per month for 11 months 6,600

2. Yes, Mrs. Judy Kelly was employed in an acting position to backfill during Mrs. Warner's period of French language training. Amount paid in wages to Mrs. Kelly—PM-2—$22,698—25,571.

3. (a) and (b) No statistics are kept. Mrs. Warner visits the Midland Office once a week where it is estimated that French is used 70 per cent of the time.

4. No statistics kept.

PASS PRIVILEGES FOR CN-CP TELECOMMUNICATIONS EMPLOYEES

Question No. 4,558—Mr. Benjamin:

Were pass privileges for employees of CN-CP Telecommunications terminated and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reason?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of VIA Rail Canada Inc. advises as follows: Yes. (a) July 1, 1982. (b) At the request of the management of CN-CP Telecommunications, following the conclusion of a new collective agreement between CN-CP Telecommunications and its employees.

Mr. Burghardt: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask this Parliamentary Secretary, as I have asked another Parliamentary Secretary, why we have to date still not received a reply to question No. 2,042 which was placed on the Order Paper almost two years ago and deals with the Prime Minister's world tour. It simply asked what was the cost of that world tour and, specifically, how much was being borne by the taxpayers of Canada.

Perhaps, Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that we have the Prime Minister off on a new jaunt, we could catch up in at least reporting to the people of Canada what these trips, including five others I have asked for on October 23, have cost Canada to date.

Mr. Burghardt: Madam Speaker, I will certainly take notice of that question on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that to date some 83 per cent of the questions have already been answered.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACTENO. 2

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and the motion of Mr. Gray (p. 21886) and the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21889).

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the Christmas recess is over, we are back again, and it seems as though we have never been away.

I had hoped Bill C-133 would not be in front of us on our return, despite what the Government House leader had said. I had hoped that during the Christmas and New Year's recess the Members of the Government would have consulted with their constituents and other interested parties and decided not to go forward with Bill C-133, which is an amendment to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, otherwise known as the SRBA.

What is this Bill all about? It is part of a trio of Bills and relates closely to Bill C-131, which is an amendment to another Act for the same purpose, and that is to limit the indexation which takes place each year of old age pensions, civil service pensions and the pensions of the Armed Forces. These two Bills, C-131 and C-133, are a pair and do the same thing, only to different groups of people. They started off with the intention of lowering the indexation capping or ceiling to 6 per cent this year, 1983, and to 5 per cent next year, 1984.

After a great deal of discussion and dialogue and the beginnings of a revolt in the Liberal Party, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), in a fit of uncharacteristic kindness, increased the limits by one half of 1 per cent. This was enough to cause the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Evans) to give up his principles of supporting his constituents and decide to vote with the Government. Some other Liberal Members decided to stick with their principles and do as they said they were going to do, and they voted against the measure.

To determine what this is all about, we should go back a little into the history of it, and I am quoting from the report of the President of the Treasury Board, who is here this afternoon, of March 31, 1981. He pointed out:

Prior to the 1973 amendments, the amount of the increase was related to the increase in the cost of living since the year of retirement or death, as the case may be, with a maximum increase of 2 per cent per year, similar to the Canada Pension Plan at that time. Effective January 1, 1974, this 2 per cent ceiling was removed and provision was made for an annual increase in pensions related to the full increases in the cost of living.

The amount of this increase in any January is equal to the percentage increase in the average of the Consumer Price Indices for the 12 months ending on the preceding September 30 over the average for the 12 months ending a year earlier.

That should have been clear enough to everyone concerned and certainly the civil servants and the Armed Forces felt, because of the report of the President of the Treasury Board, that they did have a guarantee of such increases. The report went on to say:

Between April 1, 1970 and December 31, 1976 employees contributed one half of one per cent of salary. Effective January 1, 1977 this rate was increased to one per cent.

It was presumably increased to 1 per cent to make it pay for itself. That is why there was no complaint from the Armed Forces or the civil servants about having their contributions doubled. The report continues:

Prior to January 1, 1974, the Act also provided that all supplementary benefits would be charged to the Account. Since that date, however, those benefits paid in respect of a former contributor are charged to the Account only until their accumulated total equals the aggregate of all amounts credited to that Account in respect of that person. Supplementary Benefits paid in excess of that aggregate are then charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The same report points out that there was at that time a balance in the Account of $900 million in the spring of 1981.

When we talk about indexation of pensions, it is clearly set out in the legislation, and we have it from the Statutes of Canada, Chapter 43, in the "Short Title":

This Act may be cited as the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, when we get a complex Act, it generally has an interpretation section, and this Act is no exception. The interpretation section says this about "Pension Index":

"Pension Index", with respect to any year, means the average for that year of the Consumer Price Index for Canada, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for each month in the twelve-month period ending on the thirtieth day of September in the immediately preceding year;

That is repeated again under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. For this reason, those employees of the Government who are either in the Forces, the RCMP or the Civil Service, or employees at large of the Government, I suppose felt they did have a firm commitment from the Government that this indexation would be made. After all, it spells out what the indexation is supposed to be and it is not supposed to be at 6 per cent. It is to be the difference between the two Consumer Price Indices. It points that out in the legislation and it was promised in the House.

Finally, it was also promised in a letter written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think this is what particularly irritates all public servants, members of the Armed Forces and others to whom this Bill is going to apply. The Prime Minister, in response to a letter from a Mr. Power, wrote and thanked him for a telegram which he received on September 27. I will quote the philosophy of the Prime Minister. I am doing this so that the people here can see why the public servants thought they had a pretty firm commitment. They had it in the Act and they had it in this letter. I quote from the Prime Minister's letter:

In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the work force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes.

Perhaps the party on my left will think of that. There is quite a difference between Bill C-133 and Bill C-124, and I will repeat the words of the Prime Minister here:

• (1520)

Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production ... Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

The Prime Minister then goes on to say:

Pensioners are out of the work force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

The Prime Minister closed by saying:

I have asked my staff to send a copy of our correspondence to the President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Robert Andras.

Yours sincerely,

"P. E. Trudeau"

That letter was dated October 12, 1977. Surely, with that in his hand, the civil servant must have felt that he had a commitment, and that he had it from the Prime Minister. The legislation mentioned what the indexing was to be. Yet we now are faced with this current piece of legislation which is going to change all that summarily, not with the consent of the civil servants, not with the agreement of the Armed Forces. The Government has not even tried to negotiate with them. They have not said: "Look, we are running short of money in the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Fund; we need more money, so you people have to put in more money". I suspect they could have reached an agreement on something like that, but they did not even try. The President of the Treasury Board simply brought in a Bill saying from now on we will stop this indexation.

I have been attending the meetings of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee on this subject for I don't know how many meetings we had. It went at a frantic pace for two weeks before Christmas. The tenor of those meetings was all the same. The various elected representatives, and others, appeared in front of the Committee to explain that the people they represented were in no way satisfied with what was going on, that they were entirely in opposition. This went on day after day, and one can hardly blame them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted for his speech has expired. He could continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinnon: I would like to thank all parties of the House for their unanimous consent. I will try to be as brief as I can. When I was at home over Christmas, as other Hon. Members were, I am sure they as well as I received a lot of petitions and people came to see them on this subject. The PSAC in Victoria called a meeting and asked me to address them. It was the largest meeting they had ever held. They were adamantly outraged that they had been deceived and let down by the Government in this manner. The Hon. Members on this side, I believe, are totally opposed to this amendment. Therefore, I would ask Hon. Members opposite to search their consciences very carefully to see if they should in any way support this amendment.

Thank you for the additional time, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Bill before us could not be improved upon as an illustration of the bankruptcy of the Liberal Government. Before I go into the details of what is wrong with it, I want to make the point that this Bill is wrong in itself; it is wrong as being illustrative of the much broader six and five program, it is wrong morally and economically, and any Party or Hon. Member who cares either about economic improvement in the country or has a sense of fairness and morality should have nothing to do with it.

I want to say to the Hon. Member who has just spoken that I find the Conservative position more than a little interesting. This Bill is not some accidental outflow of the six and five program. This Bill is not a fluke in political history. This Bill which we are debating now is inextricably linked to the six and five measure which the Conservative Party of Canada voted for with the Liberals. Therefore, for the Conservatives to get up now and oppose it is, as I say, a little strange. I point out to the Conservative members, who are looking a little perplexed about this, that the "Budget in Brief" document dated June, 1982 contains on page 6 an explicit reference to the six and five program applying to public sector pensions. And the Conservatives supported that program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to my Tory friends, they cannot have it both ways. They can get up and oppose this piece of legislation; and if they are going to oppose it, they should oppose related legislation. If they want to support the Liberals in something they perceive to be popular with the public, then they have to have the guts and integrity to get up and support the Liberals when they do something unpopular. They cannot have it both ways.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill is wrong both morally and economically. It is wrong because it says to more than 200,000 pensioners who entered into a contract in good faith to create a fund which they contributed to, and which the Government, after the fact, is unilaterally going to break: "We are going to take over the next two years some $100 million out of your pockets".

It is bad enough, Mr. Speaker, to attack pensioners at this very difficult time in our economic history, especially when the same Government leaves upper income Canadians entirely alone, but I say the immorality is compounded when the pensioners are attacked on the basis of a program, a contractual arrangement, which they negotiated in good faith. Now the Government, which has the electoral power in this House to do so, is arbitrarily going to change the contractual arrangement.

I say, Mr. Speaker, particularly to all those Canadians in the private sector, that public servants ought to be receiving a fully indexed pension because they negotiated it. They contributed 1 per cent of their salaries. The Government was supposed to put up the rest as the employer, and that fund has a $14 billion surplus now. I say to the Government of Canada that this money does not belong to it; this money belongs to the pensioners and the Government is wrong to take it away from them.

This Bill, and the superficial amendment which the Minister has introduced today to try to cover himself and to protect the Government, is a perfect illustration of what the Bishops in Canada described in their statement over the Christmas break as the moral disorder which characterizes our political and economic arrangements now. And to their credit, the Bishops did not leave their critique in general terms. They made a general critique, but they give examples and specifically cited the six and five program. I regret to say we have in this country a system which can be described as one of moral disorder. The Bishops did not say that because they have suddenly discovered inequality or they have suddenly seen unemployment existing in Canada; not at all. They make their criticism not on the basis of past injustices but on the basis of this Government's approach to dealing with these very real difficulties.

On behalf of my Party, I want to make it clear that we regard the Bishops' statement as one of the most significant in the history of the Church in our country. We say it is a document that ought to be read not simply by Roman Catholics, not simply by Christians, but also by Jews and people of other religious faiths, and indeed by Canadians who have no religious faith at all. It is a document superb in its intelligence, superb in its moral analysis, and in our view it is a document which is morally and economically sound. The Bishops have not only made a moral criticism but have also given us a sound economic analysis far exceeding in its depth and range of concern that which is produced, if I may say so, by most economists in Canada at this time.

• (1530)

In recommending this document to the people of Canada, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to dwell on its details but on its relevance to a Bill which is unfair precisely in terms of the Bishops' analysis. I want to make three points about that analysis which I think ought to arouse the concern and interest of the people of Canada. First, not in their words but in the over-all impact of their analysis, what do the Bishops say? They insist that moral priorities are inextricably linked with any economic decision made by the Government of Canada. They reject the banal approach so often taken by professional social scientists and the Government of Canada that somehow you can separate instrumental political/sociological decisions from their moral implications. To their credit, the Bishops draw our attention and the attention of the people of Canada to the reality that you cannot separate morality from economics. That is very important. Specifically in the context of unemployment, they have now said not that there is unemployment, which is hardly new, but that there is unnecessary unemployment. In that context they have said that unnecessary unemployment is not simply sad or difficult or unpleasant for people; they have drawn the appropriate moral conclusion and have said in fact it represents political immorality because a Government that can be doing something better in terms of the job requirements of Canada is to be morally condemned if it is not doing those things.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the document says with great emphasis that men and women, not only in Canada but beyond it, really achieve their full humanity through the work process. They say that work is essential.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the views of the Hon. Member on the discussion paper issued by the Bishops for at least four minutes. I do not see how it is relevant to the amendment under consideration, and without telling the Hon. Member what to do, I would like him to focus on the matter under discussion, namely amendment No. 2.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The point has been made that the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is not relating to the subject matter before the House. The Chair has been listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Oshawa and although he has departed from the main thrust of the point now before the House, it is my understanding that he is, however remotely, relating to that subject.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I commend—if it is appropriate to pass judgment on the Speaker's ruling—your judgment. It did not surprise me that the Liberal Member opposite could not see the connection between the moral points I was making and his abysmal legislation. He was illustrative of the point.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is opposed to it.

Mr. Broadbent: I quickly correct myself, Mr. Speaker, because he is the Liberal Member on the other side of the House who is forthrightly and with integrity going to oppose this legislation.

The second point I was trying to make about what the Bishops have to say is something I would like to see taught in every class in every part of our land. That point is that they have said that for men and women to really realize themselves as human beings, to use their phrase, "To exercise their creative spirit, realize their human dignity", they ought to be able to work. They ought to have the right to develop their capacities and talents by labouring in their community. Surely that is a fundamental point and it goes to the root of the philosophy of social democracy. Historically it has gone to the root, of course, of a form of Christian socialism. We share in that and we would like to see it debated and discussed in the context of this kind of legislation.

The third point I would make about the Bishops' statement, which is so relevant to this Bill as an example of the six and five legislation, is that it makes a cogent analysis of the international economy, particularly the Canadian economy, both from the point of view of the efficacy of certain economic programs and from the point of view of the morality of those programs. I note in this context, Mr. Speaker, that the objections to the Bishops' statement over Christmas, in my judgment, were not accidental. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) objected in his casual and dismissive way. The Conservative Party's financial critic objected. I would suggest that they objected not because the Bishops did not understand the economy; they objected precisely because the Bishops understood the economy only too well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted for his speech has now expired. He can continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: I will not abuse the courtesy shown to me by the House and I will try to conclude quickly.

I made three points which seemed to me to be very important aspects of what the Bishops were trying to do for the people of Canada. The moral passion and concern which led to the creation of this immensely important document was rooted in their concern that the people of Canada ought to have the right to work. They were deeply concerned that in a nation as wealthy as ours in potential and with men and women who want to work, but because of our political and economic arrangements more than 1.5 million Canadian men and women cannot experience the dignity which comes from labour.

I want to conclude with this observation. They offered us the injunction that we debate and discuss this matter throughout Canada. They put it forward modestly, made arguments modestly, and I think some of us should praise those arguments extravagantly because of the fine work they did. They called for the debate to take place about the basic principles they raise, but on behalf of my colleagues I want to appeal to Members on all sides of the House to recognize what the Bishops have done for us. I want to urge them to read the document, set aside their prejudices and consider the morality of the argument and consider the economic analysis. Above all, I appeal to the Government, having done that, to consider what the Bishops have urged us to do. They have said to us as parliamentarians, implicitly: get rid of your past prejudices, get rid of your present set of priorities which are wrong, and get on with the job of producing more programs in Canada immediately so that all those men and women in our land who would like to get a job and the dignity that comes with it are able to do so. I say in conclusion, let us get on with that job.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) made some comments about a very important document, and I admit to him that the importance of the Bishops' statement deserves full debate in this House. I do hope some day when the NDP have an opposition day they will put it down to be discussed thoroughly.

I found it rather amazing that, in addressing himself to Motion No. 2 under study at this time, the Leader of the NDP did not once address himself to the amendment before us which concerns Bill C-133 which proposes to substitute some figures and increase the indexing which was six and five to 5.5 per cent and 6.5 per cent. I want to make it clear, in speaking to Motion No. 2, that I find it equally difficult to accept such a low amount of adjustment to what I consider public servants should have, that is full indexing of their pensions, since they have paid for it.

This Bill has an unusual aspect to it in that it is legislation which proposes to decrease expenditures rather than increasing expenditures. Public servants to whom I have spoken over the Christmas break said they cannot understand why at the moment the Government is calling for better inflation protection for all pensions in its "Better Pensions for Canadians" Paper, while at the same time it is moving with great haste to curtail the inflation protection of public service pensions. Some pensioners are looking for an explanation as to how this circle can be square, and are beginning to conclude that maybe—just maybe—there might be something to the charge made this morning by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that they are being made the scapegoat for inflation.

Another claim made this morning by the Minister in regard to the 6.5 and 5.5 amendment was that the six and five program only applied to the Consolidated Revenue Fund contributions. Pensioners regard with deep suspicion the claim that they have only paid for .5 per cent annual indexing. They wonder, first of all, why it is that a 1 per cent contribution to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act only brings .5 per cent indexing, when a 1.8 per cent contribution to the Canada Pension Plan buys basic retirement, survivor and disability pensions, plus 11.2 per cent indexing, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Secondly, they wonder what has happened to the statements and explanations given by the Government in 1978 and 1979 when it argued that, in determining the amount of indexing paid for by pensioners, it was necessary to take account not only of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act contributions, but also of the inflationary interest being earned on their share of the Public Service Superannuation Act, Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

I am not aware of any analysis or study that the Government has issued to show that what was wrong with its 1978 and 1979 statements and nothing has been corrected by this Bill. As far as I can determine, the Government has simply ignored its statements of three and four years ago, hoping perhaps that, if ignored, they will go away. This, quite frankly, mystifies pensioners and causes them to shake their heads in disbelief when they read "Better Pensions for Canadians", the Paper I mentioned earlier, and find the Government espousing what appears to be the underlying philosophy of its 1978 and 1979 statements and advocating that this philosophy be based in the private sector.

There are some arguments to be developed regarding the funding of the PSSA. The fund is derived from matching contributions by employer and employees of 6.5 percent of payroll contributions. Any unfunded liability is to be liquidated by the employer over a number of years. In the last actuarial report in 1977 on the PSSA, with an actuarial assumption of 5.5 per cent for salary increase, 6.5 per cent for interest rates and 3 percent for inflation, the Department of Insurance recognized that there would be deficiencies in the fund. For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982, the amount the federal Government credited to the PSSA, the main fund, due to salary increases in excess of 5.5 percent, was approximately $951 million.

Capping salary increases to 6 and 5 per cent fortuitously gives rise to an average salary increase of 5.5 per cent, which is the actuarial assumption for salary increases. The Government will effectively be relieved of its statutory obligation to credit the fund with any moneys resulting from excess earnings on the interest the fund now bears.

In the past, the interest earned in excess of the actuarially assumed rate of 6.5 per cent was used by the Government to offset its $951 million contribution. With a capping that will produce a rate of salary increase equal to the actuarially assumed rate, there will be no need to liquidate the deficiency. The question that arises is how the excess interest will be used. There is a substantial amount of interest being paid on the fund of $15 billion invested at an average rate of interest of 10.5 per cent, based on 20-year Government borrowing.

In the private sector the interest earned on pensioners' shares is used to finance, in part, the increase in benefits. This practice seems reasonable because the excess interest earned from inflation is used to offset the effects of inflation. This is not the case, however, with the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. All the excess interest has been used to offset the employer's share of the cost of inflation for its actively employed members. The situation is acceptable as long as the employer honours his promise to provide fully indexed pension benefits. If a restriction is placed on such benefits, consideration should be given to using the excess interest earnings for the purpose of increasing pension benefits.

The projected annual pension payout as of December 31, 1982, in respect of the PSSA and the SRBA is about $900 million. Capping indexing at 6.5 per cent next year will create some savings for the Government. In 1984 the savings at 5 per cent, by the Minister's own account this morning, are estimated to be in the neighbourhood of $160 million. The excess earnings on the PSSA, the main fund, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1983 and 1984 are estimated by the Government to be approximately $539 million and $661 million, respectively. Bearing in mind that the Government no longer needs to use these amounts to offset its share of contribution due to salary increases in excess of 5.5 per cent over the next two years and that the pensioners' share of the PSSA is about 30 per cent, according to the 1977 actuarial report, the share of pensioners' excess interest earnings would be in the neighbourhood of $162 million in 1983 and $198 million in 1984.

In fact, the current restraint program already saved the Government about $951 million in respect of salary increases which have been capped. Using at least part of the excess interest earnings from the PSSA to fund the benefits paid out of the SRBA would enable the Government to live up to what many of us believe to be a contractual obligation. In effect, what it should propose is to use the surplus from the PSSA to fund the deficiency in the SRBA. A similar view was expressed in the 1977 actuarial report by the Chief Actuary of the Department of Insurance, Mr. Walter Riese, because the funding of benefits through one account would result in greater stability and avoid the situation where one account would have a surplus while the other had a deficit.

Another point about the funding and indexation issues related to the Public Service Superannuation Plan, is the investment of funds exclusively in Government of Canada bonds. According to the Tomenson-Alexander Report of 1978, commissioned by the then President of the Treasury Board, the PSSA would have earned at least 1 per cent more if its investment had been in a diversified program instead of strictly in Government bonds.

Finally, by law, the excess earnings on interest rates will be credited to the PSSA account under Section 34 of the Act. This will further enrich the main pension fund while not changing by one iota the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, there are essentially two points that I wish to make in this debate. The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) read into the record part of a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to someone who had been asking how firmly committed the Government was to applying the CPI to a pension. The letter was dated 1977, but I think it is a very pertinent document today as it gives the ironclad guarantee of the Government of the day to apply to pensions the difference between the CPI at the end of one year and the CPI at the end of another. I think the end of the year comes in September but nonetheless there is a 12-month difference. I think it would be very useful if the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), who has only recently assumed that office, could have that commitment of the Prime Minister in front of him even though it was given seven years ago. I am sure that in the time he has been in office he has not had a chance to look at all the correspondence. This is a very important piece of correspondence and he should see it before he embarks too fully on the course he has set. If the Hon. Member for Victoria, when he gets the document back, might be permitted to send a copy across to the President of the Treasury Board, I think it would be a very useful contribution to this debate.

• (1550)

Mr. McKinnon: It could be appended to Hansard.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If it would suit the Chair, the Hon. Member for Victoria has actually offered to table the document and have it appended to Hansard.

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I think that by unanimous consent we will have it appended to Hansard: that is very good.

Now I will come to the two comments I should like to make. The first one is one of substance and the second one deals with form. I am not sure that time will permit me to deal with both of them, but I should like to make a few comments on the matter of substance and also read into the record a couple of remarks which were contained in correspondence between a Public Service pensioner and the former President of the Treasury Board. Again I should like to send a copy of it across to the present President of the Treasury Board because he may not have seen it. It was dated August 30, 1982.

Meanwhile, on the substance side, I want to underline first and foremost the consideration that the commitment made to public servants was ironclad. It was in the letter of the Prime Minister. In effect, the present legislation breaks faith with those people who are no longer able to speak for themselves from within the Government as they once were. As public servants and through their collective bargaining agency they could negotiate with the Government. When they are on pension and no longer on the salary roll, they are no longer in a position to exercise the same pressure. Therefore that is the group in this particular situation with whom faith is being broken.

Of course the Government should be used to breaking faith by now. Canadians are becoming used to this Government breaking faith, but these are the servants of the Government and of the people of Canada. It does not become any Government to break faith with its own servants.

I would modify my comment about their lack of organization to some extent because public service pensioners do have an organization which is known as the National Federation of Superannuants which operates from outside the Government. On occasion it can and does make submissions to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts or Miscellaneous Estimates when it does its utmost, but without the same sort of emphasis which can be made from the inside.

When these public servants were still serving the country in an active form, they entered into a binding contract, which was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Victoria, that indexation, as represented by the difference between 12 months' variation in the cost of living, would be applied to their pensions once they left the service. In addition, to indicate that they were prepared to make their contribution to this contract, they fulfilled their part of the bargain. First, by adding an extra one half per cent and then 1 per cent to the pension to which they were contributing. Now that they have made that contribution, the Government is denying the existence of the contract. Therefore, there are two points to remember in considering this matter. There is the extra contribution which public servants made while they were in the service, and there is another matter, that is the size of the pension.

Let us remember that the maximum pension which a public servant is able to obtain is the average of the best six consequential years of employed service; thirty five-fiftieths of the best six consecutive years of employed service, in other words, 70 per cent of the average within that six years of service. It is not the full salary; it is 70 per cent of what they were getting. As has been indicated, that 70 per cent was to have been indexed under the provisions of the law to allow those no longer eligible for annual increments since they were no longer salaried employees—and salaried employees would be eligible in those circumstances for annual increments—to maintain a way of life to which they had had to adjust, taking into account the ravages which runaway inflation cannot fail to have on fixed incomes. The 70 per cent mentioned is a theoretical percentage because the formula for calculating pensions is thirty five-fiftieths of the average annual salary over the best six consecutive years of employed service.

I have before me an extremely well-written letter by a former public servant. I would like to read most of it into the record if time permits, and I would like to send a copy to the President of the Treasury Board because it was sent to his predecessor on August 30, 1982. He wrote on that date to express his strong concern over the implications of the Government's proposal at that time to limit the indexing of the superannuation benefits of Public Service pensioners to 6 per cent this year and to 5 per cent in 1984. The adjustments have been made since to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent. He wrote:

I am deeply concerned first of all by the breach of faith and of principle which the proposal, if implemented in its present form, would represent. The undertaking to provide fully indexed pensions to retired members of the Public Service has a firm and specific legislative basis which involves obligations to be discharged both on the part of the employer and on the part of the employee. It was the problem of inflation which at the time of the enactment of the legislation sharply posed the need for it. In previous years Public Service pensioners had suffered heavy erosion in their standards of living. In the circumstances the introduction of such legislation was not only a progressive step and a matter of simple justice, it also had a financial justification in the requirement of an additional premium from contributors.

I see that Mr. Speaker seems to be somewhat uneasy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I must inform the Hon. Member that the time allotted to him has expired. Of course he may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I feel that this letter is worth putting into the record. I will send a copy to the Minister as well. He continued:

Mention of the contributors' additional financial obligation cannot help but place the Government's proposal in a very curious light. For there has been no suggestion in Government statements on the matter that the resources of the Superannuation Fund are inadequate to the requirements of providing fully indexed pensions.

As I am sure you will agree, pensioners have particularly strong reasons to be concerned about the effects of inflation. In our society they are, as a group, most strongly disadvantaged by those effects. Public Service pensioners are initially disadvantaged at retirement by the adverse impact of inflation on the level of their pensions . . . For some years now the range of variation over any six-year period had been quite substantial because of the factor of inflation.

He continued:

Where there is such discrepancy in income levels, both actual and prospectively increasing, Public Service pensioners must inevitably be concerned also about the inequitability of applying the Government's proposed limitations of 6 and 5 per cent to Public Service employees and pensioners alike. For such a simplistically conceived approach appears to ignore the very different situation of pensioners, specifically that they have a much lower level of income, that the real impact of the limitations will therefore be heavier on them and that, unlike people in the work force, no procedures or mechanisms exist to offer them the hope of recapturing in later years when the economic situation improves the reductions in their income.

I do not mean to imply by the foregoing comments that Public Service pensioners should be excused from making their contribution to the fight against inflation. Since they are the most strongly disadvantaged by it, pensioners are indeed bound, in my opinion, to be the strongest supporters of firm, fair and consistently-implemented measures to combat the disease. The Government's present proposal is not such a measure: as well as constituting a breach of faith it would permanently disadvantage pensioners. It cannot therefore attract the kind of co-operation which I am sure pensioners, in accordance with their limited financial means, would be ready to accord to the Government if they could recognize the sacrifice asked of them to be fair and well considered.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will have a copy of this letter made and sent across to the President of the Treasury Board.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACTENO. 2

MEASURE TO INCREASE BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported, (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and the motion of Mr. Gray (p. 21886) and the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21889).

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to speak on the amendment put by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). The amendment reads:

That Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be amended in Clause 2, by striking out at page 2 the year 1984 and the figure 275.69 opposite the year 1984.

I want to indicate that while the Government respects the ruling of the Chair with regard to the admissibility of this amendment, the Government does not accept this as precedent-setting since the Government had no opportunity to make representations in the House in this regard.

Also, while I am on my feet, I have a couple of points with regard to Motion No. 2 which increases the payments to Public Service pensioners from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent. This is done to respect the principle of not in any way reducing the payments based on contributions made by former employees, former public servants, and matched by the Government. This results in an increase of $18 million in payments. I find it difficult to understand how the Conservative Party spokesman, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, can call this a pittance or a crumb. We once heard an Hon. Member say, "What's a million?" Now we have the official spokesman for the Opposition Party saying, "What's $18 million?"

The amendment is a very simple one. It respects the contributions made by public servants, and the indexation based on those contributions will be at the CPI inflation rate of 11.5 per cent. The contributions that are made from consolidated revenue by the taxpayer will be limited to 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, this is the third or fourth time that I have been on my feet in recent days talking about Family Allowances, the decision to cap those, the Old Age Security payments and the decision to cap those, and now today talking about the Government's determination in effect to put a 5 per cent tax on all retired civil servants. I cannot help thinking as a Member of this House how rotten it feels to stand here and be faced with pieces of legislation, one after the other, which have the effect of taxing every senior citizen in this country, because that is what the OAS legislation will do.

This legislation today is a specific 5 per cent tax on all retired civil servants. Also on our agenda we have a 5 per cent tax on all the children in the country. I look across at the 147 Members of the Liberal Party and wonder how they can support these measures with any kind of priority.

I hear the answer from time to time that we are going to save the Government money. The Parliamentary Secretary said that $18 million is not inconsequential. I agree. Eighteen million dollars is a lot of money. Hon. Members over there supported the Government which spent $650 million to buy service stations just two or three months ago. They supported the Government that has provided $1 billion in hidden subsidies to one Crown Corporation called Petro-Canada. Supporting an expenditure of $1 billion on the one hand and putting a special 5 per cent tax on retired people to get back $18 million or $80 million on the other hand, where is the sense of fairness in that? Where is the sense of social justice?

Hon. Members should read the briefs which came before the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Where is the economic sanity in these measures when the nation has 1.5 million people unemployed? We have 1.5 million people unemployed because the people of Canada do not have enough money in their pockets to buy the goods and services which workers could produce. When you have no markets, then there are no jobs.

When a person stands in this chamber and says that we are going to take money out of the pockets of the poorest segment of society by way of a specific tax just to provide a little more money for the Government, we are saying in economic terms that we are taking money out of the pockets of those who spend everything they get because they are so near the poverty line and have no choice. When we say that the Government is going to save $18 million or $80 million, what we are really saying is that we will throw more Canadians out of work because that tax money is coming out of the pockets of the people who would spend the money on the necessities of life which, in turn, creates jobs. That money is being taken away from those people and it is being put into Government's coffers.

We get into these amounts of $18 million, $80 million or $1 billion and sometimes we lose sight of what they represent.

This Bill before us today which Government Members are going to support as sure as can be will impose a 5 per cent tax on a specific segment of our population. Who belongs to this segment? Let us not lose sight of who they are. The segment includes everybody who serves in the Canadian Armed Forces for a length of time; any war veteran; everybody who serves in the RCMP or their widows. These are the people. What about the maintenance people who throughout an entire working lifetime never made a wage close to the average industrial wage? These people retire on $5,000 a year, perhaps $4,000 a year. But the Government is going to take a special 5 per cent tax from those people who have a pension entitlement of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $5,000 only. What about all the clerks who serve this Government and the people of Canada so well? These people had a contract with the Government. Yet on the last day before Christmas we saw the best paid civil servant in this country, someone who made over $100,000 a year, hand in his resignation which was accepted, become eligible for a pension of about $60,000 annually. To reward this civil servant for his long-term service, he was put in the Senate at a cost to Canadian taxpayers of about $6.5 million, if he serves in the Senate until he is 75 years of age.

• (1610)

On our first day back in the House after being away for Christmas we are asked to take an average of $30 a month from the pockets of the poorest element of Canadian society, those living on fixed incomes and pensions. That is to come from the pockets of people who have pensions amounting to between $6,000 and $7,000 a year. At the same time the Government has been handing $6.5 million to one individual. Where is the justice in that? Where is the priority and the social conscience that is supposed to be a part of every political party and of every Member who is sent to this House?

If the Government is genuinely interested in saving money, does it really believe that its priority should be an attack on pension incomes in order to save that money? It should reconsider some of its decisions, or are Government Members prepared to stand in front of their constituents and say that they believe in this attack on the senior citizens of this country with a special tax rate of 5 per cent per year for the rest of their lives while its priority for spending should be the purchase of $650 million worth of service stations? Is that the Government's priority? Is the Government's priority to spend its money for the ownership, power and control of service stations in this country which it will recover from the pockets of senior citizens, mothers and children of this country? This is the priority that Parliament is being asked to endorse.

It is an abomination and not what 99.9 per cent of the people in my riding would view as appropriate Government policy. The Minister is denying reality when he rises in the House to say that the six and five program must be universal. The Government controls the superannuation accounts and is a participant in the Canada Pension Plan. One is indexed and the other is capped. The Government is creating first, second, third, fourth and fifth class senior citizens in Canada, depending upon their source of income. There is no logic or justice to the Government's policy.

This group of people with whom we are concerned have spent a lifetime serving the taxpayers of this country. They retired with a contract with the people of Canada, through the Government of Canada, in which they agreed to pay extra funds during their working life in order to participate in a pension plan that will be indexed. These employees could have reached an agreement with the Government to contribute less money into the fund and save more for themselves to protect them against inflation. However, they trusted the Parliament of Canada to keep its bargain. I hope that Members opposite will join our Party to defeat this Bill and this amendment.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the amendment to Bill C-133 which was moved by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). One might call it the half per cent solution. It is an insult to the public servants and pensioners of Canada. It is simply a gimmick to buy off some Liberal consciences. It is a cheap price.

Through this amendment, the Government is pretending that the purpose of this Bill is to deal with the problems of the pension accounts. Well, if there were problems in the pension accounts, they should have been dealt with otherwise than through the six and five legislation. As well, certainly changes should not have been initiated without consultations with the unions and the civil servants through their pension associations.

It is not often that we find the Conservative Party agreeing with the New Democratic Party in opposition to this piece of legislation. The Conservatives usually agree with the Government, as evidenced by Bill C-124 which is the legislation which started us down this slippery road. I want to say that the Conservatives cannot deny the fact that they knew, on June 12, 1982, the Government's intention when it was clearly stated in the budget that was brought down at that time. The Conservatives supported Bill C-124 which was an Act to implement the six and five program. The Government clearly stated that it would also apply to people receiving Public Service pensions, and the Conservatives were aware of this at that time.

Mr. McDermid: Did we support the budget?

Mr. Parker: The Conservatives supported that Bill.

I was very interested by some of the Minister's comments. He said that this amendment tried to avoid interfering with the fundamentally contributory nature of the program and that the Government did not want to change the pension arrangements fundamentally because that should be done in the context of over-all pension reform. Yet, many delegations came before the committee and told us that there was no consultation whatsoever with the Government regarding its intent to change the rules about the indexation of their pensions. If the truth were to be known, the Government is interfering with the most basic and fundamental aspect of the program. It is interfering with the rights of pensioners and working people to be consulted about their pensions. Even the most rotten of private sector employers—those who have pension plans—generally carry out consultation before they change the pension rules. This is not the case with this Government. In its arrogance, it just rammed measures like this through Parliament.

The Minister, in his arrogance, even denied us the right to question him before the committee after all the delegations had appeared. The Minister was unfortunately unable to return after we received all these delegations so that we may have the opportunity to question him on the facts which were disclosed at those hearings.

The Government is attempting to say that the changes in the pension plan concern the funding of the program. This is nothing but a smokescreen. If there were problems with the pension plan, the Government could have discussed them with the union and the pensioners. However, the Government does not operate in this fashion. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) stated that the Government should have taken the opportunity of the Christmas recess to consult with the people on this issue. The question of consultation is an important one which I had hoped the Conservative Party would have taken more seriously before Christmas. The Conservatives were absent at many meetings at which important witnesses appeared. Although they were entitled to have seven Members at the Committee, we were usually lucky to see two. In some cases, even those who showed up admitted that they knew nothing about the legislation. In this light, it is ironic to hear the Conservatives talking about consultation.

In closing, I would like to comment on the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board that he hoped pensioners would understand what the Government is trying to do. I suggest to him that they fully understand the Government's intentions. In fact, I am sure, as a result of the contact I have had with pensioners, that they understand its intentions. It is trying to steal money from the pensioners, raid pension funds which workers have contributed to, while blaming pensioners for inflation. It is breaking a contract with its workers that pensions would not be changed without consultation. In other words, the normal procedure would provide for consultation in order to explain to pensioners and retirees and their associations the Government's plans before they were initiated. There is no question in my mind as to whether pensioners know exactly what the Government is doing. Hopefully, they will make the Government pay for it.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal again with the principle of the Bill and will commence by saying that the principle is wrong. When one starts from a wrong premise, no matter what one does, it remains wrong. Consequently, the device of giving back a half of a half per cent, as has been suggested by the President of the Treasury Board, (Mr. Gray), will not make the Bill any more right, because it has been wrong from its beginning. The amendments may carry out certain improvements, but would not correct the wrongness of the principle of the Bill. The injustice wrought by passage of the Bill would still be there, and the only way that it could be corrected would be to withdraw the Bill entirely, and that is what the Government should do.

There are a number of arguments which show that the Bill is a double-cross of superannuates, in particular, and also, to a lesser but still a large degree, of those who are still in the Public Service. I want to use some of the arguments used by people in the Public Service to prove that very point.

The Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act are really the follow-up of other Acts which have been in place for a long time. Under the PSSA, which was consolidated in 1924, the sums deducted from the pay of employees and former employees for their contributions have been greater than the total amount paid out in pensions and indexation combined or, in other words, the amount paid by the Public Service and by those who are now superannuates, some of whom have passed on, and by former and present employees, is greater than the amount paid out. Consequently, this fund has been carried by the contributions of the civil service, of those who are involved, of the 26 organizations involved in this particular Bill. In this group are included the Civil Servants Widows Annuities Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act, just to cite a few examples.

Therefore, the amendment proposed by the Minister, which we are now being asked to accept, would not correct the things which are actually wrong. It is an attempt to make the Bill a little more palatable, but it is still basically wrong and it is still a double-cross.

The Government has never addressed the point that the people have put their money into a fund. This matter concerns their contributions. While the Government has stated that it has made so many contributions, in actual fact the amount paid into these funds by the civil service, by employees, is greater than the amount paid out. Civil servants have been paying into these funds for at least 55 to 58 years. Over this period employees have contributed a total of more than $4 billion. Matching contribution transfers by employers over the same period total about $4 billion. Accumulated interest totals about $5.5 billion, and the actuarial liability adjustment totals about $6 billion. Therefore, the total payouts from the PSSA and SRB accounts total about $4.5 billion.

We can see where the Bill is basically wrong. It is saying that the Government is contributing something which is being paid, whereas the amount being paid out has actually come out of the pockets of former employees of the various associations which are now affected. To make matters even worse, in the days in which the Hon. Lester Pearson was the Prime Minister of Canada, in the early sixties, the employees and superannuates were contacted and a deal or an agreement was entered into. Representatives approached staff associations with a proposal to exclude superannuation from collective bargaining. In return for excluding superannuation from collective bargaining, the Government of the day promised to make no unilateral changes to the Canada Pension Plan. That is something we should not forget. The employees were asked, and a bargain was signed and sealed with them, namely, that if they would give up their rights to bargaining for their superannuation, then the Government would put it into legislation and would not change it unilaterally.

No agreement should be changed unilaterally unless there is provision for it in the agreement. If Bill Jones, a man out on the street, sells a cow to Bill Smith and agrees that Bill Smith will pay $20 a month until the total cost of the cow has been paid, that agreement cannot be amended unilaterally. Bill Jones has no right to say, halfway through the deal, "We will change the agreement and charge you $30 a month for the use of that cow", even if the price of milk does go up. Because the country is now in a deep depression, much of which—not most of which—has been brought about by the policies of the Government, it is not right for the Government to go to the pensioners and say, "We will now make you pay. We will take some of your pensions away to pay for the expenditures which have been wrought because of the deep depression we are in", the depression or recession, whatever one wants to call it.

Had the Government not introduced the National Energy Program, there would still be thousands of people working who today are unemployed, who have used up their unemployment insurance benefits. Had the Government not introduced many of those parts of the budget of November 11, 1981, thousands of people would be employed today who are unemployed. Those were the factors which brought about the situation we are currently facing. Why should the Government now go to those who are receiving the least, those with whom an agreement was made that their pensions would be indexed for their financial security, and say to them, "We will cut some of that off, unilaterally, whether you like it or not"? That is not the way any Government should act. The Government would not permit a private organization to do that, not on your life. As a matter of fact, the Government already has legislation on the books wherein it is stated that a private company which is paying out pensions may not reduce those pensions unilaterally. Such companies simply would not be allowed to do it. Pension plans registered under the Canadian Income Tax Act are prohibited by law from reducing either accrued benefits or any supplementary benefits which may come from that particular Bill, yet the Government is doing what it forbids private industry to do.

The Bill is a double-cross and it should be withdrawn. That is the only way the people of Canada can be satisfied.

• (1630)

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of entering this debate until I sat here, and sometimes in the lobby, listening to what is being said in this House today. I am fearful that the wrong impression is being created in the minds of many Canadians who may possibly be listening to this debate.

Nobody can argue, particularly on this side of the House, that this is a popular measure. On the other hand, nobody can really expect all Government measures to be popular because Government by itself has to lead, and it cannot strive constantly to be at the top of the popularity polls, as Hon. Members in the Opposition would have us suspect.

Government means sometimes taking hard and harsh measures where it is possible, and in this case the only way it is possible to take these measures is within federal jurisdiction. It also means inciting to voluntary action, where the jurisdiction does not exist; and that is exactly what the Government has done.

Government means on occasion also having to tell the people the truth, which is not always pleasant. In this particular case inflation certainly is not pleasant. But unfortunately it is a fact not only of Canadian life but also of global life.

Government has to lead; it does not have to follow. It has to lead in the fight against what is one of the worst attacks on the global economy, this inflation. Inflation has to be fought and, like any war, the measures that are used, the weapons that are used, to combat inflation are not always pleasant. Nobody, particularly on this side of the House, even pretends that the present measures are pleasant.

However, let us be very careful that what we are saying is the exact truth and not some kind of distortion of the facts. The impression left by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), that the Government is taking 5 per cent out of the pockets of pensioners, is simply not the case. To take out of people's pockets implies that it is already in their pockets, and that is not the case. What the Government is saying to pensioners is, "Look, do not make the prophecy of higher, continuing inflation a self-fulfilling prophecy". We are saying, "Look, let all Canadians, irrespective of age or position in life, join in the fight against inflation so that we do not, with our own expectations, continue to fuel the flames of inflation". That is what we are doing, not taking away money which is there already but money which could conceivably, under the old legislation, accrue to these pensioners. I think we have to be very careful about that.

How is this fight against inflation going? The present indices are extremely good. Inflation is coming down. Interest rates are coming down. Despite all the efforts on the part of the Opposition members to paint a total picture of gloom and doom, there are good signs on the horizon. And for that we all have to be thankful. One sector of the economy alone cannot carry this fight against inflation.

The Member for Calgary West also, when he was specifying what kind of pensioners are being hit by this piece of legislation, mentioned the military. I, too, would like to mention the military pensioners, for whom I have the greatest respect and admiration. But it is because of my respect and admiration for the military pensioners that I can guarantee to the Hon. Member for Calgary West, or a Member from any other riding who would like to use the same example, that the military pensioners are in the forefront of fighting not only past wars but even the present war against inflation. I can guarantee that on the basis of my own conversations with these military pensioners. They are the ones who say, "Yes, we have a war, a different kind of war, and we all have to get together in it, and what will the Government do if it manages to save some of our money, albeit it is our money?"

I will tell you some of the things the Government can do, Mr. Speaker. It can create jobs for people who would give their eyeteeth to be able to collect a pension. They cannot even collect unemployment insurance, the way things are at present. They have no jobs. If some of the money which may have gone eventually to some of these pensioners were, instead, to go to some of these young people, particularly the young people, to give them a chance in life, to give them a chance to contribute to the economy and get the economy on track so that inflation is down for all of us, so that unemployment is down, I defy any Member opposite to show me the military pensioner who would object to seeing some of the money that he or she may conceivably receive in the future deny that chance to the young people of today.

We have spoken today in the House of the possibility of the Armed Forces being opened up to young people. I would have it known that that proposal came from the Liberal caucus and I, for one, am damned proud of it. But before that proposal can be adopted, before our dreams can materialize, we are going to need money. I defy any Member in this House to show me the convinced military person who is going to deny a few bucks of his possible potential income to a kid who might join the Armed Forces, get a better training and be able to support his country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if the Hon. Member who last spoke, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) would permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is that agreed? The Hon Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: During the period in the House today when statements were made, the Hon. Member made a statement, I believe, in which she mentioned listening to the Catholic Bishops and debating what they said, and bringing it before some group in the House, or words to that effect—strong words. Now the Hon. Member has just given a speech in which she has said that inflation is the main problem, that we have to fight a war against inflation. Does the Hon. Member not consider that she is being inconsistent in, first of all, saying that she wants to look at what the Bishops have said, and they have said that unemployment is the main problem, not inflation, specifically? Now she has just given a speech in which she said that the poor military pensioners must again lead their country in a war against inflation, a war that apparently Canadians do not want to fight. They want to fight the war against unemployment.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, as you will notice, I gave that speech without particular notes. I would have to check the "blues". I do believe that what I said was that inflation was one of the worst scourges facing the global situation at the moment. I did not say it was the most important. I believe I did say it was one of the worst. I can agree that unemployment is equally bad. I will agree with that.

I also did say in my speech today, speaking about the Bishops' statement, that whereas I understood and agreed with the drift of it, I did not agree with all their economic analyses. I stand by that. I still say that we all have to help with unemployment. There is no use sitting back and whining about it. A million and a half Canadians unemployed—it is easy to say that, but it is not so easy to do something about it. This is where leadership comes in, this is where the Government comes in, and know some of the pensioners we are talking about, this is where they will be in, too, helping instead of just whining.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, in response to the last speaker from the Liberal caucus, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, (Mrs. Appolloni), who stated that she is proud to be in the Liberal caucus, may I ask how she can possibly be proud of a Bill which is going to break a contract with several thousand senior retired civil servants who honoured their part of the contract. That is the essence of this Bill. It is a Bill which is breaking a contract which is signed, sealed and delivered, and under which the retired federal civil servants performed their part. We are not talking about somebody breaking their contract so, therefore, we are going to break ours. They honoured their contract. And the Hon. Member says she is proud to be a Liberal Member of caucus. How can she be proud of a Liberal caucus which for years has been spending more money than it has been taking from Canadians by way of taxes. They have achieved it by way of a fraud, by borrowing the difference and offering people programs with a low tax and saying, "Don't worry, folks, we'll borrow the difference", and the Hon. Member for York South-Weston stood up and voted for every one of those budgets for the last 14 years which have had an increasing deficit attached to it. Inflation is simply too many dollars chasing too few goods, and the Liberal Government turned on the printing press, Mr. Speaker. It was not the retired federal civil servants who turned it on. It was not the ordinary Canadians, the farmers and others, who turned it on. It was the Liberal Government, backed by a Liberal caucus which in vote after vote has stood up and voted for the policies of the Government, which have put the nation into the position it is in today.

We cannot get around the fact, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill is unilaterally breaking an agreement with people who honoured their side of it. Public employees for years have paid 7.5 per cent of their salary to support the pension fund. In a recent letter from the President of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, Mr. Jack Donegani, points this out:

> In the private sector, employee contributions seldom exceed 5 per cent and are frequently less.

We cannot get around the next point Mr. Donegani makes, and that is:

> Benefits paid from the plan to date have been more heavily financed by employees than by their employer. Of $1,360 million paid out between October 1981 and September 1982, employees contributed $735 million compared to the Government's $625 million.

The third point, Mr. Speaker, which is the principal one to my mind is this, and I again quote from Mr. Donegani's letter:

> There is a surplus of $15.5 billion in the Public Service Superannuation Account.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, for years they have been paying in an extra 1 per cent. It has been piling up in the superannuation account, and now the Government is taking it away from them. They took the extra 1 per cent. It is in the fund and it should at least be paid out until the fund is at zero. If we were going to be honest and decent about it, we would at least say to them, "As long as inflation continues, you will get your inflationary increases until the fund is down to zero." In the alternative, let us at least be honest with the retired civil servants and give them the 1 per cent back.

An Hon. Member: Plus accumulated interest.

Mr. Thacker: Naturally. Give it back to them, plus interest. The ultimate humiliation, Mr. Speaker, is that we are not only breaking the agreement, we are forcing and continuing to force the present federal civil servants to pay the 1 per cent extra, and yet they receive no guarantee at all that they are going to get it back. We are taxing them to the extent of 1 per cent extra but we are not imposing that tax on the rest of the general taxpayers. The Government cannot get around the fact that it is breaking a contract, however it might try to weasle and squirm about it and however much Members from the Liberal caucus refer to all the great past Liberal victories and the great Liberalism and support for the people.

When someone in our country breaks a law, the full weight of the Government will come down upon him. That is what our criminal law is. If somebody breaks the law, the whole weight of society bears down upon them and puts them in jail, if necessary. We have a rule of law, Mr. Speaker, that if I have a contract with you and I break it, you can invoke the power of the state and take me to court, get a judgment against me, and use the power of the state to collect that judgment. People cannot break contracts. Yet the Government can break a contract because of the absolute power of the legislature. If it decides it wants to break a contract, it can by law. Canadians out there across this whole country need to understand that is what is happening, that they have a Liberal Cabinet that is breaking the law, that is breaking a contract and a trust. How does Government expect people to trust it if it is going to pass laws and then turn around and break them?

The reason we are down to six and five—and indeed it is probably much less than six and five for most people—is not Bill C-133. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) hit it right on the head when he pointed out that it was the past economic policies of the Government which are driving this country into a recession, and probably a depression, which is causing inflation to fall. If this Bill were never passed, we would still be down to six and five this year and the following year. Therefore, why are they taking it away by way of a statute which breaks a contract and breaks that whole concept of trust in Government, when the economic conditions for this year and thereon will take it down? These civil servants deserve to receive 11.6 per cent inflationary increases because they not only have a contract which says they get it, but they paid their premiums and there is a surplus in the superannuation account of $15.5 billion. Until that superannuation account is at zero, Mr. Speaker, I say that we, the Parliament of Canada, have to honour the contract we have entered into.

We all know that the reason for Bill C-133 relates solely to the polls. The polls told the Cabinet that if they brought out a six and five policy, which would accord pretty close to the reality starting this year and next year, they would gain some political benefits. If it wants to do it that way, that is fine. Let it try to get its political benefits. But every Member in the Opposition will stand and speak to the people of Canada and say it is solely as a result of the recession that it is going down to six and five. We could have zero inflation, and we will, if the Canadian people stick with the Liberal Government, because they will drive us into a depression where we will have negative growth. There will not be any talk of 1 per cent or 2 per cent. We will be into negative figures. They have taken this nation right now from the second highest standard of living, when these guys first came to power, to twenty-fourth in the OECD under most of the major indices when they compare us with other industrial nations.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we as citizens should expect that the Prime Minister of the land would respect the rule of law and the commitments which the Government had made. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had previously committed the Government to full indexation of Public Service pensions as a right earned during the working years. Why cannot Canadians expect the Prime Minister of the land to look out for their interests? Why does the Prime Minister not look out for this rule of law? Most of us Hon. Members represent our constituents because we are elected from there, but certain people, by virtue of the office they hold, are supposed to represent the broad interests and primarily to uphold the Constitution and the rule of law. The Prime Minister is not doing that and, certainly, we from the western part of this country have no sense, and have not had any sense for years, that the Prime Minister even understands how we feel about the issues, or even cares. Whenever he comes out to talk to us, and he makes promises, as he did at the Western Economic Development Conference of 1974, we find afterwards that the actual policy and the actions of the Government belie the fine words which the Prime Minister can put out and, therefore, the Office of the Prime Minister has been reduced in stature and image as a result of the conduct and actions of the Government.

We have had this before. In the oil agreement, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said to the Alberta Minister of Energy that the Government would follow a certain course of conduct, and the very next day turned around and did exactly the opposite. So the next time we had an oil agreement, or a natural gas agreement, we insisted it be signed. The Government signed, sealed and delivered an agreement on gas pricing, and 24 days later the Minister of Energy stood in the House and unilaterally broke that agreement. We from the West have no illusions about the integrity of the Government in its upholding of contracts. We have had them broken before, and now every retired federal civil servant is in the same boat. They signed an agreement. They made their extra payment. And they are now being robbed of 1 per cent. That is the type of action, Mr. Speaker, we will not tolerate, and we will oppose this Bill at every possible point. I hope that the Hon. Members opposite, who genuinely care for their constituents and for the rule of law as being the prime difference between a democracy and a totalitarian state, that concept of the rule of law, that you do not break your contract, will stand up one of these days for that rule of law, or this nation is finished.

• (1650)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting to listen to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) speaking about the sanctity of the contract, the need for the Government to recognize that it must keep its word, that a deal is a deal, and all those other phrases the Member uses to oppose this legislation. I would remind that Member, as I remind other Members of the Conservative caucus, that Bill C-124, which this Liberal Government introduced and which the Conservative Party supported, with the exception of two of its Members, did exactly that. It broke every signed collective agreement this Government had with its workers, agreements which affected over 300,000 Canadians. It is pure hypocrisy, if I can call it that, Mr. Speaker, for the Conservatives to get up now and talk about the sanctity of a contract or agreement. If that is what they believe now, what did they believe last July or August when, time after time, on 16 different occasions, the Conservatives got up on recorded votes and supported the Liberal Government in breaking collective agreements? Remind yourselves of that, please, and let Canadians remind you on election day.

I would like to speak in opposition to the amendment before us, Mr. Speaker. The Government has made a big "to do", another one of its PR schemes, in saying that it is increasing the increase of pensions of retired Government workers from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent in 1983. However, the Government has failed to point out two very significant things. First of all, under the present legislation those pensioners are entitled to approximately an 11.4 per cent increase this year. Secondly, the fact that this Government is only increasing, through this amendment, the increase from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent means very little to the average retired Government worker. It means an average of approximately 10 cents a day, not a significant increase. Ten cents no longer buys a newspaper or a cup of coffee or tea. In today's society, ten cents a day does not buy a darn thing except perhaps the vote of one or two Liberal MPs. The real shame of this amendment and this Bill is that the Government has broken its word to thousands upon thousands of Canadians. It has promised, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on down, that it would consult with retired Government workers before it changed their pension scheme. Those pensioners, and those about to go on pension, have the word of the Liberal Government that it would not make changes without consultation with those workers. Well, what good is that word, Mr. Speaker? What faith can people, who in some cases have spent forty years working for the Government, put in the words of the Prime Minister if sometime in the future, for political reasons, the Government decides it wants to break its word?

Like many Members of Parliament, I have received letters from individuals affected by this legislation. I would like to tell you how these people feel. This is a letter from A. J. Willis in Flin Flon, Manitoba. He says:

> I am a superannuate, having retired seven years ago after 39 years of service—
>
> I am sure that you will realize that the passage of Bill C-133 will place superannuates such as myself in a serious position, and I would like to cite the following situations:
>
> As of January 1 my water bill has increased from $55 per quarter to $69.
> There is no natural gas pipeline to Flin Flon so much of the home heating is done by oil, which has increased from 28 cents a litre a year ago to a current price of 35 cents a litre.
> I would urge you to impress on your colleagues in cabinet the inequities which would be created by the passage of Bill C-133.

So there is one person who worked for the Government and people of Canada for 39 years and he is going to lose. Yet his expenses are not going to increase by 6 per cent and 5 per cent. Home heating costs in northern Manitoba are not insignificant and are going up by 25 per cent. A few months ago he believed that this Government was going to give him a pension increase, to which he was entitled, of 11.5 per cent. He would plan on the basis of that increase, but that can no longer be the case. He now has to get by with a 6 per cent or a 6.5 per cent increase, yet his costs are increasing much more drastically than that.

There are others throughout this land who have written letters talking about their own particular situation and how they are suffering under the Government's legislation. I have letters here which were written not by constituents of mine but by constituents of Liberal Members of Parliament. They feel they have to write to Opposition Members in order to get support for their position in the House of Commons. I hope the Government Members realize the situation they have put their own constituents in. With the exception of three Liberal MPs, they have put their constituents in a situation where they can no longer trust their Members of Parliament to represent them or their interests.

Throughout this process the intention of the NDP has been to make sure that those who have views in opposition to this Bill have a chance to speak. We allowed this Bill to go to committee. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), submitted the only list of witnesses to be called to the committee. We talked to and contacted a number of groups across this country and insisted that the Liberal majority on that committee allow these witnesses to be heard. I am glad we did because we found out a number of interesting things through speaking with those witnesses. We found out that this pension plan has a surplus of about $15 billion. We found out that in most private pension plans the employer pays over 50 per cent of the contribution. So this Government is not generous because it is paying less than most employers on a percentage basis. We found out this Government reaps a benefit of approximately 1 per cent by taking money from this plan rather than borrowing on the market. So we have that information, Mr. Speaker, and we will be using it in the rest of this debate to prove why this Bill is unnecessary, why this Bill is not only a betrayal of the trust of the retired Government workers but why this Bill is completely unjustified, except for the political gain of this Liberal political machine. It has nothing to do with the restraint program and it has nothing to do with good government. It is strictly a public relations effort of the Government. As each Member of this Party has an opportunity to speak, he or she will point out to Members of the Government that they should defeat this Bill.

• (1700)

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that if three more Liberals show the courage of their convictions and vote against this Bill and if the attendance of the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party is sufficient, the Bill could be defeated, and then the public servants of the country would have their trust in Government restored.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak in opposition to this Bill. I urge all Members of the House to join with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) in voting as their constituents perceive their duty to be, and that is, against the Bill.

As has been stated by a number of Members who have spoken already, the Bill would limit the increase in Public Service benefits to 6 per cent in 1983 and to 5 per cent in 1984. It would affect all retired federal public servants, Armed Forces personnel, members of the RCMP, diplomats, judges, Governors General and widows of the same.

I think the motivation for the Bill is very simple. Hon. Members opposite, other than the two I have mentioned, are capable of anything because they stand for nothing. If their pollster tells them that something is going to be popular, then, ipso facto, they are immediately in favour of it. If their pollster told them that 50.1 per cent of the population is in favour of lowering the ceiling of this Chamber, they would immediately be hot for it and could scarcely contain their enthusiasm.

This Bill shows that they are descendants of Commodore Vanderbilt who, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, was famous for saying, "The public be damned". Hon. Members opposite have added the twist, "Retired public servants be damned, public trust be damned, public sanctity be damned and public integrity be damned." These are the people who purport to form the Government of the most favoured country on the face of the earth.

The Bill is wrong for many reasons, Mr. Speaker and in the brief time available to me I will offer some of the reasons.

First, public employees pay 7.5 per cent of their salary to support their pension plan. It follows, I submit, that they are entitled not to be treated in this way.

Second, benefits paid from the plan to date have been more heavily financed by employees than by employers.

Third, there is a surplus of $15.5 billion in the Public Service superannuation account.

Fourth, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has committed the Government to full indexation for public servants and his Ministers have defended the plan over the years, yet they are now unilaterally breaking the contract with the public servants.

Fifth, the Government's Green Paper on pension reform clearly supports the need to protect all pensioners against erosion by inflation.

Sixth, the six and five program has been justified on the basis of national interest.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is truly in the national interest to deny pensioners, one of the groups in society least able to adapt because it has no more working years ahead, the right to protect their standard of living.

I should like to quote from a book by John Kenneth Galbraith entitled "Money", which Hon. Members opposite might find interesting. He points out that on December 8, 1931, with one-sixth of the total German labour force out of work the Government of Heinrich Brüning decreed a reduction of 10 to 15 per cent in most wages, this being a rollback to the level of four years earlier. He went on to say that earlier, the wages of public employees had been reduced by one-fifth and taxes on wages, salaries and incomes sharply increased. Unemployment benefits had also been reduced. He pointed out that in the following year unemployment rose to one-fifth of the German labour force and in the next year came Adolf Hitler.

These economic ghouls think that the way to deal with diminished demand is to cut the pensions of retired public servants, amongst others. These economic ghouls think that the way to get people back to work is to reduce the purchasing power of retired public servants, amongst others. They think the way to get inflation down, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) is to reduce the purchasing power of a large group of Canadians by throwing many of them out of work, by punitive interest rates, by an unduly restrictive monetary policy. You could make a list of ways to create unemployment in Canada and I submit that you would find the Government has gone through virtually everything on that list.

According to Mr. Galbraith's theory, the way to add to a recession is to reduce purchasing power. That is now the case with respect to retired public servants in this country.

There is no point in talking to Hon. Members opposite about the sanctity of contract after what they have done in the energy industry, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that after this Government has gone, things will be better for every retired public servant and every self-respecting Canadian in all parts of the country. There is no point in pleading with it to respect contracts. It does not have any contracts it respects, except the one with Mr. Martin Goldfarb, its pollster. Mr. Goldfarb has told the Government that breaching its contract with retired public servants would be a popular move. That is the end of the argument.

I see seven or eight Members opposite, and I submit that each of them has retired public servants in their riding who undoubtedly have written to them. But Hon. Members opposite will not respond to cries of, "I need the money to get by". I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the average federal public servant's pension is something in the order of $7,000. I would also remind you that this proposal would reduce the average federal pension next year by $345. There is no point in telling Cabinet Ministers, with their Jamaica tans, that a $345 reduction is going to hurt some people. They do not give a damn. They have a poll from Martin Goldfarb that tells them that if they push the Bill through it will look as if they were doing something about inflation.

Most Hon. Members opposite do not have the slightest idea of what causes inflation. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) has told them that the way to lick inflation is to put the small business community out of business or to create more unemployment. In my view, most of them do not have the energy or the material between the ears that would lead them to examine the causes of inflation. If they did, I submit they would discover that some of the causes are printing money, excessive interest rates, throwing people out of work who then cannot pay taxes, which then drives taxes up for others and drives UIC contributions up. These things are beyond their understanding. They do not know what makes the world function in the eighties.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that if four of them would put their retired constituents ahead of Party discipline, this Bill would be defeated. Then a great many public servants who paid for these pensions and expected to receive them would get them.

• (1710)

Finally, in the few seconds remaining let me say that someone who has worked in the federal or a provincial Public Service for ten years will not forget the fact of Hon. Members opposite passing this Bill. There is not a single retired public servant, federal or provincial, who will forget what was done through this Bill.

I should like to give a personal example. An uncle of mine worked in the Public Service for 40 years at a lower wage than he would have received in the private sector because he believed he would have some security on retirement. People like him and thousands of others in the federal Public Service are completely at the mercy of a Government, a Government which would make Commodore Vanderbilt and his "public be damned" blush with embarrassment.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in addressing Bill C-133 it strikes one that we are being asked to view a quadruple feature horror series at a local drive-in. First, the Government presents Bill C-124, "Dracula", sucking some of the lifeblood out of the economy. Not content with that, the series goes on to Family Allowances, pensioners and Public Service pensioners—featuring Bill C-131, "Son of Dracula"; Bill C-132, "Daughter of Dracula"; finally, Bill C-133, "Dracula Sucks". Those are the names of four films. Other Members who have teenagers as I do are probably well aware of them. They are not particularly great drama, but they are full of gore and there are many victims. Not only do we see the Government and its Ministers acting like Dracula toward Public Service pensioners, recipients of Family Allowance and Old Age Security pensions and Public Service workers, we have seen the Official Opposition, who had lots of warning that this was all part of the deal, acting like nothing less than Igor, running around and helping to prepare the way and the victims for Dracula to descend upon. Now they try to act as the victims' defenders.

How do we know this? If we go back to the budget, it was referred to as part of the entire six and five program—"A Strategy To Bring Down Inflation". It was all laid out there so clearly and simply that even a Tory should have been able to understand it. Thankfully, two of them did. Two Conservatives saw the light, but what about the rest of them? Now they are claiming to be champions of the family, children, old age pensioners and Public Service pensioners. They were prewarned in writing and verbally, and only now do they discover that innocent people are being hurt at this time and well into the future. This strikes one as more than somewhat odd.

Many odd things have happened in this debate. We watched the spectacle of some Liberal backbenchers who were really brave when there were public meetings of public servants in the Ottawa area. At those meetings they said that they would oppose this legislation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): With all their might.

Mr. Kristiansen: Yes, with all their might, as the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) just said. The Government responded, and of course it made a great to-do about that fact. Instead of six and five, it responded by increasing limits to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent.

If we take the average Public Service pension—and these calculations may not be exact—and average them with the survivors' allowance or pension, we come up with an average pension of something in excess of $6,000 per year, and one half per cent of that is roughly $30 per year—30 pieces of silver. Now we know what it takes for Liberal rebels to be brought around—30 pieces of silver. It is Public Service pensioners who will get it in the neck.

In a number of briefs before the Committee there was ample testimony. One of the best briefs was from the economists, sociologists and statisticians association. Mr. Potter, chairman of its pensions committee, gave some very interesting facts. He stated that Public Service pensioners had been willing to be patriots. They had not minded that the Government had misused, misallocated and had been bad business managers in dealing with their pension funds over the years, as long as the promised full indexation was provided.

The Dave Becks and Jimmy Hoffas of the Canadian pension industry sit over there on that side. It is a pension heist, it is a pension steal; it is nothing less. Talk about breaking contracts as some people do—there has been a lot of that going on.

As reported, Mr. Potter made the following statement in committee:

> The idea is that the pension account and the indexing account collectively earn less interest than a fair return on a well-managed private pension plan by about one percentage point, according to Tomenson-Alexander.

Also, in quoting an answer given to one of the Members from Halifax, he pointed out the difference by indicating the following:

> The actual amount of the indexing account was $807 million.

If these funds had been invested in an appropriate manner, as was often recommended—and this has been done outside the federal Government sector in many areas—and if the 1 per cent extra were added, which the Tomenson-Alexander report suggested, the amount in the fund would be somewhere between $6.3 billion and $10 billion, rather more than a little over $800 million. The Public Service pensioners of Canada did not mind the fact that the Government was using their money to finance its other operations as long as they got the agreement that was indicated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by Prime Minister Pearson and other Cabinet Ministers over the years. Instead of a written contract they had an "iron clad guarantee" of full indexation. When this is taken away, how much can we rely upon the good faith of people who have been hosed and bled? Now they are being told that they will be bled for years to come, while other public sector workers will do their bleeding over just two years. How long can we expect good faith from the workers when the Government itself has not shown any? The Government has shown no respect for the sanctity of contract. The Official Opposition on Bill C-124 did not show any respect for the sanctity of contract despite its words today.

If we are to look forward to a period when labour and management, whether in the private or public sector, come together in order to arrive at some sense of harmony to provide a beginning to proper social and economic reconstruction, we must build upon a better foundation and better principles than the fact that the Government can break its word at any time although it demands different standards from the private sector in the pension industry. It is absolutely rotten, it is despicable; it is bad government and it sets the worst precedent possible.

As was indicated in testimony before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates when it was dealing with Bill C-133, it demonstrates that "the Government is a bad credit risk". We do not need that kind of reputation today.

Finally, enough has been said by many people on this subject. I urge backbench Government Members to read very carefully the detailed submissions. I am not referring to wild arguments about principle but to the detailed submissions showing that there is ample money available through contributions of Public Service workers to finance full indexation and much, much more. If they believe this and are human enough to feel even a little twinge of guilt, I ask them to pressure, to lobby and to talk to their Ministers. Canadian public servants, Canadian pensioners and Canada as a whole deserve proper, fair and reasonable treatment.

• (1720)

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my remarks, I hope, will be short and to the point. I had planned to speak just on two subjects, but one was dealt with very well by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) when he put forward the basic concept of free ownership society, namely the sanctity of contract. I am glad to see that the NDP are accepting this principle in relation to this Bill. Secondly, I wanted to put this whole matter into a wider perspective. I have listened to much of this debate and I think that is the one missing ingredient.

Many years ago, as a teacher of history I used to bemoan the fact that teachers of history, both at the high school level and at the university level, had to rely almost entirely on sources that were American in origin and as well to some extent the Cambridge history series from the U.K. As a Canadian, knowing just a litle bit about our history, this was always a matter of offense to me. When I got my chance in 1957 as Minister in charge of resources in Canada, and I include in that human resources, I asked the leading historians of Canada to get into a group and select among their number the most learned and literate in their specialty to write a series of books on the history of Canada for Canadians from the Canadian viewpoint. That series is almost complete now. The original plan was for 18 volumes. The volumes take us up to 1967. The volume I have in my hand is the one covering our history from 1939 to 1957. I found out that after these books were published very few appeared in the schools of this nation. They were not designed for children; they were designed for adults. I find that very few Members of Parliament over the last 25 years, since these books began to be published, have read any of them. MPs are busy people.

However, I went so far a few years ago as to invite some of my colleagues to a dinner. I paid for both the solids and liquids, and presented each one of them with a copy of this volume. A couple of years later I quizzed them all on whether they had read it. Not one had. One fellow said he had leafed through it. But, after all, he is now a Senator and has more time than most of us.

I point that out because what we are doing in this debate is ignoring the lessons of our nation in the past. If you look at this short, devastating, punchy volume of our history from 1939 to 1957 you will notice that, first of all, it is entitled "The Forked Road". What were the forks in the road that we took as a nation during that period from 1939 to 1957? One of the forks that we took was the gradual process of turning the real power of decision-making in our nation over to what is called by one author as the managerial elite. A more popular description taken from the Chinese of a few mandarins is how we refer to them. These mandarins believe, to the extent of making it a religion, that they, and they alone, know what the right decisions are. They draw from all the experts in their departments and from all across the world all the knowledge there is, from organized committees and other committees who examine committee work. Out of it all comes a rational thought. It was a battle for a while. Parliament did put up a bit of a battle. But because of the success of these early mandarins Canada went through the war with ultimate ease. War usually devastates a nation economically, but Canada grew in all forms during the war. Yes, we lost a few tens of thousands of our boys, but the country grew. It became mature under the leadership of this very self-styled elitist group who ran the civil service.

More modern books were written as monographs. "The Ottawa Men" was published last year, in 1982, written by Granatstein. I urge all Hon. Members to read this book to find out how that control mechanism got command. Granatstein admits at the very beginning that he admires tremendously the concept that only the gifted and the elite shall rule. Not Parliament, not the people, only those gifted by high degrees from Oxford, or famed universities in the United States are fit to rule the Canadian people. The choosing of this fork during the war ended probably in 1946 with a White Paper, a brilliant Paper on the future of Canada looking ahead 20 or 30 years. Following that there was the Gordon Commission which looked ahead 20 years to 1980. There was a real positive thrust and drive to this elite which we in Parliament, I regret to say, accepted as God's word.

Now we come to a little Bill where the end is shown in all its ugly facets. We are asked under this Bill, in a policy on which a great majority of Parliamentarians agree in a time of duress, at the middle and the end of a recessional period, that we should put restraints on those who are earning money that we should not ask for too much which would keep inflation growing. The great majority in Parliament voted for the six and five program. They did that without any breaking of contracts with those working because when you are dealing with people who are working contracts can be amended, particularly those that come under the power of Governments, provincial or federal Government.

In this particular section we have an unusual thing. The Government has extended this six and five rule to apply to people who no longer are employed and who have been charged heavily these last ten years for this indexing in order to build up the fund. If you look at the figures on these funds you will find that, because of the large payments made by all of those who work for Her Majesty's service here in Canada, we have collected a lot more money in these funds than we will ever use. It is found money for those who manage our money, in other words, the Department of Finance. Here we see the end product of turning power over in this fashion to a self-styled superior group of elitists. They really believe in their hearts that they are the voice of God and the people. They come down to a level where they state, with regard to these people who have slaved for 30 to 40 years of their lives and were charged more than the private sector for their pensions and have been fully charged and more for their indexing, that they will be consistent. They said, "We are rational people. We do not distinguish between those who continue to work and those who are helpless and on retirement." Therefore, the fork in the road that we chose during the war to save ourselves and after the war to follow the great plan for the future of Canada now comes down to this disgusting bit of meanness that sometimes falls from the table of these men who sit around and control our country.

I suggest that any nation or Parliament that does not know where it has been certainly does not have any future. I will close by simply pointing out that I want as many people in Canada as possible to know that this Government will go in due time. I am positive that there will be another Government in its place. I am positive, and God willing I will be there, that this law will be changed and will have the support of every NDP Member who is in Parliament at that time, every Conservative and every Liberal, because once these Liberals are removed from the threat and the power of the elitists to whom they have surrendered, they will vote as human beings who have a mind and can think and act with justice and equity, as we should.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak against this Bill C-133. I will not go into the statistics since other Members have spoken about the amount of money that was paid into the fund and which is held by the Government of Canada in trust, I might say, for these retired people and those who will retire in the future.

I will not argue as to whether the fund that was set up for indexing is actuarially sound. I would suggest that if the fund is not actuarially sound, it is not the fault of the pensioner or the public servant who is presently contributing to the fund, but the fault must fall squarely on the shoulders of this Government. It should have been monitoring the fund on a continuing basis over the years and adjusting contributions and investing the funds in such a manner as to ensure that there would be sufficient money to cover the indexing and that the fund was actuarially sound.

A few weeks ago a letter was delivered to my constituency office in Moose Jaw. It was written and signed by the President and Vice President of the Moose Jaw Branch of the federal Superannuates National Association. The letter is dated December 3 and is addressed to the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada. I would like to read an excerpt from this letter. It says in part:

An extract from the 1974 Treasury Board booklet, "your superannuation plan", reads in part as follows: "In any year when there is an increase in the cost of living, pensions will be increased in an amount directly related to the increase in the consumer Price Index, without limit".

I would like to underline the words "without limit". They go on to say:

We note that the latest issue of the Treasury Board booklet omits such a direct statement and wonder why the change.

We have fulfilled our part of the agreement with our contributions and those that follow in our footsteps continue to contribute to the S.R.B. Account at the same rate of one per cent. Our pensions were earned, we contributed our best years, our best efforts and to applying an agreed portion of our salaries to the Superannuation and S.R.B. fund in trust. These funds should not be tampered with but be handled with trust.

Should the Federal Government break this trust with Bill C-133 it would be equally rational to apply the six and five formula to Canada Savings Bonds and the Bank of Canada. We could also apply the same formula to our 1983 and 84 income tax returns.

The Hon. Donald Johnston, a former Treasury Board President, recognized the indexation of pensions to the Consumer Price Index as a 'minimum benefit'. The breaking of this agreement with Bill C-133 will completely destroy the integrity of our Government.

I would submit that the statement quoted from the 1974 Treasury Board booklet indicates that there is a contractual obligation between the Government of Canada and the superannuates. I suggest that any court of law would find, if there was not an actual, written binding contract, an implied contract in that statement.

The superannuates and the civil servants have carried out their part of the contract by making their contributions on a monthly basis. Surely the Government can be expected to carry out its obligation. It is either a contractual obligation or an implied contract and, at the very least, a moral obligation. When I was a boy people said that a man's word was his bond, and so it was. They also used to say, perhaps not with the same conviction, that if a Government gave its word, it could be trusted. The present Government, over the past 14 and 15 years, has eroded that trust. This Bill will further erode that trust very seriously. When the public loses its trust in Government, it can cause very serious problems in society.

I would like to read another excerpt from the letter I referred to earlier which is addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This excerpt is under the heading "Who Can be Trusted". They say:

Mr. Prime Minister, in your speech to the nation you requested the people of Canada to 'trust me'. Should your Government really expect our trust in view of Bill C-133 which will take from us something which we have contributed to by agreement?

• (1740)

Then they go on to discuss the people who will be affected by this indexing. These are people who can least afford to have their incomes cut. They have been faced over the years with very high rates of inflation, rates which are continuing. They have been faced with high costs for food, shelter and clothing, and in many cases they find that it is almost impossible for them to carry on.

I would urge that the Minister reassess his position, consider the question of trust and integrity of the Government, and withdraw the Bill. If the Minister will not do this, I would then suggest that the individual Members of Parliament on the Government side join with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and vote against the Bill, and let the people of Canada see that at least some of the Members on the Government side can be trusted. We must rebuild the trust in Government. We must rebuild the integrity which has been lost over the last 14 or 15 years.

I would again urge Hon. Members opposite to stand up, to be honest with themselves and with their constituents and to show that they have integrity by voting against the Bill.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Bill with which we are dealing today, Bill C-133, is indeed about money, pensions and indexing, but, far more than that, it concerns integrity, trust and fair play. Those words are not written into the Bill, it is true, far from it, but that is really the basic issue we are discussing here.

We on this side of the House have listened with amazement to the unbelievable and really hopeless attempts of the Government and of Hon. Members opposite to justify Bill C-133, a piece of legislation which, in fact, makes a mockery of Government trust. I say that we have listened with amazement to the speeches which have been made by Hon. Members opposite and to the arguments in committee because it is very hard to understand—indeed, it is impossible to believe—that Hon. Members opposite would once again, not for the first time, go back on their word and, in this instance, reduce the indexing of pensions of superannuated public servants, of Armed Forces and RCMP personnel. There really can be no justifiable reason nor logic behind a decision to cap these pensions at 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent.

On many occasions I have head Government Members rise in this House and unequivocally state their support for pensions, their interest in pensioners and, especially, after some initial reluctance, they even came out strongly in support of that extra security of indexing which would ensure that inflation did not erode the inherent value of the pensions which our senior citizens, our retired citizens, receive. Yet, with little thought, little concern and certainly no consultation, the Government has decided arbitrarily and unilaterally to declare an agreement void, to throw it out, to really declare its non-existence.

Bill C-133 essentially declares that the contract between employer and employee, the contract which deals with Public Service and Armed Forces pensions, is null and void; it is over, it is through. However, it does more than that. With such a dictatorial measure, the Government has effectively destroyed any remaining hope of retaining its integrity as an employer. It certainly cannot go on to say that, from here on, it will negotiate in good standing, in good faith, in the hope that others will retaliate, in the hope that others will come back on the same terms with the Government. This has been destroyed. The fact that Government employees have personally paid into this pension so that indexing can continue obviously means nothing to most of those opposite. Their actions to push this Bill through at any cost show a total lack of concern for the ramifications of this legislation, where it will lead. What will be the next step? If this agreement, this contract, can be broken, what other contracts can be broken? Where can it be done on the national scene? Can it even be done on the international scene?

Passage of this Bill would allow the Government to steal pension moneys away from those who have worked in the Public Service, in the Armed Forces and in the RCMP. It really questions the dedication of those people to successive Governments over the years. They have earned their pensions and Bill C-133 is a slap in the face of those who are now retired and who rely heavily on the security of an indexed pension. There are many such people who live in Kingston and The Islands. Many have worked for years in the Public Service, either as Armed Forces personnel or as civilian staff at the base at Kingston, in the penetentiaries or in the many other Public Service outlets in the Kingston area.

There is sometimes a view abroad that public servants, and retired public servants in particular, live on a very comfortable, secure income. If one looks at the average of those pensions, including the people who are the widows of pensioners, one finds that that average is slightly under $7,000 a year, which is in fact well below the poverty line.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Sixty-nine hundred.

Miss MacDonald: That is what we are discussing. We are not discussing people who sit back on incomes of $50,000 a year. We are discussing the great majority who live below the poverty line on these pensions, and it is this group of people from whom the Government is stealing this miserable pittance.

I see that the Hon. Member opposite is arguing again today.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is the Parliamentary Secretary, part of the great conspiracy.

Miss MacDonald: The Parliamentary Secretary may be content to take money out of the hands of retired public servants and retired Armed Forces personnel. He may be content to take money away from the widows of those people.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He has OHIP.

Miss MacDonald: However, I can tell Your Honour that we on this side of the House are not.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), toward the end of last year when he produced that television series, spoke of great and noble qualities. He spoke of faith, hope and trust. He did not mention charity because the Prime Minister really does not know much about charity. However, he spoke of faith, hope and trust when he addressed the nation. How can he honestly expect these qualities, which he emphasized will be demonstrated across the nation when his Government introduces legislation like Bill C-131 to place limits on the indexation of old age pensions, or Bill C-132 to place limits on the indexing of Family Allowances, or this Bill, Bill C-133 to place limitations on the pensions of public servants and Armed Forces personnel?

• (1750)

Earlier in the debate my colleague, the Hon. Member from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), referred to this vicious trilogy of legislation. One cannot help but wonder if the Government is using this as a means to introduce a new kind of removal of benefits from the general public, removal of benefits by breaking contracts and ignoring agreements which the public has come to expect. The very Government which has placed this country into severe recession because of its policies is now attempting to use its victims as guineapigs on which to try to rebuild the economy, and these guineapigs it is singling out, the people to whom this limitation of indexing applies, are the very people who are most vulnerable to the high interest rates and to the inflation which the Government has created.

I really find it quite incredible that the Government holds to this plan with such tenacity; indeed, I would say with such bullheadedness. Have the Members opposite no understanding of their obligation to fulfil the terms of what is really a social contract, an agreement made, so we thought, in good faith and respect for the other party concerned? No, sir. It is obvious that such a decision to introduce this Bill was made with very little regard for the parties involved. The successive regressive actions by this Government are placing public trust, respect and confidence in Government in a very, very precarious state.

Times are very difficult. Why does the Government add to the situation by destroying whatever confidence is left in the country? Unemployment continues to rise and there is no relief in sight. Bankruptcies continue. Canadian businesses and labour struggle with little encouragement or incentive from this Government. In the midst of this recession the Government has decided to introduce policies that will place increasing burdens on the very Canadians most affected by the economic instability which it has created, not worldwide problems, but which it has created.

The proof of what I say is that when one looks at the last OECD Report on how the industrialized countries in the world are doing, Canada ranks twenty-fourth out of 24 countries. It is what the Government is doing here in this country that is creating the economic instability, not what is coming from abroad, and the Government's response to it is to introduce Bills which make it more difficult for those who are most vulnerable.

Where does the Government go from there? One has to ask, because I was astounded, as most of the people in this country were, to hear comments made by the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mrs. Erola) to show that the next step the Government proposes is to take away the benefits of spousal tax exemptions, again from those who can least afford it. That Minister has indicated that it is her intention to remove spousal tax exemption, and that spousal tax exemption is used by 75 per cent of the families who receive $25,000 a year, or less, as income in this country, the people who are at the lower end of the income scale.

That seems to be the progression of the moves that this Government is taking.

I understand that my time has elapsed, but I am very concerned. I would say to you that Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and Bill C-133 show a progression of the kind of steps that this present Government is bent upon taking, and the statements by the Minister responsible for the Status of Women just show another indication of that progression. It is to hit those who are at the lower end of the income scale, those who can least afford it and to break trust with those with whom agreement has been made. How can the Government expect any kind of support for that kind of action which denies decency, fair play, justice and integrity?

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, there are only a few minutes left in today's session, but I would like to begin to speak on this amendment, to speak against it.

I would like to speak for my constituents, particularly those who have paid into government pensions. I would like to put on record a short letter that I received today from a member of my constituency, Thomas Barrie. Mr. Barrie has written me a very short, concise letter that says, as far as I am concerned as clearly as anything I have heard in the House today, what the debate is about. He says:

> Bill C-133 is unfair. Any pension that is not sufficiently indexed in these times of financial stress is a one-way ticket to welfare.
> As a retired federal public service employee I, along with my counterparts, have paid for indexed pensions and paid well for them.
>
> Please do your utmost to put this Bill out of business.
>
> Sincerely,
> T. S. Barrie

I do not think anybody could say it more concisely, more clearly nor more surely than Mr. Barrie has said it to me, and which I have now read to this House of Commons.

What is involved in this particular amendment, is what many Members this afternoon have spoken about. It is a breaking of trust, it is the breaking of a deal.

The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) brought back to me the memory of my own childhood, when I grew up in a community I suspect not unlike the one he grew up in, where it was taken for granted that there was a universal acceptance of another person always keeping their word. I remember when I was very small my father simply said, "You don't have to write things down because if a man gives you his hand, if a man makes a deal with you, it is a deal. If I make a deal with someone, it is a deal". To me that means not going back on something which has been accepted by both sides. What has taken place, as has been said very clearly this afternoon by several Hon. Members, is that this particular Bill is the breaking of a deal. It is a deal between the Government of Canada and the civil service people who have paid into pensions. That was an arrangement which came about by negotiation, bargaining, and finally the hand was put out. It was called a deal. They said, "We will shake on it; we can believe in each other". Now that deal is being broken. That is why we are against what is going on.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it agreeable to the House that we call it six o'clock? It is only a moment before that time.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER INVESTIGATE SITUATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, on December 22 I questioned the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) with regard to the Small Business Development Bond. If all Hon. Members can give me their attention for a moment I would like to point out the problem that is facing small business in Canada today with regard to the Small Business Development Bond.

The advertising the Government is perpetrating on small business right across the country is such that the businessmen who have found themselves—particularly small businessmen—in financial difficulties because of the downturn in the economy, high interest rates and so on, are approaching their banks and asking for assistance under the Small Business Development Bond, and are finding that the Small Business Development Bond is indeed a myth.

• (1800)

The Small Business Development Bond was first introduced by a Conservative Government to assist small businesses to develop and expand their operations. The present Government in an ill-advised way said that the Small Business Development Bond would continue for businesses in dire straits.

Because of the Government's introduction of that Clause, "financial difficulty" into the Small Business Development Bond, it has become totally ineffective. Banks are profit-oriented and they do not want to lend money to a company which is in dire straits because that company will probably go bankrupt and they do not want to lose their money. That is eminently reasonable. My contention, therefore, is that the Small Business Development Bond has become totally and absolutely useless because the Government has introduced the two words "financial difficulty" as a prior qualification before a small business can apply for this bond.

The words "financial difficulty" cause two problems. First, many small businessmen do not want to admit that they are in dire staits because every small businessman is an eternal optimist and feels he can pull his company out. Second, banks are profit-oriented and are unlikely to throw good money after bad. The Government, to pretend that a Small Business Development Bond is in place, that it is available for small businesses which are having financial difficulties and they can rely on this, is an absolute, monstrous lie. It is a monstrous misleading of the Canadian small businessmen for the Government to continually indicate through the advertising media, radio, television and newspapers, that for small businesses which are in dire straits or in financial difficulty there is assistance available to them through the SBDB.

The bankers see it this way: that unless the bond can salvage the company, it is unwise to lend the money. There are so many factors affecting the survival of a small business—Liberal Government policies, red tape, bad budgets, a myriad of things—that it is unlikely that the bond alone could save the company.

In my question to the Minister, I asked about the Small Business Development Bond. I tried to point out in my questioning on December 22 that the banks themselves not only are not making available the Small Business Development Bond to businesses which apply for it, but require from the business a statement from their chartered accountants or auditors to the effect that the bond is needed or the business will go bankrupt. It is criminal to think of the number of small businessmen across the country who look to the Government for assistance when they do hit dire straits, and are told they can get the Small Business Development Bond, but when they go to the bank find they are refused.

In addition, as I pointed out in my questioning, they go from one bank to another and find that the banks have an agreement among themselves that no matter what the circumstances, one bank will not make the bond available to a client who has been refused by another bank. So we have shades of collusion between the chartered banks whose branches have received directives from their head office that they are not to even accept an application from a small businessman who has applied at one bank and has been refused. That is considered "raiding" one bank's customers and they do not want to do this.

• (1805)

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that previously many, many small businesses across the country used the Small Business Development Bond very effectively. They created jobs and expanded into other markets. Then the present Government said that the bond would continue for small businesses in financial difficulty only. Adding those two words "financial difficulty" totally destroyed the concept and effectiveness of the bond. This made it absolutely useless for small businessmen in dire straits, facing possible receivership or bankruptcy, to go to a bank and expect to get some assistance under this bond. It is just not happening.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his representation and tell him that we are taking it very seriously, as I hope to show in a moment.

The Small Business Development Bond is a very important part of the Government's ongoing program to help small business. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) pointed out to the Hon. Member, it was for this reason that we included the Small Business Development Bond in the budget last June and extended its life.

The Hon. Member has now raised very serious questions about collusion between the banks, and neglect towards small businesses who have great trouble. He mentioned in particular the Royal Bank. The Minister promised to check with both the office of the Inspector General for banks and with the Royal Bank. Because we took the Hon. Member so seriously we followed up on his representation and also went to the Canadian Bankers' Association. I would invite the Hon. Member to give me copies of any documents he might have. He referred to a directive from head office to branches concerning how to handle these applications. If he has a copy or knows of a copy of such a directive, I would like to see it. We have not had it from him and I am acting without that knowledge in telling him what we now know.

We have found that borrowers are quite free to go to any bank to put in an application for such a loan. I must remind the Hon. Member that these programs are geared to people with financial difficulty. That obviously presents practical problems for the banks because they are going to be dealing with an application from a stranger who is in admitted financial difficulty. They are going to be slower or less happy to deal with them on that basis. Also, the banks' willingness to get involved with this program will depend, very correctly, on their existing portfolio and on their tax position. Now, that does not mean neglect or collusion.

The Royal Bank, for example, has 38 per cent of the all-bank financing under this program. I would refer the Hon. Member to the comments of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business about the behaviour of the banks, particularly the Royal Bank, which in their opinion came out very well in its attitudes and lending programs towards small business. The Royal uses a degree of risk in its existing portfolio as the basis for decisions on such loans.

• (1810)

Finally, I should like to point out that the Canadian Bankers' Association has very strongly denied the existence of any hidden agreement or collusion between banks on such borrowers' practices. They say that any borrower is free to go from one bank to another to seek such a loan, without having the banks react badly to them.

If the Hon. Member has a copy of such a directive, I will follow up on it. The Minister followed up on his earlier recommendation which we took seriously. We hope this information will move the issue along for him.

FISHERIES—DISCLOSURE OF KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT CONTENTS. (B) REQUEST THAT RECOMMENDATIONS BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the matter I wish to bring to the attention of the House relates to the report of the Task Force on the Atlantic Fisheries which was announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on January 8, 1982. At that time the Minister appointed Michael J. L. Kirby as Chairman of the Task Force and said that he would succeed to the position of Deputy Minister of Fisheries and Oceans when the work of the Task Force was completed. When the Prime Minister made that announcement he attached urgency to the work of the Task Force and the indication was that a report would be forthcoming very shortly thereafter.

In August 1982, six or seven months later, the Chairman of the Task Force, Mr. Kirby, indicated that he would be ready to report in September. At that time he distributed, amongst persons interested in the Atlantic fishery, a questionnaire which he thought would be the final activity of the Task Force. Oddly enough, notwithstanding the Prime Minister's indication that the work of the Task Force would involve far reaching inquiries amongst those interested in the fishery, in fact the Task Force held no public hearings and only dealt with people on a private basis. No real public discussion was generated by the work of the Task Force and thereafter it became a matter of media activity and investigation. The media informed the public what was going on.

That media activity is of concern to Members like myself; the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), and the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). It was also our concern last December when we raised the matter in the House and asked when the report of the Task Force on the Atlantic Fisheries would be released.

There was reason for our concern because by October 1982 it had become clear that the Task Force report had been completed. There were rumours abroad in the City of Halifax that it recommended the takeover of two of the largest organizations in the fishing industry in the Atlantic area, that is, H.B. Nickerson and Sons Limited, which I believe still has control of another large fishing group, National Sea Products Ltd., and also the Newfoundland Lake Group Ltd., which I understand is the largest private concern in the fishing industry in Newfoundland. This rumour was met with shock and alarm and had a very upsetting effect on the fishing industry in the Atlantic Canada, particularly Nova Scotia.

That was not the end of rumour, Mr. Speaker. On November 29, 1982, a report in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald indicated that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) had provided information to the London correspondent of that newspaper, indicating matters that were included in the report of the Task Force.

To remove any doubt that parts of the Task Force report were being leaked to media persons and other officials, a series of articles appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail, of all newspapers. It is not noted for concern about the Atlantic fishery. On January 4 and January 14 of this year these articles indicated very clearly that the newspaper, or the reporter involved, had possession of copies or parts of copies of the report of the Task Force on the Atlantic Fisheries. The fact that a reporter for the Toronto Globe and Mail could tell readers exactly what was contained in the Task Force report indicates that what we are observing is a report by trial balloon. Mr. Kirby and his officials involved in the Task Force, are simply sending out trial balloons to the public by way of leaks to newspaper reporters and others about what is included in the report.

I think the most serious leak to date was the indication that large private concerns in the fishing industry were about to be taken over—in effect nationalized—so that the Government could enter directly into the Atlantic fishery by way of operating a part of it.

There is no question that the Atlantic fishery is of vital economic importance to all four Atlantic Provinces, but particularly to the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. In the case of the Atlantic fishery, it employs thousands of persons in fishing vessels of independent fishery operations and onshore plants. International exports from the Atlantic fishery alone total $1.5 billion. Mr. Speaker, you do not have to use your imagination to realize what effect the Atlantic fishery has on the economy in eastern Canada.

For the Government and its appointee, Mr. Kirby, as head of the Task Force, to play fast and loose with this vitally important matter is a shame and a sham. I call upon the Government today, as I did a month ago, to release immediately the report of the task force on the Atlantic fishery; not to send out any more feelers to find out how the public and the Atlantic fishing will react to the conclusions or recommendations of the report, but to put on the table the actual material included in the report so that it can be judged by those interested in the Atlantic fishery.

It is wrong that the Government and the chairman of that task force, Mr. Kirby, should adopt this process and procedure of leaking bits and pieces of the report. It is harmful to the Atlantic fishery and it is dangerous to the economy of the Atlantic Provinces, particularly the Province of Nova Scotia.

I ask the Government to stop this sham and this shame and to come clean with the Atlantic fishery and those persons whose lives, existence and future security depend upon what action will be taken by the Government of Canada with respect to the recommendations, made not only by the Task Force headed by Mr. Kirby, but by all other persons and officials who are knowledgeable and interested in the Atlantic fishery.

At the risk of repeating myself, I ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Government of Canada to take immediate action, come clean and stop this chicanery once and for all.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I greatly admire the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). I have sat with him many times in committee and I know that he is seriously interested in the Atlantic fishery. But I must say that his approach today has confused me somewhat, and to a certain degree disappointed me. We have heard seven minutes of talk about shams and shame. There were very few, in fact by my count no constructive suggestions whatsoever.

The Hon. Member talked about the Kirby Task Force report and suggested that somehow the report was constructed in isolation of the people of Atlantic Canada, in particular those people most concerned with the fishery, those people who participate in that industry. He told us that was a terrible thing. I want to tell him that this Task Force and its report resulted from the most extensive consultation and the most extensive investigation and research ever carried out in the Atlantic fishery. Near the end of his comments he accused us of floating trial balloons and told us that we should quit floating them, that we should quit testing the public. That is a contradiction in terms.

The fact of the matter is that essentially the Kirby Task Force had two jobs. One was to investigate and make recommendations regarding issues concerning the harvesting, processing and marketing of fish. It has done that, and I am very happy to report that part of the report will be available very soon. Its second job was to have a look at the question of the financial difficulties being experienced by many of the same players mentioned by the Hon. Member opposite a few minutes ago and to give us some advice on how to restructure the industry.

The Hon. Member talked about private enterprise, private concerns, and the possibility of the option that Government could take an equity position. I tell him that that kind of concern rings somewhat hollow when those same private concerns are coming to the Government of Canada this day, yesterday and I am sure again tomorrow, with their hands out. As a Member of the New Democratic Party, its leader at one point, used the phrase—and pardon me for my license in borrowing it today—corporate welfare, or whatever it was, I simply want to say that when an industry, private or not makes decisions that get it into serious economic trouble and comes to the Government with its hand out, it should certainly not be surprised that the Government of Canada is interested in spending the people's and the taxpayers' money wisely.

In summary, let me say the Government recognizes the need to dispel all the uncertainty in the industry as quickly as possible. As I indicated, the Task Force report will be made public very shortly. It is presently being prepared. Further, the question of restructuring that vital industry, vital to my constituents and to those of the Hon. Member, will be answered very shortly as well. It is now before a committee of cabinet.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that I know of his great interest in the fishery. I know of the sincerity of his attempts to acquire information. I want to tell him with equal sincerity and with equal passion that the way to help this fishery is not by giving us a litany of sham and shame, or by casting doubt upon the good work of Mr. Kirby and his commission, but by contributing and suggesting solutions to the problems facing this most important industry in Atlantic Canada.

TRADE—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES ON LUMBER INDUSTRY. (B) QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE DIPLOMATIC NOTE

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on December 17, I raised a matter with the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) regarding representations to the United States authorities on the lumber industry with particular regard to the investigations being conducted through the processes of the U.S. Department of Commerce, the International Trade Commission and the International Trade Administration in the United States. At that time I urged the Minister and through him the Government to utilize the opportunity provided to deliver a "clear and careful but unmistakable message", and supported the suggestion that a diplomatic note along those lines be delivered to the United States Administration for the attention of the U.S. Department of Commerce thus clarifying our legitimate deep and serious concerns with regard to this whole array of complex problems.

I am led to believe that, following that intervention in the House, although I am not suggesting that the action the Government took came about because of that intervention, that a diplomatic note or other means of communication was in fact undertaken by the Government or by some of its representatives. While it may not be appropriate to release the substance or the content of such a note or message, I and a number of others, certainly in the Official Opposition, and certain others who work in and around the federal Government would appreciate being briefed on this matter so that we may continue to deal with this very sensitive issue in the appropriate, constructive and non-partisan manner in which I think we have all conducted ourselves up to this time.

There is a problem with mixed jurisdiction. I am sure the Hon. Member who is answering for the Government this day will realize that the number of departments and the number of people who find themselves seconded to this department and other concerned departments creates some confusion. There is some concern that the note may not have received full consideration by some of the people within the Government service who have the greatest depth of experience and knowledge in the particular areas involved. We would like to be assured that in any future action that at least those misunderstandings do not take place, and again we would appreciate being briefed at some point as to what will happen.

Would the Parliamentary Secretary attempt to inform the House now or perhaps at a later date whether the International Trade Administration in the United States has sufficient staff at its disposal in order to give proper and full attention to the very complex and vast array of material now being assembled here in Ottawa?

Finally, could the Parliamentary Secretary also report on what stage we have now reached in our assemblage of the submissions of both the forest industry and the provincial Governments regarding the whole matter of stumpage rates, which may very well give us the first clear insight into our policies across Canada in that regard?

• (1825)

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) for the question he put in a non-partisan way. We are all interested in assisting this industry. I want to immediately assure the Hon. Member for Kootenay West, since he suggested that the note was not sent because of his representations, that it is precisely because representations by him and others like him who are sincerely interested in this industry that a diplomatic note was, in fact, sent. He need not be needlessly modest today.

I can now report that a formal diplomatic note was presented and received. This note expressed the Canadian Government's serious concern over the action brought by the U.S. industry and reiterated our view that the charges made in their petition had neither substance nor merit. Particular attention was drawn to the importance of these products in our cross-border trade and the serious effect that any disruption of this trade would have on both the Canadian industry and on the communities which depend on it. Secretary Schulz has acknowledged the importance of the matter and a formal reply is expected in short order. Our ambassador has also brought our concern to the attention of the Department of Commerce which, as the Hon. Member will know, is primarily responsible for carrying out the investigation.

As I noted when the matter was raised earlier, the countervailing procedures in the United States are laid down in legislation, and once a petition has been filed and accepted any investigation must follow a strict timetable. As part of these procedures, the U.S. Department of Commerce has requested and has been provided with extensive background on the various federal and provincial programs which were the subject of complaint. Based on this and other evidence, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is to make a preliminary determination on or before March 7 as to whether or not any element of subsidy exists. I must say that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) is confident that the material provided will thoroughly refute the allegations made in the petition, particularly those concerning provincial stumpage practices. I think this was a matter of very great concern to the Hon. Member for Kootenay West.

In the meantime, bilateral consultations have already been initiated with the United States under Article 3 of the GATT Code on Subsidies and Countervailing duties. The course of events will determine the extent to which further bilateral and multilateral action may be necessary. In any such effort to preserve this vital export trade, I can assure all Hon. Members that we are continuing to work closely with both provincial governments and the Canadian industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed from Monday, January 17, 1983, consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and the motion of Mr. Gray (p. 21886) and the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21889).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): When the House adjourned last night the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) had the floor.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in my intervention I was reasonably assured that there was unanimous consent for the tabling of a document from which the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) had read. I see from this morning's Hansard that that document does not appear. It was a letter written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1977 to a correspondent who had been inquiring about the application of the CPI to Public Service pensions. In that letter every assurance was given to the correspondent and to anyone else—because it was an open letter—that the cost of living index would be applied to Public Service pensioners. I would refer Your Honour to page 21908 of yesterday's Hansard, where it appears that unanimous consent was granted. Therefore, I should like to urge that the omission be remedied in today's Hansard.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, to avoid prolonging the debate, I shall be very brief. If I remember correctly, first of all, the Chair did not ask for unanimous consent and second, when the Hon. Member said that he thought there was unanimous consent, I clearly heard one of my colleagues on my left say no, he did not agree.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I thank the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich for raising the point. First of all, private Members are not allowed to table documents in the House, unless, of course, unanimous consent is given. This has been a long-established practice. I understand that unanimous consent was refused yesterday. Even though it might not have been heard by the official reporter of the House, a "No" was stated yesterday. A refusal was stated to unanimous consent, so therefore we cannot proceed at this time with the matter raised by the Hon. Member.

• (1110)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, there was no sound of a dissenting voice. As reported in the second column on page 21908 of Hansard, I said:

> I think that by unanimous consent we will have it appended to Hansard: that is very good.

There was no sound, there is no record in Hansard of any dissenting voice having been recorded. I would assume—and I think it is a fair assumption for anyone reading Hansard—that unanimous consent was given and that therefore the document should be appended.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Again I should draw to the Hon. Member's attention that the only way for private Members to table documents or letters is through the means of unanimous consent.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The record also shows very clearly that the Chair did not seek unanimous consent. The Hon. Member may have rhetorically asked for unanimous consent in the course of his speech, but formally we never proceeded to seek unanimous consent for the tabling of those papers. Those are the facts as they unfolded yesterday. Therefore, even though the Hon. Member feels he has a personal grievance, it is not possible to correct a situation which did not occur in the first place because unanimous consent was not sought.

Is the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) seeking the floor on the same point of order?

Mr. McKinnon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will not delay the proceedings of the House for long. It might resolve this matter if you were now to ask for unanimous consent and, if there are some Hon. Members opposite who do not want the letter of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to be tabled in the House of Commons, they could then say so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Then I will put the request to the House. Is there unanimous consent for the tabling of the document read by the Hon. Member for Victoria in the course of his speech yesterday?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating Bill C-133, an amendment proposed by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to change from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent and from 5 per cent to 5.5 per cent the indexing of pensions of retired public servants. I am opposing the motion and my Party is opposing the amendment because it is wrong.

Yesterday evening when I was speaking on the Bill I pointed out that a deal is a deal is a deal. The deal which was made between the public servants of Canada, their pension fund and their pension future, with the Government of Canada was a deal. When the deal was finished both sides believed that it was sincere and true. Unfortunately, we find out now that the Government did not accept it as a deal and has decided to change it. We are speaking against that kind of thing because it is wrong.

Public servants have paid into this pension fund in all good faith and with the good will that when their time came to retire they would be receiving the pensions which had been prescribed to them by the negotiations and the deal made with the Government. Unfortunately, that deal has been broken. This brings to the fore of my mind one of the most serious problems that we as Members of Parliament face in the House of Commons. That is, who are we to believe and who are the people of Canada to believe? I stand here and people judge me for my credibility; do I speak or do I not speak the truth? My colleagues on all sides of the House have the same responsibility. They stand before this House of Commons and before the people of Canada. They do so whether they are credible or not. I have talked to many people in Canada and I believe that many Canadians are losing their faith in this House and in the value of this House of Commons. One of the reasons for that is broken deals.

• (1115)

All of us must ask ourselves the question: "Are we credible?" I have to do that, Members of my Party must, and so must Members of the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party ask themselves. That question must be asked by Members of the Cabinet and by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We must ask ourselves whether we are credible; are we telling the truth; are we doing what we say? If we cannot answer yes to those questions, then I have a moral responsibility to myself, and others in this House of Commons have a moral responsibility to themselves, to do something about it.

Unfortunately, the people of Canada, the voters out there, do not have the force of power to come here and argue their case in the House. We have to do it for them. But I know when I speak about the broken deal on the civil servants' pension fund that I speak what they are saying and what they are thinking.

We have legislation before us now that has been so easily summarized under the catch phrase "six and five". This six and five program is a sort of direction or thrust that was thrown out to the Canadian people as a solution to their problems. My colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party, by supporting that direction, should stand up now and say that having supported the direction they therefore support this amendment, because that is the truth. If you buy a principle, then you buy what the principle says you have to do.

I am asking the President of the Treasury Board to reconsider seriously what he has proposed. I am asking the Government to reconsider seriously what it has proposed in these Bills that are now being bound around the six and five principle.

I think it is important as we debate this particular Bill to remember that as people get more power and more financial strength they have a more difficult time speaking the truth all the time. I believe that poor people who tell you that they are hungry, that they cannot look after themselves in their old age, that they are sick or that they do not have a job, will speak the truth more clearly and more frequently. That is easily understood. It is not a new idea; it is as old as the biblical traditions that we have. Those who become powerful and rich—I speak of governments, of the House of Commons, of business people, of labour unions, of anybody who becomes powerful and rich and gets away from the poor—have a great deal of difficulty in speaking the truth all the time.

Today, as I throw in my few words on this important amendment and Bill, I ask that the Government seriously reconsider what it has done. I ask Members of this House of Commons to consider seriously what they have done. We should cancel those Bills. If that does not happen, I can say very clearly that what is going to happen in the next election in Windsor is that the campaign slogan will be "Goodbye, Herb".

• (1120)

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks at the report stage of Bill C-133, which amends the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act and adversely affects public servants' pensions, by underlying the massive implications of this measure for Canadian pensioners and public workers.

First, the 6 per cent and 5 per cent cap on pension increases directly affects 200,000 public servants who can rightly claim that they bargained and paid for this benefit. The fact that this employment agreement was entrenched in the statute law and can only be changed by a parliamentary Act is evidence of this social contract.

Second, there are 500,000 public servants employed by the Government of Canada and its agencies, including the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP, who view this legislative change as adversely affecting their pension rights and benefits.

Third, this Bill, C-133, involves a breach of faith for every Canadian because every Canadian who receives a benefit under the statute law of the Parliament of Canada cannot rest assured that that benefit will be continued in all circumstances.

The Government has taken the position that if it considers it necessary in the interest of its financial responsibility to remove benefits without consultation, without prior discussion with the beneficiaries, it can do so by simply introducing an amending Bill in the House of Commons. That is a breach of faith which should concern not only the 700,000 public servants who are particularly affected by this Bill, but it is a breach of faith which should concern all Canadians.

I am certain that every one of the 700,000 responsible and socially conscious Canadians who are represented by the retired public servants and by those now in the Canadian Public Service would accept a limit on their statutory pension rights if that limit was based on reality and principle. However, the Government has substituted fiction for facts. The Government has replaced principle with prejudice.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Cabinet colleagues have systematically and maliciously created a false impression of the federal public servant and, in the case of Bill C-133, the retired public servant. That perception first projects a retired public servant as one who is given pension benefits as an unearned reward by an overgenerous employer. Second, this fictional public servant was overpaid for most of his or her working life, yet the retirement benefit was a substantial percentage—as much as 70 per cent—of that bloated salary. Third, the overpaid and undeserving senior citizens scoff at high inflation rates because, in fact, according to the Government, senior citizens benefit from that inflation rate because the pension income they receive is increased in line with the cost of living.

To suggest to the Canadian people that retired public servants benefit from inflation and therefore can accept a cap on that benefit is ridiculous. What a tragedy it is that well informed Canadians would accept such a false and deceptive description of the retired public servant. What a tragedy that our Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues would, with malice aforethought, create such a perception for the public to accept. This is moral bankruptcy at its lowest level.

The Prime Minister and his colleagues who hold a majority in this House will make Bill C-133 the law of this land, but they will not suceed in convincing Canadians that their action is right and just.

Why is this Act not right? Because the whole six and five program is a fraud and a sham. It is a public fraud on the Canadian people. The Government continues to spend at the rate it has spent over the last decade. It continues to build up a deficit which is now at $23 billion. We were told this very week that it is going up to $30 billion.

Why is Bill C-133 unjust? Because there are 200,000 pensioners who have an average income of $6,900 a year. When one adds the old age assistance to this income, a retired public servant 65 years of age or over, if he has a wife, is below the poverty line of $10,400.

Let me look at the specific problems that are encountered by aging Canadians. In some cases they require care in a nursing home or a similar institution. There is no way that a retired public servant whose income averages $6,900, even with the old age assistance benefit, can pay for nursing care in a nursing home institution anywhere in Canada. Our retired public servants who have spent their working lives trying to provide for their old age are deprived of the financial ability, in most cases, to pay even for nursing care in an institutionalized setting. Therefore, to call the action being taken in Bill C-133 fair or just is to defeat the purpose of those expressions.

I question whether the measure is necessary. The saving to the public purse, as I understand it, will be $15 million in this fiscal year and $85 million in the subsequent fiscal year because of the change which will be brought about by the provisions of Bill C-133. I have already pointed out that the Government continues its spending at an alarming rate and is piling up an even greater deficit than that projected in the June, 1982 Budget which created the six and five program. However, let me give some other examples of Government spending, which are in excess of $100 million, which will be saved by the provisions of Bill C-133.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is in the House and I am sure he is about to approve the construction of a vessel to ply between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and span the Gulf. The estimated cost of that vessel is $122 million and the project was first rejected by the Government. It is now apparently being reinstated, not to help the poor people in Newfoundland or in Nova Scotia but, rather, to help the company that will build the vessel, a subsidiary of Dome Petroleum, the Davie Shipbuilding Company. So there is $122 million which will be spent.

Mr. Pepin: Everybody is in favour of that.

Mr. Crosby: We have the continuing luxury of the Mirabel Airport piling up a deficit of $50 million a year. Over a two-year period, we could save $100 million there. I will not mention the Canada Post Corporation, with its $500 million deficit year after year. What about the assistance the Canadian National Railways generously gave to the CAST Shipping group, over $60 million to help a foreign company build ships and create activity offshore? I could go down the list and very quickly come up with literally thousands of examples of wastage in the area of $100 million over the last decade, but I will content myself with those examples. If there were other Ministers in the House, I could display for Hon. Members some of their financial sins in the past decade.

I want to speak about the attitude of the New Democratic Party, which Your Honour has just seen evidenced in this House by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: Its thesis before us is always that the Progressive Conservative Party supported the six and five program.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, let me ask you, let me ask New Democrats and let me ask every Canadian, why would the Progressive Conservative Party not support the six and five program when it was first announced? When it was first announced, it was tied to a cutback in Government expenditure in the name of restraint. It was intended that the six and five program would save the public treasury funds, and that the savings would result in a better economic situation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the former Minister of Finance, who no longer is the Minister of Finance for that very reason, deceived the House when he brought in his June, 1982 Budget. He was not interested in restraint at all. The six and five program has since been proved to be a public fraud.

Mrs. Mitchell: You voted with us!

Mr. Crosby: There was no intention to cut back on spending. So what happened was that the Opposition, in its loyal duty to Her Majesty, to the Crown, accepted the Government's good intention to restrain Government spending and to apply the six and five program fairly to accomplish that purpose. We were the victims of the Government's fraud when it comes to federal public servants and retired federal public servants.

This is not to justify the action of the New Democratic Party, because we know that it was not sincere in its opposition. We know from its action time and time again in this House of Commons that its Members simply stand up and take whatever position their whim of the day desires, as they did in this House the other day in support of the Roman Catholic Bishops of Canada. They supported the Roman Catholic Bishops of Canada because it served their purpose. However, I would ask them if they support their stand on abortion, on birth control or on other moral issues. I want the New Democratic Party to stand up in this House and support the stand of the Canadian Roman Catholic Bishops on moral issues as they have been announced.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are—

• (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I must inform the Hon. Member that the time allotted to his speech has expired.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to take part in this debate for a moment or two and to support my colleague from Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), who so aptly put the case for our Party in this matter. I did not have an opportunity to speak in the earlier debate because of the rush to judgment that was precipitated by the Government.

Simcoe North does not have a very great civil servant constituency so this issue is not in my riding, as it is in several of the Ottawa ridings, an issue upon which an election can be won or lost. I regret that the Member for my public servant constituents in Ottawa, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), I guess it is, has seen fit to support the Government on this particular issue.

An Hon. Member: Ottawa Centre!

Mr. Lewis: Ottawa Centre, I am sorry. My apologies. I appreciate the Hon. Member would not want to be associated with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) in this matter because of the way—

Mr. Epp: Ottawa-Vanier!

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has had the courage of his convictions in this matter. As a matter of fact, I want to commend him for having the courage of his convictions as opposed to his fellow sheep on the back bench of the Liberal Party who have abandoned their constituents on this particular issue. I have had several of my constituents write to me or call me, both civil servants and non-civil servants, asking that I put forward their views on this particular amendment.

There are two points that I wish to make briefly. One is that the people of Simcoe North, my constituents, believe that a deal is a deal, that an agreement, once made, should not be broken unilaterally. That is exactly what the Liberal Government has done in this Bill. They have broken an agreement which they made with the civil servants of this country. Secondly, the people of Simcoe North believe that the Government should not fight inflation on the backs of those who cannot fight back.

What I want to do for a moment is to elaborate on both of these points. Several years ago the federal Government agreed to index civil servants' pensions to cover the effect of inflation. That meant that each year there would be an increase in the pension paid to a civil servant to allow for the inflation of the previous year, if any. The theory was that the recipient would always be in the same position as he or she was guaranteed under the agreement made with the Government. Pensions would be indexed to inflation.

What the Government is doing in this Bill and what our amendment attempts to correct, or stop for a period of time, is to index pensions only so much as the Government wishes; in other words, to index only to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984.

The Government entered into an agreement collectively, with the union—and I suggest it entered into it individually with each and every civil servant—to index pensions to inflation. On the other side of the agreement, the union agreed, and each individual member of the union agreed, that they would pay a premium for that indexing. As I understand it, that is 1 per cent of salary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not want unintentionally to mislead the House. There was no negotiated contract between the unions and the Government on this particular issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should inform the Parliamentary Secretary that that is hardly a point of order; it is a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you for your intervention, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the Government may want to differentiate between breaking its word and breaking an agreement. As far as we are concerned, if you give your word as a Government and people act on the giving of that word, that makes it the type of agreement that should not be broken. I believe that is what is at issue here. The Liberal Government did not give its word but it was awfully glad to brag about it.

Let me read from the Treasury Board booklet of 1974 entitled "Your Superannuation Plan". It says:

> There is no means test and all in receipt of pensions, whether former employees or their widows and dependants, benefit from the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act's provisions. In any year where there is an increase in the cost of living, pensions will be increased in an amount directly related to the increase in the Consumer Price Index, without limit.

I emphasize, "without limit". It goes on:

> The percentage increase payable each January represents the increase of the average of the Consumer Price Index for the twelve-month period ending on the preceding September over that for the twelve-month period of the previous year.

There is no footnote saying "Provided that the Liberal Government does not change its mind", or "This is not a firm agreement, just our word", or "This is a one-sided agreement; you pay and we will decide whether or not we will uphold our side of the deal". That is what we are concerned about; a deal is a deal.

My second point is the fight against inflation. Over the years we have had promise after promise by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when he was in town, to wrestle inflation to the ground. He has gone to Japan perhaps to improve his Samurai wrestling, or some other type of wrestling, but he has failed to wrestle inflation to the ground. In 1980 it was 10.1 per cent and in 1981 it was 12.5 per cent.

There are obvious reasons for that. We are now in a recession that the Government has provoked with the National Energy Program, with its economic policies, with its Budget of 1981 and its addendum, which has created something which is called unemployement; and inflation has begun to come down because companies cannot sell their inventories. Stores cannot sell their merchandise. That does the best job of all in fighting inflation. The Government has come up with a plan to take full credit for the depression. They are calling it "fighting inflation".

So six and five is designed to restrict the salaries of civil servants, and we agreed with that. We had no difficulty in agreeing to that. The NDP had a lot of difficulty in agreeing with that. As I have said before in this House, I spent a lot of time this summer answering questions from my constituents who asked: "Why did the NDP vote to increase their salaries to the rate of inflation?", and "Thank you, Mr. Lewis, for voting to hold yours back. There is no restraint at all on the part of the NDP. They just want that big, fat salary."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Really, it was embarrassing, explaining this to them. We are fighting this Bill because the Government is determined to fight inflation on the backs of families, on the backs of civil servants and on the backs of pensioners, all people who cannot fight back. Civil servants working now have an option. If they do not like the 6 per cent they have the option to go and find another job.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) will tell you that he is creating job after job. The Minister creates jobs by the thousands. The point is that there are no jobs. This Government is not creating them. The Liberal Government is taking the coward's way out to fight these people who cannot fight back. That is why we are supporting the amendment of my colleague and are fighting the Government on this Bill.

• (1140)

I urge all Members of this House, including those on the other side, to support this amendment and to vote against this Bill. I would like those opposite to show the courage of their convictions, if they have any. I do not want to see the Liberal Government shaft the public servants or public servant pensioners or any others who cannot fight back. I see that my Member of Parliament is here. I am pleased to see him in the Chamber. Oh, he is not all here!

In conclusion, I ask the House to vote against Bill C-133 and support this Party. Vote against the Liberal Government's attempt to fight inflation on the backs of Civil Service pensioners.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a few comments on the record respecting Bill C-133 and the matter of the superannuated pension. It was previously asked whether the six and five program should have been supported originally. My answer is yes. It not only gave a signal to both the public and private community that inflation was a major problem in the economy, but the Government had to recognize it and come to grips with it. As has been mentioned, because of recessionary factors and pressures there is no question that the reduction in inflation has been influenced largely by that rather than any government program.

Bill C-133 is quite different from Bill C-124 which was a capping of salaries of public servants, 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. That was the essence of Bill C-124. The merit of those two proposals is evident and I do not have to make further comment on that.

When we get to deal with Bill C-133, we are in a different situation. I will explain it in this way. On the one hand, Canadians through their tax dollars pay money into general revenues at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. Those moneys are used to provide services which those Governments, Parliament or the legislatures decide to be important for the well-being of the general population.

We as Opposition Members and as members of society generally might argue that the Government is not using those funds in the best way possible. Through the methods in this House, namely by debate and eventually by the electoral process, the Canadian people give their verdict as to whether the Government of the day has prudently spent the tax dollars collected by Government over the course of the years.

That is a process we all understand. The question of accountability is central. However, when we look at money which has been received by individuals, money deducted at source when people receive their salary cheques or money directly paid to a pension plan, that money is very different from general revenues. General revenues are moneys used for the general well-being of society. When an individual Canadian pays a premium for a pension to be received at the time of retirement, that money is held in trust by the Government to make it work to the best advantage of those who initially contributed to that pension plan. It is a trust fund. Therefore, that money should be seen by Governments differently from the general pool which is often referred to as the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The Government has an obligation to fulfil the terms of the pension agreement. What we are dealing with today is a pension agreement between the Government and every public servant who has contributed his or her pension premium to a pension plan. They do not know what the pay-out will be at the time of retirement. It depends on the salary earned and the number of years of contribution and, until the passage of this Bill, on the so-called escalation which is related to the cost of living increase.

Because of the power it has in the House of Commons, the Government says it will now change that agreement. I believe that is wrong. The people who contributed to the pension fund are now being told that the other partner, the Government of Canada, is changing the rules. Ironically it is only one partner that can change the rules because of the power that partner has in this House of Commons through the legislative process. Previously the rules were changed through the collective bargaining system by agreement. What we are dealing with today is an agreement between the Government and the public servant.

Over the past number of days all of us have had experience with people who are concerned about their investment. As I spoke to my constituents during the Christmas break, I found a certain attitude. They were willing to invest and have the money to invest, but they had great fears along the following lines. First, would the Government change the tax rules again if they made an investment today? Would the rules again change at the time of the next Budget? That creates real confusion in the mind of the average person who wants to invest, create jobs and make the economy go.

Second, and I found this interesting, they were concerned about the viability of Canada's financial institutions. The average person was asking whether his money would be safe and secure. I do not want to comment today on what is happening in the Ontario legislature relative to mortgage and trust companies, but it has not helped that attitude. It has created even more confusion and fear. Fear is not too strong a word in this regard. The average person wants to know whether his investment will be secure. For example, in Winnipeg there are some branches of the Ontario companies that are involved. Average people stood in line in the cold of winter in Winnipeg to see whether their investment was secure, the financial future in which they had invested.

When dealing with Bill C-133, we must also touch on the human factors. Individuals believe that if they work and do their job properly and contribute at a certain rate, they will have a certain pension not only for themselves but, more important, for their families when they pass on. These people have contributed an extra percentage point to buy escalation in pension equal to the cost of living increase. Nowhere in the legislation are these people given the option of not having to pay the extra 1 per cent.

I find it very difficult to understand how the Government can say: "Well, we are not going to escalate in to the cost of living; and, secondly, we still expect you to pay the premium which bought that protection". I do not think a private insurance company could get away with that. It they said, when one bought either a life insurance policy, superannuation or whatever, "Look, those were the conditions but we have decided to change them even though you signed a contract", I would think the Government would step in very quickly and say very specifically: "You have a contract, fulfil it". There might also be a question from the general public as to whether the fund is solvent. But I think if you look at the surplus in the fund, that question is answered as well.

The last point I want to make, from my constituents' point of view, is this. It is generally regarded that there are not that many public servants in my riding, active or retired. Well, that is simply not the case in a riding where there are five border crossings or where there is a community, Whiteshell-Pinawa, which has an atomic energy research station. I have before me, Mr. Speaker, a petition signed by some 200 people from communities such as Pinawa, Beauséjour, Whitemouth, River Hills, Lac du Bonnet, Seven Sisters Falls, Winnipeg, Elma, Seddon's Corner, Tyndall and Transcona who said: "We paid in, signed a contract and we are living up to our contract; members of the Government, live up to your side of it as well". That is the message they have given to me and that is the message I have given to the House.

The reduction of inflation is a valid national goal, but when you have a contract and you expect other Canadians to live up to their side of the contract, I suggest the Government, for its own integrity, do the same thing.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, welcome the opportunity of being able to participate in this most important debate. It is something I really do not enjoy, however, because of the fact that I find Bill C-133 to be one of the most repugnant pieces of legislation to be introduced in the House since I have been here.

As speaker after speaker from both opposition parties has indicated, this Bill is breaking a contract between the Government and its past and present employees. It destroys an agreement, something which would not be allowed in the private sector. It is morally and economically wrong. Essentially what it does is cap at the 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent level the increase in pensions of some 154,367 retired public servants who receive an average pension of some $6,900 a year. They will receive an increase in their pension of 0.5 per cent more than mothers or people on Old Age Security because of a sense of guilt by the Government over the fact that these people have paid into a fund and are indeed entitled to full indexation because they won it in contract negotiations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Government can claim that the net effect is not going to be all that great because inflation is going to be down next year, perhaps even to 6 per cent. We all hope it will be, but that is not the point. The point is that retired civil servants have fought for and won the right to some protection in periods of rapid economic change. They have paid for it. There is no guarantee, Mr. Speaker, of what the inflation rate will be during the next two years. When we look at the economic forecasts during the last two years, what sticks out is that nobody knows what in heaven's name is going on. All the predictions have been wrong—predictions as to what is happening with the economy, when the recovery is going to occur, what Government deficits are going to be, what inflation or unemployment is going to be. Economists, both in the private and public sector, have been unable to make any accurate, long-term predictions. No one can tell us with any degree of certainty what the inflation rate is going to be next year, yet Bill C-133 removes the protection against inflation for the very people who need that protection the most. The only protection people such as mothers or the retired have is what they have legally gained through institutions such as Parliament. But the Government removes this protection in the name of fighting inflation. That is insanity and cynicism from the Government opposite which just amazes me. It is wrong economics.

The Conference Board of Canada stated last week, and I quote from The Globe and Mail of January 13, 1983:

—the recovery will continue to be hampered by the weak growth expected in real disposable income in 1983.

Essentially the Board says that while consumer confidence is high in Canada, the ability of Canadians to purchase the goods and services they want and need is hampered by the fact that they do not have the purchasing power, and the cutbacks introduced by the Government and massive unemployment are preventing economic recovery. This proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, further aggravates the basic problem. We are not going to get on the road to economic recovery with legislation like Bill C-133. In fact, this Bill further slows down the economy. I am not certain that there is an explanation for why the Government cannot see or understand this. Perhaps it does. Perhaps it is quite willing cynically to say: "This is the price we are prepared to pay to wrestle inflation to the ground. We are prepared to see old age pensioners, mothers, and retired civil servants squeezed even further in order to fight inflation to the ground."

We in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, have maintained from day one that this type of Reaganomics will not work. The amount of human suffering is too great to make this an acceptable cure for inflation. In fact, this type of Reaganomics will lead to economic disaster, bankruptcies, massive unemployment and, perhaps, to the very ruin and crash of our present economic system.

I was definitely encouraged to hear Members of the Conservative Party denounce this legislation because it broke contracts. They spoke in terms of the importance of understanding and of gentlemen's agreements on contracts. They are absolutely correct, but I sense a bit of a double standard there because they supported Bill C-124 which capped salaries of public servants. That Bill broke a lot of contracts that had been negotiated between public servants and their employer, the Government, yet we only heard two Members of the Conservative Party protest that obnoxious Bill C-124.

I think the Conservative Party still has a chance to show how sincere its opposition is to Bills C-131, 132 and 133. Members will meet in convention next week. I challenge them to introduce and pass a resolution at that convention that would denounce Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133. If at that convention they pass resolutions condemning those pieces of legislation, then some of the faith that I used to have in that Party will be restored. I challenge its Members to introduce such a motion and to marshal it through the convention next week.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret I have to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. de Jong: I also regret that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, we are now engaged in what has become the longest parliamentary session in Canadian history, and this so shortly after a Christmas recess when one might have thought Members of the Government, if they had listened to their constituents, would have returned with fresh, new ideas about how to fight inflation. But they have not, so we must continue our opposition to their approach to the battle against inflation.

Bill C-133 is more than just mean-minded. It comes at what is perhaps the blackest moment in Canada's pension history. Goodness knows what will follow. Should Government backbenchers see fit to fall into line and vote for the legislation, they will be playing a major role in this blackest moment in our history.

In the name of restraint, the Government has chosen to launch a stubborn and determined attack on senior citizens, mothers and Public Service employees while it just as steadfastly refuses to put its own house in order and curtail Government expenditures.

Who are the people who are being asked to make sacrifices as a result of Bill C-133? It certainly is not Senator Pitfield or Edmund Clark. Some 70 per cent of the people affected by this Bill are receiving pensions of less than $10,000 per year. Better than 80 per cent of widows and survivors of public servants receive pensions of under $5,000 per year. Are these the people whose inflationary expectations must be brought into line? Are these people to be made an example of for the Canadian people?

It was suggested at second reading of the Bill that the Government could be sympathetic enough at least to exclude pensioners in the lower income brackets. The response was that pensioners in the lower income brackets could not be excluded because there were too many of them. That response speaks volumes about the insensitivity of Members across the floor.

These are tough times, the Government says. Tough times, indeed, Mr. Speaker, for those persons who cannot bear the brunt of this inflationary attack. Do Members across the floor not realize that never in Canadian history, not even in the darkest hours of the depression of the thirties, has a Government altered pension arrangements as is proposed now? That has never happened, Mr. Speaker. This action is totally unprecedented. It is disgraceful, it is shameful and it should not take place. It breaks trust and it certainly destroys confidence. It is bad enough that a Government should attempt to build a restraint program on the backs of pensioners without taking them into consideration and the fact that it is establishing a bald-faced precedent.

I was raised to believe, and my children have been brought up as well to believe, that my word is my bond. A deal is a deal. As a lawyer, I was persuaded many times to put a deal into writing. What does the Government propose? It does not matter that the Government's agreement has been reduced to a convention and an understanding that public servants could retire on a contributory pension which, they were told in 1974, would be indexed. This Bill not only unilaterally breaks that deal, but it does so without prior consultation and without prior notice. Such action, whether it be in the Public Service or the private sector, can only lead to bad relations between management and labour.

In trying to resolve all the issues that arose in the formulation of the Civil Service Staff Relations Act, the Public Service unions and associations agreed to forfeit the right to bargain pensions in return for an agreement on the part of the Government of the day that it would never tamper with Public Service pensions without full and meaningful consultation. This agreement obtained through 1971, when partial indexing was adopted, to 1974, when full indexing was introduced, and onward until June, 1982 when the Government broke it without notice and without consultation.

Throughout the period from 1967 to June 1982 it was understood that it was the Government's responsibility to administer the pension fund and, from 1981, the indexation account, in an actuarially sound manner. The Government was to set the contributory rate in consultation with the staff associations and unions; it was to match that rate and, most important in the context of Bill C-133, it was to make up any deficiencies that might result. Public servants, in turn, were to pay that which was agreed upon, namely 1 per cent of gross earnings, for indexation. How the Government chose to invest the pension and indexation funds was the business of the Government, not of the unions or associations.

Now, out of the blue, the Government is breaking the agreement made 15 years ago with respect to changes in the area of pensions and it is making a mockery of the 1974 promise to provide full indexation. To add insult to injury, the Government is justifying this by pointing to its own less than satisfactory investment and accounting practices and to the good faith and trust extended by the unions and associations of the Public Service in not insisting upon a formal contract.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-133 is a contemptible and repugnant piece of legislation. It attacks those who have no way to defend themselves, those who are in no position to fight inflation themselves. They are being asked to bear the brunt of the Government's attack on pension legislation. These pensioners are not only going to lose, on average, some $1,200 over the two-year period that the program will be in place, but they will see their pension base eroded by an estimated 10 per cent for the balance of their pension life.

The amendment put forward by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is not only inadequate, it is an insult to the intelligence and integrity of Public Service pensioners. The honourable course, Mr. Speaker, is to defeat the Bill or to withdraw it.

• (1210)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have this opportunity today to rise and speak on this aspect of Bill C-133, not because it is a good Bill, but because it provides one with an opportunity to speak on this very dark day in Canadian pension history. It allows a person to raise on behalf of tens of thousands of Canadians a number of issues which they would dearly love to raise before the Government of Canada themselves. They have requested that the Members of Parliament who represent them do it on their behalf.

Over the last number of weeks, during the Christmas recess especially, I had the opportunity to meet with retired public servants, retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and retired members of Canada's Armed Forces. They approached me both formally and informally to ask just what on earth the Government of Canada was doing. These three areas of Canada's Public Service were under the impression that they had entered into a contract with the Government of Canada, that they had made an arrangement or a deal, and that there was a clear understanding.

I am referring, for example, to those public servants who had really committed themselves and dedicated their lives to being public servants in the most positive aspect of that term, those who had literally established careers and dedicated their lives to serving Canadians and Canada. I am referring to such people as those who for years and years represented us as a country in our Customs houses and immigration offices here and abroad, those who represented Canada in weather stations both in the settled parts of Canada and often in very remote areas of the country, those who dedicated their lives to assisting the unemployed through UIC offices, those in Parks Canada who served the public, protected wildlife and made more inaccessible areas of Canada a welcome part of Canada's heritage. They welcomed people into those parks and introduced them to the finer elements of our environment and Canadian ecology. Also I am referring to people in fisheries who often risked their lives working for that very critical resource industry. One could go on and on referring to people who dedicated their lives to serving Canada.

Retired members of the Armed Forces have come to me and said, "Mr. Riis, as my Member of Parliament, I want to tell you that I have dedicated my life to this country." They say that in a way different from other Canadians. In fact, they served in World War II and literally laid their lives on the line on many, many occasions. They were prepared to risk their lives for Canada. They served Canada in Korea and in a number of peace-keeping missions around the world. When they got up in the morning and went out on the job, they were prepared to give their lives for Canada as a result of a contract into which they had entered between themselves and the Government of Canada. Also I refer to those members of the RCMP who daily, year after year, decade after decade, risked their lives to protect Canadian citizens in whatever part of Canada they were found. From the largest metropolitan areas to the most remote coasts, RCMP members were prepared to dedicate their lives and in many cases risk their lives frequently on Canada's behalf.

These people had an understanding. In many cases they virtually had a contract that their service would be recognized in their pensions. The pension is not excessive; a typical retired public servant receives today $6,900. They recognized that there was a factor of inflation which would jeopardize that pension. They were given the opportunity to pay into a fund which would protect them in the case of inflation. The Government of Canada indicated that that should be included as part of the understanding of the deal being made, that not only would they contribute 6 per cent toward their pension but they would add another percentage point to protect them against the ravages of inflation. Many of them decided that they would retire early for two reasons—to allow access to their career for other Canadians and because they knew they would be protected in the case of rapid inflationary growth.

Now they have learned through one source or another that the Government has turned its back on them and has decided to change the contract, to renege on the contract, to break the contract. They are puzzled. They really cannot believe that the Government for which they worked for many years—people who had literally dedicated their lives to serving Canada, Canadians and the Government of Canada—was now turning its back on them.

We have heard other speakers refer to the crisis in leadership confidence. I read with interest in The Globe and Mail this morning one of Canada's best columnists, who identified that our critical problem today was that Canadians had lost confidence in their leadership for good reasons. The article indicated that they cannot trust the leadership of the Government of Canada any longer, that the leadership says one thing and does another. An example of that is that the Government of Canada entered into a contract with its public servants and now it has broken it.

Also the columnist referred to the Progressive Conservative Party. I suspect many people are perplexed when Members of the Progressive Conservative Party rose and said that they supported the six and five principle and were prepared to break contracts with tens of thousands of Canadians. Now they rise and say that they do not like breaking certain contracts with certain aspects of the Public Service of Canada. Then the people of Canada ask, "What on earth does the Progressive Conservative Party stand for; where is its integrity? It is prepared to break some contracts but is hesitant to break this one."

I must say that there are some Members of the Progressive Conservative Party who have a heart, a conscience and integrity. Those are the ones who stood in their places and said, "We will not participate in this hypocritical move in which the rest of our colleagues in the Conservative Party are participating." They had the courage to stand up and say that.

I believe it must be said very clearly that there is a crisis of leadership confidence in the country, and that the Liberal Party of Canada and the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada are providing ample fuel for that speculation. Canadian public servants are truly confused when they find the contracts into which they had entered being broken and in principle supported by the Conservatives as well.

The disappointing aspect of Bill C-133 is really twofold. One is that it fights inflation on the backs of those people who are really the victims of inflation. If there is one group in Canada feeling the pinch of inflation, it has to be those on fixed incomes, especially those who are retired. The Government says that those who are suffering the most and are paying the greatest penalty will be those people on whose backs it will fight this war as well. They are the casualties of the war. Simply, this Bill will add to the casualty list in terms of people who are suffering as a result of the six and five program. Most important, we must recognize that Bill C-133 breaks contracts. When they start breaking contracts, confidence begins to erode and any support which the political leadership had created in the months previous quickly evaporates, and I suspect it has been totally evaporated at this point.

I call upon all those Members of Parliament in this House to stand up and be counted when the vote comes. I say to Liberal backbenchers: "Have the courage to represent not only your constituents but have the integrity to represent those people across this country who have literally dedicated their lives to the service of Canada". I am thinking of those people in the Armed Forces, in the RCMP and those dedicated public servants who have given up their lives to serve Canada. The least we can do now is to give them a fair pension.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, much has been stated here in the House and during sittings of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee as it heard witnesses who appeared to give their reaction, almost universally adverse, to Bill C-133. Much has been stated that reflects very poorly on the Government of Canada breaking trust with its employees and retirees in the matter of indexation of pensions.

Certainly of all the witnesses who appeared representing the many elements of the Public Service in Canada, the breaking of a trust relationship dominated their testimony. In addition, we have all received letters and communications from constituents whose interests are adversely affected by Bill C-133. Typical is a letter received recently from Mr. William Hitchen of Victoria, B.C., who is chairman of the Organization for Indexed Pensions. In his letter he writes:

> The Prime Minister has recently made a plea for trust between Canadians. Pillaging the funded Public Service pension accounts does not improve trust.
> Please help to defeat Bill C-133.

Mr. Hitchen also wrote:

> Bill C-133 is designed to limit the indexing of Public Service pensions to 6 per cent and 5 per cent over the next two years. Its purpose obviously is to enhance the Government's "six and five" program, although in actual fact its implementation would contribute practically nothing to our fight on inflation.

On that point I believe it is clear we have to take issue with what our colleagues to my left have repeatedly been saying about the Progressive Conservative Party's position concerning Bill C-124. Bill C-124 was the first indication that the Government of Canada took the damage that inflation was doing to our citizens seriously. It was on the basis that Bill C-124 was the first move by the Government of Canada to do something about it that we supported Bill C-124. Up to that point the Government had not taken seriously the damage it was inflicting on the economy of Canada and to individual Canadian citizens. The Government was then seen to recognize what was happening. Because Bill C-124 was the first step toward bringing Government activity under control, we supported it. But we have been offended by the repeated actions of this Government that have gone against the spirit of Bill C-124. Canadians right across the country have been offended by what is seen as the failure of the Government to live up to its commitment which it gave to the Canadian people when it put the problems that inflation were producing before them and produced as a first step toward resolving those problems Bill C-124.

I asked a witness who appeared before the Committee whether that person would be ready to accept the implication of Bill C-133 if an awareness was reflected in Government action day by day that it, the Government, was the prime producer of inflation in Canada, a problem that could only be brought under control by trimming its own voracious appetite for spending. The witness's response was: "Yes, indeed, it would be more palatable if the burden were shared right across the spectrum of society".

The problem is unequal treatment. That is what offends Canadians. For example, the generosity extended to Mr. Pitfield stands in marked contrast to the treatment of pensioners whose average pension is less than $7,000 annually. Naturally, they are offended when they read of the generous spirit shown to a public servant who has served Canada well, I am sure, but whose situation stands in marked contrast to that of the ordinary pensioner and superannuate.

The generosity of this Government to its friends, as demonstrated by the Maislin trucking bail-out and by the selection of Mr. Erikson to design the embassy in Washington, by-passing the expensive and thorough selection committee recommendations, offends Canadians. These actions stand in contrast to the way superannuates are being treated. All those things offend me and they offend the Canadian public.

What about the $17 million grant to the Holiday Inn to build a hotel in the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce's riding in the city of Windsor? It is interesting to note that Minister is now President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and has responsibility for Bill C-133. That action stands in marked contrast to what the Government is asking, which is a denial of a privilege that was guaranteed to superannuates and is now being taken away from them through Bill C-133.

What about the several hundreds of millions of dollars being spent on Government advertising? I see the Government's present information budget is $235 million. The federal Government has risen from being the seventeenth largest advertiser in Canada to being the largest advertiser in Canada.

Surely if we are looking at places to trim Government spending we can point the finger to more productive sources of saving. We should not be looking to the pensioners and superannuates, the people who have contributed far more funds than have been taken out. Surely we can look to those sources. The traditional role of Government spending has been to provide information but it has gone far beyond that process now. It is not information that the Government is providing, it is soliciting support for programs and Government initiatives, many of which are not worthy of support.

You have indicated to me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I just wish to say on behalf of those who appeared as witnesses before the Committee that the Government can make all people appreciate the effect of restraint by demonstrating restraint itself. This would bring all the people on the side of the Government in the matter of restraint. We will not be supporting this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago at an earlier stage in this debate I made my fundamental objections to this and the other pieces of legislation quite clear. Over the years the question of my parliamentary responsibility has never been a complicated one for me. If a piece of legislation is good law, then it should be supported. If it lacks that qualification, it should be opposed. I have always believed that good laws were simply those which the people in fact wanted to support and embraced as being for the betterment of themselves, their community, the country and the world.

I do not have any difficulty in deciding upon this series of legislation which has been introduced in support of the principles of the six and five program. I have opposed it since the beginning. While the particular measure in front of us now could be improved with the Government's acceptance of certain amendments, I am somewhat amazed to believe that the Government would continue in the perpetration of this hoax.

Our economy is in a serious recession. There is a growing consensus, from what I have read, that it is just such measures as this which effectively take spending money out of the market place that will, in fact, prolong the very recession that the Government claims measures such as this will cure. I believe the Government has admitted this fact to some extent, perhaps simply to smooth over the objections of some of their more thoughtful supporters. The Government has admitted its error in this legislation by sneaking in this amendment for 5.5 per cent and 6.5 per cent. However, it makes no impact at all.

The Government should be determining ways to inject real dollars into the economy which will provide the capital pool for those manufacturers, processors and developers in this country to sell their goods and services and therefore enable them to rehire workers and get the industrial effort in this country back on track. This is poor legislation, if for no other reason than that. However, the problem is much more complex than this simple test for what a responsible Member of Parliament should do with respect to the principle of what is good or bad legislation.

One can consider this legislation from the point of view of being a very personal attack on the retirement capacity of people to live with some degree of dignity. We are aware that the savings to the Government are immeasureably small. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) cited only two or three examples. He is quite right that there are literally hundreds of examples which could be cited. The average pension income is still under $7,000 and Old Age Security is still under $3,000. The total income which pensioners receive presently is below the poverty line. This is a fact which is acknowledged and accepted by everyone.

If this program was to result in the recovery of sufficient amounts of money to restore economic activity in the country, there would then be some basis on which to listen to the arguments of the Government for support for this program. However, this is not the case. The Government is taking money from an already hard hit group of people. In Nova Scotia, we have 15,000 retired federal public servants. In Halifax-Dartmouth alone there are 37,000 public sector employees. What will they live on when they retire? The domestic electricity rates in Nova Scotia have just risen by 28 per cent. You know in your own Province, Mr. Speaker, how domestic electrical costs compare to the national average. Despite this one increased item alone, the Government will remove even more funds from these people.

I reject this legislation because I believe we should be in an expansionary mood in the House instead of a contracting posture. We have seen a bleak year in 1982 which we may wish to forget. However, when we look ahead in 1983 the picture is not much better and this type of legislation will do nothing to help that forecast.

The employment rate has fallen for 16 consecutive months, with 492,000 fewer identifiable jobs than there were a year ago. We know there are 1.5 million people unemployed and I am sure there are another 750,000 unemployed people who cannot be identified or counted. This legislation does nothing to address the problems faced by them.

Some 10,000 businesses have been pushed into bankruptcy in recent months. It is no wonder that inflation is dropping, since there is theoretically no money while national productivity is running between 60 per cent and 65 per cent in terms of efficiency. We know what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said in this respect. Perhaps we will soon have 100 per cent efficiency with no firms operating at all. If that is the direction in which the Government is heading, it may be able to produce some good statistics from that.

This is poor legislation which should not be supported. The difficulty with the legislative process in this place is that, once there is a commitment to a particular course of action, there is no fundamental sense of responsibility to change direction. We simply forge on with it, whether rightly or wrongly. "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead!" The Government is torpedoing a whole segment of Canadian society which, the good Lord knows, are presently facing enough difficulty in making ends meet without having this further burden imposed upon them.

There are amendments which should be made to this legislation, the very least of which should be a sunset law to bring it to an end. These things are apparently not acceptable to the Government. I do not even know for sure whether it has even considered them. If in fact inflation does not come down, does the Government hold out any hope to these people that money taken away from them by this measure can be given back to them to help restore them to a level at least approaching dignity?

• (1240)

Indexing is a principle which was introduced in this Chamber by a former leader of ours, the Hon. Robert Stanfield. Actually, it was the then Minister of Finance, John Turner, who, after thinking about the wisdom of Bob Stanfield's comments, introduced it. It is interesting that some Hon. Member on that day wondered whether the real Bob Stanfield would stand up.

What the Government is doing is wrong. It seriously affects thousands and thousands of Canadians. If the Government in fact wonders about the view of retired public servants, I suggest that it ask the 15,000 retired federal superannuates and members of the Armed Forces in the Province of Nova Scotia. There would be no misunderstanding at all on their part.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on the so-called compromise amendment to Bill C-133. To start off, I would like to tell the rest of the story about the Conservative support for Bill C-124. The Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) spent a considerable amount of his ten-minute speech explaining how the Conservatives had been tricked into supporting Bill C-124, but they could not follow through on that support in the Bills which came to follow. In speaking against the Bill, they argued that it is wrong for the Government to break contracts and that deals which have been made are deals which should be kept. How hypocritical can one get, Mr. Speaker?

Bill C-124 broke many negotiated, signed contracts established by recognized unions which had fought long and hard for the benefits which those contracts gave to them. The Progressive Conservatives supported that Bill. Now for the sake of political expediency, they are against this Bill. We accept their support. We are glad that the superannuates have their support and that, in the process, if Hon. Members across the way are able to get up the courage and vote as they would probably like to vote, we may be able to defeat this Bill. However, let the people of Canada realize that the Conservative Party here is being selective as to what contracts it will support and what contracts it will break. Let there be no suggestion that just because its Members supported Bill C-124, they have good reason to vote against Bill C-133.

The Government has presented a number of Bills, the six and five Bills, and has said that it does not really need these Bills. What it is trying to do is to work on the psychological impact of inflation. That sounds like a pretty good idea, but who contributes to inflation? It certainly is not the superannuates. It certainly is not the workers, farmers, or small businessmen. These people are now receiving less to live on than they did a year ago or even five years ago. They are not the people who are contributing to inflation. Farmers from my district are receiving 17 per cent to 25 per cent less income this year than they did last year. Superannuates are receiving real wages or real retirement benefits which are comparatively less than they were two years ago, and this 6 per cent does not increase them to a level which is equal to inflation.

We should take a good look at who contributes to inflation. There is a story which all of us know, the story of Alice in Wonderland, where the Queen tells Alice: "Look, you must run as fast as you can so that you can stay in one place". That is what the superannuates are trying to do. Here we have the Government stating that although it did make an agreement a number of years ago, and although there was a handshake on it and everyone accepted the fact that the Government would support indexed pensions, suddenly it is in the position where it will no longer keep the agreement.

The Government is almost symbolic of one which will go ahead and break contracts and break the law in the process of attempting to put before the people a rather unacceptable point of view. Let us consider the record of the Government in breaking contracts. This particular Bill would break contracts with civil servants and the amendment is a compromise. What a compromise! It amounts to an increase of .5 per cent, or $39 a year for the average civil servant.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is present in the House. He has proposed before this House, before the people of Canada, the breaking of a contract which was established in 1925.

Mr. Pepin: Only reactionaries oppose that.

Mr. Hovdebo: That contract is the Crow rate agreement, an agreement between the people of western Canada and the Government of Canada. The Government, so the Minister tells us, will break that contract. It is a contract—

Mr. Pepin: Replace it with a better one.

Mr. Hovdebo: —which the farmers have already paid for many times over.

The Government also signed a number of treaties with the aboriginal people of Canada, treaties which guaranteed health, education and a number of other benefits which the aboriginal people expected to have for the rest of their lives, or into perpetuity. Just last month the Government withdrew support for post-secondary students across Canada, support which would have allowed them to break out of the poverty in which they exist and become university graduates who would contribute more to this country's economy and future than has been possible in the past. That is the kind of Government which is in power, one which has no compunction at all about breaking contracts or even about breaking the law.

Right now one of the Members of this Party is proceeding with a lawsuit against the Government with regard to the pre-build of the pipeline. That is a portion of the pipeline which was not authorized by law. The legislation passed in this House instructed the Government to build the whole of the pipeline from Alaska to the United States. By building only part of it, this Government is breaking the law.

• (1250)

The Government is now breaking the law in this particular Bill because we are told—maybe we will have to wait for the answer—that it is going to send out superannuation cheques before the end of the month, even before it is sure that this Bill will be passed, or before any of the other six and five Bills will be passed. This is the kind of Government that we have.

Therefore, we should be looking not only at what the Government is trying to do with this particular Bill, but looking at it as a Government which is breaking down and eroding the credibility of this Parliament. It is doing it so well that all one has to do to find out what the public thinks about the Parliament of Canada is to go out into the streets and ask. People will ask you, "What are you guys doing in that House that you cannot even keep a contract that you made a number of years ago?" Unfortunately, those of us on this side of the House are painted with the same brush because we are part of this Parliament. Whether the Government does that or not, this Parliament—

An Hon. Member: Not this Parliament, the Government.

Mr. Hovdebo: They are the ones painting us with that brush. What do you expect? Members on this side of the House must object to this kind of legislation, and therefore this Party will again be voting against the six and five legislation.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendments before us is to cap the amount of the increase under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act at a level substantially less than the present rate of inflation would require. I think the very fact that this objective has been set out so clearly would be an incentive for every Member in this House to oppose this measure. As we look at it a little further, we realize that those affected are federal Public Service superannuates, including members of the Armed Forces and the RCMP.

We are all aware of the tremendous contribution these individuals have made to Canada and Canadians. Federal public servants have served in a very effective and commendable manner throughout the past years. Members of the Armed Forces have shown their ability and willingness to sacrifice everything in the interests of our country. The RCMP have a record that is not surpassed by any agency in the world. Yet the Government states that this is the way in which we are going to reward them for their contribution toward the welfare of Canada and the benefit of Canadians.

To my mind, this is one of the most reprehensible proposals that has ever been made in this House of Commons. Is this the way to treat those who have given the very best of their lives to serve our interests? I would say it is a jolt to the faith of all those who are affected by it. They believed that in rendering this service to Canadians, and in view of the agreements and understandings which had been entered into, they could trust the Government, that they could trust those in authority to see to it that their remuneration or their superannuation was at least a reasonable amount, and they believed that the commitments made would be honoured. This is a real jolt to their faith in Government, which actually constitutes their employer. It is a jolt to their sense of security because they have no doubt considered, as we all have, the days when our participation in the active labour force will come to a close. They were depending on their pensions and they believed their future was guaranteed. With the introduction of a Bill such as the one before us, their confidence has been shattered, their faith has been severely jeopardized and their confidence in their employer and in their country has suffered a real setback.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), placed on record yesterday an excerpt from a letter signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I just want to read the relevant section here. My colleague quoted this letter as follows:

> In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

I think this states very clearly the attitude that the Prime Minister had when he wrote that letter and made that commitment, but now we find a complete reversal of ethics. It is hard to believe that the Prime Minister, the leader of this nation, would promote or subscribe to a policy that we are facing at the present time where that very principle has been eroded and destroyed by the introduction of this measure.

This is but one of three Bills which have been brought before this House and have occupied a considerable amount of time. The one presently before us deals with public employees, the second one with Family Allowances, and the third with Old Age Security. In presenting these Bills the Government is not claiming—or I do not think they are—that this legislation is going to have a great monetary effect on their financing of Government operations, but it is apparently its idea of equalizing participation in an economic recovery program. Rather than equalize it, it does just the opposite. To some it may have slight consequences, but to those to whom we are making reference today, it could mean a reduction in their income and in their ability to face the future in their retirement years. As far as those in the other parts of the six and five program are concerned, it means they are not able to meet the challenges facing them at this present time.

HEALTH

WARNING AGAINST USE OF ASA IN TREATMENT OF CHILDREN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, ASA, acetylsalicylic acid, is the active ingredient of Aspirin and many other products taken for headaches and colds. A series of American studies have suggested that, for children with flu and chicken pox, the use of ASA can lead to a rare and often fatal brain disease called Reye's Syndrome.

In the United States, in one group of children with Reye's syndrome, 97 per cent had been given ASA when they had flu or chicken pox. In another group of children who had the same illnesses but did not develop Reye's Syndrome, only 61 per cent had taken ASA.

In the United States official public health warnings on stickers for ASA products are already in place which state:

> Do not give this product to children under the age of 18 with chicken pox or flu. It contains an ingredient associated with Reye's Syndrome—an often fatal disease.

In Canada the responsibility for this kind of thing lies with the Department of National Health and Welfare. Although this Department sent a warning about ASA to doctors, there were no public warnings. There has not been a formal and systematic way of informing the vast majority of Canadians. It is unfortunate that, with the flu season already under way, no such warnings are yet in place. It is my hope and expectation that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) will make this a priority issue as soon as possible.

AIR TRANSPORT

ADVANTAGES OF AIR SPACE DEREGULATION

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, I think it is becoming increasingly clear that the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications regarding the deregulation of air space should be made the subject of a study immediately, for the benefit of all Canadians. Unfortunately, the present policy of Transport Canada officials does not encourage Canadians to travel within their own country, since as you know, it is often cheaper to travel from Montreal to London than from Montreal to Vancouver.

Even more incredible, Madam Speaker, is the fact that at the present time, one of my constituents, after a half hour's drive to Dorval, where he has to pay to park his car, and if he travels with Air Canada from Montreal to New York, will have to pay $125, or $277 from Montreal to Miami, and that is one way, while if he goes to Burlington, which is an hour by car, he can park free with People's Express, and he can travel from Burlington to New York for $19 and from Burlington to West Palm Beach for $49.

So once again, Madam Speaker, deregulation has very definite advantages. In the case of our aviation policy, it seems to me that the principle of free competition should prevail. Regulations should be eliminated as much as possible. If there is a demand, there will be people who are prepared to meet that demand, and in that case, Madam Speaker, prices will stop being artificially high, carriers will get the equipment they need and travellers will have a choice of airlines and Canadian industry will benefit—

Madam Speaker: Order!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the postal service of this country is in a mess. The swiftness and reliability of delivery have become a sad joke. Since becoming a Member of Parliament I have received as many phone calls and letters of complaint about postal service as on all other topics combined. There was a time when Canadian mail delivery was the envy of other nations. It was then the Royal Mail and it was given royal attention. Thanks to this Government, we no longer have the Royal Mail. What we have instead is a royal foul-up.

Problems in my riding are typical of what is happening right across the country. Recently, because of the method of rural tendering, more than 800 residents of RR 4, Barrie, were without mail delivery service for more than two weeks. Because of other postal policies, residents of Susan Place and Oakridge Drive in Barrie are still without home delivery.

Canada Post should spend less time trying to define a letter and devote itself to delivering one, on time and intact. In the United States postage is 20 cents and there, as in Great Britain, the service operates at a profit. I would strongly suggest it is about time for the Government and officials at Canada Post to cease spouting platitudes and start doing something for Canadian mail service, which is so richly deserved.

STATUS OF WOMEN

TREATMENT UNDER TAX SYSTEM

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel): Madam Speaker, according to the Canadian Council on Social Development, 50 per cent of Canadian families would be living below the poverty line if wives were not working outside the home. This clearly indicates what the situation would be in Canadian families if a spouse decided to stay home to raise the children. One of the consequences for women who did stay home is that 75 per cent of Canadian women over 70 are now living at or below the poverty line.

[English]

I cannot over-emphasize the fact that children are dependent on us for their future and we are dependent on them for ours. Yet child rearing is associated with poverty. It is also related to women, and 41.5 per cent of all female-led families live below the poverty line. The incidence of poverty varies according to the size of the family. Until the changing reality of our society is reflected in our tax system, women will continue to be perceived as dependants and families will continue to be penalized.

THE ECONOMY

NECESSITY FOR INDUSTRIAL ECONOMIC STRATEGY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my statement arises out of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is winding up an Asian visit and the fact that the Liberal Party promised, during the election campaign of 1980, to implement an industrial strategy.

I raise this now because the Prime Minister was told the other day in Manila by the Asian Development Bank that we sell very little to Asia because we as a country do not have an industrial strategy. In fact, they said that we do not even bid on public works projects put forward by the Asian Development Bank. The Prime Minister's reaction was to rest content with being an exporter of raw materials to Japan.

Also on the weekend a very distinguished American economist, an adviser to the Democratic Party, told an Ontario Liberal convention that Canada does not have an economic strategy. We do not have any national economic goal or national dream.

Also, on January 5 the Bishops said that we need an industrial strategy, both regional and national in scope. Because of that I call upon the Government to implement a promise it made in 1980, namely, that we need an industrial economic strategy so that we can put Canadians back to work. I want ministers to keep their word and their promise to the Canadian people.

COMMUNICATIONS

PROJECTED PORNOGRAPHIC SHOWS FOR PAY TV—CALL FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, Pay TV is no doubt a permanent part of our future in telecommunications. I was delighted when the CRTC approved several licencees for national and regional Pay TV systems. The competition will result in much more flexibility and creative programming in order to obtain public support.

The proper role for Government, however, is to set the minimum standards for Canadian content and morality. Unfortunately the Government has passed that responsibility to an appointed regulatory agency, the CRTC. It is surely ironic that the CRTC is currently addressing sex stereotyping in the media, yet has failed to set minimum standards for Pay TV as to pornography.

As a private Member I do not believe that it is necessary for any of the Pay TV systems to market pornography in order to obtain viewers from its competitors. Solid Canadian programming of our history, our culture and our role in the world, will result in massive numbers of viewers. Surely we, as a society, have not sunk to the level of having to promote human degradation, especially that of women, as the means of financing Pay TV.

In my opinion the Government should immediately refer the whole subject matter to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture so that Canadians can give their views before pornography is made available in all of our homes where our children's minds may well be distorted as to values and morality.

TRADE

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO SOUTHEAST ASIA

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made an important trip to Southeast Asia to open up new trade opportunities and business contacts with those countries. I would like to suggest to the Prime Minister and his officials that they make arrangements to report fully on all trade opportunities made known to them during this trip so that Canadian businesses can take full advantage of them, and that appropriate follow-up meetings with Canadian industry and other business organizations be arranged as quickly as possible.

S.O. 21

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO ADOPTIVE PARENTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Act provides for payments to a woman giving birth to a child, and properly so. But the same Act denies any payment to a woman who adopts a child. Most, if not all, provincial Governments require a woman who adopts a baby to remain in her home with the child for a period of six months. In other words, a working woman must leave her job for six months in order to adopt a child. Under the Act, UIC officials reject such claims, which otherwise qualify, on the basis that the mother is not available for work, or is not looking for a job.

A woman who adopts a child is a mother in every respect except that of giving birth to the child. She gives the child a name; she gives the child love and kindness; she gives the child a hope for the future. The task force report on unemployment in the 1980s recommended that the special conditions surrounding the payment of maternity benefits be removed, and that those benefits be extended to adoptive parents. The Human Rights Commission also supports such action. Canada owes much to the hundreds of parents who are adopting babies and children, rearing them in homes filled with love and understanding, and making them happy and useful citizens. The present law is discriminatory and unfair and should be changed now, giving adoptive parents the same rights accorded to natural parents.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PROGRAMS TO IMPROVE WORKING CONDITIONS

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to note that in his annual report, the Minister of Labour announced an additional thirteen quality of work-life programs. Since the riding of Montreal-Mercier is very industrialized, Madam Speaker, I would like to point out the availability of these programs to all labour-management organizations, and I would urge them to make use of these programs during the coming year. I believe that the quality of work-life programs encourage communication, help increase productivity and improve labour-management co-operation, and I hope that 1983 will be known as a year of co-operation among all economic partners in this country.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CUT IN FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise to question the morality, indeed the legality, of the Government's assault on family allowance benefits. Families across Canada are receiving their allowances this week and finding their cheques have been tampered with. We have an Act in place, the Family Allowances Act, passed in 1973. We have regulations, written by this Government. We have provisions to index family allowance payments to the consumer price index. That, Madam Speaker, is the law, and this Government must uphold the law as all other citizens uphold the law.

Bill C-132, the Act to cut back family allowance cheques, is still only a gleam in the Minister's eye and is not yet law. People are entitled to family allowance benefits and they are being ripped off by the Government. Until legislation is given Royal Assent—and I want to make it clear that we intend to do what we can to make sure that that never happens—the Government has a moral and legal obligation to respect the laws of Canada.

It is not new to witness the Prime Minister and his Cabinet disregarding Parliament. In fact the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is currently before the courts challenging the legality of this Government's action with regard to a pipeline. It is not new to see the Government break legal contracts, supported by the Conservatives, as was the case in Bill C-124.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: I knew you could not make it.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ASSIGNMENT OF QUOTA TO NORTHERN ALBERTA WHEAT PRODUCERS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, northern Alberta wheat producers are being denied delivery opportunities due to the fact that, as of this date, the Canadian Wheat Board has not assigned a "C" quota to the region. This means that the area north of Red Deer remains on a six bushel per acre quota while the balance of the Canadian Wheat Board designated area has a nine bushel per acre quota.

I therefore call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to prevail upon the Canadian Wheat Board to correct this inequitable situation so that the producers in northern Alberta will be treated equally with producers in the rest of the Wheat Board designated area.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER PLAN TO END PRODUCTION AT WINDSOR PLANT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, dealing with a situation in the city of Windsor where approximately one in every five of the labour force are already out of work.

Would the Minister indicate whether he has consented, as Chrysler announced yesterday, to Chrysler's plan to discontinue production at its Windsor spring plant at the end of the 1983 model year?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the answer to that question is emphatically no. We have not consented to the closing of any operations by Chrysler anywhere in Canada.

DUTY REMISSION ACCORDED TO CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that in the existing agreement signed in the early part of 1981 with Chrysler, which was referred to in a press release from the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, it was stated that the undertaking not to close any Chrysler facilities in Canada without the prior approval of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had been retained, would the Minister indicate whether he in fact has a request from Chrysler to close down this plant, and are there any circumstances where he may agree to such a closure? Finally, has he considered that Chrysler has a duty remission in its favour of approximately $250 million between the years 1981 and 1982, and does he intend to use that as another lever to have Chrysler live up to its contract?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I received the executives of Chrysler Corporation, I think it was on the afternoon of December 23. I had confirmed to me in a letter in the early part of January from Chrysler officials that they did indeed want to close the spring plant as well as change several other items in the two agreements previously negotiated.

I have indicated to Chrysler that unless they provide some alternatives to the proposals they put forward, we are not prepared at this time to make any changes. The Government of Canada has fully lived up to its obligation under those agreements, and the Chrysler Corporation at this point in time has violated the agreement on a couple of occasions. I think the Hon. Member will agree with me it would not serve the purpose of those people employed in Chrysler's operations to carry on negotiations in public, but I will admit to the Hon. Member that we are very conscious of the points he raised.

QUERY ON SIGNING OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, bearing in mind that another 300 people may be thrown out of work if the spring plant is actually closed, and there is a serious suggestion that Chrysler may intend to phase out much of its production in Canada in favour of its home country, would the Minister indicate whether in fact the agreement, referred to in a press release of the then Minister in August of last year, was signed by Chrysler, or is the report that Chrysler did not sign the agreement, as represented by the then Minister, in fact true?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, not having that particular press release the Hon. Member has referred to I cannot clarify the question he asked. The Chrysler Corporation did sign an agreement in the early part of 1981. Then when they asked for some specific changes in the agreement, the major one being the diesel engine plant in exchange for the K-Car, there was a memorandum of understanding signed, but no new detailed agreement, to my understanding, Madam Speaker.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CLOSING OF PLANT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can the Minister tell us whether it is the Government's view that Chrysler is free to close the spring plant without the Government's approval?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Chrysler Corporation would violate the agreement, and leave the Government open to change its obligations under the agreement, if it makes a decision to close the spring plant. We have said that we have an agreement with the Chrysler Corporation. We are intending to hold them to that agreement. We have fulfilled our obligations under the agreement and we expect that Chrysler will honour their undertakings under the agreement as well.

• (1420)

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, that is an incredible response. Chrysler announced today that it is closing the spring plant. That is in violation of the agreement. What is the Government going to do?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, Chrysler has announced that it is going to close the spring plant but I have not noticed that the spring plant has actually closed yet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: Of course I could expect the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to ask that question. I am not aware that the Government of Canada can stop the Chrysler Corporation from closing any of its operations.

Mr. Nielsen: The ironclad guarantee!

Mr. Lumley: However, I am aware that the Government of Canada is not compelled to fulfil its obligation signed in 1981 if Chrysler does not fulfil its side of the obligation.

RESTRUCTURING OF AGREEMENT WITH CORPORATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, that was precisely my question. What is the Government of Canada going to do now that it has been served notice that Chrysler intends to breach the agreement that was signed with the Government of Canada? What is it going to do?

While I am on my feet let me refer the Minister to the press release issued by his predecessor, the Minister from Windsor, which reads as follows:

The Honourable Herb Gray, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion, announced today that the federal government has agreed to restructure the agreement of February 1981—

That release says that the federal Government had agreed to restructuring that agreement. Did Chrysler agree to the restructuring, or was this an agreement that only Herb Gray signed and that Chrysler did not sign?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the memorandum of understanding that was signed at that time was signed by the Chrysler Corporation and, if I am not mistaken, also by the Province of Ontario, and by my predecessor for the federal Government. It was signed at the request of the Chrysler Corporation in order to make changes in the original 1981 agreement. The major change was that they decided not to go ahead with the K-Car operation and to institute the diesel engine project in its place. The memorandum of understanding was signed by the Chrysler Corporation and the Government of Canada at that time.

The request that Chrysler Corporation made in January of this year was to change the second agreement that was negotiated by my predecessor and by the Chrysler Corporation.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister, is that memorandum of understanding an agreement?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, it is not an agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: —in the same sense as the first one. It is a memorandum of understanding. If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not know the difference between a memorandum of understanding and an agreement, I am sure some of the legal people on his side will be more than happy to explain the difference to him.

The Government of Canada is going to do whatever it can to ensure that the Chrysler Corporation fulfils its obligation to employ fully the 11,000 plus people in Chrysler Canada at the present time.

COMMUNICATIONS

PORNOGRAPHIC PROGRAMMING ADVERTISED BY FIRST CHOICE PAY TV

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Minister is presumably aware of the public concern about the licence to First Choice and its plans for pornographic programming. I presume the Minister is aware of the enormous influence of television, especially on children. My question is about his remarks to the effect that, if First Choice had made its intentions clear about this problem, it would never have received its licence in the first place.

An Hon. Member: Take it away.

Ms. McDonald: Precisely; take it away is what I want to get at.

Will the Minister agree that the pornographic programming advertised by First Choice is contrary to the Broadcasting Act, both in the general provisions to strengthen, enrich and safeguard the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada, and the provision against obscene, indecent and profane language and pictorial representation? If the Minister is in agreement, will he undertake to communicate this view to the CRTC and to support a move to institute proceedings to revoke the licence of First Choice if it is not willing to change its plans for pornographic programming?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I indicated my position quite clearly yesterday in response to the question put to me by the Hon. Member for Trinity. It is quite clear that the licence issued to First Choice, and the licences issued to other Pay TV operators in Canada, contain conditions which are appended to them. It is quite clear also that if any one of these channels had applied for a pornographic Pay TV licence, that licence would have been refused by the CRTC, and certainly would have been refused on appeal to the Governor in Council.

It is not our intention to launch, with Pay TV, a pornographic film industry in Canada. It is our intention to see to it that Pay TV helps the Canadian program production industry to develop world-class programming.

As far as content is concerned, the Hon. Member knows that Parliament in its wisdom has given authority over content to the CRTC and that the CRTC has the necessary powers to examine the whole question. As I indicated yesterday in answer to the Hon. Member for Trinity, I spoke to the Chairman of the CRTC about this and registered my concern with him.

PROVISIONS OF BROADCASTING ACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, it is of course true that the Commission has the power to proceed, but the Commission listens to the Minister of Communications very carefully. I suggest that it is his duty to uphold the law of Canada. The Broadcasting Act is very specific. The Minister did not answer my question.

Let me quote from the advertisement for First Choice. An article in The Globe and Mail of January 14 reports as follows:

> First Choice has been advertising itself as "The Playboy Channel" and promises to show "the most adult of adult entertainment . . . TV like you've never seen before. Sizzling entertainment . . .And that's the bare truth."

Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister whether, in his view, this is consistent with the Broadcasting Act. May I also remind him that it is not necessary to repeat the Broadcasting Act in the condition of licence. It is assumed that the station, network or whatever, will abide by the Broadcasting Act.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, once again the Hon. Member has asked me to say whether I am in favour of the development of a pornographic industry in Canada. I have already indicated quite clearly that pornography has no place on Pay TV or on regular broadcasting stations in Canada. The laws of the land are already in place. Parliament in its wisdom has given the courts jurisdiction over the definition of obscenity and pornography and has not given that discretion to the Minister of Communications. Parliament has also given the necessary powers to the CRTC to monitor the situation and to take corrective action.

If the Hon. Member is asking me whether I have confidence in the Chairman of the CRTC and in the CRTC itself, the answer is yes.

REQUEST THAT BROADCASTING ACT BE AMENDED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I should like to quote from Chapter 381 of the Consolidated Regulations of Canada regarding the Broadcasting Act. Section 6(1) provides as follows:

> No station or network operator shall broadcast
>
> (A) anything contrary to law;
> (B) any abusive comment or abusive pictorial representation on any race, religion or creed;

I would ask the Minister to explain why it is wrong to abuse members of a race, religion or creed, but it is perfectly all right to abuse women? Will the Minister undertake to introduce an amendment to the Broadcasting Act to include sex as one of the prohibited grounds of broadcasting?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to read the law and read the regulations, perhaps I could quote back to her Section 6 of the CRTC's Television Broadcasting Regulations which prohibits any station or network operator from broadcasting any obscene, indecent or profane language or pictorial representation.

Quite obviously, I am on the same wave length as the Hon. Member as far as the principles of the question are concerned. I have stated my position quite clearly. We do not see Pay TV developing in this country as pornographic delivery mechanisms. We are definitely against that.

In its conditions of licence and in the over-all powers given to it under the Broadcasting Act, the CRTC has all the powers necessary to enforce this.

What the Hon. Member is asking me to do is to intervene personally. Obviously the second question then is whether it is the job of the Government to intervene in such cases, or if Parliament was correct in saying that questions of content should be debated and handled in front of an independent organization such as the CRTC, all powers in this matter having been given to the CRTC by Parliament.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question on precisely this point. The Minister was not so careful to hide behind the independence of the CRTC when he chose to change the content requirements of Pay TV on appeal. Is he now saying that is wrong and that, "I cannot do anything about pornography on Pay TV?" Will he tell the House precisely what he has asked Dr. Meisel and the CRTC to do, if he has in fact asked that anything specific be done? If that is in writing, will he table it in the House?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is confusing the issues. When the Government modified the subsequent decision of the CRTC concerning conditions of licence, it was acting under powers conferred on it by Parliament. In this case the question of control over content is clearly given to the CRTC by the Government.

• (1430)

As Minister of Communications I have indicated my very real disappointment at the way various Pay TV companies in Canada, particularly First Choice have gone about marketing their product and at the type of product they want to offer Canadians. I am telling First Choice now that if indeed they intend to continue in this type of programming, and if they intend to present pornographic programming to the Canadian public, then the Criminal Code applies and the CRTC has the power to take whatever action it believes is necessary.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF TAX ON PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns another troubled industry, namely, the petrochemical industry, which is plagued by the effects of the National Energy Program and the prospect of further job losses in that important sector. Considering the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated, "the Government is prepared to adjust" the natural gas and gas liquids "tax if the development of the international oil price should require it", may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether that assessment has been made and when we can expect an adjustment to the natural gas and gas liquids tax which would have the effect of maintaining the 65 per cent price relationship with the price of crude oil at the Toronto gate?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that the Minister of Energy has made that specific statement, but the petrochemical industry is under discussion right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: Might I advise the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the Minister of Energy made that statement in a letter dated December 14 which was directed to me.

TASK FORCE ON PETROCHEMICALS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, considering the fact that discussions are taking place with members of the petrochemical industry and that there are two important sectors, namely, the natural gas based sector and the oil based sector, could the Minister explain to the House why he has refused to meet with provincial government officials in connection with the discussion of the task force on petrochemicals in relationship to the difficulties in which the natural gas based petrochemical industry finds itself? Why has he refused to meet with Alberta Government officials in connection with this very important matter.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member check his facts. As a matter of fact I had a meeting about four weeks ago with my counterpart from Alberta on this very issue. I assured him that no decision would be taken by the Government of Canada until such time as we had further consultations. I would suggest that he call his provincial colleague and verify the facts.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED TRAINING CENTRE COMPLEX AT CANADIAN FORCES BASE GAGETOWN

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask him whether he can confirm today to the House that at long last the Treasury Board has been given approval for appointment of architectural designers for the combat training centre complex at Canadian Forces Base Gagetown? Will the Minister indicate when it is intended that this design stage will be completed and when construction will start, so that we can have this badly-needed facility on line and also the badly-needed jobs in New Brunswick where unemployment is very high right now? I hope the Minister might be able to give some indication that we might get some work done there this winter.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I understand the interest of the Hon. Member in this project which is one of the most important ones in the area of Gagetown, New Brunswick. In regard to this training centre, we have asked Treasury Board to approve the architects to carry out the design and feasibility study. It should be approved any time now. I can assure him that we will give it top priority considering the unemployment down there. I consider the interest of the Hon. Member very important.

APPOINTMENT OF ARCHITECTURAL DESIGNERS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. When this vital and important project was first announced two years ago, and since the approval for appointment of the design architects has been before Treasury Board for approximately four to six months, does the President of the Treasury Board think that he might be able to get his staff to take a look at it and get this approval through so that we can get some badly needed jobs in New Brunswick? Alternatively, will he consider transferring some of his staff to the Post Office where they might be more at home?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to check into the status of the submission. It has not come before any meeting of Treasury Board since I became President of the Treasury Board. I would be very happy to see what could be done to expedite the matter, and I will assure the Hon. Member that I will not send the answer by mail.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

COURT RULING ON USE OF WRITS OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the decision by Provincial Court Judge Paul Belanger of Ottawa that writs of assistance can no longer be used by the RCMP in Ontario, is the Minister considering the forbidding of such writs in the rest of the country?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the writ of assistance has been a valuable operational tool used by the RCMP and approved by all courts until the recent decision to which the Hon. Member referred. We are now seeking advice from the Department of Justice about the possibilities of appeal and, as soon as that decision is made, the matter will be dealt with in court.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT TASK FORCE REPORT BEFORE NEW AGREEMENTS ARE MADE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I remind him that had it not been for the federal Government bail-out of Chrysler Canada Limited, the U.S. corporation would have gone down the tube two years ago. Also I remind him that in the auto parts industry there is a cumulative net deficit of $41 billion, and that last year alone the deficit was $5 billion. In view of this despicable situation and that the Government has already recognized that it has no industrial strategy in the auto industry, because it set up a special task force last fall to look into this whole area, will he promise the House that he will not enter into any agreement whatever or make any deals whatever with any auto industry, especially Chrysler, until the task force reports to him and to Parliament?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, what I can assure the Hon. Member is that we will do whatever we think is in the best long-term interest of the automobile workers in Chrysler plants here in Canada.

Mr. Blackburn: The Minister appears to be admitting that he has been had, that the Government has been had, and that Chrysler Canada can do any damn thing it pleases—it can shut down and go home. This is another example of the branch plant mentality of the Government.

TASK FORCE TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister if he would expand the terms of reference of that special task force to include its right to investigate any and all violations of the automotive agreement, and to include that in its report to him and to Parliament.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I did not quite hear the latter part of the question, whether the Hon. Member was talking about the agreement with Chrysler or the auto agreement with the United States of America. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that with our automobile situation in Canada, with our auto manufacturing plants in better shape than the U.S. situation, now is an appropriate time to renegotiate the auto pact—

Mr. Blackburn: No.

Mr. Lumley: —I think he should go back and think about what he is recommending to the Government of Canada.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION GUARANTEE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I direct my question to the Acting Minister. In a highly publicized report yesterday by two former Governors of Alaska, Walter Hickel and William Egan, it is now proposed that gas from Prudhoe Bay in Alaska be piped across Alaska and then exported to Japan in liquefied form, rather than through the proposed Alaska gas pipeline, which was indefinitely delayed last April. Unemployed Canadians desperately need the some quarter million man-years of real work associated with the Alaska gas pipeline promised by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will the present Minister, through his second in command, confirm the iron-clad guarantees given by his predecessor that the Alaska gas pipeline will be constructed in its entirety?

• (1440)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I will accept this question on behalf of the Senator in the other place who is responsible for the Alaska Gas Project. The Hon. Member is correct when he refers to the report being tabled by two former Governors. There is a second report, I understand, in the course of preparation which was commissioned by Governor Hammond, the former Governor of Alaska, who was very supportive of the Alaska Highway route.

Mr. Nielsen: He is only a Governor.

Mr. Johnston: I understand there is a third report as well that is being prepared by the General Accounting Office in the United States. Other information that I have received is to the effect that there does not seem to be much support in Congress for the report to which the Hon. Member makes reference.

Moreover, the producing companies in question, I understand, have favoured the Alaska Highway route for some time as opposed to the LNG proposal to export gas from Alaska to Japan.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, the amount of support in Congress for these proposals, I would suggest, has yet to be determined. But a report by a gentleman of the stature of the two I mentioned is not to be taken lightly.

ENERGY

POSSIBLE GAS EXPORTS TO JAPAN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I think it is ironic when the Canadian Prime Minister is enjoying his vacation in Japan that trade opportunities with that country have been snatched from under his very nose by the Americans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: Will the Minister guarantee that the proposal to export shut-in Alberta and B.C. gas through B.C. ports to Japan will not now be lost, together with the thousands of jobs involved, to the U.S. because of government inaction and delay?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I will take that question simply because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not here. But it is clearly a second question completely unrelated to the report that was tabled yesterday by the two former Governors, on the project in Alaska.

I suggest that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will indeed respond to the question which the Hon. Member raises, but to the knowledge of all Members on this side of the House he is very dedicated to bringing onstream whatever opportunities for jobs and further development in Alberta that are possible.

Mr. Jarvis: You sound like Lalonde now.

Mr. Johnston: Therefore, the question is simply without foundation, and it is sheer speculation. It is also quite unfair, I might add, to the activities of the Prime Minister who is vigorously selling Canadian exports abroad during his mission.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX

PROPOSAL TO ELIMINATE SPOUSAL DEDUCTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It has to do with the recent irresponsible statements attributed to the Minister responsible for the status of women who proposes the elimination of the married tax exemption for those persons who choose to stay at home, for those persons who, because of circumstances beyond their control, must stay at home and cannot enter the work force, or who have retired from the work force, and for those who are part of the large constituency of the volunteer work force, will the Minister put to rest the unnecessary alarm and fear that have been generated because of these statements, by assuring this House that no such action at this time will be considered by Cabinet?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I thought yesterday I had put to rest any alarm and fear that might have been alleged by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Wilson: You have changed your mind before, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: Speculation surrounding tax changes is always bound to occur before a budget. The Minister of Finance probably will be asked in the House very frequently before a budget whether he is contemplating any particular tax action. If he takes the usual approach he will say, "Wait to see the budget." But to my knowledge there is no suggestion anywhere within the Government to implement specific tax proposals that would have the effect the Hon. Member fears.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I trust that the Hon. Member will co-operate with me in putting to rest the alarm and fear which she alleges exist in the country.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATUS OF MOBILIZATION PLAN

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In March, 1981, the Minister told the Standing Committee that "the mobilization planning task force is expected to report later this year". In January, 1982, the Minister told the Conference of Defence Associations that he expected to "be able to present my recommendations to cabinet later this year." In January, 1983, the Minister did not say whether or not the plan had been completed. Would he now tell the House whether or not the long promised mobilization plan has been completed and, if not, when does he now expect it, if ever?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as I said at the CDA meeting last week, the mobilization plan has been more or less completed by our own Department—

Miss MacDonald: Is it more or is it less?

Mr. Lamontagne: May I state that it was taken into consideration when we presented the strategic overview of the Defence Department to the Cabinet and to the Cabinet committee on external affairs and national defence. This is currently being studied by my Department and by this Committee.

DEPARTMENT'S BUDGET

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Defence. The Minister told the CDA that the Department of National Defence will be receiving an extra $20 million in 1984-1985. Considering that in the last seven months the various Ministers of Finance have taken $200 million from him in June, and $230 million is to be taken away in 1983-1984 and 1984-1985, for a net loss of $410 million, can the Minister explain how the Government has—and I will quote the Minister, "backed up its decision to provide specifically for increased readiness and sustainability"?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Victoria appears to ask questions with a great sense of humour. At the CDA meeting I did, in fact explain why this reallocation had taken place. We were able to do it as a consequence of the inflation rate being reduced due to the six and five wage restraint policy of the Government. That some money from the Defence Department was then reallocated to other Departments for job creation. That also was explained to the CDA, and the 200 people who were there seemed to have understood that, very well. I said that in 1983-1984 the Government, in principle, decided that sustainability was as important as the regular force, that we would take steps in 1984-1985 to see that some funds would be made available, to begin implementation of the specific requirements of sustainability, the Hon. Member should understand that as the other people at the CDA meeting understood it.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INCREASE IN BLUE CROSS PREMIUMS FOR QUEBEC PENSIONERS

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In 1977 an agreement was signed between the CNR and the railway union which cut Blue Cross premiums for Quebec CN pensioners in half by averaging the claims experience of three groups, active union members, management, and pensioners.

On January 1, 1983, 6,000 CN pensioners in the Province of Quebec were informed that their Blue Cross premiums have more than doubled because the Railways have agreed to insure their active employees as a group with another insurance company, while CN management and supervisory personnel dissociated themselves from the pensioners in order to obtain a cheaper rate.

[Translation]

I am therefore asking the Minister of Transport to check what happened to the 1977 agreement signed by CN and the union, in order to find out who is responsible for this new devastating measure which excludes pensioners. Could the Minister also inform the House whether CN could examine, with the Minister, ways and means of resolving the problems of CN pensioners who appear to have been abandoned by both management and the union?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, without wishing to accept the premises of the question, I am quite willing to look into the matter with CN authorities.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SEIZURE OF VEHICLES FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA NATIVES

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the Minister knows, last week a number of charges were laid against native people in the Province of British Columbia in connection with the alleged selling of fish illegally which were caught by the native people. But at the same time, and quite unnecessarily, these people's vehicles were seized. Can the Minister tell the House whether any consideration is being given to releasing those vehicles to the families? In asking this question I am not taking the position that there is any sympathy for the charges if they are proved. But it seems a very great hardship on the families of native people to have these vehicles seized and held.

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, there is no question that it is a very great hardship to the people concerned. If the Hon. Member's comments just now are to be taken as a representation, and I think that they are, I certainly would add my representations to his with respect to the legal officers of the Crown and the RCMP.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for his answer. Do I take it that he will immediately contact his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and convey to him what he has told the House, and perhaps to the Justice officials who are involved?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): They certainly will be made aware of the comments made in the House today.

TRUST COMPANIES

PROTECTION FOR INVESTORS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I want to quote one sentence to him from the 1964 Royal Commission Report on Banking and Finance. It is the Porter Commission. It says, "We have found considerable variety in the quality of supervision of other institutions across the country and think it is essential to act before there is a repetition of the unfortunate experiences of many chartered banks prior to the establishment of good supervision in the 1920s."

My question concerns Seaway and Greymac, the mortgage companies, and all the ordinary people who are investors who have their lifesavings, in some cases, in these mortgage companies. In view of the fact that the Government has basically ignored this Royal Commission for all of these years and has really taken no action, and has now put some of these people in jeopardy by not sufficiently reviewing or controlling these companies, would the Minister be prepared to commit the Government to complete protection for the legitimate investors in those two mortgage companies? In view of the Government's negligence in the past to do anything, will it commit itself to complete protection of these people?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would first remind the Hon. Member that the actions announced by the Government yesterday, whereby it moved to bring the insured deposit in line with inflationary pressures and the economy, were designed to do exactly that. I really do not understand his question. The motivation of that move was to protect the very people whom the Hon. Member has pointed out.

It is encouraging to have the Hon. Member, presumably representing his Party on this issue, take part in the debate and become interested. It is obviously a departure from their practice of dissociating themselves from the very serious work conducted by the Finance Committee in the House which looked at all aspects of the banking system. It is a pity that Members of his Party did not continue and that they walked away from that study and presumably dissociated themselves from any concern with banking institutions.

Mr. Waddell: Let me tell the Minister that one reason why we have a lack of credibility in these studies is that nothing has been done in nine years. This is the exact situation that was predicted in the Commission report.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Let the Minister assume that he was a renter and that he had to pay his rent money to a company of which he did not know the owners, a numbered company, with a Liechtenstein account, comprised of some people about whom some serious questions are being asked. To top it all, it was announced yesterday by his colleague in the House that the landlord is being investigated by the RCMP.

Considering that these are the first real financial companies in trouble in Canada, two of which concern the federal Government, will the Minister be prepared to consider a federal inquiry into this issue?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I was in the House of Commons yesterday. I did not hear the Minister responsible for the RCMP indicate that any particular landlord was being investigated. Second, the other premise on which the Hon. Member posed his question is totally erroneous. He says that the Government has not acted. The Government did react very quickly to the report of the Finance Committee on Banking, dated July 27 of last year. We responded to Members of the House, for example, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre who represents the constituency close to the one referred to by the Hon. Member, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, and the Hon. Member for York-Peel. We responded to them. We moved quickly to increase the amount of protection to ordinary Canadians involved in deposit corporations.

MINES AND MINING

INQUIRY WHETHER GASPÉ MINES WILL CONTINUE TO OPERATE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of State (Mines).

The Minister is aware that Gaspé Mines in Murdochville have further reduced their staff by 380 workers during the last months, owing to the depressed prices for copper on the international market, and that the mine will no longer be able to operate for at least the next two years.

The management of Noranda Mines is prepared to carry out operations on a section under the town, at a cost of $85 million, with the assistance of the provincial and federal Governments.

Could the Minister inform the House whether she has received an official request from the management of Gaspé Mines regarding the continuation of operations and hence the survival of this town in the Gaspé?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Yes, Madam Speaker, we have had discussions with Gaspé Copper. As a matter of fact, they have had numerous discussions with my departmental officials and are looking at proposals that would qualify under Section 38 and the NEED Program.

It is my understanding that their proposal is now being refined. It also requires the approval of the Quebec Government. I can assure the Hon. Member that with co-operation from all parties we will see these people back to work soon.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday, in answer to a question from my colleague from Etobicoke Centre, the Minister stated that there is presently no claim against the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation from any trust company, to the best of his knowledge. Could the Minister advise the House whether or not all claims made against the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation by certificate holders in Astra Trust and Re-Mor Mortgage Corporation have been settled, and whether any claims subsequently launched with the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation as a result of still unsettled lawsuits or appeals presently before the courts would be considered under the higher limits announced yesterday?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member who asked the question incorrectly quoted from my answer in the House yesterday. I did not say that there was no outstanding claim of any trust company. As a matter of fact, claims are from individuals who have deposits with companies. They are not by companies at all. In that vein, my answer was that at the present time there are no current claims, no claims that have not been disposed of by the Corporation, outstanding against the Corporation.

POSITION OF ARGOSY TRUST DEPOSITORS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I just want to know whether or not we will have some claims settled at the $20,000 limit and some settled at the $60,000 limit. As well, I want to know whether claims that may arise as a result of the bankruptcy of Argosy Trust, which is still under investigation, would be adjudicated under the lower or higher limits?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, to answer that question I would have to prejudge the outcome of appeals to which the Hon. Member refers, and of course I would not entertain trying to make that type of decision in the House of Commons.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DEFENCE DEPARTMENT JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister may recall that the Minister of National Defence indicated yesterday, in response to a question, that he would be willing to work out a program to increase the recruitment levels in the Armed Forces in order to alleviate the unemployment levels for those Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24. He said, "The Department of National Defence has put forward different programs and has told the Minister of Employment and Immigration what we could do and how we could do it. We could do something fast and efficiently." Does the Minister have the same feeling and, if so, when will he bring forward the program that has been put to him by his colleague, the Minister of National Defence?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that in fact a number of proposals have been made by different Ministers in their own Departments to alleviate the problems of employment for young people, and not just the Department of Defence. The Secretary of State's Department, the Housing Department, and a number of other Departments, including our own, have put together a number of ideas.

I want to point out that last Friday, when we presented a number of these proposals for the provincial Governments to consider and assess as well, in the spirit of co-operation that we are trying to establish, we established a working group with the provincial Governments to assess how we can combine our efforts in the area of providing youth programs for youth employment. Once we are able to co-ordinate what we can do across the board federally and work it out with the Provinces, we will be able to establish a type of program that will give a significant and serious response to the serious issue of youth employment.

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE BROUGHT FORWARD

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister understands that we all appreciate that the other Ministers who have their particular programs are forwarding their ideas to the Minister. We also appreciate that the Minister works out those programs with the Provinces. Of course, my question had nothing to do with that.

• (1500)

The Minister of National Defence, by his own words, has forwarded a program to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to increase the recruitment levels of the Armed Services in order to alleviate the problem involving 21 per cent of young people in this country between the ages of 15 and 24 who are unemployed, and it is a specific program from that Minister to this Minister. I am asking whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration will accept the proposal from the Minister of National Defence to increase employment levels and, if so, when will he bring that program forward? There are 25,000 applications from people who want to join the Armed Services to get a job and get training. It is a specific program, and you can do it—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thought that I had explained to the Hon. Member the fact that the Government is looking at a number of approaches which can be used to deal with the problem of youth unemployment. The proposal put forward by the Minister of National Defence is one proposal. There are several other proposals also being put forward. I think that what is important is to balance out each of those recommendations with the kind of money which might be available so that we get the maximum use of our resources, and target where the need is most severe. That is a very useful and very constructive solution, but so are others. I think that what we must do is to attempt to provide—

Mr. Nielsen: You have to answer the question.

Mr. Axworthy: —a comprehensive approach and not do it in a piecemeal fashion. That is what we are engaged in at the present time.

Miss MacDonald: Why are you ignoring it?

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—REPLY OF MR. LUMLEY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the response given to a question directed by myself to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley). Your Honour will recall that I asked the Minister a question concerning a certain agreement to which reference was made in a press release of the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Gray, on August 12, 1982. Further to my response, the Minister, in response to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), informed the House that there was no such agreement. There was, in fact, a memorandum of agreement signed or initialled in that period.

My question of privilege arises from the fact that I have in my hand a press release which was issued by the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on August 12, 1982, and repeatedly misleads those who read the release into thinking that an agreement had been signed and existed between the Government of Canada and Chrysler Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) realizes that he might want to have further clarification on matters which he has wanted to discuss with the Minister, and that is quite legitimate, but he has no foundation for a question of privilege. I would urge him to seek such clarification during Question Period on a subsequent day.

Mr. Nielsen: Misleading the House.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my purpose in rising on this point today is, first of all, to give you the needed notice and, second, to—

Madam Speaker: I need not have notice in the House. The Hon. Member may give me a notice in writing and send it to my office, and then we will consider his question of privilege, if he has one.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, in addition to suggesting that I would like to give notice, I am attempting to comply with the requirement set out on November 1, 1962 at page 201 of the Journals of this House, which state that "should a question of privilege be based on published material, the article in question must be submitted and read at the Table". In view of that provision in the Journals, I was simply asking for consent to submit the written material, upon which I hope to base my question of privilege subsequently, to the Table so that it may be read.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have a question of privilege at the present time. He may quote those papers and legitimize his arguments to those documents if he wishes, if and when he has the basis for a question of privilege. If the Hon. Member wants to send me a notice, I can recognize him tomorrow.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, based on what the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) said, I just want to clarify something for him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. If I allow the Minister to clarify something, he will be engaging in debate, I think, as was the Hon. Member for York-Peel, so I must stop it at some point, and I guess this is the point.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It happened that during the Question Period I quoted from the document in question. I wonder if I might have the unanimous consent of the House to table the document from which I quoted.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The Right Hon. Member may not table documents.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Without unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: He may quote from documents. Only a Minister, if he quotes from a document, should table the document.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, you would know that the House can do anything with unanimous consent, and so can any Member. What I had sought was the unanimous consent of the House of Commons to table the document, the news release issued by the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, from which I have quoted. I would seek that unanimous consent now from the House of Commons.

Mr. Lumley: A point of order.

Madam Speaker: Perhaps the Minister would allow me to deal first with the particular question. I read Citation 311 from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> Under no circumstances may a Member merely table a speech for printing in Hansard. With minor exceptions, what appears in the record of debates has actually been spoken in the House. On rare occasions a Member may receive the consent of the House to have printed as part of his speech long lists, statistics or similar material. Such consent should rarely be asked for and is rarely granted.

That is why I did not ask the House to give unanimous consent. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is right; one can do anything with unanimous consent. However, this particular situation is clearly not customary in the House and that is why I did not ask for unanimous consent. However, we can solve the matter very easily. I will ask, does the request of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition meet with unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lumley: Madam Speaker, the document to which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers is press release which is already—

Madam Speaker: Order. Hon. Members are obviously debating.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MAZANKOWSKI—REPLY OF MR. LUMLEY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Now that I have set the record straight in connection with the response of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) to my last question, I wonder if he would be prepared to make a modification to the answer that he gave me to the last question which I presented to him in the House.

Madam Speaker: Order. I cannot allow that. The Hon. Member for Vegreville will have to ask for supplementary information at another time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BLACKBURN—REPLY OF MR. LUMLEY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which is also related to a question I put in Question Period today to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley). In the question, I referred to a task force committee—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I did not quite hear the Hon. Member. Was he rising on a point of order or on a question of privilege?

Mr. Blackburn: A question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: All right.

Mr. Blackburn: I directed a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with reference to a task force to look into violations of the auto pact. The Minister, I think deliberately, twisted my words around to make it look as though I were asking him to review the auto pact with the United States. That was not the question. I want the Minister to clarify that.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is continuing debate under the guise of a question of privilege and I cannot allow that.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,225, 3,331, 3,487 and 3,958.

2. Did the report recommend any changes in the Public Service Employment Act and, if so, was any action taken on the recommendations?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): 1. Two reports were prepared in the last five years to examine staffing appointments and training in the Public Service: Report from the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 3,487—Mr. Murphy:

1. Did the actuarial reports on the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) prior to December 31, 1977 examine the PSSA using economic assumptions that reflected a zero inflation scenario?

2. Did the actuarial report on the PSSA as at December 31, 1977 examine the PSSA using economic assumptions that reflected a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario and, if so, what windfall gains were realized by the PSSA with respect to the (a) amount required to finance PSSA benefits earned to December 31, 1977 (b) employer contribution rate required to finance all PSSA benefits in respect of current service after December 31, 1977 solely because the 1977 PSSA valuation was carried out in a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario?

3. To what extent would the windfall gains realized by the PSSA through the move to a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario in the 1977 PSSA actuarial report have been reduced if the calculation of PSSA benefits after December 31, 1977 were made on the basis of a PSSA contributor's best consecutive (a) five (b) four (c) three (d) two (e) single year annual salary?

4. What windfall gains would have been realized by the PSSA with respect to the amount required to finance PSSA benefits earned to December 31, 1977 and the employer contribution rate required to finance PSSA benefits on account of current service after December 31, 1977 if the 1977 PSSA actuarial report had moved to economic assumptions reflecting annual inflation scenarios of 6 per cent and 9 per cent respectively and if the calculations of PSSA benefits after December 31, 1977 were made on the basis of a PSSA contributor's best consecutive (a) six (b) five (c) four (d) three (e) two (f) single year annual salary?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): The following replies are based on information provided by the Department of Insurance.

1. Yes.

2. The actuarial report on the PSSA as at December 31, 1977 used economic assumptions of 6.5 per cent annual interest and 5.5 per cent annual salary increases. While no explicit assumption was made with regard to inflation, an implicit assumption of 3 per cent annual inflation was included in the two economic assumptions used.

Previous reports were based on assumptions of 4 per cent interest rates, zero per cent for salary increases and no inflation assumption. In the most recent report, the real interest rate could be said to have changed from 4 per cent to 3.5 per cent and salary increases related to productivity were assumed to be 2.5 per cent.

The effects of using an implicit inflation assumption of 3 per cent, and therefore raising the interest and salary increase rate assumptions from 3.5 per cent and 2.5 per cent to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent, respectively, were as follows: (a) with respect to benefits earned to December 31, 1977, a decrease in liabilities of $3,648 million; (b) with respect to the employer current service cost for service after December 31, 1977, a decrease of 5.1 per cent of contributory payroll from 11.6 per cent to 6.5 per cent.

3. The effect on the amounts shown in question 2 of lowering the number of years over which public service salaries are averaged for benefit calculation purposes would be as follows:

	Salary Averaging Period
	(a) 5 years	(b) 4 years	(c) 3 years (000,000'S)	(d) 2 years	(e) 1 year
Reduction of $3,648 million decrease in liabilities shown in question 2	145	292	441	579	719
Reduction of current service cost difference of 5.1 per cent of payroll shown in question 2, as a per cent of payroll	.3	.5	.8	1.1	1.3

4. The effect of using implicit annual inflation assumptions of 6 per cent and 9 per cent instead of zero per cent, along with reduced salary averaging periods, would have been as follows:

A—6 per cent inflation

	Salary Averaging Period
	6 years	5 years	4 years (000,000'S)	3 years	2 years	1 year
Decrease in liabilities in respect of service prior to December 31, 1977	5,873	5,659	5,432	5,194	4,966	4,725
Decrease in current service cost for service after December 31, 1977, as a per cent of contributory payroll	8.1	7.7	7.3	6.9	6.5	6.1

B—9 per cent inflation

	Salary Averaging Period
	6 years	5 years	4 years (000,000'S)	3 years	2 years	1 year
Decrease in liabilities in respect of service prior to December 31, 1977	7,327	7,113	6,885	6,639	6,400	6,142
Decrease in current service cost for service after December 31, 1977 as a per cent of contributory payroll	10.1	9.7	9.3	8.8	8.4	8.0

Note: While the inclusion of an inflation rate factor in the economic assumptions used to value pension benefits payable under the Public Service Superannuation Act can decrease the liabilities and the estimated current service cost of those benefits, this does not mean that a surplus or savings are created for the Public Service Pension Plan as a whole. For example, the 1977 actuarial report on the Public Service Superannuation Account indicated that as of December 31, 1977, the net position of the Public Service Pension Plan, including indexing benefits, was a deficit of $3.9 billion.

Question No. 3,958—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Did the actuarial reports on the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) prior to December 31, 1977 examine the PSSA using economic assumptions that reflected a zero inflation scenario?

2. Did the actuarial report on the PSSA as at December 31, 1977 examine the PSSA using economic assumptions that reflected a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario and, if so, were the gains realized by the PSSA with respect to (a) the amount required to finance PSSA benefits earned to December 31, 1977 (b) the employer contribution rate required to finance all PSSA benefits in respect of current service after December 31, 1977 solely because the 1977 PSSA valuation was carried out in a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario and, if so, what were the amounts of these gains?

3. To what extent would the gains realized by the PSSA through the move to a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario in the 1977 PSSA actuarial report have been reduced if the calculation of PSSA benefits after December 31, 1977 were made on the basis of a PSSA contributor's (a) best consecutive (i) five (ii) four (iii) three (iv) two year average annual salary (b) best single year annual salary?

4. What gains would have been realized by the PSSA with respect to the amount required to finance PSSA benefits earned to December 31, 1977 and the employer contribution rate required to finance PSSA benefits on account of current service after December 31, 1977 if the 1977 PSSA actuarial report had moved to economic assumptions reflecting annual inflation scenarios of 6 per cent and 9 per cent respectively and if the calculations of PSSA benefits after December 31, 1977 were made on the basis of a PSSA contributor's (a) best consecutive (i) six (ii) five (iii) four (iv) three (v) two year average annual salary (b) best single year annual salary?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): See reply to question No. 3,487 answered this day.

[Translation]

Mr. Peterson: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, the answers to questions given today by the Parliamentary Secretary to the two Ministers of State I think have either become garbled in the translation or else the Parliamentary Secretary has made an error. I believe the numbers he has just referred to, at least two of them in any event, are not the same numbers shown in the supplementary Order Paper published by the House under yesterday's date.

Mr. Nielsen: At least Smith knew his numbers.

Mr. Peterson: I would be pleased to repeat those numbers, or else I can take this up outside the House, or privately, with the Hon. Member in order to rectify any problems that may have arisen.

Mr. Nielsen: Do it here.

Mr. Clark: Table it.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I know it is simply routine to ask that the rest of the questions remain on the Order Paper, but I am rising on a very valid point. We believe that the numbered questions referred to today by the Parliamentary Secretary have not been answered. Therefore, if the House agrees to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member, presumably we are agreeing that today's numbered questions have been answered by him. If that is the intent of the motion, I for one disagree and object; and if we are going to get into a debate about it, so be it.

May I seek your ruling, Madam Speaker, on what I believe is perhaps an error on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary?

Madam Speaker: The Chair is certainly not in a position to determine whether it is an error or not. The Parliamentary Secretary wants to deal with that and I recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. Peterson: It is entirely possible that there could have been an error but perhaps it would clarify the situation were I to read again the numbers of the questions to which I have placed answers before the House today. They are Nos. 1,225, 3,331, 3,487 and 3,958. Should there be any irregularity, I believe it could be rectified through merely standing the tabling of those answers. I can assure Hon. Members that this Government will undertake, as expeditiously as it has in the past, to respond to all other questions.

Madam Speaker: The Clerk of the House indicates to me that these answers are tabled and the questions have been answered.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There still seems to be an irregularity. I am looking at the Order Paper, and question 3,958, which I believe is the number the Parliamentary Secretary gave, is in my name; and it is answered in that way on page 126.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I have here a copy of the answer to the question. I certainly do not want any Member not to have his question answered. That is not our intention. If there has been an irregularity I undertake to ensure that it is rectified so that Hon. Members may have their responses. I look forward to co-operating with them in order to ensure that that result comes about.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is fine. Good enough.

Madam Speaker: I am sure that satisfies all Hon. Members.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In answering the questions the Parliamentary Secretary answered question No. 3,487, which is a question I have had on the books for something like 13 months now. It is a question relating to the Bill we are debating again today, and I find it ironic that it took so long for the Government to get this information. I find it extremely ironic that we are getting this information after we have had the debate on second reading and after we have finished committee study of that particular measure, Bill C-133.

I would hope that in future when we seek information from the Government it will not take 13 months, and if the Government is going to introduce specific legislation on matters about which we have asked questions, that that information will be forthcoming before the debate is almost over.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, we of course are pleased to take under advisement any constructive suggestions coming from the Members on the opposite side of this House, in order that there might be the greatest disclosure, the greatest number of answers to these questions. I think the Hon. Member as well as all Members here will recognize, that we have answered thousands of questions during this session, some of them more complex than others. The Hon. Member can even take heart from the fact that perhaps his question has been partly responsible for some of the legislation we are bringing forward.

We can learn, Madam Speaker, from the Opposition as well as from Hon. Members on this side of the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and the motion of Mr. Gray (p. 21886) and the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21889).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the amendment before Bill C-133 is discussed this afternoon. I wish to make it clear that I wish to oppose the amendment. I think it is very unfair and very unjust.

First of all, it is an amendment to increase the 6 per cent raise in this particular legislation to 6.5 per cent, a measly one half of 1 per cent. That shows the generosity of the Liberal Party of Canada across the way.

An Hon. Member: It is $18 million.

Mr. Nystrom: It may be $18 million, but the Liberal Party across the way gives many more millions to big companies and to all kinds of people through very extensive tax write-offs.

As a matter of fact, I could not help but note in the statement made by the Bishops of Canada on January 5 that the top 20 per cent of the Canadian people make 42 per cent of Canada's national income and the bottom 20 per cent make 4 per cent of Canada's national income. What the Bishops are saying, and I want to quote them, is that we need more balance and that an equitable program should be developed for reducing and stemming the tide of inflation. This would require shifting the burden for wage controls to the upper income earners and introducing controls on prices and new forms of taxes on investment income such as dividends and interest. I think that is the crux of the whole six and five debate which is before the House.

I do not think anyone argues that we do not need a restraint program; most countries in the world do have restraint programs. But the whole problem is, who is going to pay the price? Who is going to pay the price to bring down inflation in this country? The Government decided it will be the ordinary worker, the pensioner, the kids of this nation. Ordinary people will have to pay the price of inflation in Canada.

● (1520)

For example, a 6 per cent increase for someone with an income of $10,000 will result in an additional $600. However, for someone with an income of $50,000, a 6 per cent increase will result in an additional $3,000. What kind of fairness is that when the poor guy gets an increase of $600 and the wealthy person receives an increase of $3,000 a year? All that does is add to the disparities, the unfairness and inequities in this country for the top 20 per cent who earn 42 per cent of the national income and the bottom 20 per cent who earn 4 per cent of the national income.

I suggest this legislation should provide the converse. Everything we do in this country should be directed toward narrowing the gap between the rich and the poor. I recommend that all Members read the statement by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops issued on January 5. In many places they speak about the moral obligation of politicians, the business community and others in this country to help the poor and the ordinary working people of Canada. They say, and I quote:

> The first principle has to do with the preferential option for the poor, the afflicted, and the oppressed. In the tradition of the Prophets, Jesus dedicated his ministry to bringing "good news to the poor" and "liberty to the oppressed". As Christians, we are called to follow Jesus by identifying with the victims of injustice, by analyzing the dominant attitudes and structures that cause human suffering, and by actively supporting the poor and oppressed in their struggles to transform society.

Bill C-133 does not do what the Bishops of Canada suggest, identifying with the poor and those less done by. Instead, the Bill before this House will make the poor and the ordinary worker pay more. In this case the retired public servant will pay more while the wealthy in this country pay less as they get more and more tax breaks from the Government supported, unfortunately, by the Progressive Conservatives in this House of Commons.

I repeat, this statement should be required reading for all Members of Parliament. In their statement the Bishops make reference to the kind of economic programs we should have in this country. They say it is not moral that we have 1.5 million jobless in this country. I recommend this document to each and every Member.

I hope that the Liberal backbenchers, many of whom I believe are sincere, will be able to persuade their colleagues in Cabinet who are isolated from the real facts not to fight inflation on the backs of the ordinary people, the poor, the oppressed and the unemployed, but rather that we fight inflation by restricting the incomes of the very wealthy or clamping down on excessive prices and profits and the many tax loopholes that there are for the wealthy and the coupon clippers of this country. We should not fight inflation on the backs of the poor and the pensioners in Canada. The right way is to deal with those who can afford it. That is not only the best way economically but the moral way to get out of this crisis.

If the Bill before us stated that the incomes of the lowest paid Canadians would be increased by the cost of living plus 3, 4, 15 or 18 per cent, or something like that, that those with incomes of $50,000 and more, such as Members of Parliament, would receive an increase of 2 or 3 per cent or no increase, and that those making higher incomes would have their salaries rolled back, I would agree with an inflation program and a restraint program. However, I do not agree with an inflation program that tightens the belt of the skinniest person so much that he cannot breathe and gives the overweight person extra elastic in his pants so that he can expand indefinitely as he enjoys life and the fat of the land.

That is not fair. It is not the direction we should be taking in our country. Nor is it the vision we should have for Canadians. In fact, in addition to giving working Canadians and other ordinary Canadians more of the national income, they should be given more of a say, more power and more rights in the workplace. Workers in the communities and farmers should own more and more of our economy. However, there are those in this House, particularly in the extreme right in the Progressive Conservative Party, who complain about the present day Petro-Canada, CBC and other public ownership. That is the direction we should be going.

I am sorry, I cannot hear the interjection of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). I suggest that he study the statement of the Bishops. He will find that they refer to alternative economic approaches that we should be taking in this country. I quote from page 6:

> There are, of course, alternative ways of looking at our industrial future and organizing our economy. This does not imply a halt to technological progress but rather a fundamental re-ordering of the basic values and priorities of economic development. An alternative economic vision for example, could place priority on serving the basic needs of all people in this country, on the value of human labour, and an equitable distribution of wealth and power among people and regions. What would it mean to develop an alternative economic model that would place emphasis on—socially-useful forms of production; labour-intensive industries; the use of appropriate forms of technology; self-reliant models of economic development; community ownership and control of industries; new forms of worker management and ownership; and greater use of the renewable energy sources in industrial production?

That is exactly the opposite of what we hear from many Members on both sides of the House. They say we have too little of society oriented toward profit-making, stock markets, private investment, and that there are not enough write-offs for dividends, investments and tax credits. That is the opposite of what the Bishops recommend.

I hope this document of the Bishops will become an historic turn-around in this country toward a society that is more moral, just and equal for each and every Canadian and each and every region. If the Bishops succeed in doing that, they have made a contribution to Canada that is much greater, I am sad to say, than the national Parliament of Canada is making through the words uttered in this House.

I believe I have another minute or two, but I see you getting edgy, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that the allotted time for his speech has expired.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak in opposition to the amendment proposed by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) as well as the provisions of this Bill. When one looks at the amendment advanced by the President of the Treasury Board, one readily sees that it is a measly admission of the fact that this Government's approach is wrong. If it had the courage, it would withdraw not only the amendment but the legislation. If it had any confidence in its six and five program, this kind of legislation would not be necessary.

I am surprised in listening to the debate that the NDP seem to focus the bulk of their words on an attack against the Conservative Party. They are more inclined to attack the Conservative Party, who are not the authors of this piece of legislation, rather than attack the Liberal Government, which is the author of these provisions. More and more Canadians are coming to the realization that the Liberal-NDP socialist alliance that has governed this country over the last 15 years is certainly not working. It is the NDP which kept this Government in office during the period from 1972 to 1974. It is the NDP which triggered this Government's return to power, but now they stand around and indirectly criticize the Liberal Government, but they are more inclined to attack the Progressive Conservative Party which obviously has a greater share of political support in Canada than perhaps the Liberals and NDP combined. So they are basically fighting for their political survival.

• (1530)

I hearken back, Mr. Speaker, to lectures we received from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this fall when he emphasized the necessity for trust and the need for Canadians in all corners of Canada to pull together. I have listened to this debate and there have been some very impassioned pleas and sincere appeals from Members on this side, asking the Government to reconsider this legislation. The Liberals are asking Members to put their country first. They are asking senior citizens and other groups, those unorganized and unable to fend for themselves, to bear the brunt of the six and five program. The Liberals are breaking a promise and commitment, once again employing that double standard which has been the hallmark of this Government. The Government has one law for its friends and one law for other people. It does not ask the Pitfields or the people who have been the recipients of the huge bail-outs to restrain or cut back. Rather, it calls upon that group in society which has the most difficulty fending for itself.

The Government points out that it needs the revenue. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is inaccurate and clearly misleading because this Government has always found money to buy service stations and nationalize oil companies. Look at what the Government has spent through PetroCan. It gobbled up Pacific Petroleum for $1.5 billion; Atlantic Richfield for $342 million; Petrofina for $1.4 billion, and then the latest acquisition of a string of service stations for $600 million. That is $4 billion in the last two years. The Government found money to spend on those kinds of enterprises, but we have to ask ourselves whether that expenditure has really been in the best interests of Canada. I have before me an assessment of PetroCan's competitive potential related to its low-cost capital structure as outlined by Ultramar Canada, and I want to quote from a document they presented. They say:

> Petro-Canada obtained its equity capital 'free' from the Federal Government and pays little interest on its debt.
> It reported retained earnings of $176 million on December 31, 1981 after six years of operations. If Petro-Canada during those years had been obliged to find its capital, and reward its shareholders and lenders on the same terms as a private sector integrated oil company, subject to the rigorous discipline of financial markets and commercial reality, it would have reported a cumulative deficit in the order of $341 million.
> This is a variance of $517 million, financed by taxpayers and consumers in ways few of them understand, and potentially enabling Petro-Canada to wield irresistible power in the market place.

There you have it, Mr. Speaker. The Government has money for that sort of enterprise which is really, according to this assessment, not a very good investment. It has not even paid simple interest in terms of return on investment. We also know this Government is extracting billions and billions of dollars from the western provinces and resource industries. I have a recap of the cumulative total which this Government has extracted in the field of energy related taxes and it works out to about $11 billion over an 18 month period. It is now working out to a rate of about $7 billion or $8 billion a year in taxes extracted from the consumer and taxpayer as the result of this Government's imposition of its energy tax program. So when we talk about money, it is simply a matter of the allocation of funds and priorities, and this Government has chosen, as a priority, to spend money buying service stations rather than providing for protection to retired civil servants and the people of Canada with young families who are finding it very difficult to cope in this very depressed economic state.

When we speak of trust, Mr. Speaker, we simply have to refresh our memory about what this Government said during the last election campaign and the 1974 election campaign. We all know the issue was wage and price controls. We know the Government, particularly the Prime Minister, was very critical of a policy outlined by our Party in support of a freeze and a regime of wage and price controls. He promised the Canadian people that would never occur. Well, we know what happened, that is history. We also know that in the 1980 campaign there were some rather irresponsible promises made by this Prime Minister and his Government, amongst which was this, and I quote from The Toronto Star of January 26, 1980:

> Trudeau: "We will enhance the security of the individual through measures such as the increase in the guaranteed income supplement which helps one of the groups in our society—the elderly poor—that needs help most.

I could go on and quote the promises regarding cheap energy, or talk about the security of individuals and what the Government was going to do with respect to the problems of unemployment. Just a short quotation would certainly be most revealing at this particular time. At the University of Saskatchewan on January 16, 1980, Mr. Trudeau stated this:

> On jobs, we will not increase unemployment by 100,000 jobs this year as the Tories promised to do in their budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I would draw to the Hon. Member's attention, concerning the use of proper names of Members in the House, that he should not do indirectly what is not allowed directly, and that he should refer to Hon. Members by the name of their portfolios or their ridings.

Mr. Mazankowski: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I was under the impression that when one was quoting from an extract, one would have to quote accurately, using the name

"Mr. Trudeau" as it appears in the article rather then improvising, but I will certainly adhere to your suggestion and just continue with the quotation:

We will instead produce an industrial strategy that expands small business, encourages research and development, and increases Canadian ownership.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation in this country where Canada finds itself in the worst position of any of the countries of the OECD group. We have an auto industry and a forest industry in trouble; we have a mining industry which has practically collapsed, a fishing industry in tatters, and an agricultural industry severely impaired by high energy taxes. We have a Canadian energy industry severely hurt by the National Energy Program, and the latest Oilweek magazine bears that out when it says that the net income of foreign controlled companies in the year 1982 has declined by 11 per cent, while the Canadian controlled companies—which were to have been protected by the NEP—saw their income slashed by 37 per cent. What we need in this country, Mr. Speaker, is a climate of confidence in which we can build and inspire industry and investment and create confidence to allow the combined fortunes of this country—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

• (1540)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on behalf of my constituents in Burnaby on Bill C-133, and in particular on the amendment which is before the House. It is basically an attempt to buy off Liberal backbenchers who had expressed a certain amount of opposition to the Bill in its original form.

The amendment would increase the annual rate of indexation by one half of one percent in 1983 and in 1984. What this means is that those Liberal backbenchers who have changed their minds and have now agreed to support the measure—which is an invidious attack on the standard of living of thousands of elderly people in Canada—have been bought for a price of approximately ten cents per day. That is the amount of the increase the amendment would bring to the average pension of the people affected by the Bill.

The Bill constitutes a direct attack on the standard of living of thousands of my constituents in Burnaby—retired members of the Public Service, retired members of the Armed Services and retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Government has broken faith with close to 200,000 retired federal employees. The breakdown for 1980-81 showed some 120,000 retired members of the Public Service, 32,000 retired members of the Canadian Armed Force, 2,200 retired members of the RCMP and other retirees, bringing the total to about 160,000 people. This figure will be increased over the next two years to about 200,000 people.

We are talking about individual retired federal employees who, over the course of their employment, contributed 1 per cent of their salary to a special supplementary retirement benefits fund for the purpose of protecting the purchasing power of their pensions. In addition, they contributed 6.5 per cent of their salary each year for their basic pensions.

I want to emphasize that what the Government is doing is breaking a sanctified contract with public servants who, in good faith, contributed deferred wages, in effect, amounting to 1 per cent of their salary, for the purpose of protecting the purchasing power of their pensions against an increase in the cost of living. The Government has made use of those funds contributed by retired federal employees, for its own purposes and has not invested them to bring the best possible return. Once again, the retired federal employees are contributing in that way to the good of the country, only to have the Government stab them in the back through the means of Bill C-133.

We are not talking about wealthy individuals, Mr. Speaker. The average pensioner affected by the Bill has a pension of $6,900 per year. Many of them are survivors and 83 per cent of survivors receive a pension of less than $5,500 per year. Most of the survivors are elderly women struggling to get along on incomes well below the poverty line.

The effect of this iniquitous Bill is to rob retired federal employees of over $100 million over a two-year period. For the average pensioner that means a loss in 1983 of some $345 or, for the two years, some $1,200. At the same time, the Government is eroding the base of these pensions for future years. This is a Government that talks about equity, that asks pensioners to contribute on a fair and equitable basis to the fight against inflation. It asks pensioners, in effect, to take a cut in their real standard of living.

What equity exists in a Government which, at the same time as it slashes the standard of living of federal retired employees, cuts the marginal tax rate of the highest income earners in the country? What equity exists in a Government which, at the same time as it cuts the standard of living of elderly retired public employees, allows some 4,850 Canadians who earned more than $50,000 in 1980 to pay not a penny in income tax? This fact is revealed in the most recent taxation statistics for this country. In that same year, 179 taxpayers who earned over $200,000 paid not one penny in income tax as well.

The Government should hang its head in shame for asking retired federal employees to take a cut in their real standard of living at the same time as it allows the wealthiest in our society to escape paying any income tax whatsoever. At the same time, it has introduced legislation which would cut by 10 per cent the marginal tax rate of the wealthiest people in the country, those most able to shoulder the burden of the fight against inflation. The Government certainly does not in any way display the principles of equity and justice which should be displayed in the circumstances.

Bill C-133, Bill C-131 which deals with old age pensions, and Bill C-132 which deals with Family Allowances flow directly from the six and five legislation which the Progressive Conservative Party overwhelmingly supported in June 1982. In the documents which accompanied that legislation it was explicitly stated that at the heart of the six and five proposals was a cut in the standard of living, not just of federal public servants but of retired federal employees, including retired members of the RCMP, the Canadian Forces and others.

The Conservative Party was fully aware of the consequences of six and five, yet it voted with the Liberals 16 times, in recorded votes, to support the legislation which is resulting in a cut in the standard of living of over 200,000 elderly people in the country. What hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): As my colleague says, shame on them for supporting the framework of this legislation and now hypocritically saying, "Even though we knew where the legislation was leading, even though we knew six and five was going to be applied to the elderly and the weak in our society—"when it comes to the acid test, they back off.

I could not put this matter any better than it has been put by many of my constituents in correspondence with me. I should like to quote from a letter sent by a Mrs. McIntosh of Wildwood Avenue, Burnaby, which is one of many I have received. She writes:

> I am writing this letter to protest the proposed government legislation to limit the indexing of civil service pensions to 6 per cent. I can understand the need for restraint in these trying times, but it should not be at the expense of something that we have already paid for. During our working years, civil servants were told that in return for a percentage of their wages, they would receive a pension fully indexed to the cost of living increase for that year. If a private individual tried a stunt like that they would probably land in jail for fraud.

How true that is, Mr. Speaker.

In 1977, in response to correspondence on the question of the indexing of Public Service pensions, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had this to say:

> Pensioners are out of the work force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

I note in passing that they are the victims of the economic policies for which the Liberal Government is responsible. The Liberals have been in power for almost all of the last 15 or 20 years in this country, with a brief interregnum.

● (1550)

I know my time is coming to an end. I would like to close by emphasizing the fact that Bill C-133 and the proposed amendment to buy a few votes on the Liberal side constitute nothing less than an assault on the standards of living of some of the people in the country who are the least able to afford the burden. I have heard from many of my constituents. I have heard from Mr. Glen Scott, President of the South Burnaby branch of the Royal Canadian Legion, and from hundreds of others who insist that the Government should respect the commitments it made to them and to the people of the country and withdraw this odious piece of legislation.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some brief comments on this infamous Bill and the rather stupid amendment to Bill C-133, to cap the retirement benefits of public servants. Actually it is a Bill which gives the Government a licence to steal. Heaven only knows that the people of Canada have lost enough faith already in the Government. To bring in a piece of legislation like this breaks a legal contract without any prior consultation with a group of people who can least fight for themselves in the struggle to keep their heads above water during retirement years.

We in the NDP are outraged because if a trade union broke a legal contract I am quite convinced that the Government members, and certainly the Conservatives, would be up on their feet yelling and screaming all afternoon, day after day. Let us not forget that the Conservatives supported the Government with Bill C-124 which brought in the whole six and five program. We in the NDP were the only Party in Ottawa to oppose it. Now it is easy to understand why one Tory after another is rising to try to heal his or her conscience. They are trying to get across the idea that that is not what they had in mind when they supported Bill C-124, that they did not anticipate that it would be extended to include retired public servants. Nonetheless, they supported the six and five program at that time because they felt that the majority of Canadians were for it. Perhaps that is true, if one wants to be led by the polls like sheep, but one must have the courage to face reality afterwards. Apparently that is not being done in this debate by the Conservative Opposition.

There are a few facts with respect to Bill C-133 that I would like to put on the record. I hope they will clear up some misconceptions and misinterpretations as far as the general public is concerned. To begin with, the Bill really amounts to the theft of $165 million from an account paid into and contributed to by public servants during their working years, based upon a 1 per cent additional payment by them as a hedge against inflation during retirement years; in other words, the indexing of pensions. Public employees pay 7.5 per cent of their salary to support the pension plan. On the other hand, in the private sector employee contributions seldom exceed 5 per cent and are frequently less. This is something which is not generally known by the public, that Public Service employees actually contribute more to their pension plan than do most employees in the private sector—7.5 per cent of their salary to support their pension plan.

I have another series of figures which I should like to put on the record. The benefits paid from the plan to date have been more heavily financed by employees than by their employer. Of $1,360 million paid out between October 1981 and September 1982, employees contributed $735 million compared with the Government's $625 million. Here again this is usually not the case in the private sector. Usually in the private sector it is the employer who pays the larger share and, in some cases as a result of agreement, the employer pays all of the contribution to the pension plan. During their contributing years federal public servants pay more than the private sector at 7.5 per cent, and in contributions back they have actually paid more for the contributions than their employer.

Another fact I should like to put on the record is that currently there is a surplus of $15.5 billion in the Public Service Superannuation Account. The interest which can be earned on this amount is more than sufficient to pay for indexation. The fund itself is in healthy shape. At this time it is not costing taxpayers one cent, yet the Government insists on cutting back the normal increase public servants would receive based on the cost of living. This was why they contributed the extra 1 per cent during their working years—as a hedge against inflation.

Previously the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) committed the Government to full indexation of Public Service pensions as a right earned during working years. I believe this was stated by the Prime Minister back in 1977. His Ministers previously defended the plan and argued that the Government could not break its contract with Public Service pensioners by reducing indexation. We must keep in mind that we are not dealing with only Clerks of the Privy Council or Deputy Ministers who retired on very handsome superannuation benefits because they were making very high incomes during their last five or six years of employment. We are dealing with literally thousands upon thousands of retired RCMP officers, retired military personnel and retired public servants who never got into the high income brackets during their working years. Like all retirees, they have no clout or strength in numbers to fight the Government. I argue very strongly that they were not the cause of inflation.

Ordinary Canadians, whether they be retired public servants or retirees from the private sector, did not have control over the economy. They did not make major decisions at the top which contributed to inflation, yet they are the ones who are expected to fight inflation by taking a reduced retirement pension when, even at the present time, well over half the 100,000 federal Public Service retirees can barely make ends meet, primarily as a result of the high inflation rate.

The Government's Green Paper on pension reform clearly supports the need to protect all pensions against the erosion of inflation. Many observers in the private sector agree with this. I cannot think of anything more humane which a Government can do, at the federal or provincial level, than to guarantee its former employees who are now retired a secure and financially safe retirement. In most cases they have given the best years of their lives to the Government and its Public Service, yet now they are being kicked in the pants because of the Government's stupid financial policies which have brought about runaway inflation.

I should like to close by simply stating that we in the NDP are unalterably opposed to Bill C-133. It is unfair, it is morally reprehensible, and it is a theft of some $165 million from contributions by public servants to their retirement fund as a hedge against inflation. It is an odious Bill. It should be withdrawn, and the amendment to raise the increase from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent and from 5 per cent to 5.5 per cent is nothing short of a sick joke.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could I put a question to the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn)? I believe that is provided for under the rules.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The time allotted to the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) has expired. The question can only be put at this time with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Blais: What about the ten minutes allowed for questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I think there is a misunderstanding either on the part of the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) or on the part of the Chair. Speeches at this time, at report stage, are not followed by the ten-minute question period provided under the provision of the rules. It is my understanding that the Hon. Member, if he receives unanimous consent, can put a question to the Hon. Member for Brant at this time. This is why the Chair asked whether the House wanted to give its unanimous consent to the Hon. Member for York-Peel. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is agreed, provided also that the Hon. Member for Brant accepts the question.

Mr. Blackburn: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will accept a question.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Hon. Member and also to two of his colleagues. I am always curious to hear what socialists have to say with respect to whatever happens to be before the House.

Mrs. Mitchell: Listen and learn.

Mr. Stevens: I noted that the Hon. Member for Brant spoke about runaway inflation. I certainly agree it is a tragedy that this Government has subjected the nation to the inflationary forces we are experiencing in the country. The Hon. Member for Brant is the last socialist speaker from whom we have heard. I believe that most of us have had an opportunity to read the OECD economic outlook of December, 1982, which pointed out that Canada in 1982 alone had a real Gross National Product reduction, a negative growth, of 5 per cent, the worst of any of the 24 nations reviewed in that report. Does the Hon. Member—and presumably he knows the feelings of his colleagues in the socialist Party—have any twinge of conscience now for what they triggered in this country? They allowed the emperor to return to be Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and allowed the nation to be subjected to a lack of real growth and to inflationary pressures. Does it not disturb the Hon. Member and his colleagues to see what they have subjected the nation to?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would seek the guidance of the Chair in determining whether the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has any inclination to follow along the track of the question. He knows full well that the Conservative Party committed suicide in the Thirty-first Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Brant.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to give a facetious answer to a very rambling question. I do not know what the question had to do with Bill C-133 or with what I said. I can only assume that the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) is prepared to support this Bill. I presume that his Party is prepared to support this Bill as a way of fighting inflation. However, I put the question back to the Hon. Member for York-Peel by way of an answer. Does he think that it is morally right that we should fight inflation on the backs of retired Canadians? Let him stand up and answer that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Before I recognize the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), may I deal with the proceedings of the adjournment motion this evening?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave)—Agriculture—Level of beef imports—(b) Balance remaining in quotas; and the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis)—Unemployment Insurance—Plight of persons exhausting benefits—request for aid to municipalities.

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and the motion of Mr. Gray (p. 21886) and the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21889).

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak against this amendment and to second the motion, if you will, of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and to support his remarks made to the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). I remind the Hon. Member for Brant that it was an amendment that brought the fall of the Conservative Government which was trying to do something about inflation at the time of the demise of the Thirty-first Parliament. I would also remind the Hon. Member for Brant that the reason many Members were opposed to Bill C-124 was that Members' salaries were to be reduced by it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to take a look at Members opposite who opposed any cut in their salaries, the great socialist hordes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: This amendment is ludicrous. Just listen to the baying hounds to my left, the cohorts of the people across the way.

This amendment, amounting to a half of one per cent, is an admission by the Government of a disastrous Bill, of an inequitable Bill. It is adding to the confidence crisis in this Government. It is a plague unto the savers of Canada who, by prepayment of their pensions—hundreds of thousands of them in the Armed Forces, the civil service and the RCMP—provided for their future now, only to find their future crimbling like a sand castle by the actions of the highest court in the land, this Parliament that can change its mind. The underlying issue, as everyone is aware, is the credibility and accountability of this Government or, more correctly, the lack of it.

By introducing Bill C-133, the Government is once again going back on its word, just like the 18-cent a gallon tax. By doing so, this Government is proving that honesty and integrity, the things on which the Conservative Party is built, are words that this Government cannot comprehend in either official language.

This Government, having entered into a contract, a sacred contract, now seeks to break that contract. That provision was not in Bill C-124. This Government seeks to break that contract with little or no regard for the serious consequences to befall those with whom it contracted, and with little or no regard for the morality involved. That is the problem in Canada today.

It has been pointed out by many other speakers that for many years public employees paid 7.5 per cent of their salaries to support a pension fund. In that, of course, was a 1 per cent provision for indexation. The Government has chosen to ignore that.

In my firm we have a 5 per cent pension plan. Contributions of 5 per cent come from the employee and a like amount from management. Right now that fund draws 9.5 per cent. Those employees are secure. As their salaries increase, so does the amount in the pension plan. As we refinance those moneys with increased interest payments, people are totally protected. Why then did this Government not put the principles of free enterprise into play? I will tell you why. It is because this Government supports the principles of the people to my left. This Government does not care. What does it do with the money? Is it actuarially sound? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what would happen if that money, that $15.5 billion surplus alone, not to mention all the rest of the money that was invested over those years, had been placed with a private insurance company with a letter of comfort, the backing of the Canadian Government? To have done that would have made sense. Had that money been invested through free enterprise there would be no need for me to stand here today talking about indexing of pensions, because the Government would have had money to burn had the money been in separate funds. But these people will laugh at Mr. Lougheed and his Heritage Fund. His Government places money at the disposal of people, where it belongs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: Even forgoing what I have just said, whether or not the notion of indexing was appropriate is not the issue here. The issue is the fact that public servants, Armed Forces personnel, RCMP personnel, contracted with their Government for the indexing of their pensions. They paid for it. They did that in good faith, but what happened? The Government can change the law at will in order to force its will upon the savers of Canada, many of whom are very low income earners, such as the private in the Army and the Government clerk who have put their years in for the service of Canada.

• (1610)

I would remind the Government that a contract is supposed to have legal status. There are laws in place to protect either party in a contract, and the Government's duty is to enforce those laws, not break them. Yet this Government wishes to enact a new law which will enable it to break a contract while destroying the confidence of the Canadian people. What is next? The Government is demonstrating once again that when a certain law does not suit its purpose it will bring in another law which will, no matter if it is through three budgets or by other means.

Surely, if the Government no longer supports the principle of indexing pensions for its employees, it should have the simple decency to honour its present obligations under the contract and change its rules for future employees. Certainly it is a dishonourable and discreditable act to tell a group of people that they will be assured of something through a contract and then be denied that assurance.

This Government's pension plan has been bogus from the beginning. It is not actuarially sound. Reports are made to give people the impression that they have a separate pension fund when, in reality, this money goes into the general revenue. Let me point out a few examples of what the Government does with this money, even with a $15.5 billion surplus. As was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) a few moments ago, its priorities are mixed up. It purchases oil companies for $4 billion, some of which is double the price of the stock, and the money leaves the country. In this area it has a $341 million deficit.

Let us review some of the loan transactions this Government has made. For example, there is a loan to China for approximately $49 million. The Auditor General's Report stated, "An interest-free loan to China was authorized under the Exports Credit Insurance Act interest-free." The Government is then willing to give a paltry .5 per cent to the people who have devoted their lives to the service of this country. I could cite many other examples of loans which have been made by this Government interest-free. There is an example of a loan which has a 35 year maturity, a five-year grace period and is interest free. It matures at various dates between April 2001 and November 2005 in the amount of $3.82 million. There is another loan for $18 million with a 20 year maturity and a five-year grace at 5 per cent. There is a myriad of these examples. It represents absolutely profligate spending and mismanagement. One only needs to consider countries such as Haiti and Jamaica for further examples.

Canadians realize what this Government is doing. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) was the Member who pointed out the fact of that $15.5 million surplus. He made one of the best speeches last night of any I have heard in the House since I have been here. He pointed out the fallacious actions of this Government.

My hon. colleague, the Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) received a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dated October 12, 1977. I would like to quote it again for the record. The Prime Minister said:

> Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation. They are its victim. We have an obligation to protect them.

We see the Government's obligation through a law which says that its former obligation does not count. The Government cannot be believed. It will break a contract whenever it wishes.

The pension fund is not actuarially sound when it could be so very easily. The Government does not back free enterprise, and this country is going down that slippery slope to socialism every day that we stand in the House. It is into our pockets, into our lives, and we want it out. This cannot be done on the backs of pinchers.

Some Members opposite understand the principles that are involved in this issue. They have publicly indicated their opposition to this Bill. It is about time that they began to think. A few other Members opposite first objected, at least publicly, to their constituents, but now have decided to put politics above people and will undoubtedly vote with the Government on this odious Bill, to quote a phrase from the Hon. Member for Brant.

Having destroyed the Canadian economy, the Government is now crying poor and, in this instance as in others, is planning to take money from the poorer sectors of society. Of course, it is the sector of our society which needs it.

If we are so poor that we cannot afford to help Canadians, so poor that we have to renege on our contracts but can lend billions of dollars to Third World countries, why do we have those billions of dollars to give to those Third World countries and other people? We will never help them unless we put our own house in order and help our Canadian pensioners.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) may answer a question with unanimous consent of the House since his time has expired. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Mitchell: I thank my colleagues. The Hon. Member referred to the fact that this Party voted against Bill C-124 because we wanted to keep our MPs' high pensions. Of course, this is not the case. I would ask the Hon. Member how many Members in his Party have given up their pay increases; as many as our Members have done? I would also ask how many Conservative Members fly first class or have begun to fly economy, as our Members have done to save expenses to the people of Canada?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The last speaker flew first class to Vancouver at Christmas, and I know that because I saw her get on the plane.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, can the Hon. Member show me documented proof that every Member of the NDP is flying economy, and can she show me where they did not vote for an increase in their salaries? I cannot vouch for every Member on this side, but I am not asking the question. I know how I spoke in caucus and I know the feelings of a great many of my colleagues. Therefore, I would say that the onus is on her to show the people of Canada what she really means. Put up or shut up.

Mr. Thacker: Ask her about her Japanese car.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need to answer that question because the facts speak for themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak to this Bill and to the amendment which is the half per cent solution presented by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). It only penalizes civil servant pensioners more than the original six and five proposal.

Of course, I join my Party in strongly opposing Bill C-133 because it breaks a contract agreement with the civil servants. It is a contract to ensure them full indexing on their pensions which they paid into with the intention of being protected from inflation. The Government is doubly penalizing Public Service retirees by arbitrarily imposing this six and five restraint on them. It is destroying confidence in the credibility of the Government itself which already has very little credibility.

Over the years many civil servants have paid into their pensions while planning very carefully for their retirement. Some retire early in order to be protected from having to live on a limited income with high inflation.

Their employer, the Federal Government, agreed to full indexation and paid its share into these pension funds. The Government also made use of those funds to which the public servants had contributed from their salaries. It made use of these funds at a low interest rate for various projects, and it benefited more than fully from the money of its civil servants. We strongly oppose the fact that the Government now refuses to pay back the civil servants. Pensioners are unable to reduce their food intake by 6 per cent. They cannot depend on fuel costs being restrained to 6 per cent or that their rents will be held to an increase of 6 per cent.

Many pensioners in my riding are finding it very difficult to survive on their limited incomes, particularly if they are not living in their own homes. Civil service pensioners have worked hard for the federal Government and they will be doubly penalized by the Government, first, through Bill C-131, if passed, when there will be a cut-back on basic old age pension indexing to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. Then, of course, the Government wants to sock it to them again in this Bill which would impose 6.6 per cent, 6.5 per cent with the amendment, capping the cost of living indexing. Any way one looks at it, this is a terrible breach of confidence. It is really an immoral step that the Government is taking against its own employees, who work very hard for some of the people who are sitting in this House and voting for this Bill.

I would particularly like to concentrate on the plight of civil service pensioners who happen to be women. In the last couple of days we have heard much about gentleman's agreements in this country. I can tell Your Honour that those gentleman's agreements have not been too concerned with the actual prejudice on the part of the Government toward women employees in the Public Service. I would like to give several examples. We know that women clerks who went on strike to get equal pay had an agreement that their salaries would be increased, including a 12.25 per cent increase. However, under Bill C-124, their indexing was reduced to 6 per cent. When their union appealed to the President of the Treasury Board to exempt them under the clause that stated that any group can be exempted by the Governor-in-Council, he refused. This is the lowest paid group of public servants.

Then again, we consider many of the women who are working and struggling to try to improve their position in the Public Service. Of course, these women who are now pensioners worked at very low rates of pay. That is bad enough for those who are younger now and in the Public Service, but the ones who are retirees worked at unbelievably low rates of pay over the years. If we consider the number of women who have a chance to get promotions in the Public Service, one finds a deplorable situation, once again. This is because the Government has no affirmative action program. There is the lack of kind of affirmative action program to which the Government gives lip service. We find, for example, that 63 per cent of women in Public Service earn under $18,000 while only 23 per cent of men earn under that amount. We also see that 78 per cent of women in the Public Service are in support categories, such as clerks and maintenance people, earning low wages, and only 22 per cent are in middle management or office positions. There has been very little improvement over the last few years, since the Government has given lip service to affirmative action. Now, of course, the Government is breaking a written contract with Public Service pensioners, particularly with these women who have worked for such low wages over the years and now receive low pensions. On top of that, they will be doubly cut by these two Bills concerning indexing. Any way one looks at it, this Bill must be withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House unintentionally. There is no written contract with regard to the pensions between the Public Service and the Government.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to proceed with an example. To illustrate discrimination against women in the Public Service, and now against Public Service pensioners, I would like to refer to a woman to whom I spoke when I visited my riding last week. She was very concerned about this Bill. At that time she spoke about the male domination which still exists in the federal Government, even though there is supposedly equal treatment in Canada today. She said that women are working in the lowest paid jobs, they work for much shorter periods of time, and therefore they have lower pensions on the average.

In her particular case, she went back to work when she was 42 years old. She was the sole supporter of her family, with two young children. She worked as a typist for $192 a month in 1956 and slowly made her way up to a clerk-typist position and a little higher. Then she was forced by poor health to quit in 1960. She said that she is lucky because she has her own house and a little garden and can keep some of her costs down. This woman earns, from her superannuation from the federal Government, a mere $359 a month. That is very little for people to survive on in Vancouver.

I would like to say that not only do we object to the Bill because it is immoral, but also because of the fact that to the federal Government's employees it is a breach of faith on the part of the federal Government. It is extremely hard on federal Government pensioners who are the lowest paid people and who now face full inflation. They have no real protection against inflation. As I said, it is of major concern to this Party as it applies to women pensioners who were former civil servants in particular.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of my constituents in Vancouver-Kingsway to speak on this amendment to Bill C-133. As Your Honour knows, the Bill itself decreases the amount of civil service pensions next year and the subsequent year to a level of six and five, 6 per cent and 5 per cent, rather than the inflation rate which was the original bargain, and thereby decreases the amount of money which should legitimately come to retired civil servants. In other words, the war against inflation will be fought in part by the retired civil servants in Canada.

The amendment changes the Bill somewhat. It increases the annual rate of indexing by .5 per cent in 1983 and 1984. Therefore, with the amendment, it means that the increases will be 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent. The change, I am told, is to placate some Liberal Government backbenchers. How easily, sir, they are placated! Their support is literally bought for 10 cents a day. They are easily sold out.

I rise to speak on the Bill because it is an attack on some of my constituents in Vancouver-Kingsway, specifically, on retired civil servants, on retired Armed Forces personnel, on retired RCMP personnel and others. I am told that there are 200,000 people in this country, in Canada, who will be affected by the Bill. I know that there are a number of people, affected in my riding of Vancouver-Kingsway, because I have received letters, visits and telephone calls about this matter. I am told that 1 per cent of civil servants' salaries went into a special fund to protect the purchasing power of those salaries.

The Parliamentary Secretary raised the question as to whether there is a contract involved. I am told that the Government states that there is not a contract between itself and its employees in terms of pensions. The unions state that when the Government was preparing for collective bargaining, the unions approached the civil service associations in the 1960s to suggest that superannuation be excluded from collective bargaining. In return, they were promised that there would be no unilateral changes in the program. An advisory committee was established and, until the present time, the Government kept its promise about no changes without consultation.

I note that Bert Hill, in an article in the Ottawa Citizen on January 5, said that "This puts the Government in the same position as some backward private employers who see pensions as a privilege rather than a right earned during the working years".

There was an agreement, in a sense, and this agreement has really been broken. This is a Government which seems to be prepared to break agreements and bargains, and that is a dangerous trend, because I do not think that governments in Canada were like that in the past. The Government is prepared to break the Crow rate agreement with farmers. It is even prepared to break agreements with Parliament. Concerning the pre-build of the Alaska Pipeline, it did not even come back to consult this Parliament when it wanted to change a fundamental law of Parliament. It is prepared to break an agreement with employees across the country when it implements the six and five program and it breaks collective agreements with the Public Service. I say that this is morally wrong.

I have before me a recent statement of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. The Bishops say that there has been a breakdown in the morality of Canada. All we have to do is to look at our own Government. I believe that moral priorities are linked with political decisions, as the Bishops have said in their report. I say, and I think many other people feel this way, that it is morally wrong for the Government to change this agreement that it has with their retired employees.

● (1630)

The other day the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) said that it was up to the retired civil servants to fight the battle against inflation. In the first place, this is the wrong battle. We should be fighting against the problem of unemployment, not inflation. We have the wrong people fighting the wrong problem.

Dome Petroleum is offered $500 million to bail it out, along with the banks. There are petroleum incentive grants of $8.6 billion offered in this country to the oil companies. Maislin is bailed out; Chrysler is bailed out; any company can be bailed out. Even in British Columbia we have got to the point where we bail out a ski hill, Whistler's Mountain. Then we penalize and freeze the incomes of civil servants. What we have in this country is socialism for the rich. That is what we have achieved after all these years, I am loathe to say.

Is it not about time we asked the people who can best afford to bear the burden of this recession, as the Catholic Bishops have said in their report, to do so, instead of picking upon the poor civil servants and especially on retired Armed Forces personnel who cannot speak for themselves when they are in the Army and who are now speaking through their organization? It is simply not fair. It is simply immoral to pick on the Armed Forces retirees. They are the people who fought for this country, who served this country. We do not want them to have to fight further battles in their retirement. We want to help them in their retirement. I think this is where it is morally wrong.

Pensioners have written to me from my riding and from all across Canada. To illustrate, I just want to read a letter from Mr. H. R. Gillespie of Hoy Street in my riding. He says:

> As a retired civil servant, I would like to protest the Bill C-133 as it applies to superannuation pensions. While employed I was required to contribute 6.5 per cent of my salary to the Superannuation Account and an additional 1 per cent to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account. The latter deduction was made to provide for pension indexing (as defined in section 2(1) of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act). I support FULL indexing to be applied at the current rate of inflation as measured by StatsCan for the year 1982, on January 1, 1983.

The letter continues:

> In all honesty, the Government does not have the right to use this money for purposes other than maintaining the pension funds. For them to have changed the rules of indexing when it was paid for by myself and all other civil servants, both retired and continuing workers, is completely unacceptable. I will monitor the performance of those Members in Parliament who can protest this injustice and influence my family accordingly, when next we have an election.

I can assure Mr. Gillespie that we in the New Democratic Party, and myself in particular from Vancouver-Kingsway, support him 100 per cent in the thoughts he has expressed in his letter.

I have had letters from other constituents. Pensioners' organizations and professional organizations have written to us. All of them, except perhaps for the superannuates' national organization the executive of which, in my view, badly represents its members, have been very supportive, and I quote from a letter from the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada dated January 14, 1983. It says in part:

> The New Democratic Party has steadfastly supported public service pensioners, in their fight to defeat a bill which seeks to legitimize the theft of $165 million as part of the Government's political battle against inflation.

We are grateful for that support and we will continue to fight.

Before I sit down I would like to speak to two other matters. I say this to the Conservative Party, and I have listened to some of their speeches. They should have realized, when they agreed to support the six and five program in principle, that bills like this would affect the old people, the children, and now the retired people from the Armed Forces and the Public Service. It is beneath contempt to make the argument about the NDP voting to increase our salaries. They know that is nonsense. The NDP voted against the six and five Bill, and the Conservatives should have voted against it in principle because the logical outcome is this particular Bill.

I want to conclude by saying this. I am ashamed for my country—and I say this to the Canadian people, if I might—that we are attacking the Public Service of Canada. If one were to go today to Fraser Street in my riding, to the UIC Office, one could see what it is like to be a clerk in that office, with a line-up of thousands of unemployed. So let us not attack them; we should be supporting them. We should be helping them in this dire time. That is fundamental justice. Instead, we seem to be morally bankrupt here in bringing in an amendment such as this and a Bill such as this in which we go after retired civil servants, the retired Armed Forces personnel and the retired RCMP personnel to make them bear the brunt of the war against inflation. All this, while we let the big, rich guys off. In my view, that is morally wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River rises on a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I am a little concerned and would like some clarification as to whether the Conservative Party is going to continue to oppose this Bill, or are they remaining in their seats for the rest of the day?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Bow River rises on the point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the NDP should know that we have had 17 speakers on this Bill since yesterday morning. The NDP has had 14. They still have to catch up to us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the NDP. They tell us, as members for sanctimony, that somehow we are against the aged, the retired, that we in the Conservative Party, because we voted for a Bill, can take the least likely stance that they can paint and say we are for all of its follow up legislation. It is like asking us, "Why do you vote for the pizza you want, when you oppose anchovies?" The fact of the matter is, if they can paint the light, that somehow there is any Party in this House or any group of citizens anywhere in this country who opposes those who are retired from receiving a decent income, then it is every bit as legitimate for us to tell them that when they voted against Bill C-124 they voted against it because they were protecting their own salaries. In other words, as the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) just said, it was nonsense for us in the Conservative Party to tell the NDP that the only reason they voted against Bill C-124 is because they did not want their salaries to be cut. It is nonsense, but it is every bit as logical as their telling us or anyone else in this House that there are some people here who are opposed to retired people.

So, if I may set that question aside, I want to say that what we have here is pizza legislation. Parties will differ because there will be some parts they like and others they disagree with. It is not to say that the six and five program is wrong, or our Party is wrong in seeing that the six and five was brought in. What is wrong is that the application is selective, that is, it applies to a section of society, generally from welfare to average, but does not apply to those in the average to high income bracket. That is one of the principles that is wrong.

The other principle that is wrong is the question of breach of contract. Members opposite say there was no written contract. What a thin veil to hide behind, because we can still see right through. The truth of the matter is, whether it was written on paper or otherwise, the members of the civil service paid extra money for the purpose of receiving the extra pension.

• (1640)

If it was to be the view of Government, supported by Parliament, that there would be a time when public servants should not receive as high a pension, right or wrong, that could be accepted, but not after the contribution payments had already begun. Who in their right mind would believe that after having made payments for the purpose of receiving a higher income, along would come big government and say that it is sorry, "Although you have made the payments, you will not get a higher retirement income"?

Who on the Liberal side can rise and say there is no contract? Although it has collected $14 million more from the public servants in Canada in terms of payments, it now says there is no written contract. Whether it is written or not, there is a contract. There is an agreement whereby if public servants were to set aside more money, they would receive more in return.

Other Members have pointed out that what is wrong here is the question of the principle of allocation of Government priority. In other words, while they argue that in this time of restraint they can no longer pay for pensions, they can build airports that are massive and opulent and buy oil companies at double their value as well as introducing a Crown corporation that would destroy the right of enterprise in the marketplace of agricultural products.

In other words, what the Government is doing is simply reaching into the grab bag and picking on those groups their pollsters tell them they can pick on. The news media has widely circulated the fact that through polling Canadians, the Liberals have found out that public servants can be picked on politically. It is not a question of justice or the law of Parliament, but simply whom they can safely pick on politically. This is done on the basis that right across this country there are public servant jokes such as, "How does a public servant wink? He opens one eye". That is the view of the Government on the basis of polls, even though it knows it is wrong. It tells the people of Canada that because there is no contract, it can do as it wishes with public servants.

We talk about six and five and now the amendment to 6.5 and 5.5. That is very much like yelling to the person who is drowning not to worry because we have taken a pail of water out of the lake. If one's income is degenerating, having it degenerate by not quite so much is of very little comfort.

I want to share this perspective. Many Canadians who hear this debate will view it in the context of a public servant and think of him as having retired yesterday or today.

Mrs. Mitchell: Him or her.

Mr. Malone: I am sorry, I stand corrected. Obviously I meant persons, people, him or her. I certainly want to give all the credit one can to that hard-working army of females in the Canadian Public Service who deserve the compliments of everyone in this House of Commons. The point is that Canadians generally think of them as having retired either presently or very recently. The truth is, and this was mentioned previously by others, some of the public servants retired a decade or more ago. They made their contribution to their pension benefits. Because of inflation in recent years, they are in a very desperate situation today. To limit them in the same way that would limit someone who has recently retired and has caught up with the present inflation rate is basically inexcusable. Those who retired in the sixties or early seventies as a result of the limits of this legislation will have their pensions cut in a way that will severely limit their buying power.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are giving me a signal to tell me my time is up. It certainly is not a signal to tell me that there is an end to the issue. We can talk for a long time on this.

We must remember there is a specific injustice. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) reminded me of this when I said "him" rather than "them". She is very right in talking about public servants to a large degree being female and that to a very significant extent females are in the lower income brackets. This legislation will apply more to them and will cause even more discrimination with regard to their pensions.

We need to talk about the principle of this legislation. First, if there are going to be programs such as six and five, they must be universal throughout society. Second, you cannot breach a contract, which this Bill and this amendment does. Those two principles have been broken by the Government. For those reasons, we are fighting the Bill.

The NDP refer to how we voted before. We must restrain ourselves as a society. They now find individual warts in this legislation. That in no way deters us from the principle that we must practise restraint at a time of inflation. However, the Progressive Conservatives are strongly opposed to the suggestion that (a) the Government has the right to select or (b) that it has the right to breach a contract. My time is up. There is much more we should talk about. I hope Members of the NDP recognize that if they continue to speak in opposition toward this Party which did not introduce the legislation, they simply implicate themselves as to whom they are afraid of at the time of the next election.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak today to the amendment to Bill C-133. It is an opportunity to express some of the views of my constituents who are concerned that their pensions are being eroded by the unilateral action of a federal Government which they thought had some commitment to pension reform. I will quote from a few letters I have received. It is important that we know whom we are talking about when we talk about the Public Service and those who are affected by the legislation. I quote:

> For many years we paid the contribution required toward the full indexing and we were assured that our pensions would always be fully indexed.

That was written by a pensioner who served for four and a half years in the RCAF and 30½ years in the Public Service. I quote another pensioner as follows:

> With times as they are now, I need all the pension I can get to keep up with today's prices and rates. The indexation was set and promised by the Government and I feel betrayed.

The individual who wrote that worked in the Post Office for 21 years. Another constituent wrote:

> This is a contract entered into with the federal Government and should not be broken . . . I say we have paid for this in advance.

He paid into the superannuation fund for 35 years. Finally, a fourth constituent wrote:

> If any company or corporation had handled pension funds in this manner, they would be jailed or out of business or both . . . I trust your Party will take a strong stand against this proposed Government measure.

We in the NDP have demonstrated, not only on Bill C-133 but on Bills C-132 and 131, that we are not prepared to see the standard of living of our pensioners and our children eroded by legislation that will not generate any economic activity in this country but will simply lead to greater and greater recession.

• (1650)

I might say to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who has obviously been keeping an eye on the number of speakers in this debate, that we have now had 18 Conservative Members and I am the fifteenth Member of the NDP to speak. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that we were expecting there would be the normal three Conservative Members speaking against this legislation for every New Democrat, and we will be anxious to tally up at the end of the debate on this amendment just what the outcome is. I certainly will be interested in hearing what comments the Conservatives have to offer.

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I made an error when I said we had 17 speakers. We actually had 19, and now we have had 20 compared to the NDP 14, and now 15.

Mr. Miller: I see the Conservatives still have some difficulty counting, Mr. Speaker.

We are opposing this legislation because we have pensioners in our ridings who thought they had some security. As we all know, the superannuants have paid 6.5 per cent of their wage into a pension fund, but beyond that they have contributed 1 per cent of their income to a supplementary retirement benefit account. That was specifically to protect them against the erosion of inflation. They were probably in an enviable position, considering what the rest of the pension system in Canada is like, to be able to do that. They considered that contribution as a deferred wage, and the former President of the Treasury Board recognized that.

The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) indicated there is some sensitivity in the public about public servant's salaries and pensions. We seem to have in Canada a group of individuals who do not particularly like to see public pension plans or government involvement in those plans. We have seen the spectre of exorbitant pensions being paid to retired public servants and Members of Parliament. If those indexed pensions were extrapolated over 20 years at about a 10 per cent inflation rate, certainly they would be immense. But what we are dealing with here is an average pension of about $8,100 a year. If we look at the widows' and survivors' benefits of those public pensions, they are even worse. One figure I have read is $3,200, but if I look at the Superannuants Association figures, they estimate a typical surviving spouse as a meagre pension of about $2,000, which will be reduced under this legislation to about $1,800. That is a pretty pitiful amount of money for a surviving spouse to have from a pension fund into which the employees paid 7.5 per cent of their wages. We are dealing with a tax on retired public servants which is going to cost them on average about $1,200 over the next two years, for a total saving of $100 million or $150 million to the Government. Because that money would normally have been used to generate further economic activity, it will help to depress the economy. The Government has recently published a Green Paper on pensions called "Better Pensions for Canadians". It lists some of the serious failings of our pension system as follows:

> Some elderly people who are single, particularly single women, have incomes that are insufficient.

Inflation has eroded the value of employer-sponsored pensions for many Canadians who are now retired and has also eroded the value of benefits accumulated by employees who are still at work.

Many employees will ultimately receive little pension income, even after many years of work, because they do not stay in one job long enough to acquire vested benefits.

Even if vested benefits are acquired, pensions are generally not "portable" when an employee changes jobs.

A significant number of working people are likely to experience declines in their living standards when they retire, in large measure because employer-sponsored pension plans are not universally available, because they lack sufficient opportunity to accumulate retirement savings, or because pension plan benefits are not sufficiently large.

Here we have Government employees who were at least some way down the road to improving pensions, but we now have a Government which arbitrarily degrades the only bright spot in the pension scheme in Canada, probably to the benefit of private pension plans. What is going to happen ultimately, when old age pensioners and superannuates see the attitude of the Government to pensioners? In order to protect their retirement income they will have to turn more to private industry. I would challenge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to use some of her clout within cabinet to see that legislation of this nature is withdrawn, and withdrawn immediately.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, to examine this amendment in slightly more detail than we have been doing so far, let me say that it is really a problem in the sense that it is an insult to Parliament and the senior citizens and civil servants who have served this country for so long. Today we find a Government which wants to steal money from those people, money they have paid over the years, 6.5 per cent for a pension plan, followed by 1 per cent for indexation. Now the Government would literally steal from those who have paid into that fund. The proposal put forward by the Government is that the thief return part of his ill-gotten gains, and a very paltry amount at that. That is clearly an insult and the House should be offended, as should civil servants who depend on that indexed pension.

• (1700)

There is no doubt that the amendment offers a number of courses of action, and perhaps it would be useful to list them for my Conservative colleagues. The Government is absolutely intransigent on this particular point and has no intention of backing off. No matter how foul the proposed legislation, the Government will go through with it. It is a matter of saving face. However, it might be useful to outline the problem for our colleagues who share the Opposition benches.

The Government can proceed with the offensive measure of closure on the Bill if the Opposition shows that it is serious. For that to happen, though, the Conservative Party would have to put up an equal number of speakers to those put up by this Party, and obviously it does not intend to. Occasionally it does put up a speaker to make a token representation. If Members of that caucus were to join our caucus in an equal commitment to stop legislation, then they would put up three speakers for every one from this Party, but since it has taken the opposite approach, clearly it intends to let the Bill slide through. In the hour that remains, we are faced with the necessity of putting up six speakers from the New Democratic Party with little assistance from the Conservative Party. That is consistent with the position the Conservatives have taken on the amendment as well as on the Bill itself and on Bill C-124.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Nonsense!

Mr. Skelly: A commitment by the Conservatives such as I have outlined, would force the Government to impose closure on the Bill, but obviously they do not intend to bring that about.

On the 16 votes that were held in relation to Bill C-124, essentially the Conservative Party backed the Government. There was a proposal that Bill C-124 should not apply to pensions, but by voting with the Government the Conservatives elected to defeat that. It is clear that you cannot have your cake and eat it. We are not attacking our Conservative colleagues. I think many of them and a minority of Liberals believe the Bill is offensive. All we are doing at this time is asking the Conservative caucus to bear its full share of responsibility in order to defeat this reprehensible piece of legislation. I ask them not to talk out of both sides of their mouths, blatantly claiming that they are doing their share to defeat the Bill.

Much has been said about this amendment already, Mr. Speaker. We know that the proposal would cap the pensions of 119,670 retired civil servants, 31,811 retired members of the Canadian Armed Forces and 2,249 retired RCMP officers, and that with increases in the years ahead, roughly 200,000 people, including spouses, would be affected.

The Government is asking us to take the money that those people have paid into a pension plan and money paid to index that pension plan and use it to refuel the economic recovery of the country. Clearly that is a complete and reprehensible farce proposed by a reprehensible Government.

Over the years, the mismanagement of the economy, the blatant abuse of Canadians through high interest rates, the lack of development of an industrial strategy, the failure to provide adequate programs for industrial development and secondary industry, have led to the collapse of the economy. The way out of this is not to steal from retired civil servants or retired members of the Canadian Armed Forces but, rather, to put an adequate program of economic development in front of Parliament, pass it quickly and get Canada back on the road to economic recovery. I reiterate, the solution is not to steal from civil servants.

The amendment before us which proposes to give back a small amount of money, represents an attack by both the Liberals and the Conservatives on the concept of the Public Service. They know full well that if they spread the view that public servants are not doing a good job then, by implication, it follows that their pensions should be chopped, their bargaining rights taken away and their salaries capped. When the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) was a member of the Clark Government he proposed to chop the civil service by 60,000 members.

An Hon. Member: What about Howard Pawley in Manitoba?

Mr. Skelly: Over the years the Liberal Government has attacked the civil service in the same way as the Conservative Party has. The final abuse is the way that the widows of salaried employees have been treated over the years. Michael Pitfield was given a $6 million pension and salary through his appointment to the Senate.

An Hon. Member: The Six-million-dollar man.

Mr. Skelly: As my colleague says, the Six-million-dollar man. He was also sponsored by the Clark Government. Although it fired him, it allowed him, for pension purposes, to be classed at the DM-3 level, at $105,150.

What we have before us today is a grossly unfair amendent which is a complete insult. It shows a lack of integrity on the part of the Government and a lack of commitment by the Conservative Party to retired civil servants, members of the Armed Forces and the RCMP.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to speak on this amendment and some of the general principles involved in the Bill. I should like to raise some issues of a moral and ethical nature. First, I should like to remind members of the Government about the Speech from the Throne of April 14, 1980.

We are now in one of the longest sessions of Parliament in history. Because of this, perhaps our Liberal friends opposite have forgotten what was said in that Speech from the Throne, so I think it is important to remind them. They made a commitment to the people in April 1980 which is not being honoured. The Government promised to respond to individual needs by promoting greater security for the elderly, extended opportunities for the young and equality for women. Does this Bill offer that greater security, Mr. Speaker? It definitely does not. My colleagues have pointed out that many of the older pensioners are women. In my constituency there are some who worked for the federal civil service in Ottawa and who took early retirement. Do you think they consider this to be equality? They definitely do not.

In that same Speech from the Throne in 1980, the Liberals claimed that they wanted to create a country whose people would share their wealth with those who need it most. But what is being done for the elderly and the pensioners of this country? The Government is attacking their pensions.

The Speech from the Throne pointed out that inflation strikes hardest at the old and those least able to take care of themselves, yet the Government is now acting in an irresponsible manner.

• (1710)

I notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is in her place. In committee she said that she expected sacrifices from everyone, from taxpayers in general, Family Allowance recipients and pensioners. This reminds me of the little anecdote about the hen and the hog walking arm and arm and seeing a sign at a church concerning an offering. The hen said to the hog, "I have an idea. I think we should contribute to the needs of the poor; I think we should offer them bacon and eggs." The hog replied, "Well, yes, for you that is merely an offering, but for me it would be a total sacrifice." Many of these elderly people have already sacrificed totally. These people had to live through the more difficult periods of time when they did not have all the technology and other benefits we have today. They had to live by the sweat of their brow. These people are presently being attacked.

I should like to share the contents of one or two letters that I received because we need to remind the Government opposite that it is the human dimension it needs to take into consideration. In one letter from Ste. Rose du Lac in my riding, a person wrote:

> I have worked for nearly 21 years in the Post Office—the first years were made up of long hours and days and very hard work—we were there to give service to our community.
> The contributions made to the SRB Fund were mandatory and represented a form of insurance of our pensions against rising costs of living. We paid the premium. We are entitled to it.
> Now a retired pensioner, I have looked forward to that pension cheque so I can enjoy the rest of my declining years.

She asked me to do everything possible to stop this type of legislation. In another letter from Winnipegosis in my riding, a superannuate referred to Bill C-133 and asked me to oppose it. It read:

> This is in direct opposition to what we were promised when we contributed an extra 1 per cent which was to ensure that our pensions would be indexed according to the increase in the cost of living. We feel that we have paid the premium and so should be entitled to the insurance this premium was to cover.
> If this Bill is passed it will give the Government the legal right to rob the pensioners of their rights and reduce many to living below the poverty level recently determined by the Senate. In other words it would reduce or rob the average pensioner of approximately $1,200 in the next two years and drastically lower their standard of living for years to come. The Government's claim that this lower indexation will save the pension account $100 million is a very misleading assertion. The $100 million belongs to the contributing public workers, not the Government.
>
> On behalf of all superannuates and those now contributing to the fund, I would urge that you do everything in your power to oppose any legislation by our Government to alter the present form of indexation. I think you will realize that if this Bill is passed it will set a precedent which will endanger the rights of many people in Canada and also lead to possibly other legislation of a similar nature.
> Again I would urge you to use all means you have available to have this Bill defeated.

I could go on and on sharing the comments of people who have taken the time to write to me. They have written in their own hand; it is not something they have cranked out. They are representative of the vital concerns of people who perhaps have been struck with fear as a result of the arrogant actions of the Government. Another letter reads:

> I am writing to express my concern of Bill C-133 which is now before the House of Commons.
> As I am a retired federal civil servant, I urge you and your colleagues to oppose this measure, in support of all retirees of the Civil Service.

I assure that person that indeed we oppose this Bill. Another letter urged me to strongly oppose the Bill to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act.

There are some people who have waited for a long time to receive their pension. I have a letter from a person who retired as a warrant officer in 1971. He contributed to the pension fund and received a pension cheque of some $349, which amount had not changed since that date. However, a couple of years ago he received notification, according to his letter, that in 1983 his pension would be adjusted upward. He said that he was elated, but imagine his feelings when he found out that the Government would now renege on its commitment to indexation.

What is happening in this type of legislation? It is a case where the Government is failing to recognize the people who contributed over their earning years to the economy of Canada. The present Government is biting the hands that have fed it over the years. This type of ingratitude reflects negatively on the Government. I urge the Government to reconsider this legislation. In this case a contract was given to people; there was a promise and an understanding. Pensioners contributed with full trust and in confidence, expecting the Government to honour its word. Instead, the Government has not honoured its word.

Perhaps we should ask ourselves whether pensions are really a privilege or something actually earned by pensioners. I urge the Government to recognize that it is not a mere privilege. It is something to which people contributed, something for which public servants worked hard, something they have earned. Retired public servants in my community, even those who retired early, contribute in vital ways to community life, whether it be volunteer work, in cultural groups or otherwise. They anticipated that the Government would honour its word and that they would be able to cope with inflation because they had contributed to the fund. Some of them were enticed to take early retirement, feeling that this was one way in which they could assist in providing employment for younger people. Instead, the Government reneged on its promise and these people were forced to ask themselves whether they could get back into the job market to meet their needs in their retiring years.

In closing, I indicate to the Government that by its actions it is creating a crisis of confidence in itself. I urge Government members to have a change of heart, repent in their ways and drop this Bill.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief intervention in the ten minutes which I am allowed this afternoon on the amendment to Bill C-133, to limit the indexing on pensions of retired public employees. In fact, the amendment increases the six and five program for retired public servants from 6 per cent in the first year to 6.5 per cent and from 5 per cent in the second year to 5.5 per cent.

• (1720)

I would like to have a little leeway before coming to the comments I would like to make with regard to the amendments to the Bill. One could hardly recognize what we are debating from listening to some of the interjections made by members of the Conservative Party. I am tired of listening to members of the Conservative Party blaming their woes and problems on the New Democratic Party, which Party they consider to have defeated the Conservative Government in December, 1979. Comments made this afternoon, both by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) and the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) were almost entirely on that subject. I would like the people of Canada to know the reason for the downfall of the Conservative Government in December, 1979. The Government of the day, that Conservative Government, introduced a budget in which it set out to the people of Canada how the Conservatives would run the affairs of the country. The Liberals made an amendment to the budget. As normal procedure, the New Democratic Party made a sub-amendment to the amendment of the Liberals. When it came time to vote on the subamendment to the amendment, the subamendment which was put forth by the NDP, the Conservatives were defeated. They took that as a vote of non-confidence. In spite of requests and pleas from many members of the Progressive Conservative Party, their Leader went to the Governor General and asked for Parliament to be dissolved and to call another election. It was out of the ignorance of the Conservative Party. I submit that the Conservatives did not have to go to the Governor General and have another election called. They could have waited until the amendment moved by the Liberals came to a vote or until the actual vote was taken on the budget itself. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and I think the people of Canada should know, that it was through ignorance and the inability of the leadership in the Conservative Party that brought the Conservatives down in 1979. It was through no fault of the New Democratic Party that that Government was removed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: In fact, I feel very badly that the Leader of the Government at that time, now the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) did call for another election, because he might have been able to manoeuvre himself into staying in power. I wish he had done that so that the people of Canada could see that a PC Government is not a darn bit better than a Liberal Government.

Mr. Epp: What about Manitoba? The NDP Government has a $700 million deficit.

Mr. Anguish: The people of Canada would have known that by now.

There are few things that can be seen with the hindsight of the Conservative Party other than their hemorrhoids.

I would like to address the rest of my remarks to the Bill itself and to the amendment. By the Government's own admission, it will save in 1983 some $60 million by imposing a 6.5 per cent limitation on the indexation of retired public employees' pensions. If the Government invested all of the $60 million that we will have at the end of this fiscal year, this $60 million in savings would make up one twenty-fifth of one per cent of the national debt. That is a very minuscule amount when you talk about the whole scheme of things. In 1984, the Government will be saved an additional $105 million.

My colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party are opposed to this amendment as we are opposed to Bill C-133 itself. We do not see any need to put the burden of fighting inflation or of beating inflation to the ground on the backs of those who can least afford it.

In the pension plan right now that we are talking about today, there are some 90,000 former contributors who receive about $8,100 annually out of the program. There are an additional 32,500 people who receive about $3,200 a year each in survivor's benefits. The average annual pension that was paid out, as of November, 1982, was some $6,900 a pensioner under this pension program.

I think it is unfair for the Government to have said there is not a contract here. I submit that there certainly is a contract, if not written or entrenched in stone, there was certainly an agreement between the public employees and the Government that they would be taken care of in their years of retirement as part of having worked and served their country and also as a benefit for having contributed 6.5 per cent of their salaries. This was to assure the public employees some kind of security in their retirement. In addition to this, these people have paid an extra one per cent of their income to protect their pensions against the ravages of inflation with which we have become so familiar in recent years. As the cost of living went up according to the Consumer Price Index, their pensions also would go up. It is important to note that these retired public employees paid for that benefit.

In the 1960s the Government suggested that superannuation be excluded from collective bargaining. In return, the public employees were promised that there would be no unilateral changes in the program. An advisory committee was established and, until the present time, the Government kept its promise, but now it is breaking the promise. This is the same as in the early days when the private pensions and public pension programs were not in existence. The railways were the most flagrant abusers of pension programs. The railways used a pension program as a tool to hang over the heads of their employees so they could clout them with it if they went on strike. When people went on strike their pension programs were cancelled. In that case, many people within the union were divided. The younger people, not caring quite as much for their pensions, would still want to go out and fight whereas those closest to retirement could not do that because they knew the companies could take away their pensions from them at any time.

We find the Government is doing much the same thing here in destroying confidence in the Canadian people. People felt they had a contract. They thought the Government was obligated in terms of providing them with some retirement income. But we now find the Government has been reneging on the promise of protecting them from the ravages of inflation. In fact, it will be very harmful to this small group of people since we have, relatively speaking, a small dollar amount that will not even affect the treasuries of Canada. It is hard to say how actuarially sound the program is because the Government does not set up separate accounts for the indexing amount put in by public employees and the actual benefit that has to be covered for the 6.5 per cent. The moneys go into general revenues, and it is very difficult to trace back how sound the pension program is when the Government keeps the records for the pension program in the way that it does.

I will say a further word in terms of support of this Bill. One finds that when the six and five program first came about in Bill C-124, the Liberals introduced it and the Conservatives supported it, knowing full well that what was going to happen to this program is happening here today. The only Party on record as being opposed to the changes in the pension programs for which we have fought so long and hard is the New Democratic Party. It is certainly not the fault of our pensioners or our retired public employees that the country has suffered such a high rate of inflation. It is direction, or lack of it, from successive Governments, both Liberal and Conservative, which have not put this country on the track on which it should be.

We need to bolster our economy in order to protect those programs which we have worked so long and hard to put into place. While Governments are partly responsible for bringing this to reality, we now see it being eroded.

I am very distressed to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who is returning from his tour, indicating that we may be shifting some of our exports of raw material to Japan since the United States is no longer as great an industrial power. I believe this is a sad situation. I suggest that we should be attempting to process some of those resources at home instead of exporting them to other countries, so that we may provide the jobs and the economy that we need in Canada and protect those programs which are being affected by Bill C-133 and C-131.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to oppose this legislation. I wish to say to my colleagues to my right that we are now reaping some of the whirlwind of the winds that they have sown over the last number of years. We also see the spectacle of a Liberal Government, in its frightened and confused state of mind, endeavouring to pass measures through this Parliament which would meet demands made by the Official Opposition over many years.

It was the Official Opposition who sowed the winds over the last number of years about there being too much Government, too great a deficit and that there should be reduced Government spending and the introduction of restraint. They have met with a fair measure of success, to the point where they have frightened the Grits into adopting that state of mind. They are now reaping the whirlwind of those winds which they sowed. They are now saying that they are against those measures which they have been advocating for many years. They ran on the horse of Reaganomics and those foreign ideologies about the new morality and the new conservative trend from south of the 49th parallel, and we are beginning to see the results of that.

I believe that these two old Parties want to reduce indexing and eventually have no indexing, in spite of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) believed a few years ago.

Every Canadian would be willing to co-operate in fighting inflation and providing employment. When the Government unfairly picks on those who are at the lower end of the income scale and unable to defend themselves, then this Party cannot and will not support that unfair treatment. We will do what we can to prevent this legislation from passing.

Even with a modest amount of inflation, or even zero inflation, the necessity for an increase in pension will still arise to allow for an increase in the standard of living. However, we will not likely reach that stage for some time.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation with which we are confronted is reminiscent of former policies. I invite my friends on the Government side and in the Official Opposition to go back and read Hansard of 1929 and through the "Dirty Thirties". We are now into our 116th year of Confederation and we have had nothing but Grits and Tories and Tories and Grits, booms and busts, depressions and booms and recessions and busts. It is a vicious circle.

It is interesting to consider that this legislation attacks the pensions of former federal employees whose pensions were part of their wage package. Every government or private employer has taken into account the expenditures it has had to make for unemployment insurance premiums, workmen's compensation and its share of pension deductions as part of the wage package. Since it was considered as part of the wage package, private sector employers were able to add that to their cost of doing business. Working people considered deductions for a pension as part of the wages they earned in all the years they were employed. It is their money and not the Government's to make use of. That is money which the Government holds in trust for federal civil service pensioners.

When one reads the history of these two old eighteenth century outfits, one runs across statements such as:

> I think you will find that in every department of the Public Service we have spent less this year than Parliament authorized us to spend.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Tell us about the Regina Manifesto.

Mr. Benjamin: You will get that in July. Another such statement reads:

> (Ten per cent cut in Public Service wages) that we believe is essential for the purpose of enabling this country to have a balanced budget.

Another quote reads:

> Third, increases in the rates of pay of other employees in the federal public sector will be constrained to no more than 6 per cent in the first year of the application of the program to them and 5 per cent in the second year.

You might guess who that is. Another quote reads:

> There is one important initiative—the introduction of restraint on public sector salaries. That is a field in which the Government has lagged behind several Canadian Provinces.

Almost all of them had Tory Governments.

I cited three quotations. One is from R. B. Bennett on February 8, 1932, at page 59 of Hansard. The second is from the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) from June 18, 1982. The third is from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on July 5, 1982, when commenting on the budget. Now they are reaping the whirlwinds of the winds they have sown.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, the seeds.

Mr. Benjamin: Here is another quote:

> The Canadian Pacific Railway Company a year ago instituted such economies—

They were able to get a 10 per cent reduction. It was accepted by the clerical staff. That quote was from R. B. Bennett in 1932.

What has been happening to those employees who are under federal jurisdiction? What is not happening for them with respect to their pensions?

I have some more quotes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Benjamin: As soon as I am finished.

Mr. Fisher: You have been finished for years.

Mr. Benjamin: Here are some more interesting quotes on the Grits and the Tories. The first one states:

> The primary duty with respect to unemployment does not rest with the federal Government.

The next quote states:

> We want to encourage the private sector and have more profits, more investment and more employment in the long run. That is our policy and it will overcome the misery to which the hon. gentleman referred.

The next quote states:

> Third, we must continue to rely primarily on dynamism and creativity of the private sector as the engine of growth in Canada.

● (1740)

Those are three more quotes: R. B. Bennett, June 30, 1931, page 3183 of Hansard; John Crosbie, November 13, 1979, page 1242 of Hansard; Marc Lalonde, October 27, 1982, page 2079 of Hansard. Mr. Speaker, they have not learned anything in 50 years. They keep repeating the history from which they did not learn anything. One does not fight inflation starting at the bottom end of the income scale. Surely, that is not civilized at best, and, at worst, surely that is not Christian. One does not start at the bottom. One does not have $600,000 corporation presidents heading up one's program of restraint and combating inflation. Surely, no Parliament which has any self-respect and regard for the pensioners in Canada, whether or not they were civil servants, can countenance this kind of legislation. I ask the Government to withdraw it. It is not your money. It is there for the people to have, and let us make sure that they get it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on a point of order if he is pursuing the same point, but then I would have to have unanimous consent of the House for the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to continue.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the history, and I would like to test the memory of the hon. gentleman from Regina West.

Mr. Benjamin: I am not as old as you are, Walter.

Mr. Epp: He does not look as old.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He has referred to a number of quotes coming from political leaders, Liberal and Conservative, back—

Mr. Benjamin: And present ones.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —to Richard Bedford Bennett, our Prime Minister in the Depression. He indicated that those Prime Ministers had said certain things about public servants. Is he aware that not even Richard Bedford Bennett attacked the pensions of public servants, and that the present Government is the first one which has attacked the pensions of public servants?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly aware—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As I indicated, I must seek the unanimous consent of the House for the Hon. Member for Regina West to continue his remarks. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly aware that Mr. Bennett did not bring in legislation against civil service pensions because there were little or no civil service pensions.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There were.

Mr. Benjamin: However, what civil service pensions there were, with his reduction in the number of people employed and the reductions in their salaries, he ruined their pensions over all the rest of the years he was in office, and it was continued by Mackenzie King. Deductions were not made from their incomes, and, as a result, their pensions were reduced by that much when it came their turn to retire.

Mr. Speaker, I am so happy to have received unanimous consent of the House to continue my remarks—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: —that I want the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to hear some more similar quotes from the likes of R. B. Bennett, Mackenzie King, Pierre Trudeau, Joe Clark, etc.—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I think unanimous consent was extended to the Hon. Member for the purpose of answering the question and not for the purpose of continuing his remarks. If he wishes to seek unanimous consent, I must recognize him to do so.

Mr. Benjamin: I thought I already had unanimous consent Mr. Speaker. I do not want to abuse the House. I do not think that particular rule has been changed. I can go on speaking until 6.30 p.m. and start up again tomorrow, if you want.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman, by continuing, is not abusing the House. He is abusing himself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will ignore that remark by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, because if there is anyone who abused himself and his entire Government, it was himself on December 13, 1979, when he could not count and did not know anything about the rules and manufactured the defeat of his own Government.

Mr. Speaker, I will not go into all of these quotes which I want to give.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I will use other occasions. I just want to ask this House not to pass this legislation, and I want to ask the Government to withdraw it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I came into the House late because I had difficulty getting to Ottawa today. I came to the House about one hour ago and I had not intended to enter into the debate. I would have preferred to have done so tomorrow. However, I have been encouraged by my constituents, who would be affected by this particular piece of legislation, to enter the debate. They have an excellent association headed by one Mr. Vern Perry, who has been in touch with me over the years, and they have done a tremendous job of organizing the senior federal pensioners in the area to combat the likes of this legislation. I will perhaps go into that in a moment, but I would like to explain my reasons for rising. Maybe I should not rise to the bait which has been put out by my colleagues from the left. They are from the left in more ways than two or three, but I really must rise to speak.

The Hon. Member for Regina (Mr. Benjamin) did not know whether we had been in Confederation for 117 or 118 years. Frankly, his arithmetic is as lousy as his logic.

Mr. Epp: Impossible.

Mr. Ellis: If my arithmetic is not too bad, I think this is the 116th year of Confederation. During that time, thank God, we have not had a socialist government any worse than that of the socialists who sit across from us right now. Had we been forced into the—

Mr. Benjamin: They are more reactionary than you are.

Mr. Ellis: —unlikely and unhappy position of having to put up with a government of socialists such as those we have heard this afternoon, then Heaven help us.

I am curious to know, in this particular piece of legislation, who they feel is the enemy. All they have done this afternoon has been to condemn the Conservative Party.

Mrs. Mitchell: You and the legislation.

Mr. Ellis: It happens for a change, that we are on the same side concerning this particular piece of legislation. They really cannot tell the difference. Let me tell them who is was who supported the Liberals in order for the Liberals to get back into power. Let us make that very clear. The New Democratic Party stood up in this place and supported the Liberals three years ago. It was their motion. They moved it. They supported the Liberals in order to turn out of office the only Government which provided opportunity, the only Government which was on its way to cleaning up some of the mess that we have seen over the past decade and a half.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Bunch of crybabies! They do not know even how to lose bad!

Mr. Ellis: Certainly, there is no question but that we are opposed to high taxes. Taxes are too high. I know that the socialists would like to see higher taxes. That is what the Hon. Member has just said. Taxes are too high and we would love to see them come down. Deficits are too high, and we would love to see those deficits come down, but we all know that there is not a snowball's chance of either of those things happening with the present Government.

To return, I would ask, who put the Government in power?

Mr. Lang: The people of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Unfortunately.

Mr. Ellis: Whenever the Hon. Member for Regina West rises to speak, one notices that there is nothing, by way of any legislation, which he cannot hang on Canadian Pacific. He worked it into his speech this time. In some way shape or form, I am sure that if we ever have legislation to prevent the proliferation of mustard seed on the moon, he will get the CP involved in it. I wonder if the Hon. Member really realizes what is going on in his own Province.

• (1750)

I had the very distinct pleasure of having dinner last week with the Hon. Grant Devine, the Premier of Saskatchewan, and I listened with tremendous interest to what is going on in that Province. I listened to how they have given themselves a break and reduced the price of gasoline to $1 per gallon. I guess, Mr. Speaker, I am not supposed to use that language in this House. Perhaps I should have said 22.9 cents per litre, in the Province of Saskatchewan. That was despite the National Energy Program, not because of it. We know that the NDP members in this House are in favour of the National Energy Program. They would like to see gasoline prices go higher yet. They would like to see Petro-Canada buy all the major oil companies, then the price of gasoline could really go up. If they could get the price of gasoline up to $3 or $4 per gallon, they would be very happy, but I say that the new Conservative Premier of Saskatchewan has cut the price almost in half, to 22.9 cents per litre. I am curious as to how these fellows square this with their constituents when they go home on the weekends, if indeed they dare go home on the weekends.

Some of the things happening in Saskatchewan I found very interesting. I recall hearing the Hon. Allan Blakeney talk about the need for family farms and the strength of family farms, but the NDP government in Saskatchewan had bought over a million acres of land. They were not interested in family farms, they were interested in Government farms. There is a difference between the sanctity of the family farms and the Government farms they were planning. I get terribly tired of this pious rhetoric that we get from our colleagues on my left.

As I said, I walked into the House and heard this nonsense and decided to respond in part to it. Unfortunately, I have not had the time to dig out all the quotes, but I tell you this, Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with any of the quotes the Hon. Member has cited this afternoon. He may not like them, and he may have some way of twisting them so they suit his purpose, but I tell you that the men he quoted were honest. They stood in their places in this House and they spoke their piece and they worked for the benefit of Canada. They did not get up and say one thing one time and something else another time, when it suited their purpose.

It seems to me that had we had the time to dig out some quotes it might have been very interesting to see what the Member for Regina West would have to say on this and other subjects.

I know that the new rules of the House, which I support, do not allow for a free-ranging and long-winded discourse on the New Democratic Party. It would give me great pleasure to spend the rest of the afternoon making them account for some of the things they have done.
