House of Commons Debates

THIRD SESSION—TENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 1, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Tnree o'clock.

PAPERS RE SUB-TARGET GUNS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. I beg leave to renew the motion I made yesterday that the return to the House with reference to the purchase of 250 sub-target guns be referred to the Public Accounts Committee for investigation.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I quite concur.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LAND BELT, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 102) to ratify an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia respecting the western boundary of the Railway Belt. He said: This is simply a formal Bill carrying out an agreement entered into between this government and the government of British Columbia as to the actual delimitation of the western boundary of the Canadian Pacific Railway land belt.

KAIEN ISLANDS TITLE—PAPERS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not remember at this moment whether or not a motion was made in connection with the Kaien Islands title.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I think papers are down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Could the minister inform me whether the papers as brought down contain the particulars of the title? It was said that this government had given a certain title, whatever it could, to the Grand Trunk Pacific as I understood.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is down. I have not really looked through the papers to see, but I am satisfied it is in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I shall look it up myself and remind the minister.

PREVENTION OF STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS.

House again in committee on Bill (No.36) to aid in the prevention and settlement of strikes and lockouts in mines and industries connected with public utilities.—Mr. Lemieux.

On section 24—where settlement effected, memorandum of same with report to be forwarded to minister.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) has an amendment to move.

Mr. PARDEE. I wish to move that this section be amended by inserting after the word 'authorized' in line 31 the following words: 'and shall, if the parties so agree, be binding as if made as a recommendation of the board under section 55 of this Act.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend explain the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. PARDEE. The question was raised by the hon. leader of the opposition the other day, what would happen if, after convening the board, and proceeding with the case, the parties should come to an agreement between themselves. Several suggestions were made, and I remarked that if that should happen it would be exactly the same as a settlement by consent in an ordinary civil case before the courts, and the terms of the agreement should be as binding on the parties as if it were a recommendation of the board. After discussion, it was thought that that might possibly savour of compulsion, and both the employer and the employee might be bound by something that they had not intended to be bound by. The amendment I propose provides that if, after the board has been convened and proceedings have commenced, and possibly some evidence has been taken, the parties should come to an agreement between themselves, that shall have the same force and effect as a recommendation of the board if they agree to that, while if they do not agree to that, then it will not be a recommendation of the board, but simply a private agreement between themselves.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does that meet the objection of the hon. member for Nanaimo?

Mr. PARDEE. The hon. member for Nanaimo seemed to think the other day that my suggestion involved compulsion. There can be no compulsion if the parties themselves agree that the terms of their agreement shall be a recommendation of the board.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. That is satisfactory.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 25—where settlement not effected, board to make report with recommendations.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This section is quite easy to understand. It will give the public an unbiased and unprejudiced report, instead of a report coming through the press, which may take sides with one party or the other. The report, when published, will be published as sent to the minister and signed by the arbitrators.

Section agreed to.

On section 26—form in which recommendation shall be made.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is taken verbatim from the New Zealand legislation.

Section agreed to.

On section 27—report and recommendation to be made to the minister in writing.

Mr. GALLIHER. It seems to me that it would be advisable that the minority report should also be filed. Suppose that the arbitrator representing the company and the third arbitrator agree, but there is a dissenting member of the board. As the section stands, we would only receive the report of the two who agreed, and the public would have no idea of the views of the dissenting member. Therefore I would suggest that the following words be added to this section; 'and in the same manner a minority report may be made by any dissenting member of the board.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. When this clause was drafted I had in my mind the idea that, if there was a minority report, the report of the board would always contain both; but, as my hon. friend suggests, it might be just as well to have it clearly stated in the Act, so that all parties will have the advantage of having their views published. Besides, in any report made to parliament, I think it is the custom, when there is a minority report, to publish it alongside with the majority report.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 28—filing and distribution of report.

Mr. GALLIHER. It will be necessary to amend this section in the same way, by adding after the word 'report' in the sixth line, the words 'and any minority report.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. I agree to that. I think it is sound policy. In connection with legislation of this nature, which relies on public opinion it is wise that the report should be distributed broadcast, especially amongst the unions. The minister should have that discretionary power, whenever a demand is made upon him.

Section agreed to.

On section 29—publication of report,

Mr. GALLIHER. The same amendment will have to be inserted there. Insert after the word 'board,' in line seventeen, the words 'and any minority report as well.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 30—powers of board to summon witnesses, etc.,

Mr. LEMIEUX. The first part is taken word for word from the Railway Labour Disputes Act. I think we ought to give the board as much power as possible, and not allow any technical or legal objection to hinder its action. It should have as much power as any court.

On section 31—form of summons,

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is taken from the Railway Labour Disputes Act.

On section 32—documents not to be made public,

Mr. CONMEE. The wording of this section would confine the right or examination to the parties themselves, but they might require an expert accountant. That might be remedied by inserting after the word 'parties' the words 'or their agents.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. The better way would be to strike out the words 'of the' before the word 'parties.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 34—allowance to witnesses,

Mr. BOYCE. This provides that witnesses shall be paid according to the scale for the time being in force with respect to witnesses in civil suits. But there is one scale for the division court and another for the superior court. Better make it according to the superior court.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like to have the advice of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) on this point. We can bring up that question later on.

On section 35—witnesses in railway disputes,

Mr. LEMIEUX. As that affects the railways, we will let that stand.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Are the other clauses that concern railway men also to stand?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Anything in the Bill affecting the railway men stands until I have received a reply from the representative of the railway brotherhoods, Mr. Harvey Hall.

Mr. BARR. Does the minister contemplate leaving out the railway men altogether?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am expecting an answer in a day or two from Mr. Harvey Hall, before going on with these clauses.

Mr. BARR. Then it depends on Mr. Hall.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not exactly; but as he represents a number of brotherhoods, I thought it would be only right to hear their views before putting this legislation through.

On section 38—View by direction of board—Power to interrogate. Examination of factories, &c. Inspection of work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is taken from the New Zealand, New South Wales and West Australia labour legislation.

Mr. CONMEE. This seems a very useful section, but I think that it could be amended to advantage. Under the section as it is, no inspection of the works and premises, &c., can take place until the board shall have determined that there is danger that a strike or lock-out may take place. Then, the board or any member thereof, or any other person duly authorized, can exercise this power of examination of premises, and interrogation of employees or employer. Why not give this power to the registrar, so that he may act even before the board is convened?

Mr. GALLIHER. The board are in the same position as the jury in a trial going to take a view, that they may deal with the matter involved more intelligently.

Mr. CONMEE. But I do not see why it is necessary to wait until the court is convened. If evidence as to the local conditions is necessary, why should not one of the parties be able to get an order from the registrar to make investigation.

Mr. GALLIHER. It would involve all sorts of inconveniences.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not see why that should be. It seems to me it would facilitate matters.

Mr. LOGAN. This gives the board power to authorize entry upon private property which is a very serious power to grant, and it is one which should be exercised under the most conservative conditions. It seems to me that to leave this to the registrar would be to give that official a power greater than is needed and one that should be exercised only under direction of the court.

Mr. CONMEE. But would a single member of the court be more likely to act conservatively in these matters than the registrar, who is the deputy minister of the department?

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is the board, not a single member of the board, who gives this power.

Mr. CONMEE. It says 'the board or any member thereof.'

Mr. LOGAN. But any other person must have the authority of the board in writing, as the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) will see if he reads the section.

Mr. CONMEE. It says 'The board or any member thereof, and, on being authorized in writing by the board, any other person' may enter the premises. The hon. gentleman may be right in his interpretation. But my point is that this means delay until the board is convened, and I think it will facilitate matters if the power were given to the registrar.

Mr. GALLIHER. Even when there is no dispute on?

Mr. CONMEE. There would be no request for such an examination except when there is a dispute.

Mr. GALLIHER. Then, there is no need for granting the power.

Mr. PORTER. I would call the attention of the minister (Mr. Lemieux) to the fact that there is no provision here for notice to the other parties. It authorizes the board or any member of it, or any person authorized by the board, to enter the premises at any time. This means that they would have the authority to enter a man's premises at night. It seems to me only fair that the party should have notice in some way of what is taking place.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not think it necessary that formal notice should be given that a view of the place would be directed by the board, because a view of the premises will be directed by the board in the presence of the party. Besides it is just as well that the board should be able to decide at any time to view the locality or the place where the trouble has arisen.

Mr. PORTER. I cannot understand how that order by the board can be made in the presence of the party. As soon as the board is convened it may make that direction at once in absence of the party. I think it is only fair that he should have some direct notice.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not agree with the member for Hastings (Mr. Porter) in that regard. The matter in dispute might be the condition of a certain part of a mine; the men might have gone out on strike because a certain part of the mine was not ventilated, or there was some condition to which they objected. We should give the board power to send the man there immediately upon its formation, without notice.

I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) something with reference to his suggestion that the registrar in Ottawa should have power to authorize any man to go upon the premises. There are mines in this Dominion of a very dangerous character; the men have to go down with safety lamps, and penalties are imposed upon them if they take matches into the mine. Does the hon. gentleman really think that we should give the registrar here in Ottawa power to authorize some man to go down into that mine in Nova Scotia or elsewhere, when, by his lack of knowledge or negligence, he might blow the whole mine up and destroy the property entirely? Should not that power be confined to the board itself?

Mr. CONMEE. I do not see that the mine would be in any great danger of being blown up by giving the power I have asked for. I would suggest that instead of the registrar having that power it should be the minister. I think that where there is a dispute going on there ought to be facilities to enable the parties to acquaint themselves with the matters in respect of which they will have to give evidence instead of having the examination prolonged for days and weeks, and perhaps months, in order first to get the authorization, after the board is formed and secondly to send a party to make the examination. There will be no greater risk because authority is given by the minister. The parties will take pains to acquaint everybody with the conditions. They will send some one with the examiner. No man will examine a mine without having somebody to accompany him who would protect the mine and property from any of the calamities to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), but as Minister of Labour I would object to making any such order as the one he suggests which is intended to direct the board. Let us as much as possible leave the putting into motion of the machinery of the Act to the board itself, and as little as possible to the minister. It is already a great power that is vested in the minister to appoint the third arbitrator when the two parties fail to agree. We should shrink from the idea of giving the minister power to enter at any moment into an establishment without any notice. The minister after all is in politics, and sometimes it might savour of tyranny if he were to exercise that power. I would rather leave it with the board itself so that public opinion would respect the decisions of the board pending an investigation, whereas if we left that power in the hands of the minister public opinion might become divided, and not a few would say that the minister has done something which he should not have done and which should have been left in the hands of the board.

Mr. PORTER. I cannot agree with the minister nor with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) that no notice should be given. If I understand their argument, it is that the board should have the right at any time to go on and inspect a man's premises, without a notice which would allow him to put his house in order, so to speak, before the inspector got there. This provision in the clause it seems to me is in direct violation of one of the very first principles of British liberty, to say that a man's property should be taken possession of, so to speak, by any authority or person without notice. I am not arguing or suggesting that he should have a notice of two days or five days or ten days, but it does seem to me to be a violation of the rights of the individual or corporation to allow a person to walk into your premises when you are absent and nobody is there in your interest. If any notice whatever is given surely the case that is imagined by the minister could not arise. When he goes there to make his inspection he tells the proprietor of the premises, I am going to make an inspection, and the proprietor will send some one with the inspector to see that the investigation is properly carried out. The proprietor ought to know what is going on as well as the board.

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not think any board would ever make an inspection in any other way.

On section 42,

42. No counsel or solicitor shall be entitled to appear or be heard before the board, except with the consent of the parties to the dispute, and notwithstanding such consent the board may decline to allow counsel or solicitors to appear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is taken from the Labour Disputes Act. It might be in some cases that the employees would be placed at a disadvantage in being unable to retain counsel, while the companies would be able to engage the best legal talent. In order to shorten the proceedings before the board I think this is a good provision.

Mr. HAGGART. Why not allow one party to this dispute to employ counsel?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If both parties agree then they can have counsel.

Mr. HAGGART. This clause requires the consent of both parties?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. For instance, a union engaged in an industrial warfare against a big trust company appears before the board, the trust will be in a position to retain the best legal talent in the country, while the poor union might not be in that position. It is better to treat both parties alike and to say that counsel or solicitors will not be admitted unless both parties agree to have their representatives. Besides, it would prevent the union from incurring any large costs, because we were told during this debate that the labour element would already have spent large amounts in negotiating with the company. If after having had these negotiations they decide, before declaring the strike, to apply for a board, it is fair that they should go there and present their case in a business like way and not be forced to retain counsel declaring which would entail more costs.

Mr. BOYCE. I must confess that I am unable to follow the minister's reasoning on this point. When this board is constituted the trial of the issue has a somewhat judicial character.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. It would be a fallacy if one party, whether it be the employer or the employee, cannot have his solicitor or counsel to represent his interests at investigation. In a division court case involving only $10, the parties are entitled to be represented by counsel. I fail to see the reasoning of the hon. gentleman. For instance he speaks of a wealthy corporation as the employer on one side——

Mr. LEMIEUX. The union.

Mr. BOYCE—or a number of individuals as constituting a union on the other side; if this clause were to remain in the law one could block the other and burk investigation, and what is to take place during that time with both at arms length, with a sharp issue between them, if it is made obligatory upon them to give consent that each shall have counsel? I might point out that possibly he may have unwittingly thrown a barrier in the way of expeditious and easy investigation and that the right of either party to appoint his own counsel or representative should not be interfered with. My hon. friend's Bill provides in clause 41 that:

Every party appearing by a representative shall be bound by the acts of such representative.

But, if an employer wants to engage the greatest counsel in the land as his representative before that board or if the employed wants to do a similar thing he cannot do it. He is limited in regard to his choice of a representative by what ?—by the consent of the other party, which must be obtained, and is it reasonable to suppose that the consent of the other party under such strained relations as we would naturally expect to find at that time could be obtained to the choice of a counsel without which consent that counsel or representative could not act. It would be a bar to the selection of a counsel and it would delay the adjustment of disputes.

Mr. GALLIHER. In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) I would point out that in my opinion there are no parties to a dispute of this nature that are more capable of acting in their respective interests than are the heads of unions or the director, president or manager of interests like a big railway company. When these parties are authorized to appear there I am satisfied that they would expedite the progress of the arbitration quite as much as any lawyer, who, no matter how eminent he might be, would be employed on either side.

Mr. BOYCE. Take the illustration of a strong corporation with a keen, competent business manager, and say, fifteen men—the number must exceed ten—the strong corporation with its wealth, power, activity and business acumen does not want counsel. The men do. The manager of that corporation can prevent the men from having counsel and from being put upon the same plane as it is in regard to ability to present their respective views.

Mr. GALLIHER. There might be that particular case of a few men who do not belong to an organization.

Mr. BOYCE. If there were a hundred it would be the same.

Mr. GALLIHER. But my hon. friend knows that most of these organizations not only have their head local man but also a man above him, and that these men have the law and conditions with respect to these matters at their finger ends. I might also say that under the Railway Disputes Act that has already been passed and from which, I believe this section is taken—am I right in that ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. GALLIHER. This has been found, so far, to work very smoothly.

Mr. BOYCE. There have been no references under it.

Mr. GALLIHER. There may have been no references but there has not been any complaint on behalf of the companies or employees in regard to the provisions of this section. This is not a hard and fast thing that must last for ever. If it is found that it will work a hardship by leaving it as it is now it can easily be amended at another session of parliament. I do not think that anything of an undesirable nature can occur in the interim and we have before us the fact that at all events the section of the Railway Disputes Act has not been commented upon adversely by those for whose benefit it was passed.

Mr. BOYCE. It has not been tried.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. We have only had one case under the Railway Disputes Act, that with respect to the telegraphers' strike, and both parties in this case agreed to have a solicitor. My hon. friend can refer to that case as it is reported fully in the 'Labour Gazette.' He will see that each party was represented by a solicitor. My hon. friend looks at it from the solicitor's point of view. I am a barrister. He is also an eminent barrister and he may be sure that I do not wish to prevent the barristers of this country from appearing before any tribunal. I think they can appear worthily before any tribunal, but in this particular case, before such a board which will hear evidence on labour questions no better representatives of counsel could be had on behalf of each of the parties than their own immediate representatives. For instance, suppose the railway men are under the operation of this Act, and that there is trouble between a railway company and therir employees; the railway company would be represented by its manager and the brotherhood would be represented by a man say like Mr. Hall. Does not my hon. friend think that the fact of being represented by Mr. Hall would mean as much for their railway brotherhood as if it were represented by counsel. After all, it will not be so much a legal questeion which will be discussed or investigated by the bord as a labour question, a question of fact, not a question of law, and I am afraid that if we were to allow parties to be indiscrimately represented by solicitors and counsel we would defer the object of this legislation.

Mr. BOYCE. I will put another case to the minister. He will remember the trackmen's strike. The trackmen are a class of men not as well educated, perhaps, as a rule, not of the same intelligence as the railway engineers, coal miners, or railway firemen, but they have just as much right to have their grievances properly placed before the commission, as the others. Pre-eminently the keen business manager of a railway will outweigh in ability a representative of those trackmen appearing before this board, and of course in saying this I intend no disparagement to the trackmen, but they would be handicapped, if not outclassed, by the railway's representative before the board and why should they be deprived of the right to put their case into the hands of a solicitor, to exercise the ordinary just right of the British subject and to avail themselves of the skill, ability and force which is perhaps not possessed by one of their own number, but which the business manager of the railway company possesses ? The minister says : Let us try this. I say let us try the position of affairs as they exist to-day in an arbitration or dispute when each party has the right to employ counsel. I would suggest that you wipe out the necessity for the consent of both parties to the employment of counsel, and let the board determine whether there should be counsel and whether either party is outclassed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not share the views of my hon. friend. The trackmen are a very large organization. I quite agree that the individual members may not, perhaps be intellectually speaking, of the same class as the engineers, locomotive firemen, &c., but a large organization such as the Trackmen's Union will always find as their representative a level-headed, bright and intelligent man. My experience teaches me that all those labour organizations, take them at the lowest grade of labour or at the highest, are well represented. During the last two or three months I have had many occasions to meet them. I have met the representative of the trackmen, and not many solicitors could do better than him before a board of this nature on questions which would call his presence there. Even if they did not take their representative from amongst themselves, they could employ an expert from outside, an able man, say an engineer, but if we allow solicitors to appear before that board, you may cause one of the two parties who have to appear to incur costs which would not be justified. I would suggest that we retain this clause as worded, because we have it in the Conciliation Act and in the Railway Labour Disputes Act and it has worked well. The deputy minister informs me that in all the cases with which he has been concerned, under the Conciliation Act, the parties never were represented by counsel and yet the labour unions, generally speaking, were very ably represented and could always bring forward their views and their conclusions just as well as if they had been so represented.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not arguing for the solicitors or lawyers, they are able to take care of themselves, but I did not catch the reason for the latter part of the clause. Suppose the trackmen, trainmen, or whoever they may be, wish to have a lawyer—any man has a right to employ a lawyer if he pleases. These men, for certain reasons, wish to employ a lawyer and the employer may consent to their having one. You get there a condition of affairs which does not militate against the agreement between the two parties. The two parties agree to have counsel, there is no dispute about that, but when they do come to that necessity and agree that they shall meet the necessity by having counsel, is it not arbitrary to say that the chairman of the board shall say: I do not care what you think, I absolutely refuse to have a lawyer appear before me in the interest of clients. That is, you are giving into the hands of the board the very arbitrary power of denying to the contestants before them all their rights towards the explicit stating of their quarrel, their claims and what they think should be the conditions of settlement. What is the reason for that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. First of all I take exception to what my hon. friend stated that the chairman has power——

Mr. FOSTER. Or the board.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The board because it will always mean two if it is the majority.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not make any difference, whatever the number may be.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Even in the Privy Council or before any of the courts of law the judge can at any stage of the proceedings prevent a lawyer from arguing a case, he may hear one side——

Mr. FOSTER. Because he has had enough.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the present instance we must always rely on the fair play and the sense of justice with which the members of the board will be imbued. Now if it is apparent to the board, which I may remind my hon. friend is already clothed with vast powers and rightly so, in order to settle the trouble as quickly as possible—that the employment of barristers or solicitors or counsel will delay and protract indefinitely the proceedings and will cause the trouble to continue for any length of time, is it not better that the board should say at once: 'In order to avoid any costs, and to save time, no lawyers will be heard on behalf of the parties.' We must rely on the common sense and spirit of fair play of the board.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend has made the matter a little worse. In proportion to the arbitrary or plenary power of the board or chairman, should be the right to the contestants before them to the plain and full statement of any one of their claims. Now, on the start I have not a good way of putting my views before this board. I am hesitating and modest in approaching them, and I cannot get out exactly what I want to have brought out, but I am willing to pay a lawyer to do it, and he is here. It seems to me that the more power the board has the more reason there is why I should have the right to put my case before it as I please. You may go on the assumption that human nature is perfect, but you will fall down if you do. You may assume that this board or its chairman will be high-minded and fair; we hope they may be; but there will be cases in which they are not, and that is all the stronger reason why one who knows the law should have the right to give his services if required by one of the contestants.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend must remember that each party will have already selected one member of the board, and therefore their views have always a chance of being fairly put before the board. I am informed that in connection with the conciliation boards in the United States and in England a provision similar to this, exists. My hon. friend, I think, takes an extreme view of the case. The representatives of the parties, employers and employees, are always well able in such cases to present their views, and I honestly think it is saving time and money to prevent the parties from employing counsel, even when they have agreed to do so.

Mr. PORTER. It seems to me that the position taken by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is unassailable. There are two parties to the dispute, the employer and the employees. They get together and they agree that they shall each have the right to employ counsel. They are the only ones who have any interest at all in the case. The board is a disinterested body, who are there simply to consider the evidence and the views brought before them, and to see that the proceedings are fairly and properly conducted. If the parties, the only ones interested, agree between themselves on a certain line of action being pursued, does it not seem to be the most arbitrary thing for the board to have the power to say to them: You shall not carry out your agreement?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I would like to say that representations have been made to myself from the largest labour organization in the province of Nova Scotia to the effect that this clause should at least stand as it is, and that no counsel should be permitted to appear for either party. They point out that to give permission to counsel to appear on behalf of either party to the dispute would only result in confusing the issue and prolonging the agony. So far as I am concerned, I have no clear-cut views on the subject.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you that letter or petition?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have the letter somewhere, but not here. The grand secretary of the Provincial Workers' Association, Mr. John Moffat, wrote to me, stating it as his view and the view of his organization that no counsel should be permitted to appear on behalf of either party.

Mr. FOSTER. I can see consistency in that position. My hon. friend's advice is not in favour of this clause. What he says bears out the idea of not having any lawyers about this thing at all and I would have more sympathy with that idea than with the idea of giving the board power to refuse the parties the right to employ counsel if they wish to do so.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not know that I would be prepared to go so far as my hon. friend goes, and say that if both parties to the dispute should desire to be represented by counsel they should not be allowed to do so.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What is the practice in New Zealand?

Mr. CALDWELL. I have received a letter bearing on the subject under discussion which I would like to read. It is from the Carleton Place Labour Council, and says:

> Should employer and employed not be able to come to an amicable settlement and a conciliation board be called, capital would be willing and able to employ costly counsel to work in their behalf, which it would be almost impossible for labour, with very little funds, to back it up, to compete against, and, as is generally the case, capital would win, and keep the employee at a standstill for another year. I have been instructed by the council to write you to this effect and to ask you, as our representative, to give this matter your very best consideration.

I merely quote this because it gives an idea of what the labour people are thinking of with reference to the employment of counsel.

Mr. MONK. For my own part, under reserve of the objection I have made to the whole Bill, I do not think that the labourer or the employer would gain much by being represented by counsel in an arbitration of this kind. There are no questions of law. With the questions which arise, as a rule, it seems to me that lawyers are not at all competent or accustomed to deal. We must admit that the lawyer has a litigious tendency, and he would be liable to introduce into an investigation of this kind legal intricacies which would perhaps retard a final decision. At the same time, I can conceive that some cases might arise in which, the circumstances being very special, the parties would require the assistance of a legal mind, and, having sanctioned the principle that no lawyers should be employed, I would be disposed to leave to the board the discretion in those special cases of allowing the employment of counsel. But, as between the two, I would prefer such a disposition of the law as would absolutely forbid the employment of counsel.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The intention of this section is to prevent the use of counsel except in extreme cases, and in such cases it is provided that both parties must be willing to have counsel. This is based on the principle that an employer of labour is in a position to get the most expert and capable counsel of the country, while in nine cases out of ten the labour men would not be able to employ counsel who would be likely to meet, in strength and ability, the representative counsel of capital. Moreover, matters of this kind, which are domestic matters, can, as a rule, be conciliated far better by practical men than by lawyers. In England the history of conciliation boards has been that they began by calling in counsel. To-day there is scarcely an instance where a lawyer has an engagement with a labour conciliation board. It is considered that these domestic questions are understood best by the practical individuals who have daily experience in them, and a counsel has the tendency to confuse and prolong the whole difficulty.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Under the New Zealand law, no counsel or solicitor is allowed to appear or be heard before the court or any committee thereof unless all the parties to the reference expressly give their consent. There is not this proviso in our clause but in New Zealand the award is binding and partakes therefore of a judicial character.

On section 43,

> Persons other than British subjects and residents of Canada shall not be allowed to act as members of a board.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Strike out 'residents of Canada'. There may be cases, where the representative of one of the parties may reside abroad and be a British subject.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. On section 42 the minister said that these people could not be better represented on the board than by the selection of their own delegates. That remark is equally applicable to this section. But it is now desired to limit their selection. Take for instance the case of a new invention, there are but few people who have practical experience in handling that. Not long ago, on the western section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the railway employees took exception to the double cabbed locomotive but the matter was adjusted in some way. Under this section you would prohibit the railway employees from having a representative on the board who has practical experience and are restricting the selection of the board. Take, for example, the brotherhood of railway trainmen or locomotive engineers, up to the present their executive officers, or the great majority of them, reside in the United States. These brotherhoods would want to have the best men they could get on this board, and by this prohibition you would create friction in the organization. It seems to me that you should permit the men to select the best representatives they could from wherever they could best get him.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Under this and preceding section, could the representative of the locomotive engineers, who happens to be in the United States, be allowed to appear before the court and present the case of the locomotive engineers ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly. But a man must be a British subject to be a member of the board, no matter where he resides. It would be humiliating for this country that a board of arbitrators should be partly composed of Americans. You might as well have an American sitting as a judge in any one of our courts of law. But suppose a union has its ablest representative an American citizen residing in the United States, there is nothing to prevent that representative from appearing before the board and presenting its case.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. It is quite possible that an officer of the board of locomotive engineers might be a practising lawyer. Could the labour organizations select a representative, whether he be an American or a British subject, to appear before the board and present the case of the men ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly, but he cannot be a member of the board unless he is a British subject.

Mr. MONK. I would be inclined to agree with my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy). If this law is to be useful, we must try and give the greatest satisfaction to the labouring men in the selection of the board. Strange to say the labour organizations lose sight entirely of territorial limits. In Europe, the international extends from country to country, and, in order to achieve their object, labour organizations are affiliated quite irrespective of national lines. My hon. friend the minister (Mr. Lemieux) knows that here in Canada,—in the province of Quebec at any rate—there has been a strong movement to nationalize our labour organizations. There are at present in Montreal two federated labour organizations, one affiliated with the organization in the United States and known in common parlance as the international, while the other is exclusively Canadian. For three or four years a strong movement has been carried on to diminish the affiliations with the United States and to make these labour organizations pure Canadian. That movement has failed and, I think that at the present moment the order affiliated with the United States is far more extensive than the purely national organization. Under these circumstances it seems to me it would be only fair that as they have only one representative on the board they should be allowed to choose freely. There are very experienced and able representatives of labour in the United States in whom our labouring classes have great confidence. They are very often invited here, while representatives of labour in Canada are very often called upon to settle disputes in the United States. I think that my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) has, on one or more occasions been called upon to act as arbitrator in the United States, because they had confidence in him and because they felt, perhaps, that, as he was far removed from the scene of the trouble, he would be able to give a more disinterested verdict than one more closely connected with the trouble itself. I do not see what objection there could be to a man acting as a member of the board, even if he were a foreigner. He is only one member, the majority would be Canadians, and, in case he had the confidence of the labour men, the fact of his being an alien, would not be a valid objection to his acting.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I feel sure that, on second thoughts my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will see that it would seriously reflect upon Canada if we should go to any foreign country to form a board under this Act. For my part, I would very seriously resent it. And I believe my hon. friend would also resent it if he were called upon to appear before a tribunal to settle a national issue—and he will understand the sense in which I use the word 'national,' the dispute being one within our own territory—if that tribunal were composed in part of foreigners. Why, in the very humblest sphere of our judicature, in the appointment of the justices of the peace, we require that the appointees shall be British subjects.

Mr. MONK. That is for the administration of our law.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And this board is to administer our law.

Mr. MONK. It is for investigation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, investigation of matters in dispute between British subjects. And why should British subjects be called upon to appear before a board, the majority of whom may be foreigners—all of whom may be foreigners, for, if you give one side the right to choose a foreigner, you can hardly deny a similar right to the other side, and why should not these two choose a third foreigner to complete the board? My hon. friend will see that it is undignified—I think that word is not too strong. I use it not because I do not like our American friends, but because we ought to feel able to manage our own affairs. At present there is a strong public opinion against the walking delegates coming in here from abroad and sometimes causing trouble. That objection would be much stronger on the question of the formation of a board under this Act. I know that my hon. friend is as true a British subject and Canadian—as proud a British subject and Canadian—as I am, and I think he will see that to allow this amendment might authorize the formation of a board before which every true British subject would refuse to appear, and so would defeat the purpose of the Bill.

Mr. MONK. I think as I am as true a Britisher as my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux)——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK—but the crucial point here seems to be to give satisfaction to the labouring party; and I do not see why in a matter of this kind, their selection should not be perfectly free. This board is to investigate, which is a very different matter from applying the law, particularly the criminal law, which would be the main point involved in the hon. gentleman's illustration of the justices of the peace. We have an analogy in our incorporation Acts, where it is quite commonly provided that a majority of the board of the company incorporated shall be British subjects. I do not see why it could not be provided that a majority of this board shall be British subjects.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no frontier for money.

Mr. MONK. And there is no frontier for labour. My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) knows that efforts made in very high quarters in the province of Quebec to prevent our labouring classes from affiliating with the international organization have been fruitless.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We should encourage those efforts.

Mr. MONK. I believe that it would be a great advantage from the national standpoint if our labour organizations were confined exclusively to this country. But they are not so, and, until that happy condition of things obtains I would be in favour of liberty in this matter.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. How would the hon. member (Mr. Monk) carry out the idea of having the majority of the board British subjects when both parties were free to select foreigners ?

Mr. MONK. I would like to see the labouring men untrammelled in the selection of their representative.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Then, he would have to give the same liberty to the other side, and, as the board consists of three I do not see how we could be sure of a majority of British subjects.

Mr. BARR. I think it is to be regretted that this section is not to be allowed to remain as it is in the Bill. We know that the most turbulent spirits we have in all strikes come from a foreign country. I think it would conduce to our national interest, and would also be much more dignified, and would even be more in the interests of both parties in a labour dispute if the clause were left as it is in the Bill, and all the members of the board were not only British subjects but residents of Canada. I do not think that any case could arise in which we could not find suitable men for this service. We know that in the Senate a few days ago, a Bill was introduced to prevent foreigners from coming here and agitating strikes, the object being to keep out the class known as walking delegates. One reason why that Bill was not received with greater favour in the Senate was because it was that the Bill now before us would prevent other than those that are British subjects and residents of Canada from being members of this board. I think we are doing wrong by changing this Bill. I think it would be to the interest of both parties if the board were to be composed not only of British subjects, but of residents of Canada.

Mr. MONK. I think there is a distinction to be made with regard to the walking boss. We know that legislation has been sought to prevent the interference of foreigners in our labour troubles, and that legislation has caused great dissatisfaction, the labour classes have all protested against it. Here we have a law which is designed to conciliate, not to irritate, and for that reason it seems to me a distinction ought to be made.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have been looking at the United States Arbitration Act, and I find in it no reference to the citizenship of the arbitrators.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I suppose that in the United States it goes without saying that the board must be composed exclusively of Americans. Public opinion would not stand any other but a British tribunal. Let us be as loyal to our country as the Americans are to theirs. We have often heard it said, once a British subject always a British subject. Whether a man resides in the United States or in Canada, provided he remains a British subject, we should not bar him out from serving on these boards. We know that in the county of Essex, for instance, and indeed in a great portion of the province of Ontario where the territory is contiguous to the United States there is a network of railways on which many Canadians are employed, who reside in the United States. In order to earn their living they are obliged to reside in the United States, although their families are in Canada and they have large interests in Canada. They are, and they remain, British subjects, and no one can deny them that right.

Mr. BARR. I do not think the hon. gentleman meets the argument. If a man resides in a foreign country he cannot become a magistrate there, he cannot vote there, as a rule. Now these labour disputes are purely domestic affairs, and there is no reason why foreigners should be allowed to have any say in them. It might happen that one of the parties would appoint a person living in the United States.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman would like to see this clause stand as it was, with the words 'a resident of Canada ?'

Mr. BARR. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, suppose the parties in a dispute would like to bring some one from the British West Indies or from Newfoundland, or from England, to represent them on the board, would the hon. gentleman prevent them from doing so ?

Mr. BARR. I would prevent them bringing a man from Newfoundland or from England if he did not know anything about the merits of the case, as a stranger would not be likely to know.

On section 49,—All members of the board to be present.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My attention has been drawn to the fact that in some cases one of the members of the board, through illness or other cause, might not be able to sit. We have therefore to provide for the appointment of another member, and I would move that the following words be added :

If any member of a board dies, refuses to act, becomes incapacitated or neglects to act, his successor shall be appointed in like manner as is provided in respect of the original member of the board.

Motion agreed to.

On section 52,

The members of a board while engaged in the adjustment of a dispute shall be remunerated for their services as follows :

(a) to members other than the chairman—

(i.) an allowance of five dollars a day for a time not exceeding three days during which the members may be actually engaged in selecting a third member of the board;

(ii.) an allowance of fifteen dollars for each whole day's sittings of the board.

(iii.) an allowance of seven dollars for each half-day's sittings of the board;

(b) the chairman shall be allowed twenty dollars a day for each whole day's sittings of the board, and ten dollars a day for each half-day's sittings;

(c) no allowance shall be made to any member of the board on account of any sitting of the board which does not extend over a half day, unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the minister that such meeting of the board was necessary to the performance of its duties as speedy as possible, and that the causes which prevented a half-day's sitting of the board were beyond its control.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The amounts fixed for remuneration of services of members of the board are based upon the due regard for the responsibilities and duties of these members. This section should be read with sections 53 and 54. It is expected that persons requested to act upon the board will be prepared to act from motives of duty rather than from a consideration of the amount of remuneration which may be offered them. There might be a temptation in some cases for the board to protract its sittings for a period of time if payment were made for the entire time. That is the reason we have divided the payment, so much for a half day and so much for a whole day.

Mr. LOGAN. It seems to me that we are making provisions for a rather large remuneration for members of the board to investigate cases in which the dispute may amount to very little.

Mr. CONMEE. I think it is too small.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not. I would like to ask why the change is made from the payment of members provided for in the Railway Disputes Act. If you will allow me I will read section 17 of the Railway Disputes Act :

The department will pay to each member of a conciliation committee or board of arbitration his actual travelling expenses and also to each of them other than the chairman, ten dollars per day for each day that he shall attend a meeting of the committee or board or be engaged in travelling from or to his home (being in Canada) for the purpose of attending or after having attended a meeting of the committee or board. The department will pay to the chairman such sum as the Governor in Council deems reasonable. The department will also at its expense provide the committee or board with a stenographer, secretary and any other clerical assistance that to that minister may appear necessary for the efficient carrying out of the provisions of this Act.

You will see that the members of the board are allowed $10 whereas in this case they are allowed $15 for each day's sitting. Under the Railway Disputes Act the chairman is paid at the discretion of the minister and under this Act the chairman is paid $20 per day. I think that in dealing with the question of a dispute in reference to wages it is not a wise thing to pay a man who is arbitrating upon or investigating that dispute an excessive wage, and for my part I would suggest that the amount be reduced from $15 to $10 per day to the two members of the board, and that the chairman be allowed $15 per day instead of $20 per day.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We must get the best men possible to sit at these boards and we must pay them, if not lavishly, at least liberally. This has in view the delays to which the parties may be subjected and it is better to fix the remuneration beforehand than to leave it to the good will of the minister or the Governor in Council. If my hon. friend will read clause 53 he will see the reason why the amount may appear a little high in section 52. We propose to allow $20 for the chairman and $15 for the others for a day's work. We do so because it is provided in section 53 that

No member of the board shall accept in addition to his salary any perquisite or gratuity of any kind, from any corporation, association, partnership or individual in any way interested in any matter or thing before or about to be brought before the board in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

We must have as far as possible a disinterested board above suspicion, and in order to ensure the working of the Act, and to secure for it as much respect as possible from the public, we should pay fairly the members of it. The parties who will be called upon to sit at that board may be parties occupying very high positions and having large salaries, and it would not be fair to ask such parties to sit for a trifle.

Mr. LOGAN. Besides getting the confidence of the general public we must have the confidence of the parties to the strike. Suppose a man who was getting $2 a day at his ordinary occupation is chosen as one of the board of investigation. He suddenly jumps from $2 per day to $15 per day. Are we not liable to create a suspicion in the minds of some men that the sessions of the board would be unduly protracted? There might be some man who would be mean enough to take advantage of his position to protract the sittings of the board for a long time because of the fact that he was receiving $15 per day. From the first discussion of this Bill to the present time I have in any part of the discussion in which I have been engaged and in any amendments which I have moved advocated the necessity of providing for expedition. We want to make this matter quick, short and sharp and anything that tends to protract the length of the sessions should be eliminated from this Bill. I do not like to disagree with the minister in this matter, but it seems to me that the provisions of the Railway Disputes Act for $10 per day to these men is a reasonable compensation. After all, the big man is not going to be influenced by a matter of $10 or $15 or $20 or $50 per day. It is only a matter as between a reasonable payment of $10 a day and a payment of $15 a day. It does not seem to me that we will be able to get any better class of men for $15 a day than we will get for $10, and, after all, $10 a day will only apply to two of the men whereas the third man will be paid $15 per day. I think we should try to avoid the suspicion that might be created in the minds of some persons that a man would be tempted to keep this investigation dragging on for an indefinite period on account of getting $15 per day when he was only earning at his ordinary occupation perhaps $2 or $1.50 a day. It must also be remembered that we allow $5 per day for three days before the investigation commences and that in addition to that we allow them their travelling expenses.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend refers to the Railway Disputes Act, clause 17 of which says:

The department will pay to each member of a conciliation committee or board of arbitration his actual travelling expenses and also to each of them other than the chairman, ten dollars per day for each day that he shall attend a meeting of the committee or board.

A man may sit one hour or half a day under the Railway Disputes Act and he will receive $10, while under this Bill he would receive only $7 for a half day's sitting. However, I am inclined to be governed by the committee in this and I would like to have the sense of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. Stand.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is easy to decide that now. If the committee is of the opinion that I should reduce it to $10 instead of $15 I am quite willing to do it. Is it the sense of the committee to reduce the salary of the members of the board except the chairman, to $10 ?

On section 53,

No member of the board shall accept in addition to his salary any perquisites or gratuity of any kind, from any corporation, association, partnership or individual in any way interested in any matter or thing before or about to be brought before the board in accordance with the provisions of this Act. The accepting of such perquisite or gratuity by any member of the board shall be an offence and shall render such member liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Under this section would the paid secretary of a union be prevented from acting as one of the members of the board ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, the unions are free to employ any one.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What do you mean by salary ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The special salary for the work he is doing on the board.

Mr. CONMEE. Could the paid secretary of a labour union sit as a member of that board at all ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Unquestionably he could.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. And draw pay ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. CONMEE. I doubt if he can.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Why not ?

Mr. CONMEE. He is to have no direct interest.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is not specially paid by the company or the union to work on the board, he has a salary all the year around. He is the best man to represent the employees, he is selected by them and sits on the board and he receives from the government the amount which is fixed by section 52, but that would not prevent him from receiving his usual salary.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. By section 53, would a corporation be able to appoint as their member of the board a retained lawyer ? They might give him a $5,000 additional fee if he did the right thing by them as a member of the board. There is nothing to prevent it, he is the paid lawyer of the corporation. The word 'salary' in the section means as a member of the board ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes as a member of the board.

Mr. GALLIHER. I take it the object of the section is to prevent a man sitting on the board receiving a bribe ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. After the word 'salary' I would insert an amendment in accordance with the suggestion of my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Duncan Ross) 'as a member of the board.'

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 54,

54. Each member of the board will be entitled to his actual necessary travelling expenses for each day that he is engaged in travelling from or to his place of residence, in Canada, for the purpose of attending or after having attended a meeting of the board.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would move to strike out the words 'in Canada,'

Mr. GALLIHER. What is the intention in striking out the words 'in Canada.' If they bring a man here from Peru to represent them will we pay his expenses from there ? I think when we go so far as to pay his expenses from the borders of Canada to the place where the commission meets and back that is all we are called on to do.

Mr. LOGAN. We have provided that the limitation is only to a British subject and by striking out these words you could not pay a man his expenses from London, England, for instance.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think we could settle it without going that far.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If expedition is the point we could not wait until he came from there.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 57,

It shall be unlawful for any employer to declare or cause a lockout, or for any employee to go on strike, on account of any dispute prior to a reference of such dispute to a board of conciliation and investigation, or during the pendency of any proceedings in relation to such dispute before a board under the provisions of this Act : Provided that nothing in this section shall prohibit the suspension or discontinuance of any industry or of the working of any persons therein for any cause not constituting a lockout or strike.

Mr. PARDEE. Reading that clause in conjunction with clause 65 of the Act, it appears to me some ambiguity might possibly arise as to the right of the employee to strike and of the employer to exercise his right to lockout. I move that section 57 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words :

And provided that, except where the parties have entered into an agreement under section 65, nothing in this Act shall be held to restrain any employer from declaring a lockout, of any employee from going to strike, in respect of any dispute which shall have been duly referred to a board, and which has been dealt with under sections 24 and 25 of this Act.

That simply puts it beyond peradventure that unless there is an agreement between the employer and the employees, the employees shall practically have a right to strike at any time.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Do the brotherhoods endorse that ?

Mr. PARDEE. I do not know. I did not ask them. I take it that the Act is rather ambiguous as to whether or not, after a binding agreement has been entered into between the parties, or even after there is a recommendation of the board, if they are not satisfied with the finding or recommendation, they would still be entitled to declare a lockout or go on strike. I take it that they would be ; but to remove any doubt, I desire to provide that, if they have not come to any agreement within a certain time under section 65, the employees may at any time go on strike. The Act is simply to aid in conciliation, but not to prevent the employees, if dissatisfied, from exercising their right to strike if they want to.

Mr. CONMEE. I think there is a further object to be served by the amendment of my hon. friend. Suppose, after an agreement is made between the parties, one of them breaks faith. Then there might be doubt as to whether the employees could strike without recourse to another reference. I take for granted that that is not the intention of the Act, but that the intention is that once they have given notice, they are to be at liberty, in case of bad faith or disagreement afterwards to strike. The amendment, it seems to me, would clear up that point, and put it beyond doubt that under such circumstances they could strike without having a re-hearing.

Mr. LEMIEUX. After the remarks of my hon. friend and after reading over the amendment, I may say that it was my intention that the Act should have such an effect. The intention of this Act, as I have stated many times, is to give the public a chance to know the real causes of the dispute before it becomes effective either by a lockout or a strike. Now, the parties may agree together ; but they must be at liberty to have that agreement binding on them or not binding. Under these circumstances I will not object to the amendment.

Mr. CONMEE. I want to ask the minister a question. I am not so certain that the amendment as worded covers the point I have in view. Suppose there is a reference by the parties to the board, and then they come to a settlement and do not make their agreement a ruling so as to be enforceable, or the arbitration is discontinued. Then suppose one of the parties violates the understanding, would the employees be required to give notice of another hearing, or would they be at liberty to strike, having given the previous notice ? I do not think they should be required to give a second notice.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend has correctly interpreted that clause.

Mr. MONK. As I understand the legislation under consideration, there will be upon the labouring man, once proceedings have been initiated under this Act, an obligation to continue working as long as the investigation goes on. That is the principle to which I object, and I would like to point out to my hon. friend that it places our labouring men on a footing of inequality as compared with the labouring men of the United States. I have here the American Act, the only Act analogous to this one, 'an Act concerning Carriers engaged in Interstate Commerce, and other Employees.' That Act provides for an arbitration, both parties consenting, and the decision rendered by the arbitrators in the case of a labour difficulty is binding ; but there is a proviso that during the pendency of the arbitration, 'no employee shall be compelled to render personal service without his consent.'

Mr. GALLIHER. He would not be here either. There is a difference between leaving one's employ and striking.

Mr. MONK. Here, according to section 60, he is liable to a fine if he leaves the employ for the reason that has given rise to the dispute.

Mr. CONMEE.

Mr. GALLIHER. There is a difference between a man refusing to work at any time, even during the pendency of the reference, and a strike. A strike means concerted action on the part of a number of individuals, but a man individually may quit work whenever he likes.

Mr. MONK. Under the American Act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce, the sentence of the arbitrators is deposited with the Circuit Court and may be enforced by that court, but there is nothing to compel any labourer to go on working. Under this Bill, however, he cannot leave the work, whether on strike or individually.

Mr. LEMIEUX. A strike and leaving work are two different things.

Mr. MONK. Under this Bill, if a man does not wish to wait for an investigation and decides not to go back to work, he is liable to be fined.

Mr. GALLIHER. You could not punish him in that case.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The object of this measure is to prevent a strike or lockout before an investigation takes place. Is not that the object of the American legislation to which my hon. friend refers ?

Mr. MONK. As I understand this Act, should a difficulty take place among the railway men, they may submit that difficulty by common consent to arbitration. Once it is submitted they must remain in statu quo just as in the Bill of my hon. friend, and they must abide by the decision of the arbitrators, and that decision can be enforced by process of law. But the liberty of the labourer to quit work is guaranteed because he cannot be compelled to perform personal services and cannot be punished if he refuses. But under my hon. friend's Bill, if he should leave work, after the proceedings are initiated and a board appointed, he is liable to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Suppose the two parties submit their dispute to a board and the board gives a finding to which both parties agree, and which is binding on them during a certain period. In the meantime let us say that the men accuse the company of not living up to the agreement and the company deny the charge. That was the case which caused the strike at the Crow's Nest Pass. Who is to be the judge as to which contention is right ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Under section 65, when both parties agree to be bound by the finding of the board, that agreement can be enforced by any court of law just as any other agreement. If either party complains that the other is not living up to it, that will be a matter for the courts to decide. And the judgment of the court would be binding on the parties, just as the agreement was supposed to be. Now, if it is not an agreement such as is contemplated under section 65, the parties are their own judges—one party can lockout or the other strike, or they can apply for another investigation.

Mr. CONMEE. And have the same board again ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is not provided in the Bill that the board shall be reconvened. But it is provided that the minister may make regulations, and there is nothing to prevent his making a regulation which will cause the board to reconvene to hear the parties.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood the minister, in one of the discussions on the Bill, to say that that would be provided for.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I did introduce an amendment, but it was dropped and another one substituted for it.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If a finding of the board has been agreed to by the employers and the men, it is to have effect for a stated period. But if, in the opinion of the men, the company are not living up to the finding and a court of law afterwards decides that they are, will the men be mulcted in the penalty provided under section 60 because they had the honest opinion that the agreement was not being lived up to ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. I would like to point out to the minister that the United States Act is much more liberal than the Bill under discussion, because, though it provides in a different way for the settlement of the dispute and although the finding of the arbitrators is binding, still the personal liberty of the workingmen is absolutely safeguarded. Before this Bill is read the third time, I would ask the minister to consider how this legislation will work out in view of the Trades' Union Act of 1872. My hon. friend will find that, in the well known Act of 1872, which was reproduced in the consolidated statutes and is in the revised statutes to-day exactly as it was enacted in the first place, the agreements among trades unions are absolutely lawful and binding and can be enforced. Now, what I ask myself is this : If a labouring man went on strike in contravention of the section now under consideration, and were charged with that offence, if he offered as a defence that he belonged to a trade union and was bound to follow the rules and by-laws of that organization, which are expressly declared to be legal, would it be possible to convict him ? He would say : I received orders under the by-laws of my association, from the committee on strike or from the walking delegate, to cease work —it seems to me that his defence could not be overruled as long as the Trades' Union Act is in force. I mention that in order that the minister may give the point his consideration, for, if this law is to be worth anything it must be workable ; and it seems to me that the defence which the labouring man would offer under the circumstances I have indicated would be a valid defence and would enable him to evade absolutely the provision of this section and the one following.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not think the Trades Unions would evade the law any more than other parties. This law provides that no strike or lockout can take place unless an investigation has been held. A trades union or any member of a trades' union could not evade that law under the pretext that he has received instructions to strike from the walking delegate or the officers of the union.

On section 58,

58. In every case where a dispute has been referred to a board, until the dispute has been finally dealt with by the board, neither of the parties nor the employees affected shall, on account of the dispute, do or be concerned in doing, directly or indirectly, anything in the nature of a lockout or strike, or a suspension or discontinuance of employment or work, but the relationship of employer and employee shall continue uninterrupted by the dispute, or anything arising out of the dispute ; but if, in the opinion of the board, either party uses this or any other provision of this Act for the purpose of unjustly maintaining a given condition of affairs through delay, and the board so reports to the minister, such party shall be guilty of an offence, and liable to the same penalties as are imposed for a violation of the next preceding section.

Mr. LEMIEUX. At a former stage of the discussion, I submitted to the House in anticipation of the discussion to take place on this clause an amendment which I intended to propose. I move to insert, before the words 'in every case,' the words : 'Employers and employees shall give at least thirty days' notice of intended change affecting the conditions of employment in respect of wages and hours ; and also to insert after the word 'shall' and before the words 'on account' the words: 'alter the conditions of employment in respect of wages or hours or——

Amendment agreed to.

On section 62—Dismissing an employee because of membership in union, illegal ; and section 63—Striking because of employment of persons other than union members, illegal.

Mr. LOGAN. Some time ago the minister agreed to drop these two sections. I object to these sections, among other reasons, because they go to determine matters in dispute between employers and employees which are better left undetermined by this Bill. I think it would be better for all concerned in reference to this matter of open shop or closed shop, that we should leave it entirely in the hands of the parties themselves.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When I first introduced the Bill, several members of the House on both sides, notably the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), represented to me that we should hesitate to embody these two clauses in the Bill. Personally I was in favour of these two clauses, and thought they should be incorporated in the Bill. But I find there is a strong objection to them. Under these circumstances I yield to the pressure which is brought to bear by hon. members, and I will drop these two clauses 62 and 63.

Mr. BARR. The two most important clauses in the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Would that be called a saw off ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is tit for tat.

The final clause being passed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must thank the committee for its courtesy in dealing with the Bill so far. I have already stated that it would be necessary to have the Bill as amended reprinted and distributed to members, in order that they might have a knowledge of the Bill in its present shape. There are some clauses which have not yet been passed. I think perhaps on Wednesday next, if it is agreeable to hon. gentlemen, we may be able to take up the Bill again after it has been reprinted. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Before you rise, and while we are devoting a good deal of attention to this phase of the railway question, there is another phase of it that ought to be taken up, and that is the large number of accidents that are happening to-day in Canada and all over the continent of America. The matter has become so serious that I think it demands the immediate attention of parliament. It seems to me that the great railway corporations of this country are devoting too much attention to the expansion of their systems rather than to the operation of their systems to the satisfaction of the public. I take this occasion of calling the attention of parliament to the matter, by reason of another accident that has occurred to-day very near this city.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 27) respecting La Banque Nationale.—Mr. Lachance.

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Masonic Protective Association of Canada.—Mr. Parmelee.

NORTHWESTERN TRUST COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 31) to incorporate the Northwestern Trust Company, Mr. M. S. McCarthy.

On the preamble,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is this one of the regular trust companies ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, these Bills are made to conform to the usual trust company Bill.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is there a clause that calls for an annual report to the government as the minister promised a year ago ?

Mr. FIELDING. We do get reports.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I asked that a year ago and the minister could not tell if he had got reports.

Mr. FIELDING. I brought the reports down afterwards.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are the reports of the trust companies on the table ?

Mr. FIELDING. A portion of them are ; some which are provincial companies send their reports to us and they are included in one of the volumes of the Insurance Report. Yes, this contains a clause requiring a report to be made.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. These trust companies are becoming so numerous and have such a large volume of business to transact that I think it is time they should be put under a general Act. The minister promised that he would think of it and bring in a general Act defining the kind of report they should make.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I did not promise ; I said the matter was worthy of consideration. Of course these companies are by no means numerous as insurance companies. It is worthy of consideration whether we should have a general Act. This is in the usual form and it would not make any great difference, it is a matter of convenience.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of Auditor General for the year ended June 30, 1906, volume II.—Mr. Fielding.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Public buildings—Quebec—Grosse Isle quarantine station—improvements and repairs to buildings, $12,000.

Mr. MONK. How is this sum going to be applied?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). There are a lot of small repairs of various kinds to the church, sheds, stables, &c. There are no large amounts.

Mr. MONK. What repairs to the church?

Mr. FISHER. To recover part of the roof which leaks.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How do we come to repair churches?

Mr. FISHER. This station is an island without any inhabitants except the people in the government employ and we provide for their spiritual welfare.

Immigration buildings generally, province of Quebec, $5,000.

Mr. DANIEL. In what places are there immigrant buildings?

Mr. FISHER. In Nominingue, Roberval and Peribonka. These are where the repatriation work is being carried on. The provision for this year was $5,000. Of that $1,600 has not been spent so that there will be a revote of $1,600 out of the $5,000. The Nominingue immigrant building was placed under contract in 1906. The amount of the contract is $3,400; fittings and furniture will cost $1,600, and the site will cost $1,500; making a total of $5,500. Tenders were called for and the lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice by the Auditor General's Report at page V—53, that there was purchased for the Montreal immigration offices a gas stove at a cost of $86, 25 cots at $10 each, a roll-top desk for $32, 2 dressers and stands for $42 and $16, a 9 foot by 4 foot table for $32, and other things in the same proportion. These are pretty high prices.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose these things were necessary furniture for the buildings. Unless I am mistaken the cots are iron, with woven wire fittings under the mattresses. I should think that was not an out of the way price for them. Twenty-three dollars does not appear to be out of the way for a refrigerator. The cost of a gas stove depends altogether upon the capacity of the stove.

Mr. MONK. I would like to get some information in regard to these immigrant buildings. What we require most in the northern part of the province of Quebec for immigration as well as all other purposes is railway communication. Who is at present in charge of the building at Nominingue?

Mr. BOURASSA. That is in my constituency, and if the minister will permit me I can satisfy my hon. friend in a few words. This building was asked for by the Immigration Society of Montreal for a number of years. Nominingue is the terminal point of the Canadian Pacific Railway branch going from Montreal to the north. The object of this is to afford to settlers who are being repatriated or to ordinary provincial settlers who want to reach further points to the north, varying from ten to sixty miles distant, a house where they can lodge with their families and their effects, without being subjected to the high prices exacted by hotel-keepers. The house is built right at the station; they get there without paying any transportation and can remain there and thus avoid the higher rates charged by hotel-keepers until they are prepared to go to the Lièvre valley.

Mr. MONK. The purpose is a very good one. Is the house finished?

Mr. FISHER. It will be for this season.

Mr. BOURASSA. Now they can go up the railway instead of having to go round by the Nominingue district.

Lachute public building, $10,000.

Mr. MONK. Is that to be erected this year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, the plans are prepared and tenders will be asked at once.

Levis public building, $8,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is to finish. The total cost will be $42,000. The expenditure to November 30 last, was $29,000. It is intended for a post office, custom house and usual government offices.

Montreal barracks for permanent corps, $20,000.

Mr. MONK. Where is that to be situated?

Mr. FISHER. The site has not yet been purchased.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What will be the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. Probably three quarters of a million. I have not yet seen the plan, but these barracks will be on the same scale as those in Toronto, and the estimate I have given is what the latter is expected to cost.

Mr. MONK. We are entitled to a more detailed statement before voting this amount. Is the minister in a position to tell the committee how far negotiations have proceeded for the purchase of the site or what is the obstacle in the way?

Mr. FISHER. Various propositions have been made. The city of Montreal has acquired from the government St. Helens island for park purposes, and we propose utilizing the money to be received from the city in the purchase of a site and construction of these barracks. There is a good deal of difficulty in deciding on the best place. Some people want the barracks to go to the west end; others want them in the east, some want them in the centre of the city, and others at Lachine, and others also at Longue Pointe. With such a variety of proposals, the Militia Department has not yet been able to make up its mind.

Montreal new postal station 'B'—site and building, $30,000.

Mr. FISHER. This building is under contract. It is situated on St. Catherine Street near University.

Nicolet public building, $17,000.

Mr. MONK. What is the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. $25,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I see in the Auditor General's Report a charge made for the travelling expenses of Mr. J. B. Charleson. What position does he hold with regard to public works?

Mr. FISHER. He is the general inspector of public buildings.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that the same Mr. Charleson who was inspector of the Yukon telegraph?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Quebec immigration buildings—additions, renewals, repairs, &c., $7,500.

Mr. MONK. How is that to be expended?

Mr. FISHER. On a variety of small repairs. The amount expended last year up to the end of December was about $900 out of an appropriation of $5,000. These are the buildings on the Louise embankment to which the immigrants have come from the ships. The buildings are constantly in need of repairs.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Does the department call for tenders for this work?

Mr. FISHER. No, this is only for small repairs.

Quebec immigrant hospital for treatment of immigrants suffering from trachoma and kindred diseases in Savard park—reconstruction of building destroyed by fire, $40,000.

Mr. FISHER. That is under contract.

Mr. MONK. What is the entire amount we have spent on that hospital from its inception? What did the building cost which was destroyed by fire?

Mr. FISHER. The building destroyed cost about $30,000. I have not before me the total expenditure. The new building is to cost about $80,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How is this maintained? Do the parties who get the benefit of it contribute?

Mr. FISHER. I understand that the steamship companies have to pay.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But if the immigrants have the money they are expected to pay, are they not?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but for the destitute ones the steamship companies have to pay.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. About what size is this building?

Mr. FISHER. The building is to be 147 feet long by 57 feet in width and two stories high.

Mr. DANIEL. How many patients will it accommodate?

Mr. FISHER. I understand that at a pinch it will accommodate 400.

Mr. DANIEL. The question may not be quite in order here, but perhaps the minister can tell us something of the policy of the government with regard to the detention of trachoma patients?

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to ask the Minister of the Interior when the immigration estimates are up.

Quebec military buildings—main store building at Dominion Arsenal, $6,500.

Mr. MONK. What is that?

Mr. FISHER. This is a stone and cement building which is to be 71 feet long and 53 feet wide at the intersection of Carleton and Arsenal streets. It has been put under contract recently. Tenders were called for and the lowest tenderer was awarded the contract.

Mr. MONK. What is the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. The tender came in very recently, and my information concerning it is not complete. But the estimate is $36,000, and I am told that the contract awarded is for a good many thousand dollars less.

Mr. MONK. Who is the contractor?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the name before me, but I will ascertain it.

Mr. MONK. Is it a tender for the completion of the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Quebec East—public building, $30,000.

Mr. FISHER. Nothing has been done about that yet.

Mr. MONK. No site chosen, nor anything else done?

Mr. FISHER. I find nothing in the information before me about a site having been purchased.

Mr. MONK. I do not think that system of voting money is a very satisfactory one. The committee is given no information to show where the building is to be or what kind of building it is to be. We have no means of judging whether the vote should be $30,000, or $40,000, or $15,000.

Mr. FISHER. I will give my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) some information if he will allow me. The report is that St. Rochs post office is absolutely inadequate for the wants of the place. St. Roch is a large manufacturing and industrial portion of Quebec in which centres a large retail trade. I have before me a copy of a petition from the people showing the need of additional post office accommodation.

Mr. MONK. To whom is it addressed ?

Mr. FISHER. To the Postmaster General.

Mr. MONK. I know that St. Roch is a very busy locality. Would the minister let me see the petition?

Mr. FISHER. What I have before me is only a copy of the allegations and without the signatures. The signatures appear on the original petition, which, of course, we can bring down if desired.

Mr. MONK. I would give great consideration to such a petition, aside from any reasons that the minister has given. But when the government ask for such a sum as this they should be ready to show that there is some immediate need for it. There has been no purchase of a site, there is no recommendation from the Post Office Department, nor the report of any official showing the necessity for this building. The petition is the only thing we have to enable us to judge what amount should be voted.

Mr. FISHER. I can give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) some further information if he will allow me. There are now two post offices one at St. Sauveur and one at St. Roch, both under rental, one at $700 and the other at $300. The population of the first to be served is a trifle under $40,000. The postal revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30th last were, for St. Roch, $11,775, and from St. Sauveur, $4,824; a total of almost $17,000 per annum. Money orders issued, $77,000, and paid, $20,000. Payments to postmaster at St. Roch, $824; to postmaster at St. Sauveur, $691. These payments are based on the amount of business done in these offices. Then comes a petition which was forwarded, endorsed by the Postmaster General to the Public Works Department.

Mr. MONK. Is that the information upon which this vote is asked ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. In addition to that, is the reason that the Public Works Department understand the need of a public building of this character at Quebec, and it is considered that $30,000 could be properly utilized during the coming fiscal year towards the erection of such a building.

Mr. MONK. I think that a considerable expenditure of money is required, both at Quebec and at Montreal, for many purposes. These are the two most important places in the province of Quebec. If we have regard only to the recommendations of the transportation committee, and if we intend to carry out those recommendations, we ought to be spending a large amount of money to solve the transportation problem at Montreal and Quebec. It is not with any feeling of hostility to this expenditure that I must say that I consider the data is insufficient upon which we are asked to vote this money. The minister shows that a considerable postal business is done in that part of the city of Quebec, there is no question about that. But that is no proof that a new postal building is required there. It would be better to expend this money in carrying out the recommendations of the Transportation Commission in the important port of Quebec. We have no reasoned report from the Department of Public Works to show what this $30,000 is specifically required for. No doubt there is a petition somewhere asking for this improvement, but we have not got it before us. It seems to me that where it is a question of initiating a large public work such as this which must cost $100,000 at least, the department would proceed much more satisfactorily, and the committee would be more willing to consent to the vote, if we had such information as is generally laid before a board of directors of any business company when they propose to enter into a large enterprise of this kind. It is not because there is a large business at that post office that we should have a $30,000 building; we should have to justify this vote a statement from a responsible official of that department to the effect that a new building is absolutely necessary, and what will be its approximate cost. It seems to me we ought to have before us the petition asking for that expenditure, in order to understand the grounds upon which they ask it. Speaking generally, there is no doubt that improvements of this kind are required in the city of Quebec and in the city of Montreal. But I would object to a large vote, for instance, to enlarge the post office at Monreal without having before us all the necessary information to justify it.

Sherbrooke drill hall, $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. The site has been purchased, the plans are all prepared, and tenders will be asked for probably within a few weeks.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When will the building be completed and ready for occupation ?

Mr. FISHER. I hope the contracts will be awarded within a month, and I think a year from this spring the building will be completed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Has the minister any information as to how the regiments will be provided for in the meantime ?

Mr. FISHER. No, that would come under the Militia Department.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What will be the probable total cost of the building ?

Mr. FISHER. About $80,000.

St. Johns military buildings—stables for cavalry, $7,000.

Mr. MONK. Are there any stables there now ?

Mr. FISHER. I think only a temporary stable. There was a cavalry school there, but they had no cavalry stables, and had to build some.

Mr. MONK. Is the department in possession of any estimate as to the cost of these stables ?

Mr. FISHER. Not a detailed estimate. There is a requisition sent in by the Militia Department.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Has the department under consideration the disposal or exchange of this property ?

Mr. FISHER. Not the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MONK. For what number of horses is accommodation needed here ?

Mr. FISHER. For one school, I think about 100.

Mr. ALCORN. Would the minister explain this item of $322.89 for advertising St. John public buildings ?

Mr. FISHER. Advertising for tenders.

Mr. ALCORN. In what papers?

Mr. FISHER. Local and other papers in Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa, and I do not know how far west.

Three Rivers drill hall, $15,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is under contract ; nearly completed.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. FISHER. $52,500, and the total cost will probably be about $70,000.

Mr. DANIEL. How many different corps is the building expected to accommodate?

Mr. FISHER. My notes do not tell me that.

Mr. MONK. There is only one corps at Three Rivers.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think there is one regiment of four companies.

Mr. MONK. What will bring the cost up from $50,000 to $70,000?

Mr. FISHER. The contract is $52,500, and there is the additional work of laying a mastic floor, $1,100, making $53,600. Then there is $1,425 for heating boilers, $2,000 for electric wiring and fixtures, $5,000 for fittings and furniture, $3,000 for sidewalk and fences, $2,300 for contingencies and superintendence, and nearly $2,000 for printing and advertising and supervision of the architect in Three Rivers.

Mr. MONK. I know it is a very invidious task to criticise any expenditure for public buildings, but knowing Three Rivers as I do, if it is to accommodate one regiment composed of four companies, it seems to me a very large expenditure. I doubt very much if the business population would not have preferred to seeing that amount of money spent in improving the port and giving greater facilities to that port in view of the large trade which the back country is developing just now. I doubt very much if the people would not have preferred that kind of expenditure to so abnormal an expenditure on the drill hall. I know there is a great desire generally to erect a public building in a constituency, but I think that in most cases, but certainly in this one, the expenditure would have been wiser if it had been even greater, but applied to a more practical object.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose the militia people want this drill hall.

Mr. MONK. No, I do not think that probably in this case that is what has happened. It is generally the sitting member who wants to erect a monument to himself —I do not say it is so in this case—and have his name placed on a post office or public building. But very often it seems to me that expenditures, perhaps less calculated to reflect undying glory upon the member, but more useful to the constituency might be made.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I asked the minister if the department had in contemplation the removal of the dragoons from St. Johns, Quebec. My reason for asking was that in the 'Star' to-night there appears an article as follows :

Want barracks for seminary purposes.

St. Johns deputation will ask government to remove dragoons.—Many citizens opposed.—It is claimed such a step is unnecessary, and might become permanent.

Mr. FISHER. What is that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is an article in the Montreal 'Star.'

Mr. FISHER. Oh, well, you need not bother about that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The 'Herald,' I mean.

Mr. FISHER. It is only a rumour.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It says:

St. Johns, Quebec, March 1.—A deputation, consisting of the mayor-elect, J. S. Messier, councillors and other citizens, is in Ottawa today for the purpose of urging the government to allow the temporary displacement of the dragoons from the barracks at that place. This step they ask in the interests of the homeless students of the College of Ste. Marie de Monnoir, who would then find quarters in the barracks here until, as it is represented, the academy could be rebuilt.

Mr. FISHER. I have not heard anything about that.

Mr. MONK. I would like to make this observation in connection with the whole of this vote for the province of Quebec. It is always a disagreeable task to select any particular locality for criticism, but anybody who will look through the whole list of appropriations for next year, amounting to nearly half a million for the nine months ending the 31st of March, 1907, and amounting to nearly another half million for the next fiscal year——

Mr. FISHER. We are not asking any more for the twelve months than we asked last year for the nine months, and nearly half of these are revotes; so that it is not extravagant at all.

Mr. MONK. Well, it is extravagant in this way, that I am perfectly sure that if we devoted the half of that amount in the province of Quebec—because I will admit that perhaps half of it is devoted to necessary works—to carrying out the suggestions of the Transportation Commission, which have been referred to more than once this year in this House, the province would derive a hundred times more benefit from that expenditure than from most of these expenditures for new public buildings which are mentioned in this list. Very often during the present session the advisability of carrying out the suggestion of the Transportation Commission has been discussed. I do not wish to refer to that debate, but why is it since that very important document has been before the government and before the country we have so signally failed to carry out specifically the recommendations made there? It is, I venture to say, because every year we are obliged to vote a very large amount of money to erecting buildings, and very often the wharfs, in constituencies where the benefit derived is very slight. Very often it is done to enrich or benefit individuals. If we carried out the suggestion of the Transportation Commission, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned; if, for instance, we devoted that money to making the ports of Montreal and Quebec national ports and making the channel between Montreal and Quebec and below Quebec what the Transportation Commission recommended the government to make it without any delay, the money would be far better spent.

Mr. FISHER. I think my hon. friend, before the end of the session, will see that he has nothing to complain about in regard to transportation.

Public buildings, Ontario—Alexandria, reconstruction of portions destroyed by fire, $3,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is this the ordinary buildings of the usual kind, customs house, post office and that kind of thing?

Mr. FISHER. There is a post office; I do not know if there is a customs house or not. The usual public building in a small place.

Belleville armoury, $30,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice an item of $391 for law expenses; it seems an enormous amount.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose that was for the purchase of site, &c. I understand that a site was purchased there and then an exchange was made at the request of the people of the city involving a considerable amount in searching for titles, no less than three lots had to be obtained in the exchange.

Mr. ALCORN. Where does Mr. Butler who was paid this amount at V—60 practise?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose in Belleville.

Mr. ALCORN. I do not know any man of that name there.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It seems a large amount in comparison with what you pay others for similar work.

Mr. FISHER. There was a good deal more work.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Deeds are generally at the expense of the seller. I understand a prudent man having the title examined to see that it was good, but this seems an excessive amount.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know the Ontario practice, but in Quebec I have had to pay for the registration of the deed.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But not the legal expenses to have the deeds drawn. You have to pay for registration if you want to protect yourself, but that is a small item and I think $40 or $50 would be a big fee for this work. I know that lawyers in the House do not like to criticise the bills of other lawyers; they have a sort of feeling among themselves, but some of us who have to pay these bills sometimes feel like criticising them.

Mr. ALCORN. I would like an explanation of the item. I do not think there is a gentleman of that name practising in Belleville.

Mr. FISHER. I really cannot say. I will have to inquire about this. The Justice Department tax these bills always and authorize the payment.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is not satisfactory. If there are two departments concerned in an item, both ministers should be here. It has become a common practice for the other ministers to be absent when one minister is getting his estimates through, but we should be able to get these explanations fully.

Mr. FISHER. I am willing to get the information for my hon. friend, but he knows that there is a lot of this detail about which the minister does not know anything.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. There are your officers.

Mr. FISHER. We cannot have the officials here all the time. I will see that the information is given.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I have not asked who Mr. Butler is because I think I know.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps he will tell the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn)?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. My impression is he is a brother of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals and a very respectable man.

Mr. FISHER. Is he a lawyer?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think he is.

Mr. FISHER. Is he at Belleville?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think he was, but I do not know whether he is there now or not. I think he is a brother of Mr. Butler, the deputy minister, for whom I have the greatest respect, but that does not make any difference.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to know just what the hon. gentleman wants?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I want a detailed statement of what these law costs were for.

Mr. FISHER. I shall get the details.

Dominion public buildings—post office renewals, repairs, &c., $16,000.

Mr. U. WILSON.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I presume the Brockville public building is included under this. I see a charge of about $6,000 for that at V—62.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that was a settlement of an old claim on the Brockville public building.

Mr. ARMSTRONG There is a charge for interest?

Mr. FISHER. When the claim was settled, as the money had been retained for some time, interest was paid.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There are apparently three claims, as there are three items of interest.

Mr. FISHER. There were three different claims at three different dates, and the interest had to be reckoned on each claim up to the time of payment.

Mr. MONK. If the minister is in a position to explain, I think it would be interesting to learn something respecting the award to Tompkins, Crain & Company, in connection with the Brockville public building. An award was made on June 13, 1904, of $2,102.50, and Tompkins, Crain & Company were paid $6,046.60. The difference between these two amounts apparently is for interest—some $4,000. The minister can no doubt find out from his officer how there came to be such a large amount paid for interest.

Mr. FISHER. This claim was dealt with by a special board of arbitration, composed of the deputy minister. the chief engineer of the department, and the engineer of the Otawa river works. They examined witnesses under oath, went into all the facts of the case, and eventually made this award. It was a special item, voted by the House with an explanation. The interest on the award was from 1886 to 1906, twenty years.

Mr. MONK. Was that included in the award ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Do I understand, from the vote just passed for the Chatham armoury, that the contractors, who I understand have completed their contract and want their money, will now be able to get their money ?

Mr. FISHER. They will when this vote has passed parliament.

Guelph armoury, $50,000.

Mr. ALCORN. I notice that in connection with this $543.70 has been paid for advertising.

Mr. FISHER. That is for advertising for tenders.

Mr. ALCORN. Is it the practice of the department to advertise every contract in a set number of papers, or are the papers selected for different contracts ?

Mr. FISHER. The practice is to advertise in large cities, where a large number of the contractors live, and in smaller places within a fair radius of the place where the work is to be performed.

Mr. ALCORN. All Reform papers.

Mr. FISHER. Both.

Mr. BARR. I notice that $392 has been paid for advertising the Hamilton drill hall.

Mr. FISHER. That is probably for advertising all over western Ontario.

Mr. BARR. Are notices sent to the papers, or do they put in the advertisement without any instructions ?

Mr. FISHER. The King's Printer sends notices to the papers.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister advertise only in papers which support the administration, or does he advertise in papers generally ?

Mr. FISHER. I think we give a preference to those which support the government.

Mr. DANIEL. He does sometimes put an advertisement in a paper that does not support the government ? Could he tell us what Conservative papers these advertisements appear in ?

Mr. ALCORN. The amount spent for advertising the Guelph armoury was more than ten per cent of the amount spent.

Mr. FISHER. The Guelph armoury is an $80,000 contract.

Hamilton drill hall—addition, $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will that building cost ?

Mr. FISHER. $300,000 in round numbers.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the city furnish the site ?

Mr. FISHER. No, we purchased it and paid $30,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How was the site purchased ?

Mr. FISHER. Through the Justice department, no doubt on the recommendation of the Militia department.

Mr. SPROULE. Who has the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. George Webb.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. A first-class builder and a good contractor.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it given to the lowest tenderer ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Hamilton post office—alterations to building, &c., $10,000.

Mr. ALCORN. I find that the Office Specialty Manufacturing Company figures extensively in the Auditor General's Report for supplies to the different post offices. It figures for $193.12 to the London post office, $2,897 to the Guelph public building, $1,406 to the Galt building $652, to the Chatham building and so on. Are all these purchases made without tender ?

Mr. FISHER. Very likely. The explanation was given the other night. There are only two firms who can supply the letter boxes and other post office fixings, and we give the contract on fixed prices which were established some years ago.

Kingston military buildings—barracks for Royal Canadian Field Artillery, $18,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Last year we spent $6,900 for new stables for the Royal Military College. What is the explanation of that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Formerly the college used the horses attached to the field battery, but that was found exceedingly inconvenient. The commandant has been urging us for years to take this step, and I thought it was in the interests of the college to build these stables.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How many horses ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not remember.

London post office—additions and improvements, $7,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice that Mr. H. C. McBride, architect, was paid seven and a half per cent commission on $23,000 expenditure, $1,725.

Mr. FISHER. That is the standard commission paid an architect for superintending repairs and alterations.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did he superintend as well as do the architect's work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. ALCORN. What is the explanation of the payment of $617 for extra work for moving defective wall ?

Mr. FISHER. When they got to work they found another piece of wall not indicated in the contract which was defective and which had to be removed.

London military buildings—new stores building, $12,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there not a very large item for a military building some years ago ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend is thinking of the drill hall, which is completed. This is a small building for stores. We had been renting a building for many years which was not satisfactory, and it was thought better to construct a building and thus save money because the interest at three and a half per cent is less than the rental we were paying.

North Bay public building, $25,000.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. How much land was purchased for that site, and what was the total cost?

Mr. FISHER. The site is 66 by 132, and the building will be 55 by 90 feet. It will cost $8,100. We hope it will be finished by the 1st of January next.

Mr. ALCORN. I find an item for advertising, $307. Does the government pay the advertising rates fixed by the papers themselves, or has the government any scale of their own?

Mr. FISHER. The rates are fixed by the King's Printer for all papers. They go through his hands and payments are made by him.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said some time ago that the Department of Public Works sends out a copy of the advertisement to each paper.

Mr. FISHER. The King's Printer does that, and only those are paid. I have noticed, not unfrequently, advertisements of this kind in other papers which were not authorized to print them, to which the advertisements were not sent. But only those are paid which the King's Printer has ordered. As I explained a few minutes ago, advertisements are inserted in the large papers of widest circulation. Then we take a radius from the locality itself, and advertise in the papers within that district.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is this building to cost altogether?

Mr. FISHER. About $59,000. The contract was let for $33,879. Then there is the site, heating, lighting, furniture, fixtures, sidewalks and fences.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice in the Auditor General's Report, in connection with this (North Bay building, there is an item of $100 for salaries at Ottawa. In looking up to see what that refers to, I find it refers to services of Mr. Beaton, architect. Is Mr. Beaton an employee of the government, living in Ottawa?

Mr. FISHER. I understand that this gentleman was taken out of the Public Works Department and put on this special work. He is paid that amount until he was appointed by order in council. This $100 is to pay his salary before he went on by order in council.

Ottawa departmental buildings—fittings, &c., $40,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With reference to this item, I notice a purchase of metallic fittings from the Eclipse Manufacturing Company. I notice that this company are furnishing a large number of book racks, steel drawers and roller shelves. Is this the only company in Canada that is capable of furnishing these articles?

Mr. FISHER. That and the Toronto Specialty Company are the only two companies who make these steel shelves. There was another company at Gananoque, but that has gone out of business.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice there are very extensive purchases of these goods. Are they supplied by tender?

Mr. FISHER. Tenders have been asked for several times, and these two companies are the only ones who tender. It is a question in my mind whether that amounts to anything. Where the tenders are not asked for, prices are fixed according to those which have been paid under tenders.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. When the minister says that tenders were called for, does he mean that several firms were invited to send in their estimates?

Mr. FISHER. No, we have advertised several times, with the result that nobody else has tendered except these two companies. They are the only two companies equipped with the machinery necessary to make these steel shelves. The article is patented. A little while ago we advertised for tenders for fittings in the post office buildings here, and nobody else tendered except these two companies.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How are these goods purchased—by the foot, by the pound or by the yard, or how?

Mr. FISHER. Plans and specifications are prepared by the officers of the department, and these people have to work to that plan and specification.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then their estimate is made on that plan?

Mr. FISHER. Plans are prepared for the room. I happen to have observed one case, and know how this work is done. The plans for the room are prepared and estimates made of the weight of shelving required. This is done by an officer of the Department of Public Works. The plans being all drawn to scale. When the weight of metal required is known, tenders are called for.

Mr. MONK. What is this $40,000 to be spent for ?

Mr. FISHER. Almost altogether for the steel shelving and filing cases. There are a lot of them in this building.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it intended to call for tenders publicly ?

Mr. FISHER. Whenever we can get tenders from parties outside of these two firms we shall be glad to get them. We have asked for tenders over and over again and none but these two firms have put in tenders.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do you publish an advertisement in the papers ?

Mr. FISHER. No, they come and look at the specifications. Or, by writing, they can get a copy of the plans, and then they can tender.

Owen Sound public building, $30,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What progress is being made with this building ?

Mr. FISHER. A site has been bought on the corner of Baker and Sproat streets. Tenders are now being called for. The site cost $10,950, and it was bought from the Kilburn Real Estate Company, Limited.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the building to accommodate, post office, customs and inland revenue ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the plan for the building been made ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the size ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the details of the plan here. I suppose the building will nearly cover the lot.

Mr. SPROULE. The contract will be let by tender ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and to the lowest bidder.

Mr. SPROULE. How was the lot purchased ? Was it purchased direct by the department ?

Mr, FISHER. Yes, from the Kilburn Real Estate Company, Limited.

Peterborough armoury, $30,000.

Mr. MONK. Is this to complete the building ?

Mr. FISHER. The contract is let. I believe it is for $126,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is the building to cost when completed ?

Mr. FISHER. About $150,000 or $160,000.

Mr. SPROULE. To whom was the contract let.

Mr. FISHER. To Mr. Proctor, of Sarnia.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the result of tenders ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the lowest tenderer get the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. From whom was the site purchased, and what size is it ?

Mr. FISHER. It was purchased from the corporation of the town of Peterborough and the price was $10,000. The lot has a frontage of 450 feet on Murray street and 185 feet on St. George street.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. Is it the ordinary custom for the department to decide to put up a building, spend money on the site and let a contract, and then come to parliament for the money ?

Mr. FISHER. There was a vote for this last year, and I think one the year before. When the first vote is made by parliament, that is looked upon as a decision by parliament in favour of the construction of the building, and then the work is gone on with.

St. Catharines public building—improvements, &c., $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What improvements is the department making there ?

Mr. FISHER. Renewing the plumbing, carpenter work, painting, repairing the roof and other items.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this done by tender, or by day work ?

Mr. FISHER. It is done by day work on the estimate of the architect.

St. Mary's public building, $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. That is under contract for $22,506.

Mr. ALCORN. This contains an item of $355 for advertising ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it is the same kind of thing as in the other instance.

Mr. ALCORN. I see that the amount spent for advertising last year was about $182,000.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose that was for the advertising of all the departments all over the country.

Mr. ALCORN. What other advertising is there besides Public Works ?

Mr. FISHER. There is a great deal of advertising, for instance, by the Department of the Interior. Occasionally the Department of Agriculture has to advertise—we have to send out notices concerning quarantine and diseases of animals. The Justice Department is called upon to advertise in certain matters. The Railways and Canals Department advertise their time tables. You hardly can take up a newspaper but you find there a government advertisement of some kind.

Mr. ALCORN. Does this $182,000 include everything in the way of advertising ?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose it does from what my hon. friend says.

Mr. ALCORN. This item at page V—10.

Mr. FISHER. I should think that was the general item of advertising.

St. Thomas drill hall—grading grounds, $3,000.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. What is the nature of this vote ?

Mr. FISHER. This is for grading and levelling the ground around St. Thomas drill hall as requested by the Department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. How much land does that take in ?

Mr. FISHER. 601 feet on Wilson street, and 590 feet on Chester street, 32 lots, including a street called East avenue, in all 8⅝ acres.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. That $3,000 is intended to be used in grading that ground ?

Mr. FISHER. Levelling and fencing the property.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. How is that work being done ?

Mr. FISHER. It is not done yet. I do not know whether it will be done by contract or not.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. I know that they are working at it now. I know the fence is up and they are grading. Is that work being done by day labour or contract labour?

Mr. FISHER. I understand the fence is paid for so much a foot.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. Who has the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the names.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. Who is the overseer?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the names.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. How is the grading done ?

Mr. FISHER. My officer thinks it is done at so much a yard ?

Mr. WM. JACKSON. If it is done by the yard who has the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know anything about the details.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. I would like to know.

Mr. FISHER. I will get them for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. If it is done by day work I would like to know who is the overseer.

Mr. MONK. How much is being paid a yard for that work ?

Mr. ALCORN.

Mr. FISHER. I will find that out, I have not the information.

Simcoe public building, $10,000.

Mr. MONK. Anything done yet there ?

Mr. FISHER. The site is bought and this is to go on with the work. Contract has not been let.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a post office and custom house combined.

Mr. FISHER. Post office and customs.

Stratford armoury, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for ?

Mr. FISHER. To complete the building.

Toronto customs house—alterations and additions, $15,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is under contract.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. minister say whether he has any policy in regard to the proposal to dispose of the present Toronto custom house and put up a large building ?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say as to that.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Of course it is a building that in its present position you would not be justified in spending much on, in view of the fact that the block is likely to be taken for the railway improvements. The business now done there is the largest in any custom house in the country and there is a lack of accommodation for that business. It is a very old fashioned building and I would suggest to the minister that he should give his attention to the question of providing the facilities required to accommodate the large amount of business done in the Toronto custom house. With all the improvements that are going on now in Toronto I would suggest that the government instead of continuing to spend money on this building should consider the question of providing a new building.

Mr. FISHER. I will ask my hon. friend the Minister of Customs about it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask what the position of Mr. S. G. Curry is in reference to these Toronto buildings ?

Mr. FISHER. He is supervising architect on commission.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What commission does he receive.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose the usual architect's commission. It depends on the class of work.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has he charge of all the public buildings in Toronto ?

Mr. FISHER. Most of them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. He acts as clerk of the works as well as architect.

Mr. FISHER. He is architect and clerk of works.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have just gathered from the Auditor General's Report that S. G. Curry has received in all $4,499.77.

Mr. FISHER. Last year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As his commission on different works that have been going on there. I think that some explanation is necessary.

Mr. FISHER. At page V—76 there is a list of works which he has been supervising, and the commission paid him is for each of these works. I notice that in most of these cases the value of the work is given and the commission is evidently based upon that value.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. At page V—77 I find a payment of $2,559.

Mr. FISHER. That is for the same kind of work.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is that additional ?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose so.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well then I made a mistake in saying $4,499.77. Instead of $4,499.77 it appears that he received $7,459.35 and it appears that the more expensive is the building the more money this gentleman expends the greater the amount the commission he will receive.

Mr. FISHER. That is always the case in architectural work.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does that apply to the clerks of the works as well ? The more expense a man can place on a building the greater his commission will be ? Is that what I understand ?

Mr. FISHER. No, he does not design the building, it is designed here, the contract is let here, and he is requested to see to the carrying out of that contract. The price is fixed before he gets it and he is given a percentage on the cost of the work carried out under his supervision. This is the regular thing in architect's payments ; clerks of the works are generally paid so much a day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Some of this work is not done by contract but under his supervision and the more money he would spend the more commission he would receive. Apparently he receives $7,459.35 for his commissions on this work.

Mr. FISHER. That work was not necessarily done all in that year and all his payments that I can see are the two items of $2,959 and $2,958.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister will find a number of other items such as V—76, $95 and payments for the Toronto post office, and the postal station, &c.

Mr. FISHER. These are the itemized statements, it is all included above, the two figures I have given are the only ones.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. Would it not be better to employ a man on a salary ?

Mr. FISHER. That would depend on the amount of work to be done. In a place like Toronto we might keep an architect all the time, and if there was a great deal of work of this kind being done it would be cheaper but where there is not much it would be dearer.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. How does the minister propose to handle the large appropriations for the new drill hall and armouries, $150,000.

Mr. FISHER. I think a special arrangement would have to be made for a thing of this kind.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Are clerks of works still employed ?

Mr. FISHER. Not where there is an architect.

Mr. MONK. I would suggest, in view of the lateness of the hour and the absence of members for Toronto, that these larger items should be reserved.

Mr. FISHER. We might hold one item or pass these with the understanding that any Toronto items which members want to discuss may be taken up again.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend knows that is very unsatisfactory to those interested.

Mr. FISHER. If we apply that principle we could not pass more items, as the members for Manitoba I do not think are present. We will keep one item.

Mr. SPROULE. It is understood that any Toronto member may refer to these items or the ones which are held over.

Mr. FISHER. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I see that Mr. Curry gets five per cent commission on this work in Toronto.

Mr. FISHER. When Mr. Currie prepares plans and designs for the buildings as in the case of the customs house he gets five per cent. When he acts simply as clerk of the works and supervising architect, and the plans are prepared here, he only gets two and a half per cent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. For superintending work on the post office, he gets seven and a half per cent.

Mr. FISHER. That is the usual payment to architects for repairs of that kind. This kind of work is much more difficult than designing a new building.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. A great deal of this repair work is done by day labour, of which I approve, especially on small jobs, but in that kind of work he is merely a foreman in charge of the men, yet instead of getting two and a half per cent as when he does not prepare plans, he gets seven and a half per cent.

Toronto drill hall—additional accommodation for new corps, $150,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That work is under way?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Were the plans prepared at Ottawa?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The same applies to the barracks for the permanent corps?

Mr. FISHER. Yes; those plans have been prepared, but they are not yet authorized.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would like the minister to tell us whether the government intend to go on with these barracks, or what is their policy in regard to them?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Two or three years ago the land was acquired. The expenditure involved is very heavy, and we made arrangements with the city by which the present barracks could be occupied for a time; and it was thought, in view of the heavy expenditures which are being carried on in Canada, that we might take a reasonable time to construct these buildings. I understand that now the acting Minister of Public Works, with his officers and the officers of the Militia Department, are going carefully over the plans, with a view to determining just the kind of buildings to be constructed.

Toronto military buildings—magazine, $3,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is that to be built this year?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Toronto military buildings—barracks for permanent corps, to replace property sold to the city, $50,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What does the minister propose to do with this preliminary $50,000, and when does he intend to spend it?

Mr. FISHER. The moment the plans are completed and approved by the Militia Department and by the Public Works Department we shall advertise for tenders.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are those plans prepared?

Mr. FISHER. Plans have been sketched, and an officer of the Militia Department and an officer of the Public Works Department have been going over these plans with myself to see what could be done in the way of perfecting them. The whole scheme involves a considerable number of buildings. The first thing will be to choose out one or two buildings and go on with them, and afterwards add to them as the Militia Department thinks best. The first buildings will perhaps cost from $50,000 to $100,000. It is not intended that all the buildings for the permanent corps will be built at once.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is there a prospect of their being commenced this year?

Mr. FISHER. I do not see any reason why the contracts for one or two of them should not be let this year.

Mr. SPROULE. What are they expected to cost exactly?

Mr. FISHER. That will depend on the nature of the plans, which are not yet completed; but probably $400,000 or $500,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be an evidenee of business wisdom to reach some conclusion as to what you intend to do before you go on and take a vote of $50,000?

Mr. FISHER. We have done that.

Mr. SPROULE. But you can give the House no idea of what the buildings will cost. You only ask the House for money.

Mr. FISHER. This whole scheme has been decided upon, but the details as to how it shall be carried out have not yet been worked out. Plans have been discussed and sketches made, which are tentative in their character.

Mr. SPROULE. They may be tentative in their character, but the hon. gentleman knows whether the buildings will cost $100,000, $300,000, $500,000 or $1,000,000.

Mr. FISHER. When the whole scheme is finished, the cost will be certainly over half a million, very likely three-quarters of a million; but I cannot say how quickly that will be done. It will depend largely on the necessities and the demands of the Militia Department. The scheme, as first sketched out, would involve a cost of a million dollars. We are now at work seeing how much we can cut that down, and, judging from conversations which I have had with officers of the Militia Department, there is no doubt that we can reduce that by 25 per cent, perhaps by 30 or 40 per cent.

Mr. MONK. As there is not an approximate estimate of what this work will cost, I think the committee, in view of the importance of this item, might reasonably ask to see those sketches.

Mr. FISHER. The sketches are so entirely tentative that I would not like to bring them before the committee. They will have to be changed in many respects before they will reach the stage at which it can be said they have been approved.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Was it not announced some time ago that it was the intention of the government, by reason of the requirements of the permanent corps, to have a first-class building? That announcement was made a year or two ago, and this is the beginning. I thought the policy had been adopted, and Toronto has been led to expect that these improvements would take place. The policy having been announced, I hope the minister will have the buildings under way at the earliest possible date, because it is of some importance to have a military headquarters in Toronto suitable to the requirements of the permanent corps.

Mr. FISHER. I think we can do that.

Mr. MONK. Will the minister have any objection to allowing this item to stand, and we will take up the others?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Dropped.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This item has been discussed over and over again for three years, and the policy has been accepted by the House and the country. I do not believe that any hon. member from Toronto will take any exception to it or ask that the item be allowed to stand.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No; we want the work to go ahead.

Mr. MONK. Did I hear hon. members saying 'dropped'? Do they think that a member desiring information is not justified in asking that the consideration of the item be put off?

Mr. JOHNSTON. The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) knew that the matter had been considered.

Mr. MONK. Was the hon. member for Cape Breton one of those who said 'dropped'?

Mr. JOHNSTON. If my hon. friend is not in favour of the item I would not object.

Mr. MONK. I thought I spoke clearly enough for my hon. friend to hear. When we are only eight or ten on this side of the House, and the city of Toronto is not represented at all, and we ask that the consideration of the item be put off, it seems extraordinary that hon. members should say 'dropped.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is an old item. Three times at least I have explained it. It seems to me the only thing the government might be blameable for would be that it has not gone on more rapidly.

Mr. MONK. That may be, but it is quite legitimate to ask that an item should stand for further consideration, which amounts to nearly a quarter of a million of dollars with what has been expended before. It seems to me that request is reasonable in view of the absence of these gentlemen from Toronto, and it gives no justification to members from British Columbia calling out dropped.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is able to look after the interests of Toronto and he is doing it very well. The interests of that city are not likely to suffer, even in the absence of its other representatives, while he is here, and if that item should stand over they may not be present when it comes up again.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We all appreciate the complimentary reference to my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean), but when the hon. member from British Columbia (Mr. Macpherson) refers to the Toronto men as not likely to be present——

Mr. MONK. And invited us to drop the item.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—he is very unfair. They are regular in their attendance, more so than the hon. gentleman himself. As I understand, what they desire is an assurance from the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) that the building is going to be erected this coming season.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend must not be too thin skinned and should remember that comparisons are odious. He takes himself altogether too seriously—far more than anybody else does.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. As regards the representation from the city of Toronto, when that question is brought up I may say that I am the senior member for that city. There is a portion of the city now in my constituency, and with the exception of a few weeks I have represented the city more or less in this House the last fourteen or fifteen years. And while I do not claim the position, still, when it is called into question, I must tell the House that a portion of the city is in my constituency and that, with the exception of a few weeks, I have been one of the city's representatives for the last fourteen years.

Mr. MONK. I am quite prepared to admit that, even apart from what he has said, my hon. friend is competent to speak for the city of Toronto, but until the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) told us that this item had been discussed before, we were justified in asking that it should stand over for further discussion, and that was no reason for hon. gentlemen opposite asking that it be dropped. I am surprised that my hon. friends from another province should avail themselves of that request to ask that the item be dropped.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The fact that the minister is not able to lay a plan on the table warranted the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in asking that the item stand.

Mr. FISHER. I shall not be able to lay the plans on the table this session as they will not be ready.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. From what the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) has said they ought to be ready, for the decision to put up a building was come to two years ago. The minister is not ready to go on with the work but still he wants the item passed at once. What guarantee have we that anything will be done this year at all ? We may be just in the same position next year as that in which we have been in the last two years.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so.

Toronto post office—additional postal station 'F,' $37,000.

Mr. MONK. Is that to complete ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. $14,000 was paid for the site and the contractor has received $56,000 to date. Total expenditure to date, $73,000. Probable cost $115,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Where is the site situated ?

Mr. FISHER. Corner of Young and Charles streets.

Brandon drill hall, Manitoba, $30,000.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. minister not think we have done enough ? There are no representatives from Manitoba here. We might, in any event, take up the Saskatchewan items.

Mr. FISHER. It is only half past ten and it is not quite fair to delay the work of the House because members are not present. However I have no objection to taking up Saskatchewan.

Alameda land office, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $2,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is for the erection of a one story building with stone foundation. It is for the Dominion lands branch and is going on this year.

Barracks for permanent corps (Strathcona Horse), $40,000.

Mr. LAKE. Where is this barracks to be, and when is it proposed to go on with it ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). It is hoped, by the Department of Militia at any rate, that this work will be proceeded with at once. It has been talked about for a long time, and I am exceedingly anxious that the building should be constructed. I believe that the military authorities to whom the matter was referred gave it as their opinion that either Calgary or Medicine Hat would be equally advantageous from a military point of view for the location of these buildings. I believe it has been settled that they shall be at Medicine Hat.

Mr. LAKE. Is the Department of Public Works going to be able to start these works this year ? I observe votes appearing for a number of these military buildings year after year, but we do not seem to get any further than voting the money for them.

Mr. FISHER. I will do my best.

Mr. MONK. Are any plans prepared ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. MONK. Any estimate of cost?

Mr. FISHER. I have none.

Mr. MONK. No report of any kind?

Mr. LAKE. I am afraid the Public Works Department is in a bad way.

Calgary public building—enlargement for post office and examining warehouse purposes, changes, fitting, &c., $35,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is under contract.

Mr. LAKE. I understood that when $30,000 was voted for this last year, it was to complete the building ?

Mr. FISHER. I think there must have been a mistake about that. The probable cost of the building is given at $106,000. The contract is for $77,000.

Mr. LAKE. Is this for an enlargement of the present building ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, for an enlargement of the post office and examining warehouse building, with changes and repairs.

Edmonton immigration building, $7,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is that to be a new building ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it is to house the immigrants while they are arranging what part of the country they will go to.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. FISHER. It is given at $16,945.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How do you heat the building, with steam or with hot water?

Mr. FISHER. With hot water.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is a pretty expensive arrangement.

Mr. HERRON. Is any arrangement made for immigrants in the southern part of Alberta ?

Mr. FISHER. I have nothing before me on that subject. I think we have no request from the Department of the Interior with regard to that.

Mr. HERRON. It seems strange that provision should be made for the northern part of the country from time to time, and nothing for the southern part.

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter for the Immigration Department to explain.

Mr. HERRON. It is a fact that immigrants who wish to make their homes in the southern part of Alberta have no accommodation, they lie around the railway stations at night. That is the case at Macleod, and has been for years. Something should be done about it.

Mr. FISHER. I will tell my colleague, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Herron's) remark.

Mr. MONK. Is there a report on that ?

Mr. FISHER. There is a requisition for it.

Mr. MONK. Has the minister that requisition with him ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. MONK. No document ?

Mr. FISHER. No document—simply the statement of advantages by the Department of the Interior showing what is required.

Mr. MONK. From the statement of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) there is a great dearth of accommodation for immigrants in the southern part of Alberta. Does not the hon. minister think we should have something from the department to justify this vote?

Mr. FOSTER. The statement of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) indicates the necessity for a building of this kind, but, apparently, the Minister of the Interior has not asked for other buildings.

Mr. MONK. Why should we start a building in the north when there is such need for one in the south ?

Mr. FISHER. That is for the Immigration Department to say.

Mr. DANIEL. I find thirty-four yards of ribbon charged for, used in the immigration building. Also, two loads of evergreens, total, $15. What were these for ?

Mr. FISHER. They must have been for some celebration. I believe it was on the occasion of the Governor General's visit.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What is the need of an immigration station at Edmonton ?

Mr. FISHER. That, my friend the Minister of the Interior must answer.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Are we passing items about which we can get no information ?

Mr. FISHER. I can give all the information about the building. And there is the fact that the Minister of the Interior requires this for immigration purposes. The statement of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) shows that these immigrants require a place to go to. Edmonton is a centre from which they are distributed throughout the country. He says also that there ought to be something similar in the southern part of Alberta. I hope he will be able to get it. I shall inform my colleague, the Minister of the Interior of what he has said.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It seems that Medicine Hat is the place for distribution of immigrants—not Edmonton. They are distributed long before they get to Edmonton.

Mr. FISHER. No, they go to points north, east and west from Edmonton.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me the committee is placed in a most ludicrous position. Here is a plain statement from an hon. member from the Northwest that we have not sufficient accommodation for immigrants in the southern portion of Alberta. We ask the minister why he is putting up a building in the north, and he says we must ask the Minister of the Interior. But the Minister of the Interior is not here, and the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) will not show any document or representation upon which he says that this building is necessary.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) states a fact that a building is needed in the south. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has stated that a building is needed in the north.

Mr. MONK. Where is that statement ?

Mr. FISHER. He made a requisition.

Mr. MONK. Where is it ?

Mr. FISHER. It is in the department. I cannot lay every document——

Mr. MONK. The hon. minister ought to have every document here that may be necessary to justify these votes.

Mr. FISHER. I do not agree with the hon. member (Mr. Monk) I think he is wholly in error. It has never been customary to bring down such documents and lay them on the table. My hon. friend is an old enough parliamentarian to know that that has never been asked for.

Mr. MONK. I maintain that when we are asked to vote an item under these circumstances, we have a right to get from the government everything tending to show that the vote is necessary, not only the requisition which may come from another department, but the plans, specifications and contracts, if any, and statements of what has been paid and of what remains to be paid. Is there a contract for the construction of this immigration building at Edmonton ?

Mr. FISHER. There is a contract, at a price of $8,495.

Mr. MONK. We have voted $13,000 already.

Mr. FISHER. But $7,000 of it is a revote. There is a contract for $8,495 for the building and $1,500 for heating. The estimated cost of the building is $16,990.69.

Mr. MONK. How is the difference made up between $9,516 and $16,900 ?

Mr. FISHER. Heating and boilers, $3,-700 ; furniture and range, $1,000 ; sidewalk and fencing, $500 ; contingencies, &c., $2,945.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the size of the lot ?

Mr. FISHER. The building is 60x32, two and a half stories high.

Mr. MONK. I will take back what I said about plumbers in Montreal, if it costs over $3,500 to put in a heating apparatus in this building 60x30. What is the name of the company ?

Mr. FISHER. The Standard Plumbing and Heating Company, Limited, of Edmonton. The building is at the corner of Columbia and University streets. The contract for the heating apparatus alone $1,500, but the heating and boilers together are estimated to cost $3,500. Tenders were called for the heating apparatus, and the contract was given to the lowest tenderer.

Medicine Hat public building, $27,000.

Mr. LAKE. How much is that going to cost altogether ?

Mr. FISHER. The probable cost is $46,-000. It is under contract.

Mr. LAKE. Is it necessary to spend $237.34 in advertising for tenders in the press of Medicine Hat?

Mr. FISHER. It is not only in the press of Medicine Hat, but probably the press of the whole Northwest, including Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary and Regina.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the total contract price of the building at Medicine Hat ?

Mr. FISHER. $46,445, inclusive of site, electric wiring, heating and all the fittings.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In V—83, 1906, the estimated cost was to be $25,550.

Mr. FISHER. That was for the building alone. The land cost $5,000.

Mr. HERRON. What system of heating do you adopt ?

Mr. FISHER. Hot water.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What will be the size of the site ?

Mr. MONK.

Mr. FISHER. 75x130, 3 lots. The contract for the heating is not let yet, because the building is far from being finished.

Mr. MONK. I notice that in all these public buildings the advertisements for tenders are extremely high, ranging from $250 to $400, and in one case, I am told, to $600. Has the minister a list of the newspapers in which tenders were called for ?

Mr. FISHER. I have it in the department.

Mr. MONK. Would my hon. friend mind taking a note and letting us know?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I will send it to my hon. friend for his edification.

Mr. ALCORN. And also the advertisements for the Calgary public building ?

Regina post office, custom house, &c., $100,-000.

Mr. LAKE. It cost $637.84 to advertise this building. Does it cost more to advertise a large building than a small one ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, because we advertise in a larger number of places in order to attract the attention of a larger number of contractors at a distance, who would be able to undertake a contract of that kind.

Mr. LAKE. It would be interesting to see a list of papers publishing advertisements in regard to all these buildings in the Northwest.

Mr. FISHER. I will lay a list on the table of the House of all the advertisements of all the buildings included in this item.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would much prefer that the hon. minister should read it off to-night and put it in 'Hansard.'

Mr. FISHER. Do not ask me to read it off.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Your time is pretty valuable but you sometimes waste a little of it. How much will the building at Regina cost ?

Mr. FISHER. $200,000 and perhaps a little more.

Mr. MONK. What is the size of the building ?

Mr. FISHER. 75 by 125.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was paid for the land.

Mr. FISHER. $10,000.

Mr. MONK. Are all the contracts given in that case ?

Mr. FISHER. No only for the building. The buildng is not covered in.

Mr. MONK. Is the contract given for the plumbing ?

Mr. FISHER. It is included in the contract for the building.

Saskatoon public building, $25,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the cost of this building to be ?

Mr. FISHER. The plans have not been yet completed and tenders have not been asked for.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the estimated cost ?

Mr. FISHER. Until the plans are completed I could hardly give a very close estimate.

Mr. LAKE. I think we were told last year that it was to cost about $43,000. Saskatoon is likely to be a very large place.

Mr. FISHER. I think it will be more than that.

Mr. LAKE. Yes, and I hope the minister will take that into consideration.

Mr. FISHER. I think it will be $50,000 or $60,000.

Mr. LAKE. When does he propose to undertake the work ?

Mr. FISHER. The plans are now, I believe, ready to submit for approval.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the size of the lot ?

Mr. FISHER. 60 feet frontage by 75 feet depth.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the population of Saskatoon ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember ; it is quite a large place and growing rapidly.

Mr. LAKE. Over 3,000 according to the last census.

Mr. FISHER. I think it was 4,000 and over according to the census.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. You are paying $9,000 for a lot 60 by 75. It is a most extravagant price.

Mr. MONK. Land is more valuable there than in Montreal.

Mr. SLOAN. I know something about Saskatoon property and I think the government could probably get $15,000 for that site to-day.

Mr. MONK. What is land worth a foot there now ?

Mr. SLOAN. It is pretty high. I know that the Bank of Commerce paid for a corner lot in the neighbourhood of $20,000 recently. There are seven banks in Saskatoon at the present time.

Mr. MONK. How large was that lot ?

Mr. SLOAN. It is two lots composed of two 25-foot lots and has a frontage of 50 feet.

Mr. FISHER. I am mistaken in giving the dimensions of the property. They are 90 by 100 feet.

Public buildings—British Columbia—Fernie public building, $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. Tenders are in for that but the contract has not been signed.

Mr. MONK. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. FISHER. About $40,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I see that the government paid $5,000 for a site ? How large was that site ?

Mr. FISHER. 120 by 220 feet. I think the successful tender was something over $40,000.

Mr. ALCORN. What is the population of Fernie ?

Mr. FISHER. Fernie must have a population of 6,000 or 7,000 people.

Ladysmith public building, $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. The plans are not quite prepared for that and the contract has not yet been let. Ladysmith is a mining town of about 5,000 people I am told.

New Westminster public building for Marine and Fisheries and Indian Affairs agencies, $5,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is meant by that item ?

Mr. FISHER. The Marine and Fisheries Department and the Department of the Indian Affairs have asked for a building for the accommodation of their officers. It is not attached to the present building but is adjacent to it.

Vancouver public building, $100,000.

Mr. MONK. Is that under contract ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is the post office, is it not ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes the post office.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the total cost and the contract price of the building?

Mr. FISHER. The cost is $544,000. The contract price was $434,500.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And the usual extras?

Mr. MACPHERSON. There were no extras.

Mr. FISHER. There was the heating, electric lighting, furniture, elevators, &c.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it completed?

Mr. FISHER. No ; we expect to have to pay $100,000 on this next year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it built under a clerk of works or an architect?

Mr. FISHER. A clerk of works, who is paid by the day.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is there a clerk of works and architect as well?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The superintendent of public works for the province, in his duties, also oversees the work. He is an architect.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What commissions were paid?

Mr. FISHER. The superintendent of the work got $7 a day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In Winnipeg I see that Darling & Pearson received $8,500 for services as architects.

Mr. FISHER. They prepared the plans, specifications and everything of that kind. The Vancouver plans were prepared by the architect of the department.

Mr. LAKE. What is the claim of Mr. Thomas Tompkins against the building in the last year's public accounts?

Mr. FISHER. I am told there was an old building built there years ago, and Tompkins had a claim in regard to it, which was only adjusted recently.

Mr. LAKE. Not the same building?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. FISHER. It appears to have been a relic from hon. gentlemen opposite that we settled up.

Public buildings generally—salaries to resident clerks of works, assistants, &c., $17,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think this should be explained.

Mr. FISHER. Those are the clerks of works like the architect just spoken of in Vancouver, who are stationed at different places in the country, representing the Department of Public Works, and looking after the public buildings within their region.

Mr. MONK. How many clerks of works are there in that estimate of $17,000?

Mr. FISHER. Eight, with their clerks.

Mr. MONK. Would the minister give the names and residences?

Mr. FISHER. They are Mr. Adams at Ottawa, $100 a month; Mr. John Cowan, Ottawa, $3.50 a day—he is not one of the men I alluded to—Mr. Desjardins, Montreal, $90 a month; Mr. Béland, Quebec, $106.87 a month; Mr. Shehan, $3 a day; Mr. Hastings, at Toronto, $100 a month; Mr. Curran, of Winnipeg, $55 a month—Mr. Curran is a clerk under Mr. Greenfield—Mr. Greenfield, Winnipeg, $175 a month; Mr. Brown, of Victoria, $116 a month. He is under Mr. Henderson, who gets $191 a month and Mr. Mollard, of Regina, who gets $125 a month; a total of $16,187.15 out of the $17,000 vote.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. In comparing the salaries you are paying these men now with those stated in the Auditor General's Report, they seem to have been very much increased.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say as to that. They may have had some increases lately.

Mr. MONK. I would like to know what works Mr. Desjardins, of Montreal, is acting as clerk of?

Mr. FISHER. He looks after all the public buildings in Montreal.

Mr. MONK. Is he a carpenter?

Mr. FISHER. No. He is a builder, I think. He was appointed by my hon. friends when they were in power, and remains there still.

Mr. MONK. He must be a very good man.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend was quite ready to criticise him until he found that out.

Experimental farms—new buildings and renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $10,000.

Mr. CROCKET. How many experimental farms are there in the Dominion?

Mr. FISHER. Five.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it proposed to establish an experimental farm in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. FISHER. That will come up in the votes for the Department of Agriculture, and I would rather postpone the explanation till then.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is it proposed to establish a farm at Calgary?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.—Mr. W. McIntyre.

QUESTIONS,

PAYMENT OF 38TH DUFFERIN RIFLES.

Mr. COCKSHUTT—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. What is the cause of the delay in paying the men of the 38th Dufferin Rifles, located at Brantford ?
2. When is the said payment likely to be made ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). As soon as the Supplementary Estimates for the present year are voted, this, together with a few other similar items will be paid.

BOAT REGULATIONS AT LIME KILN.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Macpherson—asked :

1. Has the attention of the government been called to the following newspaper report :

No boat race at Lime Kiln.

Vessels must pass in single file hereafter through 'Hell Gate' of the lakes.

Washington, February 21.—President Livingstone, of the Lake Carriers, has asked the War Department to make a set of rules for the navigation of the narrow channel at Lime Kiln crossing, in Detroit river, a channel which he describes as the 'Hell Gate' of the great lakes. The lake carriers desire rules which will compel vessels to move up and down through that channel in single file and not try to overtake and pass each other while within certain prescribed bounds. The War Department will accede to the request and will provide a vessel commanded by an army officer to patrol and police the crossing and direct the vessels as to the order in which they shall make the passage. A. A. Schantz, of the D. & C. line, is here to see that the rules are not made so stringent as to passenger boats that they cannot meet their schedule time, and the carriers are disposed to agree that passenger vessels ought to have privileges not granted to freighters ?

2. Has the government given consent or been asked to consent to the alleged proposed action of the United States government in Canadian waters ?
3. What authority, if any, has the United States government for the said proposed action ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. The attention of the government has not been called to the newspaper report.
2. No.
3. The government has no information on the subject, but will make inquiries.

GROSSE ISLE YACHT.

Mr. PAQUET—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Have tenders been called for a gasoline engine for the Grosse Isle yacht, in the county of Montmagny ?
2. If so, who are the tenderers ?
3. What are the amounts of the tenders ?
4. To whom has the contract been awarded ?
5. What kind and of what capacity should such machine be ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes. Through Dr. Martineau, Medical Superintendent of the Grosse Isle Station.
2. La Cie Manufacturière de Montmagny. The Lavoie Electric Company, Quebec.
3. $600 and $595 respectively.
4. The Lavoie Electric Company.
5. A twenty horse power gasoline engine with propeller and reversing gear and all other necessary accessories.

HEALTH OF HON. MR. OUIMET.

Mr. DELISLE—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

Is the government aware that the Hon. J. A. Ouimet, to whom an annual superannuation of $4,666.66 is accorded as a retired judge, after nine years and eight months of service as such, is in perfect health and has just accepted the position of president of the Montreal District Savings Bank?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The government has no information as to the health or business of the Hon. Mr. Ouimet.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE OF MAJOR F. L. VAUX.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. Has Major F. L. Vaux, of the Permanent Army Medical Corps, recently applied to the Minister of Militia and Defence for leave of absence from his duties?
2. If so, when was such application received by the department?
3. Upon what ground was leave of absence asked, and for what length of time?
4. What action has the department taken upon the application of Major Vaux ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1, 2, 3 and 4. Major Vaux has not applied for leave of absence since December 13, last, when he applied for and was granted leave from December 24 to January 1 on private affairs. This fact was published December 18, in Militia Order No. 290, as required by regulation.

EMPLOYMENT OF REV. G. C. PATTERSON.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. Is Rev. G. C. Patterson, formerly of the village of Embro, in the electoral district of North Oxford, performing any duties or services for, or in the employment of the government?

2. If so, where is he located, what duties is he performing, when was he employed, and at what salary?

3. Upon what recommendation was Mr. Patterson appointed?

4. Has he passed any qualifying examination?

5. How often is he required to report, and what is the date of his last report?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). From information received from the different departments it does not appear that Mr. Patterson is employed by the government.

REDUCTION OF IRON, STEEL AND LEAD.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM asked:

What is the number of tons produced, the number of men employed, and the amount of wages paid out, in each of the different iron, steel and lead manufactories of Canada?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The Trade and Commerce Department have furnished me with the following; they cannot answer the hon. gentleman's questions in full.

The total production of iron and steel by manufactories in Canada and on which bounty was paid, during the fiscal year ended June 30th, 1906, is as follows:

Company.	Tons of Iron & steel produced.
The Dominion Iron & Steel Co. Ltd.	521,485
The Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co. Ltd.	125,858
The Hamilton Steel & Iron Co. Ltd.	124,175
The Canada Iron Furnace Co. Ltd.	34,773
The Algoma Steel Co. Ltd.	372,771
The Deseronto Iron Co. Ltd.	12,085
The Londonderry Iron & Mining Co. Ltd.	31,227
John McDougall & Co.	2,695
The Montreal Rolling Mills Co.	2,462
Total	1,227,531

The amount of lead contained in lead bearing ores mined in Canada and delivered by the producers at smelters in Canada, on which bounty was paid during the last fiscal year was 14,407 tons.

The mines producing the above lead and participating in the bounty thereon numbered approximately 135.

This does not represent all the lead produced, but only such as was entitled to bounty and of which only the department has record.

The Department has no knowledge of the number of men employed and the amount of wages paid by any company or parties producing iron, steel or lead.

FINES ON CORDAGE COMPANY.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked:

1. What amount of money was received by the government through fines against the Chatham Cordage Company, alleging that short twine was made?

2. Was a commission paid to Alexander Smith, ex-Liberal organizer for Ontario, for settlement?

3. If so, how much did he receive?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. The name 'Chatham Cordage Company' does not appear in connection with any seizure; but seizures were made from the M. J. Wilson Cordage Company. Ltd., of Chatham—presumably the company referred to—on account of which $281.52 was paid in by the court to the credit of Receiver General, and $67.50 through the inspector; total $349.02.

2 & 3. No. None so far as the department is concerned, nor has it any knowledge of any.

CHATHAM ARMOURY.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked:

If there is any money due to the contractors on the Chatham armoury and for work completed, when may the contractors expect to receive their money?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). Any money due will be paid as soon as the Supply Bill is through parliament.

W. S. LOGGIE & COMPANY.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. What sums have been paid by any department of the government during the years 1905, 1906 and up to first of March, 1907, to W. S. Loggie & Company, of Chatham, New Brunswick, and for what purposes?

2. Is this the firm of which Mr. W. S. Loggie, member of this House for Northumberland, New Brunswick, is a member and managing partner?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am not aware of the existence of any such company but there is a corporation known as the W. S. Loggie Company, incorporated under the laws of Nova Scotia. Nothing was paid during the years 1905 and 1906, but the sum of $2,467.38 was paid them for lumber, paint, &c. for reduction work and light house supplies by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in 1907. In reply to the second question, the government has no information on this subject.

STEAMER 'GOLSPIE.'

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. Was the steamer 'Golspie' in the service of, or employed by the government of Canada, in any capacity during the last two years? If so, for what purpose, and under what circumstances?

2. For what reason did the government dispense with the use of the steamer 'Golspie'?

3. From whom did the government charter, or use, or arrange for the use of the steamer 'Golspie,' and upon what terms ?

4. What are the total amounts paid by the government to the owners of, or to any other persons, for or on account of, the use of the steamer 'Golspie,' during the years 1905, 1906 and 1907, respectively ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (For the Minister of Marine and Fisheries).

1. The steamer 'Golspie' was employed in 1905 and 1906 in conveying lighthouse supplies to lighthouses between Montreal and Port Arthur and vicinity.

2. The steamer Golspie' was wrecked on Michipicoten Island, Lake Superior, on the 4th December, 1906.

3. The government chartered the 'Golspie' from Messrs. R. O. and A. B. MacKay, ship owners and forwarders, of the city of Hamilton, Ont.

4. $7,500 was paid in 1905. $7,500 was paid in 1906. Nothing was paid in 1907.

COPPER CLIFF POST OFFICE.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. Was any inquiry made upon the direction of the Postmaster General into the complaints respecting the conditions of the Copper Cliff post office ? (See unrevised 'Hansard,' July 12, 1906.)

2. If so, when was the investigation held, by whom, and what was the nature of the report which was made ?

3. Has the postmaster at Copper Cliff been removed from office in compliance with the petition of the 500 residents of the town, and for the reasons given in their petition ? If not, for what reason is he continued in his office ?

4. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to hold any further investigation into the subject of the complaint ? If so, when ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (For Postmaster General) :

1. Yes.

2. An inquiry was made by the Post Office Inspector of the Toronto Postal Division, who reported under date the 7th September last, that he had inspected the Copper Cliff post office and found that the post office premises compared favourably with other country post offices of the same class and that the duties of the office were performed in a satisfactory manner.

3. No. The department did not consider that the circumstances of the case justified such action.

4. If any further complaints are brought forward concerning the present management of the Copper Cliff post office the department will make further inquiry regarding them.

LAKE SUPERIOR FISHING GROUNDS.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. Has the government been made aware that the fishing grounds in Lake Superior, tributary to international water, are being steadily depleted of whitefish, sturgeon, lake trout and other merchantable fish ?

2. Did the Dominion Fish Commission hold any session in the neighbourhood of Sault Ste. Marie during last year, for the purpose of inquiring into these conditions ? If so, where did it sit and has the commission made a report ?

3. Is the Department of Marine and Fisheries aware that American fishermen are making use of the provisions of the fishery privileges accorded to Indians, for their own purposes, by supplying them with nets, and purchasing the fish caught by the Indians in their fishing grounds at Goulais bay and Gros Cap, and exporting them to the United States for the American market, to the injury of the Canadian market ?

4. If so, when were such complaints made ?

5. Has the department taken any action upon the same ? If so, of what nature ?

6. Is the government intending to take any steps towards prohibiting the exportation of fish from Canada, with the object of conserving the same for the use of Canadians ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (For the Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. No.

2. No ; but the first sittings that will be held when the commission resumes its investigations in the early spring, will be at Sault Ste. Marie.

3. No. Indians, the same as white men, must comply with the Fishery Regulations. The question of licenses for fishing purposes in Ontario, is administered by the provincial government as a proprietary right.

4. Answered by No. 3.

5. Answered by No. 3.

6. The intention of the government on this point of policy cannot at present be expressed.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Was there an accident to any Ross rifles on or about May 24, 1906, at St. John, N.B.?

2. How many casualties to arms occurred on this occasion, and were the rifles of mark 1 or mark 2 pattern ?

3. In what company and regiment did these accidents occur, and who was the officer in command ?

4. Was any report of the occurrence made by the officer commanding the regiment to the officer commanding military district No. 8 ?

5. When was this report asked for, by whom, and what was the nature of the communication ?

6. Has the Department of Militia and Defence the report of the officer commanding the 3rd regiment, C.A., or any report or reports containing the facts relating to these accidents ?

7. If so, what is the nature of the reports, and when were they received ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). I would like to remind my hon. friend that an order of the House was granted to bring down all the papers in connection with the Ross rifle. These are being prepared, and will probably be laid on the table within two or three days. It would be much more convenient to have the matter discussed after the return is laid on the table.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Have any accidents occurred in the Royal Northwest mounted police in connection with the use of the Ross rifle ?
2. If so, where, and on what dates did the accidents occur ?
3. What are the names of the parties injured ?
4. What was the nature of the injury, and how long was the party or parties confined to the hospital ?
5. Has the government any record or report of such accident or accidents ?
6. If so, what is the nature of such report, and by whom was it sent in ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). The same answer to this question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not think that the returns asked for would cover these questions.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I assure my hon. friend that the return will include every thing down to the date at which it is laid on the table.

Mr. FOSTER. The questions will then stand I suppose, Mr. Speaker ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the reply to be that the return ordered by the House will bring down all the information asked for.

Mr. BERGERON. There can be no harm in letting the question stand.

ANNUAL DRILL—LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Referring to militia orders, February 9, 1907, number 34, under section 1, a clause respecting the annual leave of civil servants, is it the intention of the government to restrict the privilege re annual drill and camps to civil servants in the inside departments only, or to extend the same privileges to the outside service as well ?
2. Is the government aware that members of the outside service attending annual drill and camp have the time expended in so doing deducted from their annual leave ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). The question of leave of absence for civil servants who are members of the militia in excess of their annual leave, to enable them to perform annual training in camp, was brought to the attention of the Department of Militia and Defence by other departments of the Public service at Ottawa, and the approval of His Excellency the Governor General for such leave was obtained and notified in militia order No. 34 of February 9 last.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

The order provides such leave for the inside service only, but there is no reason why it should not be extended to the outside service if, after a trial, it has been found to be in the public interest.

BOUNTIES ON CRUDE PETROLEUM.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM asked :

What amount of money has been paid in bounties up to the present time on crude petroleum ?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1905-06.	291,157 20
1906-07 to date (Feb. 27).	203,963 24
	$845,167 61

This was answered the other day, when the above figures were given, representing payments to February 28. Now the hon. gentleman wants payments for February 28 to that ?

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. That will do.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—THE QUEBEC 'SOLEIL.'

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before the House takes up the notices of motion, I wish to raise a question of privilege. The 'Soleil' of February 28 last, contained an editorial entitled 'Another avatar,' which read as follows :

Another avatar.

In Ottawa yesterday, Mr. Dubeau, M.P., repudiated most positively and unreservedly, the statements concerning Mr. Fielding, attributed to him in an article which appeared in the 'Nationaliste,' on Sunday last.

As for us, we did not think it necessary to call attention to the evidently false stories circulated by the above paper, being satisfied that the people would not be fooled by such tittle-tattle.

However, it is very fortunate, indeed, that Mr. Dubeau should have deemed it worth while to call attention to these slanders and should have repudiated them most unreservedly in the House, not so much on account of those stupid concoctions themselves, as on account of the facts brought out in connection with his protest.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Armand Lavergne acknowledged having written the article in the 'Nationaliste' to which exception was taken, and admitted that he had written it on information supplied to him by reliable people.

I refrain from reading to the House the remainder of the article, which contains abuse regarding myself. I understand that the 'Soleil' has called attention to that incident in order to have people think that I make use of confidential information as contributions to the 'Nationaliste.' That is not so. The facts which I stated had come to my knowledge through various and public channels, and are on the whole absolutely true. As regards the denial made by the hon. member from Joliette (Mr. Dubeau), I have accepted it as coming from a gentleman and I still accept it; but I am bound to say that the remainder of the story is entirely in accordance with the facts and that if the government papers persist in representing me as a spy and a slanderer, I shall apprise the House and the aforesaid papers of the picturesque and coarse expressions made use of by a certain member on that occasion to designate the Minister of Finance.

IMPORTATION, MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF CIGARETTES.

Mr. R. BLAIN moved:

1. That the object of good government is to promote the general welfare of the people by a careful encouragement and protection of whatever makes for the public good; and by an equally careful discouragement and suppression of whatever tends to the public disadvantage.

2. That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injury to young people; impairing health, arresting development, weakening intellectual power, and thus constituting a social and national evil.

3. That the legislation, licensing and restricting the sale of cigarettes has not proven sufficient to prevent these evils, which will continue while the public sale of the cause of the mischief is permitted to go on.

4. That this House is of the opinion, for the reasons heretofore set forth, that the right and most effectual legislative remedy for these evils is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes; and that it is expedient to bring in a Bill at this session to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, I believe to be one of great importance to the present and future welfare of Canada. This parliament authorizes the expenditure of large sums of money to bring European immigrants to assist in the development of our fertile Northwest; we devote a considerable portion of our time in this House to the discussion of the railway and transportation question; we give great attention to the development of the natural resources of Canada. All these are matters of great importance to the people, and all are questions that should receive the careful attention of this House. But the resolution which I move to-day is one of vital importance to the youth of Canada; and, whatever differences of opinion may exist among representatives here as to the use of tobacco in its various forms, I am quite sure no hon. member will venture to say that it is in the best interest of the people of Canada that cigarettes should be used by our growing boys, those who are to be the men of Canada in the coming generation. This is not a new question in the House of Commons. On April 1, 1903, my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike) moved a similar resolution. At that time a pretty general discussion took place. The members on both sides of the House agreed that this was an important question and the House decided in favour of the resolution by a vote of 103 yeas to 48 nays. Following that resolution the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) introduced a Bill to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes in Canada. The Bill was introduced on April 29, and the motion for its first reading was passed unanimously. The second reading was proposed on the 18th of May, but on a technicality, the Speaker ruled the Bill out of order, and the mover withdrew his Bill.

And that was the last heard of this important question until January 21 of this year, when I put a question which was answered by the right hon. Prime Minister. The question and answer are reported in 'Hansard' as follows:

IMPORTATION, MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF CIGARETTES.

Mr. Blain asked:

Will the government at this session introduce legislation to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes, as expressed by resolution of this House on April 1, 1903?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government, Mr. Speaker, have not come to the conclusion that they should introduce any legislation to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes as expressed by resolution of this House on April 1, 1903, but I need not tell my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) that it is quite open to him to introduce such legislation if he sees fit.

From that answer I anticipated, of course that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would give to the House and country legislation in accordance with the resolution passed by such a large majority in 1903. Of course, my right hon. friend stated that he did not intend to propose such legislation this session, but that it was open for me to introduce a Bill of that kind. On looking into the rules of the House, I found that, although this resolution was passed in 1903 by the large majority I have mentioned, it would not be in order for me to base a Bill upon it, or in other words, it is necessary for a similar resolution to be passed at this session before a Bill can be introduced.

I wish now to give some figures to show the nature of the question with which we have to deal.

These were the cigarettes manufactured in the different provinces I have mentioned. With the forbearance of the House I will now give the latest figures that it is possible to obtain of the number that were consumed by the people of Canada. From 1896 down to 1902 the department did not separate cigarettes from cigars and tobacco, and, therefore, the returns do not show any exports of cigarettes from Canada during those years. Commencing then in 1896 the imports into Canada were as follows:

TOTAL CONSUMPTION OF CIGARETTES IN CANADA.

—	Exports from Canada.	Imports into Canada.	Manufactured in Canada.	Total Consumption.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the latest figures that can be procured, and I am sure the country will be alarmed at the enormous increase, not only in the importation, but in the manufacture, and particularly in the consumption, of cigarettes by our own Canadian people. Of course this is a question that will be regarded from many different standpoints. Some will say that it is a question that ought to be dealt with by the fathers and mothers; that if the fathers and mothers cannot control their own children and keep them from contracting these habits that are so detrimental to the youth of our land, it is useless for schools or collegiate institutes or local legislatures or parliament itself to attempt to do what the home is unable to do. I am of the opinion that a very large number of the fathers and mothers have done their very best to prevent their children from using cigarettes. The primary schools in many parts of Canada have given this question special consideration. The churches of all denominations, I am glad to say, have also given it consideration, and the local legislatures of the different provinces, all or nearly all, have passed what may be regarded as strict legislation on this question. Speaking for the province of Ontario, I may say that this Act was placed upon the statute-book in 1892:

'Chapter 52, An Act respecting the use of tobacco by minors. Her Majesty, by and with the consent of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario, enacts as follows:

I will read clause 1:

Any person who either directly or indirectly sells or gives, or furnishes to a minor under eighteen years of age, cigarettes, cigars or tobacco in any form, shall on summary conviction thereof before a Justice of the Peace, be subject to a penalty of not less than $10, or more than $50, with or without costs of prosecution, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding thirty days, or to both fine with or without costs and imprisonment to the said amount and for the said term, in the discretion of the convicting magistrate. And in case of a fine, or a fine and costs being awarded, and of the same not being upon conviction forthwith paid, the justice may commit the offender to the common jail, there to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding thirty days, unless the fine and costs are sooner paid.

This Act was assented to and came into force on the 1st of July, 1892, and is upon the statute-books of the province of Ontario at the present time. I will not make special reference to the other provinces in Canada which have legislation upon their statute-books of a similar kind. Notwithstanding these restrictive measures—and I think the people in the main have made an effort to enforce these statutes—there has been, and it is going on to-day in Canada, an enormous increase in the consumption of cigarettes. It would be worth our while to ask some people who have given rather special attention to this question what they think about the use of cigarettes by boys and, in some cases, I am sorry to say, by girls as well, although not to any great extent, in my opinion. I have here a testimony from an educationalist in regard to the harmfulness of the cigarette:

The annual meeting of the Toronto Teacher's Association was recently held in that city. The teachers discussed various questions relative to their work, among others, that of obstacles to the proper development of child-nature. Mr. Ferrier, Superintendent of the Mimico Industrial School, who has abundant opportunity to know whereof he speaks stated that he could most unhesitatingly affirm that the greatest evil he had to contend with among the boys in his care was the use of cigarettes. He found this proved the starting point on the road 'that leadeth to destruction' to many a boy. Mr. Ferrier bore this further testimony to the pernicious use of cigarettes. 'I have never yet met a cigarette smoker who was a truthful boy, and I also know when the habit is once fastened upon a boy he will do anything to obtain tobacco.' And yet how slow our country's law-makers are to put the ban of their condemnation upon an evil which, when once learned, will so surely sap and undermine the best in the characters of our Canadian youth.

The cigarette habit, now ranging like an epidemic among boys and girls, in high as well as low life, has come to be recognized as one of the principal crime producing agencies. The use of the cigarette seems so to deaden the moral sense as to make the victim lie, steal and even shoot to kill, with little compunction of conscience. Character is utterly demoralized, and weaklings and degenerates are being made by the thousands.'

That is the testimony of a gentleman who has had very wide experience in the province of Ontario. The Mimico Industrial School is one of the foremost in the province in connection with the taking care of boys, and I rather think this is important testimony given at that convention in the city of Toronto, and testimony that speaks for itself without further comment on my part. In the city of Montreal the Rev. Dr. Shaw, chairman of the Protestant Board of School Commissioners, in answer to a communication from the president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, wrote as follows :

Dear Madam,—In answer to your recent inquiries as to the use of tobacco by boys in the schools under the control of the Protestant school commissioners of this city, permit me to say :

1. Personally I heartily detest and lament the great and growing evil of the use by boys of cigarettes and of tobacco in any form, and I am in full sympathy with your efforts to reduce this evil. . . . . In the High School, regulation No. 8, as framed by the board, prohibits the use of tobacco and this and other regulations are required 'to be read and explained to each class at least once a month.' Probably there is greater danger in this matter in the High School than in others, as boys here have reached an age of rash independence which more readily exposes them to temptation.

The influence of the former rector, the Rev. Dr. Rexford, and of the present rector, Mr. Dixon, has done much by moral, rather than by legal means, to reduce this evil. It is well known that their attitude to it is one of decided opposition.

I made it my business to write W. G. Taylor, Esq., a gentleman in the city of Montreal who is superintendent of what is known as the Old Brewery Mission, which is doing a very important work in the reclaiming of men and boys. He sent me a letter in reply. I will just make a quotation from it :

To have such a Bill passed would be a great boon, and I pray that the legislators of this glorious country may be led to give this obnoxious business of making and selling cigarettes a death blow. The good to be accomplished is immeasureable for there is no doubt of the baneful effects from smoking those 'death dealing cigarettes' especially on boys.

Further he says, giving an example or two :

Here is the case of a doctor——a man of talent who has filled and could fill a good position, so addicted that though he has been told by the best physicians that his eyesight will be gone in a few months and has fought for months for victory, yet cannot give up the habit.

Another :

Some sad cases have come our way. Men who have been saved from drink tell me that they find the desire for cigarettes stronger than that for liquor. . . . . I have had many others cry out to me about their slavery and curse the day they began to smoke the cursed things. I believe these statistics will show that in the majority of cases where boys have begun stealing from their employers they have been cigarette smokers. I would be glad if these few words will help even to the slightest degree in having the Bill passed. No cigarettes means less drinking of intoxicants.

I have also here some letters from some very worthy workers in connection with the Dominion Women's Christian Temperance Union. I will not stop to quote them all. I have one dated London, Ontario, January 27, 1907 :

We of the W. C. T. U. are moving along this line and have instructed our solicitors, Perkins, Fraser and Gibson, to prepare a Bill.

They have had under consideration the introduction of a Bill into this House for the abolition of cigarettes in this country. I will not further quote these letters, because they are very numerous. I have, however, a very important document here that I want to make one or two quotations from. I quote the following opinions on cigarette smoking from business institutions, colleges, United States army and navy schools, etc.:

2. Business college.—This is our experience in teaching more than fifty thousand young people : cigarettes bring shattered nerves, mental weakness, stunted growth and general physical and moral degeneracy. We refuse to receive users of tobacco in our institution. (Henry C. and Sara A. Spencer, Spencerian Business College.)

4. Omaha schools.—No two ways about it Either let cigarettes alone, or go without an education. The use of cigarettes impairs the faculties of the pupil, and sooner or later will ruin him.—Superintendent of Omaha schools.

5. Swift & Company (Packing House, Chicago), and other Chicago business houses employing hundreds of boys, have issued this announcement, or similar ones : 'So impressed with the danger of cigarette using that we will not employ a cigarette user.'

9. United States Army positions.—Thousands of young men rejected by medical examiners because they had tobacco heart, the result of cigarette smoking. In one examination for West Point, one-fourth of the candidates were rejected. Cause : tobacco heart from cigarette smoking.

10. United States Naval schools.—Out of 412 boys examined by the naval enlisting officer (Peoria, Illinois), only 14 were accepted. Of the 398 rejections, the greater number were on account of weak hearts, and in the majority of cases this was caused by cigarette smoking.

12. Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad bars cigarrette smoking.

14. High schools.—I will not try to educate a boy with the cigarette habit. It is wasted time. The boy couldn't learn. Trying to teach him would be like talking to a block of wood. Cigarettes are poisonous. A boy who smokes cigarettes can't learn.

Boys who smoke cigarettes are always backward in their studies. They are filthy in their personal habits, tending to viciousness ; they are hard to manage, dull in appearance. There is danger of such boys making weak and undesirable citizens.—Principal W. S. Strickland. (All of these instances are from the school principals of one large city.)

Ayer's Sarsaparilla Company, Lowell, Massachussetts, employs hundreds of boys. March 1, 1902—Believing that the smoking of cigarettes is injurious to both mind and body, thereby unfitting young men for their best work—therefore, after this date, we will not employ any young man under twenty-one years of age who smokes cigarettes.

John Wanamaker's.—The application blank to be filled out by boys applying for a position reads :

Do you use tobacco or cigarettes ? A negative answer is expected, and is favourable to their acceptance as employees.

Western Union Telegraph Company will discharge from their employ messenger service boys who persist in smoking cigarettes.

Northwestern University Academy. — Dr. Fisk has asked all pupils who will not give up cigarettes to leave. Last year not one of the boys who used tobacco stood in the first rank of scholarship. Careful observation has convinced me that tobacco is largely responsible for low rank in scholarship.

I quote the following letter addressed to the editor of the 'Lancet,' the foremost medical journal in Great Britain, on the danger of inhaling cigarette smoke :

Poisoning by the inhalation of cigarette smoke.

To the editors of the 'Lancet :

Sirs,—In papers read some years ago before the Bolton and District Medical Society, and the Lancashire and Cheshire branch of the British Medical Association, I drew attention to and described some work I had done on this subject on the suggestion of Mr. Gibson Dyson, Ph.D. It was pointed out that the habit of inhalation rendered the cigarette the most dangerous form in which tobacco can be enjoyed. It was also pointed out that the connection of carbonic oxide with the evils attending the habitual inhalation of cigarette smoke hitherto had been overlooked, and it was further suggested that the enormous amount of damage inflicted by this vice on the younger members of the community constituted a national danger, and some means should be adopted to minimize or put an end to it.

I am, sirs,
Yours faithfully,
J. HILTON THOMPSON, M.D.,
Vict.

Dated Bolton, January 26, 1904.

I quote from an article in 'Chamber's Journal' the following :

It is no exaggeration to say that this new habit of inhaling the smoke of cigarettes—a habit which has only come into vogue in this country during the last few years, and which in the next few will inevitably tell a great tale upon the mental and bodily capacity of the nation—more quickly obtains a strong hold upon those who give way to it than any other habit which has for its object the gratification of the senses in one way or another.

It is now perfectly safe to assume that, whilst a smoker of only twenty or thirty cigarettes a week may or may not inhale—probably does not—every man who gets through more than a dozen in a day almost certainly does ; otherwise the insipidity or nicotine taken in this form would very quickly pall upon him, and such a consumption would be impossible. The man who is fond of his pipe, and has not learnt to inhale, is always more than satisfied with half-a-dozen cigarettes in a day, and cannot see any sense in smoking them. On the other hand, the confirmed inhaler, who has abandoned himself entirely to the habit, thinks nothing of forty in a day ; surprising as it may seem to the uninitiated, it is by no means an uncommon thing for such a man to smoke as many as seventy, and I have even known this figure to be exceeded. Of course, the cigarettes are not smoked outright ; as soon as the nicotine which collects at the lip-end begins to taste strongly the man who inhales rejects it, and lights a fresh one from the burning end.

I shall also quote the following letter, which is also published in the 'Lancet' :

The cigarette craze.

To the editor of the 'Lancet' :

I have had twenty-three years consecutive experience in the tobacco trade, as manufacturer and retailer, I have the pleasure of numbering among my clients many medical men, mostly cigarette smokers, and I have watched with interest how their purchase of cigarettes nearly always increase. As an example, one doctor returned from South Africa about a year ago and smoked about ten Virginian cigarettes daily. He now purchases and smokes fifty Turkish cigarettes daily. His appearance is deplorable, having all the pinched ghastly looks of an opium smoker, plus dull reddish eyes and shaking hands. My firm conviction regarding the insidious effect of cigarette smoking is that the cigarette does not nauseate, hence the appetite is never satisfied. Pipe smokers will agree with me that in most cases after smoking two or three consecutive pipes the tobacco appetite is satisfied, but never in the cigarette smoker.

In view of these expressions of opinions from those who have studied the question, whatever difference of opinion may exist among the members of this House as to the best mode of putting an end to cigarette smoking among our Canadian youth, we must all agree that it is a great evil. When we remember that this evil is growing in Canada, I believe that there is hardly any other question which can come before us of greater urgency than the devising of means to prevent our youths indulging in cigarette smoking. We are spending millions of money to bring settlers from other lands, but what avails it all if we continue to allow this deadly evil to sap the lives of our own Canadian youths who ought to be our best hope for the development of Canada. The right hon gentleman, I am sure, is always anxious to have behind him public opinion. Upon that point I am offering no complaint. I would like to direct his attention to the fact that behind him in this country he has an overwhelming public opinion in favour of placing upon the statute-books this session a Bill to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes. It may be that in some provinces the feeling would not be so strong as in others; that will be the case with every important question that comes up.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There is a way of getting around that now.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, if there is a way I think it ought not to be found on this question. The government of the day have behind them a large majority both in this country and in this House who would at once support such a Bill. Personally, while I am not much of a supporter of the present government, I would give them my hearty support so far as it goes and my vote as well if a measure was introduced at this session to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes in Canada, and I believe that the people of this country are favourable to legislation of that kind. I do not think the right hon. gentleman can set aside the views of the people. The people of Canada were very much disappointed, I am sure when, in 1903, so large a majority of the members of this House voted for a resolution and Bill of this kind, and when the right hon. gentleman allowed so long a time to elapse, from April, 1903, when the resolution was introduced down to the present time without any action being taken. The government have been requested on every hand, important bodies of people in every part of Canada have passed resolutions calling upon the government to carry out the expressed wishes of the representatives of the people. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his government have turned a deaf ear to this request, and today, I believe, the people of this country will expect from the government legislation on this question.

It will not be enough for some hon. gentleman to stand up and say this is a Sunday school question, and should be relegated to the churches and the fathers and mothers in the homes. That is not an answer, that answer long since has been set aside by the people of Canada; we expect the government to deal with these questions, it is their duty to deal with such questions and if the Prime Minister will take hold of this, having behind him a large and strong majority, while he may not be able to get the support of every gentleman on this side of the House, I can say he will have support from a considerable number of the Conservative members on this question. I appeal to the Prime Minister and to his government. It is useless for us to appeal to any other body. It has been pointed out that the legislatures of many of the provinces have made an effort, an honest effort, to deal with this question. They have found it impossible to reach the evil and have not been able to check to any great extent the enormous increase in cigarette smoking in Canada. We must remember that we are living alongside a great and growing country where this habit is very general. In the United States the annual growth in the consumption of cigarettes is enormous; the consumption of 1906 was many millions more than in 1905. These people are passing in and out of our country and our Canadian people are going over there. It is the boast of the government that a large number of American citizens are coming into Canada and settling on the Northwest lands. Canadians rejoice at this intercourse. Some of our Canadian people are still going to the United States. With that country lying beside us, separated only by a line, there must be for all time a great intercourse between the two peoples. We are paying large sums to induce immigration from European countries and it is our duty as a parliament to face this important question and prevent the growth of this habit which saps the life of the growing children of this country, as the government and the people understand very well. To-day important commercial institutions are posting notices at their doors that boys who smoke cigarettes cannot be employed by them. What is the use of developing Canada if we are to allow evils of this kind to flourish and destroy the future of our growing young Canadians, who will, of course, make the best citizens we can have. I make an appeal to the government; I hope I shall not be disappointed. I do not wish to weary the government with statistics, but medical men the world over agree that this is a great evil, and I want to pledge myself, in so far as I have the right, in support of such a measure—and I think I can promise at least a fair measure of support from this side of the House if the Prime Minister undertakes to place on the statute books this session a law to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). I wish to ask my hon. friend a question. I do not rise with any unfriendliness to the idea presented in the resolution, but simply to ascertain—because I assume my hon. friend has given some thought to this subject and speaks for some of the elements behind a movement of this kind—whether he has taken into consideration the proposition mooted in Nova Scotia that this parliament should be asked to pass a Bill which would give to each provincial legislature the power to deal with the suppression of cigarettes. I have under my hand some correspondence from bodies interested in that in my province asking me to support such a Bill.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the hon. gentleman say as a lawyer, that the Dominion government could give to the provinces such jurisdiction as that?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The proposition is one I would not like to answer off-hand. I am only directing myself to the question as to whether or not the course suggested has been considered by my hon. friend and those for whom he speaks.

Mr. BLAIN. I will not attempt to answer that question; my hon. friend will be quite able, I am sure, to deal with that matter. All I have to say is that I understand the parliament of Canada have power to place upon the statute-books a law to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes, and I may remind my hon. friend that a gentleman from his own province stated that the legislation that they had on the statute books of Nova Scotia was a dead letter, and therefore he suggested that it would be useless for the legislature to put further legislation on the statute-book of that province.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I shall be very glad to give my hon. friend the correspondence I have.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask my hon. friend what his opinion would be on the constitutional aspect of that question ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am afraid my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) labours under the idea that in asking the question I did, I was actuated by some unfriendliness towards his project. Quite the contrary, I would be disposed to endorse the spirit of the resolution ; but when he spoke on behalf of a large number of people, not only in his own but in other constituencies as well, interested in the suppression of the cigarette, I was in receipt of correspondence from people in my own county who were suggesting the method I indicated as the best means of dealing with the question. And it was in all sincerity, and not out of any hostility to the proposed legislation, that I asked the question I did. As to the constitutionality of provincial legislation of that character, one could only give an opinion from a legal standpoint after the Bill had been drafted providing for the dealing with this evil in a certain way by this parliament. As regards the abstract question, I think that this parliament has jurisdiction to deal with the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) if any of the correspondence he has is against this parliament legislating on this question this session?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Not at all. I shall send my hon. friend what letters I have.

Mr. THOMAS MARTIN (North Wellington). I have here a number of statistics which I had intended giving the House, but as my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has gone so fully into the matter, I shall not weary the House with them. I wish to say however, that I am heartily in sympathy with what my hon. friend has said. I believe that the cigarette habit is growing very fast and is a great injury to our young people—both boys and girls, and I am prepared to support any legislation which will rid us of such an evil, but there is one argument against this proposition of my hon. friend which he did not take the opportunity of answering. I would ask him, if we prevent the manufacture and importation of cigarettes, can we hope to accomplish the object aimed at so long as we import tobacco which can be made into cigarettes ?

Mr. BLAIN. My reply to this is that I think our youth acquire the smoking habit by beginning with cigarettes. My object is to deal with this from the boys' standpoint. I believe that if we prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes, we will get at the root of the evil from the boys' standpoint and will thus accomplish a great deal.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). While I am heartily in favour of the two first paragraphs in my hon. friends resolution, namely :

1. That the object of good government is to promote the general welfare of the people by a careful encouragement and protection of whatever makes good ; and by an equally careful discouragement and suppression of whatever tends to the public disadvantage.

2. That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injury to young people ; impairing health, arresting development, weakening intellectual power, and thus constituting a social and national evil.

The motion of my hon. friend is too extensive. Three years ago, this question was brought up by the hon. member for St. Lawrence Division (Mr. Bickerdike) and pretty thoroughly discussed. The discussion we had then and the information I have gained since lead me to doubt the feasibility of enforcing the prohibition in such a general way. At that time we had the advantage of the experience of Dr. Roddick, of Montreal, who then had a seat in this House ; and if I remember rightly he declared that in the case of grown up people the smoking of cigarettes was the most harmless form of the evil. While cigarette smoking is highly detrimental to immature youth, and while I would approve of any legislation prohibiting the use of cigarettes by our school children. In its present shape, I doubt whether the resolution—if enacted into law—could be put into practice.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has told us that this is not a Sunday school question but a very practical question, in which I agree with him. The use of cigarettes is universally admitted to have very injurious effects, both physical and mental, on immature youth. I would be disposed to go further than my hon. friend and say that the use of tobacco in any form is very detrimental to the health of young people. But the physicians generally agree that it is innocuous to grown up people, whether in the form of cigarettes or cigars or smoked in pipes. The whole of my hon. friend's argument was that the use of cigarettes is injurious to boys. He did not pretend to say it was injurious to men, and I am convinced he will not. Does he think it is fair to deprive adults of that which is harmless to them because it may be injurious to young people ?

I sympathize altogether, for my part, with every effort that can be made to discourage, and, if possible, prevent the use of cigarettes by young boys. And, if I may be permitted to express my own feelings, I may say that nothing can be more offensive to me than to meet on the street a young boy of ten or twelve with a cigarette in his mouth. It is a thing, I think which should be prevented by police regulation, it is a thing which should be prevented by parents. But, although this is offensive and dangerous in the young child and should therefore be prevented, does it follow that it should be prevented in the grown man in whose case it is neither dangerous nor offensive ? It seems to me that my hon. friend is going altogether too far. This resolution, like all legislation of this kind, if it were passed and put in the statute-book in the form of a law, would be likely to defeat the very object which the hon. gentleman has in view. All sumptuary legislation of this kind has been shown by experience to be, not beneficial but the very reverse, unless there is a strong public sentiment in the community against it ; and I do not think it will be contended that legislation preventing the use of cigarettes by men would have behind it the support of the community. No one would suggest that men who desire to smoke should be prevented from using cigar or pipe, and equally, surely no one would suggest that men who prefer cigarettes should be prevented from using tobacco in that form. Still, this is the effect of the motion which my hon. friend has offered to the House and which he asks us to adopt. His argument, to which I listened very carefully—and for which, if he will accept it from me I would express my high commendation—was against only one form of tobacco and against the use of that form by one class—that is it was against the use of cigarettes by children. And yet what is his conclusion ? It is expressed in the terms of his resolution :

That this House is of the opinion, for the reasons heretofore set forth, that the right and most effectual legislative remedy for these evils is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes ; and that it is expedient to bring in a Bill at this session to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

In my estimation the motion of my hon. friend goes altogether too far. I have also this to say: Even if I thought that this motion could be accepted by this House, I can hardly agree with him that it would be expedient to bring in this session the legislation he proposes. We are now in the third month of the session, and we hope, by the blessing of a kind providence——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And the help of somebody else.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER—and the consent of His Majesty's loyal opposition, and the efforts of the third party also—I am sure that on this question we shall be unanimous—to bring the session to a close early next month. Under these circumstances, I do not think the motion should be agreed to.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Will the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) allow me to ask him a question?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to hear the right hon. gentleman's sympathy with the purpose of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) so cordially expressed. He would like to see cigarette smoking by children done away with as far as possible. But he thinks it is going too far to prohibit the use of this form of tobacco by adults. Now, what I would like to ask is what he would propose, within the powers of this parliament, to mitigate the evil which he deplores ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have nothing to propose at this moment; but I am always open to conviction and always ready to vote for a good measure.

Mr. FOSTER. That is good as far as it goes, but I do not know that it gives us much information. For my part I have not very much to say with reference to this matter, except to express my hearty and entire sympathy with the purpose of the mover of this resolution, and, in fact of all those who have spoken, to prevent, so far it can be done, the smoking of cigarettes or tobacco in any form by non-adults, especially young children. This should be done not only for the sake of the children themselves, but for the sake of the nation as a whole. I am afraid that we sometimes lose sight of waste at one end whilst we devote great expense and care to building up at the other end. For instance, we are very anxious to have immigrants come into this country. We spend half a million or a million dollars a year in order to add to our population by importations from abroad. We consider that this is good business policy for the country. But, when the matter is looked at properly, I think that it is at least as good business to prevent loss of life amongst those who are born in the country and so prevent the waste of citizenship. Or, take our action with regard to the question of tuberculosis and the waste of life caused by that terrible disease. It is well agreed that every effort should be put forward to prevent the waste caused by that destroyer of life in this country. But, were we able to follow the deleterious effect upon mind, morals and physique of cigarette smoking by the young of this country, I am not sure that we should not find more waste of life—to say nothing of the deterioration of morals and habits—than we make up by our efforts to protect our people against the great white plague. I think it is a fair subject for all legislatures, and particularly for this parliament, to seriously consider, how far it can go and what it can do to prevent this waste and this deterioration through the use of cigarettes by the boys and youths of this country. I do not think that any one will find much fault with that statement of the case. Well, then, here is the position: This waste is going on; every year sees a new generation coming up to the age when this scourge can begin its work upon them. Every year sees the effect that it is having upon the young life in our country, an evil which must perpetuate itself in adult life as, those who are falling in to this habit grow older. Are we to do something, or are we to sit idly by and do nothing with reference to this scourge of the country?—for it is neither more nor less than a scourge. Of course, we must all agree that anything that is within our power we ought to do. But have we ever seriously considered in this parliament how far we can go in this matter? I had great hopes of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He sympathized so strongly with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) who moved this resolution and declared so warmly his desire to see the evil cured, that I began to think, that, if he could not go so far as approve the legislation asked at least he could point out to the House and country some line of action which could be entered upon to mitigate, at least, in some degree the evils which he and all of us deplore. But he does not end with that. I do not say that it was his duty to enunciate a policy. It was of interest to me to know, and I am sure it would be of interest to the country to know, how far he was prepared to go, and how far his many friends and supporters in this House and in the country would go, towards mitigating the evils which are commonly deplored.

There is another point, in which I do not agree with my hon. friend. I am not a medical man, nor is the right hon. gentleman, but I would not subscribe to the idea that adults can use tobacco, as it is commonly used, with absolute safety, I mean that, as my right hon. friend put it, it is absolutely innocuous to men of adult years. I cannot subscribe to that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is that the experience of my hon. friend, that the use of tobacco is injurious to grown up men? He does not use tobacco and I do not. But I give my experience, and what is his experience?

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend will agree with me that there are two methods by which we learn, one is experience and the other is observation. All the knowledge that comes from observation personally, from the observation of others in and through a series of years, the opinions of medical men, the results which have been treasured up and put upon record—all that forms a body from which we make our inferences outside of experience. I may say that so far as experience goes I have had but very little in this matter, either as an infant or an adult. I have never been able to conquer the strong natural aversion to tobacco with which I believe almost all people come into the world. It is a taste which, I think, in most cases has to be acquired, and there are certain inward and outward strivings which are necessary in order to acquire a taste for and an ability to enjoy what they call the weed. I have not had very much experience in that respect. The experience I have had has not been very pleasant, so far as I can remember, and it takes an effort of memory to go back that far. But what I mean to say is that if, upon the young person of the human family, the use of tobacco in the form of cigarettes is admittedly injurious, a priori I think we can argue that it is injurious to the human system; and that if it is injurious to the young, it cannot be, as a rule, healthful to the old; that if the old can use and enjoy it without absolutely quick ill effects, it is because they have become inured to it, and it constitutes no argument at all that if they had never contracted the habit they would not be far better off physically, mentally and morally. But I have not lived so long as I have without being able to judge by observation of the ill effects of smoking and of the use of tobacco upon others than children. I would be sorry to have the opinion go out from this House that the use of tobacco in all its forms can be indulged in by adults with absolute safety and without any hurtful results. I think the experience of the world and medical observation does not carry out that view.

However, to come back to the matter which is before us, I would be sorry if something could not be done to voice the opinion of this parliament in a more moderate way—if my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Blain) will excuse me for using that word—and in a way which would obtain a larger body of support, against the use of cigarettes by young people in this country. If this resolution could be put in some shape which would voice that opinion, I am sure that it would have great weight in the country. We are an august body, most of the time. The parliament of Canada has its dignity and its importance; and until people begin to know better, which is very late in life with a great many, there is a general respect for parliament as being the highest representation of the worth and ability of this country. Any voice which would go forth from this parliament, from this House of Commons, with reference to a matter of this kind, would undoubtedly have its effect in the country. I hope that a resolution can be framed in some way which will carry out what is evidently the sympathetic belief by most members of this House that the use of cigarettes is an injurious thing, both for the individual and for the country, and that the cigarette habit, which has become so prevalent amongst us, is much to be deplored. Then, having voiced our opinion in that respect, I hope that, either during this session or another one in the near future, some method may be devised by which that evil would be, to some extent, if not entirely mitigated, at least largely repressed. For, after all, the laws that you make upon any subject whatsoever, it is the home, and the school, and the church influences which make public opinion, and keep it strong, and make it the largest factor in repressing evils and supporting laws.

Mr. J. B. BLACK (Hants). The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has opened up a very large and interesting question of political economy in his introductory remarks. I was delighted to hear what he said with regard to the bad economy in paying so much attention to the importation of foreigners while neglecting to save our own people. This is a question which requires more thought than it has hitherto received. I believe almost every word that has been said in regard to the injurious effect upon children of the vile habit of smoking cigarettes. There are, however, some things that I could not subscribe to. I think a good deal has been said in an exaggerated way, a good deal has been written by emotional people and hysterical people, and emotional people and hysterical people always exaggerate. In discussing any subject we ought always to keep within the bounds of truth; and if we keep within the bounds of practical knowledge, we must all admit that the cigarette habit is most injurious to our boys. There is no more disgusting sight than to meet on the street a boy with a cigarette in his mouth. This evil is much more prevalent than we might suppose from what we see of it on the street. If you consult the teachers in our schools they will tell you, as they have told me, that very few boys between the ages of six and fifteen have not the odour of cigarettes in their breath.

I do not know what we may do to prevent it, but something ought to be done, and yet I am afraid that no very practical result can be achieved. While the fathers smoke the pipe or cigars, the children, I am afraid, will smoke the cigarette. It is the most natural thing in the world for the boy to imitate his father. The father is the beau ideal of mankind in his eye, and if the father can smoke a pipe he can begin by smoking a cigarette, and I am afraid we will not accomplish very much in the direction of stopping boys from smoking cigarettes while we smoke the pipe. It looks to me to be as inconsistent as it is on the part of the man who says 'damn' every day in his household and spanks his boy for saying 'darn.' The boy will imitate the father every time. I will do every thing in my power to prevent cigarette smoking by our boys. It is extremely injurious. I believe the use of tobacco by any human being is injurious, although less so to the adult than to the child. I was not so fortunate as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who told us that he was born with an aversion to the weed. I am afraid that I had the nicotine of several generations of Irish dudeens floating through my viens, and I naturally took to tobacco and kept at it until I got older and sensible enough to lay it aside twenty odd years ago.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Did it hurt the hon. gentleman?

Mr. BLACK. I am sure it did. Coming back to the question, how much it is the duty of the government to protect the lives of our people in their childhood, I believe that is a question that should receive our earnest attention. There are many other things besides tobacco and tuberculosis, which are depleting our country of the very best stock that we can raise in it. If you will look at the statistics you will find that there are more deaths up to the fifth year than there are from that until the fiftieth year. What is the cause? Is it preventable and is it our duty, if it is preventable, to prevent it? I think there is no medical man in this House with experience, and there are several who have had extended experience, but will agree with me that the great majority of deaths in children are preventable and that in many cases they are due to maternal and paternal ignorance. The vast number of deaths that occur up to the fifth year are caused by indigestion. The ignorant mother does not know how to properly feed her child, and the child dies of some form of indigestion. The parson consoles her by saying that she must not grieve because God took away her child, when as a matter of fact it was taken by pure, sheer ignorance. I am talking of a very sad thing, but of a very true thing, and I say that the great majority of our young Canadians below the fifth year are dying for the want of proper knowledge, and I have a very strong conviction that it is the duty of the government to instruct the people in the proper way to rear their young. I was reading the other day of a large amount of expense that was gone to —and properly gone to—to prevent the death of cattle down in Pictou county from a weed that grew there. This government sent a veterinary surgeon all the way down there to investigate and save the lives of these cattle. There have been thousands and thousands of volumes issued this year, properly and rightly so, by Dr. Rutherford on 'The conservation of the health of domestic animals.' I would like to know how much has been expended by the government on the conservation of the health of our babies. There is more money spent by the government in properly raising a bull calf than in raising a baby boy. I do not know that this has very much to do with the question of cigarette smoking, but I could not help saying it. I would join with the hon. gentleman who gave notice of that motion in anything that I thought would be feasible, but I do not think that what he has embraced in it would be altogether feasible. I do not think we can prevent the importation of tobacco or cigarettes. I do no think we can really prevent the sale of them. I do not think we can prevent the manufacture of them, because the manufacture of them is so extremely simple that any child can learn in a day or two to roll up a cigarette for himself in the most perfect manner. Indeed, those of us who have ever gone to Cuba or been with Cubans know the dexterity with which the Cuban, in a moment, pulls out his packet of papers, puts the tobacco on the paper and rolls it and then it is only a moment until he has it lighted and in his mouth. I do not think that any law can prevent the manufacture of cigarettes. I think that surely some master mind can invent some way by which this evil can be lessened.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). I think it is quite evident from what has already come out in the debate that the longer the question is delayed the more difficult it will be to deal with it. I am not an advocate of the theory that the old man should sow the wild oats for himself and the boy too. That is about the argument that has been used by some hon. gentlemen who say: Oh, the old man must get his cigarettes and the boy must run the risk. I think we ought to give the boy a handful of wild oats once in a while and I do not see why it should not be possible that the older people should make some sacrifice in the interest of the young. I believe it is difficult, as has already been said, to teach the boy in the parlour that he must not smoke, while the old man is smoking in the kitchen. The boy is an imitator and the argument that the father uses to the boy that he must not smoke while he himself is smoking has not much weight with the boy. I once heard of a reverend gentleman who chastised his boy for having his eyes open while the reverend gentleman was having family prayer. The young lad asked: How did you see me if your own eyes were shut? The boy wants to know why you are doing it if it is wrong for him to do it. I can quite understand the difficulties surrounding this question and the difficulty that there is in dealing with it, but no man can shut his eyes to the fact that the youths of this country are being very seriously injured not alone by the use of cigarettes, but by the use of tobacco generally. I read some few years ago a report made by a board connected with the schools in France which found that in these schools which were getting large public aid a great many of the pupils were not making the progress they should make. An investigation was instituted and they found that in nearly every case where boys were not making the headway they should in the schools they were using tobacco. That was several years ago. I do not think there is any use in talking of the injury that follows the use of tobacco, but the question before the House is whether or not it is possible to deal effectively with this question. I do not think the resolution should call upon this House to deal with it this session, beause I do not believe that a Bill of that sort, having the proper scope to deal with this matter effectively, should be brought in and put upon the statute-book hurriedly.

I believe the matter ought to be thoroughly canvassed before it is dealt with, and then it should be dealt with in the most intelligent way. It is quite easy to say that you can put a law upon the statute-book prohibiting a boy from buying cigarettes or prohibiting the vendor selling to a boy, but I know that in my village where we have such a prohibition, the elder boys buy the cigarettes and distribute them among the minors. They get around the law in that way and they are likely to do it more or less no matter what law may be passed. However, any law that proposes to deal effectively with this question, shall have my hearty support, no matter from what quarter it emanates.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster). I am heartily in sympathy with the spirit of this resolution, but judging from some letters I have received from members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Ontario, I am afraid that those who are interested in working along this line, have not been consulted on this occasion. I understand it was their intention to have a Bill prepared and submitted to the House, which would avoid any clash of jurisdiction between the Dominion parliament and the legislatures of the provinces. I do not always agree with the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), but I heartily concur in what he said to-day, and I am also strongly in accord with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Dundas (Mr. Broder). I can hardly see how we can expect to carry any legislation of this kind through this parliament, considering the number of smokers who are amongst our members. I do not suppose there are half a dozen members in this House to-day who are not smokers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, I am glad to know that there are more than half a dozen who do not smoke, but I doubt if there are fifty. I agree with the hon. member (Mr. Broder) that there is very little use in our legislating against an evil which we seem to endorse by our actions. The boy is very apt to follow in the steps of the old man; he is sure to reason that if his father smokes a cigar he may smoke a cigarette, which to his mind is only a small cigar. It is human nature for the youth to reason in that way, and it is pretty hard to get him to understand anything else. The best way for us to discourage this bad habit is to set a better example to the boys. I think there is no doubt but that there is a great increase of smoking in our community. We hear a great deal from medical men about the value of pure air, but I will defy any man to walk down any of our public streets and get more than half a dozen whiffs of pure air in the whole length of the street.

Mr. BRODER. What street?

Mr. KENNEDY. Any well travelled street in this city. For curiosity, yesterday while walking along Bank street from the corner of Albert street to Sparks street I counted ten men smoking, some smoking cigars, some cigarettes, and some pipes; and between that street and the corner of O'Connor street I counted twelve more. There is one characteristic about tobacco smoke, and that is that you can smell it a long way off; after you have passed a smoker you can smell him for fifty feet, if not more.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. KENNEDY. I know that I can. I would not say that smokers intentionally annoy their neighbours, but the smoking habit is certainly very annoying to those who do not like it, and it must be particularly annoying to the ladies. If you go to a lacrosse match, or a hockey match, and get an upper seat you are in a cloud of smoke all the time. I do not think it is right, and I do not think it is healthy. It would be well for smokers to consider a little, and to remember that they are responsible through their example for the great harm that is being done to our youths. The example of the older people is at the bottom of the evil, and until we can get rid of that there is very little use of our legislating against cigarette smoking.

Mr. B. B. GUNN (South Huron). I hope I shall have an opportunity of supporting by my vote the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). The Prime Minister expresses a great deal of sympathy with this resolution, and he seems to think that legislation of the kind proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) should be enacted. Well, the right hon. gentleman has the power to enact legislation of that kind if he chooses. The Prime Minister reminds me of the man who stood at the top of a well, and who said to the boy down below: I am exceedingly sorry for your plight, I would like to help you but I don't feel disposed to. The right hon. gentleman has the rope in his hand; he can haul that boy out from the well if he chooses, but so far as I can make out from his remarks to-day he does not feel disposed to do so. In some respects this is the most important proposition that has been submitted to the House since I have had the honour of a seat here, and I cannot conceive how any hon. gentleman who represents a respectable constituency could refuse to support a measure of this kind. We are told that the session will be brought to an early close, but whether that is so or not, there is plenty of time to put a measure of this kind through, if the government wishes to. It is not a new question by any means; before I was elected to this House the question was discussed and a large majority declared they were in favour of legislation of this kind. It was said by one hon. gentleman to-day that a law of this kind would be hard to enforce. Well, most of us Canadians believe that sumptuary laws like this are harder to enforce in the United States than they are in Canada, and yet in the state of Wisconsin there is an anti-cigarette law and you cannot buy a cigarette in any city of that state without being subject to a heavy penalty. I, for one, have no doubt that in Canada such a law as this could be enforced, and I trust the hon. gentleman from Peel (Mr. Blain) will press his resolution so that we may know where the members of this House stand on the question.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) This is a very important question and it is one as to which we should not act hastily. In 1903, this House, by a considerable majority, accepted the principle of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of cigarettes in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. And the importation.

Mr. FISHER. And the importation also. I do not want to go back on that in any way or shape. I think that we ought to keep that before us and we ought to try and work towards it. I say this because I find that other legislation in the country by which an effort has been made to accomplish the result aimed at has been ineffective. The provinces and the municipalities have certain control over the trade in cigarettes. I do not know all the details of the various provincial laws but I know that they are very drastic in certain respects. I presume that the provincial legislatures have gone as far as they thought the public opinion of the various provinces would permit them to go in the direction of checking the smoking of cigarettes. They have not gone as far as this resolution proposes and yet my observation and my information leads me to believe that the laws which have been passed are more honoured in the breach than in the observance, and that, as a matter of fact, to-day they are to a large extent a dead letter. This being the case it requires the most serious consideration as to whether we can go so far as this resolution requires us to go, with any hope of the successful enforcement of such an enactment. There is another side to that argument and that is why I think that we ought not to in any way weaken the position which this parliament adopted as an academic principle a few years ago. It may be that the reason that these provincial and local laws are ineffective is that the provinces have not sufficient power to control the evil and that it is necessary, in order to control the evil, that the law should be passed by the supreme authority of the land, and should be equally effective and equally enforced and equally drastic all over the country. For this reason I would be tempted to support a resolution and a law on the lines herein indicated.

I feel however that perhaps there has not been that fair effort on the part of the inferior powers in this country to accomplish the end which we might reasonably demand and expect. One speaker this afternoon referred to the influence of the home, the school and the church in this country. These are most potent influences in this land and yet, as far as I can see, looking abroad in the land, the influence of the home the school and the church is lessening in Canada to-day in regard to the bringing up of our youth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. No, no.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, my observation leads me to believe that to-day there is far less control over the immature Canadian than there used to be fifteen or twenty years ago.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the fault of the present government ?

Mr. FISHER. No, it is apart altogether from government or legislation, it is that the influence of the older people over the younger, the influence of the teaching which would induce a reverence and a recognition of authority on the part of the growing youth is weakening and I believe that this spirit is growing amongst the young people of this land in a way that is dangerous to the young people and to the community. When the home and the church and the school to-day come to the parliament of Canada to ask the parliament here to do by-law what in an older generation they did without a legislative enactment, I have the best proof of the proposition I have just laid down. I think this is most regrettable, most regrettable in every way. Some one said that there was no more deplorable or horrible thing than to see an immature boy smoking a cigarette. I would be disposed to agree in that proposition if I had not seen an even more deplorable thing, an immature girl smoking a cigarette. That, unfortunately is becoming too common in Canada, although not so common as I believe it is in some other countries. But I believe that when the evil has assumed such proportions that it attacks not only the boys but also the girls, it is certainly necessary for us to do anything we can to check it.

Now, Sir, I have my own views about the use of tobacco in any shape or form. I know that those views are not popular and not sympathized with by the great majority of the people. I do not use tobacco in any shape or way and it is very offensive to me, when, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) has said, I go down the street and have dirty tobacco smoke puffed in my face by passers by. I have sufficient faith in the decency and kindness of human nature to believe that the doing of this is largely due to thoughtlessness, and that those who do it do not appreciate in any way how offensive it is to non-users to have tobacco smoke and the flavour and smell of tobacco forced on them, not only in public but in private places, as it is only too commonly in our country. Still that is a proposition on which I do not wish to dwell at present. I sympathize with what has been said in regard to youth. I believe personally,—I cannot say that I have experience, because I have never used tobacco—and I am led to believe by observations and by conversation and discussion of the question with leading medical men who have the best opportunity of judging the effects of these things upon the physique of a large circle of patients, that the use of tobacco in any quantity or form is rather hurtful to the user. I believe that the degree of the hurt is measured by the amount of the use. But the grown-up individual may be supposed to take care of himself. He ought to have enough knowledge and enough judgment as I said to induce him to take care of himself and not to hurt himself by an immoderate or general use of the weed. But youth we cannot expect to have that carefulness, that feeling of self-interest or that feeling of self-restraint and therefore it is the duty of the powers that be, whoever they may be, to try to protect the youth and surround him with those safeguards which we do in many other ways. There is no more deplorable thing than to see boys going through the streets smoking. I have often seen school boys just coming from school within a few feet of the school door stop and take out cigarettes and light them within sight of the school buildings, probably within sight of the masters. I do not know to what extent the teaching authorities do make an effort to restrain its use among the pupils, but I do think that evil has not been met sufficiently by either the home, the school or the church in this country to justify them in demanding from us, the parliament of Canada, the passing of legislation.

I am not prepared to wait for that time. Personally I am in favour of a law which might perhaps interfere with the privilege of the grown individual to use cigarettes if he wishes to, because in the interests of the youth of those who ought not to have this privilege it may be necessary, as in the case of other legislation, to restrict the privilege of some persons for the benefit of others, and I am ready to do this. As to the exact form of the resolution, I confess that as far as this motion is concerned, I do not feel that at this stage of the session we are in a position to draft and put through this House a Bill which would be likely to be a successful one. If my hon. friend would change his motion by making it read 'next session' I would hold up both hands for it and do all I could to see that the motion passed and that the legislation should be introduced and brought forward next session—speaking, of course, in my private capacity and not as a member of the government. I am speaking of course in my private capacity and not as a member of the government. It would be almost impossible to give this session that thorough ventilation to the whole subject which would be required in order to draft a Bill that would be effective. This session is coming to its close, and the time at our disposal would not be sufficient to enact practical legislation. If my hon. friend should propose this motion in the early days of next session, before Christmas, I should be glad to do all I could to put through a measure which would prevent the use of cigarettes by young people. Therefore unless my hon. friend should amend his motion so as to make it read next session instead of this, I cannot support it. I hope that a Bill of this kind will be brought in next session and passed unless we can find other means more effective than those now in force to lessen this evil.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). My hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) has forgotten the old adage: Procrastination is the thief of time. If we cannot enact legislation of this kind this session, I am very much afraid that we will not be better prepared next session than we are now. We all know that during the past few years there has been an agitation to lessen the evil, if not root it out altogether. During the past year various young women's associations have interviewed members of parliament to this end. So far as the province of Ontario is concerned, I do not believe there is a member here from that province who has not had correspondence urging him to support a Bill of this kind. Those desirous to stamp out this evil have gone further. They have endeavoured to exert their influence in the elections and obtain pledges from the various candidates. Under the circumstances, it seems to me the House is just as well prepared to-day to deal with this question as it will be at any future time. We know that the evil is increasing, and consequently every year it will be more difficult to deal with. It is no argument to say that the law now in existence in the province of Ontario has not proved effective. I think it has done considerable good. In my opinion our provincial law prohibiting the sale to minors of tobacco, cigarettes and cigars has greatly aided our school teachers in their efforts to stamp out this evil. Before that law was passed, our teachers had no power to prevent the children from smoking; but at present they can exert their influence against those who sell the cigarettes, they can follow their pupils to their homes, and the result is a considerable diminution of the practice. No doubt the importation and manufacture of cigarettes have increased during the last few years, but it must not be forgotten that our population has very largely increased, and I think it will be found that the use of cigarettes by our school children is diminishing. We have certainly accomplished something. And we have, as the result of this, a demand for more drastic legislation. This tobacco evil is no doubt responsible for many diseases among children and for many crimes committed by our youth. It is undoubtedly a source of decadence, and responsible for a good deal of physical and mental deterioration. I do not think that the plea put forward by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) should be entertained. If we do not legislate this session, how do these hon. gentlemen opposite know that they will have control of the House next session. We have heard rumours of the possibility of general elections before another session; and if there should be, the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite on this and other questions may possibly induce the people to elect a more aggressive government which will pay better heed to the demands of the people. Besides we have no reason to believe that this session will close for a month or six weeks yet, and surely in that time—especially considering that this question has been before the House the last four or five years—we ought to be able to dispose of it. I am prepared therefore to support the resolution of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. R. N. WALSH (Huntingdon). I cannot agree with the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) when he urges that we should not go too hastily. I believe that we cannot go too hastily in legislating on this matter. Nobody who has paid any attention to the youth of this country can fail to be deeply impressed by the pernicious results of cigarette smoking. I am surprised that the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should argue that we ought not to deal with this question because cigarette smoking is not injurious to adults. Anybody who has heard the opinions of medical men or who has seen men with shaking hands who must have a cigarette before breakfast to steady their nerves, must know that the habit is injurious both to adults and youth, though of course much more so to the latter. All those who have given any attention to school children have found that the great difficulty in curtailing the habit lies in the temptation to buy cigarettes when they are exposed for sale in every corner grocery. It has been said that so long as the elder people smoke pipes and cigars, the children will follow suit. But who ever saw, while cigars and tobacco were in general use and cigarettes practically unknown, boys smoking as we see them to-day? It is only since cigarettes have been put on the market that the tobacco evil among immature youth has grown to such an extent. I think that a Bill should be introduced this session. What is the use of leaving it over to another session, when we will just have the same difficulty? All the speeches in opposition to this resolution are practically in favour of the legislation asked for; and when all are in accord, why not introduce a measure and put it through the House.

Mr. CHARLES DEVLIN (Nicolet). I would like to explain why it is impossible for me to support this resolution.

I have no objection whatever to the first two portions of the resolution, but I decidedly object to the last clause—that is, that portion which forbids the importation, the manufacture and the sale of cigarettes, I object to that for the simple reason that I do not think that, even if you were to enact such a law it would be carried out. Of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken here to-day there are several who, I am quite sure, if they knew the attachment that one using tobacco has for that article, would soon be convinced that notwithstanding any laws we might pass upon the subject, the man in want of tobacco would find a way to get it. The resolution, if carried into effect would do away with the smoking of cigarettes in this country. Well, I do not think that there is much likelihood of such legislation being carried out in the immediate future. For my part, I do not think cigarettes are much more injurious than is tobacco in any other form. If we carry out this resolution, what shall we see in the future? Take, for instance, a social dinner: there are those who cannot smoke a cigar or a pipe, but can smoke a cigarette; there are those who can smoke a pipe but cannot smoke either cigarette or cigar. Carry this resolution into effect, and the pipe must be taken out and smoked instead of the cigar or cigarette, and to my mind such a sight at a great social function would be neither seemly nor artistic.

But what struck me most was the speech of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I was edified; and yet I could hardly believe that this was the same hon. gentleman whom I had known from 1891 to 1896 in this House. Then, he was in power; then he had the opportunity of passing this legislation. That was his time. No doubt, the evil was as great as it is to-day, and I am quite sure that it was brought to his notice. His feelings upon this subject, I have no doubt, were as strong then as they are now. But never once, from 1891 to 1896, although he was then Finance Minister of this country, did he undertake to pass legislation upon this subject. And, I put it to the hon. gentleman: some day, perhaps, he will be Finance Minister again; well, when he is Finance Minister again, when he is once more at the head of the department over which he presided so long, will he bring in legislation such as he advocated to-day? I am quite sure that his attitude then will be exactly what his attitude was when he was Finance Minister. I am sure that he will not rise here to-day and tell this House that if his party comes into power, he will introduce legislation forbidding the importation, the manufacture and the sale of cigarettes. I can readily understand that on almost everything he will advocate higher duties, but I do not think that he will advocate this prohibitory legislation. I was astonishesd therefore, to hear him twitting the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) upon that subject and that he was so anxious that the leader of the government should immediately adopt a Bill forbidding these things, which, in his day he had the power to forbid but did not forbid, and which, I believe, were he in power to-day, he would not forbid.

Again, in respect of this article, what authority have we for saying that the cigarette is any worse than the cigar, or pipe, or snuff, or any other use to which tobacco is put? Why not include all these also? The hon. gentleman says that he is aiming especially at the protection of the children.

But, if the child is so anxious to smoke it will smoke pipe or cigar as freely and as readily as it will smoke the cigarette. I have very little patience, I confess, with a good deal of the doctrine I hear preached with respect to this subject. I think this is one of the matters which can be very well left to the parent, for the parent is interested in the care of the child, and he will see to it, far better than the state can do it, that the child shall not injure himself. Or, if it is decided not to leave it to the parent, far better leave it to the police regulations of the municipalities, as suggested by more than one hon. gentleman.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I move the following amendment, seconded by Mr. Barker :

That all the words after the second paragraph in the resolution be omitted and replaced by the following :—

3. That is the duty of the government to introduce legislation at the present session of parliament to prohibit the sale of cigarettes to and the use of cigarettes by persons under sixteen years of age.

I cannot go as far as the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) proposes, but I think it would be easy for parliament to pass legislation in the direction suggested by this amendment. There is no doubt that the smoking of cigarettes does a great deal of harm among children, I can speak as having had the experience of school commissioner for the city of Montreal. As some hon. members has said, the children leave school, and, for a few cents they can buy a package of cigarettes ; and they acquire the habit of smoking, which is a great injury, as indicated by the second paragraph of this resolution. My experience of the children in the schools, which experience is quite extensive, leads me to the conclusion that, if the children knew that the law had declared against their use of cigarettes, if they knew it had been made an offence, they would refrain from smoking cigarettes. As has been said here to-day, we sometimes meet children in bands smoking cigarettes. And what is the remark that we generally make at such a sight ? We say it is regrettable that there is no law which forbids the practice of smoking by these children. The parliament of Canada has the power to pass a law which will make it an offence for people to sell cigarettes to minors; it can make it an offence for children to purchase and use tobacco in that form. And, as I have said, I have no doubt that while such a law possibly might not lead to the total suppression of such a pernicious habit among children, it would greatly lessen the evil.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the proposed amendment prohibit the sale of cigarettes to children ?

Mr. C. R. DEVLIN.

Mr. MONK. Yes, it prohibits the sale to children and the use by children of cigarettes. It would be easy for any grown person—school commissioner, policeman or anybody else—meeting children smoking cigarettes to simply warn then that they were breaking the law and so assist in putting down the practice. The effectiveness of the law, according to my experience would be in the fact, which would become known to the children, that this practice is an offence punishable by arrest and confinement. Of course as has been stated, it is the duty of the parent to watch the child. But I must say that I coincide in what has been said by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) that the power of those authorities which hitherto have been sufficient to prevent the evil, the church authority, the civil authority, and the municipal authority and the authority of the parent, is greatly diminished. There are many opportunities to-day for children to purchase and use cigarettes which did not exist in former times, or, at least, were not so numerous. I believe that it is a step in the right direction to make it an offence to furnish children with what is undoubtedly, upon the admission of everybody a very obnoxious thing for persons of immature age. It is well that children should know in the streets of Montreal, and all large cities where they are so numerous—we had 30,000 of them under our care in Montreal some ten years ago—that there is a law that can reach them. For that reason I would be sorry to see this discussion end without any result. As I am not prepared to go the full length of the motion presented and so ably advocated by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), I would still like to see something done, and done at once, which would mitigate an evil which all admit to exist, so far as children are concerned.

Mr. BARR. I regret that the amendment will prevent the House from recording their votes on the straight question proposed by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). In Ontario we have a law which prevents minors from purchasing and using tobaccos, including cigars and cigarettes. Although it has not been effectual, still it has been a step in the right direction. But it does not fully meet the desires of the people. Therefore, I regret that the members of this House will not have an opportunity of recording their votes upon the straight issue which has been placed before us by the hon. member for Peel. The amendment will practically have the effect of shelving the question and amounts to nothing.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). At the outset I desire to raise the question of the right of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to propose an amendment. The hon. member has exhausted his right to speak, because he has already spoken upon the main motion. I raise the question that he had already exhausted his right to speak and could not rise the second time to propose an amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think that the hon. member who moved the amendment should have done so at the conculsion of his original speech, and having failed to do that his right to speak ceased at the end of his first speech, and he was not in order in moving the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I understand, therefore, your ruling to be that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was not within his right in proposing the amendment. That being your ruling, I propose myself to offer an amendment, it being understood that there is no dissent from the ruling of the Chair. I am going to assume that my point has been well taken.

Mr. MONK. I understand my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is prepared to move an amendment if there is any irregularity in my own.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) will have an opportunity of moving an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is every day the practice of the House to permit a member to speak more than once, as a matter of courtesy. The Prime Minister speaks half a dozen times very often on one motion, and no objection is taken to it. If we are to have a strict ruling in this sense, we might as well understand it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. For my part I have always felt that it was not proper for us to make any departure from the rules of the House even in the case of the Prime Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that settles it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Whether that settles it or not, I am giving my own view on this subject, and in my judgment the business of the House would be conducted very well by adhering strictly to the rules. I propose to move an amendment.

Mr. MONK. I think the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Johnston) is taken too late. I think he cannot raise the point of order after you have put the motion before the House, and discussion has been allowed to proceed upon it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hardly think that point is well taken.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I propose to move that all the words after 'that' in the second paragraph of the main motion be omitted and the following be substituted therefor:

That it is the duty of the government to introduce legislation at the next session of parliament prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to and the use of cigarettes by, persons under sixteen years of age.

I may say one or two words in this connection. Certain persons have made representations to me along the lines mentioned by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), persons who are interested in remedying the evils that have been pointed out by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). They have suggested to me that steps should be taken to introduce legislation giving the provinces a right to legislate along these lines.

Mr. BLAIN. The provinces have that right already.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am not prepared to speak on that point; I am only speaking from representations made to me by various temperance organizations in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BLAIN. Various provinces have already placed upon their statute-books legislation of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am not dissenting from that position, I am merely pointing out that temperance organizations in the province of Nova Scotia have represented to me that it was desirable that legislation along these lines should be submitted during the present session of parliament, and they have asked me to support it. As to the power of this parliament to legislate, I am not a constitutional lawyer, and would not venture an opinion.

Mr. S. BARKER (East Hamilton). Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. It will be necessary for me to put the amendment. It is moved by Mr. Johnston, seconded by Mr. Hughes, (King's, P.E.I.)——

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. No, I am going to speak.

Mr. SPEAKER. So long as the hon. member does not rise he can second the motion and still have the right to speak. It is moved by Mr. Johnston, seconded by Mr. Proulx:

That it is the duty of the government to introduce legislation at the next session of parliament prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to, and the use of cigarettes by, persons under 16 years of age.

Mr. BARKER. May I observe that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) has not only adopted very much the wording of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) but he has actually taken his paper.

Mr. FOSTER. Stolen his guns?

Mr. BARKER. As I was prepared to second the amendment of my hon friend (Mr. Monk) I also desire to move an amendment to the amendment, and I will restore the original amendment as far as possible and perhaps improve it a little. I therefore move in amendment to the amendment:

That all the words after the second paragraph of the main motion be omitted and replaced by the following: That it is the duty of the government to introduce legislation at the present session of parliament prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to, and the use of cigarettes by, persons under eighteen years of age.

I move that amendment although I was in favour and would have voted for the original resolution, but I see no prospect of the original resolution being adopted on this occasion, and as I think that some action should be taken at once I prefer supporting this amendment to the amendment. There can be no doubt that a great many people have very strong opinions upon this ques- of cigarettes generally. There is a far greater number, I think, who object very strongly to the use of cigarettes by young people under age. I do not know that it would be wise to go as far as to say that all under twenty-one years of age should be prohibited but I certainly think that young people under eighteen should not be allowed to use cigarettes. There is no doubt whatever in my mind that a great injury is caused in the province of Ontario because of the difficulty of enforcing the law there. But, I agree with what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has said that if young people knew that it was an offence to be found in the possession of cigarettes and if the sellers of tobacco knew that it would be an offence to sell to these people you would do a great deal indeed to make the law effective and do away with the use of cigarettes by young people. I move my amendment, although I agree with what has been said here that if cigarettes are allowed to be used at all you increase the difficulty of enforcing the law as to young people. I do not wish at this hour to occupy time and I shall therefore simply hand in the amendment prepared originally by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier which I have altered into an amendment to the amendment and I presume that I have as much right to use that piece of paper as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) on the other side of the House had.

Mr. MONK. I beg leave to move that the question be now put.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is moved in amendment to the amendment by Mr. Barker, seconded by Mr. Taylor:

That all the words after the second paragraph of the main motion be omitted and replaced by the following: That it is the duty of the government to introduce legislation at the present session of parliament prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to and the use of cigarettes by persons under eighteen years of age.

Mr. BARKER.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I would like to rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier had the floor first.

Mr. MONK. I move the previous question. I move that the question be now put. There can be no further discussion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, yes, there can.

Mr. MONK. There must be a vote on that motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Are we to have the closure here? Is this discussion to be choked off because the hon. gentleman wants the question put?

Mr. MONK. I have made the motion that this question be now put.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the motion that the question be now put is in order at any stage.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. That can be discussed?

Mr. SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I desire——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. Mr. Monk moves, seconded by Mr. Fowler that the question be now put. The question is on the resolution of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I certainly object to this motion as far as I am concerned. I think this question is worthy of discussion by this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Go on and discuss it.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I would like to know just what is the question under discussion. I am waiting for an opportunity to discuss the question.

Mr. MONK. There can be no discussion on the previous question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No other question can be put but there can certainly be discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the rule is not that there can be no discussion. Rule 42 provides that:

The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question, and shall be in the following words: 'that this question be now put.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will recall an example to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), which I am sure he has not forgotten. In 1886, upon the Riel question a motion was moved by the hon. member for Montmagny of that date, Sir Hector Langevin moved the previous question and we debated it for two or three weeks.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the question can be discussed. No other question can be discussed until that is disposed of.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker,——

Mr. MONK. Do I understand you to rule that it can be discussed on the motion for the previous question ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. What question have I the privilege of discussing ?

Mr. MONK. That the question be now put.

Mr. SPEAKER. It must be confined to a discussion as to whether the question shall be now put.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. To that I am decidedly opposed. I certainly think that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier should not endeavour to choke off discussion in this House. I think that the question which has been brought up by the hon. member for Peel is well worthy of consideration and of discussion by the members of this House and that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has taken a strange way of showing his sympathy with this question by endeavouring to prevent discussion in this House and before the country.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that we have only three minutes to discuss that question and he wishes to talk it out.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I am certainly within my right in discussing it for those three minutes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Prince). If I had only two minutes I would feel it my duty to give expression to my opinion on this subject. I may say that I am very heartily in accord with the principles expressed in the resolution moved by the hon. member for Peel.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. That is out of order is it; then I will address myself to the motion made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, but in order that I shall make no mistake on this matter I will again ask your opinion, Mr. Speaker, as to what is the question now before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question before the House is as to whether the motion shall now be put or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With all due deference Mr. Speaker, I submit the whole question is now before the House. The moving of the previous question is simply to prevent any other amendment being made, and I submit that the whole question which is now being debated, namely, the main motion, the motion in amendment, and the motion in subamendment as now before the House are open to discussion. I think I could quote authorities in support of my views.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. If I have your permission Mr. Speaker, I shall proceed with my remarks.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister has taken up part of your time.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I cannot help that, but I claim the right as a member of this House to discuss the motion before the chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I repeat, that I think this is a very summary way to dispose of this question. I am certainly opposed to the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and if it comes to a vote I shall vote against it.

Mr. W. WRIGHT (Muskoka). I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright) has moved the adjournment of the debate, and the matter will therefore come up again.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think no other motion can be made while the hon. member from Prince Edward Island has the floor.

Mr. BLAIN. It is only fair to me that I should have an opportunity of saying a few words——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BLAIN. I very courteously ask, whether this motion shall be allowed to drop now, or whether the motion of my hon. friend from Muskoka to adjourn the debate shall be accepted, so that this question can be again discussed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MONK. I will withdraw my motion for the previous question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has a perfect right to have an answer to his question. I think, that while the motion for the previous question is under discussion, and the hon. member from Prince Edward Island has the floor, any other motion is out of order.

Mr. MONK. But I have withdrawn the motion for the previous question.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. Hughes) has the floor, and he has not waived his right to the floor. Therefore, the hon. member for Muskoka has no right to move the adjournment of the debate while my hon. friend is speaking.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the point is well taken.

Mr. BLAIN. With the permission of the House, I would like to say that this question was driven out of the House on a technicality in 1903——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Blain) can address the House with consent of the House and the hon. member from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. But I have the floor.

Mr. BLAIN. I am quite willing to sit down if my hon. friend is in a hurry.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I have the floor and I wish to continue my remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the House and the hon. member object, the hon. gentleman from Peel cannot interrupt.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the House will not object.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BLAIN. If that is the kind of warfare, I will accept it——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Peel sees that objection is taken to his proceeding now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) who has the floor can move the adjournment of the debate, or he can conclude his remarks; that is the proper course.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman from Prince (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has not concluded his remarks.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I cannot conclude my remarks, if hon. gentlemen continue to interrupt me.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. J. J. Hughes) move the adjournment of the debate?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER. It being six o'clock, I now leave the chair.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

INSURANCE COMMITTEE REPORT.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Before we proceed with public Bills and orders may I ask the Prime Minister when we may expect copies of the Report of the Royal Commission on Insurance to be laid on the table.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, I do not know, it is in the hands of the printers now, but it ought to be ready any day.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the Prime Minister kindly inquire so that he can let us know to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Thank you.

THE TRANSPORTATION QUESTION.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bennett.

That in the opinion of this House the report of the Committee on Transportation (of which J. H. Ashdown, Esq., is chairman), should forthwith be taken up, considered and acted upon by parliament.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). Mr. Speaker, of all the important questions which are agitating the minds of the people of Canada to-day, I doubt if there is any which is of equal importance with that of transportation. Not only is that important question agitating the minds of the people of Canada but it is equally agitating those of the people to the south of us in the United States. On page 22 of the report of the Royal Commission on transportation the commissioners have divided the routes from the Georgian bay to the sea-board into three separate groups :

1. Via Midland, including the Grand Trunk Railway, double tracked as Mr. Hayes proposes, the Trent Valley waterway and in all probability the Canadian Pacific Railway.

2. Via Depot Harbour, including the Canada Atlantic and Intercolonial Railway, and

3. The all-water route, via either the proposed French and Ottawa rivers and canal system or the enlarged Welland canal.

The first of these via Midland has been very ably discussed by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and consequently I shall have nothing to say with reference to it. I may, however, say in passing that not only are the remaining two routes of importance but also all the other routes; those from Goderich, from Collingwood, from Owen Sound and from Meaford, will all be required if we are to carry the grain and the other products which are to be grown in the Northwest to the sea-board. First of all let me draw attention for a few moments to the route via Depot Harbour. This road was built and formerly owned by the Canada Atlantic people but of recent years it has passed into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway. That railroad purchased it in order that it might be used as a through route in the carriage of grain from Port Arthur to the sea. When they took hold of the road it was not in the most perfect condition by any means but they have set about improving it systematically to the highest state of efficiency. Bear in mind that this is one of the important routes which the Royal Commission have set before the public. At Depot Harbour we have a depth of 24 feet of water which is ample for any vessel sailing upon our great lakes. There is still another advantage at that harbour over most of the lake ports in that there is no river running into it and consequently no silt or foreign matter deposited in the harbour; whatever depth of water there is there to-day will continue to be there without any additional expense. Furthermore this road from Depot Harbour has the advantage that it is 36 miles nearer to Montreal than by any other route and it is 60 miles shorter from Port Arthur to Depot Harbour than from Port Arthur to any other bay port making a difference of 100 miles in round numbers in favour of this line of road. At Depot Harbour large improvements have been made by this government; they have built a breakwater there 525 feet long of the most substantial material, built in the most workmanlike manner, which acts not only as a breakwater but also as a splendid wharf on which has been erected one of the finest elevators we have on the lake front. When this elevator was first constructed its capacity was 1,500,000 bushels but it has since been enlarged so that it has now a capacity of nearly 2,000,000 bushels. In addition to that the Grand Trunk people, as soon as possible after purchasing this line, undertook most material improvements. At Madawaska, the divisional point, they erected last year a magnificent concrete and steel round-house capable of holding 13 engines and also one of the finest coal sheds on their road, all equipped with the most improved mechanical appliances; it is second to none on the Grand Trunk Railway. They are erecting a similar round-house at Depot Harbour so that when those improvements are made the road will be one of the best equipped in that respect in the province of Ontario. When the Grand Trunk Railway took over the Canada Atlantic the trestles were in very inferior condition and it has taken a long time to fill these up but most of them are now filled, and they are working on the grades so that from Depot Harbour to Rainy Lake, 75 miles, they will be able to mount with only a 1 per cent grade and after passing Rainy Lake, until they reach Montreal they can easily obtain a 4-10 per cent grade because it is down grade all the way. When these improvements are completed it will be one of the best routes for carrying our through traffic to Montreal. Between Ottawa and Montreal they have made vast improvemnts. They have erected new steel bridges capable of carrying the largest engines and trains that they have; they have increased their capacity at least 50 per cent on this road and it is now one of the finest in the land. In addition to that this road can be easily connected with Petawawa where the military camp is held and if the government sees fit to take advantage of its running powers over the Canada Atlantic they can not only get to the Petawawa camp and obtain a share of the traffic which is largely increasing every year but can also carry their share of the through traffic from Depot Harbour to St. John and Halifax.

Having said so much with reference to this road, let me proceed at once to the city of Montreal and, inasmuch as a good deal has been said with reference to the alleged want of action on the part of this government in giving proper railway and freight facilities, I wish to draw attention for a moment to some of the things this government has done. I shall take good care that I do not cover the same ground that was so ably covered by the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher). There are some things which of course the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) did not mention, but of course he could not cover the whole ground in one speech. Perhaps not the least important was the appointment of this commission to take up all the various routes and report to this House. This I consider one of the best moves this government ever made. In addition it has spent $550,000 on a survey of the Georgian bay canal route. That was a most liberal expenditure, but an expenditure which will be well repaid. Let me take you to the city of Montreal and see what has been done there. There was a great deal of work to be done and a great deal has been done though there is considerable still left to be accomplished. To give you an idea of what the St. Lawrence channel from Montreal was like not long ago, let me draw attention to how the condition of that channel affected us in my own riding. Mr. Perrigo, one of our most successful cattle dealers, who sends large consignments to the old country, sent a consignment not many years ago to Glasgow. But after the cattle were got on ship board, the ship was caught in the low tide down the river below Montreal and went over to one side. The consequence was that Mr. Perrigo lost a large number of cattle through their being smothered. But how did that affect the county of South Renfrew? Well, when Mr. Perrigo came back he told the farmers that inasmuch as he had lost so much on that trip, it was impossible for him to give the same prices. Consequently the prices went down several dollars a head. That showed the direct loss to the people of South Renfrew caused by the lack of proper facilities for the navigation of the St. Lawrence. Let me draw attention once more to the situation in Montreal in 1901. Mr. Roddick, who was then representing that city in this House, speaking on the St. Lawrence channel, used the following language:

Marine insurance to the St. Lawrence is more than double to American ports. For instance, where the insurance is 4½ per cent to, say, Baltimore, we have to pay from nine to ten per cent, and even eleven per cent, on the steamers employed in the St. Lawrence route, which means, on a vessel costing $500,000 making five voyages in the season, extra insurance of $5,000 per voyage, or $25,000 per year.

A little further on he said:

Seventy-five per cent of Lloyd's underwriters will not look to the St. Lawrence, either for hulls or freight.

That was a pretty serious state of affairs. The question now is what has this government done? Has it done anything to improve that condition? Has it made matters any better? To show you what this government has done, let me draw your attention to an address which was given on February 13 last, in the city of Montreal by Hugh A. Allan, before the Shipping Federation. Here is what he said:

Proceeding Mr. Allan directed the attention of members to the fact that the large expenditure by the government in improving aids to navigation has been justified by resulting in the reduction of insurance rates for seven years, from 1900 to the present time inclusive, of thirty-nine per cent on provisions and fifty-four per cent on grain.

This shows clearly that the work undertaken by this government has been beneficial to this country. Furthermore I am proud to know that during this last year, owing to the improvements on the waterway between Montreal and Quebec, not a single accident has happened on that route of any magnitude whatever. The consequence is that the rate of insurance is going down every year and every time the rate of insurance is reduced on our products, that means so much in the pockets of the farmers or those who are shipping to the outside world. You must bear in mind that this government has provided a channel thirty feet deep from Montreal to Quebec—a channel which is three hundred feet wide where it is straight to 500 feet at the bends. The consequence is that vessels sailing from Montreal have no difficulty navigating the St. Lawrence route, and insurance has been largely reduced, to the benefit of the whole community. Furthermore bear in mind that this reduction goes to the benefit of the freight shipper no matter where he resides in the Dominion and consequently is a direct advantage to everybody here. In addition this government has constructed one of the largest and most powerful dredges in the world to-day. This dredge was built all of Canadian material, designed by a Canadian engineer, built by Canadian workmen and in a Canadian port. Surely it is a source of gratification that we should have the most powerful dredge and the most efficient in the world made by our own workmen in our own land. Surely that is something we ought to give this government credit for. Then you must not forget that the acting Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) when he took this position in hand, found things in the department in a very peculiar condition. The old board of commissioners was doing the work, and on that board there was continual bickering and friction. One wanted one way and the other wanted another, and the consequence was the work was not advanced as it should be. But when the present Minister of Marine took charge, he took the most sensible and wisest course. He appointed three independent commissioners, experts in that line of business. These three, along with one of the best engineers of the harbour, talked the whole matter over, and ever since the work has been pushed with vigour, and I hope the time is not far distant when everything there will be in perfect order.

Mr. TAYLOR. After playing with it nine or ten years.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I must acknowledge that things have not gone on as rapidly as we would like. But it is hard to get things in this world to go as smoothly as we would wish. One thing is certain, that things are improved as compared with former times, and I hope from this on they will get better than ever before.

I wish to draw attention to a few things we would like to have done in the port of Montreal. We believe that the St. Lawrence river should be for the benefit of the whole Dominion. We hear a great deal in these days of railways, for the 'general advantage of Canada.' Why should not the St. Lawrence river be for the general advantage of Canada, and be so designated? The ordinary workman living in Montreal has not half the interest in the port of Montreal and the St. Lawrence river that the farmer living a thousand miles away has. The farmer is the man who is interested in having that river put in the best possible condition for navigation. The man who works for day's wages in Montreal has none of this interest. Therefore, the St. Lawrence river should be designated as a river for the general advantage of Canada and used as such. The great ports of the St. Lawrence, Montreal and Quebec, should be made free ports. In the state of New York, in the present session of the legislature, they are passing a law which will do away with all the dockage in the port of New York, which, last year, amounted to no less a sum than $13,000,000. The amount of wharfage and harbour dues paid in the port of Montreal last year was only $360,000. Surely, if the state of New York can give up over $13,000,000, the Dominion of Canada can give up this $360,000 of harbour dues collected in the port of Montreal. If these charges were removed and Montreal were made a free port, and if Quebec were treated in the same way, it would be a great advantage to the shippers of this country. And not only should Montreal and Quebec be made free ports, but St. John and Halifax should be made free ports also. There are other matters that are backward in Montreal and that should be changed as soon as possible. I speak particularly of the carriers which take the grain from the elevators to the vessels. As it is now, when a vessel goes to Montreal to be loaded with grain, the grain must be taken from the car and be put into the elevator, from here it is put into the barge which has to be towed out to the vessel and the grain elevated from the barge to the vessel. All this costs money and involves delay. The difficulty with regard to these carriers is that the sheds on the wharfs of Montreal have not been completed, but I understand that arrangements have been made whereby they will be completed at an early date this year, by which time the carriers also will be completed, and when this is done things will move a great deal better than in the past. Now, what is the use of our spending $90,000,000 in canals and $400,000,000 in bonusing railroads, if, when we bring our products to Montreal, we cannot get them shipped? Why is it that last year 20,000,000 bushels of our grain was exported by American ports and only 21,000,000 by our own Canadian ports? The reason is that we have not, up to the present time, the facilities for taking care of the grain when it came to the port of Montreal. This is the thing we want to have remedied. We want every facility for the loading and unloading of grain. It is true that all this will cost money. But you must remember the old adage that it is where you scatter a large quantity that you gather a large quantity, and we want to do the scattering in order that we may gather a great deal. Before I leave this point, I wish to refer to this wonderful scheme which Lord Strathcona and his associates have proposed to give a quicker connection with the old country—this 25-knot scheme which he is bringing to the notice of the government. I understand that by the scheme they will be able to take passengers from Blacksod bay, in Ireland, to Halifax in a little less than three and a half days, or, from London to Montreal in a little less than five days; from London to Chicago in less than six days; from London to Vancouver in nine days; from London to Yokohama in seventeen days; and from London to Hong Kong, China, in twenty-two days. What is more important still is that they can take passengers from London to Halifax and on to New York in one day less time than can be done by any other route. If this can be done, surely it is something that the government should take seriously into consideration.

Now, allow me to draw your attention to the Georgian bay canal, which is the third noticed by the Transportation Commission. I know that it is said by some that the days of canals are passed. With this I certainly cannot agree. Let me give you the answer which the state of New York makes to that suggestion. They have granted $101,000,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the Erie canal to deepen it from 7 to 12 feet. If they can pay so much for a canal only 12 feet in depth, surely we should be able to pay something towards the Georgian bay canal, to make it a waterway of 20 or 22 feet in depth. We find that the amount of freight going through the Sault canal in 1905 was no less than 45,000,000 of tons. This was in seven months, and the amount was three times greater than what went through the Suez canal in the whole year. If you wonder where this great haul came from, allow me to remind you that the tonnage from the city of Chicago is almost equal to the tonnage from New York and that the tonnage from Duluth is greater than that of the city of Liverpool and almost equal to that of Liverpool and Glasgow combined. This gives an idea whence this great traffic comes. And consider the saving to the people of the trade going through the Soo canal. On page four of the report of the International Waterways Commission, I read the following:

> The total number of tons of freight which passed through the Sault locks in 1905 was 44,270,990 and it follows that in this year there was an aggregate saving through lake transportation on Lake Superior, through freight alone, of approximately $116,000,000. In other words, by transporting the Lake Superior freight on the Great Lakes $116,000,000 were saved in 1905 to the producers of raw materials to the manufacturer, and the consumer, and the saving to manufacturers has made it possible for them to supply the home market and compete in those of foreign countries.

Let me give a few further figures showing the freight carried on the St. Lawrence canal in 1902 and 1904 respectively:

—	Tons.	Tons.	Increase.
	1902.	1904.
Coal	12,000	345,000	Nearly 30 fold.
Corn	13,000	73,000	" 5 "
Miscellaneous goods	8,000	41,000	Over 5 "
Total freight passing through	11,000	1,427,000	Nearly 2½ "
Number of vessels	566	617	51 vessels.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why do we want the Georgian Bay canal constructed ? We want it constructed because it will be a regulator of freight rates on the railroads. You must bear in mind that canals are the best regulators of freight rates that have been discovered. They are far better than any Acts of parliament we can pass. They are continuous, they are always effective, and in every instance they make railroads carry freight at a reasonable rate. Now, it is impossible for us to bring the cities of the western plains to the sea-board, but we can bring the sea-board nearer to the cities of our western plains. If this canal were constructed to a depth of 21 feet, it would bring the head of navigation to Port Arthur and Fort William, a thousand miles inland, and the consequence would be that the cities of our western plains would be that much nearer to the sea-board than they are now. But that is not all. It would bring Chicago, Duluth, Fort Arthur and Fort William as near to the sea-board as they are now to Buffalo.

There are in this country three principal systems of transportation, wagons, canals and railways. The wagons carry everything too and from the railways. You would perhaps naturally think that marine transportation would work in direct opposition to the railroads in the carriage of freight. But as a matter of fact the one assist the other. Canals carry everything which is heavy, which does not require expedition, where time does not enter so materially into the operation. Canals carry that class of goods which railways lose money on, and which they do not care to carry. For example, canals carry the coal, the ore, the lumber, the stone, the lime and all such heavy goods in which time is not an important factor. But the railways carry goods which are revenue producing. They take the passenger traffic, they take the express, the package goods, they take live stock, and all that kind of freight on which there is money, and they leave to the canals the carriage of the heavy goods on which they do not make so much money.

Now, if this canal were constructed it would give us an immense amount of water power in addition to what we have now. It would give us more water-power and more valuable water-power than Niagara Falls, for the reason that it is distributed throughout the whole length of the 425 miles of this canal. Consequently we would have industries starting up all along this canal route. Let me draw your attention to this fact. Why is it that we have the town of Cornwall, with its 8,000 inhabitants and 2,000 operatives in the mills? It is because, in the construction of the canal, a fine water-power was developed which is rented to these mills, and consequently you find that town full of cotton factories, paper mills, &c., which never would have had an existence were it not for that water-power. The same remark applies to Valleyfield, a town of 12,000 inhabitants and 2,500 operatives in the cotton mills. The same remark applies to Côte St. Paul where they have 15,000 inhabitants and 3,000 men employed in the shops.

Now I ask you to bear in mind the experiments which Dr. Haanel has made with reference to the electrical smelting of ore, and which is so hard to smelt in any other way. He has discovered that all those ores we have now lying so plentifully along this proposed canal route can be utilized by the electrical process. Let me read to you what Dr. Haanel says in a summary of the results of his experiments.

1. Magnetite can be as economically smelted by the electro-thermic process as hematite.
2. Ores of high sulphur content not containing manganese can be made into pig iron containing only a few thousandths of a per cent of sulphur.
3. The silicon content can be varied as required for the class of pig to be produced.
4. Charcoal which can be cheaply produced from mill refuse or wood which could not be otherwise utilized can be substituted for coke as a reducing agent, without being briquetted with the ore.
5. A ferro-nickle pig can be produced practically free from sulphur and of fine quality from roasted nickeliferous pyhrrotite.
6. The experiment made with a titaniferous iron ore containing 17·82 per cent of titanic acid permits the conclusion that titaniferous iron ores up to perhaps five per cent titanic acid can be successfully treated by the electric process.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we have all these ores in such abundance, which can be smelted by electricity generated by water-power, you will see what a great source of wealth would be opened to the country by the construction of this canal and its accompanying water-powers. At Sturgeon Falls on Lake Nipissing there is a paper mill producing fifty tons of paper per day. If this route were constructed they would be able to bring in all the coal they require by water instead of bringing it in at great expense by land and they would immediately double the output of the mill and the number of hands they employ. At Copper Cliff, near Sudbury, are located the richest nickel mines in the world furnishing employment to 1,500 men. These works represent an outlay of $2,000,000 and they produce more than half the nickel supply of the world. They use nearly 30,000 tons of coal annually all of which has to be brought at great expense by rail from Pennsylvania and Ohio. If we have this canal constructed they would bring in their coal at such a low rate that they would commence refining operations right at their works, they would double the number of men they would employ and instead of sending all our ore out to the United States to be refined all this work would be done in our own country. The same thing applies to Cobalt. There, we have the richest silver mines that there are in the world. Why should not all these ores be refined in our own country instead of going abroad? If we had this canal constructed they would bring in coal and the refining would all be done there and not in the United States.

Now, let me draw your attention for a moment to the route itself. If this route is constructed it will be in length 425 miles. Of this length 395 miles would be lake and wide, easily navigated river. There would only be thirty miles of canal and these thirty miles of canal would not be the same as an ordinary canal because the banks are of rock and so constituted that vessels could go through under full steam from one end to the other. It is true that there would be a number of locks, but these locks are managed so quickly that it would take very little time to pass through them. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, for your benefit, and I have no doubt that the members of this House would like to have this information, to state that a single steamer has passed through the Canadian lock at the Soo in eight minutes, a single steamer has passed through the Weitzel lock in ten minutes, and a single steamer has been passed through the Poe lock in eleven minutes. It is gratifying to know that we have in our Canadian lock the best and most improved that there is in the world. Eight minutes is all the time that is required to pass a vessel through that lock. If we can pass a vessel through that lock in eight minutes surely the delay that there would be in going through the locks on this route would not, taking into consideration the fact that it is a small operation, count at all. You must bear in mind too that this is a direct route, that it is 378 miles shorter than by the St. Lawrence, and that it is 450 miles shorter than the Erie route. It is not only 450 miles shorter, but it is also four days shorter in time and inasmuch as time is an important factor in the carrying of grain and merchandise surely this would be a great advantage. We must bear in mind also that this is a shaded route, that it will be protected from wind and storms, that consequently we will get a low rate of insurance and that no foreign navigation laws can affect us as this route is all in our own country. You must know that we have an arrangement with the United States whereby no more war vessels may be kept on the upper lakes than those which are actually necessary for revenue purposes. We also know that we have strictly lived up to the letter of the law. We know that the United States have not lived up to the letter of the law. We know that they have now on the upper lakes no less than seven or eight war vessels. We know that last year they took a war vessel in halves to the lakes through the Erie canal. It is not nice for us to say these things when there is such a good state of feeling between the United States and Canada. We would hope to see the entente cordiale continue, but if it should not continue where would we be? If we have the Georgian bay canal constructed and if there should be a war or any difficulty between us and the United States we would be able to bring vessels from the coast through our own territory and place them on the lakes and the consequence is that if they had war vessels there before us we would be able to go in and effectually protect our shores. Then, it would enable us to produce sailors in time of peace so that in time of war we would have them to man our men of war.

Now then, I want to say a word in reference to the cost of grain carriage. According to a statement which was made by Mr. Richardson of Kingston, the other day when a deputation waited on the ministers here it cost six and a half cents to carry grain from Fort William to Montreal by water and rail. If this route were opened we would be able to carry grain from Port Arthur to Montreal for three cents which would make a difference of three and a half cents a bushel. You can easily see what that means to the farmers of the Northwest. Just let me take you for a moment on board a vessel which runs from Fort William where the grain is transferred from the railway. Upon going to Midland or Depot Harbour the vessel has to wait for some time to get in and many times they are not able to get in as soon as they like. They take the grain from the vessel to the elevator and the loading costs half a cent a bushel. When they go into Montreal there is another delay, they have to take the grain from the car, put it in the elevator which costs another half cent a bushel, then they take it from the elevator and put it on the barge, and from the barge into the ship. This costs another half cent. For loading charges alone there is a loss of one and a half cents a bushel all of which would be saved if we had this canal constructed. We have on the great lakes capacity to carry 100 million bushels a year. If we have that surely it would be a grand thing for us to have this route because at the present time we are not able to get the grain out from Manitoba. Only a quarter of the grain grown in the Northwest has yet been taken out and we want this route in order than it can be carried out quickly. Now, I do not think it is necessary to detain the House any longer, but I do hope that as soon as the report comes down from the surveyors who are making a survey of this route it will be found that the amount which will be required will be within the reach of this government and that the government will take the matter in hand and construct the route at the earliest date possible.

Mr. GERALD V. WHITE (North Renfrew). Mr. Speaker. Representing as I do a constituency which lies on one of our great inland waterways, the Ottawa river, I feel it is my duty to say a few words on this very important subject of transportation. We are blest in Canada with abundant agricultural, mineral and forest wealth, and nature has placed at our disposal splendid waterways by means of which we can transport these resources cheaply and quickly to the markets of the world. But it remains for us to assist nature and to render suitable for the needs of modern commerce the transportation routes so generously placed at our command. In view of our great development in trade and commerce, the transportation question is one of the most important which faces the people of Canada at the present day. We have discussed during this session of parliament a project to build a railway to Hudson bay, which, connecting with a line of steamers, would give us a new outlet to the European markets. I am heartily in accord with all such projects to develop the commerce of our country, but in my opinion the construction of the Georgian bay canal is the project that above all others will confer the greatest advantages upon our country: It is now about fifty years ago since the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian bay canal, a scheme to connect the great lakes with the sea-board, was first presented to the people of Canada, and during all the years that have intervened in the last half century, it has been occupying the attention of the people of this country. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House have during this and previous parliaments, advanced many cogent reasons why such an important work should be constructed with the least possible delay, and I join my voice to theirs in the hope that the government of Canada may now proceed with this undertaking. Within the last few weeks, we have had expressions of opinion from such eminent authorities on our transportation question as Mr. Robert Reford, of Montreal, and Mr. H. K. Wicksteed, chief engineer of the Canadian Northern Railway eastern lines, strongly advocating the immediate construction of the Georgian bay canal. As I have said, we have been blest by nature with extensive and abundant waterways, as an instance of which I might cite the fact that the Georgian bay canal scheme opens up to us a navigable waterway of 425 miles, out of which only 30 miles require any artificial aid to make it an advantageous route. Mr. Reford declared that the construction of this canal would make Montreal and Quebec two of the greatest ports on the American continent, and he also said that on every bushel of wheat the western farmer produced it would lessen the cost of transportation by three cents, putting that much more money into the farmer's pocket. Let me quote a few words from Mr. Reford's statement :

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT.

We have all heard of the American invasion and know that there is a strong feeling for annexation in the west. There are many American farmers there, and they think they would have an outlet for their produce in the states if annexation were accomplished. But, if we show them that it is in Canadian routes to the sea that their interests are best served, we shall bind the west to the east by chains whose strength we little realize.

This is strong language from Mr. Reford in favour of the Georgian bay canal, and no less enthusiasm for the scheme is evidenced by Mr. Wicksteed, who, although a railway man, has pointed out that while within the last thirty years railway rates have decreased by 50 per cent; water rates have gone down 80 per cent. My hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Wright) has pointed out that from a military point of view the building of the Georgian bay canal would be of great strategic advantage to Canada, inasmuch as at no point along the route would it be less than 45 to 50 miles from the international boundary. This feature of the scheme will no doubt commend itself to many Canadians who may not be so particularly interested in it from a commercial point of view. But Mr. Wicksteed has pointed out its commercial advantages and he says that while the main object of railways was to connect the west with Lake Superior, the object of this canal would be to complete that chain of transportation and to carry the produce of the west from Lake Superior to the sea-board. I quote from Mr. Wicksteed :

It can do us no harm to have the American commerce sailing past our doors; it can do no harm to Montreal and Quebec to have this commerce transhipped in their harbours ; and it can do no harm, especially in a political sense to have Canada controlling the main gateway of the commerce of half this continent.

Let me point out some few of the advantages of the Georgian bay route in the matter of distance from the points of production to the great consuming centres. I shall mention the following comparative distances :

	Miles.
Fort William to Liverpool via New York	4,930
Fort William to Liverpool via the Georgian bay canal	4,109
Difference in favour of the Georgian bay route over the New York route	821
Fort William to Liverpool via the St. Lawrence route	4,410
Fort William to Liverpool via the Georgian bay canal	4,109
Difference in favour of the Georgian bay route over the St. Lawrence route	301

And, Sir, not only would the building of this canal secure the trade of our great Northwest for ourselves, but it would undoubtedly attract to Canada a considerable portion of the trade of the western states. We find that the grain trade through to Buffalo, at the present time, is about 150,000,000 bushels a year, and of this quantity some 15,000,000 bushels is the product of the Canadian Northwest. Is it not a patriotic idea to so develop our natural waterways as to ensure that at least all our Canadian trade should pass through an all Canadian route. There is another feature of the Georgian bay canal which well deserves the attention of this parliament and which must add immensely to the wealth of our country. The development of the Georgian bay route would place at our disposal enormous water-powers, so that along its banks industries of all kinds might be established. It is said indeed, that from 3,000,000 horse-power to 5,000,000 horse-power could be developed along the route of the Georgian bay canal, and such an immense quantity of power cheaply obtained must give enormous impetus to the manufacturing industries of this country. Then again, its beneficial effect on our mining and our lumber industry would be incalculable. The products of the new Ontario mines could be cheaply transported, and the necessary supplies would be cheaply brought to the mining centres. Then, in connection with the lumber trade, this transportation route would carry the lumber direct from the saw you may say to the English market and provide a most convenient outlet for the products of the great sawmills on the Ottawa river. Then the vessels on their return trips could carry the lumber more cheaply from the Ottawa valley to the west.

As I said before this project has been before the country for a great many years. Within the last few years the present administration has expended some $550,000 odd on surveys in connection with this great scheme. I find in the report for 1905 the latest report which I have been able to obtain—the final report for this year not yet being down—that Mr. St. Laurent, the engineer in charge of the survey says in conclusion, after referring to the weather conditions :

Notwithstanding these unfavourable conditions, good substantial progress has been made, and the field force certainly deserve great credit for their efforts in the interest of the work, and the amount of work already performed. It is hoped that most of the survey will be completed late in the fall, excepting on two or three sections, which are longer than the others, and where physical difficulties are such that they may be completed only some time in January or February next.

It is understood also that in 1906, while putting down on paper the final scheme as adopted, it will be necessary to send out one or two parties at different points to supplement the information, if required, where structures &c., will be located.

I think it is due to the people of this country that at a very early date we should have the final report of the engineers on this survey.

It must not be forgotten that great advantages to the country would follow from the opening of this canal through the benefits that would be given to manufactures by the development of the water-powers on this route. Flour mills, for instance, could be erected at many points, which would form great industries and afford a market for the small grain growers especially.

As has been pointed out, it would tend to hold the railways in check in regard to freight rates, as we can see by the experience of other countries. Last year the Erie canal carried some 20,000,000 bushels of grain with 7,000-bushel barges. Taking into consideration the dimensions of this canal and the capacity of the barges it could accommodate, I believe it would be quite safe to say that the barges which could be placed on this route could have a capacity of 100,000 bushels, and thus it would be an even more important factor in the regulation of rates.

I have studied the report in relation to the hydraulic part of the work, and I find that the water supply at the height of land is studied on the basis of a possible traffic of from 10,000,000 to 20,000,000 tons. The survey shows that the height of land is at a point at or near Trout lake, some four or five miles from Lake Nipissing. It has been proved beyond doubt, at least as far as the stretch from the Georgian bay to Lake Nipissing along the French river is concerned, that the scheme is quite feasible, and this part of the route has, I think, been pretty thoroughly surveyed. We find that Trout lake is some 23 feet above the level of Lake Nipissing, and the reports would indicate that it would be necessary to excavate to the level of Lake Nipissing at high water. It was at first thought that it might be possible to raise the level of Lake Nipissing, but this has been found impracticable, especially in later years, since the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the building of towns along the lake front, which would be drowned out were the surface of the lake raised to any extent. I am sorry that I have not more figures to give to the House on this important question, but as the final report has not been laid before the House, it is almost impossible to come to any final conclusion, especially with regard to figures. However, if I may be permitted for a moment, I shall quote a few of the references to this great project made by some of the leading engineers of this country. We find, for instance, the late Walter Shanly says in part :

The Ottawa country abounds in iron ore of the richest description. Its forests of pine are inexhaustible. Its water-power is not only unlimited in capacity, but it is available to its fullest extent at numberless stages upon the route. By the opening of the projected navigation this geat manufacturing agent would be brought into comparative proximity to the granaries of Lake Michigan, and would immediately be turned to account in preparing the cereals of the west for the markets of the east. With such a combination of advantages in possession or in prospect, it is surely not difficult of belief that the valley of the Ottawa is destined to be not only the workshop of Canada, but one of the chief manufacturing districts of America.

Then we find that Mr. T. C. Clark, a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, in his report to the government of Canada, in the year 1860, says :

In the first place I have to report that the distances between Montreal and the mouth of the French river on Lake Huron according to the plans furnished me by the department, is following the line of investigation adopted, 430·76 miles, that of this distance 351·81 miles are already a perfect natural navigation and requires no improvements and that it is perfectly impracticable so to improve the remaining 78·95 miles as to convert the whole chain of waters into first-class navigation for steam vessels and to reduce the length of canalling to 29·3 miles or, exclusive of the Lachine canal, to 20·82 miles.

I do not wish to detain the House at any greater length, but before resuming my seat I would like to point out that the other evening, when my hon. friend the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fisher) spoke on this question, he referred to the assistance given by this government to such projects as the Trent Valley canal, the improvements at Port Colborne, the increased grant to the Canada Atlantic Railway and so forth, but I was rather disappointed to find that he did not make any allusion to this great canal scheme, because it is a scheme the accomplishment of which will not only tend to further the interests of the people in eastern Canada but also be a great advantage to the west. In conclusion I would like to impress on the government the importance of this great work, and I trust that within a very few days we will have a final report laid on the table. That report, I am confident, will point out that the scheme is a feasible one and one which should commend itself very heartily to the present administration.

Mr. JACOB SCHELL (Glengarry). When this matter was under discussion last session, I took occasion to make some extended remarks, and while I do not propose going over the same grounds this year, I desire to make a few observations both as regards the position in which we stand and what has been done since we last met. I was pleased to listen to the remarks of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) also those of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) and the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) as well as those of the gentlemen who have spoken this evening. But each of these hon. gentlemen discussed the subject from a special standpoint and not from a Dominion standpoint. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) devoted most of his time to discussing the improvements of Midland harbour, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) discussed the Trent Valley canal, and to-night we have heard the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) pointing out the advantages of the Georgian bay canal system.

Mr. TAYLOR. And you heard something too about a dredge.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. That did not call for comment. The great subject before us is the movement of produce from the west to the east and east to the west by routes which would be the cheapest and best in the public interest. Taking up this resolution and discussing this matter from the standpoint of the Transportation Commission, I would point out that the commission summed up its report as follows :

Your commission are of the opinion that the Canadian routes herebefore mentionned, viz.:

1. Via Midland, including the Grand Trunk Railway (double-tracked as Mr. Hayes proposes), the Trent valley waterway and in all probability the Canadian Pacific Railway.

2. Via Depot Harbour, including the Canada Atlantic and Intercolonial Railways ;

3. The all-water route, via either the proposed French and Ottawa rivers canal system, or the enlarged Welland canal ;

Should be taken and considered as the main Canadian routes by which the products of the west will reach ocean navigation.

Having given these as the alternative routes, so far as the government is concerned, I believe they are carrying out the suggestions of the report of that commission as fully as possible, in so far as they are now erecting those elevators at Port Colborne which will take care of all the grain they can possibly pour in there. It all depends on the amount of elevator capacity they have at Port Colborne, and if that is not sufficient then the deepening of the Welland canal. So far as the government is concerned, I claim they have carried out the requirements of the resolution moved by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett).

The whole transportation question now resolves itself to a question of railway or canal transportation. I claimed last session, and I claim still, that canal transportation will scarcely compete with railway carriage. It has not done so in the past ; and notwithstanding the remarks of the last speaker (Mr. White), who quoted Mr. Wicksteed to the effect that the reduction in the cost of carriage by water had been so much more than the reduction by rail. I shall give you a few statistics which will show what we may expect in the very near future from rail transportation. Up to the present in the carriage of grain from the Georgian bay eastward, we have not got any railway, whether the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway or the former Canada Atlantic, which is better than a one per cent road. Let me give you the figures from one of the leading railways on the continent of America as to the haulage capacity of their trains :

With loaded cars, engines of twenty by twenty-six cylinders, sixty-two inch drivers, pressure two hundred pounds—when you are running your train, I will take a speed of twenty miles per hour, being the average speed per train, and will compare that again with a rate of fifteen miles. On a dead level, engines of that class will haul 4,621 tons at fifteen miles per hour, 3,383 at twenty miles. At one third of one per cent at fifteen miles, 1,952, at twenty miles, 1,570. At one-half of one per cent 1,500 tons and 1,200 tons. And at one per cent 909 tons and 760 tons.

Now any one who is at all conversant with the haulage capacity of trains to-day will realize that 900 tons is about the capacity of the ordinary freight train on a one per cent road such as the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canada Atlantic. But when those roads will be reduced to a three-tenths of one per cent or even a four-tenths, they will, according to the figures given here which are authentic, haul on a four-tenths grade three times as much at the same cost as on a one per cent grade, or they will haul it for one-third of the cost. We all know that the Canada Atlantic has been hauling grain at two and a half cents a bushel from Parry Harbour to Montreal. Let us go further and say three cents a bushel. On a four-tenths road, they could haul that to the same advantage at one cent a bushel. That is equal to any canal route in existence—it is better than any canal route in existence. And, if the Georgian bay canal system were a waterway, it would be different, but the Georgian bay canal route has to climb up 450 feet and down 450 feet and go through thirty-seven locks. The cost of that canal can only be given approximately. I went over to the department to try to get the figures, but was told that they have not yet got them completed. But one engineer went so far as to say that the total would be about $120,000,000 when the figures were made up. Another point I would like to make is that when they made the surveys in the Georgian bay canal, they did not take the levels—the levels are not upon the plans as I saw them in the department to-day allowing for the extra low water, we had last year, that we have this winter and that we are liable to have in recurring years. The water in the Ottawa river last summer was four feet lower than at almost any previous time. I had a conversation with Mr. Booth on that subject, and he told me that in forty-four years he had never seen the river so low. He remembered, that about thirty years ago, it was within about a foot of the low level it reached last summer. When you reduce the depth of that canal to allow for this unusual, but quite possible lowering of the water, there is no saying what the cost will be, for not only would dredging have to be done in many places in the river, but where the canal portions are constructed would be, as the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright) points out that these points would be in rock and the work would be expensive. I think my figures prove that the up-keep of the canal, as compared with that of the St. Lawrence canals added to the interest on the cost of the canal, would carry free every year 150,000,000 bushels from Georgian bay to Montreal. This says nothing of the unknown and practically unlimited cost involved in the reduction of the level by four feet more. If we allowed for this, I believe that the expense would carry absolutely free 300,000,000 bushels of grain from Georgian bay to Montreal. It must not be forgotten also that the canal will freeze up two or three weeks before the open lake, reducing the season of navigation by this route very considerably. So far as lake navigation is concerned, I think the proper course is that which the government have been pursuing to make the best possible use of the Welland canal, either by building elevators at Port Colbourne or by reducing the level of the Welland canal so that large vessels can come through to Kingston. Either way would cost practically the same amount of money, say between $10,000,000 and $15,0000,000. Then you would have lake navigation into December of every year, and sometimes even longer as in the season just closed. The Georgian bay canal, away north would, probably in all likelihood be frozen up two or three weeks before that. I say, let us make the most efficient use of the canal systems we have, and let us depend largely upon the railways—and, before I conclude, I wish to point out another fact in connection with the railways. When the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is built, and the possibility of the Hudson bay route is tested, it will be time enough to go on to the Georgian bay canal system. I hope the day will shortly come when we shall require all these routes in order to move the products of the Northwest; but, until that time comes, I think the government should confine their efforts to making the best use possible of the route we have by way of the great lakes. The other matter concerning the railways of which I spoke is the fact that another railway is projected and now building from the mouth of the French river to Quebec. That road, I believe, will be put under contract during the coming year nearly all the way through. It will have 4-10 per cent grade and over it grain can be carried from the Georgian bay to Montreal, or to Quebec, for less money than by any road in existence coming from Georgian bay.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Which road is that?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The Canadian Northern. Carrying of freight on railways is much the same as carrying freight on the water. On a waterway you have no grades to overcome, but, when you come to canals it is about as expensive as to carry by railway. When railways reduce their grades to the level, it will be a question which of the two, water or railway, will supersede the other. As a matter of fact, you cannot point to any canal system on the continent of America, but there is a railway running along it, and in many cases they have a railway on either side, and these railways are doing the larger share of the trade. I am not opposing the Georgian bay canal route as a route, but I am opposing the spending of the money of the people of this country and pledging the credit of this country at the present time for this purpose. Let the present canal be developed as far as possible, and let the railroads have the opportunity to compete with them, and I think we shall arrive at a very low rate for the carrying of the produce of the west and the manufactures of the east, especially when the rates are, as they are now, under the regulation of the Railway Commission.

Then, again, this government are giving bonuses year after year for the development and expansion of the railway system, and as they do that, open and develop the waterways as far as possible, make them as useful as possible, and enable them to act as regulators of the railways. On the waterway system of the St. Lawrence, the great lakes and the Welland canal this country has expended $80,000,000, or as some say, $90,000,000. That system is used principally as a regulator of the railways so far as freight carrying is concerned. Just as the rates of carriage on canals in this country, the rates of carriage on the railways have been going down to meet them; and still the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway are running right alongside the waterways and carrying their full quota of traffic summer as well as winter So it will be along the Georgian bay and Ottawa river canal, if it is ever built. While it might, in course of time, become a regulator of freight rates, I do not think the time has come when the government should take hold of this matter. More than that, I think the government have carried out the suggestions made by the Transportation Commission, and have fulfilled all the requirements called for in the resolution of the hon. member for East Simcoe. At that point I would leave this matter in the hands of the government, contending that they are carrying out to the fullest extent the very ideas embodied in the resolution of the hon. member for East Simcoe.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman one question. What would we do if the Sault Ste. Marie canal were closed to-day? Where would that 45,000,000 tons of freight go that is now carried through it?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. We are not discussing that phase of the question now.

Mr. C. A. McCOOL (Nipissing). I desire in the first place to express my satisfaction with what has been done by the present government, so far, in increasing our transportation facilities. While I cannot say that everything has been done that I would like to have seen done, or that could have been done, I do think that great strides have been taken in the direction of improving our transportation facilities. This is a subject of great interest to me, and I have listened with a great deal of attention to the discussion that has taken place upon it this session, and also during previous sessions. In the main I agree with most of what has been said. I have no objection whatever to improving the harbour facilities on the great lakes, for instance, at Midland, Parry Sound and the other chief ports. All these improvements will be needed in a very short time. I am also very much in favour of improving the terminal facilities at Montreal, also at St. John and Halifax. Improvements at all these ports are necessary in order to facilitate the development and progress of this great country of ours. I am a firm believer in the policy of railway construction, and would give a charter to any railway company who could show its ability to go on and build a road. Without putting them to the expense and bother of coming to the House for a charter, let them present their plans, show their route, and make application to the Department of Railways and Canals, and then give them a charter. We want all the railroads we can have in this country in order to meet the growing needs of our great west. I have been curious recently to look up the statistics of grain production in the Northwest and have been greatly astonished at the rapid advance. For instance, in the province of Saskatchewan I find that in 1900 a little over 5,000,000 bushels of grain of all kinds were grown, whereas in 1905, the last year for which we have a return, the product was almost 47,000,000 bushels, or an increase of about 900 per cent in the short space of five years. That was in one province alone. The products of all the western provinces last year totalled almost 200,000,000 bushels of grain. Ten years from now, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, improved as it no doubt will be then, perhaps double tracked, with the Grand Trunk Pacific completed, with its easy grades, with the Canadian Northern completed, and possibly with a road to Hudson Bay, it may well be doubted if even all these roads will be able to handle the immense quantities of grain that will be produced in that country. It is simply impossible to figure out with any degree of accuracy what the production of that country will be ten years hence.

Now, Sir, I was very much surprised to hear my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. J. T. Schell) speak in opposition to the improvement of the Ottawa and French River waterways, commonly called the Georgian Bay canal. I consider that that canal, if constructed, would prove to be an immense boon to this whole Dominion. That project has been a live question in this country for fifty years, as was remarked by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) and we have been looking forward to it ever since. In my school boy days we heard nothing else discussed but the Georgian Bay canal, and we have been discussing it ever since, without getting much nearer to a realization of the project. The first practical step however in that direction has been taken by this government, when they arranged to make a complete and through survey of the whole route in order to get an estimate of the probable cost. I think that was a most necessary step, and the proper starting point in this great work. It would be of little use to start in and complete a small section of canal here and there. We have had some experience of that kind when a piece of work was done at the Chats a great many years ago, and more recently, some twenty-five or thirty years ago, at Chulbute Rapids. As I said, I am very glad that the government has made a survey of this proposed canal, but I am a little disappointed that the report has not been brought down this session. I expected that we would have had it before now. However, I would rather wait another year than to have an incomplete survey, and an unsafe estimate of the cost of the work. In undertaking a work of this magnitude we cannot be too careful to get all the information possible. For instance, consider what the United States are doing at the present time in the way of canal improvements and construction. They are expending a hundred million dollars on the Erie canal between Buffalo and New York, which when completed, will not at all compare in importance and usefulness with the proposed Georgian Bay canal. Although we call it a canal, that name is in fact a misnomer, because it is absolutely a waterway, and a waterway of immense depth.

All the obstructions have already been mentioned to you this evening. There are only about 37 locks in all and there are hundreds of miles of wide and deep river sheltered from storms such as would cause serious delay on the great lakes. There is nothing that the present or any future government could do to so much advance the general interest of the Dominion at large as the building of this canal. It will not be a competitor with any other line. It does not interfere with the St. Lawrence route. All these and more will be wanted. Talk about double tracking the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian Northern Railway; we will have to have four tracks on those roads inside of the next twenty or twenty-five years. I therefore say that I am more than pleased that we have at last taken this up in an earnest way as evidenced by the expenditure on the survey and I do hope that when next session comes round we will then have such full information as will enable us to discuss it in an intelligent way and possibly prevail upon the government to start this great work.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, this is a very great question indeed and it affects every province of this Dominion. It vitally affects, if I may say so, the province from which I myself come inasmuch as that province is cut off from continuous communication from the other provinces for a considerable portion of each year. Some few days ago an important delegation was here from St. John, N.B., bringing a branch of this question to the attention of the government, namely, desirable improvements at that port. I find, Sir, that statements were sent out from Ottawa, written by some person here I presume, to some of the newspapers in this country including newspapers in my own province. I refer to the Summerside 'Journal,' the Charlottetown 'Guardian' and the Charlottetown 'Herald,' misrepresenting and seriously misrepresenting statements of the right hon. Prime Minister of this country made on the occasion of the interview with that delegation. It is regrettable that these things should be done in considering an important question of this kind. It is regrettable that a political party in this country, and newspapers supporting that party should think it necessary to misrepresent the statements of any member of the government, and particularly the statements of the Prime Minister. I do not think I could do better than just read what these papers say. I may say that I spoke at considerable length upon a branch of this subject some few days ago and this is a reference to the particular question that was up at that time.

But some light was thrown on it twelve hours afterwards when the Premier met a St. John delegation asking for harbour improvements. Then the Premier told them that he had been asked to construct a tunnel to Prince Edward Island. He mentioned a possible cost which was about double the highest estimate given and spoke of the project as one that could not be taken seriously.

Now, I have his authority for stating that this is a gross misrepresentation of what he said on that occasion.

Mr. C. DEVLIN. What paper is that ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The Summerside 'Journal.' Similar statements appeared in two other papers to which I have already referred, I consider it a most reprehensible thing that in the consideration of most important questions of this kind that we cannot discuss them without bringing in tactics of that kind. I consider it a very unfortunate thing indeed that any of the correspondents of the newspapers should pursue such a course. I bring this matter to the attention of the House.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Centre York). I have not had an opportunity of considering the report of Mr. Ashdown as thoroughly as I would have liked. It is a very voluminous report, enters into the subject with a great deal of minuteness, and no doubt is one that will be of very great service in enabling us to arrive at a right decision in reference to the great question of transportation. I notice that this report deals very fully with the means of transportation at present in existence and refers especially to the Welland canal, the improvements at Port Colborne, the improvements at the port of Montreal, the lighting and deepening of the channel from Montreal to the sea and also to Quebec. The report also refers to the necessity of more dredging at Port Arthur, Fort William, Midland, Collingwood and Owen Sound. The report very generally goes into the whole subject of transportation from one end of the Dominion to the other, going as far west as Vancouver and Victoria and also paying some attention to the conditions at Winnipeg. A great many valuable suggestions are made that will be of great assistance to us in arriving at a decision as to the proper methods of solving this great transportation question. It is a question that has been now, for a great many years, engaging the attention of the House and of this government. I remember that last session we had a very thorough discussion of this same question and that views of members on both sides were given very freely as to the best means of arriving at a proper solution. The motion which has been placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker, I do not think does justice to the government or to the House of Commons. It says :

> That in the opinion of this House the report of the committee on transportation (of which J. H. Ashdown, Esq., is chairman), should forthwith be taken up, considered and acted upon by parliament.

The natural inference from a motion of this kind is that this report has never been taken up, has not been acted upon by the government and that therefore this is, in a sense, a vote of censure upon the government. In my opinion if nothing had been done towards solving this great question by the government of the day that motion would be justifiable, but in view of what has been done by the government in solving this great question I think this motion is not one that ought to receive the sanction of this House. Take for instance the St. Lawrence route ; it is well known that this government engaged at once in a vigorous prosecution of the work of deepening the canals to fourteen feet which was accomplished in a very short time. They also devoted their attention to solving the great problem by deepening the harbour of Port Colborne and by erecting a long breakwater there and they are now proceeding to erect an elevator of a million or two million bushels capacity. That is just what Mr. Ashdown suggests in his report, and in that respect the government have been proceeding with the solution of our transportation problem. At Montreal the government have spent very large sums of money in recent years, building new docks, and warehouses and a steel elevator of large capacity, and improving the terminal facilities generally. The channel of the St. Lawrence has been deepened to 30 feet, the St. Lawrence route has been lighted almost as well as the main street in the city of Ottawa, and now, at any time of the night or day, steamers can sail up the mighty St. Lawrence in perfect safety. The work at Montreal is still going on. At St. John, Halifax, and Quebec, large sums have been spent for the purpose of carrying out the suggestions made by Mr. Ashdown in his report. I am not familiar with the conditions in the far west, but I venture to say that at Victoria, Vancouver and Winnipeg, the government is proceeding systematically and energetically with the improvements pointed out by Mr. Ashdown. There is no question to my mind but that the St. Lawrence route is the ultimate highway to the sea. When we have large elevators constructed at Port Colborne so that the great vessels coming down the lakes can discharge their cargoes and return to Chicago, Fort William, and Duluth to reload, and when we have a fleet of lighter boats carrying the grain from Port Colborne to Montreal and Quebec, then I believe that no railway can compete with our water routes. It is because we have not sufficient facilities for handling the grain at Port Colborne that 40 per cent of our Canadian products finds its way through American channels to the sea. It is an anomaly that we should have spent $70,000,000 on our canal system, and yet that vessels only carrying 70,000 bushels of grain can enter the St. Lawrence canals or the Welland canal. I believe that when the works at Port Colborne are completed grain can be carried from that port to Montreal for one and a half cents a bushel, as against three or three and a half cents a bushel by the Buffalo-New York route, and about the same rate via Midland, or Depot Harbour or Owen Sound. I do not wish to detain the House longer, but, inasmuch as the government have been spending within the last two or three years large sums of money to carry out the very suggestions made by Mr. Ashdown, I beg to move in amendment, seconded by Mr. J. J. Hughes, as follows:

That all the words after 'that' in the second line of the amendment be struck out, and the following be substituted in lieu thereof:

In the opinion of this House the report of the Transportation Commission (of which Mr. Ashdown is chairman), has been considered by parliament and is being acted on by the government with reasonable progress, having regard to the public service generally.

Amendment (Mr. Campbell) agreed to, on division.

Main motion as amended agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take up the tariff resolutions in ways and means.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 5, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 104) for the relief of Osprey George Valentine Spain.—Mr. Campbell.

Bill (No. 107) respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company.—Mr. Johnston.

Bill (No. 106) respecting the Accident and Guarantee Company of Canada and to change its name to the Royal Accident Company of Canada.—Mr. Johnston.

ADDITION TO LUMBER COMBINE COMMITTEE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That Messrs. Galliher and Crocket be added to the special committee appointed to investigate the alleged lumber combine.

Motion agreed to.

INSURANCE COMMITTEE EVIDENCE.

On the Orders of the Day being called.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Could the Minister of Finance inform us when the evidence taken before the Royal Commission on Insurance will be ready for distribution?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the report and the evidence will be ready for distribution to-morrow, a sufficient number for the use of the members.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask what becomes of that large body of material in the shape of documents, known as exhibits, &c., which are of course germane to the whole matter and include in them the gist of the relation of the evidence to the subject in hand.

Mr. FIELDING. I could not give any information upon this. My attention has not been brought to it, but I shall make inquiries.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will notice that these exhibits are not necessarily read, perhaps short extracts are read from them and perhaps they are simply referred to as exhibit so and so, and the evidence is practically useless in many cases unless we have the exhibit which is filed with it and to which it refers.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the first time this matter has been brought to my attention, but I shall take steps to find out why the exhibits were not included.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Might I ask how many copies we will be able to get? I have had a number of inquiries.

Mr. FIELDING. In view of the intimation given that there will be a large demand we have given directions for the printing of an extra number and I have no doubt a reasonable number will be available for each member.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY SURVEYS; NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.). Is the Prime Minister yet prepared to state whether or not the government will lay on the table the latest reports in reference to the selection of the route of the National Transcontinental Railway through New Brunswick? I notice the government press has announced, since the discussion of this subject in the House some days ago that the commission has approved the engineer's recommendation of the back route and that the report is now before the government for approval.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am not aware that the report has come for the approval of the government. I have seen the statement in the press, but I think it is premature. I will inquire and let my hon. friend know.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if he would be good enough to expedite the bringing down of the returns which were asked for by the House with regard to some sales of lands in certain townships in the district of Algoma. I ask this in view of the desire intimated by the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) yesterday to bring the business of the House to a close early in April.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The returns are in process of preparation as rapidly as the Department of Indian Affairs in able to get them out.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would call attention also to the fact that returns asked for on February 11 for similar information have not yet been brought down.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). And I would put in a plea with the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), unless the returns have not already been brought down, to expedite the bringing down of the papers relating to the old drill shed in Halifax.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). I am sorry that I have to make another excuse. The papers are in the hands of the Department of Justice. Tht deputy minister tells me that they will be completed in a day or two. He had a telegram from Halifax concerning certain conveyances which are necessary to complete the papers. I think I can promise them positively next week.

Mr. JOHN HERRON (Alberta). I would like to inquire when I may expect the return asked for respecting Blairmore town site.

Mr. OLIVER. These returns, I think, are ready to be presented to the House.

WAYS AND MEANS—ENFORCEMENT OF FEDERAL LAW.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I beg to move in amendment the motion of which I gave notice on January 25 last as follows:

> That in the opinion of this House the government of the day is responsible for the due enforcement of all federal laws; and that if any further legislation is necessary to secure such due enforcement and the punishment of violations thereof, it is the duty of the government to forthwith introduce such legislation.

I have also a similar notice of motion which appears on page 386 of the Votes and Proceedings, which is made applicable to the Railway Act and which will come up later on. The reason that I make this motion is that I think it is really one in which the country is more vitally concerned to-day than almost any other coming before parliament. A very strange thing has happened. It has been laid down in this House by hon. gentlemen speaking on behalf of this government that while we pass laws in this parliament we are not bound to enforce them, but the enforcement is to be left to somebody else. I shall not take up much time in dealing with the subject, but, in order that I may make good my statement, let me quote from the official utterances of members of the government in this House. At page 1127 of the unrevised 'Hansard' of this year the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) laid down his position as follows:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order. The hon. gentleman is referring to a past debate.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then I will refer to the matter more generally. It has been laid down in this House by the Prime Minister, by the Minister of Justice and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that the enforcement of the federal law is not within the scope of the Dominion government, but is within the scope of the provincial authority, that, while we pass laws year after year, it is no part of the duty of the government to enforce them. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) even went so far that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) had to correct him. I believe that instance had been cited of the Attorney General of the United States being held responsible and having to enforce the federal law. But the Prime Minister argued that our constitution was different from that of the United States, and that the enforcement of the law depended upon the local authority. The Minister of Justice did not quite agree with that, but made the argument that the Attorney General of this country—who is the Minister of Justice—enforced the federal law only when the duty was specially imposed upon him, and that except in these cases he looked to the Provincial Attorney General to perform that duty. And the Minister of Finance when he defended the conduct of the government in its non-enforcement of the Inland Revenue law against adulteration said that everybody knew that the enforcement of this Act was a part of our criminal law administration and came under the jurisdiction of the provincial authority. And so we have this peculiar attitude taken by the responsible government of this country—that they do not consider it their duty to enforce the federal law unless that duty is specially imposed upon them by Act of this parliament. My contention is that the government of the day is responsible for the enforcement of all these laws. It is to clear up this point that I propose this motion to-day.

Now, I would like to give an instance from the literature of imagination of the authorities taking a position similar to that of this government. The great poet of our language tells us how important it is to hold the mirror up to nature. It is to Shakespeare that I go to find a justification for the Prime Minister and his colleagues, and I think I have a quotation which illustrates their position on this matter most perfectly. I refer to the words of the celebrated Dogberry on the subject of the administration of justice. And I think the right hon. Prime Minister will see some resemblance to himself, and the gentleman to his left (Mr. Fielding) will see some resemblance to himself, the Minister of Justice some resemblance to himself, while the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) will find that he is the counterpart of one of those in the drama I quote from, scene 3 act 3, of 'Much Ado About Nothing.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear. Oh, oh.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. We shall see whom this ado is about. We shall see how close the portraits are, including that of the Minister of Railways and Canals. Here is the scene:

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the watch.

Dogberry. Are you good men and true ?

Verges. Yea. . . Give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.

Dogberry. First, who think you the most desartless man to be constable ?

First Watch.

Our friend the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Hugh Oatcake, Sir, or George Seacoal. For they can write and read.

Dogberry. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal. . . . You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch ; therefore, bear you the lantern. This is your charge : You shall comprehend all vagrom men ; you are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name.

Second Watch.

This is the Minister of Justice.

How if a' will not stand ?

Dogberry. Why then, take no note of him, but let him go ; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verges. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

Dogberry. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects : You shall also make no noise in the streets, for, for the watch to babble and talk, is most tolerable and not to be endured.

Second Watch. We will rather sleep than talk ; we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogberry. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman ; for I cannot see how sleeping should offend ; only, have a care that your bills be not stolen : Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

Second Watch. How if they will not ?

Dogberry. Why, then, let them alone till they are sober ; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say they are not the men you took them for.

Second Watch. Well, Sir.

Dogberry. If you meet a thief you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more it is for your honesty.

Second Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him ?

Dogberry. Truly, by your office, you may, but I think they that touch pitch will be defiled : the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verges. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

Dogberry. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will ; much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verges. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call for the nurse, and bid her still it.

Second Watch. How if the nurse be asleep and will not hear us ?

Dogberry. Why, then depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying : for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it baes will never answer a calf when he bleets.

Verges. T'is very true.

Dogberry. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince's own person ; if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verges. Nay, by'r lady, that, I think, a' cannot.

Dogberry. Five shillings to one on't, with any man that knows the statues, he may stay him : marry, not without the prince be willing : for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verges. By'r lady, I think it be so. . . .

Second Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge : let us go sit here upon the church bench till two, and then all to bed.

Now, the Dogberry method is apparently the method this government have adopted in regard to the enforcement of federal laws in this country. If you apprehend a thief, or a man who has done wrong in connection with a federal law, why, you are to let him go ; if the maid will not stop the crying child, you are not to interfere; and if you arrest a prince in the night time, and he protests, you are to let him go. I hold that is not a doctrine that ought to apply to a federal law in this country. I know that is the proposition that has been put forward from time to time in regard to federal laws. Time after time the law has not been enforced, time after time men who have been caught in wrong doing have been allowed to get out of the country. If, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, we are not to enforce federal law, if we are to leave it to other powers to enforce it, they have reached the Dogberry position in regard to the application of Canadian law. This is not the position the federal government ought to take in the administration of law. I am going to the United States for some illustrations, where they have a somewhat similar constitution to our own, and there they have discovered the absurdity of passing a law and not enforcing it. We find to-day that the government of the United States, under the lead of the present president, and of the Attorney General, and of the Secretary of State, have decided that federal laws must be enforced, and they have reached the stage over there that in every federal Act they put a clause that it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to enforce that law, and furthermore they make a money provision for the enforcement of that law. Now, I wish to read an extract which shows the position of American statesmen on this question. In the United States statutes dealing with combinations in connection with the tariff law, it is declared to be crime to make combinations to enhance the price of an article which comes under the Tariff Act. Then it goes on to say: The several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent violations of section 73 of this Act.

It shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, whenever the Attorney General shall direct, either of his own motion or upon the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to institute and prosecute such proceedings.

Then the law goes on to provide that the sum of $500,000 is appropriated to the service of the Attorney General of the United States to enforce this law. That is the way they are reaching these combinations in the United States, combinations in restraint of trade, whether in connection with the tariff or not; it is by the Attorney General of the United States being made responsible for the enforcement of that law, and a large sum of money being placed at his disposal to enforce that law. I believe the Attorney General of Canada this session is asking power to enforce the law in our Railway Act, and that money be given him for that purpose. I believe there is a feeling on the part of the government that in some way they are responsible for the enforcement of law, but only to the extent that they may be instructed in a special clause. My contention is that if a law is a federal law its enforcement by that very fact rests upon the Attorney General, and he ought to have all the money he requires to employ counsel, to employ special agents to work up his case. But here he says—and his confession is on record—I will only enforce the law when parliament imposes it on me by special Act. Now, I want the House and the country to listen to that. The Minister of Justice has stated that he will only enforce a federal law in this country when he is instructed by a special Act of parliament to do so.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN.

Now, in the United States they have a Railway Act such as we have here, but they handle it in a very different way from the way we handle it in this country. Take their Railway Act and you will find these clauses occurring in it:

The commission——

That is the Railway Commission.

—is hereby authorized and required to enforce the provisions of this Act.

Then it goes on:

And the Attorney General of the United States is authorized and directed to institute, in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, civil action to recover such money.

On the next page you will find a statement of the instructions to the Attorney General of the United States to enforce the Railway Act:

It shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to inform the Attorney General of all such cases of neglect or refusal and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to proceed at once to judicially enforce the forfeitures hereinbefore provided.

It runs all through that Act and it runs all through other Acts they are passing in the United States, that it is the duty of the Attorney General to enforce the law. But we have the confession here that the Attorney General will only enforce the law when he is so instructed and taking that view he is asking for a special instruction from the commission in order to employ counsel and look into the express company phase of the Railway Act. Surely that is a confession of weakness that the people of Canada never expected from the government. They thought that we were passing laws in the public interest and that whether they were in connection with railways, the tariff, the Criminal Code or anything else they would be enforced by the government. We have been talking year after year about the purity of elections in this country. We have been passing laws to secure the purity of elections but the government do not undertake to enforce the law. They leave it to the local authorities, to the provincial governments, and if a provincial government happens to be friendly to the party in power nothing is done. If a hostile party happens to be in power, although it may be an honest party and determined simply to enforce the law, it puts the law in operation and we get revelations in regard to misconduct in elections. An instance which illustrates the truth of this is the case of the London election. As long as J. M. Gibson was Attorney General of the province of Ontario there were no revelations with regard to the conduct of elections in that province, but there came in a new Attorney General and then we had these revelations. I contend that the Minister of Justice should enforce the law and that he should instruct his attorneys to enforce it. He should have power to enforce the law, to employ counsel, to institute proceedings and have the law vindicated. Take this Railway Act again—and I must appeal to the Minister of Railways and Canals to bear me out in this—when you go through it it comes down to this that the only enforcement we have to-day, except in one or two instances, is at the instigation of the man who pays the freight, or who is the passenger or the traveller. The ordinary citizen is the litigant in that case and he is called upon to enforce this great Railway Act. I contend that the Attorney General and the Minister of Railways ought to be enjoined in that Act to enforce it at every point to see that it is enforced and that the Railway Commission ought to have power to ask him in every case to assist in the enforcement of it. But, as far as I can see, I can only find one clause of the Railway Act under which you can go to the Attorney General and ask his view in regard to certain breaches of the Act and under which he can proceed to recover a fine. But in no case is that done. Under the law that is the only enforcement of it that is placed upon the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Railways. It is left to the private suitor. I am going to read a few words from the present Secretary of State in the Roosevelt cabinet as to what is happening in the United States. He is claiming great credit for the Roosevelt cabinet for the enforcement of federal law. Formerly that was not the case in that country, but as Mr. Root explained a new condition of things has arrived in the United States. He spoke as follows:

> For the accomplishment of this due measure of control, which from time immemorial our laws have recognized as necessary, the government of the United States has taken up the task where the several states have failed, and is performing and purposes to perform its duty not beyond but to the full limit of its constitutional power.

And then on another page he says:

> The obstacles to the enforcement of the federal anti-trust Act thus removed are obstacles which stood in the way of all proceedings, and they had to be cleared away before any proceedings of the same character against the same class of corporations could be successfully maintained. They have been removed, not by newspaper headlines and denunciation, but by skill, ability and energy of the highest order.

The cabinet of the United States found that they had these laws to administer and they found obstacles in the way, but the energy and legal talent of that cabinet succeeded in removing these obstacles with the result that the law has been enforced. Mr. Root goes on to say:

> Thereupon the Department of Justice began active prosecutions for the enforcement of the law. Fifty-three indictments have been found against hundreds of defendants and covering many hundreds of transactions.

That is what has happened in the United States. They have made these federal laws. They have made the Attorney General responsible for their enforcement and the government over there claim for themselves the greatest credit and they certainly deserve credit. Look what they are doing to-day. The great investing public not only in America but in Europe are simply dumbfounded by the revelations which the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States are now unfolding by the aid and at the instigation of the Attorney General of the United States. They have exposed a condition of things that is simply frightful in the way of the worst kind of a fraud perpetrated on the investigating public. Statements have been made showing how this man Harriman has wrecked investors, how he has wrecked railways, how he has profited by the process of watering stock, and the result is that the financial interests are filled with dismay by reason of these revelations. They would have been discovered long ago if the federal law had been enforced, but in the past it has not been enforced, these things were going on and these men gathered strength in their attack upon the public. But, to-day, by reason of the attitude of the government, by reason of the activity of the Attorney General, by reason of the Congress of the United States insisting upon the government being responsible for the enforcement of the law, these things are now taking place and the public are getting what President Roosevelt says he is determined to give to the public—a square deal. In that case the law is being enforced because somebody in the administration is held responsible for the administration of the law. I suppose you could impeach the Attorney General of the United States if he did not enforce the law when it is so clearly set out that he must enforce it. In that way they are getting enormous reforms over there. They see that if the United States is to hold its own they must have an enforcement of the law in regard to transportation.

The United States is achieving that, and we can only achieve it by giving effect to the resolution I propose, namely, that the federal government must be responsible for enforcing federal laws, and that the responsible man in the government is the Minister of Justice. If, up to the present, we have been relying on the local authorities, or on the efforts of individual suitors, to enforce federal laws, that practice should cease, and we should in future rely on the great departments of state. If we are dealing with transportation problems, we have the Minister of Railways, with his legal officers and his numerous staff, and we have the Department of Justice, which is generally presided over by the ablest counsel in the land; we have the machinery already established, and it is that machinery which should enforce our laws. It was a private suitor who had to proceed against the Grand Trunk Company to get his rights in regard to passenger rates, and when I appealed to the Prime Minister about it he referred me to the Attorney General of Ontario. I wrote to the Attorney General of the province and he acknowledged my letter, and that is all I know about it. Why should not the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways aid this individual suitor to get his rights from the Grand Trunk corporation? What is the government for anyway? Is it to help the corporations or is it to help the people of Canada? Apparently the energy of this government, and probably the energy of this parliament, is on the side of the corporations, when it should be on the side of the people. I called the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that frauds of the most enormous kind are being perpetrated in connection with our inland revenue, and that the revenues of the country were defrauded because the Compounders' Act was not enforced. I can get all the evidence the government wants in that direction, but the Minister of Finance referred me to the Attorney General of the province for the enforcement of our criminal law. I give credit to the Minister of Customs that he does not wait for a provincial attorney general to enforce the Customs Act. He has his own special officers to enforce it, and he does not allow his department to be defrauded. But the Inland Revenue Department, by the non-enforcement of the Act with which it is charged, allows the country to be deprived of very considerable revenue. I stand here, and I stand before the country, and I say that if a federal law is worth passing it is worth enforcing, and if it is worth enforcing it should be enforced by the federal Minister of Justice. It may be that our practice in this respect has been wrong from the very beginning, but whether that is so or not, it is high time that we should make a new departure, and we should here and now, by a special enactment if necessay, declare that it is the duty, not only of the Minister of Justice, but of the minister presiding over any department concerned, to enforce the laws of this parliament. I enter my protest against this absurd practice which makes the federal officers not responsible for the administration of federal law. If the right hon. gentleman pleads that such is our constitution, then, for heaven's sake, let him go to the source of our constitution and have it changed. For my part, I believe that this House has the power to declare now, in the words of the resolution, that the enforcement of federal laws lie with the federal authorities. The Prime Minister told us that we had no federal courts in which the laws could be enforced; but, if that be so, let him establish federal courts and give them jurisdiction. It is worse than a comedy; it is a crime that we should go on passing laws session after session without making any provision for their enforcement. The United States found out their mistake in this respect, and it is now a characteristic of all their laws that the federal government is responsible for the enforcement of all laws passed by the Congress. If our law is faulty in that respect, then it is the duty of this government to correct the fault. I am not attacking the government of the day, I am attacking the system, and I am asking that the government of the day should change that system. And, Sir, in order to help the government in changing that system, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Walsh (Huntingdon), the resolution which I have placed in your hands.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). From the observations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean), I should have found it difficult, if not impossible, to understand whether this was an amendment to our constitution that he was urging this government to obtain, or whether it is his view that this government, or this parliament, had it in its own power, without any amendment to the constitution, to accomplish the end he desires. But, judging from the language of the resolution, it would appear to be the view of the hon. member that this parliament has the whole subject in its own hands, and that nothing else is necessary than some legislation by this parliament to bring about what he wishes. Indeed that idea is furthered by the frequency of the hon. gentleman's references to the course taken by this government in this matter, thus implying that this government has been, in some sense, remiss in its duty and has adopted some line of policy in this matter different from that of previous administrations. If that be the impression entertained by the hon. gentleman, it is an entirely erroneous one. Whatever in this respect may be the policy and the practice of this government or of whatever minister may happen to be in charge of the Department of Justice, that exactly was the policy and practice of the previous governments and previous Ministers of Justice from the days of our first Minister of Justice, the Rt. Hon. Sir John Macdonald. There could be no other course possible under the British North America Act because any attempt on the part either of the government or any particular Minister of Justice to adopt the line of practice which the hon. gentleman recommends would, in my humble opinion, be a distinct infraction of the provisions of the British North America Act and a distinct encroachment upon provincial rights. Under the British North America Act the administration of justice within the provinces is in the hands of the provincial authorities and with regard to that subject the provincial legislatures alone have jurisdiction to legislate. The constitution of the courts and everything connected with the administration of justice in the various provinces was placed by those who framed our constitution in the hands of the provincial authorities. If the views of the hon. gentleman were to be carried into practice, such a state of confusion would result as would make it impossible to carry on the government of this country. Frequently he referred to the Minister of Justice and his attorneys. I scarcely know what idea lay behind the words that he used. But if there was any such idea as this, that the Minister of Justice or the Department of Justice has at its disposal officials permanently appointed as attorneys of the department then the idea was utterly fallacious and erroneous.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I did not make that statement regarding our own department, but was speaking of the attorneys of the United States government and I was quoting United States precedents.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That explanation just serves to mark the difference between the two systems. In this country the Department of Justice has no attorneys permanently appointed under its control; but whenever it has any particular piece of business to do in any particular locality it, like any other business organization, simply retains for the conduct of that particular piece of business the services of some qualified attorney. In any other sense the department has no officials of the character of the government attorneys in the United States or of the Crown attorneys of the various provinces in this country. The whole system of the administration of justice within the provinces in Canada is in the hands of the provincial authorities. The attorney general of each province has various crown attorneys for each county, who hold office under statute, whose duties and revenues are defined by that statute, who receive the regular fees provided by it for their services and who have the standing of officials of the administration of justice. The various provinces have the right to appoint the various officials of the courts except the presiding official, the judge, whose appointment, by special exception under the British North America Act, is vested in the Dominion government. But the whole jury system, the method of summoning juries, the qualifications for jurors and the means whereby juries are constituted for the trial of cases, whether civil or criminal, is exclusively within the legislative authority of the provinces. All the trial courts, with the exception of the Exchequer Court, are of provincial jurisdiction and constitution. And when we find the fathers of confederation deliberately adopting a system different from that in the United States, with the experience of the United States system before their eyes—when we find those who framed the British North America Act, in the light of such experience, deliberately adopting a policy entirely different and deliberately assigning to the various provinces of the Dominion authority over the administration of justice in those provinces, is it to be supposed that they acted inadvertently and without consideration? and are we now, after forty years experience of the working of the Act, to be told by my hon. friend that it is all wrong and that we should at once take means to set it right? We have a system applicable to the conditions of this country. We have in the great province of Quebec a system of law, founded upon entirely different rules at all events, if not entirely different underlying principles, from the systems obtaining in the other provinces. And it was a wise provision of our constitution which left the administration of justice in the province of Quebec not to the Department of Justice at Ottawa—which might, as likely as not, be presided over by an official who had no familiarity with or knowledge of the peculiarities of the system which obtains in Quebec—but to the department of justice of that province. And in like manner it was a wise provision which left the administration of justice in the other provinces, not to the Department of Justice at Ottawa—which might be presided over by an official who had intimate knowledge of the Quebec system, but was not versed in the principles and practice of the common law of England,—but to the departments of justice of those provinces. At all events whether it was necessary or not to have such a provision for the administration of justice as we have in the British North America Act, we find it there, we have had experience of its workings during forty years, during that time it has worked well, and I can see no object in making any change. But the hon. gentleman says that the administration of justice ought to be under the control of the Dominion authorities, and he instances particularly the provisions of the Railway Act to which apparently he has, of recent times, paid particular attention. I wonder did he consider what his proposition would involve, I wonder if he means that the enforcement of our criminal law should be in the hands of the Dominion authorities rather than of the provinces, and that every murder trial and every case of common assault should be under the direct supervision and control of the federal Department of justice. That certainly would be a most revolutionary proceeding, and I have tried to point out how entirely foreign to our whole system of administration are the ideas of the hon. gentleman and how radical a change they would necessarily lead to. There is not only under our constitution no machinery provided for the carrying out of any such ideas as he has been offering, but those ideas I venture to think, if applied to the ordinary everyday work of enforcing the criminal law of this country, would be found to be utterly impracticable. The whole machinery for that purpose is with the provincial authorities, has been deliberately, designedly, of set purpose, so placed and no reason for any change is now suggested by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not done in the Northwest Territories?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Northwest Territories were in a very different position until they were constituted as provinces. There were no provincial authorities there who could be charged with the administration of justice. Since they were made provinces they have been in the same position as the other provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to argue that it was inconsistent with our constitution that the Dominion should enforce criminal law and I merely cited the Northwest Territories as an illustration.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I said in the provinces where there is provincial machinery, and therefore the exception which the hon. gentleman suggests, the Northwest Territories, where there was no machinery, is not in point. At the present time the Department of Justice necessarily has to enforce criminal law in the unorganized territories of the Dominion, simply because there are no provincial authorities to be charged with it, but once there are provincial authorities whose duty it is, under the constitution, to have practically the constitution of provincial courts in their charge, to have the sole power of legislating in regard to the whole machinery of these courts that surely is the appropriate place for the jurisdiction to lie.

Reference has been made to the exceptional cases in which by some special provision of the law a responsibility has been put on the Attorney General or the Minister of Justice of Canada and whereas those are cases of an exceptional character they have been pointed out, not specifically but by general allusion, as though they were the class of cases which should govern. Let me say simply that with regard to certain cases such, for instance, as the deporting of aliens, one of the instances which occurs to my mind at the moment, the wisdom of this parliament saw fit to enact that the Attorney General for Canada should take certain action. It was in regard to a subject with respect to which this parliament was at the time legislating.

I have never for a moment questioned the perfect competence of this parliament, if it saw fit to do so, to impose any duty on any of its officials or any department of the government it chose to select for that purpose. That is the undoubted right of parliament within its jurisdiction and legislating with regard to any of the subjects which by section 91 of the British North America Act are assigned to the competence of the Dominion parliament; it is in the judgment and discretion of the Dominion parliament to impose any duty it may see fit upon any minister of the Crown. Where such a duty is imposed the minister of the Crown, if he is to discharge the duties of his position will endeavour, to the best of his ability, to discharge that particular duty; but I say that unless he is so authorized, unless he is so directed, he would be encroaching on that which it is important in the constitution of this country should not be encroached on, if he went out of the line of his duty and endeavoured to do the duty of some other and provincial official in this country.

The instances which have been given by the hon. gentleman from the United States are surely not in the least degree in point. As I have pointed out and as was said by the First Minister on a previous occasion, in the United States, federal courts were constituted for the very purpose of enforcing federal laws and federal courts being so constituted with the necessary and incident machinery of the courts attached, with federal district attorneys under the Attorney General of the United States to discharge, each in his district, the duties pertaining to his position, there was not only no anomaly but there was every reason why there should be in the United States federal statutes the directions which have been referred to, that the United States federal attorney general should prosecute. In this country, on the other hand, it would be distinctly an anomalous thing and distinctly out of line with the whole traditions of the constitution if the amendment to it which is suggested should be enacted. I am not for a moment meaning to say that if any good reasons for making such a complete reversal of the whole policy which has obtained in this country for forty years were given by the hon. gentleman it would not be entirely competent to this House to address His Majesty asking that an amendment should be made by the imperial parliament to the British North America Act which would adopt the line of policy which has been suggested, but no reasons that I have heard have been given in favour of making any such reversal or of attempting so far as this parliament could do it, to depart from the policy that has been adopted by this parliament and that has prevailed in this country ever since confederation.

Reference was made also to other departments of this government, contrasting the activity of some of them in enforcing laws for the protection of the revenue or otherwise with what was said to be the inactivity in other respects of the Department of Justice. Let me say to the hon. member, what possibly has not occurred to him and what possibly may be information to other hon. members as well, that in that respect our friends have not correctly understood the position of the Department of Justice. The relation of that department to other departments of the government is not different in principle from the relations which exist between any business man and his solicitor. The Department of Justice can know nothing and does know nothing of what goes on in the ordinary administration of daily or routine business in the other departments of the government. Suppose there is a contract of the Public Works Department or the Railway Department which has been broken and in regard to which the Crown, as represented by that particular department of its service, wishes to resort to the courts to enforce its rights; suppose there is some breach of the customs laws, some failure to pay duty or some breach of the laws in regard to the collection of inland revenue or of the laws with regard to the administration of the postal affairs of this country, the Department of Justice, unless it is informed of the facts, unless it is instructed to take action by the department concerned, is in no different position as to its ability to act than the ordinary practising solicitor is in regard to the affairs of his client. Upon any such case arising the course of business is simply to refer the matter to the Department of Justice with the instructions of the department concerned, as to the course which ought to be taken and in any such case, in cases for instance where the revenue of the country calls for protection or where the interests of the Crown are involved the Minister of Justice, the Attorney General for Canada acting as any other solicitor would act, resorts to the court in charge of the case for the department concerned, or if the Crown is assailed by any suitor the defence of the claim is referred to the Department of Justice and is conducted under the direction of that department in ordinary course.

These are surely very different things from such as are struck at by the observations if not by the resolution of the hon. member. His proposition is simply that whenever a federal law is passed, that law should contain a provision that its enforcement rested with the Department of Justice of Canada, or that the constitution should be asked to be amended in order that without special provision it should cease to be the duty of the provincial authorities and become the duty of the federal authorities to enforce all Dominion laws. As I have tried to point out, that certainly is an altogether radical proposition, that certainly is something the need of which has not yet been seen in this country unless the observations which we have heard to-day point to that need. Complaints have not been heard unless we are to take the observations which the hon. gentleman has made this afternoon as complaints with regard to any lack of zeal or any injustice in the prosecution of offenders under the control of the provincial authorities. In regard to the great majority of offences against the criminal law there is a private interest at stake. In regard to most offences, which, in the interest of the general public, ought to be prosecuted there is some one particularly aggrieved who may be trusted to bring the facts to the knowledge of the Crown authorities. Nothing more is needed than the bringing of the facts to the knowledge of the proper authorities—who, under our constitution are the provincial authorities—to start the proceedings.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Aylesworth) pardon me a moment? Would that apply to the Railway Act of Canada? Is the provincial attorney general, the man, in the opinion of the Minister of Justice, to enforce our Railway Act?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I can only answer that if there is any offence against any statute which is of a criminal character, it is undoubtedly the right of any person to lay the facts before the duly constituted authorities of the province; and it would be the duty of the authorities, in that case, to take such action as they saw fit. If the machinery of the law is put in motion, the law itself is sufficient. Therefore, I respectfully submit that there is no occasion for the amendment which the hon. gentleman has suggested.

Mr. E. GUSS. PORTER (West Hastings). I do not rise for the purpose of supporting the resolution moved by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), but to say a word or two concerning an illustration brought forward by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). That hon. gentleman spoke of the Alien Labour Law which is now in force in the Dominion as illustrating the argument that he was advancing that it was proper and right that the administration of that Act should be in the hands of the provincial authorities. I wish to call attention to a case which came within my own observation showing how this Act works. It is provided by the Act that, before a prosecution can be commenced, the consent of the attorney general of the province, or of a superior court judge, or of a county court judge, must be obtained. In the case to which I have referred, which was a most flagrant breach of the Act, application was made to the attorney general of the province. But the answer received was that this was a federal law and that he did not see fit to interest himself in the administration of federal law; and so the consent was refused. The application was then made to a county court judge, and his answer was: This is a local matter and one in which I am well known by all the parties and there is somebody in authority over me—the Attorney General and the Superior Court judge; and I will not interfere, and so will not give the consent. Application was then made to a Superior Court judge. He said that consent had better be got from somebody else. But on the fourth application, I succeeded in getting consent for the prosecution, and eleven of the people against whom the prosecution was instituted were convicted and fined a considerable sum. Now, while I do not agree with the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) as moved, yet in the case of the Alien Labour Law it does not seem to me that it is well that consent should be obtained in the way now provided. It is a matter in which, I think, the jurisdiction might properly be exercised by the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General. And there should be only one person to apply to for consent, if consent is made necessary at all. It is said, and perhaps correctly, that the consent is necessary in order to prevent frivolous prosecutions. I think, that, perhaps, the police magistrate or the county judge, before one or other of whom the charge is to be investigated would be perfectly conpetent to judge upon the facts being laid before them, whether the prosecution should take place or not. It seems to me that the object of the Act is, to a very large extent, defeated by the provisions requiring consent in the way now provided. I make these remarks to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the facts, in order that he may consider whether it is not advisable to make some alteration in the law.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) be good enough to tell the House whether any federal officer was associated with him in the prosecution of the ballot frauds in the county of Hastings, and why that federal representative intervened?

Mr. PORTER. There was none.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What had Mr. Shepley to do with it?

Mr. PORTER. I do not know how Mr. Shepley was engaged, but I am informed that he was engaged by the Dominion government to watch the proceedings.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I sympathize with the purpose which I believe, the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has in view, but it seems to me that he has made his resolution too comprehensive. The terms of his resolution would impose the duty upon this government of taking over the enforcement of the criminal law all over the country.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I can modify it to that extent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty is that it is not modified to that extent. If it had some qualifying clause, I should be prepared to support it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggest a qualifying clause?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will, after I sit down. I would have suggested one before if my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) had told me that he was going to move it today.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have had it on the order paper for nearly two months.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the duty of enforcing the criminal law has been accurately stated by the Minister of Justice. It has been laid down by the courts over and over again that administrative functions and executive power follow the division of legislative power between the parliament of Canada and the provincial legislature. It therefore follows that the function and power of administering the criminal law belong to the province and that, for the purposes of the criminal law, the 'Attorney General' is the Attorney General of the province and the Attorney General of Canada, in the absence of special provision to the contrary. The position then, is this: If the resolution passed in its present form, we should not only be laying down a principle which is contrary to section 92, subsection 14 of the British North America Act, but we should be undertaking that which has been the duty of the province ever since confederation and has been carried out altogether by the provincial governments.

So much for that. But in the idea, though not in the language, of the resolution I am very much disposed to concur. In fact, the government of this country has already concurred in the idea, though not in the words of my hon. friend. It has introduced a Bill No. 75 of the present session, which provides for the enforcement of the Railway Act through application made by the Board of Railway Commissioners to the Minister of Justice for the Dominion. This is the idea, as I understand it, that the hon. gentleman from South York had in mind.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have given notice concerning the enforcement of the Railway Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman gave notice, but I am sorry he did not consider the terms of this resolution a little more carefully. What he has said about the administration of laws of purely federal concern, I am disposed to agree with almost altogether—in fact altogether. There are many laws, such as the customs and the inland revenue laws, which are enforced by the government because they concern the public revenues of the Dominion. As the Minister of Justice has already said, the modus is this—that the department concerned applies to the Minister of Justice for the enforcement of these laws whenever there has been a violation. Now, that is good so far as it goes. But we are getting a body of legislation in this country that requires a little more special provision. We have the Railway Act, which no doubt the hon. member for South York had in his mind; we have the Alien Labour Act and we will have in a little while, I suppose, an Act relating to the development of electrical power and energy which will contain some provisions the violation of which would be of public concern. As to all these matters that are of special and peculiar federal concern, I would be disposed to support the idea put forward by the hon. member for South York that there should be a legislative provision for their enforcement by federal authority. So far as his motion has that end in view, I entirely favour it, although, for the reasons which I have already stated, I am unable to support the resolution in the form in which he has presented it to the House.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I would take this opportunity of saying that it seems to me an anomaly in our constitution that the administration of the criminal law should be saddled upon the provinces. It has seemed to me particularly since our provinces have been obliged to assume so large an expenditure in connection with education, public works, institutions of charity and a variety of other matters, which were not carefully calculated or foreseen at the time of confederation—I say it has seemed to me a great hardship for the provinces to have to undertake the administration of the criminal law. I have never been able to understand this situation in our Dominion, except as stated by the Minister of Justice, that since confederation that situation has prevailed, that the provinces have named the crown prosecutors, and generally have borne all the expense of the administration of criminal law. I suppose it is founded on subsection 14 of section 92 of the British North America Act, which says that the administration of justice in the provinces, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts, shall belong to the provinces; and upon that foundation the whole of the expense of the administration of criminal law has been laid upon the provinces. If that criminal law is developed, if we provide new offences and more expensive system of procedure, if we create new penalties and an expensive mode of collecting them, the provinces that have nothing to do with the edicting of criminal law, must nevertheless bear the whole expense of carrying out that law. That is the reason why in the province of Quebec, where I think the administration of justice in respect to the criminal law costs perhaps more than half a million dollars, it has seemed to us an injustice, and that it would be better from many points of view if the administration of criminal law were left in the hands of the Dominion government. For my part, I do not see in that subsection I have just read an absolute justification for saddling all that expense on the provinces. The question I admit is one of doubt, not so far as custom exists, because it has always been so interpreted, but there is a doubt as to the proper interpretation of that subsection. To give the House an instance I would refer to the case of Mousseau & Bate, where that question has been raised in our own province. It is reported in volume 27 Lower Canada Jurist, and it was decided that the provincial Attorney General had not power to call in question, by a writ of scire facias, the validity of a patent. It was a question of the interpretation, or the application, of a federal law, and it was decided that the attorney general for the Dominion not the attorney general for the province, was the right party to apply the law in that instance. I mention that as an instance where it was decided in the province of Quebec in one of our courts that the administration of the patent law belongs to the Minister of Justice, and not, so far as it is a public matter, to the provincial attorney general. Mr. Clements in his work on the constitution, says:

> It seems difficult to appreciate the distinction between proceedings for breach of the criminal law and proceedings founded on a breach of the Patent Act. The former, perhaps, fall more properly within the common notion of the administration of justice.

The reason we have always considered that the administration of criminal justice belonged to the provinces is because it falls under the common notion of the administration of justice. But I do not see anything strictly laid down in our constitution which says that the prosecution of criminals, who are liable to be prosecuted under the criminal Act, should fall upon the provinces rather than upon the Dominion authorities, so far as expense is concerned. That has been the interpretation from the beginning, but as the Prime Minister is aware, more than once in our provinces, and probably also in the province of Ontario, it has been suggested that the provinces should be relieved from that burden, and that the administration of the criminal law would more properly fall under the control of the Dominion. It would relieve the provinces from a very heavy expense, and would solve, at any rate it ought to solve, without any other change in our relations with the provinces the great question of the need of further financial assistance on the part of the provinces at the present time. I think there is nothing in the constitution which could prevent the Dominion government, by arrangement with the provinces, undertaking that great expense, and the responsibility which, as the Minister of Justice has said, has been borne since confederation by the provinces themselves. They have run away with that notion. It is illogical it is not the proper way of administering the criminal law. I do not think there is anything in the constitutional Act which would prevent the Dominion government from assuming that charge, leaving, as by that subsection 4 we must leave, to the provinces the constitution of the tribunal the procedure in civil cases, the organization of the jury; all other matters to be left under the control of the Dominion government, and the Dominion government to defray the expenses. It is for that reason that I am rather disposed to favour the motion of the hon. member for South York.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) advocate that the maintenance of the court should be upon the Dominion?

Mr. MONK. Well, the maintenance of the court, the payment of the judges, certainly, the nomination of the Crown prosecutors and their appointment. There is where, for instance, in the province of Quebec, there could be an immense saving. I do not see what is to prevent our naming the judges. Take, for instance, in the city of Montreal; we have magistrates paid by the province to administer the criminal law. There are judges of sessions. It seems to me that it would be far preferable if the courts were constituted otherwise, the judges named by the Dominion and paid by them and the Crown prosecutors and everything connected with them paid by the Dominion government. As I stated a moment ago, and I speak subject to correction, as it is a long time since I looked into the matter, I do not see anything in subsection 14 of section 92 except these words 'administration of justice' which would prevent us from doing that. We pay the judges of our highest criminal court, the court of King's Bench, when they sit in Montreal or Quebec, for the hearing of criminal cases. The province pays the Crown prosecutors and pays the expenses of trial but in other courts the cases are tried by the magistrates in Montreal with juries. The court of sessions sits with juries and all the expense is saddled upon the province. I do not know of anything in the Constitutional Act which prevents the government from assuming that expense and one of the reasons I advance for doing that is that at the present moment the expenses of the province have become very great—much greater, no doubt, than was anticipated at the time of confederation, and if we can, by assuming them without violating as I do not think we do violate the provisions of the Constitutional Act, if we can relieve the province and it can be done legally and constitutionally, I would be strongly in favour of it. I think it would be much better to relieve them in that way, to build railways and to construct public works in the provinces than to adopt a system which must become general of having the provinces coming for financial assistance from this government. The day we begin giving money to the provinces to help them out of their financial difficulties provincial autonomy will be gravely endangered.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has been anticipating a debate upon an important question which will come up at a very early day now, but I may remark to him at once that whilst he deprecates in advance the policy which has been announced in the speech from the throne of interfering with the provincial subsidies and of giving money to the provinces it seems to me that he does nothing else but affirm that course. He deprecates all interference with the arrangement in regard to the payment of provincial subsidies——

Mr. MONK. I deprecate the placing of the provinces in dependence upon the federal power and I am urging a mode by which we can come to their assistance.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend suggests that we should relieve the provinces of the expenditure which belongs to them at the present time and which has been placed upon them. If we do that it is certainly equivalent to giving a payment to the provinces and it is doing the very thing which he deprecated a moment ago.

Mr. MONK. I think it is very different.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is very difficult, I admit, but I do not follow the argument of my hon. friend at all. Section 92 of the British North America Act says:

> In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated.

'May exclusively make laws' and amongst these classes of subjects in regard to which the provinces may exclusively make laws is the one which my hon. friend cited a moment ago and which is to be found in subsection 14 of this section:

> The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance, and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction.

While this comprises all laws concerning juries and all laws incidental thereto my hon. friend states that there is no provision in the Act which would prevent the federal authorities from appearing as prosecutors in provincial courts. I differ from him altogether. The section says that the provincial legislature shall make provision in regard to both civil and criminal jurisdiction. In courts of criminal jurisdiction it is essential that there should be a prosecutor and the prosecutor is the sovereign—the King. Who should be the prosecutor? Should it be the King, represented by the Attorney General of Canada, or should it be the King, represented by the Attorney General of the province?

Mr. MONK. It has been held that it is a matter of procedure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly, it is a matter of procedure. The section says:

And including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

He refers to the fact that procedure in criminal matters is left to the federal authorities. I admit it is. But, in my interpretation of this Act the prosecutor in criminal matters cannot be the Attorney General of the Dominion but must be the Attorney General of the province. To go one step further: let us assume that we should take the administration of justice away from the provinces and place it in the hands of the Dominion authorities. Is my hon. friend of the opinion that it would be conducive to good government if the administration of justice in criminal matters were taken away from the provinces and vested in the Dominion? If that is his opinion, and I gather from what he says that it is his opinion, I dissent from him altogether. I say it is of the utmost importance to the welfare of the community that the administration of justice in every province should be left to the authorities of that province. My hon. friend knows that there is nothing so delicate as the administration of criminal justice in certain matters. Take the law of libel, for instance; take other matters which bear upon political questions; is my hon. friend of the opinion that as to such questions the Dominion should step in and enforce its own views which perhaps might be very different from the views of the community where the law would be administered? Take a case which would, to some extent, be confined to political matters—the case of a riot, for instance, into which politics might come to a certain extent; is my hon. friend of the opinion that under such circumstances it would be conducive to the liberty of the people if the Dominion could come in and enforce its own views upon the people in the locality where the riot took place? It seems to me that it is essential to liberty, as we understand it, that the law should remain as it is and as it was contemplated at the time of confederation; that is to say, that the administration of justice ought to be vested in the provinces and not in the Dominion.

Mr. E. BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). While I agree with what the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has said in his observations that the administration of criminal law is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, I agree also with the principle of the motion proposed by my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), because my hon. friend from South York is perfectly right when he says that there is a great deal of federal legislatioin which is not criminal legislation, but which is legislation of the Dominion which should be enforced, and a breach of which is not a crimnal act.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It may or may not be.

Mr. BRISTOL. It may or may not be. For instance, take the Alien Labour Act, the Labour Disputes Act and Acts of a similar character affecting the Dominion. I think it is the feeling of the country, if not of the House, that Acts of parliament passed by the Dominion legislature should not be a dead letter, and that it should be the duty of the Attorney General of the Dominion to enforce any of our laws for which other provision has not been specifically made, so as to avoid the possibility of the provincial authority saying: This is not our business; this is a federal law.

Mr. MONK. If the Prime Minister will seek the opinion of the magistrates of my province, who are called upon to administer the criminal law, he will find they will confirm my view, that no danger can arise from changing the responsibility for administering the criminal law from the provinces to the Dominion.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have presented this principle to-day in its widest sense. As a rule, whenever I do propound a principle in that wide sense, some one invites me to present it in a narrower sense. I shall later on present this principle in the narrower sense, in connection with the Railway Act. I repeat, that we are building up a lot of special legislation in this country in connection with federal affairs, and the responsibility of administering this legislation ought to be placed on some one. If we have attorneys general, and attorneys under them, to enforce the Criminal Code, why should there not be some attorney on behalf of the people to enforce the railway law?

Amendment (Mr. W. F. Maclean) negatived on division.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and House went into Committee on Ways and Means.

39. Starch, including corn starch, potato starch, potato flour, rice flour, sago flour, tapioca flour and all preparations having the qualities of starch, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty per pound, 1 cent, 1½ cents, 1½ cents.

Mr. FIELDING. We propose to strike out 'rice flour, sago flour and tapioca flour' from this item, and to make a special item for them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do you strike them out?

Mr. FIELDING. All these articles were included in one group because of their similarity, and it was represented to us that the duty proposed upon these three items was burdensome, and so we intend to make the rate lower.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are they used for any manufacturing purposes?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; in the manufacture of cotton.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are rice flour, tapioca flour and sago flour manufactured in Canada?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by 'potato flour'?

Mr. FIELDING. We had the word 'farina' in the previous tariff, but that is the name of a special preparation, and so we have to distinguish the different items.

Mr. SPROULE. You refer to corn starch, potato starch and potato flour; of course, you make starch from potatoes, but I was not aware you made flour.

Mr. FIELDING. They are practically the same article, though they are sometimes known under the different names; they have the same rate of duty.

Mr. PATERSON. Potato flour is a product of Prince Edward Island.

46a. Dutiable bread stuffs, grain, flour and meal of all kinds, when damaged by water in transit or prior to importation into Canada, 15 per cent; 22½ per cent; 25 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. This is intended to meet special cases. It was 20 per cent in the old tariff. In the drafting of the resolutions the item was omitted. We are now inserting it and making the duty 25 per cent instead of 20 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why?

Mr. FIELDING. We think 25 per cent is a moderate rate.

70. Flax seed, 7½ cents per bushel; 10 cents; 10 cents.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN.

Mr. FIELDING. We held that over because we desired to take up for further consideration the question of the encouragement of the flax seed industry in Canada. Therefore, we held over this and several other items which relate to it, for example, the duty on linseed oil, paints, white lead ground in oil, oil cloth and linoleum. These all have relation to the foundation item of flax seed. Flax seed has hitherto been free. But it is becoming an industry of some importance in the west and also in quite a group of counties in Ontario. We had a deputation before us, including quite a number of members of parliament on both sides, who represented strongly that the time had come when we should not allow flax seed to remain on the free list, but should impose some duty on it. We have come to the conclusion to recommend a change in the scale of duties, beginning with flax seed. Instead of having the item free we propose to charge a British preferential tariff rate of seven and a half cents per bushel, an intermediate tariff rate of ten cents per bushel, and a general tariff rate of ten cents per bushel.

Mr. SPROULE. This is done apparently for the protection of the industry.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall not quarrel about the name, provided I have my hon. friend's approval.

Mr. SPROULE. For the benefit of the hon. gentleman an open confession would be good for the soul.

Mr. FIELDING. I am happy to have my hon. friend's approval. I want to call attention to the fact that this change will necessarily lead to several other changes in the duties on the articles I have referred to, which will come up in their proper order.

71. Seeds of timothy and clover, 5 per cent; 10 per cent; 10 per cent.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is there any supervision over the quality of timothy and clover and other seeds of that nature so as to bring them into line with the Seed Control Act which we passed some years ago? We had a failure in our crop last year and there is now a large importation of these seeds. Are they coming in subject to supervision under the seed control law? That is a very important matter, as I understand some of the foreign seeds are not at all up to the mark. Does the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) supervise that or does that come under the Department of Customs?

Mr. FIELDING. The Department of Customs does not exercise any special supervision as to the quality of the seeds. Whether that inspection comes within the scope of the Minister of Agriculture I should not like to answer in his absence.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have seen some samples which were not at all up to the standard provided by the Seed Control Act. They should be supervised in the interests of first-class Canadian seed.

Mr. FIELDING. That seems reasonable, and I shall call the attention of my colleague to it.

Mr. LENNOX. If there is any supervision it would probably have to be exercised by the Customs Department. Would the Minter of Customs (Mr. Paterson) instruct the committee whether there is any such supervision?

Mr. PATERSON. As far as the Customs Department is concerned we have not exercised it.

73. Garden, field and other seeds for agricultural or other purposes, n.o.p., sunflower, canary, hemp and millet seed, when in packages weighing one pound each or less, 15 per cent, 22½ per cent, 25 per cent.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I wish to make some representations about the classification of seeds under sections 72 and 73 into packages of a pound or over and a pound or under. Seeds in packages of a pound or over come in at 10 per cent, but in packages of a pound or under they are charged 25 per cent. With regard to many seeds such as flower seeds and cauliflower seeds a pound would be a wholesale order. Cauliflower seeds are worth as much as $25 a pound, and at 25 per cent on small orders this would be a duty of $6.25, as against $2.50 on packages over a pound. I do not believe that more than ten pounds of cauliflower seeds would be used in Canada in a year. The effect of this might be to cause dealers to overstock and consequently to sell stale seeds.

Mr. FIELDING. There may be exceptional cases such as that cited in which this will work some hardship, but as a rule experience has shown that it works out well. As the duty is an ad valorem one it adjusts itself and the high priced article pays only in proportion to its cost, so I do not think there is any grievance in that way, but as to whether we could have a better distinction between wholesale and retail that question is worthy of consideration. The officials inform me that the present definition works as well as anything we could have.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Owing to this difference in duty on packages over and under a pound, you may have the duty $2.50 per pound on wholesale lots and $6 on retail, a difference of nearly $4 on one pound.

Mr. FIELDING. The reason for the distinction is obvious and one which I am sure the House will approve of, that is, we want to distinguish between seeds brought in in bulk or large quantities and seeds put up abroad and brought in in small packages. A man importing seeds in large quantities and putting them up in Canada is, in a sense, a manufacturer, whereas, if they are brought in in small packages the labour is done abroad. I should be pleased to receive suggestions as to a better definition of wholesale packages, but a man bringing in a small quantity of cauliflower seed would pay very little duty and it would not be burdensome.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know if the practice has changed since I was connected with the seed business, but then seeds came in small packages, and if the practice of the trade is the same I think that this article at 25 per cent would about cover the seeds that came in in small quantities. These packages came in from the other side and at the end of the season the parties who sold them used to come around and take back the seeds not sold. To take the different seeds and have a separate item for each one, would give you a very long list.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The greatest objection that I have to these items is that it gives the wholesale man a profit of fifteen per cent to start with in this difference between ten per cent and twenty-five per cent, whereas the farmer or ordinary market gardener cannot purchase in small quantities without paying the extra fifteen per cent.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The Minister of Customs spoke of the conditions of the trade when he was in it. I believe the same conditions prevail to-day. A large proportion of seed comes in small packages. A approve the doctrine of taxing the small packages more than the large, but a pound package of cauliflower, I may tell the minister is not a retail order, but a wholesale order.

Mr. PATERSON. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) favour making a special item of this?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I think there should be a special item of high-priced seeds fixing a limit at $1.50 or $2 a pound. But, as I have said, I approve of the idea of charging for small packages a higher duty than the large one, and, in that respect I do not quite agree with my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). My reason is that there is a great deal of labour involved in putting up these packages, and such labour in our own country should be protected. Packages of cauliflower seed contain very small quantities, and the making up of these packages involves a great deal of labour which warrants higher taxation. But the point I make, and the one concerning which seedsmen have written to me, is that a pound of cauliflower seed is not a small retail quantity, but rather a wholesale order.

Mr. PATERSON. Has the hon. gentleman any suggestions to make ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I would suggest that the price as well as the quantity should rule. Of course, if I am asked to name a list, I can do so. But the cauliflower seed is the principal item, though there are many flower seeds which should be included under the same head, and perhaps a few others that are considered garden seeds. On the other hand, there are seeds in which case an order of a hundred pounds would be a small order—these seeds come in five hundred pound lots, or even ton lots, and I believe there are as many tons of beans used for seed as there are pounds of cauliflower seeds. To mark the division between wholesale and retail at the same quantity in each case would be unfair.

Mr. PATERSON. Would it suit the hon. gentleman if it were made one half pound ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. One half pound would be more suitable in the case of cauliflower seed, but not in all cases.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Carried.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Mr. Chairman, I understood the minister to suggest to reduce it to a half pound.

Mr. FIELDING. It would be better to carry the item now, but, before it is finally passed, if we can find a way of improving the situation we can adopt it. I do not see anything we can do about it at the moment.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understood the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to ask if I would suggest a change to one half pound.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not say that I see now any objection to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt). But experience has taught me that it is better not to make these changes suddenly. We can learn how the change is likely to work out, and then, before the item is finally passed——

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I would be willing to hold the item over——

Mr. FIELDING. It would be better not to hold it over. There is possibility of further consideration, but I would rather avoid holding anything over.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understood the Minister of Customs to suggest that.

Mr. FIELDING. No, not to hold the item over. But, before it is finally passed, if further light comes to us on this subject we will avail ourselves of it to make any necessary modification.

Florist stock, viz.: azaleas, rhododendrons, pot grown lilacs, araucarias, bulbs, corms, tubers, rhizomes and dormont roots, n.o.p.; seedling stock for grafting, viz.: plum, pear, peach and other fruit trees, free, free, free.

Mr. FIELDING. I move to add after the words 'seedling stock' the words 'and rose stock.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the object of that ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is suggested by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith.)

Amendment agreed to.

Tomatoes, fresh, 20 per cent, 27½ per cent, 30 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. There was considerable discussion over the duty on tomatoes, and we came to the conclusion that this was a case in which an ad valorem duty would best meet the general sense of the House, so we have adopted these rates of 20, 27½ and 30 per cent instead of the specific duty which stands on the original schedule.

Mr. FOSTER. How do these compare?

Mr. FIELDING. The prices vary so much that we found it exceedingly difficult to make a calculation. But our information is that an ad valorem duty will meet the varying conditions better than the other. Early in the sesason when tomatoes are brought in at a tolerably high price, the ad valorem duty will be a moderate rate. Later in the season there is no foreign competition.

Amendment agreed to.

Dates and figs, dried, per hundred pounds, 40 cents, 55 cents, 62½ cents.

Mr. FIELDING. We made a slight reduction in these rates, as we found on closer examination that the duties were rather high. These fruits do not come in competition with anything in Canada.

Amendment agreed to.

Blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries, strawberries, cherries and currants, n.o.p., the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, per pound, 1½ cents, 1¾ cents, 2 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new one.

Mr. FIELDING. That was held over at the request of some hon. gentlemen, I do not remember whom. There is no change in it except in a fraction of the preference.

Mr. SPROULE. How would you apply that in the case of strawberry packages? Is one package of strawberries just a pound ?

Mr. FIELDING. The weight is to be included, so as to avoid the necessity of separating them for duty purposes.

97a (plums). Strike out the figures 20 in the general tariff rate and insert the figures 30.

Mr. FIELDING. The general tariff is increased from 20 to 30 cents per bushel.

There is a question as to the application of the French treaty to this item, which does not arise here as respects the general tariff. We propose to increase the general rate from 20 to 30 cents, the other rates remaining the same.

135. Sugar, n.o.p., not above number sixteen Dutch standard in colour, sugar drainings or pumpings drained in transit, melado or concentrated melado, tank bottoms, sugar concrete, and molasses testing over fifty-six degrees and not more than seventy-five degrees by the polariscope, per one hundred pounds, 34 cents, 45 cents, 52 cents.

And for each additional degree over seventy-five degrees, per one hundred pounds, 1 cent, 1⅓ cents, 1½ cents.

Provided that fractions of five-tenths of a degree or less shall not be subject to duty, and that fractions of more than five-tenths shall be dutiable as a degree.

Provided that all raw sugar, including sugar specified in this item, the produce of any British colony or possession, shall be entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff, when imported direct into Canada from any British colony or possession.

In item 135.—Strike out all the words after 'direct' to the end of the item and instead thereof insert the words 'by ship to a port in Canada, from any British country, and not otherwise.'

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Have there been any representations from the refiners in regard to the sugar duties? I understand that they complain of an advance in the charge on raw sugar, and not giving them sufficient on the refined article.

Mr. FIELDING. We shall have something to say when we come to the item of raw sugar. We are not changing the duty on the refined. This definition of No. 16 Dutch standard is one of long standing, and I think has been accepted by all who understand the sugar question as the proper line of division.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the minister would give us generally an idea of what he proposes to do on the sugar items as a whole, and what it involves. It is a matter about which representations are made, and the changes are rather drastic, I think, in some respects.

Mr. FIELDING. We have made no change with regard to the duty on refined, though a change that has been made in the duty on packages affects the refiner a little, perhaps to the extent of 1½ cent per hundred pounds. The package, which was formerly dutiable on refined sugar, now becomes free under a general classification. To that extent, the duty on refined is a little less.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the first effect is that 1½ cents per hundred pounds is taken off the fine sugar by the change in the package?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. While there is no change in the rates, the effect of that change on the package is equivalent to about 1½ cents per hundred pounds, and we propose to take that into consideration in adjusting the duty on the raw. With regard to the duty on the raw, we propose to change the rate. We increased the rate on raw sugaar as described in this item to the extent of 7⅓ cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. FOSTER. In the general?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the preferential, because raw sugar comes in very largely under the preferential tariff. Representations have been made to us that we have imposed a considerable burden on the refiner, and after consideration we have concluded to reduce the duty on raw from 34 cents per hundred pounds under the preferential tariff to 31½. To that extent the refiner will be somewhat better off than he was under the arrangement proposed some weeks ago. It will not entirely meet his criticism, we are aware, but we think it will to some extent meet his criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the old tariff?

Mr. PATERSON. 51⅔, now it will be 56½, on raw sugar.

Mr. FOSTER. I mean the preferential duty on raw sugar?

Mr. PATERSON. You mean 99 or 100 degrees, do you not?

Mr. FOSTER. I mean what was exactly the corresponding duty under the old tariff, corresponding with the 34 cents you propose here.

Mr. PATERSON. If you bring it up to the 100 degrees, that would be the case. There is 31½ for 70 degrees and 1 for each additional degree.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the 70 degrees under the old tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. It was 40 cents under the general tariff, subject to one-third off, which would make it 26⅔. We increased that to 34. We are now proposing to reduce it to 31½.

Mr. FOSTER. You are increasing it from 26⅔ to 31½?

Mr. FIELDING. As compared with the tariff of three months ago.

Mr. FOSTER. What will that give you on 100 pounds?

Mr. FIELDING. It increases it from 26⅔ to 31½; 4⅚ cents is the actual sum instead of 7⅔, which we had contemplated adding to the rate on sugar when we presented the budget some weeks ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the Minister of Customs said that you added one cent for every additional degree, which brought the duty upon the sugar ordinarly imported to a certain higher amount. I would like to know what that higher amount is on the various grades of sugar ordinarily imported. The Minister of Customs will understand that I want to get at the practical working out of the two tariffs as applied to the way in which business is done.

Mr. PATERSON. Refined granulated sugar will run 99 to 100 degrees; 100 degrees is perfect. Raw sugar will be 31½ cents under the preferential rate testing 75 degrees. For every additional degree over 75 one cent is added. As there are 25 degrees over 75 necessary to make 100, if you add 25 to 31½ it makes 56½. That is 56½ cents per 100 pounds on sugar that will produce 100 pounds of granulated sugar. The previous duty was 51⅔ cents on the same test, and therefore it is practically an advance on the raw sugar which the refiner buys of not quite 5 cents, or 4⅚ cents.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is an addition for every additional degree; so that you add one cent for every additional degree, and you in that way reach 56½ cents per 100 pounds. Is that right?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; except that I think the purpose that my hon. friend has in view will be met if we do not attempt to enter into the question of how many pounds of raw sugar go to make 100 pounds of refined. Formerly the duty was 40 cents under the general tariff, subject to a reduction of one-third, which would make it 26⅔. We increased that to 34, which would make an increase of 7⅓ cents, but we now propose to go back a little, and instead of increasing it from 26⅔ to 34, we will increase it from 26⅔ to 31½. It will give the refiner about 5 cents per hundred pounds less advantage than under the old tariff.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that, but I cannot quite understand the Minister of Finance in saying that we should not take the other matter into consideration, because I am only applying the principle which he laid down this afternoon. He referred to sago flour, or rice flour, or something of that kind, as subject to a low duty because it is used in a certain manufacture in Canada. Raw sugar has to be used in a certain manufacture which is carried on very extensively, and in order to see what the proportion is between the duty on the raw material and the duty on the manufactured article, I thought it would be proper to find out, as far as we could, just what is the duty upon the raw material which is necessary for the purpose of producing 100 pounds of the manufactured article. I do not know how many pounds of the raw sugar of the quality referred to by the Minister of Customs are necessary to produce 100 pounds of the refined article. Is it 100 or 108 pounds? Perhaps the Minister of Customs could tell me, if he is following me.

Mr. PATERSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. R. L. BORDON. I wish to know how many pounds of raw sugar upon which a duty of 56½ cents is levied will be necessary to produce 100 pounds of the refined article? Do I make myself clear to the hon. gentleman?

Mr. PATERSON. I think perhaps you do. But the trouble is that the raw sugar is imported of varying degrees of saccharine strength. Supposing sugar is imported of only 60 degrees of saccharine matter——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was referring to 100 degrees.

Mr. PATERSON. You cannot import raw sugar testing 100 degrees, but if you import it at 75 degrees and add 25 to that it would give you a saccharine strength of 100.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I only want to get the information for the purposes of comparison. As I understand the minister's statement, you in practice do not get sugar containing 100 degrees of saccharine matter?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But for the purpose of comparison, we can deal with it as if it were practicable to obtain that article. If you have 100 pounds of sugar which will make 100 pounds of refined sugar, you will levy 56½ cents per 100 pounds of duty?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes; that would be on 100 degrees of saccharine matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Am I right in assuming that the difference between that and 72 cents would be the measure of protection which you give to the industry of manufacturing refined sugar?

Mr. PATERSON. Is 72 cents the preferential rate on refined sugar?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. No; I think it is more than that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is 72 on this.

Mr. LENNOX. Item 134.

Mr. PATERSON. It is 72, and for each degree over 88 degrees it is a cent additional; so that you have to add the difference between the two. The difference between that and 84 is the protection that the refiner gets.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difference between 56½——

Mr. PATERSON. And 84.

Mr. FIELDING. We have another proposition which bears a relation to that, though we will refer to it later. It is in regard to the beet sugar industry. We have several beet factories in Canada which have been turning out a considerable quantity of sugar. There has been some discussion, and I think some debate, as to how far this industry may hope to be permanently successful. At all events, we know that they are turning out a large quantity of sugar and that they are consuming a large quantity of beets grown in Canada. It is claimed by farmers, or a large number of them, that the beet is a very profitable crop to them, and that they are very much interested in having this beet sugar industry remain with them. One of the difficulties of this beet sugar industry is that the mills in Canada all operate by one process from the raw beet to the refined article. There is no intermediate process. The consequence is that they can only work during their season; that when the beets come in from the farm they have to be converted quickly into refined sugar, and that when their campaign—I believe that is the word that is used—is over the beet factory has to close up. It has exhausted all its material and nothing further can be done. It has been suggested that the industry could best be carried on if it is to become permanently successful with us by having factories established for the intermediate process of converting beets into raw material in a form which would permit it to be stored, and then it would become the raw material which could be used by the beet factories when their ordinary campaign is over. There are none of these intermediate factories in Canada at present. It is thought that those interested in the industry would be willing to establish these factories, and we propose to allow, for three years, this concession to the manufacturers of beet sugar. We think that will be long enough to enable them, if they will, to establish these intermediate factories. We propose to allow the beet sugar manufacturers, for a period of three years, to bring in at the British preferential rate two pounds of foreign sugar for every pound of refined sugar they produce from beets grown in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be foreign beet sugar?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, because their machinery would not enable them to use cane sugar. This is an experiment intended to encourage them to continue the industry, so that when their ordinary campaign with the Canadian beet is ended, they can continue the operation of their factories for a longer period than is now possible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this amendment set out in the notice?

Mr. FIELDING. I mentioned that I would have one or two proposals which are not set out in the notice and this is one of them. I think the object is one with which the House sympathizes. The Ontario government granted a bounty to the beet sugar industry, but it received no special consideration from this government, other than the permission to import, free of duty, the machinery for establishing the factories. It is now represented to us that the chief disadvantage of the beet sugar manufacturers, is, that they can only operate for a short season of the year, and that something should be done to provide them with means whereby they can operate during a longer period. Their present facilities will enable them to run the Canadian beets for say two months, and if we allow them to bring in this raw material, which is what might be called a half-way house in the process of manufacture, the factories can be employed for five or six months in the year. At all events, this is the form in which we have concluded that we can give some encouragement to the industry.

Mr. FOSTER. The factories, as I understand it, will not require any new or different machinery to continue the process on this raw material which is to come in under the preferential tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. It is conceded that they will not have to go to any additional expense. Is it the idea, that instead of working the Canadian beets into refined sugar, they shall simply work them up to the raw sugar stage, then store it, and later on work their own raw sugar and the imported raw sugar into refined sugar?

Mr. FIELDING. They will go on refining their own sugar.

Mr. FOSTER. The admission of this two pounds of foreign beet sugar for one pound produced by the factories, simply enables them to carry on their process longer than they otherwise would, unless of course they could get a sufficient quantity of beets from our Canadian farmers. Has the Minister of Finance, or has the Minister of Customs, thought of the effect this proposal will have upon the urgency the Canadian beet sugar refiners will use, towards getting our farmers interested in producing sufficient beets for their demands. Will not the foreign producer of beets reap the advantage of this, to the disadvantage of the Canadian producer, and will it not do away with the idea we had when we proposed to encourage the beet root industry in this country. We never would have gone into the beet sugar industry if the refiners alone were concerned. The idea was to promote the culture of beet in Canada, and so give our farmers another branch of industry for which the land was well suited. How far are you carrying out that idea if you put it into the power of the beet sugar manufacturer to get his raw material much more easily than he does now. Will the manufacturer take all the trouble he has hitherto taken to induce the farmers of Canada to grow the best kind of beets in the largest quantity ? This is a new thing sprung upon us just now, but the thought comes to me, whether you are not removing the necessity for persistent effort to spread the culture of the beet amongst our own farmers, and, putting the beet sugar refiner in the position of the cotton manufacturer who must get his raw cotton from abroad. Will not this proposal make it so that the beet sugar refiner is no longer dependent on the culture of the beet in Canada, and that consequently, he will not be so persistent in his efforts to aid our farmers in producing beets.

Mr. PATERSON. The proposition impresses itself favourably on me from this point of view—we have two or three beet sugar refineries established at great cost, possessing very expensive plants, and which can only be run for a limited period of the year, because the beets produced in Canada must be worked up within that short season. This proposition, then, is to allow them to bring in what might perhaps be described as raw material for their factories, and as a result, instead of running a refinery two or three months as at present they will run it seven or nine months. If a refinery can run nine months instead of three, with the fixed charges that are inevitable in either case, it follows as a matter of course that the cost of production will be lessened. The argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is that we should look after the interests of the farmer rather than the refiner. We guard that by providing, that the refiner is only allowed to import two pounds for the one pound that he produces from the Canadian beet. If he slackens his efforts in getting beets from the farmer, he reduces his import, and can only import so much less. His interest is to get all he can from the farmers because it pays him better than to refine the raw. Instead of discouraging the farmers, the refiner will encourage them, for the more he will produce from the Canadian beet the larger amount he will be allowed to import. Those who know say, there was a mistake made in starting the complete plant at the beginning, and that the better way is to establish smaller subsidiary plants which have not a refining capacity up to the extent of producing the pure sugar. These different subsidiary factories could be established at points one or two hundred miles distant from refinery, and their product could be shipped, at a low cost, to the central refinery where the process of manufacture would be perfected. The importation of the raw beet sugar will, in a sense, take the place of those subsidiary factories and furnish the refinery with sufficient material to enable it to operate for the greater part of the year.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.—Mr. W. McIntyre.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BERGERON. At six o'clock I wished to ask the minister why the item originally brought down had been changed. I understood that after a long study, a year's study the government had seen fit to bring down the tariff as it was at first introduced this session. What has happened since to open the eyes of my hon. friend ?

Mr. PATERSON. I think the Minister of Finance explained that on consideration it was thought that we had raised the duty on the cane sugar, which is the sugar that comes in under the preferential rate, rather more than would be justified and so there has been a reduction of 2½ cents. That is the only change.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that give more protection or less ? What is the principle ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is not the principle, it is the interest they are looking after.

Mr. PATERSON. It is in favour of the refiner.

Mr. BERGERON. Will it make sugar cheaper or dearer ?

Mr. PATERSON. It does not affect it because the sugar of commerce is the refined sugar the duty on which is unchanged, but the refiner has less difference, which is his protection, between the raw and the refined. There is more difference now when you have lowered it 2½ cents as we have done on his raw.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Did the minister notice that the day after this was announced, the price of sugar was increased 10 cents ?

Mr. PATERSON. It did not remain at that.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister was going to explain a third point in reference to indirect importations ?

Mr. FIELDING. We propose to amend that so that it will read as it did before. That is it will require a direct importation but the use of the words 'direct by ships' are to be withdrawn. The question of direct importation generally will come before the committee at a later stage but I think the only item on which there are changes that I did not mention is on that point. The words with regard to the importation of refined sugar direct by ship will be modified so as to stand exactly as they did before in the old tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. So that the government abandons its proposal to make the shipment to Halifax or St. John obligatory ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, for the moment. Probably before we are through with this matter a general proposal dealing with direct shipments will come before the committee.

Mr. AMES. Then the minister does not intend to introduce on this one commodity a principle not applied elsewhere, but if it is proposed to allow the preferential rate only on good coming to Canadian ports it will be on all goods and not on sugar alone ?

Mr. FIELDING. I propose that this shall read as it has read for several years past; the general question will come later.

Mr. AMES. The words 'into Canada from any British colony' are struck out ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the words 'by direct ship' only.

Mr. AMES. 'By ship to a port in Canada from any British country and not otherwise.'

Mr. FIELDING. These words of which notice was given will be dropped so that the item will remain as it has been in the tariff for several years.

Mr. AMES. By the dropping of these words does it revive the words 'into Canada from any British colony or possession' ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, these will remain. They have been in the tariff for several years, there is no change. It is the difference between a direct shipment by a ship to a Canadian port and a direct shipment in the customs sense of the word, on a through Bill of lading. The words 'direct shipment from any British colony or possession' will remain but they will be interpreted in the customs sense of shipments on a through bill of lading even if they do not come in a direct ship. That has been the system for several years and we propose it shall remain for the present unchanged.

Mr. AMES. That is to say, if sugar from the West Indies came from New York on through bill of lading to Montreal by boat and rail, it would be entitled to the preference ?

Mr. FIELDING. That has been so for several years, and the words as we shall leave them will leave that matter in the same position for the present.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the beet root sugar, I do not understand quite what the idea was as stated by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). Do I understand that the sugar not wholly refined will be shipped from the other industries to a central refinery ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the minister propose to carry that out ? I can quite see how that might be advantageous to the central refinery, but I do not see in what way it is supposed to help the individual refineries which traffic directly with the farmer, stimulating him to produce the material and buying it when he has raised it.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Before the discussion on the beet sugar is taken up, I wish to continue the discussion which had begun with regard to duties on the refined sugar. I understand that the refiners have made special representations to the Minister of Finance with regard to the proposed changes in the tariff. I would like to ask the minister if he has received information as to their view of the changes in the duties on the refined sugar ? I have before me a pronouncement from them, which, I presume, has been sent to many members of the House including, no doubt, the Minister of Finance. It says :

1st. On raw sugar, the duty is increased 7⅓ cents per one hundred pounds.

2nd. On the quantity required to produce one hundred pounds of refined, the duty is increased 8 cents.

3rd. On the refined imported from Great Britain no advance is made.

4th. So a change is made, against the Canadian refiner, and in favour of the British, of 8 cents per one hundred pounds.

5th. The effect will be to depress the Canadian manufacturer, to stimulate the British, and to diminish the Canadian trade with the islands.

6th. In totals the Canadian duty is as follows :

On the raw to produce one hundred pounds of refined, 59½ cents.

On British refined, per one hundred younds, 83 cents.

The argument appears to be that the duty on the raw material is greater than on the finished product by ½ of 1 per cent. That is not a serious item, but I think it just to the refiners to lay this before the House, as the minister did not do so. As to the duty on the refined sugar I do not think we got to the bottom of this question in the discussion before dinner. The question was asked in the House three or four weeks ago, by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) as to the duty on refined sugar, and the Minister of Customs at that time stated the duty at $1.24—the highest duty.

Mr. PATERSON. It would be $1.26 at 100 degrees.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) took it at 99 degrees.

Mr. PATERSON. At that it would be $1.24.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. There is not much difference, but I myself had given it at $1.26 while the minister gave it at $1.24. In order to show that the duty of $1.26, has been paid I brought here several entries I had made, paying $1.26 on refined sugar. These may be inspected by the Minister of Customs or any other hon. member who doubts my statement. I gave the figure off-hand, and had not the means of proving it at the time, but I have brought the documents here to establish what I said—that the duty on granulated sugar of 100 per cent purity is $1.26.

Mr. FOSTER. That is under the general tariff ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Yes, the general tariff, beginning at $1.08. The minister of Customs explained how the polariscopic test works out. It seems to me that this test does not work out very well in the interest of the country when applied to refined sugar as the minister explains it. The purer the article a man imports, the higher duty he has to pay. That is hardly a good thing if the principle of a pure food law is to be regarded favourably. A man should not be fined for selling the pure article. The minister begins the polariscopic test at 88 per cent of purity and adds 1½ cents for every degree of purity between that and 100, making a difference of 18 as between the lowest at 88 degrees and the highest at 100 degrees. The man who imports the impure sugar pays the least duty. This is a feature, it seems to me, that would stand revising. The polariscopic test, I believe, was introduced by this government. The country did not understand the advance put on refined sugar by this method, though it taxes the refined sugar a good deal heavier than before. I am not saying that refined sugar is taxed too high, when we look at the rate on the raw sugar. The duty on the raw has been raised, and I think that perhaps the refiners have a grievance in that—certainly they think they have. The government have raised the duty on raw sugar 8 cents per hundred pounds, and given them no corresponding advantage on the refined sugar. I submit that the duty on the refined article is quite high enough, and that other sources of revenue should be available instead of taxing this great staple article as high as the government propose to tax it. I do not know whether the minister has had reports from the refiners and others to say whether the duties he proposes are satisfactory or otherwise in advancing raw sugar, I would like to know whether the refiners are satisfied that the change will work out without disadvantage to their business.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid that I cannot give my hon. friend the assurance that the refiners are entirely satisfied.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that the minister announced some modification just as the committee resumed after recess. I would like to understand what is the duty upon the raw material sufficient to produce 100 pounds of sugar and the duty on the refined article, I do not know that we got an absolutely plain answer to that.

Mr. PATERSON. There is 31½, add to that 25, and you have 56½ as the duty on raw sugar. Now, the refined is 72 for 88 degrees, and 1 for every degree over which is 12 ; that makes 84. 56½ will produce 100 pounds of pure sugar of 100 degrees purity.

Mr. FOSTER. But is there not a modification to be made in that ? A certain amount of raw sugar brought in does not produce an equal amount of refined.

Mr. PATERSON. It does not produce it, and therefore it does not pay the tax. The polariscope regulates that. For instance, if the sugar is 75 that pays so much duty ; but suppose that sugar produces 85 or 86, it would pay 10 more.

Mr. FOSTER. But there is a wastage in the refining process. If you take 100 pounds of raw sugar and put it through the process of refining, it does not give you 100 pounds of refined sugar. My hon. friend wanted to know how many pounds of raw sugar would make 100 pounds of refined. Now, the refiners make a calculation that it takes about 108 pounds, so when they pay the duty on raw, and in this case an increased duty, they have to pay on more than 100 pounds of raw to make 100 pounds of refined. Therefore when you come to strike the difference between refined and raw, you have to make some allowance for wastage. Now, the minister has raised the duty on raw sugars for what purpose ? That is a rise in the duty which the consumer absolutely must pay.

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. FOSTER. If you put a duty on a raw article coming into this country, and which you do not raise here, do you mena to say that every cent you put on the raw does not raise the refined product exactly by that increase of duty ? It may be said that the duty you put on a manufactured product coming in is not always paid by the consumer, that internal competition may reduce it. But with reference to the duty on raw sugar coming into this country, every cent of duty you put on raises the price of that sugar to the consumer, there is no getting out of that. Now, while the minister has not raised the duty on the refined he has raised it on the raw, and he has therefore disturbed the amount of protection that was formerly received by the refiner to the amount that he has raised the raw greater than it was under the old duties, the refined being just the same as it has been. Besides that, you have taken off a certain amount of protection in the wrapper duty, amounting, I think the minister said, to 1½ cents per hundred pounds. So you have disturbed the amount of protection that in 1897 you thought was necessary for the work of refining in this country. Now, why has the minister done that? Has he satisfied himself that he is not attacking an industry in this country and reducing it to far below the amount of protection which every other great protected industry in this country enjoys? I think he will find that that is the case.

Mr. PATERSON. With reference to the first proposition of the hon. gentleman, that a rise in the duty on raw comes out of the consumer, he says you cannot get outside of that. Well I am outside of that all the time. Raw sugar is not the sugar of commerce. The sugar of commerce which the hon. gentleman and every consumer buys, is sugar of about sixteen Dutch standard in colour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want to understand—the duty will enter into the cost of production?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, I am speaking simply on this point, that the advance we have made in the duty on raw sugar does not come out of the consumer because the sugar of commerce, whether it be yellow, or has reached a further stage of advancement and has become refined or granulated, is the sugar that is bought and used in our homes by the people. That is not advanced in price, that is actually lowered in price by the effect of the change in the packing clause. That will reduce the duty on refined sugar by about 1½ cents per 100 pounds. So the sugar that is bought by the consumer will be no dearer to him whatever, because the duty upon that sugar is not advanced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is in so far as it is imported.

Mr. PATERSON. So far as regards the imported or the home article either. The refiner, if you leave out the barrel question, pays $1.26 per 100 pounds. If he charges more than that price, sugar comes in from the outside. The refiner is at liberty to take the advantage he has between the cost of the raw and the refined to the full extent, if he sees fit. We need not argue now whether he does or does not, that he can do if he wants to. Under this tariff he has 4½ cents and a fraction more to pay upon the sugar that he has to buy to refine and there is no higher duty upon the refined article, therefore it is 4½ cents additional which does not come out of the people, but out of the refiner.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend will find out that practically the statement I made will be proved true. The very moment that this tariff was brought down sugar raised in this country. If you raise the raw material and you make the home refiner pay an increased duty on raw material there is no getting out of the fact that he must have his compensation, and he gets his compensation out of the increase in price; in some way or other it will be brought about. He may perhaps lose a little of his protection but he resides in the country, he is closer to the sources of demand and he will make out of the retailer and the wholesalers of sugars in this country sufficient to countervail that increased duty on the raw material. In the end it will work out that way. Well, now what is the protection that the refiner gets what is the percentage of protection that he gets? You take your cotton manufacturer, there is the raw material and it comes in free. You take out certain small items to lessen the duty, because you want to give more protection to the cotton manufacturer. In a dozen different ways in this tariff you have increased the protection upon cotton goods. Take woollen goods which have a lower protective duty compared with what the duties are generally in protective countries. Take your other articles which this government protects by what they think is an adequate duty and the percentage between the amount of duty on the raw material and on the refined or finished product, you will find is away and above what you allow the refiners of sugars in this case.

Now, in the 1897 tariff, you started out and gave them an advantage of about 50 cents a hundred. You have reduced that to about 27 cents a hundred. Twenty-seven cents a hundred is 1-27th of a cent per pound. You take into account the lessening by the free package, you take into account the wastage in refining and the actual increase in the raw while giving him none on the refined and you have reduced the refiner's protection. If you calculate it on the ad valorem basis you will see that you are giving him scarcely any advance at all on his refined over his raw sugars. When you commenced in 1897 with 50 cents of an advantage and have brought it down until today it is about 26 and a fraction, either you must have been wrong at first or else there is a pressure to-day which does not seem to be an equable pressure when you take into account the protection you give to other great industries, some of which we have had under review and some of which we will have under review. Will the hon. Minister of Customs give us the ad valorem protection that the sugar refiner gets in his opinion?

Mr. PATERSON. I am not reducing it to an ad valorem basis, but in reference to the first point, which, I think, the hon. gentleman ought to have clearly in his mind, he seems to think that by raising the duty on the raw sugar we raise the price that the consumer will have to pay for the sugar that is used in the household.

Mr. FOSTER. Practically you have done that and the course of trade proves it.

Mr. PATERSON. We have 56½ cents duty on the raw. Suppose we reduce that to 40 cents but still leave the duty at $1.26 on the refined sugar, will the refiner reduce the price of his refined sugar 16½ cents when he does not need to ?

Mr. FOSTER. No, but competition will do that.

Mr. PATERSON. He will have no competition until he gets up to $1.26. Let the hon. gentleman face it. Will the refiner reduce the price if we reduce the duty to 40 cents ? It is the duty on the refined sugar that determines the price that the consumer has to pay.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Why does the minister say there is no competition ? There are a great many refiners in Canada. Does he say there is no competition among them ?

Mr. PATERSON. There may be competition, but the fact remains that you cannot get outside competition if they see fit to take advantage of the protection which the tariff gives them.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Is there any reason to suppose that they do take advantage of it ?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if there is no reason to suppose that, is there any reason, without doing them any injustice, for putting them in a position to take advantage of it if they thought of doing it? Now, the minister has put a question. Let me put a question to the minister : If the minister had had the interests of the consumer entirely in his mind why did he not keep the duty on the raw sugar the same as it was before and reduce the duty on the refined sugar by a small amount ? That was open to the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. That was.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there would have been no difficulty at all in either theory or practice. Then the consumer would have been benefited absolutely. As it is to-day the minister may refine his theories as long as he likes, but I tell him that the practical course of trade as it was, as it is now and as it will be, proves that this increase in the raw will increase materially the price that will be paid for that sugar. From the revenue point of view, how much revenue does the minister hope to squeeze out of the consumers of this country by the increased duty on the raw ?

Mr. PATERSON. We do not expect to squeeze out of the consumers of this country on refined sugar—the sugar we use—one cent—not one cent.

Mr. FOSTER. I am asking the minister how much duty he expects to get out of the duty on raw sugar. We will leave the squeezing process out for the present and discuss it afterwards.

Mr. PATERSON. On this raw sugar ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. It will be somewhere between $150,000 and $200,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the budget speech the Minister of Finance said $300,000.

Mr. FIELDING. But we have reduced it since.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much ?

Mr. FOSTER. Have you reduced it one-half ?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then your calculations are wrong somewhere. How much raw sugar was imported last year ?

Mr. PATERSON. About 400,000,000 pounds.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it would be $250,000.

Mr. PATERSON. Not quite that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I think the position of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is absolutely correct that this tax is bound to come out of the people. The consumers will have to pay that increased duty. The hon. Minister of Finance in making the announcement in the first place, said that there would be an increase in this duty of $350,000.

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that I said about $300,000.

Mr. FOSTER. You have reduced it from 7⅛ to 5⅜.

Mr. FIELDING. We have taken 1⅛ off and I would say that $200,000 would about represent the amount of increased revenue that will be raised out of this reduced tariff.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I think the minister said $300,000, although I am only speaking from memory.

Mr. FIELDING. Possibly I did. I have not looked up the budget since.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. But the fact remains that the duties are being disturbed to the extent of 7⅛ cents per 100 pounds and the refiners declare that they have to pay 8 cents extra per 100 pounds. Either the refiners are going to lose that or the public are going to pay it. Does the minister think that he can take $200,000 out of the pockets of the refiners without them feeling it? It must come from one source or the other. The refiners must lose that much profit or the consumer must pay it, or else they are going to divide it. The minister says it cannot come out of the people because it is not a refined article or an article of commerce. I beg to take issue with him. Part of it is an article of commerce. Demerara is a raw sugar and it is used without any refining process at all. That is what comes from the West India islands. Speaking for myself, I have used it on my table for years. Every household consumes more or less raw sugar because it is wanted for certain purposes. For certain purposes in cooking no other sugar will do as well. That part of it is a commercial article and that is the kind of sugar that the minister spoke of. Then, take his argument in regard to which I must say they are endeavouring to evade the question although not successfully and that is that it does not follow that because the duty on raw sugar has been raised there must be a raise in the refined article. The very fact that an advance of 10 cents took place immediately after the changes were announced is a sufficient answer to that. At the same time the refiners are not here to issue a plea on their behalf. They are probably able to look after themselves, and if they see fit they can come to Ottawa and interview the minister. But the consumers should not be misled into thinking that they are not going to pay this duty. Somebody will have to pay this $300,000 additional duty, and my contention is, notwithstanding what the minister may say, that it will come out of the purchasers of refined sugar for the most part. The raw, is the basis of the refined, and unless we are going to have all our refined sugar imported, and no raw sugar imported, the duty must come out of the refined article which our refiners are selling to the jobbers and the jobbers to the retailers. The Minister of Customs should admit at the start, that that money is going to come out of the consumers.

Mr. PATERSON. I will not admit that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. There is no shadow of doubt but that the whole of that money will come out of the consumer, or at all events as much of it as the refiners can take.

Mr. PATERSON. I will not admit that in the slightest degree; I deny it right from the start.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The minister says, no raw sugar is used as an article of commerce.

Mr. PATERSON. The quantity of sugar under number 16 Dutch standard in colour, which is used, is very insignificant in comparison with the whole importation. The duty on the refined sugar determines the price the consumer has to pay for his sugar. On the basis of 400,000,000 pounds imported last year, there would be $200,000 and that seems a large sum to take out of the refiners, for it is out of the refiners it comes.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the refiners take it out of the farmers.

Mr. PATERSON. If it does not come out of the refiners why need they care about it? The question may be asked then: have we been giving the refiners, under the tariff, $200,000 a year more than they should have had? Let me tell you this: About three years ago when the preference was given to raw sugar, British grown, in order to help our West Indian brethren and to reduce the duty as well, the preferential scale reduced the duty on the raw sugar materially. But we also provided for a like reduction on the refined sugar made in Britain from British grown raw material, so that such imported British sugars are only subject to a duty of 84 cents, and not $1.26. It was a problem at that time as to how it would work out. We recognize that if the English refiner would go into this business of refining sugar from wholly British raws and exporting them to Canada, then the Canadian refiner would have a competition that I am free to say I do not believe he could have struggled under. We did not know what the effect might be, or how soon that effect might come. Two or three years have passed, and in the present revision of the tariff we have the benefit of knowing just how the tariff framed three years ago has worked, and we find that the English refiner, for one cause or another, has not taken or availed himself of the advantage given him under the tariff, and that only a very, very small quantity of English sugar refined from British grown sugar has come into this country.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Does the minister say that the Canadian refiners have not taken full advantage of the duty on refined sugar?

Mr. PATERSON. You cannot get away from the fact that the duty on refined sugar determines the price. Why does the hon. gentleman advocate an additional duty on some things, if it is not that he may get a higher price?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Not at all.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, it is reported to us time and again that they cannot exist without a higher duty. Is not the contention of the refiners, as voiced by my hon. friends opposite, that under the $1.26 duty, they cannot get along if the duty on the raw material is placed at such a rate?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. It is contended by some that there is no protection given to refiners under the new schedule, and if that is so they have a right to complain.

Mr. PATERSON. If the British refiner were sending us large quantities of refined sugar, the Canadian refiner would have a very, very close margin to work upon; closer than I would be disposed to advocate. But when we find that in the past two or three years our Canadian refiners have not had that competition, we feel it our duty to lessen the amount of protection that was afforded them under the old tariff, and give them what we believe will enable them to make a good profitable business under the rates we are substituting, and in order that the revenue may get an increased amount from the enhanced duty on the raw, without burdening the consumers of the country to the extent of one cent per 1,000 pounds on the sugar they buy. That is the explanation; that is the reason why, during the past few years, the refiners have had more than we consider they were fairly entitled to. We could have taken the line suggested by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster); we could have left the duty as it was upon the raw, and we could have lowered the duty upon the refined. To the refiners the result would be precisely the same.

Mr. FOSTER. But, to the consumer?

Mr. PATERSON. If the duty on the refined was lower, the consumer would get the sugar somewhat lower.

Mr. FOSTER. You have no bowels of mercy for the consumer.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes we have, and therefore we have removed the duty from rice, and fruits, and many other things.

Mr. FOSTER. The poor man eats rice for his breakfast, and rice for his dinner, and rice before he goes to bed.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know whether my hon. friend eats rice or not, but there is a great deal of it consumed in Canada. There is the admission of the hon. gentleman himself, that if we had reduced the duty on the refined, the price would come down to the consumer. Why can it not come down without our reducing the duty on the refined, if the refiner desires?

Mr. FOSTER. Is it or is it not the fact, that after this tariff was brought down the price of sugar went up 10 cents per 100 pounds? Is it or is it not a fact, that, as the minister has stated to-night, under the old tariff all the increase he put upon sugars was 7⅓ cents, and therefore when he raised the duty on raw 7⅓ cents, the response to that was an increase of 10 cents per 100 pounds in the price of refined sugar? And I am informed the price has not materially gone down since. An ounce of experience is worth a pound of theory, especially such kind of theory as my hon. friend is giving us to-night. Here you have a government doubling the taxes of the country, as this government has done, taking millions from the people, yet on an article which is used by every home in this country, especially the poorer homes, you take from the tax-payers $250,000 by this increase of duty, when you might have left the raw sugar as it was and saved the people this taxation upon one of the prime necessaries of life. A free trade government, even a slightly protectionist government, with an overflowing treasury, would have done that. But my hon. friend did not choose to do it. He prefers to add to the price of the raw sugar. He has got a response from the commercial world, and that response is a rise in the price of sugar over and above the tax he levied on the raw material. He does not seem to have benefited anybody. He may take a little pleasure in squeezing the refiner, but the people will see that he had an excellent opportunity of relieving them of a little of their load; and had he done that, to a certain extent that would have covered some of his sins.

Mr. PATERSON. What a hard-hearted government this must be, and what a wonderful power it must have, when it can arrange the sugar duties in such a way that it raises the price of refined sugar 10 cents per hundred pounds, not only to the people of Canada, but to the people of the United States and the rest of the world as well, because the price of sugar went up 10 cents all the world over and not in Canada alone. By what we did we raised the price, not only 10 cents here, but all over the world!

Mr. FOSTER. At that particular time?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes; I am informed that at that particular time the refiners in Canada followed exactly the New York quotations.

Mr. FOSTER. Your information is wrong.

Mr. PATERSON. Of course, my hon. friend will say so. In view of the fact that the English refiner should not take advantage of the preference, and that there was consequently an extreme amount of protection under the old tariff, we were face to face with the question whether we should not take that public money and put it into the treasury instead of letting it go into the pockets of the sugar refiners. That was the whole question. In reply to hon. gentlemen opposite, I deny totally that the change has been the means of raising the price to the people at all, because that is governed by the refiners' prices.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do you not lower it? Suppose you reduced the duty on raw sugar to about one-quarter and then maintained the same relative advantage to the refiner, would not that have resulted in a reduction in the price of sugar?

Mr. PATERSON. We would reduce the refined duty in equal proportion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose you had reduced the duty on raw to ten cents per 100 pounds, and then, in order to maintain the relative proportion on the refined, you would have a duty on refined of 37½ cents, because you say the present protection is 27½ cents per 100 pounds. That would give the same protection and would have greatly reduced the cost of sugar to the consumer.

Mr. PATERSON. I admit the general proposition that if we reduce the duty on raw and proportionately reduce the duty on refined, we would reduce the price of sugar.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do you not do that?

Mr. PATERSON. That is a fair question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And it deserves a fair answer.

Mr. PATERSON. We have chosen to do it this way.

Mr. TAYLOR. So as to get $200,000 out of the sugar consumers?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So that instead of handing back to the consumers some part of the $12,000,000 or $15,000,000 surplus, you take $200,000 more out of them.

Mr. PATERSON. What does my hon. friend mean? I think I have heard him say time and again that we do not make ends meet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am referring to the boasts made session after session here that first there is a surplus of $8,000,000, and then $10,000,000, and then $15,000,000.

Mr. PATERSON. You admit that?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am taking the hon. gentleman's statement. Does he think it is not worthy of credence?

Mr. PATERSON. As we put it, absolutely worthy of credence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, taking that statement at its face value, why do you not remit to the consumer some part of that $12,000,000 or $15,000,000 surplus, because the minister agrees it could easily be done? He says he does not do it because he does not choose to. Surely he has some better reason.

Mr. PATERSON. If I might give an individual reason, it would be this: I am very anxious, not only that we should have sufficient revenue to defray all ordinary expenses, but that we should also, if it be possible without unduly burdening the people, have a surplus over and above that which we can devote to capital account, such as enlarging transportation facilities, without having recourse to borrowing and adding to the public debt, as hon. gentlemen opposite did when they were in power.

Mr. FOSTER. You will not live much longer without having to borrow, and borrow very largely.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) will have to borrow $200,000 less.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) makes things large when he wants them to be large and small when he wants them to be small. Does he not remember that at the last general election in Toronto he told the people of that city one night that he would only require $13,000,000 to build the Grand Trunk Pacific, and that one year's surplus would do it? Now, he has had two years' surpluses. He has therefore paid for the Grand Trunk Pacific and has $13,000,000 in his pockets; let him turn out his pockets and give the people a little.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) said he did not use the $350,000 I spoke of. Well, I now have the item. On November 29th, page 326 of 'Hansard,' he said:

> That does not affect the consumer because it does not touch the question of refined sugar. The increase is very slight, but as sugar is an article of enormous consumption in Canada, we shall receive about $300,000 additional revenue from this source, which will be almost enough to balance the loss to which I have called attention.

Those are the words of the Finance Minister in introducing the resolution, $300,000.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly, that is what I stated a moment ago.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The Minister of Customs placed it at $150,000 or $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. He is generally wrong.

Mr. FIELDING. I was speaking of the item as it stood, the Minister of Customs was giving an estimate of what would be the increased revenue as now proposed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. About one-third off.

Mr. FIELDING. About that. I fixed $300,000 and my hon. friend said $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The minister spoke of British grown sugar?

Mr. PATERSON. We speak of the British preferential tariff, and we take it——

Mr. COCKSHUTT. But it is not grown in Britain, it is a product of beet sugar imported from European countries.

Mr. FIELDING. Not under the prefertial tariff.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is not British grown, what he meant was British refined, but he used 'grown' three or four times.

Mr. PATERSON. If any refined sugar comes from any but British owned countries, if the hon. gentleman will follow he will find that the refiner has a protection of 69½ cents per hundred instead of 50 cents as before, and that is where he had his great savings in the last two or three years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. About how much refined sugar was imported last year?

Mr. FIELDING. About 28,000,000 pounds.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much of that was entitled to the preference?

Mr. FIELDING. 26,500,000 pounds.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Customs stated that the British refiner did not avail himself very largely of the preference?

Mr. FIELDING. Not to any large extent, proportionately that is not a large sum.

Mr. PATERSON. As against 400,000,000 pounds.

Mr. FIELDING. 420,000,000 pounds, That would not make quite 400,000,000 pounds refined but very near it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much refined sugar was imported ten years ago?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not those figures at hand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Roughly has it increased or decreased?

Mr. FIELDING. I think lately the importations of refined sugars have decreased. There is only about 5 per cent or 6 per cent of the refined sugar produced in Canada imported. The home industry has 94 per cent of the trade to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand the Minister of Customs was disappointed that the British refiner had not proved as active as he should in competition in this country?

Mr. FIELDING. As he might.

Mr. FOSTER. Or as he might in importing sugars into this country and consequently he has thought it better to diminish the amount of protection. Is that the principle on which the minister builds up his tariff? And if it is, has he received a promise from the British refiner of sugar that he will now live up to his opportunities and export more of his refined sugar to this country? For if he does not, where will this competition come from on which the minister relies to keep the prices down, so that the refiners will not be able to make out of the consumers of the country the extra amount that they are taxed on their raw sugars. Has he any promissory note from the British refiners that they will now send in more than they are sending?

Mr. PATERSON. We have the word of the British refiners' agent that they cannot send in refined sugar under the existing tariff. He has an advantage of nearly 5 cents a hundred pounds over the United States, as against the Canadian refiner. Whether he will be able to accomplish more I do not know. I am afraid he will not be able to do a great deal better, but he will have that advantage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I observe that the Finance Minister in his budget speech used this language:

> We reduced the duty on refined to $1, and left the duty on the raw 50 cents, so that the difference in favour of the refiner became 50 cents. It has been our idea, all through, to give the refiner about that much advantage. Of course, he has to take into account the loss in manufacture and the cost of manufacture.

Has there been any departure from that in the proposal which has been made?

Mr. FIELDING. The Canadian refiner had, rougly speaking, about 50 cents advantage—protection if you see fit to call it so—subject to the preference. The preferential tariff would be somewhat less. If you take the rate to-day on refined sugar under the general tariff at about 99—allowing for some importations of a lower grade —the duty is $1.24½. Now, if you take the average of raw sugar, I am not speaking of the quantity of raw sugar that will make one hundred pounds, when we speak of 50 cents we mean 50 cents as between raw and refined, roughly defined without reference to the particular strength. Taking the same rule on the raw sugar we find it pays on an average 77½ cents, so that the net result will be that the protection to the refiner under the general tariff of which I am now speaking would be about 47 cents, which would be pretty close to the original 50 cents. This in both cases will be subject to the preference. I think the figures quoted showing the advantage to the refiner have been somewhat extreme, although there has been some reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. 27½ cents the minister figured it.

Mr. FIELDING. That was by taking 100.

Mr. FOSTER. That is taking 100 per 100.

Mr. FIELDING. Not taking the average raw sugar.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. 84 cents on refined and 56½ cents on raw.

Mr. FIELDING. I am dealing with the general tariff, my hon. friend did not have reference to that.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole competition is with reference to that.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is going back to what we allowed on that some years ago. That was under the general tariff, that was made subject to the preference. The refiner received the advantage in the shape of lower raw material, but the refiner was hurt by the reduction on refined sugar. Under the general tariff the duty on refined is $1.24½ and on raw 77½ cents, making the advantage to the refiner under the general tariff, 47 cents. Practically, however, the competition today is coming from Great Britain and when you come to make your calculations on the basis of the preferential tariff, undoubtedly the advantage to the refiner is somewhat less. Still there is this striking fact, that whatever has been done only about 5 per cent or 6 per cent of the refined sugar used in Canada is imported.

Now, we do not aim to have a prohibitive tariff in any line. I think we might all agree that we wish to leave the bars down sufficiently to allow of a reasonable degree of competition. The conditions under which British refined sugar is obliged to be made for the purpose of the preference are rather difficult for the British manufacturer to comply with. He must make his refined sugar from raw sugar grown in a British country. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) stated that the British sugar that comes in under the preference is made from German raw sugar. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in that; such sugar does not come in under the preference—it must be British-grown. The result of it all is that the refiners in Great Britain do not appear to have equipped themselves to make particularly for the Canadian market. I agree with the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) that if they change their policy and manufacture from British-grown sugar, under conditions which will enable our inspectors to certify that it is British-grown and British-made sugar——

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Do I understand him to say that all British refined sugars are the product of raw cane sugar?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I did not say that. I stated that that which came in under the preferential tariff—and, of course, it is the degree of protection afforded the Canadian manufacturer under the preference that has been quoted—is British-grown sugar; that is, the raw sugar was produced in a British country and it was refined in Great Britain. If the British manufacturer makes sugar from the foreign product, as undoubtedly he does, he is not allowed to bring it into Canada under the preferential tariff. The difficulties in the way of bringing in British-grown sugar and so getting the advantage of the preference are such that they cannot bring in much, and consequently there is but little brought in to compete with the Canadian refiner. But if the refiner in Greenock confines his work to cane sugar, if he excludes the use of beet sugar and foreign grown sugar, and makes in his factory British-grown sugar, and especially for the Canadian market, he will be able to subject our refiners to much keener competition than in the past. And, if that should turn out to be the case, there would be need in the future for reconsideration of this tariff item. But, in view of the fact that ninety-four per cent of the refined sugar consumed in Canada to-day is manufactured in Canada, and only six per cent imported, it will be seen that there is not at the present very keen competition.

Mr. BRISTOL. To what extent does the proposed tariff benefit the British manufacturer of refined sugar over the old tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not touch that at all.

Mr. BRISTOL. I gathered from what the Minister of Customs said that the British manufacturer had a better chance under the present proposed tariff than before.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not because of this tariff, but because he has not hitherto equiped himself for compliance with the terms of our Act. This Act has been on our statute-book for some years, but a very small quantity of British-grown and British-manufactured sugar has been brought in.

Mr. BRISTOL. Is it not a benefit to the British manufacturer, that the Canadian manufacturer has to pay seven or eight cents more for his raw material?

Mr. PATERSON. He lost sight of that.

Mr. BRISTOL. Then, the present tariff benefits the British manufacturer, at the expense of the Canadian manufacturer to the extent of 8 cents per 100 pounds. That is what will be the result, because it is certain that the consumer will not get this sugar for any less. The question is, how much of this $300,000 will go to the British manufacturer, and how much to the customs revenue of his country?

Mr. FIELDING. That is another way to state it. But the consumer will not be called upon to pay a fraction of a cent more. It is true that the Canadian refiner is placed, to the extent of the difference, at a disadvantage as compared with the British refiner, and, to that extent, the British producer is in a better position to compete in the Canadian market.

Mr. BRISTOL. I understood from what the Minister of Customs stated that three years ago he had put the British manufacturer on a much better basis, a basis, which, as minister, he thought was almost unfair, and would induce competition, but, for reasons not indicated, the British manufacturer did not exert himself to do more business than 26,000,000 pounds out of a total consumption of 400,000,000 pounds. But, now the British manufacturer is getting a benefit of 7 cents per 100 pounds as against the Canadian manufacturer.

Mr. FIELDING. The Canadian manufacturer is getting that much less.

Mr. BRISTOL. He has to pay that much more for his raw product.

Mr. FIELDING. We have admitted that, to the extent of this increase, the home manufacturer is placed at a disadvantage. That is unquestionably the case. But any suggestion that the British or home manufacturer can get a higher price out of the consumer is strongly denied by the Minister of Customs, and I agree with his view.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. How does the minister ascertain whether the British refined sugar coming in under the preference is produced from foreign beets or from British West India cane sugar ?

Mr. FIELDING. In the first place our law requires that it shall be so, and the parties must make the usual customs declaration that the sugar imported complies with the conditions of the law. Besides, we sent an inspector to visit one of the factories in order that we might have an additional check.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) occupied a great time in trying to prove that the consumers of sugar will not pay any more for that product than they did before the introduction of this tariff. But the facts are all against the hon. gentleman. And the Minister of Finance has not said that the consumers would not pay more. I think the Minister of Customs should rise and admit that he was in error. The fact is that, as soon as this tariff was introduced, the price of sugar went up 10 cents per 100 pounds and it still remains there. The $200,000 will go into the treasury. It will not come out of the refiner, but it will come out of the consumer. The minister might just as well admit it and let the item pass.

Mr. FIELDING. No, he must not admit it, for if he did I should have to contradict him and we must not have any divisions in the cabinet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like the Minister of Customs to inform me if he can, how much refined sugar is produced in Great Britain which might, if imported into Canada receive the benefit of the British preference ?

Mr. BRISTOL.

Mr. PATERSON. I fancy that is what came into Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister thinks that all of it comes to Canada ?

Mr. PATERSON. I think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has no definite information on that ?

Mr. PATERSON. No. But their objection to get the benefit of the Canadian preference is that they work sugars which would not come in under the preference, and they do not want to clear out their refineries and run a special batch for Canada. The conditions have been such that, apparently, they have not felt in a position to take advantage of the preference. Lately the one in Greenock did undertake it, but I think even they have found it difficult to comply with the conditions, so that it is only once in a while they make the attempt.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, Mr. Chairman, it is not carried. There is a good old rule about making haste slowly. There is one more question I would like to ask the minister. I put the question some time ago, but the Minister of Customs was not able to give me the information on the subject. But I think the computation I refer to is one that we are entitled to. What I desire to know is what would be the equivalent ad valorem duty in the case of refined sugar and raw sugar, taking both the general tariff and the preferential tariff ?

Mr. PATERSON. What would be the difference——

Mr. FOSTER. The duty is a specific duty. The question is what ad valorem would this represent in each case ?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know the figures, suppose it was $3 in England and you had 50 cents per 100 pounds. That would be about 16 per cent, would it not ?

Mr. FOSTER. Where do you get your 50 cents a hundred ?

Mr. PATERSON. The refiner has 50 cents a hundred protection, he has 27½ advantage over raw sugar. Over other sugars that come in, other than cane sugars, he has 69½ cents ; add the 27½, and he has 97 cents, divide that by 2 and it gives him 48½ cents, just where he was before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that on the imported refined the duty amounts to about 29 per cent, that is, under the preferential tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. No one can tell without he knows the values.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Take the price of sugar as it stands to-day, the price of refined sugar cannot be a subject of much mystery.

Mr. FIELDING. What we need is accurate figures.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what the ministers ought to have when they come down with a tariff, which has now been three months before the House. We want to know what the specific duty translated into an ad valorem, means.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister will give us the information the next time the committee meets.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a difficult matter to answer, but we will make an effort.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is one other matter about which I would like a little explanation. In explaining this duty the minister put it on two grounds. In the first place, he explained that the original refiner had an advantage of about 50 cents. Then he explained the application of the preferential tariff to both raw and refined sugar, and of course that simply meant, I suppose, a reduction of about 17 cents from the protection which the refiner previously enjoyed, assuming that British-grown refined sugar could be produced in any great quantity in the British Isles to which the preference could apply. He said, as the Minister of Customs has just stated, that very little such sugar is produced and in that way the refiner got an ,advantage which was perhaps a little more than the government intended at the time they framed the tariff. The next point the minister made was that in framing this tariff he was entitled to take into consideration, and did take into consideration, what he called the double freight, that is, the freight from the British Isles across the Atlantic to Great Britain and the freight, from Britain back to Canada. I would like to know whether there is very much in that item. I understand that there is very little or nothing in it, although the minister evidently relied on it. Would he tell me what importance is to be attached to that supposed advantage to the Canadian refiners ?

Mr. PATERSON. I think there is a material advantage but I cannot give exact figures. The British refiner has to pay freight from the West Indies to Greenock, then he has to pay freight from Greenock to Montreal ; whereas the Montreal manufacturer can get a cargo of raw sugar direct from the British Isles. I think that would mean a good deal in some of our ports. But the hon. gentleman knows that on a combined ocean and rail carriage through freights are sometimes pretty low. I have understood that the refiners claim that if a through rate, boat and rail, was to be given from Greenock to Winnipeg, it would be about as low as you could get a rate from Halifax or Montreal to Winnipeg. In my judgment there must be a considerable difference in the freight.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is labour cheaper in Greenock than in Halifax or other points in Canada, and does not that overcome the difference in freight ?

Mr. PATERSON. It has not had that effect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have read a printed memorandum pointing out that the rate on raw sugar from the West Indies to Great Britain, and then the through rate from Great Britain to Winnipeg or points east, was of such a figure that really there was no advantage whatever to the Canadian refiner. I do not know whether the calculation is correct or not, and I am asking the government for information.

Mr. FIELDING. That was one item which entered into our consideration to some extent, though I think the main consideration is to be found in the very small imports in comparison with the very large consumption. When we are speaking of two freights we mean two ocean freights. The question of inland freights opens up many complications because figures which would be quite correct as to one point in Canada would be entirely incorrect as to another point. When I spoke of two freights I had reference to two ocean freights. The English manufacturer would have one ocean freight from the West Indies to Great Britain and another ocean freight from Great Britain to Canada. But once you get into the question of inland freights the figures will vary at different points in Canada. It would be one item in the calculation but not a very material one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not amount to much.

Mr. FIELDING. It is distributed especially on the long distances.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it not a fact that the freight from Greenock to Winnipeg is about half what it is from Montreal to Winnipeg ?

Mr. PATERSON. No, it is about the same.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know that you can ship freight from a point in Ontario to London for a good deal less than you can ship it to St. John, N.B.

Mr. FIELDING. It is time you got after the Railway Commission.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have a summary of the freight rates as presented by the sugar refiners and it completely nullifies the argument the hon. Minister of Finance made in presenting his budget when he spoke about the reduction in freights. It is as follows :

Freight—ocean and land.

On sugar carried from the West Indies to Great Britain, and thence to Winnipeg ; and the same to Montreal and thence to Winnipeg.

1st. Via Great Britain—summer—

	Cents, per 100 pounds.
Freight to Liverpool or Glasgow, average..	14
Freight from Liverpool or Glasgow to Winnipeg..	70
Total..	84
2nd. Via Montreal—summer—
Freight to Montreal, partly via St. Lawrence, partly via Atlantic ports..	17
Freight, rail to Winnipeg..	66½
Total..	83½
3rd. Via Great Britain—winter—
To England..	14
Thence to Winnipeg..	85
Total..	99
4th. Via Montreal—winter—
To Montreal..	21
Thence to Winnipeg..	82½
Total..	$1 03½

Summary.

Summer—
Via Great Britain to Winnipeg, costs..	84
Via Montreal to Winnipeg..	83½
One-half cent less via Montreal.
Winter—
Via Great Britain costs..	99
Via Montreal costs..	$1 03½
4½ cents more via Montreal.

That shows that the refiner of Canada is actually in an adverse position as far as freights are concerned in the winter season to the extent of 4½ cents and at an advantage to the extent of half a cent in summer time. That nullifies the argument that the Finances Minister made when he presented his budget speech in saying that there was an advantage in freight on sugars imported from the West Indies into Canada. Winnipeg controls not only the local trade but the trade of the west.

Mr. FIELDING. When I spoke of double freights I had reference to the ocean freights and I did not enter into the question of inland freights. If you push the argument further and fix a point west of Winnipeg you make it much stronger and if you fix a point east of Winnipeg you make it much weaker. Inland freights raise another question altogether.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These inland freights we have to take into consideration when we are endeavouring to come to a conclusion as to what advantage there is on the part of the English refiner as against the Canadian refiner.

Mr. FIELDING. We cannot affect the inland freight question in this tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Customs will answer my question as to what the specific duty translated into ad valorem would be for the different grades of raw and refined sugar ?

Mr. PATERSON. If I make a statement will you accept it ? You seem to be doubtful about my calculation.

Mr. FOSTER. We will exercise our best judgment upon it.

136. Molasses produced in the process of the manufacture of cane sugar from the juice of the cane without any admixture with any other ingredient, when imported direct from the place of production or its shipping port, in the original package in which it was placed at the point of production and not afterwards subjected to any process of treating or mixing, testing by the polariscope not less than thirty degrees, nor more than 56 degrees, under regulations prescribed by the Minister of Customs, per gallon, intermediate tariff, 2½ cents, 3 cents.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I see that you propose, after the word 'thirty' to insert the word 'five'.

Mr. FIELDING. The old rate was forty, we reduced it to thirty and upon depresentations that we had made it too low we have thought it advisable to make it thirty-five.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You add it together and divide by two.

Mr. FIELDING. In this case it is logical although I do not know whether it was in the other case.

Mr. FOSTER. You have spent two years to find out what it should be, you say it should be 40, then you say it should be 30, and then at the end of three months more you come down and say it would be 35.

Mr. PATERSON. Does the hon. gentleman remember the fun we used to have when he spoke about his clerical errors?

Mr. FOSTER. The temperature never went from 40 to 30.

Mr. FIELDING. This is not a clerical error.

137. Molasses, testing not more than 56 degrees by the polariscope, the produce of any British country entitled to the benefits of the British preferential tariff, when produced from sugar cane and imported direct by ship from the country of production, or from any British country, in the original package in which it was placed at the point of production, and not afterwards subjected to any process of treating or mixing, free.

Provided, however, that the said molasses may be transferred in bond under excise regulations for purposes of distillation.

New item 137a. Molasses of cane, testing under 35 degrees by polariscope when imported for use exclusively in the manufacture of compressed food for live stock, free.

Mr. FIELDING. This was free before. It is a very low grade of molasses which is used for the manufacture of cattle feed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do you require a new item ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was left out before and it fell under a general clause. On further consideration we thought that the encouragement of that class of material for the manufacture of cattle feed was desirable.

Mr. FIELDING. A salutary provision.

Mr. FOSTER. A sanitary provision ?

139. Glucose or grape sugar, glucose syrup and corn syrup, or any syrups containing an admixture thereof, per one hundred pounds, 35 cents, 45 cents, 50 cents.

Proposed amendment 139. Strike out the several rates of duty and insert the following rates instead thereof. British preferential tariff rate, 40 cents ; intermediate tariff rate, 55 cents, general tariff rate, 62½ cents.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason for all this change ?

Mr. PATERSON. We thought we had it a little too high.

Mr. FOSTER. But you are making it higher.

Mr. PATERSON. It was 75 before and we brought it down to 50 ; now we make it 62½.

Mr. FOSTER. Did you get at that by adding them together, and dividing by two?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That seems to be the principle upon which the whole tariff was framed. How much does the ad valorem amount to.

Mr. PATERSON. Between two and two and a half.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where is it imported from ?

Mr. PATERSON. The United States generally, but it is made in Canada.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is made at Cardinal. Why was it reduced from 75 to 50 ?

Mr. PATERSON. We thought it a little high.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why did you think it high ; are there not articles in the tariff higher than that ?

Mr. PATERSON. I think not.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. How much less is the duty as proposed now, than under the previous tariff ?

Mr. PATERSON. It is 12½ per 100 pounds less than before.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have a long statement which was sent to me pointing out that the duty as proposed in the original resolution, was absolutely too low to enable the industry to live. I quite agree with the proposal made by the government to increase the duty now, and if they made it higher still I would vote for it.

141. Sugar candy and confectionery of all kinds, including sweetened gums, candied peel, candied pop-corn, candied fruits, candied nuts, flavouring powders, custard powders, jelly powders, sweetmeats, sweetened breads, cakes, pies, puddings and all other confections containing sugar, 22½ per cent, 32½ per cent, 35 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. There was an ad-valorem and specific before, and we dropped the specific.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister think this gives a fair protection for that business ?

Mr. FIELDING. We think so.

Mr. FOSTER. It is contended that this is pretty hard on the confectioners.

Mr. PATERSON. The competition from Great Britain will be pretty close, but they can stand it I think.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a pretty widely distributed industry, and it is a luxury rather than a necessity.

167. Malt and malt flour, upon entry for warehouse subject to excise regulations, per one hundred pounds, 40 cents, 40 cents, 40 cents.

Mr. FIELDING. In the old tariff malt flour was included in this item as was also all flour containing any proportion of malt. The new duty of 45 cents per 100 is about five cents per 100 higher than the old malt duty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did you make this change ?

Mr. PATERSON. It is a complicated question. The malt flour was susceptible of being turned into spirit, and the question of excise and customs came in. Malt flour is used by bakers, and the old rate on it made it exceedingly high. We had to try to keep that duty down, and to so divide the item that the article could not be used for any purpose in contravention of the Inland Revenue Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the duty been increased on acetone ?

Mr. PATERSON. There is no change.

Mr. FIELDING. It was not specifically mentioned in the old tariff, and there was dispute as to how it should be classified and sometimes it was classified under the 'unenumerated.' It is now included in a special item.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a statement sent to me which says :

Acetone was dutiable at 20 per cent under the unenumerated ; it has been raised from 20 to 30 per cent, which is an increase of 50 per cent. About fourteen tons of acetone is imported during the year. It is used for absorbent purposes; it is not made in this country except of late by the Standard Chemical Company, and the duty has been raised in order to give a fillip to the work of that company.

The statement further is, that it is impossible to get pure acetone from this company; that my correspondent has not been able to get a satisfactory article; that he has to get it from the United States as before, and that the heavy increased duty will practically wipe out his business. Has the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) had representations made to him in that case? It is pretty rough to raise the duty and so bear hard upon those who have been importing the article for use in this country, when the only company in Canada which pretends to make it does not make an article that is fit for use.

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed that the article is made at two places in Canada—one in Ontario and one in Quebec. There has been some difficulty in properly classifying it. At one time it was treated as a spirit and rated accordingly. In other cases it was treated as unenumerated at 20 per cent, and no doubt the gentleman referred to was getting it in at that rate. On the other hand, for that class of article, the by-product of wood alcohol, 30 per cent can hardly be said to be excessive.

Mr. FOSTER. It is an increase which, according to the representations made to me, will bear very hardly on those who are importing and carrying on their industry by means of that importation. Here is what my correspondent writes me:

With a view to assist in developing Canadian manufactuers, I wrote to the different chemical works during the past summer for prices and samples of pure acetone. Only one concern apparently, the Standard Chemical Company of Canada, were attempting to manufacture it, and they furnished samples, which, on being tested, were found imperfect and useless for our trade, namely, the absorption of acetylene gas for storage purposes in railway car and other lighting. Pure acetone has the property of absorbing twenty-five times its own bulk of acetylene gas, while the imperfect Canadian article submitted to us could not make the absorption, and the impurities in it involved a dangerous compound in connection with acetylene gas. To the best of my knowledge, the acetone imported into Canada is for the manufacture of chloroform and other anaesthetic compounds, and the relative proportion of importations for those purposes is practically in pounds while our importations are in tons.

Mr. PATERSON. That industry, under the changes which are taking place, will have difficulty both here and in the United States.

170. Freight rates for railways and telegraph rates and time tables of railways outside of Canada, bound in book or pamphlet form, 15 per cent, 22½ per cent, 25 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. That is intended to include the time-tables of foreign railways distributed, which can hardly be regarded as advertisements, but rather as information to the public. We give them the same rates as the other items mentioned.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a communication which was sent me regarding these time-tables. I understand they came in heretofore free.

Mr. FIELDING. No; the complaint was that, not being particularly mentioned, they were classified under another item, which made them dutiable at 15 cents per pound as advertising matter. We have put them in at a moderate rate, and I think that those concerned will be reasonably satisfied.

Mr. TAYLOR. Here is the letter I have received:

St. John, New Brunswick, February 18, 1907.
To hotel proprietors and managers—

Dear Sirs,—We regret to have to advise you that, owing to increasing expenditure and no corresponding increase in revenue, we shall be compelled to withdraw our cases and discontinue the distribution of railway and steamship time tables unless the government revise the duties on the time tables of foreign lines.

The local railways and steamship lines cannot afford to pay us sufficient to maintain our service, and we have to depend largely upon the patronage of foreign lines, upon whose time tables Canada practically charges 100 per cent. As a comparison we may state that the United States duty is 20 per cent on railway time tables and Canadian duty is 20 per cent of freight tariffs, and, at fifteen cents per pound, practically 100 per cent on time tables.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the complaint was with regard to the old rating, and most of the parties will be satisfied with this.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was there any change in the duty on sago flour?

Mr. FIELDING. We had that up this afternoon. We reduced the duty.

Mr. PORTER. I desire to call attention to items 183 and 184. When going through the tariff before, I took occasion to point out an apparent anomaly existing in the working out of the tariff in this respect, that magazines in completed book form came in from the United States free of duty, whereas the same material in an unbound and unfinished form, and omitting the American advertisements that are usually inserted in the American completed magazines, were, under the present tariff, obliged to pay 25 per cent. Upon calling attention to this, the hon. minister asked me to produce a case of that kind, or some evidence of it. I have now obtained a sample of two books that I referred to then. Here is one, the October number of a magazine called the 'West End Magazine.' That magazine, in the first sixteen pages, contains advertisements and cuts of celebrities, and the latter eight or ten pages contain American advertisements. On the other hand, I have here an uncompleted magazine. All the articles appearing in the completed book appear in this—the same matter, with the exception of the American advertisements and the cuts I have been referring to. This material is published in large numbers by a syndicate in the United States, and they sell it to the different publishers. The matter came to my attention in this way. Some gentlemen in Ottawa desired to start a publication to be called 'The Ottawa Magazine,' and were intending to start that industry in this city, procuring the material that would be printed in the book, with the exception of the advertisements, from the syndicate in the United States. They did bring in some of that material for the purpose of starting it, and found that they had to pay 25 per cent duty. Of course, that put an end to the enterprise. It seems very strange that the completed article, containing the American advertisements, cuts and the same reading material, should be admitted into Canada free of duty, when the article in its incomplete state, being completed here in Canada and about one-third to one-half of the expense of publication put upon it by Canadian labour, should be compelled to pay 25 per cent duty. That case exists. I have the two books here, and I would be very glad to have the minister look at them.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will send over the books I will refer them to the Customs Department and I think probably by a proper interpretation of the customs law the anomaly can be remedied.

Mr. PORTER. When this material was brought in before and an application was made to the Customs Department to have it released, the importer was told that it was unclassified and that is why he had to pay 25 per cent duty.

Mr. PATERSON. We will have the Board of Customs take the question up and give a decision.

219a (new item). Non-alcoholic liquid preparations for disinfecting, dipping or spraying, n.o.p., British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a special item intended to make a lower rate for these articles when used for disinfecting, spraying, &c.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. I do not know whether item 217 has been disposed of or not but I have been requested to ask the government if it is possible to lower the duty on sulphuric acid. There is a large firm in my riding interested in this and they claim that there has been a very strong combine and that they have very much increased the price of late. They claim to use about 600,000 pounds per annum, probably half the total importation of this article. I do not know whether there are manufacturers of this particular commodity in Canada, but if all of the acid used is imported I think this firm would be fairly entitled to some consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. The article is made in Canada in several places and I do not recollect any representations to the effect that the duty is excessive or along the lines of my hon. friend's suggestion. If it is a home industry and the duty is not excessive I do not see why there should be any change.

Mr. NORTHRUP. In the county of Hastings $500,000 has been spent on one sulphuric acid establishment and nearly the same amount on another.

244. White lead ground in oil, 30 per cent, 35 per cent, 37½ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. This is one of the items affected by the change which we made on flaxseed and it is proposed to make the rates 30 per cent, 35 per cent, 37½ per cent. I mentioned that there was a group of items the duties on which would be affected by the increased duty on flaxseed. These items are 244, white lead ground in oil, 247, liquid fillers; 249, varnishes, lacquers, &c., and an item further on in relation to linoleum, oil cloth, &c. These are all items in which oil is concerned and the increase in the duty on flaxseed necessitates an increased duty on the articles in which linseed oil is used.

Mr. BLAIN. Will that increase the price to the consumer?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, this is one of the cases where I think we will have to admit that it will increase the price to the consumer.

247. Liquid fillers, &c., 20 per cent, 27½ per cent, 30 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. What difference will this increase make?

Mr. PATERSON. An increase of five cents a gallon.

Mr. FOSTER. And all people who use those paints and varnishes all through the country will have to pay five cents a gallon more for what they use?

Mr. PATERSON. Well I guess so.

Mr. LAKE. How much additional revenue does the minister expect to get from the various oil items?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not looked upon them as likely to give us much revenue, but they seem to be the necessary consequence of the re-adjustment as to flax seed.

Mr. LAKE. And there is no calculation as to how much revenue they will yield?

Mr. FIELDING. No. I would not like to rely upon them yielding much additional revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. Could not the duty on flax seed be increased and the duty on the finished article be kept as it was, as in the case of sugar? What is the trouble now?

Mr. PATERSON. If the paint manufacturer had as much protection as the sugar refiner, it could be done.

Mr. FOSTER. He has more.

Mr. PATERSON. Perhaps, by percentage, but not in bulk.

Mr. FOSTER. I venture to say that if you work out the figures, you will find that the sugar refiner has not more than 20 per cent ad valorem, but if you will work out the duties on oil, you will find that the protection is a great deal more. Now, why, in the name of suffering humanity, which needs to have its carriages varnished, its doors painted, and its woodwork preserved—why, I say, cannot the minister arrange the duty on the raw material and keep it where it is on the manufactured article, as in the case of sugar? Just because he does not want to?—is that the underlying principle?

Mr. FIELDING. Under the scale of duties very little sugar was coming in, but a considerable amount of linseed oil was coming in. That is the true test as to whether there is much protection or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why have specific and ad valorem duties on this? This strikes the carriage manufacturers of the country pretty hard for they use large quantities of varnish.

258. Linseed or flaxseed oil, raw or boiled, per one hundred pounds, preferential, 80 cents; intermediate, $1.10; general, $1.20.

Mr. FIELDING. I propose to amend that so as to make it read British preference, $1.25, intermediate, $1.55 and general tariff, $1.65. This is the immediate result of the flaxseed readjustment.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. What is the change?

Mr. PATERSON. It is forty-five cents per one hundred pounds.

Mr. KEMP. About 50 per cent advance.

Mr. FIELDING. We had a careful calculation made as to what increase of duties would be necessary to correspond with the duties on flaxseed, with the results here indicated.

Mr. FOSTER. How many linseed oil factories are there in Canada?

Mr. PATERSON. There are a good many flaxseed mills, but of oil mills there are not so many. Some of them have shut down. There is one in Baden, I think, and one or two in Montreal. There are not many.

Mr. FOSTER. There are not many going—the minister thinks that they are nearly all shut up?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, some of them.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister puts on this duty to set these industries going?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Why then?

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman will see that they could not have a duty of 10 cents per bushel on linseed with the old duty on oil, for that would close all the oil mills, and, if the oil mills were closed the farmer growing the flaxseed would be in no better position than at present. If you are going to benefit the farmer, you must not close the oil mills.

Mr. FOSTER. So, you make every man who uses linseed oil go down in his pocket to help a few flax mills. That is a doctrine that used to be greatly reprobated by hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. PATERSON. Not to help the flax mills, but to help the farmers.

Mr. FOSTER. How many?

Mr. PATERSON. I guess there are a good many.

Mr. LAKE. How much flaxseed was imported last year, and how much oil?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. And while the minister is turning that up, I would like to ask how many pounds of flaxseed are required to make one hundred pounds of oil, so that we may get at the basis of these things. It strikes me that a good deal more than 10 cents per bushel is represented by this tax on oil. I understand that a gallon of linseed oil weighs nine pounds. The increase of half a cent per pound will equal 4½ cents for a gallon of oil. At 50 cents a gallon, which is a fair price for the import oil, this would represent 10 per cent advance, on every gallon of raw and boiled linseed oil used. The increase on the flax required for the oil, I should judge, would not make it necessary to have anything like this increased rate of duty on the oil. My argument may be a little weak, because I do not know how many pounds of flax are required for a gallon of oil.

Mr. PATERSON. Answering first the question of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), the importations last year of flaxseed out of which linseed oil is manufactured were 76,949,206 pounds, valued at $1,647,194. The imports of linseed oil entered for consumption during the last fiscal year were 1,170,012 gallons, valued at $438,937.

Mr. LAKE. What is the duty paid on the oil?

Mr. PATERSON. The duty was 25 per cent on the general and 16⅔ per cent under the preference. By far the greater part of it came from Great Britain. So that the duty would be about one-sixth the value of the imports, or, say about $70,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, what will the duty be under this? A little over fifty per cent more?

Mr. PATERSON. The commissioner says about 25 per cent.

Mr. LAKE. I would point out to the minister that these changes in oils and paints have been rather sprung upon the House and there has been no opportunity for the country to have its say in the matter. These duties are going to have a very far-reaching effect upon the country and it would be much better if the country had known that such proposals were going to be rushed through.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Will the minister tell me now how many pounds of flaxseed are required for a gallon of oil.

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed that a bushel of flax, which weighs 56 pounds, produces 17 pounds of oil.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. And the oil is nine pounds to the gallon, I believe?

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed 9·35 pounds.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It used to be 9 pounds. I was familiar with this item at one time. I wanted to get at what this duty was going to be per gallon. The minister says that 17 pounds of oil are produced from 56 pounds of flaxseed. That is, a little over three times the weight of seed is required to make 100 pounds of the oil. That is to be accurate, it will take 325 pounds of flax-seed to make 100 pounds of oil. In that case, the duty is not advanced more upon the oil than upon the flaxseed. I think that has been the idea of the minister. Is the advance in the price of oil more than is justified by the advance in flax-seed itself?

Mr. FIELDING. If there is any difference, it is that the increase has hardly been as much. It has been figured out very closely, and the difference has not been more than that which is required by the flaxseed duty, if anything it is a little less.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The expectation is that the increased duty on flaxseed is going to enlarge the production of the home grown article.

Mr. FIELDING. It is so represented to us by a number of gentlemen representing a group of counties in Ontario, and similar representations have been made to us as respects the west. Flaxseed is grown in a portion of our western country and in four or five counties in Ontario.

Mr. LAKE. What does the ad valorem duty on the oil amount to?

Mr. FIELDING. The preferential rate will work out about 25 per cent, I am informed.

Amend item 281, so as to read—

281. Fire brick of a class or kind not made in Canada, British preferential tariff rate, free; intermediate tariff rate, 5 per cent; general tariff rate, 5 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. We had made fire brick free from Great Britain, with a small duty from other countries; but on further consideration we came to the conclusion that they might as well be made free from all countries, as there is a considerable portion of this country which cannot get them from Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What becomes of the portion of the item not covered by that? Was it fire brick of a class or kind not made in Canada before?

Mr. FIELDING. It was originally fire brick, but we have defined it to mean of a class or kind not made in Canada. Anything of a different class would come in under item 282 as a manufacture of clay or cement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much of it comes in?

Mr. FIELDING. Of fire brick and stove lining the imports were $51,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The effect of items 281 and 282 is that you increase the duty on all such descriptions of fire brick as are made in Canada, that is the net result.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. It can scarcely be said that there are any fire brick, properly so-called, made in Canada, I think there are none.

Mr. FIELDING. They are made in Nova Scotia.

300. Crucibles, clay or plumbago, free, free, free.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some one has mentioned to me that this item should include sand crucibles.

Mr. PATERSON. I think we had representations on nearly every thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My communication reads :

This does not include sand crucibles, which are used in many industries, especially mining, and should be included along with those mentioned.

Mr. FIELDING. We will consent that item 300 be reconsidered, and the word 'sand' be included.

307. Marble and granite, n.o.p., and all manufactures of marble or granite, n.o.p., 30 per cent, 32½ per cent, 35 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. You still tax a man after he is dead.

Mr. PATERSON. No, you do not tax that man.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember Sir Richard used to have a succession of long sentences, or one long sentence, in which he commenced with the babe reclining on its mother's bosom, or earlier, and carried out the history of child until it was laid away, a whitehaired man or woman in the grave. He enumerated every article used from the begining to the end and declared that the Conservative government commenced taxing at the first end of youth and never gave over until the aged person was laid away in the grave. Here we have another stone laid upon the grave with an added duty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much increase is there on this tombstone item ?

Mr. FOSTER. Some of us are getting interested in this matter. I think we had better discuss it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any increase in it ?

Mr. PATERSON. The competition is very keen from Aberdeen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much of an increase is there ?

Mr. PATERSON. It was 35 per cent less one-third and it is now made 30 per cent. It is no higher under the general tariff.

Mr. MILLER. This is a very grave question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Nothing comes in under the general tariff ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, marble would come in and granite comes from Aberdeen. It is a large industry in Charlotte county and competition is very keen. The preferential is advanced but the general is not.

Mr. CLEMENTS. From where do we get the greatest competition ?

Mr. PATERSON. In granite we get it from Scotland.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. What is the new duty ?

Mr. FIELDING. 30 per cent from Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister of Trade and Commerce has consented, I suppose.

Mr. FIELDING. Without prejudice.

309. Roofing slate, 15 per cent, 22½ per cent, 25 per cent.

Amended item. Per square of one hundred feet, 50 cents, 70 cents, 75 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the effect of that? You had a general rate before.

Mr. FIELDING. Its effect is to lower the rate on the good class of slate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On the poorer class of slate it is somewhat higher ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the object of that? Is it that you do not want to encourage the poor class of slate ?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. There is a slate quarry in Quebec that turns out a considerable quantity of a low class of slate. The bulk of the slate that is brought into Canada is brought in at $4.50 per square. It is proposed to reduce it to 75 cents per square instead of 25 per cent thus reducing it by 37½ cents per square.

Mr. FOSTER. I have several communications in reference to that matter and the objection which has been taken in this letter which I hold in my hand seems to be partly met by the change. It goes on to say :

The duty on roofing slate formerly was 25 per cent ad valorem, not to exceed 75 cents per square, the object being to encourage the use of a high grade slate as no matter what the cost at the quarries the duties would not exceed 75 cents per square. The present government commissioners have made the tariff on all kinds of roofing slate 25 per cent ad valorem. This again will tend to encourage the use of No. 2 quality or low priced slate and discourage the importation of the No. 1 grades.

As I understand this change meets that difficulty.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it ought to have been made. Whether it meets all that these gentlemen require or not, I do not know, but I see that it goes along the line of meeting the objection they have made. I thought it was a very good objection.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I think they are perfectly satisfied.

316a (new item). Incandescent lamp bulbs for use in the manufacture of incandescent lamps, and mantel stocking for gas light, 5 per cent, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the object of this new item ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was classified with manufactures of glass generally. At one time we thought these goods would be made in Canada, in fact it was so represented to us, but on further examination we found that they are not made in Canada. They have to be largely imported by the manufacturers of electric light apparatus. We want to insert the words 'glass tubing'. That is a small item which is almost invisible in the electric light bulb that we are familiar with. It is not made in Canada.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Are these duties made retroactive ? Suppose the hon. minister reduces duties since the budget came down does he refund the amount which has been paid up to the present time ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a clause which will come later which lays down the general rule that whenever goods have been actually imported and we have increased the rates of duty by these recent changes we will not disturb the existing entry, but when we reduce the duty we will give them the benefit. We give the importer at the custom house the benefit on both sides.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This is a reduction ?

Mr. FIELDING. In this case it is a reduction. If any goods have been brought in in the meantime they will get the benefit of the reduction.

326. Glass demijohns for carboys, bottles, decanters, flasks, files, glass jars and glass balls, lamp chimneys, glass shades or globes ; cut, pressed ware, decorated or not ; blown glass table ware and manufactures of glass, n.o.p., 20 per cent, 30 per cent, 32½ per cent.

Proposed amendment :

Strike out the words 'and manufactures of glass, n.o.p.,' and instead thereof insert the words 'and other cut glass ware.'

Mr. FIELDING. That is a mere change in the wording for greater clearness.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it only a change in the wording ?

Mr. PATERSON. In the classification.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Manufactures of glass would include some articles that would not be included in other cut glass ware ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What becomes of the other ?

Mr. PATERSON. There is a new item, 326a, which follows.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. 326a is as follows :

Articles of glass, not plate or sheet, designed to be cut or mounted, and manufactures of glass, n.o.p., 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 22½ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. That means that partially manufactured glass brought into Canada for the purpose of being further manufactured shall have a lower rate.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister propose to make any changes in items 320, 321 and 322, which refer to plate glass ?

Mr. FIELDING. We are dealing with these in the drawbacks which we will consider later. I think we will to some extent meet the case the hon. gentleman has in mind.

Mr. FOSTER. I have had pretty extended representations with reference to that matter.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we have had the same representations, and while we may not fully meet them, we purpose dealing with them in part at all events, in the matter of drawbacks.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall have my papers with me when we come to discuss these items.

Works of art in bronze, cast from models made in Canada and designed by sculptors domiciled therein, under regulations by the Minister of Customs, free, free, free.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a new item which never was in the tariff before. Formerly they came in under unenumerated, or perhaps as manufactures of the metal of which they happened to be made. The idea is to give some encouragement to our native artists, so that when they make designs in Canada which have to be sent abroad to be cast, the castings may come back free of duty. It is done at the suggestion of some of our artists. Probably there will only be a few cases, but in each case it may be of importance to some Canadian artist.

349. Brass in bars and rods, in coil or otherwise, not less than six feet in length, and brass in strips, sheets or plates, not polished, planished or coated, 5 per cent, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent.

356. Nickel, nickel silver and German silver, in bars and rods, in coil or otherwise, not less than six feet in length, and also in strips, sheets or plates, 5 per cent, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent.

Mr. PORTER. Has any change been made in these items ?

Mr. PATERSON. There is no change.

Mr. PORTER. I have had considerable correspondence in connection with this matter from different Canadian manufacturers, who have represented to me that the materials mentioned in these two items are not manufactured in Canada. For instance, I might mention the lock industry at Belleville and Peterborough. The metal comes in sheets, and the form of the lock is stamped out of the sheet. The remainder of the sheet, which cannot be stamped out, has to be returned to be re-rolled ; it comes back to Canada, it keeps going backwards and forwards and every time it enters it has to pay duty. It is imported to carry on a manufactory here, and it is not made in Canada. It seems to me that this article, not being produced in Canada, ought to be admitted free, for the same reason as the minister gave for the free admission of certain parts of the bulbs of incandescent lights, which are not manufactured in Canada but are used in manufacturing here. These brass and nickel sheets ought to be admitted free, or they ought to be dealt with by rebate or drawback.

Mr. PATERSON. We understand that this material is made in Canada.

Mr. PORTER. I have a resolution passed by a large number of the manufacturers : the Belleville Hardware Company, the Canadian Gasoline Launch Company, the Dominion Wire Manufacturing Company, the Robert Mitchell Company, the Ontario Lantern and Lamp Company, and others, representing that the brass and nickel sheet is not produced in Canada, but is used by these various industries. I know that it is used in the lockworks in Belleville and they say they cannot procure it in Canada. They only use a small portion of the imported article and send the refuse back to be re-rolled when they import it again, so that they have to pay duty on that raw material several times before it is completely used up. That being the case the duty is certainly very high. The duty should not be charged more than once.

Mr. PATERSON. That is where they stamp out shapes as in the case of spoons.

Mr. PORTER. Or where they stamp out the face of a lock out of brass or nickel.

Mr. PATERSON. As far as spoons are concerned, we deal with that by way of drawback.

Mr. PORTER. These parties ask that the matter be dealt with in one of three ways :

(a) That the articles covered by these clauses be placed on the free list until such time as they shall be manufactured in Canada in such quantities and of such quality as shall meet the demands of the Canadian market ; or

(b) That the duty on brass and German silver goods named in these clauses when used by the Canadian manufacturer, be rebated 95 per cent ; or

(c) That the duty in the clauses aforesaid be cancelled, and in its place a bounty of an equal amount be granted on such goods, when manufactured in Canada.

They ask that the matter be dealt with in one of these three forms.

Mr. PATERSON. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) proposes to give 65 per cent drawback in the case of nickel and German silver waste sent back to the United States and imported again to be used in spoons and articles of that kind.

Mr. PORTER. The same drawback should apply to lock works.

Mr. FIELDING. Do they not use chiefly brass ?

Mr. PORTER. They use nickel as well.

Mr. FIELDING. We make a distinction between brass and German silver. There is a brass factory in Canada now.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that it is practically out of existence.

Mr. FIELDING. It was suspended for a while, but they represent that they are going to resume business.

Mr. TAYLOR. The large industries which use any quantity of these brass rods say they cannot get a supply in Canada and have to import them.

Mr. PATERSON. There was a large amount of capital invested in that factory when the goods were on the free list, and they are only getting 10 per cent under the general tariff now. The other manufacturers ought to be willing that they should get some share of protection.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are if they would supply the trade.

Mr. PATERSON. They said they could not do it under an absolutely free tariff. They wanted 20 per cent but said they would try and get along with 10 per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR. As soon as they are able to supply the demands of the trade, every manufacturer will be willing that they should get the benefit of the duty, but they will not take an order.

Mr. PATERSON. That is not the representation made to us.

Mr. PORTER. If it is fair that a drawback should be given when the raw material is used in stamping out spoons or forks or things of that kind, it is just as fair that a drawback should be given when the raw material is used in stamping out locks.

Mr. FIELDING. Do they use German silver to a large extent in manufacturing locks ?

Mr. PORTER. I am told they do.

Mr. FIELDING. We do not propose to grant drawbacks on brass, but propose to grant drawbacks in certain cases when German silver is used, but I imagine that would be little used by the concern the hon. member speaks of because brass is the article they chiefly use.

Mr. PORTER. The representation made to me is that brass is chiefly used, but they do use German silver as well in making locks. For instance, the locks furnished the Hotel Alexandria in Winnipeg were made out of German silver. And the firm in Belleville write to me that while the greater number of their locks are made from brass, they do get orders and make locks from the German silver as well. Any drawback granted the Niagara firm which stamps out spoons and forks ought to be granted the Belleville and Peterborough people who are stamping out locks.

Mr. PATERSON. The conditions may not be alike. I do not know what the locks are to which my hon. friend refers. I take it they are not mortice locks, encased in wood, for they would not be made out of nickel. Would there be anything like the loss in cutting out a square of metal for a lock as there would in the case of a spoon ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What difference would it make ?

Mr. PATERSON. There would be much greater waste in the case of a spoon. In the case of a lock the waste would be very little. In the spoon you have the narrow handle, but in the case of a lock you take a square or an oblong piece and there is very little waste.

Mr. PORTER. It is not simply the face of the lock, the square part, that is stamped out of this sheet. The handle is stamped out as well and the round part, and it is only the round part that is used. All the intermediate spaces are waste and go back to be re-rolled. So that the raw material may be sent back and imported again three times before it is entirely used up, and each time it is imported it pays a duty.

Mr. PATERSON. I hope my hon. friend will not forget to bring this question up when we reach the item.

Mr. FOSTER. Why take the cumbersome system of drawbacks with reference to an article which is not made in Canada at all ?

Mr. PATERSON. It is made.

Mr. FOSTER. The people who carry on a large industry in connection with it, say they have to import it. The Niagara concern employ 160 people most of whom are married and have families. It is a large industry, its raw material is nickel silver in rods, bars and strips. These have hitherto always been admitted free of duty. They are not supplied in this country and are the raw material for other manufactures. If this raw material is not made in Canada why change it from the free to the dutiable list ? This concern says that if the law is enforced it will put them out of business. Surely the government does not propose to do that. They use 220,000 pounds of nickel silver in sheets every year, amounting to a value of about $60,000. It is a large industry and a very nice industry as I know from having visited it. The same objection they made has been made by my hon. friend that the scrap is not used in this country, it has to go back into the United States, then it is rearranged into form and comes back to Canada and pays duty the second time and so on until it is used up. I do not see why drawbacks should be resorted to in a case of this kind where the free admission answers all purposes.

Mr. PORTER. This resolution seems to put the matter very concisely. It is a resolution passed by all these manufacturers, whose names I have already given. Speaking in regard to these two items, they say :

1. We do not object to the principle underlying the imposition of the duties levied on the articles covered by the clauses as above referred to.

2. While thus approving of the principle, we would respectfully ask you to consider the fact that none of the goods named in these clauses are, at present, made in Canada.

These manufacturers who use the articles say they are not made in Canada.

3. That the industries using these goods as raw material are now, and will be, compelled to import them ; at least for months, if not for years to come, and pay the duty imposed thereon.

4. The cost of the finished products of the manufacturers is thereby increased to this extent.

5. That there is not in the new tariff any corresponding increase in the duty upon such finished brass and other goods to offset the duty on the raw material.

6. That for these reasons the tariff, as now enforced, is injurious to our interests as manufacturers, while it fails to benefit any other industry or industries already established in Canada.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In support of what has been said by my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter), an automobile manufacturing concern that has spent a large amount in Chatham in equipping a plant that will do credit to any Canadian city, claim that it is not possible to get the class of goods they require in Canada at all. I took it up with the minister before, and they tell me on my last visit to Chatham that it is not possible to get them.

Mr. PATERSON. Unfortunately, in many cases when manufacturers appear before us they represent that the goods they make are equal to any that can be produced, but when some other manufacturer using this finished article as his raw material comes up he says he will be very glad to use the product of the other factory, but that they do not make it and he cannot use it. That is not very encouraging ; and if you believe all that was said, you would think that we produced hardly anything in Canada that is of any use. You have sometimes to take these things with a little discount, because, no doubt, if they could get this raw material cheaper, it would be an advantage to them, and I suppose all these people would be benefited if the nickel works were stamped out. It may be a question whether it should be in existence. For my part, I do not think it wise to bring an industry into existence that cannot live with a moderate rate of duty. But when you have an industry started in the face of the free competition, and there is a large amount of money invested in it, and then they come and say that they think they could run it in the face of foreign competition, but that the pressure is very great and that if given 20 per cent they could go on; then we may say: That is a big jump; we will give you 10 per cent. Then we see that the man who uses their raw material has 30 per cent protection, and he surely will be able to stand 10 per cent on the raw material, because he has still a 20 per cent protection over what he pays on his raw material, and then he has the full 30 per cent on the labour that goes into the production of the article. It seems reasonable when an industry is in existence that the other manufacturers ought not to begrudge that amount. The reason for the drawback is that there is a hardship upon them if they have to send it back and forth, and that is the reason that this 65 per cent of drawback is proposed. If it were not for the waste there would not be the proposition for the drawback.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. In support of the argument of my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter) in regard to admitting nickel blanks for locks, let me say that nickel is used to a considerable extent in locks and when the minister turns it to door locks only that does not cover the point. There are perhaps fifty other kinds of locks—desk locks, piano locks, dog collar locks, and all those locks for small furniture. That is where nickel comes in. Then I presume that the nickel door knobs are part of the locks, and that is a growing industry. These factors are all to be taken into consideration on this item—all the kinds of locks manufactured from these blanks; and I believe the document read by my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter) includes that class of goods, and that he is quite right in sticking to the contention that if brass is to be allowed in for these manufactures and nickel for some other lines, it should be admitted in the same way.

Mr. PORTER. If I understood the minister, the issue is reduced to this. If the raw material is produced in Canada, then I understood him to insist on a duty. If the raw material is not produced in Canada, then he agrees the duty should not be there.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a rather dangerous doctrine. Who is demanding the inquiry?

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. PORTER. These manufacturers. It then comes to a question of veracity, or a matter of evidence, as to whether this raw material is or is not produced in Canada. On the previous discussion the minister undertook to ascertain for a fact whether that raw material is produced in Canada in anything like sufficient quantities to satisfy the trade, if it is it ought to be encouraged. Then I am prepared to withdraw my objection to a large extent, if the facts are as represented in this correspondence to me, that the raw material is not produced in Canada.

Mr. PATERSON. Do they say that they are not produced in sufficient quantities?

Mr. PORTER. One says that they are not produced in Canada, and the resolution says 'until it is produced in Canada in sufficient quantities to meet the trade.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The representation made to me on the same subject was that:

This toll has evidently been placed upon these goods to encourage a small copper mill at New Toronto. This mill, however, has been closed down for nearly a year, and even were it able to start it again on account of the duty, it would be impossible for it to supply the Canadian trade with the various kinds of German silver and brass that they require.

Mr. PATERSON. I think that is true.

Mr. GERMAN. I happen to have had this matter up before the minister for some time and I did suppose that it was in a position which would be satisfactory at any rate to the manufacturers of cutlery who are using German silver because I was under the impression that the drawback was to be 95 per cent, but I now hear the minister say it is only 65 per cent. Well, that is unfair. All the manufacturers of cutlery are using German silver as their raw material. German silver is not manufactured in Canada, and, in my opinion, and in the opinion of men whose views should have weight, it will not be manufactured in Canada. The reason is there is not a sufficient quantity consumed in Canada to make it worth while for any manufacturing establishment in Canada to produce it. It is a very difficult article to manufacture. There are only three factories in the United States producing it, and of these only one is making it to the satisfaction of the consumer. It is a hardship for the manufacturers who are buying nickel silver as a raw material to pay duty on it so long as the article is not manufactured in Canada. If they had a drawback of 95 per cent that would relieve them somewhat. But why go to the expense of collecting a duty only to give it back again? It seems to me that nickel silver should be absolutely free. At any rate this particular duty should be held in abeyance until this Toronto factory is in a position to manufacture German silver to supply the market.

Mr. TAYLOR. And brass.

Mr. GERMAN. No, I am not interested in brass but in silver—and not Cobalt silver. The Niagara Falls industries use the largest amount of silver in Canada, I apprehend. The Ontario Silver Company has imported for the last few years, practically all the nickel-silver imported into Canada. They pay a duty on all they import though half has to go back to the United States as scrap, there to be re-rolled and brought into Canada, when a duty has to be paid on it again. In all fairness, this article should be on the free list. But, as I said, I supposed that there was a drawback of 95 per cent. Unless this concession is made, I must oppose as strongly as I can, the imposition of this particular duty.

Mr. FIELDING. The idea that because an article is not produced in Canada, therefore it must be put upon the free list, is a doctrine which I would not like the House to commit itself to too rashly.

Mr. PORTER. That is the doctrine that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) announced a little while ago.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I think the statement of the Minister of Customs has been considerably broadened. As 65 per cent of this duty is to be returned, the net result is that the duty paid is 3½ per cent. When representations were made on the subject of the duty of 10 per cent we were told that those interested should not mind the 10 per cent, but, owing to the waste, the duty had practically to be paid over and over again. Well, if you multiply 3½ per cent even three times, you have a total duty of only a little over 10 per cent. As against this, these manufacturers have a protective duty of 30 per cent, a pretty liberal margin. If they get 65 per cent drawback they are paying a duty of only about 3½ per cent, and, with a general duty of 30 per cent, I do not think the position of the industry is so bad as some hon. members seen to think.

Mr. PORTER. I would point out that these are very important industries. The Niagara concern of which my hon. friend from Welland spoke employs about 160 men and pays out about $65,000 a year in wages. The Belleville concern employs over 200 men in the lockworks. And the Peterborough employs still more. These are important industries lately established and getting nicely on their feet. The responsibility is on the government to say whether they shall be driven to the wall or crippled by this duty.

Mr. PATERSON. If there is a waste in the manufacture of locks corresponding to that in these other articles, that is a fair subject for consideration. I would not pronounce against it. That item will be reached in a little while——

Mr. PORTER. That is the representation made to me—that there is this waste.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) will be here when the item is read and the matter can then be dealt with.

Mr. FOSTER. Why does the minister act so inconsistently ? Here is an industry which has been shut for a year and has not been employing any people. On the other hand here are industries employing large numbers of people—settled industries. Now, the government say they will not give these men the drawback of 95 per cent. Yet, in the case of others whose raw material is made in vast quantities in the country as for instance the implement manufacturers, you take the implement men to your bosom and give them raw material free. That raw material they bring in from the United States, and they are charged nothing upon it, but this other industry you deprive of a large proportion of the advantage that they ought to have.

Mr. PATERSON. But the protection upon agricultural implements is not so great as that which these other people enjoy.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister proceeds upon no principle. If he wants to favour some body he gives them a drawback of the whole duty, and if he wishes to hold up some other industry, he does so.

Mr. PORTER. Like the malleable iron industry.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. The whole malleable iron industry in Oshawa is in danger of being wiped out by the hon. gentleman's tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. The drawback to the manufacturers of agricultural implements was made to correspond with the reduction of 2½ per cent on their item making their protection a good deal less than 20 per cent. These other people have a clear 20 per cent after paying 10 per cent for their raw material. And, to cover the point of waste which has been brought up, we give them a drawback 65 per cent on the duty paid. If you ask for consistency, it seems to me that this is rather consistent.

Mr. FOSTER. But the minister's inconsistency is further shown in his treatment of my hon. friends who are trying to get fair play for a large and settled industry. He says regard must be paid to the possible employment of a few people in a factory in Toronto, but he is ready to imperil this large and settled industry in order that he may secure the employment for these few. Will he figure out how much employment is taken from the people of this country by the importation of the steel which our people are not allowed to manufacture for the implement makers, Money is sent out to pay the wages of foreign workmen to make this material, because the minister wants to secure something in a political sense to these makers of implements. The matter came up in this way: What in the world can we do to help the farmers? We must do something for them. We will take 2½ per cent off, and after we have done that we will go blowing about it among the farmers. But no farmer will get his implement a single cent cheaper because of your taking off that 2½ per cent. You take out of the productive industries of this country some 40,000 or 50,000 tons of steel and you imperil large industries. You rob the people of employment on a large scale in one case and you plead for a little expansion of employment in the other case, to the peril of industries that are already large employers.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not believe there will be any less demand for steel than will require every man that is at the present time engaged in the production of steel and iron. I think the industries are working to their full capacity, and that no change we have made will cause the discharge of a single man in the iron industries.

Mr. PORTER. I cannot see the consistency in the statement of the Minister of Customs. Take the manufacture of a certain class of agricultural implements, there is a drawback allowed on certain classes of material going into that manufacture of 99 per cent. Now the same reason exists for that as allowing 65 per cent drawback in the other case. Why is it 65 per cent in one case and 99 per cent in the other?

Mr. PATERSON. Because the agricultural implement maker has a protection of 17½ per cent and the protection of the nickel silver manufacturer is 30 per cent.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Then in that case the raw material coming in free is 20 per cent. The agricultural implement manufacturer has 20 per cent, practically. In this case, the raw material coming in at 10 per cent and the manufacturer having 30 per cent, it is asserted that the manufacturer has 20 per cent. But I submit that he has not 20 per cent. The manufacturer brings in $100 worth of raw material and pays 10 per cent on it. He uses one-half of it, and on that half he has 20 per cent. But he has to send back the other half which is waste, and he gets drawback of 65 per cent. So he has now paid 3½ on that which is sent back. Then these coils are re-rolled, brought in again and he pays 10 per cent, so when he brings them in the second time he has paid 13½ per cent. He does not have 20 per cent, he only has 16½ per cent. Then half of that is sent back again and re-rolled, and he gets a drawback of 65 per cent. So by the time he gets it back again he has to pay nearly 20 per cent on the raw material.

Mr. FOSTER.

355. Britannia metal in pigs, blocks or bars, nickel, nickel silver and German silver, in ingots, blocks or bars, n.o.p., free, free, free.

Insert the word 'or' before 'blocks.' Strike out 'or bars' before 'n.o.p.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do any of these articles come in the shape of bars?

Mr. FIELDING. The effect will be that bars will become dutiable at 10 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the effect of striking out the words 'or bars'?

Mr. FIELDING. As I say, it makes the bars dutiable at 10 per cent, it strikes them from the free list.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the object of that?

Mr. PATERSON. Hon. gentlemen opposite want that to be continued as it was before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You are transferring German and nickel silver, and nickel in bars, from 355 to 356, and that transfer makes it dutiable at 10 per cent, 7½ per cent and 5 per cent, instead of admitting it free, I want to know why you are doing that?

Mr. PATERSON. Because they are being produced in Canada, as I understand. That is a disputed point, but I think we can ascertain to-morrow, it might be worth while to find out. There is a question as to the extent to which it is manufactured in Canada. I have no doubt my hon. friend believes the statement that it is not made in Canada. This letter says that it is not made in sufficient quantities and others give us to understand that it is not made at all. If that article is not made in Canada then it would be better not to deal with it by way of drawback but to make it free altogether, but having made it dutiable under the impression that it is being produced in Canada and that they have a right to have 10 per cent when others who buy their material have 30 per cent we thought it was fair. If it is not made or is not likely to be made it would be another thing. If it is not produced in sufficient quantity for all the needs of Canada many of our industries would be placed in the same position.

Mr. FOSTER. You cannot push it to an extreme.

Mr. GERMAN. In view of what the hon. minister has said, I have the best of authority for saying that nickel silver is not made in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is exactly what I understood. The minister says he has given me certain information a dozen times. I never heard it given once. The distinction is between nickel silver in bars and nickel silver in blocks. I do not understand that any distinction such as the minister suggests has been raised. I understand, as the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) has said, that it is not produced at all. I was asking as to the distinction between silver in blocks and in bars and why you make that distinction.

Mr. FIELDING. The bar is the manufactured article. That is really what we have been talking about for some time although we have not properly reached it. The block is what may be called the raw material, the bar is an advanced process and there is a dispute as to whether it is made in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the two sections have not the effect that has been stated just now:

Nickel, nickel silver and German silver in ingots, bars, blocks or bars——

That was the wording in the first instance. Now you strike out the words 'or bars' and you say it comes under item 356, but it does not come under item 356, if it is in bars not less than 6 feet in length. So you have nickel bars less than 6 feet in length which come under some other item and I would like to know under what item.

Mr. FIELDING. The smaller bar would become the manufactured article at a higher rate—under 357.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it be necessarily a manufacture of nickel where it is under 6 feet and not a manufacture where it is over 6 feet?

Mr. FIELDING. The words there make the distinction.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it would be run up to 30 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the smaller bars are treated as manufactured articles.

Mr. TAYLOR. Better let the item stand and get it right.

Mr. FIELDING. The only point in dispute is as to whether these things are made in Canada and if, before it goes through, we get different information we will be able to have it revised.

Mr. PATERSON. Item 355 will be the raw material of this factory that we are told is in existence and turning out this work. The people conducting that factory are allowed to get their material in free, and the material they get in free they turn into bars 6 feet in length, strips, sheets and plates. They get free material and 10 per cent for turning it into another form. This finished product of these 10 per cent men becomes the raw material of the manufacturers of locks, cutlery, and other articles on which they get 30 per cent. If the intermediate process is not carried on here at all it will leave the manufacturers of britannia metal, locks and other articles just as they were under the old tariff; it will leave them free.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I may say that there is absolutely no German silver manufactured in this country.

Mr. PATERSON. Nor nickel?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Nor nickel. To roll out the 30,000 pounds that this country uses would require a plant costing at least $300,000 and the market is not large enough to justify any manufacturer going into that business. It is different with brass. There is a small factory in Toronto and I do not know but what it is a fair proposition to give those manufacturers, even though they are in a small way—and nearly all are manufacturers starting from small beginings—some consideration in manufacturing rolled brass, coiled brass, brass rods, &c. I think it is a great injustice to put a duty on German silver in any shape or form because it is the raw material of a number of very important industries in this country. Take the manufacturer of spoons, forks and knives; it requires 210 pounds of German sheet nickel to turn out 100 pounds of stamped spoons and forks, so that there is a loss of 110 pounds in turning out 100 pounds of the manufactured article. I think it is only fair to the manufacturers of these articles that German silver in sheets and bars should come in free.

Mr. FIELDING. The dispute is as to whether or not these things are made in Canada. We will look into it and if you do not expect to run through the whole tariff to-night we will let the item stand. If, as the hon. gentleman says, it takes 210 pounds of this material to turn out 100 pounds of the manufactured articles of which he spoke you would not have to multiply the duty by three. Under the British preferential tariff the duty would be about 8 per cent and you have a duty on the finished article under the general tariff of 30 per cent.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. That is German silver and when it is returned to them they pay the duty on it again. That brings the duty up to 20 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. Not at all.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Items 355 and 356 stand.

374. Iron or steel scrap, wrought, being waste or refuse, including punchings, cuttings or clippings of iron or steel plates or sheets having been in actual use; crop ends of tin plate bars, or of blooms, or of rails, the same not having been in actual use, per ton, 70 cents, 90 cents, $1.

Amended item. Strike out the figures and words 'seventy cents' and insert the figures and word 'fifty cents' in the British preferential tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a reduction of duty on scrap iron.

376. Iron or steel billets, weighing not less than sixty pounds per lineal yard; ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, puddled bars; and loops or other forms, n.o.p., less finished than iron or steel bars but more advanced than pig iron, except castings, per ton, $1.50, $2.25, $2.50.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a reduction in the duty on steel billets.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a general division of the duties between the various industries using metals. We thought the consumers of steel billets had to pay rather higher than was fair and we reduced the duties on the billets. It was represented to us that it is sometimes difficult to buy billets in Canada and it appeared to us the duty was somewhat higher than it should be.

379. Rolled iron or steel beams, channels, angles and other rolled shapes of iron or steel, not punched, drilled or further manufactured than rolled, weighing not less than thirty-five pounds per lineal yard, not being square, flat, oval or round shapes, and not being railway bars or rails, per ton, British preferential tariff rate, $2; intermediate tariff rate, $2.75; general tariff rate, $3.

Mr. FIELDING. These specific duties are about the equivalent of the former ad valorem duties.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did you change to a specific duty?

Mr. FIELDING. Most of the iron and steel duties are specific and we thought we might make this also.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the only reason?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not recollect any other reason to-night.

379a. Flat eye bar blanks, not punched nor drilled, and universal mill or rolled edge plates of steel over twelve inches wide for use exclusively in the manufacture of bridges or of steel structural work, or in car construction, per ton, British preferential tariff rate, $2; intermediate tariff rate, $2.75; general tariff rate, $3.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a further concession to the manufacturers in these several lines. There is a large industry established near Montreal for the manufacture of cars, and it was represented that the tariff would make it difficult for them to pay the duties and carry on their operations. We have made the same duty in connection with the manufacture of cars as in the case of bridges and we have included general structural steel. It was open to debate whether general structural steel should be rated the same as if it were steel for bridges, and now we treat steel for bridges, for cars, and for structural purposes alike.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the new car company you refer to?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a company promoted by some American people, in which there is also Canadian capital invested.

Mr. KEMP. The Canada Car Company.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there any duty collected on Pullman cars coming into this country?

Mr. FIELDING. If they run on international roads they are not dutiable, but a Pullman car built abroad and imported for service in Canada would have to pay duty.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the Pullman Car Company ever paid any duty?

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose they claim their cars are running on international lines and as such they would not be dutiable.

Mr. BERGERON. Suppose a car is running between Montreal and Toronto?

Mr. FIELDING. It should pay duty.

Mr. J. D. REID. Take a Pullman car that runs between Montreal and Toronto, from its first day until it is used up?

Mr. FIELDING. It should pay duty.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know it should, but has any duty ever been collected on these cars? There are a great many railroads in Canada which import these cars and they never pay any duty.

Mr. FIELDING. The Commissioner of Customs informs me that there have been cases in which duties have been collected, but I cannot give particulars now.

386. Rolled iron or steel and cast steel, in bars, bands, hoop, scroll, strip, sheet or plate, of any size, thickness or width, galvanized or coated with any material or not, and steel blanks for the manufacture of milling cutters, when of greater value than three and one-half cents per pound, British preferential tariff rate, free; intermediate tariff rate, 5 per cent; general tariff rate, 5 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. This item was five per cent before, with one-third off to Britain. We have made it free to Britain as we thought it might turn the trade to Britain, the duty against the United States being 7½ per cent. It is represented that it is impossible to get this material from Great Britain and it is thought desirable to make it five per cent in the general tariff instead of 7½ as proposed.

387a. Steel in bars or sheets to be used exclusively in the manufactrue of shovels, when imported by manufacturers of shovels, 10 per cent, 12½ per cent, 15 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. We are converting this into specific duty—$2 ; $2.75; $3 per ton. Some of this steel is very high class and it was found that an ad valorem duty would operate rather severely. This meets to some extent the criticisms of people interested in that line of industry.

393a. Round polished steel shafting in bars not exceeding two and one-half inches in diameter, 17½ per cent, 22½ per cent, 25 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a reduction of about five per cent in the general tariff on this class of goods used in the manufacture of agricultural implements.

395. Wrought or seamless iron or steel tubes for boilers, n.o.p., under regulations prescribed by the Minister of Customs ; flues and corrugated tubes for marine boilers, free, 5 per cent, 5 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. Strike out the figures and insert free instead thereof.

397. Tubes of rolled iron or steel, not joined or welded, not more than one-half inch in diameter, n.o.p., 5 per cent, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. Strike out all the rates of duty and insert the word free. That is a class of tubes not made in Canada, chiefly used in the manufacture of bedsteads.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business tomorrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. The tariff.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.01 a.m., Wednesday.

Bill (No. 108) to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Mr. Aylesworth.

QUESTIONS.

INDIAN BOARDING SCHOOLS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What was the cost of building each of the boarding schools for Indians, opened at Fort Alexander, Fort Francis and Sandy Bay ?
2. How many pupils are attending each, and are these schools under the control of the government ?
3. What studies are taught in these schools?
4. What qualifications have the teachers in each of the said schools ?
5. What is the total quantity of Indian lands contained in reserves in each province in the Dominion ?
6. Do denominational Indian schools receive any government inspection ? If so, how many of such schools are inspected, what are the names of the inspectors, and what are their salaries ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. These three boarding schools were built by the Reverend Pères Oblates, St. Boniface, Manitoba, and before being taken over by the department were inspected by an architect from Winnipeg, who valued the cost of the Fort Alexander school at $16,000; the Fort Frances school at $18,000 ; and the one at Sandy Bay at $16,500 ; making the total cost of the schools $50,500.

2. The returns for the quarter ended 31st December last show that there were 45 pupils in attendance at the Fort Alexander school ; 46 at the Fort Frances ; and 43 at the Sandy Bay. The government has general control.

3. English, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, history, general knowledge, ethics, recitation, vocal music, calisthenics and religious instruction.

4. These schools are conducted by the Oblate Fathers on a per capita grant paid by the government. They appoint the teachers, who are members of religious orders.

5. The quantity of land contained in Indian reserves in each province is as follows :

Province.	Acres.
Nova Scotia	21,557
Prince Edward Island	1,524
New Brunswick	37,342

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS IN BANKS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What was the total amount of money in banks, to the credit of this government, at the end of each month during the year 1906, giving the name of each bank ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. The information asked for is too extensive to be given in the form of a reply to a question. If a motion is made for a return, the return will be prepared.
2. No interest is allowed by the banks to the government on ordinary accounts. On the other hand, the banks receive no payment by way of commission for the services which they render as agents of the government in receiving and paying moneys throughout the Dominion. The only exception to this is in the case of the Yukon, where a small commission is paid to the bank for handling the government business at that point.

CONFERENCE OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS—PROVINCIAL TAXES.

Mr. FOSTER—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

What agreement, if any, was made at the conference with the provincial premiers, (a) as to the provincial taxes upon commercial travellers ; (b) as to the provincial tax upon companies chartered by the Dominion government ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will find the answer to this question in the report, which has already been brought down, giving the proceedings of the interprovincial Conference. I may tell him, however, that the premiers there present agreed, with regard to the provincial taxes upon commercial travellers, to have that form of tax repealed. With regard to the discrimination against companies having Dominion charters by provincial authorities, the matter was discussed, but no conclusion arrived at.

5. Has Mr. A. B. Aylesworth or the Minister of Justice had any conference or communication, verbal or written, with any person other than Messrs. Shepley and Tilley, bearing in any way upon the suggestion or collection of evidence for possible use before the commission ?

WATER RESERVE LANDS—LETHBRIDGE DISTRICT.

2. Since that time has the west half of 3—10—24 north of the river, been sold to any person? If so, to whom?

3. Does not said west half of 3—10—24 contain 320 acres?

4. Were there any other applicants for said land, or any part thereof?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. One of the conditions of the sale at auction of cancelled stock watering reserves in June, 1906, was that not more than 160 acres would be sold to any one person.

2. This land was offered for sale by public auction, but no bids were received, and in regard to such lands public notice was given that they would be offered at the upset price to the persons owning adjoining lands who applied therefor.

The west half of 3-10-24 west 4th, north of the river, has been offered to Mr. J. C. Graves, who owns adjoining land, at the upset price of $3 per acre.

MR. LOUIS LEOPOLD.

Mr. SINCLAIR asked :

1. Is the government aware of the report that has been current in the press to the effect that Louis Leopold (Lazarus), who formerly conducted a labour bureau in London, England, is now the agent of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and that he has opened an office in London, to assist the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in inducing skilled labourers to emigrate to Canada ? If so, can the government verify the truth of the report ?

2. Has the government taken any steps to prevent the manufacturers' agents inducing skilled labourers, by false representations, to emigrate to Canada ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour) :

1. The following paragraph from 'Canada' of February 16, 1907, is the only information the government has upon the subject :

Mr. Louis Leopold, after an extended trip throughout the Dominion, has just returned to London as the salaried representative of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Great Britain. In this capacity, Mr. Leopold has undertaken to supply various members of the association, which embraces almost every industry, with skilled labour, of which there is a pressing need. This he proposes to recruit from the ranks of artisans in the British Isles.

2. In 1905 this parliament enacted the following measure respecting false representation to induce or deter immigration :

Every person who does, in Canada, anything for the purpose of causing or procuring the publication or circulation, by advertisement or otherwise, in a country outside of Canada, of false representations as to the opportunities for employment in Canada, or as to the state of the labour market in Canada, intended or adapted to encourage or induce, or to defer or prevent, the immigration into Canada of persons resident in that country, or who does anything in Canada for the purpose of causing or procuring the communication to any resident of such country of any such false representations, shall, if any such false representations are thereafter so published, circulated or communicated, be guilty of an offence, and liable, on summary conviction before two justices of the peace, to a penalty of not more than one thousand dollars and not less than fifty dollars for each offence.

In September of last year the government sent Mr. Mackenzie King, deputy Minister of Labour on a special mission to England to represent to the British authorities the importance of having similar legislation enacted by the British parliament with a view to prevent false representations being made in Great Britain and Ireland to induce persons to emigrate to Canada. As a result of the government's action the following provision was enacted as one of the clauses of the Merchants' Shipping Act, passed by the British parliament, assented to on December 21, 1906 :

If any person, by any false representation, fraud or false pretense, induces or attempts to induce any person to emigrate or to engage a steerage passage in any ship, he shall for each offence be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding three months.

WAGES OF PAINTERS IN HALIFAX.

Mr. CROCKET asked :

1. Is the government aware that Mr. F. Reardon, the contractor for the painting of the walls of the new custom house in Halifax, is paying only $8 per week to some of his painters employed by him, although the current wages in Halifax amounts to $10.70 per week of forty-eight hours ?

2. Has the Department of Labour any information on the subject ?

3. Does Mr. Reardon's contract contain the fair-wage provision ?

4. What action does the government propose to take in the premises ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works) :

1. No, the Department of Public Works is not aware of the fact stated.

2. The Department of Labour has received from the secretary of the Painters'

Union of Halifax, a communication stating that the union has been informed that Mr. Reardon had been awarded a contract to paint the walls of the customs house, and that members of the local union who had applied for work on the building were informed by the contractor that the wages he paid were $8 per week, while the current wages at the present were $10.70 per week of 48 hours. This communication was referred to one of the fair wages officers of the Department of Labour for investigation and report.

3. No contract was made for this work. The work was allotted by correspondence and no mention of wages was contained in the correspondence.

4. The government is prepared to insist that the wages generally accepted as current for competent painters in Halifax shall be paid.

POSTMASTER AT OPHIR.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. Who is the postmaster at Ophir in Algoma, when was he appointed, and what is his present remuneration?

2. Has his salary been recently reduced? If so, to what extent, and for what reason?

3. Have not representations been made to the department that a tri-weekly mail service between Rydal Bank and Ophir is desirable in the public interest? If so, how have such recommendations been dealt with?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. James Clarborough is postmaster of Ophir. He was appointed on October 1, 1904. His present remuneration is $25 per annum for salary and $3 per annum for forward allowance.

2. The postmaster's salary was reduced from $40 a year to $25 a year on January 1, 1906, the reduction being due to a corresponding falling off in the revenue of the office.

3. No representations were made to the department for a tri-weekly mail between the points mentioned, but an application was received for a semi-weekly service. The circumstances of the case, however, did not warrant the department in acceding to the proposition.

WAYS AND MEANS—A. B. STEELE ET AL., A. W. PRITCHARD AND J. OBED SMITH.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, in the 'Free Press and Times,' a paper published in the city of Burlington, in the State of Vermont, in the issue of January 21 last, I find the following item:

The 'Free Press' referred recently to a suit tried in Winnipeg between Asa B. Steele, A. B. Buell and Max Powell, as plaintiffs, and A. W. Pritchard and J. Obed. Smith, both of Winnipeg, as defendants. The action was for alleged deceit in the sale of a large tract of land in Saskatchewan purchased by the plaintiffs who relied upon the representations of the defendants, who made the sale, that the block of land was all of the original purchase and that none of the land originally purchased by the Ontario and Saskatchewan Land Company, the owners of the land in question, had been withheld when in fact a large tract of the best land had been taken out.

The trial lasted ten days and Judge Mathers has just handed down the opinion. He holds that defendants, Buell and Powell, were induced to make the purchase by the false statements of defendants, that they relied upon those statements and suffered loss; that the land was worth at the time of the purchase last June all that the plaintiffs paid for it and that the enhanced value since that time cannot be taken in reduction of damages, but was simply what plaintiffs were entitled to as a result of the deal, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the value of the tract if it had been as the defendants represented and intact, and measures the damage at $14,601.80. The court finds that plaintiffs' deal did not rely upon the representations and he is non-suited. The apportionment of damages between the plaintiffs will not be finally made until counsel have time to look up testimony and argue that question.

The land purchase was syndicated in Burlington and the plaintiffs formed a part of the syndicate. The land taken out was not the choice selections throughout the tract so as to leave 'culls' but was in the north part nearer the railroad. The soil was no better than what was left. Defendant J. Obed Smith is government immigration inspector at Winnipeg, and the plaintiffs relied upon his statements the more on account of his position.

I have in my hand as well a copy of the pleadings in this case which was brought before the high court in Winnipeg. Without reading the pleadings in full, they being somewhat voluminous, I may say that the statement of claim starts out in the usual way by describing who the plaintiffs are and who the defendants are. The second paragraph is as follows:

The defendant A. W. Pritchard is a real estate agent residing in the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba. The defendant J. Obed Smith resides in the city of Winnipeg.

The statement of claim then goes on to say that the defendants, representing that they were the agents of the Ontario and Saskatchewan Land Corporation, or that they held an option from said company, undertook to sell to the plaintiffs all the land that had been acquired by that Ontario and Saskatchewan Land Corporation Company. In the course of the negotiations the plaintiff Powell asked the defendant Smith particularly if the defendants were selling all the lands that had been acquired by the Ontario and Saskatchewan Land Corporation, and the answer was that they were selling to them all these lands. As a matter of fact, the plaintiffs claim that some 7,000 acres had been kept out; land not particularly better—as the newspaper report said—than the other, but better situated, being at the north near the railway. The plaintiffs, therefore, brought their action, claiming damages for the 7,000 acres of which they had been wrongfully deprived, as they said, through the misrepresentations of the defendants. The defendants denied all the allegations of the plaintiffs' statement of claim with the exception of the first two, and the second one, as I read to the House, was the one in which the defendant Smith is described as immigration commissioner residing in the city of Winnipeg. We, therefore, have the plaintiffs claiming that they have been defrauded by J. Obed Smith, who was the Dominion immigration agent at Winnipeg, and we have the defendant Smith admitting that he is that official.

The case went to trial, and I have in my hand the judgment of the learned Judge Mathers, after a trial which lasted according to the newspaper report ten days. Evidently from the amount of evidence taken, the trial must have lasted a very considerable time. The judgment is somewhat lengthy, but I may read two or three extracts from it. The judge held as to the plaintiffs Powell and Buell:

There is a preponderance of evidence in favour of them and I find that the defendants did represent to them that that block of land was the entire original selection and all that the selling company ever owned in the six townships named, and that these two plaintiffs were induced by such representations to become co-purchasers with Steele of this block of about 47,000 acres of land at $6.50 per acre. I find that the representation was not true as the Ontario and Saskatchewan Company had previously sold out of its original holding 7,800 acres and the block in question represented the balance only of the company's original holding in these townships. From the examination of the defendant for discovery put in evidence it is impossible to find otherwise and that they had no belief in the truth of the representations when made.

Mr. McCRANEY. At what date was the judgment rendered by Judge Mathers?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman the exact date, but evidently it would be within a few days of January 21 of this year, because the item appears in the Burlington 'Times' of the 21st of January, and it says that the judgment had just been handed out. In the course of the examination in the court, of the defendant Obed Smith, some extraordinary admissions were made by himself. I can quite understand that if, standing in this House I were to claim that an official of the present government should be condemned in consequence of any evidence given by any witness in court which had been contradicted by the official in question, the government might well stand by their own official and say he was as well entitled to belief as those who contradicted him. But when we find the immigration commissioner himself in the box; when we find him under oath making certain admissions, I think even the Minister of the Interior might be justified in finding, if these admissions tell against the official, that the official has no ground of complaint if the department should act on the admissions made by himself. On pages 4 and 19 of the cross-examination of Smith, which I have before me, the point was made very clear, when the question was asked, whether or not he and his co-defendant were keeping anything back. Here is his own answer to the question:

I am stating what he (that is Buell) said: Now you fellows are not keeping back any of the best sections for yourselves, are you?

That was, of course, indignantly denied Then on page 19:

Q. I see Mr. Powell says in his examination that you told Buell that he was to get all the holdings of the company; is that the expression you used?—A. No, I do not think that was exactly correct.

Q. You would not agree with these words?—A. No.

Q. Substantially correct?—A. Yes, that was the intention.

So we have Mr. Obed Smith himself, under oath, admitting that he did represent to the plaintiffs that they were getting all the holdings of the Ontario and Saskatchewan Land Corporation, when in fact and in truth they were getting some 7,400 acres less than had been the holdings of that company.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). Were the representations of Mr. J. Obed Smith made verbally or in writing?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I would judge from the evidence that it was a conversation between the plaintiffs Powell and Buell and Pritchard and Smith; as far as appears from this evidence it was a verbal representation.

Mr. McCRANEY. What was the amount of the claim made?

Mr. NORTHRUP. The following are the particulars of the plaintiffs' claim—they ask damages at $3 per acre in respect of 7,840 acres of land occasioned by the deceit of the defendants, $23,520. The plaintiffs, therefore, claim $23,520. I may say for the information of my hon. friend, that I have reason to believe that the plaintiffs differ entirely from the basis on which the learned judge assessed the damages. The learned judge found that the plaintiffs were entitled to be reimbursed whatever they had lost through the deceit of the defendant, but in computing the manner in which the damage was to be assessed and the amount of the damages, the plaintiffs contend that the learned judge erred very grievously and, therefore, there has been an appeal. The appeal is not by the defendants from the judgment, but by the plaintiffs, claiming a larger amount of damages than has been given them by that judgment.

On pages 15, 23 and 24 of this cross-examination of Mr. Obed Smith, the further admission was made by Mr. Smith that he was utilizing his position as a government official in order to make money—to use his own classic expression—on the side. Let me read his own evidence that I may not be accused of misrepresenting him or wronging him. I quote from page 15:

Q. You as an officer of the Dominion government received reports of homesteads from time to time?—A. Yes.

Q. Daily reports?—A. Weekly reports.

Q. So that you were in a position to give information as to what land had been homesteaded?—A. Reasonably accurate information.

On page 23 I read:

Q. That is to say, Mr. Riddington——

And Mr. Riddington turns out in a subsequent part of the evidence to be a government official.

Q. That is to say, Mr. Riddington sent you this exhibit No. 45 with letter exhibit No. 2 of the 18th of June and the plat inclosed in that letter?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they all attached together?—A. They were.

Q. You detached the letter from the plat in the meantime?—A. No, I have the report. The report that Mr. Buell took away was not the report of Mr. Riddington, but it was a copy of it. I gave him a copy of the plat and the original report.

At page 24, as if to place the matter beyond peradventure, I read:

Q. Who is this Mr. Riddington who sent you this report?—A. One of the homestead inspectors up there.

Q. An employee of the Dominion government?—A. Yes.

Q. Paid by salary?—A. Yes paid by salary.

Q. And you have made use of government officials to make reports for you in order that you might make money on the side?—A. Yes, that is true.

I think I have established that a Dominion government official has been charged in the courts with deceiving people who came to this country, and who, relying on the statements made by a Dominion government official—and the more to be relied on for that reason—that he deceived them, and that he has been mulcted in heavy damages in the courts of the land. I think I have shown that this defendant, Obed Smith admitted under oath that he had made untrue representations whereby these people were deceived and defrauded. He also admitted that he was in a position to use, and did use, the weekly reports sent in by officials in order to make a little money for himself on the side. I would have thought it would not have been necessary to do more than call the attention of the House to such a state of facts to insure prompt action by the government; but I am sorry to say that our experience in the past is such as to lead us to a very different conclusion to that which ordinary men, unaware of the proceedings of the Department of the Interior in days gone by, would reach. Had this been the first case of the kind, I would have thought it beyond peradventure that a man who had thus abused his position would have been promptly dismissed, and probably punished by prosecution at the hands of the department; but for such a trifling offence as poor Smith is guilty of, merely lying to people and thereby defrauding them, and using his official position to make money on the side; I must say that I do not think the department, unless prepared to admit its sins of the past and to turn over a new leaf, is in a position to punish him very severely. We have had the experience of the mis-doings of other officials in the Department of the Interior. We had in this House in a previous session the case of Nixon, a land agent at Macleod, whose case was reported upon by one of the officials of the government. It was proven that his books had been mutilated, that moneys he had received had not been handed over to the government, and that various other wrongs had been done by him, and the only excuse that could be offered was that this was all done by his son, a youth fifteen years of age. Although it was proved by affidavit on more than one occasion that money had been paid to Nixon himself, he was not prosecuted, but was allowed to resign, and shortly afterwards he was put on the immigration staff at a salary of $40 or $50 a month, which, in a couple of weeks, was raised to $75 a month; and, as far as this House knows, Nixon is still enjoying the fruits of his services by drawing this increased pay. Then we had the case of Wagner, the facts of which are intimately known to the Minister of the Interior, possibly more intimately than to any other man in the world except Wagner himself. There was no dispute about the facts of the Wagner case. He was a thief, convicted as such in prosecution after prosecution, and sent to jail; yet when the inquiry was made in this House whether he had received any promotion, the Minister of the Interior could only say: There is no information on the files of the Department of the Interior to show that this man had ever been in jail. The Department of Justice knew it; it was on record there. The Minister of the Interior, as an individual knew it; but the House was gravely informed that there was no record of it on the files of the Department of the Interior. It may be said that these things are of the days gone by, that they are charges of two or three years ago. Well, we have had some since. We had an election in this country in 1904, and now that the smoke of the conflict has blown over and every member is secure in his seat until the next election, I suppose no gentleman will deny that there are three or four members of this House from the province of Manitoba who would not be sitting here had it not been for the thin red line which was introduced into Manitoba politics. Here again I deal with matters which were before the courts and on which evidence was given. Nobody in the province of Manitoba, certainly nobody in this House from that province, will deny that in constituency after constituency the majority recorded for hon. gentlemen opposite was indescribably less than the number of Conservative supporters who were disfranchised by virtue of the thin red line. This was all done by one Leach; and how was he punished? The government, on the 1st of January, 1905, expressed its dissatisfaction, its indignation, I might almost say its determination to be revenged on Leach, by appointing him an immigration agent, at a salary of $2,000 or $2,500 a year, a position which, so far as I know, he still occupies.

These cases of which I have spoken are known to all the members of this House, and therefore one can refer to them with confidence. I hold in my hand a letter which I have received in the last few days from a gentleman in the Northwest in whom I have the greatest confidence, and he tells me that Lawrence Duggan has received an appointment from the Dominion government in the land titles office, at either Calgary or Moosejaw. He also says that Christopher C. Calverley has been appointed Indian agent at Norway House, the former having been returning officer at Selkirk, and the latter deputy returning officer at Beausejour. And these gentlemen were evidently implicated in the thin red line scandals for which Leach has been so well rewarded. I do not say that these appointments have been made; but I am prepared to accept the statement of the correspondent, for two reasons—first, because he is a man of standing, whose word can be relied on in any event; and, secondly, because in view of our past experience of the Department of the Interior, if Nixon, Wagner and Leach, after having been found guilty, have been rewarded by promotion in the service at increased salaries, why should not these men be rewarded in the same way? Even if the appointments have not been made, the names have been before the public, and the public believe they have been made; and I call the attention of the right hon. leader of the government to the fact that when an impression gets in the public mind that men are to be promoted for their bad deeds, 'by merit raised to that bad eminence,' it is supposed to be well-founded; and the destruction of public confidence is bad, not only for the department and the government, but for everybody who loves his country. There is another reason why I have brought this matter before the House. We often hear the question asked, why do not the Conservative opposition expose some of the scandals which are talked of throughout the country? The members of the opposition have been taunted again and again before the electors with the question: Why don't you ventilate these charges before the House? Why are you mute there, and only speak of them after the House is dissolved and there is no one to answer you? The case of Smith is one to illustrate the disadvantage under which the opposition labour. Looking at the Auditor General's Report, which is the only basis we have to work upon in the Public Accounts Committee, the only record I find with reference to Smith is the following (L—29):

Smith, J. O., Winnipeg: commissioner, 12 m. to June 30, $3,000; caps, officers, 1, $3.75, 1, $3.50; overcoat, $25; uniforms, 2 $56; total, $3,093.25.

That is all the biography any Conservative member of this House has of Mr. Smith. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite how could it be expected that that would be sufficient to assist us in ferreting out such a transaction as this. How could we, from merely reading that little scrap of biography suspect that Mr. Smith had been implicated in a land deal? It may be the first he has indulged in and I hope it will be the last he will have any opportunity of indulging in; but hon. gentlemen opposite know that it is common rumour in the Northwest that all these officials are engaged in just such transactions. Mr. Smith might have been engaged in such transactions for years and the opposition would never have had an opportunity of ventilating the matter. Had it not been that Mr. Smith happened to come across an American who had both money and courage to fight what he considered a wrong and dragged this matter into the courts, we would never have heard about it. There may, for aught I know, be other cases of a similar character. This one item is a scandal of which the government should be ashamed, and the very fact that it has come to light gives reason to suspect that there may be other cases just as bad but which the opposition are unable to discover. I bring this matter to the attention of the government in the hope that some change may come over the direction of the Department of the Interior so that it may be understood that there are other ways of securing promotion in that department than by violating the law. There is no necessity why those who violate the law should be promoted, but that appears to have been the rule in the past; and if examples were made, whenever breaches such as this occur, they might lose to the government active supporters in election times, but the people would be better off and the administration of the various departments would be better respected. I lay this matter before the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and we ask him what he proposes to do about it.

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY (Saskatchewan). The material upon which my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Northrup) bases his argument is the evidence and judgment in the case recently tried in Manitoba of Steele vs. Pritchard. My hon. friend has told us that the judgment of Mr. Justice Mathers was delivered about the 21st January last. Up to the present time however no formal judgment has been signed. My hon. friend has told us that the plaintiffs intend appealing from that judgment because it does not give them sufficiently large damages. Well, I have here a copy of a telegram from Mr. T. H. Johnston, a lawyer of Winnipeg, addressed to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and dated the 26th February, 1907:

> As counsel for Mr. Smith, I state to you that my associate counsel and I have advised that the verdict in Steele vs. Smith et al. is against the law and not supported by evidence and that an appeal would obtain its reversal.

I would further point out that in the province of Manitoba no appeal can be had until the formal judgment is taken. The Act of the Manitoba legislature passed last session, establishing the courts of appeal, provides that the rules of procedure in appeal shall be the same as those which obtain in the court of King's Bench. These rules, which are to be found in the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, state that the time for filing an appeal against a judgment shall be within fourteen days from the date of the entry of the judgment. The reason therefore that no appeal has been entered as yet by the defendant is because the plaintiffs have not seen fit to take out that formal judgment. I submit therefore that as the matter is still before the courts, it is not one which should be discussed in this House.

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend contend that the time for the appeal runs from the date of the entry of the judgment or the rendering of the judgment?

Mr. NORTHRUP.

Mr. McCRANEY. I understand that in Manitoba the time for entering the appeal runs from the time of the formal judgment, thus differing from Ontario in that respect.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman will find that he is wrong.

Mr. McCRANEY. I have the statute here and can show it to my hon. friend. Before discussing the subject matter of this suit we should not only have the evidence given at the trial but also the finding of the highest court of appeal to which either party wishes to go. These are essential to this House before it can form any judgment, and I think that this House should hesitate before discussing this subject and making a pronouncement which might prejudicially affect either party before the courts. I understand that up to yesterday no formal judgment had been rendered.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). The hon. gentleman has hardly met the point at issue. We have not only the decision of the judge but the admissions of the defendant himself. We have the admissions of Mr. Smith himself. If we bring to the knowledge of the Minister of the Interior, the fact that the defendant upon his oath—reluctantly no doubt admitted that he was speculating upon information which he had obtained officially, we have sufficient on which to ask the minister to dismiss this official. Now the statute under which we have been acting and which the minister proposes to re-enact, provides for a case of this kind, and I am sorry to say that such cases have not been unknown in the department before. Sections 84 and 85 of the proposed Act are practically a re-enactment of the present statute. The first deals with the Dominion officials and land officials of any kind who speculate in Dominion lands. Section 85 provides that:

> No employee of or under the Department of the Interior shall disclose to any person, except with the authority of the minister, any discovery made by him or any other employee of the said department or any information of which he is possessed in relation to Dominion lands.

This officer, as I understand, by his own sworn statement, disclosed information which he got as an employee under the government and which was specially reported to him by Mr. Riddington, homestead agent, and the penalty provided by the Act is:

> Any employee appointed hereunder shall be liable to summary dismissal on the order of the minister, but such dismissal shall not affect the right which any person may have to bring against such dismissed employee any civil or criminal action.

That is the definite proposition, the definite statement of the law if the facts bring Mr. Obed Smith within this provision and

I shall ask no more than that the statement of the defendant himself, the party whom we are attacking, shall be taken at par as a statement to govern us in this case. Then, further, the Civil Service Act provides an oath for parties occupying positions such as that of Mr. Smith and the concluding part of that oath in the case of one in the outside service provides :

And that I will not, without due authority in that behalf, disclose or make known any matter or thing which comes to my knowledge by reason of my employment as (defining the position).

I do not suppose that that gentleman got authority from any one to make the disclosures he made and I shall refer briefly to what he says as to his action. We find this in the evidence.

Q. You, as an officer of the Dominion government, received reports of homesteads from time to time ?
A. Yes.
Q. Daily reports ?—A. Weekly reports.
Q. So that you are in a position to give information as to what lands have been homesteaded ?—A. Reasonably accurate information.
Q. The one whom one would most naturally look to for such information ?—A. Reasonably accurate, as I have said.
Q. And it was a matter of discussion, and the information received with pleasure by Mr. Powell and Mr. Buell on the morning of the 29th that a great many lands had been homesteaded in the vicinity of the lands in question ?—A. Yes.

That is the lands this gentleman was dealing with. Then turning to pages 23 and 24 we get a further insight into his position and to what took place.

By Mr. Bradshaw :
Q. Will you look at exhibit No. 45. Do you recognize that document ?—A. I do.
Q. Who prepared that ?—A. Well, I can't say, but it was sent to me with Mr. Riddington's letter and plats.
Q. That is to say Mr. Riddington sent you this exhibit No. 45 with his letter, exhibit 2, of the 18th of June, and the plats inclosed in that letter —A. Yes.
Q. Were they all attached together ?—A. They were.
Q. When did you last see this prior to this trial ?—A. On the morning of the 29th of June. Mr. Powell asked me if he might take them, and I took them apart and handed him the instruments.
Q. Took what apart ?—A. The papers that were pinned together. This plat and these reports were pinned together.
Q. You detached the letter from the plats and the reports ?—A. No, I took the report—the report which Mr. Powell took away was not the report of Mr. Riddington, but it was a copy of it. I gave him a copy of the plats and the original report.

This was the original report from Mr. Riddington the homestead agent to Mr. Smith, the immigration commissioner.

Q. Did you also give him exhibit No. 11 at that time ?
Mr. Wilson—That has all been gone into in chief. That is the one I think I gave you before.
Q. Were the reports attached to the township plats when you gave them to him ?—A. I can't remember that.
Q. Did you keep any copies of exhibit No. 45 ?—A. No, I kept no copies. In fact, I had practically forgotten about it until I wrote to Mr. Riddington for a copy a few days ago. I received it and I have had no copies since this was given to Mr. Powell.
Q. You didn't take any copies before giving it to Mr. Powell ?—A. No.
Q. And is this the original report you received from Mr. Riddington ?—A. Yes. They were in somewhat of a hurry, and off they went with the report in their hands.

Now we will find the position that Mr. Smith definitely says he took in the matter.

By Mr. Wilson :
Q. Who is Mr. Riddington who sent you this report ?—A. One of the homestead inspectors up there.
Q. An employee of the Dominion government?—A. Yes.
Q. Paid by salary ?—A. Yes, paid by salary.
Q. And you have made use of government officials to make reports for you in order that you might make money on the side ?—A. Yes, that is true.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the whole matter in a nutshell, that this gentleman, employed by the government, in defiance of the statute, and in defiance of the oath and presumably in defiance of the Minister of the Interior if we can presume that, used his position and the influence that he thus obtained, for the purpose of making money as he says, upon the side, making as a matter of fact in this transaction, although that is not material, a matter of nearly $30,000, because as the evidence shows he received 60 cents an acre upon some 48,000 acres which he sold.

I said that nothing else was very material. It is not a question of the findings but of a certain fact. My hon. friend who has just spoken says that an appeal is about to be taken and that notwithstanding what has happened there may be a reversal on appeal, but what I point out is that there can be no reversal of what this man deliberately swears to in the investigation of this case. There can be no change of the deliberate admission that he has made upon record in the evidence in the case.

But it is important all the same to read what is said in the judgment in regard to the facts. The judge first points out that as to the plaintiff Steele, he was aware of the circumstances and therefore he was not deceived and not entitled to damages. The judgment proceeds :

As to the other plaintiffs the case stands differently. There is a preponderance of evidence in favour of them and I find that the defendants did represent to them that that block of land was the entire original selection and all that the selecting company ever owned in the six townships named, and that these two plaintiffs were induced by such representation to become co-purchasers with Steele of this block of about 47,000 acres of land at $6.60 per acre. I find that the representation was not true as the Ontario and Saskatchewan Company had previously sold out of its original holding 7,800 acres and the block in question represented the balance only of the company's original holding in these townships. I find also that the defendants at the time the representations were made had no information on the subject at all and could not therefore believe it to be true.

That is not information as to the matters that they were alleging in reference to the Dominion lands and their sale or the information obtained from Riddington, but no information as to whether any lands had been sold out of the purchase or not.

From the examination of the defendants for discovery put in evidence it is impossible to find otherwise than that they had no belief in the truth of the representations when made.

The judge then proceeds to find the amount of damages to which the plaintiffs are entitled, finding that by reason of the fact that the plaintiffs have disposed of a portion of the lands without damage they are entitled to less damages than they otherwise would.

The sole and only question is whether on the admitted facts as given by the defendant Obed Smith in his evidence, this is a person whom the government in the face of the statute should retain in their employment, and secondly, whether having regard to the statute and the oath that the gentleman has to take, the government is prepared to swallow the whole matter and maintain this gentleman in their employment.

Mr. D. W. BOLE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, I should not have taken part in this debate had it not been that certain extraneous matter was introduced by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup). But for that I would have rested upon the point made by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney) that it is hardly proper for this House to discuss a question which is now practically in the hands of the courts; we should first have before us the findings of the court and the evidence in the case. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) made some reference to the 'thin red line,' and intimated that the gentlemen who represented Manitoba on this side, are here in consequence of the 'thin red line.' I beg to inform the hon. gentleman that, so far as I am personally concerned, it does not apply, and it does not apply for the simple and sufficient reason that in my case the 'thin red line' was not necessary. And the reason it was not necessary is that mine is one of three constituencies which are co-terminous with the Dominion constituencies. I challenge the hon gentleman to show to the House how it would be possible for a Dominion election to be held in Manitoba without the use of the 'thin red line.' Why, the thing is simply impossible, for the reason that the Dominion and provincial constituencies are not co-terminous, but lap over one another, and the only voters' lists that we had on the occasion of the last election were provincial voters' lists. It was necessary to introduce the 'thin red line' in order to remove from the list those who had no right to vote and include those who had.

Now, with respect to the subject introduced by the hon. member for East Hastings, namely, the case of these gentlemen from the United States against J. Obed Smith and Pritchard, I may state that Mr. Smith in his capacity as immigration commissioner in that western country is solicited a dozen times a day the whole year round by people who are looking for investments or who desire to settle in the country. I am not surprised that Mr. Smith has interested himself in securing information for people who desire to settle in the country. Now, it has been contended by hon. gentlemen on the other side who have spoken on this subject that Mr. Riddington, who was a land inspector, furnished information to Mr. Smith out of which he could make money. Now, Mr. Riddington, as inspector of Dominion lands, is not subject to Mr. Smith's orders. But Mr. Smith, I suppose, in his capacity as immigration commissioner, has facilities for securing information that is collected by Mr. Riddington for the benefit of immigrants and the general public. It is Mr. Smith's duty as an officer of the government to give such information with respect to land as has been obtained by such officers as Mr. Riddington. I did not know until very recently that the hon. gentleman intended to bring this matter up, and therefore I shall not consider at length, the propriety of a government official engaging in outside business. But I believe it is acknowledged on all sides that an official of the government, if there is an opportunity for a little speculation, is quite at liberty to engage in it, so long as it does not interfere with his ordinary duties. I would point out to hon. gentleman that the land that Mr. Smith has evidently been interested in is not Dominion land or land concerning which he had any information as an officer of the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What lands were they, then?

Mr. BOLE. I understand that these were lands, part of a lot of 151,000 acres sold by the Canadian Northern Railway Company to the Ontario and Saskatchewan Land Company. Of this total 100,000 acres were sold, as I understand, at the price the company paid for it. Some of the stockholders of the company were stampeded and sold at about the price they bought for, leaving 51,000 acres unsold. I understand that the Land Company had a provision in their charter by which the members of the company could purchase some of the land on payment of stock in the company, and I understand that that was taken advantage of to some extent. That is to say, 4,000 or 5,000 acres were bought by members of the organization leaving 47,000 or 48,000 acres still to be sold.

Now, with regard to the matter under discussion, itself, I would like to read the evidence I have. I am sorry I have not the official evidence which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) seems to have, but I read from the report in the Manitoba Free Press of October 27, 1906:

J. Obed Smith, one of the defendants, was also called and gave a categorical denial to the statements made by the plaintiffs as to the representations made at the time of the sale. The quantity of land which he and Mr. Pritchard agreed to hand over to the plaintiff Steele, was '48,000 acres, more or less.' It was with Steele that the whole bargain was consummated and he emphatically denied making any sale to the other plaintiffs, Powell and Buell.

I understand that Steele has been nonsuited in the case and certain damages have been granted to the plaintiffs Powell and Buell—one-seventh of the amount claimed, the amount claimed being $23,-250. I understand that it is Mr. Pritchard's intention to appeal against that judgment, and that it is the intention of the plaintiffs to appeal against that judgment as it affects them. Therefore, I think it is quite improper to discuss the merits of the case before this House until judgment is rendered and the terms of the judgment and the evidence are before us. But if hon. gentlemen opposite are determined to discuss the merits of the case, let me read the evidence of one Bredin, who made an inspection of the land:

The evidence of E. A. Bredin, land inspector for the Osler, Hammond and Nanton corporation, was taken on behalf of the defence. He testified to the effect that he had been connected with the original survey of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which made the selection of lands for that company's grant. He had been connected with surveys and land inspections in Manitoba and the Northwest since 1876, and was over the lands now occupying the attention of the court sixteen years ago. He had also made an examination of it, within the past few weeks, and while he would not say that he had personally investigated every quarter-section of the whole of the six townships under discussion, he had examined a very large portion of it.

He swore that the lands secured by the plaintiff were 'a good buy' at the price paid, $6.60 per acre. He made comparisons of the value of the lands which actually went to the plaintiffs and the portions which they asserted they should have got in addition to the 47,000 acres, and claimed that the lands which the plaintiffs got were equally valuable with those which they alleged had been culled out.

In view of that testimony, if it is properly reported, I think it abundantly clear that the discussion of the matter should not go on until we have before us the judgment of the court and the evidence in the case.

I may state that Mr. Obed Smith we in the west regard as one of the most efficient officers of the government. He is a very active immigration agent. I would not be surprised if he were once in a while mixed up in land transactions for the reason that I know that he is solicited a dozen times a day, especially in the busy season, for information as to land and it is very natural for him to turn to Mr. Riddington's report or to any other report of the land inspectors to enable him to furnish that information. I think that any gentleman from the United States who bought land at $6.60 an acre in this district should not appeal to the court with respect to their bargain because they have made, as Mr. Bredin has stated, a very good buy and I do not see for the life of me on business grounds why they should have brought any action.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, it must be, to all hon. members of this House, a very regrettable fact that the ordinary business of the House which the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) desires to be expedited in view of his wish to attend the colonial conference next month, should be of necessity delayed by the continued attention which the House has to give to matters brought before it of grave misconduct in the departments of the government or on the part of officials of the government such as this and such as have been brought to the attention of the government and of this House this session and last session. It is to uselessly and idly prolong a discussion of this nature for hon. members opposite to get up one after the other in the interests of their friends who may be charged as a gentleman is charged here and endeavour to cloud the issue and to gloss the subject by themselves making excuses which do not amount to anything more than just an invitation to the hon. member who brought the matter to the attention of the House to withhold his fire and not to shoot. I listened with some attention to the speeches of the hon. gentlemen who spoke on the government side of the House, and I appeal to you and to the House to say whether either of these gentlemen touched the kernel of the accusation of my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) against the Department of the Interior in this regard. Neither of these hon. gentlemen touched the crux of this point at all and very much to my surprise, and I am sure very much to the surprise of this country, when a charge so serious as this is brought to the attention of this House and in the presence of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), the Minister of the Interior sits dumb and opens not his mouth in defence of a public servant who is drawing from the coffers of this country $3,000 per annum to stand between the country and the speculator. The Minister of the Interior has been known to have excuses in this House. It is not often that the hon. gentleman sits dumb. It is not that he is not ready with specious if not eloquent and cogent arguments in answer to accusations and charges brought from this side of the House, but the hon. gentleman to-day puts up hon. gentleman behind him to offer excuses which do not touch the subject matter at all, to raise legal quibbles as to the pendency of appeals from the judgment and to present all sorts of excuses in order to cloud the issue which is before us. What is the issue? The hon. Minister of the Interior knows that as well as we all know it. The issue is as to whether J. Obed Smith, immigration commissioner, upon his sworn oath in a court of law, has not shown himself to be disentitled to hold the position under this government which he holds at the present time by his admitted misconduct as an officer of the government. There is no question of any pending litigation. There is no important question as to whether the judgment which has been rendered by a learned judge on the bench in the province of Manitoba is a final judgment or not. The question is whether, by word of mouth, writing, or upon oath, that officer has admitted that he has made use of an officer in his department and has made use of the services of other gentlemen employed in the Department of the Interior to further his private ends and to enable him to make money on the side. Is there any dispute, Mr. Speaker, about that fact? It is sworn to and sworn to by the gentleman who is himself charged. Surely that is evidence enough and no appeal by that gentleman and none of the laws' delays will enable the Minister of the Interior to put any different construction upon that admission. This gentleman was speculating with his position. Can the Minister of the Interior put it in any different light, or does he, by his silence, intimate to this House that there is no misconduct on the part of that official? Is it an improper act in the opinion of the minister for J. Obed Smith or any other official of the government, especially an immigration official, to use his position and the positions of the homestead inspectors under him, not for the purpose of furthering the interests of this country, not for the purpose of promoting immigration or of assisting immigrants as they come to the Northwest to make themselves comfortable, the conditions pleasant and the prospects happy for them by lending them, as it is his duty to do, all the assistance that he possibly can, free gratis and for nothing, to make comfortable homes for themselves in the Northwest country, to promote their prosperity, but for the purpose of promoting his own private interests? This man comes forward and in a court of law swears that he was using his office and the office of those subordinate to him to put money in his pocket in addition to his salary. That is the case that has been presented to this House by my hon. friend from East Hastings and that is the case that so far there has not been one word in rebuttal of either by any member of the government or by any follower of the government, perhaps the Minister of the Interior would say that, well, after all, the proceedings show—and I fancy the strenuous effort of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole), produced with iron bars and perspiration, was to try and get the House to believe it also—there were some comfortable features for Mr. Smith, and that it was not government land that he was dealing in, but I would like to ask the hon. Minister how far he would carry that doctrine into these excuses. Could it be carried, for instance, into the Department of Finance? Would the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) countenance an officer of his department dealing in government bonds or securities as a broker? Would the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) contemplate—I do not know whether he would or not or whether he has or not—but should he, in the opinion of the Minister of the Interior, tolerate an officer in his department, or an employee under his department, who has to fulfil the duty to the public, being interested in a canal, railway, or public work which comes under the jurisdiction of the department and in respect to which he has to make reports or to exercise some official jurisdiction. Or, how would my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) behave supposing it were brought to his attention that some officers in the employ of his department were found to be interested in contracts for the furnishing of supplies or arms for the maintenance of the volunteers in Canada? Would that be proper? Is there a line of demarcation, may I ask the minister, between acts so gravely improper as those which I cited, and which of course, are hypothetical and the one in question where Mr. J. Obed Smith uses his office to promote his private gain? Is that the work for which J. Obed Smith was appointed by this government? Was he appointed to prey upon the public, or, was he appointed to assist the public? Was he appointed to get as much as he could personally out of the office, or, was he employed to carry out to the best of his ability the immigration policy of this country? The people of Canada pay Mr. Obed Smith $3,000 a year for attending to the country's business, and for no other purpose. We have it on as high an authority as the present Minister of Justice, when he was Postmaster General, that a postmaster who receives $1,000 a year would be required to devote his whole time and attention to the duties of his office. Why is that rule not applied to Mr. J. Obed Smith who gets $3,000 a year? I was much interested in some of the remarks of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) who told us in a very appealing tone, how great a pity it was that unsettled lawsuits should be the subject of discussion in this House and that the opposition should be silent until this litigation had been threshed out to its conclusion, and that not until then, should we speak, according to his view, in well modulated whispers as to the misconduct of a government official. The hon. member (Mr. Bole) has forgotten some things; his memory is as clouded as he attempted to cloud this issue. Does he remember the taunts and the charges, and the abuse that came from his side of the House, against my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Fowler) against my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), against my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Lefurgey), in connection with matters which were then before the courts, but which had not been tried at all, and as to which there was no judgment of the court, but only a pleading. Whether the copy of the pleading that these gentlemen cited was a true copy or not we do not know but at all events the mere pleading seemed to justify an hon. member on that side of the House in making the gravest possible charges against hon. gentlemen on this side. In that case there was no judgment of a court, no evidence of witnesses, no sworn admissions as there were in this case; but merely a statement of the plaintiffs claim, and that justified members on the opposition side iterating and reiterating grave charges, and hurling taunts across the floor at gentlemen against whom there was not one tittle of evidence. Let me suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole), that we on this side of the House do not follow the example set by some hon. gentlemen opposite. We have sworn testimony to support the whole of the charge that is now brought against the Department of the Interior in connection with the retention in office of Mr. J. Obed Smith, after his misconduct has been proven. Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Bole) that if litigation over this matter had never arisen there would have been ample in the evidence, which has not been discredited, of the admissions made by Smith on oath, that he had been making money out of the public by the use of his office, and by the use of private reports made for him by other officials of the Dominion government. My hon. friend (Mr. Bole) tells us we should read the evidence, but I submit it is not necessary to go further than to take this one sworn admission of Mr. J. Obed Smith, and to ask the government upon that: Whether that is the kind of officials it appoints and maintains in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, in such an important position as Mr. Smith holds. But we have brought numerous instances of this kind of thing to the attention of parliament. We have moved resolutions, moderate in their tone, in condemnation of the methods employed by the government and its officials. We have, amongst others, moved resolutions condemning the Galway Cattle Ranch deal, the Robins Irrigation deal, and the Saskatchewan Valley Land deal, and calling for some action on the part of this government to show that it was a responsible government which has the welfare of the people of Canada at heart. But these resolutions have been voted down by the majority. We have brought to the attention of the House abuses of another class, such as the case of the postmaster at Thessalon. Here was an official who had been proven by the report of the post office inspector to have embezzled the public funds, for his pulp wood deals, his house deals, and his land deals. It was shown that he had taken money out of the post office till to purchase his pulp wood, and his house, and his land. The inspector recommended that he be dismissed, and he was dismissed, but having served the party interests of this government in a by-election and in the Dominion general elections, this same man wrote a letter endeavouring to place the blame upon one near and dear to him, and the very Postmaster General who dismissed him reappointed him, and to-day that man enjoys the office of postmaster at Thessalon: And so the game goes merrily on.

Mr. BERGERON. Did he get an increase of salary?

Mr. BOYCE. I do not know as to that, but I can tell my hon. friend that he gets a salary exceeding $1,000 a year, in addition to which he carries on a business which he stated in a letter to the department was bringing him $200 a day, and which he also stated was taking up so much of his time that some one else could rob the till while he was attending to his private business. And yet the present Minister of Justice, when Postmaster General, told this House that any postmaster in receipt of $1,000 a year or over must attend wholly to the duties of his office. But this gentleman at Thessalon gets over $1,000 a year, and yet he is allowed to engage in private business which he states in his own letter to the Post Office Department, exceeds the sum of $200 per day. This gentleman at Thessalon is very comfortably taken care of. After being dismissed summarily by the Postmaster General, after being found guilty of a serious charge, he is reappointed to office, and his qualification for reappointment was his activity in the general elections of 1904, and that alone. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) also suggested that the thin red line scandal in Manitoba could not have been avoided. I would remind my hon. friend that there was a time, when the Liberals were in opposition, when they discussed the Dominion Franchise Act, and I would ask him to consider very carefully, whether, had that Franchise Act been in force, there would have been any occasion for, or any danger of, the thin-red line scandal. I leave that to him for his consideration. As the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) reminds me, the repeal of that Act was promised by the leaders of this government when in opposition, and that was possibly the only election pledge which was carried out; and in the carrying of it out, we now have the pitiful excuse of my hon friend for the thin red line scandal. Now, how long is this sort of thing going to continue? I ask the Minister of the Interior whether he is so desirous of maintaining the public service of Canada in an efficient and honest state that scandals of this kind shall be met in a summary mannner and dealt with justly and firmly? Were this the only one it would be bad enough, but my hon. friend has got so thick skinned with so many of these scandals brought before the House, that he has come to relish them, and where he used to get up and make an argument in reply, he now sits silent.

Mr. BERGERON. There are too many of them.

Mr. BOYCE. Perhaps there are, and perhaps the more there are and the graver they are the thicker skinned and more callous the government of the day will get, because when this sort of thing is allowed to creep in it is likely to permeate the whole system of government. It is not as if charges like these were made with reference to one department only. They have been made before, and with regard to different departments; and if the government do not take notice of them there is a tribunal which will, and which will require clean and honest administration of the public service, whether in the Department of the Interior or in any other department, and that is the tribunal of the people of Canada. The people of Canada are becoming awake to the fact that the fountains of the administration of justice are impure, that the government are winking at iniquities like this. Hon. gentlemen opposite may gloss them over and vote them down to serve party ends, but the settlement day will come, when the people will declare their desire to have a clean government cleanly administered in every department. I appeal to the Prime Minister, a gentleman for whom I have the highest personal respect, who in 1893, on a public platform in this city declared himself in favour of a clean administration of every department of the government, making the strongest possible tirade against scandals that appeared in the public press and certain matters then before the House of Commons. The right hon. gentleman also went through the country, and in towns where I had the pleasure of hearing him, promised the people of Canada that if his party were returned to power, a clean administration would follow, and these scandals would be a thing of the past, their desire being to serve the interests of the people in the cleanest and cheapest way. I appeal to the right hon. gentleman to take cognizance of these charges and to see to it that some action is taken to lessen the number of them in future. He has the power to do it if he has the desire, and I earnestly trust that he will make it his business to see that the services of any man found in the position of Mr. J. Obed Smith, using the office of a servant of the people for his own profit, be immediately dispensed with. If the right hon. gentleman will not do that, I fear that when the people of this country have an opportunity to pass their opinion upon his masterly inactivity in that connection, they may in their wisdom and their might, see fit to dispense with his services. I beg, along these lines, to move, seconded by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup):

That all the words after the word 'That' be omitted, and the following substituted therefor:

'The government ought not to continue in office public servants who, in violation of their duty, make use of their official positions to promote their private interests.'

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the House for continuing the debate. I would not have done so had it not been that our friends opposite have placed their opinions in the form of a motion. As this debate or alleged debate was going on, I thought of the views expressed a few days ago by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) when he regretted so deeply the deterioration of debate in this House of Commons. I think he must have felt doubly grieved to-day as he listened not only to the subject but to the manner and method of the present debate as far as it has gone. There was one remark made by my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) which I think gives the keynote of the discussion. He said it is bad for people to get the impression that matters are not going right in the public service, for if they get the impression, it does not matter much whether matters are right or wrong. That, I think, expresses very fairly the attitude of my hon. friend and those who have spoken in this debate, and who will no doubt vote in favour of this motion. With them it is not a matter of whether there is right or wrong; it is only a matter of continued clamour, continued asservation and extravagant statements, if the public can be induced to believe that there is or may be something wrong. My hon. friend appealed to the right hon. leader of the government to do something to prevent the statement of these scandals against the Department of the Interior and other departments of the government. Unless and until the right hon. the premier shall be empowered to gag the capacious mouths of some of our friends on the opposite side, it will be impossible for these scandals to be stopped.

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot all have as nice a mouth as my hon. friend. We have to do with what nature gave us.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not so much the kind of mouth as the purpose for which we use it, and when hon. gentlemen use their mouth to no other purpose than to give vent to unfounded scandals, certainly the most beautiful mouth will not justify its existence.

Mr. TAYLOR. Tell us about Obed Smith.

Mr. OLIVER. As regards the scandals alleged against the Department of the Interior, that department has no cause of complaint if they are all of the character of the one brought forward to-day. The Department of the Interior has responsibilities extending from the international boundary to the Arctic sea and from ocean to ocean, which involve the employment of a very large number of officials. And if the charge brought forward to-day is a sample of the best or the worst our hon. friends opposite can do, then the administration of that department stands very fairly justified before the people. The people are reasonable and do not expect absolute perfection on this earth, even in the administration of an approximately perfect government, and if they secure good results from the public administration, the government is doing all that can be expected of it, and it will take something more than this exploiting of petty scandals to destroy public confidence. Might I give an instance which will show the character of the alleged facts placed before the House to-day. My hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup) read a letter which he said came from a most reliable person. He did not happen to mention the name of this very reliable person, but the subject matter of the letter was an accusation against the Department of the Interior for having appointed a man named Duggan to a position in the Land Titles office at Calgary or Regina or somewhere else. What particular crime this man committed I forget, but probably he had voted Grit at the preceding election and this was his reward. Well, it would surprise my hon. friend to know that this government has no authority to appoint Mr. Duggan or anybody else to a position in the Land Titles office at Calgary or elsewhere in the west. As a specimen of the credible statements made by the reliable friends of hon. gentlemen opposite this will stand. My hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) was good enough to read the law with regard to the responsibilities of public officials and applied the law as he read it, to the case of Mr. Smith. But he did not read the law as it is to-day, but as we hope it will be.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. minister say that it differs in any way from the law as it is?

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend will not interrupt I shall be much obliged.

Mr. LENNOX. Does he mean to say that what is proposed to be incorporated in the new Act is not what is in the present Act?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend will be content to accept the statements as I make them.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know about that.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not suggesting that I have any hope of convincing the hon. gentleman. The law, as it is at present, is as follows:

> No person employed in or under the Department of the Interior shall purchase any Dominion land except under the authority of the Governor in Council or shall locate military or other bounty land warrants, or land scrip, or act as agent of any other person in such behalf; and no person so employed shall disclose to any person, except his superior officer, any discovery made by him or by any other officer of the Department of the Interior, or any other information in his possession in relation to Dominion lands, until such discovery or information has been reported to the minister, and his permission for such disclosure has been obtained.

My hon. friend assumes that under this section Mr. Smith should be dismissed from his position. Does he know that Mr. Smith, in the discharge of his duties as immigration commissioner—one of his duties being to give information to people going into the western country with the view of directing them to such parts of the country as shall be best suited to them—has to take information from the homestead inspectors and land agents and other officers of the government in that connection and divulge it to people who may be looking for land. Therefore, Mr. Smith is not under any liability to dismissal, according to the reading of this section in the duties he performs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He is entitled to that, the minister thinks, for the purposes of his private speculations.

Mr. OLIVER. Again I would ask my hon. friend to permit me to make my own statement and he will be at liberty to make his.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree that the minister should not be interrupted.

Mr. OLIVER. I say that this man has certain duties to perform and those duties do not render him liable to the condemnation which hon. gentlemen opposite want this House to pronounce against him. I do not know that it is necessary that I should traverse the case which has been brought before the House, but since my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup) read from a newspaper, published somewhere in the United States, an article on this matter, let me read from a newspaper published in Toronto, the Toronto 'World,' a special despatch from Winnipeg dated October 21:

'SKINNED' IN A LAND DEAL—YANKEES BRING LAWSUIT.

Vermont Millionaires Charge Government Agent with Misrepresentation.

Winnipeg, Oct. 21.—(Special.)—A case comes before the high court to-morrow which promises to have most sensational developments, as it involves J. Obed Smith, government immigration commissioner, in a big land deal.

A. B. Steele, West Derby; Max L. Powell and A. B. Buell, Burlington, millionaire Vermont lumbermen, have brought suit against Smith and a real estate agent named Pritchard, for $23,000. They claim that Mr. Smith misrepresented to them a tract of 54,000 acres of land which they secured through him and Pritchard.

The Americans state that the cream of the land had been culled over and that the tract they got was far from what was represented. They have engaged the best counsel in the city, and are preparing to fight the case to a finish. They say that if they lose the suit here they will draw the attention of the American consul at Ottawa to the case and at least endeavour to have Smith removed.

The House can judge in whose interest this discussion has been brought up to-day. As to the rights of Mr. Smith to traffic in land, I do not know what my hon. friends have been placing before the public if it is not that this gentleman because he is in the employment of this government must not engage in land transactions. In other words, a man who is in the employ of the government must not engage in any other business. I submit that if this is a good rule it is a rule that has never been acted on by any government in any country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is applied to postmasters who receive over $1,000.

Mr. OLIVER. No, I do not think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is so stated over and over again.

Mr OLIVER. I think not; I think my hon. friend will have to revise his information on that point. I am stating the broad, general principle that we have no right to control over the private acts of a private person, and when we come to undertake to interfere with the rights of a private citizen in transacting private business we take a very serious responsibility. If it is asserted that Mr. Smith has no right to buy or sell land that is not government land—and it is not alleged that this is government land, it is private land—I am going to ask my hon. friend opposite in what position are hon. members of parliament sitting on that side of the House in regard to land transactions which have been discussed in this House? If Mr. Smith has no rights as a private citizen, neither have other people, and surely the obligations of a member of parliament are just as important and just as delicate as the obligations of an employee of the government and of parliament. Mr. Smith is one of the most important public officials in that western country. It is under Mr. Smith, and very largely by reason of his efforts and directions, that the population of those three western provinces has doubled within the past six years, has increased from 400,000 to 800,000. Mr. Smith stands at the gateway of that country and the increase of population there very largely passes under his control or under his review. That he has discharged his duties well, that increase is all the evidence that this country needs.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the North Atlantic Trading Company were entitled to that credit?

Mr. BERGERON. What about Preston?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Preston and the North Atlantic Trading Company have played their respective parts.

Mr. SPROULE. And passed off the stage.

Mr. OLIVER. Just as Mr. Smith has played his part. Each of these officials of the government has played his part as the general policy of the government has played its part, and the result has been a stupendous success. I submit that when hon. gentlemen ask the government of this country to condemn an official with such a record as that of Mr. Smith, in the discharge of his public duties, because of an alleged quotation from evidence said to have been given, I say that they are asking something that it not reasonable, that is outrageous and carries with it its own condemnation. If Mr. Smith has done wrong the case has been before the courts, and a judgment has been given which Mr. Smith is not prepared to accept and the people who have taken out the judgment do not dare to put Mr. Smith in a position to appeal his case. They have been careful not to do it until their friends here in this House had an opportunity to drag Mr. Smith's name with all the discredit they can give it before this House and the country. This is a kind of politics, a kind of political warfare, that I do not imagine will receive any but that credit which properly belongs to it before an intelligent and progressive country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). The facts which are relevant to this case have been dwelt on at considerable length and I do not propose to repeat them. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), who has just taken his seat, carefully avoided any reply to my question. He stated that Mr. Smith is a man of great energy, that a great deal of immigration which the governmen have been attributing to Mr. Preston and the North Atlantic Trading Company is really due to Mr. Smith. That is entirely beside the case.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. gentleman ought to quote fairly. I said that each had played his part, and that statement caused a great deal of risibility among our hon. friends opposite. I did not say that Mr. Smith was entitled to all the credit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman did not state exactly to what 'part' he referred. The question is not as to Mr. Smith's qualifications as an immigration agent. We are not attacking him on the ground that he has not been active in a certain way; I do not know whether that is the case or not. There is no evidence on the subject before the House except the statement of the minister. We are quarrelling with Mr. Smith's conduct for two reasons. In the first place because, being an officer of this government brought into the most delicate relations with settlers in that country who are seeking lands, he has seen fit to go into land speculation himself, and in the second place we are quarrelling with him because from his own sworn admission, against which I presume he does not intend to appeal, he has been using government officials to make reports for him in order that he might make money on the side. The minister stated that this gentleman has the right to use the reports of government officials for the purpose of affording information to intending settlers. I asked him whether he undertook, standing here, as a trustee for the people of Canada, to announce to the officials of the government throughout this country and especially to his own officials in the west that one of them is at liberty to make use of his position, to make use of other government officials and of official information for the purpose of carrying his private business; and the hon. gentleman exercised a great deal of discretion by informing me that he was going to make his speech and he did make his speech, which, however, is not very relevant to the subject. In the course of his speech he did not venture one word of reply to that question.

Mr. OLIVER. I will reply now if the hon. gentleman wishes. All I have to say is that each case will have to rest on its merits.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, on what kind of merits does this case rest? The minister has not made us acquainted with any merits on which this case rests.

Mr. OLIVER. The matter has been discussed before the courts and I am awaiting the judgment of the court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The judgment of the court has nothing at all to do with it; it would not make the slightest difference from a public standpoint which way the judgment went. I would be prepared to take exactly the same position, as far as this case is concerned, if Judge Mathers and the Court of Appeal had pronounced unanimously in favour of Mr. Smith on the question of misrepresentation. That is not the point. The only matter of concern, from a public standpoint is whether or not this man, enjoying a salary of $3,000 per annum, and supposed to devote his whole time to the public service and brought into these delicate relations with intending settlers, is to be permitted, in the first place, to engage in land speculations which must interfere with his public duties, and in the second place, to use government officials and official information in order—using his own words—that he may 'make money on the side.' That is the question, and not any question which is to be argued before the courts of the province of Manitoba. The minister says that each case must rest on its merits. That is a mere evasion, just as the minister's remark to me a moment ago was a pure evasion of the question which he dare not answer. By the vote which he will give in a little while, he will declare, and summon his followers to declare, that these men are entitled, notwithstanding that they are officials of this government, to make use of their public position, in violation of their duty, to promote their private gain. That is what this man has stated in this case, and he has stated it in no equivocal terms:

> You have made use of government officials to make reports for you in order that you might make money on the side?
> Yes, that is true.

That is not the statement of a hostile witness, it is the statement of the man himself whose conduct we are discussing. As I said before, I presume that he is not appealing to the Supreme Court of Manitoba against his own sworn statement in the courts of that province before a judge of the land and in the presence of his counsel. There is no appeal, so far as this case is concerned, in respect of that which alone concerns the public interest. The only question we have to consider to-day, as my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) said, is whether this government official in the west, brought into these delicate relations with men who are proposing to acquire homesteads in that country, and with men who are going there not merely for the purpose of homesteading but for the purpose of purchasing land, shall not only carry on his work as commissioner of immigration, but shall also carry on land deals and speculations for the benefit of himself alone, and shall do that, not by means of information secured by himself or through servants employed by himself, but by utilizing for that purpose government officials who have handed in their reports to him and by means of official information so acquired by him. If that is the principle upon which the government propose to carry on the public service of this country, well and good—it is only right and just that we should understand that that principle is boldly and unblushingly allowed by the Minister of the Interior, and that he and his followers propose to place themselves on record to-day in confirmation of such a position, absolutely against any recognized principle of constitutional government and absolutely against principles which have been proclaimed in this House by ministers of the Crown. The other cases, I suppose, were considered 'upon their merits.' For example, the postmaster at Cannington happened to be a Conservative appointment. He had a salary of $1,000 a year, and was interested in some business which he did not openly carry on. He was dismissed by this government, as I recollect the record—and I think I recollect it very well—solely because he was interested in that business; and the principle was laid down that a postmaster receiving a salary for his whole time should be dismissed if it were ascertained that he was interested in any other business even though he had not allowed that business to interfere with his public duties. Said the Postmaster General of that day, on March 19, 1906:

> It is, and always has been the policy and practice of the department to require postmasters to give personal attention to the duties of their offices, and when a post office is sufficiently important to call for the full time and attention of the postmaster, and the salary adequate for his maintenance, it is considered undersirable that he should engage in any other business.

That was the only ground for the dismissal of that postmaster. Yet this officer in Winnipeg has a salary of $3,000 a year, and I think it will be conceded that the duties of his office are sufficiently great and sufficiently important to require his whole time and attention, and yet he is permitted, according to the principle laid down on the other side, to engage in business which must take his time from his official duties; in short, he and every other officer of the Department of the Interior, according to the doctrine laid down, are to be permitted to carry on business for their private gain, to take the necessary time from their official duties and also to utilize other employees of the government and official information for the purposes of their private business. That is a new doctrine and a new principle. It may have been carried out in practice by this administration up to the present time—and I believe it has in some cases—but it has never been so boldly and unblushingly avowed as in this House to-day by hon. gentlemen on the other side.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). This debate has taken a turn which was not anticipated by me, at all events, on listening to the remarks of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), who brought the subject to the attention of the House. As I understood his remarks that hon. gentleman called the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the conduct of one of his subordinates which he thought at variance with the proper discharge of the duties entrusted to him. Had the debate been confined to that there would not have been much fault to find, and we could answer the hon. gentleman to his satisfaction. But the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) went further and moved this resolution, as an amendment to the motion before the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means:

> The government ought not to continue in office public servants who, in violation of their duty, make use of their official positions, to promote their private interests.

As an abstract proposition there is no objection to this. Everybody will agree to the doctrine that the government ought not to continue in office public servants whose conduct is as here described. If it were to come before us as an abstract proposition, I would have no hesitation to saying 'yea' to the declaration of the hon. member for West Algoma. But we cannot forget that this amendment comes after a debate, which has been going on for some time, in which one of the officers of the government, Mr. J. Obed Smith, commissioner for immigration in Winnipeg, has been under discussion, and, to some extent, under censure. If we were to accept this motion at the present time, it would be an admission on the part of the government that we agree to the strictures passed upon Mr. Smith; and, for my part, I am very far from being disposed to agree to anything of the kind. I say in all candour—and I think I shall be able to show—that nothing has been made out against Mr. Smith in his official capacity. Mr. Smith has been in office for a great many years, and so far as my information goes, he is one of the best officers we have in the department. I never heard, up to two days ago, that any charge was ever made against him. I was quite surprised to learn in the course of a conversation I had with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) after a note I had received from my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr.

Northrup) stating that he intended bringing this motion forward—that any charge had been made against Mr. Smith.

Let us review the accusations made against him to-day. I am ready to accept the version given by the hon. member for East Hastings, with very few exceptions. Mr. Smith was brought into a lawsuit by certain parties to whom he had sold land, and a judgment was rendered against him in the court which tried the case. As far as I understand there has been an expression of opinion by a judge but as far as I understand also there has been no formal judgment and the case is not finally disposed of. From the speech of my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Adamson) I understand that Mr. Smith's lawyers have advised him to take the case to the court of appeal and certainly I am not surprised at that. I would be surprised if the statements which have been made in this case were not brought to a superior tribunal there to have another hearing. As far as the circumstances reveal the facts to us we find that Mr. Smith had a land transaction with somebody and that one of the conditions of the sale—at all events that was the contention of the plaintiffs—was that there should be a whole, entire block of land which had been bought by Mr. Smith and his associates and that it turned out that the whole block of land which he had bought was not sold to the purchasers, whereas they had the intention of purchasing the whole block. Upon this condition of the contract which it appears was an element of the case, the action was brought and it developed that in regard to this condition, at all events, there was no written contract. It was simply a verbal agreement, affirmed on the one side and denied on the other. In a matter of this kind it is not surprising that the mind of one judge might be one way while possibly the mind of another judge might be the other way. Every one knows how dangerous it is to rely upon verbal agreements and if that was a condition essential to the contract my surprise is that the purchasers, who must have been keen business men, were satisfied with a verbal agreement rather than with a written condition in the contract. I do not know that there is anything to justify the conclusion that Mr. Smith has violated the contract which he entered into. So far as I can see I think that nobody can gainsay the conclusion at which I have arrived. But, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asks: 'Are you going to allow one of your officers to enter into land speculations? Is he not paid to discharge his duties and is it consistent with his duty that he should be allowed to traffic in land? There can be no two ways of looking at that. I do not admit that Mr. Smith or any officer of this government can engage in any other occupation than the one which he is paid for. He is paid to give all his time to his office whether it be that of the Commissioner of Immigration or any other office. When we give a salary to a man we expect to have all his time, but would it be reasonably pretended, and as I understand it that is the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that a man in the service of the government is not to have the same liberty as any one else to make an investment if he wishes to do so in land, or stock or anything else? Is that the position of hon. gentlemen opposite? If it is, it is a position which is not tenable. It is not common sense. Every man in the community as far as that goes is allowed, outside of his occupation, to engage in a legitimate transaction, but it is a very different thing for a man occasionally to enter into a transaction of some kind in which he has no management from going into that business as an occupation. If it were proved to us that Mr. Smith is a trafficker, a merchant, or a trader in land then I would say certainly you must be allowed to go into that, but if it be an isolated transaction, if it be a thing that occurs once in awhile, I do not know that a man in the civil service ought to be placed on any other footing than any other member of the community.

I can not see the relevancy of this case to the case which was mentioned by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition a moment ago in regard to the position of a postmaster. A postmaster who receives the sum of $1,000 a year as salary is expected to give all his time to his office. If he does not receive $1,000 a year in salary he may engage in other business, but if he receives more than $1,000 then he is expected to give all his time to his office. His remuneration is supposed to be sufficient to justify us in exacting from him that he shall give all his time to his duties and that he shall have no other occupation. But, supposing a postmaster receives $1,000 or $2,000 or $500, nobody pretends that it is not open to him, as it is open to me, or to any other member of the community, to engage in an isolated transaction, I do not know that Mr. Smith has done anything else. It does not appear that Mr. Smith is a trader in land. It does not appear that he does not attend to the duties of his office, but what appears is simply that this gentleman, with some other parties, upon one occasion bought and sold some land. After all, when we have an isolated transaction of that kind, I do not know that any one could reasonably tell us that he has violated the duties of his office and that he has made himself liable to censure or dismissal. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) stated that, answering under oath, Mr. Smith admitted that he had received information from his subordinate and that he had profited by it. If Mr. Smith had made such an admission it would be a matter which we would have to look into, but on a reference to the answer which was given by Mr. Smith, I do not so interpret it, nor do I think that the answer which he gave is liable to such an interpretation. As I understand it he might have received information out of which he might have profited and I dare say that every man who is a land agent may certainly profit by such information if he chooses to do so. But, I do not admit that he made the admission that he actually profitted by information obtained from a subordinate officer. I think my hon. friend from East Hastings will agree with me when I say—and in this I appeal to his sense of fairness—that it is not right or fair to any man who gives evidence of that kind to cull out a sentence from his evidence and quote it against him. There may be other statements which qualify it, which give another colour to this sentence and therefore to take a sentence simply out of a deposition which covers twenty or thirty pages of paper and hold it up and say this is what you said and judge this man by it is not fair to the party impugned. We have a right to see the whole of his evidence, to see if there are any qualifications, to judge of it in its entirety, because, to take only one sentence, might give an impression which reverses the meaning intended to be conveyed. I must say in all candour to my hon. friend from East Hastings who usually exhibits fairness in taking part in the debates in this House, that I do not think he displays his usual fairness when he comes before this House and asks it to condemn a man simply from a sentence culled from his evidence. In view of the circumstances as they appear to us, I can have no hesitation whatever in coming to the conclusion that the motion moved by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) should be voted down.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I propose to simply follow closely the argument made by the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and to discuss his positions leaving the extraneous matters alone. In the first place, as he is entitled to do, he raises a presumption in favour of Mr. Obed. Smith by saying that Mr. Smith is an old officer, a good officer and that there have been no faults found with him. That is a proper proceeding. What a man has made of his office work, of his character and the like of that goes to prove him all right until the special point is brought up in which he has committed a fault. Presumptively, therefore, the right hon. gentleman made a case in favour of Mr. Smith in his very first sentence. But, when it comes down a little later what is really the first thing that appears ? The first thing that appears is that Mr. Smith, the Dominion commissioner, a man whose office is very exigent, whose duties are manifold and multiplex, whose energy and intensity of service are such in the position that he holds that it would tax even such a good and able man as Mr. Smith if he gave all his time and energy to the work of his office. I think that is a fair inference to follow from what the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and the right hon. Prime Minister both said.

Suddenly, we find in a lawsuit which is brought, that this official, Mr. Obed Smith, with so many duties of such importance devolving upon him, figures as a public land agent. Can there be any exception taken to that statement ? My right hon. friend ingeniously, but fairly, states that no matter whether a man is an official of this government or not, and no matter whether his duties be light or heavy, or his pay great or small, you cannot debar him from making a private investment. Certainly you cannot. Mr. Obed Smith, or any Dominion official, had a perfect right to buy a home for himself, or to buy a lot of land in the city of Winnipeg, or to make an investment anywhere he pleased. That is his own private business. But, will my hon. friend maintain that in this transaction, Mr. Obed Smith is making a private investment ; that he is simply a man exercising his right to invest his money as he pleases ? Certainly not. Mr. Obed Smith appears in a large transaction, he is the agent in the disposal of over 50,000 acres of land ; he appears in the position of a public agent, acting for gentlemen who are well known as investors and speculators in Northwest lands. These gentlemen find in Mr. Smith an agent whom they are able to enlist in their service in this large transaction. That, is far removed from the kind of private investment that my right hon. friend pleaded for, and which it is the right of any official of the government to exercise if he thinks fit. But, would my right hon. friend say, in relation to a transaction like this, that it is a fair inference that this was the only land transaction in which Mr. Obed Smith was engaged. Prima facie, it would not be a reasonable thing that a private individual discharging his official duties and his official duties alone, and making a little private investment once in a while, should be picked out by large land dealers to carry on a transaction involving 50,000 acres. That at once places Mr. Obed Smith out of the category of the occasional private investors, and it elevates him as a man of mark for men who wish to speculate in lands in the Northwest, to go to in order to negotiate deals, with the idea of mutual profits. My right hon. friend spent a lot of time in tearing out all the padding in the lawsuit which took place. But I think my right hon. friend was answered before he made his speech. It is absolutely immaterial to this case, as to whether there was a lawsuit, as to whether there was a judgment, or, as to whether there was not. That is not the question which is being debated ; that is not the question which has to be decided here. The question is simply this : Does it appear from the records, that Mr. Obed Smith, while he was the Dominion commissioner of immigration, and drawing $3,000 a year salary, was in such a land transaction as has been described, and that he was making himself the agent and negotiator in the deal, with of course the expectation of getting profit,—and any man who undertakes to negotiate a sale of land is entitled to make his profits thereby. But let us see what appears by the record. The right hon. gentleman said that if it were an isolated case it might be condoned, but he would condemn it if it were not an isolated case. Well, Mr. Obed Smith, cross-examined by Mr. Wilson, deposed :

Q. Who was Mr. Riddington who sent you this report ?—A. One of the homestead inspectors up there.

Q. An employee of the Dominion government ?—A. Yes.

Q. Paid by salary ?—A. Yes, paid by salary.

Q. And you have made use of government officials to make reports for you in order that you might make money on the side ?—A. Yes, that is true.

Now, that appears upon the record. Take away all the rest,—as to the evidence, as to the judgment, as to it being a case which is now appealed—there is the admission on oath by Mr. Smith himself, that he made use of government officials, over whom he had authority. You may say that this official is not in the same department as Mr. Smith, but nobody believes but that Mr. Obed Smith, in his position, does have an authority—whether it be moral or official—and that he used that authority in this case to get information, and to give away original reports which he got from paid officers of the government in order to assist him in making a land deal out of which he was to profit. The Prime Minister went just as far as he could go when he said, that an official of this kind cannot engage in any but his official business for which he is paid, and limiting such an official definitely to a private investment which he may make from time to time, but utterly cutting out the business of a trader in any particular, and in this respect that of a trader in land. The case of the postmaster at Cannington has been brought into this discussion. It is a case in point. The postmaster at Cannington had a salary of $1,000 a year. He was engaged in assisting some relative of his in the grocery business. He was dismissed, and the reason given for his dismissal was, that being paid a salary of $1,000, it was his duty to attend to the postmastership and not to engage in any extraneous business. If that be the rule to apply to one government official who has a salary of $1,000, is it not a rule which ought absolutely to apply to another government official who has a salary of $3,000 and whose duties are much more responsible and much more multifarious, than the duties of the Cannington postmaster. But the Cannington postmaster had to get out of his office because he assisted his brother in the grocery business and was supposed to have some interest in it—although it has been proven fully this session that he had no beneficiary interest in it, and that his connection with it was by reason of a loan made by him, or something of that kind. Prima facie, Mr. Obed Smith appears as a trader in lands ; he appears as a trader in lands on his own admission; he appears as having availed himself of the reports of Dominion officials in order to further his trading in lands. I do not think it can be taken as an isolated case of private investment at all. It is the case of a public negotiator of land sales. The right hon. gentleman ended by saying that he could not condemn Mr. Smith on the statements that had been made, and on the evidence such as it was, before the House. But, having a prima facie case before him in which this Dominion official appears as a negotiator in the sale of 50,000 acres of land, the Prime Minister refrained entirely from giving this House any intimation that he, or the Minister of the Interior, would take occasion to look into this matter, and would by investigations find out, whether or not Mr. Smith was in the habit of negotiating in land deals of this kind, or whether or not this was an isolated case.

I think the least that the minister could have done was to have given that statement to the House, that inasmuch as evidence came out which implicated Mr. Smith in a wholesale transaction in lands, which put him prima facie in the position of being a trader in lands, of doing the thing more than once, of doing it often, may be habitually, the matter should be looked into most carefully and investigation put on foot to find out just what position Mr. Smith had been taking during the last five or six years with reference to the negotiation and selling of land in the Northwest. I think that is the least the Prime Minister could have done to set this matter on a proper footing. Going out as it does, the statement made by the Minister of the Interior, which was full and explicit, and had no ifs or ands about it, which was not limited at all as was the statement of the Prime Minister, that it is the perfect right of an official of this government, if he wishes, privately and outside of his duties, and in connection with the carrying on of his office, to engage in these transactions on the side, gives carte blanche to all the government employees in the Dominion of Canada to go into private speculation and to use their official positions in connection therewith. Translate this into all the branches of the Department of the Interior, let the hordes of men engaged in carrying on the Indians affairs of this country, the men engaged in the Yukon, the men engaged in the homestead business, the men engaged in the inspection of lands and the reporting on lands—let all the men throughout the whole Interior Department know that they have carte blanche from the minister, whilst being paid their salaries and getting intimate information as officers of the government in connection with their special duties, to use such information in order to make private investments and to carry on private transactions as go-betweens with others, and the administration of that department in the future will be much more difficult than it is at the present time. Let this matter be left just where it is by the Minister of the Interior and the Prime Minister, and you have done more to demoralize the public service of this country, to make it inefficient and unreliable, than any action that has taken place in this parliament so far with reference to the officials of the country.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the merits of the question now before the House, but to draw your attention and the attention of the House to what I consider to be a grave departure from the practice that obtains in the British parliament in reference to the conduct of public officers. I have heard the deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs attacked when he had a seat on the floor of this House advising his minister, and had no opportunity of defending himself; I have heard Mr. Preston attacked in this House; and now I hear Mr. J. Obed Smith attacked in this House. In the British parliament no such attack could be made. Under the rules of the British House of Commons, when an hon. member desires to attack a civil servant, he must move for a committee of inquiry, where the civil servant will have an opportunity of appearing and defending himself. Now, it does not appear to me to be British fair play to attack an officer of this government on the floor of the House where he has not the slightest opportunity of defending himself. I do not wish to raise the point of order at the present time, but I think the time has arrived when this House should take the position that the civil service of the country should not be attacked in the House of Commons. I wish to quote one or two precedents in regard to the practice in the British House of Commons. Mr. Todd has laid it down on page 215, volume II, as follows:

It is competent to any member of the legislature to call the attention of parliament to abuses or irregularities in the conduct of business in any department of state; but the intention to submit a cause of complaint to the notice of either House ought first to be communicated to the department concerned, so as to afford an opportunity for the redress of a particular grievance. If no remedy be thus obtainable, it would be proper to appeal to the House to appoint a committee of inquiry.

That practice is confirmed by other authorities who lay down the rule that it is not competent in the House of Commons to discuss the conduct of civil servants, they being responsible only to the political heads of the department who are on the floor of the House to answer for themselves. A case in point occurred in the year 1873, when a charge was made against a Mr. Scudamore, of the Post Office Department of Great Britain. A committee of inquiry was appointed, which reported a finding against Mr. Scudamore, and a resolution was introduced into the House denouncing the Post Office Department. Mr. Gladstone, in reply to the hon. member who introduced the resolution, spoke as follows '(Hansard' of 1873, p. 1229):

The hon. gentleman has criticised—and very naturally from his point of view—the conduct of the Postmaster General, but he does not confine his motion to the conduct of the Postmaster General. He extends it to the entire department, and both in the interpretation of the terms of the motion and in the speech of the hon. gentleman I read a strong censure on Mr. Scudamore. To censure the post office is not the phrase a man would adopt if he meant to pass a censure on the Postmaster General exclusively; and the attack on the post office dictinctly includes an attack upon Mr. Scudamore. Now, Mr. Scudamore is a very proper subject for animadversion, if he has done wrong. in the report of the committee, but he is not a fit subject for the censure of this House. It is the political officers of this House who stand between the permanent officers and its censure.

The committee before whom Mr. Scudamore was in a position to defend himself, had a right to censure him, but the House of Commons has not such right because he had no opportunity of appearing before it in his own defence.

Mr. Scudamore has committed a great error but that great error is, in my judgment, balanced by still greater services and upon the merits of this case I refuse to censure Mr. Scudamore. What I stand upon, with those who are not so well aware as myself of the great services of Mr. Scudamore, is that we should do wrong to adopt a motion which does not confine the sweep of its censure to political officers but includes within it these important permanent servants of the post office.

I think that the rule is absolutely laid down in this connection that parliament has no right to criticise a public servant of this country. There is a way of reaching these public servants when they do wrong, but it is hardly fair that a member of this House should get up and attack civil servants who have no opportunity of defending themselves.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is not an attack on civil servants we are making, but an attack upon responsible ministers of the Crown for allowing their officials to do wrong, and in this we are quite within our rights. We are laying a charge against the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) for having allowed his officials to depart from their well understood duty, and parliament is the proper place in which to lay that charge. Was not the same course followed in 1893 in that long inquiry against the Department of the Interior which was promoted by hon. gentlemen opposite, who were then in opposition? Did they not attack government officials then? They cited man after man in the department. Mr. Arnoldi, because he took a couple of brass dogs as a gift, was driven out of the civil service. These hon. gentlemen opposite were loud in their denunciations of the department because Mr. Arnoldi accepted that gift from a company from which he obtained supplies for the department.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I was not in the House in 1893, but I was old enough then to read the discussions. All this took place in the Public Accounts Committee where Mr. Arnoldi had an opportunity of defending himself.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all, the charge was made in this House, and Mr. Arnoldi could not come here. True he was brought before the Public Accounts Committee where he was questioned and cross-questioned by the hon. gentleman's friends and where he admitted like a man what he had done. Was there anything disgraceful in that, yet these hon. gentlemen endeavoured to hold the Minister of the Interior of that day responsible and to pass a vote of censure on the government because that had been done. Yet we have this hon. gentleman telling us to-day that the course we have taken is an improper one because it is an attack on officials. Sir, it is an attack on the responsible head of the department, and the motion is a vote of ensure on him for having allowed improper conduct to take place. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has asked where are all these scandals. Why, we have cited one after another this session—land scandals, grazing lease scandals, timber scandals—all in the Department of the Interior. And in each case we attacked the department and held it responsible for the conduct of its officials.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). The hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Ross) after coming down and getting his instructions from the Minister of the Interior, who no doubt consulted with the First Minister—

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I had no instructions from the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was in the House in 1893, when the hon. gentleman tells us he was old enough to read the discussions that then took place, and I am surprised that the right hon. First Minister should allow one of his supporters to take the position that we have not the right to charge the officials of any department with wrong doing. Why, in 1893 the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Customs and others of their colleagues, who were then in opposition, from day to day made charges against civil servants. And what did the First Minister of that day do? Did he put up a supporter to say that this was the kind of thing which the British House of Commons would not allow? Not at all; he took an entirely different course. But this government is in a different position. The officials who are doing their dirty work throughout the length and breadth of this land are their masters and the government dare not dismiss them. They have the government by the throat. But how was it with the late government of which Sir John Thompson was First Minister? Sir John Thompson then said: Bring on your charges and we shall dismiss every civil servant against whom any wrong-doing is proven. Why the most frivolous charges were brought by hon. gentlemen opposite against these civil servants. They even charged wrong doing because some of these officials took writing home at night and did it during extra hours and got extra pay. That was a charge made against them and some of them were dismissed on that ground. But these gentlemen have so added to the staffs of the various departments that there is a congestion of officials, and where a few dollars extra pay were earned by the civil servants of these days doing a little extra work at their homes after hours, we have thousands of dollars spent on permanent employees who could very well be dispensed with. The First Minister of that day did not take the position which the right hon. gentleman has taken. He did not put up one of his supporters and give him instructions.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I received no instructions from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). The First Minister did not put me up. I got up on my own volition, and I must ask the chief whip of the Conservative party (Mr. Taylor) to withdraw that statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman says he did not receive any instructions, but we on this side knew for some time that he was going to be the one who would be called on to reply. He had been consulting with the Minister of the Interior. Whether he received instructions or not—and of course I accept his word—he took his inspiration from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). But I am just drawing a comparison between the attitude taken by this government, who know that their officials are doing wrong, but who are afraid to chastise them, and the attitude taken by the late lamented Sir John Thompson when, as First Minister, he challenged the opposition to bring on their charges and he would investigate every one, and if any official were found guilty of wrong doing he would dismiss him from the service. That is not the position that the Prime Minister to-day is taking. It is pointed out to him day after day that his officials are doing wrong and in place of dismissing them he promotes them at increased salaries.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Does my hon. friend consider the resolution introduced by the member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) a charge against Mr. Smith ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I was not considering the resolution, I was answering the speech of my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross).

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (Kings' and Albert). The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) has cited some precedents in the British House of Commons. He claims that a different procedure should have been had with respect to this matter, and that the resolution as presented to the House by the hon. member for West Algoma is a charge against a certain civil servant, Mr. J. Obed Smith. Now, Sir, there is no mention of Mr. Smith or any other civil servant in the resolution. His name has been mentioned as an incident in connection with the discussion. The hon. gentleman from Yale-Cariboo finds fault with the hon. member for West Algoma because he did not move for a committee of investigation with respect to this matter and as I say he cites certain precedents in the British House of Commons ; but my hon. friend need not have gone very far in his research, he might have looked at 'Hansard' of last session and on page 5571 he would see that a committee of this House was moved for with respect to a civil servant and that the motion was voted down by a large majority ; the vote stood 41 for the investigation and 88 against. The motion, after reciting the charges against this particular civil servant, wound up :

> That in the opinion of this House the said Philip Wagner should be forthwith dismissed, or if he denies the truth of the said charges and allegations, an immediate investigation should be held into the matter aforesaid.

Now, if this man made denial of the charges against him—and they were made on the record of convictions of the court against him—if he denied these allegations then we asked for a committee of investigation. Did we get it ? It was voted down by 41 to 88. The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) was not in his seat but he was paired as voting against the motion. But his leader, the leader of the government, voted against the motion refusing the committee of investigation asked for. There was one of the most glaring cases where it was shown that a man, an official in the immigration branch of the Interior Department who had to do intimately and closely with the immigrants coming into the country, people who could not speak English, an interpreter and therefore a man upon whom these new immigrants must lean with the utmost confidence, had so far betrayed the confidence of these men that twice he had been convicted of taking money from them under false pretenses, and yet an inquiry into his conduct was absolutely refused. We can quite understand how the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) would think there had not been that change of heart on the part of the government which would be necessary to make them assume a different attitude this year from their attitude last year with respect to this investigation and therefore he proposed the motion in the manner in which he did.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). The right hon. gentleman who leads the House appealed to me to be fair in any statements I made against Mr. Smith or in connection with this case. I certainly wish to be fair. The Prime Minister took the ground that it is not a fair thing to take an isolated sentence from a document, from the evidence in the case, and to judge the witness from that one sentence. Partially I agree and partially I disagree with this statement. I can quite understand that under certain circumstances it would be most unfair to take an isolated sentence which is perhaps explained away and destroyed in effect by the context. In other circumstances it might be fair to take an isolated sentence which might be a straight question and answer. There are several answers given by Mr. Smith in the certified copy of the evidence, not in a fugitive scrap of evidence as the Minister of the Interior would imply—where statements are made by Mr. Smith that, on a fair reading, I think tell against Mr. Smith. At the same time there was a context which certainly modified what was said and I did not read any of these statements to the House. But the principal statement I read and which I think justified the position I took is not modified by any context or by any thing else in the evidence. It is a clear and distinct statement and was I think read to the House before. I take the liberty of reading it now and if the right hon. gentleman can show a line in it which in any way modifies the direct answer given by Mr. Smith or which should lead a member to change his opinion, I am quite prepared to accept the correction and to change the opinion I formed after reading the questions and answers :

By Mr. Wilson : Who is Mr. Riddington who sent you this report ?—A. One of the homestead inspectors up there.

Q. An employee of the Dominion government ?—A. Yes.

Q. Paid by salary ?—A. Yes, paid by salary.

Q. And you have made use of government officials to make reports for you in order that you might make money on the side ?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And in making these copies of reports in the exhibit, did you also make——

And then he was stopped by the lawyer on the other side. So that I submit that these are clear cut questions and answers and that unless Mr. Smith can come forward and say he entirely misunderstood the questions and did not intend to give the answers he did, the case is proved against him. As regards the charge made that we should not attack Mr. Smith here, in the first place we are not attacking him, there is no charge against Mr. Smith.

Mr. SPROULE. We are attacking the Department of the Interior.

Mr. NORTHRUP. We are attacking the department for not looking after its duty and the motion before the House is a fair attack on the department if they did not do their duty. Mr. Smith is simply an incident in the case to show that the minister did not do his duty and even when instances of malfeasance in office are brought to his attention he refused to banish the official and continued the official in office. The evidence is cited in proof of this case and I venture to say that what has been said about the cases in England falls wholly to the ground. The member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) spoke as if for the first time in parliament an attack of this kind was made on civil servants. Let me refer to an attack made years ago by a gentleman whose authority I think the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) will admit, at a time when the Conservative government occupied the treasury benches. This is what was said at that time, speaking of appointments to the bench :

I do not say that all the appointments which have been made by the present government have been bad but I say unhesitatingly that the present government, not the government of 20 years ago, but the government which came into office after Mr. Mackenzie's downfall, have appointed men who had no other qualification for the position than the fact that they had been mere party hacks.

That is an attack made on the judges of the bench in 1893. And that same speaker further down goes on :

The Senate is now composed very much as was the legislative council of the province of Quebec at one time, when, out of twenty-four members, there was only one Liberal. This is why the work of the bench has been degraded, as it has been. It is asserted and hon. gentlemen know the names as well as I do, that judges of the province of Quebec have paid for their appointments. It is asserted, and I believe the truth will be forthcoming some day, that judges contributed to the election fund of the Conservative party at the last election. This is a statement current in the streets of Montreal and Quebec, and I believe, moreover, the fact will be proved before many months have passed over. . . . These are the reasons why my hon. friend has spoken as he has to-night. Certainly the bench should be respected, but if the bench has to be respected, let the appointments be made, not for considerations of politics, but simply for legal qualifications.

These are the words of an attack on the bench made in 1893, by a gentleman who then bore the name of Mr. Laurier. Now, I do not wish to add anything to what has been said, save this: The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) seemed to complain that no amendment was made when I first brought this subject to the attention of the House. I may tell the right hon. gentleman that, at that time, it was not decided that any motion should be made. It was desired to know what defence the Minister of the Interior had to this charge, and, if the minister would give such a defence that we should know where the government stood, that would be the end of it. But after several hon. gentlemen had spoken, the motion was made. And then the Minister of the Interior rose and told us exactly what we had expected—that he had not intended to speak, and would not have spoken had not this motion been made. When I gave the hon. gentleman notice, I had no intention or expectation of my presentation of the case being followed by a motion—it was my intention simply to bring the matter to the attention of the House. But when it turned out that the minister declined to treat even with the courtesy of an answer charges which to us seemed serious charges, then, and not till then, it was decided that a motion should be made.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Boyce.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

403a (new item) Steel wire valued at not less than two and three quarter cents per pound when imported by manufacturers of rope for use exclusively in the manufacture of rope; and also wire rope for use exclusively for rigging of ships and vessels—under regulations by the Minister of Customs.

Free in all the tariffs

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the explanation of that new item ?

Mr. PATERSON. It was formerly admitted free of duty under item 625 as crucible steel wire, but as it is doubtful whether it is really crucible steel wire it has been deemed advisable to make a new item to cover it.

399. Wrought or seamless iron or steel tubing, plain or galvanized, threaded and coupled or not, four inches or less in diameter, n.o.p., 20 per cent, 30 per cent, 35 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did this stand?

Mr. FIELDING. It is one of a group of items which were held over. The rates are not changed but there is a difference in the size. Formerly the item read 'seamless iron and steel tubing over two inches' and we propose to enlarge it to four, the manufacture of these goods having been developed in Canada and things are being made now which were not made at the time of the former revision of the tariff.

404. Galvanized iron or steel wire, Nos. 9, 12 and 13 gauge, free, 5 per cent, 5 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the explanation of that ?

Mr. FIELDING. We had made it free from Great Britain and dutiable from other places. This is one of the several items in regard to which it is represented that there are difficulties of importing it from Great Britain especially in the western part of the country and we are making it free from all sources.

410. Coil chain, coil chain links, and chain shackles, of iron or steel, five-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, and over, 5 per cent, 5 per cent, 5 per cent.

Strike out the rates in the intermediate tariff and in the general tariff and insert the following rates: intermediate, 7½ per cent; general, 10 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is an increase. What is the explanation?

Mr. FIELDING. In this case the rate was 5 per cent all through and in order to make a difference we propose to make it read 7½ and 10.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the country from which we import these articles?

Mr. FIELDING. They may be imported from both Great Britain and United States.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I would like to ask if item 399 has been passed?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the change in that?

Mr. FIELDING. The change is an increase in the size. Formerly the limit was two inches and now we make it four.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the duty?

Mr. FIELDING. The rate of duty has not been changed—35 per cent under the general tariff. We shall have some provision in the schedule for drawbacks for certain purposes. We shall give some portion of the duty back.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Would you say at this time what the drawback would be? I think it was printed—it may have been an error—that there would be 99 per cent of a drawback.

Mr. PATERSON. It will be 50 per cent, I think.

Mr. FIELDING. There will be 99 per cent of a drawback for some purposes but 50 per cent for part of this. When used in casing water, oil and natural gas wells it is proposed to give a drawback of 99 per cent, but when used for the transmission of natural gas under high pressure from gas wells to points of distribution there will be 50 per cent of a drawback.

411. Malleable sprocket or link-belting chain, 15 per cent, 17½ per cent, 20 per cent.

Strike out all the rates of duty and insert the word 'free' in all the tariffs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the explanation of that?

Mr. PATERSON. It is not made here and it is used largely in the manufacture of agricultural implements.

Mr. FIELDING. And it is also used in the lumber industry to a very considerable extent.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I understand that there is a plant in which there has been invested $10,000 for the manufacture of the article mentioned in item 411.

Mr. PATERSON. We heard the other day that they were preparing to go into it in Oshawa, and as the hon. gentleman states representations were made that there was something like $10,000 invested, to make some of the smaller kinds, I suppose. But, to make anything like the quantity that the country requires it would have to be gone into on a very much larger scale than that.

Mr. TAYLOR. What do you propose doing with it now?

Mr. PATERSON. We are putting it on the free list.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where we have an industry like the Oshawa Mallable Iron company ready to do business we should give it some encouragement. You protect a little industry in Toronto like a brass works that are not manufacturing on anything like the scale that the Oshawa Mallable Company are but you refuse to give protection to this industry. I think you should let this item stand and consult with them. You should not wipe out an industry that is already started and which is employing over 1,000 men.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not understand that they are making this article. The representations are that they are putting in this plant, but that they have not gone to any length with it yet. The main business of the Oshawa Malleable Iron Works, is making malleable castings.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is the same thing.

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a very extensive institution at Oshawa; there has been a great deal of capital invested in it, and the enterprise has been in progress of development for a great many years. If there is further development proposed, and a considerable investment of capital for the purpose of manufacturing articles of this kind, it seems to me it is very unwise to change the tariff for the purpose of preventing that development of the industry. There seems to be an extraordinary consideration given to the manufacturers of agricultural implements; we have articles allowed to come in free for their benefit, and we have proposals for drawbacks and so on. Why is not this particular industry entitled to equal consideration?

Mr. PATERSON. The works at Oshawa are not engaged in making these particular items.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from South Ontario says they are so engaged, and that they have put in a plant costing $10,000 on the faith of the tariff as it was up to the time of this amendment. Why is it that so many of these amendments are designed for the benefit of the agricultural implement industry which seems to be in a fairly prosperous condition, and why is so little consideration given to some other industries?

Mr. PATERSON. According to the representations made to us by the Oshawa concern, the agricultural implement industry is a very vital fact in their prosperity. The Oshawa company represented to us that they employ about 1,000 hands, and that one-half that number are engaged the whole year round in making malleable castings for the agricultural machinery men. My own impression is that if that trade is preserved to this company, it will not attach so much importance to this particular item, because it means of necessity extra expenditure to the agricultural implement makers in this item which the malleable iron people do not claim to be in anything like a position to supply. That is my impression.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not minimizing the agricultural implement industry; I am pointing out that it is a very well established industry and in a very prosperous condition. No doubt it is a customer for a very large part of the product of the Oshawa works. But the statement is made that these Oshawa works will shortly be in a position to supply articles of this kind.

Mr. PATERSON. The representation made to us was, that they might be in a position to supply this demand, but we were not impressed with the information we had on the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What information has the hon. gentleman on the subject?

Mr. PATERSON. The representation made to us was that they were just beginning, that they were preparing to go into the business in a small way; probably they would enlarge by-and-by.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Christie) says they are manufacturing at Oshawa. This sprocket chain is not manufactured in the chain, but each separate link is cast in mouldings, and the links are then put together. Eight or ten feet of that chain is used on each agricultural machine, while my hon. friend (Mr. Christie) says they are able to supply it from Oshawa. I understand from the malleable iron men, that the agricultural men are getting all their malleable castings as well as the sprocket chain put on the free list, so that the industry at Oshawa will be wiped out of existence under this tariff.

Mr. PATERSON. The representation made to us was that our malleable works in Canada were all running to their fullest capacity, and therefore we thought that the putting of this article on the free list, in order to compensate the agricultural implement men for the reduction of duty, was a proper thing to do. The malleable men came here, and notably the Oshawa company said that was a serious matter, and that while it was true that they had all the work they could do, yet one half of their 1,000 employees were engaged in making these malleables all the year round. When that matter came before us we had to see if we could not accomplish our purpose in some other way, because while the malleable men have demand for all they can make, yet so much of the work of the Oshawa concern is in this one line, that it became a very serious matter for that one concern, even though they might have turned their attention to other things. As a result of our consideration, the hon. gentleman will find there will be a proposition made by-and-by.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I can state that the Oshawa Malleable Iron Works have been enlarging their concern to a great extent, and I am given to understand they have put in a plant costing $10,000 for manufacturing this very sprocket chain.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I was present when the deputation waited upon the ministers in connection with this matter and my recollection is that the Oshawa people stated that they were already in a position to manufacture this very chain and that a $10,000 plant has been established for that purpose. They pointed out that it would injure their business to a large extent if the industry were not put on a protective basis.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. In the case of a new industry starting, this government professes to protect it, and when they put this article on the free list in the present case, I think they are doing a most unfair thing to this industry. I would like to know what reason there is for the change. It was not free before; the duty on it was 20 per cent. I have not heard any satisfactory reason why that should be taken off, especially as there is an institution in this country which has put $10,000 into machinery for the very purpose of making it. I think that in all fairness to those people who have invested their money in this industry, the government should hold that item over until they get more information, if they cannot leave it as it is now.

Mr. PATERSON. I have given the explanation. I do not think there would be a desire to burden the agricultural implement maker with a duty on all they have to buy, because a company which is employing a thousand hands has invested $10,000 in this industry. Although I do not wish to belittle that, it is small in comparison with other industries which have $100,000 or $200,000 invested.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The point I do not understand is this. Up to the present time the manufacturers of agricultural implements have got along pretty well with a tariff of some 20 per cent on these very articles, and I have not heard any complaint during the last ten years on that score. Then, just on the eve of the establishment of this particular industry, or after it has been to a certain extent established, you suddenly change the tariff and permit these goods to come in free. What is the particular crisis in the development of the agricultural implement industry at this moment that makes it necessary to change the tariff? That is what I do not understand, and I do not think the minister has made that plain up to the present time.

Mr. PATERSON. It has been explained several times by the Finance Minister and others. The farmers, especially in the Northwest, are very much interested in agricultural implements; and, with a view to benefit them we reduce the duty on self-binders, reapers and mowers from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent; and in order to compensate the manufacturers for that change, we propose to give them a drawback of the duties they pay on certain raw materials which enter into the cost of the machines. We proposed to give them a drawback on their malleable iron, but we had a representation from the Oshawa Company to the effect that they have 500 men employed the year round in producing that very thing. That representation could not be passed over. This sprocket chain we were not aware was made in the country, and my information is that there was an investment of only $10,000 for the purpose of starting the manufacture. Though I do not want to under-value that investment, I did not consider that such an investment made by a firm employing 500 or 1,000 men at other work could be made a ground of objection to this reduction in the tariff for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is the minister going to meet the request of the delegation which waited upon him in regard to malleables and restore them to their former position?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. They will be put in the position they were in before.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). There are other factories besides the Oshawa factory which are very much interested in this very question. I do not understand whether the minister intends to wipe out the duty altogether on malleable.

Mr. PATERSON. No, the malleable manufacturers will be where they were before, but they will have 2½ per cent more duty on certain articles which they produce.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman has made a bargain with the agricultural implement makers——

Mr. PATERSON. No bargain.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT—that if they would allow a reduction of 2½ per cent he would give them free malleable iron and other considerations, I think they are getting altogether the better of the deal. The privileges he is giving them under the changes proposed are far in excess of the 2½ per cent rebate they are giving, which will not benefit the farmers one iota, because I am in a position to state that under the new contracts which the implement makers have made since the introduction of the tariff, they are putting the sellers of the implements on the same basis as they did last year, which shows that the farmers will have no benefit from the change in the tariff. So that the hon. gentleman is putting into the pockets of the implement makers and those who are making the raw material for them all the benefit of the change. I do not know just what hold these people have on the government, but they evidently have a hold that is very material.

Mr. PATERSON. If they had much of a pull I do not suppose we would have left the duty where it is on all other malleables. There will be the same duties as there were before, except on the malleable castings which are part of the machine and which are admitted at 17½ per cent instead of 20 per cent. On other malleables, which were 25 per cent before, the duty will now be 27½ per cent, so that the malleable industry will be in a better position than it was in the past.

Mr. BLAIN. But it is quite correct that the concession which the government propose to make in this particular item is to the agricultural implement manufacturers.

Mr. FIELDING. It also affects the lumber interest which is a very large industry.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understand there is some change of heart on the part of the government, including the Minister of Customs, on this item. As it is before the committee, the preferential tariff is 15 per cent the intermediate 17½ and the general 20 per cent. They propose now to erase these altogether and make it free. Therefore there is a change of heart.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. And the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wright) has pointed out that this is a concession made to the agricultural machine manufacturers.

Mr. PATERSON. And lumbermen.

Mr. TAYLOR. What do they use sprocket chains for?

Mr. PATERSON. In their mills, and lots of other manufacturers use them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wright) to say that they are manufactured in Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. A sprocket chain is simply a lot of links run together. It is a question simply of setting the links in place. I would not like to say that all the sizes of links are made in Canada but there is nothing to prevent any ordinary institution turning out these links. It is simply a question of room.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I think that should be fairly satisfactory to the deputation which waited on the government. The matter was thoroughly laid before the minister and he endeavoured to meet the views of the committee. If the item stands, we can hear whether it is made in other factories but I understood the deputation to say it was only made in one factory.

Some resolutions reported.

At six o'clock House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 7, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. In the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1900, page 10, for the fiscal year 1899-1900, the following sums were voted by parliament to the Canadian Bank of Commerce for Yukon business.

Canadian Bank of Commerce for services in handling and shipping gold dust from Dawson:—
4 per cent (including insurance at 1½ per cent, freight at 1¼ cent, convoy and all other charges connected therewith ⅝ of one per cent) on $533,695.44, to June 1, 1899.. ..	$21,347 80
2 per cent commission on drafts issued free of charge to miners at Dawson, to June 1, 1899..	4,285 96
1½ per cent on revenue collections, $664,274.83, to September 30, 1898..	9,964 10
1½ per cent on cash payments, $252,555.51, at Dawson, to September 30, 1898..	3,788 33

1¼ per cent on cash payments of $425,531.84, from October 1, 1898, to April 30, 1900..	5,319 14
	$90,851 75

This amount was paid as follows :

July 26, 1900..	$15,257 78
" 27, 1900..	24,860 67
" 31, 1900..	36,714 10
August 3, 1900..	4,911 73
" 14, 1900..	5,319 14
" 9, 1900..	3,788 33
	$90,851 75

For the fiscal year 1901-02 the sum of $53,169.36 was paid on the 26th June, 1902. This amount represented ¾ of 1 per cent on the business from 1st of May, 1900, to 30th of April, 1901, and ⅝ of 1 per cent on the business from the 1st of May, 1901 to 24th of April, 1902.

In 1903-04 the sum of $19,000 was paid on the 9th of December, 1903, representing ½ of 1 per cent on the transactions in the Yukon for the fiscal year ended 30th of April, 1903.

In the fiscal year 1904-05, on the 26th of September, 1904, $12,600 was paid, being ⅜ of 1 per cent on the business for the fiscal year ended 30th of April, 1904.

2. None. The account is kept with the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Ottawa.

3. None. There have been no overdrafts.

4. None. The situation in the Yukon was exceptional. There was no bank in the Yukon when the government began to have extensive business in that region. The Canadian Bank of Commerce established a branch at Dawson upon assurance that reasonable compensation would be paid for the transaction of government business, the rate of such compensation to be such as the Minister of Finance might from time to time determine. The rates of commission are given above. A further reduction to ¼ of 1 per cent has been made in the rate that has been allowed for the business between the 1st of May, 1905, and the 31st of March, 1907. Whenever it is felt that the conditions governing the financial business of the government in the Yukon approximate those prevailing in the rest of Canada, the commission will be abolished.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Has the Department of Militia and Defence any reports touching or concerning the Ross rifle from any of the following officers : officer commanding Royal School of Infantry, Quebec ; officer commanding Royal School of Infantry, Toronto ; officer commanding Royal School Infantry, Halifax, N.S.; officer commanding Royal School of Infantry, London, Ontario ; officer commanding Royal School of Infantry, Fredericton, N.B.; officer commanding Garrison Artillery, Halifax, N.S.; officer commanding Royal School of Cavalry, St. Johns, Quebec ; officer commanding Royal School of Cavalry, Toronto ; chief staff officer, Eastern Ontario command ; officer commanding 6th regiment Canadian Artillery ; officer commanding 67th regiment, Carleton Light Infantry ; Major Goudet, G.C.F.; or any other officer serving in a subordinate position in any of the corps mentioned ?

2. If so, what is the nature of the reports, and when were they received ?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). My hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) has placed in my hands the following answer : So far as there are any reports in the Department of Militia and Defence mentioned in the question they will be included in the Ross rifle returns, (already called for by the House), to be laid on the table in a day or two.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Hon. Jacques Bureau, member for the electoral district of Three Rivers ; introduced by the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and hon. L. P. Brodeur.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That from this date to the end of the session, government orders have precedence on Mondays, immediately after questions to be put by members.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). There are some motions that I think ought to be considered on Monday next and I think the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should make that motion read 'from and after Monday next to the end of the session.' I have one Bill coming in. It only gets on the order paper to-day and there are a number of important motions by members to be considered. For instance, there is one by the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) who desires to secure for the people of the west a three cent passenger rate, and who wishes to discuss that question in this house. I would like to see an opportunity afforded of discussing it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is not well informed in regard to the motion of my hon. friend from Strathcona. He will have an opportunity of moving his motion on the Railway Bill. He has given notice to that effect and therefore he is not affected at all by the passing of the motion that I have just put before the House to take Mondays. We are now in the third month of the session and I think the time has come when we should take Monday if we want to have prorogation at an early day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is quite true that we are in the third month of the session ; in fact we are in the fourth month of the session as three and a half months have elapsed already. Of course, three weeks come out of that during which we were not sitting. But, on the other hand there are some motions upon public Bills and orders, one of which I would like to have discussed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Which one ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No. 18.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend insists upon having a further debate upon his question—No. 18—I do not know that I would object very seriously.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not imagine that very much further debate would be requisite. As far as I am concerned I do not desire to say anything upon it and it has been fully discussed on both sides of the House. All that would be necessary would be to give an opportunity if any one desires to say anything. I do not imagine there will be very much discussion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will arrange with my hon. friend about that.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Could my right hon. friend bring up his Railway Bill before that ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am only speaking for myself ; I do not know about other questions under public bills and orders and motions. Perhaps some arrangement might be made by which we could take motions upon which there is no discussion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. For the granting of papers ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection, and on next Monday we can do that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that would leave the whole of the rest of Monday for government business and possibly we could arrange to expedite such motions until the end of the session.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to item 13 under notices of motion. I would like to have that discussed. It is not a matter upon which there need be any division of the House. Certainly I would like to have an opportunity of discussing the matter and I would like also an opportunity of considering a motion for the second reading of Bill (No. 16), item 3, of public Bills and orders 'An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act.' I would like an opportunity of discussing both of these matters.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Notices of motion have been called once or twice already.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps there are same matters amongst the notices of motion that members would like an oportunity of discussing on going into Committee of Supply, and on Monday we could take the opportunity of dropping these so that they would not stand in the way. Perhaps there would be no objection to that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that we will object to that very seriously. We can run over the paper on Monday.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again in Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. R L. BORDEN.

411. Malleable sprocket or link belting chain, 15 per cent, 17½ per cent, 20 per cent.

Strike out all the rates of duty and insert the word 'free' in all the tariffs.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I believe it has been understood that my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) desires to make his motion in amendment to the resolutions, and as several hon. gentlemen have expressed a desire that he should do so at the time agreed upon he has asked that he be permitted to make his motion to-day, to which we have no objection.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, when the budget was brought down in the early days of the session I gave notice that on a subsequent day I would move that the British preference be confined to goods imported into Canada through Canadian seaports. This, Mr. Chairman, I submit is but carrying out the lines of policy which have actuated the parliaments of our country ever since we became a confederation, namely, that the traffic of this country should be from east to west and from west to east ; in other words, that the traffic in Canadian produce should be through Canadian channels. It was under the inspiration of that policy that we contributed millions to help to build the Canadian Pacific Railway ; it was under its inspiration that the Intercolonial Railway was built, and that large sums of money were expended upon the canals of Canada. All these great projects were carried to completion for the purpose of keeping Canadian trade in Canadian channels. And, need I mention that the last great project of this government, the building of the National Transcontinental Railway, was launched with the same object in view? All parties in Canadian politics have endorsed that policy, and had it not been the policy of this country, we would to-day see most, if not all, our trade diverted from Canadian channels and going through American ports. In 1897 the right hon. the Prime Minister, in the course of a patriotic speech, stated he would not rest content until all Canadian commerce should pass through distinctly Canadian channels, and in the intervening years he has nobly devoted himself to the accomplishment of that end. I believe this policy is endorsed by the great majority of the Canadian people, and the motion of which I have given notice is directed towards the same end.

One of the objects of the British preference, perhaps I might say its chief object, was to draw together more closely the motherland and her daughter colony. The British preference was described as an arrangement within the family, and yet during the past year twenty million dollars' worth of goods imported into Canada under the British preference—not including the goods which have entered free of duty—have been brought through foreign ports. My desire is that this trade, which to-day finds its way through American channels, should be diverted to the development and prosperity of Canadian ports and railways and British shipping.

Prior to 1901, individual boards of trade in different parts of Canada had adopted resolutions endorsing this proposition. In August of that year, at a general meeting of all the boards of trade of the maritime provinces, held at Chatham, N.B., the following resolution was passed :

Resolved, that in the opinion of this board, the preferential tariff, applying to imports from Great Britain, should only apply to goods imported directly through Canadian ports.

In that same year, 1901, the legislature of New Brunswick unanimously passed a resolution on the same lines, and forwarded that resolution to Ottawa. The discussion of this proposition was, however, confined largely to the maritime provinces, but in 1902, at a convention of all the Canadian boards of trade, held in Toronto, the following motion was proposed :

British preference be confined to goods brought through Canadian ports.

It was moved in amendment :

In order to encourage the importation of British goods via Canadian ports this conference desires that the preferential rebate on goods imported from Great Britain arriving by United States ports shall be limited to 25 per cent.

After very full discussion, the amendment was declared carried. I shall quote from the utterances of some prominent Canadians at that convention. Mr. George E. Drummond, who afterwards became president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in supporting the original motion, said :

There is no question that if you can fill these Canadian Atlantic steamers, both ways, it will mean cheaper freight rates for the men of the west, and our railways will meet us in a generous way, I am perfectly confident, if the volume of trade will permit of it. For that reason I propose to support this motion. My friend from Windsor has spoken of what the Americans may do. I tell him that when the Americans meet in such a conference as this, they do not care much what Canadians are going to do. They believe in themselves. We in this country have never had sufficient confidence in ourselves.

Mr. D. R. Wilkie, of Toronto, in the course of a lengthy speech, said :

We have granted this privilege of a preferential tariff in favour of British goods, and it was said at the time it was passed that we would suffer for it : that the Americans would retaliate. What have they done ?

After referring to the statements that had been made when the British preference was first granted, he said :

As to the argument of Mr. Saunders, that he was forced to export his goods by way of Boston or New York, what does that mean ? It means that by our allowing this preference on British goods coming through Boston and New York, instead of limiting it to goods that come only through Montreal, Halifax, Quebec and St. John, he was forced to send his goods to Boston and New York. Force them to bring our goods through Canadian ports and you will have cheaper freight rates for Canadian products from your own ports.

Subsequent to the Toronto convention, there were a number of resolutions passed by boards of trade in Canada, and on the 20th of June, 1904, I had the honour of moving in this House the following resolution :

That in the opinion of this House the preferential tariff should only apply to importations through Canadian seaports.

Among the hon. gentlemen who took part in the discussion on that resolution was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who said :

But for my own part I am heartily in favour of it, and if he decides to divide the House upon it, I shall have pleasure in giving my vote in support of the motion. For the purposes of the present budget and the present condition of affairs we cannot deal with it. But I hope there will be such an educational movement on the question, that, at no distant day, we may adopt it as part of our practical legislation. If that can be done at no distant day no one will rejoice more than I shall.

After referring to the reasons which I had given in support of the motion, he said :

So, while I do not say that this motion will receive the assent of the House, to take effect at once, it is a move in the right direction. Even if it is not received with unanimous approval, as I would desire to see it received, I trust that the time will soon come when we may accept it as part of a thoroughly national policy.

The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) spoke upon the question, and on being asked by the then member for Victoria, Cape Breton, his opinion as to the advantages which would accrue to Canada from the adoption of the policy enunciated, the member for Grey said in reply :

I took it for granted that no member of parliament was so wanting in common sense that he would for one moment doubt the advantage of it.

The right hon. the Prime Minister, during the course of the debate, said :

Upon the general principle of this resolution there cannot be any difference of opinion.

After referring to the remarks of Mr. Wright, member for Renfrew, in reference to the lack of facilities for shipping in our ports, Sir Wilfrid said :

In my judgment at all events, the way to have better facilities and accommodation in our own harbours, is to turn as far as possible all our trade to these harbours.

The right hon. gentleman, however, stated that if such a policy were adopted without notice it might cause disturbance in the country. The hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) said :

I would be inclined to go a little further than my hon. friend from Cumberland. I do not see any reason why we should restrict this enactment to goods entered under the British preferential tariff.

The only members of the House at that time who spoke against the motion were the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Heyd) and the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright), who referred to the congestion which had occurred with respect to east bound freight and who feared that this might have some ill effect upon the transportation of the farmer's produce in that regard ; but we were not discussing east bound freight. The resolution which I had the honour to propose passed this House with only one or two dissenting voices.

Since that time, and particularly during the past few months, resolutions have been adopted by different boards of trade in Canada, a number of which have been sent to me. At the last meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, held in Winnipeg, the following resolution was adopted :

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in conference assembled, desirous of building up Canadian ports, unanimously favours the application of the preferential tariff only to goods coming into Canada direct from the country of their origin.

If there are any members of this House who are members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and who were at that meeting, I desire to refresh their memory with this resolution, which it is stated was passed unanimously.

Last year the total imports from Great Britain into this country amounted to $69,194,588. Of this amount 66·21 per cent came in under the preference, 1·21 per cent was subject to the surtax, 8·64 per cent was subject to the general tariff, and 23·94 per cent came in free. The imports from Great Britain into this country through American ports last year amounted to something over $13,000,000; the imports of sugar from British possessions amounted to about $4,500,000, and the goods imported from other parts of the empire entitled to the British preference bring the total importation into this country through American ports up to about $20,000,000. I want to point out that these importations are not confined to the winter months, when the ports of Montreal and Quebec are closed, but of these importations from Great Britain about $5,000,000 worth were brought through American ports during the summer months. So that the argument that the ports of St. John and Halifax are too far away certainly does not apply to these goods brought in during the summer months.

Mr. KEMP. Are these figures set out in the Trade and Navigation returns ?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Will the hon. gentleman give the total volume of goods entitled to the preference which are imported through Canadian ports?

Mr. LOGAN. About two-thirds of the importations from Great Britain come in through Canadian ports.

Mr. BERGERON. About $40,000,000 worth.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, I desire to state as briefly as I can what I consider would be some of the advantages of the adoption of this policy, and afterwards I propose for a few moments to refer to some disadvantages which some people claim would result. In the first place, the adoption of this policy would mean the intensifying of a thoroughly Canadian national policy and a declaration of our independence of the United States of America. So long as we have to admit that we are dependent upon United States ports, so long we have to admit that we are dependent upon the United States of America. In the second place, it would mean the encouragement of steamship lines plying between Canada and Great Britain and the different countries entitled to the preference, giving to the steamship lines between Great Britain and Canada westbound cargoes, which are seriously needed to-day, thus giving encouragement to the shipping industry. Shipping should be one of the greatest industries of this country. To build up the ship-building industry of any country is to build up the nation itself. The third advantage of this policy would be the building up of Canadian maritime ports on the Atlantic and on the Pacific. I hope that we in the east and in the west are not selfish. I do not want it to be thought, for myself personally or for my constituency, that this policy is going to be of any direct or special benefit to us. It will be the same benefit to us that it will be to the rest of Canada. It has been claimed that this policy is in the interest of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I contend that it is in the interest of all Canada that we should establish in this country a thoroughly Canadian national policy. We in the province of Nova Scotia cannot be charged, I think, with being parochial in our politics, in view of the fact that we have borne our share of the cost of building the great Canadian Pacific Railway, although not a foot of it is in the province of Nova Scotia. Nor have we complained that this country has adopted the policy of building another great transcontinental line at a cost to the public treasury of probably $100,000,000, although not a foot of that railway is to be built in the province of Nova Scotia. In fact, we have endorsed that policy unanimously, as the last general election in Nova Scotia showed. But what we ask is that there shall be a Canadian policy, not only for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but for all parts of the Dominion of Canada, cementing this country more closely together than it is at the present time. The fourth advantage of this policy would be the lessening of eastbound ocean and rail freight rates by providing westbound cargoes. A representative of one of the largest steamship companies operating to Canadian ports writes to me as follows:

From my experience of 25 years I may say that steamers on the westbound trip from Great Britain or Europe are rarely full of cargo, the vessels depending almost entirely on the freight from Canada to Great Britain and the continent for their earnings. That sufficient tonnage could not be obtained to carry the traffic is, from my experience, incorrect. The fact of the matter is that all the large lines coming to Canada, if the traffic was obtainable could place a larger number of steamers on the several routes. The lack of business, especially on the westbound voyage makes it unprofitable. In the winter months, when the boats run to both Halifax and St. John if full cargoes were obtainable to Canada we could give lower freight rates on goods carried from Canada than when earning practically nothing westbound, which is pretty much the case at present.

Referring to sugar he says:

A large amount of the traffic that comes to Canada finds its way via New York and Boston. Nearly all the sugar for the Montreal refineries comes via New York, whereas if the preference was only given to sugar coming direct to Canadian ports it would benefit Halifax and St. John, give employment to an extra number of steamers, give a large extra revenue to our railroads and leave a large amount of money in Halifax and St. John and also Montreal.

By encouraging return cargoes, it would hasten the date when we shall have a fast Atlantic steamship service. This is neither the place nor the time to speak at length on the advantages of a fast service; but every year and the more I travel, I am the more convinced that it is the bounden duty of this government to provide a fast Atlantic service at the earliest possible moment.

It would give increased revenue to the railways of Canada and especially increased business to the Intercolonial Railway.

To-day goods shipped from Liverpool to Vancouver are generally carried in American bottoms to American ports and thence transported over American railways across the whole length of the continent. Why should we allow this to continue? The Intercolonial Railway is the property of the people of Canada. We are told, in season and out of season, that it is a sink hole, that we are sinking large amounts every year in its upkeep. But what road on earth could be expected to pay its way so long as its owners do not try to divert traffic to it? If it be considered that the Intercolonial Railway is a burden on the people, let the government come to its rescue. Let us insist, as we can, that goods shipped from the mother country to the daughter colony shall arrive at a Canadian port and be transhipped over the government road, thus giving the Intercolonial Railway increased earnings. I propose in a moment pointing out what we have done in the last few years to increase the facilities of the Intercolonial Railway for the handling of this traffic.

Last in the list of advantages is this, that it would remove from the minds of British exporters the idea that Canadians have to depend on United States ports and railways during the winter season. It would show them that the reverse is the fact and thus be an object lesson of our self-reliant position.

A few months ago a gentleman in Ottawa ordered certain goods from a large shipping house in London to be delivered in this city before Christmas. He ordered the goods to be sent by the Canadian Pacific Railway steamship line. They were sent, however, via New York, with an explanatory letter stating that the shippers had tried to get them shipped before the Canadian ports were frozen up but that was impossible. Ask nine out of ten Englishmen whether we in Canada have an ocean port open the year round and they will say no, that you have to get to Canada through Boston or New York or some other American port. I should like to remove this idea and teach the people of Great Britain that we have ports as free as the air itself during every day of the year.

Let me pass to some objections urged against the adoption of the policy I am advocating. The first is the excessive freight rates. Now, in debating this question, I do not want to give any guess work figures, but the actual existing conditions. It is all very well to say that the Intercolonial Railway is frequently snowed up and not available. Let me give the exact conditions on that road and the exact time it has taken to transport goods during the past winter.

As regards excessive freight rates, I may say that to-day the freight rates on goods brought into Canada from Liverpool are the same, if not less, via Canadian ports than via American ports. The Canadian Pacific Railway freight tariff as published is, if anything, lower than the freight rates as published via New York and Boston to-day. It may be said that if we were to adopt this policy, there would be less competition and freight rates would increase. But I submit that while that might have been said a few years ago with a good deal of reason, it cannot be said with any reason to-day. To-day we have so many steamship lines crossing the Atlantic that we have competition within ourselves.

But the objection is raised by some of our friends—and it is the most reasonable I have heard—that this policy would place the people west of Lake Superior at the mercy of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But we would not be confined to the Canadian Pacific Railway even if this policy were adopted. We own the Intercolonial Railway so that goods could be landed at Halifax or St. John and carried over the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, and from that city they could be sent either over American or any other railways.

The second objection is that there are not sufficient independent lines to create competition in freight rates between Canada and the old country. Well, we have at present operating between Great Britain and Canada the following steamship lines :

The Canadian Pacific Railway line of boats from Canadian ports to Liverpool, London and Bristol ; the Allan line to London and Glasgow ; the Head line to Belfast and Dublin ; the Donaldson line to Glasgow ; the Thompson line to London ; the Dominion line to Bristol and Liverpool:

I must say, with regard to the Thompson and the Dominion line that they do not run a winter service from a Canadian port to Great Britain but from Portland. We have also :

The Manchester line from St. John, N.B., to Manchester ; the Furness line, running all the year round between Halifax, St. John, Liverpool and London ; the Elder Dempster Company between Canada, South Africa and the West Indies ; the Pickford and Black operating between Canada and the West Indies.

It will thus be seen that there could not be any monopoly enjoyed by any particular line of steamers but on the contrary there would be keen competition, even if this resolution were made part of our tariff.

The next objection is that a British Canadian service could not be depended on for regularity and that there would be considerable delay in the transportation of goods. Well, that objection is purely imaginary. In the first place, it is very doubtful whether any hardship would accrue even if the service were not as quick as via New York. The chief thing a merchant wants to know is when his goods will arrive, and it is not so much a question with him whether the passage will be speedy or not. What he requires is certainty as to the date of arrival rather than speed in the passage. In certain cases, of course, such as express parcels that might be cabled for, it may be necessary to have a fast service, but as a rule that is not of primary importance as regards freight. But what really are the facts? The facts of the case are that during the past season the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Allan Line coming to Canada have given as regular and as rapid a service as any line to any United States port. The fast boats of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Allan Line are making the trip to-day in mid-winter in a few hours over six days, and that speed is not equalled by any of the boats from Liverpool to New York.

Take for instance the slow boats, take for instance the 'Celtic' and the 'Cedric' the two biggest boats on the White Star line ; their average sailing during the last six months from Liverpool to New York has been about ten days ; and the average sailing of the freight boats, not the fast line, not the fast boats, but the average sailing of the freight boats of the Canadian Pacific Railway during the same period of time, has been between ten and eleven days. What becomes therefore of the statement that we are going to lose days and weeks if we bring goods in through Canadian ports ?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman makes a statement—I am not impugning the veracity of the statement—but I would like to know if he has the details upon which he bases the assertion that the fast freight boats coming to New York take about ten days, and that the ordinary freight boats of the Canadian Pacific Railway take about ten or eleven days. That is a very important thing. But we ought to be able to get behind the statement of fact to the data upon which that statement of fact is made.

Mr. LOGAN. I have this data, that I know from my own experience, and other members of this House know from their experience, the time that the 'Celtic' and the 'Cedric' make in crossing the Atlantic. I made inquiry in New York in reference to the sailings of these two ships, because I regarded them as the two model ships of a fast service, the two largest boats in the White Star line service, and I got that information from New York. With reference to the other information, regarding the Canadian Pacific Railway boats, I asked that company to answer a question with reference to the time of their freight boats, to St. John and Halifax, and the reply they gave was that it was between ten and eleven days.

Now let me say a word with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway service between St. John and the western part of Canada. I will speak particularly of that service in the winter time, because I know that gentlemen who are opposed to this resolution make the objection as regards the winter months and not as regards the summer months. They have told me that they do not object to confining the British preference to Canadian ports when they can bring their goods in to Montreal and Quebec ; therefore I am going to refer merely to the service to the maritime ports which are open the year round. I asked the Canadian Pacific Railway the following questions :

Q. What is the present time of the Canadian Pacific Railway freight service between St. John and Toronto ?—A. Fifty-two hours.

Q. What is the time of freight service between St. John and Hamilton ?—A. Fifty-seven hours.

Q. What is the time of freight service between St. John and London ?—A. Sixty-three hours.

Q. What is the time of freight service between St. John and Winnipeg ?—A. A hundred and forty hours.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that schedule time ?

Mr. LOGAN. I merely asked the question : What is the time, I presume it is schedule time.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The hon. member will not pretend to say that goods are carried in that time. I have a letter here stating that they are not.

Mr. LOGAN. I know the hon. gentleman is much opposed to the policy, and he is going to speak on it when I am through. This is the time that was given to me by the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities.

Mr. LALOR. Was that express or freight?

Mr. LOGAN. I am talking of freight. I want to point out that this freight service on the Canadian Pacific Railway has only been announced within a short time ; I also want to point out to the people who object to this motion that we are moving in the east as well as in the west. I do not contend that the Canadian Pacific Railway freight service between St. John and the western cities is carried out to the minute ; there has not been any railroad in this country during the past winter that has been able to deliver its freight on schedule time. We have to figure upon storms upon all railroads, both in Canada and in the New England states. Storms will occur, accidents will happen, freight will be delayed ; but the Canadian Pacific Railway, is advertising to-day a freight service between St. John and Toronto in fifty-two hours. The Intercolonial Railway, the much abused Intercolonial Railway, has within the last two years, established a fast freight service between St. John, Halifax and Montreal. A freight train leaves Halifax, running upon schedule time, only stopping at the most important junctions and stations, and runs through to Montreal carrying the through freight. It is no use for men to say that the service of the Intercolonial Railway is slow, that it takes weeks to transport goods, because I am going to quote to you actual facts of the delivery of freight on the Intercolonial Railway during the months of November and December of this year, which can be verified by the books of that road, and which are given to me by the general traffic manager.

The cargo of the steamship 'Virginian' left Halifax on the morning of November 18 and arrived in Montreal on November 20. The cargo of the steamship 'Tunisian' left Halifax on December 2 and arrived in Montreal on December 4. The cargo of the steamship 'Laurentian' left Halifax December 12 and arrived in Montreal on December 14. The cargo of the 'Ionian' left Halifax on the morning of December 17 and arrived in Montreal on December 19.

These are cargoes of ocean bound steamers transported from Halifax to Montreal. The time occupied in transporting cargoes from Montreal to Toronto should not exceed eighteen to twenty hours. The total time for freight in transit between Halifax and Toronto is therefore from 76 to 80 hours. From inquiry which I have made in Toronto asking for guaranteed delivery of freight from New York to Toronto, I received the reply that they would not guarantee a delivery in Toronto under three and a half to four days.

Mr. FOSTER. What date ?

Mr. LOGAN. That inquiry was made, I think, early in December.

Mr. FOSTER. They would be pretty bold if they guaranteed time delivery during December.

Mr. LOGAN. Probably my inquiry was made in November before I gave notice of this resolution. So, if the actual conditions are that we can transport goods between Halifax and Montreal in two days during the month of December and that these goods can be transported from Montreal to Toronto in a day and a half, what becomes of the argument that it takes longer to transport goods by Canadian ports than it does through American ports ? These are the actual facts, that goods can be transported in three and a half days over the long Intercolonial Railway from Halifax to Toronto. What is your guarantee from New York ? In what time will they transport freight ? From three and a half to four days.

Mr. HAGGART. Why is it that the through traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, with all its facilities, is growing less every year?

Mr. LOGAN. One reason is because the people of this country do not stand by the government road and ship goods that way, and I am afraid that there are many who do not try to educate their fellow citizens along these lines. There is no reason why through-freight on the Intercolonial Railway should become less every year, because the service is becoming better every year.

We must not forget in considering mileage that Halifax and St. John are much nearer the ports of Great Britain than New York, Boston and Portland. Let me give you the ocean mileage:

From Liverpool	to	New York..	3,169
" "		Boston..	3,017
" "		Portland..	2,985
" "		St. John..	2,700
" "		Halifax..	2,450
" "		Montreal	2,755

Thus there is a difference between the distance from Liverpool to New York and that from Liverpool to Halifax of about eight hundred miles.

It is said that we have not sufficient facilities at Canadian ports. Now in the language of the Prime Minister in 1904, when I moved this resolution in this House: If we have not these facilities the best way to get them is to provide traffic to pour through these channels. If we have not the facilities surely it is a crying shame and disgrace to this country. Has the time come, after all these years of large expenditures in this country, after forty years of confederation, when we have to declare to the world that we have not ports that are properly equipped for the transporting of goods for our own consumption, from the motherland to Canada? If that is the condition of affairs it is time that the government and the people of this country should waken up to this condition of affairs and if for no other reason let it be done for the patriotic purpose of keeping these goods within our own channels. But what have we done in the last few years? I do not want hon. gentlemen to approach this question from the standpoint of conditions that existed on the Intercolonial Railway and in the ports of Canada ten years ago. We have made great strides in this country in the last ten years. We have made great improvements in transportation facilities at ocean ports. We have spent millions on the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal, for the improvement of the channel for the summer traffic. The city of St. John, with noteworthy confidence in its future and praiseworthy enterprise and activity, has spent over $1,000,000 in bettering the facilities at that port. This again has been supplemented by the expenditures of the Intercolonial Railway. With reference to the facilities afforded by the Intercolonial Railway let me cite what has been done on that railroad in the past seven or eight years—and I am bound to say that I think it will come as a surprise to many members that such very large sums have seen spent to improve that railway. From 1897-8 to 1905-6 inclusive, there has been spent on increased facilities by the Intercolonial Railway in the city of St. John, on capital account, no less than $1,226,021 for dredging, $45,722, a total of $1,271,744. At Halifax there has been spent during that period for increased facilities, on capital account, $1,089,490; for dredging, $18,085, a total at Halifax of $1,107,576, or a total expenditure by the government of this country in those two ports alone, during the years I have mentioned, in the betterment of shipping facilities, of $2,379,320. This does not include over $1,000,000 spent during that time in building a branch from Windsor Junction to Dartmouth which gives better facilities in Halifax as Dartmouth is on the other side of the harbour. The double-tracking of the line between Halifax and Windsor Junction and the amount spent at Halifax and St. John in the erection of elevators, but the simple improvements of the ports and the increased facilities have cost the people of this country $2,379,320 during those years.

Then take the equipment of the Intercolonial Railway. On the 30th day of June, 1898, there were only 208 locomotives in service on the Intercolonial Railway and nearly all of these were of small type. On the 30th of June, 1906, eight years after, there were 347 locomotives in service, a large number of which are of the most powerful type. In 1898, the freight car equipment of the Intercolonial Railway was 6,667 cars, on June 20, 1906, it was 10,840 cars.

I want the people of this country in approaching this question to consider not the Intercolonial Railway of the old days, but the Intercolonial Railway of to-day, after so much has been expended on its terminals, on its rolling stock and on the roadbed itself.

The last objection which is urged to this resolution, and the one which I am afraid has the most influence in this country, is that legislation such as this would offend the United States, would cause retaliatory legislation and the abrogation of bonding privileges over certain United States territory for goods in bond destined to Canada. We heard this same statement ten years ago when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) brought down this very preferential tariff policy. There was great fear that the United States of America would retaliate and it was said that they would abrogate the bonding privilege. I think that the people of this country are about convinced that the bonding privilege is as important to the United States of America as it is to the Dominion of Canada and that the abrogation of the bonding privilege is not to be feared in the consideration of a question such as this.

But, Sir, if this resolution is adopted, if this policy which I enunciate becomes part of the tariff policy of this country, we shall be putting in force a policy which has been made historic by the United States of America. For the past one hundred years, whenever that country has acquired new territory, it has extended its coasting laws around that territory. In 1817, the Congress of the United States provided that:

Commerce between the territories shall be regarded as coastwise and shall be confined to vessels built in the United States, officered by United States citizens, flying the United States flag.

This policy has been continued to the present time. In 1868, the navigation laws as to the transportation of merchandise were extended to Alaska.

In the case of Porto Rico, under an Act approved April 12, 1900, it is provided under section 9 as follows:

The coasting trade between Porto Rico and the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts of the United States.

In the case of Hawaii by an Act approved April 11, 1900, it is provided:

The coasting trade between the islands aforesaid and any other portion of the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions applicable to such trade between two great coasting districts.

The United States then has extended its coasting laws not only to its nearby possessions, but has thrown them out half way across the Pacific to the Hawaiian islands, and now, having taken possession of the Philippine Archipelago, let us trace the legislation of the United States in reference to that country. Not only is the special tax upon hemp exported from the Philippine islands remitted to the United State importer, greatly to the disadvantage of this country, but the most stringent law has been passed by the legislative bodies of the United States in reference to the transportation of goods between the United States and Philippine ports. We find an Act passed last year in the United States entitled :

A Bill to regulate shipping and trade between ports of the United States and ports and places in the Philippine archipelago, and for other purposes.

I ask hon. members to follow this in order that they may see the extent to which this principle is applied by the United States.

Be it enacted that on and after April 11, 1909——

—which is the date on which certain Spanish treaties will cease to exist:

—no merchandise except supplies for the army or navy shall be transported by sea, under penalty of forfeiture thereof, between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine archipelago directly or via a foreign port or for any part of the voyage, in any other vessel than a vessel of the United States.

Section 2,

That on and after April 11, 1909, no foreign vessel shall transport passengers between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, either directly or by way of foreign ports under a penalty of $200 for each passenger so transported and landed.

In other words, if a Canadian ship should undertake after the date mentioned to carry goods between the Philippine archipelago and the United States of America the goods in that ship would be subject to absolute forfeiture, and if a Canadian ship should start from the Philippine archipelago for any port in the United States and should go even via a Canadian port and land its passengers in the United States that ship would be subject to a fine of $200 for every passenger so transported.

And yet are we to be told in this country that we should not confine the preference to goods brought in through Canadian ports, that we should not confine this family arrangement between the motherland and her daughter colony to ourselves for fear that we should offend the United States of America ? All I have to say is that to admit such a proposition is to admit that we are not a self-reliant nation and that to admit such a policy would not be to the credit of any Canadian who desires to maintain the dignity of citizenship in this great country.

To summarize the argument which I have endeavoured to present in favour of this great proposition, let me say that the fast boats of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Allan lines are making their trips between Liverpool and Halifax and other Canadian maritime ports in as good time, if not better, than the time being made from Great Britain to New York. The other boats on the different lines plying between Great Britian and other Canadian maritime ports are of about the same class and make about the same time as the freight boats running to New York. The actual time occupied in transporting goods between Liverpool and Halifax even in the winter months by the fast boats is about six days. The time between Halifax and Montreal, even by the Intercolonial Railway, is between two and two and a half days. By actual experience during the present winter the service between Toronto and Montreal and other western Ontario points should not exceed a day and a half; so that the total time of transporting goods from Liverpool to Western Ontario points should not exceed eleven days. According to my information, which I consider trustworthy, the time taken via New York is equal to if not in excess of this number of days. If the freight rates are the same, if there are sufficient steamship lines to ensure competition in freight charges, and if goods can be shipped as rapidly via Canadian steamship lines, Canadian ports and Canadian railways, why should we give the carriage of British goods to United States steamship lines, United States ports and United States railways?

These are a few of the arguments which can be made in favour of this proposition. Believing that this policy is in the best interest of a united Canada and that if we have not now the transportation facilities we shall have them within a short time, sharing as I do the national Canadian ambition to be independent of the United States of America, determined as far as in me humbly lies to assist in removing from the minds of the English exporter and others the false idea that we live only in the shadow of the United States and for the purpose of controverting the impression that the front door of Canada can only be approached during certain periods of the year through the gateway of an American port, I desire to move:

That the following be added to the tariff resolutions now before the House : That on and after the first day of May, 1908, the British preferential tariff shall only apply to goods brought direct to Canada by ship to a Canadian sea-port.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). Mr. Speaker, this resolution which has been introduced by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) certainly strikes a loyal chord in our hearts. We would all like to see that kind of thing carried out, but when you translate it into cold, practical, commercial English you find that it is something you cannot carry out. Theoretical facts are one thing.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What kind?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Theoretical facts are one kind, but practical hard facts such as we have in every-day life are altogether different. Theoretical facts are good, but when you cannot carry them out they are not so fine an article. I wish, in the first place, to refer to the resolution which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat read and which was passed, as he said, in the city of Toronto, by delegates from the joint boards of trade. The resolution which I have and which you will find, as given by himself, on page 5074 of the 'Hansard' of 1904, I think, is as follows:

In order to encourage the importation of British goods via Canadian ports, this conference desires that the preferential rebate on goods imported from Great Britain——

Notice, Mr. Chairman, 'imported from Great Britain.'

—arriving by United States ports shall be limited to 25 per cent.

Mr. LOGAN.

I understood the hon. gentleman to say that it would be limited to 10 per cent.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, what I meant to say—and I think 'Hansard' will bear me out—was that under the preferential tariff the rate will be 33⅓ per cent if brought in through Canadian ports and 25 per cent if brought in through American ports. I said that there would be a difference of 10 per cent; it is 8⅓.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Now, I want to draw your attention to this portion of it; you understand in the first place that there were delegates from the maritime provinces as well as from Ontario and from all other portions of the Dominion. The people of Ontario did not wish to be too discourteous to their friend from the maritime provinces and those who are interested in this matter and consequently they did give them a certain amount of latitude. They were willing to allow the preference should be 33⅓ per cent only on all goods coming from Great Britain on the understanding that this would not apply to goods coming from ports other than those of Great Britain. You must bear in mind that we get a large share of our goods from the island of Mauritius and goods coming from Singapore now pay exactly the same freight to New York as they did to Liverpool. The consequence is that when we are getting goods in by way of New York we only have to pay the freight from New York to Toronto; whereas, if we were getting them via Liverpool we would have to pay the freight from Liverpool to Halifax and from Halifax to Toronto. What are the goods we get in that way? We get sago, rice, tapioca, spices of all kinds, ginger and tea. A very large amount of goods comes in that way and if we had to lose the extra amount that the adoption of this resolution would entail it would be a very serious loss to us. We would be perfectly satisfied if the conditions were such that we could get our goods in an expeditious manner that they should come this way.

Instead of calling on the gods of the thousand hills to come and give us more freight, we should call upon Hercules to help us to take away the freight we have already. The truck is too full now and there are too many parcels and packages, so that we cannot move it. One proof of that is, that one-quarter of the grain in the Northwest has not yet been moved. When will it be moved? Last year, according to the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, we had to send 20,000,000 bushels of our wheat by American ports when we only sent 21,000,000 by Canadian ports. Does not that show that we cannot ourselves take out our produce. And is this parliament going to make it still worse? What we should do is to provide facilities for taking out our goods, instead of lifting the mailed fist and saying: You shall have to bring your goods in by a certain port, and you shall have to send your goods out by a certain port. Make Canadian ports so that they can handle Canadian trade and then you will have no need for a resolution such as this. It is not for us to feed our farmers and producers on vinegar; we should give them something sweeter; we should try to improve their condition rather than to make it worse. And if you pass this resolution what will be the result? To-day we have only two railway systems bringing goods from St. John and Halifax, and the result of this resolution would be to give them a complete monopoly of the carrying trade, with longer time in transit, and higher rates of freight. If you have facilities at Canadian ports and on Canadian railways the goods will come through Canada anyway. Provide these facilities and you do not need this resolution. My hon. friend (Mr. Logan) has spoken of the thousands of dollars spent on the port of St. John, but let me read him such an excellent authority as the chairman of the St. John Board of Trade, who, dealing with the harbour improvements and aids to navigation in the Bay of Fundy, says, with reference to the congestion of freight:

The unsatisfactory condition of affairs is known to all, and it is our duty to make the greatest effort to remedy it. We have to recognize that it is beyond the financial ability of the city to provide what is required, and we must appeal to the Dominion government for ways and means to carry on the work, commenced, and up to this time executed by, the city.

The city of St. John acknowledges it cannot do the work, and if they cannot accommodate the freight that is coming their way to-day, how will they accommodate a still greater quantity of freight. I have here a letter dated January 15, 1907, from a gentleman in Montreal, who says:

The freight that comes to us from England via St. John, New Brunswick, lies many days after getting into Montreal before the railways can get space to unload the cars. So bad has been the congestion in Montreal that the Canadian Pacific Railway has had to unload railway goods into ship sheds on the wharfs, and goods which arrived by ships in November last have in some cases not yet been delivered.

Here we have goods which arrived in November, not delivered on January 15. Surely that is a state of affairs that calls for a remedy; surely it is proof that we are not now able to provide facilities for the transportation of the goods coming to us. I quote the following from a correspondent of the Montreal 'Herald' of February 15, 1907:

Regarding the new customs regulations which provide that raw sugars, to obtain the benefit of the preferential tariff must be imported direct through Canadian ports; unfortunately for all concerned this arrangement has not worked out satisfactorily owing to the serious delays which have taken place while the sugars were in transit from Halifax. In some instances they have been as long as six weeks in the cars. Against this I have sugar from New York in three days.

Surely you do not want to pile up the agony on a suffering people by passing this resolution. It is bad enough when we cannot get our freight out; surely you are not going to make it so that we cannot get our freight in.

Now, I want to call attention to another point. If this applies to goods coming in, it will of course apply to goods going out.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). How will goods coming in be subject to the same delay as goods going out, and vice versa?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. If we cannot get our goods in we cannot get them out; it is a poor rule that will not work both ways; the principle is exactly the same in both cases. I want to draw attention to the fact that there are times when we cannot get our goods out by way of Halifax and St. John, and there are times when the freight rates are much less by way of Boston and Portland than they are through Canadian ports. I take it that the man who owns the goods has the right to say what way he shall bring them in, or by what route he shall send them out. We are all perfectly satisfied, that so soon as you give us facilities to bring in our goods by Halifax or St. John, to bring them in by these ports. If our friends down by the sea will bring in a resolution asking for more money to increase the facilities at the ports of Halifax and St. John and to put them in the very best condition possible, I for one will support it with all my heart. But, until you have such facilities, until you have the means of handling goods there, why should you penalize us and make us conduct our trade under such serious disadvantages. I certainly trust that this resolution will not pass the House.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). I am sure we are all in hearty sympathy with the object which the hon. member (Mr. Logan) has in view——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask if the government has any policy on this question?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend should not interfere with the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Kemp), who wishes to speak.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see any evidence that the Minister of Finance wishes to speak.

Mr. FIELDING. When I wish to speak I can generally get a hearing.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) has the floor.

Mr. KEMP. I am afraid that the government has no policy to announce.

Mr. FIELDING. Have the opposition a policy?

Mr. FOSTER. Is it for the opposition to have a policy, and not for the government?

Mr. FIELDING. Not necessarily, but you are very anxious about other people.

Mr. KEMP. I am sure that we are all in favour of any proposal which would tend towards the development of our Canadian seaports, and it is because I am in favour of the development of Canadian ports that I rise to speak this afternoon. The hon. member for Cumberland has dealt with several phases of this question; he has referred to freight rates being the same by way of Canadian ports as by way of United States ports, and of course that would be necessary. The freight rates in effect from Great Britain, via New York, Boston and Portland, to Canadian points, regulate the rates from Great Britain to the same points via Canadian ports. The hon. gentleman has also spoken of the number of hours that the railways take to carry goods from St. John and Halifax to western points such as Toronto. That, however, is not a very important matter at the present time, because in these days of railway congestion you cannot calculate on getting your merchandise on schedule time. All over this continent, and especially in Canada, the railways are blocked with freight, and while you might get freight from St. John to Toronto in fifty-two hours, if there was no congestion, it may now take three or four times that number of hours before you get your freight. Of course that same condition might exist in the case of freight from Boston, New York or Portland, so that there is nothing in the contention, at present at all events, as to getting our goods on schedule time.

A case was recently brought to my attention in which it took two weeks to get goods from Toronto to Montreal owing to the congestion that existed. The hon. gentleman referred to the coasting law of the United States. I agree with him that the United States has pursued a national policy in regard to coasting, but Canada is in exactly the same position in that respect; that is to say, while Canadian vessels cannot do a coasting trade in United States merchandise between United States ports, neither can United States vessels do a coasting trade between Canadian ports. If we acquire territory, as the United States has done in the case of Porto Rico and in the Pacific ocean, we would, I presume extend to that territory the coasting laws of Canada, just as the United States has extended its coasting laws to its possessions in the Pacific as well as in the Atlantic ocean. I cannot understand why it should be necessary to adopt such a course as the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has outlined, and which has been endorsed to some extent by the government or by members of the government. According to the quotations which the hon gentleman gave from 'Hansard' it seems that certain members of the government, particularly the Minister of Finance, were in favour of such a policy a year or two ago. I notice also that in the 'Globe' of February 15, in a report of a Liberal caucus, it was stated that the principle of this solution was endorsed, but that it was thought best to leave it for the government to say when the transportation facilities would make it feasible to enforce it. I do not know whether that report was official or not. Then, if we remember the words of the hon. Minister of Finance the night before last with respect to the sugar duties, I take it that he had in his mind the resolution of the hon. member for Cumberland when he declined to put into effect the amendment of the tariff in regard to sugar. So that it appears that the government are pretty well committed to this policy. When we take into consideration the fact that of the $54,164,102 worth of goods which comes into this country under the preferential tariff, we import the greater part through Canadian ports, I do not know why we should want to disturb existing bonding conditions and have a general misunderstanding with the United States. Most of the merchandise which comes into this country under the preferential tariff comes by way of the St. Lawrence during the open season of navigation, by way of Victoria and Vancouver on the Pacific coast, and a certain proportion for local consumption by way of maritime province ports. So much comes by way of the St. Lawrence because that is its cheapest route, reaching as it does into the distributing centres of the country and serving a large portion of the consuming population. The freight rate from Great Britain to Montreal via the St. Lawrence during the summer season is from 10 shillings to 11 shillings per ton; when navigation closes the rate is 23 shillings, 9 pence a ton approximately. So that it is in the interest of importers to lay in all that is possible before navigation closes. Of the total amount of $54,164,102 of merchandise imported last year under the preferential tariff fully two-thirds, I estimate, came by way of the St. Lawrence, Vancouver and Victoria and maritime province ports. As I have said, that would amount to $36,109,402, leaving $18,054,700 which we have to deal with. Now, it is difficult to say just how much of this comes in by Canadian ports. I have followed pretty closely what has taken place within the last few years with respect to the development of our Canadian ports. Eight or ten years ago gentlemen representing Halifax and St. John addressed our boards of trade in the west, and since that time I have noticed a growing sentiment of loyalty amongst our manufacturers and importers, displaying itself in a disposition to patronize most freely our Canadian ports, This sentiment gives these ports an advantage, and it is a very important one. When there is a loss in an importation coming through an American port, the importer has the greatest possible difficulty in collecting his claim, not knowing what steamship company or railway or other transportation company is responsible; but if the goods are brought in by a Canadian port, he knows exactly where to place the responsibility. And in order to have a more rapid adjustment of claims, in order that the importer will have his claims adjusted and be able to get what he is entitled to, that is a factor of some importance. When we put this question of sentiment and claims together and consider what the Canadian ports would get in any event, I think there will be found a very small amount left which would be affected by this resolution. I do not know how much that would be, but I have here a memorandum of what the total imports were from the United Kingdom during the year 1906, both free and dutiable, which came through American ports. This was given in a reply to a question put by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) either this session or last. I refer to the amount which came through American ports under the preferential tariff.

Mr. DANIEL. Last session.

Mr. KEMP. The answer was that the total amount of goods which came from the United Kingdom, dutiable and free, through American ports was $13,283,428, out of a total import of $69,317,150. I do not know what proportion of our imports under the preferential tariff would be affected by this resolution of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), but I believe it would be a very small amount, and, considering the great risk we would be taking and the radical character of this resolution, I think it would be a very great mistake to adopt it.

The hon. gentleman referred to the international bonding system in force between this country and the United States. It seems to me that this is one of the most serious questions we have to consider in connection with this resolution. We have had for years past an international bonding system between the two countries. Under that system we are handling more American goods through Canadian ports destined for United States points than are being handled through American ports destined for Canadian points. I do not think there can be any doubt about that. My hon. friend has referred also to the question of freight rates, and claimed that this policy would not have a tendency to raise the rates. I have already shown that our freight rates in Canada are regulated by those in existence between British and American ports. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. DANIEL. What was the amount of United States goods handled through American ports and the amount of Canadian goods handled through United States ports?

Mr. KEMP. I have not got the figures, but I assume that the amount of goods which were handled through American ports destined for Canadian points are not as great as the amount handled through Canadian ports destined to American points. That is the statement I made. If you accept the theory I lay down, and which I claim is correct, because I have had personal experience and can give an instance in point and produce the documents, then the adoption of this resolution would undoubtedly raise freight rates. A year or so ago the railway and steamship companies raised the rates of a certain commodity to Canadian points. I was under the impression that they were giving lower rates to American points than to Toronto, and I took the trouble to cable to Great Britain in order to ascertain if my impression was correct. I found that the railway and steamship companies plying to Canadian ports were quoting practically the same rate to Chicago as to Toronto, yet Chicago is 516 miles west of Toronto, and that freight had to be carried through Toronto in order to get to that western city. The reason is this, that the ocean rates from Liverpool or other British points to New York are very much lower than the ocean rates from Great Britain to a Canadian port. I have here some circulars in which the figures will be found. For instance, the rate from Liverpool to Halifax is exactly double what the rate is from Liverpool to New York.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. On what kind of goods?

Mr. KEMP. I will send my hon. friend the circular, and he can look it over for himself.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. On the same class of goods?

Mr. KEMP. Yes. The reason is this, that the steamships plying between Great Britain and Canadian ports have not to meet the same competition as the great number of lines which ply between Liverpool and New York. The rate between Liverpool and New York is seven shillings and sixpence a ton, and between Liverpool and Halifax, fifteen shillings a ton. And the rate between Liverpool and St. John is twelve shillings and six a ton. I am taking these figures from a circular issued by a very reputable firm, which has offices in London and Liverpool—the firm of John Williams & Sons—and the circular is dated February 14, 1907.

What I am contending is this, that the bonding system in effect between Canada and the United States is a very great advantage to both countries, that it is a regulator of freight rates, and we should not do anything to disturb it. The question is a very serious one. Here is this western country, the western United States, which is geographically right behind Canada, and we are in a far better position, as regards mileage and for geographical reasons, to secure the freight which is imported from Europe to these western states. That business is constantly increasing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You mean the business for western points in the United States?

Mr. KEMP. Yes, which might come from Europe through Canadian ports. There is a tremendous amount of traffic taken at St. John, Halifax and Montreal and carried through Canada on to Chicago and the west.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. How does the hon. gentleman account for that if the freight rates from Liverpool to Canadian ports are double those to New York?

Mr. KEMP. I account for it in this way. Where the railways have to meet competition, they have to so adjust their through rates as to secure the traffic and counteract the difference in the ocean rates.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The railways assume the difference?

Mr. KEMP. I think the rate is lower for through shipments in order to meet freight rates via United States ports to points in Ontario and the west. Freight rates via Canadian ports are regulated by the competition via United States ports, but if you legislate to throw all this business into Canadian ports, you will do away with American competition, and the rates will be very much higher than at present.

I would like to know from the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) if he considers of importance this question of the amount of merchandise destined for American ports which go via Montreal, Halifax, and St. John. Does he consider that of any importance? But there is something else just as important. We are working up a tremendous business on the Pacific coast. We are bringing the products of China, Japan, and the Straits Settlements in British vessels to Vancouver, destined for United States points, and there is a tremendous tonnage being carried that way by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and will be carried perhaps before long by the Grand Trunk Railway, into the United States. Now, it might not be considered a very extraordinary thing to pass the resolution that the hon. member for Cumberland has proposed; and it might not be considered a very ingenious thing for the United States government to find some way of preventing this merchandise coming in from the Pacific coast and from the Atlantic coast, without interfering possibly with the bonding privilege, if they did not want to go that far. But I do not think they would hesitate to put some consular arrangement or customs regulation into effect which would cut this out. I do not think the hon. member for Cumberland has sounded our Canadian railways on this question, he does not say that he has sounded them. I fear that our Canadian railways would be very much opposed to this motion for the reasons that I have stated, and I am afraid that before long we would find our Canadian railways at Washington, as they were a few years ago, on their knees, trying to prevent the American government from interfering in any way with the bonding privilege. We are getting along very well with the United States just now, particularly since they have become involved in colonial possession they have not paid so much attention to us. But we must not forget that the American people are very sensitive in regard to these matters. For instance, let us go back to 1892, when the United States claimed that we were discriminating against them by giving a rebate on the tolls through the Welland canals, and they claimed that they should have equal privileges in the Welland canal for their products with Canadian products. In 1892 President Harrison proposed retaliation in a message.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that not a treaty right?

Mr. KEMP. I believe that both the bonding privilege and the Welland canal matter were treaty rights. The United States Congress passed a law under which the President could put into effect a certain regulation with respect to freight passing through the American Soo canal, and they promptly did so and retaliated upon us. Now, if the American people were sensitive in regard to matters of that kind they would be sensitive again if we attempted in any way to interfere with the national bonding system, which I understand is a treaty right. The hon. member for Cumberland did not say how this would affect that large volume of imports which come into this country from all points in the British empire, and that are entitled to the British preference, where we have no direct steamship connection. He referred to a conference which took place in Toronto, I think in 1902, when certain gentlemen, he says, favoured this project. But there were other gentlemen who spoke at that conference who said that their business would be affected by that project because they were obliged to import certain commodities from New York, through want of a direct steamship connection, and they could not, under this project, bring goods through Canadian ports.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another point which, to my mind, is equally important. A few days ago on January 15, Secretary Root made a statement of policy before the National Convention for the Extension of Foreign Commerce, in which he declared in favour of a minimum and maximum tariff system. I think that those of us who have followed the articles appearing in American newspapers and magazines, must be convinced that the Americans are moving in the direction of a minimum and maximum tariff. Let me also remind the House that recently the Massachusetts legislature, by an almost unanimous vote, passed a resolution declaring in favour of a maximum and minimum tariff. I think that only twenty-three out of a total of two hundred and eighty or three hundred members voted against that resolution, and it was sent to the President of the United States. I think, therefore, that we may conclude from all these indications that the United States will have before long a minimum and a maximum tariff. Now, Mr. Chairman, what position would we be in supposing they followed our example in establishing a minimum and a maximum tariff? We might say that importations under our minimum tariff must come in through Canadian ports. Supposing that the Americans said that importations coming in under their minimum tariff must come in through American ports. That would destroy all the commerce that comes into Canadian ports at the present time destined for the United States, both on the Atlantic and the Pacific coast. I believe that this bonding system has been an advantage to Canada, and I do not think that we can afford to trifle with it. I believe that we are profiting more from the bonding system than the Americans are. I believe we are bringing in more goods for American points to-day than the Americans are bringing in through their ports destined for Canadian points. I believe that we shall gain still more from this system by improving the St. Lawrence waterways and all the facilities which we have in all our Canadian ports. I think we are handling to-day all that it is possible for us to handle with our present facilities. I believe in spending sufficient money to develop our Canadian ports, and that our American business will grow if we leave things as they are. I believe that Canadian business through American ports will decrease as time goes on. Just think of what is taking place at the present time. We talk about the $13,000,000 worth of free and dutiable goods that came in last year from the United Kingdom through United States ports. The imports that came in last year through the port of St. John were $10,000,000 in excess of what came in the year before. I hold in my hand the report of the Board of Trade of St. John which has just been received. I find that our imports through that port since 1905, when that port first began to develop on a large scale, are 500 per cent in excess of what they were at that time. I may also say in passing that our exports from the port of St. John have increased during that time 700 per cent.

Referring to the increase in imports through the port of St. John last years I may say that in 1905 the imports were $5,582,477 and in 1906, $15,124,424. When we take all these things into consideration, when we think of the risk we are running, at a time when we stand a chance to increase the American imports of our Canadian ports, and these ports stand a chance to benefit, would it not be a foolish thing to pass such a resolution as that which is proposed by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan)? I believe that this resolution if carried would ultimately have a very injurious effect upon our Canadian ports and that is the reason why I intend to vote against it. We are getting along very well; let us increase our railway facilities and our facilities at these ports and let us not adopt a policy which will kill, possibly for all time, the American business which we are getting at the present time.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John City). This is the third time that this matter has been discussed in this House, and I think that the discussion this year has perhaps been more thorough, as far as it has gone, than has been the case on former occasions. I think it right that in discussing a resolution of this kind we should have not only what can be said in favour of it thoroughly brought out but also the legitimate objections that may be made to it. I think there is some little lack of knowledge with regard to the amount of business that is done under the preferential tariff through Canadian ports. I know that that is the case with the press, as I have noticed that editors in this city have spoken of the amount and value of goods brought in through the United States ports in very exaggerated terms. I procured through the Customs Department the actual figures of goods that were imported from the United Kingdom through American and Canadian ports, for the years 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906. The figures are as follows:

Year.	Through U. S. Ports.	Percentage.	Through Canadian Ports.	Percentage.
1903	12,796,772 00	21·66	46,271,934 00	78·34
1904	12,685,878 00	20·47	49,275,031 00	79·53
1905	12,399,326 00	20·48	48,139,485 00	79·52
1906	13,283,428 00	19·16	56,033,722 00	80·84

This shows that we are importing through United States ports not more than one-fifth, in fact only 19 per cent during the last year and the other 80 per cent through our own ports, so that when we speak of a change being made such as is advocated by the resolution brought forward to-day we cannot and need not trouble ourselves about the importations through American ports being so large as to disturb the channels of trade, and create difficulties of which we may not know the result, because the matter is really not of such great importance as that. As far as the maritime provinces are concerned, I would say that if the resolution is not passed it will not break us any more than if it pass it will make us. I do say that if it is passed it will be a great and very considerable advantage to the eastern end of Canada for several reasons.

My hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright) spoke about the great congestion of freight that takes place on the eastern end of our lines, the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I might say to that hon. gentleman that if we had many speeches such as he has made to-day, there would not, for a very long time, be much congestion of freight in that part of the country; there would be very little freight at all and I would prefer to hear the hon. gentleman taking a different cue and speaking on lines which would go to build up our own ports rather than decrying them as I am afraid he did.

He said also that there would be no competition, that if this resolution were to be passed every thing would have to go over the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Is it impossible for the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway to give themselves a little honest competition? Why should there be no competition between those two lines any more than between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway? I must say that his objection seems to me very far fetched indeed. He made a quotation from the Montreal 'Herald,' written by a gentleman who does not appear to have the courage to sign his own name but who writes over the nom de plume 'Merchant'. I do not know whether he is a railway man or a sugar refiner or what he is, he conceals his identity and what does he say, speaking of the new customs regulations which the Minister of Finance brought in by which sugar can only get the advantage of the preferential rate if imported through Canadian ports? He says, speaking of shipments via Halifax and St. John:

> Unfortunately for all concerned, this arrangement has not worked satisfactorily owing to the serious delays which have taken place while the sugars were in transit from Halifax. In some instances these have been as long as six weeks in the cars. Against this I have had sugar from New York in three days.

Now what argument is there in a statement of this kind? In the winter he says one shipment was delayed for six weeks. Supposing the statement to be true, it is something at which we need not be entirely surprised that one shipment is delayed in winter by snow storms, &c., over a long line of railway. One gentleman spoke of the time it took to get freight from New York being so much less than that from Halifax. But this writer says 'I have had them from New York in three days, showing that as a general thing it took a great deal longer than three days to get his freight from New York, and if we take the statement of the hon. gentleman from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) the time taken in shipping from Halifax or St. John by the Intercolonial Railway must be, as a general thing, less, or at all events no greater than the time taken when importing from New York.

There is, to my mind, one important reason why a policy of this kind should be adopted, and that is that it would compel shippers on the other side of the water to gain a little more knowledge than they appear to have at the present day of our ports and facilities and of this Canada of ours as a country generally. As a matter of fact it is surprising, but it is true, that there is a very great amount of ignorance in regard to this country on the other side of the water even among merchants, shippers, and other business men of that character who might be expected to know better. Last summer, in the city of Toronto, where a great many people had assembled to attend the meeting of the British Medical Association, when everybody was travelling in the coolest and loosest kind of clothing he could possibly get on, there was received from some part of England a case of goods intended for exhibition at that association meeting and on the outside of this case of goods was printed in large letters 'Please Protect from Frost.' This came out to Toronto when everybody was sweltering in the heat and when people could find no cool place to sit in or lie in. This is but one evidence of the ignorance which exists on the other side of the water on Canadian matters. The passing of a resolution of this kind would compel those people on the other side of the water to find out something about the Canadian ports through which they would be obliged to ship their goods if they wish to take advantage of the British preference. Another point that I would like to refer to is this: While the people of the eastern provinces would like to get all they can, or all that belongs to them, I do not think that they would urge upon this country the adoption of that policy if, by so doing, they were going to impose upon the rest of Canada greater rates or greater expense than they are called upon to bear under the present conditions when goods are imported through our own ports. When this matter was up in 1905 I gave the rates of freight which were charged on goods shipped through the port of New York to Toronto, and on all classes of goods from Halifax and St. John to the same place and in every one of these classes—and I would like my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) to bear this in mind—the rate from St. John and Halifax to Toronto is less than the rate from New York to Toronto.

Mr. KEMP. These rates do not affect importation. They are local rates.

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir, and in addition to that I wish to say further that in so far as the ocean rates on these goods are concerned they were actually the same from Liverpool to New York, from Liverpool to Boston, from Liverpool to Portland, and from Liverpool to St. John and Halifax.

Mr. KEMP. I admitted that the rate necessarily had to be the same.

Mr. DANIEL. Your John Williams & Company circular did not say that.

Mr. KEMP. I explained that these were local rates.

Mr. DANIEL. Then what was the object of bringing in the circular?

Mr. KEMP. Well, I thought I made my self clear.

Mr. DANIEL. The freight rates are these per 100 lbs.:

Class.	From Maritime ports to Toronto.	From New York to Toronto.
1..	36 cents.	57 cents.
2..	32 cents.	49 cents.
3..	27 cents.	39 cents.
4..	23 cents.	27 cents.
5..	18 cents.	22 cents.
6..	17½ cents.	19 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these local rates?

Mr. DANIEL. These are the freight rates on goods from New York to Toronto and from maritime ports to Toronto while the ocean rates from Liverpool are the same in all cases. In so far as freight rates are concerned I have here shown that the people of Ontario and the west would do better by getting their goods through Canadian ports than by importing them through the port of New York.

I spoke of the educative effect which would be one result of the adoption of this policy and I think it is needed. It would teach the shipper on the other side of the water that Canada is not part of the United States and while it may seem strange that we have at this day to speak of that, as a matter of fact, I believe the necessity still exists. We ought to be able to teach him that these are two distinct countries, that we are friends and neighbours and always hope to be, but that we are each trying to carve out our own destiny, under our own flag and under our own form of government, that we are each proud of our own individuality and doing the best we can to become nations under our own individuality and under our own government. I would like to refer to the objections which have been made to carrying out a policy of this kind. I do not wish in any way to minimize the objections which have been brought forward by the hon. gentleman who just preceded me. He speaks of difficulties with the United States: he speaks of what might take place in case the United States chose to go in for reprisals. That, it appears to me, is one point which may be urged against the adoption of this policy. At the same time, as the hon. member for Cumberland has already said, here is the United States applying its coasting laws away out in the Atlantic as far as Porto Rico and extending them half way around the world to the Philippine Islands. We have our coasting laws but I think we have not been quite so niggardly in carrying them out as the United States have. We allow some eight different countries to share in the coasting trade with ourselves. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) was a little inclined to doubt that, but the fact is that the following countries are now entitled to share in our coasting privileges: Italy, since 1873; Germany, since 1874; The Netherlands, since 1874; Sweden and Norway, since 1874; Austro-Hungary, since since 1876; Denmark, since 1877; Belgium, since 1879; and the Argentine Republic, since 1881.

Mr. KEMP. The United States do not.

Mr. DANIEL. The United States do not because they do not reciprocate, and because they will not reciprocate. At all events, it would seem that this is the only serious objection that can be raised to the carrying out of this policy. There is no doubt that we do export a great deal of American goods through Canadian ports, and, should the United States by any customs regulation put an end to this, I am free to admit that I think we should gain very little by the passing of a resolution of this kind. However, the amount involved is so comparatively small that I do not think we need fear any such action as that on the part of the United States, and that factor can be left out of our consideration of this question. Now, as to our shipping business; I regret to say that the shipping of the eastern provinces, including Quebec, is on the declining stage. During the last ten years the registered shipping of the eastern provinces, including Quebec, has decreased 40 per cent. Here are the figures:

Province.	Year.	Registered tons of shipping.
New Brunswick..	1895	122,407
New Brunswick..	1905	40,145
Nova Scotia..	1895	343,356
Nova Scotia..	1905	198,976
Quebec..	1895	158,776
Quebec..	1905	141,406
Prince Edward Island..	1895	19,323
Prince Edward Island..	1905	11,924

The shipping industry of Canada has not been assisted to any extent by the tariff, and in view of the figures I have quoted, it is the duty of this parliament to come to its aid. I saw a statement in one of the newspapers recently, which shows to what a great extent the building of ships is handicapped in Canada by means of the tariff. This newspaper stated, that a steamer called the 'Midland Prince,' a large vessel of 10,000 tons, was launched at Collingwood last fall, and the duties paid on the material which entered into the construction of that vessel ranged between $25,000 and $30,000, while the drawback of $1.15 per ton would only amount to $11,500, so that vessel paid practically $12,000 in custom duties. I certainly would urge upon the House the reasonableness of taking this whole question into consideration, and of adopting the motion presented by the hon. gentleman from Cumberland (Mr. Logan). The people of the maritime provinces take a great interest in this matter, the boards of trade have pronounced in favour of it, the legislature of New Brunswick has passed a resolution supporting it, and, coming from a maritime city I feel it my duty to urge upon this House the adoption of this resolution, so that our shipping interests may be benefited, and that the Intercolonial Railway may reap the advantage of participating in the haul of this $14,000,000 worth of goods which come in under the British preference and which now go through American ports.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). I agree with a great many of the remarks made by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), who introduced the resolution, and I am sure we all look forward to the time when the trade of Canada will be carried on our own railways and through our own ports. But the question is, has that time yet arrived? Of course, I look upon this question from the standpoint of a western member. We in the west, are now labouring under great disadvantages in the matter of transportation. We have great difficulty in getting our products shipped out of the country, and we would not like to have the conditions made worse by the putting of this resolution into force at the date mentioned in it, for I fear that with regard to the importation of goods to the west we would then be much worse off than we are at present. The hon. member for Cumberland pointed out that $20,000,000 worth of goods from Great Britain and her colonies which came in under the preference, passed through American ports, and that $5,000,000 worth of these goods came in during the summer months. I presume that the lesson from that is either that the rates through American ports were cheaper than through Canadian ports, or that the facilities at the American ports are better than they are at our own ports.

I am sure that the average Canadian importer is loyal enough, other things being equal, to have his goods brought in by Canadian ports. Some hon. gentlemen have claimed that the freight rates from Liverpool to Toronto via St. John and Halifax are lower than the rates via New York. If that is the case, why do the goods not come in that way? The fact is that there is more competition via New York, and for that reason goods coming that way are transported more quickly and cheaply than they would be by maritime provinces ports. The hon. member for Cumberland pointed out that if goods coming in under the preferential tariff were forced to come by way of St. John and Halifax, after they reached Montreal they could go by any route the importer wished. To my mind, as a western man, it is just as important that we should have liberty to bring the goods by the cheapest route all the way from Liverpool to Winnipeg as from Montreal to Winnipeg. The hon. member also said that Sir George Drummond, who was at one time the president of the Manufacturers' Association, was in favour of this resolution. I should imagine he would be; why should he not be? As a manufacturer, he would regard this resolution, if passed, as being in the interest of Canadian manufacturers, because it would be equivalent to adding so much duty to imports coming into Canada; and that is just what I object to in it. If we are going to have more duty put on goods coming into Canada, let it be done in the tariff, and then we shall know what we are doing. We in the west do not want the goods we have to import made any more expensive than they are at the present time. When we have ample facilities for bringing goods through the eastern ports of Canada to the west, the people of the west will gladly welcome that condition of things. The hon. member for Cumberland said that cargoes of goods were brought from the lower provinces to Montreal in two or three days. When he said cargoes, I do not suppose he meant the whole of the cargoes, but small portions of them. Every member of this House knows that it is impossible to bring goods from the lower provinces to Montreal in such a short time. Only a short time ago, when the question of carrying coal in the Northwest was brought up in this House, an effort was made by the local government of Saskatchewan to have rolling stock sent from the Intercolonial to carry coal for the people who were suffering for the lack of fuel, and what was the answer of the Minister of Railways and Canals ? It was that there were a thousand loaded cars standing on sidings in the lower provinces because they had not engines enough to haul them, and, in addition, there were very many more carloads of goods waiting to be loaded. If that is the case, why should we put more work on these railways, and in doing so increase the cost of goods to the people in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). The American railways also are short of cars.

Mr. TURRIFF. They probably are, but as things are at present, we have two strings to our bow ; if we cannot get the goods in one way, we can in another, and when we have competition they are likely to be brought in more quickly. There is very little likelihood of this condition of affairs being changed for the better for some years to come, for the reason that business in Canada is increasing at a faster rate than the capacity of the railways to furnish rolling stock. One of the leading railway officials stated in the last few months that they were not catching up, because, while every day they had twenty-five cars added to their equipment, there were thirty going into the scrap heap. At that rate how long will it take the railways to furnish additional facilities for catching up with the development of trade in this country ? I know of a case within the last two or three months of two carloads of goods shipped from Ottawa to Montreal, which, after reaching Montreal, one was twenty-one days and the other nearly a month before the consignee could get the cars where he could unload them, such was the congestion of traffic. It would be the greatest blow which could happen to the western country—and I presume the same would apply to Ontario—to hamper the people in any way in getting goods into that country. As one of the speakers pointed out this afternoon about half of our wheat has to go out through American ports, simply because we have not the facilities at the present time to handle it to advantage in Canadian ports. The traffic will go by the cheapest route, and any effort to force it into another route will eventually be at the expense of the consumer. The purpose of this resolution is to force all the goods coming in from Great Britain under the preferential tariff to come in by Canadian ports. That means during the winter season by St. John or Halifax, over either the Intercolonial or the Canadian Pacific Railway. As we all know, the Canadian Pacific Railway runs through a portion of the United States, and, as has been pointed out, if the American people decided to abrogate the bonding system, we would be confined to one railroad which two or three months ago had a thousand loaded cars on the sidings and no engines to haul them. We would not liket to be dependent on one line of railroad, especially when it has more business than it can attend to at present. Let us wait some years until the other transcontinental railroads which we are building are completed and until our ports are so equipped that we can handle the freight in Canada as cheaply and quickly as it can now be handled when brought in by New York, and when that time comes it will be time enough to pass a resolution of this kind. We would all like to have a monopoly of the transportation, but at present to adopt this resolution would do more harm than good. I trust therefore it will not be passed in its present shape, which would bring it in'o force a year from next May, but put off the time when it will come into force until we are in a position to handle the trade. Then it will be welcome all over the Dominion.

Mr. GEORGE SMITH (North Oxford). I am fully in accord with the principle of the resolution, but I believe, with the last speaker (Mr. Turriff), that the date mentioned in the resolution ought to be put further off than 1908. It seems to me the reasons are obvious to all. We have had in Canada to fight against climatic and geographical conditions in all our trade lines from east to west. Only the other day I heard the hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Scott) state that his first trip from Toronto to Montreal was by stage coach. Mark you, that occurred within the life time of a member of this government. The next development was probably the Erie canal, when people from Great Britain landed at New York and came up that canal to the Niagara peninsula and thence to western Canada. The next step was the building of the Grand Trunk Railway, with its terminal point at Portland. Then came the Intercolonial Railway, with its terminal at Halifax—a railway built rather for imperial than commercial interests.

The next step in advance was the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with its terminal point at St. John. And we have now under way the Grand Trunk Pacific transcontinental road, and I believe that in the near future we shall have another outlet at Hudson bay. When we have all these lines built, then will be the time to carry out the policy of this resolution. As Canadians, we are the better of all these struggles. It is the struggle that makes the people, just as it does the man. Wherever you find obstacles to be overcome, you find a people developed by the very struggle to overcome them. Look at the building of the Quebec bridge. I do not know that we realize the importance of this project. To my mind, it is one of our most important undertakings, the accomplishment of which will give us an open winter port. The importance of such a port cannot be underrated. Why, Russia went to war with Japan for the purpose of getting a winter port at Port Arthur, and you know the result. Japan rose to the position of a first-rate power, while Russia lost considerable prestige. Here in Canada we have another barrier to our transcontinental trade, and that is Lake Winnipeg, running 200 miles north and south. Our Grand Trunk Pacific had to go around—I suppose through the drawing powers of Winnipeg—the south end to within a few miles of the United States boundary, but in the future the probabilities are that we shall have a road running directly north from Quebec to Edmonton, going to the north of this 200 miles of Lake Winnipeg. We see this northern development going on in many other lines. Look at our summer resorts. When I was a boy we used to hear about Saratoga. Later on it was the Thousand Islands, then the Muskoka islands, and possibly, in the near future, our summer resorts will be on the shores of Hudson bay. I should like to know just what effect the adoption of this resolution would have on British trade with Canada. It unquestionably would operate as a restriction, because it would restrict the preferential tariff to goods coming by Canadian ports. Any one who comes from Toronto to Ottawa knows the difference in climatic conditions. You may leave Toronto while it is raining and you have almost summer conditions, and before you get to Ottawa you are into winter. Why should you compel the people of western Ontario to take their chances of snow blockades and delays, for that is the main difficulty? I have been in conversation with merchants in the city where I live, and they have told me that the difference in rates is immaterial, but that the delay in getting goods is a very great barrier, and it would be an injustice to subject the people of Ontario at this date to such a handicap. Taking a broader view, we find in the world to-day a gigantic struggle for commercial supremacy. We find nation competing against nation for commercial supremacy. What effect would the adoption of this resolution have on our relationship with the old land? Would it draw us any nearer or wider apart? I would be inclined to favour the postponing of this measure for a considerable length of time, say until the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific or the building of another line from the west to the Hudson bay, thus giving the Canadian people an outlet at Hudson bay. I shall not take up the time of the House any longer, but shall conclude by stating that while I am in favour of the principle of this resolution, I think we should delay carrying out the policy it embodies until these facilities are furnished our people.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I thought when the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) announced his resolution and supported it with so much eloquence and power, that it would receive the unanimous assent of the committee, but subsequently, some remarks which were made caused me to alter that opinion. I thought that the resolution was a harmless one, and in line with the generally avowed and expressed sentiment of the country; but this afternoon my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) has regarded it as a bomb-shell intended to disturb the amicable feelings existing between us and our mutual friend Mr. Root, Secretary of State of the United States, and that it might have the malignant tendency of preventing him from applying the minimum clause of his minimum and maximum tariff to Canada. On the other hand, my hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. George Smith) is alarmed lest the passage of this resolution should outrage the mother country and destroy the amicable and cordial relations existing between the mother corntry and Canada. So, between these two fires, the American fire and the British fire, this resolution may suffer. My opinion is, however, that it does not deserve the criticism of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp), nor has it the aspect in which it appears to my hon. frend from Oxford (Mr. George Smith). The British preference was intended as a material advantage to the British manufacturers, in order that the trade so created might have a sentimental influence upon the relations between Canada and Great Britain, and that as a consequence of the sentiment so created Canada herself might reap a reciprocal advantage. So that sentiment and material interests are blended together. We took the initiative, we held out the olive branch to the mother country and gave her a preference, and we hoped that the advantage given the mother country might result in a reciprocal advantage to Canada as a consequence. I have no doubt that that preference will result in advantage to both the mother country and to Canada. Therefore, if that be an advanatage, and it is conceded to be an advantage, the adverse speakers this afternoon acknowledge that it is an advantage, and they approve of the preference so given why it should not be applied to its utmost limit, to the greatest extent of which it is capable? Why should not all portions of the Dominion participate in that advantage? Why should not the preference and all that results from the preference be made a common benefit to each province and to each constituent part of Canada?

My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) quoted some statistics to show the insignificant amount of goods which would come into Canada if this preference were applied, if the advantage of coming into Canadian ports were made obligatory. The amount of goods introduced, he thinks, would be exceedingly small. From the figures read by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) the proportion of goods that could enter through the maritime ports during the winter time was about one-fourth as compared with those that were imported into the whole of Canada through all sources and at all times. Now, the figures of dollars and cents do not present this subject to the eye and to the mind as they should do. Dollars and cents are not an adequate criterion and test of the value of the trade. A truer test is the value of the trade, the bulk of goods which are carried from the mother country to Canadian ports and distributed throughout Canada. That is a closer criterion, and presents a more correct idea of this special trade than does a comparison in dollars and cents of the receipts through the maritime ports as compared with the general receipts. Under the tariff I think there accrues an advantage to the consumer of about ten per cent on high priced goods which would be subject to thirty per cent under the tariff, and the reduction of one-third would amount to about ten per cent on the value of the goods. I would like my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) to attend to that point, because that element will enter into the whole calculation of the value of this trade with Canada and to the maritime and mercantile interests. Now, the difference on the whole amount of freight upon the high priced goods would not be greater, I think than one per cent. I have not calculated it, and I have no figures in that respect, but I think the difference in freight upon the whole of the high priced goods would not amount to more than one per cent. So, if the consumers of the goods received under the preferential tariff ten per cent, and they would pay at the utmost one per cent freight the proportion of that which would be in excess on account of coming through the maritime ports would be an insignificant sum. Now, if, as my hon. friend says, the proportion of freight received in this way would be insignificant in itself, insignificant in comparison to the volume of trade otherwise received, why would it be so serious an impediment to good relations between us and our friend Mr. Root? If it be an insignificant matter, why would it destroy this good feeling which has been produced at the expense of so much dining and wining? Thus the increased payment on account of freight by the consumer in Canada is a very insignificant element.

Now, Sir, having started with that little statement with regard to the value of heavy goods in contradistinction to light goods and asserting as I do that the efforts made by steamboats and railroads is to secure heavy and bulky goods as cargo and freight, I shall go on to show that the consideration of receiving heavy goods for carriage westbound outweighs the mere amount in dollars and cents received in freight rates. Steamers on the Atlantic carry full and heavy freights from American and Canadian ports to Europe. On the return voyage they carry ballast or a small proportion of cargo. Ship owners must supplement that in order to meet the exigencies of an Atlantic voyage with either an excessive quantity of coal, or water ballast or adopt some other expedient to sink the ships in the water. Therefore they will carry heavy goods westbound for an insignificant rate of freight. For instance, my friend from Toronto has sent me the paper by which they profess to carry heavy goods from Liverpool to New York for 7s. 6d. a ton whereas to St. John they charge 12s. 6d. The amount of the freight on the value of the goods is insgnificant, it amounts to a very small item but the value to the steamboat of this heavy freight is great. It shortens the voyage, it obviates the necessity of discharging a lot of cargo or water ballast or handling coal at great expense. The steamer can afford to carry heavy goods at cheap rates simply for the sake of having back freight. Some of these liners carry grain for nothing or carry it to Liverpool or Glasgow for a penny or a penny and a half a bushel, but to London and Hull and other places the rate is twice that. Some liners, for the purpose of procuring grain for ballast, bring it back again to America and carry it over again. Captains of steamboats have told me that they have had three passages of grain in the hold at a time simply because it paid them better to carry it back and forward than to discharge it and get other ballast. The railroads need heavy goods to haul to the west. The traffic in heavy and bulky goods is from the Northwest, from Ontario, from Montreal, from all parts of Canada down to the sea-board, and the railroads want heavy and bulky goods to carry back in their cars as otherwise the cars have to go back empty, and the sea-board freight has to pay a double rate; it has to pay for the carriage of the goods to the sea-board and also to pay for the haulage of the cars back again. Thus if we could secure heavy cargo to load the cars on the west bound haul it would largely diminish the rate of freight charged on western goods which are going to their destination in the east, to maritime provinces ports and to other places along the line.

Therefore, this is not a simple abstract question of rate against rate, we must also consider the collateral advantages which will accrue from having westbound cargo to carry on the steamers and on the cars. In this way the haul to the eastward is reduced by the amount of return freight which the railways and steamboats obtain on the goods they carry to the west.

This is the object, to cheapen the rate on the steamboat and on the railroad and therefore those in the west who must secure the carriage of their products to the sea-board at the lowest rate, especially when they enter into close competition so that the obtaining of the lowest possible rates on the carriage of these goods is of importance to them, are especially interested in obtaining heavy freight for westbound carriage by steamship and boat. Such differences have often turned the trade in favour of the Canadian shipper in markets where the competition is very close and where the sale depends on the cheapness of transport by both rail and water. Not only is this problem of importance to-day but it will become more and more important in the future as trade increases, as the railroads multiply, as more steamers are built, as there are more competing lines and as tramp steamers come to ply on Canadian routes. With this expansion in trade the importance of such a measure as this and the importance of securing westbound cargoes will become more and more manifest and the advantage it will be to the country will become more evident.

The importance of this subject has been recognized not only by members of parliament, by merchants, by ship owners and railroad managers in Canada but by American capitalists. At the present time lines of steamers are being constructed to carry on trade especially on these lines in order to procure for the American ports the trade of the Northwest through the cheapening of freight rates on the Atlantic by carrying westbound cargo destined for western Canada and for the American ports in these vessels. It is hoped by that means to be able to place agricultural products, grain, cattle, &c., in the British market at a lower rate than that at which they can be transported by Canadian routes. This project is now definitely under way, the capital has been subscribed, the lines are being built and before we waken up to the results of delay in this matter, the Americans will have captured the trade of the Northwest and then we can have what there is left, we can then say: The time has come when we will have cheap freights, when we will have cheap transportation to the coast and have goods come through Canadian ports—but it will then be too late and it takes a long time to capture trade that has set in a certain channel and to warp it into new channels after it has been secured by powerful competitors, who will do anything to secure and hold the trade which they have won by their enterprise and by their promptitude. We should not wait until a thing is manifest to every one, until the competition actually exists, until the trade has slipped away; you should foresee what will transpire five or ten years hence. When the Transcontinental Railway is built, when the other railroads are completed from the interior to the sea-board, every body will see it and many will complain that at a favourable juncture the opportnnity was lost for want of foresight, by not grasping that opportunity, and anticipating the demand which would arise later on. Not only will there be lines of steamships constructed to effect that purpose, but they will be especially constructed for the grain trade. We know that the oil traffic was formerly carried on in sailing vessels and the loss of shipping which has been deplored was mainly in consequence of the loss of the oil trade to Canada. Many of our vessels carried oil in barrels.

When the Standard Oil Company introduced tank steamers the cost of the barrel being carried across and brought back was removed altogether from the calculation. They were able to handle their product in all the cities of Europe at the minimum cost. The effort will be made in the future, I venture to predict, to carry grain over in steamers specially constructed for that purpose. Self-trimmers, quick discharges, vessels constructed with beam bulkheads enough to make the voyage and possessing all the requisites of modern steamships will be provided. Whoever applies them to this trade captures the trade. Whoever provides modern facilities, if they are calculated to reduce the cost of transport, captures the trade in these days of competition. Argentine is contending with Canada, Russia is contending with Canada, all the grain producing countries are contending with Canada and we are to stand still and see that trade pass us when we can supply these facilities and obtain that trade by means of promptly investing in it and making use of the facilities that we have?

This advantage, Mr. Chairman, will not only accrue to the maritime provinces. This advantage will be obtained by the Northwest because the cheapening of freight on the long trains will cheapen the cost of the sending of their products. It will be of advantage to Ontario with respect to its eastern freight. Every car load of freight which is sent to the maritime provinces is increased in cost because of the car having to be hauled back empty or very nearly so. It will result in advantage to the maritime ports in the labour and in the prestige which they will obtain. It will also have a tendency to bring carriers to the maritime ports. Wherever ships congregate, wherever there is competition, freights are lower in both directions. Vessels will start on a long voyage to a port at a cheaper rate if they are sure of securing return cargoes. That is the reason which my hon. friend ought to give for the lowness of freights to New York. We know that every vessel that comes to New York from the East Indies or Liverpool wants to secure a return cargo of grain or some other cargo. Are we then to give facilities to our rivals, to throw whatever we have to contribute to our rivals when these are the impediments which stand in the way of the development of our trade and the cheapening of our freights? Therefore, St. John, New Brunswick and Halifax will benefit to a small extent during the winter months. The large bulk of the trade as the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) observed, will pass through Montreal in the fall of the year. The merchants will anticipate their wants. They will procure by the cheapest way the bulk of their goods to be used during the winter. That will increase the value of Montreal and consequently it will increase the value of Quebec if that port be longer open in the fall of the year. So that, it is not for the value of the maritime ports alone, but every interest in Canada will be benefited by this assistance which is given apparently to the ports of the maritime provinces. The Canadian Pacific Railway, from their possession of steamships on the Atlantic and from the long lines of railway running into the interior, will be able to give as cheap a rate of freight from ports in Great Britain as any American railway and steamship connecting line can give and as they are anxious for these heavy goods to ballast their ships and to give freight to their cars which they have brought down long distances to the maritime provinces. They will be compelled to compete with the American railways and American steamship lines for the traffic, and the competition of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway with the American railways will be for the benefit of every importer of goods throughout the whole of Canada. The Intercolonial Railway will benefit from the carriage, the Canadian Pacific Railway will benefit from the carriage, and they will also receive all the incidental advantages which accrue from the traffic.

Now, I have a word to say to the hon. member from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp). The little anomaly which he presents in regard to freights from various ports may be accounted for by the fact that the great volume of trade is going in the other direction and that these rates may be on special lines. I believe that you can get a whole cargo just as cheaply by way of Halifax or St. John as you can by way of New York. The owner of a vessel will make a freight rate for a whole cargo just as low by way of Halifax as by way of New York, and you can get a rate which will be just as cheap from Halifax to any place west of Toronto as any American railway can give you. The ordinary rates on American railways are not less than over a Canadian railway. The ordinary rates charged between railway points in the United States are high. My hon. friend from York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) will corroborate that. Where there is competition to obtain other freight, where they can secure Canadian trade by lowering the rate they will go to great lengths. They will carry it for comparatively little. My friend Mr. Root may have most benevolent ideas in regard to Canadian trade and the introduction of our goods under a minimum tariff and I would like to see some effort made in that direction, but I would like to have an inspection of that tariff so that we would not see some goods figuring under the same rate as they do in the present tariff which bristles with impediments against Canadian trade or have some articles penalized under the same high rates against which my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) so eloquently declaims.

Some remarks were made by my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright) this afternoon. He is always right politically, but on matters of trade and finance, I think he is sometimes heterodox. In regard to freights from ports in the east, Mauritius, Singapore, Philippine islands and China, from which large cargoes come a number of ports are grouped together. For instance, they will group New York, Boston and Halifax together at one rate. If the cargo is not sold when the vessel starts the vessel may go to Sandy Hook for orders, or she may call at Halifax, but the same rate of freight applies to the whole group; so that, where we had a cargo sent 'to order' we could obtain as cheap a rate to Halifax or St. John as could be obtained to New York. The desideratum is return freight. If they cannot get a return freight at Halifax or St. John then the inward freight has to pay the compensation to reduce the Canadian freight or to bring the level of the inward and the outward freights to the limit of the rate charged to New York. It is the same with the West Indies in regard to cargoes of sugar and other produce. If we have as large or bulky a cargo and if we can furnish a return freight the ports are grouped together and we would obtain as low rates as could be obtained at New York provided we could guarantee that the steamer which brought these goods obtained a return cargo sufficient to remunerate the owners in proportion to what they would receive by going to a port like New York where they always can get return cargoes. My hon. friend from Renfrew and my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) and other gentlemen have spoken of the blockade which existed on the Canadian Pacific Railway preventing the goods coming out from that country and they thought that that blockade would be increased by the shipment of goods bound for the west.

On the other hand, if these goods came from the west to the east, and the cars were returned loaded with this preferential freight, a car supply would be provided for the west. The shortage of cars does not exist in the east, and under this system the west would obtain more cars from the east. The fact is that the shortage of cars in Canada resulted, in a large degree, from the number of cars which were sent to the United States and which were held up there. The truth is, that under the system proposed by the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) there would be a greater supply of cars in the west; and in that respect the arguments of my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Wright) and from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) fail. Now, this question is founded to some extent on sentiment, and if there is any sentiment which would result to the advantage of the whole country, we should try to cultivate it. We should not look upon this question merely from the point of view of its results to the maritime provinces, or as to its effect upon Ontario as distinct from the other provinces, or its effect upon the Northwest Territories as distinct from the rest of Canada. I think this parliament has advanced to the higher level of opinion, which holds that what makes for the benefit of one part of the Dominion makes for the benefit of the whole. As the hon. gentleman from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) and other hon. gentlemen have shown, the principle proposed in this resolution, if given effect to, would be of benefit to the whole of Canada, and therefore I trust it will receive the unanimous endorsation of this House.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I intend to give this proposal, not only my sympathy, which is sometimes of the cold potato nature, but my vote as well. I have no great belief in a measure of trade based on a preference, where the government offering it asks for nothing in return, and where the government receiving it does not see the propriety of giving anything in return. On that ground alone I would vote for this proposal. But I am inclined to vote for it also because it is based on the principle of the great transcontinental road which we are building. The policy of that transcontinental scheme is that it is a national Canadian road, and throughout the agreement calling for its construction and operation there are conditions imposed upon the contracting company for the development of Canadian trade through Canadian ports. The best and only way to improve our Canadian ports is to direct to them all the trade we can control. In the case of the preference, we can more or less control that trade, and if we have confidence in our own ports, and if we are spending millions and millions to develop a national transcontinental system, it is our duty to endeavour to develop these ports on the lines laid down in the resolution. There is the old motto: If you wish to play upon the harp, play upon the harp; in other words, if you wish to build up your national ports, you must encourage them on every occasion. Hence it is that I support this resolution. The hon. gentleman from Cumberland wishes to see the Intercolonial Railway system developed. So do I. The best way to build up the Intercolonial Railway is to remove its administration absolutely from politics. Not only am I in favour of that, but I would antagonize, in the strongest possible manner, all the efforts now being made to deprive us of the national asset we have in the Intercolonial. There are to-day rival railways that would like to see the Intercolonial Railway put out of business, and there are public men in Canada who sympathize with that movement to destroy the Intercolonial. All my sympathy is with that national railroad, and all my sympathy is with the maintenance of the independence of that road, which is an essential factor in the development of our national ports. I wish to see Canada independent of the United States in every respect in the matter of seaports. We can only achieve that by self-reliance and by making our own seaports efficient wherever they are deficient. It is only a question of money after all, but if we are going to spend money let us spend it wisely. The money that is now wasted in the maritime provinces on building inferior wharfs and harbours that are not required, should be devoted to making the maritime province ports thoroughly efficient for our national trade. All my sympathy is in favour of a liberal treatment of the maritime provinces and towards building up our national ports. We should go further. We should control the transatlantic trade of this continent. We should build the best and fastest steamships and run them from the nearest Canadian port to the nearest British port. We can control the express trade of the Atlantic, the fast freight trade, and the fast mail and passenger service, and we should set about doing it at once. But you can only do that by first believing that you are able to do it, and then putting your money in it without any regard whatever to party politics or party considerations. So that if we have a preferential policy —and we have one, such as it is—let us make it part of a national policy, as the mover of the resolution said this afternoon. If we wish to build up Canadian ports and keep them national ports, and connect them with railway systems in the west, let us concentrate everything we can in that direction, and not abandon this national policy for a temporary consideration. My hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) this afternoon urged us not to disturb the United States or the bonding privilege. I am ready to disturb the United States or the bonding privilege any day if it is to the advantage of Canada to do so. The hon. gentleman speaks of the bonding privilege. What would the bonding privilege be worth if we kept in this country the hundred millions of money that we send every year to the United States for American goods? I would keep that hundred millions in this country, and that would be a fitting answer if the United States saw fit to cancel the bonding privilege which they now concede to us and which we concede to them. So that, on the whole, I have no hesitation in saying that the motion of the hon. gentleman is on the line of the national policy which has been advocated by some of us for a great many years, which the government laid down in regard to the Transcontinental Railway, and avowed in regard to our national ports. This proposition seems to me in every way a thoroughly national proposition. In line with it, we ought not only to control the fast Atlantic passenger service, but we ought to have a great national ship-building industry in Canada, and it ought to be in the maritime provinces. The way to have such an industry is to do this very thing—to make St. John, Halifax, Sydney, or possibly a port in Newfoundland, the national port, and with it to have all these other things; and, having a spirit of nationality and a confidence in our own country, we can so weld all these things together that they will go to make what we desire to have, but what we shall never have unless we have the courage of our convictions and not only believe in the national policy, but a determination to realize it. Therefore, I shall be only too pleased to vote for this motion and to uphold any motion tending to make us more self-reliant, more self-contained, more confident to work out our own destiny, and, most of all, to build up our own country, even if for the time being this may entail some temporary or apparent injury to ourselves. No great or progressive object, nothing in the direction of nationality, is obtained without sacrifices of some kind; but any sacrifice we make in this direction must be of a temporary nature, and the ultimate result will be the upbuilding and strengthening of our nationality.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). Mr. Chairman, when this matter was brought up some little time ago, realizing how great was its importance, I corresponded, in the first place, with one of the leading importing houses in Canada. I made no comment that might in any way direct their reply, but simply sent them a copy of the resolution and asked them to favour me with their opinion. On the 14th of January they wrote to me as follows:

> We have yours of the 11th instant re British preference if confined to goods brought through the Canadian seaports, and in reply would say that if such a scheme were carried into effect we consider this would be ruinous to the commercial interests of the country. Our experience has been that the best way to keep the railroads in any bounds is to allow competition, and no doubt if the measure you refer to were passed it would give them a complete monopoly.

Mr. DANIEL. What railways?

Mr. MILLER. The railways that carry the goods from the seaports to the interior. They, of course, mean that it would limit the competition. (Reading):

> Our freight contracts as a rule are made year by year, and one has just been completed via Boston. Should this measure pass it would practically put us out of business. We are inclined to think that the Americans would retaliate, and as both our Canadian roads run through part of the territory of the United States they would be liable to cut off our bonding privileges which would demoralize railroad traffic.
> We see no argument in favour of the scheme and can find it hard to realize how a business man would bring up a measure so far reaching in its ruinous effects on the country.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Where is that letter from?

Mr. MILLER. It is from one of the best known, largest and wealthiest importing houses in the Dominion. The firm have not asked me to treat this as a private communication, neither have they given me liberty to make known the name of the firm.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member cannot read it without giving the name.

Mr. MILLER. Then I will give the name. It is from Messrs. John Macdonald & Company, the well-known importing house of Toronto.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Does my hon. friend say that both of those railroads run through American territory?

Mr. MILLER. That was not my statement; I am simply reading the communication. Any one who knows the firm of John Macdonald & Company will not, I think, accuse them of any disloyalty. I think they are as loyal as any Canadian citizens. It may be that their fears are not well founded; it may be that this would not bring to them the dire consequences they seem to think. However, that is the opinion of men who are in business, and who view this matter from a practical standpoint. About the same time, I wrote asking for the same information from one of the largest commercial agencies in Canada. I refer to the Bradstreets Company. On the 17th of January Bradstreets wrote to me as follows:

The writer was in Ottawa on Tuesday last, and hoped to see you in reference to your correspondence of the 11th instant, but did not manage it. I may say to you that I have been seeking opinions upon the subject you wrote about, viz., Hance Logan's motion, and I may say that the feeling is decidedly against any such motion being carried. The Americans will doubtless regard it as hostile, and in some way or other make the Canadians 'sweat for it,'—possibly by abrogating the bonding privilege. All those I have spoken to feel that such legislation as proposed would do us decidedly more harm than good.

Mr. GANONG. The hon. gentleman knows that that is a Yankee concern.

Mr. MILLER. No, I do not know that it is. I know that the Bradstreets Company operate in the United States.

Mr. GANONG. Its head office is in the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Thomas C. Irving, the Canadian manager, is a very well known Canadian. I believe that the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution did so from the most patriotic motives; I have no doubt that his intentions are perfectly good, and that in time the resolution will be in place, and the effect good and not evil; but it seems to me that this is not an opportune time to bring into effect any such legislation. Loyal sentiment is a good thing; it is a good thing to have confidence in ourselves; it is a good thing to be independent and to feel that we are independent. I do not know that we make ourselves independent by shouting independence or that we are really dependent to any extent upon the United States. I was much impressed by the remarks of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) who pointed out that while our imports come in some measure through American ports, yet a large volume of American imports come through Canadian harbours. We must realize that we have Canadian harbours on the Pacific as well as on the Atlantic. When the Lord's Day Bill was before the House and the committee, we were told that a large number of trains were being regularly brought in over the Canadian Pacific Railway, laden with silks and teas for the United States market, and which were carried through Canada to towns in the eastern states. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), in my opinion was quite correct in saying that if the Americans, to use the language of one of the letters I have quoted from, should endeavour to make us sweat, as they naturally would, if we were to adopt the policy now advocated, we might lose a great deal more than we would gain. The hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) has spoken of our doing that which would be to the advantage of Canada. It seems to me that it would be to the greatest advantage of Canada and be an evidence of the greatest degree of loyalty, if we were to choose that policy which will bring the greatest good to the greatest number of our own Canadian people. As has been pointed out, less than 20 per cent of the goods referred to come through American ports today, and it would not add much to the prosperity of our Canadian seaports if the remaining 20 per cent were to come through them. It would not build up Halifax or St. John to any extent if that $13,000,000 of additional imports were brought through those ports nor would that small amount have much effect in building up our shipping interests. The figures quoted to-day were somewhat interesting. In 1903, we imported goods entitled to the British preference, through United States ports, to the value of $12,000,000 and in 1906—three years later—to the amount of $12,500,000, or about half a million dollars increase. But the goods entitled to British preference, which were brought in through our own Canadian ports, had increased, not half a million, but $10,000,000. So that if things be allowed to go on as they are, in three or four years the amount of goods brought in through American ports to Canada will be comparatively very insignificant. I think that we are all loyal; and if without doing any injury to our Canadian business men or consumers, if when the Grand Trunk Pacific is completed and the ports of Halifax and St. John are further improved, such legislation as that which is now proposed may be enacted, and if the enactment of such a policy will bring any degree of benefit to even one or two Canadian seaports, we will all be very willing to have it put upon our statute-books.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). In view of the different opinions expressed to-day upon this very important question, it ought not to be difficult for the House to come to a unanimous conclusion. Every member who had addressed himself to this question has, with one exception—the exception of my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp)—pronounced himself in favour of the principle of this motion. My hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) is the only one who has taken exception to the principle itself. But doubt has arisen as to whether, admitting the principle, the time is opportune for declaring such a policy as that embodied in the motion of my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan). My hon. friend's resolution is quite in keeping with the policy followed by this country for the last fifty years, namely, the developing of Canadian trade within Canadian channels. Everybody in this country for the last fifty years, especially since the inauguration of confederation, has favoured such a policy. Fifty years ago, when we began to build railways, we began to build them north and south, and the objective point of all of them was some American port. The ports of Boston, New York and Portland were the three through which we got our imports in the winter. But after confederation we began to build up another policy. We began to dispense with American harbours and to bring the trade to our own ports. This policy we have followed to the present day and with reasonable measure of success. Take our importations from Great Britain, from seventy to seventy-five per cent come through Canadian harbours and only twenty-five to thirty per cent through American ports. The question now is whether or not, following out that policy, we are in a position to adopt the policy proposed by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan). He proposes that the benefit of British preference should be given only to such goods as come through Canadian ports. My hon. friend, however, is not ready to have his motion apply immediately. Whilst he desires to have it incorporated in the tariff, he is not ready to have it come into force before May, 1908, or a year from next May. I put the question to the House, will the time have come, twelve months from May, when this policy can be applied successfully and without detriment to any body? That the time will come ultimately we are all agreed, with the exception of my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp). But in my judgment the period left for a lee way by my hon. friend from Cumberland is altogether too short. In my opinion we would not be ready twelve months from to-day to put that policy into force. My hon. friend himself has given a reason why we could not apply at once this policy in its entirety. He has said that all the goods from Great Britain might safely come through Canadian ports, that they can reach Montreal by either of two lines of railway, the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and then can reach the new provinces in the west by either the American or Canadian railways. But the objection has been taken that any goods which come to Montreal through Canadian channels would, in order to reach the Canadian west, have to go by the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that there would be no competition, or if we must have competition, these goods would have to go through American territory. Well, it seems to me that my hon. friend has thereby given a reason why it would be premature to adopt this motion now and apply it next year.

But I look upon this motion as a completion of the policy which we inaugurated four years ago when we resolved to construct another transcontinental railway from the Pacific to the Atlantic ocean. When this railway is in operation, as by the terms of the contract it must be in operation in the month of December 1911, then will be a fitting time to adopt this policy. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would not be disposed to agree altogether with the motion of my hon. friend if it is intended to apply it in the month of May, 1908; it will, however, fittingly apply in 1911 when the transcontinental railway will be completed. Then we shall have two competing lines from the maritime harbours to the great new centre that is developing west of the great lakes, and then when the people of the Northwest will have two lines in operation to carry their imports and exports, we will be in a position safely to apply the policy indicated in the motion of my hon. friend from Cumberland.

My hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), however, objects in toto to the policy, if I understood him aright. He is afraid that if we adopted this policy we might offend our American neighbours. Well, Sir, we know from past experience that our American neighbours are very sensitive in their trade relations, we know that they are not disposed to give anything if they can help it. But they cannot find fault with us if we take a leaf out of their own book and copy their own methods. Is it not a fact that the Americans have never neglected an opportunity of bringing trade into their own channels when they were able to do so? If we adopt the same principle of bringing trade into Canadian channels, certainly our neighbours cannot find fault with us. Now, would the adoption of this policy at the present time have any effect upon the bonding privilege? I do not think so. The bonding privilege merely gives us the privilege of carrying our own goods through their territory, and gives them the privilege of carrying their goods through our territory. But if we choose by domestic arrangement to bring trade into our channels, we do not thereby abolish the bonding privilege, we simply become independent of it. Well, Sir, was not one of the objects we had in view when we introduced the policy of building a new transcontinental railway to get rid of our dependence upon the bonding privilege? Our policy is to be absolutely free of the need of using American harbours and of the need of a bonding privilege; we desire to be in such a position that at all times we can bring our imports and send our exports through our own channels independently of American harbours and the bonding privilege. Moreover, we are to remember that the benefits of the bonding privilege are reciprocal. The Americans use our territory and we use their territory. But if it should come to this, that the bonding privilege were taken away from us by the United States, we can take away from them the bonding privilege which they enjoy of carrying their goods through our territory, and in that case I think the United States would have more to lose than we would have. However, I would be sorry if it ever came to that, we do not want to have with our American neighbours any but the most friendly relations. I would be sorry if the bonding privilege was interfered with, but if it is ever interfered with at all, I am ready to say that in my humble judgment we have less to lose than our American neighbours, and they would hesitate before interfering with the bonding privilege. They may do so, however. Twice already they have threatened us with the destruction of the bonding privilege, and at that time it would have been a serious blow to us, because we were not equipped then, as we shall be by and by to be able to do without it. When we have another transcontinental railway in operation I think we shall be absolutely independent of the bonding privilege. Therefore, holding these views, though I think the motion of my hon. friend is all right, it is a little premature. But it is well to have it on our statute-book, it is well that we should know it is there, and that we intend to make use of it at the proper time. But the proper time would not be in 1908, the proper time would be when our new railway is in operation. Therefore, if my hon. friend would permit me, I would move this amendment to his motion:

That on and after a date to be named by the Governor in Council the British preference shall apply only to goods brought into Canada if shipped through a Canadian seaport.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I have only to observe that the Prime Minister three years ago was ready to adopt this policy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, certainly some members of his government were, the Minister of Finance was ready to vote for it at once, and when passed it directed the government to carry this proposal into force at once. My hon. friend was in control of the House. His Minister of Finance said he was ready to agree to it at once. The observations of the Prime Minister were to this effect, that he was in favour of the principle in the abstract, that there was a question as to its effect upon retail traders who might require quick delivery, and he said that any change such as this should be heralded, otherwise, there might be disturbance, and that the government should not take a leap in the dark. Well, he has had three years to investigate and to herald, he still controls this House as he did then, and now he proposes, after reflecting on this question two years and a half, to emasculate the resolution of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) and to substitute a resolution which absolutely leaves the whole matter in abeyance. Now, the resolution of 1904 was definite and explicit. The Prime Minister had had two years to consider it at that date, because the hon. member for Cumberland gave notice of it, in the first instance in 1901; he did not introduce it till 1904. Well, after having had the two years' consideration to which I have alluded, the Prime Minister said he required further time before putting it into effect. Nevertheless at that time he supported this resolution, and it passed the House:

That in the opinion of this House the preferential tariff shall only apply to importations through Canadian seaports.

It was a resolution much more definite, much more effective, and having a much more immediate effect, than the resolution the hon. member for Cumberland has proposed to-day. Well, if a resolution of that kind was proper according to the view of the Prime Minister, and especially according to the view of the Minister of Finance, who said definitely that he would vote for it if it came to a division, why is it that the matter is to be left in the nebulous condition which is proposed by the Prime Minister to-day? My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was extremely explicit on that occasion. He said over and over again that if it was necessary to divide the House upon it, he would cordially vote in support of the motion. He did, of course, refer to the educational effect of the discussion, but he committed himself to a resolution which called for immediate action and did not suggest any delay. As far as the general observations of the Prime Minister are concerned they, of course, leave this matter practically where it would be if no such resolution passed. It confers a power uopn the Governor in Council which the Prime Minister has told us will not be exercised before 1911 at the very earliest. He has given his reasons for that, I do not intend to enter into any discussion of them. It seems to me that, apart from the considerations which have been advanced to-day, one very effective method of bringing trade to Canadian channels is by rendering the mode of transportation from Great Britain to our ports and through our country as cheap and expeditious as, or more cheap and expeditious than, the means of communication by ports in the United States. That is the most effective way of all, there can be no doubt of that. It may be, and I have no doubt is the case that some assistance might be given by a method such as my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has suggested,—and he has made a very interesting and instructive speech in support of his proposal—but after all when you come to the real test as to the channels through which traffic will pass, it will in the end always pass through those channels which are the most expeditious and cheapest; and by properly equipping our Canadian ports and by making our mode of inland communication both by rail and by water as good as or better than those in the United States we will accomplish the end sought by my hon. friend from Cumberland, more effectively than in any other way.

If this proposal, the principle of which has been sanctioned by the Prime Minister, is a good one why should it not be applied to the intermediate tariff as well? If it is good as a principle to apply the British preferential tariff only to goods which enter by Canadian ports why is it not an equally good principle to apply the intermediate tariff only to goods which come to this country by direct shipment to Canadian ports? If the principle is good in one case I cannot believe it is not good in the other case, and I would ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of that, he would not be willing to amend the resolution he has himself suggested, which by the way, is not in proper technical form—by including, after the words 'British preference' the words 'intermediate tariff'. There is no such expression to be found in the tariff resolutions as 'British preference' which the Prime Minister has used; the proper technical expression in the resolutions brought down by the Minister of Finance is the British preferential tariff. I would suggest to the Prime Minister for his consideration whether or not the words 'intermediate tariff' should not be added after the words 'British preferential tariff' which should appear in this resolution instead of the expression the Prime Minister has used.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The suggestion of my hon. friend is one which is worthy of consideration, but I could not be prepared to accept it at this moment for this reason: The British preferential tariff—I stand corrected, since my hon. friend prefers it so—is in force now; the intermediate tariff comes into force only at a later time. It does not apply to any country now, it is there only to be applied at the proper time and the question is a proper one to consider at that time, but I would not take it up to-night as suggested.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) appears to forget that this is to come into force by order of the Governor General in Council as well, and therefore. Thus when you bring the intermediate tariff into force by proclamation and order of the Governor General in Council, you will also bring into force by exactly the same means the terms of the resolution which the Prime Minister has proposed. The two proposals run exactly along the same line. The intermediate tariff is to come into force by order of the Governor in Council. This particular provision of the tariff resolutions is also to come into force by order of the Governor General in Council; there seems therefore no good distinction in that respect.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Pardon me, there is. The intermediate tariff can come into force only by negotiation. Suppose we have that tariff on goods coming from Italy; we have no direct line to Italy and therefore it would not be right to apply this resolution to the intermediate tariff with Italy, our goods might have to come through the United States. All this may come in time but at the present time we are dealing with the British preferential tariff and the motion covers that.

Mr. KEMP. We have no direct line to certain portions of the British empire, to which the British preferential tariff applies.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think we receive much from those portions of the empire.

Mr. KEMP. Oh, yes, a great deal. Mr. Hugh Blain, a wholesale grocer of Toronto, made a statement to that effect and a number of other wholesale grocers have said the same thing. Mr. Blain said at the conference held by the boards of trade to which the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) referred:

> My friend asks me if I were ever down there and I suppose he means I would discover that they had facilities. Take my own business; we import goods from the Straits Settlements, Ceylon and other eastern parts and there is no direct connection between any of them and any Caaadian port. We cannot issue a letter of credit bringing goods by any port except by way of New York or Boston.

These are the sentiments of a good many wholesale grocers.

Mr. R. BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence). I think the country is under a debt of gratitude to the hon. member from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) for introducing this motion. One point has not been touched on by either the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and that is that old John Bull should be taught that there are ports in Canada. They seem to still think in England that Portland and the State of Maine are in our country. They forget the Ashburton treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They ought to be.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. They ought to be in our country, there we agree. Now, Sir, who will suffer ? I do not know of any one who will suffer. Perhaps a few merchants in Toronto who are importers might suffer but surely that good city is sufficiently patriotic——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. BICKERDIKE—to be willing to lose a few cents on the carriage of freight to protect our own ports. I cannot understand why any one will suffer at all. The Prime Minister says that probably the time is too soon. I think both my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) and the Prime Minister are procrastinating in this because in four or five years from now when the Grand Trunk Pacific is completed the population of the west will have increased and some one may then suggest that we have to postpone this action until we get another transcontinental line. That will be the result and therefore I feel sure with the way the west is filling up now, we cannot do this too soon, and I did hope that the Prime Minister would change it and make it come into force at once. That is the proper thing to do.

Mr. FOSTER. Put your pressure on.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes, it is not very strong. The British people, especially British manufacturers, are receiving great benefits under the preferential tariff and we are all pleased to have it so, but would it not be well that they should learn what route to send their products by ? I believe they do not go to the trouble to find out. I do not believe it is a question of freight. It is simply that they do not go to the trouble to find out. The continuation of the flirtation going on between John Bull and our friends to the south of us is in many cases detrimental to our interests. Canada unfortunately has to furnish the music very often for that flirtation and the band comes high. I would like very much if we could have this brought into force immediately.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, almost every speaker has commenced with a profession of his sympathies, and the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) came to the conclusion that everybody was sympathetically, at least, in favour of the proposition of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), with the possible exception of my hon. friend on my right. Well, I may be allowed to ask whether there is anything else but an expression of sympathy on the part of the right hon. gentleman and his government. They were given notice, and consequently were asked to consider this question when the member for Cumberland, in 1901, first brought this matter before the House, and that is nearly six years ago. Then the matter came up in 1904. It is a thing which is passing strange, and I think not in good form, that the government, when it has control of the matter, allows an explicit declaration of a policy to be made and to be carried in the House with its assent and with the strong support of its members, and yet without any intention at all, as has been confessed here to-day by the right hon. gentleman, of putting it into force. Surely the country has a right to expect that when this parliament, led by the premier, makes an explicit declaration of policy and embalms it in a resolution, supports it and passes it without any qualification at all, that the resolution really means what it says, and that it means something and is not simply an idle flirtation. The business world are advertised, not only in Canada, but outside of Canada, that the right hon. premier and the parliament of Canada have put in the form of a resolution of parliament in the most formal way you can do outside of the statute itself, and have advocated an immediate line of policy, and they are advertised to guide and govern themselves accordingly. When they go to work and think it over, and it sinks into their minds, they suddenly awake—may be not suddenly, but a while afterwards—and they find that the Prime Minister of Canada did not mean at all what was said in that resolution; nor was there any intention of carrying that resolution out on the part of the Finance Minister, who, in a matter of this kind, speaks with as much authority as the Prime Minister, because he presides over that very important branch of the country's business. They find that the Prime Minister did not mean at all that he said he did, what the resolution which he allowed to pass, and which he allowed his own colleagues to definitely declare they were in favour of and would vote for coming into force immediately, affirmed. This has not a good influence in the country nor outside of it. No resolution should be allowed to pass by the government unless it is an honest resolution and honestly meant. Now, we see that this was simply a flirtation, that my right hon. friend is simply preparing himself for a more extended flirtation of we know not how many years on this subject. He has not had anything to do in regard to it since 1904. He is proposing to go on just coquetting with it, not denying that he wishes to continue that for an indefinite period in the future. What happened? The matter of the revision of the tariff has been before the country for three or four years. The right hon. gentleman's commission went through this country from one end of it to the other obtaining all the information that they could possibly get to mould a tariff which should meet Canada's wants, and which should embody the true principles which had been subscribed to by the government and by the party which had supported that government. Yet that commission had gone from one end of this country to the other without having, as far as I have heard, or as far as I now know, touched the question as to whether the business men and the transportation interests of this country were favourable or what their view was in regard to such an important question as the confining of the preferential goods to the ports of Canada. That shows, in the first place, that the government did not take seriously their own subscription of faith. The creed that they declared to be their creed in 1904 they absolutely threw aside, and they absolutely neglected the opportunity in the course of the investigation which would have enabled them, if they had put the proper questions and carried out the proper inquiry to have come back to this House with an authoritative idea of what the sentiments of the business and transportation interests were. That great privilege they did not avail themselves of, and the thing comes to this pass, that to-day, when my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) wishes to have his resolution put into actual working within a year, the government have no definite information upon which to act, and we have gone through this debate to-day without a single member of the government being able to tell us what they believe the effect of this will be upon the transportation and business interests of this country. That shows, in the first place, that it is simply coquetting with the question. Unready, they toy with it and dally with it, using it to create a sentiment favourable to themselves where it may be used in that way, and, where it may be used in the other way, to say: We never intended to put that into force; do you not see that at least we put it up in the clouds with a long string attached to it by which we may pull it down at some time in the dim and distant future, and we may not. We pledge ourselves to nothing except sympathy. But what has been the defect in this discussion to-day, despite the able speeches that we have had, and they have been interesting and able to a certain extent. A person listening to this debate has this difficulty: He says that there is really at stake the injury or benefit of the transportation and trade interests of this country, and yet there was between the different speakers an absolute disagreement as to whether these will be in the main injured or whether they will be helped. Take it by and large, and not one single man has been able to give much more than his own experience and some statistics which he has been fortunate enough to gather out of his own trade and business or from the transportation and other companies. So that when one gentleman reads a letter from one of the most prominent importers of this country—a very old and very responsible house—why, it does not seem to come with any authority, for somebody says that is only one man's opinion. It is one man's opinion; it is a good opinion, in so far as it goes, and I believe it is an honest opinion; but how much better we would have been equipped if the commission, which spent two or three years and a lot of the country's money in finding out what the sentiment of this country was in reference to tariff matters, trade and transportation interests, had collected the opinions of the trade and transportation interests, technical men engaged in business who know just where this would strike and who could give reasons for their opinion.

We have none of this equipment, because the government did not discharge its duty to get all this information on the broadest and most general grounds. I have unbounded faith in the future of Canada; I believe in strengthening the sentiment of nationality, but I don't believe it is necessary for us to bite off even a portion of our own noses, unless we are sure the result will be beneficial to the whole body. The transportation and the business interests of this country, are, outside of sentiment, the two interests which will guide us in this as a matter of policy. Sentiment will be reinforced by the consideration that our transportation and business interests will be bettered, and if that be so, we may embark on this new policy with assurance. But I do not know what the general effect on the transportation interests of this country will be. I see a population of 6,000,000 here; I see our transportation interests with connections in England and connections in China and Japan, and intermediate connections in the United States. If there are 30,000,000 people in the middle west of the United States who export and who import, and if the facilities we have built up at so much cost are able to feed the business requirements of that 30,000,000, should we not be mighty careful as to whether we shall put the least straw in the way of our getting the full benefit of that trade. Our own population is sparse at present; true it is constantly increasing, but I reiterate with all my strength, that before we adopt any such policy as is foreshadowed here, we should know just how it is going to affect us.

I thought that the Prime Minister rather put a chip on his shoulder and invited the United States to knock it off. That chip was a sort of defiance from him, about the bonding privilege. Make yourself independent of the bonding privilege and do it as soon as you can, but don't make yourself independent of it with the idea that you want to get rid of any mutual advantage that come from it to both countries. Does it hurt Canada to have the United States ship goods from Vancouver to Boston, over the whole length of Canadian territory? The Prime Minister does not think it does; the Minister of Customs does not think it does; the government does not think it does, for the government has absolutely violated a treaty and knocked into a cocked hat the customs laws of this country in order to give that free transportaion in at least one notable instance. The treaty of 1818 forbids any use of Canadian ports for transhipment and the buying of bait, and yet, in order to get the transportation of certain products through Canada, from Vancouver to Boston, the government—on the slim foundation of an Audit Act which was never meant and never used for that purpose—have absolutely knocked a hole though the treaty of 1818 and set the customs law at defiance. And why? Just to do the very thing that was so lightly spoken of by the Prime Minister to-night, when he thought the United States might take away from us the bonding privilege just as soon as they liked.

Now, Sir, the bonding privilege is mutually good. Does it not help Canada to have great quantities of goods from the United States passing through our territory? Ever hour that these goods are in this country, every mile they pass over the rails, is an hour and a mile which feeds some Canadian mouth and which makes some Canadian arm all the stronger for the development of the productive forces of this country. Along the whole line, rich drippings, which go to build up and fertilize this country in the development of its wealth, come from that kind of traffic. Don't we want all of it we can possibly get? Let us make no show of bravado with reference to the United States; let us not put a chip on our shoulder and tell them to knock it off if they like; let us not tell them their bonding privileges are no good, but let us admit that the bonding privileges are mutually beneficial to both countries. Above all, don't forget that any kind of an arrangement this country makes, which may be construed by the Congress of the United States into an attempt to take away from them any trade they would otherwise get, will be met by an equal measure of restriction by that Congress, just as sure as we are here. It has done it in every single case so far; it will do it in every single case in the future. The United States is out for trade; it is out for foreign trade. Its immense productive power can satisfy its own needs and its great pressure now is to get foreign markets. Read the speeches of Mr. Shaw; read the speeches of Mr. Root; read the speeches of any great United States publicist, and the whole beat and trend is: We need trade and we must push for foreign markets. If, by this legislation, you deprive the United States of $20,000,000, or $1,000,000 worth of its trade, the United States Congress will be ready and quick to put into its next tariff legislation what will be a counterpoise as against our trade.

We do not want it in either case. Unless we can show that it is of greater ultimate benefit to us—in fact, almost a necessity—there is no necessity for us making any provocation in order to incite the United States to do away with the bonding privilege; and I cannot help thinking that the illusion of the Prime Minister to that was not at all a fortunate allusion. Now, until we get the proper information, so that we are enabled to gauge just about what this thing will do, and what effect it will have on our business interests by and large, and on our transportation interests by and large, with reference not only to what we carry for ourselves, but to what we carry for other people, I am not in a position to vote in favour of such a policy being put upon the statute-book. But what I am in favour of is having an investigation. I am sorry that we have to take money that we might have saved; sorry that we have to give these gentlemen who occupy the treasury benches another year of the trouble of going about the country asking questions. The answers seem to have been so voluminous in one case that they fuddled the brains of the ministry and it took them two years to get their conclusions into shape. After their conclusions had simmered for two years and got the proper jellification, they bring them down, and we get the astoundingly wise statement from the Minister of Customs that a month ago he had put on 60 cents and less than a month ago 40 cents, and now it is 50 cents; and when I asked him how it came to be 50 cents, he said that he had added sixty and forty together and divide the result by two. Let the ministers appoint their commission and get at the bottom of this thing, with reference to the business interests and the transportation interests, and let them bring that information to us as a basis, and we shall have something tangible to go upon. At present we have sentiment, which is good as far as it goes, and the sentiment of this House is Canadian. I am glad to see that it is so Canadian as it is. The comparison is very pleasant indeed. My hon. friend from Cumberland said that what we wanted was a unifying national policy—a national spirit; and, as he said it, he looked over to the Minister of Finance, no doubt with the thought somewhere in the back of his head of that time not yet passed from the memory of man when the same Minister of Finance was endeavouring to take Nova Scotia and if possible New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island outside of this confederation. How pleasant the change; how glad we are for the conversion. How glad we are for the conversion of the right hon. gentleman as well. I can remember and I do not have to go very far back, the time when he thought we were treating the United States most scandalously; when he thought that of all countries in the world that was the country to be cultivated, that there was our natural market, that there was where we must look for the source of our prosperity. One time he pinned the flag of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States to the top of his party mast and swore by all the gods that it should stay there until they came into power, if it should be a decade or two decades. Then he declared that we did not get reciprocity with the United States because the Tories, stiff-necked and rebellious, did not want it and only made a pretext of trying to get it. Well, he came in, and his powerful men with him, and he marshalled his giants and marched on Uncle Sam, and used sunny ways, or threatening ways. or any way he could in order to accomplish his designs. Now he takes the opportunity of telling Mr. Root, right in the face, that we are not very anxious at all about having trade relations with the United States; that, in fact, we think we are better off by going our own road. All this is pleasant. It shows that at last logic and reason and a consistent course by the Liberal-Conservatives of this country have had their effect even upon such obdurate people as these old-time free traders and lovers of the United States.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And that is the reason you want more investigation?

Mr. FOSTER. I want investigation because I find that my right hon. friend is very faulty in his knowledge. May I give him an instance? When we had a debate here not a month ago, in which the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) struck out, in his strongest and most effective way—not this time against the Englishman as compared with the Doukhobor, but against the Swedish privateers who, having access to our country in a free coasting privilege, were taking the birthright from our people, I ventured to say a word with reference to it, and I had no more taken my seat than my right hon. friend jumped on me with both feet. These Tories are forgetful, he said; my friend forgets that these people were let in to the reciprocal casting privileges of Canada by the old Tory government. Now, let my right hon. friend look up the record, and he will find that all these countries but two—and one of these was Argentina, which does not trouble us much—were let in to the reciprocal coasting privileges by the Liberal government which was in power from 1874 to 1879. And so I advise my right hon. friend to be sure of his facts, and get from other people the information which he does not very often have accurately himself as when he makes such a mistake as he did in this case—effective at the time, for all behind him cheered him mightily for the way he floored the members opposite. Well, we are not going to cheer over it because it was a case in which the Prime Minister had not the knowledge, but had the courage, which was greater than his knowledge, and his courage got the better of his knowledge and led him into a misrepresentation of the facts. And now, with regard to my good-natured friend from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), I want him also to revise his methods. I want him to take the Minister of Agriculture by the ear and lead him away into some private corner, and have one real heart talk with him; because when my hon. friend, if I understood him to-night, berated John Bull because he did not give us enough preference for what we gave him, I remembered that not two weeks ago Lloyd George, a member of the British cabinet, declared in a speech that the British people were not called upon to give any preference to Canadian products because the Hon. Sydney Fisher had declared in so many words that the Canadian farmer did not want a preference from Great Britain. Now, will my hon. friend use his persuasive ways, which are so well known, on the Minister of Agriculture and just give him a private wigging for making that most unfortunate and unfounded statement which he did make with reference to that subject.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I want to allude to the only point that troubles the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). He wants information, and he thinks the tariff commission ought to go through the country and procure that information for him and for the House. Now, supposing we did so, is the member for North Toronto prepared to act upon the suggestions?

Mr. FOSTER. No, he is not prepared to act upon the suggestions of the minister, but he is prepared to act upon the information.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, he can make up his mind what he would do in the following contingency. Here is an invitation to all parties, to all classes of business men, to come before us and state their wishes and their views on trade and commerce, because the hon. member for Toronto says he cannot give an intelligent vote until he knows what these people say. Well, suppose that Mr. Smith comes before us and says: I have invested ten thousand dollars in a tape manufactory and I want the preferential not to apply to as great an extent as it does. Well, Mr. Smith, there is a gentleman in the House of Commons who was Finance Minister, he has been to Washington on one occasion, if not more, to ascertain the views of the American government, and he wants to ascertain your views in reference to this matter so that he may be able to vote intelligently on the question when it comes up. If we do this do you think the United States will do away with the bonding privilege? Well, I do not know much about that question; I think you have men in the House of Commons who ought to be able to determine that better than myself. Was not the member for North Toronto Finance Minister at one time; has he not interviewed the American government and would not his opinion upon this question be as good as mine? Then, Mr. Jones comes forward and says he is engaged in another line of manufacture, and the preference will affect him somewhat. Mr. Jones, we wish to get your opinion upon an important mattter. There is a question coming up in the House of Commons and the member for North Toronto does not know what to do unless he has your opinion. He wants to know if you think that if we interfere with this preference it will lead Uncle Sam to do away with the bonding privilege? The member for North Toronto wants to know your opinion upon that point. Then Mr. White comes before us, who is engaged in another line of business, and he presents his case. The member for North Toronto thinks it was our bounden duty to ask him. What do you think? If we interefere with this preference and confine it to goods coming through our own ports will Uncle Sam do away with the bonding privilege? Would he not be apt to give the same answer. The House of Commons, as representatives o the people of Canada, have to deal with great questions like that, and they are in a position to know better what to do with reference to these matters than I am. Why, such an idea! Of course, this House has to consider questions of that sort; this House, with its knowledge of public affairs, after discussion of the course of trade, must consider how it will affect us; how any action we may take will affect Uncle Sam. I will not follow up this line of argument any further, but I could not help being amused at the position of the hon. member for North Toronto who says that he cannot determine this question until Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones and Mr. White have told him what their opinion is upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Suppose I were to turn the tables and ask him what under heaven was the Tariff Commission doing for two or three years when they were going through this country from one end to the other, asking Mr. Smith one question about it, and Mr. Jones another question about it, and Mr. White another? Was it not the duty of the members of this commission to report this information to parliament?

Mr. PATERSON. We asked Mr. Smith about his business, supposing that he knew more about it than any member of this House possibly could; therefore, we asked him for the information of which he was in possession and which we wished to obtain. But if we had asked him what the hon. gentleman thinks we ought to have asked him, why he would have told us what I have said before: You had better ask the hon. member for North Toronto who is better posted on public affairs than I am.

Mr. FOSTER. But suppose my hon. friend and his colleagues had asked th great transportation interests whom they met in every quarter of this country, how their business would be affected by putting into operation a resolution which the government affirmed in 1904, and suppose he had asked the business interest, the importers and others, how their interests be affected. Now, if he had asked them that would he not have had a body of information which would be just as cognate to the question which we are discussing to-night as the questions that he asked the business men with reference to tariff conditions upon which they spent so much time and money? But my hon. friend assumes that I was not able to make up my mind as to whether this should be put into active operation because I did not know whether the bonding privilege would be done away with or not. That was not my position. I discussed the bonding privilege because it was introduced by the Prime Minister. My position was that the information I lacked was information which my hon. friend ought to have given, as to how the transportation interests and the business interests of this country would be affected by the incorporation of that declaration in the tariff.

Mr. PATERSON. The transportation companies and the whole country had had notice of the motion of the member for Cumberland for some years. The representatives of the transportation companies had the same invitation that every one else had to come before us and make known their opinions. Such representations as they made known to us will be found embodied in the report, if there is one, just as the representations that were made by other parties. There may be a difference of opinion among transportation companies upon certain points, and their interests may be at variance. And out of it all, it comes to this that the House of Commons must determine for itself a question on which large conflicting interests are not agreed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs a question.

Mr. PATERSON. I am not undergoing a catechism.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has answered a question put by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), is he going to discriminate between him and me?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, he needs information while you do not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I admit that I do not need information so much as the minister does, but I need some, and I would like to know whether or not any inquiry was made by the Tariff Commission into this question. They had very good notice of it. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had assented to this resolution. He had made himself a party to it——

That in the opinion of this House the preferential tariff should only apply to importations through Canadian ports.

That was proposed for the purpose of bringing about an amendment to the tariff and the government had accepted it but said they desired further information. The right hon. gentleman, the leader of the Minister of Customs, said that he desired further information. This Tariff Commission went perambulating about the country for the alleged purpose of obtaining information on all questions pertaining to the tariff. Did they or did they not procure or seek any information on this question? Or did they regard it as of so little moment, although the principle was affirmed by a resolution of the House of Commons, that they never gave it a thought?

Mr. PATERSON. I shall do the hon. gentleman the courtesy of answering as far as I can. In the first place, the motion referred to was not moved as an amendment to the tariff.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was moved in relation to the tariff.

Mr. PATERSON. The tariff was not under consideration. It was moved as an independent resolution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a very fine distinction.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, I want to keep my hon. friend right even on minor points. There was every opportunity for the transportation companies to make before the Tariff Commission any representations they saw fit. Speaking for myself alone, I should not have cared to ask every one who came before us: What do you think the United States government will do if we should take such a course? Do you think the bonding privilege will be in danger? I would not care to put any such question. We are the parties to determine what course we shall take, after looking at the subject from all points of view and discounting all the possibilities and probabilities. And in my opinion this parliament is better fitted to determine that point than any individual we might question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not asking about the bonding privileges with the United States at all, but I am asking whether the Tariff Commission made any attempt to procure that information which the Prime Minister said in 1904 it was necessary for the government to obtain before putting this resolution into force. The terms of the resolution itself show that it would have application to the tariff if carried into effect, and the First Minister told us that certain information was necessary. I am asking whether or not the members of that Tariff Commission took this question into consideration at all; and if they did, what is the result of their inquiries?

Mr. PATERSON. I have replied to my hon. friend. I said that I did not intend to discuss the subject generally but wanted the committee to go on with the consideration of the items. But I was somewhat amused with the argument of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who objected that the commission, as it went around did not ask the views of Smith, Jones and Robinson as to the probable action of the United States government with regard to the bonding privilege, should a certain course be adopted by this government. I answered him on that point. I said that we did not make any such inquiries of individuals. My own view was that if even any such question had been suggested to us, I would not have cared to put it. But with reference to the general question as to whether it is desirable that the British preference should only be given to goods brought through Canadian ports, I believe that representations were made in that connection at one or two points in the maritime provinces. I think that in the city of St. John, some gentlemen there brought before us the desirability of having the preference apply only to imports through Canadian ports and there were perhaps others who brought up the question, but there were only a very few who took sufficient interest in the matter to bring it before us. I speak of course subject to correction because we had a great many interviews at a great many places.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. However much the hon. gentleman may have been amused at the remarks of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the House is still more amused at the minister's inability to give the slightest information on the very important question I have put to him. He says that no one took any interest in the matter. Certainly the members of the commission do not seem to have concerned themselves much about it. Yet we had a proposal put forward in this House by one of the government's own supporters—a very important proposal, which the government accepted without qualification—and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is forced to admit that this Tariff Commission took no interest in it. And he regarded the matter as of so little moment that it did not impress itself upon his memory. No inquiry was made by the commission, the subject was never mentioned, but was considered as not deserving the attention of the members of the government who composed that commission. What was the Tariff Commission doing? Why did it not occupy itself with this matter? Was it not a matter of considerable moment? Had it not been introduced by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) a year or two before? Had not the resolution of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) received the approval of this House with the consent of the government? If there was one matter more than another which should have engaged the attention of the Tariff Commission, it was this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is it the commission should have inquired into?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let me quote from the right hon. gentleman's own remarks:

The hon. gentleman does not appreciate that this is a business government, that we look before we leap, and that we try to ascertain where we will land before we attempt to jump.

Mr. FOSTER. He had already jumped.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Further on he says—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no necessity for inquiry into that, it is known to every body.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Further on he says:

My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) knows perfectly well that while at present most of the wholesale houses import through Canadian harbours, I understand that the retail business in Toronto and Montreal, and London and Hamilton, is still largely done through United States ports. The retail houses wish to have their orders filled in a hurry; they cable for their goods and they give instructions to send them by the cheapest—not by the cheapest, but by the quickest route—so that they may have them at the earliest opportunity. This is a circumstance which we have to look into.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did not the Tariff Commission look into that, that is the question.

I think it is possible even in that case to force trade into Canadian channels.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He thinks it is possible but he does not know; therefore, the Tariff Commission should have inquired.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. (reading):

By giving due notice to importers of all classes, that they will get the British preference if they send their importations by way of Canada, we should, I think, accomplish that. But, if without giving notice of the policy which the government intend to pursue on this question, we at once adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), there would probably be a great deal of disturbance caused in certain lines of business.

There will be a great deal of disturbance and therefore the Tariff Commission should have investigated. He understood that disturbance in these lines of business would be occasioned and I could quote still further illustrations from his remarks if it were necessary to do so. If the Prime Minister did not desire further information why did he not act then? It was either for the purpose of obtaining information or giving notice, one or the other. Now, which was it, or was it both? Will the Prime Minister tell me, was it for the purpose of giving notice merely or was it for the purpose of giving notice and obtaining information? If it was only for the purpose of giving notice then the Prime Minister announced on that occasion in the concluding portions of his remarks the policy of the government. I shall read his words:

Therefore, I think it is quite proper that this discussion should take place, and that all parties should understand that the government would be actuated and guided by it, as to what its future course should be.

Therefore the position is just this, as I understand the Prime Minister's remarks, he wanted information and he wanted notice given to the country. He has given the country three years' notice; has he obtained the information?

Mr. FOSTER. The ministers never got it for him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He has given the three years' notice, has he obtained the information? If the Tariff Commission has obtained the information let us have it, let them state what it was. If information was not desired, then we have had three years' notice and the policy then affirmed by the House should be put into force.

Mr. PATERSON. The Tariff Commission was appointed to inquire into the conditions of the trade and commerce of the country—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is not this part of it?

Mr. PATERSON—in its different lines and branches, and it did it. With reference to the question that is under consideration at the present time or the questions that have been raised as to the probable effect of certain action if taken by this government upon the action of another government—that is the question he is asking—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not ask that.

Mr. PATERSON. As to the question he asks with reference to the trade and commerce there is no one who will be able to give better information than we can get from our own statistics of trade. These statistics have been brought before the House to-day by many speakers. That information we have got. When this question is taken up and is being dealt with those statistics can be supplemented by inquiries that will be made in a few quarters from people who are supposed to have information other than what is in the public records. I shall not discuss this matter further but I take this opportunity now and I demand in courtesy an answer from the hon. gentleman having attempted to answer his question, to ask: Where is my hon. friend on this question? He voted for that resolution in 1898, or four years ago he says: Did I understand that he now is prepared without this information that he says it is absolutely necessary to get, to say that this course should be adopted in May, 1909, or where is he on this question?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not say that I desired any more information; that is the answer to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister allow me to present another nut for him to crack? The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) accompanied occasionally by another minister travelled this country over from end to end asking questions of Tom Smith and John Jones and Edward Brown which they knew all about, because they knew all about this trade question before they came into power; they were so cock sure over all the commercial conditions of this country that before they came into power they knew exactly what they would do on obtaining office, they would eliminate protection and remove the curse and ban from this country.

Mr. PATERSON. And did we not do it?

Mr. FOSTER. Now you went through the country for two or three years, the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance; you asked questions of this one and that one and the other, and you had in mind once in a while this idea of forcing preferential goods through Canadian ports, did you not? And you decided that you would adopt the policy and you did adopt the policy, and you brought it down to this House in your resolutions, making it necessary that sugar importations, in order to have the preference apply to them, should come in though Canadian ports and through Canadian ports alone. That you decided was the proper thing to do, you brought your resolution down and you intended to pass it through the House. Had the small boys been caught doing something that the larger one did not know any thing about? The smaller boys meeting together determined they would put this particular idea into practice as far as sugar was concerned. Suddenly they were called off. Why? It must have been that the right hon. gentleman found out what they were at and he called them off. You made the policy, you adopted it with reference to sugar and you have not been strong enough in your opinion or strong enough in you power of will to put through what you declared by bringing down the resolution was the proper policy in reference to sugar imports. Now where is the difference between applying the principle in part and in all? You applied it in part until the Prime Minister got hold of you and then he made you drop it quicker than a hot potato.

Mr. PATERSON. I fear I am monopolizing the time of the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, we like to hear you.

Mr. PATERSON—but really I do not often trouble the House you know unless they are kind enough to ask me and then my good nature always prevails on me to answer, especially when information is sought. I was appointed with two of my colleagues, three in fact, to ascertain the condition of the trade of the country after ten years of the tariff which had been introduced by the Liberal party on attaining to power in accordance with the platform laid down three years before, at the convention of the great Liberal party. That policy made a very radical change in the tariff of this country. It had been in operation for ten years and we wanted to see how it was operating, whether there were any changes in the current of trade and the conditions of the country that necessitated changes in the tariff and it was a most gratifying thing to us to find as we went from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as we met the representatives of the fishermen, the miners, the agriculturists, the professional classes, the merchants, wholesale and retail, and every other person, that as a general thing the tariff which had been adopted in accordance with the principles laid down by the Liberal party in 1893, whereby revenue was to be—

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, oh, be easy on us.

Mr. PATERSON. Whereby revenue was to be the basis on which the tariff would be founded—for wherever there is a customs duty of course there is a certain amount of protection—but this was a tariff founded on revenue as we were instructed in that platform to introduce and we wanted to see what its effect had been. It was predicted that if we went on the principle of a revenue tariff and eliminated the principle of protection, which principle is prohibition to shut out the goods that would otherwise come into the country—the principle of prohibition that the Liberal party protested against—disastrous results would follow.

That is what the principle of protection is. We said: No, that is wrong; you may impose taxation—and we provided in the resolution of the convention for the imposition of taxation—and the rates should be levied by customs duties as they had been in the past, but that they must be levied for the purpose of raising a revenue and whatever protection there was in them came in as an incident. The principle of protection is to prohibit goods coming in and if perchance any little money does come into the public treasury as a result it is merely an incident and not a working out of the principle. We reversed that. We carried out our policy. What was the result? We have been from end to end of this country and we found that the operation of our tariff policy was giving unbounded satisfaction. We found a degree of prosperity prevailing that is not equalled in any other country at the present time, and that the requests for changes, except on minor points, were very few. People said: Yes, you have your revenue; it is a revenue tariff. Is it not a revenue tariff in view of the fact that when we came in we found a tariff enacted by hon. gentlemen opposite, that was bringing in from $17,000,000 to $19,000,000 a year which we changed with the result that we get a revenue in ten years afterwards of over $50,000,000. Again I ask: Is it not a revenue tariff? Yet, men rise here and parrot like, repeat again and again that we have been false to that plank which we laid down in the Liberal platform. I utterly deny it.

Mr. FOSTER. You will deny anything.

Mr. PATERSON. No, I will not deny anything; but I will deny anything that is not true. I was on the committee that framed that platform.

Mr. FOSTER. Worse still.

Mr. PATERSON. I was on that committee. I understood it. I had the honour, I think, of being the one who seconded that resolution and I pointed out in the speech which has been referred to that under a revenue tariff, while you were securing the necessary revenue for the country, there would be as an incident enough protection to sustain the industries of this country. This was denied by these hon. gentlemen. They said that it might produce a revenue but that it would open the flood-gates to foreign competition at the expense of crushing out Canadian industry. One of the gratifying features of our travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific was to find that hon. gentlemen opposite had not the first conception of the needs of the trade and commerce of this country, that every prediction, every suspicion, every thought that they had in the past from the beginning of this tariff has been falsified, and that the prinicple which we adopted was a principle that had conduced to the prosperity not in one line or in two lines but in every branch of industry. We found industry prospering to a degree that was never experienced in any other country. We were sent out to ascertain what were the changes, if any, which were necessary to be made owing to the changed condition of the country. One of the important results was that we ascertained, or believed we ascertained, what had been the operation of the tariff that we instituted in reference to sugar in 1904, when we extended preferential treatment to the British West Indies. At that time there was a problem as to how that would work out which time alone could solve. We were going to take one-third off the duty on raw sugar and we were going to reduce the duty on sugar refined from that same raw sugar which was to be admitted at the preferential rate. On the face of it that was reducing the protection to the refiner to a very material extent, to an extent that I do not hesitate to say would have been unfair to the refiner, but we thought that the British refiner could not at once fit himself to enter our market in competition against our own refiners with a product refined solely from cane sugar until some time had elapsed. After three years had passed and when we came to examine this tariff we found that the Englishmen and the Scotchmen had not availed themselves of the opportunity of refining this raw sugar from British grown cane and of sending it into our market. They had only done it to a small extent and they had therefore left the market for refined sugar almost wholly to our Canadian refiners. As a result of that and with the very great benefit that they had from the reduction of the duty on raw sugar they were able to take some hundreds of thousands of dollars more than was necessary in our judgment to carry on their industry profitably. When we discovered that we proposed the change which has been submitted to the House and approved by the House and that is that the duty on raw sugar coming from the British West Indies should be reduced by 7⅓ cents per one hundred pounds. I do not want to stand here and say that we are infallible or that in our examination into these things we did exactly strike everything. There fore, we have been willing to receive representations, informations and light on every subject from that time up to the present when we are about to close the discussion of the tariff, and in subsequent explanations and considerations that were given to the question we made up our minds, that, though we recommended at first a 7⅓ cents advance on the duty on raw sugar, as the refiners were disadvantaged to the extent of 1½ cents on the package and for other reasons, we had perhaps gone too far and therefore we modified that by reducing it by 2½ cents. But, there are not many changes of that kind. You may count the alterations and amendments that we have asked the House to make. Many of them are merely verbal, merely to make the thing clearer. As a result of the—what shall I call it?—trip, if you like, of the tariff commissioners, a tariff is before the House, the House has sanctioned it, I believe the country will sanction it, and I believe you will have a tariff that will contribute, as the tariff in the past ten years did, very materially to the best interests of the country. That is why the Tariff Commission was appointed, that is the work that the Tariff Commission did and this is the result. As to whether a certain course may have an effect upon the bonding privileges is a question that the government and this House will be able to deal with when occasion arises, but I do not consider that it is the question now before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Just time for a statement and a query.

Mr. PATERSON. Another query?

Mr. FOSTER. The statement is this: That after having the admission from the Minister of Customs that he attended that convention of 1893, that he helped to form its different planks into a platform, that he actually spoke upon that and that now after seven or eight years of power he comes to the conclusion that they have carried out these planks in their platform and have embodied in their policy all the principles that they laid down in that platform—I say the statement that I wish to make is that if the hon. gentleman puts himself in that position he furnishes such a glaring example of absolute depravity that I conclude he is irreclaimable and incorrigible and there is no use in spending any more time on him. The query is this: In the course of that peregrination did you find out what the opinion of the Grand Trunk Railway, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, of the Canadian Northern, of those great trunk lines, was in reference to this question of bringing preferential business only through Canadian ports? Does the minister remember whether he ever came into possession of the opinion of these great transportation companies as to what would be the effect?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think there is any use carrying on this conversation, further than to tell the hon. gentleman that we laid on the table of the House nine volumes of information on all kinds of subjects. It is nicely indexed, and if he takes the trouble to examine it, he need not take up the time of the House and delay business.

Mr. FOSTER. And when the Minister of Customs was asked why one item was put at 60 per cent, and then at 40 per cent, and lastly at 50 per cent, he made no reference to the nicely bound up information laid on the table, but he took to the arithmetical rule of adding the two highest rates together and dividing by two, and he considered that proper. The amendment proposed by my right hon. friend is vicious, in that it puts into the hands of the government an airy something of tremendous import for the transportation and business interests of Canada, and it enables the First Minister, whenever political or other influences impel him, to threaten to pull the string and to let loose the consequences upon these great interests. I can conceive how that power may be very deftly and very dangerously used by my right hon. friend. At the proper time, when these great transportation companies feel they would be injured by a proclamation putting this thing into force, and if they are asked by this government to help them out of very great difficulties at a critical time, the Prime Minister can say: You had better be careful as to how you carry sail; I have it in my power to close all foreign ports to preferential imports. It is a disciplinary if not a menacing measure, which is capable of very vicious and hurtful use, if people desire to use it so.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The views of the Prime Minister with regard to the bonding privilege, as announced to-day, are in direct antagonism to his pronounced views of a few years ago, when he submitted to parliament his Grand Trunk Pacific scheme. He told us then that the bonding privileges were so important to Canada, and the danger of their abrogation was so imminent, that we could not wait a month, a week, a day, or an hour, but that we must do something to protect ourselves. But to-night the First Minister proclaims that if the United States should abolish that privilege we can get along without it, and it would hurt them more than it would hurt us. Why this change of front? He has done nothing for the last three or four years to cause Canada to be less dependent on the bonding privileges now than it was then. Had the government perfected Canadian routes of transportation in the meantime, had they established a fast Atlantic service instead of playing with it from year to year and getting bottled up with their bottle-necked steamers, had they done anything to improve our transportation facilities, then the Prime Minister might, with propriety, have proposed this amendment to-night. But nothing has been done by the government in the interval, and so their action of to-day shows that the announcement by the Prime Minister three years ago as to the bonding privilege was not the result of any sound judgment or of any settled policy. Had the government given a bounty to ship-building to develop that trade had they done anything to foster that industry in Canada, had they put fast steamers on the Atlantic and the Pacific had they improved our transportation facilities in any way. I could understand how the Prime Minister might, with some show of reason, propose this resolution and say as he has done—it may result in depriving us of the bonding privileges, but if he does we can stand it. But in view of the government having done nothing in the meantime, the resolution of the Prime Minister to-night is inconsistent with the statement which he made when he proposed the Transcontinental Railway scheme to the House. If it is important that this resolution should be carried to-night, why was it not important four years ago? It has been dangled before the House for years by one of the friends of the government, whom they could control at any time. Just as they gave him an intimation to proceed with the motion now, they could have given him that intimation at any time during the past few years, and he would have spoken or remained silent at their suggestion. But now it seems to suit their convenience, and they tell the hon. gentleman to go on with his motion. Is not the same inconsistency shown in their tariff policy? The Minister of Customs told us that after the tariff policy had been in force for seven years they found, on inquiry, that the people of Canada were satisfied with it, and therefore they did not change it. But is not the tariff which is now proposed different from any tariff which they ever had before? Have they not a minimum tariff or preferential tariff, an intermediate tariff and a maximum tariff, something that never before existed. They went through the farce of perambulating the country, on the supposition that they were to make inquiry and base a tariff on the result of their investigation, but did not the Minister of Finance tell us two years ago that we were going to have exactly the kind of tariff which has been submitted to parliament? Did he and his colleagues not know before they ever started on their investigation that just such a tariff would be propounded by them, and was not their investigation more or less of a sham?

If the country was satisfied with the tariff that had been in operation for ten years, why did hon. gentlemen make this radical departure from it? What justifies it? Is not the very fact that they are making these radical changes an evidence that the country was not satisfied with the tariff? Again, I ask, if these changes are made on the strength of the knowledge the hon. gentlemen acquired when they went through the country to get information, how is it that the principle on which the changes were to be made was announced before they made any inquiry at all? It seems to me that they are just about as inconsistent in this respect as they are in regard to carrying Canadian trade in Canadian bottoms and about bringing preferential trade through Canadian ports. In fact, they seem to be taking a leap in the dark; they seem to be moving on lines of expediency rather than on lines of statesmanship, judgment and knowledge. They did not entertain the same views with regard to the United States doing away with the bonding privilege when they were in opposition, and when they declared that if we put an export duty on saw logs, we would be incurring the greatest danger we could possibly incur. There was no danger in it, and to-day the Prime Minister says that we do not fear the doing away with the bonding privilege, that we would not suffer as much as the United States, and that it is our duty to go on and do what is best for Canada irrespective of what the United States may do. This is what hon. gentlemen opposite were told to do years ago. They have changed the views they had when they first came into power, when the First Minister was prepared to give away the fisheries and everything else to the Americans if they would settle the various subjects of dispute with Canada. Now he comes out and takes the statesmanlike view, but it is from force of circumstances and not from conviction or good judgment; because intelligent men saw ten years ago what the Prime Minister sees to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to find that the resolution which I have moved has received at least the sympathetic consideration of all the members of this House. I say all, because I do not except even the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp). While he may not have made his sympathy with the resolution very clear this afternoon, I have in my mind another speech of his on a similar motion in which he said

> I am in hearty sympathy with the motives that are behind the resolution which has just been moved and seconded, the idea of shipping Canadian goods through Canadian channels.

So I think I can truthfully say that the House is unanimously in favour of the general principle of this resolution.

Mr. KEMP. I said that again to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not going to deal with all the points that have been raised in opposition to this resolution, but let me say, in reply to a remark of the hon. gentleman who last spoke, that I do not think he is correct in saying that I am prepared in this matter to jump when the government pulls the string. The facts of the matter are that in 1903 there was nothing said in this House on this resolution, nor did I introduce any such resolution either in that year or in 1902.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did the hon. gentleman not give notice of it in one of those years?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not. I gave notice of it in 1901.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did the hon. gentleman not move it in 1901?

Mr. LOGAN. Because I could not get an opportunity; it was too far down on the order paper. In 1904 I moved the resolution, and it was accepted by this House. On that occasion it was endorsed by the hon. leader of the opposition, although it failed to have the endorsation of that hon. gentleman to-night. There was no revision of the tariff until this year, and what was the use of my reiterating that resolution every year? This year, as soon as the tariff was brought down, I took the first opportunity to give notice of this resolution, and to-day is the first day I have had an opportunity of moving it. So that the charge that I have been derelict in this matter is not well founded. I admit that I am a little disappointed that the government has not seen fit to adopt this policy, because I am convinced that it is in the best interests of our country. But I realize that there may be difficulties in the way with which I may not be conversant, but of which the government may know. I realize, too, when the Prime Minister moves an amendment to the effect that this policy shall only be brought into force at a date to be named by the Governor General in Council, he is speaking for the government, and as there has been so much opposition manifested to this resolution that the resolution of the Prime Minister is to be accepted. For these reasons I have to bow to the decision of the Prime Minister. I am glad, however, that although I have not been able to secure the adoption of this amendment to the tariff in the manner in which I have introduced it, yet to-night we are putting into a Canadian tariff for the first time a provision which means that we shall bring into this country through Canadian ports British goods entitled to the preference. For that condition of affairs I am very thankful. I only want to say in conclusion that if the facts are as stated here to-day with reference to the congestion of trade in the eastern seaports and on the eastern railways, it is high time for the government to grapple with this situation and grapple with it in no uncerain way. If it is a fact, as stated here to-day, that the Canadian Pacific Railway is so congested between St. John and Montreal that certain steamship lines are not plying between St. John and the mother country because they cannot get cargoes over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Montreal to St. John, and if it is a fact that the facilities in St. John, Halifax, Sydney and other maritime ports are not sufficient for the handling of Canadian trade, it is the paramount duty of the government to set itself at once toward the betterment of these conditions. If it is a fact that the magnificent harbour of Halifax, a harbour in which the British fleet could be hidden from the outside world, in which the largest vessel that floats on the ocean could draw up at the wharfs, is not provided with sufficient facilities for the handling of our Canadian trade, and if it is a fact that the facilities of St. John, a good harbour, though not so good as Halifax, are not sufficient, then I beseech the government to take hold of this question at the earliest possible moment and provide the necessary facilities.

After all the preferential tariff is a family matter. The granting of a preference on British goods is a concession by the daughter to the mother, and surely it is not to the credit of this country that we are to be told that the goods on which we give a preference cannot be brought from the mother to the daughter without going through the hands of some foreigner. Hon. gentlemen may speak as they like of some material disadvantage which may possibly come to some localities from the adoption of this policy, but we cannot build up a country on material considerations alone and leave out of our calculation all question of sentiment. If we are ever to become a great nation we must be patriotic, we must be true to Canadian institutions true to our own interests, we must give predominance to Canadian institutions and Canadian trade and Canadian ports throughout the length and breadth of this country. The government is putting this resolution into the tariff to be carried into effect at a date to be named by the Governor in Council. Let me tell them that the people will not hesitate on every favourable occasion to urge them to name that date, and until they do name it no man in this country can say that we in Canada are absolutely independent of the great republic to the south. So long as we are compelled to import our goods through foreign channels, no one can say that Canada is a self-reliant and self-contained country.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not wish to take up the time of the House at all, but I must express my regret that the right hon. the First Minister has thought it necessary to postpone indefinitely the putting into force of this resolution, because really that is the only result which can follow the adoption of the amendment he has offered. He urged that this policy should remain in abeyance for at least four years longer until the Grand Trunk Pacific is built, because then we would be entirely independent of the United States as regards bonding privileges. Well, when the Grand Trunk Pacific is built, we shall be no more independent in that respect than we are now. We have now the Intercolonial Railway running entirely on Canadian soil to the ports of St. John and Halifax. What more shall we have when the Grand Trunk Pacific is built? When the Grand Trunk Pacific gets to Moncton, it will reach St. John and Halifax over the Intercolonial Railway. So that we are now just as independent of the United States, in so far as bonding privileges are concerned, as we shall be when the Grand Trunk Pacific is built. I am in sympathy with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) regarding the lack of facilities in our ocean ports at present. There is no doubt the duty devolves upon the government of seeing that the facilities at the terminal points of our great transcontinental railways are sufficient. They are not at present. At the same time, I would take some slight exception to his remarks that the Canadian Pacific Railway was not hauling to the ocean ports in the maritime provinces as much freight as it should.

Mr. LOGAN. What I said was that if the statement which had been made today was true—I only took a hypothetical case.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I understood him to make a reference of that nature. I do not think that the Canadian Pacific Railway are at all to blame in that respect because, as a matter of fact, there has been a very considerable lack of freight during part of this winter—so much so that they were unable to fill up their own ships and these ships had to cross the Atlantic only partially loaded. That of course was not the fault of the Canadian Pacific Railway but was due to weather conditions and other matters beyond the control of that company. We have had an hon. gentleman say that there was considerable opposition to this resolution from this side of the House. I think that if he will recall the facts and the members who have spoken, he will find that his statement is not warranted. In the former part of the hon. gentleman's speech, he referred to the expression of opinion in this House as being practically unanimous in favour of the proposition. But as the matter stands now, if this resolution should pass as amended, it will go by the board for an indefinite length of time. We have not had any expression of opinion from the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on this occasion. On former occasions he gave expression to a great deal of sympathy for the resolution and said he was in favour of it. I hope his opinion has not changed, and I think that really he is in duty bound to give us his view before this matter is finally disposed of. Otherwise the impression might be created that he has perhaps changed his mind. I do not think he has, but I should like to receive his assurance to that effect, and I think that such an assurance is due the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I am exceedingly happy to learn that my hon. friend attaches so much importance to my remarks on this occasion. I wish he did at all times, because then he would be willing to be guided by me and I might sometimes lead him into better paths. Several references have been made this afternoon to some remarks of mine made in this House on the resolution of 1904. From occasional observations regarding this resolution, one would think that the resolution then adopted was adopted only by the government and the members supporting it. But the fact cannot be gainsaid that it was supported practically by the whole House, including my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) although he has not manifested as much zeal on its behalf to-day as he did then. It was supported without division by practically the whole House. Only two gentlemen expressed some qualified opposition to it, and the House generally seemed to accept it as a principle which at some reasonable time might be carried into effect. It has been stated here that I said I was prepared to put it into effect at once. That is not a correct statement of my remarks. My remarks, even as referred to by some hon. gentlemen and imperfectly quoted, will not justify any such statement. What I did say was that I heartily sympathized with the object of the hon. member for Cumberland, and if a division was taken I would vote with him. But I said at that time that it was not a policy which needed to be put into operation at once, and I ventured to express the view that at an early date we might be able to do so. Lest there might be any misunderstanding, I will quote the words I used. I stated, both at the beginning and the end, that I sympathized with the views of the hon. member for Cumberland, and I still sympathize with the great object he has in view, the only question is when is the proper time for carrying it into effect. I went on to state:

> It is a subject on which there is need of education, not only outside of the House, but, possibly inside the House. I am aware that possibly, from some points of view, objections may be raised to the motion of my hon. friend. But, for my own part I am heartily in favour of it, and, if he decides to divide the House upon it, I shall have pleasure in giving my vote in support of the motion. For the purposes of the present budget and the present condition of affairs we cannot deal with it. But I hope there will be such an educational movement on the question that, at no distant day, we may adopt it as part of our practical legislation. If that can be done at no distant day, no one will rejoice more than I shall. I think that the reasons that my hon. friend has given in support of his motion are strong, and I believe that the more the subject is discussed, the more likely we are to reach the conclusion that he has reached after so much consideration. So, while I do not say that his motion will receive the assent of the House, to take effect at once, it is a move in the right direction.

Therein, Sir, I definitely stated that I recognized the fact that there was a great want of an educational movement on this subject. Now the discussion that has taken place in the House to-day has given us the evidence of that. It is a sad fact that forty years after the beginning of confederation, after all the hopes and expectations that were entertained, and justly entertained, with regard to the utilization of the maritime ports as, to use a common expression, the wharf of the whole Dominion, it is a sad fact to have to confess, after forty years have elapsed, that we are not yet independent, commercially, of our neighbours to the south of us. One of the strongest arguments used by the advocates of confederation in the lower provinces was that this inner portion of our territory required access to the ocean. If you turn to the debates of that day, you will find that that was the view held very strongly before the people of the maritime provinces. They were told that the people of what was then called western Canada—which has now become central Canada—had no desire to do their business by way of the south, but they did desire access to the ocean, that they would have railways built, and the result would be that the trade which crossed from old Canada to the United States would thereafter pass through the maritime provinces, and that the cities of St. John, Halifax and other ports in the lower provinces which were to grow up, would become indeed the wharfs of British North America. Well, we have had since not only the building of the Intercolonial Railway, but we have had the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have not only the line of railway which was contemplated at the time of confederation, but we have a second line; and yet we are told to-day that the facilities of our ports and the facilities of our railways are not equal to carrying the trade which is referred to in this resolution of my hon. friend from Cumberland.

Now, I think that so far as our friends in central Canada are concerned, in the province of Ontario notably, they are needlessly alarmed. I think even with the facilities which exist to-day there would not be any great unfairness in asking our friends in Toronto to support this resolution and to receive their goods by way of Halifax or St. John.

Mr. KEMP. They come that way now, most of them.

Mr. FIELDING. No, most of them come by way of Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. KEMP. I beg your pardon, by Canadian ports.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, Halifax and St. John are Canadian ports, though some gentlemen do not seem willing to admit it. But I say that even if we were to put this into operation to-day as respects central Canada, really I do not think the disadvantage to the trade of Toronto, for example, or of other cities of western Ontario, would be anything like as serious as some hon. gentlemen imagine. I think that even if they had to pay a little more freight, even if they had to suffer a little disadvantage in their carriage, there is sufficient public spirit in the province of Ontario, when it is properly appealed to, to make the little sacrifice they might well make in order to carry out what would be in the best sense of the word a truly national policy. So far as transportation is concerned, I think, my hon. friends in that province rather overestimate the difficulties. They are reasoning from the operations of the present season. We have had a very severe winter, and transportation has been interferred with to a large degree, but that interference has not been confined to Canada. If you look across the line you will find the same thing, stories of hundreds and hundreds of cars side-tracked along the line of railways. The other day I read in one of the western papers that in a train yard of a western town, there were a hundred cars of Christmas goods not yet delivered to their destination in the western United States. It would not be reasonable therefore to infer that because the difficulties of transportation have proved to be so severe during the current winter, we would be justified in concluding that to be the ordinary current condition of affairs. I admit however that there might be some disadvantage, some embarrassment, and I hope and believe that as it becomes necessary to deal with this question in the future, our friends in the province of Ontario will satisfy themselves that this is a meritorious movement, and that they will be prepared to support it, even though it would call for some little sacrifice on their part. But still I think the disadvantage is somewhat magnified as respects Ontario cities. I think there is greater force in the argument presented to-day by the hon. member from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) from the point of view of the western settler. Undoubtedly there is a congested condition of traffic in our western country. Not only the east bound traffic, not only the traffic of bringing out the grain of the country, but the traffic westbound, I may say, is also in a congested condition; and there is much ground for the feeling expressed by our western friends that if they were confined to this one line of railway which is now running through the western country they would suffer a serious disadvantage. In my judgment there is force in that, to a larger extent than there is in the similar line of criticism of the hon. gentlemen from Ontario.

Now, I think a step has been taken to-night of great importance. The hon. member for Cumberland has not accomplished all that he desired ; but, as he says, he is receiving to-day from the government a recognition of the principle, the principle which was voted upon by the House almost uanimously three years ago. We are not in a position, it is contended, to apply that principle to-day and carry it into effect at once. I do not believe that we could put it into force at once, successfully. Possibly, however, we do not take as enthusiastic, or, as some would say, as patriotic view of the question as we ought to take, and some of us might think that we could put it into force at an earlier day than we are able to do. At all events, we recognize that there are some such difficulties as have been suggested, and so it becomes a question of when we may bring this new scheme into operation. Upon that question there is a difference of opinion. There are some who would put it off for a longer period; there are others who think that we shall increase and improve our facilities of inland transportation very rapidly, and that the day may come very early. The government have concluded therefore, recognizing the fact that there are difficulties in the way of bringing this principle into operation at once, that it is best to recognize the principle and to insert that declaration in the tariff, throwing upon the government the responsibility of bringing it into operation whenever, in their judgment, the transportation facilities and the port facilities are such as will enable the project to be carried out without unduly burdening the trade of the country. Now, I suppose, as a maritime man, I should take a more enthusiastic view and say that I would be glad to have this policy go into operation at once. But I recognize the need of the educational process to which I have referred. We are able already to declare the policy in a concrete form, and to put in the tariff a declaration that in the opinion of this House it is the true principle, that it is the true national policy of this country, and the House is prepared, I believe, to accept it in that spirit. I believe that in taking this step to-night we are going as far as we should be asked to go. I think that the hon. member for Cumberland, who has given us so much information, and devoted so much time to the subject, who has done himself so much credit by his promotion of this policy, would be wise if he would now recognize the great progress that is made, and allow the resolution of the Prime Minister to become the main motion rather than divide the House upon it.

Mr. BARKER. I always endeavour to listen with respect to the arguments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) but when he comes to an opinion on the trade and business of a merchant, I would prefer even to his opinion that of an ordinary man in the trade. He undertakes to say that the merchants of Ontario, especially of western Ontario, are unduly timid and afraid as if the minister with his little experience of merchandise and merchant traffic is more capable of expressing an opinion on such a matter than men who have spent their lives at their own business and understand it from the bottom up. I as a representative of an Ontario constituency, am opposed to the motion of the hon. member who has introduced the main motion. I oppose it because it ignores the geography of this country.

Mr. FIELDING. So does the Union.

Mr. BARKER. It ignores the facilities that the western portions of Ontario and those carrying on business there naturally have by their nearness to the sea. There is an enormous trade among the grocers of Ontario in the autumn. Spices and other things of that kind of which the importation is enormous come in at the very end of the season at a time when land transportation from the maritime provinces is subject to delay and inconvenience and the expense of long land carriage. Spices, &c., come from the East and West Indies via New York because there are no lines of water communication running to our own ports and we are asked to say that shipments via Boston and New York shall be barred to the merchants of Ontario, especially western Ontario, in order that the preference shall drive the trade through St. John or some other maritime port. There are no lines to St. John, there is no business done in St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. Where from ?

Mr. PATERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman asks where from. That is a perfectly fair question. I have said that these spices from the Indies go to New York by lines of shipping that never touch Canadian ports. When they arrive at New York they are within 500 miles of western Ontario and they have the competition of the American lines of railway, several of the best lines, perhaps the very best railway accommodation obtainable in America. Coming via Halifax or St. John they would be subject to delay. Why is it that the government do not accept the resolution of my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) ? Because they do not think under the present conditions it is wise to accept it and they object to it. If it is good it is good now, but what do they propose ? They propose to go one step further in the role of this government, government by order in council. That is the remedy they propose. Between the straight resolution by which this House will take the responsibility, and the resolution to govern by order in council I would accept the main motion rather than that of the government. I propose to oppose the resolution of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) because it is unduly injurious to a very large section of Ontario, which is as much entitled to the consideration and the protection of this parliament as New Brunswick or any other province ; and I still more strongly oppose the amendment because it is shirking the question, the government neither propose to accept the hon. gentleman's resolution nor to squarely vote it down. Instead of the question being dealt with three or four years hence in parliament, they propose to take power to deal with it by the judgment of the cabinet. That is not parliamentary government as I understand it, and I shall vote against the original resolution and still more strongly against the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should have strongly desired to have seen the motion of my hon. friend from Cumberland accepted by this House. He presented excellent reasons that should cause the committee and the country to reach the conclusion that it is desirable for many reasons that the policy he has propounded and submitted to the committee should have been accepted. I agree entirely with what he said that the day will come when this policy will be adopted by the people of this country. I have been surprised at the reception of this resolution by certain members, bearing in mind the reception it received from them in 1904, when my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) proposed the same resolution to the committee. I am somewhat surprised at my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) who was in parliament when my hon. friend from Cumberland presented this resolution in 1904. He did not raise any opposition to it then. He has asked what has brought about changes ? I might ask what has brought about the change of heart on the part of my hon. friend.

Mr. BARKER. There has been no change of heart on my part.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I say there is. He did not rise in his place in 1904 and protest against the passing of this resolution.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to assert that I supported it or was present—

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am going to by reason of the fact that I have the records to show that the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) did not rise in his seat in 1904 as he did to-night—

Mr. BARKER. Can you produce the record that I did not rise in my seat ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think I have the record right here and it will not bear out the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) in the statement that he stood up to protest against the passing of this resolution. I might refer to something that might make it somewhat unpleasant for my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) in this connection.

Mr. BARKER. Do not stop on my account.

Mr. JOHNSTON. He says that the Minister of Finance to-night spoke as if he knew more about the business of the merchants of western Canada than the merchants did themselves.

Mr. BARKER. I said I think so.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I might read to my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) for his enlightenment the views of a merchant of western Canada who, I take it, knows just as much about conducting mercantile business as my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). Is my hon. friend from Hamilton aware that when the resolution of my hon. friend from Cumberland was before the House in 1904, Mr. W. R. Brock, who is a merchant prince of the city of Toronto, expressed some views upon that question ? Perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton will stand up to-night and ask : What does Mr. Brock know about merchandise ? Perhaps he will and yet if he looks at the views expressed by the late member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) he will find that these views are practically in line with the observations made by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to-night which observations were dissented from by my hon. friend from Hamilton. The observations of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance are almost in line with what Mr. Brock said upon that occasion and I would commend to the careful perusal of the hon. member for Hamilton, if not for his enlightenment, the remarks made upon that occasion.

Another word. Something has been said as to the equipment of the ports of Halifax and St. John. The hon. member for Hamilton was good enough to say that practically no trade was done through the port of St. John and I suppose he intended to convey the same idea in regard to the port of Halifax. I may say to my hon. friend from Hamilton that if he takes the trouble to go down to the city of Halifax—and I am going to speak of Halifax because I have a personal knowledge of the equipment of the port there and I am not going to speak of St. John for the reason that my knowledge of the port of St. John is not as accurate as it is of the equipment of the port of Halifax—he will find that as far as the equipment of the port of Halifax is concerned it is equal to the requirements of this country. I am sure if any one will take the trouble to inquire into the matter he will find that the port of Halifax is equipped to take care of all the trade that comes to this country from Great Britain. I make that statement as a statement of fact, I know something of what I am talking about and I say without fear of contradiction that if hon. gentlemen who are not acquainted with the situation go down to Halifax and examine the equipment there they will find that they have nothing to fear. I share the view of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to a very large extent that some people are unduly alarmed as to what the results of the passing of this resolution will be. As far as I am concerned I hope that in the very near future the policy which has been propounded by my hon. friend from Cumberland will become the policy of this country and that it will be accepted by the people generally from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) who has just sat down would lead the committee to believe that I was present and that if I did not support the resolution I apparently acquiesced in it. He seeks to refute me by referring to the remarks in 1904 of a member of this House, a Conservative (Mr. Brock), a well known merchant and a man whose opinion certainly commanded respect from this side of the House and, I think, from the other. The hon. gentleman has chosen to represent Mr. Brock as taking the very opposite position to that which he assumes I took upon that occasion and apparently he would lead the House to suppose that Mr. Brock supported the views which the honourable member has just endeavoured to express. I would like to read what Mr. Brock said :

I had hoped to get through with this session, Mr. Speaker, without your having to hear my voice, but we have had such an exhibition of insincerity on the part of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that I cannot keep silent any longer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Go on.

Mr. BARKER. (reading):

When the Finance Minister was advocating the building of a railroad from the Northwest down to the sea-board he assured gentlemen on this side of the House that the patriotism of Canadians would lead them to send their goods to Canadian ports in preference to American ports. The present exhibition will confirm the opinion that there is no sincerity whatever in any of the motions brought up by gentlemen on that side of the House. I can tell the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat——

Mr. JOHNSTON.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is not finished yet.

Mr. BARKER. Oh, you will get it all. Do not be in a hurry.

I can tell the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Logan) that many merchants bring all their goods to this country through Canadian ports,——

As has been said over and over again in this House and nobody disputes it.

—and do not allow their goods to come through United States ports so far as they can help it.

Is there anything inconsistent with what I said there?

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is a good deal.

Mr. BARKER. (reading)

The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) says the effect of this resolution will be to make goods dearer. All I can say is that I bring all the goods I can to this country through Canadian ports, and I manage to compete with other people pretty well.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. Does that show that he approves of the position taken by the hon. gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. It shows the very opposite.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Not at all.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly it does. Mr. Brock goes on:

I am sure the Finance Minister will give me credit for patriotism, not that I think it makes much difference, but because the Finance Minister has insisted that the farmers of the northwest will be induced by patriotism to bill their grain to Canadian ports.

Mr. Brock goes on:

I think the hon. minister will require to hedge a good deal before he gets through. But I just wished to draw the attention of the House to this most remarkable exhibition.

This is the gentleman who is said to be supporting the resolution.

I think the country will see it and I know this House will see it—that there is no sincerity on the other side of the House. This notice has been long enough on the order paper——

So it has this session.

—to allow the Finance Minister to take note of it and to have made it a part of his budget speech; but it has been put off now so that the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) who certainly deserves a certain amount of credit for it, might get the credit of bringing it up himself. I would like to see him take hold of it with the same energy that he manifested with regard to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific to Moncton. In that case he forced the government at the point of the bayonet to fall in with his wishes ; why should he not now be just as sincere in favour of Halifax and St. John as he was in favour of Moncton ? Simply because he wanted, I suppose, to make a little political capital out of it.

That was Mr. Brock's view.

But if he is going to make political capital out of anything of that kind, there must be a little more sincerity than there is in this present motion.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the speech referred to by the hon. member for Cape Breton?

Mr. BARKER. That is the speech.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is now after half-past eleven o'clock. I agree fully with the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that this is a question which does and will materially affect the people of the Northwest. An important event happened there to-day, and I would like to inquire at this time of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as I presume the returns are all in now, if he has heard the result of the elections in Manitoba?

Mr. JOHNSTON. It has just been announced that the Attorney General of the province of Manitoba in the late government has been defeated.

Mr. BRISTOL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the discussion of an important matter of this kind, which is really a matter of national importance, is advanced by degenerating into personalities. There seems to have been a considerable amount of that this evening. Perhaps we had better discuss the question before the House. Personally, I cannot claim to have much knowledge of the subject, but I am free to say that I listened with a great deal of interest to the very excellent speech of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan). I think he deserves the thanks of the members of this House for the excellent speech he made, for the very large amount of information he gave us and for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. I must take issue with the Minister of Finance, when he says that the people of a portion of Ontario are raising objections to this, because they may have to pay some slightly increased freight rates. That is not a fair suggestion to make as to the people of my province.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is not doing me justice ; I did not cast any reflection on the people of Ontario. I said I thought they were needlessly alarmed, as I did not think there would be any increase; but if there was an increase, I believed they would be patriotic enough to be willing to pay it.

Mr. BRISTOL. I think so too, and I am glad the Minister of Finance has made that explanation.

Mr. FIELDING. I said that before.

Mr. BRISTOL. The question is one as to which there may be honest difference of opinion. I shall quote from the remarks of Mr. Hugh Blain, who was a Liberal candidate in Toronto, who is a very eminent business man and a man whom we in Toronto all respect. Mr. Hugh Blain said :

My friend asks if I was ever down there, and I suppose he means that I would discover that they had facilities. Take in my own business ; we import goods from the Straits Settlements, Ceylon and all these eastern parts, and there is no direct connection between any of them and any Canadian port. We cannot issue a letter of credit bringing goods by way of any port except by way of New York or Boston, and it is quite evident we must develop our eastern facilities for doing business infinitely more than they are to-day before we could possibly enforce a resolution such as this.

Mr. LOGAN. Is not the date of that speech five years ago?

Mr. BRISTOL. Yes. One of the real points in this question is : Have we the transportation facilities which would justify the government in adopting such a policy as is being considered to-night? It occurs to me to say that, as I understand the idea of a preferential tariff, it was to develop trade between Great Britain and her colonies. Can we develop trade between Great Britain and her colonies if, when we start the progress of trade on its way to this country, we hamper the methods of transportation? That is a crucial point to consider. If we compel the trade of Great Britain, to which we desire to give a preference, to come to this country by a more expensive route, necessarily we increase the cost of the product when it reaches this country, and necessarily we will lessen our volume of trade with Great Britain, and lessen the preference we desire to give to Great Britain and the colonies. Under the circumstances, and as the matter is one for grave consideration, I think we have not yet before us the facts on which we can come to a determination on this question. As I believe there is no urgency, for the member from Cumberland only asks that it come into force a year from now, surely this is a matter which can stand for a later session, and then, when the government has fuller information, the decision should be left to the House, and the responsibility for determining such an important matter should not be cast on the government.

Amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agreed to on division.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Shall item 411 pass?

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me we have had a pretty hard, long day, and we will not make much progress to-night.

Mr. PATERSON. Take half an hour longer.

Mr. FOSTER. That will take you past midnight. I think we will get as far ahead if we go on with it to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. The day has not been entirely without profit, but I was hoping to get through with some items to-night. Of course, at this late hour we could only make progress by common consent. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The same thing.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Pius Michaud, Esq., member for the electoral district of Victoria, New Brunswick; introduced by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. H. R. Emmerson.

THE LATE MR. EDWARD COCHRANE, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, it is once more my duty during the present session to announce to the House that we have lost one of our colleagues in the person of Mr. Edward Cochrane, member for the electoral district of East Northumberland. I am quite certain that the loss of Mr. Cochrane will be sincerely felt by all the members of this House, above all by his party friends and perhaps no less by those who had not the privilege of being his party friends. Mr. Cochrane, as all those who had the privilege of being associated with him for many years know, possessed many traits which endeared him to his colleagues on both sides of the House. He had an impulsive Irish nature, a warm Irish heart and a good Irish wit and humour. All those who were associated with him here, we on this side of the House as much as his own friends on the other side, will miss his cheerful countenance, and I do not know but that for my part personally I shall not miss the very fiery but very good natured lectures which were sometimes delivered to me on the many shortcomings of this administration. He took part in the debates and always did it with a good deal of earnestness and at the same time always generously. We shall join with hon. members on the other side of the House in offering to his family our sincere condolences in their bereavement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) for his kindly references to our late colleague. Mr. Cochrane was all that the Prime Minister described him to have been and in addition to that he was of very manly character, of strong intellectual grasp and possessed a vast fund of information respecting public questions. He had his strong opinions, his intense likes and dislikes. He was not only warm and impulsive but even passionate, and when I saw him last only a few days ago I recollect very well that he was inclined to express himself with the same old passionate earnestness respecting any thing that did not meet with his approval. He was warm, impulsive and passionate, but above all he was kind hearted, tender, lovable and had every quality and trait that could serve to endear him to every member of this House, I am sure, and especially to those who had the privilege of being his colleagues and who shared his political opinions. I am sure that the sympathy of hon. gentlemen, irrespective of politics, will go out to those who are near and dear to him, and who are called upon with us to mourn his loss.

PRIVILEGE—JUNIOR JUDGE OF SIMCOE COUNTY.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, for the purpose of making a personal explanation in regard to a question which was asked in this House on the 25th of last month, and answered on the same day, regarding the junior judge of the county court of the county of Simcoe. The 'Northern Advance,' a paper published in the town of Barrie, speaks in this way in regard to this question:

> Now, who could have suggested this impertinent question? No one will for a minute imagine it was prompted by Mr. Lennox, M.P., or Mr. Bennett, M.P., who certainly would have been manly enough to have placed their names to the question had they suggested it. Besides which, even if it were either of the above gentlemen, Conmee would have been the last man they would have applied to, to do such work. Who, then, was it? Because,

Conmee could not have acted on representations made to him by any one resident in the county. If Mr. Leighton McCarthy, M.P., can throw any light on the subject, he should embrace the opportunity to-morrow night at the Grit pow-wow. How the hungry wolves are howling for the prey.

I desire to say that I had not in any way whatsoever anything to do with the propounding, asking or instigating the asking of the question with reference to the junior county judge of the county of Simcoe referred to, as to which the hon. member (Mr. Conmee), who asked the question, will corroborate me. I have been at some pains to ascertain who was the instigator of the question, for it could only be some one who had some spite or spleen to vent, or who desired to wound the feelings of that judge and his family. It is my endeavour always to avoid being placed in that class, and besides I have always had the most friendly and cordial feelings for that judge, and have also most highly respected him as a judge. The result of my inquiries has been to enable me to say that the instigator of that question is the same gentleman who, some weeks ago, sent a petition asking for the retirement of that judge to a practitioner in Collingwood, asking him to have it signed by his professional brethren there, and then he followed it up by propounding this question and sending it to a member of this House, who handed it to the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) who asked the question, and then this Conservative paper, the 'Northern Advance,' evidently inspired from the same source, charges me with being the instigator of it. Sir, the gentleman to whom I have referred is Mr. A. E. H. Creswicke, a Conservative barrister in the town of Barrie.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I notice that my name is mentioned, together with the name of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) in connection with this matter. Mr. Bennett is not in the House at this moment——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, he is here.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) is here. As representing the riding in which the junior judge of Simcoe resides, and as a member of the bar, I may say that I regret that the question referred to was asked. The information could have been obtained without putting it that way. I particularly regret that such a mode was taken to elicit the information that was sought. As regards Mr. A. E. H. Creswicke, who is said by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to have inspired this article——

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) now speaking to a question of privilege?

Mr. LENNOX. I am speaking to a question of privilege, as I am mentioned in this newspaper article. Mr. A. E. H. Creswicke is a personal friend of mine, and he no doubt will have occasion to refer to this matter in some other way. At present I am not advised one way or the other, but I should be exceedingly surprised if Mr. Creswicke did anything of an underhand or dishonourable nature.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND COMMUNICATION.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the First Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Marine, if the passengers who, a few days ago, were landed on Pictou island from the steamers 'Stanley' and 'Minto,' have yet been taken off? I understand there are one or two lady passengers, and the conditions on Pictou island cannot be pleasant for ladies so situated. I know that one lady has been landed on the island, whose mother is in a dying condition in Alberton, P.E.I. What steps have been taken to get the passengers off the island, and in what position are the steamers 'Stanley' and 'Minto' at the present time? I should like also to give the First Minister an opportunity of denying the imputations made with regard to certain words of his in addressing a delegation from St. John a few weeks ago. The report went down to the Prince Edward Island newspapers that the First Minister had said that the question of a tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland had been mooted——

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon. gentleman now speaking to a question of privilege?

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is a question of privilege; I am asking the First Minister to explain.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is the privilege of the First Minister to offer an explanation. The Prime Minister is alleged to have said that this tunnel would cost some $20,000,000, and for his part it was out of the question, and he did not think seriously of it. I understand that since then an hon. gentleman, on behalf of the First Minister, has denied that the right hon. gentleman said that; but I should like the Prime Minister to give an explanation himself.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As to the first part of the hon. gentleman's question, I am sorry I have not any information on the matter, but I shall ask my colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to get the information and to give it on Monday. As to the other part of the hon. gentleman's question, in reference to what I said to the delegation from St. John, it is quite easy for me to answer. I was waited upon by a delegation from the city of St. John, and the hon. member who represents that city (Mr. Daniel) was present. I said, amongst other things, that the works which we were asked to undertake in the harbour of St. John were expensive; that the government were engaged at this moment in the building of the Transcontinental Railway; that we were asked to build the Georgian bay canal, which would cost $100,000,000; and that we were also asked to build a tunnel to Prince Edward Island, which I thought would cost all the way from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. I expressed no opinion at all antagonistic to the idea of a tunnel. On the contrary, if I said anything at all, it was rather in the way of indicating my own feelings that I was quite in sympathy with the movement and with the idea. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) permit me to say that he would do well not to believe everything he sees in Conservative newspapers.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It was published in an independent Liberal paper.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry for that paper.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That paper is sorry for the government.

WAYS AND MEANS—RAILWAY RATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PATERSON. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to place on the table of the House——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I desire, Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair— —

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I desire to bring a matter before the attention of this House, and if the Minister of Customs, and especially if the Prime Minister, wish to get on with the public business they will pay some heed to the question I raise. I will be very brief, but I may have to refer to the subject again if satisfaction is not accorded. Something happened within the precincts of this House yesterday in regard to a question which I have raised here more than once, namely, the conduct of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in regard to a charter right of the people who live along that line of railway. The Grand Trunk Railway Company is compelled by the law of this land to give those people a penny a mile passenger service. That is so clearly set out in its charter that the company applied to this parliament this session for an Act repealing that provision, and it was rumoured yesterday that the reason why the company had withdrawn the application for this legislation was that the government of the day or the Minister of Railways had insisted on its withdrawal. Whether that is so or not I am not able to say, but the fact is that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has now abandoned its intention of asking for the repeal of the law which gave the people along its line the right to a penny a mile service. In view of this confession on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway Company within the court of parliament that that law is still in existence, I desire to ask the government whether they intend to enforce the law and to secure for the people along the line of that railway a penny a mile service? That right of the people is most clearly set out in the statutes of 1852, and when I raised the question in this House as to the enforcement of Dominion law, I am told that it rests entirely with the provinces, and that I should go to the attorney general of the province of Ontario. Now, I want again to place this case before the Prime Minister and to give him the opportunity of declaring whether or not that is really his view, because if the charter rights of the people, as contained in the Act of 1852, are not to be enforced by Dominion authority, and if the charter rights of the people with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway are not to be enforced by the government of the day, I ask the Prime Minister how he intends to enforce the charter rights of the people which he created four years ago in connection with the National Transcontinental system and the Grand Trunk Pacific, when he entered into an agreement with a railway corporation to secure to the people of this country things of the utmost national import? For instance, he provides that all materials and supplies must be purchased in this country; that the Railway Act shall apply to this road that the control of rates shall be under the government; that there shall be an efficient service; that there shall be a standard of service. Now, if there is to be no enforcement by the Dominion government of the charter rights of the people as set out in Acts of parliament, does he mean to tell us that all the protection he claims to have secured for the people in that Act of parliament is to be left to the attorneys general of the provinces—that this government, after having signed an agreement of that kind, does not concern itself any more with it? If that is so in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway charter, it must be so in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway charter and in regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific charter. Where are we at in this country? Are we making these contracts with these companies and giving them all these franchises and imposing on them the performance of certain obligations in the public interest, and at the same time saying that parliament, in so far as it is concerned, and the government of the day in so far as it is concerned, and the Minister of Justice in so far as he is concerned, and the Minister of Railways in so far as he is concerned, do not intend to enforce that Dominion law? The answer is, in substance—I have heard of it given before—that the member for South York is asking us to enforce the Criminal Code. I have hardly mentioned the Criminal Code, but we have a type of Minister of Justice—and I have great respect for his office—who is only indulging in legal quibbling when he makes that statement. This parliament is sent here to make laws, and it is responsible for carrying on the government of the country. There is something besides legal quibbling; there is such a thing as statesmanship, and if hon. gentlemen abandon that, there is such a thing as carrying on the government of the country. Are they carrying on the government of the country, through the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways, when they say that any enforcement of the law concerning these three great railway lines in this country is to be purely a matter for the attorneys generals of these provinces? Are we living in a house of mummies? Are all these laws mummified laws, so far as this parliament is concerned—laws which are not to be enforced? I am speaking now for the people of South York who live along the line of the Grand Trunk Railway and are entitled to a penny a mile service. I am also speaking for the following constituencies of Ontario in demanding this charter right for the people, although it probably now applies to the whole Grand Trunk Railway system for which Mr. Hays speaks; because I believe that this Act is broad enough to cover that. At any rate, the following constituencies are involved in the matter: The five constituencies of Toronto, South York, South Ontario, Durham. When the present Minister of Justice ran in Durham would he have told the people there that if he came to be Minister of Justice and the Grand Trunk Railway Company came to be charged with wilfully disobeying the law of the land in regard to the concession of a charter right to the people, he would stand up in parliament and say go to the attorney general of the province for your rights; don't bother me; you are annoying me about enforcing the Criminal Code. The other constituencies are: The two Northumberlands, the two Hastings, Prince Edward. Lennox and Addington, Frontenac, Kingston, Leeds, Brockville, Grenville, Dundas, Stormont, Glengarry. If the hon. members who represent these counties cannot join with me, then I myself, on behalf of all the people who live in these counties, insist on this government making it their business to see that the Grand Trunk carries out this law, or else let that government be put on record as a government which imposes a solemn obligation on a railway and then takes no interest in seeing that that obligation is carried out. In the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company it is set out that the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall be a party to it, so that the Prime Minister makes an agreement with a self-confessed and recognized law-breaker.

Will the company ever make good that solemn obligation which Mr. C. M. Hays and Sir Charles Rivers Wilson signed, so long as the First Minister and the Minister of Justice declare it is not their duty to enforce the law, but that it is the duty of the provincial attorney generals? Are these laws that we are making every day simply mummified laws? Have we reached that stage that we are enacting mummified laws in a mummy house and that we have no means of enforcing the laws we pass? When I ask that these laws be enforced, with what reply am I met? I am met with legal quibbling, I am met with this reply from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth): Oh, the hon. gentleman is trying to enforce the criminal law and that is outside our jurisdiction. That is not what I am arguing. I am arguing for the enforcement of Dominion law. I am arguing for the vindication of the charter rights belonging to the people who live in all these counties from Montreal to Toronto. This railway has not only deliberately refused to comply with the law compelling it to provide a passenger rate of a penny a mile, but is guilty of discrimination. In the Act governing railways, there is a clear clause against discrimination. And this company not only refuse this penny a mile service east of Toronto, but are discriminating against these people and charging them three and a third cents a mile. Where are my hon. friends on both sides? Where is the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell), whom I have heard so often declaim about the rights of the farmers? Where is he when he sees the farmers charged three and a third cents a mile when they are entitled to a penny a mile? Where are the other hon. members representing counties thus discriminated against? Are they chloroformed just as the government is? It looks as if the Grand Trunk Railway owned this country and could defy the government and can defy the members who represent the people living along the line of that railway. I am not going to be satisfied with any such subterfuge as has been advanced heretofore. If necessary I shall go into every county and call a public meeting there, and will ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and the Prime Minister to come and meet me and see whether the people will accept their view that this House has nothing to do with the enforcement of the charter rights of the people who live along the Grand Trunk Railway. The right hon. gentleman can have an early and a quick session, so far as I am concerned, if he will do what I conceive to be his duty in the matter and not assign it to somebody else. Let him instruct his Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and his Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) to see that in the next two or three days Mr. Hays is brought to a recognition of his duty to the people and compelled to carry out this law which has imposed on his company this penny a mile service and which forbids discrimination. It is all fudge to talk about the great rights which the First Minister has secured for us, such as the obligation of the Grand Trunk Railway to build up our national ports and buy its supplies in Canada. It is all mere fudge for him to say he has secured these things, when he has no intention of enforcing these obligations, and when it is only the attorney generals of the different provinces who can bring this company to book. If the right hon. gentleman will make Mr. C. M. Hays, with whom he has entered into a hundred million dollar contract, carry out his obligations and thus show that he is a law abiding citizen and a man of his word, I shall be only too glad to facilitate the closing of the session and allow the right hon. gentleman to go on and attend to any great public business he may have on the other side.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver City). Possibly coming from the far west, I may not be interested in the question which the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) has brought up, but I have a very distinct recollection of the conduct of the hon. gentleman in the railway committee on a Bill affecting the province of British Columbia. When the representatives of that province had their backs to the wall fighting to break a monopoly in that province, I have a distinct recollection of the hon. member doing his best to drive us from the wall.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has made a statement against me which is not true. I assisted the hon. gentleman and all the members of British Columbia on the occasion to which he refers.

Mr. MACPHERSON. He assisted us only when the attention of the public was drawn to his conduct, but what was the first vote he gave in the Railway Committee of this House on the Victoria, Vancouver and Edmonton Bill? His very first vote was in favour of a provision which would have made that Bill impossible.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I say it is not so.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Why, I was there and heard the hon. gentleman's name called.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order in referring to what took place in a committee and his statement besides is false.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Well, not true. I withdraw the expression 'false.'

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not think the hon. gentleman is fair in claiming that I am out of order. If I am treading on the corns of the hon. gentleman, he ought to keep his toes away from my feet.

Mr. FOSTER. Very difficult for him to do that.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman ought to withdraw the statement.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I shall withdraw the statement if I have said aught against the hon. gentleman's conduct in this House. If his conduct does not back up my statement, then I withdraw it. But his conduct does corroborate my statement. Why then should I withdraw it? Will he deny that in the Railway Committee—I will put the question fairly to him. My hon. friend is fond of doing the high dive act in this House. He is fond of getting up before the footlights and doing the hootchee-kootchee and the high kick act when there is anything to be made out of it. But I want to tell him that he is not sincere and all his high flown talk is no evidence of sincerity.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not want to disturb this little friendly intercourse, but the question now raised is the question of the enforcement of a federal statute governing the Grand Trunk Railway. I do not think that on that question, it is in order to discuss the vote which may have been given by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) in the Railway Committee on some railway legislation affecting British Columbia.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The point is no doubt well taken, but the question before us is the motion to go into supply. What I am bringing up now is the question of principle on which the hon. gentlemen from South York (Mr. Maclean) is so fond of pluming himself. Well, we must be judged by our actions outside of this House as well as in it. And when I say that the hon. gentleman has not, in the course of his career, always upheld those high and lofty principles which he is now vindicating, I am stating what is a fact; and I am in the judgment of every man who was present at that meeting of the Railway Committee two years ago when I say that the hon. gentleman voted for the very thing which would have made our Bill, the Victoria, Vancouver and Edmonton, impossible. Is he capable of denying that ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Let me hear him deny it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I have only one way of denying it and that is by saying it is not so.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I am very sorry that I have not got the newspaper reports of that time, but the first vote cast in the Railway Committee of this House——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I think the hon. gentleman should not continue to repeat the statement after the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has denied it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Then I withdraw the statement that my hon. friend asked me to withdraw. But I will state—and I think I am within my rights as a member of the House in this—that the hon. member (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is thoroughly inconsistent as shown by his action in this House when he has a political point to gain as contrasted with his action in the Railway Committee. I have nothing to do with this two-cent rate, so far as the Grand Trunk is concerned; but what I object to is that any hon. member of the House, when he has an opportunity to make a little cheap popularity for himself should act in one way in this House and then refuse to carry out in the Railway Committee the high principles which he has declared here, and that is what the hon. gentleman has done in relation to a proposal the carrying out of which was necessary to secure competition for us in British Columbia.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). When the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean) referred to Glengarry and said he proposed to come into that county and hold public meetings to show the people of the county as well as the people of Leeds and Brockville, that their members were not doing their duty properly, I can only say that I have no objection to the hon. gentleman coming to Glengarry at any time. We have had plenty of people in Glengarry who have talked as he talks, who have talked nonsense and blatherskiteism of every kind. But I should not feel that the hon. gentleman was doing me any harm if he came to Glengarry and talked there as he has talked here this afternoon. If his statements meant anything, he meant to convey the impression that it was possible to have a two-cent-rate on the Grand Trunk with the same accommodation as is given for the three and one-third cent rate. I am quite satisfied that the people of Glengarry do not want to ride in a cattle car at two cents a mile, when they can ride in a second class passenger car at two and one-quarter cents a mile. I do not know that they are very anxious to be able to ride second-class or to claim that they must have the two-cent rate on the same basis of accommodation as for the first-class rate. When the hon. gentleman wants to come to Glengarry and state his case fairly, honestly and openly, I can only say I will welcome him to Glengarry and be one of the spectators or will meet him on the platform, whichever he may prefer.

Mr. D. DERBYSHIRE (Brockville). If the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) desires to test the feeling of the people of Brockville on this subject and will resign his seat, I will resign mine and will run against him in Brockville. That is a speedy way of settling the matter. Why should we have this hon. gentleman taking up all the time of this House talking nonsense? He is always on the floor taking up the time of this House. And not only that, but the other day he took up the whole time of the sitting of the Railway Committee, shouting his two-cent rate and these other foolish things with which he hopes to make himself popular. Let the hon. gentleman come to Brockville and I will give him a rousing welcome.

INSURANCE COMMISSION REPORT—ALLEGATIONS AGAINST MEMBERS.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer for a very few moments to a question which has already been the subject of some comment in this House and the discussion of which, by the joint action of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), was postponed. When, on February 21 last, I brought before the House the subject of accusations which have been thrown from either side of this House, especially by the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) and the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), the Prime Minister expressed himself in this way:

> I have not made up my mind that at this moment the time has come for the House to take any action upon the matter which has been brought to its attention. But that the session cannot pass without this matter being brought to the attention of the House goes without saying. For my part, I believe that we should wait until we have the report of the Insurance Commission, and then the whole matter can be threshed out.

To which the leader of the opposition replied:

> If there is any charge contained in the evidence taken before the Insurance Commission, or if there should be any charge in the report of that commission against the public honour of any man on this side of the House, standing here, as I do, and in the position I occupy, I pledge myself that I will give to the Prime Minister of this country and to this parliament the best of my assistance to probe such a charge to the very bottom. That is all I have to say about that. I agree with the Prime Minister that it is impossible that the session should close without those charges which have been insinuated either being withdrawn or brought on for discussion and adjudication. So far as I am concerned—and I speak for every man on this side of the House in that regard—we do not propose that this session shall end until that matter has been discussed, and until that investigation has been made.

The report of the Insurance Commission, as everybody knows, has been before the House for some time. I did not raise this question before, because I thought it might be objected that it should not be discussed until the report had been placed in the hands of every member of the House. The report has now been in the hands of hon. members for some days. I suppose my colleagues in this House have taken the time, as I have done, to read this report, especially that part which relates to the investigation of the Independent Order of Foresters and the Canada Life Assurance Company. There is no doubt in my mind that the report contains adjudications, as we may describe them, on the part of the commissioners, which are clearly of a very damaging character against one member of this House and one member of the Senate. Whether it is the business of the House to deal with the matter, to pass judgment upon the conduct of that member of this House or that member of the Senate, is a question which will have to be discussed by both sides of this House. Undoubtedly, after this report and the comments that have been passed upon the conduct of this member of the House and this member of the Senate—and, as it is just as well to be clear in these matters, I may say that I refer to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and to Hon. Senator Cox—parliament must do something. This parliament must decide whether or not it is proper that members of the Canadian parliament, whether in one House or in the other, should be connected in the way that has been proved before that commission of inquiry with the administration of a public trust——

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) having brought this question up again and having gone so far, will go a little farther, and will kindly define what charge there is that can be brought by any member of this parliament against the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster); and when he has done that, will he or any other hon. member be good enough to make his charge and get to work on it as soon as he can.

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) need not grow warm——

Mr. BOURASSA.

Mr. FOSTER. No, only earnest.

Mr. BOURASSA. I want to be fair to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) as well as to the hon. Senator Cox. If the hon. gentleman will follow me cooly to the end he will find that I am not stating that either he or Hon. Senator Cox has been guilty of deeds that are within the right of this parliament to adjudicate upon.

Mr. FOSTER. From whom did my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) get the information? Does he mean to affirm that the report of the Insurance Commission states that I, as a member of this House, have been guilty of conduct which is unworthy of me?

Mr. BOURASSA. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will possess his soul in patience——

Mr FOSTER. I would like to have that information.

Mr. BOURASSA. I will endeavour to make myself clear. I am not making any charge against the hon. member, nor against any member of either House; I am simply stating that in a matter of the highest importance to the people of this country, an inquiry by a commission has been held for several months, testimony and evidence have been given before that commision, and a report has been made. In consequence of the evidence given before that commission, a suspicion has been aroused throughout the country that some members of this parliament, whether of the upper House or of the lower House, have been guilty of acts that are not in accordance with their duty as public men, nor in accordance with their duty towards the institutions with which they were connected. I am ready to agree that the business relations between the Independent Order of Foresters and the member for North Toronto, and the business relations between the Canada Life Assurance Company and Senator Cox, are not, strictly speaking, political matters. But I take this ground, that when the time comes for parliament to deal with this insurance business, I think that those gentlemen should feel that they are not in a proper position to be present in parliament, or to have anything to do with such legislation as may be adopted with regard to insurance companies. But that is a question to be dealt with in the future. The question at present before the House is a question of the confidence which the people of Canada should have in their institutions. Now, I repeat, I make no charge against these gentlemen; I have not yet decided in my own mind as to whether their acts in this relation are proper matters of discussion in this House. But other members of this House have made accusations against the member for North Toronto, against the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and against the member for Prince, P.E.I. (Mr. Lefurgey), and against the member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler). To these accusations the member for King's has retorted that if his conduct was attacked he would prove that members on the government side of the House, both ministers and private members, were guilty of improper conduct, that he would make that charge good if an accusation was brought against himself. Now it has been said, both inside and outside of the House, that after all we should not be so severe in regard to insinuations, and I myself have been charged with having made an insinuation on one occasion. I will not discuss at present whether I was guilty of that or not. It is not so much a question that insinuations have been made from one side of the House to the other, but the question before the House and country is that the hon. member for King's says that he knows of certain facts of the most damaging character against members of the administration and against members of parliament, which he will conceal if no charge is brought against his own conduct. That, Mr. Speaker, is a position which I claim ought to be cleared up from the bottom. It is not that accusations and insinuations have been made in the heat of debate. I agree that, although accusations and insinuations should not be made in the debates of this House, after all, perhaps, every one of us has been at some time more or less guilty in that respect, in a moment of heated debate. But I repeat that the grave question before the people of Canada at this time is that a certain member of parliament says he has procured data—that is the word which he used—showing that members of the government and members of the House of Comons are guilty of immoral conduct, both public and private, are guilty of such acts as would make them unworthy of sitting here as representatives of the people, and at the same time the statement is made that these acts will be concealed if no accusation is brought against other members of the House. That is a saw-off business against which the sentiment of the Canadian people is aroused to-day. The Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition have agreed that this matter must be cleared up. It is not sufficient to say that such words have been used in a moment of heated debate. The Prime Minister has said:

> If, however, when the report of the commission is before us, and if, as a result of this report, his conduct is impugned, it shall, I think, be his duty to make good the insinuations he has made.

I understand the Prime Minister to mean that if the report of the Insurance Commission is of a character to prove that the member for King's is guilty, then the latter is bound to prove that some members of the government are guilty of graft. Sir, to my mind that is not sufficient. Even if the report of the Insurance Commission does not warrant this House in bringing the member for King's to task, still I claim that ought not to release the member for King's from the necessity of making good his charge that members of the administration and ex-members of the administration are guilty of graft. I protest against the idea that in case the Insurance Commissioners' report does not incriminate the member for King's, then the members of the government and members of the House against whom the member for King's makes his charge, shall escape an inquiry and be allowed to go scot free. I say this is a point which ought to be cleared up. I repeat, because I want to make myself clear with the Prime Minister and with the leader of the opposition, as well as with all my colleagues, I repeat that it is not my desire to pose as a censor of the debates in this House, or to apportion blame on any member. I do not pose as a censor, or as a perfect man in that regard. But I claim that these charges and counter charges ought to be cleared up, in the public interest; and that when accusations of graft and of immoral conduct are made against members of this House they cannot be allowed to remain uninvestigated, even though the report of the Insurance Commission does not incriminate the hon. member for King's. The people of Canada demand that this matter should be sifted to the bottom, so that if any one is guilty he shall be punished, and if he is not guilty his reputation shall be justified.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). While this question is on I desire to say that on one occasion the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) introduced my name in connection with this so-called Northwest land scandal in which I and others were concerned. On that occasion I told the hon. gentleman that by virtue of holding a seat in this House he should at once take the matter up upon his own authority. I have not his exact words before me, but he said at an early date he would refer to it, or something to that effect. However, later on the question was renewed, and I find that on the 21st of February the hon. member made this statement, referring to myself:

> I am not going to lay any charges now, I am not called upon to do so, I have no instructions to do so. But I will tell the hon. member for East Simcoe that whenever an opportunity presents itself, while I am a member of this House, to discuss the connection of these gentlemen with land deals in the Northwest Territories and in British Columbia, I for one will only be too happy to meet the occasion, and I will tell the people of this country my views on that transaction.

Well, from the arrogant tone of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., who I regret is not in his place, I would have expected that he would have had the manliness to have followed this up at an early date especially as he has had in his possession for many days the finding of this investigating commission which has been referred to. But, that hon. gentleman, up to the present occasion, has seen fit to be silent. . . I shall not refer to that hon. gentleman in terms such as I would outside because they would be unparliamentary, but I think that hon. member for Carleton, N.B., must stand to-day before the general public of this country as one who is not to be credited with much authority on any statements he may have to make, and I am here to tell that hon. gentleman, who, I regret is not here, that I court the fullest discussion upon this question in so far as my actions are concerned. I will be only too pleased whether the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa)—and the duty is not cast upon that hon. gentleman because he has not said any thing about my conduct in this connection—or any other hon. member of this House wishes to introduce that question for open discussion and I shall take advantage of the opportunity to discuss that question with him in so far as I am concerned. As to the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., who, I again repeat, I regret is not here, I think he will be held up to the general public as one who cares to make statements and one who cares to throw braggadocio charges and to retreat at the earliest possible opportunity as he has retreated on this question. As far as the whole question is concerned we had the statement of the hon. member for King's, N. B., (Mr. Fowler) in regard to the charges he has to make and not only has to make but has made in this House of which he has never retracted one word. Let the House and the country understand that.

Mr. BOURASSA. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Let the House and the country understand that and I quite agree with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) in that regard. I have in the past week or two had occasion to visit my own home and I can tell the right hon. leader of the government and hon. gentlemen present that there never was a question presented before the public of Canada that has stirred it to the very centre like the grave allegations that have been made against this government. Not only are the good name and fair reputation of this government at stake but what is something higher than that the fair name and reputation of Canada are also at stake. It is being discussed. What happened the other day in an adjoining county? If any one had read it in England or any other country he would have been surprised that a man could stand on the public platform and make the insinuations—aye, Sir, more than insinuations—the charges that he made against a minister of the Crown in Canada to-day. It is not a matter for the hon. member for King's N.B., it is a matter for this government and more than that it is a matter for the people of Canada and as far as I am concerned this government will find that if my vote counts for anything I will give it for a full and thorough investigation. You must either make the hon. member for King's stand up in this House, apologize and retract every word or force him to have an investigation. The country will not be satisfied until that is done and I am sure the country will not be satisfied with the conduct of the premier until this matter is probed to the very bottom and to the very core.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, when this matter came up a few weeks ago I stated that we had better wait until the report of the commission on insurance should be before the House to ascertain what action should be taken. The report of the commission is now before the House; it was delivered last week and has been in the possession of the House perhaps for two or three days. The commission have reported that in their judgment there was a necessity for legislation and they have submitted a blank bill for the consideration of the House which is now in the hands of hon. members. Beyond this they did not report; they made no report against any body. In the course of the reasons which they gave for this legislation they brought in the names of certain members of this House. Whether or not there is in the report any thing which would warrant this parliament in taking any action against any of its members, I, for my part, am not prepared to say at this moment. The matter is still quite new amongst us and I have no opinion to express either one way or the other at the present moment. In regard to the charges—I will not say charges but rather insinuations—of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), this is what I said when the matter was brought up by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa):

Now, in connection with the other incident, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) made some very grave insinuations. The hon. gentleman did not make charges. He told us he had provided himself with certain material, as he said, to carry the war into Africa, and that if his conduct was discussed, or charges made against him, then he would take means to defend himself by accusing other parties—making insinuations of a very grave character against some members of the government and of this House, but without making any specific charges. I thought at the moment that the matter was very grave and exceeded the bounds of what might be expected in the heat of debate: still it arose in the midst of a heated discussion, and there might perhaps not be so much importance to be attached to it. If, however, when the report of the commission is before us and if, as a result of this report, his conduct is impugned, it shall, I think, be his duty to make good the insinuations he has made.

To the opinion which I then expressed I do not think I have any thing to add nor from it have I any thing to retract. I do not understand at the present time how it is possible to investigate any thing that has been said by the hon. member for King's. He did not mention any name, he did not mention any offence, he spoke in a general way and I am at a loss to know at the present moment what charges there are to be investigated. Of course, if the hon. gentleman made no charges himself, the report of the commission is now before the House and he could, if he has any thing to say, say it, or if he has any thing to charge, he could make the charge. He may have some thing in his mind of a grave character and it may be that what he has in his mind may not amount to any thing. Words of that kind are not words upon which you can base a charge or an insinuation of any kind, but it may be that the hon. gentleman has something against the character of members of the administration. If he has it is for him to decide whether or not he shall make his charges. I have not heard any thing so far which would lead me to believe that the hon. gentleman has any thing upon which he can base charges against any body and therefore I have nothing more to say at the present moment than what I have just said.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Mr. Speaker, I merely rise to state that in so far as the insurance report is concerned I have made many attempts to get through the whole of it but up to the present time I have not accomplished more than half of it and I might say to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that perhaps it is because some of us attend in the House a little more regularly than he does that we have not so much leisure to devote to these reports.

Mr. BOURASSA. I think that I can very often find out more in studying in my room than listening to the speeches in this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very likely; perhaps that might be said of some of us, today I would be inclined to disagree with my hon. friend when he suggests that I did anything to postpone the discussion of any of these matters. There is not one word in my remarks from beginning to end that invited any postponement. When the hon. member for Labelle says, as he did say, that the discussion of this matter was postponed by some joint arrangement between the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and myself he states that for which he has no warrant. There has never been any understanding of any kind between the Prime Minister and myself and there will not be.

Mr. BOURASSA. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will allow me I will quote his own words, and that may perhaps explain. I did not mean by 'an agreement,' that there was any arrangement in words between the two hon. gentlemen. I simply stated that both hon. gentlemen took the same view, and my ground for that statement is to be found in the following words of the leader of the opposition:

> If there is any charge contained in the evidence taken before the Insurance Commission, or if there should be any charge in the report of that commission against the public honour of any man on this side of the House, standing here, as I do, and in the position I occupy, I pledge myself that I will give to the Prime Minister of this country and to this parliament the best of my assistance to probe such a charge to the very bottom.

I did not mean there was an agreement between the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition to postpone this matter beyond the time when the report of the commission would be presented. Now that the report of the commission is brought down I ask the leader of the opposition to join with the Prime Minister, to have the accusations of the member for King's (Mr. Fowler), cleared up, and I may say these accusations have nothing to do with the report of the commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not one word to withdraw from what I said then, and I do not think I have anything to add. I was referring more particularly to charges against men on this side of the House, and speaking from the standpoint of one who is the leader on this side at the present time, I declared to the House then, as I again declare to the House now, that if there is any charge against any man on this side of the House in connection with that insurance investigation, or in connection with any other matter that affects his position as a member of this House, or as a public man, I will join with the Prime Minister, or I will join with my hon. friend from Labelle in probing that charge to the bottom. I invited no postponement, I invite no postponement now. I do not know exactly what my hon. friend from Labelle desires. Does he desire to discuss this matter, and to make a charge this afternoon, and to have it dealt with this afternoon. I am ready to go on with it this afternoon, or at any other time. I invite no postponement whatever.

Mr. BOURASSA. Does the hon. gentleman ask me a question?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. BOURASSA. What I desire is that the member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), should make his charges good, or, that he should withdraw them. That is what I desire.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The member for King's (Mr. Fowler) does not happen to be in his place this afternoon, and it is idle for my hon. friend from Labelle to get up and address an empty chair, and ask the member for King's to go on this afternoon. If he means that we ought to go on to-day—

Mr. BOURASSA. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then if we are not invited to go on this afternoon, I do not know what object the member for Labelle had in lecturing me——

Mr. BOURASSA. Fix a day for the hon. member for King's to make good his charge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let my hon. friend from Labelle bring up the matter in the presence of the hon. member for King's. It is open to my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) just as much as to any member of this House to take action. Let me say again, that I have invited no postponement of any charges against members on this side of the House. I have already informed my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) and I inform him again, that if there is any charge of any character affecting the public status of any one of these men, I shall be prepared to join hands with him or with any other member of this House, to have that charge probed to the bottom. There has certainly been no postponement at my instance, nor do I think there has been postponement at the instance of any one else. I simply rose to make this statement because any one reading the words of the hon. member for Labelle, without the explanation he has given by quoting from my remarks, would be inclined to think that there had been some arrangement between the two sides of the House, that some investigation should be postponed and the discussion of some charge should be put off to a later date, or put off altogether. So far as I am concerned I repeat that there has been no arrangement and further, that there will be no arrangement with regard to any such matter or for any such purpose as that.

STATEMENTS IN THE TORONTO 'WORLD.'

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to an article in the Toronto 'World' of the 6th instant, in which my name is referred to in connection with the Bill regarding railway tickets which the hon. gentleman for South York (Mr. Maclean) had before the Railway Committee on Tuesday last. The Toronto 'World' says:

> Indeed the significant event of the day was the undignified scamper resembling a panic, among the members of the committee, when it became evident that Mr. Maclean would muster sufficient strength to call a division. Among those recorded as present at the meeting, but missing from the roll call are:
> Mr. BOURASSA.

Then follows the names of some members of the House, including my own. I want to say to this House that I was not present at the committee. Through the courtesy of the Minister of Agriculture, Dr. Fletcher appeared before the Agricultural Committee that morning in regard to a matter in which my county was deeply interested and I considered it far more important that I should attend that committee than to attend the Railway Committee. I say it in the most friendly manner to the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), that if he was the instigator of that reference to myself there is absolutely no truth in it. There is no power in possession of either the Prime Minister or the leader of the opposition, that would compel me to scamper from any committee to shirk any vote.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). My name appears in this black list that has been published by the member for South York. He has no foundation whatever for saying that I shirked a vote in the Railway Committee. As a matter of fact I was not present at the deliberations of the Railway Committee that morning, further than that I passed through the room in company with another gentleman with whom I had business elsewhere. It was impossible for me to attend the committee that morning, in view of my other public engagements. I did not know that the Bill of the hon. member for South York was under consideration, nor that a vote would be had upon it. Now, I want the member for South York to understand something as to the relations between brethren in this House; I want him to understand that he should be fair to other hon. gentlemen in this House. I want him to understand also, that although he may not be liable to the criminal law or to the civil law for any libel or slander he publishes about his fellow members, yet, he has indulged in the most miserable form of slander, when he attempts to damage a person's reputation in such a way that he cannot be held accountable for it in the civil or criminal courts. I resent the imputation that, together with other hon. members, I sneaked away from the vote on the Bill which the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) was talking about in the Railway Committee. I express my resentment now against the imputation which the hon. member has made in his newspaper. I ask him to retract it. I ask him to be a man of honour and to retract that false statement; because so far as I am concerned, the statement is utterly false.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale and Cariboo). In reference to the matter that was brought up by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), and which was dealt with by my colleague from Vancouver, I desire to say that as I had charge of that railway legislation I had a distinct recollection that the member for South York voted for the amendment that was introduced solely for the purpose of killing the Bill. I have before me the division list in the Railway Committee, and his name appears among those who voted for the amendment. That vote of his was commented on in the newspapers of the country, and I have before me a very strong editorial which appeared in the Toronto 'Globe,' in which, with regard to that vote there is a criticism of the inconsistency of the hon. member for South York; and in which it is stated that he is a theoretical champion of popular rights but a practical voter in favour of railway monopoly. When I heard the denial of the member for South York, I had a distinct recollection that he was lined up on that occasion in favour of monopoly, and I am bound to say it surprised me very much when he gave that vote.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. I invite the attention of the committee to items 355 and 356, which we had before us several days ago. In regard to German silver and nickel, the question arose as to whether these articles are being made in Canada. We were aware that a factory had been established in Toronto for the manufacture of brass and nickel, but we found on inquiry that it had been suspended for some time. Although negotiations are understood to be in progress with a view to opening it, there is no very definite prospect of it going on. The conclusion we have reached, as respects the principal item of the factory, brass, is that we will adhere to the small duty of 10 per cent proposed, while as respects German silver and nickel, which are practically not made in Canada, we think it well to make them free; so that if the factory goes on, as the parties interested say it will, they will have the benefit of this small duty on brass, while the nickel, which is a secondary matter with them, will be free.

Amendment agreed to, and item as amended agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. In connection with item 71 there was a discussion with regard to certain field and garden seeds, which it was held required special consideration from the fact that they were of high value. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) spoke of them as being so costly that the tariff would bear very heavily upon them. Therefore we have decided to insert a new item to meet that case:

71a. Field and garden seeds, not specified as 'free,' valued at not less than $5 a pound, in packages weighing not less than one ounce, each, British preference, 5 per cent; intermediate, 10 per cent; general, 10 per cent.

The idea is that the ordinary division of a pound package would not apply to these valuable seeds, and so we make a special rule providing for a one ounce package. We think that substantially meets the suggestion of the hon. member for Brantford.

Item agreed to.

411. Malleable sprocket or link-belting chain 15 per cent, 17½ per cent, 20 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. When the committee last reported we had this item under consideration. The view we expressed was that the malleable industry, which at one time had made representations and which it appeared had some just cause of complaint, had been fairly dealt with as respects the greater part of its product; whilst this malleable sprocket was a branch of business which they were preparing to enter into, but had not actually entered upon. We felt, therefore, as respects the principal articles on which they are now engaged, we might fairly give them some measure of the consideration they asked for. But we do not think that they should press for further consideration on this particular item, which they are not actually manufacturing, but in the manufacture of which they are only prepared to enter.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that a letter was read here saying that they have been manufacturing this special kind for some time. The hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Christie) made the statement in the House the other night.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I was given to understand that they were manufacturing link belting and I made that statement from a letter of February 15 last, from the Secretary of the Ontario Malleable Iron Company. He says:

Another very serious blow to us is the removal of the duty from link belting, which we have manufactured for many years. We have recently expended in patterns, machinery and buildings, upwards of $10,000 for the manufacture of this chain, which will be a dead loss to us if chain is allowed to come in from the United States free of duty, as it is utterly impossible for us to compete with the United States without protection.

I read this so as to put myself correct, as some hon. members may have thought that the statement I made the other night was mere guess work.

Mr. FIELDING. Every one who knows the hon. gentleman will know that he made the statement in good faith, but there is not much substantial difference. This is not at present an important branch of their business, and no injustice will be done them if they do not go on with that particular branch. That is not the principal branch in which they are engaged. Their industry is a very large one and they employ a very large number of people, but their business is mainly in other branches which have been well considered in the readjustment of the tariff, and the promoters ought to feel that we have made every reasonable effort to meet them.

Mr. FOSTER. In whose benefit is that rearrangement of the duty to enure? Who chiefly use these products?

Mr. FIELDING. Largely agricultural implement makers and also the lumber industry.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. I understood the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to say that he had raised the duty on many lines. On what lines has he raised the duty to compensate this taking off the duty?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think that there is any quantity of sprocket chains made in Canada. But if there is, it is affected in that way adversely. The duty on reapers, mowers and binders has been reduced from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent. Parts of those come in at the same rate as the duty on the implement itself. Therefore malleables imported for reapers, mowers and binders will come in at 17½ per cent instead of 20 per cent, as they came in before as part of the machine, when the duty was 20 per cent on the machine. That is the disadvantage I understand they are under. The advantage they have is that all their other productions, which were 25 per cent before, will now under the general item come in at 27½ per cent. Malleable iron of course enters into the construction of many things. If any one industry will feel the advance of 2½ per cent, it will be the railways more than any particular industry that I know.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. I understood the hon. minister (Mr. Paterson) to state that lumbermen would be one of the parties who would benefit by this change in the tariff. But the benefit to the lumbermen seems to be that they will pay 27½ per cent instead of 25 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. No, they use these sprocket chains.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. Very little.

Mr. PATERSON. They will be free.

Mr. CLEMENTS. While we have in Canada an established factory of this kind, as the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Christie) has told us, this government should deal out equal protection to the other manufacturers. I understand that a good deal of malleable iron is used in agricultural implements. I want to say that if a duty of say 15 per cent or 20 per cent were given these people, it would not cost the farmer very much more, as far as the binders are concerned. It would not make 20 cents difference. I would like to ask the hon. minister what in his opinion would be the difference in the cost to the farmer of a binder between the 17½ per cent and the 20 per cent duty.

Mr. PATERSON. It would be about 20 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. Twenty cents of an advantage in the sprocket wheel trade.

Mr. PATERSON. In selecting the articles on which we give a drawback to the manufacturers of these three implements on which we are reducing the duty—in making our computation when we put in malleable iron as part of it, which we are now striking out, there was a duty on sprocket chains. Making sprocket chains free will compensate in a measure for removing the original discription of all malleables that were in the drawback. Malleables will go out of the drawback altogether. The sprocket chain is not called a malleable. Having been dutiable before and being made free, that will go towards compensating the agricultural implement maker for the taking out of malleables that which it was proposed in our original draft—to give them—not that it will balance but it will be part that enters into the competition.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. As I represent a riding in which the lumber interest is largely developed, I want to draw attention to the fact that sprocket chains used by lumbermen are not malleable sprocket chains. They are chains in which there is no malleable whatever. They are partly composed of cast-iron and partly of wrought-iron or steel. There are some chains all malleable, very light chains, but they are used very little by lumbermen. Then there are chains of larger dimensions, part malleable and part wrought-iron. The larger chains have no malleable whatever, so that the benefit to the lumber industry will be very little indeed.

Mr. PATERSON. I speak without absolute knowledge, but I venture the opinion that no lumberman in Canada would say that he had used malleable sprocket chain made in Canada. Any they have used, no doubt, have been imported. The duty on large iron chain is not heavy.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that the minister intends to give the manufacturer of harvesting machinery the opportunity to import his malleables, which are parts of the finished article, at 17½ per cent. But he has added 2½ per cent to the malleable irons imported for other purposes. I understood him to say that the bulk of these are manufactured in Canada for railway purposes. If he will inquire of the Oshawa people he will find that they have five or six hundred men making goods which are not used by the railways at all. Every carriage factory and every wheel factory in the country buys malleable irons from these people. I do not know how much my hon.

friend from East Peterborough (Mr. Findlay) pays them, but I know that our bill runs about $1,500 to $2,000 a month. They will take advantage of this 2½ per cent and the farmer will have to pay it. What will be the good of the reduction of 2½ per cent on harvesters when the farmer will have to pay 2½ per cent more on the malleables in every vehicle he uses on his farm?

Mr. PATERSON. If this 2½ per cent is added, of course the malleable iron manufacturers will take advantage of it. But, of course, my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) will not put it on the buggy he sells to the farmer.

Mr. CLEMENTS. No doubt the minister has made a calculation of how much the farmers expect to benefit by this reduction from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent. What will be the saving on a binder?

Mr. PATERSON. It ought to be $2.50.

Mr. CROCKET. I understood the minister to say that this change is made for the benefit of the lumber industry as well as for the manufacturers of agricultural implements ?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not attach much importance to the effect upon the lumber industry.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the government received, since the bringing down of the tariff, any request from the lumber interests for this change?

Mr. PATERSON. The representatives of the lumber industry appeared before us very seldom. In British Columbia they wanted a duty on lumber and representations were made also that they were burdened with duties on all they had to buy and were afforded no protection. We have not heard so much about it lately, I suppose on account of their brisk trade in lumber.

Mr. CROCKET. Since the tariff was brought down has the government received any requests on the subject in behalf of the lumber trade?

Mr. PATERSON. I think not.

Mr. CROCKET. It is entirely then at the request of the agricultural implement manufacturers that this change is made?

Mr. PATERSON. It must be largely in their interests that it is made. Yet I do not want to mislead the committee; it has just struck me now that, while this will in part compensate the agricultural implement manufacturers for the reduction in duty of their finished goods, any other industry using malleable sprocket chains will benefit also.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would it not do to confine this to malleable sprocket chains when imported by harvesting machinery manufacturers?

Mr. PATERSON. The carriage can stand this all right, I think.

434. Lamp springs, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent, 10 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. We propose to add clock springs to this item as being articles of a similar character.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a representation made by the manufacturers of what are called newspaper feature matrices which, as I take it, will come in under item 433, which reads:

Stereotypes, electrotypes, celluloids and bases for the same, composed wholly or in part of metal or celluloid, n.o.p., and matrices or copper shells for such stereotypes, electrotypes, and celluloids, per square inch, ⅛ cent, ⅛ cent, ⅛ cent.

The facts appear to be these: The protection on these goods, up to the present time, has been 2½ cents per square inch. Under that duty these manufacturers came into this country and established themselves and have been two years in business. They have been paying out about $23,000 a year to their employees and in connection with their work. They have quite a large staff employed and have been supplying matrices to nearly all the great newspapers in Canada.

Mr. D. ROSS. Where is the plant?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is in Montreal. I have here letters from a number of the principal newspapers in Canada, the general tenor of which is that they are satisfied with the service they have been getting from these people. Now, the duty of 1½ cents a square inch is cut down to ⅛ cent a square inch. If this be done, it effectually puts this factory out of business. They affirm that it has been done in some special interest, that their interests have been entirely ignored and that their industry, which employs Canadian labour, will be, as I have said, wiped out. I would like to hear the reasons of the minister for what seems to be a pretty drastic treatment of this industry. I may read a few of the letters on the subject. Take, for instance, the letter from the Manitoba 'Free Press,' which is a large and representative newspaper:

I am happy to say that your matrix service which we have been receiving for the past year has given us good satisfaction and has resulted in our being able to use a much greater quantity of matrices than we were able to do before you began business in Canada.

And the managing director of the Halifax 'Herald' writes:

We are entirely satisfied with the page matrix service which you have rendered. Our only regret is that we cannot use more mats.

The 'Herald' of Hamilton writes :

In reply to your inquiry I have to say that since you began the business the 'Herald' has paid much less for mats that it was obliged to pay before, and I attribute the lower price chiefly to your enterprise.

The Ottawa 'Free Press' writes :

Replying to yours of recent date, the establishment of the Canada Newspaper Syndicate has been of undoubted advantage to Canadian newspapers. The Ottawa 'Free Press' has shared in this advantage to a considerable extent, and is on the whole well satisfied with the service of the syndicate.

The 'Ottawa 'Journal,' an able and independent newspaper, writes in exactly the same strain. The Toronto 'News' says :

I beg to say that the service we have been receiving through your company is eminently satisfactory, and we could not possibly procure the mats direct from American citizens at anything like the same figure.

There is no need of reading more. Without exception, they are all in the same strain. Now, if a satisfactory service has been rendered, if it is a service, for the newspapers mainly, that has been transplanted from the other side, and has, in one or two years business in this country, made prices lower rather than higher, I cannot see why a change should have been made in the duty. Of course if you take the duty down from 1½ cents per square inch to ⅛th of a cent, you might almost as well have no duty at all.

Mr. PATERSON. What is the hon. gentleman referring to ?

Mr. FOSTER. I am referring to the Canada Newspaper Syndicate of Montreal.

Mr. PATERSON. I think that has been in existence since 1897.

Mr. FOSTER. This particular industry I quote from has been in existence two years, and has transferred itself from the United States.

Mr. PATERSON. The making of these matrices is not a new thing that was introduced only a year or two ago, and I am rather surprised to hear what the newspapers have said. My impression was that there was a great clamour against the excessive duty, and my remembrance is that the old duty of one and a half cents, with this ad valorem added, was an extremely heavy duty, and was unfair to those who had to purchase these things. The commissioner does not remember that we have had any representations from these people complaining that the duty was unjust to them. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman has information as to what these combined duties amount to ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not making any calculation as to that, I am just stating the facts as they seem to exist. Now, these gentlemen have been before the commission, and they state that they have the promise that if the newspapers of Canada were satisfied with their service, and it was so indicated, the duty would be kept at the old rate. The newspapers have written these letters in return, and yet they have not been able to get the duty changed, although they have made strenuous efforts in that direction. When the tariff inquiry was being held, the newspapers in Canada did ask the commission for a reduction of the duty on matrices for advertisement purposes, and on plates for newspapers only, but they did not ask for a reduction of the duty on these feature matrices. But that is the one article in which these people deal, and where they are struck by the duty.

Mr. FIELDING. This item has not been reduced as largely as my hon. friends imagine. The item is in two parts. I think there were representations from the newspapers in this and other matters, and we found on examination that the duty appeared to be very high. The item passed some days ago, and I have not my notes on the subject here ; but my remembrance is that we found on examination that the duty was rather high, and we made a reduction on that portion which applied to the newspaper work. The hon. gentlemen will observe that the item is divided between these matrices and the stereotypes and all the other things mentioned in this item for advertisement purposes and other purposes, the other purposes being the newspapers. There was no reduction in that item, although it was a rather high one on the matrices and the various other items that are used for the purpose of advertising, for calendars, circulars and such like. But if it was to be used for news matter, which is now being imported to some extent, the reduction applies only to that portion which is used in the newspaper press, not including advertisements. The reduction is not as broad as the hon. gentleman supposes. The newspapers would include advertisements, because many of the great advertising concerns have these things made for their own use and distribute them, and these will come in under the higher rate. The only thing which has been reduced is the actual news matter, on which we found the duty was rather high. Strong representations were made on behalf of the press, and when we found the duty seemed to be a large one, we made a reduction, which I think will still give the industry a fair chance of success.

Mr. FOSTER. If an industry which was getting one and a half cents per square inch has its protection reduced down to one-eighth of a cent, does the minister think that gives a fair protection ? But after all, these men ought to know their own business better than I do, and they ought to know what they are making and where they are hit and where their business is being bowled out. They have made their representations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I find a letter here of January 2nd, in which they write to Mr. Bain, assistant commissioner, and which I will read, as it may have escaped the minister.

Our Mr. Mitchell, representing the Canada Newspaper Syndicate, interviewed you some time ago regarding the reduction of duty that had been made on matrices by the new tariff, and you requested him to place his representations in writing.

Our client pretends that (1st) up to the present time they have been protected by a tariff of 1½ cents per square inch on matrices; (2nd) that by the new tariff a reduction from 1½ cents to ⅛ of a cent per square inch has been made; (3rd) newspapers were getting matrices at present at a much lower price than they were previous to the Canada Newspaper Syndicate, Limited, commencing business;

I think that the letters I read go to carry that out.

(4th) Matrices are sold in the United States from $5 up, and cannot be purchased from the North American or Philadelphia, the Hearst Syndicate, McClure, of Philadelphia, and the International Syndicate at any lower price; (5th) with a duty of a cent and a half per square inch on these matrices these syndicates could not interfere with our Canadian trade; (6th) the International Syndicate could only sell matrices in this country at a lower rate by sending their surplus to Canada, and this surplus would not be sufficient to supply all the newspapers, and consequently, only a few newspapers would benefit to the detriment of the newspapers throughout Canada in general; (7th) the field in Canada is a limited one, and to protect an industry such as our clients stated they require the entire field; (8th) the Canadian Newspaper Syndicate, Limited, have been supplying matrices at prices varying from $1.50 to $5, manufacturing them here, and consequently employing a large number of men.

Then they go on to say that the salary list and wages for the first eleven months ending December 1, 1906, amounted to $24,380. That is a tidy little sum in the way of a small industry amongst a great many, and these small industries are important adjuncts to the manufacturing life of the country.

Since the Canadian Newspaper Syndicate, Limited, has commenced business newspapers thoughout Canada have been able to get their matrices at a cheaper rate than they ever did before, and we are inclosing herewith copies of letters from several newspapers showing their opinion of the service——

I have read these to the minister.

We will be pleased at any time to give you any further information that you may require.

They state also that if this duty is left at one-eighth of a cent they will simply have to move to the United States and that the expenditure of this money in Montreal will therefore go by the board. Then, on January 3 they write again to Mr. Bain and they go over the ground in part sending him also some more letters. I dare say I have read the one from the Halifax 'Herald.' I have a recollection that somewhere in the correspondence they say that although they made this communication through their attorney they have not received any answer and they have not received any amelioration.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will see that we could not give any answer beyond a proper acknowledgment of the letter. I notice that it is stated also that they had received a promise that if certain information were given the duty would be changed. I am quite sure that statement is unwarranted because it would be highly improper to make such a promise and I am certain we did not do it. In reference to this item my impression is that it will be found that we have had fair consideration for the industry. As this item has been passed I have not at the moment all the information we had before us with respect to it but I happen to have under my hand the representation which was made by Mr. L. L. Channel, of the Sherbrooke 'Daily Record,' who writing to us on November 22, stated that 'the duty on plate used by us for newspaper columns and on matrices for the same is prohibitive' and requesting us to put these articles on the free list. We did not go as far as to meet the demand to put them on the free list but we have given what we consider a sufficiently high duty and at the same time we have reduced the duty for the benefit of the press of the country.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the minister at hand the figures showing the value of the matrices brought in from the United States last year?

Mr. FIELDING. Matrices are not shown separately. They are grouped under 'stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of newspaper columns,' &c., so that this item does not mean matrices only but includes the whole group. The imports of the articles embraced in that item were valued at $15,717. Although the item has already been passed, if it is thought that we should give it further consideration, I should be very happy, before the matter is finally through, to look over the papers again. My own impression is that we did give it fair consideration at the time and that while they suffered a little reduction on the whole they would still have a good chance to do business.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems rather hard treatment.

Mr. FIELDING. If the rate is excessively low it is hard treatment.

Mr. FOSTER. No one took up my challenge to say what feature matrices were.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have here a newspaper containing illustrations printed from stereotypes made from these matrices.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose they are such cuts as those.

Mr. FIELDING. They are not advertising matrices.

Mr. FOSTER. I take it that this is what they deal in and that they are quite content that newspaper, plate and advertising matrices should come in. They are interested in the feature business and I do not know whether I am sorry or glad to see that these 'features' are occupying much more space in the newspapers than formerly.

Mr. FIELDING. All these are cuts of ladies who are good looking.

An hon. MEMBER. Should that be discouraged ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. The pictorial method is an attractive one and even for adults and cultivated adults it has a good deal of interest and sometimes conveys a good deal of information. But, the feature business is their business. I would be glad to hand these papers to the Minister of Finance and ask him to consider them.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman will leave the papers, although the item has been passed, before the tariff is finally through we will look into them again and if we find that any injustice has been done we will be quite willing to correct it. I think that the case is a little better than the hon. gentleman imagines but we will look into it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am putting it just as it has been put to me.

Mr. LALOR. Before going to another item, if the hon. Minister of Finance will permit me, I would like to call his attention to item 318 which has already been passed and which deals with common and coloured window glass. I do not know whether the government had their attention called to the fact that in the town of Cayuga in the county of Haldimand there has been established a large window glass factory, that large capitalists from Pittsburg have established that enterprise there and that they have already spent $75,000 in connection with the window glass business. These people are very anxious that the government should give them some encouragement by way of increased duties in order that they may extend that busines. They state that if they received sufficient encouragement from the government in a short time they would be employing a thousand men in Cayuga. It would quadruple the valuation of property in that locality and it would be a very great enterprise for this country to encourage. I believe that the result would be that in a short time they would be selling window glass at a lower price than the people are now required to pay. I believe that probably they would get it for an even less sum than the amount of duty which is now imposed. It would be very beneficial to the country and to the county of Haldimand and I trust that the minister will seriously consider item 318 and see if he cannot assist this great industry which has located in this country in order to encourage them to increase and extend their plant. They are people of great wealth and a rational measure of encouragement would lead to the establishment of a very great enterprise in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. One should not attempt to discredit any industry in Canada, and I speak with great hesitation on such a point; but I am bound to say that our information led us to form the impression that the window glass industry is one which we can hardly hope to make a success of in Canada. It has been tried before without success. I believe it is carried on by only one or two concerns in England. It is an industry which cannot prosper except under special conditions, which we do not think exist here. It is especially a Belgian industry, and the Belgians appear to have taken control almost of the world's market in that line. Of course, I speak with a great deal of deference in the presence of hon. gentlemen who may have invested money in the enterprise, but, as I understand, it is like one or two other industries which have been brought to our notice, and as regards which we think they could not be made a success in this country. Window glass is an article in universal use, and any duty that would be acceptable to the promoters of the industry would be regarded as a burden on the consumers. By increasing the duty, you would be increasing the price of an article that is universally used.

Mr. LALOR. We have special advantages in Cayuga for the manufacture of glass. We have natural gas, and fuel is a large item in the manufacture, and they have found a peculiar quality of limestone which is most suitable for the purpose. It is believed that the industry would develop if it received encouragement in the way of a duty. These people have also patents which cover the manufacture of window glass by machinery, and I am informed by a member of this House, who is in the business, that window glass can be manufactured in Canada just as cheaply, and even to greater advantage, than common bottle glass. This industry would be a great advantage to Canada if it were encouraged.

Mr. SPROULE. It has been stated that for some years past there is an understanding among the plate glass trade, and I think the window glass trade as well, by which a certain price is fixed. If, by putting a duty on, it would play into the hands of the trade in that respect I would feel that the government were doing wrong. If, on the other hand, the putting on of a duty would help a Canadian industry, and if that industry kept outside the trade agreement, then it would be a good thing to put on a duty. For many years past glass has been much higher in price than it ought to be, according to its intrinsic worth and cost of manufacture. I do not know that this may be fairly called a trade combine, but there is some kind of understanding by which every firm sells at the same figure. If there is any way in which the government can force the trade to bring the price down to a figure which would give the manufacturers a reasonable profit, it is desirable the government should act in that direction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have been asked to inquire why monotypes have been increased from 10 to 20 per cent. I am informed that this machine is not made in Canada, and that it does not compete with any machine made here.

Mr. FIELDING. That particular machine may not be made in Canada, but I think I am correct in saying that machines which serve the same purpose are made here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no personal knowledge, but the statement is made to me by a gentleman who is interested in matters of this kind. There does not seem to be any good reason for doubling the duty, if this machine is not made in Canada.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. The monoline is made in Montreal, and it answers the same purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statement has been made to me by a gentleman who has been engaged with newspapers for a very long time, and who should know about matters of this kind.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. The linotype and the monoline answer the same purpose as this machine.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The machine to which I have reference is called the monotype.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I know the machine.

445. Mowing machines, harvesters, selfbinders or with binders, binding attachments, reapers, 12½ per cent, 17½ per cent, 17½ per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the present tariff on the articles mentioned in this item?

Mr. PATERSON. It was 20 per cent; it will now be 17½ per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know how the exports of these machines compare with the quantity used in Canada; the actual amount of the exports; and to what countries these machines are exported?

Mr. FIELDING. In 1905 the value of all agricultural implements entered for consumption was $1,593,301; for the year 1906, $1,614,564. That includes agricultural implements of all kinds. In 1905 the mowing machines imported are valued at $71,375, and in 1906 their value is apparently $24,692.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that for the whole year 1906?

Mr. FIELDING. That is the fiscal year.

Mr. FOSTER. Are mowers included in agricultural implements in the former figures you gave?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. The total exports of agricultural implements, the products of Canada, are $2,497,601. They go to some thirty different countries, the larger ones being: Australia, $523,514; Great Britain, $236,955; Argentina, $256,000; New Zealand, $143,000; France, $293,000; Germany, $443,000; Holland, $100,000; Russia, $180,000; British Africa, $94,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know further if the minister can inform us, from information derived by the Tariff Commission, how the net prices realized abroad compare with those realized at home and what is the actual price at which these machines are sold abroad?

Mr. PATERSON. I would not like to speak positively, but my impression is that it was claimed that they got better prices abroad than they did at home.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister will be prepared, when we get into committee on the Bill, to give us this information in as definite a form as possible.

Mr. PATERSON. Of course, we would have to take the word of the manufacturer for it. I think the representation made to us was that agricultural machinery was sold cheaper in Canada than in any other country in the world except the United States. I say that from memory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There has been a good deal of discussion on this subject, and I assume that information must have been gathered by the Tariff Commission on these points. Then I would like to know whether or not these articles successfully compete in any and in what foreign countries with similar articles manufactured in the United States.

Mr. PATERSON. We have our official figures of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Another point on which I think it is desirable to have some information is, as to the actual cost of producing these machines and as to the cost of selling? I mention that because we have had some discussion as to the services of agents in connection with the insurance business, and I would like to know how much the farmer pays in respect of the services of agents, middlemen, &c., in connection with the purchase of these articles. Then I would like to know what average profit the manufacturer makes on them. if we have the cost of manufacturing plus the cost of selling, we would be able to ascertain what the average profit is. Would the minister also tell us what capital is employed in this industry and what dividends are paid on the stock issued and what the amount of stock issue is? Then I would like to know how the cost of these articles when manufactured in Canada compares with the cost of similar articles when manufactured in the United States, also how the cost to the purchaser in Canada compares with the cost to the purchaser in the United States? Then I would like to know whether the American manufacturer dumps these machines in Canada, or whether he pays the duty and sells them at the same price in Canada as the Canadian manufacturer? Another important question is whether or not there is in Canada among the manufacturers of these articles any combine as to prices, modes of selling, or other matters of conducting the business? Then I would like the minister to give me information as to how many alterations have been made either in items in the tariff or by drawbacks or otherwise which would affect the cost of manufacturing these machines in Canada. It would also be desirable for us to know, if possible, the extent, in each case and in the whole, to which these alterations will affect the cost of manufacture in Canada.

Mr. PATERSON. That is a series of questions which my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) had better put to the Minister of Finance. I think there will be some difficulty in getting the information on all these points. The hon. gentlemen is asking for every detail of a man's business, and how far he will be willing to give that——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may tell the Minister of Customs that the information I have asked for is no more than has been obtained by the Royal Commission in Australia which investigated the cost of manufacturing these articles and some others in that country. And it is well known to those who have investigated the subject that the new Australian tariff, so far as these articles were concerned, has been based upon the report of that royal commission. The Tariff Commission we had in this country was fulfilling, to a certain extent, the same purpose as that royal commission which has done such exhaustive work in Australia. The Australian commission did not regard it as outside the sphere of their duty to make inquiries into the cost of manufacture of these machines in Australia in order to be able to report what rate of customs duty should be imposed upon them under the new Australian tariff. I do not think, therefore, that I am going beyond what is right in asking for this information. Of course, it may be possible that the government have not looked into the matter so thoroughly as the Australian commission did and may not be able to furnish the information. All I ask is that whatever information on these points is available should be supplied, in so far as the government thinks that my request for information is a fair one. Of course, I would not make the request unless I thought it fair, and I make it, of course, without the slightest desire to do injustice to these gentlemen; for I am sure that they desire only fair play at the hands of the government and parliament of Canada, and do not ask us to discriminate in their favour beyond the protection which other manufacturers in this country have expected and are receiving. I will hand the memorandum of what I have asked to the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Finance, and I do not ask that this item be delayed for the purpose of completing an answer, because it can be given later on when the House is in Committee on the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. So far as the information asked for is available it will be our duty to get it. Some of it can be obtained by looking at the records of the census returns and others. In the Tariff Commission we did not think it our duty to consider in detail the cost of manufacturing every article in the tariff. That would have been an endless task. Some may have thought that time enough was spent on our work as it was, but we simply could not have accomplished it at all if we had attempted to gain that information concerning all lines of industry. Some of the information which the hon. gentleman asked for was dealt with by some of the witnesses. So far as we can we will get the information before the tariff is finally moved.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to add an inquiry as to the valuation placed on each of the classes of articles coming under this head which are imported into Canada. The Minister of Finance, in his budget speech this session, proposed to offset the reduction in duty on threshing machines by an increase in the valuation. Therefore, I would like to know exactly how the valuation is arrived at in the case of each class of these machines—is it the price charged to the wholesaler or the jobber? In this connection I would point out that the information furnished by the Minister of Customs some little time ago concerning the valuation placed on self binders—I leave out mowers for the moment—in the year 1895 depended on the quantity imported at the time, and that the average valuation at that time amounted to $95. Subsequently that valuation was increased to $102 for two classes of self-binders at any rate, and apparently, they remained at that valuation from 1900 to 1905 when a sudden drop was made to $97, at which figure it remained last year. I would like the House to have definite information as to what the valuation of these machines is. One can readily see, of course, that under the dumping clauses, a decrease of the duty of 2½ per cent could be offset by an increase in the valuation of a little more than $2 on the machine itself.

Mr. FIELDING. We will give the hon. gentleman the information as to the valuation.

Mr. HALL. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs the meaning of the words in section 445, completed parts thereof?' There are certain classes of repairs brought in by the foreign manufacturer, and these, I should suppose, would be 'completed parts' of these machines. On the other hand, there are certain manufacturers in a small way here in Canada who buy certain parts to be used in the making of these machines. As a matter of fact, these parts are not actually complete; they may need to be punched or submitted to some other simple operation. Would this class of goods used by these manufacturers, be counted as complete parts, or would they be subject to the higher duty?

Mr. PATERSON. I fancy that, in this case the words 'completed parts' refer to parts which are intended to be an integral part of the machine and not useable for anything else. What we have to guard against is the importation of parts which are not integral parts of the machine. Even though it may have to be punched or something of that kind, so long as it can be recognized as a part of the machine, I think that would be enough.

Mr. HALL. But work upon these pieces is necessary to make them part of the machine.

Mr. PATERSON. It must be a part that, when it comes in, is in the shape required for use in the machine. It must be some thing that is really a part of the machine, something that could only be used in that machine.

Mr. HALL. A cutting bar might be brought in, that is a piece of bar of iron made into the shape but not properly punched. I would like to see a definition as to the amount of work that would be required upon this particular part in order to bring it within this clause. I fear that the wording of that item might militate against the smaller manufacturer of agricultural implements because if he had to pay a duty of 30 per cent on particular parts of a machine which could not be made in his own factory but could be brought in in quantities, he would be placed in an unfavourable position with regard to the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. PATERSON. The man that is only engaged in assembling the parts we do not consider is doing as much for the country as the man who is making the whole machine in this country. He brings them in here partially manufactured and does not give employment to our own people. It must be distinctly understood that the article must be a part of the machine. You could not bring in a part of the iron and forge that into shape and claim that it was a part of the machine.

Mr. HALL. Here is a point that I would like to have made clear. I can understand that the foreign manufacturer, such as the International Harvesting Company, can bring in their parts from Chicago and the Northwest and put them together in Canada but all the work has been done in the United States. But take a local company, as for example, one in Peterborough, that employs a couple of hundred men, they cannot use the gang-punches and all sorts of drilling machines because their works are not fitted for it, and naturally in order to compete with large manufacturers they require to get in these small parts. The item 'and complete parts,' it struck me, would operate in favour of the large manufacturer who was bringing in repairs made in a foreign country, but would operate unfavourably to the smaller manufacturer who is bringing in certain parts of the machine and paying seventeen and a half per cent duty on them, but which parts require some work in order to complete the machine. Take the cutting bar, for instance, that might come in unpunched, but the knives might require to be placed on them, certain punching might be required to be done, and certain riveting, and this extra work we require to be done on them in order to put them in the machine. It struck me that the words 'complete parts' might militate against the small manufacturer.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. With regard to the valuation of articles, does the department make any difference whether a machine comes into the province of Ontario or whether the like machine comes into the province of Manitoba? In the western States the question of freight is a very important one in arriving at the value of an article. A binder made in the western states would be worth more money than a binder of the same size and class made in the eastern states.

Mr. PATERSON. The value is alike in all cases, no matter in what part of the Dominion the machine enters.

Amend item 447, so as to read—

447. Portable engines with boilers, in combination, horse powers and traction engines, for farm purposes; windstackers, and threshing machine separators, including baggers, weighers and self-feeders therefor and finished parts thereof for repairs: British preferential tariff rate, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff rate, 17½ per cent; general tariff rate, 20 per cent.

Mr. LAKE. In introducing this item in the budget speech, the minister stated that it was proposed to increase the valuation in order to offset the reduction in duty. Now I would like to know how the reduction in duty is going to work out under these circumstances, how much the valuation is to be, proportionately, in order to make that offset. There are certain well known manufacturers, and a certain number of standard threshing machines brought into the country, and I would like to know exactly how these provisions are going to work out with reference to threshers.

Mr. PATERSON. There is a 5 per cent reduction in duty, from 25 to 20 per cent. The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), when he announced that to the public, thought it well to let the public know that while there was that actual reduction in the duty, under a ruling that had just been adopted, or was about to be adopted, as to values, it would not really be a reduction of the cost in threshing machines to the farmer. The question of valuation is one with which the Customs Department are charged, and which it is their duty to review when they consider it necessary to do so. On a review of the valuation placed upon threshing machines just a little before this was being introduced it was determined by the Customs Department that the discounts that had been allowed on threshing machines coming from other countries were larger discounts than the Board of Customs thought they were authorized under the law of the land to admit. The discounts at that time amounted on certain lines to 40 per cent; they are not all equal. The department got the price lists with the discounts that are attached thereto. That is what we have to go by. All the threshing machine makers of the United States have not uniform lists of prices and have not uniform discounts. Each party has to be dealt with according to the prices that he lays down in his price list in reference to the duty. If these threshing machines had not been reduced by 5 per cent at all, if they had remained at 25 per cent, the review of the valuations would necessarily take place by the Customs Department in any case. The law requires that the fair market price attached to the article as sold in the country of production is to be the value for duty in this country. It is a rather intricate question that has to be decided very often by special officers being sent to the manufacturers in the United States who are shipping into the country to get a full and complete understanding of their mode of doing business. If the hon. gentleman asks me: Will a man who buys a threshing machine now under the amended values, and with the duty reduced to 20 per cent, pay more or less?—the judgment of the commissioner is a—and he, of course, is more conversant with it than I am—that the implement will be somewhat cheaper, but not to the extent of 5 per cent on the old valuation.

Mr. LAKE. I have been informed that the increase in valuation will result in this, that they will have to pay duty on a larger value than the goods are actually being sold for in the United States. I do not know whether that is the case or not, or whether the minister has any information in regard to that.

Mr. PATERSON. It would not be right if we were doing that. But the hon. gentleman understands that the peculiar way of doing business in this case makes it very difficult. They have no price. They do not sell to the consumer direct, but they sell through agents.

Mr. LAKE. I understand that the manufacturers have a regular, definite price. What I understand from the minister is that the department allow a certain definite discount off this price in making the valuation of the article?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. Now, I think the minister can tell us, in the case of the few firms which export threshing machines to this country, exactly the amount of the discount that is allowed at the present moment off their published price list. I think that information will be very valuable to the public, and will enable them to know exactly what duty they are to pay.

PRIVATE BILLS.

DOMINION FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Consideration of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 53) respecting the Dominion Fire Insurance Company, was first called.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is this amendment ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The head office of the company is at present at Vancouver, and the amendment is to change it to Toronto.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that all ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes.

Amendment concurred in.

CENTRAL CANADA MANUFACTURERS' MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

On the order :

House in committee on Bill (No. 81) to incorporate the Central Canada Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Mr. MILLER. As Mr. Calvert who has this Bill in charge, is not in the House just now, I would mention that Mr. Heaton, one of the promoters said he would like this Bill to stand as they have some idea of asking permission to withdraw it.

Mr. FIELDING. Let it stand.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA.

On the order :

House in committee on Bill (No. 82) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would ask that this Bill should stand until Monday. There was a difference of opinion in the committee between legal gentlemen as to the necessity of a very important suggested amendment. If it is thought wise to press the Bill now, I will have to take up the time of the committee to show why I think it should stand until Monday.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think there is any objection to its standing.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 72) respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I hope the Minister of Railways will be able to assure the House that the Bill has been carefully revised after the many amendments made in committee, and that the Bill as now presented, is as it passed the committee. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can assure us that it has been carefully revised by some officer representing the department or the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it has been pretty well revised.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If the chairman of the Railway Committee so assures us, I have no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. These amendments simply define the branch lines more definitely than they were defined in the original Bill.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There were some other important amendments, as the Minister of Railways knows.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think they were put in pretty clearly.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If the minister assures us of that I have no objection.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I have on other occasions drawn the attention of the House to the slipshod way in which these Bills were placed before us after passing the committee. Bills like this which have been extensively amended should be reprinted before they are sent back to the House. At present, all I can do is to rely on an indefinite recollection of what happened in committee in regard to this Bill. The Bill should be reprinted before coming back, I think the Minister of Finance has on a former occasion expressed himself in favour of that view.

Mr. McCOOL. This Bill was considered very thoroughly and revised by the special committee. The changes merely put it beyond any question of doubt as to what lines are intended to be extended.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I know that the gentlemen who had this Bill particularly in hand understand it, but there is no good reason why all the members should not have an opportunity of understanding it.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a good deal in what my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) says : This Bill has been very materially changed in the committee, and the members of the committee as a whole are entitled to have placed before them a reprinted copy of the Bill as amended. I quite concur in that suggestion.

Mr. FIELDING. Under the new rules, the Bill would have to be reprinted, and therefore the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) must be carried out.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I hope the Minister of Railways will remember that when Bills are seriously altered in committee they have to be reprinted before being sent back to the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the officers of the House should not place such Bills on the order paper until they have been reprinted and are ready for consideration by the Committee of the Whole. The officers of the House have more time to attend to that than I have.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. All you have to do is to comply with the rule.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was chairman of the subcommittee to which this Bill was referred. We gave close attention to it, and I know that the amendments are of considerable importance. I think we made a proper report, but in the meantime there were only six or eight members on that subcommittee, and the other members of the House have a right to know what the amendments are, as has been properly pointed out by my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson).

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 92) respecting the Grand Valley Railway Company.—Mr. Smith (Oxford).

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.—Mr. McIntyre (Strathcona).

Bill (No. 94) to incorporate the Nipissing Central Railway Company.—Mr. Clarke.

Bill (No. 89) respecting the Crawford Bay and St. Mary's Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

NATIONAL ACCIDENT AND GUARANTEE COMPANY.

On the Order :

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 29) an Act to incorporate the National Accident and Guarantee Company of Canada.—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. LANCASTER. What are these amendments ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It seems to me that whoever is in charge of the Bill ought to be able to make the explanation ?

Mr. MILLER. I think the only change is with regard to the amount of stock a man must hold to entitle him to be a director. The Bill originally provided for ten shares, while the amendment provides for twenty-five.

Mr. LANCASTER. Some one has been kind enough to send me a copy of this Bill, and it seems that the Senate has struck out sections 12 and 13, which are very important :

12. The company may invest any of its funds in accordance with the terms of the Insurance Act and any amendments thereof, and may call in the said investments as occasion requires.

13. The company may invest or deposit such portion of its funds in foreign securities as is necessary for the maintenance of any foreign branch.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the promoter is not here, if there is any objection, the order had better stand.

Order allowed to stand.

QUINZE AND BLANCHE RIVER RAILWAY.

On the Order :

Consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 56) an Act to incorporate the Quinze and Blanche River Railway Company.—Mr. McCool.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amendment ?

Mr. McCOOL. The only change that was made by the Senate was the reinsertion of clause 15 which the Railway Committee of this House struck out. There is no objection to the Bill as it stands. I cannot tell why this clause was struck out in the Railway Committee but some one raised an objection to it. It was reinserted by the Senate, not at the request of the promotors, but because the Senate thought it was necessary to the Bill. It is as follows :

The company and its undertaking shall be subject to such provisions of any general Act now or hereafter passed by the legislatures of the provinces of Ontario or Quebec as provide, in the interest of public health or safety, for the control and regulation of the transmission, distribution or supply of electricity in any form.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not see why that amendment is necessary at all. This was very fully considered by the railway committee, and the clause was purposely eliminated from the Bill. We cannot legislate in any way to affect the powers which the provinces have with respect to public health, and it needs no legislation from this parliament to give effect to any legislation within the jurisdiction of the provinces. It seems to me that this clause is absolutely and entirely unnecessary. It is mere surplusage.

Mr. BERGERON. It cannot do any harm.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a great deal in legislation that cannot do any harm. If it does no good, there is no use of passing it.

Mr. BERGERON. If we do not pass it, the Bill will have to go back to the Senate.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the clause is properly in the Bill. It deals not only with the public health, but with safety for the control and regulation of the transmission, distribution or supply of electricity in any form.'

Mr. EMMERSON. Within the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. LANCASTER. Both parliaments might deal with that matter, which is not exclusively within the jurisdiction of the province. If this parliament chose to intervene it could do so; but if we think the province ought to control in these matters, it seems to me proper to have the clause inserted.

Amendments read the first and the second time and agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again in Committee of Ways and Means.

Item 447:

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. When the House rose this afternoon we were discussing this question of valuation, which is important, not only because it affects the duty, but because of its relationship to the dumping clause. It has been said that it is very difficult to arrive at a proper valuation under this item on account of the absence of invoices and the peculiar manner in which the goods come into the country. In his budget speech, page 315 of the revised 'Hansard,' the hon. the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) referred to the particular article under discussion in the following terms:

Threshing machine outfit, when consisting of traction or portable engine and separator; under the old tariff these articles were dutiable at 25 per cent and we propose to make them 20 per cent. In the case of threshing machines the difficulty has not been so much the duty as the valuation. There has been a difficulty in establishing a proper valuation for that article because it is not sold to the wholesale trade; it passes from the manufacturer through the hands of agents to the consumer. The department has been allowing 40 per cent reduction on the cost price, but the department is rearranging that and increasing the valuation, so that unless there was a reduction in the duty the cost of the article would be increased. That was not desirable because it is a very important item in the northwest so that the change in the valuation will not operate to the disadvantage of the buyer.

There are two prices known to the general public—the wholesale and the retail. There seems to have been no difficulty in arriving at the cost of these articles and after the department arrived at the cost it cut of 40 per cent. What is meant by the cost of the article and why is that cost reduced by 40 per cent?

Mr. PATERSON. It is the cost to the consumer in the United States.

Mr. LAKE. Before the House rose this afternoon, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) made the statement that the net result of the reduction in duty, combined with the increase in valuation, was a slight decrease in the amount of duty which would have to be paid in future by the consumer. I wish to point out that under the dumping clause regulation that is not the net result by any means, but the net result is a large increase in the duty to be paid by the importer. Take a J. I. Case threshing outfit, valued, say $500 for the separator and $1,700 for the engine, or a total of $2,200. I am told that the original valuation by the Customs Department up to within quite recently allowed a discount of 35 per cent on that amount. That is to say, the customs duty had to be paid on a valuation of $1,430 on an outfit which was listed at $2,200. The duty on $1,430 at 25 per cent would be $357.50. The department, as I am informed, has now decreased the amount of discount allowed on a J. I. Case threshing outfit to 20 per cent. That is to say, that same outfit is now valued by the department at $1,760, on which the duty of twenty per cent would amount to $352, or a reduction so far as that goes, of five and a half dollars on the duty. But it must not be forgotten that under the dumping clause the man who, up to the present, has been able to buy that outfit at $1,430 will now have to pay a special duty which in this case will amount to $264. So that whereas formerly on this particular outfit he paid a duty of $357.50, under the new valuation proposed by the Customs Department he will have to pay a duty of $616. I call the attention of the Minister of Customs to this and ask him if it is not a correct statement of the case.

Mr. PATERSON. The dumping duty cannot be applied unless the goods are being brought in at an under valuation of 5 per cent or more.

Mr. LAKE. But the Customs Department makes the valuation.

Mr. PATERSON. The valuation is based on the prices at which the article is sold in the United States.

Mr. LAKE. But how is that arrived at? Entirely by officers of the department?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, after examination of the facts. For instance, on the J. I. Case machine which the hon. gentleman mentions we do not allow as much discount off the price list as in many others. In some the discount is 20 per cent, in some 30 per cent and in some 35 per cent—this last, I believe, being the highest. We had an examination of their price list, and not only that, but had a conference with the representatives of the manufacturers as well. We had the representative of the J. I. Case Company here. I think the basis arrived at is one which they could not successfully controvert as to valuations in the United States, and that is the basis on which we work.

Mr. LAKE. What is the discount allowed now on the list price of the J. I. Case outfit?

Mr. PATERSON. I have not that information before me at the moment.

Mr. LAKE. I am informed that the J. I. Case people allow a discount of 35 per cent to the American jobber and that the Customs Department have reduced that.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think they have jobbers, nor can it be said that they have jobbing prices. They have agents, and they consign to themselves, and put in the machines at figures that we cannot accept. If they dealt with the jobbing trade in the ordinary way and we could find out their jobbing prices in the United States, we would take these as a basis. But, under the circumstances, we have to ascertain what is the proper valuation. If we took it the other way it would bear harder on the farmers of the Northwest. Suppose we were to take the price at which they sell the implement to the customers in the United States and take 20 per cent off that and make that figure the basis for customs taxation—twenty per cent is more than they allow, and for that we have the testimony of the member of the House who acts as agent for them.

Mr. LAKE. I understand the minister admits that the department are not able to ascertain with certainty the actual price at which the manufacturers sell to their customers in the United States? That leaves the matter in the hands of his officers to bring it out as nearly as they can. If the officer puts the valuation a little higher, it means that the consumer has to pay a much higher duty than he would otherwise pay. I think that the example that I stated just now, shows an enormous increase in the customs valuation, which, I consider, would result in an excessively high duty to be paid by the consumers in this country.

Mr. PATERSON. That is assuming that the Customs Department would act arbitrarily and advance the value without reason. That would be improper, and we could not do it.

Mr. LAKE. I do not suggest that the officer would deliberately act in an arbitrary manner. But I think they are likely to err on the safe side and in favour of the revenues of the department.

Mr. PATERSON. No, our way is to interpret the law as liberally to the importer as we can. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) will understand that these are difficult questions to deal with owing to the different discounts on the various makes of these implements and the variation from time to time in the process. Since the tariff was introduced representatives of these firms have been in Ottawa, and the discounts allowed by the board of customs, I consider, about right in each case as between themselves. The question of under-valuation is not confined to this class of goods. It is our duty to raise the valuation if the goods are sold in this country at lower rates than in the country from which they come. Now, with reference to reapers and binders these prices vary, I think, about once a year. My hon. friend (Mr. Lake) mentioned a case in which the answer brought down showed that the valuation for duty of binders varied from year to year. It was $95 and went up to $102. But the hon. gentleman may remember that there was a wonderful advance in steel and a new valuation had to be made. Another change took place in prices of steel, and our officers went to the headquarters of these firms and reached a determination of the proper valuation for customs purposes on entering Canada. Of course, we cannot ascertain the discount and allow it to remain for all time, because the changes in conditions bring changes in the price-lists and we have to review the situation, and, to that end, we have to make inquiries. I think there is no danger that anything unfair will be done. I have thought that perhaps the better way would be to take the price-lists of these firms showing prices at which they sell to the farmer in the United States. Take that actual price-list and take 20 per cent off for commission, and when he sells that article it means 25 per cent added, that would be 25 per cent profit for the man who sold it. If we did that I think our farmers would pay more than they pay now. We have the testimony of a member of this House who acts as their agent and he says they got only 10 per cent. But if we were to take 20 per cent as a commission, I think the present arrangement is better for our importer than that would be.

Mr. LAKE. When the hon. gentleman is bringing down the information asked for by the leader of the opposition, would he be kind enough to give us a statement of the amount of discount allowed previous to this last arrangement, and the amount of discount allowed under this new arrangement, on all classes of threshing outfits which are brought into this country?

Mr. FIELDING. I did state that that information would be brought down, and I hope we shall be able to bring it down. But how far we are able to bring down information given in fixing the values of invoices is a question. It may be that we will find that the information came to us in a way that we might not be free to use it. I merely put myself on guard there.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. I think the minister could arrive at the values a great deal nearer than by taking the price at which the goods are sold to the farmer. In every instance these companies sign a contract with their agent, in which he is allowed a net cash price. That is equivalent to the wholesale price on any other class of goods. The hon. gentleman can arrive at the actual value of the goods turned out by these manufacturing concerns by sending over to their wholesale houses in Ottawa, and he can get the contract they sign with their agents, and settle the matter in ten minutes with regard to the great bulk of the goods of this class coming into Canada. The same practice prevails in the United States. I have in my hand a contract made by a wholesale manufacturing concern there with their agent, and the same conditions are found in it. There might be a question of freight to determine between the United States manufacturer and the point where the goods are laid down to the agent here. But there is a net cash price to the agent in every contract that is made. Once that price is determined for any given year, the contract stands for twelve months. I do not think the question of arriving at a valuation is a very serious one if it is gone about in a business-like way.

Mr. LAKE. I would like some information in regard to the wording of this clause. I see it states 'portable engines, with boilers in combination, horse-powers and traction engines, for farm purposes.' What is the exact meaning of that language? I would like also to ask the minister whether it is proposed to allow gasoline engines to come in when portable and used for threshing purposes? A number of them are used in the Northwest now.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no distinction between steam and gasoline. I think, under the words used there, the gasoline engines forming part of a threshing outfit would be all right.

Mr. LAKE. I want to know what the words 'in combination' mean?

Mr. PATERSON. Has the gasoline engine a boiler connected with it?

Mr. LAKE. No. I think they should come in under this heading, specifying gasoline engines when used for threshing purposes.

Mr. PATERSON. Gasoline engines are used for many other purposes, but we confine it to portable engines with boilers for farming purposes.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. In two years all the grain in the west will be cut with gasoline engines attached to the mowers and reapers.

Mr. LAKE. Where do gasoline engines come in under this tariff?

Mr. PATERSON. Under the general item, 27½.

Mr. LAKE. Then when a man imports a threshing outfit, if the engine is a gasoline engine, he would have to pay 27½ per cent?

Mr. PATERSON. On that part, yes.

448. Hay loaders, potato diggers, horse powers, separators, n.o.p., windstackers, fodder or feed cutters, grain crushers, fanning mills, hay tedders, farm, road or field rollers, post hole diggers, snaths and other agricultural implements, n.o.p., 15 per cent, 22½ per cent, 25 per cent.

Insert a 'semicolon' after the words 'horse powers' and after the word 'snaths.' Strike out the words 'horse powers, separators, n.o.p., windstackers.'

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs, with regard to item 449, whether the Canadian market is entirely supplied by the Canadian manufacturers with axes, scythes, sickles and goods of that kind, or whether there is much importation of those articles?

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a large exportation of them.

Mr. FIELDING. Strike out the words 'separators and windstackers'.

Mr. LAKE. In the first notice of motion it says 'horse-powers, separators n. o. p., windstackers,' &c.

Mr. FIELDING. In the printed copy I have it says:

Strike out the words 'horse powers, separators, n.o.p., windstackers.'

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). The item will read in this way:

Hay loaders, potato diggers, fodder or feed cutters, grain crushers, fanning mills, hay tedders, farm, road or field rollers, post hole diggers, snaths and other agricultural implements, n.o.p.

Mr. LAKE. It seems to me that horse-powers have been inserted in 447; have they not? They appear in two separate items now under different rates of duty.

Mr. FIELDING. Item 447 includes 'horse-powers and traction engines for farm purposes'. It is limited to a particular purpose there.

Mr. PATERSON. They will not come in at as low a rate for other purposes.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman asks about axes, scythes, &c.

Mr. PATERSON. $8,000 worth of axes came in and about $2,000 worth of scythes.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many went out?

Mr. PATERSON. Of spades, shovels and forks, $13,000 worth came in. I do not suppose the exports are very large. The trade is very largely with ourselves.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice that the minister has reduced the duty one half per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. And that the American duty is 45 per cent on the same articles.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, but the manufacturers get their steel free and it was considered that it was time to bring this duty down a little. They are stronger and we thought that they were able to bear it.

Mr. DANIEL. Of course, if the Canadian manufacturer holds the market or more than holds it that might be a fair reason for reducing the duty.

Mr. PATERSON. He does; $8,000 is nothing comparatively.

451a. Stove urns of metal; and dovetails, chaplets and hinge tubes of tin for use in the manufacture of stoves, 5 per cent, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a new item. These articles are not made in Canada. They are given a low rate of duty to assist the stove maker.

460. Sundry articles of metal as follows, when for use exclusively in mining or metallurgical operations, viz.:—Diamond drills, not including the motor power; coal cutting machines, except percussion coal cutters; coal heading machines; coal augers; rotary coal drills; core drills; miners' safety lamps and parts thereof, also accessories for cleaning, filling and testing such lamps; electric or magnetic machines for separating or concentrating iron ores; blast furnaces for the smelting of copper and nickel; converting apparatus for metallurgical processes in iron or copper; copper plates, plated or not; machinery for extraction of precious metals by the chlorination or cyanide processes; amalgam safes; automatic ore samplers; automatic feeders; retorts; mercury pumps; pyrometers; bullion furnaces; amalgam cleaners; blast furnace blowing engines; wrought iron tubing, butt or lap welded, threaded or coupled or not, over four inches in diameter; and integral parts of all machinery mentioned in this item, free.

Amended item.—After the words 'processes in' strike out the words 'iron or copper' and insert the word 'metals.'

Mr. FIELDING. In item 460, instead of the words 'blast furnaces for the smelting of copper and nickel' I propose to substitute the words 'furnaces for the smelting of copper, zinc and nickel ores.' There are furnaces now which are not blast furnaces. There is the modern electric furnace and we want to adapt the wording of the tariff in that respect, and to include the smelting of zinc ores as well as copper and nickel.

461a. Iron or steel pipe not butt or lap welded, and wire bound wooden pipe, not less than 30 inches internal diameter, when for use exclusively in alluvial gold mining, 5 per cent, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent.

This is a new item given to assist alluvial mining in the Yukon.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to item 461.

Machinery and appliances of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and elevators and machinery of floating dredges, when for use exclusively in alluvial gold mining, free.

Dredging for gold has become an important industry in the Yukon and these machines are not made in Canada. In order to place a requisition for them with the manufacturers in the United States where they all come from, the people who want them find that they have to place an order for the whole machine in order to get delivery at a given time. If they have to get a portion of the machinery in Canada and a portion in the United States the people who can supply the greater portion will not take the order.

Mr. PATERSON. This would let in every thing except the power.

Mr. THOMPSON. Possibly; but in some cases the power is placed upon the hull of the dredge. In other cases it is placed upon the shore of the pit in which the dredge works and power is transmitted by wire from the power plant to the dredge. This is one of the best industries in the territory that I have the honour to represent, parliament has that industry in the hollow of its hand and I would like to have that restriction removed for at least a few years. The government have met my request to a very large degree by opening the gate so that this machinery can come in. If they could further remove that restriction it would be a great assistance to that industry. I will leave it to the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you mean to confine it to the floating dredge or do you mean the power to be established on the land ?

Mr. THOMPSON. According to the construction I put upon it at the present time it does cover the power if the power is placed upon the dredge.

Mr. PATERSON. It will not cover plants upon the land producing electricity to work the dredge but if they were part of the dredge they would come in free.

Mr. THOMPSON. Could it be considered to mean a power plant if the plant were placed upon the shore and the plant was for alluvial mining ?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. FIELDING. I ask the committee to return to item 79 for reconsideration. We made an amendment in that item, but I find we have put the newly added words in the wrong place. I move that the words 'rose stock and other stock for grafting' be inserted after the word 'lilac' and that the words 'rose stock' be struck out where they were added, making the item read :

Florist stock, viz.: azaleas, rhododendrons, pot grown lilacs, rose stock and other stock for grafting, araucarias, bulbs, corms, tubers, rhizomes and dormant roots, n.o.p.; seedling stock for grafting, viz.: plum, pear, peach and other fruit trees, free, free, free.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. How about item 407 ? This item reads :

Wire, single or several, covered with cotton, linen, silk, rubber or other material, including cable so covered, n.o.p., 20 per cent, 27½ per cent, 30 per cent.

I have here representations from the manufacturers of these goods. This wire is used in making hats and bonnets. They say that, owing to the higher wages paid here and the customs duty on raw material, it is impossible to compete with the old country prices under the preference. The duty on the wire is 20 per cent. The duty on the cotton yarn 20 to 25 per cent and on silk floss 25 per cent and on boxes 35 per cent, on which, of course, the importers get the benefit of the preference. The changes that these people asked for and that they thought would be granted have not been granted. They say that this is a new industry in Canada that in this department they employed twenty-five hands, but will have to close down indefinitely if they do not get more encouragement from the tariff. The preferential duty on the silk floss and cotton yarn will be 17½ per cent, and as the duty on the finished product is only 20 per cent they have a margin of protection of 2½ per cent, and they say that under the tariff as it was they had a margin of 5 per cent. They have a letter from the secretary of the Tariff Commissioners, that their case would be looked into, but the change that they asked for has not been made.

Mr. PATERSON. We went fully into the hat and cap business, and these people will be in a better position than before.

Mr. FOSTER. But this is not a hat or cap manufacture but a manufacture of wire used in making hats or bonnets.

Mr. FIELDING. Their rate has not been reduced. There must be some misapprehension.

Mr. FOSTER. Has there been any increase on the duty of the silk floss which they use to cover this millinery wire ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The general rate is all right ; it is the preferential that hurts them.

Mr. PATERSON. This would affect a good many engaged in other lines. Where are these goods made ?

Mr. FOSTER. These makers are in Toronto.

Mr. FIELDING. I see we have increased the duty on materials. They are in no worse position than they were before.

Mr. FOSTER. Look at 579, which includes silk floss at 17½ per cent for the preferential. The protection they have on the wires when finished is 20 per cent. Now, have you not raised that preferential duty 2½ per cent on silk floss?

Mr. FIELDING. It is possible some portions of these were unenumerated.

Mr. FOSTER. You have not given them any advance on the finished article, but you have added to the duty upon the raw material.

Mr. FIELDING. It is only on one of their raw materials; it is only a small percentage of their goods.

Mr. FOSTER. The direct result of the change has been that on the floss they will use there has already been notified to them an advance in the price consequent upon the duty. Now, you allow Canadian yarns in free for the manufacture of shoe laces and they raise the question very pertinently why you should not allow floss in free for the manufacture of these millinery wires.

Mr. PATERSON. It is a difficult matter to get a perfectly straight edge on the tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. Before the matter is finally through with, we will look over it again.

Mr. PATERSON. In reference to item 135a of the Act regarding beet sugar, it has occurred to the commissioner whether, under the conditions that sugar may be brought in from Belguim or France, the dumping duty would not apply. Beet sugar is produced in Canada, and if it was sold lower coming into this country it might be subject to the dumping duty, which would nullify altogether the article. He suggests for safety to add to that clause:

Provided that sugar imported under this item shall not be subject to special duty.

That is the dumping duty. It seems to me it is a proviso that only secures that the sugar should come at such prices as will exempt it from the special duty.

Schedule 'B'—Goods subject to drawback for home consumption.

1001. Oil, fuel and other articles not machinery when entering into the cost of binder twine manufactured in Canada, drawback, 99 per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to have the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) explain what the regulations are going to be in reference to these items in schedule B. You have changed the amount of the drawback from 95 to 99 per cent. I know some large manufacturing industries which, if they have to pay the full duty and get the drawback when the goods are manufactured, will be obliged to lock up large amounts of capital. Take, for instance, the spring and axle works at Gananoque; they import very largely their year's supply in the fall and get it delivered by barge. It comes to a very large sum of money. They pay the duty, but do not get the drawback until the goods are manufactured. The goods they import cannot be used for any other purpose than for springs and axles; unless some satisfactory arrangement can be made by which they can make an entry, pay the duty, put in a declaration that the goods will not be used for any other purpose and then get their money back they will be locking up thousands and thousands of dollars. I would like to have the minister explain how he purposes giving these drawbacks.

Mr. FIELDING. The principle governing the matter and the line we try to draw is this. If we desired to make an article free for a certain purpose, and it could only be used for that purpose, then we would put it straight on the free list; but if it could be used for the purpose as to which we did wish to make it free and it could be used for other purposes for which we did not wish to make it free, we would deal with it by way of a drawback, practically giving back all the duty upon evidence being furnished that it had been used for the particular purpose for which we wished to give it free. I think that will be regarded by the committee as a reasonable arrangement, and that it is necessary to guard against the abuse of the privilege, because if an article is admitted free for one purpose and it is afterwards used for another purpose, the intention of parliament will be defeated. In regard to steel for springs and axles, my hon. friend says that it cannot be used for any other purpose. If we were free to agree with him upon that, I would say at once that it should be put on the free list, but we were advised that it could be used for other purposes, and that there was danger of the privilege being abused. It is for that reason that we made this subject to drawback and did not make it free.

Mr. TAYLOR. In so far as steel for making springs is concerned, of course it might be put into bars to make pins for fastening logs together, or something of that kind, and so could axle steel, but it is not done. It could be used for another purpose, but I think an arrangement might be made whereby the importers would make an affidavit stating that it would not be used for any other purpose.

Mr. PATERSON. They do that now; they have always done that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know it is going to be a great hardship for these people, because it cannot be used for any other purpose to any advantage. Rather than use it for any other purpose, they would use iron in place of steel. Any manufacturer who knows the purpose that spring steel is used for knows that it would be used for no other purpose than for making springs for carriages, and the same would apply to axle steel. It is made up especially as to sizes, and it is used for that purpose only. It means thousands and thousands of dollars of their capital being locked up until the goods are manufactured, and it would be a great hardship to them unless some arrangement can be made by which it can be allowed to remain in bond until they are ready to use it.

Mr. PATERSON. We will allow it to remain in bond.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is no place to bond it except in their shed.

Mr. PATERSON. It will have to go into a bonded warehouse.

Mr. TAYLOR. They have no bonded warehouse to put it in.

Mr. DANIEL. I have the same complaint to make on behalf of the manufacturers of edge tools, cutlery, files, augers, etc., in regard to the steel that is imported for that purpose. These people have to import in large quantities, and the consequence is that before they get their drawback they lose a large amount in interest on the money which they are obliged to pay to customs duties. It is a very great hardship for them. I am informed that the steel which is used for this purpose is unsuitable for almost everything else. The exact words I have here are these:

On account of the fact that material used for edge tools is suitable for almost nothing else and as almost all of these are included in the drawback clause, the government will suffer no loss in working it out in that way.

That is in allowing the importer to pay 5 per cent on the steel imported, instead of paying the whole duty and then getting a drawback many months afterwards, perhaps of 99 per cent. It appears to me that the government, under these circumstances, will be likely to suffer no loss, and if they could arrange it in that way, or, as the Minister of Finance said, make it free altogether, it would relieve these people of a very considerable loss and allow them to transact their business with the government very much more satisfactorily, and the government would suffer no loss of revenue. I think that perhaps the minister might give some other reason for continuing the burdensome arrangement than that already given.

Mr. TAYLOR. I might just add, before the minister replies, that if an arrangement could be made by the Customs Department with manufacturers who are manufacturers exclusively of the goods to bond these goods in their own warehouses, it might be a relief. I am satisfied, and perhaps the minister is too, that the revenue has been defrauded by some persons who are both manufacturers and hardware merchants, and who can import these goods for the purpose of manufacturing them and then sell them out to the trade. But where a manufacturer is exclusively a manufacturer, if an arrangement could be made that a bonded warehouse could be made of his yard, and not force him to put up the duty that the tariff calls for, it would be a relief. Some satisfactory arrangement ought to be made in a case of this kind.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sure the Department of Customs would be only too happy to facilitate any arrangement that was reasonably possible in regard to the bonding of goods. This is so much a matter of administration that I would not care to offer any opinion of my own. The question is as to whether or not these goods can be used for other purposes. The hon. gentleman will see that the Customs Department have no earthly interest in creating this drawback system. It is a great bother to them. It would simplify their work very much if we would put these goods on the free list and be done with it.

Mr. BERGERON. And a great bother to the trade also.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Was not this item on the free list before?

Mr. FIELDING. It was claimed that in regard to a number of these items which were free for certain limited purposes, the privilege was abused and they were used for other purposes and would come into illegitimate competition in that way. To guard against these abuses, the drawback system was adopted. In cases where the article imported can only be used for the purpose for which it is admitted free, it is not put on the drawback schedule. The drawback system is a great trouble to the department, and it is only introduced in cases where the experience of the department has shown it to be necessary to guard against abuse. I am sure the Minister of Customs and his commissioner would be only too happy to make any reasonable arrangement to carry out the suggestion of the hon. gentleman with regard to bonding goods, always provided we can have the safeguards which are necessary for the protection of the public.

Machinery imported after the first of July, 1906, and prior to first of July, 1908, and other articles not machinery. When entering into the cost of tinplate, &c., manufactured in Canada, 99 per cent drawback.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you mean by the word 'prior?'

Mr. PATERSON. The tinplate industry which is being started at Morrisburg had some machinery imported before the tariff was brought down on which they paid duty. This will make that machinery free, and if the duty was paid, of course they will get a refund.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the minister does not care to give the history of the negotiations.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, yes. We did not see our way clear to give them a duty on tin, but we think no industry is injured by doing what we now propose.

Mr. BRODER. This industry is in the town I live in and I know considerable about its inception and progress. The outlay up to the present is about $250,000 and they are only proposing to manufacture things that are not now manufactured at all in this country. Their intention is to manufacture terneplate, tinplate, Canada plate, and steel sheets, plain and galvanized. What will be the effect of the 14 gauge limitation in the item?

Mr. PATERSON. Stouter than stovepipe.

Mr. BRODER. They are proposing to make steel sheets that would enter into the manufacture of steel ranges; would this 14 gauge preclude them?

Mr. PATERSON. We cannot give them a drawback on an article which is made by others.

Mr. BRODER. I have been informed by the president of the company that none of the things which they propose manufacturing are now made in Canada at all.

Mr. PATERSON. We think we have covered this in the wording of the item. If we make it as broad as the hon. gentleman suggests they would be getting free what others have to pay duty on.

Mr. BRODER. They would only be getting their material free, out of which they would manufacture these different articles. The steel plates can be made into tinplate in the United States and England and come in free, whereas if these gentlemen had to buy the steel plates they would pay a duty of $7 from the United States and $4.25 from England.

Mr. FIELDING. We are relieving them on that score.

Mr. BRODER. Very well.

Malleable iron castings, and pig iron. When used in the manufacture of mowing machines, reapers, harvesters, binders and attachments for binders, 99 per cent drawback.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister tell me how much pig iron will be used under this clause? It is important we should know that.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you mean on each machine?

Mr. FOSTER. How much pig iron do they use in each machine and how much will this be in the aggregate? I want to know the total amount that will probably be deducted from the production of the country by letting this in free.

Mr. FIELDING. The drawback on a six-foot binder is estimated as follows: 300 pounds of pig iron, 37 cents; 500 pounds of rolled steel, $1.73; total, $2.10. Then we put in a saving of 225 pounds malleable at ¾ of a cent per pound, and the reduction of duty from 20 to 17½, 21 cents; making $2.31, which is the estimated concession in this respect to the makers of binders. The reduction of duty from 20 to 17½ per cent on a six-foot binder valued at $97 would be $2.42, so that the concession is estimated to be if anything a little less than the difference.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the farmer get his binder for $2.42 less?

Mr. FIELDING. The farmer who imports an American binder will pay the American price plus the lesser duty.

Mr. BERGERON. The Canadian manufacturer will sell at the same price as the American.

Mr. BRODER.

Mr. FIELDING. I presume so; that is what the manufacturer generally does.

Mr. BERGERON. And it won't make much difference to the farmer.

Mr. FIELDING. Just to the extent of the difference in duty, no more.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister imagine that the farmer will get his binder 50 cents cheaper on account of this?

Mr. FIELDING. Surely.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the Minister of Finance that he will not get it one cent cheaper.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has a curious method of arguing; if any duty is increased which to him does not seem agreeable, he immediately tells us of the dreadful effects of this increased taxation, but when the duty is reduced my hon. friend thinks that no one gets the benefit of it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister of Finance is entirely astray, because I have not undertaken to make such an argument before this House for a long time. Where the duty is reduced to a trifling extent, it does not make much difference in the price one way or the other. The farmer will not get the machine any cheaper. If there were a large reduction in the duty, he would get it somewhat cheaper; but a small reduction is usually taken up by the trade.

Mr. FIELDING. A reduction of $2.50 on one item is not small.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. I am in a position to say that the manufacturers have not reduced the price of binders, or other machines to the trade to the extent of five cents, in consequence of the reduction of duty.

Mr. FIELDING. Then they are foolish to pay the price if they can bring them from the United States that much cheaper.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. The price is the same, because there is a combine, and it is the same thing whether they buy them in Canada or in the United States.

Mr. BERGERON. This is no longer an infant industry that should be fed. I think it is time that it stood by itself.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has given the amount of pig iron and steel used in a six-foot binder. What I want is the total amount of pig iron and steel approximately that will come under this heading in one year.

Mr. PATERSON. We cannot tell the tonnage.

Mr. FOSTER. You ought to know just about the number of machines manufactured last year, and the number that will probably be manufactured this year, and then it is simply a piece of multiplication. The House does not know what it is conceding when you simply say that in the machine there will be used 500 pounds of the one and 300 pounds of the other. What we want to get at is the total number of tons of these materials that will come under the drawback in virtue of this clause.

Mr. FIELDING. If it is reasonably accessible, we would like to get it.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount of malleable iron castings that would go into a six foot binder ?

Mr. FIELDING. 225 pounds.

Item 1007. Flat spring steel, steel billets and steel axle bars, when used in the manufacture of springs and axles for vehicles other than railway or tramway vehicles, drawback, 95 per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR. Am I to understand that the minister will make an arrangement with the manufacturers at Gananoque to allow them to store these materials in bond ?

Mr. PATERSON. We shall be glad to make any arrangement that will not affect the revenue. The goods will be under customs lock and key, and they will have access to them only under the supervision of one of our officers.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is impossible, because they will have to haul them into a yard and pile them there. It only means locking up a large amount of money.

Mr. FIELDING. You will have to trust the minister.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman must remember that these people are protected to the extent of 35 per cent, and they ought to be willing to bear the interest on the amount of the duty from the time the goods come in until they get the drawback. But we will try to meet them without any loss to the revenue or damage in any other way.

Mr. TAYLOR. They will give you any amount of bond, if you require it.

Mr. PATERSON. If the goods are in bond, they will only take out a certain amount at a time. If they take out a month's axles, they will get their money back on that amount.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say is that the minister is storing up an immense amount of trouble and complication for himself. Whenever an article can be put on the free list, I would think it would be better to put it there.

Mr. PATERSON. As far as the minister and the department are concerned, the hon. genteman is perfectly right.

Mr. FOSTER. The expenses will be large also.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, we shall require more officers and have more work altogether. Would the hon. gentleman say we should not do this ? We have had of course complaints, but I do not want to make any allusions to the particulars of these complaints. The trade however complain that these free items for special purposes have been abused, and the only way we can keep track of them is to collect the duty. When a free entry was made, the proprietors would declare that these articles were to be used for that purpose, and no doubt they would make that declaration honestly, but people in other lines had the impression that the thing was abused. You may be sure that we are not doing this with the view of easing the work of the department, because this will entail a good deal of labour and expenditure.

Steel, when used in the manufacture of cutlery, files, augers, auger bits, hammers, axes, hatchets, scythes, reaping hooks, hoes, hay or straw knives, agricultural forks, hand rakes, skates, stove trimmings, bicycle chain and windmills, 95 per cent.

Mr. CROCKET. We have in St. Mary's, N.B., a very important manufactory of cant dogs and peevies. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will remember that I waited on him before the revision of the tariff, when this item was on the free list, and called his attention to the request made by this concern that cant dogs and peevies be included in the items here enumerated. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was not able to state any reason why they should be excluded. I think also the matter was brought to his attention when he was in Fredericton with the Tariff Commission, by an officer of this company. I would ask him whether these cant dogs and peevies could not be included among the articles specified in this item? I presume that the reason for giving this drawback is to encourage the manufacture of these goods in Canada, and I cannot see why the same encouragement should not be given to an industry such as we have at St. Mary's. It is a very important establishment, one, I think but two or three similar factories in the Dominion.

Mr. FIELDING. The duty on this finished article is higher than in some of these others, and therefore that industry is, in that respect, in a better position. Axes are charged 22½ per cent and peevies 30 per cent, so that there is a substantial advantage to the manufacturer of the latter. That in itself is a reason for this distinction.

Mr. DANIEL. The manufacturer of axes and the importer of this steel is put to rather greater disadvantage in this new tariff than some of the other gentlemen with whom we have been dealing. The duty on their products has been reduced and their raw material has been taken out of the free list and put in schedule B under this drawback. I presume that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), from the fact of his putting this steel into schedule B and giving it a drawback, must have received some information to the effect that this steel, while imported for the purpose of making edged tools, has been used for other purposes. I have not heard him say that he has received such information.

Mr. PATERSON. It could be; I only said it could be.

Mr. DANIEL. What would be more to the point would be information as to whether it has been or not, more especially as these gentlemen have to make affidavits to the fact. The information I have is that it is almost impossible to use this kind of material for other purposes, except for the purpose of making these cutting instruments. Perhaps the minister would reconsider this item and put it, where it was before, on the free-list, especially as the drawback amounts to 99 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. That would be to go back to the old tariff and wipe out schedule B altogether. But this was done after consideration and representation from the trade generally. It would be invidious for me to mention any names or make any particular charges. I can only say that there were complaints—I am not saying that they were well-founded, but no doubt they were made in good faith—that this free entry was being abused. That was no doubt due to errors and mistakes, but there were cases in which we had to impose penalties. Suspicion was aroused that the abuse had gone to a far greater extent than we discovered; and I thought it was only reasonable, if people were getting the concession of free material—chargeable with a rate of duty of 22½ per cent—which gave them that amount of protection over all the material they bought, they ought to be willing to be out of the sum of money paid to customs, from the time of making their entry until they got their drawback. We shall try and give them their drawback as early as we can, and will not make them wait a year. As they turn out their product, and send us a statement which can be checked, we propose to give them their drawbacks. From the departmental standpoint, it is true, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said, that this will entail a lot of work on the Customs Department, and, from that point of view, I would rather have the old system.

Mr. CROCKET. I do not think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) can have given the true reason for the exclusion of peevies and cant dogs from this item. He suggested that it was because these articles were more highly protected than the articles mentioned in the list.

Mr. FIELDING. I gave axes as an illustration.

Mr. CROCKET. I would call attention to the fact that skates, the steel for the manufacture of which is mentioned in this item, bears a duty of 35 per cent, or 5 per cent higher than the duty on cant dogs and peevies. So that the reason he has suggested does not appear to be the true or a good reason to assign for the exclusion of cant dogs and peevies from this item.

Mr. FIELDING. Skates are a very much more advanced product of the steel industry than peevies and cant dogs.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister is not prepared——

Mr. FIELDING. I am not persuaded.

1010. Cloths, of wool, cotton, silk, ramie or unions, fifty inches or over in width and weighing not more than seven ounces per square yard, rubbered, not rubbered or made waterproof—When used in the manufacture of mackintosh clothing, 50 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that on the free list?

Mr. FIELDING. The duty is 15 per cent and we propose to give them one half off, which leaves them about where they were.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these cloths made in this country?

Mr. FIELDING. Some of the cottons probably are, but not the silks. Substantially, this is no change—they get the old concession in another form.

1013. Fabrics of silk and satin, embroidered or embossed chiffon, casket gimps and fringe—When used in the manufacture of burial caskets and burial robes, 65 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. Under an order in council passed in January 7, 1905, the duty was reduced on the following articles when imported by the manufacturers of burial caskets and burial robes for use in their own factories:

Casket gimps and fringes, and embroidered or embossed chiffon—the rate to be reduced from 35 per cent to 10 per cent; silk cloth, including satin, the rate to be reduced from 30 per cent to 10 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the government power to refuse a duty?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I knew it had power to put an article on the free list.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we called attention in a previous session to the fact that the power to make free seemed to involve the power to reduce the duty. There might be cases in which we would not want to give up the whole duty, but might wish to reduce it. That is allowed under the present law.

Mr. FOSTER. How long is it since that was done ?

Mr. FIELDING. This order in council to which I have just referred was passed in 1905. The change was some time before that.

Mr. FOSTER. My recollection is that the principle upon which governments have acted is that they had a right by order in council to repeal a duty, but they had no right to vary. What the minister says is all news to me—that the government, sitting in council, has the power to vary duties. It is quite true that the power to take off a duty altogether argues the power to reduce it. But I do not think that was ever contemplated in the law.

Mr. FIELDING. I feel sure we got the authority of parliament for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the minister to tell me where it is.

Mr. FIELDING. I remember distinctly bringing the matter before the House. It seems to me that if we had the power to give a man a dollar we ought to have the power to give him fifty cents. I do not think the matter admits of any doubt. There might be cases in which manufacturers would show that they would be able to advance their industry if we would reduce the duty. This we might be willing to grant and yet not be willing to grant the abolition of the duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the power ?

Mr. FIELDING. As I say, I have a distinct recollection of having brought the matter before parliament and having carried it. I find that it was in 1903—section 13 of the amendment of the Customs Act of that year. By it the government received power to make regulations to reduce the duties on all articles, whether natural products or products of manufacture, used as materials in Canadian manufactures.

Mr. FOSTER. You have not made a law to enable you to raise a duty ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be the next step.

Mr. FIELDING. That will have to come under a government not so mindful of constitutional safeguards as the present one.

Mr. CROCKET. You are taking that power under the present tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Crocket), by a forced construction of the law, made it so appear.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister said that this was equivalent to a duty of 10 per cent on these articles ?

Mr. FIELDING. We aim to leave them in the same condition as before.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be simpler, and easier and better to put on a duty of 10 per cent, instead of compelling them to pay it and then applying for a drawback.

Mr. FIELDING. We have been discussing that for some time. But that way of doing it is apt to lead to an abuse of the law by the importation of the articles under the low rate of duty for another purpose.

1015. Rolled angles of iron or steel, nine and ten gauge, not over one and one-half inches wide—when used in the manufacture of bedsteads, 99 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. That was free before.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these articles made in this country ?

Mr. FIELDING. A small quantity is made in Canada.

1019. Bituminous coal, subject to drawback when imported by proprietors of smelting works and converted at the works into coke for the smelting of metals from ores, portion of duty payable at drawback, 99 per cent.

Mr. BOYCE. Does that meet the request of the steel companies?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. The principle is that as coke is free it would seem only reasonable that the material out of which coke is made should be free. Any thing touching the coal duties naturally arouses suspicion on the part of the coal mining community. If we take the concrete case of the Sault Ste. Marie operations, we can see the reason for this item. Coke is brought in from the United States for smelting operations at the large Sault Ste. Marie works because coal would have to pay a duty, they could not bring in coal to make their own coke. We thought it only reasonable that as coke was brought in free, if they saw fit to bring coal in and establish a coking plant on the Canadian side, there would be no injury to the coal mining interest anywhere, and there would be that much additional labour established on the Canadian side rather than on the American side.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister made any calculation as to what duty he is going to lose?

Mr. FIELDING. We do not lose any. At present coal does not come in free, but the coke comes in free. They bring in coke from the American side because they say that while the duty on coal remains it won't pay them to make coke in Canada, and they bring it in. In Nova Scotia they make the coke, also in the west.

Mr. BOYCE. They use 500 tons of coke a day at Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. FIELDING. When this thing was first proposed the coal interests looked upon it with suspicion, and I have sufficient appreciation of the value of the coal mining industry to be mindful of it, but I am satisfied that in this instance we simply transfer the making of coke from the United States to the Canadian side of the Soo, and that is a very desirable object.

Mr. FOSTER. How would it do to make coke dutiable now?

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman had set us an example like that we might have attempted to follow it.

Mr. PATERSON. 480,000 tons of it came in. We should get the making of a large part of that in our own country.

1014. Nickel, nickel silver and German silver, in bars, rods, strips, sheets and plates, subject to drawback when used in the manufacture of spoons and cutlery, portion of duty payable, 65 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the item on which the member for North Toronto (Mr Foster) asked for some information in regard to glass. We are going to give them a lower rate, give them back a part of the duty.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what you call the raw plate glass.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, a half manufactured article which is partly finished in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to ask the minister if, when they were going around the country getting information in regard to the question of duty on these various lines, they made any inquiry to ascertain whether parties engaged in this line were in combination with the understanding that they should all sell alike?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, that was very often a subject of inquiry.

Mr. SPROULE. What information did you get in regard to glass?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not recollect that it was alleged before us that there was any combination in glass. There were some complaints as to the British glass manufacturers not being willing to sell generally in Canada, but only through certain specified agents, which some persons objected to. But I do not think there was any complaint of a combination.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that a traveller would only sell for certain houses; the glass must be purchased through certain houses, and it was all one price. The information was given to me that a travelling agent stated that the trade do their business only through certain channels; that no matter where you purchased plate glass you have to pay the same price. Some time ago I know that statement was made by a travelling agent who was selling, I think, for the Pilkington house in England. There is no other conclusion than that there was an understanding in the trade somewhere or other, that either certain houses would handle the trade in that line, or that there was an understanding in regard to the wholesale price, no matter who sold it.

Mr. PATERSON. We do not make that in Canada. That question did come up; it was charged that an English firm would not sell except through its own agents, and there was quite an argument in our presence that lasted until after midnight, one affirming one thing and another affirming another thing, and finally the Pilkington agent, to prove that he would sell agreed to take any order right there and then from this man who was complaining that he could not buy from them.

Mr. SPROULE. It was contended that the glass all came in from one company but was manufactured in different countries, and no matter what country it came from you paid the same price for it. That led to the inference that there must be some understanding among the people who handled it here as to what price it should be sold at. The traveller would have no hesitancy in the world in telling you that it does not make any difference; that you might as well take it from him because you cannot do any better. If you send to Toronto or Montreal you have to pay the same price. The traveller will say: You might as well place your order now, because it will go up 15 cents a foot inside a certain time. Fifteen cents a foot is a big jump on plate glass. It is apparently going up all the time if you listen to what the trade tell you. They seem to know beforehand and that suggests that there is an understanding come to amongst those engaged in the trade that they will stand by a certain price.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. In regard to the question of glass I handle a considerable quantity of it and I agree with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that in so far as plate glass is concerned there is a combination ordinarily speaking. The Consolidated Plate Glass Company of Canada handles nearly all the plate glass which comes into Canada except that which comes from the Pilkington concern in England. They have an agent now in Montreal. When we can get quotations from the Toronto Plate Glass Company or from any of the three glass concerns in Montreal asking for plate glass to be delivered at any given point, for instance Ottawa, or even nearer to Montreal or at Whitby we find that there are practically but two concerns in Canada dealing in plate glass. These are the Consolidated Plate Gass Company and the Pilkingtons, and if you get a quotation you we find that they will be practically the same, freight paid and delivered to any point in Canada. It makes no difference, as the hon. gentleman from East Grey says, which concern you order from, the price will be the same delivered. Any person in the trade always buys the plate glass delivered. I think the hon. gentleman is a little off in speaking about quotations for other glass.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not speaking in regard to any knowledge I have during the last year, but I do know that before that this condition existed because I was obliged several times to buy glass and I know the fluctations.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The fluctuations in plate glass have not been one quarter what they have been in ordinary glass. A few years ago we were buying ordinary glass for ninety cents a box when we were buying plate glass for ten cents a foot, whereas we are now paying $4 a box. Plate glass has remained at very nearly the same price. A combination exists in reference to plate glass but in reference to the other glass there is no combination.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not so sure about the other glass.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I know there is no combination in that. I do not buy any glass except what I import from Germany or England.

Mr. PATERSON. Can you buy plate glass direct from Belgium or English houses?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I think not. They handle it through the Consolidated Plate Glass Company of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Consolidated Plate Glass Company of Canada is composed of the various firms which were handling it before and which have come together as a combine and that is where I consider the combine is. The Consolidated Plate Glass Company is made up of the individual concerns that were acting separately before.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. No, the Pilkingtons are not in that. Invariably when I get quotations all of the others, on a $150 order, will be within a dollar or two, but the Pilkintons will vary their quotations probably by $10 or $15. I have had them as much as $22 below the others on a $180 order. Of course I have had them as much as $5 or $6 above the others. I do not know just on what line they figure their prices but I have found that they are not in the combination to the same extent as the others. I have had quotations from Hamilton and Toronto firms, from Montreal and the Consolidated people and they would come within 25 or 30 cents of each other, never varying more than $2, but I have found the Pilkingtons varying as much as $24 or $25 on an order of the size I have mentioned. I do not think they are in the combine.

Schedule 'C.'

1208. Metallic trading checks.

Mr. FIELDING. We place metallic trading checks in the list of prohibited goods because they may be regarded as coins. It has been represented to us that there could never be danger in circulating metallic checks where they are not circular. If we allowed circular checks to be imported they might be mistaken for our coins.

Mr. SPROULE. Are circular checks used in trade? My information is that they are not. We have frequent inquiries from parties as to whether they can be used or not. Is it illegal to use a platinum check?

Mr. FIELDING. There may be a doubt about it. I am half inclined to think that the Criminal Code would prohibit them now. However, we should not encourage their importation. We may require legislation to prevent their use in Canada, but certainly hon. gentlemen will agree that we should not allow them to be imported.

Mr. PATERSON. We have just these two items, leather and boots and shoes; can we go on with them to-night?

Mr. FOSTER. I think you had better allow these to stand.

Mr. PATERSON. How long?

Mr. FOSTER. Till the next sitting.

Mr. PATERSON. Of course, this question of drawbacks is a pretty heavy item with some people and they are now anxious to know how they can get their drawbacks. We cannot make any regulations until this becomes law.

Mr. FOSTER. Friday night is a night when there are very few here.

Mr. PATERSON. Will you take it up on Monday?

Mr. FOSTER. On Monday then; our people will be back.

Mr. FIELDING. I would like to draw attention to the amendments to the resolutions one of which was very fully considered before. That is in regard to the exemption of binder twine from the dumping clause. It was represented, hon. gentlemen will remember, that we are making a certain class of binder twine in Canada and sending it to the United States, and the danger was that if we subjected binder twine from the United States to the dumping duty it would be taken to be within the meaning of the American tariff, and the effect would be to shut us out from the privilege we now enjoy of exporting that special class of binder twine to the United States. There was something in the criticism, and we have concluded to amend the wording of the resolution by taking the exact words of the American tariff which admits certain classes of binder twine free; we say that as respects that particular class of binder twine, using the very words of the American tariff, the dumping duty shall not apply. In that way we prevent the giving of any justification to our American friends for imposing a duty on this twine, which is made by a number of factories in Canada and which is exported to the United States. I have reason to believe that in this form, the amendment is in no manner open to any objection.

Resolution as amended agreed to.

On resolution No. 4,

That it is expedient to provide that the provisions of the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into operation on the 30th day of November, 1906, and to apply and to have applied to all goods imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have also applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day except as otherwise provided in the resolutions: provided that goods which were imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption and on which duty was paid on or after the 30th day of November, 1906, and prior to the 12th day of February, 1907, in accordance with the rate of duty set forth as payable on such goods in the resolutions respecting the duties of customs introduced in the House of Commons on the 29th day of November, 1906, shall not be subject to further payment of duty by reason of such rate of duty having been increased by any resolution or amendment introduced subsequently to that in accordance with which such duty was paid.

Mr. FIELDING. I mentioned to the House the other day that we desire to interpret this tariff as liberally as possible towards the importer and we propose to adopt this rule: That where, since the presentation of the tariff some weeks ago, we have in any case increased the duty, we do not propose to go back and collect it. We say to the importer that he has made his entry, and his business has been based on that, and we will not disturb it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

Mr. FIELDING. On the other hand, if as a result of further discussion we have come to the conclusion that the duty was too high and we have reduced it, we will give him the benefit and in that case we will not reopen the question.

Mr. FOSTER. Even though he sold on the duty as it was?

Mr. FIELDING. Even so.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. Take a case where the old tariff of 20 per cent was raised to 30 per cent, and which in the interval has been placed upon the free list. Would all of the duty be given back, or would the old rate of duty be charged?

Mr. PATERSON. If they were made free, he would be entitled to his duty back since the date of the budget.

Mr. FIELDING. We have done a fair days work, and I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business for Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. We would like, if it were convenient, to wind up the tariff; if there is any delay or difficulty in doing that, the Postmaster General will bring on his Labour Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. There will be no difficulty in taking the tariff in the afternoon or may be in the evening.

Mr. FIELDING. Failing that, it will be the Labour Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 11, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move:

That the Hon. Jacques Bureau be appointed to the following committees: Privileges and Elections; Debates; Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines; Private Bills; Banking and Commerce, and Agriculture.

These are the committees on which Mr. Bureau was.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move that Mr. Pius Michaud be appointed to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON ACT, AMENDMENTS.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 109) to amend the Yukon Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is this Bill about?

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of the Bill is to provide for the appointment of an acting Commissioner of the Yukon, and to legalize the action already taken by the acting commissioner.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROPRIETARY AND PATENT MEDICINES.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Inland Revenue if it is intended to proceed this session with Bill (No. 99) respecting proprietary and patent medicines? It is stated in the newspapers that the Bill may be postponed, and, as it is an important measure, I would like to get information on that point now.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). There is no determination to postpone the Bill. We have been receiving the views of those interested in the trade, and we will meet several delegations this week. The postponement of the consideration of the Bill has been due to that fact; we may reach it next week.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that mean that it will go on this session?

REPORT OF THE INSURANCE COMMISSION.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I wish to ask the Minister of Finance if he knows where these exhibits are in connection with the Insurance Commission report? I cannot find them in the record office, and I am afraid they are dumped somewhere outside.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). If they were not sent to the House with the report, I suppose they are in the hands of the commission; but they can be found.

Mr. FOSTER. They ought to be in the custody of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I know of no reason to the contrary.

Mr. FOSTER. They are an integral part of the evidence.

Mr. FIELDING. I will see the secretary of the commission about it. I presume the commission would be quite willing to turn them over to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the commission has anything to say about that. They are part and parcel of the report and they are incorporated in the report, and should have been laid on the table of the House along with the evidence.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not expect there is any trouble over the matter, but I think the commission as a body can determine, subject to the ultimate view of the House, what shall be done. If the commission has not sent them in, they are under the control of the commission.

Mr. FOSTER. They do not belong to the commission at all.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Speaking of that insurance report, would the Minister of Finance say if the government intend to deal with it by legislation this session?

Mr. FIELDING. It would depend on the condition of business. I think the probability is that the question is too large to be taken up at the present stage of the session. But I would not like to give any definite answer.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There will have to be a debate on it.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CENTRAL CANADA MANUFACTURERS' FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 81) to incorporate the Central Canada Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Mr. CALVERT. I wish that this Bill should stand. I am awaiting instructions from the promoters of the Bill, and I would ask that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 82) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

On section 8,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I want to ask the Minister of Railways why the Grand Trunk have withdrawn clause 9 of this Bill, and if by its withdrawal they confess that they propose to give effect to the penny-a-mile clause in their original charters? Is this withdrawal a confession by the Grand Trunk that that which they wished to have repealed is, as a matter of fact, in force and is to be enforced in this country? The public of this country voted £3,000 per mile for the original construction of the Grand Trunk, and with that great franchise went the condition that a certain kind of service was to be given to the public. The Grand Trunk have never performed that service, and, as far as I can understand now, the government have refused to entertain a proposal of the Grand Trunk that that condition in the original charter should be repealed. If that is so, the people of Canada are entitled to an explanation from the government. One of the main organs of the government said not long ago that this was a very important issue, that it would have to be dealt with, and that the Grand Trunk would be held to account for the performance of what it had undertaken to do in its original charter. We are entitled to an explanation in regard to this great question; and it is a great question, because the Grand Trunk charter occupies exactly the same position that the Canadian Pacific Railway charter and the Grand Trunk Pacific charter occupy with reference to the parliament and people of this country. If it comes to be recognized in this country that the provisions of these charters—and every one of them carry great subventions and the credit of the country—are put in simply for the railway companies to break and ignore them, and to be free, in the face of their very defiance of the law, to enter into new negotiations with the state, then things have reached a pretty pass in this country. The government are bound to make an explanation to the public as to whether the Grand Trunk Railway Company is to be required to give that penny-a-mile service, and whether the government, especially the Minister of Railways, intends to enforce the performance of that duty.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no particular explanation to make with respect to this Bill. I, in common with the other members of the Railway Committee took into consideration Bill (No. 82), and when it was announced by the solicitors representing the promoters that clause 9 would be withdrawn, we passed the Bill without that clause. My hon. friend was present at the committee, and heard the statement in common with myself, and no further action was taken with respect to it. I am not the father confessor of that Railway Company nor of any other railway company, and I am very thankful that I am not in such a position. The promoters having withdrawn that section, there was no occasion for any further action on it to be taken by the Railway Committee. We assume that every railway in Canada is bound to respect the law, and whatever the provisions of the Act of 1852, incorporating the Grand Trunk Railway Company may be, I certainly, in common with all the other members of this committee, would not for a moment question that the Grand Trunk would be bound by those provisions.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If the hon. gentleman is not the father confessor of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, he is the Minister of Railways of this country, is paid a large salary, and has a large department under him. He has his own legal department, who will advise him that there has been a breach of the law in this case.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does my hon. friend mean in withdrawing that section? It was entirely eliminated from the Bill?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I know it was, but in that way the minister's attention has been called to this grievance of the public, for which I am demanding some kind of cure. The Minister of Railways says he hopes the Grand Trunk will obey the law. He ought to do more: he ought to compel the Grand Trunk to obey the law when it has been found to be a defaulter. They have confessed their default by their conduct of last week. They found that public opinion would not stand for the repeal of that charter, and public opinion looks to the government of the day for its enforcement. Does the Prime Minister remember how he used to thunder——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise the point of order; how can a clause which has been dropped be discussed by an hon. member of this committee? It does not appear in the Bill.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. He wants to talk all the time; let him talk.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Here is the same old sidetracking of the argument I am making. I think I am quite in order. In the old days the Prime Minister used to storm against the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, and he and his friends used to hold debates in this House to show how the provisions in that charter were not carried out; and he has claimed credit that on one occasion he rectified a grievance of the people in the west by reason of certain negotiations of his in regard to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Therefore he upheld the doctrine of the sanctity of these contracts, and the duty of the government of the day to see that they are observed. Here is the charter of the Grand Trunk Railway, and in it this provision is set out:

3. And be it enacted, that the gauge of the said railway shall be five feet six inches; and the fare or charge for each first-class passenger by any train on the said railway, shall not exceed two pence currency for each mile travelled, the fare or charge for each second-class passenger by any train on the said railway, shall not exceed one penny and one-half penny currency for each mile travelled, and the fare or charge for each third-class passenger by any train on the said railway, shall not exceed one penny currency for each mile travelled; and that at least one train having in it third-class carriages shall run every day throughout the length of the line.

These very words in the charters of all British railroads gave the people of Great Britain that excellent penny-a-mile service which they have to-day; and if the same provision were enforced in Canada, it would give the people of Canada the same thing. Why has this clause been struck out of this Bill ? Is it because the ministry insisted on it going out ? It was told in the committee that the reason this clause was withdrawn was that the government would not stand for it ; they wanted it out. If they did, they should go further and insist on this provision of the charter being lived up to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who said that the government wanted it out ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I was told in the committee by a gentleman responsible for what he said with reference to that Bill that the Minister of Railways wished it out.

An hon. MEMBER. Who was it ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I was told by the solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. Biggar ; and on behalf of the people of this country, I ask now, the solicitor of the Grand Trunk, having withdrawn the clause, as he informed me at the request of the Minister of Railways, do the government intend to make any move for the enforcement of that law ? Or does it come down to the question which I raised last year, and which I am going to raise again at the first opportunity, whether the federal law is to be enforced or is to be a farce, or whether we are to go to the provinces for its enforcement ? I do not raise this question to annoy any one, but I think I am entitled to an answer.

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to say that I made no statement in the committee to the effect that the government were opposed to the Bill in any way, and I made no request personally or on behalf of the government to Mr. Biggar or any one else with respect to the Bill. Mr. Biggar made the announcement as to what he proposed to do. Mr. Biggar probably has some knowledge of my own personal views in the matter, but they are not relevant to the discussion of the Bill here now. But so far as the government is concerned, there was no announcement made to the committee nor was there an announcement made to Mr. Biggar. Mr. Biggar stated to me that it was his purpose to withdraw the clause. That was a matter for him to determine.

Mr. LENNOX. The section I want to call attention to has been passed but the Bill was mentioned as No. 81 and it was not until just recently that it was noticed that it is Bill No. 82. What I wish to speak of is in reference to section 7. I proposed an amendment to section 7 and it will serve my purpose quite as well, I think, to propose that amendment on the motion to read the Bill the third time. I would ask that the Bill should not have its third reading to-day and if that is understood I do not propose to move the amendment now because I want to draft it carefully. It is on the lines I mentioned the other day and I will move it on the third reading if the minister will allow it to stand.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is no reason why the Bill should be pressed to a third reading and while I have not charge of it, it being a private Bill and I being in no way responsible for it, I certainly would concur in the desire of my hon. friend.

Mr. LENNOX. The promoter of the Bill is not in the House at the present time.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has spoken of the provisions of the original charter of the Grand Trunk which was a copy of the English charters of that day making provision for first, second and third-class accommodation. I think it is considered in Canada that the third class is entirely obsolete and that we have no desire on this continent to have such a class. I think there is on all Canadian railways a second-class fare of two cents per mile. I know that is true with respect to the Intercolonial Railway and it is certainly true with respect to some portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway and I think as well with respect to the Grand Trunk on certain sections. My hon. friend, of course, seems to be particularly the champion of a two-cent first-class passenger rate. In speaking of the matter in this House the other night he cited the state of Nebraska and I read only to-day in one of the newspapers the result of the movement there for a two-cent rate. This is an item taken from the papers published on March 8th :

> The two cent per mile passenger fare Bill recently passed by the Nebraska legislature became a law yesterday. Simultaneously with the Bill coming into effect the railroads in Nebraska, including the Union Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the Chicago and Northwestern, the Missouri Pacific and the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific issued circulars absolutely abolishing all classes of reduced fares.

That is the effect of the two cent rate Bill in Nebraska. It is followed by the Nebraska railways cancelling all classes of reduced fares. That would be a matter for consideration by hon. gentlemen in considering the question as to whether we should impose upon the railways at this stage in Canada a uniform rate of two cents per mile for first-class passenger accommodation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Now, the minister once more has shown his incompetency for the position which he holds. He says on the floor of this House, as he has said repeatedly, that there is provision in Canada for second-class accommodation and for a rate of two cents a mile on nearly all the railways. It is not so. It is not so on the Grand Trunk and it is not so on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said on portions of them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then tell me the portions. The hon. minister talks about portions; he may show that the two cent rate is in force on one tenth of these roads when it should be in force on ten tenths.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am speaking of the eastern section where my experience has been had.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then, the Minister of Railways should not talk of his experience. He should speak of his knowledge because he should know the fare on every mile of railway in this country and he should speak by the book. I challenge him that if he will show me one instance where you can get it I will show him twenty instances where he cannot get it. He spoke of the Canadian Pacific Railway and I will give him an instance that came under my notice recently. A doctor in Lindsay asked for a second class ticket on the Canadian Pacific Railway and he could not get it because that is a branch line there. When he went to Myrtle he got it You cannot get a two cent a mile ticket every where in Canada. There is no two cent a mile or second-class rate on the western division of the Grand Trunk. There is no second-class ticket sold from Toronto for Niagara Falls, Hamilton, London or Detroit. There is no second-class ticket sold at two cents a mile between Toronto and Montreal excepting between the two cities themselves and in that way the Grand Trunk pretend to obey the law. Now, the hon. Minister speaks about Nebraska and here is where he shows his profundity; he says that in Nebraska the people are getting a two cent a mile rate but that the moment they got that all their other privileges were withdrawn. At least there is a square deal and every man will be treated alike. I tell him that fifteen states have passed two cent a mile laws without any of the privileges theretofore existing having been withdrawn. In Ohio I proved in this House that not only had a two cent a mile rate been adopted but I also gave the proof on the authority of the Railway Commissioners that not a single privilege theretofore existing had been withdrawn and I also gave the authority of the Railway Commissioners for the statement that the railways have earned over a million dollars more within the three months during which this law has been in force than they did previously. So that, before the Minister of Railways gets up on the floor of this House and begins to tell us what he knows about the two cent a mile proposition and about the way it is spreading over the country he should make himself acquainted with the subject. He is trying to make the people believe that the two cent a mile proposition is a dangerous one. and he inferred that it was still more dangerous because it involved a third class penny a mile service. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell) said the other day that the people wanted no penny a mile service if they had to stand up in open cars and travel like cattle. They do not need to do that. If in England the third class penny a mile service means so and so it means the same thing in Canada and if there is progression in England in regard to what that service is there must be the same progression in this country and I think a little more. Although the hon. member for Glengarry derided that service the other day they have secured in England a splendid penny a mile service and we would secure the same thing in Canada. All that would be necessary would be that the government should enforce the federal law as it is the duty of the government to do. Evidently the government do not believe in enforcing the law. They only believe in making laws and in humbugging the people. The government make laws, spread them before the people and ask to be praised for making these laws although they had no intention of enforcing them. They say: Look what we have done; read these statutes, but when you come to the application of them the Minister of Railways says that he does not know whether the two cent a mile law is in force or not. He is not even going to concern himself to find out.

Mr. EMMERSON. What law is that?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The penny a mile third-class service under the Grand Trunk charter. It is on the statute-book. I read it to the hon. gentleman. Does he intend to enforce it?

Mr. EMMERSON. Did I question whether it was there or not?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I will tell the hon. gentleman what happened. I put the question in this House three times whether this was the law. The Minister of Justice dodged the question on two occasions. But on the third occasion, the Minister of Finance, who, by the way, is not in his place at the moment—said that this was a lawyer's question, and a great deal could be said on both sides, and he must leave it there—and there it was left. And up to this day, this government, with its expensive legal department and its expensive railway department, does not know whether this is the law of the land or not, and, if it is the law of the land, the government does not know whether it is going to enforce the law or not. I think that this is a question worthy the attention of the government for a great many people are interested in it. Here is the significance of it: If the government can secure this penny-a-mile service on the Grand Trunk, it means that there will be a similar service all over the country. If the Grand Trunk give the penny-a-mile rate on a portion of its system, it must extend it to all, and, in that case the Canadian Pacific must follow. That is proven by the experience of Manitoba, which, of course, the Minister of Railways has not forgotten. Some years ago the Canadian Northern made an agreement with the province of Manitoba to give a three-cent-a-mile rate in that province. That was all there was to it, so far as any agreement was concerned; but the moment that agreement went into force, the Canadian Pacific came down to the same rate. So the whole future of this reduced passenger service rests on the vindication of this law. As I told the Prime Minister, if he wishes to avoid the responsibility of interfering with his friends the Grand Trunk directly, all he has to do is to put the law in motion and say that he was forced to do so. The effect would be that there would be a penny-a-mile service all over the country. And it would be a good service, just as it is a good service in England—good cars, fast trains, and penny-a-mile cars on every train. It is true that, according to the original charter the Grand Trunk were not obliged to run more than one train a day, each way, that is all the law they have in England. But in enforcing it, they have a splendid service. And if we should enforce it here to-day, the result would be a splendid service to Canada. I cannot see that the Minister of Railways has made a very advantageous exhibition of himself in discussing this question, because he has shown that he has no knowledge whatsoever, no actual and accurate knowledge, of what the railways are doing in regard to the two-cent-a-mile service, whether second or third class. The railways refused it when asked for it, as they did in the case of the gentleman from Lindsay whom I quoted. This happens to-day because the Minister of Justice will not enforce the law and the railways feel that they can defy the law for that reason. The Minister of Justice takes the position that, outside of any special duty imposed upon him, the administration of the law rests with the attorney generals of the provinces. And, now, as I have that question up, I wish to direct the attention of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to something he said here the other day with regard to the enforcement of the law. The Minister of Justice said that, if any special duty in the enforcement of the law were imposed upon him or if any department of the government gave him a case, he would see that their rights were maintained. And he was endorsed by the Prime Minister. This shows that it does not do for even a Prime Minister to undertake the interpretation of the British North America Act unless he has recently perused it. The right hon. gentleman had failed to read section 101——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston). Order. I would direct the attention of the hon. member (Mr. W. F. Maclean) to the fact that the question before the committee is: Shall Bill (No. 82) be adopted?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I will abide by your ruling on that score, Mr. Chairman. I shall be able to discuss the matter a little later on. But I would remind you that it was the Minister of Railways who raised this whole discussion. I had sat down, having finished what I had to say; but the hon. gentleman wanted to show what lore he had in regard to railway tariffs. He lost his bearings, and I was simply trying to help him out. I will return to the question before the day is over.

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill was hurried through before we had time to get it. There is another question on which I would like an opinion. Clause 3 empowers the company to acquire 'lands, water lots, wharfs, docks, and so on.' I desire to know if this has anything to do with the land sold or granted to this company or one of its allies on Kaien island or adjoining territory. And I would like to know if the government have looked into this matter and intend to ratify the sale of that land without safeguarding the reversionary right of the province of British Columbia in the land. As the members of the government know, the claim is put forth on behalf of the province of British Columbia that, when that land is given up by the Indians the reversionary right is in the Crown and the Crown is represented by the province. Is it the intention to assist the company to take this land in violation of the rights of the province?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is straining the matter a little far, when he takes occasion, on the discussion of a Grand Trunk Railway Bill to refer to the operations of a different company in an entirely different section of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. This is part of the Grand Trunk.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, my hon. friend knows that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is an entirely different corporation.

Mr. SPROULE. In name they are different but in reality they are one.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, they are entirely different. My hon. friend knows that the Grand Trunk Railway Company is simply the guarantor for the Grand Trunk Pacific. But, however, that is neither here nor there——

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a fact that we gave them power to take over the Grand Trunk Pacific and that we gave the Grand Trunk Pacific power to amalgamate with the Grand Trunk ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend was before the Railway Committee I presume, and heard the explanations that I heard. The question was asked of the solicitor of the company what lands these powers referred to——

Mr. SPROULE. I did not happen to be there when any explanation of that kind was given.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then, I will repeat the explanation to my hon. friend. A question has arisen as to whether the Grand Trunk Company has power to take action in Canada with regard to real estate in Great Britain. It appears that they propose to have offices there, and they want to remove doubts on that subject. This clause has special relation to that point so that they may take necessary action with regard to certain office buildings in Great Britain.

Mr. SPROULE. 'Canada or elsewhere,' that means Great Britain. I take it that we could not grant any powers to them to acquire and hold land in Great Britain; all we can do is to deal with the Dominion of Canada. It seems to me that is quite superfluous.

Mr. EMMERSON. We could give them power to hold lands abroad, but of course they would have to hold them subject to the laws of Great Britain. Last year we gave power to a company to acquire lands in Mexico, and on another occasion to a company to acquire lands in Cuba and Brazil. But of course these powers are always subject to the laws of the land in which they are to be exercised.

QUESTIONS.

WHARF AT BAY OF SEVEN ISLANDS.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked :

1. What is the total cost to date of the wharf or wharfs erected by the government at the bay of Seven Islands, P.Q. ?
2. Were said works done by tender publicly called ?
3. Is the work finished ?
4. What is the population of the locality where said works have been located ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works) :

1. $90,304.70.
2. No.
3. Last fall. Public tenders were asked for for the completion of the work, due October 27, 1906, as a result of which a contract was entered into and the work is at present progressing towards completion under such contract.
4. Large works are established there and the population is variable according to the number of hands employed. The department has no knowledge of any census ever having been taken.

BREWERIES AND DISTILLERIES IN LOCAL OPTION MUNICIPALITIES.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Have any petitions or other communications been received by the government asking that in local option municipalities breweries and distilleries in such municipalities be prohibited from selling their products for consumption therein ?
2. If so is it the intention of the government to prohibit them ?

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1 and 2. One communication has been received from the Department of Inland Revenue asking that in local option municipalities breweries and distilleries in such municipalities be prohibited from selling their products for consumption therein. This was from Mr. John McQuaker, of Owen Sound, who wrote to ascertain if the department could cancel licenses of brewers to sell in local option municipalities. The reply made by the department was that the license to sell having been obtained under the authority of provincial legislation the proper source of redress was that under which these sales were being made and it was suggested that Mr. McQuaker should make his appeal to these authorities.

LEE-ENFIELD AND ROSS RIFLES.

Mr. DANIEL—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. In what year were Lee-Enfield rifles first issued to members of the Canadian militia ?
2. Since then, how many Lee-Enfield rifles have been issued to members of Canadian militia and Northwest Mounted Police, giving numbers to each force separately ?
3. In what year were Ross rifles first issued to members of Canadian militia ?
4. How many Ross rifles have been issued to members of Canadian militia and Northwest Mounted Police, respectively ?
5. How many Ross rifles have been used on active service or at target practice by members of Canadian militia and Northwest Mounted Police ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence.)

1. 1896.
2. (a) to militia forces and rifle associations, 39,550 ; (b) To Royal Northwest Mounted Police, 450.
3. 1905.

4. (a) To militia forces and rifle associations, 5,019; (b) To Royal Northwest Mounted Police, 1,000.

5. The information in possession of the Department of Militia and Defence and the Royal Northwest Mounted Police does not enable a specific answer to be given to this question. The numbers stated above were issued to the militia and rifle associations and the Royal Northwest Mounted Police respectively, but it is impossible to say how many of that number were actually used at target practice.

IRRIGATION IN WESTERN PROVINCES.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY—by Mr. Blain—asked:

To what extent, if any, is the government, or any department thereof, carrying on investigations in the western provinces, bearing upon the measurement of streams and the conservation of the water supply for irrigation and other purposes by the location and withdrawal from sale and settlement of natural reservoir sites?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Investigations have been carried on by the staff of the office of the Commissioner of Irrigation since the year 1894 in Southern Alberta and Southwestern Saskatchewan, and by order in council of the 27th September, 1897, a large number of reserves were made for reservoir sites. Last season three parties were in the field. One party was occupied in gauging the rivers and large streams to determine the flow of water therein and in obtaining general information for the hydrographic branch. The two other parties were employed in gauging the smaller creeks in addition and in inspecting works in connection with irrigation schemes.

SALVATION ARMY IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. RALPH SMITH—by Mr. Duncan Ross—asked:

1. Has the attention of the government been drawn to the following circular being issued in Canada by the Salvation Army, and to the comments thereon, by the Hamilton 'Herald,' as follows: 'Two documents have reached the 'Herald' which show that the Salvation Army has undertaken to bring out to Canada British mechanics and labourers and supply them to employers who may apply for this class of help. The Salvation Army officials are not publicly exploiting this phase of immigration work. The documents printed below are not promiscuously distributed. They are carefully placed only where it is thought that advantage will be taken of the means afforded by the army project of obtaining a supply of cheap labour.'

The first of the documents is a circular letter sent to manufacturers. It is as follows:

Dear Sir,—I have the pleasure to inform you that during the past three years the Salvation Army has been successful in selecting and bringing to this country nearly twenty thousand very desirable immigrants from all parts of Great Britain. Next season we hope to still further develop this important branch of our work, and among those emigrating through the agency of the Salvation Army there will doubtless be some very good mechanics and labourers of all kinds, for whom we desire to secure suitable positions.

Seeing that your firm is interested in the employment of labour, we have reason to hope that you will co-operate with us in this matter, and if you can possibly assist in placing some worthy and desirable people in positions, we are confident that you will do so.

If you have any vacancies at present, or are likely to require men during the coming season, I shall be obliged if you will kindly set forth your requirements on the attached application form, and return at your earliest convenience, when we shall be pleased to give same our careful attention.

Yours very truly,
THOMAS HOWELL,
Secretary for Immigration.

The other document is the application form mentioned in the letter. At the top it displays the names of Thos. B. Coombs, commissioner, and Brigadier Thos. Howell, with the lettering: 'The Salvation Army Immigration Department and Bureau of Labour. Manufacturers' Application Form.' There are ten blanks which the manufacturer is requested to fill, the information desired being as follows: 1. Number of mechanics required. 2. Nature of employment. 3. Wages per hour or day. 4. Number of men required for labouring work. 5. Wages per hour or day. 6. Will your firm furnish permanent employment for satisfactory men? 7. Can houses be procured suitable for workingmen? 8. Probable rent per month. 9. Date men will be required. 10. Please state whether open or union shop.

The 'Herald' has inquired of several trades unionists whether they knew of this phase of the Salvation Army's immigration work, but they all expressed ignorance of it. The public significance of the project is referred to on the editorial page.

2. Does the Salvation Army receive any assistance from the government in this connection?

3. Does the government have any guarantee that money paid to the Salvation Army for immigrants of the domestic class will not be applied in importing mechanics and artisans?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes, to the circular which is alluded to in the following letter:

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Transportation and Immigration Offices
James and Albert streets,
Toronto, Ont., March 1, 1907.

W. D. Scott, Esq.,
Superintendent of Immigration,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Scott,—I noticed in the 'Toronto Evening News' last night an article on the Salvation Army and Mechanics, and that the matter had been referred to the Labour Solicitor with instructions to bring the matter before the government. I think it is fitting that you should know our position in the matter. It is quite understood that among those who are coming to Canada there is a small percentage of mechanics. Many of those people are not prepared to sacrifice their trades to go on farms. The result is that they make for such cities as Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and the larger cities of Ontario and the west. It has been, and is yet, the policy of the army to distribute those people where there is a demand for the various kinds of labour. We send a circular around to all the firms we can get in touch with, and find out from them as far as possible the needs. We then send our representative to interview them, and also to interview some of the workmen to find out if the shop is an open shop or union shop, and if there is any trouble there. If we find there is any labour difficulties we advise the people to keep away and thus protect the labour interest. If we find that the firms are anxious to get men in order to reduce wages we avoid sending the people to such firms. We have the workingman's interest at heart, and if the labour unions would only confer with us instead of publishing all kinds of stories in the press, they would find that the Salvation Army is doing more in the best interests of labour than some of the unions are doing themselves. I may also say that in our first year's business, our people made a mistake in one or two instances in sending people to firms where there had been some difficulty, but as soon as I was advised of this I acted promptly.

I may say that we have been approached with some very tempting offers to bring skilled mechanics to this country on various occasions, but we have absolutely refused to open any such negotiations with any firms where there is any labour difficulties.

I thought it best to give you this information so that if the matter comes up you will know our attitude.

Very truly, yours,
(Sgd.) T. HOWELL.
Brigadier.

3. Money is paid to the Salvation Army on the same terms and conditions as to other booking agents and on the undertanding that such terms and conditions will not be departed from. In addition thereto there is paid $5,000 a year in connection with their London office, which payment is made in consideration of the fact that the army assumes all responsibility for the care of the immigrants it sends to Canada.

Mr. A. MARTIN asked :

2. If so, what action does the department intend to take in regard to it ?

5. Will the scrip to be issued be locatable by bearer ?
6. Has the government considered any method of extinguishing half-breed claims by other means than the usual issue of scrip?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

PREVENTION AND SETTLEMENT OF STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 36), to aid in the Prevention and Settlement of Strikes and Lockouts in Mines, and Industries connected with Public Utilities.—Mr. Lemieux.

On section 2, interpretation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I beg to move as subclause (b) :

(b) Trade union or union means any organization of employees formed for the purpose of regulating relations between employers and employees.

During the discussion in committee we dropped the words 'incorporated or registered,' and for the better understanding of the Bill, it is well to insert this definition which is taken from the statute of 1872.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The word 'organization' requires definition almost as much as the word 'union.' Would it mean a temporary organiaztion for a few days? What would constitute an organization?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think the word would be understood in the application of the Bill. Labour organizations are sometimes constituted when the trouble arises, and we have provided that when such an organization elects a secretary and a president, through them the machinery of the Bill will be put in motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The word organization has no legal meaning and we have simply to guess at it.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4,—appointment of boards of arbitration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When this clause was under discussion the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) suggested that there should be a permanent board, instead of temporary boards for each dispute. Since then, the hon. gentleman has discussed the question with the deputy minister and he thinks that for the present he should not propose the establishment of a permanent board. I think the appointment of such a board would be unwise. Labour organizations and industrial concerns are very sensitive, and if once a decision were rendered by a permanent board the parties might feel that the board would be bound by its decision, even though like conditions did not apply in a different case. It may be said that we have permanent courts in civil and criminal cases, but the leader of the opposition who is an eminent jurist, knows, that sometimes exception is taken to this. When the Hon. T. Chase Casgrain was Attorney General of Quebec, there were complaints as to civil and criminal jurisdiction being exercised in the same district by the same judge, and he introduced a Bill providing that there should be a sort of tour de role for the judges, If there are complaints of the administration of civil or criminal justice, there may be more criticism and perhaps more trouble if we select for the application of this law a permanent board. Therefore I think we should keep the clause as it was originally drafted, and later on, when public opinion is accustomed to the decisions rendered by these boards and educated to this legislation, it may perhaps be convenient to have a permanent board, as we have with regard to railways. Another objection, I think, may fairly be pointed out. This country is very large, and the settlement of these disputes should be had as soon as possible. If we had one permanent board, and that board were engaged at Halifax or Pictou or Fredericton or somewhere else in the eastern provinces in the settlement of a great strike or a great lockout, and its services were required in British Columbia or the Northwest Territories, would it not then be found advisable to have several boards instead of one permanent board? I think the objections are obvious, and we should leave this clause as originally drafted.

Mr. CONMEE. When subsection (f) was under discussion, I suggested an amendment. The minister stated that he would take it into consideration and would apply the amendment suggested to clause 58, and I believe that has been done. But I still think this amendment should be amended.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the amendment?

Mr. CONMEE. I would suggest inserting after the word 'work' in the third line these words: 'or a lowering of wages or an increase in the hours of labour.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. The amendment made in clause 58 covers that point entirely.

Mr. CONMEE. I am aware that there was an amendment to section 58. If that is sufficient, I am content, but it seems to me that the two sections conflict, and the different sections of the Bill should be consistent with each other.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The amendment to section 58 adopted the other day was the insertion after the words 'in every case' in the first line of the following words: 'employers and employees shall give at least thirty days' notice of an intended change affecting the conditions of employment in respect of wages and hours.' So that before the appointment of the board and pending the investigation before the board no changes can take place as regards hours or wages on either side.

Mr. CONMEE. It was contended that after the notice was given, there might be a lowering of wages or a change in the hours, because the parties had not come together. No strike had been ordered and no investigation had taken place under the Act, and in that case such an occurrence might take place. That is a matter of legal construction on which I do not attempt to set up an opinion, but I call the attention of the House to it to see if there is anything in it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Section 58 has been amended, but does not section 2 have a different office to fulfil?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is only a definition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But that definition applies to other clauses than clause 58. For example, the word 'lockout' is defined in clause 2. The same word is used in clause 15, and their is no special provision as in clause 58 to which the hon. minister has just referred. The amendment in clause 58 would have no effect in governing the definition of 'lockout' in clause 2 as applied to clause 15. Clause 58 deals with a case of a lockout in a particular instance. It does not deal with clause 15, which says that you must make a declaration that a lockout shall be declared before any reference shall be made under the terms of that section. Section 58 deals with what takes place afterwards, not with the initial difficulty. That is what the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) has in mind, as far as I can understand it.

Mr. CONMEE. That is the point I am trying to make clear.

Mr. PARDEE. The definition of 'lockout' applies to all clauses. Section 58 does not apply to the other clauses, and, therefore, does not meet the point raised.

Mr. CONMEE. I cannot see the objection if that is the intention and it seems to meet with the approval not only of the minister but of all the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. If that is so why not put it in the clause? It will make it absolutely clear and do no harm. It will satisfy me, at all events, and I believe it will do some good.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister, I think, sees the difficulty.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, but I am not quite ready to go as far as my hon. friend from Rainy River. Section 2 defines a lockout and section 58 declares that the moment a reference has taken place no change on account of a lockout or strike can take place in the wages or the hours or the work of the employees pending that investigation. What does my hon. friend wish to add to the definition of the word 'lockout'?

Mr. CONMEE. I fear that section 15 intervenes.

Mr. PARDEE. The interpretation says that the word 'lockout' should mean a certain thing, just what the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has pointed out. Then section 58 goes on to define what shall take place after a lockout. Then what are you doing by the proposed amendment? All you are doing by the amendment which my hon. friend from Rainy River proposes is to say what a lockout is so that the Act may come into operation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So that there can be a reference.

Mr. PARDEE. So that there can be a reference. Section 58 then goes on to say what you shall do after that takes place. The interpretation must be there to show what the lockout is before this takes place.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Section 2 defines what a lockout is. Section 58 says in plain language that the reference must take place in view of the lock-out, not after it has happened. The investigation is ordered before the lockout or before the strike and section 58 enacts that pending that investigation and before the lock-out or strike no change in the condition, wages or hours of the employee shall take place.

Mr. CONMEE. This is not a question of a lockout or a strike but the enployer says: I am going to reduce wages after a certain date.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Act has nothing to do with it except in cases of lockouts and strikes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is just the reason why the hon. member for Rainy River desires to have it amended. He takes the ground, and I think he is right, that if, instead of closing the place of employment or suspending work the employer should say that a reduction in wages was necessary or that it was necessary to work longer hours, the employee should have the right, under section 15 to have that referred under the Act. I think that under the clause as it is drafted at present he could not do that. You should make it plain. After you have had a reference under section 15, then of course, the amendment to section 58 which the minister has proposed puts the matter right according to the view of the hon. member for Rainy River, but before that it does not seem to put it right. I entirely agree with the view which has been put forward by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee).

Mr. LENNOX. I think it is very clear. I understand the minister to say that he agrees with the view that in the definition of 'lockout' in section 2 are included what the hon. member for Rainy River suggests—

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. LENNOX. That is that there included the lowering of wages and any change in condition of employment.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. LENNOX. If the minister does not mean that and if the minister does not think they should be embraced in the term 'lockout,' then we have nothing to argue about. As I understand the minister, by section 58—

Mr. LEMIEUX. As amended.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand what the minister has said; I want the minister to understand me if he will. I understood the minister to point out to the hon. member for Rainy River that what he wants to have accomplished is accomplished by section 58. I understand that to mean that the minister concurs with the object that the hon. member for Rainy River has in view and then he says that the object is accomplished by section 58. I submit that it is not. If you turn to section 15 you will find there a provision made for a sworn declaration setting forth that failing adjustment a lockout will be declared. Then you have to find when you come to work the Act out what a lockout is. According to the definition as it is in the statute at the present time it would not embrace a lowering of wages or a change of conditions. According to the hon. member for Rainy River it should embrace a change of conditions or a lowering of wages. If the minister concurs in the view that a lock-out should embrace a lowering of wages or a change of conditions then he must put it in the definition ; otherwise when you come to deal with the declaration you cannot make the declaration and you cannot get the assistance of the Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend please follow me now ? I have followed him with pleasure. The definition of the word lockout is as follows :

'Lockout' (without limiting the nature of its meaning) means a closing of a place of employment, or a suspension of work, or a refusal by an employer to continue to employ any number of his employees in consequence of a dispute.

What is a dispute ? According to subsection (e) :

'Dispute' or 'industrial dispute' means any dispute or difference between an employer and one or more of his employees, as to matters or things affecting or relating to work done or to be done by him or them, or as to privileges, rights and duties of employers or employees, &c.

And without limiting the general nature of the above definition includes all matters relating to (1) the wages allowance or other remuneration of employees, or the price paid or to be paid in respect of employment.

I think that covers the point.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not meet it at all.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the minister state what objection he has to adding the amendment of the hon. member for Rainy River ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. member for Rainy River state the amendment that he proposes ?

Mr. CONMEE. I am referring now to subsection 7 of section 2 (f) in regard to lockouts and after the word 'work' in the third line I would insert these or other words to the same effect : 'Or a lowering of wages or increase in the hours of labour.' It may or may not be a dispute. It seems that these are the principal things about which there might be a difference. They should be covered in the definition.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. member for Rainy River might also add the words 'or any other change in the condition of the employment.'

Mr. CONMEE. I have considered that but I think it would be going too far. An employer might want to ask a man to work at a certain employment to-day and he might want to shift him to-morrow to something else which he could do. There is no necessity for tieing their hands in that way. The main point in the interest of the employee is that his wages may not be reduced or his hours of services increased. I think that with these two safeguards he will be satisfied.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not think I can accept that amendment, because as I have pointed out, we know what is, under this Act, a 'dispute.' We are not going to declare the fact of a notice being given by an employer that he intends to reduce the wages or increase the hours constitutes a lockout no matter whether it is acceptable to the employees or not. We know what a 'lockout' is under the Bill. We know that a 'lockout' results from a 'dispute' and we have a 'dispute' clearly defined. I think my hon. friend should be satisfied with the amendment of section 58.

Mr. CONMEE. But if these words are not added there is no reference in subsection (f) to rates of wages or hours of service.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Subsection (e).

Mr. CONMEE. But I am speaking of subsection (f).

Mr. LEMIEUX. The addition of these words, it seems to me will be merely redundant. Under the definition of the word 'lockout' we say that it means 'a closing of a place of employment, or a suspension of work, or a refusal by an employer to continue to employ any number of his employees in consequence of a dispute.' Now, what is a 'dispute.' We turn to subsection (e), and there we find that it is 'any dispute or difference between an employer and one or more of his employees, as to matters or things affecting or relating to work done or to be done by him or them, or as to the privileges, rights and duties, of employers or employees, and so on. These things are included in the definition of 'dispute.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the minister does not see the point. Suppose the men make a demand for an increase of wages and the employer grants it and does not close his shop. He does not do anything enumerated in subsection (f) at that time, but, immediately after, he increases the hours of labour by one or two hours. That is not a lockout——

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is a dispute.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may not even be a dispute. It is an act of the employer which obliges the men to strike. It is the adoption of tactics by the employer which are essentially a lockout, though not a lockout, within the meaning of subsection (f).

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman will read the amendment to subsection (f) he will see that it applies to hours of labour as well as to wages. In the case that my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) cites, the employees would have recourse to the tribunal, and, pending that investigation, there could be a change made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, but it would put the men in the position of striking, whereas it is virtually a lockout by the employer.

Mr. CONMEE. And there is this further consideration: Section 15 provides, under subsection (b) that there must be a sworn declaration in order to bring the matter before this tribunal. If the employer lowers the wages, he will not make the declaration; and the men cannot make it, because there is no lockout, as the employer is not closing his doors. I shall not argue that the men could not strike, but what I do say is that that is the only course open to them, the Act ought to give them the reference without a strike.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He must give thirty days' notice.

Mr. CONMEE. But that does not hurt him, if he lowers the wages.

Mr. BOYCE. Take the definition of lockout under subsection (f) and a strike under subsection (e). These are correlative terms throughout the Bill. If the meaning of 'strike' is compared with the meaning of 'lockout' the minister will see the necessity for a change. A 'strike' is declared to be 'the cessation of work by a body of employees acting in combination, or a concerted refusal, or refusal under a common understanding of any number of employees to continue to work for an employer, in consequence of a dispute—' and so on. Unless this is amended, the employer may lower the wages and so render operative section 58, but it would be through a refusal of the workmen to accept the lowering of wages, and thus would be a strike and not a lockout. Thus, the terms would be no longer correlative.

Mr. VERVILLE. The question of lockouts and strikes is easily understood. it only arises through a misunderstanding. Suppose that the employer reduced the wages of the men, and at the same time told them: You are going to work two hours more for the same money—you will understand that no men who are men will consent to that, they have the privilege of coming under this law, for the very reason that they can refuse to accept the conditions offered to them by their employer, and vice versa. When the Bill was first in committee I offered an amendment to that very section, and the minister offered another amendment to section 58. I was entirely satisfied with his amendment because I knew that section 2 and the amended section 58 covered the same ground. I think we have too many technical words here with regard to strikes and lockouts. If the two sides cannot agree there is going to be a fight, and that is all there is about it.

Mr. BOYCE. Does not the hon. member for Maisonneuve, as the alleged representative of labour in this House, see some difficulty in not including these words suggested by the member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee)?

Mr. VERVILLE. I am satisfied that the change in clause 58, taken together with clause 2, cover the same ground. The plainer the better, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BOYCE. The clause absolutely contains the declaration that a lockout includes a lowering of wages or an increase of the hours of labour. Now does the member for Maisonneuve object to that?

Mr. VERVILLE. I do not object to anything in any clause as to the lowering of wages and the increase of hours. But as I remarked a moment ago, if an employer at any time chose to increase the hours of labour or lower the wages, the men are at perfect liberty to refuse to accept his conditions.

Mr. BOYCE. Would it be a portection to the men?

Mr. VERVILLE. It would be a protection to the men to come under the law. I am entirely satisfied with this. If I were to come under that law I would use that clause, because I would not accept a diminition of wages and longer hours, and nobody else would.

On section 11,—members of board not to have pecuniary interest in dispute.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The committee may remember that when this clause was under consideration, some one, I think it was the member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross), suggested that perhaps the secretary-treasurer of a union could not be selected as a member of board because he was receiving a salary both from the government, as acting on the board, and from the union. In order to remove any doubt on that question, I move that this section be amended to read as follows:

No person should act as a member of a board who has any direct pecuniary interest in the issue of a dispute referred to such board.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The secretary of a miner's union might also be a man who was working for $4 a day in the mine, and in fact any one connected with the union might be a working man not interested in the outcome of the dispute.

Mr. VERVILLE. Do I understand that the amendment would prevent anybody directly interested in that trade from being appointed on the board?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. It means, as I understand, that no striker shall be a member of the board.

Mr. VERVILLE. There might be in a city a trades council, with which all the trades were affiliated; then where are you going to find a labouring man to represent them on that board? They are directly interested.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are indirectly, but not directly interested.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 16,

16. The application and the declaration accompanying it :

1. If made by an employer, an incorporated company or corporation, shall be signed by some one of its duly authorized managers or other principal executive officers ;

2. If made by an employer other than an incorporated company or corporation, shall be signed by the employer himself in case he is an individual, or a majority of the partners or members in case of a partnership firm or association ;

3. If made by employees, members of an incorporated or registered trade union, shall be signed by any two of its duly authorized officers ;

4. If made by employees not members of an incorporated or registered trade union, shall be signed by not less than ten of their number.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Subsections 1 and 2 passed, and 3 and 4 were allowed to stand, after some suggestions made on both sides. I have drafted these amendments which I think will meet all the suggestions :

3. If made by employees, members of a trades union, should be signed by two of its officers duly authorized by a majority vote of the members of the union, or by a vote taken by ballot of the members of the union present at a meeting called on not less than three days notice for the purpose of discussing the question.

4. If made by employees, some or all of whom are not members of a trades union, should be signed by two of their number duly authorized by a majority vote taken by ballot of the employees present at a meeting called on not less than three days notice for the purpose of discussing the question.

Mr. CONMEE. Under section 4, where some employees are members of a union and some are not, how are you to distinguish? Suppose the union men call a meeting and send in a notice, independent entirely of those who are not union men? I think the amendment assumes that both bodies will act together.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They must act together under this—it contemplates joint action.

Mr. CONMEE. Difficulty might arise under this. I do not see why the union men should not be dealt with through their regular union officers, and why the non-union men should not be recognized through a chairman and secretary elected by them. That is the usual practice.

Mr. D. ROSS.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Both are included in the amendment. By the first, if it is made by employees who are members of the trade union, we have the procedure ; and if it is made by employees who are not members of the union, we have also the procedure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is accepted in either case?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Those who belong to a union have their secretary, and those who do not, elect a president and secretary.

Mr. D. ROSS. If, under section 4, the union men make an application and the non-union men do not, would that application be acted upon?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. D. ROSS. If the non-union men made an application and the union men did not, would that application be acted on?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

On section 20,

20. Copies of applications or statements in reply thereto, to be transmitted to the other party under any of the preceding sections where the other party is, &c., &c.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Here I would suggest the following amendment, as the result of the debate which took place on this clause : In subsection 3 strike out the words 'an incorporated or registered' and substitute the word 'A.'

For subsection 4 substitute :

Composed of employees some or all of whom are not members of a trade union.

(a) Where some of the employees are members of a trade union shall be sent to the president and secretary of the union as representing the employees belonging to the union; also

(b) Where some of the employees are not members of a trade union and there are no persons authorized to represent such employees, shall be sent to ten of their number.

(c) Where under section 16, subsection 4, two persons have been authorized to make an application shall be sent to such two persons.

This is to meet all cases.

Mr. CONMEE. I assume that the amendment means that in the case of men who are not members of a union, but who had met and elected a chairman and secretary, that chairman and secretary would be recognized.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly ; they are recognized formally in the Bill.

On section 34—scale of witness fees.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Boyce) the other day made an objection as regards the scale of fees to be paid to the witnesses duly attending the meetings of the board. He stated that in Ontario in some civil courts the fees were different from those before a superior court. I suppose they are higher in a superior court. We might perhaps amend it by substituting the words 'criminal cases' for 'civil suits,' which would give you the same scale of fees all over the Dominion.

Mr. LENNOX. That will not improve it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What fees are paid to witnesses in Ontario ?

Mr. BOYCE. $1.25 a day, outside of the three mile limit; the division court fee is seventy-five cents.

Mr. PARDEE. Make this $1.50 a day, with the additional mileage.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That suggestion might be adopted.

Mr. BOYCE. I suggested the other day that this clause should be amended by providing that the witnesses fees shall be governed by the scale for the time being in force with respect to witnesses in civil suits in the Supreme court.

Mr. PARDEE. That would be all right.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 39, how parties may be represented before the court.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I move to strike out section 39 and replace it by the following :

Any party to a reference may be represented before the board by three or less than three persons designated for the purpose, and by counsel or solicitor where allowed, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How are they to be designated in the case of a number of employees, not members of a trade union ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, they will find out themselves I suppose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They certainly would not find out from the Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We must trust them.

New section 39 agreed to.

On section 57, prohibition of strikes or lockouts ; agreement between parties.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. After the award has been given it holds good for one year. Now, immediately after an award has been given a dispute may arise as to whether either of the parties is keeping the award. The men may say that the employer is deliberately violating the agreement, and they may go on strike, maintaining that the finding of the board is not being lived up to. I would suggest an amendment along these lines ; I have not drafted it in legal language.

If after the award has been accepted by both sides a dispute arises as to whether the terms of such award are being violated by either party, then the board shall immediately adjudicate upon the question in dispute.

That would mean, the same board should immediately inquire whether the finding they made is being lived up to by the parties.

Mr. SPROULE. The same board may not be in existence.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am not wedded to it being the same board, but I point this out as being a case not covered by the Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have no objection to the amendment provided these words are added :

The board may be reconvened by the minister.

Mr. FOSTER. How can you regulate the board after it has performed its functions, and made its report.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Duncan Ross) mean that if one of the parties has violated the agreement, the board should be reconvened to decide on that ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. There is this point, that the finding of the commission has been agreed to by the men and the company, and the day after it goes into effect the men raise the question that the company is not keeping it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. member mean the recommendation of the board or does he mean what becomes an award by agreement?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do not care whether it becomes an award by agreement or not. In either case the men raise the point that the company is violating it. There is no machinery in this Act that I can see for finding out whether the men are right or wrong.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the board makes a report or recommendation no one is obliged to observe it.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. But they agree to observe it, and the men claim that the company are not observing it. The Act only provides for the penalties imposed by sections 60 and 61.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see where the hon. gentleman would get to anyway. Here you have the men and the employers before this commission. The case is heard; the commission make their report and recommendation. Up to the time that it is made there is a prohibition of a strike or a lockout, but the moment the report and recommendation is made that provision no longer applies. The next minute the men may walk out and there is no penalty.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am only dealing with the case in which the report of the commission is accepted by the company.

Mr. FOSTER. In what way? If it is by a formal written contract, that is enforceable by law. If it is not by a formal or written contract, it is not enforceable. and if you call your commission together for a second time in order to tell the employer or the men that they are not living up to the agreement, what happens then? The men may still go on strike or the employer may lock out, and there is no provision for a penalty in either case. There is simply the power of sweet persuasion filtering through the lips of the three commissioners, while either of the parties may be obdurate, and, with the fear of neither God or man before their eyes, may go on and do just as they like.

Mr. CONMEE. The two parties may agree, before the board has convened, that the finding of the board shall be a rule of court. My hon. friend (Mr. Duncan Ross) wants to provide that in the case of difference of opinion between the employer and the employees as to the meaning of the finding, the board may be reconvened to determine what its meaning is. I think that point was discussed the other day, and the minister agreed to bring in a section to cover it.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister cannot do it, because he sets out with the idea that this is not to be a compulsory finding.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Except when the parties agree that it shall be so.

Mr. FOSTER. If they do that, and it becomes enforceable by law, the hon. member for British Columbia has what he wants.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No. The point I am making is that after it is enforceable by law there may be an honest difference of opinion as to whether the award is being kept or not. All you can do under this law is to mulct the employees in the penalties provided in the Act, because they believe that the company are not living up to the agreement and consequently go on strike. That would be the worst kind of compulsion. All I ask is that if there is a dispute as to whether the award of the finding being kept or not, the minister should immediately reconvene the commission for the purpose of deciding that point and not enforce the penalties of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member has only in mind those cases in which agreements have been made and acquire the force of law. If the agreement is in the opinion of one or other of the parties being violated who shall decide the matter and enforce the decision? What power will this commission have to enforce it? It may give an opinion, but its opinion would not be worth anything more than it was before. What the hon. member for British Columbia wishes is enforcement; he comes back to the idea of compulsion. But this commission, being jelly-like in its formation, has no power to enforce things. It is the attitude of sweet persuasion that it holds towards all parties.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. You cannot call on the law to punish a man because he has an honest opinion that the other party is not keeping the agreement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You can have another tribunal and show them up to public opinion.

Mr. BOYCE. The only clause in which the matter is dealt with is section 65, which provides that:

Either party to a dispute which may be referred under this Act to a board may agree in writing, at any time before or after the board has made its report and recommendation, to be bound by the recommendation of the board in the same manner as parties are bound upon an award made pursuant to a reference to arbitration on the order of a court of record; every agreement so to be bound made by one party shall be forwarded to the registrar who shall communicate it to the other party, and if the other party agrees in like manner to be bound by the recommendation of the board, then the recommendation shall be made a rule of the said court on the application of either party and shall be enforceable in like manner.

My hon. friend will see that if there has been a finding and if there be a consent by both parties then the function of the board ceases, the award becomes a rule of court and is enforceable to the same extent as an award would be in an arbitration.

Mr. FOSTER. That must be an agreement in writing.

Mr. BOYCE. It must be an agreement in writing.

Mr. PARDEE. The effect of the amendment which the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo proposes would be to absolutely negative some portions of this Bill because how would it be possible that an award should be a rule of court if you were not going to act upon it? It would simply mean that in many cases men, in order to escape the penalties, would invoke a dispute. I think that is wrong.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. All I have to say in reference to the matter is that if you expect that men are going to agree to any award and make it a rule of court enforceable by the court, I am afraid you will never get them to agree to it.

Mr. LENNOX. That is the intention.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I guess that drops; does it not?

On section 67,—Governor in Council may specify certain industries as coming within the provisions of this Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Section 67 stood. That section provides:

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, by notice in the 'Gazette,' declare any specified industry to be an agency of transportation or communication or a public service utility, and such industry shall thereafter be deemed to be included in the provisions of this Act.

This clause has been regarded as rather dangerous from what I hear coming from outside of the House and from inside the House too. Some hon. gentlemen are of the opinion that this might lead to the tyrannical abuse of the power of the Governor in Council with respect to private industry and private business. Therefore I will not press this clause before the committee. I will only say in explanation of its having been drafted and inserted in this Bill that it was drafted to meet certain strikes and lockouts which would be strikes and lockouts within the meaning of this Bill. Suppose that there should exist in the city or district of Ottawa a bread trust as we have had in the city of New York an ice trust; the question might arise whether it would be the duty of the Governor in Council to declare then that it was a public utility and that we must proceed as we do under this Act in order to prevent any strike or lockout. However, in view of the fear that has been expressed on several occasions during the discussion of this Bill, we must give time to public opinion to be educated on the general provisions and features of this new legislation and consequently I will drop this clause for the present. But, I want to impress the committee with the idea that it was not inserted there with the view of giving the Governor in Council any tyrannical power of investigating the private business of any private concerns but just to carry out the intention of the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 67 is expunged.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister intend to drop section 68 also?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Section 68 is passed.

Mr. LENNOX. I mean now that the minister has dropped section 67, should he not drop section 68? It seems to me it is more arbitrary. What is it for? What does it mean? It follows out section 67. It empowers the minister to determine what industries are included in a public service utility. These words are also used in section 67. I do not know what the object of this is. It is more arbitrary and more dangerous than the other.

Mr. CONMEE. There must be finality somewhere.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think this clause is very important and very useful. My hon. friend is wrong when he thinks it is very arbitrary.

Mr. LENNOX. There is no doubt about it being arbitrary; it may be necessary.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is necessary to determine what is included in this class of industry, but the moment we declare that we will not interfere with private industries, as mentioned in the preceding clause, there should be no fear as to the application of this clause.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who is to refer it and how is it to be referred? I do not quite understand how it will be worked out in actual practice.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Minister of Labour, of course, will administer the present Bill and he will communicate with the Governor in Council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The clause does not say anything about the Governor in Council.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Communication will be had between the parties and the minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The clause is certainly unnecessary for that purpose, because when the parties under the Act shall make application through the minister he will not act if he thinks it does not concern a trade within the meaning of the statute. If he thinks it is a trade within the meaning of the statute then he will take the necessary proceedings to have the board appointed. The section certainly is not necessary for that purpose and I do not understand yet what purpose it would answer or how it would be worked out. Who is to refer it to the minister? By what procedure is it to be referred to the minister? Are the parties to be heard before him, and if so, what parties and upon what notice? All these are matters for consideration when you come to consider the practical application of the clause.

Mr. CONMEE. That I think would be provided for by the rules. The Act provides that the Minister of Labour may provide rules and forms and I suppose that the machinery would be set out in the rules.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not agree with that view.

Mr. LENNOX. In the interpretation clause it is stated that the provisions of the Act shall apply to a certain class of employment, but I do not know of any clause where there is any provision for the particular employment that appertains to one of the industries as distinguishing it from the industry itself? Now, the word here used is not that the minister shall determine the particular class of industry as coming within the Act; but other industries which are not exactly of that class, but which pertain to it he may declare to come within the provisions of the Act. I do not see anything in the general scope of the Act which justifies this clause. It is not necessary in conjunction with the interpretation clauses, so far as I can see, and I do not remember any other provision bringing in other and ancillary occupations.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Take the case of the longshoremen, for instance: The question may arise whether they belong to the shipping industry, which is a public utility, or are to be regarded as ordinary labourers. The minister may be called upon, after a reference has been made to him, to decide upon this point. And—answering the question raised a moment ago—the minister will decide at the time the reference is made to him whether the law applies or does not apply to the particular industry in which these parties are engaged. I think it well to keep this clause in order to give some discretion to the minister under the law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under section 6 the minister has all the discretion that is necessary. That section provides:

> Whenever, under this Act, an application is made in due form for the appointment of a board of conciliation and investigation, the minister, within thirty days from the date at which the application is received, shall establish such board under his hand and seal of office.

If the industry in respect of which the application is made does not come within the terms of the Act, the minister would have no power to constitute the board. But what I do not understand is the 'reference' to the minister—by whom is it to be made, under what notice, and how is to be done?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The application is made to the minister, and on that application he may declare that the law does not apply, on the ground that the employment involved is not a public utility.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the time for him to decide.

Mr. LEMIEUX. True. But, during the investigation, the question may arise before the commissioners, and then the minister will declare whether it is a public utility or not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But, the minister will have already decided that question by constituting the board, because under the terms of the Act, he can constitute the board only in such cases.

Mr. LENNOX. The interpretation clause shows exactly what is to come within the scope of the Act, when application is made, the minister must determine whether the employment involved comes under the Act or not. But the Bill goes even further and gives the minister power to determine even contrary to the fact—he may decide that an employment is of the class provided for under the Act when, in fact, it is not of that class. If the Bill means anything, it means that. It gives the minister even a wider latitude than is given by the interpretation clause. What we should have is the interpretation clause alone. Anything that comes within the scope of that should be dealt with and every thing else rejected.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it might be desirable to provide that, if the minister having decided to constitute the board in respect of a certain matter, should, upon reconsideration conclude that the matter did not come within the terms of the Act, he would be free to disestablish the board. But this seems to go further and to give the minister the arbitrary power referred to by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox.)

Mr. LEMIEUX. After the case is referred to the board, a question might arise whether the certain class of employees, for instance, the shipwrights come under the Act. It might be contended that they were a building trade and did not belong to transportation, and so were free to act regardless of this law. Under the Bill as now proposed, the minister would have power to decide that question and say whether this employment was a public utility or not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It gives a great deal of power to the minister if its terms are read literally. Suppose, for instance, that the men in a particular industry wish to strike. They are advised by counsel that their industry does not come within the terms of this statute, and they strike. If they are charged with violation of this statute, is the decision of the minister to be invoked in the courts, and used, possibly as a means of punishing these men, even though under the construction of the statute by the courts they would not be guilty of any offence? I do not think that that power should be vested in any man in the minister's position.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The powers may appear to be wide, but my hon. friend must not forget that the minister, being responsible to parliament, will take good care not to override the law and not to act arbitrarily. He will have to render an account of his stewardship at the next session of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. At the next caucus.

Mr. LEMIEUX. At the next great caucus of the nation. It seems to me that the minister should be clothed with large powers seeing that he can be held to responsibility for the operation of the law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I mean is that the men should have their case adjudged according to the law of the land as determined by the court, and not according to the law of the land as determined by the minister. I do not know whether the clause goes so far as I have suggested, but apparently its terms are intended to go that far.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am ready to yield to the judgment of my hon. friend. What would he suggest in order the better to define any 'specified industry to be an agency of transportation or communication or a public service utility'? Would it not be better to leave it to the minister to determine?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am willing to leave it to the minister so far as parliamentary responsibility is concerned. So far as the constitution of the board is concerned, the minister might conceivably make a mistake, and his action would be a subject of criticism in parliament if he constituted a board in an industry which, by the judgment of some court afterwards, was found not to be included within the terms of this statute. But in respect of the responsibility of the men for any penalty or punishment, the statute should be made perfectly plain that the determination of the minister should in no wise affect that. That is not a matter upon which the minister can invoke his parliamentary responsibility. Men always have been governed by the law of the land in this country, and I hope always will be governed by the law as construed by the courts, and not as construed by a minister of the Crown.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think the point of my hon. friend is well taken, and after recess I will have some further amendment.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Before recess we were discussing section 69 and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was suggesting an amendment to section 68. Has he framed his amendment?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I have not had an opportunity.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As this is a quasi-judicial matter what would my hon. friend think of referring it to the Minister of Justice instead of to the Minister of Labour?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would not improve it from my standpoint. I would like to leave everything to the minister absolutely as far as he is responsible for the administration of the Act. When an application is made some one must decide whether or not the industry is of the class specified, and I make not the slightest objection to the minister doing so; but I do not like to have the Act go further and to use any language which might be construed as taking away from the courts of the country the determination of whether these men had or had not been guilty of an offence by going on strike under certain circumstances. These are matters which ought not to be left to the determination of the minister in any way. I would say the same thing if it were a Conservative Minister of Labour. I would be inclined to think the minister has all necessary powers under section 6 because under that he can do what he sees fit.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Although I think that the Minister of Labour, whether a Conservative or a Liberal, would, in any case, pronounce judiciously and judicially on the question of whether or not a particular employment comes under the definition of a public utility. I see the point of my hon. friend's objection. In view of the fact that very heavy penalties are imposed under the Act, I can see that this might in some cases give rise to a very serious conflict and therefore I would not object to dropping this clause and leaving it to the courts. I therefore move that the clause be dropped.

Mr. VERVILLE. Does that mean that sections 67 and 68 will be dropped?

Mr. LEMIEUX. 68, yes.

Mr. VERVILLE. Both of them?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. VERVILLE. I do not like to see that. When I first read the Bill I thought that section 67 was the best protection we could get. It is all very well if the government is in session; they might decide by resolution that such and such an occupation is a public utility but what would happen between sessions? There are many things that would come under the head of public utilities which in fact would be more really public utilities than those specified in the Bill. We have had cases cited and there are others that would be more public utilities than a strike on a street railway. If the government cannot decide who will?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The courts.

Mr. VERVILLE. The courts? How long will that take. Criticism has been made of the length of time that will be required to make an award. I was sorry to see section 67 dropped, and dropping 68 makes it still worse. There is no one to decide what is a public utility. Take the longshoremen's strike in Montreal years ago, when you had to call out the militia; was that not a strike on a public utility? We must take into consideration the damage caused to all classes of society by a strike. If you drop section 67 I hope you will leave section 68. Give us something that we can go to, some one responsible to the people at large. If you drop that we have nothing at all.

Mr. BOYCE. Clause 6 of the Bill gives the minister the right to establish a board and the argument of the leader of the opposition as against section 68 as well as against 67 was that before the establishment of the board under clause 6 it would be the duty of the minister to ascertain the applicability of the Act to the particular industry under consideration and that the minister would not establish a board under section 6 unless he was satisfied that the Act applied to that particular form of industry as a public utility and therefore that the matter, although taken out of section 68, is still absolutely in the discretion of the minister who is charged with the administration of the Act and he would have the same power of interpretation under section 6 as under section 68. The reason 68 is dropped is that the power is vested in the minister under section 6, and he would decide under 6 before the board is constituted instead of at a later stage with possible delay under 68.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not concur in the proposition to strike out section 68. It is true that the minister under 6 would have power to decide whether he should constitute a board, if he thinks the application is made by those who are not intended to come under this Act.

Mr. BOYCE. Take section 3 with section 6.

Mr. CONMEE. Suppose the minister does constitute a board would there not be an opening to take the ground that there was no jurisdiction under the Act in reference to that particular employment and thus hold the matter up for a long time? I think that under the Act the government or some minister should be held responsible to the people of the country for the simple working of this Act. If this Act is going to require the best legal talent of the county to determine its meaning, it will not secure the confidence of the labour organizations as we all hope it should. There is force in the objection that too much arbitrary power should not be put in the hands of the minister, but, nevertheless, I favour the clause because I see no other means of affording simple and practicable machinery to enable those who desire to take advantage of the Act to do so without difficulty. So long as we have a good Minister of Labour, such as we have now, I have no fear, but the time might come when the man in charge of the portfolio might not be so admirable and so just as the present minister. However, we must risk even that possibility. He would be responsible to public opinion and I see no other simple recourse. The propositioin is in the public interest; it is certainly in the interest of the labouring men.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) to advocate that some minister should be made responsible for the administration of this law?

Mr. CONMEE. I thought my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) had a better understanding than that. What I was trying to convey was that if this section is expunged, section 6 does not give the jurisdiction which I think it ought to give. I want to see some minister of the Crown responsible for deciding the questions which may arise under this section.

Mr. BOYCE. When the minister receives an application he decides whether it is in reference to a public utility. When he constitutes a board he decides all questions relating to the applicability of the Act, and there is a finality so far as his jurisdiction is concerned.

Mr. CONMEE. There is no provision in the statute giving the minister power to decide. He may establish a board under section 6, but its legality may be attacked in the courts and all kinds of delay may occur.

Mr. PARDEE. As to bringing the Act into force, might we not amend section 6 by such a provision as this:

> Whenever, under this Act, an application is made in due form for the appointment of a board of conciliation and investigation, the minister, on being satisfied that the provisions of this Act should apply, shall within thirty days from the date on which the application is received, establish such board under his hand and seal, &c.

True, that brings us back to where we were before, but if the Act is to be of use at all, there ought to be a provision giving some person the right to say whether the dispute or contemplated strike is in connection with a public utility.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should have no objection to that; I think section 6 means that now.

Mr. PARDEE. There seems to be ambiguity.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree that so far as the board is concerned the minister must be responsible.

Mr. PARDEE. Do you not think the striking out of sections 67 and 68 would leave an ambiguity, so far as the power of the minister is concerned?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think so, but I have no objection to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CONMEE. I agree with that suggestion so far as it goes, but I think there should be some words in the clause declaring that the decision of the minister shall be final. What I want is that the decision of the minister shall stand, and that the employees shall not be dragged from one court to another. If the door is open for that sort of thing, well, the Act may be of advantage to the employers but it will be of no use to the poor workingman.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection that the decision of the minister as to the formation of the board shall be final, but I do object to the decision of the minister controlling proceedings against these men in a criminal court. The men ought not to be controlled in the criminal courts by the decision of any minister of the Crown whether Conservative or Liberal. My suggestion has been spoken of as being against the men. It is not. It is in favour of the men, so that they may be judged by the law of the land, as is their right, and not by a minister of the Crown.

Mr. CONMEE. I did not intend to insinuate in the slightest degree that the proposal made by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) was against the men; on the contrary, I quite agree with him.

Mr. PARDEE. I move that section 6 be amended so as to read :

Whenever, under this Act, an application is made in due form for the appointment of a board of conciliation and investigation, the minister, whose decision for such purpose shall be binding, shall, within fifteen days from the date at which the application is received, establish such board under his hand and seal of office, if satisfied that the provisions of this Act apply.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 68 and 69 struck out.

On section 35,

Mr. LEMIEUX. Now comes the question of including the railway men within the provisions of this Act. As I have stated before, we met some delegations from certain brotherhoods when the Bill was introduced. The railway men represented by Mr. Harvey Hall claimed that the provisions of this Act were cumbersome and expensive as regarded their organizations, and represented to the minister that they would rather remain under the operation of the Railway Labour Disputes Act of 1903. I have had several communications with Mr. Hall, and I am sorry to say that this gentleman persists in the position which he took at the beginning, and will not yield to the invitation to come under the operation of the present Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister says that Mr. Harvey Hall objects to come under the operation of this Bill. Is that as the representative of the trainmen, or is it a personal matter on his part?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I mean as representing the railway men—not all of them, I may say, but some of the brotherhoods. The hon. gentleman must not assume that when I speak of Mr. Hall I speak of him personally. I speak of him as acting for several brotherhoods with which he is connected.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the minister kindly name some of the brotherhoods?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have not the list here, but he represents many. I regret to say that Mr. Hall persists in the position he has taken on behalf of some of the railway brotherhoods. We claim that this Bill is less expensive and less cumbersome to the railway organizations than the Labour Disputes Act of 1903. I made a proposition to Mr. Hall which I thought he would accept. I have asked Mr. Hall to let his brotherhood, and the railway men in general, come under the provisions of the Railway Labour Disputes Act, provided the Railway Labour Disputes Act were amended so as to, at all events, prevent a strike before any investigation should have taken place. I have received a letter from him, in which he declines to accept the proposition which has been made to him. Under these circumstances, and in view of the position occupied in the country by the railway men, in view of the importance of the present legislation, and in order to protect the public against any strike or lock-out on the part of railway employees or railway companies, I have decided, after consultation with my colleagues and many members of this House, that the Act should not apply to any railway company or to the employees of any such company with respect to any dispute which has been referred and dealt with under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Act respecting conciliation and labour. That is to say, railway employees and railway companies will come under the operation of this Act if they do not accept the operation of the Railway Labour Disputes Act. If they prefer to accept the Railway Labour Disputes Act they are at liberty to do so. Under that Act an investigation can take place before a strike has been ordered, or during the strike, or after. The Railway Labour Disputes Act will remain on the statute-book. They can invoke the provisions of that Act, or if they refuse, then this Act applies. I have drafted an amendment which will form a new section by itself. It reads as follows :

This Act shall apply to any railway company or the employees of any such company in respect of any dispute which has been referred and dealt with under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Act respecting conciliation and labour.

I speak here of the Act respecting conciliation and labour because it is so defined under the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. LENNOX. While my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is looking over this proposed amendment, I desire to call the minister's attention to the fact that I have received a number of communications in regard to this subject. I propose to quote to the minister these two telegrams. They are both from Barrie. One is :

The Order of Railway Conductors, representing the northern division of the Grand Trunk Railway, respectfully request exemption from the Lemieux Bill, or that Bill be withdrawn this session.

(Sgd.) K. McLENNAN,
Chief Conductor.

The other is:

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, representing the northern division of the Grand Trunk at Allandale, respectfully request exemption from Lemieux Bill ; failing exemption that Bill be withdrawn.

(Sgd.) J. LITTLE.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have also received several telegrams of the same nature, but the answer is very plain and it is that they need not be afraid of the provisions of the present legislation because they are at liberty to remain under the old legislation. If they are satisfied with the Act of 1903, and if they wish to avail themselves of the provisions of that Act they are at liberty to do so.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is the minister in a position to tell the House whether the railway brotherhoods accept this new proposal? What they asked was to be relieved from the scope of the Act altogether and to show that, I want to read a message I have here :

The joint general committee of the Order of Railroad Conductors and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, in session assembled at Toronto, beg to advise you that the proposed measure known as Bill No. 36 is inimical to the interests of the men in train service. We, therefore, respectfully ask that you use your influence to have the same amended by eliminating steam railways from the Bill.

Mr. PARDEE. Who is it signed by ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is signed by Mr. W. J. Rath, secretary of the joint committee. The views of the men are very admirably set out in a resolution passed by the Cigar Makers' International Union. While they are not concerned in this Bill they have a very clear appreciation of the situation and their resolution runs in this way.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Are they a public utility?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No, but they have their view in regard to organized labour.

Whereas the Hon. the Minister of Labour has introduced a Bill providing for compulsory investigation of industrial disputes ;

And whereas the said Bill enjoins such unions as may come under its provisions from striking under any circumstances pending the conclusions of the sittings and report of the findings of the arbitrators which may take thirty or sixty days or be prolonged for an indefinite period of time, denying workmen the right to strike until after the publication of the report of the arbitrators ;

And whereas the said Bill does not similarly enjoin the employer who may inaugurate a strike by a summary reduction of wages or other rupture of existing agreement causing cessation of work ;

And whereas the said Bill is, in our opinion, a long step in the direction of compulsory arbitration, which same we believe would be an unlimited curse to the workingmen of this country, and which the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, the legislative mouthpiece of the workers of Canada, have denounced and pronounced against ;

And whereas the ostensible object stated as sought for by said Bill, viz., the avoidance or settlement of industrial disputes, particularly in mining and transportation, and such as are generally described as public utilities, would be better obtained, and the general public who are so dependent upon these things would be far better satisfied if these utilities were brought, as they ought to be, under public ownership ;

Therefore, be it resolved that we, the Cigarmakers' International Union No. 27, of Toronto, denounce the said Bill as opposed to the best interests of labour in this country and against the interests of labour generally; and be it further resolved that copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the Hon. Minister of Labour, Toronto parliamentary representatives, Alphonse Verville, M.P., W. F. Maclean, M.P., editor 'Industrial Banner,' and the press, Toronto.

I would like the minister to say, since he has decided on a compromise policy and since he says he has been in long consultation with Mr. Hall, the legislative agent of these brotherhoods, whether he has submitted this compromise to him. I would ask that he should go no further in regard to this proposal to-night, but give them an opportunity of being heard again. For these railroad brotherhoods are a very extensive organization and embrace a very fine class of men. I know no better men in Canada than are the men who run our railroads. They have the lives of the public in their hands, and they are worthy of the trust. They are law abiding citizens. I know hundreds of them personally and meet them year after year; and if there are any citizens of Canada who are entitled to be heard in this parliament and to have their representations most carefully considered, they are the men making up the railroad brotherhoods in Canada.

Mr. TALBOT. Are they in favour of the two-cent fare?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes. And they are in favour of public ownership. And they are in favour of a good many other things—and will be in favour of a new government if their views are not listened to. So I put it to the minister as a reasonable suggestion that, as he has said he has negotiated with the brotherhoods, he should go one step further and have some further conference with regard to the proposal he has submitted.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As I said a moment ago, during the last four or five weeks I have had several communications from Mr. Hall, but, as I have already informed the House, he would not accept any compromise, but simply stated: 'There is a law in the statute-book governing the relations of the railway employees to the railway companies and we do not want any change in that law.' Well, under this section, the brotherhoods he represents, are at liberty to remain under the Railway Labour Disputes Act. But there are other railway employees who are ready to accept the provisions of this Bill. Mr. Hall says—and, of course, it is his right to hold and to express his opinion—your Bill is too expensive and cumbersome and we prefer the existing law. Very well; let him remain under the operation of the existing law. But one thing is certain, they must remain under the operation of one law or the other, just as the railway companies must remain under a legislation which protects the public. My hon. friend cites the opinion of the cigarmakers. I have a very high regard for the cigarmakers; they are earnest labourers. But the cigarmakers are not concerned in any public utility or engaged in the production of a necessary of life. I prefer the opinion of the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress which has represented for years the healthy and honest opinion of organized labour in Canada. The Dominion Trades and Labour Congress has signified its endorsation of the present legislation in no uncertain terms. I have stated already that in September or October last that great representative body passed a resolution in favour of a legislation such as this, and after the Bill was introduced, they sent a delegation to Ottawa to meet the Prime Minister and Minister of Labour to express strongly their approval of this Bill. The street railway men of Toronto held a public meeting and unanimously endorsed this legislation. And so did the Toronto Trades and Labour Council. In fact, nearly all the labour organizations in Canada support this measure. We have the opposition of Mr. Hall because he says, speaking always on behalf of the railway brotherhoods, that he prefers to remain under the provisions of the law of 1903. Now, he has stated in his letter criticising this Bill that this is the second step taken by this government in favour of compulsory arbitration. Well, if he contends that this is the second step towards compulsory arbitration, he was himself a party to the first step taken in 1903, because he gave his unqualified endorsation to the Bill introduced in this House is 1903 by Sir William Mulock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And he endorses it still.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly, and, under this section he is at liberty, and the brotherhoods he represent are at liberty, to remain under the provisions of the Act of 1903, or, if they prefer, to come under the operation of the present law. But, Sir it would not be fair, it would not be honest, to exclude all railway employees when other organizations come under the provisions of this Bill, for the railways are the greatest of our public utilities. Now, in 1903, Mr. Hall, on behalf of the brotherhood, wrote the following letter:

Hon. Sir,—After the great amount of consideration that I have given to your Bill for the settlement of railway labour disputes and your desire to put a Bill such as it is on the statutes of the country, for the purpose for which it is aimed, I feel that considering those motives, it is one that should be endorsed by the members of parliament. The fact that the Bill has the power of appointing a conciliation committee, whose duty it will be to endeavour by all possible means to bring about settlements of disputes that may arise, I have no doubt will have good effect. Although in the train service we have had no serious difficulties between the train hands and the company for over ten years, and I don't see that there is a possibility in the near future of anything of the kind occurring, still, the fact of a measure such as this being under the statutes of Canada will place the Minister of Labour in a position to use his good offices to bring about a settlement of those differences, should they arise, possibly without going so far as arbitration. If, after the committee have failed to settle the difference, then the privilege of course, of referring the matter to arbitration, or of what is more a fact—investigation of the difference between the company and their men. They making their report to the Minister of Labour, who will, according to the provisions of the Act, make report of the findings of that committee through the public press of the country; this being for the purpose of influence by public opinion. Something, I believe, that will have that force behind it, that no matter which side of the controversy refuses to be fair, will compel them to accept reasonable conditions and to make a settlement. As I said before, the matter has had a great deal of consideration from myself, and also from other representative railway men of the country, and while admitting that there are a number of those interested who opposed the Bill, I think merely from the fact that they believe that the existing circumstances are all that are required, claiming that they have been able, up to the present, to settle their differences without interference from anybody, and believe that they can still continue to do so, and argue that there is no occasion for the Bill. But I am confident that a large majority of those interested are satisfied to accept your Bill, with the guarantee that it is intended to accomplish the one object—the bringing about of settlements of disputes that may arise.

As the legislative representative of the Brothrerhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Order of Railway Telegraphers, I have consented to the Bill as it is now introduced, and hope that all concerned will make the necessary use of the Bill, if the occasion ever arises, and also that it will be interpreted according to the ideas and intentions of the minister, and as I believe the Bill is intended to operate, and serve, my only wish is that it will be the dove of peace to bring about conditions where sometimes we have war and enmity to each other.

Respectfully yours,
(Sgd.) J. H. HALL.

So, Mr. Chairman, in 1903 Mr. Hall was in favour of a Bill which gives power to the minister to order a public investigation before a strike takes place or while a strike is going on, or after it has taken place; while in 1907, Mr. Hall says that he does not wish to come under the operation of the Bill which I have introduced, and which is about to pass this House, but that he still wishes to remain under the operation of the Act of 1903. Very well, he will remain under the operation of that Act if he chooses to do so, and if he does not, then he must come under the operation of this Act. Is that not fair? But he has himself declared that the Act of 1903 is a dove of peace, inasmuch as it provides for an investigation and decision, and brings peace where there were disputes, and settlement where there was war. I think that the railway employees, at least those who are behind Mr. Hall, should not persist in opposing this legislation, especially the present section, which has in view only the protection of the public and their own interests. What objection does Mr. Hall raise? From the beginning his objection has been this: This legislation will entail unnecessary expense on our railway organizations, it is a cumbersome Bill, and we prefer the first one. Well, we now give Mr. Hall and the railway brotherhood which he represents the option of remaining under the Railway Disputes Act, which he accepted, or of coming under the operation of the present Bill. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the committee should pronounce finally and say that in order to protect the public against the effect of any strike or lockout in the railway world, the employees should come under the operation of this law as well as the employers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has on at least two occasions, in my presence, quoted the letter of Mr. Harvey Hall as a reason why this Act should be made to apply to the railway employees. If I understood the letter aright, it contains every reason why they do not desire to be brought under this Act. The minister says that they declare the Act of 1903 to be a good Act, they hail it as the dove of peace and what he says is quite true; but it is precisely for this reason that the men want to remain under it. The minister says he does leave them under it, but I do not think he does so very satisfactorily, and I will explain why. His proposed amendment is as follows:

Mr. LEMIEUX.

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or employees of any such company in respect of any dispute which has been referred to and dealt with under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Act respecting conciliation of labour.

To advert for a moment to the wording of the section, there is no such a thing as a reference in the Conciliation and Labour Act at all. The language is badly chosen. All that the Conciliation and Labour Act provides is that the minister, in case of a dispute, may, upon application of either of the parties, or of any municipal body, cause an inquiry to be made into the same and into the cause thereof. There is nothing in the first instance about a reference in the Act so far as I am aware; certainly not in the main section of the Act. So this is not very happily worded, in the first place. The amendment provides that this Act shall not apply in respect of any dispute which has been referred and dealt with under the Conciliation and Labour Act. So until you have had the dispute referred under that Act—and there is no provision in that Act for referring it in the first instance—and until you have had the dispute dealt with under that Act, then the application of this Act is not eliminated. If you desire to do what the minister says is in his mind, you will have to adopt a different wording, and make a provision something like this:

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or the employees of any such company in respect of any dispute, if either party thereto applies to the minister to cause inquiry to be made into the same and the cause thereof, under the provisions of the Conciliation and Labour Act.

I have followed the wording of the Conciliation and Labor Act, and possibly the expressions I have used might be improved, because I have written them out hurriedly. The operative words of section 13, which was section 3 of the original Act of 1903, are as follows:

The minister may either on the application of any party to the difference, or on the application of the corporation of any municipality directly affected by the difference, or of his own motion, cause inquiry to be made into the same and the cause thereof, and for that purpose may, under his hand and seal of office, establish a committee of conciliation.

I have not made the section even so broad as it might be made under the operation of section 13 because it would not perhaps be unfair that this Act should apply unless either one or other of the parties invoked the operation of the Act of 1903. That I understand to be the minister's intention. Perhaps I am not correct in that. Would he say whether he proposes to make his present Act absolutely applicable unless either one or other of the parties to the difference shall apply to the minister to cause an inquiry to be made under the Act of 1903?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, and after the reference has taken place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty then is that at any time before that inquiry has been concluded you can still bring the men or the employer under this Act if you follow the literal reading of your section. I propose to eliminate this Act as soon as either one of the parties applies under the Act of 1903. The minister's section does not eliminate the application of this Act until after the matter has been referred and dealt with under the Act of 1903. I say that if what the minister proposes is carried out, either of the parties can absolutely bring this Act into operation just as soon as the other invokes the Act of 1903. That is the difference between the two proposals and it is a very important one.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend states that either party may apply to the Minister of Labour under the Act of 1903, and the Minister of Labour may of his own motion cause an inquiry to be made—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On such application or of his own motion.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The inquiry may or may not take place; it is optional; it is discretionary on the part of the minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is my hon. friend of the opinion that the railway employees or the railway companies as the case may be can strike or lockout without any investigation taking place? The object of the new section which I propose is that under no circumstances shall a strike or lockout occur on a railway without an investigation having taken place. The railway employees claim that the present Bill is too cumbersome and entails too vast an expenditure for them and they prefer to remain under the Act of 1903. They do not say that they object to the investigation taking place before the strike. If my hon. friend will read the letters which were published by Mr. Harvey Hall he will find that they do not object to the investigation taking place before the strike is declared; the objection is that the procedure under this Act is too cumbersome and expensive. Well and good, you shall come under the operation of the Act of 1903, and when the matter referred under the provisions of the Act of 1903 has been dealt with and decided then this Act shall not apply to the dispute in question. That is the object of the new section. I shall read the objections of Mr. Hall to the present Bill. I have here a letter addressed to myself, January 17, 1907:

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of yours of January 15, in which you say there is a possibility of your being unable to hold over the second reading of your Bill for compulsory investigation in industrial disputes until after February 5. I sincerely hope, however that you will be able to do so as I feel that an understanding prior to the second reading might shorten the discussion and also give you a better understanding of the position of the railway men in respect of this legislation.

In the last paragraph of your letter you asked me to give my reasons for claming that your Bill is not in the interests of the railway organizations or in the interest of peace between them and the companies. At this date I am not at liberty to go into any extended argument on the question for the reason I have not had time to consult with any great number of my clients. However, I think I can claim that the railway men of Canada should have been exempt from the Act. I do so from the fact that our organizations have always been very conservative in their actions.

I am glad to find the word 'conservative,' because some hon. gentlemen the other day thought I had invented the word.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a good word.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is a good word.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do not apologize.

Mr. LEMIEUX. (reading):

I do so from the fact that our organizations have always been very conservative in their actions and dealings with their companies and have on many occasions spent thousands of dollars negotiating their grievances rather than take extreme measures. In a few days I expect to have information showing the amounts which are positively astonishing spent in this way. Months have also been spent in negotiating, and when I said in my letter that I did not think it was in the interests of our organizations I referred to sections in the Act that will encourage further delays and expense which must be borne by the employees, and an opportunity will be given the railway companies to further harass their employees without any advantage in so far as the public is concerned other than that which is now in the Railway Disputes Act, 1903. When I mention the fees I do so owing to the reason that the railway organizations will have to change their policy from that of extended negotiation and attempt without spending money and time in efforts to make a settlement when they know this Act is liable to be used to create delay and expense on their membership, and I am quite satisfied it will not tend to continue the harmonious relations which now exist.

The letter then discusses sections of the Bill and is signed by Mr. J. Harvey Hall. Thus my hon. friend will see that the only objection raised against this Bill by Mr. Hall is that it makes the procedure too expensive and cumbersome for the railway men's organization.

Here is another letter dated January 28, addressed to the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Minister of Labour:

Referring to my letter of January 17, in which I said I was not in a position to make an extended argument on the reasons why the railway men of Canada were liable not to agree with the conditions in your Bill I am now in a position to say to you that the organizations which I represent, being the conductors, locomotive engineers, trainmen and telegraphers, are going to ask to be exempted from the operation of your Act for the reasons of increased expenses in their deliberations and negotiations with their companies. The following will give you an idea of what is spent by the railroad organizations of Canada in negotiating with the companies by reference to the schedules which were agreed on during the year 1906. On the Grand Trunk system the conductors and trainmen acting jointly spent $5,572 on commission expenses. The same organizations on the Canadian Pacific Railway on lines east Fort William $12,043, commission expenses in negotiating their schedules.

He goes on quoting the expenses and continues :

We claim that your Act will create a condition that will bring about further delay and expenses upon the men. We also claim that the Railway Disputes Settlement Act, 1903, is as far as is necessary for the government to go in so far as the steam railway men are concerned, and I again ask you to withhold the second reading of the Bill until after February 5, when we will have representations from the men when these questions can be discussed.

Thanking you in advance, &.,

(Sgd.) J. HARVEY HALL.

So that according to Mr. Hall himself they are quite willing to come under the operation of the Act of 1903 and they are at liberty to be under the operation of that Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I beg the minister's pardon.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But if he does not choose to come under the operation of the Act of 1903 surely the public must be protected, surely a strike must not be allowed on any railway system without an investigation taking place. The objection of Mr. Hall is that the machinery in this Bill is too cumbersome and too expensive. But under the Act of 1903, the minister has power to order an investigation before the strike takes place, and the action of the minister is described in section 15 as a reference.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand perfectly what you mean now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a provision in the Act of 1903 for the formation of a board of conciliation, and if that board is not successful, a board of arbitration may be appointed, so that, contrary to Mr. Hall's idea, the machinery in the Act of 1903 is not less cumbersome and less expensive than the machinery in the present Bill. But I yield to the request of Mr. Hall and the brotherhoods which he represents. I say to them : You will continue to be under the operation of the Act of 1903, but if you choose not to apply, and if your dispute is not referred before the strike or lockout takes place, then surely no one will say that no investigation shall take place as provided in this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difference between the brotherhoods of railway men and the minister was this. They did not want sections 57 and 58 to be made applicable to them, because, they said, there is a careful, and patient, and thorough investigation, so far as they are concerned, not only in the various grades of their order, but through all the railway departments from the lowest to the highest, before they decide on a strike. They said : You have practically all the investigation which is necessary or desirable, and you should not subject us to the operation of sections 57 and 58 of this Act ; you have the Act of 1903, which, as the present Minister of Labour and his predecessor have declared, has operated successfully and perfectly in the prevention of strikes ; and therefore there is no occasion to impose on us the restrictions of this statute. The minister first told us he proposed to get over this difficulty by allowing the railway men to remain under the Act of 1903, but to so amend it that sections 57 and 58 of this Bill should be added to the terms of that statute. He does not do that. But he does the same thing in another way ; he proposes to add to this statute the following clause :

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or to employees of any such company in respect to any dispute which has been referred and dealt with under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Act respecting conciliation and mediation.

The minister says he is providing for simplicity of procedure, but let us see. You can proceed under the Act of 1903 on the application of either one party or the other, and the minister upon that application establishes a board of conciliation, which has the duty of endeavouring, by conciliation and mediation, to bring about an amicable settlement of the difficulties, and to report the proceedings to the minister. The conciliation committee may for months be endeavouring to effect a settlement; and in case it fails the minister may refer the differences to arbitration. First, you have the conciliation committee, then you have a board of arbitration appointed by the minister, and, so far as I understand the proposed amendment, at any time before the board of arbitration completes its work, one party or the other can invoke the provisions of the Bill which we are now considering, and thus you will have a third tribunal. I do not see any simplicity of procedure in that. It seems to me a perfect mockery. The minister speaks as if the railway men would have their choice; they will have no choice. The minister may begin by appointing a committee of conciliation, which may work for weeks or months; he may then refer the dispute to a board of arbitrators, and these arbitrators may work for weeks or months; and then, at the very last moment, if the employer thinks the board of arbitration is likely to decide against him, he can undo all the work that has been done and he can proceed under the provisions of the statute now before us. Almost anything is better than a scheme of that kind. And yet that is the scheme which is seriously proposed to us by the minister, if I understood him correctly; if not, I should like him to correct me.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend seems to forget that I was simply yielding to the requests made by Mr. Hall.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Am I correct in my interpretation of what may take place under the proposal which the minister now makes?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend seems to forget that I am yielding to the demand of Mr. Hall and the brotherhoods he represents, in giving them the option of remaining under the Act of 1903. I agree with my hon. friend that the Act of 1903 is not simplicity itself in the way of procedure. It is more cumbersome and more expensive than the present Bill; but the railway men, as represented by Mr. Hall, do not wish to come under the operation of the present Bill, they wish to remain under the operation of the other. We say: Very well, remain under the operation of the other; but if you do not invoke the Act of 1903, you will come under the Act of 1907.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The amendment does not say that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, the amendment says that this Act shall not apply to railway companies or railway employees with respect to any dispute that may have been referred and dealt with under the provisions of the Railway Labour Disputes Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What do you mean by the expression 'dealt with'?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will give an example. Suppose that I am a railway employee, and with my fellow workers decide that a strike shall be declared. Before declaring the strike, I consult with the committee, and we decide to invoke the provisions of the Act of 1903. We make our application to the Minister of Labour, and he orders an investigation to take place before the strike is declared. A board of conciliation is constituted, and if it does not succeed in settling the dispute, a board of arbitration is appointed, its findings are published, and then the parties are at liberty to strike or not to strike. On the other hand, the committee decide not to come under the operation of the Act of 1903, but to come under what I consider the more expeditious procedure of the Act of 1907. They follow the procedure which is indicated in the Bill which we are now considering. They have the option of the two Acts. The point I wish to make clear is that the strike will not take place before the investigation has taken place, whether it is under the operation of the Act of 1903 or the Act of 1907.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose the men under the Act of 1903 make an application on February 1, for the intervention of the minister under the terms of that Act. Is it not perfectly possible for the employer on February 2, to make his application under the terms of the Act of 1907, and to bring that Act into instant operation, and in that way to nullify the action of the men under the Act of 1903? That is one question. Is it not possible for the employer to do that very same thing on every day that intervenes between the day of the application by the employees under the Act of 1903 and the day on which there has been a final award by a board of arbitration constituted by the minister under the same Act?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend, I am sure, wishes to be fair; but is he really fair when he supposes the first case? Does my hon. friend believe that the Minister of Labour will be satisfied—in accordance with the terms of the amendment adopted a few minutes ago—that the second application is well founded in view of the one made on February 1? Surely my hon. friend sees that the Minister of Labour will not grant the second application if there is one pending since February 1 with regard to the same dispute?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why, the Act of 1907 supersedes the other, unless the matter has been referred and dealt with under the Act of 1903. I am pointing out that it has not been referred and dealt with up to the time the final award is made. Therefore the minister has no option. He will be bound to grant the second application.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That point can easily be covered. What I wanted to establish first before the House was the compromise at which I had arrived. When that compromise is accepted by the House, as I assume it will be, we can easily provide for the case mentioned by my hon. friend. Surely nothing should intervene between the application and the finding by the first board.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not accepting or rejecting anything. I have no authority to accept or reject anything; but as these men have not had an opportunity to appear before a committee of the House, as I think they should have had, I would not be disposed to impose upon them any provisions which they are not willing to accept. I think the conditions might have been very different if the minister had brought representatives of the men face to face with representatives of the employers before a committee of the House. As the matter stands, we are proceeding largely in the dark. If they had been given that opportunity, I believe these people would have got together. It is idle for the minister to boast that everything is known about this subject in the Department of Labour. Only some aspects of it are known in the Department of Labour; and I am not saying this with any disrespect to that department, because it is perfectly idle to suppose that any department could, with the utmost possible diligence, learn everything about the labour question in this country in three or four years; and it is idle for the minister to think that he could get along with this Bill as well without that information which could have been acquired by a committee of the House, as he could have done if he had taken advantage of the suggestion that was made. If the minister desires to carry out what he says he proposes, he should put his amendment in this way: This Act shall not apply to any railway company or to the employees of any railway company with respect to any dispute if either party thereto applies to the minister to cause an inquiry into the same and the causes thereof under the provisions of the Conciliation and Labour Act. If he does that he gives the men an option.

If he does not do that he gives the men no option because he imports, by the terms of such an amendment as this, the provisions of section 57 and 58 into the Railway Disputes Act of 1903, and I do not think it is fair to these men to import these provisions into that Act without first giving them an opportunity of appealing before a committee of this House. No such legislation has been passed in any country that I know of in the civilized world, whether New Zealand or elsewhere, without giving workingmen an opportunity to be heard before a committee of the House and of expressing their views fully and freely; and when you attempt to proceed with this Bill without that, you have to be extremely careful as to the character of the legislation which you impose, because the worst possible service which you could do the cause of conciliation between capital and labour is to impose upon the railway or any other class of men legislation which will leave them with a sense of injustice and lack of fair play. If the minister does propose to give the men the option, as he says he does, I think he should adopt the clause as I have hurriedly drafted it and not the clause which he has drafted the effect of which simply is to impose upon these men that against which they are most earnestly protesting.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. FOSTER. After the lawyers have had their round of it I want to see if a layman can understand what the minister means.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Did I not make it clear?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, there was a little fog about the thing. The atmosphere was not quite clear.

This Act——

That means the Act we are now discussing?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER (reading):

—shall not apply to any railway company or the employees of any such company.

When shall it not apply?

In respect of any dispute which has been referred and dealt with.

It shall not apply to any dispute which has been referred. That is one step.

—and dealt with.

That is finished.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No 'dealt with' means commenced, I should think.

Mr. FOSTER. 'Dealt with' means commenced. Have I dealt with my breakfast when I have commenced with the porridge? Evidently not. The whole concern must be negotiated. I must eat the porridge, the eggs, the bacon and all before I have dealt with it. Has the insurance question been dealt with when the first witness is heard or when the report even is made? When it is dealt with it is finished, it is all gone through with from A to Z and laid up on the shelf. As I understand it as a layman the only exception is with respect to a dispute under the 1903 Act which has been begun and ended.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Dealt with under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. And therefore to every dispute not begun and finished this present Act applies? That is my reading of it.

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or the employees of any such company with respect of any dispute which has been referred and dealt with under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Act respecting conciliation and labour.

The minister expressed his wish to give the railway men an absolute option and not to trammel it in any way. That is one thing. But when he gives them only an option with respect to disputes which have been referred and dealt with and which are ended it leaves this Act to come in on every dispute which has not been begun and dealt with and ended. May be I am wrong but that is the impression the English of the section conveys to my mind.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will try and make myself a little clearer. I will take an example again. I am the employee, my hon. friend is the employer and I have a dispute with him. We are in the railway business and we have two courses to follow. I can either, as a railway employee, come under the provisions of the Act of 1903 or under the provisions of the Act of 1907. I choose to come under the Act of 1903. I apply, to the minister and the minister orders an investigation as per section 3 of the Railway Labour Disputes Act. The board is constituted, the award is rendered, or the finding is made and the case there is dealt with. The dispute may not be ended, the parties may strike or lockout but the investigation will have taken place before the strike or the lockout, and therefore that dispute has been dealt with under the provisions of the Railway Labour Disputes Act of 1903. Is that clear ?

Mr. FOSTER. Well ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Suppose I do not choose to come under the operation of the Act of 1903 ; the Act of 1907 applies. One of two things must happen ; the strike or lockout will not take place unless the investigation has been ordered and has taken place. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says that the section should be drafted to read as follows :

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or the employees of any such company in respect of any dispute if either party thereto applies to the minister to cause inquiry to be made into the same and the cause thereof under the provisions of the Conciliation and Labour Act.

The objection I find to this draft is this : Under the Act of 1903 the parties may apply to the minister, the minister may grant the investigation or he may refuse it. He has a discretionary power, it is optional with him to grant an investigation and if he does not choose to grant the investigation, if, for instance, application is made by the railway employees and the minister happens to be a friend—a near friend—of a railway corporation and he refuses an investigation—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice answered my hon. friend during this session by explaining that when the word 'may' is used in that sense it means that the minister may do that and may not do any thing else.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But my hon. friend will see that there are three different courses which are mentioned in section 3. I will read it for my hon. friend. I may be wrong but I think I am right. Take section 3 of the Railway Labour Disputes Act :

Whenever a difference exists between any railway employers and railway employees, and it appears to the minister that the parties thereto are unable satisfactorily to adjust the same, and that by reason of such difference remaining unadjusted the railway lockout or strike has been or is likely to be caused or the regular and safe transportation of mails, passengers or freight has been or may be interrupted, or the safety of any person employed on a railway train or car has been or is likely to be endangered, the minister may, either on the application of any party to the difference, or on the application of the corporation of any municipality directly affected by the difference or of his own motion, cause inquiry to be made into the same and the cause thereof.

So it is purely optional on the part of the minister, because it says 'if it appears to the minister.' But it may not appear to the minister that the investigation is necessary, and, in that case, no investigation will take place, the strike or lockout will be declared, but the public will not know the cause of the quarrel, and the parties will not have the advantage of placing before the public the nature of the trouble.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister will excuse me, but he has misread the section. It says :

If it appears to the minister that the parties thereto are unable satisfactorily to adjust the same, and that by reason of such difference remaining unadjusted a railway lockout or strike has been or is likely to be caused——

That is one of the alternatives, and it is complete. The word 'may' is not optional when applied to a public functionary like the minister. The minister is obliged to act, and would be guilty of dereliction of duty if, under such circumstances, he refused to act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Still my hon. friend (Mr. Borden), with his legal knowledge, is aware that under this wording, as it is understood in the Railway department, it is purely optional to the minister. I see that my hon. friend from South Simcoe shakes his head.

Mr. LENNOX. I certainly shake my head at that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Then my hon. friend has no reason.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister must exercise a reasonable discretion, but, when the case is clear, it is his duty to act—he must act.

Mr. BOYCE. The minister has dealt with the two parties to the dispute, as if no others were interested, so far as this Bill is concerned. But what is the minister going to do with the people, as represented by the municipal corporations? Take the case of a great railroad strike, in which neither disputant will make application under this Act, is the minister going to ignore the right of the people to make an application under the Railway Labour Disputes Act? Suppose there is a big railway strike in the Northwest, one which would create a great deal of trouble with regard to the fuel supply, as was the case last winter, and neither of the parties to the dispute would make an application under either one Act or the other, the minister would have no jurisdiction except under the Railway Labour Disputes Act, under which he may, of his own motion, interfere. But if a municipality applies under the Railway Labour Disputes Act and the minister proceeds under the Bill now before us, where is he going to land, and what decision is the board going to give? Is he going to ignore the right of the public as representing the municipal corporations, or will he concede this right of the people by accepting the very reasonable amendment suggested by the leader of the opposition, which leaves the Railway Labour Disputes Act there to be invoked by those entitled to invoke it? The minister reverses the situation, and extinguishes the right given to the municipality under the Railway Labour Disputes Act. The effect of the minister's proposal is to deprive the corporation of any municipality of its right.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How?

Mr. BOYCE. Simply because he says that this Bill shall not apply unless the parties come forward and ask it to be made applicable. That I understand to be the position.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The municipality is protected under the provisions of this Act.

Mr. BOYCE. I should like to understand that more clearly.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Railway Labour Disputes Act is not repealed.

Mr. BOYCE. But if that were the case, you would have the municipality applying and exercising its right under this Act, which does not need to come into consideration. That is, if they apply under the Railway Labour Disputes Act, the minister would act under the other. The minister does not say that if a municipality applies, that will govern his decision, or that he will have any other jurisdiction.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) will see that in case the dispute should be referred under the present Bill, the dispute will be referred to the board appointed under this Bill, and, in the meantime, no strike or lockout can take place. Suppose a municipality applies to the minister to proceed under the Act of 1903, the minister may refuse or he may consider it; he may refuse, because the dispute is pending and a reference has been made under the dispute. There cannot be two references under the same dispute.

Mr. BOYCE. But under section 13, if the municipality applies the minister has no judicial discretion to refuse.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister has over and again stated that he is giving the railway employees an option of remaining under the Act of 1903. I think if he will put that into legislation it will probably be satisfactory. But I do not think the minister has carried into effect by the amendment the statements he made in his speech. I understand the amendment to amount to this, that if proceedings have been taken under the Act respecting Conciliation and Labour and have been disposed of, then the new Act will not apply. It is what the lawyers call a case of res adjudicata, it is a matter that has been disposed of. So that what the minister really gives in his proposed amendment is simply a gold brick; so far as it amounts to giving these men any remedy, it is absolutely useless.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend explain that?

Mr. LENNOX. I say that all it provides is this: That if proceedings have been taken under the Act of 1903, and have been disposed of, then they cannot come forward immediately under the new Act. What the minister proposes under the new amendment is absolutely useless and does not in any sense carry out what he proposes to give these men, that is an option. He also says that under the Conciliation and Disputes Act, when an application is made to him he may refuse it. Well, that is all the greater reason why he should make a distinct provision that until default is made by the railway employees or by the railway company in coming under the Act we have now in force, the new Act shall have no application at all. I understand the minister wishes to give these men an actual option to remain under the Act of 1903. But you cannot bring them under the new Act unless they have been guilty of some default in regard to the Act of 1903. Therefore I would suggest that this is the proper line of legislation to adopt.

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or the employees of any railway company unless and until the railway company or railway employees have refused to come under the provisions of the Act respecting conciliation and labour.

That is going, I acknowledge, further than the leader of the opposition suggested. He pointed out that probably the minister only intended to go so far as to say that if the parties had invoked the jurisdiction of the old Act then this Act should not apply. But the minister, in his speech, promised the employees that the Act should not apply unless they were in default and refused to come under the old Act. If the minister means that, he is not carrying out the suggestion. I say in no offensive sense that the amendment as proposed by the minister does not carry into effect what he suggested, it does not show that he has very carefully considered it. At all events, it is only fair that these men should have an opportunity of considering it and formulating their answer to it. I therefore suggest that the minister will save time and be giving a greater measure of justice to the men, if he allows this matter to stand now so that the interested parties may have an opportunity of considering it.

Mr. VERVILLE. I think that some of the railway employees who are not supposed to come under this Act, according to the amendment, would not like to see others come under it. We must not forget that there are a certain number of them who are entirely favourable to this new Act. Last Friday, I met in this very hall a representative of one of the large railway organizations, that is the maintenance of ways men, and he plainly told me that he had been misinformed with regard to this Bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, the men who take care of the road, I say it with all due respect to other employees, are just as important to the road as any other class. If the road is not well maintained no trains will run over it. It is proposed to give some of the railway employees the option to come under the Act of 1903 or that of 1907. Of course there is a technical question here which the lawyers have been discussing.

I am not a lawyer and am glad of it. At the same time we must not forget that it is not just to exempt a certain faction of the employees of railway companies or any other from coming under this Act. I do not think it is just or right. I am not going to read letters from cigar makers although I have received some. I had one from Montreal but instead of reading it in this House I attended a meeting in Montreal and explained the Bill and they were satisfied. It is easy to satisfy the labour people of this country that the Bill is all right if you explain its provisions. Men have been misinformed in reference to this Bill in many parts of the country and they complain that it is compulsory arbitration. The trades congress does not come here to criticise legislation ; we come before a committee of the House and suggest whatever legislation we wish passed during the coming session. This is the proper way to do. I do not know that the railway employees do that. They criticise any legislation that comes before the House but never suggest to the ministers what legislation they think is necessary. I have always approved of this Bill in particular with the exception of two clauses, 62 and 63 which it was promised would be struck out and they have been struck out and I am now satisfied with the Bill. I claim it is completely unjust for a faction of the railway employees—we must not believe they are all that way—to prevent other people who may come under this Bill from deriving benefit from it. With all respect for Mr. Harvey Hall and for the railway men whom he represents, I wish to say this. It is not a question of more explanation and as far as technicalities are concerned, I leave them to the lawyers of the House. The railway employees have the option of coming under the 1903 Act or the 1907 Act, but I claim that this Bill should be passed as soon as possible, and then we would be able to observe the results of its operation and if necessary improve it next session.

Mr. BOYCE. With regard to the attitude of Mr. Harvey Hall on this question and in view of the fact that the minister read only a portion of the correspondence, I think it only fair to Mr. Harvey Hall who has met with such displeasing comments—

Mr. LEMIEUX. Displeasing—

Mr. BOYCE. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, oh.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not consider that Mr. Hall has received that fairness of treatment from the minister which the correspondence would warrant, and I shall place before the committee letters showing the manner in which Mr. Hall offered to meet the minister. There is a contrast between that and the way in which the minister treats the railway men as represented by Mr. Hall in introducing this amendment without consultation with Mr. Hall or those represented by him. I have here a letter which was in answer to the minister, dated from the Grand Union Hotel, March 4, 1907, to hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Minister of Labour.

Ottawa, Ontario, March 4, 1907,
Grand Union Hotel.

Honourable Rodolphe Lemieux, Minister of Labour, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of February 22 wherein you ask if the railway organizations would be willing to make an undertaking that they would not go on strike until after an investigation had been held under the Railway Labour Disputes Act, and my reply to the same that I would place your proposition in the hands of the executive officers of the organizations I represent and that I would reply as soon as advised by them.

I am in a position now to say that they do not agree with the idea and they further intimate that there is no difference between your proposition and the conditions as set out in clause 57 of your Bill.

In your letter of February 25 you appear to invite further expression of my views in respect to your Bill. I therefore take this opportunity of presenting some further views in respect to the same.

There is no doubt that you are quite aware that the railway men are unanimous in their opposition to the principle of the measure, and further as you have stated that there are certain organizations of labour who believe the legislation to be good and are willing to accept it, and further, I think you must admit, that it is experimental legislation. I feel that you could readily grant exemption for the railway men and let your Bill apply to those who feel that it would be in their interest. You have sufficient argument to sustain this position as has already been pointed out to you, and, as I believe, you know yourself that the railway men are negotiators and not strikers, and the record of these associations are such that no strikes of railway men interested in the train service in Canada have taken place for a great number of years, the public would suffer no inconvenience and parliament will be carrying out a much recognized principle in not amending or altering legislation that is on the statute-books that has proved so satisfactory as the Railway Labour Disputes Act has. Representation has been made that your Bill does not interfere with the railway men up to the time of a strike or the application to board of investigation. That is one of the principal points of our objections to your measure. We claim that it does.

We claim that under present circumstances we negotiate with the officers of the companies, both employer and employee standing on the same level. Your Bill alters that position. The employer knows that the employee can only go so far and no farther without giving due notice, which is done in the copy of the application which has been sent to the minister asking for the appointment of the board. This puts the employer in a position that he will take all kinds of an advantage of the employee and will not negotiate with that spirit of fairness that heretofore has prevailed.

I am inclosing you a copy of a letter that I have received from Mr. E. E. Clarke, a gentleman who was spoken of by yourself as composing a portion of the commission appointed by President Roosevelt to inquire into the Pennsylvania coal strike, and was also spoken of by other members in the House as sanctioning legislation such as your Bill contains. In reading Mr. Clarke's letter I am sure you will see that he points out practically the same objections to your Bill as I do, as you will notice he makes very serious objection to clause 57, which to my mind is the essential clause of the Bill and are its main objections as far as we are concerned.

Now, Sir, I feel that in all fairness to the railway men, who no one can say a word against in respect to the manner in which they conduct their business through their organizations, and the little cause that there is for any one to complain about any inconvenience that they have been submitted to through the actions of these organizations and your own sense of justice of a great number of citizens of Canada who are engaged in the railway service, that we shoud not be submitted at the present time to legislation of this nature, and I again appeal to you to exempt us from the provisions of this Act or that the Act should stand over until next session when its clauses can be more explicitly presented to all concerned. And let me say in conclusion, that if you adopt my suggestion that this legislation be made to apply to those who are willing to accept it, and it proves as satisfactory after a fair trial as it is maintained by its supporters that it will, in bringing about fair and amicable settlements of disputes, the railway men will meet you and give every consideration to the Act, and I will go farther and say assist you in making the Act a benefit to the country.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours very truly,

J. HARVEY HALL.

So far from making an emphatic refusal of the minister's proposition Mr. Hall while dissenting from the proposition advanced by the minister in his letter that the railway men should undertake that they would not go out on strike pending a reference under the Railway Disputes Act says, that if the minister would either postpone his Bill or leave the Railway Disputes Bill as it was he would get all assistance from the railway men as represented by Mr. Harvey Hall. The situation is just where it was when the minister introduced this Bill and we know in what terms he then spoke of the Railway Labour Disputes Bill. There could not have been higher praise of the successful operation of any Bill than the minister bestowed on that Bill on that occasion. I quote from unrevised 'Hansard,' page 3075, the words of the minister:

> We have next the Railway Labour Disputes Act, and I think every one will admit that that Act, with its feature of compulsory investigation, has prevented any strike taking place in Canada.

If the Railway Labour Disputes Act has been so efficient as to prevent any railway strike taking place in Canada, can it be bettered by this experimental legislation which is complicated in its terms and cumbersome in its machinery. Mr. Hall's proposition to the minister is a fair one, and the minister might even now give it his consideration and postpone decision on this matter until such time as the organizations which Mr. Hall represents may have an opportunity of expressing their views. In justice to the railway labour organizations the minister should not force through this legislation without getting their opinion upon it.

Mr. CONMEE. I have had a number of communications from the railway employees and the ground they take is that they are opposed to compulsory arbitration or to any legislation that would prevent them quitting work either singly or in a body when the wages or conditions of their employment do not suit them. I agree that these are rights and privileges which should be safeguarded to them. The Bill does not impose compulsory arbitration, and it does not take away the rights to which reference has been made, but to a certain degree fortifies them. It will readily be admitted that every individual should be free to pursue his vocation and course of happiness in life, untrammelled by restrictions, so long as he does so without unduly infringing on the rights of others. A strike or a lockout cannot take place without seriously infringing on the rights of others than those immediately involved in the dispute, and that being so, it is a fit and proper thing to be regulated by legislation. It is claimed that this Bill will be more expensive than the Railway Disputes Act of 1903. On the contrary, this legislation will be very inexpensive to operate; it will cost but little to invoke the establishment of the board, and, on the whole, the machinery provided seems to be satisfactory. It has been urged as an objection to this Act—but I think the objection is reached by confusing this Act with a Bill introduced in the Senate—the claim is that those who are not British subjects cannot appear before the board to advocate the rights of labour organizations. This Bill does not in any way interfere with that. Neither does it interfere with the right of labour organizations to have such repretatives negotiate with the employers with a view towards settlement. I have been told on the best authority that it cost over $25,000 to settle a dispute between the trainmen and one of the railway companies in this country. I cannot see how that large sum of money could possibly be expended under this Act, because the men can remain in their employment, continue to earn their wages, and their representatives can carry on their case before the board; their fees and expenses are paid, and the state bears the expenses of the board. I cannot possibly see how there can be any additional expense under this Act. It is contended by some that the delay involved may deprive the labour organizations of their right to select the time when a strike may take place, which is said to be a very potent weapon. I cannot see where in the Bill takes away that right. Of course, if both parties are to strive to take every unfair advantage of the other, difficulties will arise, but such difficulties can arise under the present legislation. It is fair to assume that all the skill and all the diplomacy is not going to be exercised by the employers. I believe the employees are equally capable of conducting their own side of the case, and that their diplomacy will be at least equal to that of their employers. These grievances do not crop up in a day or a week; they are usually of long standing, and there is nothing in the Act to prevent the giving of notice so that the employees can have the matter disposed of by the board and then be in a position to strike whenever they please and when it will best serve their purpose.

But I think the Act gives them another advantage. I might point out that it is not a question of a large body of men quitting work that will make a company yield. That will no doubt discommode a railway company, but that does not cause them to yield and accept the terms offered. The power to discommode the company and force conditions from them exists not so much in a body of men quitting work as it does in their sympathizers creating difficulties and disturbing certain connections, such as everybody knows takes place at the time of these strikes—the water supply is interfered with and the operation of the service is paralyzed. This power and influence does not come into operation except where there is a strong public sentiment behind the claims of the men. If this law were in force, would it not be a strong lever behind the negotiations? Would not the labour organizations be able to point to it and say: Our claim is just, and if you do not agree to it, we can invoke the power of the state under this law, which provides that you shall appear before an impartial tribunal, produce your books, and give evidence for the course you pursue, if you can justify it before public opinion. With the finding of the board, in whole or in part, behind the railway men, surely they will be in a much stronger position if they have ultimately to strike than they would be otherwise? And in conducting negotiations will they not be in a much stronger position after this Act is passed than they are to-day?

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman think that applies to the railway men, if the Bill is passed with this amendment?

Mr. CONMEE. I certainly do; that is my very point. They have an additional weapon which they can use with great force if they choose.

Mr. BOYCE. The weapon they have is paralyzed.

Mr. CONMEE. The only way they can embarrass a railway company is through the action of those who sympathize with them; because you will never get a railway man to admit that he himself disturbed the connections; it is always his friend who has done so, and I think that is generally the case. These things are done in defiance of the general law of the country, and at the expense and to the disadvantage of the general public. These strikes do expose a great many people to a good deal of hardship and inconvenience and the principle of bringing the people together in advance of these extreme measures, which is embodied in this Bill, is certainly in the public interest. I may point to the settlement of other matters as evidence that this Bill will be a potent factor in favour of a settlement even without its provisions being invoked. The trainmen now, in the case of an accident in which some of their number are injured, take proceedings through their agents, and I am informed that it is very seldom that the companies fail to settle. Why is that? Will it not be admitted that it is because the men have the general law behind them to protect them in all these matters if an agreement is not made? It is true this is a double argument and can be used in this respect by both parties, but its greatest force is in favour of the labour men as against the corporations. They have always the recourse to say to the corporation: if you do not agree to this, we will bring you into court, and the courts of the country will give us our demand because it is just. That is a strong force in the hands of these organizations for the settlement of that class of disputes which do not come under this Bill at all, and it will be still more the case in the settlement of disputes here dealt with, after this Act is passed. I find myself in favour of the general principles of the Bill as I understand it, notwithstanding all the objections which have been raised. I believe it to be in the interest not only of labour organizations generally, but of locomotive engineers, conductors and firemen, who I understand desire to be excluded from its provisions. If there is one member of this House who is pledged strongly to support legislation in favour of labour organizations and labour men, I think I am that member, and I deside to carry out that pledge. I am bound to support anything which in my judgment is to their advantage, which will put them in a stronger and better position to guard their rights and privileges, and I am bound to oppose any legislation which I believe to be injurious to their interests. I believe I am consistent with that position when I advocate the principles of this Bill. We must remember that it is not a law of the Medes and Persians. I do not pretend to say that the Bill is perfect. In fact, I would have liked to have put some other amendments in it myself; but I am told by gentlemen of considerable experience that the principles for which I contended are already in the Bill. If so, well and good. If the Bill is found not to be what it has been represented to be or what we expected it to be, or if it does not accomplish the purpose for which it is enacted, we can amend it from year to year until we make it workable. I might go further in regard to the general scope of the Bill. Surely it is the right of the public, who are not a party to the dispute, to be protected by a provision that a strike or a lockout shall not take place until an effort has been made to bring the parties together to settle the dispute. The labour organizations, through their representatives, say: We always exhaust every honourable resource before we appeal to the extreme measure of a strike. Well, I submit that this Bill is an honourable resource which they should take advantage of before going on strike.

But the public have the right to have something to say as to what are proper efforts or endeavours, they have a right to say that before they are discommoded and their lives put in danger, the parties to the dispute shall invoke the provisions of this law. I think the public are entitled to that much protection, at all events. What is the position after that? If the finding is in favour of the men, in whole or in part, will it not be admitted that they are in a much stronger position? Sometimes in labour difficulties the military are called out. I can conceive that under this provision if there were a finding of that character, it would be a very difficult matter indeed for either party to procure military protection. For these reasons, I cannot but think that there is an advantage given to the labour organizations by the provisions of this Act. But there is another reason why I would support the Bill, and it is upon general principles. My view is that no set of men, whether they are railway magnates or walking delegates —I care not who they are—should be above the power of the state or beyond the power of the law. Then, surely it is within the jurisdiction of the government of Canada to regulate a matter that so seriously interferes with the public business, with the rights of every citizen, and if any set of men say that they are entirely outside the scope of legislation, that they are too big to have any legislation applied to them, I take issue with that position. I think it is the bounden duty of the government and of the state to provide machinery, not only looking to the settlement of disputes, but looking also to the protection of the rights of the citizens, the rights of the public, the rights of commerce, and of all other interests that are affected by so serious a matter as strikes and lockouts. The question is a large one. There is a great deal that one would feel disposed to say, but I merely wished to make the remarks that I have made in explanation of the reason why I find myself in favour of the Bill as I understand it. Coming back to this clause under discussion, I understand the purpose of the minister to be that the railway men may have a choice of coming either under the Act of 1903 or the Act of 1907. But in either case no strike or lockout can take place until the matter in dispute has been dealt with, either under the Act of 1903 or under the provisions of this Act or after a finding the parties refuse to accept it. It may be that it is held by some that this Act actually prevents a strike or lock-out. I do not so understand it. The only thing it does is to provide for certain proceedings, after which the men are as free to strike, if their terms are not accepted, as they were before. Neither the men nor the company are bound to accept the award. If the finding, in whole or in part, is in favour of the men, they are certainly put in a more favourable position than they otherwise would be.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The hon. Minister of Labour has stated, and his words are, that the railway men have an option as to whether they shall remain under the operation of the Railway Disputes Act, 1903, or come under the Act now before the House. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) seems to take that meaning out of what the minister said. Then a word as to the effect of the Railway Disputes Act of 1903; upon all hands we have the same assurance of complete satisfaction with it. The railway men are satisfied with it, and the railway corporations appear to be satisfied with it. We have abundant evidence on all hands that the railway men are satisfied with it. Then the railway people, both the employers and the employees, are satisfied, the Act has worked harmoniously, the public interest has not suffered or been prejudiced, and all parties concerned, including the public at large, seem to be getting justice under the operation of the Act. As I understand the minister, it is his intention to leave the operation of the Act free to the railway men and to the railway companies to be invoked at will. I may be right or I may be wrong in that assumption. As I understand the minister, he emphasized and elaborated his position in that respect, and no two meanings can be taken out of his very plain, if not forcible, words on that point; but when you come to read the amendment, I certainly think it is at least doubtful if the amendment, as proposed, in any way carries out the explanation which he gave. Let us see what are the words. They are these:

> This Act shall not apply to any railway company or the employees of any railway company in respect of any dispute which has been referred and dealt with under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Act respecting conciliation and labour 1903.

I contend that if this were crystallized into an Act of Parliament, and any lawyer were asked to give his interpretation of these words, he would say that undoubtedly this clause relates to something which has already been referred and dealt with under the provisions of the Act of 1903; that is, you are doing something here in this Act which accomplishes nothing, because it only refers to disputes which have been referred and dealt with, and if you attempted to deal with them again under this Act, as every lawyer knows, the matter would be said to be res judicata—already disposed of under another Act. There can be no two opinions about that position. I believe that every lawyer would agree that that is the effect of this legislation. If the matter were raised in court, and we must now have regard in the discussion of these matters to the construction of them in their legal aspect, there is no doubt that the meaning would be given to these words that this provision exempting railway men only applies to disputes which have heretofore been disposed of and settled, and that in any case they could not be raised, because it would be said, and properly said, that they were res judicata. That seems to make the amendment proposed absolutely worthless. Then, take the position of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). In the first place, undoubtedly you are confronted with this, that if the railway men invoke this Act of 1903, then, up to the time the matter has been finally dealt with, it is open for the other parties to the dispute to ask that the dispute be brought under this Act, and the matter would be dragged from under the Act of 1903 and disposed of under this proposed law.

Mr. D. ROSS. Suppose that the railway employees exercise their opinion of having the matter in dispute brought under the Railway Labour Disputes Act, and the matter was investigated and finally disposed of, would not that close the matter?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. It only applies to disputes that are finally disposed of.

Mr. D. ROSS. As I understand it, the men have the option of bringing their case under the Railway Labour Disputes Act. If they do so and if it is finally decided, what more is necessary?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. There is the whole point—'if it is finally decided'.

Mr. D. ROSS. Does not this give the men the option?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. It gives them a delusive option. It says that they may invoke the Act of 1903, but until the case under that Act is finally disposed of—

Mr. D. ROSS. This Act shall not apply.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. It may apply at any time until this matter is finally disposed of.

Mr. D. ROSS. As I understand it they have the option of coming under the Act of 1903, and as soon as the case is brought under that Act, you cannot apply the Act now under consideration.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That is what I am asking for, but that is not what the amendment says. Something should be put in this section to provide that when the Act of 1903 is invoked, the dispute shall remain under that Act until it is finally settled.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I share to a large extent the view of my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville). We have had this matter fully considered, and the difference seems to be a difference between the lawyers. I think there is a fairly unanimous understanding as to the intention of the minister, which is that the railway brotherhoods represented by Mr. Hall may be exempt from the operation of this Act. Like my hon. friend from Maisonneuve I am aware that there are a number of railway men in this country who are in favour of coming under the operation of this Act. There can be no doubt of that whatever. A large organization of railway men has signified its willingness to come under the provisions of the law we are now considering. Surely we are not going to deprive those who are well deserving of being heard in this connection of the benefit of this Act? The minister is willing to exempt the other railway organizations, and so far as I am concerned, I do not see why there should be any further question about the matter.

My hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) rather dissented from the observations of the Minister of Labour concerning the representative of the railway men in this legislation. I do not share the view that the Minister of Labour was in the least unfair to that representative. On a former occasion, when this matter was under consideration, I found fault with Mr. Hall for certain representations he had made to certain railway organizations, and I wish to emphasize the objections I then made, which I think, were well founded. It was pointed out that, in a circular issued by Mr. Hall he had stated—

Mr. TAYLOR. We had that once before.

Mr. JOHNSTON. But, the question having come up, I want to emphasize my objection to what I regard as not a fair statement made to the railway men of this country. I have had an opportunity of discussing it—

Mr. TAYLOR. You told us that before.

Mr. JOHNSTON. And it has been made abundantly clear that the railway men with whom I discussed it, shared my view that the representations made by Mr. Hall were not proper representations——

Mr. BOYCE. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Has he any evidence, by way of resolution or otherwise, from any railway men's organization to the effect that he has just stated.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have evidence which is abundantly satisfactory to me.

Mr. BOYCE. Is it in writing?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, it is in writing.

Mr. BOYCE. Would the hon. gentleman mind placing it——

Mr. JOHNSTON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) is extremely curious about the matter I will place in his hands certain correspondence. But as a matter of fact, that is not the important point. I say there are large numbers of railway employees who, having had the matter satisfactorily explained to them, do not hold the views as strongly as they did that this Bill would be inimical to their interest. I wish to point out, for the information of those who are not familiar with the matter that in his circular Mr. Hall said:

> The measure is one that may have a very serious effect in the operation of our organization and is the second step made by the present government towards compulsory arbitration.

A fair assumption must be that the first step was necessarily the Act of 1903, and Mr. Hall represents to the workingmen of this country that the Railway Disputes Act of 1903 was a step in the direction of compulsory arbitration. So far as I am concerned, the position I have always taken is that, whilst I am in favour of investigation, I certainly am opposed to compulsory arbitration. I would be opposed to this government or to any other government if it introduced compulsory arbitration at the present time. I dissent from the view of Mr. Hall that the Conciliation Act of 1903 was a step in the direction of compulsory arbitration. But if that Act was a step in that direction Mr. Hall himself is on record as being in favour of it, and while that may be satisfactory to Mr. Hall, I doubt if it will be satisfactory to the railway organizations. I agree entirely with the position taken by the Minister of Labour that these people who have expressed a willingness to be exempt from the operations of this Act should be exempted, and those who have expressed a willingness to come under the operation of this Act should not be deprived of the power of coming under it. Therefore, I think the amendment proposed by the Minister of Labour should be adopted, because I think it will meet the views of all parties interested. If any defects should manifest themselves in the future they can be remedied.

Mr. BOYCE. With regard to the statement that Mr. Hall is alleged to have made that the Act of 1903 was a step in favour of compulsory arbitration, we do not have to go any further for confirmation than the words of the Minister of Labour himself as to the Act of 1903, which I find on page 3073 of the unrevised 'Hansard,' where he spoke as follows:

> Sir Wm. Mulock, however, stated at the time that in all such legislation we should be very wise, very prudent and very cautions, that the time would come when perhaps it would be necessary to extend that Conciliation Act, but that for the present the country should be satisfied with it. Time went on, and during the session of 1902 he introduced a Bill which received only its second reading. That Bill embodied exactly the same principle which had been advocated the year previously when he had introduced the Conciliation Act. The Bill contained the principle of compulsory arbitration.

Now, my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) knows, and his minister knows, that the Act of 1902 which the minister says contained the principle of compulsory arbitration, was only introduced by Sir William Mulock, who did not attempt to force it through the House. It was a drastic measure and he gave full time for the country to consider it. I think I may say to the present minister, with the utmost respect, that he might take a lesson from the wisdom of Sir William Mulock in that respect. He was a man of great experience; he was prudent and cautious, and he did not believe in drastic reforms. That Bill was a compromise upon the question, although the present Minister of Labour declares that it contained the principle of compulsory arbitration. The member for Cape Breton did not say that Mr. Hall asserted that this Bill was the second step in the direction of compulsory arbitration. We have the minister's admission that Sir William Mulock's Bill was the first step. Now, we will look for some other authority as to the fact that the hon. gentleman's Bill contains the principle of compulsory arbitration. He will bow, I know, in recognition of such an authority as Mr. E. E. Clark, now of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who was one of the arbitrators in the great Pennsylvania coal strike, whose remarks were quoted by the minister himself when introducing this Bill. Mr. Clark in a letter to Mr. Hall under date February 27, 1907, says:

Section 57 contains provisions which to me seem to inject into this Act actual compulsory arbitration.

The minister smiles at Mr. Clark now——

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have read that opinion and he is completely at sea on that.

Mr. BOYCE. But he does not hesitate to quote Mr. Clark when it suits him.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Would my hon. friend read the section referred to and tell the House whether he reads it as embodying the principle of compulsory arbitration? It is as clear as daylight that it is compulsory arbitration.

Mr. BOYCE. I shall read an extract from the letter for the edification of the last speaker (Mr. Johnston) if not of the minister and in justification of the charge brought against him by my hon. friend (Mr. Johnston). Mr. Clark proceeds:

Personally I do not believe that either employer or employee should be restrained by such a provision. I believe it is the proper function of government in these later days to provide an easy, efficient and fair method of settlement of these disputes by arbitration. I do not believe that the government should intervene as an arbitrator except by consent of the parties to the dispute. I should favour a provision in such an Act as that now under discussion to that effect. . . . If the compulsory feature of section 57 is eliminated and it is provided that the Act will operate only with the consent of both parties to the dispute, I should think sections 59, 60 and 61 were proper.

Mr. D. ROSS. Well, my hon. friend as a lawyer and a very good one, states it as his opinion that section 57 involves compulsory arbitration?

Mr. BOYCE. I am reading from a greater authority than myself——

Mr. D. ROSS. Would he give us his own opinion of section 57?

Mr. BOYCE. This is not the time or the place to give my opinion on section 57. I am reading the opinion of Mr. Clark and the minister after, I presume, giving careful weight to Mr. Clark's judgment, has seen fit to cite him as an authority, so his opinion must be received with respect.

Mr. LEMIEUX. May I cite a paragraph of Mr. Clark's letter?

Mr. BOYCE. Will my hon. friend allow me to conclude my citation from Mr. Clark and then he can refute it?

Mr. BOYCE. (reading):

I approach with much hesitancy any criticism of the Bill which you send because of the fact that in order to make reply promptly as requested by you and because of other pressing matters my review of the Bill must be most superficial.

Mr. LENNOX. Did the minister read that when he quoted Mr Clark the other day?

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is not the opinion I cited. This is the superficial opinion; I read the weighty opinion.

Mr. BOYCE. I am giving what Mr. Clark thinks on a more careful consideration. He further says:

Section 65 of your Act contemplates in substance the same thing, but at the risk of repeating will say that it seems to me the terms of section 59 introduce a compulsory feature which is wholly inconsistent with the idea of mutual agreement. In other words it would seem to have the effect of forcing people to agree against their will.

It must be apparent that my hon. friend's criticism of Mr. Hall is absolutely unjustified by so high authorities as Mr. Clark and Sir William Mulock both of whom are cited as authorities by the minister.

Mr. PARDEE. In order to meet the objection of my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) might not this section be amended to read simply:

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or an employee of any such company in respect of any dispute which has been the subject of a reference under the provisions concerning railway disputes in the Act respecting conciliation and labour, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

That is to strike out the words 'refer' and 'dealt with,' and simply add 'which has been the subject of a reference.'

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That certainly does not meet the case, it simply deals with something that has happened in the past. My intention was to secure the benefit of the operation of that Act to two parties who desired to invoke its operation, provided they had initiated proceedings under it. This amendment does not meet that case, because it simply says that it concerns disputes which have been disposed of or dealt with.

Mr. PARDEE. My hon. friend could add a rider to this effect:

Provided it shall be optional with either the railway company or the employee to refer under this Act or the Act respecting conciliation and labour, 1903.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I would suggest that the language of the leader of the opposition (Mr R. L. Borden) be used exactly; that covers the ground fully.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I shall move my amendment in a slightly different form in order that it may be before the committee. I move:

This Act shall not apply to any railway company or the employees of any such company, if before the appointment and establishment hereunder of the board of conciliation and investigation in respect of any dispute, either party thereto applies to the minister to cause inquiry to be made into such dispute and the cause thereof under the provisions of the Conciliation and Labour Act.

That is to say, if either party starts under this Act, the other party has the right, before the board is fully completed, to go on under the Act of 1903.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That all comes back to the point that the parties may apply to the minister under the provisions of the Act of 1903, and no investigation may take place. Under these circumstances we would not satisfy public opinion. There will be no investigation and a strike or lockout may take place. What we alm at is that the parties cannot strike or lockout without an investigation taking place. The Act of 1903 leaves it optional to the minister to grant an investigation or to refuse it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is rather a remarkable reason to give against the amendment, that the minister will not do his duty. I would not do the minister that injustice—

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The Act of 1903 does not interfere with the right of the men to go on strike pending an investigation, and they would have that right under the amendment of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difference between my amendment and the amendment proposed by the minister is, that mine gives the absolute option in the first instance, and the amendment of the minister does not. I say that if the employer or the employed makes an application for the purpose of invoking the provisions of this Act, then, before the establishment of a board, the other party should be enabled to invoke the provisions of the Act of 1903, and in that case this new law should not apply.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If they invoke the provisions of the Act of 1903 they have the right to go on strike.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Exactly.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Even during the investigation—there is no penalty under the Act of 1903.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so, I understand all that fully.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And under this amendment, even if the minister grants an investigation, the strike can go on?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so. I say that my amendment is justified by the declared intention of the minister. The minister, first said, that he proposed to give these men an option between the Act of 1907 and the Act of 1903. If he did not mean that the question falls; if he did mean it then my amendment should be adopted. The men certainly have now the right to strike, and until the men have an opportunity to appear before a properly constituted committee of this House to urge their claims, that right ought not to be taken from them; and especially in view of the repeated declaration of the minister, that the Act of 1903 has given the most perfect and absolute satisfaction up to the present time.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is true that the Act of 1903 has given satisfaction, but the time has now arrived to provide against any possible strike or lockout in public utilities. I say, that the duty of this parliament is to include employees on railways, just as well as employees on other public utilities. I do not see why railway corporations or their employees should be excluded or why they should be given any pretext to declare a strike or lockout before an investigation has taken place, when others engaged on public utilities cannot do so.

Mr. LENNOX. If the minister means what he says now, he did not mean one word of what he said this afternoon. He declared many times this afternoon that the railway employees should have the option of coming under either one Act or the other and the amendment of the leader of the opposition provides for that. We have lost five or six hours in discussing this matter absolutely for nothing. The minister does not seem to have definitely made up his mind, and the little group who sit behind him do not seem to be able to help him to. At the last hour the minister declares that he does not mean what he said and that he will not concede to the railway men what he said he would concede. We might as well vote and lose no more time.

Mr. CONMEE. The minister also said, that the intention of his amendment was that a lockout or strike could not take place until the matter was dealt with by either one of these boards. It is not fair to take one part of the statement of the minister without taking the whole.

Mr. FOSTER. The matter is in a condition now where it ought to be allowed to simmer and to be thought over. I do not say that with any intention to obstruct the Bill. We have been engaged for five or six hours in discussing this clause, and it all comes back to this: That when the minister stated he intended to give the railway trainmen an absolute and unconditional option to take the 1903 legislation but that he wanted to give an opportunity for other organizations of railway men that were in favour of the clause to have the benefit of the new Bill, I thought that a very fair compromise. We have had amendment after amendment proposed, and for the life of me I cannot see that the minister's amendment does give a fair and full and unconditioned option to the railway trainmen to take the 1903 legislation. If that were so, I think it would be a fair compromise, but so far as I can see that is not so. I do not understand that the amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition makes it so that the intention of the law can be evaded and that strikes can take place before an investigation takes place. The railway trainmen say, let us have our investigation under the 1903 Act, and the minister said he was quite willing to allow that to be done, fully and freely and without conditions. If that be so, and you provide against the contingency of a strike without an investigation, it is simply a matter of getting the instrument to express the intention. You have now four different attempts to do this, and every one is an honest attempt, but yet we are not at one. So I think the best course for us now, having had the discussion and having practically the same end in view, is to let this matter simmer and let the minister have a talk with his deputy and I think they will bring in an amendment which we can all support.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The object of my amendment, as I have repeated so often, is simply to prevent the railway employees from striking or the railway companies from declaring a lockout until a public investigation has been ordered, in order to ascertain the cause of the dispute. If the hon. gentlemen opposite agree to that principle, it will be easy to draft an amendment that will suit them. Under these circumstances I propose that we leave the section as provided by my amendment and I will have the Bill reprinted with all the amendments that have been made and agreed to, and this clause will remain to be reconsidered at the next sitting of the committee.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Marine Branch.—Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 12, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 110) respecting The Trader's Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. A. Johnston.

DEATH OF THOMAS MARTIN, M.P.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, less than a week ago we had to mourn the loss of one of our colleagues. Within that very short time death has again visited this House and removed one of its members in the person of the member for North Wellington, Mr. Thomas Martin. Mr. Martin was one of the new members of the House, elected only in the last general election. His career amongst us has therefore been very short, but in that very short time he had endeared himself to all those associated with him—indeed, to all those who came in contact with him ; and I am quite sure that I express the unanimous feeling of this House when I say that we extend our sincerest sympathy to his bereaved family and to his large circle of friends.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire, on behalf of the members on this side of the House, to associate ourselves with the words of sympathy which have just fallen from the lips of the Prime Minister. Mr. Martin had been a member of the House for only a short time, but in that period he had shown us that he was a man of strong intellect and force of character; and, although he spoke seldom on public questions, he always spoke to the point and was listened to with great respect by the House. I desire on behalf of those sitting to your left, to join in the sympathy which has been so feelingly expressed by the Prime Minister.

WAYS AND MEANS—EUROPEAN IMMIGRATION.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER moved that the House go again into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to draw the attention of the government, especially the Minister of the Interior, to a report which was published in the Montreal 'Daily Star' of Saturday, March 9, as follows :

Ottawa, March 9.—In consequence of the termination last fall of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company respecting the encouragement of emigration to Canada from European countries, the government has now made a new arrangement to insure the continuance of work in the interests of the Dominion in Europe. On the advice of the Minister of the Interior, an order in council has been passed providing that a commission of ten shillings for each adult and five shillings for each child shall be allowed to continental steamship booking agents on all the emigrants booked for Canada. The emigrants booked must, however, be of the same classes as those upon whom the bonuses are paid in Great Britain and Ireland.

I would like to know if that report is true.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Yes.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Then I give notice to the government that I will bring the matter up Thursday before going into supply.

THE YUKON.

Mr. A. THOMPSON (Yukon Territory). Before the motion is put to go into supply, I desire to call attention to some questions relating to the Yukon. Since I had the honour of addressing the House before on this question, we have had some very important information supplied us by the Geological Survey with regard to the value of the gravels which exist and are being mined in the Yukon. Until last year, the future of that territory, as regards the quantity of gold that might be found in it, was more or less problematical. All we knew positively was the amount of gold that had been extracted. Last spring, however, my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) sent into that district a corps of geologists, under Mr. McConnell, and some engineers, and they examined and prospected the gravel beds still existing in that country. The result of their prospecting has been most gratifying and has placed the future of that territory absolutely beyond peradventure. On account of the limited time at their disposal in one season, they were able to survey only a portion of the territory, but the amount of ground they did survey and examine has produced in actual results nearly $95,000,000 and Mr. McConnell estimates that the amount of gold still left in that area represents some $53,500,000. Here is what Mr. McConnell says:

This estimate is based on sampling done by ourselves, on the results of actual mining operations, and on the data carefully examined and sifted, furnished by miners and others familiar with the ground and is believed to be a reasonably close approximation. In a rich district like the Klondike, however, sources of gold crop up in unexpected places, and any estimate is apt to be considerably under rather than over the mark.

The section of territory which he did not have time to examine has produced in round numbers some $25,000,000 in gold, and, judging by the topographical and geological indications, will no doubt produce as much more. This, if I am correct, indicates an amount of gold still contained in the hills and valleys of that region equal to $75,000,000. I mention this to show that the last chapter in the history of the Yukon has not been written by any means, and that it is still a territory worthy the very best attention of this or any other government. Before I leave this particular phase may I be permitted to point out that the values I have mentioned as having been produced and those yet to be produced are actual values in dollars and cents, in gold itself, and not represented by any stocks or bonds or other things that go to represent values in other mining camps. The fact is we are so far removed from money centres, that stock flotations have not as a rule been a success, and the operations in the main have been based absolutely on the actual production of gold. In stating that that territory will yet produce some $75,000,000 in gold, I am stating a fact based upon actual examination over a very large portion of territory—not by any means over the whole of the Yukon Territory because the amount of ground still unprospected in that district is very vast. The production of gold has supported in that territory a population which is one of the best consumers of Canadian products from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is a community which produces absolutely nothing to any considerable extent except gold. The people there have to be fed and clothed by the outside world, and in the main, I am glad to say, are fed and clothed by Canada, so that per capita the people in the Yukon furnish today the best possible market Canada has. Anything that will encourage the mining industry there cannot fail to be of great advantage to the people east—to the people of the plains who raise wheat and cattle and the manufacturers further east, as in the Yukon they will have the very best possible market, and one within their own borders. To-day the Yukon is some eleven years old. It was discovered in 1896, prospected in 1897, and began to produce in 1898, and it has produced over $120,000,000 in the past ten years.

The first thing I would like to draw attention to is the constitution of the government or the legislature in that territory. It is known as the Yukon Council and is partially elected and partially appointed. Five members of that council are appointed by the government and five elected from the various districts, and the commissioner acts as president of this council. That was not always the case. In the early days, all the members of that body were appointed by the federal authorities. Gradually these members were added to by members elected by the people themselves. First two members were elected by the people, and at the next election five members were elected by the popular vote. So that to-day we have five members elected by the people and five appointed by the government, and the commissioner acts in the dual capacity of speaker of the legislature and governor of the territory. The term of the present elective members is about to expire. They are elected for two years, and new elections will be held some time in April or May. I submit that the time is now ripe to give that territory a further measure of self government by making all the members of the council subject to election by the people themselves. That council became gradually developed from a fully nominative body to a body half nominative and half elective. I would like to see that development carried further and have the whole council elected and directly responsible to the people. I am not asking for complete provincial automony. The people of that territory feel they are not prepared at present to assume all the provincial responsibility such a course would entail, but we ask that the same measure of automony which the territories enjoyed before they were erected into the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan be given to us. In asking this, I am simply expressing the sentiment of the people and am not submitting anything in the shape of a party question. In fact the platform of every man who has ever come before the people of the Yukon for election has had a plank to further that automony which I am now asking. I have in my hand a letter from Mr. T. Dufferin Patullo, secretary of the Yukon Liberal Association, in which he says:

I have the honour to inclose herewith copy of resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Liberal association with reference to a wholly elective Yukon council:

Whereas the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, has on several occasions assured the parliament of Canada and the people of the Yukon that the Yukon council would be made wholly elective, and

Whereas the present commissioner of Yukon, Hon. W. W. B. McInnes, immediately upon his arrival in the territory publicly declared that there would be changes in the council, and

Whereas the Yukon Liberal Association and the people of Yukon have at all times declared themselves in favour of a wholly elective council, and

Whereas the Yukon council as at present constituted is not in harmony with the spirit of Canadian institutions, and does not give to the people of this territory that measure of responsible government which the constitution of Canada insures to its citizens, and

Whereas the resources of the territory have induced the investment of a large amount of capital, and the building of thirty miles of railway from Dawson during the past summer which will probably be extended next season another forty miles, thereby greatly aiding in the stability of conditions here and the assuring of a permanent population,

Therefore be it resolved that this association is of the opinion that the granting of a wholly elective council should not be longer delayed;

And be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Interior, the Commissioner of Yukon, and the member of parliament for Yukon.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a party question. What I have said is simply a reflection of the opinions of the people of all political parties residing in the Yukon. Nor will the granting of a wholly elective council be an experiment. The people of that country come from the several provinces of Canada, from the various countries of Europe in which representative government exists and from the states of the country to the south of us. Those who were not British subjects, but have become British subjects, have been accustomed to the franchise. And I am sure that the hon. gentlemen in this chamber will agree with me that those members of our community who came from the various provinces of Canada are well acquainted with the uses of the franchise, so that if the franchise is conceded to them we may be sure it will not be abused. The trouble with the present Yukon council is that it is not sufficiently representative; it is not sufficiently in touch with the people, not close enough to the people. The five members who are appointed draw salaries as occupants of various positions under the government, and they are, therefore, necessarily not as closely in touch with the people as would be men who were elected directly by the people. This is the only territory in all this vast Dominion which has not full and complete autonomy, the only portion of Canada that has not directly representative institutions. If the change desired is not made in time for the coming elections, two years will elapse before the opportunity will come again to give the people more than five members in a council to represent the people of the territory. I submit to the government the propriety of widening the Yukon council so that it will be composed hereafter of men who directly represent the people from the various portions of the territory, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and this government, and the people of this country, that if that boon is given it will not be abused.

Another question I wish to discuss very briefly, and that is a perennial question in the Yukon—concessions. In the early days of that territory vast areas were given to various people as 'hydraulic leases,' but now known and discussed in recent years as 'concessions.' These concessions were granted upon the representations of men who came down to Ottawa and told the government that the ground in these areas was too low-grade in character to be worked by ordinary placer methods, and that, in order to work the ground successfully and win the gold, water had to be brought in under hydraulic pressure. I may say, in passing, that the knowledge that these men possessed at that time was absolutely insufficient to justify them in forming the opinion they expressed. In some instances since that time the ground has proven so rich in certain sections that it could be worked very profitably by ordinary placer methods. It is true there are portions of these large areas which will have to be worked by hydraulic methods or some other, but there is ground in each of these concessions which could be worked, and worked profitably, by the placer miner. The locking up of this ground during all these years has prevented the development of certain sections of the country and has lessened the number of ounces of gold the country would have produced, besides throwing a wet blanket upon the energies of the people, which energies in the main, are directed to the mining of gold. These concessions are of various sizes and cover different creeks, and some are still extant. In an interim report in 1906, Hon. W. W. B. McInnes, then commissioner of the Yukon, said :

> They were granted for large tracts of mining land upon the strength of representations made to the government, and upon the distinct understanding that the ground included within the concessions was of too low a grade to permit of its being worked by the ordinary placer mining method, and that it could only be profitably worked by the installation of costly modern machinery, or extensive hydraulic works. . . . And one of the provisions (section 4) of the leases specifically requires 'that the said lessee shall have sufficient hydraulic or other mining machinery in operation on the said demised premises within one year from the date hereof to permit of his beginning active operations for the efficient working of the rights and privileges hereby granted.'

Now, Sir, these people who owned these concessions have persistently and continually evaded the letter and spirit of the law, and, without exception they have left this ground lying idle, playing the part of the dog in the manger by failing to work the ground themselves and refusing to allow anybody else to work it. The existence of these concessions has produced a continuous agitation, and until something is done, that agitation must continue, because these concessions are not for the best interests of the territory. The gold bearing area of the country is now very well known, and every acre subtracted from it means so many ounces of gold less. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) visited that territory two years ago, and, after examining into these leases himself, was satisfied that the attitude of the concessionnaries to the government, to the people and to the leaseholds they occupied was such that he could not consistently allow them to hold the ground as they were holding it. He decided to cancel these concessions, and he did cancel them. But the ground is still locked up, and what we in that territory want is that the ground shall be worked. It is at present absolutely useless because it does not provide employment to our people, it does not increase our output of gold. I ask that this concession question be looked into as soon as possible, and that these concessions be cancelled and the ground opened for work, or the concessionnaries compelled to work it. The people of the Yukon ask that the ground be thrown open for placer mining, and this course I would urge in as strong words as I can command. The territory which has produced the gold in the Yukon is of small extent compared with the whole Yukon territory. The Yukon territory comprises an area about equal to the area of France. Judging from the reports which we have received from geological experts, there is a large area in which the prospector has a good chance of finding gold. But, up to the present time the prospectors operations have been confined to the Klondike and Indian river valleys chiefly. In order to have that territory go ahead we want some help for this mining prospector, the man who makes it possible to have a Klondyke, who made it possible for Canada to produce $120,000,000 of bullion in the last ten years. And when we get our mint finished, in a few years, we shall need this gold. For we of the Yukon are the only people in this country who are producing gold in any considerable quantity. In British Columbia you have large productions of silver and copper ; in Ontario, in the Cobalt region, you have silver ; and you have some gold produced in Nova Scotia. But the great production of gold has been in the Yukon, and that supply must continue to come from the Yukon. The man who has made it possible for us to produce that gold is the prospector.

Mr. BENNETT. May I be allowed to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thompson) if the Bronson & Ray concession, which was discussed here, has been cancelled ?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is among those that the Minister of the Interior cancelled, but it is still tied up.

Mr. HAGGART. How can it be tied up if it is cancelled ?

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, the Minister of the Interior I presume can answer that. It is cancelled by the government, but not thrown open, I understand it is in litigation. Now, Sir, the point I am making is this, that in order to exploit and develop that vast territory we want to get the prospector upon the hills up the side streams which are tributary to the Yukon, and in order to do that we want a subsidy for a line of light draft boats which will carry him to the head waters of these navigable streams where he may spend the spring and summer, and bring him back in the fall. We want the government to set aside a subsidy for small draft boats, of which we have plenty in the Yukon, but which at the present time do not find a sufficient amount of travel up these side streams tributary to the Yukon to make it profitable for them to ply their trade. I want to ask the government to give a subsidy for these boats, so that the prospector may go up with his outfit in the spring and live there during the summer, and let them make another trip in the fall and bring him down, about two trips in the year. There is no doubt about the future of that country. The limited area which has been prospected so far has produced vast wealth, and we have the evidence of Mr. McConnell that the wealth so far produced is only a nucleus of greater wealth that still exists in that vast district. I submit for the consideration of the government that they should assist the prospector in this way. The method of mining is changing somewhat in that country, and dredging is becoming an important factor. Dredges are coming in in considerable numbers, and we hope to see more in the next few years. This particular form of gold mining is used extensively in New Zealand, in Australia and in California, and I am glad to say that the government has seen fit to remove the duty on dredges that are used in that territory, and in the main they have very materially assisted the development of that particular industry. As it is only in its infancy, I am led to believe, on the very best authority, that it will yet become a very great industry in the future production of gold in that country.

A few days ago I had the pleasure of laying on the table of this House a sample of wheat which was grown in that Yukon valley. Now I said a few moments ago that gold was the chief product of the Yukon, and so it is, and it must necessarily be so for years to come. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I want it understood that gold is not the only thing that can be produced in the Yukon. Gold is the only thing we export, but we have other products in that country, and year by year, as the country develops and labour becomes less expensive, we find certain people turning their attention to agriculture. During the past year some 75 tons of potatoes were raised successfully near Dawson, and oats and barley have been raised in the Yukon valley with fair success, although not as successfully as I think they can be raised. I have under my hand a return from the Department of Agriculture which gives an analysis of the wheat which I had the honour to lay upon the table of the House the other day. It is this :

Pecentage of germination, 96. Grown in the valley of the Yukon river, latitude 63. In point of vital energy this sample is above the average even of northern grown wheat. The percentage vitality is also unusually high.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to say that the Yukon is a great agricultural country, but I do say that we have there demonstrated the fact that wheat can be grown, and grown successfully, and that the quality of the wheat is quite equal to anything that can be grown in the Northwest. By these remarks I am leading up to ask the government to establish there a small experimental station to see what can be done in the way of agriculture. Our friends the Americans are very active along these lines, they have stations, not experimental farms, but stations where they send the seed to certain individuals and pay them to sow it, look after it, harvest it and make a return. I submit that is a question which this government might well consider, and if they do so, I am sure the result would furnish some very agreeable surprises. The quality of the soil there is good, and while we have not the number of growing days you have here, we have the number of growing hours, because during the months of June and July we have practically no darkness at all.

Another thing which is of vital interest to that country is telegraphic communication. We are far away from Canada and the centres of civilization. The present telegraph line, which is government built and government owned, is probably as satisfactory as it can be, traversing the country which it does. But at best it gives a very intermittent service, particularly during the winter and spring months, as those are the months in which the snowfall is greatest over that section of the mountains traversed by this line between Quesnel and Hazelton. In looking up the reports I find the greatest number of breaks in that particular section. I submit for the consideration of the government the advisability of bridging that section with a wireless system. On this subject permit me to read a brief extract from a despatch from India. It is headed 'Kitchner will see his projects to completion.' I will not read the whole article, but only that which is pertinent to the wireless question.

Incidentally I may mention that Lord Kitchener has lately begun the establishment of an elaborate system of wireless telegraphy along the entire frontier of India, which will enable the withdrawal of a number of isolated military posts hitherto maintained in order to keep up the line of communication which will now be furnished by means of this wireless telegraphy.

That struck me as being the solution of our telegraph question in the Yukon. It would be better if we had a wireless system right through. But we have a government line there now, which line must be maintained, and it has cost a considerable amount of money. I do not advocate that it be replaced by a wireless ; I would suggest that the wireless cover that section where the greatest number of breaks have occurred, where it has been proven by several years experience that it is almost impossible to keep up continuous communication.

Mr. FOSTER. How many miles ?

Mr. THOMPSON. Approximately three hundred miles, I think, five hundred at the outside. I have examined the question a little, and I believe it is quite within the range of possibility and feasibility to establish such a system, and if it were done, it would decrease the annual expenditure for the maintenance of the present line. But, Mr. Speaker, whether that line cost $100,000, or $1,000,000, we have got to have it. We must not settle down to the belief that that territory is to remain completely isolated from the central government, for the want of a telegraph line. If we do not have a line of our own we shall have to patronize the American cables and connected land lines. To-day the Americans in Alaska, while they are not so far advanced in governmental institutions as we are, have paid particular attention to two things, namely, the geographical and geological examination of their territory, and communication between that territory and the outside world in the way of cables and land lines.

Now I submit that we want as good a service as it is posible to get. We pay large tolls. In some countries they would be regarded as prohibitive almost. They are excessive but it is a costly line to keep up and we simply have to have it. But, I submit that the government should bridge that section of the line with the wireless telegraph, and from the information I get I believe it would be very successful. I have nothing further to say to-day except to express the hope that the government will take into consideration the various requests of the people of the Yukon.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House and the country are interested in this far northwestern corner of the Dominion, a territory as large, as my hon. friend, has said, as France, and a country of such wealth that in a short period of time it has produced over one hundred millions of dollars of gold, something that may be considered the wonder of the world. It is not only in the amount of gold that this country has produced that it is important and valuable to the Dominion. Canada has an immense area stretching over many degrees of latitude and its population has until recent years, been restricted to a narrow fringe north of the international boundary. It had been accepted until the discovery of gold in the Yukon that the vast hinterland of Canada was of no value, but that immense discovery of gold in the Yukon has changed all that, and now, instead of the hinterland of Canada being considered as so many leagues of snow, it is looked to with hope and confidence as a land of riches such as the world has never seen. To the men who have had part in the discovery and development of these riches in that far distant corner of the country, whose discovery has resulted in such great advantage to the country, every one must give consideration, and when their representative in parliament voices a demand or a request for a fully elective local government that demand must receive careful and full attention. It may be asked why has not that territory been given full representative local government before now? There are many sides to the question of government. It is not yet settled in fact what is the best form of government in this world, although there have been governments of many, many different kinds ever since the world began. Therefore, it is not altogether settled that under all circumstances representative or elective government is always the best for all parties concerned. The conditions as they have existed in the Yukon were that a small number of people were occupying a large territory with immense, but indefinite or undefined riches, which riches might be exhausted within a very short period of time, or, on the other hand, development might continue and go on for ages to come. All that has yet been attempted in the Yukon in the way of government has been to meet the conditions as they existed, believing that as time went on, as conditions developed then those new conditions might be met in due course. It is far better to meet the conditions as they arise than to provide for conditions which may never arise when the provisions which you have made may be a hindrance and not a help to development. As far as matters have yet gone in the Yukon I do not know that there is anything to be said against the form of local government that has existed there. It is true that the local government of the Yukon has not had the entire approval of every one either inside or outside of the Yukon territory, but that is a misfortune which is common to many governments and even appertains to the government here. The fact that there has been criticism of the government of the Yukon is no evidence that it is at fault in its form, or that a change of form would have obviated criticism. On the whole, I think that the speech of my hon. friend here to-day will indicate that there has been a very satisfactory progress in conditions in the Yukon towards a fuller development which is certainly not in condemnation of the government or the form of government as it exists.

Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that the population of the Yukon was for some years on the decrease rather than on the increase, that is, that where there was a population of some 20,000 or 30,000 in the early nineties, some three or fours years ago the population had shrunk very materially, and it was for some years a question whether or not the camp had seen its best days, or indeed if it would not become within a very few years as mining camps must necessarily always become at some time. However, I might suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it was because of this contingency that perhaps no greater effort was made to meet the natural desire of the people of the Yukon for an entirely elective local government. It is, however, something that I think this whole country may be congratulated on that the change has come, and that instead of the Yukon being a small and transitory mining camp, there is at any rate every prospect that it has become a country of vast future mineral development not only capable of providing means of subsistence for a large population, but whose development will render necessary the presence of a large population. In view of the facts as they were, I have already said the government did not see its way hitherto to granting the very natural desire of the people of the Yukon for an entirely elective council, and although we are, as we believe, on the eve of a change, on the eve of an upward movement, or in fact have already begun that progress, the change has not yet come. Had the expectations which are held in regard to the next year or two been realized during the past year or two, my hon. friend might rest assured that he would not have needed to call the attention of the government to the desire of the people of the Yukon for a wholly elective council. But if the hopes now entertained are fulfilled, while it will not be possible at this present session of parliament to meet the desires of the people of the Yukon as expressed to-day for an elective council with respect to the elections now pending we may take it for granted that the pending election will be the last that will be held in the Yukon where a council not fully elective will be chosen. Although there is no doubt on the part of this government in regard to the propriety of giving a fully elective council when the time arrives, doubts have been expressed by people who are responsible and whose views are entitled to consideration. For instance, my hon. friend on the other side, at the last session, seemed to hold the view that although we had an independent legislative body legislating for and governing the Yukon it was not right or proper that that legislative body should have an independent right of control. Not once but twice, with that ability, those gifts which he unquestionably possesses he urged upon the House and upon the country, upon the government particularly, the advisability of exercising their dominant authority which is entirely repugnant to the ideas of self government held by the people of the Yukon and by the people in all parts of Canada, especially in those districts where liberal sentiment predominates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To whom does my hon. friend refer ?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I might say that at this time violent appeals are being made through the newspapers for an interference on the part of this government with the control of local affairs in the Yukon, with the exercise of its rights by the Yukon Council. These appeals may have good foundation or may not, I only submit to the House that there is antagonism between the appeals to this government to exercise an authority which is vested in it, but the exercise of which would be contrary to the principles of self-government, and the granting of further powers of self-government to the people of the Yukon. We cannot at one and the same time give the people local self-government and exercise an arbitrary or dominant authority over their affairs. It has been the policy and principle of this government to give the local government of the Yukon the fullest possible scope in the exercise of the responsibility placed in its members looking only to the Council and to each member of that Council to discharge the duties of their positions with regard to the interests of the Yukon, that is to say to act according to their best judgment.

I might say a word as to the principle underlying the granting of hydraulic concessions. It is an accepted principle that wherever the individual miner can advantageously work the ground containing mineral wealth he should have the first and the best and the only opportunity to acquire that wealth in that way. But it is also a well known fact that conditions may exist wherein the individual miner, the man whose capital is his labour, his persistence and his skill is not able to advantageously work the mine. Under those circumstances combinations of capital have to be called into action and concessions have to be made such as will sufficiently induce the investment of aggregations of capital. It was in view of this consideration that hydraulic concessions or leases were granted in the Yukon. It was represented to the government at that time that there were large areas of ground containing gold in limited quantities which the individual miner with individual appliances could not profitably work, but that these areas, if aggregations of capital and suitable appliances were brought to bear, could be profitably worked. The object of the government was to secure the development of the natural resources of the country and while provision was made for the operation of individual mines by individual miners provision was also made for the operation of large areas of low grade ground by heavily capitalized companies, or in other words, a large number of hydraulic concessions were granted. Of course there is a large area of country to be considered and it may very well be that while in a small area immediately adjacent to Dawson, it would be proper that only the individual miner should be given the opportunity to operate, it might easily be that in the balance of a territory as large as France, there might be room and opportunity for the profitable investment of millions in the operation of low grade mining ground. However, as the case worked out, a number of applications were made for hydraulic concessions and a number were granted. They were granted on certain well defined conditions. One condition being that the lease should be efficiently operated by hydraulic or other method, and it was recited in the lease that the reason for the granting of the lease was the necessity for the application of hydraulic methods or such other methods as would require a large amount of capital in order that the ground might be made productive. A number of these leases were granted and a number of lessees went on and operated according to the letter and spirit of their agreements, and a number did not. It is not necessary to recite the conditions in connection with each of these leases; it is sufficient to say that several of these concessions were located in the immediate vicinity, in fact actually adjoining the valuable gold bearing territory which was operated by the individual miners, and when these leases were not operated, as the agreement required, it was certainly felt to be a substantial grievance on the part not only of the individual miner who desired to work a claim on the concession but also from the standpoint of the general interest of the country, as in this way its natural resources were tied up from development and the country was held back to that extent.

While it was brought to the attention of the government from time to time that holders of hydraulic leases were not operating these leases, the government hesitated to use its right or authority of cancellation of the lease on the one hand in the hope, that by refraining from cancellation the lessee would be enabled and would as a matter of fact operate the lease, or, on the other hand, if they cancelled the right which the company had acquired to the lease the fear was that capital which was required for the further development of the territory at large would take fright and the country would suffer a permanent injury because of that cancellation in that way. There was the possibility that, as a result of the cancellation of a certain lease according to the letter of the contract, the country at large would suffer a very great loss by reason of capital being deterred from investment.

For this reason, I say, the government for some years held its hand and did not cancel these leases, even though the lessees were not fulfilling the conditions of their contract with the government. I had the privilege of visiting the Yukon territory two years ago, and, having looked over the conditions as they existed then, it seemed to me that the time had come when it was necessary for the government to take a stand on this matter, even with the possibility of deterring the investment of capital, in order to justify the policy of the government in having granted the hydraulic concessions in the first place. No one objected to the concessions provided they were worked, but every body objected to them provided they were not worked; and so at all risks the decision was reached that the concessions, on which there was no fair or reasonable or proper attempt made to comply with the conditions of the leases, should be cancelled. In pursuance of that policy some six leases were cancelled. They were: the Klondike government concession, generally known as the Anderson; the Bonanza Creek hydraulic concession, generally known as the Bronson-Ray; the Washburn and Ritchie, the Palmer, the Quartz Creek and the Scroggie. Whilst the government felt it necessary to cancel the agreements under which these parties held their several concessions, it also felt that it was not desirable to alarm capital or to create the impression that every justice was not being given to investors in that country; and all of these parties had invested money to a greater or less amount in their respective concessions. Therefore a proposition of settlement was first made to the concession holders. We said to them: Your right is forfeited; but, in consideration of the expenses that you have made, we will give you a certain small part of your concession —say three, four or five claims as the case might be—if you will give up peaceable possession of the remainder. If you will not do that, and you desire to question the right of the government to cancel your concession in the courts, you will be given a fiat to enable you to proceed in that way. If you will not do either the one or the other, then the government will take proceedings in the courts to oust you from possession. As a result of the notices, two concessionnaries agreed to the terms. The Quartz Creek and the Scroggie each accepted a part of their concession, and gave up all claim to the remainder. The other four concessionnaires maintained their position. They did not agree to our offer of settlement; they did not take proceedings in the courts; they simply sat still and did nothing; and at last we had to take the proceedings in order to oust them from possession. It was because of this procedure, which we felt it was right and proper to take in order that we might not deter capital from investing in that country, that there has been so much delay in clearing the ground of these concessions.

Mr. FOSTER. And these four are now in that position?

Mr. OLIVER. These four are now in that position. The pleadings have been entered, I understand, and the cases will be tried in the Exchequer Court at the earliest possible date. We declare that these people have forfeited their rights, and we ask for a legal ejectment of them from the premises in order that the ground may then be absolutely clear for being dealt with according to the mining law of the Yukon.

Mr. THOMPSON. May I ask my hon. friend if the Exchequer Court will sit here or in Dawson?

Mr. OLIVER. In the absence of the Minister of Justice I am unable to answer that question, but I understand that it will sit in Dawson, as that will be found more convenient. Under the letter of the agreement with the companies, our cancellation was final, and we could then and there have declared the ground open for staking by miners; but we did not feel that that would be good policy. While we hold that these concessionaires have not fulfilled the requirements of the contract, they hold that they have. They have certainly spent a considerable amount of money; they have done what they call their assessment work; and the whole question between us is this: are we entitled to force our understanding of the agreement as to efficient working? That is the point that will be decided by the court—whether these people have actively, efficiently, and, according to the spirit and letter of the agreement, operated their concessions. If the court holds that they have, as they claim that they have, then of course our concellation will be of no effect, and they will be maintained in possession; and the reason that, having declared the concession cancelled, we did not there and then throw it open for staking by free miners, was the possibility of the concessionnaire re-establishing his right before the court, and thereby creating a very serious complication in regard to the men whom we might have permitted to stake on the ground. That is why we thought it better to accept the delay necessary to secure an absolute and legal clearance of the ground in these concessions without undertaking to deal with it without that legal clearance, and possibly bring about complications that would be very unfortunate for all the parties concerned. In the case of the Quartz Creek concession, I may say that it was some time ago that they accepted our offer of settlement, and the concession will be open for staking by miners on the 1st of June next. The Scroggie concession will shortly be in the same position. I regret as deeply as any one that our government has not apparently been more prompt, but I beg to assure the House and the people of the Yukon as well that we have been as prompt as the circumstances permitted, having due regard to the rights of investors and the welfare of those who might eventually desire to acquire titles in those lands under our cancellations.

There is nothing my hon. friend has said as regards the importance of considering the prospector that I cannot fully agree to. Any mining country absolutely depends upon the prospector, and in facilitating prospecting we are aiding the country. I believe that the action taken by parliament last session in passing the Yukon mining code has had a great deal to do with stimulating prospecting in that country. There was previously a lack of knowledge of the conditions, and possibly the conditions were not altogether as satisfactory as they might have been. The mining code itself was practically prepared by the Yukon council, the people understand its provisions, its provisions are suited to the country, and I am satisfied that prospecting has received considerable impetus from the passing of that Act. Furthermore although we have cancelled the concessions and to that extent interfered with what are claimed to be the rights of capital, yet the fact remains that never in any year has there been such a large investment of outside capital in the Yukon as during the year in which those concessions were cancelled. And no doubt while this large investment of capital has let free a number of men who were working on claims more or less profitable and enables them to go out prospecting, it has also given a general confidence in the country which we had hardly hoped for a few years ago. The investments of capital have been large and the developments have been substantial and genuine. And what has been hoped for during many years, the development of low grade levels on the Klondike side of the Dawson mining area, now seems in a fair way of fulfilment. I am not able at the moment to give any definite answer to my hon. friend's suggestion regarding the assistance by government of steamboat navigation in the various streams in the country. I can only assure him that every consideration possible will be given by the government to the further development of that country. The government have the highest appreciation not only of the past and present value of that country, but also the highest possible expectations of its future permanence and development through the energy and enterprise of the men who have gone out there in quest of gold.

Another suggestion of my hon. friend concerning which I cannot make any definite statement is his suggestion to substitute wireless communication for the present telegraph line. No doubt there is a great deal to be said in favour of the proposition he puts forward, but it is something which has to be worked out and it would not be well to take too much for granted regarding its practicability. The government, however, will give the proposition most serious consideration, and we hope that in one way or another communication with the Yukon will be maintained and improved. And while it is not my place to pledge the government, I can say that my hon. friend has given expression to the general policy of the government that communication with the Yukon must and will be kept up.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is always an interesting occasion when the far away member of a far away country goes through his annual function of making his budget speech to the House. It is a budget speech somewhat different from that made by the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) inasmuch as the latter promises expenditures and largesses in one way or another, whilst the former is largely composed of requests often reiterated, and, I am sorry to say, not as frequently answered to the full. It is also interesting to have the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) reply in gentle and sympathetic tones to the representative from this far off section of country. He evidently does not feel quite the same towards my hon. friend as he does to some others of us here. He does not use the same amount of caustic in his treatment of him that he does with reference to myself and other more militant members on this side. But if this annual function is usually interesting, it is much more so this year for two reasons. Something tells me that within the vicinity of this House, and probably within the hearing of the two hon. gentlemen who have just acquitted themselves so well, there is in the flesh the late Commissioner of the Yukon (Mr. McInnes). And an eighth or a ninth sense—for it appears in these days, when we have to take so many methods of informing ourselves, these additional senses have to be developed—rather gives us to understand that the incoming commissioner for that far off territory is also present in the flesh and not very far from us. So that we have the past with all its glory, the present with all its struggle, and the future with all its promises. What could an audience require more and what could a speaker desire more as an impetus? That is one reason why I think that the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), to say nothing of the speech of my hon. friend from the Yukon (Mr. Thompson)—whose speeches are always good—fell upon sympathetic ears; and for my part I give my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) a measure of compliment for the way in which he has met the requests made by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Thompson). However, it does not do any harm to have a little talk with reference to some of these questions. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) made some reference to myself. I roused myself from a partly dormant condition when he began his remarks, but I did not get sufficiently awake by the time he had ended that part of his address to find out just exactly what he thought I meant last year. Anyway, I did not come to the point of a personal agreement with him, if I understood his English. The government occupies an anomalous position in the Yukon. There is a council which administers the Yukon, the majority of which is appointed by this government and the minority elected by the people. So long as the government controls the council by having a majority of appointed members, just so long this House will hold the government responsible for the administration of that council. If the Yukon had an entirely elective assembly or council, which had the spending of the appropriations by this government in addition to what they get from their own revenue, then they would have the management of their own affairs financially and would be altogether responsible for that management.

But, as it is now, the government through its nominees and representatives dominates the whole situation, directs the policy of the administration in that country, and consequently will be held responsible not only for the financial management but also for the general trend of policy there. I do not see how any other position can be maintained. On that ground, I held the government responsible for the general trend of the expenditures in the Yukon, and I think I was perfectly right in so doing; and, so long as the present state of things holds, I do not see how we can do anything else. At the same time, I am absolutely at one with the hon. member for the Yukon and with the desires of the people of the Yukon that they should have the election of their own council. I could not understand the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). He said that if things had gone as had been hoped during the last year or thereabouts there would be possibly have been an elective council before this time, but things did not quite go as they were expected to go, and consequently the old hybrid system still remains. I endeavoured, but failed, to divine what possible reason there could be for affirming or denying a principle of government for the reason that things had not gone as expected, in the way of the output of gold and the development of the country—to which, of course, the minister must have referred. Surely, the capacity for a people to govern itself is not dependent upon the question whether there is a superabundance or a scarcity of rainfall or a large or small output from the mines. The question of the kind of government and the basis upon which it shall rest is entirely apart from such considerations. The minister did not tell the House what were the expectations which had been blighted in the bud, and the blighting of which has made it impossible to carry out what otherwise would have been carried out—the giving of autonomy, in the way of power to elect their own council, to the people of the Yukon. May be it was because the operations of that celebrated member of the administration, or high officer of the administration, the Dawson rainmaker, did not turn out as well as the government thought they would, or well enough to justify the appropriation that was made. That was a disappointment, a sore disappointment. But I protest against such a thing as that operating to keep the people of the Yukon from having the right to elect their own council at as early a date as possible.

Now, as to the relation of the prospector and the large operator, we have had information this afternoon that six concessions were dealt with. Two sets of concessionnaires proved themselves amenable to reason and to self-interest and made their peace with the administration. They have their little portion and are carrying on their operations as best they can, while the rest of their territory is given back to the department and is again under the administration of the Minister of the Interior. With reference to the four other concessions the hard hand of the law is being put upon them, and gradually and in the course of time it is hoped they will be ejected from the barren privileges which they have had. I am not going to quarrel with the minister because he acted thus cautiously. I am not going to say that his was not probably the better method under the circumstances. We do not want to be too drastic and so run the risk of frightening capital from the company and especially of keeping foreign capital out. At the same time we must safeguard the rights of the people in these lands. The minister did not tell us what other concessions there were. Are these two concessions that have been compromised and these four of which the government are trying to get possession all the concessions? Or is it true that there are dozens and dozens of concessions, and, if so, how are these being dealt with? Are the concessionnaries being kept to the letter of the law? Are the concessions situated in districts appropriate for placer mining? This is information which the minister might have given the House and which I am sure would have been useful in further discussions of the subject. I draw the attention of the minister to this matter so that when the subject comes up again, as no doubt it will, we may learn from the minister about these other concessions. It is proposed that small boats should be subsidized to go up the streams to carry the prospectors up in the spring and afterwards bring them down with their goods. Give the prospector a chance; that is the plea of the hon. member for the Yukon. But if the prospector is only to toil, to have the claim that he has hunted out at great personal risk, inconvenience and labour, gobbled up by the Guggenheims or other corporations and monopolies of that kind, very little good will come to the prospector. If the prospector gets any advantage it will be only a transitory advantage. And is it not true that great corporations, especially the Guggenheims, are gathering to themselves by purchase, by concession, or by claim-taking, a very large proportion and the very best part of the ground in that territory? If so, that does not mean large population, numerous small holders and the wide distribution of wealth. It means working by machinery, with the minimum of manual labour and the smallest number of colonists for that great country. It prevents the influx of population and prevents the equable distribution of wealth. While it is fair that you should take certain of these lands that cannot be worked in any other way, and, by giving reasonable terms, put it in the power of capital to work them economically and profitably, I think great care must be taken, on the other hand, to retain for the small miner the land which he can work with advantage, making the small miner's profit thereout. The trend to-day seems to be to discourage the small miner and to place matters in the hands of capitalists. Is that an absolute necessity, or is it not possible, by government regulations and appropriate arrangement, to encourage also the small miner by keeping the best places for him to carry on placer mining, thus retaining for the Yukon that class of people who, of late years, have very largely drifted out of that territory and gone to other mining regions.

Now, it seemed to me that the Minister of the Interior was a little too self-congratulatory. He thought everything in the Yukon had gone on in the very best way. Well, I differ from the minister in that respect. I say that in some way or other a loose hand, whosoever it was, has been had upon the Yukon. There has been almost unexampled extravagance, there has been expenditure in the most reckless fashion, without any return, and there has been no strong hand put forth to curb that expenditure in proportion to the needs of the country for it, particularly in the way of administration, of employees, of civil servants, and of the many aids that the government officials there think they must have—there has been no strong progressive hand which has taken hold of that branch of the subject and has endeavoured to curb the reckless expenditure and pare it down. To-day you can take up the public accounts, the expenditure on the one hand and the revenue on the other, to which we must always have regard, though it is not absolutely certain that because the revenue is not up to a certain point, therefore no expenditure should be made; but with reference to receipts and expenditures there ought to be a fair balance kept, and we ought to pare down in that country the immense expenditures and curb the reckless extravagance which have characterized the administration of the Yukon since the hon. gentlemen opposite got the administration of it into their hands. I think the minister has friends in the Yukon, and I am quite certain that the public accounts and the reports of the departments would give the minister fair knowledge with reference to these things, and that some more decided steps should be taken, and some more decided results should be shown, in the way of curbing the extravagance which has been so characteristic of the administration of the Yukon.

There is no use going back to old things, such as the telegraph building and its administration. Whether that line was ever properly built in the first place, I do not know, but certainly it has been a most expensive line to maintain, it has been remarkably so. We might say that it has recently been more celebrated by its breaks and its failures than by its success in giving a fairly good communication with the Yukon. The time was, under this administration, when a corporation eminently able to carry on the service, and which could have been controlled as to rates by the government itself, offered on a very reasonable basis to build that communication and to carry it on. But the government proposed to carry it on themselves, and the result has been a poor service and a very heavy Bill of expenses for maintenance, and for repairs of breakages and consequences. And after all that expenditure we have come to a point where the people of the Yukon are cut off from the outside world and proper communication, more or less, during all portions of the year, and in some portions of the year for very long and inconvenient periods.

There are other questions as well. What reason is there, if, theoretically or practically, we need a commissioner of the Yukon, that he should not be there attending to his duties, and that if his duties are interrupted by a call to a lower kind of work, some one else should not be appointed. It is always best, if you have a head to an administration, that the head should be upon the body, and about it. It leads to all sorts of maladministration and carelessness if the representative head of a territory, a government or a province, vacates his position and his duties for a long period, and is not present at his post. What is the reason that if it became necessary for the administration to—what shall I say?—degrade the gubernatorial or the commissional position by bringing it down to the rough and tumble turmoil of party politics, what reason has the government to give why it should not have placed another head to that administration, and done it within a reasonable time? I ask the minister now if, from the time that the late commissioner was taken away from his duties until the present, there has been any legal representative of this government in the shape of a commissioner in the Yukon Territory to attend to the duties that commissioner has to attend to. I am informed that there has not been. Again we press the question, why, if the commissioner is necessary, he should not be on the spot and be attending to his duties. Some one says the commissioner must have a holiday. Well, according to some representations, it is a perpetual holiday in Dawson city, daylight for twenty-four hours of each day for a certain period of the year, electric lights and all other kinds of lights for the darker portion of the administration's existence in the Yukon. But taken altogether, variety and excitement seem not to be entirely absent in that far nothern portion of our territory. How can a man keep away from a position in the Yukon for such a long period of time? How is it that the government can take away the prospective head of that great and growing country, where the best wheat in Canada is got from the soil—how can the government be so cruel as to keep him from the scene of his labours by not appointing him straightway and letting him take his position and do his duty?

Well, there is another point. A year or so ago my hon. friend who sits by my side (Mr. R. L. Borden) called the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the extraordinary discrepancies in the royalties for gold. I think the Minister of the Interior, while not ready to answer the question at the time, or to make a statement, promised to take the matter up and have an investigation made. I find in the 'Hansard' of 1906 that:

> Mr. R. L. Borden (Carleton) asked the Minister of the Interior whether he had been able to make an investigation into the royalties received on the product of gold in the Yukon.

Then he gave his tabulation of the reports, and showed the very considerable discrepancy that had occurred. The minister answered that his attention had not been called to the discrepancies, that the matter had really escaped his attention, but he said, 'I will see that it is attended to.' Now the whole matter of the collection of and the charge upon these revenues was set out in clear light by the leader of the opposition. It required an answer, it required careful looking into, and instant looking into. There was an inference from the whole statement which was not creditable to the government and not creditable to this country. Whilst the minister may have an answer to it or be able to get it, it is important that the answer should be forthcoming at a fairly early time and not have the country waiting in suspense for an answer to the statement or the implication in the statement for so long a time. The minister has not given us any information in reference to it. It is another one of the things which are not pleasant features of the work of the Yukon. As enforcing my plea that the commissioner should be appointed to the Yukon I would like to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a very remarkable letter which appears in the Toronto 'News' of March 11. It is not an anonymous letter. It is openly signed by the writer and the writer is, I believe a presbyterian minister, and who, writing over his own signature and making these allegations, seems to have been well informed and to be able to substantiate what he has therein stated. I may say that within the last three months I have received repeated communications from the Yukon along the very same lines; in fact, the intimations have not been confined to the last three months, but they have been common and repeated for many, many months. I see that in another House a member has called the attention of the government formally to the matter. Now, Sir, on the question of responsibility, so long as this government has seven out of the elective council and has a majority of that council it should be particularly sensitive to such matters as are complained of in this letter and it should be a rigid rule, so rigid that if it were frequent fatal results would take place, that no high official of the government representing and standing for the order and respectability of the government, should give any countenance whatsoever to the class of evils which is complained of here as being licensed under the council and as being licensed favourably under that council. I am not going to read just now to the House every thing in connection with it but I am going to mention two or three facts. One is that an official of the Yukon council, the license inspector, paraded his presence in a very questionable way, at a very questionable time and before a very questionable audience in a way which gave the sanction of that official, in so far as he could give it to the very thing which every straight and honest inhabitant of the Yukon disbelieves in and would feign discountenance. So that in reference to the official life under this council and consequently under this government I think a direct duty rests upon the government here and upon the minister who particularly represents the government in that country as it comes under his administration to call to instant and bitter account any of their officials who are found flaunting themselves in that way. I do not say that the government could interfere with the morals or the habits, or the likes, or the pleasures of a private individual but it does become a different thing when a representative, an official, be he high or low, of the government is concerned in these things and therefore, to a certain extent, compromises this government—that is not so important—but compromises government generally and the best that government stands for. I am not saying this in a partisan way but simply as a general principle. Now, there are one or two parts of that letter which I think it would be well to read. Attention is called to the fact that in the Yukon and in Dawson city there are families, there are children, and no healthier and better children, they say, can be found elsewhere that are found in the Yukon territory and in Dawson city. The influences on family life and on growing children ought to be as carefully looked after as it is possible to do. The Rev. Mr. Pringle goes on to say:

> The members of the government at Ottawa are aware of this condition. Again and again they have been appealed to, to rid us of this menace and disgrace, without result, without, in some cases, the courtesy of a reply. The latest answer is, that the licensing power has been delegated to the Yukon council and that therefore, the federal authorities have no jurisdiction. Has there been delegated to the Yukon council, or any other inferior legislative body, the power to frame iniquity by a law, to license prostitution in contravention of the criminal law of Canada? But what is the Yukon council?

I will omit what he says in reference to the composition of it:

> If the men who are appointed to serve on the Yukon council will not serve the moral interests of the people of the Yukon—and to be perfectly frank they are the last interests we should expect some of them to serve—let the government appoint those who will, or tell the present appointed members, all government officials, that if they permit this infamy to exist any longer under cover of an ordinance, their positions will be to let. They have shown themselves to be the subservient tools of the worst executive we ever had in the perpetration of a wrong. Let the government tell them, if they are ignorant, where the path of right and decency and safety lies.
> Nor is it to be overlooked that the legalizing of the added attraction in these two houses is an injustice to those who are in the legitimate liquor business, and a discrimination—I am almost ashamed to write this—against the much less dangerous houses in Klondike City.
> I have a few words more to say. We are without a commissioner. Doubtless within a month or two an appointment will be made. Much depends upon the personal character and moral ideals of the executive. Send us a man to whom a drunken orgy will be but an incident amongst other commonplace incidents; who has no moral ideals, or has ceased to regard them; who will prostitute the moral and material interests of the people to private or party exigencies; who will lead a lewd life before the people whose interests he is appointed to serve; who is by habit or business allied to the lowest elements of our social life—let the government send such a one and discontent will persist and grow. Nemesis will run abreast of him from the start and may thrust itself across the path of those who send him.

But give us a clean, sane, upright man, who will frown upon vice in official and private life alike, whose life itself will be a rebuke to the drunkenness, lust, gambling and graft which have been our shame; who has high moral ideals and the courage to move persistently if slowly towards their realization, and he will effect the contentment of the great mass of our people as to moral and material interests alike.

Reading that letter all through it does not strike one as the letter of a bigot; it is the letter of a man who takes a reasonable view of society in a new and peculiarly constituted country like that, a mining country. He gives and takes, and is willing to give and take but he does ask, in the interests of morality and of the abiding population of Dawson City and of that country, that certain excrescences be cut off and that certain clean principles shall be carried out in certain ways in the administration of that country. I have great faith in that northern country; I have greater faith every hour I live in the unknown and unexplored portions of this Dominion. What we have had lately revealed to us when the lid has been but partially taken off with reference to the great areas that we had looked upon as being absolutely worthless, gives us great hope and confidence as to what may be found in the good time of Providence when still more northern areas are opened up by the enterprise and industry of our people and made to contribute their quota to the wealth and to the progress of this country.

COLONIAL SECURITIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to bring another matter to the attention of the government, of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) particularly. The minister will recollect that during the session of 1906 I made certain inquiries of the government with respect to the application of the Imperial Colonial Stock Act of 1900 to the securities of the various provinces of Canada. By the Act in question the power of trustees in the United Kingdom under the Trustee Act of 1893 was extended and provision was made for the investment of trust funds in colonial securities under regulations to be made by the Lords' Commissioners of the Treasury. The regulations of the Lords' Commissioners of the Treasury were promulgated in due course, I do not know exactly at what date, but they are as follows:

(a) The colony shall provide by legislation for the payment out of the revenues of the colony of any sum which may become payable to stockholders under any judgment, decree, rule or order of a court in the United Kingdom.

(b) The colony shall satisfy the imperial treasurer that adequate funds (as and when required) will be made in the United Kingdom to meet such judgment, decree, rule or order.

(c) The colonial government shall place on record a formal expression of opinion that any colonial legislation which appears to the imperial government to alter any of the provisions affecting the stock to the injury of the shareholders or to involve a departure from the original contract, in regard to the stock would properly be disallowed.

The government of Canada secured within the last ten years, I do not know exactly at what date, the necessary consent of the imperial authorities and the securities of Canada at the present time are available for investment by trustees in the United Kingdom. The following self-governing colonies and Crown colonies have taken advantage of the Act, passed the necessary legislation and given the assurances required under the treasury regulations.

(a) Self-governing colonies, the Dominion of Canada, Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Newfoundland, New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, Victoria and Western Australia.

(b) Crown and other colonies, Barbadoes, British Guiana, Ceylon, Gold Coast, Grenada, Hong Kong, Jamaica, Lagos, Mauritius, St. Lucia, Sierra Leona and Trinidad.

As a result the financial position and credit of those colonies which have come under the Act and under the regulations of the Lords' Commissioners of the Treasury have immensely improved and their securities have obtained a better status in the market. We know that the various provinces which now constitute Canada were united into one Dominion under the British North America Act and various orders in council passed at subsequent dates under the authority of that Act. I understand that the inscribed stocks of the provinces of Canada are eligible for registration under the Colonial Stock Act of 1877, and amending Acts, and the word 'colony' is defined in the Colonial Stock Act of 1877 as follows:

In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires. The expression 'colony' means any dominion, colony, island, territory, province, or settlement situate within Her Majesty's dominions, but not within the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, or Isle of Man, and not forming part of India as defined for the purposes of the Acts for the time being in force relating to the government of India; and for the purposes of this Act the whole of the dominions, colonies, islands, territories, provinces and settlements under one central legislature, and also such part of the said dominion and such of the said colonies, islands, territories, provinces and settlements as is under a local legislature is deemed to be a colony.

It would appear that the difficulty in the way of extending the benefits of the Act of 1900 to the provinces of Canada is to be found in the provision of the third of the treasury regulations. This difficulty is that the treasury regulations require that there shall be a formal assurance to the imperial government that any Act of the colony which in any way interferes with the value or security of the stock may properly be disallowed. The power of disallowance so far as the legislation of the provinces of Canada is concerned, is vested not in the imperial government but in this government, and it is of course obvious that the imperial government not having the power of disallowance, or rather the Crown disallowing through the executive of Canada and not through the executive of Great Britain, has not the same control as it has in respect of the other colonies and dominions of Her Majesty which I have just now named. I understand that the provinces of Canada have proposed to get over this difficulty by giving the same assurance to this government which has been given by the other colonies that have obtained the benefit of this Act to the imperial government, and they propose further that this government should in respect of the disallowance of any such Act proceed upon the request or advice of the imperial government so that in that way every necessary assurance would be given to the holders of such stocks in the United Kingdom. I understand perfectly that there are difficulties in the way; there were difficulties, which were not overcome for some time before, this government succeeded in having its securities inscribed for investment by trustees in the United Kingdom; but I would think that by some such means as have already been suggested the object might be accomplished, and it is to be supposed that the governments of the respective provinces of Canada would be prepared, and I think they would be prepared, to give any further assurance in addition to that which I mentioned which would make the holders of stocks of the provinces of Canada in the United Kingdom just as secure as the holders of the stocks of the Dominion of Canada. I bring the matter once more to the attention of the government because my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, during the last session, after having alluded to the difficulties I have just now suggested, promised that the matter would receive the attention of the government, and that, as the subject was a very important one for the provinces, the best efforts of the government would be directed towards securing for the different provinces of Canada the same treatment that is accorded in the United Kingdom to the securities of even some of the minor Crown colonies. It does seem very ridiculous that when the securities of these small Crown colonies may be invested in by estates in the United Kingdom, securities of Quebec, Ontario and the other great provinces of Canada are excluded. To say the least, it seems a very striking anomaly, and I sincerely trust that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will either to-day or at some early day in the session announce that some progress has been made or that the matter has engaged the attention of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not had this matter before me for some time, and I am therefore obliged to speak from recollection; but my impression is that there has been no recent change in the situation. The impression that seemed to prevail in the mind of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that this was a matter within the control of the federal government is an erroneous impression.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not say it is within their control.

Mr. FIELDING. The provinces must be left to a large extent to work out their own salvation in a matter of this kind. If our good offices can help them in any way, certainly they are entitled to them, and they will always be given.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seemed to me that the matter could only be worked out effectually by the intervention of this government, because it holds the power of disallowance in respect to provincial Acts.

Mr. FIELDING. There would be no difficulty in our giving the British government the assurance that we would undertake to disallow any Act of a provincial legislature —if one could conceive of such an Act under our system of government—whereby a province would attempt to repudiate or in any way minimize its obligations. I quite realize that it is very desirable that the securities of our provinces should have the advantage of being included in the trustee list ; but I am satisfied that that is not the real difficulty, and we have had no intimation that the British government take that view at all. The objection of the British government rests on other grounds. They are very unwilling to enlarge the trustee list at all. The same question has arisen with respect to stocks which are more than provincial—which are essentially Dominion stocks ; for instance, the stocks which the government and parliament of Canada have guaranteed with respect to great railway corporations—the Canadian Northern in the first instance, and the Grand Trunk Pacific in the second, as well as originally the Canadian Pacific Railway. Each of these stocks, it would seem to the ordinary observer, has all the merit of a Dominion stock plus the obligation of the company itself. It is the case of having the promissory note of the company and the endorsement of the Dominion government. Yet, strange to say, the imperial authorities will not admit these stocks to the trustee list. That is a stronger case in one respect than the case of one of our provinces, because it is a security in which the resources of the Dominion of Canada are pledged ; but so strong is the opposition of the imperial authorities to the enlargement of the trustee list that they have refused so far to allow a stock bearing the guarantee of the government of Canada to be included, although they will admit a straight government stock. If by taking the steps which my hon. friend suggests, we could secure this advantage for the provinces, it would be both our duty and our pleasure to take it; but the impression that that is the real cause of the difficulty is a very erroneous one.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the real reason ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think there are two reasons. There is first the natural conservatism of the imperial authorities in matters of this kind. My hon. friend knows that in his day what he thought was a perfectly complete case for the admission of our Dominion stocks into the favoured trustee list had not the desired effect, and the only reason was the natural conservatism of the Englishman, especially in financial matters. Probably another consideration in the mind of the imperial authorities is that the broadening of the trustee list has the effect of making British consols much less sought after than they used to be. That is regarded in some circles as one reason why British consols have fallen to very low figures, though I would not attach much significance to that assertion. I suppose no English statesman would like to admit that this consideration has influenced his mind to any extent, but it is in the mind of some financial writers. However, everything that my hon. friend has said with regard to the admission of our provincial securities into the trustee list has my sympathy. It does seem unreasonable that the stocks of a small colony with small resources should be admitted while the stocks of one of our great provinces are excluded; but the explanation is that the imperial government has a direct connection with and control over these colonies, which it does not possess in the case of our provincial governments under our federal system. As my hon. friend has pointed out, the power of disallowance of provincial Acts rests not with the imperial authorities, but with the government at Ottawa ; while in the case of the Crown colonies to which he has referred, the power of disallowance rests directly with the imperial government. That is where the line of division comes. However, I would not utter a word other than one of hearty sympathy with what my hon. friend has brought to the attention of the House, and if by any Act of ours we can bring about so desirable an end, I can assure him it will be both our duty and our pleasure to do it.,

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. I would invite the attention of the committee to several matters in the order in which they appear in the tariff resolutions. In resolution 1, the first subsection proposes to repeal a large number of Acts. We find that since that section was drafted the revised statutes have been brought into operation, and they have repealed all these Acts ; therefore it is not necessary for us to repeal the Acts specifically, but merely to repeal any section of the revised statutes which deals with them. I propose therefore that resolution 1 be reconsidered and amended by substituting for paragraphs Nos. 1 and 2 of resolution 1, the words :

Resolved, that it is expedient to repeal chapter 49 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, entitled the Customs Tariff.

The effect is the same, but it is a better form of legislation than repealing Acts which have already been repealed.

Mr. FIELDING. In resolution 2, for the same reason I propose to strike out the words I shall now read:

As amended by section 2 of the Customs Amended Act of 1888.

The recent revised statutes consolidate the whole Act and therefore we do not need to refer to these amendments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN And the section is the same.

Mr. FIELDING. Strike out the words 'as amended by section 2 of the clause amended Act of 1888.'

Agreed to.

On item 79,

Mr. FIELDING. I propose, before the word 'araucarias' in the second line, to insert the words 'seedling carnation stock.'

Agreed to.

On item 433.

Mr. FIELDING. This item comprises a number of things connected with the printing industry. We have the articles of metal and the articles of paper associated together and want to separate them. I propose to strike out the words 'matrices or' in the fourth line.

Agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I propose to insert a new item 433a:

Matrices for stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids, described in item 433, per square inch, one-half cent.

The old item was one and a half cents per square inch, it being rated in combination with a number of other thing. We made a distinction between these various items and in part got a reduction and in part let the item stand. The reduction, as applied to these matrices, was from one and a half cent to one-eighth of a cent. It is an article the value of which is rather hard to establish. After careful consideration, we have formed the impression that the reduction was perhaps too severe, and we propose that the rate for these matrices shall be half a cent instead of one-eighth.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister make any distinction between matrices for newspaper plates and for advertising?

Mr. FIELDING. For advertising purposes that will remain as before. They were not reduced. The reduction only took place on the newspaper matter.

Mr. FOSTER. It is featured matter.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be regarded as newspaper matter. It would be hardly deemed an advertisement. This rate of half a cent will work out very reasonably for the industry.

On item 441,

Type casting and type setting machines, adapted for use in printing offices; and typewriters.

Mr. FIELDING. We find that typewriters had been classified with type casting and type setting machines, for convenience, but the effect was to make a reduction which was hardly contemplated. The common typewriter is not properly classified with the type casting and type setting machines. We propose to strike the typewriter out of item 441 and make it an independent item, which will leave the rate of duty as before, without change except as to the fraction in the preference. I propose to strike out of item 441 the word 'typewriters' and to make a new item, 441a, typewriters seventeen and a half per cent, twenty-two and a half per cent, twenty-five per cent.

Agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. We find that horse-powers are mentioned in two different items. Horse-powers for farming purposes are included in the amended item 447, and horse powers are also mentioned in item 448. We have concluded that, having provided for these for farming purposes we need not mention them in the other item. I move therefore, that 'horse-powers' be struck out of item 448.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. Iron tubing of certain sizes has been made free when imported by the manufacturers of bedsteads. This has been in the tariff for years. Our attention has been called to the fact that the same article is used by manufacturers of carriage rails, and so we propose to insert a new item, No. 486a, as follows:

486a. Iron tubing, lacquered or brass covered, not over two inches in diameter, and brass-cased rods and brass trimmings, when imported by manufacturers of carriage rails for use exclusively in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories, free, free, free.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I propose to insert also a new item, No. 650a, as follows:

Button blanks of animal shell, in the rough, 7½ per cent, 10 per cent, 10 per cent.

These are practically raw materials which are imported for the use of manufacturers of buttons, and we make a low rate of duty accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. In the drawback schedule, schedule 'B.' I propose to insert a new item. Certain articles of cordage, lines and twines for use in the fisheries are made free. It has been represented to us that, in the changing conditions of the fishing industry, particularly on the Pacific coast, a galvanized wire netting is now being used in the fish traps. It is practically a portion of the netting of the fisheries, but, probably, under a rigid interpretation of the item as it reads, it would be held to be dutiable. We desire to give the same concession on this as is given on the lines and twines used on the Atlantic coast. Therefore, I propose the following item in the schedule 'B':

1020. Galvanized wire netting of a class or kind not made in Canada, when used in traps for the fisheries, 99 per cent drawback.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that disposes of the tariff matters before the committee except two items relating to boots and shoes.

Mr. FOSTER. If I may, I would like to call to the attention of the minister a matter relating to the importation of machinery as between Great Britain and the United States. The British exporter, of course, gets the preferential rate. He has to charge for the packing of the machinery and the recipient here must pay for it. Owing to the long voyage, machinery imported from Great Britain must be securely and therefore more expensively packed than machinery coming from the United States. The machinery sent in by the American producer is sent to Canada by car and comes at much less expense in packing, and the packing is largely returned. It is impossible to return more expensive packing used by the British exporter. The effect of this is to give a decided advantage to the exporter from the United States. The attention of the minister has been called to the matter, and my informant tells me that he has a promise of its consideration. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) will easily see how this works out to the disadvantage of the British manufacturer and to the advantage of the American. Well, we do not want the advantage that way but rather the other way. I would like to hear whether any attempts were made to do away with this discrimination—as it virtually is—against the British producer.

Mr. FIELDING. The criticism would apply not only to these but to all packages. No doubt, the proximity of our country to the United States enables the producer in that country to send in goods at less expense for packages than the British exporter must face. But, while this is a fact, I do not see how we can overcome it, unless we abandon the system of taxing packages altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, has the minister looked into that matter? Why should the case in which a piece of merchandise comes may pay a duty? If I buy merchandise in a foreign country and carry it in in my hand, I pay duty only on the merchandise. What difference can it make if I bring it in in a box? Of course, I understand that goods may be brought in in packages and that packages themselves may become merchandise. In such a case, of course, it is fair to charge duty on the packages. And I know that it has been the policy to charge duty on packages but I would like to know on what theory it is done?

Mr. PATERSON. You could not do without the package clause very well. In the working of the department a uniform rule has been adopted. In the case of goods bearing a specific duty, the packages are free, unless the packages themselves can be sold and used again. For instance, a flour or sugar barrel, one that will not hold water, is not charged a duty; but a tight barrel, which can be sold as merchandise would be dutiable. In the case of goods on which there is an ad valorem duty, if the value of the case is included in the value of the goods, there is no separate duty on the case; but where the package is specifically charged for, it bears the same ad valorem rate of duty as the contents.

It will not bear so hardly upon the line that my hon. friend has mentioned as it will upon the gentlemen in the drys goods trade, who have objected to it. The reason is that, recognizing that machinery, packed as the English have to pack it to cross the sea, costs so very heavily, we endeavoured to meet that by giving a greater reduction to the machinery from Great Britain. Machinery before was 25 per cent and the English rate of course was 16⅔ per cent. We have raised the general tariff to 27½ and we have lowered the preferential rate to 15. That will largely overcome the difficulty, a very serious matter, with reference to the cost of packages which are so expensive. But the difficulty remains with the dry goods, and it cannot be considered in any other light than that it does detract that much from the preference. But I think in many classes of dry goods there has been a lessened preference rate.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BOYCE. I was not in the House when item 210a was dealt with, that is, caustic soda which, when in packages of not less than 25 pounds weight, is free, and over that 15 per cent under the general tariff and 10 per cent under the British preferential. The minister had, I presume, a knowledge of the conditions existing with regard to the manufacture of bleaching powder and caustic soda at Sault Ste. Marie, and I understood that he had promised, or suggested, that some protection to that industry might be granted when the tariff came to be revised. Strong efforts were made some years ago when the factory was first started, to induce the government to give some protection against foreign competition, and those who saw the minister were told, as I am informed, to carry it along as well as they could and not allow it to go to the wall. They did so in the hope that some remedy would be afforded by the government. The minister is familiar with the conditions that existed there, so I merely ask whether any reconsideration could be given to this item, or whether he has lost sight of the representations that were made to him, and which, as I know, were entirely in accordance with the facts. This was an industry in which $300,000 of capital was invested, paying about $40,000 a year in wages. It was manufacturing an article of a quality and in quantity sufficient to supply not only the Canadian trade but it exported some abroad, for instance, to the United States. But this industry has been entirely crushed out of existence, and the factory has been sold under liquidation sale. Those conditions were brought to the attention of the minister some years ago, and I now ask whether it is possible to reconsider this item.

Mr. FIELDING. Is the article now made at the Soo?

Mr. BOYCE. No, I do not understand it is now made at the Soo; but I can tell the hon. gentleman that if he would carry out the promises that I understand he made—I am not speaking authoritatively, I am merely repeating what was told me—the manufacture could be revived, and probably something could be done towards recovering the trade which had been lost.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend says that any promise was given by the government that a duty would be imposed on that article, he has certainly been misinformed. I recollect that several years ago urgent representations were made of the kind the hon. gentleman mentions, but he has no authority for any statement as to any promise having been given obliging the government to impose any rate of duty. The matter was brought before us when we were at the Soo, and my impression is that the industry had been abandoned. I think I am correct. That being the case, the matter was not pressed upon us as strongly as it had been at a previous stage. This article has been on the free-list for generations, and the promoters desired us to make it dutiable. But on the other hand there were manufacturers in Canada who used it and who offered strong objections to that course. While representations were strongly made in favour of that industry, when we found that it had been abandoned, the matter ceased to engage our attention as closely as it had done on the previous occasion.

Mr. BOYCE. Of course, this is very much in the nature of a post mortem over an industry. But in justice to the people who made the representations I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the facts as they occurred chronologically. The factory was completed about the 1st of June, 1903, upon which there had been expended in round figures $300,000. Its payroll was between $30,000 ond $40,000 a year. The total output of the factory was sufficient, not only to supply the trade in Canada, but a large part of the trade in the United States. On or about the 1st of February, 1903, a deputation waited upon the Minister of Finance and made an argument in favour of the protection of that industry, which was then ready for work. Tables and figures were laid before the minister to show him that with a little protection as against foreign importations and to shelter them from the disturbed conditions of the markets in England, Germany and elsewhere, this industry could be carried on successfully, and be of great benefit to that neighbourhood. These arguments I believe were made before the minister on the 21st of February, 1903. They were oral arguments and the minister requested the deputation to put them into writing. This was done by a letter under date of March 4, 1903, which was acknowledged by a letter from the minister dated March 7, which I have in my hand. In it the minister promised to give consideration to the matter. The budget was brought down about the middle of April, but no mention whatever was made in regard to this industry. In the month of December of that year the Soo industries met with temporary embarrassment, and suspended.

They passed into the the hands of a receiver. Thus, although an independent industry, it was indirectly affected by the result. It was an auxiliary industry to the Lake Superior industries, because a large amount of the product of this factory was used in the manufacture of pulp and paper by the Soo industries. Towards the latter end of December, 1903, I am informed, that Mr. James Bicknell, who was then the solicitor for Speyer & Co., who had taken possession of the plant at Sault Ste. Marie, had a conference with the Minister of Finance. He told the minister, as I am informed, that the company would have to go into liquidation unless something were promised in the shape of a protective duty on caustic soda and bleaching powder. I am further informed that the Minister of Finance asked Mr. Bicknell to make it his care and to see as far as he possibly could that the company should not go into liquidation. In February, March and April, 1904, I understand that Mr. J. J. Kehoe, who was the unsuccessful candidate at the last Dominion election, waited upon the minister and impressed upon him again the desirability of something being done in this matter. Again I understand that other efforts were made by Mr. Clergue and possibly by other directors of the company. The ultimate result was that absolutely nothing was done, a winding up petition was filed against the company under its debenture mortgage and the industry had to close its doors. I submit with very great respect that it is a little late for the hon. gentleman to say that if steps had been taken and representations had been made something might have been done in this tariff when the strongest possible representations were made to the government and the Minister of Finance at a time when the minister was in a position to stimulate this industry. The result was disastrous to the company. Although they continued as long as they could to struggle against the competition that existed, although the price of their goods, as shown in the tables on file in the minister's department had month by month steadily decreased, and although that was impressed upon the minister personally, by petition and by argument, in the strongest possible way, the hon. gentleman allowed that industry to be crushed out of existence for want of acceding to the request which, I think, under all circumstances, having regard to all the arguments, seems to me to be a fairly reasonable one and one which would create no difficulty for or have any injurious effect upon any other industry or trade and which would have been most acceptable to the people of Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. FIELDING. The only part of my hon. friend's remarks with which I wish to disagree is the statement that there was a promise given to these gentlemen. It was a religion with us throughout the whole tariff inquiry that while we listened to everybody respectfully, and we certainly did not desire any man to close up his industry if any sympathetic word would help him to keep his factory open, no promise was given that any special rate of duty would be imposed. What he says as to the representations made from time to time is quite correct. There were numerous representations made several years ago.

Mr. PORTER. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to the item in regard to rolled brass and to ask him if he has any further information in regard to it. I understood, when we were discussing the matter before, that he would make some inquiries as to whether that was manufactured in Canada or not, and that if it were not manufactured in Canada perhaps some change might be made or some consideration given to that question. I may say that since the matter was discussed here I have made some inquiries myself and I have received from manufacturers using that class of goods some correspondence in which they assure me that rolled brass is not manufactured in Canada at all. As late as December of last year orders were given to the firm outside of Toronto that reference was made to, the orders were refused and those giving them were told that that firm was no longer in business. It is impossible to obtain these goods in Canada and I would repeat my request that the manufacturers who use these goods be allowed to bring them on duty free or that they be given a rebate.

Mr. FIELDING. This matter was considered and dealt with in the tariff the other day. Our discussion, in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) participated, had reference more particularly to the question of nickel and German silver than to that of brass. But the two items were associated in the discussion and the point that my hon. friend (Mr. Porter) drew attention to was that we were allowing a drawback to persons who were using nickel and German silver for certain purposes and he suggested that we extend it to locks. I remember asking him if these articles were used to any extent in the manufacture of locks and he said they were, and his claim was that the manufacturers of locks should be treated in the same way as the manufacturers of certain articles to whom that concession was given. We did give the matter further consideration, and we came to the conclusion that as respects nickel and German silver we would make them free so that the industry the hon. gentleman refers to will be placed in a position of equality with other industries, but as respects the item of brass, which was not the one which was under discussion, we determined that as there was a fair prospect of the factory being reopened we would let the duty stand, and give these industries the benefit of exemption from the duty on nickel and German silver, which is only a secondary business as compared with the manufacture of brass.

Mr. PORTER. I regret that I failed to make myself understood before. The hon. gentleman is quite right in the statement he makes in regard to what I said about German and nickel silver. It is used in the manufacturing concerns to which I refer, but it is not the principal thing that is used. Brass is the principal thing that is used by these lock manufacturers, and what I asked for was that brass, which is not manufactured in Canada, be put in the same position as nickel and german silver. That is still my request, and if the minister understood me as abandoning that contention as to brass being put upon the free list or a rebate being allowed upon that, I beg to correct that because that was not the intention that I endeavoured to convey to the House. It was that brass, being the principal article used in the manufacture of locks, should be treated in the same way as nickel and German silver by being made free or rebate allowed.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but we were not giving any drawback to anybody on brass and therefore the discussion chiefly concerned nickel and German silver, although it is quite right to say that brass is associated with it. However, the conclusion we reached was that if we would make nickel and German silver free we would to that extent meet the hon. gentleman's criticism. Brass has been manufactured by that Toronto concern to a very considerable extent. A very considerable sum of money was invested and when we determined to put the item in our tariff we understood that the industry was in operation. Further inquiry, however, led to the discovery that the factory which had been in operation had suspended, but we have some assurance that it is likely to reopen shortly. There is a large amount of money invested, it has not been abandoned, the promoters contemplate reopening the factory, and if a small duty of 10 per cent will help them we do not think that we should deprive them of it. It is not a very heavy duty if it has to be paid by the various industries which use brass, most of which have a fairly good protective duty themselves.

Mr. PORTER. Then these manufacturers are to understand that this is the reason and the sole reason why brass is not treated in the same manner in this tariff as German silver, namely, that this is a proposal of a manufacturing concern in Canada manufacturing the brass. That is the only reason?

Mr. FIELDING. That is hardly a fair way to state it. That would imply that someone was contemplating the establishment of a brass factory; that is not the situation. A factory has been established and was in actual operation and sold brass goods to scores of manufacturers in Canada, but owing to financial difficulties the company suspended operations. The brass is their principal product. They also ask consideration with regard to German silver, but as that is not their principal product we thought that we would give them this little advantage with regard to brass and leave German silver free. We think it is a fair arrangement and that the industries using brass will not have occasion to complain of a 10 per cent duty when they have 20 per cent and in some cases 30 per cent on their finished article.

Mr. PORTER. If it were understood by the firm in Toronto that is likely to start up again that the admission of brass free of duty would only extend to such time as they required to get into operation, would that affect their business?

Mr. FIELDING. It would be rather hard to introduce an item of that kind in the tariff. If we did it here we would have to do it in other cases, and I really think the duty is so moderate that it will not be a burden to any one.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 72) respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Pardee.

CENTRAL CANADA MANUFACTURERS MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Bill (No. 81) to incorporate the Central Canada Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Calvert—considered in committee and reported.

On motion for the third reading.

Mr. AMES. This Bill has been so considerably changed that it should be reprinted before its third reading so that those who have any objections may see whether the Bill in its amended shape is not open to objection.

Mr. FIELDING. The main objection was on the question of deposit. The company have consented to the view of the committee on that point, and as far as I am aware there is nothing debateable in the Bill now. The reprinting would have the effect of putting the Bill before us in simpler form, but there is nothing controversial in it. Of course the promoters will have to pay for the printing.

Mr. LENNOX. The matter of the deposit is governed by the General Act.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I understood it was a violation of rule 112 to go into committee on a Bill before it is reprinted, and I thought there was an understanding that that rule would be enforced.

Mr. CALVERT. The reason why it has not been reprinted is that the promoters of the Bill expected that in all probability they would have to withdraw it. It is only to-day that I was notified the company were officially prepared to accept the proposition made by the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) to put up a deposit. As the Bill has been fairly discussed in committee, I would ask the House to permit it to pass. It will be reprinted before it goes to the Senate. As the Bill has met the approval of everybody, why not let it pass this House and let it go to the Senate?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I am speaking upon the general principle. This thing is being done from day to day. What I am anxious for is that the rules of the House be complied with and every member be given an opportunity to see the Bill as it passed the committee. That is the only way in which a Bill can be discussed intelligently.

Mr. AMES. I do not wish to delay the passage of the Bill, but I would like to ask the promoter whether Bill (No. 93) is also to be proceeded with ?

Mr. CALVERT. I expect that when it comes before the committee, it will be dealt with along the same lines as this Bill.

Mr. AMES. My object would be quite attained if this Bill passed its third reading and was reprinted for the Senate, so that, in its reprinted form, it would be in the hands of members before Bill (No. 93) is actually taken up in committee.

Mr. CALVERT. That could be done.

Mr. AMES. Is that agreed to ?

Mr. CALVERT. Yes.

Bill read the third time, and passed

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again in Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. I suggest that we take the two items relating to boots and shoes together.

611. Boots and shoes, pegged or wire fastened, with unstitched soles close edged, 17½ per cent, 22½ per cent, 25 per cent.

611a. Boots, shoes, slippers and insoles, of any material, n.o.p., 20 per cent, 27½ per cent, 30 per cent.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the change there ?

Mr. FIELDING. It means, briefly, that the coarser goods remain as before, but, on the finer classes of boots and shoes the duty is advanced five per cent.

Mr. BOYCE. Item 219 of the old tariff reads as follows :

Boots, shoes and slippers of any material, n.o.p., 25 per cent ad valorem.

In the tariff introduced on the 29th of November last, this was changed, and now we have the two sections as read by yourself. Mr. Chairman, the question of the duty on boots and shoes, as the minister knows, raised a great deal of difficulty with the Tariff Commission, while a good deal of what might be called the internecine strife between the boot and shoe manufacturers on the one side and the tanners on the other, was disclosed to the ministers. I propose to consider these items before the committee as briefly as possible. It will be seen that boots and shoes, pegged or wire fastened, with unstitched soles, are left as under the old tariff, while an additional protection of five per cent is given to the manufacturers of all boots and shoes coming under section 611a. This change, as I understand it, is the result of representations which were made by a very large delegation which waited upon the Tariff Commission in Quebec, and of some negotiations since that time. In order to outline the difficulties which led up to the amendment of this tariff, I cannot do better than read the memorial addressed to the Tariff Commission by the manufacturers of boots and shoes :

To the members of the Tariff Commission, 1905—

Gentlemen,—The undersigned representatives of the Boot and Shoe Manufacturers, beg to submit a statement as to the condition of the industry at the present time, and the reasons why we consider that necessary changes should be made in the tariff on boots and shoes.

Size and extent of industry.

At the present time there are about eighty-two concerns engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes. These represent a capital investment of $6,000,000, and they annually turn out about 12,000,000 pairs of boots and shoes valued at $15,000,000. These factories give employment to 10,000 hands whose wages amount to $3,700,000 per annum.

General condition at present time.

The boot and shoe industry is now, and has been for some years past, in a depressed state. The figures of the United Shoe Machinery Company, which may be taken as authentic, show during the past year an average decrease in royalties from boots and shoes in the better grades of 5,000 pairs per month instead of showing an increase in accordance with the growth and general prosperity of the country.

This depression is largely due to the increased importations of American shoes which last year, according to the official figures of the blue-book amounted to $1,107,100. If this amount of money had been put into Canadian goods, our manufacturers would be able to further specialize in their lines, to reduce the cost of production as well as improve the character of the output. In addition about $300,000 extra would have been spent in wages, and from 700 to 800 more hands employed in our factories.

The extra output which this amount of trade would have required would have enabled the manufacturer to sell goods at a lower figure on account of the reduction in his fixed costs.

Only one other country buys more American shoes than Canada. The value thus afforded to the American industry is well stated by 'American Shoemaking' as follows: 'Had Canada purchased no more boots and shoes in 1904 than 1903, United States exporters would have shown a falling off of $124,908 from 1903.'

Owing to the smallness of the market, and the vast extent of territory to be covered, and the necessity of making so many classes of goods in one factory, the cost of administration and distribution is greater in Canada than in the United States.

Raw materials used.

Canadian manufacturers of boots and shoes have to pay high prices for their raw material. The tariff on the raw material averages about 21 per cent, as it is the finished product of other manufacturers in this country who enter the bulk of their raw material free of duty, and have a protection varying from 15 per cent to 35 per cent on their finished product. The sources of supply are chiefly Canada and the United States.

Competition.

The chief competition which Canadian manufacturers must meet is that of the United States.

The imports of boots and shoes from the United States last year amounted to $1,107,100, all in fine and fine medium goods, competing with $4,250,000 of similar goods made in Canada. In other words over 25 per cent of the fine and fine medium styles of boots and shoes sold in Canada were manufactured in the United States.

This competition from the United States has been steadily increasing during the past nine years, shown in the government records as follows :

1897	$ 320,025
1898	378,453
1899	451,376
1900	541,665
1901	542,790
1902	701,383
1903	743,378
1904	1,002,900
1905	1,173,113

While the records of the leather trade in so far as disconnected with the shoe manufacturing industry are the reverse.

One reason for this competition is that of late the United States manufacturers have been compelled to seek the foreign market in order to get rid of the large amount of goods annually turned out by their factories, and their attention has been directed towards Canada on account of convenient access to the Canadian market, and the low tariff which it imposes.

In order to secure home business United States manufacturers advertise extensively in the cheaper magazines. These enter Canada free and are distributed without charge by our post office, to the disadvantage of the Canadian manufacturers. Thus the American manufacturer secures Canadian advertising without extra cost.

Some United States factories do such a large business that it would be easy to find three whose output is equal to the entire output of the eighty-two Canadian factories.

CHANGES DESIRED.

We require with present duties on raw material a duty of 35 per cent on boots and shoes, and should the duties on our principal raw materials such as leather, &c., be increased over present rates, that the same advance over 35 per cent be allowed on our finished articles, namely, boots and shoes.

An increase in the duty on boots and shoes will enable the Canadian manufacturer of these articles to handle more effectively the home trade and also put him in a better position to enter the export field. It will also give increased business to the leather people and the other manufacturers whose goods we buy, thereby increasing their cost of administration.

To show that many, both inside and outside the boot and shoe industry, are aware that our trade deserves the increased duty asked for we append the following resolutions.

There are the signatures of the different firms signing the memorial. The raw material spoken of there is subject to an average protective duty of about 20½ per cent. For instance, on a fine and fancy article such as patent leather shoes, the raw material which goes to make up the article is protected to the extent of 26½ per cent, and the manufactured article comes in under a tariff duty of 25 per cent. Now, that is, shortly, the request that was made to the Tariff Commission by the manufacturers. At the same time there was some difficulty as between the manufacturers and the tanners, that is the importers of the raw material or sole leather. Now it is to be observed that the amendment to this tariff provides an increased protection to the tanners of 5 per cent. The relation between the tanners and the manufacturers have become, during the last five years, considerably strained, owing to the efforts which were made by the tanners to form what I conceive to be, from the information I have obtained, an improper combination against the manufacturers, a combination most injurious in its effects, and which had for its most apparent object the forcing of the manufacturers of boots and shoes to purchase from the tanners at their prices, and from the tanners alone. In support of that statement I can give to the committee the facts contained in several documents under my hand. As long ago as 1895, a combination was formed of fourteen tanning firms, which number was subsequently reduced by the acquisition of some of the firms by the remainder to seven, which subsequently controlled the tanning combination. The combination formed by the tanners, which I think was very detrimental to the boot and shoe and leather trade of Canada, is defined and shown by documents which I will read. The first is a letter marked 'Confidential,' dated 6 Front St., East, Toronto, December 21, 1895. It is a circular letter addressed to each member of the Manufacturers Association, that is the manufacturers of boots and shoes.

Confidential.

65 Front Street, East,
Toronto, December 31, 1895.

Dear Sir,—A careful analysis of the Canadian supply of and demand for sole leather, proves that the normal annual Canadian consumption absorbs only about sixty per cent of the number of pounds annually being tanned in Canada, and the conviction is thus forced upon us that, only the choice between two expedients remains, viz., by restriction of the output of sole leather by nearly one-half, or, the development of the export trade therein.

Recognizing the hardship upon our employees, which the necessarily large restriction of output would entail as well as the loss to those supplying our raw materials, and being assured that by working our tanneries to their full capacity, and thereby reducing the cost of tanning to the lowest possible point, successful competition could be made in foreign markets, we confidently appeal to our customers to aid us in the development of the export trade, by confining their purchases to the product of our several tanneries, thus assuring us of a steady volume of trade.

Believing that the result of working our tanneries to their full capacity will sufficiently reduce our cost of tanning to justify a rebate being paid on all purchases of sole leather from us, we hereby tender you the opportunity to avail yourself of a reduction in price in your future purchases of sole leather.

We have therefore authorized Mr. D. A. Burns, 65 Front street E., Toronto, acting for us and on our behalf, to pay you in the month of July, 1896, and in each succeeding month, providing you shall have for the six preceding months bought and received sole leather only from us, the undersigned sole leather tanners and dealers, and the same has been duly paid for, a rebate of five per cent (5 per cent) on the net amount of all invoices of such sole leather bought by and delivered to you from us during the sixth (6th) preceding month respectively.

It will however be necessary before such rebate shall be paid, that you shall furnish us such satisfactory evidence of such continuous exclusive purchasing and delivery, as may from time to time be required.

We reserve the right upon notice, to cancel all or any part of this proposition, but not thereby to relieve ourselves of any obligations that may have accrued hereunder.

Mr. BOYCE. I believe that the head of that firm is the present Minister of Public Works. There is a memorandum attached to that letter to this effect:

In July the rebate will be paid on January invoices.

In September the rebate will be paid on March invoices.

And so on month by month irrespective of the time when the contracts of purchase may have been made.

The foregoing applies to sole leather of all descriptions.

Arcott & Company; Benton, N. B.; Achille, Gagnon & Company.

3. That my firm has not, neither has any partner of mine, nor has any one acting as my agent, nor has any one acting as the agent of any partner of mine, nor has any one acting as agent of the business described above, nor has any one connected with me or with any partner of mine in any way whatsoever in the business referred to above, nor has any one connected with my firm or with the business described above, either purchased or used in any way whatsoever, or contracted to buy directly or indirectly, or received for sale or sold on commission, or dealt in any way with or contracted for the production or manufacture of any sole leather of any kind or description whatsoever except imported oak sole leather in sides, backs, or bends, save from the above-mentioned firms.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. member whether he asserts that a member of this government was a party to that illegal contract ?

Mr. BOYCE.

Mr. BOYCE. I assert, Sir, at the time this contract was formed, apparently this present government was not in existence, but that the firm of C. S. Hyman and Company, Limited, of which the present hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) was the head was a member of that combination and that it existed until just forty-eight hours or thereabouts after the Minister of Finance, on the 29th November last year, introduced the amended tariff, that within forty-eight hours after that was introduced this combination, of which C. S. Hyman and Company, Limited, was a member, was dissolved and notice given to the manufacturers of boots and shoes that it was dissolved, so that thereafter the boot and shoemakers might take care of themselves and be free from the parental care of the Tanners' Association.

4. That I and all who are in any way connected with the business described above, have done no act that would disentitle the said business to the said rebate offered upon certain conditions by the firms mentioned above, in two circulars dated December 31, 1895, and January 31, 1896, but on the contrary, we have faithfully fulfilled both in letter and spirit all conditions contained in said two circulars.

5. That the statement marked exhibit 'A' to this declaration is a true and complete account of the sole leather purchased or contracted for by any one connected with the business described above from the above-mentioned firms.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Then again we find the letter referred to in the declaration of January 31, 1896 :

Toronto, January 31, 1896.

Gentlemen,—Referring to the letter addressed to you by the undersigned, dated December 31, 1895, offering you, under certain conditions, a rebate of five per cent on your purchases of sole leather from us, we beg to say that said offer was made on condition of your beginning the exclusive purchasing and receiving sole leather from us on January 1, 1896, but having learned that there exists some misapprehension on this point through our not having made it sufficiently clear in our letter, we now beg to extend the said date to February 3, 1896.

That was the position from January, 1895 up to the time at which the difficulties began to arise and at which the stress began to get too great from the tanners upon the manufacturers. The manufacturers of boots and shoes had for ten years suffered under the grievous oppression of this combine. They had objected to it, they had writhed under it and they had attempted to get rid of this incubus but without success. It will be somewhat surprising to this committee and to the country to learn that the tanners were not satisfied with the grievous burden which they were imposing by the letters I have just read and by the declaration which they exacted from the manufacturers but they wanted more. They were not satisfied with that but the burden became so great and the quality of the goods obtained from the tanners was so inferior and at such excessive rates that the Boot and Shoe Manufacturers Association of Quebec decided that they would tolerate the Tanners' Association no longer, and they crystallized their complaint into the form of a letter which I will now read to the committee. It is dated August 10, 1906. That is more than ten years after the combination had been in force. Some seven firms were maintaining this combination, of which the firm of C. S. Hyman and Company, Limited, was one and since that combination had been formed the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who was called upon to form a government, had called on Mr. Hyman, the head of that firm to join his cabinet although during all that time he was a member of this tanners' combination. This is a letter that was addressed by the secretary treasurer of the Quebec Boot and Shoe Manufacturers Association to Mr. D. A. Burns, secretary of the Tanners' Association, Toronto :

Quebec, August 10, 1906.

D. A. Burns,
Secretary Tanners' Association,
Toronto.

Dear Sir,—For some time it has been found that the sole leather obtained from the members of your association has been loaded with foreign materials.

The effect of this adulteration has been not only to obtain payment, at the price of leather, of substances of no value as such, but to deteriorate the quality of the goods manufactured therewith to the great injury of the reputation of our manufacture and to make accurate costing of the goods impossible.

We are compelled to ask for a definite assurance that the practice complained of shall cease and that the leather supplied by the members of your association shall in future be such, in respect of the defects mentioned above, as it used to be before the loading was begun. Unless we obtain satisfaction in this respect, we shall bring the matter before a commission which we are informed it is the intention of the Quebec government to appoint for the purpose of investigating matters prejudicially affecting the trade and take such other steps as we shall deem necessary for our protection.

This communication is, of course, without prejudice to the remedies which the individual members of the association may conceive it in their personal interest wise to enforce.

Yours truly,
Secretary-Treasurer,
Quebec Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association, Quebec, P.Q.

That was replied to by a letter from Mr. D. A. Burns under the letter head 'Tanners' Association' written from 32 Adelaide street East, Toronto, on 13th August, 1906.

THE TANNERS' ASSOCIATION.
32 Adelaide Street East,
Toronto, August 15, 1906.

D. A. Burns,
Secretary.
J. A. Cloutier, Esq.,
Secretary-Treasurer,

Quebec Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association, Quebec, P.Q.

Dear Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th, and in reply beg to say that I shall be pleased to bring the matter in question before the next meeting of the committee of the Tanners' Association, which will be held at an early date.

Yours truly,
D. A. BURNS,
Secretary.

It may be argued that the effect of that arrangement was not a combination and that it did not restrict or restrain the manufacturers of boots and shoes from buying where they liked. But with the duties as they were at that time, with the scant protection that was afforded the shoe manufacturers, they were forced to purchase the classes of raw material which went to make up the boots and shoes from the Tanners' Association and from them alone ; and the effect of it was very apparent for we find that the Canadian shoe trade was offered, by British sole leather dealers, Canadian-tanned sole leather made by members of the combine at rather less money than it could be bought for in Canada, and that after paying freight twice across the Atlantic, insurance expenses and profit to the British dealer. That will indicate the conditions which were imposed by the Tanners Association upon the manufacturers. The manufacturers then endeavoured to adjust their grievances with the tanners in a double way, to get rid of the burdensome combination and to get from this government such protection as would enable them to compete with the American importations of the fine and fancy article for which there was a growing demand in Canada, owing to the increased trade. Meetings were held between members of the Tanners Association and the Shoe Manufacturers Association and an effort was made to adjust their grievances. These meetings took place in the fall of 1905, but they did not result very favourably as appears by the resolution of the tanners association, a copy of which I will now place on record.

Tanners' Branch, Board of Trade, the city of Toronto, secretary's office, Toronto, October 13, 1905.

Excerpt from minutes of section meeting held October 10, 1905 :

Resolved, that this section, having heard the report of the delegates, Hon. E. J. Davis and Mr. W. D. Beardmore, who were appointed to meet the shoe manufacturers of the Dominion at Montreal on October 3, have decided that while they are prepared to do everything in their power to assist the shoe manufacturers in obtaining as high a duty as possible, at the same time they feel that they should be left free to state their case from the tanners' standpoint before the government commission appointed for that purpose, in order that they may obtain such increase in duty on leather as would seem reasonable and proper under all the circumstances.

Further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the president and secretary of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association.

Late in 1905, I think, the Tariff Commission sat at Quebec and the memorial which I read was presented asking for a 10 per cent additional protection. After some argument before the commission in support of that memorial, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and possibly the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) conceded that some concession should be granted, some further protection accorded to the manufacturers on some lines which they were manufacturing and it was suggested, I believe, that a line should be drawn between the different grades so that protection could be afforded to that grade in respect to which there was the greatest competition from foreign importations. It was suggested, I believe, that the line should be drawn on Goodyear or welted goods. At any rate, without going too much into details, that was not considered satisfactory and the line that was drawn was the line that appears in section 611 as amended by the minister, the line being drawn at boots and shoes pegged or wire-fastened with unstitched soles and close edged. Those were the coarser goods and the others were to be subjected, as the manufacturers state they believed as the result of that meeting to an increased protective duty of 10 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. Five per cent.

Mr. BOYCE. The minister says 5 per cent. I do not know if he will agree with me that when the manufacturers left the commission in Quebec or very shortly afterwards they were given to understand that with this line of demarcation between the different classes, their demand of 10 per cent additional protection, that is a protective duty of 35 per cent, would be afforded on fine and fancy boots.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly not, certainly not.

Mr. BOYCE. I will just put it that this was the attitude taken by the shoe manufacturers association and that up to a day or two before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) introduced his amendment the manufacturers were positively assured that with that line of demarcation drawn they would be accorded on these classes on which there was competition and on which they desired to increase their trade, the additional 10 per cent. I am so informed, and that a gentleman who interceded with the government between the Manufacturers Association and the commission, positively assured the chairman of the Shoe Manufacturers Association, as the result, as he said, of an interview with hon. ministers representing the commission, that the matter was all settled and that, with that discrimination and that line drawn, the 10 per cent additional would be accorded to the manufacturers. Well we see what the result is by this tariff. But at the same time that the shoe manufacturers were accorded only one-half of their demands, the Tanners' Association, strong as they were, influential as they were and not needing that protection for the want of which the shoe manufacturers were suffering, came to the Tariff Commission on their own account, threw overboard the shoe manufacturers and got from the Tariff Commission an increased protection which was not so much required, if required at all, as was the full increase asked by the Shoe Manufacturers Association.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was there any increase on boots and shoes in the first tariff brought down?

Mr. BOYCE. In the first tariff brought down there was no increase at all on boots and shoes and there was 2½ per cent increase on leather and all the change that has taken place was the result of very determined effort on the part of the manufacturers since the tariff was brought down by the minister on November 29. So it will be seen that the Tanners' Association had not lost any of its influence. It still had considerable influence, and before the manufacturers were able to get any little concessions of which they originally stood in need, both to protect themselves against foreign competition and against the tyranny of the combination, the tanners could easily go to the government or to the Tariff Commission, and without any memorial or audience of a grave nature or the employment of expensive counsel, could get brought down on the first revision of the tariff an increase of 5 per cent in the duty on imported sole leather. Another feature of the matter is the cut-sole business. No change took place in the tariff, I believe, with regard to that. Two of the tanners have engaged in this business—the firm of Beardmore and the firm of Hyman. The effect of the present tariff is to enable those who get the increased protection in that business to further hamper the manufacturers in making the finer classes of boots and shoes and in competing with importations from the United States; because by engaging in that industry these firms can with increased protection, compete to that qualified extent with the manufacturers. The manufacturers felt at the time that they were considerably handicapped by the influence which was strong in the tanning combine. There was a good deal of correspondence with reference to that influence. At the risk of prolonging the discussion I will, in order to make myself clear, read some of the letters. There is a letter under date of October 14, 1905, from W. D. Beardmore, the chairman of the Tanners' Association, to John Ritchie, of the John Ritchie Company, who was the chairman of the Manufacturers' Association :

Dear Mr. Ritchie,—I have been from home since Thursday and returning this morning find your letter of the 11th instant, notifying me of a meeting of the joint committee on the tariff revision.

Mr. Davis called me up at noon to-day saying he had a similar notice and asking me what I proposed to do in view of the action which had been taken by the Tanners' Association, of which you will have received a report. I told him that I had written you on Wednesday telling you exactly the position the tanners were taking, and I thought it would be best to write and ask you what you would like us to do in view of all the circumstances. If you want us we are quite willing to attend, but unfortunately I am afraid I shall have to be in New York on Thursday. Mr. Davis says that it would suit him far better if you could have the meeting fixed for either Saturday or Monday instead, and either of these days would also suit me equally well with Friday.

Last week when returning from Montreal, I met Mr. James Robinson, the shoe jobber, on the train, and we had a long talk that night on tariff matters. I was glad to find that he is very thoroughly in favour of an increased duty on boots and shoes and thinks the tariff should be forty per cent. He says that he is prepared to go before the commission and advocate an increase as a shoe buyer having no interest in manufacturing, and he is further prepared to say that he is quite sure his shoes will not cost him any more in consequence of any increase which may be granted by the government. Would not this be a good strong card for the shoe manufacturers to play ?

I expect, however, it is going to take all the pressure that the leather and shoe industries can bring to bear on the government to get them to increase the duties. One very prominent man and a very strong supporter of the government who is also most anxious to see a general increase in the tariff, told me yesterday that he was afraid the government was weak-kneed and would do very little, if anything. He further added that they would bring about their own downfall just as the local government in Ontario had through being half-hearted and weak-kneed. This, however, should not discourage us, for the leather and shoe industry ought to be able to get what they wanted if any industry can do so.

Unless I am obliged to change my plans I expect to leave here on Tuesday evening for New York, where I shall likely be on Wednesday and Thursday. Will you please address your reply to this letter to the Manhattan Hotel, Forty-second street, New York.

Yours truly,
W. D. BEARDMORE.

The weak-kneed and half-hearted government of which the gentleman complains were not a bugbear to him, in view of the influence which he pointed out in these few lines, so that they were not to be discouraged, because they could get what they wanted if any industry could.

Mr. FIELDING. It appears that they did not.

Mr. BOYCE. The tanners did.

Mr. FIELDING. He said he wanted to combine the two.

Mr. BOYCE. But my hon. friend will remember a letter which has gone on 'Hansard' and since that time the tanners threw the manufacturers to the winds.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman must be fair to Mr. Beardmore. He did not claim that the tanners were big enough or that the shoe men were big enough, but he claimed that when they got together they could get what they wanted. But unfortunately neither of them got what they wanted.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes, the tanners got what they wanted.

Mr. FIELDING. Both got what they did at the same moment.

Mr. BOYCE. The tanners got their duty when the hon. gentleman introduced his budget speech.

Mr. FIELDING. The two items were introduced at the same time.

Mr. BOYCE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon ; he is right. A meeting was held at Quebec on the 24th of October, 1905, or thereabouts. As a result of that meeting a letter was written by the chairman of the manufacturers to Messrs. W. D. Beardmore and E. J. Davis, the representatives of the Western Tanners' Association :

Gentlemen,—In reply to your several letters I beg to inform you that I have been appointed to take care of and lay before the Tariff Commission the memorial of our industry. I think you should know how we shoe manufacturers resent what we consider an attempt on the part of the western leather trade to hold us up, and obtained from us a slice or 'rake-off', from any such needed increased protection our industry requires and hopes to obtain, your only weapons being that you will use a stronger political pull which you pretend to have in certain quarters than we have, as expressed by you at our meetings.

This is addressed to the committee of the Tanners' Association, the ring of the invincible seven :

Your only reason given for asking this rake-off being that 'you wanted it', and that at some remote period this market might be flooded with English leather under a preferential tariff and on account of their cheaper labour.

Now the history of the leather trade in Canada and England for many years back is a sufficient reply to this, coupled with the fact that I have been personally told by many if not most of the eastern leather trade that they are satisfied with the present tariff and fear no danger from the United States, from which source if there were any danger to the leather trade it would come.

Now we have no wish to antagonize any portion of the leather trade, but must protect the interests of our industry as far as it is in our power, and I beg to say that if your western leather association does not carry out what you two gentlemen promised to do instead of trying to shield themselves behind your personal promise and give me full assurance of this, I personally will lay the whole story of the 'hold-up' before the Tariff Commission.

The shoe industry has no wish to injure your trade in any way and will do nothing to do so as they feel sure their cause can rest on its own merits.

We have resolutions in favour of increased duties on shoes passed by many other branches of trade, and even labour organizations without solicitation or any demand for a 'rake-off', and it rests with the western leather men entirely as to what will not be done in this connection.

I suppose I should apologize to you for some words used in my telegrams but I would say when a man feels himself taken by the throat human nature is apt as a rule to use similar expressions.

I have submitted copies of this to the committee who had seen the correspondence.

I remain yours truly,
JOHN RITCHIE.

Mr. FIELDING. Addressed to the tanners ?

Mr. BOYCE. To W. Beardmore and E. J. Davis, representatives of the western tanners. The letter is dated 24th October, 1905. Here is another letter under date Montreal October 25, 1905 from J. Hagar to John Ritchie, Quebec :

Montreal, October 25, 1905.

John Ritchie, Esq.,
Quebec, Que.

My dear Mr. Ritchie,—I had a long chat with Mr. Hyman this morning with the result that he was as far as possible neutral in the matter, but he brought up the Beardmore statements and asked me to write him a letter stating what Beardmore had said. I incolse you the letter that I purpose sending and would ask you to look it over and see if I am correct.

Mr. Hyman would be very much indebted to you if you would write him a letter stating what Beardmore said to you, as he claims that he was very much mis-reported, but would like to have an opportunity to contradict the reports covering his name with them.

Confidential.—A very strong point will have to be made as regards the importation of fine and coarse goods. We know pretty well that in coarse goods there are very few American goods imported, but we will have to convince the commissioners on this point. I am writing to-day to several parties trying to get the names of the exporters of Goodyear and Turns from the States. We will then try and find out what each of these parties have sent into Canada. In the face of it it looks as if we had 90 per cent of the shoe trade in our own hands, so that a very clear statement will have to be made as to where the hardship comes in to the Canadian manufacturer of fine shoes, owing to the large amount of these lines that are imported.

Yours truly,
J. HAGAR.

Mr. PATERSON. Addressed to whom?

Mr. BOYCE. To John Ritchie, chairman of the Manufacturers Association. Here is a letter again from Mr. Beardmore, chairman of the Tanners' Association :

39 Front street East,
Toronto, October 26, 1905.

John Ritchie, Esq.,
The John Ritchie Company,
Quebec, Quebec.

Dear Sir,—Coming down to my office this morning (Thanskgiving Day) I find your letter of the 24th instant. I am just leaving for Bracebridge and shall not be back before Saturday, and I may not be able to see Mr. Davis before Monday next. Of course it will be necessary for me to see him before I can reply to your letter, and I am merely writing this to acknowledge it and explain the delay which will necessarily take place before I can reply to it.

I feel in justice to myself and Mr. Davis, however, that I must absolutely deny your statement that either of us claimed at any of your meetings that we had any stronger political pull than the shoe manufacturers, or indeed that we ever referred to political pull in any way.

According to my recollection, however, what did happen was that one of your members (I think it was Mr. Jas. McPherson, of Hamilton), made an incidental remark that the shoe manufacturers recognized that the tanners had a stronger political pull than the shoe manufacturers. We did not consider this in any way pertinent to the object of our meeting, which was that we should arrange for joint action before the Tariff Commission, and no reply or reference to the remark was ever subsequently made by either Mr. Davis or myself. As a matter of fact to neither of us, nor do I believe to any of the other tanners who have attended the meetings has the idea ever occurred of antagonizing or working in any way against the interests of the shoe manufacturers, and it would be the height of folly for us to do so, and your accusation that we are attempting in any way a 'hold up' of the shoe manufacturers is doing us the grossest injustice.

As before stated, and as you well know, Mr. Davis and I were appointed by a meeting of tanners here in Toronto as delegates to meet the shoe manufacturers to try and arrange joint action before the Tariff Commission. As a condition of this you stipulated that we should give a certain pledge for the whole tanning trade which Mr. Davis and I after considering the matter did not think we were justified in doing from the fact that we did not believe we had the power without first of all calling another meeting of the tanners. This was thoroughly understood between you and ourselves and that the meeting which was subsequently held did not empower us to give the pledge was not our fault. By the action of the meeting Mr. Davis and myself no longer held the position of representatives for the western tanners and neither of us have any authority to speak for the trade and each can only speak for himself personally.

I, and I believe Mr. Davis also, as we stated at your meeting, were ready to go before the commission, putting forth first of all the case of the shoe manufacturers and then the case of the tanners and supporting them on exactly the same lines that we conditionally agreed upon at our joint meeting in Montreal, and I, and I believe Mr. Davis also, are still ready to do this, and if you will allow me to say so I think it is unfortunate that you should have thought it necessary to adopt the tone which you have done both in your telegram and now in your letter, as it makes it more difficult for Mr. Davis and myself to get the unanimous co-operation of the tanners in support of the case of the shoe manufacturers which we both feel is paramount to any other consideration even if you will not do us the justice of recognizing that this is the case.

I will write you further as soon as I have seen and consulted with Mr. Davis.

Yours truly,
W. D. BEARDMORE.

And so the correspondence goes on down to the point at which the resolution was passed by the tanners, intimating to the manufacturers that henceforth they would look after their branch of the case and the manufacturers could do likewise. The tanners were successful in getting what they wanted. The manufacturers succeeded only to a certain extent in getting the protection absolutely necessary for an industry which is of very great importance to Canada. The curious fact, and one which certainly calls for some little comment, is this, that the moment the tanners got their increased duty, the moment they had outclassed and handicapped the manufacturers by means of the Tariff Commission and by the so-called adjustment of the tariff they dissolved their combine which had been in force ever since December 31, 1895. Within forty-eight hours after the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) delivered his budget speech, the tanners, evidently satisfied that the minister was acceding to their demands, evidently satisfied that their interests would be protected, dissolved their combine and wrote a letter as follows:

The Tanners' Association,
Toronto, December, 1905.

Gentlemen,—Acting for the udersigned firms I hereby beg to notify you that I shall not pay the usual rebate of five per cent on any purchases you may make or any deliveries of leather made to you after November 30 last.

That was written the day after the Finance Minister delivered his budget speech.

I shall, of course, continue paying you the rebate on all the leather invoiced to you prior to the 1st of this month, providing that you have complied with the conditions up to that date——

That is this beautiful declaration.

—but from that date you are free to purchase as you may see fit without affecting the rebate on leather invoiced prior to December 1.

Yours truly,
D. A. Burns, Secretary,
Anglo-Canadian Leather Co.,
C. S. Hyman & Co.,
Beardmore & Co.,
Marlatt & Armstrong,
Breithaupt Leather Co.,
Maganetawan Tanning Co.,
Logan Tanning Co.

It will be noted that that letter is dated December 6. I wonder whether the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) was then in condition to attend to business. It will interest the members of the government to know whether that was signed by himself, in view of his serious condition of health, as explained to us about that time.

P.S.—I understand that the individual firms, each for itself, intend to allow a rebate of 5 per cent on all deliveries made after December, on contracts made prior to that date.

I desire to take up as little time as possible with the discussion of this matter. But, in order to show the relative position of the tanners and the manufacturers, I wish to place on record two letters which indicate that manufacturers are supported by the retail trade in the position which they take. The first of these letters is from the Fogarty Company, Limited, a well known firm in Montreal, whose letter is as follows:

February 21, 1907.

Mr. John Ritchie,
President of the John Ritchie Co., Ltd.,
Quebec,

Dear Sir,—We take great pleasure in endorsing your undertaking to have the duty raised to thirty-five per cent, or higher, on American boots and shoes. We may state that we are the largest retailers of boots and shoes in the city of Montreal, and we know that if the duty is increased it will mean a great protection to us from American manufacturers, who are opening retail stores in our city. If you think these few lines would further your good cause, you may use them for all they are worth.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) THE FOGARTY Co., Ltd.,
Per .E. J. WAYLAND.

And Waterbury and Rising, large dealers in excellent standing, of St. John, N.B., write as follows:

St. John, N.B.,
February 13, 1907.

Messrs. John Ritchie Co.,
Quebec, P.Q.

Dear Sir,—We notice by this mornings' papers that the duty has been advanced five per cent.

The government have evidently ignored all the manufacturers have done and have simply added enough to the duty to give themselves a little more revenue, which is about what the advance will mean. All they appear to be looking for is more money to blow in, as I do not believe it will have any effect on the importation of American goods. We should have had ten per cent or no change.

Yours very truly,
WATERBURY & RISING.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the bare outline of the grievance of the manufacturers which they desire to have laid before this committee. Their position at present is a very serious one. If their trade is to be protected they must have some addition to the very small and inadequate protection which has been afforded them. As hon. ministers doubtless, are aware, the competition that the manufacturers have to contend against is in the fine and fancy article, If they are to compete successfully in this, large sums of money must be expended, particularly in the purchase of lasts and dies, which are continually changing. I am told that an average expenditure for lasts and dies, would be about $1,200 a set, and only one year's lasts and dies would be taken into stock in computing the assets of a firm, though there might be a hundred thousand dollars' worth of lasts and dies in the place. This shows what tremendous expense is involved in the manufacture of fine and fancy boots and shoes. I understand that one firm expends annually from $5,000 to $7,000 in lasts and dies. To enable the manufacturers to equip themselves to meet competition, they must have the volume of business. It has been contended, I believe, that the importation of boots and shoes into Canada is but a small percentage of the value of boots and shoes manufactured in Canada. It has been said that it only amounts to 5 per cent. I would like to point out that that is an erroneous impression. The quantity manufactured has been quoted from last year's census as $18,000,000. The real figure is $14,000,000, of which $8,000,000 was of the coarser class of boots and shoes, in respect of which there is no competition. The fine and fancy goods made up only $6,000,000. The importation of fine and fancy goods in 1905 and 1906 was about $1,250,000 and $1,500,000 respectively. If you add the 30 per cent duty, that would bring the importations up to $2,000,000, or nearly one-third of the manufacture of fine and fancy goods.

The manufacturers laid their case before the Tariff Commission in the hope that what seems a reasonable request might be granted. They desire the volume of business in order that they may increase their factories and the number of hands employed and compete with American manufacturers in fine and fancy boots and shoes. The market and other conditions are ripe, but the element of protection is lacking. I think a strong case has been made out for the manufacturers in this connection; I think they made out a far stronger case than did the tanners who appear to be the favoured ones before the Tariff Commission and the government. Certainly, the treatment that the manufacturers have received at the hands of the government has retarded the development of the industry which otherwise would have been built up handsomely. It is an industry which, If stimulated as it might have been by reasonable protection, would have done much for the trade of Canada. It is along the line of sound policy that such an industry should be stimulated, so that the Canadian manufacturers may be assisted and strengthened and encouraged to put upon the market an article which will compete with the importations from the United States. The ministers know perfectly well what difficulties have appeared in the path of the manufacturers of Canada. The market of Canada has been assailed year after year by that article, and the only protection which the manufacturer could get to enable him successfully to compete is the protection which he asks from this commission, and which was backed up by the retailers themselves, who pointed out that the general trade of Canada would be, within that sphere, increased and strengthened, that additional factories would be built, that additional hands would be employed, that additional articles would be purchased to be manufactured in Canada, and that a large amount of capital would be employed, all to enable the Canadian manufacturer to retain for himself the Canadian market as against the American market.

Mr. PATERSON. What is the hon. member's proposition ?

Mr. BOYCE. I have already laid the proposition of the manufacturers before the committee in the memorial of the Manufacturers' Association, asking the 10 per cent which they say would be adequate to build up their industries, and that the Tariff Commission should not confirm the opinion that has been written by Mr. Beardmore. I ask that the hon. gentleman reconsider the situation, and ascertain whether it is not possible even now to take such prudent steps as will stimulate this industry in the general interests of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think I would be doing an injustice to the hon. member for West Algoma if I said that four-fifths of the purpose of his speech was to associate the Minister of Public Works, who happens to be a member of the firm of C. S. Hyman and Company, with this matter of the increased duty on sole leather.

Mr. BOYCE. I had no such intention.

Mr. FIELDING. Then why did he so repeatedly drag in the name of the Minister of Public Works ?

Mr. BOYCE. I read all the correspondence that bore upon that subject, in order to show that I was not casting any imputation on the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman made several allusions to the Minister of Public Works, and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) took pains to put the question directly so that the hon. member for West Algoma might have an opportunity of renewing his statement that the Mr. Hyman mentioned was the present Minister of Public Works.

Mr. BOYCE. He is only one of seven.

Mr. FIELDING. That may be, but the hon. gentleman is not much concerned with the other six.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should not the name of the Minister of Public Works be introduced if he is a member of a combine?

Mr. FIELDING. I will come to that point presently. I say again that four-fifths of the hon. gentleman's speech seemed, I think, to most hearers to be devoted to the purpose of implying that the tanners had received some special consideration which they were not entitled to, and that they had received it through the instrumentality of Mr. Hyman, who is a member of the firm of C. S. Hyman & Company, engaged in the tanning business.

Mr. BERGERON. The boot and shoe men were under that impression.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think so. But I desire to state now that the Minister of Public Works was never present at any meeting of the government when the question of tariff revision was brought before the government. I want to say that the work of tariff revision has been carried on since the Minister of Public Works was absent from his duties; he has never been present at any meeting of the government when these tariff items have been considered; and so far as I have knowledge, and to the best of my belief, the member for London, the Minister of Public Works has no more to do with the revision of the tariff on leather than any hon. gentleman who sits on the left of the Speaker. Now having said that much, there is really not anything left to answer in the speech of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is one thing more. The minister stated that there was no change in the duty on leather in the tariff as first brought down.

Mr. FIELDING. I said on sole leather. There were two different items. There was the duty on one class of sole leather, and when the second tariff came down the two duties were made alike. Now let us come to the question of a combination. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the memorial of the boot and shoe men presented to us at Quebec as presenting all the essential facts of this case. Well, it is a curious fact that in that memorial the hon. gentleman read there is not one word about any leather combine. He has read a lot of correspondence that appears to have been going on with respect to an alleged combine. But it is a fact that when the boot and shoe manufacturers appeared before us and presented this comprehensive memorial, so far as my recollection goes of the presentation at Quebec, they had not one word to say with respect to the existence of any combination. Now if this combination had existed as stated by the hon. member, and if it was regarded by the boot and shoe manufacturers as a very great evil, and as one of the grounds upon which they should seek a further revision of the tariff, does it not strike the hon. gentleman as rather singular that the very gentleman who has given him all this information never came before the government with any complaint about a combination among the tanners?

Mr. BOYCE. Did the minister not hear of any combine?

Mr. FIELDING. I will come to that in a moment. The hon. member has presented his grievance as that of the shoe manufacturers, and as I heard him read the memorial, and according to my recollection of it, the boot and shoe manufacturers made no representation whatever as to the existence of this alleged combine. More than that, in the memorial that was submitted to us at Quebec, it contained a statement that the leather manufacturers joined the shoe manufacturers in the application that was being made for an increased duty on boots and shoes. So it would seem that the boot and shoe manufacturers were perfectly prepared to avail themselves of the services of this wicked combine to assist them in making representations to the government. It would not be I think, an ungenerous criticism to say as respects the particular manufacturers who made that statement, that they seemed to be quite willing to join the combine if they could only arrange to divide the spoils. But at a later stage they come in and, through the hon. gentleman, make a complaint about the combine. I do not think it is unfair to state that if the boot and shoe manufacturers had a grievance in regard to the existence of a combine, they had ample opportunity to present that grievance to the government in various forms without waiting until this late date and then confining the matter to the tender care of the hon. member for West Algoma. It is a little late for the boot and shoe manufacturers to complain of a combine when they seem to have been quite willing to join a combine in making representations.

Mr. BARKER. Has not the hon. gentleman found it to be the case that the victims of a combine are obliged to combine with the people who are coercing them?

Mr. FIELDING. Just so, but if a man enters into a partnership with another man to impose some improper burdens on the public and to divide the spoils, all I can say is that he had better not have any thing to say afterwards about it. He had better share the burden as he has been willing to share the advantages to be derived from it.

Mr. BOYCE. He has no alternative, he has to submit.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, my observation of the gentlemen connected with the boot and shoe trade that came before us is that they are not the kind of men who would be very easily intimidated by any combination, whether of tanners or of anybody else. The hon. gentleman asked if I had never heard of the existence of the combine. I will answer him candidly. As far as my recollection goes no representations were made to the government or before the Tariff Commission about a combine. I do not wish to be too positive about that. There was a vast mass of evidence given and before speaking positively I would require to have time given me to make a search, but at this moment I do not remember that the boot and shoe manufacturers made any complaint with respect to a combine. Quite a long time ago, I remember, some persons called upon me and talked about a combine in leather and wished the government to take steps to reduce the duty or some such action. I remember calling the attention of the parties—I do not remember who they were—to the clause in our Tariff Act in relation to combines. This House had determined, and I think they had wisely determined, that it was not wise to leave with the government of the day the duty of determining when a combine existed in regard to any item which might be affected by the tariff. The House had determined that before a combine could be believed to exist there must be a judicial proceeding and that the parties who made the complaint of the existence of a combine must take certain steps to establish the existence of that combine before a judicial tribunal before the government could take cognizance of it and make any tariff change. Well, that was the position involved as repeatedly explained in the House, and it so happened that if there was ever a belief in the existence of a combine no person ever took the steps contemplated by the Act to establish its existence, and to the best of my knowledge and belief for several years we have had no complaint whatever in regard to the existence of any such combine. I would like to look up the records of what appeared at the Tariff Commission before I would make a positive statement, but speaking from memory I would say now that the boot and shoe manufacturers, while they made representations and presented their grievances, did not mention the existence of a combine as one of their grievances. Now, we come to the question of the duties on imports. Are they reasonable or unreasonable? The duty on sole leather is 12½ per cent under the preferential tariff. Is that or is that not a reasonable duty ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What do they pay on their raw material ?

Mr. FIELDING. Nothing ; hides are free.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the average duty on the raw material used by the manufacturers of boots and shoes ?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not tell that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They assert that it is a little over 20 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. I would not contradict that because it is a matter of calculation. The tanners have a duty on sole leather of 12½ per cent from Great Britain. Is that an unreasonable duty ? Judging that with almost any other line of manufacturing industry will it be said that 12½ per cent from Great Britain is too high a duty ? The duty on most articles in the tariff which have a protection is much higher than that, and when I point out that the duty on sole leather coming from Great Britain is only 12½ per cent, and when competition is beginning to come from Great Britain, I think it will be admitted that the duty on sole leather is not an extravagant one. There is a less duty to-day on sole leather than there was in the days of the national policy. The duty on sole leather in the days of the national policy was 15 per cent from all quarters and the duty on sole leather to-day under the tariff now before the House as respects imports from Great Britain is only 12½ per cent. In the face of these figures what reason can any one have for saying that the duty on sole leather is excessive ? Is it because a member of the government happens to be engaged in that particular industry that all reason is to be set aside and we are to be told this is an extravagant duty imposed by the government for the benefit of a minister of the Crown ? That is not a reason. Is it that it is excessive ? Who will say that 12½ per cent on sole leather coming from Great Britain is an excessive duty ? I do not believe any member of this House, if he looks at the question on its merits, will say that the duty is excessive. Well then, what is there to complain of with respect to the duty on sole leather ? I can think of nothing more to say upon that question. It is simply a question of whether the duty is fair or not and who, having regard to the rate of duty imposed on many other articles under our tariff, will say that 12½ per cent on sole leather can be regarded as an excessive duty ? Then, I come to the question of the duty on boots and shoes. The hon. member for West Algoma treats the increase of 5 per cent on boots and shoes as a matter of no account. He says that the tanners have all they want. Well, the tanners have 2½ per cent of an increase on their sole leather and the boot and shoe manufacturers have a 5 per cent increase against the United States on a certain class of boots. That is a very considerable class. We have drawn a line at the rougher shoe, the shoe which may be described as a coarse shoe such as is used by our fishermen, farmers and by men who want a rough, common coarse shoe.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. They are very likely imported.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, they may be. Then, if we have added 5 per cent to a class of shoes that is largely imported the criticism might be offered as to why we had increased the duty.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is what I want to know.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend wants to know why we increased the duty on boots and shoes by 5 per cent I confess that I have not as good an answer to that question as I have to the question of the hon. member for West Algoma as to why we increased the duty on sole leather.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I quite agree with you.

Mr. FIELDING. I am glad to know that there are some reasonable men over there. If this hon. gentleman had complained that this 5 per cent increase was too much I must confess that perhaps I would not have as good an answer, but when the hon. member for Algoma says that 5 per cent is nothing and asks why we did not make it 10 per cent I submit that there is no ground for the attack which is made upon the government. An increase of 5 per cent is quite a material increase. It is 5 per cent upon a considerable article of importation. When my hon. friend complains that the boot and shoe people are treated ungenerously because there is an increase of 2½ per cent on sole leather while they get an increase of 5 per cent on a very large part of the importation of boots and shoes it seems to me that the hon. gentleman cannot show that he has made any case whatever. There are the three positions; first, the personal element in regard to the Minister of Public Works. I have dealt with that. Secondly, the combination; I have stated that the boot and shoe manufacturers have made no grievance out of the existence of a combination, that they have made no attempt, such as is contemplated by the Tariff Act, to prove the existence of a combination. As to the duty on sole leather I submit it is a reasonable duty and not an excessive duty and I further submit that when we increase the duty on a very considerable percentage of shoes to the extent of 5 per cent we are showing our desire to give the shoe manufacturer all possible consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not rise to discuss the question as to whether the increase is sufficient or insufficient, but I rise more particularly to refer to the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that it was not brought to his attention for a long time that there was a combine in the leather business.

Mr. FIELDING. I stated how it was brought to my attention.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to remind the minister, that several years ago I brought it to his attention. I read this agreement and I read all the affidavits in connection with it and I made an appeal to the Minister of Finance. It will also be remembered that Mr. Garrow who is now Judge Garrow endeavoured to have the Minister of Finance and the government take advantage of the clause in the Tariff Act providing that if it were found that a combine existed they would take the duty off the article and allow it to come in free.

Mr. FIELDING. But it was not found.

Mr. SPROULE. It was found as far as the men in business proved it by affidavits.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not what the Act said.

Mr. SPROULE. What did the Act say? It was proven to the satisfaction of the government that a combine existed.

Mr. FIELDING. No, pardon me; it had to be proven through a judicial investigation.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the first time, in so far as I remember, that the contention was ever set up that it must be proved through a judicial investigation.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is mistaken. That is the law.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the law? It was brought to the attention of the government and in every way that intelligent men could bring it to their attention. It was also pointed out to the government that it was a great injustice to the small tanners of the country and the manufacturers of leather goods.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At what date?

Mr. SPROULE. I think that I first brought it to the attention of the government in 1898, but before that a memorial had been brought down by Mr. (now Judge) Garrow, who made out a very complete and strong case for the small tanners, which I afterwards used before the House at the request of himself and a number of tanners in order that the government might take some action. It was brought up two years afterwards when I used the same arguments and appealed to the government to take action and they again refused. It was brought up once or twice afterwards and it was brought to the attention of the government that C. S. Hyman and his firm were in the combine and he was at the same time a friend of the government. It was brought to their attention not once or twice, but three or four times and the government were aware of every fact in connection with it at the very time they made Mr. Hyman a minister of the Crown. While declaring that they were opposed to combines, they were at the same time supporting and strengthing them and knew that a member of their own Cabinet was interested in that combine and carrying on its nefarious operations in the country. Yet to-night the minister says he was not aware of it and that the manufacturers never brought it to his attention, yet they had brought to his attention from time to time and failed to get redress. The appeal to the government fell on deaf ears and at last they abandoned it because they were unable to bring any influence to bear on the government to induce them to do anything to give relief. But the members of the combine had always the ear of the government. That was the condition in which the small tanners and the manufacturers were, but they could not get the government to take the duty off that special article of Spanish sole leather or to give any redress whatever, and when the Minister of Finance complains to-night that they were not aware of the fact I can only say that his memory must be very bad, because it was brought to his attention over and over again and he did nothing either to relieve himself or the Cabinet of the stigma that one member of the Cabinet was in a combine, supporting and helping to maintain it, and that the Cabinet itself made no effort to dissolve the combine or to give the people of the country that relief which they so desired and for which they so often prayed. They asked for this relief and the government might have given it to them if they had chosen to do so.

Mr. FIELDING. If there is any defective memory in connection with this, my hon. friend's memory is at fault and not mine. There is nothing wrong with my memory on that at all events. When he says he never heard until to-night that the proceedings to establish the existence of a combine had to be of a judicial nature his memory is not good, because it has been discussed a dozen times in this House and has been in the tariff for ten years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did not the government initiate the proceedings?

Mr. FIELDING. It was never intended that they should. The House deliberately resolved that they would not leave the government to take the proceedings, as that was thought to be a dangerous power to place in the hands of the government to decide that there was a combine and that the duty should be reduced or removed. The House, after consideration, resolved that the procedure should be as is stated in the Act, and whenever parties have come to us our statement has been: Take the procedure established in the Act and the government will take it up.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did the minister not give the same reply to the small tanners of the country that he gave to the consumers of paper when they appealed to the government? Had he told them to do that they would have taken advantage of it, but they were not aware that it was necessary or they would have availed themselves of that procedure.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend makes a strange reflection on a gentleman now a judge of the highest court in Ontario who he says did not know the law on the subject. The law is very plain. He asks why did we not give the same answer to the small tanners as was given to the consumers of paper? The Press Association took the procedure contemplated under the Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the procedure?

Mr. FIELDING. The party who takes the responsibility of making the accusation must be prepared to come forward and prove his case and unless he is prepared to prove his case we ought not to proceed to issue a commission to establish the existence of a combine.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The provisions of the statute are as follows:

18. Whenever the Governor in Council has reason to believe that with regard to any article of commerce there exists any trust, combination, association or agreement of any kind among manufacturers of such article or dealers therein, to unduly enhance the price of such article or in any other way to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in Council may commission or empower any judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any superior court in any province of Canada, to inquire in a summary way into and report to the Governor in Council whether such trust, combination, association or agreement exists.

My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) states that one of the best lawyers in Ontario was employed by these small tanners, that he prepared an elaborate statement to prove the existence of a combine and submitted it to the government on behalf of the tanners, and although that gentleman, who has been deemed worthy of a seat upon the bench of the Court of Appeal in Ontario, was so commissioned and performed his duty presumably, as there is no evidence to the contrary, the government failed to take any actions whatever. What else could the small tanners do? They placed the matter in the hands of a counsel who has since been placed by this government on the bench of the highest court in Ontario and he according to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) made every statement and representation that could be made on the subject and yet the government took no action. What more was there to do in order to induce the government to perform its duty?

Mr. FIELDING. In every case where parties have made representations to the government in regard to combines our practice has been to call attention to the wording of the Act and to say: If we issue a commission are you prepared to come forward and prove your case? I cannot remember the conversation that took place with Mr. Garrow, if there was such a conversation, but I know that when such a matter is brought to our attention that is the position we take. In the case of the paper consumers they said: Yes, give us a commission and we will prove it, and they did so; the existence of the combine was established and the remedy applied. In another case it was alleged that there was a lumber combine in the west. Some gentlemen declared that they would be prepared to take up the matter. We issued a commission on the strength of the representations so made, but when the commission went west and tried to investigate no witnesses came forward. Our position simply means that we must have assurance that the parties are prepared to carry it forward if a commission is granted. I do not think any application was made for the appointment of a commission in the particular case to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking from memory now and I may be wrong, but my recollection is that they did make that challenge: Give us a commission and we will prove it.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it took that shape.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking on a remembrance of what occurred several years ago and may be wrong, but that is my recollection, that they offered to prove it to the satisfaction of the government before any commission, but the government did not see fit to issue a commission and gave no redress.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. I think the object of a combine is to increase prices and the evil aimed at by the law and by public opinion is the enhancing of prices against the consumers. I do not know that there is any law in this country against a combine for reducing prices. The combine, I believe, amongst the tanners was to give a certain discount to people who dealt constantly with them and by that means they reduced the prices on sole leather below the prices charged by the small tanners. I do not know if I am correct in that or not. I would like to address a question to my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Boyce), who is an expert in the boot and shoe business: Whether the duty as charged would allow the manufacturers of ladies' boots and shoes in Canada to produce an article which would be saleable and used by the ladies throughout the land at as cheap a rate as shoes of American manufacture can be sold in this country?

I would also ask whether the article which is manufactured in the United States is not superior to any that can be made in Canada; whether he is acquainted with the range of leather that can be bought in the United States; and whether the machinery used in the United States is not better than any machinery used in Canada? He will also inform me whether the same argument applies to men's boots and shoes, and to what grade of men's boots and shoes, and whether the finest grade of men's boots and shoes can be produced in Canada at the present time. I have no doubt that the medium grades of men's boots and shoes for men can be manufactured as well and as cheaply in Canada as in the United States, but I am informed by men who are experts in the trade that under no circumstances can boots and shoes for women be produced in Canada at the present time equal to those which can be produced in the United States, and I do not know that the increasing of the duty from 25 per cent to 30 per cent will affect that fact, or whether any reasonable amount of duty would give us a greater consumption of ladies' boots and shoes made in Canada over those made in the United States.

Besides the American manufacturer has the advantage of the southern states market for fine boots and shoes all the year. In Canada we have only half the year.

Mr. BARKER. I have listened with a good deal of interest to this discussion, because in the city of Hamilton we have some very large interests in the boot and shoe trade. I can only say on behalf of those interests that I feel very much indebted to the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) for the labour he has devoted to this question. I also feel that I ought to say something in resentment of the position taken by the hon. Finance Minister, who has apparently attempted to charge the manufacturing interest with something approaching improper conduct in the way they joined the tanners. My view is that the manufacturers were honestly and properly seeking protection for their own industry. In seeking that protection they did not object to protection being furnished as well to the tanners. They were quite willing to join with the tanners for the general protection of the trade. To say that there was anything wrong in that is in my opinion most unjust. They did what every trader and every manufacturer is entitled to do, and they did nothing wrong to the country at large, assuming that protection is right and I do not suppose that the Minister of Finance, at this date, at all events, will pretend that it is not right. The position of the manufacturers as compared with the position of the tanners, seems to me not unlike:

That well known young lady from Niger
Who went out to ride on a tiger ;
They returned from the ride
With the lady inside
And a smile on the face of the tiger.

The manufacturers went out for a ride with the tanners, but thanks to the Minister of Finance and the Tariff Commission they have returned, the manufacturers inside, and a very broad smile on the face of the tanners.

Mr. FIELDING. They have not shown it to me, I am sorry to say.

Mr. BARKER. They are not so foolish as to show it. But I venture to say that among all the tanners there is none who bears a broader smile, notwithstanding the state of his health, than the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to know if the Minister of Finance thinks it a fair deal to raise the tariff 5 per cent after the orders have been placed for these American goods. I misunderstood one night what was said in the House about the duty on boots and shoes, and I went over and asked the Minister of Customs, and he told me it was 25 per cent. The orders which have been placed for the goods for the spring trade have not come in yet and is it fair under these circumstances that the retail dealer should pay that extra 5 per cent ? I appeal to the hon. Minister of Finance to allow the retail trade to bring in the goods that have been on order for some time at 25 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. The retail dealer will have to charge my hon. friend and myself the difference. I do not see that there is any help for that. Every tariff change creates more or less disturbance. That is to be regretted, but there is no help for it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You gave us the assurance that there would be no change.

Mr. FIELDING. No. I would not even at this late date give my hon. friend an assurance that there would be no change. The tariff is open until the last touch is put upon it, and, while I hope there will be no further change, we cannot apply to the boot and shoe trade a different rule from what we apply to others.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Have you not sometimes done that ?

Mr. FIELDING. When a particular item has been increased, we may have sometimes provided that goods imported within a certain period would be admitted at the old rate. While the changes are not very great, there are changes all along the line, and if we had to take into account all these changes, it would be an endless task for the Customs Department. With every desire to meet the views of the business community, I am afraid that there would be difficulty in meeting them generally, and I do not see how we could make an exception of boots and shoes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It is a spectacle, I think, to be wondered at by any one having a knowledge of the history of the Liberal party, to see a free trade government putting an extra duty on one of the prime necessaries of life ; because these boots and shoes will be brought in. When the manufacturer says he has no protection beyond 25 per cent he takes the ground that he cannot get as good material in this country as he can import. Has not the retail dealer as good a right to take that ground as the manufacturer ? I will tell you an incident with regard to a manufacturer. Before the last election, knowing that he had supported the Liberal-Conservative party, I asked him for his support. He said : When you were in power, I supported you ; the Liberals are now in power, and I am supporting them ; when you come back to power I will support you. I am afraid that is very general with the manufacturers. I brought to the notice of the Minister of Finance some years ago a combine in rubbers, and offered to furnish him with the report of the annual meeting of the combine and the instructions given to their travellers, and he said he would appoint a commission if I would go to the expense of providing the witnesses. He was perfectly safe in making that offer, because he knew perfectly well that he would not have to carry it out. There is a straight combine in rubber goods, and they are getting into a closer corporation every year. Only a week or two ago I met a traveller for rubbers and he told me that this year there was another advance of 10 per cent in the price. This is the result of this kind of legislation. There was a time when I was a good deal stronger protectionist than I am now. When the national policy was first introduced we were told, and those of us who were young at the time believe it, that you might put on any duty you liked and it would make no difference, because the home competition would regulate the price.

We have lived long enough to see that there is no competition in many of these lines. It is most unfair to raise the duties 5 per cent on boots and shoes. Twenty-five per cent is a good protection in addition to the freight that has to be paid from the United States. And besides you are not really protecting these people because these American goods will come in. There are certain brands of American goods, which everybody knows, which are bought all over the country which are high class goods and will come in despite your tariff. We can manufacture coarse goods just as cheaply as the Americans, but not the finer grades because they have factories that need only turn out two or three lines, since they have such an immense market to supply. I was under the impression until tonight, because I had not noticed the change in the tariff, that the duty was 25 per cent. I had the assurance of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to that effect. I got some letters about the change, but I said the report could not be true as the minister had told me the duty was 25 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. It was when I told you.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Yes, but you are changeable in your policy.

Mr. PATERSON. According to the hon. gentleman, these goods will come in any how, and so the duty will be collected and this will be a revenue tariff.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But they may not come in in the same quantities, and it is a hardship on the consumer who will have to pay.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. We will make the goods here.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But my hon. friend says the cost of machinery is so great that we shall have to put up with the old style. We cannot have shoes made in Canada like those made in the United States because it costs so much to change our machinery and because it is so expensive to change the lasts and dies. While I am in favour of a reasonable amount of protection, I am not in favour of that increase of 5 per cent because it is a direct tax on the consumer if he chooses to buy an American shoe.

Mr. PATERSON. How would you be off with 10 per cent?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would be worse off. I am sorry I cannot make any impression on the minister. We have the argument made that because you put a duty on sole leather, you should put a duty on the other.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. I think we had better let it go.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. No doubt it will go but I cannot see why, because you put a duty on sole leather, you should put a higher duty on boots and shoes. I am in favour of a reasonable duty on all these things, but it is most unfair, after retail men have placed their orders all over the country that the government should change its opinion and make them pay an additional 5 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before this item passes I would like to point out that it is abundantly clear that the leather men received an advantage under the tariff as originally brought down. In the old tariff, the item was number 213, and it was as follows:

Skins for morocco leather, tanned but not further manufactured; sole leather and belting leather of all kinds; tanners' scrap leather; and leather and skins, not otherwise provided, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The tariff, as brought down in the latter part of November, 1906, was as follows in respect of this item:

Skins for morocco leather, tanned but not further manufactured; sole leather in whole sides; belting leather of all kinds; tanners' scrap leather; leather not further finished than tanned, and skins, n.o.p., 10 per cent, 12½ per cent, 15 per cent.

Then there was another item, number 606:

Sole leather, n.o.p., 12½ per cent, 15 per cent, 17½ per cent.

So that there was an advance of 2½ per cent on the item I have last mentioned. When the amendments were introduced after the beginning of the year, those two items were amended so as to read as follows:

Skins for morocco leather, tanned but not further manufactured; belting leather of all kinds; tanners' scrap leather; leather not further finished than tanned, and skins, n.o.p., 10 per cent, 12½ per cent, 15 per cent.

No. 606. Sole leather. 12½ per cent, 15 per cent, 17½ per cent.

So that there was in the first place an advantage to the manufacturers of leather in the tariff as originally brought down, and in the amendments introduced after the beginning of the year there was a still further advantage to the manufacturers of leather, because all sole leather was increased by that amendment 2½ per cent in each one of the three tariffs. There can be no question about that. The point made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was that the existence of this combine was perfectly well known to the government years ago and the government took no action. The combine seems to have been a very carefully prepared and effective one. This combine, by private agreement among themselves, allotted to each member of the combine a certain proportion of the Canadian sole leather trade, permission being granted to export any quantity the members might see fit without restriction. But at the same time any members selling in the Canadian trade above their proportion had to pay a forfeit of two cents per pound into a pool which was divided amongst the other members of the combine who had not sold up to their allotted amount. This is information which comes to me from a gentleman who professes to know the circumstances and declares he can substantiate them. He further said:

The Minister of Public Works was one of those who participated to a large extent in the division of this pool. As a matter of fact the Canadian shoe trade has been offered by British sole leather dealers Canadian tanned sole leather made by members of this combine at much less money than it could be bought for in Canada, and this after paying freight twice across the Atlantic, insurance expenses and a profit to the British dealer. On account of the arbitrary conditions imposed by the combine and the solemn declaration which he was forced by them to make, the Canadian shoe manufacturer was unable to avail himself of this offer.

He could not take advantage of it, because the members of this combine would not sell to any man in the trade unless he bound himself by a declaration, having the force of oath, that he would not, directly or indirectly, by himself or any partner or agent or in any manner by or through any person, purchase leather from any firm not a member of this combine.

That was the condition of affairs when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) became a member of this government. What followed ? This followed, that when the amendment to the tariff was proposed in 1905, the colleagues of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman), the gentlemen who were sharing with him in the proceeds of that pool, who were sharing with him in the profits created by this combine and by the restriction of the output and the imposition upon all the shoe men in Canada of an obligation to necessarily buy from this combine—the colleagues in business of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) began to boast of the influence which they had with this government, and to declare, not only among themselves but throughout the country, among the manufacturers of boots and shoes, that this leather industry could certainly get all it wanted whether any other would get anything or not.

Let us look for a moment at one or two of the letters that have been quoted here to-day. Let me say, in the first place, that it is declared by these gentlemen that on three different occasions this boast was made by one of the colleagues in this combine of the Minister of Public Works; I allude to Mr. Beardmore, whose firm is a member of the combine which also includes the Minister of Public Works. He declared to Mr. Ritchie, in Mr. Ritchie's office in the city of Quebec, that he relied, and the boot and shoe men, if they joined with the leather men, could rely, upon the political influence of a member of that combine, the Minister of Public Works. The same declaration, we are told, was made by the same gentleman to Mr. Hagar, another manufacturer of boots and shoes in the office of Mr. Hagar in the city of Montreal. And either of these gentlemen, I am informed is ready to go upon the witness stand and affirm that these statements were true. And on one more occasion, in the presence of at least six manufacturers of boots and shoes, this same declaration was made by Mr. Beardmore as to the influence that the Tanners' Association had with the government by reason of the fact that one of their members held office in this government. Let us look at the correspondence and see whether it bears out the statements which these gentlemen make. I quote from Mr. Beardmore's letter to Mr. John Ritchie, of October 14, 1905.

I expect however it is going to take all the pressure that the leather and shoe industries can bring to bear upon the government to get them to increase the duties.

'All the pressure that the leather and shoe industries can bring to bear upon the government.'

One very prominent man and a very strong supporter of the government who is also most anxious to see a general increase in the tariff, told me yesterday that he feared the government was weak-kneed and would do very little if anything. He further added that they would bring about their own downfall just as the local government in Ontario had through being half-hearted and weak-kneed. This however, should not discourage us for the leather and shoe industry ought to be able to get what they wanted if any industry can do so.

Can any one doubt what the suggestion is in that letter ? And can any one give much credit to the assertions afterward made that no such suggestions as those to which I have alluded were really made by Mr. Beardmore, the colleague of Mr. Hyman, the Minister of Public Works ? The explanation made in a subsequent letter from Mr. Beardmore is not very different in substance from what the boot and shoe men claim. I should refer to the fact that Mr. Beardmore afterwards, in letters to Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Hagar denied—at least, he denied to Mr. Ritchie, and, in terms which I will quote in a moment, to Mr. Hagar—that he had relied upon Mr. Hyman's influence. And Mr. Hyman has decided most explicitly and it is right that I should mention that fact—that Mr. Beardmore, if he did make such an assertion had not the slightest authority to use his name, or to make such an assertion on his behalf. But listen to the suggestion contained in the letter of November 6, 1905, from Mr. Beardmore to Mr. Hagar. He is explaining that he did not allude in any way to the influence of Mr. Hyman as a member of the government in moulding the tariff so that, at least, no injustice should be done to the tanning interests in which he is so largely interested. He says :

Among the members of the tanners' section are several like Mr. Davis, who have been prominent and life-long supporters of the Liberal party. These members joined actively in supporting our demand for an increase of tariff on shoes and leather with a view to increasing the manufacture of fine goods in Canada, and it was these parties that I had in mind in my conversation with Mr. Ritchie and afterwards with you in any reference I may have made to our uniting to bring pressure on the government for increased protection, and I presumed that it went without saying that the Hon. Mr. Hyman in his position could be governed only by what he considered generally in the public interest, and that no business or personal consideration could have any influence with him.

Now the boot and shoe men state most distinctly and emphatically that Mr. Hyman's name was used, not on one occasion but on three occasions, and on one of these occasions in the presence of at least six people, as an argument to the boot and shoe manufacturers that they would do well to keep in touch with the leather industry because it was represented in the Cabinet by the minister of Public Works who was also a member of the leather combine. That is the assertion; and the explanation is, not that their political pressure was to be used, but that the political pressure was to be that of Hon. E. J. Davis and other livelong liberals. Now, is it a desirable thing that any member of a government in this country should be so associated in his business connection that his name can be used in that way among men who are seeking tariff alterations? That is the consideration I would urge upon the government. There is not the slightest doubt that these boot and shoe men believe that this argument was advanced to them. And what discredit does such an agreement bring upon the government and how does that discredit arise? That discredit arises from the fact that a member is taken in to this government, sworn of the privy council and assigned to a portfolio when he is a member of a combine which has an express agreement among its members to restrict output and which enforces that agreement by declarations having the force of an oath and of the most comprehensive character, which declarations forbid their customers from purchasing leather except from members of the combine. I venture to think that, under the circumstances, there were good reasons why my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) should bring these matters to the attention of the House. And I see no reason why Mr. Hyman's name or the name of any member of the government which may have been bandied about the country in this way with certain suggestions of improper influence should not be brought forward and the whole facts laid before parliament and the people. And I think it will require a little more explanation than any which has yet been laid before the House to convince us that the leather combine did not exercise a considerable influence. The boot and shoe men got no increase in the tariff in the first instance. They got no added protection, though one would suppose that the circumstances were such as to justify increased protection in their case rather than in the other. The leather men pay not one cent of duty on their raw material. The boot and shoe men on the other hand, say that they pay an average duty of a little over 20 per cent. The duty on their goods has been 25 per cent. The leather men were protected with a duty of 15 per cent.

The net protection of the boot and shoe men was thus a little under 5 per cent, if their statement be correct. Then these men having a net protection of a little less than 5 per cent get no advance, and the leather men with a net protection of 15 per cent get 2½ per cent advance, on some lines at least. Well, the minister states that there was not the slightest consideration given to any of this political pressure. How was it then, under these circumstances, that the boot and shoe men, after they cut loose from the leather men, received not one iota of additional consideration under the tariff and the tanners with a net protection of 15 per cent, and with free raw material, got an advance of 2½ per cent on some lines, in the tariff as first brought down? The Minister of Finance has explained the position from his standpoint. It seems to me that it will require a little more than the explanation already given, to account for the fact that there was this discrepancy in the treatment which the two parties received when the tariff was brought down in the first instance.

Mr. PATERSON. I fail to see that the leader of the opposition has given us any information as to how he views the rates that were fixed. I cannot gather whether he is in favour of the rates or opposed to them. What suggestion has he to offer?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have the suggestion to offer that the government of this country should not pretend to be opposed to combines and keep on the treasury benches a man who is a member of a combine.

Mr. PATERSON. But I have asked what rate of duty the hon. gentleman considers should be placed upon sole leather, and what rate should be placed upon boots and shoes. If there has been any unfair pressure brought to bear, it ought to manifest itself in these items.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was no occasion whatever, so far as I can see, for an increase on leather, at least I have not heard any reason given for it. So far as the other is concerned, if these men have less than 5 per cent of net protection. I think the minister will agree, in fact he has already agreed, that that was not enough, because he has increased that by 5 per cent. And if he does not feel competent to frame a tariff without appealing to me, he had better get off the treasury benches.

Mr. FIELDING. Repeated reference has been made to the combine having been brought to the notice of the government by small tanners. I have been trying to recall the facts, and I am reminded of the fact that the small tanners would not have had their purpose accomplished at all by our putting in force the clause of the tariff which has been the subject of discussion here. The leader of the opposition says, Why did'nt you go on and satisfy them? The reason is that all the tanners were not willing to go on that basis, they would not have had any purpose served by reducing the duties on sole leather. They were not complaining of that, they were complaining of the restrictions placed upon the trade by the larger tanners; but they were not restrictions as to which any relief could be given by reducing the duty on sole leather. It might have been a legitimate subject for prosecution under the Criminal Code, if they had said that a combine existed. But the remedy which is open to the government under this section of the tariff we have been discussing, was not a remedy which would have served them at all, they would have had no relief in that way. There was the reason why they did not proceed further in the matter, they would have had no relief by calling into operation that section of the tariff.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statute does not say anything about small tanners, it does not contain a single word about small tanners. The statute contains words about the Governor in Council, and this is what it says:

> Whenever the Governor in Council has reason to believe that with regard to any article of commerce there exists any trust, combination, association or agreement of any kind among manufacturers of such article or dealers therein, to unduly enhance the price of such article or in any other way to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in Council may commission or empower any judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any superior court in any province of Canada to inquire in a summary way into and report to the Governor in Council whether such trust, combination, association or agreement exists.

The Minister of Justice has said during this session in the House that whenever the word 'may' is applied to a public functionary or to the Governor in Council in such a connection, it means that the Governor in Council or the other functionary may do that particular thing and may not do anything else. Now the Minister of Finance has discovered that this government had knowledge of this combine, but they did not exercise their power on account of some interest existing among the small tanners, because the small tanners did not want them to go on. Well, the statute makes no reference to small tanners or to any one else, it makes reference to the public interest ,and imposes a certain duty on the Governor in Council. And although the facts were admittedly brought before the Governor in Council, the Governor in Council took no action except one action, and that was to take into the cabinet, into the Privy Council, into this administration, a member of that very combine against whom this complaint has been made. That was the only action the government took. Now that action is not contemplated by the statute, the statute contemplates an entirely different action. The action which the statute requires, the government did not take, but they did take the action of admitting into this administration one of the very men against whom a complaint had been made that they constituted a combine within the meaning of that section.

Mr. FIELDING. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for the information that the statute does not contain any reference to small tanners. As I did not say that it did, I do not see what purpose he accomplishes by reading the clause to show that there was nothing in it about small tanners. But we were told this evening that this matter had been brought to the notice of the government, it was the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who told us that he had brought it to the attention of the government, and had called attention to the representations that were made by a number of small tanners. Now, although the member for East Grey is not in his place, I suppose I may allude to his argument, as well as to the argument of others. The hon. member for East Grey dwelt on the fact that this representation was made to us on behalf of the small tanners. Now what the small tanners wanted was not that the tariff on sole leather should be reduced, and when their attention was drawn to the machinery provided by the tariff, they saw at once that no good purpose from their point of view could be served by proceeding under that Act. They had a right to proceed under the Criminal Code.

Mr. BARKER. Why did'nt you proceed?

Mr. FIELDING. I will give my hon. friend the answer why. If we had taken up every complaint that was made to us of an informal character of the existence of combinations in this, that and the other line, and if we had attempted to proceed in regard to every such complaint, the hon. gentleman would have been the first man to say that we were trying to persecute some manufacturer, and were taking undue advantage of our position.

Mr. BARKER. Then you will only take notice of the big tanner?

Mr. FIELDING. Of any legitimate complaint that has been made. But the hon. gentleman knows that he and his friends, that everybody who believed that the combination then existed, had the machinery under the Criminal Code to proceed with if they wished, but they did not.

Another method of procedure, that which deals entirely with a reduction of the tariff, would not have served the purpose as to which the complaint was made. That is why I alluded to the small tanners. The remedy provided in the Tariff Act is that where a combination is established and where the remedy can be applied in the shape of a reduction in duties, that is the machinery contemplated by the Act, that is the machinery we are now discussing, but that machinery would not have provided the remedy for the evil which was alleged to exist at the time to which I refer.

Mr. ELSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister for some information in regard to item No. 1 in schedule A, which provides that horses, cattle, sheep, goats, swine and other animals for the improvement of stock may be admitted under regulations provided by the Governor in Council. Now, it appears that these regulations are very lax. They are not rigid enough in comparison with the American regulations in so far as they admit our stock into the United States. I have heard a great deal of complaint from horse and cattle breeders in regard to these regulations. I do not know what the regulations are exactly, and I would ask the minister for information in regard to them. If the regulations have not been made more rigid than they have been in the past, I would ask if it is the intention of the government to change them and make it a little more difficult for horses and cattle to come in free from the United States as they do for the improvement of stock, when a Canadian apparently cannot export horses or cattle under the American regulations to the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. I can inform my hon. friend (Mr. Elson) that no change has been made in these regulations and that they have been in existence for a long time. The regulations which were adopted many years ago have not been changed, but the Department of Customs is now communicating with the Department of Agriculture to see whether any revision of the regulations to meet our later conditions is necessary, and if any suggestion can be offered by my hon. friend for making them more effective we will be happy to hear from him on the subject. If he will give us the benefit of his views we will give them all consideration.

There are two resolutions, 9 and 10, at page 6, which have not yet been adopted. These simply confirm the schedules that we have already dealt with. As far as I know that completes everything in the way of tariff resolutions. I will be happy if any hon. gentleman will draw my attention to anything that has not been dealt with, but upon making careful inquiry I think that disposes of everything. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, although I do not anticipate there will be any need of it.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Public Works—income—Toronto drill hall—additional accommodation for new corps, $150,000.

Mr. KEMP. I see that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) is not here. There has been quite an elaborate scheme placed before the Minister of Militia in regard to the purchasing of a lot of houses in the vicinity of the drill hall and having a park right adjacent to the new drill hall, part of the cost of which would be defrayed by the city and part by the government. I would like to know if the cost of the drill ground or park is included in this estimate.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Acting Minister of Public Works). No, I think not.

Mr. KEMP. The city authorities of Toronto waited on the Minister of Militia a short time ago to promote a scheme whereby a considerable number of houses of a not very valuable character would be torn down near the present drill hall and near the new drill hall. This is partly for the purposes of a park and partly for a parade ground. Is there anything in the estimates to cover the expense of this scheme if anything is being done ?

Mr. FISHER. This item does not cover that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know if the minister is responsible for the apportioning of the money for different purposes in these estimates, but I would point out that there are regiments as good as those in Toronto that have no drill sheds at all. We do not wish to interfere with city drill sheds, but there are many crops representing possibly one quarter of the population of Toronto having no drill sheds.

Mr. FISHER. Of course the drill shed accommodation is based on requisitions from the Militia Department here, and such expense has to be discussed in relation to other expenditures. However, my impression is that the drill sheds in large military centres are being pretty well supplied. I recently signed a contract for one at Peterborough, there are several others under construction and plans for drill sheds in different large military centres are ready for approval. I think the object is being met as rapidly as possible.

Mr. KEMP. The militia force in Toronto is as large, in fact larger, than any other place in Canada, and we are told by the Minister of Militia that Toronto is the point for recruiting for the regular forces. The facilities in Toronto are not yet adequate and I believe that even when these buildings are completed the corps will still be somewhat cramped.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I would point out to the minister that although some places are scant on drill halls, there are other places that have no regiments that have drill halls, and I do not know if it is the policy of the government to continue that system of building drill halls where there is no regiment. That condition does not exist in Brantford, but it does in the neighbouring city of Woodstock.

Mr. FISHER. I think they must have a regiment there but I do not know.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I was there a short time ago and was informed there were no troops.

In connection with item 123, public buildings, Ontario, I would ask what the appropriation for the public building at Brantford is ?

Mr. FISHER. It is for improvement in the post office.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Additional inside equipment or addition to the building ?

Mr. FISHER. It is to make provision for completing improvements to the post office equipment and repairs. The total cost will be $11,500.

Brandon drill hall $30,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does this complete the drill hall at Brandon ?

Mr. FISHER. $30,000 it is expected will complete it.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the contract been let ?

Mr. FISHER. No, the plans are not complete.

Mr. BENNETT. Does that include the site ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the site been purchased yet ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, at the corner of 11th and Victoria streets for $3,100

Neepawa public building, $12,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the contract been let ?

Mr.. FISHER. No, the plan has not yet been submitted for tender.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the site been purchased ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, for $3,000, on the corner of Mountain avenue and Cannon street.

Mr. STAPLES. From whom was it purchased ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Peelhorn.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the population of Neepawa?

Mr. KEMP.

Mr. FISHER. 1,418 by the census of 1901, but it has increased very largely since that time.

Mr. LAKE. What is the meaning of this item in the Auditor General's Report: 'Survey and plan of site, M. McFadden, $167.50 ?

Mr. FISHER. I suppose that was for a survey of the land.

Mr. STAPLES. I might call the attention of the minister to the fact that other towns in Manitoba having a much larger population and being of more importance, have been crying for public buildings, but have not got them. For instance, the town of Carman in my constituency, with a population of about 3,000, has asked for a building, but has not received it.

Mr. FISHER. I will try to look into the claims of Carman.

Mr. STAPLES. It has three lines of railway, and is a very thriving town. I would like to know on what principle these buildings are allotted ?

Mr. FISHER. We try to pick out the most important towns, and try not to give too many buildings to one constituency.

Mr. BENNETT. What does the minister intend to expend on this Neepawa building?

Mr. FISHER. I should think about $25,000, but the plans are not yet prepared.

Mr. BENNETT. All I have to say is that if this government is building $30,000 buildings, including the site, in villages of about 1,400 population, it is about time the people of the country knew it. I can point out towns in Ontario with five times the population that has not public buildings.

Selkirk public building, $18,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the contract let ?

Mr. FISHER. No. The tenders have just been received. The site cost $2,000. It is 58x150 feet at the southeast corner of Manitoba and Main streets. The building will cost about $20,000.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. A year or two ago I drew the attention of the department to the advisability of having no other building within 100 feet of any public building. In the United States no public building is erected anywhere, I understand, within, 100 feet of any other building ; there must be a clear space around it.

St. Boniface public building, $12,000.

Mr. FISHER. The tenders are in and the contract let. The contract price is $20,000.

Winnipeg new immigration building, including additional land, $40,000.

Mr. STAPLES. What is the nature of the addition ?

Mr. FISHER. It is not an addition to the building but is to complete it and pay the balance of the cost.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the total cost ?

Mr. FISHER. $256,000.

Mr. STAPLES. How much additional land purchased?

Mr. FISHER. 66 by 132 at $35,000.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is it used for the housing of immigrants as they arrive, and is there any stated time during which they can remain in the building ?

Mr. FISHER. They are given accommodation in the building until they are distributed throughout the province.

Mr. STAPLES. From whom was the additional land purchased ?

Mr. FISHER. From Mr. Kern.

Winnipeg new post office—land and building, $250,000.

Mr. FISHER. I move to reduce that to $160,000.

Mr. KEMP. How much money has been spent?

Mr. FISHER. To December 31st, $390,000.

Mr. KEMP. Including the land ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes and there is a large amount due on the contract, $163,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who is the contractor ?

Mr. FISHER. Kelly Brothers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are they Canadians ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, of Winnipeg.

Mr. KEMP. Here is a building costing three quarters of a million dollars, which is sandwiched right between a newspaper office and a shop, instead of having it on the corner of a street. It is a most unfortunate location—a magnificent building with a magnificent front, built right between a newspaper office and a shop.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This post office is built alongside the 'Free Press,' the organ of this government in Winnipeg, and was so devised that parts of it were left out in order to afford light to the 'Free Press.' The government were very solicitous for their neighbours but the people have to pay.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the total amount of the contract ?

Mr. FISHER. $529,485.

Mr. BENNETT. How is it it cost $750,000 ?

Mr. FISHER. The site cost $132,350, purchased from Alloway & Good.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were they the owners or the agents ?

Mr. FISHER. The owners. The name of the agent is Thomas L. Metcalfe, barrister.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is he the same one who was appointed to revise the statutes?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know but very likely.

Mr. BENNETT. That makes a difference of $90,000 simply for the fittings.

Mr. FISHER. Fittings and furniture and boxes, $20,000 ; architect's commission, $10,000 ; contingencies, $9,000.

Mr. STAPLES. When will this building be completed ?

Mr. FISHER. In three or four months from now.

Mr. STAPLES. How long has it been under way ?

Mr. FISHER. The contract was let on the 24th of February 1905—a little over two years.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

Winnipeg postal station—north of Canadian Pacific Railway track, $35,000.

Mr. FISHER. Entire cost $60,000 to $70,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the site purchased ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, at $15,700. It has eigthy-seven feet on the Main street and is a corner lot.

Public Works—chargeable to income—rents, repairs, furniture, heating, &c.—Ottawa public buildings, including repairs, ventilation and lighting, furniture, &c., $175,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would like some explanation of this.

Mr. FISHER. This is the usual vote for the maintenance of the public buildings in Ottawa—the usual amount.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that, the post office in this building belongs to the ante-diluvian period. A modern post office has boxes where people can go and get their letters when they want them. members of this House have to wear out their knuckles knocking for a clerk to bring their letters. Moreover the boxes should be larger. Will the minister direct his architect's attention to this matter ?

Mr. FISHER. I will. I had not thought of that.

Mr. DANIEL. What about the ventilation of this chamber ?

Mr. FISHER. I explained all that, but I will go over it again, if the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not wish to put the minister to that trouble; but can he tell us when the new system of ventilation will be complete and satisfactory?

Mr. FISHER. I think it is working well now.

Mr. DANIEL. Speaking with the engineer to-day, I asked him when the ventilating apparatus would be complete, and he said that he expected to get at it again when the session closed.

Mr. FISHER. I am told that there is machinery for the exhaust of the air not quite completed but that the exhaust is working, though not with the new machinery.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister give us an idea where, in the name of all that is good, $175,000 a year is spent on these buildings? Does this include wages?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, $82,000 of wages.

Mr. BENNETT. Let us have some data as to these wages.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does this include the men in charge of the lawns, the snow shovellers and the rest?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, all the workers about the public buildings in the whole city.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How many men are employed?

Mr. FISHER. The list before me shows 135 men employed the year round, with an extra staff for eight months whose pay amounts to $13,300. The total for wages, as I have said, is $82,000.

Mr. KEMP. Has the minister the cost of lighting as a separate item?

Mr. FISHER. Lighting in this item means material for wiring and so on, not the price of the light.

Mr. BENNETT. How are this staff of 135 men employed the year round?

Mr. FISHER. There are 6 masons and bricklayers——

Mr. BENNETT. What do they do in the winter?

Mr. FISHER. The architect informs me that there is plenty of work for them to do.

Mr. KEMP. It is a pretty big factory that employs 135 men.

Mr. FISHER. Well, this is a pretty big factory. There are 30 carpenters and 4 roofers——

Mr. MARSHALL. What are the carpenters doing now?

Mr. DANIEL.

Mr. FISHER. They are chiefly engaged on fittings and repairs. They have a regular carpenter shop where they repair furniture, make fittings and so on.

Mr. BENNETT. Just to show the absurdity of this matter we have only to point to the fact that though the government has 30 carpenters employed the year round, when they put on an ordinary country porch at the front of this building, it costs $930. The department ought to furnish a picture of that work to every member of this House——

Mr. FISHER. That porch has been talked about a good deal, and I took occasion to examine it. I think that the gentlemen who find fault with the cost have not examined it carefully or have not examined it with much knowledge of the value of work. It may or may not have been necessary to put such a porch there—that is a matter of opinion—but if you look at the design and the details of the work, the quatrefoils at the top and so on, I think you will not be surprised that it cost in the neighbourhood of $800 or $900.

Mr. BENNETT. I have bought too many hardwood doors to think that such a work could fairly cost $930.

Mr. FISHER. I have before me details of the cost of that porch. Take the cost of material alone. There are no less than eight doors in that porch, all cored up and veneered, and finished with Gothic stock moulding; and the lowest price of these doors would be $25 each without hardware, setting or fitting. This makes $200 for the doors alone. I am not saying that it is necessary to have a porch with eight doors, that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon minister wants to buy hardwood doors I can give him the addresses of people in the province of Ontario who will not charge him $30 for such doors as these.

Mr. FISHER. I venture to say that if specifications had been drawn up and tenders called for making these doors we would have found no one to make them for less than $25 a piece. At the same time they were designed in harmony with the general design of the lobby and the building. I fancy that if they were put up to public tender there would not have been $50 saved by competition.

Mr. BLAIN. Who decided that they were necessary?

Mr. FISHER. The architect drew the plans in consonance with the general design of the building.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister would finish reading that account.

Mr. FISHER. It is very long, and I would rather give it to the hon. gentleman to read.

Mr. BLAIN. Whose account is it?

Mr. FISHER. It is a statement made by the builders of the porch to Mr. Shearer, the gentleman in charge of this kind of work. The builders were the Library Bureau of Canada. The main items were: Lumber, $132; hardware, $38; glass, $40; labour, $537. It was a rush job, with the understanding that it was to be finished within a certain time, and consequently a considerable part of the labour was night work for which the men had to be paid extra.

Rents—Dominion public buildings, $120,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What are the buildings in Ottawa and what rental is paid for them?

Mr. FISHER. There is an addition to to the Geological Museum on Sussex street for the storage of specimens, $600. That building is leased partly from Mr. Baskerville and partly from Mr. Johnston. Then there is the French translators' office on Sussex street, $600. The quarters on Queen street known as the Imperial building, $2,250. Coal sheds, Canal basin, $306, rented from the Slater estate. Another part of the Imperial building for the Immigration branch of the Interior Department, $1,750; that is rented from the Pearson estate. Then the methylated spirits warehouse, Mr. Lamb, $1,200. The larger Woods building on Slater street for the Militia Department, $25,000.

Yukon public buildings—rents, repairs, fuel, lighting, water service and caretakers' salaries, $100,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the population of the Yukon?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not counting the troops, neither the officials and their families, I believe the population is about 4,000 or 5,000 all told, perhaps 6,000.

Mr. FISHER. I think they have a population of 5,000 or 6,000.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. No, the census did not give nearly as great a population as the minister says.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the intention to erect a new public building there since the fire?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Will it be furnished by the government or the governor?

Mr. FISHER. I should think by the government.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the minister will not furnish the house as well as the last one was. It seems to have been a most elaborately fitted up establishment and for the benefit of the Minister of Customs I will read how the money of the people of Canada goes in that respect. It is very difficult when you go out on the platform to convince people that such things are done in this country. They will not believe that money is being thrown away by the handful unless you can quote them 'Hansard' and prove it to them. Here are some of these expenditures: One china dinner set, 96 pieces, $100, one water caraffe, $12.50; cupid catches, $8. I do not know whether those are for the fairies that are up there or not. Dinner set—a second one at $80.

Mr. FISHER. That is not very much.

Mr. BENNETT. Then there is one at $35; bowls, one at $30, one at $25, one at $20, one at $14, 2 at $12, one at $9, one at $8 and two at $5; cut glass centre, $24; copper loving cup, $8.50; Indian screen, $20. I should think that a good many perple would want to screen themselves up there besides the Indians. Liquor decanters, one pair $8. Then, when His Honour wants to recline with some person else beside him he can recline on two couch rugs at $20 each and when he gets rested he can go out and enjoy a game of croquet, the set being furnished by the people of Canada at a cost of $17.50. Then, when he is tired of that exercise he can rest beneath eiderdown quilts three of which cost $65 each and one $50. Then there are cushions, costing $7.75 and $7.25; liquor stand $30 and punch bowl $15. Why the governor of the Yukon wants to come out here for two or three months in the year and why the office is going begging when it is provided in this luxurious manner is something that I cannot understand. It is simply disgraceful that the people's money is thrown away in this manner,

Mr. PATERSON. There will be a tremendous amount of freight on that.

Mr. BENNETT. How much freight will there be on eiderdown quilts costing $65 apiece? The Minister of Customs is just as plain and democratic as I am myself. He never saw an eiderdown quilt costing $65 nor did I.

Mr. PATERSON. I never owned one, I know.

Mr. BENNETT. No, you never will for you have too much common sense and I never will if we have to pay for them out of our own pockets. The whole thing is a scandal.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I understand that it cost $13,000 odd for fitting up the commissioner's house last year. The cost for fitting up the governor's house in the Yukon is almost as great as for the Governor General's house here and that too for a little one horse place. The whole population of the Yukon is only about half that of an Ontario town. It costs $13,000 to run that little show every year. The Guggenheims, of New York, own the whole business, the governor and all, I believe.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Very nearly, and if they are going to get the benefit of all that goes on in the Yukon the least we can do is to ask them to pay for it.

Mr. BENNETT. I think that with those dance houses up there and those high licenses the country should not be called upon to put up for these cupid catches at $8.

Mr. FISHER. We will have to stop that.

Rideau Hall, including grounds—improvements, furniture and maintenance, $35,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I think I remember seeing in the early part of the winter that a conservatory that was being built on the Governor's ground had collapsed. Could the minister tell us the reason and what has been the result ?

Mr. FISHER. There was just a small section that came down. It was repaired immediately at slight cost. There was no heat in the house, and the snow on the roof did not melt and a portion of the roof caved in under the weight.

Mr. DANIEL. Was it not built strong enough to hold up any ordinary snowfall ?

Mr. FISHER. It would hold snow ordinarily but my hon. friend knows that no snow lies on a greenhouse after it is heated. This was before the heat was put into the greenhouse and the snow accumulated from a higher portion of the house.

Mr. DANIEL. Has it been rebuilt in a stronger manner than before ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, supports were put in.

Mr. DANIEL. Of course it means that it was not built in a sufficiently strong manner at first ?

Mr. FISHER. It was built under the ordinary plans of the men who are responsible for greenhouse construction.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that the architect ?

Mr. FISHER. No, the plans were furnished by men who make a specialty of greenhouse construction.

Mr. DANIEL. Was it built by contract ?

Mr. FISHER. The materials were supplied and then the workmen here put them together according to the specifications which were supplied by the men who make greenhouse construction a speciality.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the loss falls on the government ?

Mr. FISHER. There was not $10 loss altogether.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Post Office—fittings and supplies, $25,000.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. What kind of locks do they use in the post offices? In some of the country post offices the locks are very rough and letters and papers catch on them in taking them out. Where are the locks obtained ?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman refers to an old style of lock that is not used now.

Ottawa public buildings—heating, including salaries of engineers, &c., $95,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How do the government purchase coal?

Mr. FISHER. By public tender.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At what price ?

Mr. FISHER. Different kinds and at different times of the year. There is 6,000 tons of anthracite at $6.07 from John Heney & Co.; 3,000 tons of egg at $6.60; 300 tons of stove at $6.60; 500 tons of bituminous slack at $3.75; 300 tons of cannel at $7.60; 10 tons of blacksmith——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister any means of checking this coal?

Mr. FISHER. It is checked on our own scales by our own officers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not on public scales?

Mr. FISHER. Because our own officers can watch it more closely.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Judging by the record we should hardly be asked to take the checking of some of these officials, we have evidence that the government's own officials are not very particular in the matter of——

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that is a fair statement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In some instances. I remember that last year in the case of the coal purchased at Prescott not only the price but the weight was seriously called into question.

Mr. FISHER. There has been no such question here.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some cars found their way to Ottawa. How did they pass the check?

Mr. FISHER. That must have been in some other department.

Mr. DANIEL. Where does the cannel coal come from?

Mr. FISHER. Some where in Ohio, I think.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there a duty?

Mr. FISHER. There is a duty on bituminous coal and anthracite is free. I am informed this comes under bituminous so under the new tariff there will be a duty on it.

Ottawa public buildings—elevator attendants, $15,000.

Mr. KEMP. How many attendants and how many elevators are there?

Mr. FISHER. Fourteen elevators and twenty-five attendants.

Mr. BENNETT. Do you pay the elevator men in the Woods building?

Mr. FISHER. Oh, yes, we run the building.

Ottawa public buildings—gas and electric lights, including roads and bridges, $35,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. From whom does the government purchase gas?

Mr. FISHER. The Ottawa Gas Company.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In what buildings is it used?

Mr. FISHER. There is not a great deal used, the Printing Bureau is all lighted by gas.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. With whom is the contract for electric light?

Mr. FISHER. The Ottawa Electric Company.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the arrangement?

Mr. FISHER. There are 3,000 lamps at $2.25 a year; 6,887 at $2 a year; thirty arc lights at $85 a year; 150 new lights on the grounds at $2 a year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where are the arc lights used?

Mr. FISHER. At the slides and booms and on the road to the experimental farm.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister know what the city pays for arc lights?

Mr. FISHER. I do not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are you not paying rather high?

Mr. FISHER. We could not get it for any less.

Ottawa public buildings—telephone service, $12,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister explain this?

Mr. FISHER. There is a flat rate of $35 for each telephone. In the city the rate is $45 for business telephones and $25 for residences.

Mr. BENNETT. How many have you altogether ?

Mr. FISHER. Two hundred and ninety-two.

Ottawa public buildings—Major's Hill park, $8,000.

Mr. DANIEL. What is done with the flowers in the conservatories?

Mr. FISHER. There are not many flowers. The conservatories are for the production of plants for bedding out in the spring and also to keep large plants during the winter.

Mr. DANIEL. I suppose that is the only direction in which these flowers go?

Mr. FISHER. The only one I know of except that there are some plants in this building and in some of the departments for a time, and then they are sent back.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Some of the Bills on the order paper, possibly that of the Minister of Justice respecting electric power and any other Bill except the Land Bill and the Proprietary Medicine Bill, and then supply with the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. KEMP. When does the Minister of Finance intend to introduce the Tariff Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. As soon as the printing can be completed. I would not like to name a day, but we desire to expedite it without delay.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 13, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 111) respecting the inspection of electricity.—Mr. Fisher.

Bill (No. 112) respecting the British American Insurance Company.—Mr. Parmelee.

Bill (No. 114) to authorize the exchange of certain lands.—Mr. Oliver.

THE POST OFFICE ACT.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 113) to amend the Post Office Act. He said: The first section will correct an error in the printing of the Post Office Act in the revised statutes of Canada by striking out the word 'permit' in the eighth line of section 55 and substituting the word 'prevent.' The second clause is to give us authority to establish a dead letter office at Calgary. The third is to relieve the superintendent of the mail service of part of his work. At present he is in charge of the recovery of missing or delayed postal matter. With the vast development of the west and the extension of the railway service and subsidies all over the country, the superintendent of mail service is rather crippled in his work, and we have transferred that part of his work to the inspectors of post offices, who are already empowered by our Act to look after letters lost. We have thought it better in the public interest to put under the supervision of the post office inspectors the work of recovering lost, missing and delayed letters. The other section is to authorize our inspectors and some particularly accredited officers to travel free of charge, when on duty, on railways subsidized by the department to carry our mail matter. This is the rule followed in Europe and especially in the United States. During the past railway companies have always given our own officers the right to travel free when on duty, but of late we have been notified by one of the companies, which is given a large subsidy, that after the 1st of April next our inspectors and officers on duty will have to pay their railway fares. We think we should follow the same custom as is followed in other countries. That is to say, when an official of the department is travelling on duty to look after the mail on board the cars of railway companies subsidized by the department, the least the company should do is carry our officers free of charge.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

THE LORD'S DAY ACT.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

Is the Lord's Day Act, presently in force, being interpreted so as to prohibit express companies from delivering cut flowers arriving at a terminal point, such as Montreal, on Sunday morning? If so, is it the intention of the government that this interpretation be adhered to?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The interpretation of all statutes is for the courts and the government is not aware whether or not any such interpretation of the provisions of the Lord's Day Act as is suggested in the question has been in any manner pronounced.

MAIL SERVICE, DIGBY COUNTY.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. Were tenders called for mail service between Salmon river and Hectanooga, in the county of Digby?
2. What is the name of each tenderer, and what is the amount of each tender?
3. Upon what date was each tender received by the government?

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2 and 3. As the question of the reorganization of the mail service in this district is still engaging the attention of the department, and as the tenders received in answer to the advertisement have not yet been considered or the contract awarded, the department must consider the particulars asked for as confidential.

WATER POWER, OTONABEE RIVER.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. Has the water power of No. 5 dam, on Otonabee river, been leased? If so, to whom leased, and the date of the lease?
2. How many horse-power does this dam furnish, and what is the price per horse-power under the lease?
3. How much has been paid each year to the government for the power since date of lease?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes, leased to William H. Meldrum, William A. Stratton and Robert Richard Hall, all of Peterborough, on August 1, 1901, and afterwards assigned to the Otonabee Power Company, limited.
2. Surplus water estimated, 625 horse-power at $2 per horse-power, $1,250 per annum.
3. $1,250 was paid each year up to February 1, 1907.

MILITIA PENSION ACT.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). I beg to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Militia Pension Act and to provide that its provisions shall extend to officers who are seconded.

Motion agreed to.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I desire to call up the government resolution with respect to the Iron and Steel Bounty, which has been on the order paper, but has not been set down for consideration at any particular time. I move that the House to-morrow consider in the Committee of Ways and Means the following proposed resolution:

1. That it is expedient to repeal chapter 8 of the Statutes of 1899 and chapter 68 of the Statutes of 1903, from and after January 1, 1907.
2. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the following bounties on the under-mentioned articles manufactured in Canada for consumption therein, viz.:

(a) In respect of pig iron manufactured from ore, on the proportion from Canadian ore produced during the calendar years :

1907.. .. .. $2.10 per ton ;
1908.. .. .. 2.10 per ton ;
1909.. .. .. 1.70 per ton ; and
1910.. .. .. 0.90 per ton.

(b) In respect of pig iron manufactured from ore, on the proportion from foreign ore produced during the calendar years :

1907.. .. .. $1.10 per ton ;
1908.. .. .. 1.10 per ton ;
1909.. .. .. 0.70 per ton ; and
1910.. .. .. 0.40 per ton.

(c) On puddled iron bars manufactured from pig iron made in Canada during the calendar years :

1907.. .. .. $1.65 per ton ;
1908.. .. .. 1.65 per ton ;
1909.. .. .. 1.05 per ton ; and
1910.. .. .. 0.60 per ton.

(d) In respect of rolled, round wire rods not over three-eighths of an inch in diameter, manufactured in Canada from steel produced in Canada from ingredients of which not less than fifty per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada, when sold to wire manufacturers for use in making wire in their own factories in Canada, on such wire rods made after December 31, 1906, six dollars per ton ;

(e) In respect of steel ingots manufactured from ingredients of which not less than fifty per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada, on such ingots made during the calendar years :

1907.. .. .. $1.65 per ton ;
1908.. .. .. 1.65 per ton ;
1909.. .. .. 1.05 per ton ; and
1910.. .. .. 0.60 per ton.

Provided that bounty shall not be paid on steel ingots from which steel blooms and billets for exportation from Canada are manufactured.

3. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may make regulations to carry out the intentions of these resolutions.

4. That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Trade and Commerce shall be charged with the administration of the foregoing provisions.

The subject matter of this resolution having been communicated to His Excellency the Governor General is by him recommended to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). I do not see it on the order paper.

Mr. FIELDING. It accompanied the tariff resolutions and has been on the order paper for several weeks in connection with these resolutions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand the procedure. I am not saying that it is not perfectly regular, but I do not understand it.

Mr. FIELDING. It was brought down by way of notice of motion some weeks ago in connection with the tariff and will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of the day in which the tariff notices appear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, either it is on the order paper or it is not—

Mr. FIELDING. It is not on the order paper to-day, and if my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) takes that point—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not take that point, I am asking for information. I am not raising any objection whatever, but, as a member of the House, I would like to understand what the procedure is.

Mr. SPEAKER. Strictly speaking it was on the order paper.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, why did it disappear ? Was it through some inadvertence ? I am asking this particularly because I did not understand at the time why we omitted the usual formality when we went on with the tariff resolutions in the first place.

Mr. FIELDING. We never took this up in committee at all, we brought it down in connection with the tariff, thus giving notice of it, and it appeared in the Votes and Proceedings at once, but had not been placed on the order paper. If the point is taken that—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not take any point of objection ; I simply desire to understand the procedure, and I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) the question because, no doubt, he has looked into the matter : Why does this differ from other resolutions constituting the tariff resolution ? Or, does it differ in any way ?

Mr. FIELDING. It deals with a different subject, but still a fiscal subject, and may be regarded as relating to the same thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is a different procedure applicable ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a proposal to pay money out of the treasury, and differs in theory from the others. It must be commended to the House with the consent of the Crown.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I raised the point about the whole tariff resolutions, incidentally, that the motion, that they be taken up some other day, should be first adopted. But I was told that it was not necessary. It appears now to be necessary in respect to part of these resolutions. What I would like to understand is why it was not necessary in respect of all ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was not part of that tariff resolution. It was a separate resolution and has not been dealt with. I am not sure but that the fact of it not being on the order paper would justify the objection—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not object.

Mr. FIELDING. Then, if this motion is carried, then the resolution of which I have given notice will be set down in the government orders for consideration in due course.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). May I ask the Minister of Militia concerning the return about the old drill shed property ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). The Deputy Minister of Justice wrote me yesterday that the papers were complete and were on their way to my office. I expect to have them to-morrow.

Mr. JOHN HERRON (Alberta). I would ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if the returns asked for in connection with the Blairmore town site will be brought down soon ? I am very anxious to have them produced.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I think they will be down to-morrow or the next day. The returns are voluminous and have taken some time to prepare. I have urged expedition and, as I say, I expect the returns here to-morrow or the next day.

BONUS TO IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). In view of the notice given to the Minister of the Interior by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) of consideration of the question raised in the statement in the Montreal 'Star' of the 9th instant, which was read yesterday, I ask if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) is prepared to lay before the House the new contract entered into by his department on the subject of bonus to be paid to immigrants, or to state to the House the terms of that contract the names of the parties with whom it has been entered into, and the date when it comes into effect ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). There has been no contract entered into. An order in council has been passed which will be laid on the table to-morrow if my hon. friend wishes.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before the debate is taken up ?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON LIFE INSURANCE—EXHIBITS.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Has the Minister of Finance laid on the table the exhibits filed before the Royal Commission on Life Insurance ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Directions were given to have these exhibits placed in the custody of the House, and the Clerk of the House informs me that they have been received.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they not to be laid upon the table of the House as the evidence was ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is.

Mr. FIELDING. The evidence is on the table, and the exhibits are referred to in the evidence. If these things have actually to be laid on the table before us, we shall have to have some able bodied persons to bring them in.

Mr. FOSTER. They are voluminous, are they ?

Mr. FIELDING. Well, yes.

EXPORTATION OF ELECTRIC POWER.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 60) to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases.—Mr. Aylesworth.

On section 4,

4. Subject to any regulations of the Governor in Council in that behalf, the minister may grant licenses, subject to such conditions as he thinks proper, for the exportation of defined quantities of power or fluid where a right to export exists by lawful authority; and such license shall be revocable upon such notice to the licensee as the minister deems reasonable in each case.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). When this clause was under consideration in the committee some six weeks ago, the question was raised—perhaps, as much by the Minister of Customs who is referred to in section 2 of the Bill as by any other member of the House—as to the propriety of leaving the issuing and revocation of licenses in the decision of any single minister as provided in the section we are now considering. Various suggestions were made as to the possibility of referring to the Railway Commission or some other board as a tribunal for the administration of the Act. After consideration, the objection to devolving so important duties upon any single minister seemed one that could properly be remedied, and in the absence of any better tribunal to carry out the provisions of the Act, I propose that the words 'Governor in Council' should be substituted for the words 'the minister' in the two places in this section where they occur.

Mr. HAGGART. Have the provincial authorities any power of preventing exportation by reason of ownership of the soil over which this gas or electric power may pass? For instance, at Niagara there is permission given for the exportation of gas and electric power of which a part runs through what is called the Chain reserve, which is absolutely under control of the provincial authorities. I have heard that the provincial authorities intend to assert their jurisdiction by preventing the exportation only on such terms as they please.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have not heard any hint of the rumour the hon. gentleman refers to, and cannot say anything as to possible intentions in the province of Ontario or any other province where conditions similar to those which exist at Niagara in regard to the Chain reserve, may obtain. I hesitate to express any opinion—certainly any opinion off-hand—upon the important question which the hon. gentleman has raised. So far, however, as it would be proper for me to say anything at all of the manner in which the question strikes me, I would suppose that any owner of land would have control over his land to the extent of preventing a trespass upon it by its being dug up and pipes laid in his soil unless such pipe were laid with his concurrence.

Section 4 as amended agreed to.

On section 5,—supply of power and fluid in Canada—revocation of license.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I propose to substitute the words 'Governor in Council' for the word 'minister' in the second subsection.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before that section is carried, I wish to submit to the consideration of the Minister of Justice an amendment which I think is necessary. I move to insert after the words 'Governor in Council' in the sixth line of the first subsection, the words :

In which it shall always be provided:

That no licenses shall be issued under this Act unless the licensee shall employ and actually use in Canada during the whole of the term of the license a quantity of power or fluid (not theretofore employed or used) equal to the quantity licensed for export ; also that no further licenses whatever shall be issued when there shall be a less surplus than 25,000 horse-power immediately available.

When this Bill was before the committee at an earlier stage we discussed at considerable length the necessity of protecting Canada as against the United States in the use of this power. Of course our minds naturally incline to the conditions at Niagara Falls, but this amendment applies to the whole of Canada. The principle of the amendment is that this power shall not be exported, and therefore that Canada shall not lose the benefit of having a monopoly as it were, or partial monopoly of the power. I do not know how we could any better protect Canada in regard to this matter than by creating such a condition of affairs as that the manufacturers would be obliged to build on the Canadian side of the line, or at least by holding out greater inducements to them to build on the Canadian side. It is not to be forgotten that arrangements are being made by an international waterways commission consisting of three gentlemen appointed by the Canadian government and an equal number appointed by the United States government, one of the things recommended by that commission being that the power to be produced at Niagara Falls and other places shall be limited in quantity. That is a matter that makes it all the more necessary that some measure should be taken by which the use of that power shall be secured for Canada, and, the enterprises be built up in Canada, so far as we can do so by legislation. Unless we have some provision of this kind, we shall deprive ourselves of some of the advantages to which we are rightfully entitled. It has been said that we must not go so far as to prohibit any export of power at all. I thought that under the circumstances we could reasonably prohibit the export of power, especially in that part of the country. But I have yielded to certain suggestions made by other gentlemen that, while protecting Canada, we ought at the same time to allow people who are producing this power to sell a certain amount of it for export. Section 5 provides that regulations, rules and conditions shall be prescribed by the Governor in Council, and therefore I add in my amendment that such regulations and rules shall always provide that the licensee shall employ and actually use in Canada, during the whole term of the license, a quantity of power or fluid not theretofore employed or used, equal to the quantity licensed to be exported. The effect of that would be that if a certain quantity of fluid was permitted to be exported, an equal quantity would have to be used in the development of Canadian industries, that while we would permit a certain amount to go out of the country, we would do it on condition that the person exporting it should see, either by himself or by the licensee, that there was such development going on in Canada as goes on in the United States by virtue of the export allowed by the license. My object is that we shall have Canada developed by this power by as much as we allow development on the other side of the line to take place by the use of this power. I am not limiting it to any particular place or province. If, for instance, in New Brunswick it was desired to export electric power, this condition would not require that at that particular place there should be an equal quantity developed in Canada, but that at some other place in Canada there should be an equal quantity developed. If in any locality there was an export of electrical energy, the regulation would be complied with if the licensee developed in some other part of Canada an equal quantity to that for which we might have obtained the license authorizing him to export. I think that the amendment will commend itself to the minister and to the House. It seems to me that some such amendment is necessary or else we are going to permit the whole of the power that we can produce to be exported because we are evidently going to limit ourselves in production by some international arrangement of some kind. We will some day have no power in Canada to develop and we will be sorry when that day comes. I read in the Toronto papers of February 21, a despatch from Niagara Falls, New York, referring to this subject. It is as follows:

Capt. Charles W. Kutz, representing the War Department, held a hearing here to-day in regard to the permits to be issued for the transmission of Canadian power into the United States at this point.

Secretary Taft had directed the chief of engineers and Capt. Kutz to prepare the permits after consultation with counsel for the respective companies. The hearing was an informal discussion of the wording of the permits, and it was decided that the companies shall submit recommendations. As the law provides that only 160,000 horse-power shall be imported, it is likely the government will arrange to measure the power at this border, the method to be determined upon later.

The Electrical Development Company was represented by H. H. McRea, of Toronto; Chief Engineer Walter Pearson, Niagara Falls; Electrical Transmission Company by Frank A. Dudley; Ontario Power Company by Franklin D. Locke, Buffalo; V. G. Converse, this city, and O. S. Lyford, junior, New York. A. Monroe Grier, E. C. Egbert, P. P. Barton, A. H. Vancleve, F. L. Lovelace, H. W. Buck, and L. E. Implay, represented the Canadian Niagara Power Company.

I think this shows that it is necessary that we ought to have the amendment which I have suggested or a similar one for the preservation of our Canadian water-powers. We see that while this Bill has been before this House and that since it was last discussed by the committee of this House, the Americans, alert as they always are to their own interests, are apparently counting on having this power imported into their own country—that is exported from Canada—at the earliest possible moment, and are actually making arrangements for the admission of that power into their own country. Assuming that the Bill is going to be passed they can at once take advantage of our legislation and get their contracts made without fear apparently that we will wake up very soon and insist on doing something to limit the exportation.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) has explained and as the language of the amendment plainly requires, is to limit the quantity which any producer of electricity in Canada can export to an amount equal to that which he is using in some work or other in this country. It seems to me, with all deference to the views which the hon. gentleman has expressed, that it would be a very extraordinary policy for this parliament to adopt. We have already at Niagara, to take for the purpose of illustration, the conditions to which the hon. gentleman himself has referred, three companies establishing their works at a cost of many hundreds of thousands of dollars and now ready to dispose of electrical energy which they are in a position to generate. The amount of electrical energy which these three companies among them are entitled to produce if they had a market for it, or will be in a position to produce within a measurable distance of time, is over 400,000 horse-power and there certainly is not at the present time available in Canada a market for—I said on a previous occasion—not more than one-tenth of that amount. That view was challenged by some hon. gentlemen. Let us say double that. There is certainly not presently required in Canada more than one-fifth of 400,000 horse-power. What then is to be done with the remaining four-fifths of the 400,000 horse-power? There is no market for it, no room at present for the consumption of it in Canada and if the views which the hon. gentleman is advocating were to prevail that amount of actual wealth which these companies have by their outlay produced would simply have to go to waste. Is there any reason for that? Why should that be? I pointed out when this measure was under consideration in committee some weeks ago what was apparent to every one and that is that electrical energy produced from flowing water is not like some natural supply of coal, it may be, or other mineral, which, even though it may seem to be practically inexhaustible, must necessarily be limited in extent. The electrical energy which is developed from flowing or falling water, unless used when produced, can never be used; unless used to-day or to-morrow it is gone for ever. The amount which remains or the amount which may be produced in future is not lessened by the disposition and immediate consumption of the amount which may be produced to-day, and literally when we have approximately 400,000 horse-power of electrical energy produced at Niagara and we are not using 100,000 horse-power in Canada the remaining 300,000 horse-power is lost to the producers and to the world unless it is exported to the market which is waiting for it on the other side of the line. No doubt the principal market which the men who formed these companies had in view when they formed them was the United States of America. There was within easy reach of their headquarters the larger cities of western New York. There was an available market there to an extent certainly larger than then seemed likely to exist in Canada. Now, the purpose, the object of this legislation, as has been explained from the beginning is simply that the government of this country may control this natural wealth of the country and may secure by controlling the export of electrical energy and by the issue of licenses for the disposition of it, the retention for Canadians and within Canada of as much as we need. More we do not want. The amount we need will necessarily vary from time to time as conditions change. We hope it will be a continually increasing quantity. This clause 5 as it is presented to the committee provides for exactly that condition of things. It provides that there shall always be kept by the licensee for distribution to customers for use in Canada power to an extent defined by the license, in other words power equal to the amount which is needed here. As to the remainder, surely it is not a policy which will be advocated or supported by this committee that it should be dead and valueless stock, that it should be waste on the hands of the men whose capital had produced it. Reference was made by hon. gentlemen to what is spoken of as the alert action of enterprising citizens of the United States induced or brought about by the introduction of this measure and the fact that it was pending before the House. But hon. gentlemen of the committee will not forget that the fixing of the amount of 160,000 horse-power as that which might be exported into the United States was a cutting down of the amount, was something which the companies producing the power here resisted very strenuously. That was a very great hardship upon them. The Congress of the United States, not since this measure was introduced but a year ago, by an Act which was then passed, took to itself the power to control the importation of electrical energy into their country and the power to say that not more than a certain amount 160,000 horse-power, as they chose to fix, should be received into the country and used by consumers there from this side of the line. That, no doubt is their own affair. If they see fit to limit the importation those who have the commodity to export from this country and to import into the United States will have to dispose of their wares in accordance with the laws of the country to which they take those wares, but so far as this country is concerned, if we are able to secure, as we think we are and as we think the provisions of this Bill will secure, to the people of this country all the electrical energy they want, all they have immediate use for, to what end is it that we should say the remainder must be wasted beyond an amount equal to that which is consumed in Canada? I can see no necessity for the amendment proposed and indeed it would seem to me to be destructive of the interests of the men who have entered into this enterprise and who now, after the expenditure of a very large amount of money, find themselves about beginning to reap a reward for their efforts.

Mr. LANCASTER. I wish to point out that what the minister says about there being no market in Canada for one-fifth of the present production is no reason why we should not develop a market for it. If there is no power to be sold in Canada of course there will be no market because there is nothing to be bought. If the minister wants to preserve for Canada the possibility of building up its industries the best way would be to keep in Canada a certain amount of power. If all the surplus production over the present consumption is permitted to be exported to-day, we will have nothing left to-morrow to meet the increased Canadian demand.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. We can lessen the amount to be exported to-morrow or next week.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not know how that can be done with any fairness to the licensee. A man making a bargain with this government and taking a license for a certain amount of power would have to be assured that he would get that amount for at least a certain number of years. To interfere with his license in that way would be the clearest case of confiscation. Is it not better to say in the beginning that he must provide for building up Canada by supplying power for consumption in this country to the same extent as he provides it for exportation? The minister says that the power that is developed to-day does not lessen the amount that is going to be developed to-morrow, but if such an arrangement as is recommended by the Waterways Commission is to take effect, he is absolutely wrong in that because they provide for an agreement between the two countries that the amount of water to be withdrawn from the river shall be limited to a certain amount, that neither country shall produce more than a certain horse-power. Therefore, every license to export reduces the amount left for consumption in Canada because you have a fixed and determined quantity that you cannot exceed owing to this international arrangement and therefore there will be no chance for the building up of this industry in Canada. What happened at the Sault. When Mr. Clergue had more power than he knew what to do with he developed industries to use the power. What will happen in Canada if you cannot export this power, if you limit the export of it, if you require that it shall be exported only in equal proportion to the amount required by people here? You are going to force people to come to Canada to build up industries in this country because they cannot get power anywhere else. Is that wrong? Is there anything unjust to anybody who has a license or a charter or money invested in developing power in Canada to say to him: You may have these privileges, you are working under Canadian authority and it ought to be well understood that you are always going to work for the benefit of Canada, under a Canadian charter, for the reasonable development of Canada, and not having any special clause in your charter that you are to be allowed to export on particular terms, surely it is not unreasonable to say that in so far as it is necessary to protect Canada as a country, we insist that you shall assist us and that while we will permit you to export a certain amount you must furnish an equal amount for the development and industrial progress of Canada. So I say I cannot agree with the minister that by this amendment we would be creating any waste. It would be a waste temporarily until it is used by some one coming here and establishing industries. But this would not be a permanent waste. People must go where the power is and if you preserve the power for use in Canada then the waste—if you use the word 'waste' which I think is a harsh and exaggerated word—would be only temporary. But if this power can be exported the result will be the development of industries on the other side of the line by virtue of their being able to import the power from this country, as they could then carry on the industry as easily there as here. Instead of assisting in the upbuilding of the United States when they have run out of power of their own development we should preserve our electric energy for the building up of industries in this country.

Mr. CARVELL. While this Bill may be all right in the case of Niagara Falls it would work great hardships in other parts of Canada, especially in connection with two water-powers in New Brunswick, to which I referred on a former occasion when this matter was before the House. I can agree with my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) that it would be a very excellent thing if we could force Americans or any other capital to come to Canada and start industries, but I fear the hon. gentleman is prone to make his argument entirely from the conditions existing at Niagara and he is failing to recognize the condition in other parts of the country. At the present time there is a work under construction at Aroostook Falls, New Brunswick, just across the boundary, not more than half a mile from the State of Maine. This work will cost $300,000 or $400,000, and they will develop about 3,000 horse-power. The money has been provided very largely by selling stock to people in New Brunswick and Maine, although they have also bonded their property, and if you attempt to provide that they must employ as much of this power in Canada as they would employ in the United States, you would absolutely close down the industry. There is no question about it. There is very little being sold for power purposes, it is practically all to be sold for lighting purposes in Maine. On the Canadian side, at that particular part of Victoria county, there is a very narrow strip cultivated, perhaps five or six miles, but on the American side there is a highly developed country, there are three towns with a population of 3,000 or 4,000 within a few miles, and the company can sell all this power for lighting in the State of Maine; but if you say that they must sell an equal amount of power in New Brunswick they simply cannot do it and the result will be that the people who put their money in this industry will lose it and the industry will be closed down. The second portion of the amendment provides that there must always be kept available 25,000 horse-power. In such a case, as I have described, where there is only 3,000 horse-power being developed, it would be absolutely impossible to retain 25,000 horse-power.

Another water-power is being developed at Grand Falls further up the same river. There they will develop from 50,000 to 75,000 horse-power. If the electrification of railroads becomes properly developed in the next five or ten years very probably the greater proportion of this power will be used in Canadian territory, but under present conditions, if they develop this power, it is certain that a large amount will have to be exported to the United States; and if they were not allowed to export to the United States they could not develop that water-power. Therefore so far as the Aroostook Falls proposition is concerned, it is certain that if this amendment is allowed to pass, the people who put their money into this will lose it and the business will close down. As far as the other is concerned I have very grave doubts if the Grand Falls Company would be able in the next ten or fifteen years to develop that very valuable water-power if these conditions were included in this Bill, and it seems to me that while this provision may be properly applied to the conditions at Niagara Falls, it would be unwise to incorporate this in the Bill and as far as it concerns the two projects I have mentioned, it would be ruinous to them.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. With regard to the amendment of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) I think it would be very wise to limit the amount of power that could be exported. Speaking on this subject some weeks ago I advocated that a reserve of power should be at all times kept on hand so that if a new industry came to any town it could immediately get some power for industrial purposes. If all the power is exported it is evident there will be no surplus at home. The minister in discussing this I think has somewhat lost sight of the fact that there is a field that is not yet covered. The minister will remember that as yet portions of Ontario within a distance from Niagara Falls to which power could be transmitted, have not yet been reached. Hamilton and Toronto are the only important distant points, as far as I know, that are getting power from Niagara, but the district between Hamilton and London which is appealing for power including St. Thomas on the south and Berlin and Stratford on the north, will require a very large amount of power. The minister will see that if he allows the surplus at the present moment to be exported it will have several effects. One will be that it will retard the running of transmission lines into districts not already served. What is the use of going into Ontario to a remote distance from the Falls if these companies can get a market immediately across the river in the United States? The further argument will present itself that it will retard the construction of transmission lines. That is a very important feature. You cannot sell the power until you get it to the market. It must be evident that if the present market will only use 60,000 to 80,000 horse-power, other places are not yet supplied, as the companies cannot get the power to the places where it is required. Further I understand they have not yet 400,000 horse-power developed. They may have but I question it. The amendment moved by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) provides that a reserve amount shall be at all times held to the extent of 25,000 horse-power for the whole country. Whether that is a proper figure or not is a matter for reflection, but a reserve should certainly be held. My hon. friend from New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) complained that my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) discussed this purely from a Niagara standpoint. I think the minister also discussed it from a Niagara standpoint to a very large degree as these companies of which he spoke as having invested this large capital are all Niagara companies. The companies have these franchises from the country, they got them from the provinces in the first place but since then they have been licensed by the Dominion parliament, and this Bill is to allow them to transmit to that foreign market the surplus power. If the surplus power is exported, it will have the effect first of retarding the construction of transmission lines and next it will have a tendency to keep up the price of electric power at home. I think the minister cannot deny that. That will very seriously interfere with the amount of power required. The moment you get power down to a certain figure where steam or gas cannot compete, you will have an immense market for it as the steam and gas plants will be discarded and industries will turn to electric power. That will immediately open an immense market. But if you allow the surplus to be exported it will have the effect of keeping the price up at home. Now the construction will be very largely regulated by the price at which power can be transmitted to the points at which it is required.

Therefore, I submit that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), though it may not in all respects cover the case, is really one we should adopt from the point of view of a national policy. I think the minister would do well to adopt at least some of the features contained in this draft resolution because they will provide a very wise check and a very restraining influence on the prices these power companies will be in a position to charge. These companies will be obliged to keep power for the immediate use of new industries that may come into the province and are seeking for more power. Further, as proposed by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), I understand that if a unit of say five or ten thousand horse-power is exported to the United States, the same quantity must be used in Canada. That is not confined to Niagara, but may apply to the district of which the hon. member from New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) has spoken or the Rainy River district, or any other district where power is being developed in large quantities and in excess of what is required on the spot. Give cheaper power and furnish the necessary facilities and industries will naturally gather around as bees do around honey. The way to encourage industry is to furnish cheap power. Those localities which are able to furnish cheap power to industrial concerns are the ones which will be selected by these concerns looking for suitable locations. That will be the case in the Niagara peninsula provided the minister does not allow this power to be exported to the other side, and thus keep for our own use one of the finest industrial assets we have. I hope the hon. minister will give the proposed amendment his favourable consideration.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the amendment will not facilitate the attainment of the object which the hon. gentleman desires. I think it would not improve the Bill or make it any more workable than it now is. In some cases it would impose a hardship which would not be in the public interest. I have in mind one instance in a particular section of the country, and a similar instance might occur in many another section. I refer to the mining company on Isle Roy, which is an island in Lake Superior on the American side of the boundary, but very close to the north shore of Lake Superior. That company is looking to the mainland where the streams are for power, not only to operate the mine, but to deal with the ore. The ore is largely copper, and I am informed that electric smelting of that particular ore has proved very successful. But under the amendment of my hon. friend that company would be shut out because none of the power can be used just now on the north shore, as there is no industry or settlement there requiring it. Doubtless in the future conditions will arise under which some of the power might be used on our side of the line, but surely no good purpose can be served by preventing these gentlemen from coming into that section of the country and investing their money in the developing of power and the employment of the necessary labour to maintain and operate that power on our side. My hon. friend mentioned the Soo, but I think he was mistaken when he said that Mr. Clergue established his works there because of the water-power. That is not the case. No doubt there is a very excellent water-power there and that was one of the reasons why Mr. Clergue selected the Soo as a field for his operations. But it was not because he could not have got water-power on the American side. As a matter of fact, there are about the same opportunities for developing water-power on that side. The Soo was selected partly on account of its water-power, but mainly on account of its location and the certainty that some materials and natural resources could be centred at that point. The same remark would apply to many points where water-power might be procured. I do not think it is a sound argument to say that if you shut off the exportation of power you are thereby going to draw industries into this country, which otherwise might use power on the other side of the line—will be a question of cost. That might be the case in some instances, but very few. The question of location is a question of market and cheapness of production, and it will be admitted that the American user of Canadian power cannot get it as cheap as the Canadian user. Speaking generally, it will cost him more to have it transmitted to his particular locality.

Mr. BOYCE. Is it cheap power at the Soo?

Mr. CONMEE. I was not discussing the question of the cheapness of power at the Soo, but I was saying that generally speaking—take the Niagara peninsula if you choose—the American consumer of power exported from Canada will have to pay more than the Canadian consumer of that same power within a limited distance. The American consumer must take it subject to the condition that it may be taken from him at any time if there should be a demand for it in Canada. Subsection 2 of section 5 provides that the license may be revoked at any time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the American consumer pay more for it because it may be taken from him at any time?

Mr. CONMEE.

Mr. CONMEE. No, but he has to take the license with that alternative staring him in the face. He is handicapped more than that. He has to consider whether the government of Canada might not at some time put an export duty on it. Under subsection 3 of section 10 the government have power to do that, and that they would naturally do if there was a demand for power in Canada and a large quantity was being exported. This section seems to contemplate that action because it says:

> The Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in like manner, exempt from the payment of such duties such persons as comply with the direction of the minister.

If the minister directs that they shall use a certain quantity in Canada, and they do not do that, the minister may come down with an export duty which will be very onerous. I think that that is a good protection and the American purchaser has to take that into account. If he takes the power at all, he takes it because he wants it and is willing to pay for it under those conditions, and those conditions will not affect the Canadian consumer, as there is no danger of our taxing electrical power used in Canada for industrial purposes. If a company build transmission lines on the American side, they take greater risks than in building on our side; the interest of the company will be to extend all they can in Canada. It is therefore reasonable to assume that within the same radius or anything like it, the Canadian consumer will obtain his power under better conditions, if not at a less price—certainly at a less price, than the American consumer. The question is, does the Bill give sufficient protection to the Canadian interests. In the first place it provides that the Canadian market must be supplied.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Where do you find that?

Mr. CONMEE. I think it is in section 5 and in the general powers given by the Bill. Surely the minister will not give a license which will prejudiciously affect the Canadian market. You cannot make a law that will work automatically. There must be somebody to administer it. And I cannot conceive of any minister giving a license to export power to a foreign country if there is a demand for it in our own country. Then, again, it seems to me, the safeguards to which I have already referred afford ample protection to the Canadian people and assurance that their interests will be conserved. That applies more particularly to the water-powers adjacent to the international boundary—whether in New Brunswick or in Ontario. And the hon. member's motion would go so far as to shut out entirely the development of certain water-powers because there is no market for the use of any of the power just now on our side, as has been pointed out by the hon. member from New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell). It would have this affect in my own district, and I apprehend it would do the same in other sections of Canada. So far as I can understand the provisions of the Bill, it seems to me that the interests of the country are sufficiently provided for, and that it would be better to leave the Bill to its operation than to adopt the amendment which has been proposed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the hon. member for Rainy River and Thunder Bay (Mr. Conmee) has very little confidence in the ability of the Minister of Justice to advocate the measure which he has before the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) feels called upon to get up and assist the minister, and, to that end, to occupy half an hour of the precious time of this House.

Mr. BRODER. I think this Bill ought to be very carefully considered. I agree that if you allow the export of power from the Canadian side and thereby build up industries in the United States, at such places at Detroit and Buffalo, after those industries have been built up depending upon the permanency of this power, you cannot reasonably take it away from them. I think that is one great difficulty in the way of dealing with this matter in the future. You would have to face the possibility of reprisals on the part of the Americans, to the injury of those in Canada who are using power from the United States. Moreover, it seems to me that this proposition of the minister will lead to so great development that, unless export is allowed to the United States, power may become a drug in the market on our side. But, if development goes on and export to the United States is generally allowed, it would mean that Canadian enterprises would get little or no benefit from these power developments. For these reasons, it seems to me, steps should be taken to obtain reciprocal action on the part of the American people. While it is true that at Niagara there is power on the Canadian side which the Americans want to use, it is also true that further east there are water-powers in the State of New York which could only have an assurance of revenue if they were free to export power to consumers on the Canadian side. Take, for instance, the power at Massena, and then at Waddington, where probably 30,000 horse-power could be developed. In view of these circumstances I think the government should ascertain whether it is not possible to deal with the Americans on a reciprocal basis.

Mr. BRISTOL. The section under debate raises very serious business considerations. While there is undoubtedly fairness in the argument of the minister that, if this water-power is to be used, it must be used now, there are other considerations which, I am sure, the minister is anxious to bear in mind. In the first place, if there is a surplus of power, the effect must be to cheapen power to the Canadian consumer. The minister and the government must be anxious to develop industries with the Niagara Falls power and other water-powers as a basis. I do not like the proposal made to restrict the export to the surplus. If it were to a certain proportion of the surplus —say three quarters for instance—a supply for the requirements in Canada would be better assured and the Bill would be fairer in the interest of the public. I do not want to lay down a hard and fast rule as the amendment does concerning the dividing of the amount, but there should be a reasonable surplus retained for use in Canada. Let us see, as a matter of history, what has happened at Niagara Falls. The original power company, the Rankin Company, was established at a time when electricity was little used for power. The Rankin Company was the chief promoter of industries which eventually used the surplus power in the United States and made it necessary to develop power on the Canadian side. They built the Gorge Railway; they bought the railway on the Canadian side which they supplied with power; they established innumerable industries on the American side. If the minister reserves a substantial surplus in the hands of the Canadian producer he is doing no justice to the producer of power at the present time, and, on the other hand he is furnishing an incentive to the establishing of industries on the Canadian side to use power. As to this question of surplus, I would point out that we have no information before us as to how the decision concerning surplus is to be arrived at. Is there to be a commission to inquire into the needs on the Canadian side? Have we information as to the sources of power throughout the country and what they will produce, so that the minister can say what will be a surplus in the case of each power relatively to all the producers and to the demands of the vicinity? And the licensee may have an arrangement to supply consumers in the United States, as some of the companies now have. The whole power will be surplus, because they do not care whether they sell to Canada or not, for they sell in the United States. As it says in the section:

> Any such license may provide that the quantity of power or fluid to be exported shall be limited to the surplus, after the license has supplied for distribution to customers for use in Canada power or fluid to the extent defined by such license.

The licensee may have no Canadian customers. There is nothing to compel him, and no incentive to induce him, to have Canadian customers. He might come and say, I have no Canadian customer, why should I not sell the whole of my surplus in the States ? I do not think that is the intention of the minister. The clause requires most careful consideration, and before we determine a matter of this kind we should have more information on this question of surplus. What happens in the United States ? For some reason that I have not been able to ascertain, they have apparently limited the horse-power to be exported from Canada into the United States to 160,000. Now if we had a guarantee that they would keep it at that point, I do not think we would need to trouble ourselves much about it ; because if we have 400,000 horse-power, and if the minister is correct in saying that 80,000 is all we need and if the United States alone will take 160,000, certainly we have no occasion to bother ourselves very much. But these conditions may change at any moment, therefore it is important for us to consider these two facts ; that if there is a certain amount of surplus over and above the needs of the community in Canada, then there is an inducement to great concerns to establish industries for the use of this surplus power as there was at the Soo ; and in the next place, if there is a substantial surplus retained in Canada it is going to decrease the price of power to the Canadian consumer.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. One of the main objects of this Bill is to protect the Canadian consumer of electric power, but there is a question apparently of the best method of doing that. I think this point has been lost sight of, that at the present time the users of power are large concerns who can go to these electric companies and ask for a large quantity of power with some expectation of getting it. But I wish to point out that there is an enormous field for electric power in Canada that is as yet untouched. The small users of power have not yet been able to get it. A man who wants to buy a horse-power cannot go to these large companies and demand it, and if thousands and thousands of men who want four or five horse-power cannot go to the companies and demand it. then these companies have a surplus which, under this Bill, they are at liberty to export. But if the amendment of the member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) is inserted in the Bill, it would be the business and interest of these large corporations to find a market in Canada for as much of their power as they possibly can. because they can export an equal quantity under these terms to the United States. If some inducement of bringing money into their pockets is not held out compelling them to take this course, it will be to their interest to export into the United States in large quantities. and there will never be any surplus of any amount in Canada simply because the small consumer cannot go and ask for it. Now I imagine that within 200 miles of Niagara Falls, the day is not far distant when almost every man, every farmer, will be able to use this electric power in his farming operations. The great development that has occurred within the last 25 years in the use of electric power leads us to expect that within the next twenty-five years this power will be very generally used. That being the case, there will be a demand for at least half the power that can be generated at Niagara Falls under the present charters. Unless some strong company has an inducement to devise ways and means of offering it to small consumers, these latter will never be in a position to get it. This proposal of the member for Lincoln and Niagara will, in my judgment, tend greatly to bring that condition about whereby these small users will be able to have offered to them this power. The Hydro Electric Power Commission has estimated that 5 horse-power can be delivered at about $40 per horse-power. Every farmer knows that it costs him at least $100 a year for one horse-power, and if he can have this electric power delivered to him at a cost of not exceeding $40 per horse-power, he will effect an enormous saving, and this will apply to tens of thousands of farmers who are in easy reach of this power. The same remark will apply to Grand Falls, N.B. It has been said that this amendment will shut out the development of that power. But I believe the province of New Brunswick can easily use all the power within its boundaries, at any rate all the power that can be developed at Grand Falls can easily be used within a hundred miles of that point ; and if this amendment were carried, it would be the business of some company that desired to develop that power, to find means of offering it to those small consumers who are only waiting for an opportunity of getting it at a reasonable cost. For every horse-power that was used in New Brunswick they could sell one horse-power to the United States. There ought to be some provision in this Bill that will permanently protect the small users of power in Canada. If this privilege were once offered and used by great undertakings on the other side of the line, and our government were at any time to cancel the license, it might have the effect of injuring industries, perhaps of wiping out a town or village that had been in the enjoyment of this cheap power for a long time. If the provision of the Bill which enables the government to cancel this right at short notice, were put in operation, it would be a great hardship to these people who had perhaps built up an enterprise at large expense, but who would not have done so if they had supposed it might be cancelled at any time. The United States government would very likely take exception to our cancelling such a contract as that, and it would get us into difficulty. It seems to me therefore we ought to be very careful in making any provision for exporting this power that will tie our hands in Canada in the future. This power is of such estimable value, especially to the province of Ontario where coal is expensive, and where this power can be obtained cheaply, that we must be very careful how we bind ourselves in the future with regard to it.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps I was not in the House when an explanation was made of clause 4 which says :

Subject to any regulations of the Governor in Council in that behalf, the minister may grant licenses subject to such conditions as he thinks proper for the exportation of defined quantities of power or fluid where a right to export exists by lawful authority.

Then the Bill is confined altogether to the granting of licenses to parties who have power to export by lawful authority. What does the minister mean by that ? Does he mean that provincial legislatures may legislate upon the matter before he can issue a license ? In that case you will need to explain what quantities they may export.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The phrase to which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has called attention is taken from the suggestion of Hon. Mr. Whitney, Premier of Ontario who, referring to section 4, says :

It is suggested that this should be amended by inserting after the word 'fluid' in the fourth line the following words 'where such power of exportation exists by lawful authority.' Unless this is done it might be claimed that the language used overrides the limitations imposed on some companies under provincial statutes and agreements.

It was in that view that he made the suggestion and his suggestion was at once adopted.

Mr. HAGGART. Does it not limit your whole Bill to that ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It would have its operation no doubt upon the whole Bill, but it simply provides that where there is the right to export existing the licenses may be granted. If there is no right to export the license would be useless.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I would be in favour of reserving a very considerable surplus of power over and above our possible present and future requirements. Only a few years ago if any one had told us that Niagara power could have been transmitted for instance, to Toronto, we would have laughed at the idea. The development of electricity, it is said, is only even now in its infancy and it would be very interesting to know, if electricity can be transmitted to points in the state of New York within a radius of 100 miles of Niagara Falls, whether we will not require in the near future nearly as much electricity for similar purposes on the Canadian side of Niagara Falls. If this country is going to grow and develop in the way in which we hope it will, the western peninsula of Ontario, as far east as Toronto at any rate, and north to some extent, will be a great manufacturing centre for the supply of products which will go all over Canada and particularly to our Northwest. We will become as great a manufacturing country in that locality as is the state of New York. Besides that, if it is possible to produce electricity as cheaply as we have been told it can be produced, we cannot at present say to what uses it may be put. The development of electrical railways in that part of the province of Ontario, the possible use of electrical power to some extent on railways which now use steam power, and all those things must result in a largely increased demand for electrical energy. I agree with the views which have been stated here this afternoon in regard to the matter of granting licenses or of prohibiting the export of electricity by an export duty. If you grant licenses and an industry grows up on the other side of the line which is dependent upon this power it will be very difficult afterwards to cut out that industry by preventing the power from going into the United States for the purpose of supplying that particular industry either by putting on an export duty or by refusing a license. My view is that it will become an international affair. It seems to me that whatever licenses we grant we cannot very well revoke, and if we permit electricity to be taken out of the country by the United States we cannot very well stop the export in the future. There is a very large amount of electricity to be developed and I should think we ought to be very careful in guarding our interests on the Canadian side of the line and in seeing that a very considerable surplus over our possible present and future requirements is retained on the Canadian side, and I would therefore be in favour of the resolution of my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) or the government expect to hear anything from the provincial government in regard to the Bill. An intimation came to me indirectly which may be unfounded, but it was to the effect that this government would await some further communication from them.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. On the last occasion that this Bill was in committee the suggestion was made that these two clauses particularly had better be referred to the consideration of the government of the province of Ontario as that province was especially interested. That was done. An answer was received from the First Minister expressing his views in regard to these sections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Since the Bill was last under consideration ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes. Then, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the various points which have been suggested in regard to the clause under consideration, let me say a word.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. minister, if he is going to deal at large with the objections to this Bill, kindly permit me to say one or two words and then he may be in a better position to deal with them all. I think it is rather apparent that whether or not the amendment of my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) is accepted there should be some amendment to section 5. I recognize the difficulties of the position. It is not an easy matter to deal with. Whoever would undertake to place this subject in a satisfactory condition in so far as export is concerned, would find himself confronted with difficuties of no ordinary character. But the objection to clause 5 is of a twofold character.

In the first place clause 5 does not lay down any principle by which the Governor in Council shall be guided in coming to a conclusion. It simply declares that :

> Any such license may provide that the quantity of power or fluid to be exported shall be limited to the surplus, after the licensee has supplied for distribution to customers for use in Canada power or fluid to the extent defined by such license.

That leaves it absolutely open to the Governor in Council to follow any principle that may seem good to the Governor in Council, and there is no guide, it seems to me, to be found in the provisions of clause 5 which would enable us at the present time to conclude by what rule or by what standard the Governor in Council will control its action in the issue of licenses and in framing the restrictions and provisions which are to be contained in such license.

The other objection is that the Governor in Council is about the worst body that could be found for the purpose of dealing with such a matter. I say that for two reasons ; in the first place, because the Governor in Council is not composed of persons having any special knowledge of the conditions which should control the export. It is composed of men who are very much taken up and occupied with their political as distinguished from their administrative duties. For that reason one would not anticipate that any administration—I am not speaking especially of the present administration—would be a very competent or capable body to deal with a question of this kind. The answer may be that they would be governed by the report of some officer, but when we are confronted by that answer, then, there is another consideration.

That is the consideration that the Governor General in Council under our system is and necessarily must be a partisan body. It represents presumably a majority of the people of this country and it certainly must always represent a majority of the members of parliament. It is a partisan body, it acts as a partisan body and you will have entrusted to the Governor General in Council under the provision of section 5, very delicate questions indeed, questions which concern the material advantage of their political friends, questions which concern the material advantage of their political opponents ; and it does not seem to me that it is wise to entrust so delicate a power as this must necessarily be to a body of that kind. We are rapidly approaching a condition in which the most important legislative powers in this country are being entrusted to the Governor General in Council. We have a proposal from the government, which I refer to only by way of illustration, that they shall be at liberty to put in force by order in council an intermediate tariff which would create very great confusion in the business interests of this country. We have another proposal that the Governor General in Council shall have the power to make the British preferential tariff apply only to goods entering by Canadian ports, another very important power which could not fail to have somewhat important effects upon certain business interests in the country. And now we have this proposal that a control which must necessarily be exercised under unusual and delicate conditions is also to be entrusted to the Governor General in Council. I would think that some alternative could be found for that—and I am assuming in what I now say that the government does not accede to the proposition of my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster). If the clause is to be retained without anything more in the way of a guiding principle than it contains at present it would seem to me at least that the power to be exercised under this clause should be entrusted to some other body.

The Minister of Justice referred incidentally the other day to a proposal, an idea which had passed through his mind, that the power of control might be entrusted to the Railway Commission or some similar permanent non-partisan body. I would prefer to do that, I would prefer to entrust the control to the Railway Commission and to reorganize that commission. Already it has outgrown its name and I think the work imposed on it demands that it should be increased in its working power and be reorganized. I think it should properly perhaps be called the Public Utilities Commission or by some name of that kind because it is already entrusted with powers relating to telephones and many other similar matters and already its jurisdiction extends far beyond matters connected with railways and transportation. It has been said that the Railway Commission is overworked at the present time. That is not an argument, it seems to me, for entrusting this power to the Governor General in Council, but it might be a good argument and would be a good argument if what I am now suggesting should be accepted, that the Railway Commission ought to be reorganized and given a name more in consonance with the extensive powers which are already imposed on it, and that powers of this character should be given to it rather than to the Governor General in Council.

Mr. PATERSON. Would you not prefer the Governor in Council to one minister?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that on the whole I would, yes. But my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) must realize that a great many of the objections which I referred to when we last discussed this measure are equally objections to control by the Governor General in Council. I am sure the minister will realize that. I am not discussing this from a partisan standpoint or suggesting that this government would be any more liable to exercise this power in a wrong direction or by wrong methods than any other government. That is a matter I desire to put aside for the moment and to discuss this purely from a public standpoint. Every criticism I am making in this regard, would be just as applicable to a Conservative administration as to the present administration. I do not think it is a good principle. We know that these matters are disposed of by the Governor in Council, that certain important matters are referred to the party caucus and we know that, sometimes at least, the really important discussion takes place in the party caucus, and not in the House of Commons or in the other branch of the legislature, because under the system which we have in this country it is more or less the rule, and I suppose it has been more or less the rule under all administrations, that those who differ in council come down and support the action of the government because that is incident to the principle of solidarity which controls parliamentary government; and the same principle is carried to a certain extent into the caucus; that which the majority in the caucus decides upon is very often, probably in most instances, supported by the united party in the House. Thus it strikes me that we ought not to extend the principle of government by Order in Council. What is proposed by the Governor in Council will be supported by the members of the Cabinet even although a very considerable minority may not favour the proposal in the first instance. What is proposed by the Governor in Council, or rather what has been done by the Governor in Council—that is an important distinction—is usually supported by the party caucus. The party caucus may take a stand before governmental action has intervened, but when once governmental action has intervened, and the fate of the government will depend on the action which the caucus takes with regard to that particular proposal, the usual outcome is that the party caucus supports the action which has been previously taken by the Governor in Council. For these reasons it seems to be inadvisable that the principle of legislation by Governor in Council should be extended, and it is in that aspect and for that reason that I would be opposed to conferring powers of this character upon the Governor in Council, whether the administration which has to deal with the matter is Conservative or is Liberal.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The general scope of this measure and the purpose for which it was introduced must be apparent upon the face of the provisions of the Bill themselves without reference to the words of explanation or discussion which have been spoken in the House and in the committee with regard to it; and yet the observations which have fallen from some hon. gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon, particularly by my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) make me think that the intention with which this Bill has been introduced must have been, at all events for the moment, lost sight of altogether. The hon. gentleman spoke of this Bill as a measure which would have the effect of preventing transmission lines for the transportation of electricity being constructed in Canada and which would inevitably tend to increase the price of electrical energy in this country. Surely that conclusion could not be arrived at if reflection was had upon the existing condition of things as compared with the condition which must ensue if this Bill becomes law. At the present time we have no restriction whatever upon the exportation of electrical energy from this country, we have no control in any way over the market to which the producers of that commodity take it for sale or consumption. They naturally will seek to bring their goods to market with the least expense, with the shortest construction of transmission lines and will naturally seek to get their customers within the shortest possible radius of the place where the electric power is generated. The discussion upon this subject to-day has dealt principally with the conditions existing at Niagara, but we should not lose sight of the fact that this is a measure which, if passed, becomes applicable to conditions all along the boundary between this country and the United States. But dealing with it on the basis of conditions existing at Niagara, it is natural that the companies which produce electricity there should seek to supply the United States market, where there is a larger demand than in this country. It is but natural that they should seek primarily to supply that market because it is at their very door, and because they have no demand here for consumption to the extent they have it immediately opposite on the other side of the river. Thus if this measure do not pass they will be absolutely free, except to the extent to which they may be controlled by contract, to dispose of their product in the markets of the United States. We propose to control, if we can, and put some check upon them. By the provisions of this Bill some check—whether effective or not remains to be seen—is put upon the unlimited and uncontrolled export of electricity. How then can it be said that this Bill will have the effect of preventing the construction of transmission lines in Canada and of raising the price of electric energy in this country? Quite the reverse. If there be hesitation on the part of the companies now to construct new transmission lines to more distant points in Canada, it is because there is nothing to restrain them from seeking a nearer market in the United States. And it is because we want to remedy that condition of things, that we bring down this Bill. My idea of the way in which this Bill will work out is possibly different from that of hon. gentlemen who have criticised it; but if my idea be correct I cannot see that the measure is open to the objections which have been made or would be in any degree improved by the adoption of an amendment which would limit the export to an amount equal to that consumed in this country. It is provided by section four that any license shall be revocable upon notice to the licensee —such notice as may be reasonable in each particular case. Section 5 provides that the amount which is to be exported shall be defined in the license. A limit is put upon the quantity that may be exported. How is that limit to be fixed? It is to be fixed by referring to the conditions existing at the time when the license is issued. If there be a demand in Canada for electric energy to an extent greater than the amount supplied, those who require electricity in Canada may surely be trusted to make representations to the government on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any provision for public notice of applications for licenses?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No, except that the regulations to be passed under this measure —and which I propose to require to be laid before the House—will necessarily provide what steps are to be taken by any one applying for a license; and no doubt some sort of public notice will have to be given, such as by advertisement in the 'Gazette.' At all events upon application being made, it would be the duty of any tribunal, which had to pass upon the question, to take some measure to inform itself of the conditions existing at the time. Section 5 puts before such tribunal its duty and indicates the extent to which parliament intended the export to be permitted. To arrive at a knowledge of the existing conditions, to ascertain the amount which at that time might be wanted for consumption in Canada, some sort of inquiry more or less public would be essential. And it seems to me that in the practical working out of the measure, those who are interested in getting electric energy for use in this country would make their wants known, and there would be in the hands of the Governor in Council or the minister or whatever tribunal shall administer this Bill, some knowledge, to a more or less specific extent, of the actual needs of Canada at the time. Once that is ascertained, it is the position of the individual producer which has to be considered. There are—looking at the question from the standpoint of the Niagara Peninsula—three companies at present at Niagara; and if the recommendations of the international waterways commission are ratified by the two countries, so that a limit of the user of water for power purposes is agreed upon, we may expect that there will be in the future but three producing plants on the Canadian side at Niagara Falls. If we know, or can ascertain within reasonable limits, the approximate amount required, at the time of the application for a license, to supply the wants of Canadian consumers, we can have no difficulty in fixing upon, approximately speaking, the surplus which may be exported to the United States. That will depend entirely upon the extent to which the different producers supply the Canadian demand—whether or not there is any particular locality or any particular body of intending consumers not being properly supplied at reasonable prices by these different producers. Giving the Governor in Council, or whatever tribunal is to administer this Bill, the intention to deal fairly in the matter, while I admit that there will be necessarily great difficulties in working out the measure, it does not seem to be impossible to work it out equitably. An inquiry being had and the necessary information obtained, it cannot be very difficult—at all events it cannot be impossible—to determine with comparative precision whether or no any particular producer is doing his share to supply Canadian wants. If he is there can be no reason for restricting his business by subjecting him to an export duty or refusing him a license to deal with the surplus energy he has produced, and which must be a waste product on his hands if he is not allowed to export it. When you have dealt with the various individual producers in that way and have secured the whole supply required by the Canadian market at any particular time, it seems to me that you have fully safeguarded Canadian interests. It is said that there is great danger in the provisions of this Bill, because the demand in Canada will necessarily increase as the country develops. We all hope that will be the case, and there is in the provisions of this Bill just that degree of flexibility which such a situation will demand. By section 4 we have the express stipulation put before every licensee that his license is liable to be revoked—not for cause, not by reason of any breach on his part because that is provided for in subsection 2 of section 5—but at the discretion of the minister. Subsection 2 of section 5 provides :

Every such license shall be revocable at will by the minister if the licensee refuses or neglects to comply with any of the conditions imposed with regard to the supply and distribution of power or fluid in Canada.

But assuming he has lived up to all the conditions and requirements of his license, under section 4 that license is still revocable at any time, upon such notice to him as is deemed reasonable. Suppose, therefore, that by reason of some new locality coming into the market or by reason of the construction upon Canadian soil of some new industry, which called for a supply of 20,000 or 25,000 horse-power, there was not available for the use of that additional locality or new industry the electric power they required, their representations to that effect would inevitably come before the license issuing tribunal, and that tribunal would be expected to revoke the license after giving reasonable notice. The licensee, having that notice before him, would have reasonable time within which to make his arrangements with his United States consumers and cancel the contracts he might have entered into on the other side of the line.

Mr. FOSTER. Which licensee?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Any licensee.

Mr. FOSTER. There might be three or four licensees; there should be an equitable distribution.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes. The conditions might be such that it would be equitable only to provide for the new Canadian demand by an equal distribution upon each of the producing companies of the amount which was required for the Canadian market. These are things that cannot be provided for beforehand. Everything would depend upon the share of the Canadian supply which a particular licensee was already undertaking. If he was doing more than his fair proportion, it might be equitable to put the whole of the demand upon others and to relieve him altogether of any increase. These are things which nothing but the circumstances of the particular occasion will ever enable any tribunal to determine. Then, there is the suggestion of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto, that we ought never to crowd the surplus of the Canadian product close; that we always ought to keep something substantial on hand. Well, I do think that I am not unduly optimistic when I say that fortunately there is not at present any actual danger. Consider the conditions which we have. By the international arrangement which the Waterways Commission—so far as it has power to do so—arrived at, there is limitation proposed upon the consumption for power purposes of water on either side of the international boundary at Niagara. So much has been assigned as the limit for the Canadian companies and so much for the United States companies. The amount of horse-power which the Canadian companies under this arrangement will be able to produce when in full running order, and the amount which within measurable time they will be in a position to produce—if they are not fully equipped for producing it at present—is 415,000 horse-power. I will put it, for the purpose of illustration, at the round figure of 400,000 horse-power. Now, at present, according to the best information I have been able to obtain, I am assured that there is not more than 40,000 horse-power being consumed in Canada and there is no existing demand which is not being supplied. Some hon. gentlemen who are in a better position to know than I am, think that estimate is too small. But we will double it, and call it 80,000 horse-power, and we will then have a margin of 320,000 horse-power at all events which is not at present needed in Canada. Granted that the Canadian demand will largely increase in the near future, none the less, at the present time, we have certainly over 300,000 horse-power which we are not needing in Canada at all, and the question is, what is to be done with it? The United States has by its legislation declared that it will for the present receive only 160,000 horse-power, and no matter how much we may license exportation beyond 160,000 horse-power, our licenses would not in the least degree avail the licensees or enable them to sell in the United States, or to take into the United States anything beyond the amount the laws of that country will permit. Under these circumstances, do we not unnecessarily alarm ourselves when we argue here that we ought to provide for keeping in Canada some margin ?—25,000 horse-power is suggested by the hon. member for Lincoln. We shall have not 25,000 horse-power, but ten times that amount of surplus so far as now appears; we shall have much more than 25,000 horse-power for many years literally going to waste, because there will not be market for it anywhere. But if the margin ever does appear to grow smaller, is not that exactly the kind of thing that can be safely trusted to the tribunal—given an honest-intentioned one—to which the administration of the Act may be assigned?

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. minister will allow me: I understood him to say that the total quantity to be generated by the three companies now existing on the Canadian side is 400,000 horse-power, and the United States government, or some other authority, had set 160,000 horse-power as the limit of that to be exported from the Canadian side into the United States. On that point I would like to know is that absolutely set, and, if so, do they do it in order to protect their own powers and promote the generating of electricity on their own side?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Precisely. They are generating in the United States enough to supply their present needs, if they get 160,000 horse-power more from us, and, in order to ensure their own producers an adequate market they limit the quantity that they will take from Canada to the figure stated. If their needs increase and they cannot produce what they want, the quantity taken from Canada may be increased. But, at present, and for nearly twelve months, that is the limit they have put upon this importation of electricity across the Niagara river. The ultimate question of importance here would seem to me to be the question of the power which should administer this Bill, should it be adopted by the House. The leader of the opposition has expressed the view that section 5 is defective, because it contains no principle—or discloses none—for the guidance of the Governor General. Now, I submit, with all deference, that there is a very clear principle indicated upon the face of that section to guide anybody who is to enforce the provisions of this law, and that is the limitation of the export to surplus after the licensee has provided for distribution of power in Canada to the extent defined by the license. The Bill also provides—in a section which I cannot recall at the moment—that this supply must be at reasonable prices and under conditions which the tribunal administering the Act shall deem proper.

Mr. BRISTOL. When I was referring to keeping a substantial surplus, I agreed with the minister as to the present situation. But the important point seemed to me to be the future. We are passing a law to provide not merely for the present but for the future as well. When the tribunal in these matters is considering the question of surplus, there is nothing to indicate to that tribunal that it is to be a substantial surplus, to provide not only for the present but for the future needs of the country. And that is particularly important in a growing country like Canada.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have pointed out what seems to me to be the answer to that objection—that a demand could not spring up so suddenly that there would be no time, by giving reasonable notice to the licensee, to require the licensee to satisfy that demand. We are in a position always to take from the United States to supply Canada; and, under these circumstances, even if there were not any substantial margin maintained, there would be the means for securing for Canadian consumers all that they might require. But I cannot suppose that any right intentioned tribunal would ever allow itself to be put in such a position with regard to the surplus that Canadian interests would be endangered. As I have pointed out there is certainly no danger at the present time. And, in the course of future years, without any alteration in this legislation (if parliament did not find it advisable, in view of the changed conditions, to make alterations in this legislation)—it is a thing scarcely to be imagined that any government or any other board administering the provisions of this law would permit itself to get into such a position with regard to these licensees, that they would ever have no surplus for new Canadian wants, or that the surplus would be allowed to become so small that there would be danger that the needs of this country would not be supplied. Now, a word with regard to the tribunal——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the minister, before he leaves that branch of the subject, to allow me to point out what I mean. The reason I thought there was no principle was this: The amount of export is limited to the surplus, but when you turn to that how do you find 'surplus' defined? It is defined as that which remains after the licensees have supplied for distribution to customers for use in Canada power or fluid to the extent defined by such license. Therefore the surplus depends entirely upon what is defined in the license, and that is entirely under the control and in the discretion of the Governor in Council. It is true, we may assume that they will act according to their best lights—I am not questioning that—but still it does leave it to them to define the principle.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The proportion permitted to be exported will necessarily be different with different producers. In each case it depends upon the proportion which that producer undertakes to supply of the existing Canadian demand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not want to interrupt the minister too often, but I would like to make the point clear. You say that the surplus shall depend upon the amount to be supplied as defined by the license, but there is no principle in the clause which guides the Governor in Council in fixing the amount.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) means that there is nothing upon the face of the Bill to indicate the principle upon which the Governor in Council shall allot the proportion of Canadian supply to each particular producer, I fully agree with him. But once you have determined how much of the existing demand ought to be supplied by a particular producer, you have necessarily determined the amount which that producer may be allowed to export. I may say that the practical situation as we know it at Niagara is such, at the present time, that one of the three companies is supplying the principal part of the Canadian present demand. Very possibly that condition of things may continue. The very circumstance that they have their lines built for the transmission of energy will naturally make them inclined to continue the supplying of the Canadian market, possibly in preference to any other. So long as they are content with that situation, so long as they are willing to supply the Canadian consumers, whether they find their customers on this side of the line or the other, there can be no reason why the larger amount of that which is permitted to be exported might not be allotted to other companies. But if there came a time when the company which was supplying the major portion of the Canadian demand complained of that situation, insisted that it was not equitable that it should bear so large a burden, if it were a burden, and that a larger portion of the Canadian demand ought to be assigned to other companies, that would be a matter for regulation by the bureau which was issuing the licenses, and to be determined, I would think, simply upon the principle that equality is equity.

Then with regard to the change which I am proposing, to substitute the Governor in Council for the minister. I have to remind the committee of what my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will recollect, that that was a suggestion made at the close of the debate in committee six weeks ago, I think by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and no doubt it is preferable to substitute the Governor in Council. Now as to the selection of the Governor in Council as a tribunal. If any better tribunal can be suggested, I am certainly not wedded to the proposal that it must be the Governor in Council. The Railway Commission has been spoken of. Now the Railway Commission, it will be remembered, is but the immediate successor of a subcommittee of the council. The Railway Commission deals with questions of fact, and the only appeal which exists from that board, except upon questions of law, is to the Governor in Council. It is in a sense but a branch of the government of the country, and it is unfortunately true that at the present time, at all events, that body has such a mass of work in hand that to increase it would, I much fear, seriously impair the efficiency of the board. There has been however from the outset in my mind, and possibly in the minds of others, the possibility that before long, in the working out of this Act, we might have a permanent board to which this duty could be well assigned. If the present International Waterways Commission becomes a permanent board, international in character, divided into two sections of equal numbers representing each their respective countries, if it became a permanent board to consider and pass upon the great questions arising out of our international waterways, there would seem to be a permanent tribunal to which the duty and responsibility of working out this measure might well be assigned. But at the present time we have not quite reached that stage, and the idea of making that board permanent has not yet taken any actual shape. Just because that board is at present of a temporary character, it would seem not to be practical to refer to it the administration of this measure. In those circumstances it seems that there is no other body available to which the responsibility of the administration of this measure could, at the present time, be satisfactorily assigned. In administering a measure of this sort, depending so largely upon questions of scientific as well as of a business nature, the Governor in Council must necessarily depend upon the report of some officer, not merely of ability and high educational attainment, but of standing and of character. The government, responsible for their acts in this House, possessing necessarily the confidence, for the time being, of this House, would seem the only tribunal that could be selected for the administration of this measure, instead of assigning it to the discretion of any particular member of the government. It does not, I may point out, confer upon the Governor in Council the power to legislate. The working out of this measure, in the powers which it is proposed to confer upon the Governor in Council, is purely administrative. The application of the different sections may rest in the hands of the Governor in Council from time to time, but that I submit is but the administering of the Act. While at the present time it has seemed that there was no other effective tribunal ready at hand to which this work could be assigned, there is not of course any necessary finality about it. The whole undertaking of this measure is experimental in its character. If, in carrying it out, difficulties are found to exist which it will be necessary to remedy, there will at all events have been made a beginning, and there will be ample opportunity to correct our mistakes, if we have made any in the provisions which we are here submitting to the House.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The minister especially objects to two of the points that I endeavoured to make in discussing this particular section. The first is that he cannot see how it will interfere with the construction of transmission lines in the province of Ontario, particularly. That appears to be a very simple proposition. The works are located on the Niagara river, which is upon the boundary of the United States, practically within a mile of the transmission lines upon which will require to be transmitted to the United States 100,000 or 150,000 horse-power; whereas to distribute it into the parts of Ontario into which it should go would probably require two or three hundred miles of transmission lines to be constructed. I think the minister will be able to see the reason why they will prefer one to the other. Any large corporation would rather sell to a community 100,000 horse-power, than to take 10,000 customers of ten horse-power each. That is a proposition which any business concern would immediately jump at.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I said it was not this Bill that was preventing the building of transmission lines, this Bill has nothing to do with them.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I did not say it was the Bill, but I say the export of the power will prevent, on this side, the building of transmission lines. I am not saying anything about the Bill. The minister is licensing a large amount of export. I say if you allow that power to be exported to the other side, it will delay the building of transmission lines on this side, because they do not want customers. They have got them. They have a large customer on the United States side who will take all that our 10,000 customers on this side might otherwise get. They do not wish to go into the details that would be required to serve the small towns and cities of western Ontario and the farmers along the line. That is the reason they are trying to find means of escape to the United States. I see that the hon. minister uses the word 'customers' in clause 5. What does he mean by the word 'customers' as used there? Present customers. Not at all. It should be the policy of the government to give electrical power to every man who wants it, the farmer or whoever he may be alongside of the transmission line. Whoever wants 50 or 100 horse-power or even 10 horse-power ought to be allowed to get it at some price—not always at the same price as a small quantity cannot be sold as cheaply as a large one. We recognize the necessity of having a wholesale and retail business, but what we say is necessary in the first place is to construct your transmission lines on this side. You cannot find out what you are going to do until you are ready to supply power. The hon. minister speaks of 40,000 horse-power. Where does he get those figures? It is very likely that he got them from the companies as that is more likely to be their estimate of the number than a statement of the actual requirements in Ontario. For instance, when I spoke a few days ago on this question I said that Mr. Beck's commission had already applications for upwards of 100,000 horse-power. Some hon. gentlemen may say that that is ample but I do not think it is. I think that if the Minister of Justice lives to as old an age as I hope he will, he will live to see all this power used by private industries and railroad companies. I believe that in a few years all the power that is being developed on the Niagara river will be required in Ontario. I think the time will come soon, and it cannot come too soon, when this power will be required by our great industrial enterprises. It sounds all very well to be told that the United States are not prepared to receive more than 160,000 horse-power. It sounds very much like an agent who is trying to sell Cobalt stocks and who comes to you and says: I will not sell you more than 10,000 shares of that stock. You were thinking of buying 100 shares, but he says that he will not sell you more than 10,000. This Bill is to regulate the export of electricity and it is the first duty of the government, whether it be the provincial or the Dominion government, to see that our customers are first provided for. The Bill speaks of 'customers' but there is no power being supplied at present. Brantford is only 25 miles west of Hamilton and we have not a horse-power in there yet from Niagara. There are Galt, Berlin, London, St. Thomas, Woodstock, Stratford and many other rising towns and cities that are using electricity and there are radial roads that are generating their own energy at present and which should be allowed to get their power from Niagara if they wish. For the minister to say that because we have only enough customers to-day to take 40,000 horse-power and that these represent the requirements of the province is quite absurd. Just let them provide their transmission lines and the requirements of the province will at once become evident.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you against exporting at all?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am not against exporting at all, but I am in favour of the regulation proposed by my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) so that what we require on this side may be reserved. I object to the remark of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) when he says that I am entirely opposed to the export of power. I am not opposed to the export of power but I say that it should only be permitted to a limited degree and that the privilege should be quickly revocable so that if a customer applies for 5,000 or 10,000 horse-power on this side he may be able to get it at short notice. The river is, of course, large, but you are going to limit, by agreement of this international waterways commission, the amount of electricity that can be developed on the Niagara river to the amount at present being produced. There will be no more of it at any price. It is to be tied up for good and all. It is not to be used again. If the river were still available, if we could count upon planning another works there, if the government or any other large corporation could generate 100,000 horse-power more we would have a reserve force, but according to the arrangement it is proposed to limit it to the point at which it is now developed and we are never to be allowed to do anything further in that direction. Therefore I take it that the construction of transmission lines will be delayed because there is no inducement to build them. It will cost millions of dollars perhaps to put them up in all parts of the province of Ontario where they will be required. I have figures, but unfortunately I have not them here to-day, showing what a transmission line costs per mile. If I had known that this discussion was coming up I would have had them here, because they would show exactly why the company do not want to build these transmission lines. It is true that they have made a little effort in that direction, that they have got as far as Hamilton or Toronto and that they have got some of the right of way between Hamilton and Brantford but they have not done anything more. You want first of all to get them to run their lines into these towns and then when they have done that, if the minister can show us a surplus he will be justified in allowing them to export electrical power to the other side. Our requirements to-day are not our requirements to-morrow because our requirements will vastly increase as soon as these transmission lines are built. We have not been able to get what we require—a cheap economical and continuous supply. When we have currents running through these transmission lines that can be relied on at all times, ample power for every purpose, the amount required will be vastly increased and I think the minister is very much in error when he says that only 40,000 horse-power can be used.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I did not say that.

Mr. PATERSON. Supposing they put it across the river would they simply use the transmission lines of the companies on the American side, or would not they have to build their own transmission lines to reach the consuming centres in the United States the same as in Ontario? I only ask for information. The hon. gentleman has been on the commission and has some knowledge of the facts connected with this and perhaps he may be in a position to answer the question.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. That would be entirely a matter of arrangement. I understand that one of the companies operating on both sides have a transmission line on the other side which will be quite sufficient to take the power that they export from this side.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you know if they supply enough on the other side now to supply the needs of all the points reached by their transmission lines?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. My information is that they could sell a great deal more over there if they could get it. However, the fact that they are likely to take a larger amount shows that they are anxious to increase their output on the other side. The United States industries adjacent to this line will be customers for this surplus power that is going from our side.

Mr. PATERSON. Do they generate enough now on the American side to supply all they need at those points in the localities that they reach? If that is the case they would not require this export. Have they not to do precisely the same in the state of New York to find new markets, as our producers would have to do?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. No. They have already transmission lines to Buffalo and Rochester; they contemplate extending these lines to other cities; they do not have to buy more right of way to transmit a million horse-power than to transmit 100,000 horse-power, for they can transmit it over the same lines. My information is, and I believe it to be correct, that the American producers are not able now to supply their requirements on their own side of the river, and hence they are coming to our side, and are likely to become our customers. What I urge on the government is this: provide to keep our own electric power in Canada, and then these industries which need that electric power will have to establish themselves on the Canadian side. Does the minister understand me?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not quite. Do they not now supply all the needs of Buffalo; or, will Buffalo want Canadian produced energy?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The needs of Buffalo are growing daily and so are our needs, and the needs of every growing industrial centre constantly demand more electricity. The minister asked me: How will this increase the price of electricity?

Mr. PATERSON. How will this Bill increase the price of electricity?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This Bill authorizes the export of the power.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This Bill is to restrict the unlimited export of power which now exists.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This Bill allows the export of our Canadian power up to a certain point, and the Minister of Justice figured that export at 300,000 horse-power. If the Minister of Justice, as he said, is only going to keep 80,000 horse-power on this side—and he thought 80,000 horse-power was perhaps too large—does it not stand to reason that the price of power will be higher than if the producers had to find a market for 200,000 horse-power on the Canadian side ? If we have plenty of horse-power on the Canadian side, the industries will discard their steam powers, and their gas plants, and substitute electric power for them, always of course provided, that the electric power can be obtained cheaply enough. Electricity is the cheapest and cleanest method of applying power to machinery ; no force is so direct, so instantaneous, and none can be utilized with less waste. When using steam power your plant has to be kept going, and you have to continue to supply fuel even when your machinery is not in use, but, with electricity, the moment a machine is not needed the pressure of a button causes it to stop, and it is not wasting power and not wearing itself out to no purpose. The benefits to be derived from the substitution of electric power for steam power, and power produced by gas plants, must be apparent to the thoughtful mind. I think the minister can see the common sense of the proposition, that if the Canadian producers of electric power have to find a market for a large product, and are forced to extend their ramifications through the Niagara peninsula to dispose of that power, the cheaper that power will be and the better the requirements of our own country will be served ?

Mr. FOSTER. We have the concession from the minister, that the Governor in Council instead of the individual minister, shall decide. Theoretically that is a gain ; practically I am not sure that it is. Some one minister has to be charged with this duty. Every other minister has his time absorbed in administering his own department, and it practically works out in the end, that the minister who is specially charged with any duty, must be the supreme authority whose recommendations should be taken.

Mr. PATERSON. Largely, that is the case.

Mr. FOSTER. Otherwise, the minister would be unfit for his work, and his officers would not be doing their duty if they did not give him the best information, which he has to transmit to council. What happens in practice, is, that the individual minister who makes a special study of the question through his expert officers, finds himself hampered by the necessity of drilling into the minds of thirteen others, who take no interest in it, his particular point of view, based on the information he has received. I warrant you that the minister who has to do that will time and again find that other ministers will take some other point of view, may be a party point of view, and he finds it difficult to have his own conclusions, based on his expert information, accepted by the council. In that respect, it will be found that after all, on a technical subject like this, the substitution of the Governor in Council for the minister is not of such great importance. There are other subjects as to which the Governor in Council is the best body to decide, because they possess general information as to them; but, on a technical, expert subject, the benefit of the decision of the Governor in Council as against that of the minister charged with the particular duty, is not of much practical use.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is your conclusion then ?

Mr. FOSTER. My conclusion is, that as to these questions which are largely technical, and as to which data, and the opinion of experts have to be carefully obtained, the sooner these and all such kindred subjects are relegated to a competent tribunal appointed for that purpose, the better it will be.

An hon. MEMBER. Send it to the Railway Commission.

Mr. FOSTER. That is probably the only tribunal we have at present which could deal with such matters. It would seem to me that the tribunal suggested by the Minister of Justice, which has to do with matters arising along the international line, and which has not to do with expert information as to transport and economics, is not as good a tribunal for this purpose as a public utilities commission would be. Since Governor Hughes has been elected in New York there has been a movement to merge the different boards which they formerly had in the city and state of New York (such as the Railroad and Rapid Transit Boards), and to constitute two great commissions on public utilities, one for the state of New York and the other for the city of Greater New York. In my mind that is an ideal tribunal. That is what we want in Canada. You want such a body which will obtain careful information on all these subjects as to which the aid of experts is absolutely necessary, and then you want to keep it just as far away from party patronage as you possibly can. A public utilities commission properly constituted would be one of the most useful tribunals Canada could have to dispose of all questions such as this we are discussing and such as others which have attracted our attention of recent years. Meanwhile the Governor in Council is perhaps a broader authority than an individual minister, though practically speaking I do not see much difference in this particular case. Now, the argument of my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) was a sound one. We are all jealous that Canada shall have the first benefit and the fullest benefit of all her franchises and powers. On the Niagara river, near to an immense manufacturing and consuming population, you have electric power generated by three companies on the Canadian side, and by others on the United States side. The argument of my hon. friend from Brantford was that so long as you make it easy for the Canadian generators of power to sell a large proportion of their product to the American side, you will furnish them with no incentive to extend their lines of transmission through the Niagara peninsula and Ontario in order to supply the demand there. If you were to absolutely prohibit the export of power you would put the Canadian producers on their mettle. They now have facilities for generating a large quantity of power; they would have to distribute it, and that inevitably would set them to work to extend throughout Canadian territory, rather than to easily and profitably sell their power, as they now can do, to the other side of the line. Of course, to say, that just at the present moment we should prohibit the export of power would seem to bear hardly upon those who have plants there and who are looking for returns, and who contend they should be allowed to sell wherever they can find a market. To be arbitrary, and to say to these men, you shall not export at all, is, may be, a little ahead of our time. But I do not think you will find it is very much ahead of the time. I think you will find that within a very short period it will be necessary to keep all the power we have for ourselves. We all know the other side got enough of our territory and enough of our heritage away from us, and if anything is to be got from the great generating power which we have in the Canadian Niagara, let us keep it for ourselves, and let us put fair and reasonable pressure upon the corporations which have these great franchises, that they shall take pains to distribute their product to the people of Canada who are located within the transmission radius from Niagara Falls and elsewhere.

I am in sympathy then with bringing whatever pressure can fairly be brought in order that when this power is once developed it may be distributed into the working channels so far as the transmission area will permit. Then the conclusion is that if it is too arbitrary to prevent all exportation just now, keep the surplus large, and then you will have a double incentive; the man outside in the village, the town, the municipality will say: Well, if we can arrange finances, then there is the power for us if we can get the wires between us and that power; so that we will deal with the idea that there is a surplus of power which we can utilize once we are ready for it, and on the other side it will be an impelling power upon the companies to meet the demand in the country with their transmission lines, in order that they may get rid of their product. That will not be a hardship to the company. Of course the company will sell a large unit and at short distance cheaper than a small unit at a long distance. They will, however, get their profit and costs and charges; the further away from the source of production the more the power will cost so they will have their profits although they will have to exert themselves by multiplying the lines of transmission. The suggestion of my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) is to bring pressure on these companies to undertake that expansion of transmission in order that the greatest benefit may come to Ontario and likewise to all other portions of our country that are near the developing centres.

I think then if the government would take into consideration the creation of an absolutely efficient and absolutely well equipped public utilities commission, and putting all these technical and expert matters into their hands, it would be a vast gain to the country and it would be a great rest to the Prime Minister and the members of his Cabinet because those things are most difficult, most complicated and most unsatisfactory in the carrying out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Amendment (Mr. Lancaster) negatived.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the Minister of Justice whether there was anything in the communication from the provincial government of Ontario which he thinks ought to be communicated to the committee?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not suppose there is anything in the letter which the writer would have the slightest objection to having made public and I propose to read Mr. Whitney's latest letter to me on the subject:

Toronto, February 28, 1907.

Dear Mr. Aylesworth,—My colleagues and I find it very difficult to say anything definite with reference to your Bill regulating the exportation of electric power.

Under agreements with three companies, we are entitled to have utilized in Canada, when called for, one-half the power developed by them.

Should any arrangement be made with the United States affecting the quantity of power to be developed on the Canadian side of the Niagara river, or should one or more of a number of other contingencies occur, our position would be a very complicated one indeed.

Some arrangement with reference to the quantities to be exported, and the regulations and conditions of exportation under which the approval of the provincial government would be necessary, might be the means of avoiding some of the possible complications. No doubt great care would be necessary in working out any provision of this kind.

Yours very truly,
J. P. WHITNEY.

There are three other clauses in which the word 'minister' ought to be changed to 'Governor in Council.' Clause 6, in the second line; clause 8, the last word in the clause; and clause 10, subsection 3, in the third line. I also propose that the definition of 'minister' in the second clause of the Bill be struck out as no longer necessary. Then, when the Bill was in committee last, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggested that the regulations ought to be laid before parliament within fifteen days. I propose to add a section requiring that any regulations made by the Governor in Council, under and in pursuance of the provisions of this Act, shall be laid before parliament in the first fifteen days of the session following the making of such regulations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would venture to suggest that as the regulations might be made during the session, the provision would read better as follows:

Any regulation made by the Governor in Council, under or in pursuance of the provisions of this Bill shall be laid before parliament within fifteen days after the making thereof, or, if parliament be not then in session, within fifteen days after the opening of the session.

Amendments agreed to and Bill reported.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LAND BELT, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Bill (No. 102) to ratify an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia respecting the western boundaries of the railway belt. —Mr. Oliver.—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FOSTER. How much territory have we gained or given away?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). There is neither gain nor loss. This is to define what was understood but not sufficiently defined. The British Columbia government has already ratified the proposed boundaries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This has nothing to do with a subject I brought to the attention of the minister a little time ago, concerning the selection of lands.

Mr. OLIVER. Nothing whatever.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 108) to amend the Canada Shipping Act—Mr. Aylesworth—was read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FOSTER. Has this Bill been distributed?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister might explain the Bill, as we have not copies of it?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The Bill is to introduce into section 287 of the Canada Shipping Act the phrase 'at the time of the offence.' This will have this effect: Under the Act as it now stands a seaman or apprentice who deserts, refuses to obey lawful orders or commits any other offence against discipline mentioned in the section, is liable to penalty on summary conviction, provided that he has entered into articles with the ship while she was a registered Canadian ship. In one case which has recently arisen in British Columbia, seamen who deserted or refused to obey orders, when brought before a magistrate for trial, were acquitted because they showed that they had entered into articles when the ship was not a Canadian ship. Articles were signed in Christiania, Norway. These articles contemplated a voyage from Christiania to Vancouver, and then a whaling voyage. But, because they had entered into their obligations before the ship was a Canadian ship, they were able to escape conviction for the offence. What is proposed is that the section shall read:

If a seaman or apprentice lawfully engaged or bound to any ship, registered in any of the provinces at the time of the offence, commits any of the following offences, he shall be liable, on summary conviction:

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

PETROLEUM BOUNTY ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 97) to amend the Petroleum Bounty Act.—Mr. Templeman.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). Before you proceed with this Bill, Mr. Chairman, may I ask if it is printed in French?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The letters indicating that the Bill has been printed in English and French appear on the order paper when the Bill stands for second reading. If it passes the second reading stage it is supposed that the Bill must have been printed in French.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. But is it printed in French?

Mr. BRODEUR. Can my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) state that it is not so printed?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then my hon. friend should have put the question when the Bill was up for second reading. It is too late now.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Chairman, I would ask your ruling on that point.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My opinion is that the objection is too late.

On section 1,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. When this was under consideration before, objection was taken by hon. gentlemen on the other side, to the words 'special or general.' These are not material and I move to strike them out, so that the section will read :

Section 2 of the Petroleum Bounty Act, 1904, is hereby amended by adding thereto the words 'or to such other person interested as the Governor in Council by regulation approves.'

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported.

On motion for third reading :

Mr. FOSTER. Before this Bill is read the third time, would it be too much to ask the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if, within a reasonable time, he would have a committee or commission appointed to codify that large and rapidly increasing body of law which is being made by order in council.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps later on.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—SENATOR FOR ROUGEMONT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the government and especially the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) to an article published in 'La Patrie' about the nomination of a senator for Rougemont :

(Translation.)

The Appointment of Senator Dessaulles.

Mr. Girard, the Member from Rouville, vents his Dissatisfaction and Makes Disclosures.

(Special to 'La Patrie.')

Quebec, 12.—The late call of Mr. Dessaulles to the Senate as the representative of Rougemont, though made by the federal authorities, is very much discussed by the members of the Legislative Assembly. The provincial representatives had sent a joint and unanimous petition urging that Mr. Alfred Girard, the member from Rouville, be appointed, and it was expected that this request would be complied with. I have been acquainted with the circumstances of this appointment by Mr. Girard himself. These are his very words:

When Senator Hingston died my colleagues in the legislature, without first consulting me, prepared a petition to Sir Wilfrid Laurier asking for my nomination to the Senate.

When I heard of the movement I said that I could not accept without the authorization of my leaders. This authorization, however, had been accorded in advance. All the provincial ministers supported the recommendation to the federal government, which was taken to Ottawa by the member for Laprairie. Sir Wilfrid replied that the matter was in the hands of the Minster of Marine.

Mr. Brodeur first stated that he feared to open the county of Rouville by appointing Mr. Girard. Hon. Mr. Gouin, however, relieved him of this apprehension by saying that he would be responsible for the provincial election. In the meantime a petition, signed by 210 leading Liberals in the county of Rouville, was sent to Hon. Mr. Brodeur, claiming the position for a man from the county of Rouville, and recommending their local member. Hon. Mr. Brodeur, whom I met in Ottawa, on Tuesday last, gave me to understand that the question was settled.

He spoke to me as follows: 'I will keep the position for myself. I will appoint in the first place Mr. Dessaulles, whose resignation I have in my pocket, to take effect on the eve of the elections when I will take his place and become leader of the Senate.' I declared to Mr. Brodeur that I could not endorse such a scandalous act, and I would not be a party to such affront to the county of Rouville by its own member.

I told him that he could appoint some one besides myself, but it must be some one from the county, which had waited long enough its turn.

Informed of the fact, my friends advised me to appeal directly to Sir Wilfrid Laurier in order to prevent the perpetration of this injustice.

I went to Ottawa and saw Mr. Brodeur, who said that everything would be arranged, that the county of Rouville would have its senator and that it was not necessary to speak to the Prime Minister.

On the faith of this promise I returned. This was on Friday, and on Saturday the Governor General in Council appointed Mr. Dessaulles, of St. Hyacinthe.

I was at Marieville when the news arrived. I received messages from all parts of the county, and you can say that the dissatisfaction is general amongst the Liberals of the county of Rouville.

Those are the very words which Mr. Girard uttered when he knew that they would be held forth.

I understand that Mr. Girard will find means of ventilating this burning question at this afternoon sitting.

Now, I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what he has to say with regard to this statement of Mr. Girard.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have to say at the outset I do not believe Mr. Girard has given the interview which has just been read by my hon. friend, because this interview, as reported, is absolutely incorrect from beginning to end. I desire to state before this House that the allegation in this reported interview that Mr. Dessaulles was appointed on the condition that he should resign the senatorship in my favour is absolutely untrue. No offer of that kind was ever made by me; no arrangement of that kind was entered into with him with regard to the Senate, nor was any mention made of it at all.

DR. SPOHN AND A SENATORSHIP.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). In connection with vacancies in the Senate that now exist, I understand there are three in the province of Ontario, one of which has been held by the Hon. James Robert Gowan, who represented the county of Simcoe. Now, if territory is to be regarded, I would like to ask the First Minister if it is correct that Dr. P. H. Spohn, of Penetanguishene, and who was a member of this House in 1891, has to-day a written pledge from the First Minister that he is to get a seat in the Senate. Before the First Minister replies. I would like to state some of the facts in this connection as regards that riding, and perhaps adduce some evidence in support of the statement that Dr. Spohn does hold a pledge over the signature of the Prime Minister himself. During the somewhat celebrated Cook investigation as to a seat in the Senate, the following among other facts was produced in evidence. Here is a letter written by the Hon. M. C. Cameron, afterwards governor of the Northwest Territories, to Mr. H. H. Cook :

Ottawa, August 27, 1896.

Dear Cook,—The applicants so far as I can find out are 1, Cox ; 2, J. K. Kerr ; 3, Jaffray ; 4, A. P. Cockburn ; 5, James Innes ; 6, Spohn—the latter three are here pressing their claims. Cockburn is the man you spoke of——

There is a blank here. I think the word omitted is 'in.'

—your many elections. I should say Cox is the most formidable. I had several conversations with C. who is sound. I called at M.'s office four times but could not find him in. I will go to his house to-morrow and sound him and let you know, meantime if you pull any string quietly—do it.

There is a letter written by H. H. Cook to the Prime Minister. It is a long one, and I will only read part of it :

Indeed, I am sure that some of the payments made would, if I am rightly informed, be a surprise to you, especially as one of the recipients now wants a senatorship.

He refers there to the expenses, labours and sacrifices of the election in which he had been a contestant in East Simcoe in 1896. Now, I have it on the authority of a gentleman whose word I have always thought was perfectly good and which goes for a great deal in the county, that he has himself seen such a letter, and I have had the assurance of different gentlemen who have been told by Dr. Spohn that he has such a letter in his possession. I would like the First Minister to state whether it is a fact that Dr. Spohn has such a letter in his possession. Now, it will be seen from the letter written by Mr. Cameron to Mr. Cook in the summer of 1896, immediately after these hon. gentlemen came into power, that there was a vacancy in the Senate and that Dr. Spohn, according to Mr. Cameron's letter, was on the ground looking after the position. After the general election of 1896 a number of contestations were entered in the province of Quebec. I had been elected in the by-election of 1892 and my election had been protested. Election protests were about to proceed in the province of Quebec. The one against myself, with two others which I need not mention, were then questions in adjustment between the two parties. As I understood at that time, and as it was currently reported, there was great pressure brought to bear upon Dr. Spohn to withdraw the protest against myself. As to the pressure, I know not, because it was not a matter that would come under my notice. But I do know that the protest was withdrawn on the condition, I presume, that the seat was to go to Dr. Spohn, and I have the assurance of one gentleman that he saw a letter in which the Prime Minister then pledged Dr. Spohn that when a vacancy presented itself, in the event of the Liberal party coming into power, his claim for a senatorship would be considered. In corroboration of that fact is this, that early after the advent of this government to power Dr. Spohn was here pressing his claim for a senatorship, that is, if the letter of Mr. Cameron's is correct, and I assume that it is. Now, I would like to ask the First Minister if the appointment has been made for that district of a successor to Senator Gowan, and furthermore, if it is a fact that Dr. Spohn has such a written pledge in his possessions, or had at any time, from the Prime Minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that I was blessed with a pretty good memory, but certainly my memory is not equal to the task imposed upon it by my hon. friend to-day. He wants to know if I wrote a letter to Dr. Spohn some ten years ago.

Mr. BENNETT. In 1892.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is worse, 14 years ago. I must say that I am not equal to the task.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I assume that Dr. Spohn's statement is correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know what Dr. Spohn has said and I am not responsible for it.

DIVERSION OF IMMIGRANTS FROM ONTARIO.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the government and particularly of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to an article which appeared in last evening's Toronto 'News' which contains a statement made by Mr. Southworth, Immigration Commissioner for the province of Ontario, at a meeting of the Agriculture Committee of the legislature held at the parliament building at Toronto yesterday, in which Mr. Southworth states that the Dominion government is using every means in its power to divert immigrants from the province of Ontario both by the appointment of Dominion agents at the ports of arrival and also by the appointment of some 200 or 300 immigration agents in the neighbourhood of Toronto whose duty it is to endeavour to persuade immigrants destined for that province to leave it and go to the west and who are rewarded by a certain per capita payment for each immigrant that they might thus secure. The evidence of Mr. Southworth is very short and in the words following:

Mr. Southworth briefly outlined the past history and present position of immigration affairs in the province. For the past four years the applications from farmers for farm labourers had averaged about 8,000. Last year there were sent direct to the farms from Toronto 6,500 labourers, not including children or men the farmers had engaged themselves at the depots, nor the large number of immigrants who had not gone to the farms.

The Dominion government had recently appointed agents in the counties around Toronto to divert some of them from the Bureau. This year, Mr. Southworth had been informed that from 200 to 300 agents had been appointed by the Dominion government to have immigrants shipped direct to them, and who would receive a per capita fee for each one placed. Although there would probably be a greater number come over, it was altogether likely there would not be so many handled by the Bureau. He was of the opinion that this action of the Dominion government was unnecessary and harmful, and something should be done to work in unison. The Dominion was also more interested in the northwest, and diverted them at the sea-board from Ontario, and the province had no means of keeping tab on them.

I would like to ask the government if they are pursuing the policy there stated?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This is a question which more closely concerns my hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) who deals with immigration matters. But, my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) appealed to me and all I can say from conversation with my colleague and with the officers of the department is that the policy has been adopted of naming agents for the placing of immigrants in different parts of the country. My information is particularly in regard to the province of Quebec with which I am more familiar, but I understand that the same kind of policy has been adopted in Ontario of naming different people in different localities in the older settled parts of the country who would find out where immigrants could be placed to advantage on farms and who would facilitate the placing of them there. That policy, I believe, will contribute to the economical placing of the immigrants where they are most needed and where they will soonest find remunerative and successful employment.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Then the statement made by Mr. Southworth is substantially correct?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot follow it exactly. I have stated what I know of the matter.

Mr. BARR. Would the hon. gentleman give a list of those agents? I have received several letters from my riding asking to obtain information concerning where they would find men to engage on farms. Would the hon. minister bring down that list?

Mr. FISHER. No, I certainly have no list. I have no doubt my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior can give the list if it is required by the House.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. In view of the answer of the Minister of Agriculture in which he says that this matter does not arise in his department and inasmuch as the Minister of the Interior, in whose department the matter does exist, is not here, I would ask the government to have the matter considered and I would expect that the minister will to-morrow make some announcement in regard to the matter.

SENATOR FOR ROUGEMONT.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) propounded a question a few moments ago and read an article from a newspaper in French. As far as I am concerned myself, and I presume there are many other hon. members on both sides of the House like me, I did not understand what that article contained. When the hon. gentleman concluded reading it I asked him to repeat it in English, but I presume he did not hear me. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) gave his reply in English. That I understood perfectly. I have an article here in the Montreal 'Gazette' of to-day which reads as follows.

An angry Liberal—Mr. Girard, M.L.A. for Rouville, charges peculiar arrangement by Minister of Marine—Saving seat in the Senate—Mr. Dessaulles is doing this for Hon. Mr. Brodeur, says the disappointed one.

Mr. Alfred Girard, M.L.A. for Rouville, gives the following interview to 'La Patrie' concerning the senatorial succession to the late Sir Wm. Hingston:

When Senator Hingston died my colleagues in the legislature, without first consulting me, prepared a petition to Sir Wilfrid Laurier asking for my nomination to the Senate.

I presume that the right hon. leader of the government will say whether he received such a petition or not.

When I heard of the movement I said that I could not accept without the authorization of my leaders. This authorization, however, had been accorded in advance. All the provincial ministers supported the recommendation to the federal government, which was taken to Ottawa by the member for Laprairie. Sir Wilfrid replied that the matter was in the hands of the Minister of Marine. Mr. Brodeur stated that he feared to open the county of Rouville by appointing Mr. Girard. Hon. Mr. Gouin, however, relieved him of this apprehension by saying that he would be responsible for the provincial election. In the meantime a petition, signed by 210 leading Liberals in the county of Rouville was sent to Hon. Mr. Brodeur, claiming the position for a man from the county of Rouville, and recommending their local member.

Hon. Mr. Brodeur, whom I met in Ottawa, on Tuesday last, gave me to understand that the question was settled. He spoke to me as follows: 'I will keep the position for myself. I will appoint in the first place Mr. Dessaulles, whose resignation I have in my pocket, to take effect on the eve of the elections when I will take his place and become leader of the Senate.' I declared to Mr. Brodeur that I could not endorse such a scandalous act, and that I would not be a party to such an affront to the county of Rouville by its own member. I told him that he could appoint some one besides myself, but it must be some one from the county, which had waited long enough its turn. Informed of the fact my friend advised me to appeal directly to Sir Wilfrid Laurier in order to prevent the perpetration of this injustice. I went again to Ottawa and saw Mr. Brodeur, who said that everything would be arranged, that the county of Rouville would have its senator and that it was not necessary to speak to the Prime Minister. On the faith of this promise I returned. This was on Friday, and on Saturday the Governor General in Council appointed Mr. Dessaulles, of St. Hyacinthe. I was at Marieville when the news arrived. I received messages from all parts of the county, and you can say that the dissatisfaction is general amongst the Liberals of the county of Rouville.

I would like to inquire of the hon. member for Montmagny if this is the same article that he read in French which I do not understand, and I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the government if he received this petition referred to here in the article I have just read, and if the reply that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave to the hon. member for Montmagny will be the same reply that he will give to the article I have just read.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has already answered. So far as I am concerned I received such a petition.

Mr. TAYLOR. And you made the reply, as the paper says, that the matter was in the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I forget what the reply was.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business may we expect to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take up the Land Bill of the Minister of the Interior.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 14, 1907,

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 115) to amalgamate the Jordan Light, Heat and Power Company and the Erie and Ontario Development Company, Limited, into one corporation under the name of the Jordan-Erie Power Company.

INTERPRETATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 116) to amend the Interpretation Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose this is of a formal character?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The purpose of this legislation is to correct an inadvertent error in the Interpretation Act by which the Court of Appeal for Manitoba is not included in the definition of a Superior Court.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

SURVEY OF TRENT CANAL.

Mr. WARD asked:

What was the cost of the survey made by E. J. Walsh, C.E., of that portion of the proposed Trent valley canal between Rice lake and Lake Ontario, (1) via Port Hope ; (2) via Cobourg ; (3) via Trenton ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Rice lake to Port Hope, survey, $10,-331.19.

2. Rice lake to Cobourg, survey, $11,793.61.

3. Rice lake to Trenton, survey, $14,370.47.

INVESTIGATING COLLAPSE OF TOWER.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

What amount has been paid for investigating the collapse of the tower on the western block, and to whom was the money paid ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Paid : D. H. McLean, $350; A. C. Campbell, $61.95; E. S. Mattice, $155.20; F. R. McNamara, $317.30; A. C. Hutchison, $571 ; E. L. Horwood, $220 ; S. G. Curry, $692.16; total, $2,367.61.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister the total cost of the tower?

Mr. BRODEUR. The question only asks for the cost of the investigation.

LAND GRANTS TO SOUTH AFRICAN WAR VETERANS.

Mr. LAKE asked :

1. What steps have been taken by the government to carry into effect the resolution of this House to set apart grants of Dominion lands for those residents of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, who took part in the South African war, 1899-1902 ?

2. If no steps have been taken up to the present time, when is it proposed to take them?

3. What terms and conditions do the government propose in regard to these grants ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1, 2 and 3. A Bill is at present being prepared by the Department of the Interior, with the concurrence of the Minister of Militia and Defence, in order to set apart certain lands in the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan to be given, according to the terms of the resolution of parliament passed this session, as a grant to those who enlisted in the above named provinces and served during the South African war, and action will be taken as soon as possible.

TAXATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. LAKE asked :

1. Is the statement correct which has appeared in the public press that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has refused the application of the Dominion to appeal in the cases of the taxation of Canadian Pacific Railway lands, referred to in the answer of the Minister of Justice, given on the 20th February last ? If so, what were the grounds of the refusal ?

2. Will the government lay copies of the papers in this case on the table of the House?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. The application referred to was made to the Judicial Committee on the 27th February, 1907, when their lordships, in view of the length of time which has passed since the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, declined to advise His Majesty to interfere.

2. If the House so directs.

PORT BRUCE HARBOUR.

Mr. MARSHALL asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to do any repairing to the Port Bruce harbour this year ?

2. Has there been any correspondence lately with reference to the harbour ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Matter under consideration.

2. Yes.

CARRIAGE OF COAL ON CROW'S NEST LINE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. LAKE asked:

1. Referring to the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the Crow's Nest line of railway, what is the maximum price now being charged for coal, free on board the cars, on that railway ?

2. What steps has the government taken to fulfil the assurances made, if any, by them on the 18th June, 1897, that the price would not exceed $2 a ton ?

3. If the government has taken no steps, when do they propose to do so, and what is their policy in regard to this question ?

4. What are the freight rates now charged on coal delivered at, say, Moosejaw and Brandon ?

5. Are these rates lower than when the railway first commenced operation ? If so, how much lower ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The Department of Railways and Canals has no information as to the price now being charged for carrying coal from the mines, nor is such information in the possession of the government. But I am taking steps to secure the necessary information, and will deal with the matter thereafter.

PETROLEUM BOUNTY.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). As the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) is not in his place, I would like to ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when Bill (No. 97) to amend the Petroleum Bounty Act, and which passed this House yesterday, will take effect ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That Bill will take effect as soon as sanctioned, and we expect that sanction will be given it at an early day.

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND MAINLAND.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.) I desire to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) in what position the boats are at the present time plying between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. One of them has been out in the ice for the past twelve days with over one hundred passengers on board, and these boats only have accommodation for twenty-five or thirty passengers.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). It is unfortunately too true that these boats are now caught in the ice, but the circumstances are exceptional. Instructions have been given to convey all the passengers to Pictou and transfer them from that point to the island.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Are the people on the 'Minto' able to have communication with the mainland by the Marconi system?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there is communication with the cape by the Marconi system.

AN IMPERIAL COUNCIL.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I desire to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the following despatch which appears in the Montreal 'Gazette' of to-day, and which seems to be a despatch of the Associated Press:

London, March 13.—According to a Melbourne newspaper, J. G. Ward, Premier of New-Zealand, who has been in Melbourne conferring with Premier Deakin, says: At the conference we shall seek a definite understanding from the imperial government as to the position of the colonies with regard to the British treaty obligations. We do not want Great Britain to enter into treaties with foreign peoples that would give them the right to claim entry into the colonies. I am ardently in favour of the creation of a permanent imperial council of advice in London. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in private letters to me, also expresses himself as favourable, and with the help of Premier Deakin, the three of us ought to be able to carry it through.

This is so much at variance with the official correspondence laid upon the table a few days ago, that I am sure the Prime Minister will take occasion to deny this statement that has appeared in the press.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There is certainly an error in the despatch. I have had no correspondence whatever of a private character with Sir Jas. M. Ward, the Premier of New Zealand, and whatever official correspondence I have had with him was not on any of the topics mentioned in that despatch.

IMMIGRANTS FOR ONTARIO.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto) I desire to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if his attention has been called to a statement made in the press and referred to by me yesterday that the Dominion government is diverting immigration from the province of Ontario. Before the Agricultural Committee of the province of Ontario, at Toronto on Tuesday of this week, the statement was made by Mr. Southworth, Superintendent of Immigration for the province, that the Dominion government was diverting immigration destined for the province of Ontario, both at the ports of landing, and also by a system of immigration agents subsidized by the Dominion government, who are operating in the neighbourhood of Toronto, to the number of two or three hundred, for the purpose of diverting immigrants who intend to settle in that district, and sending them to the west, each one receiving for that work a per capita payment from the Dominioin government. Mr. Southworth thought that was unfair to Ontario, and so stated in his evidence before the Agricultural Committee, and I would like to know if those statements are correct.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Southworth is under an absolute misapprehension of the fact. There is no intention, no policy on the part of the Dominion government or its immigration department to divert settlers from Ontario either at ocean ports or elsewhere. On the contrary, the Dominion government during the last year made considerable expenditures with a view of securing suitable locations for settlers within the province of Ontario, thereby responding to the demand that has been made from that province for an adequate supply of farm labour during the last few years. During the present year the Dominion government has, in persuance of its experiment of last year and according to the needs of the province as it understands them, appointed a number of agents not only in the vicinity of Toronto but throughout the province; as a matter of fact has appointed two agents in each county on the average for the purpose of locating within the range of their knowlerge such suitable farm labour as may become available from the immigrants coming from the old country, which farm labour is directed or is intended to be directed to these distributing agents from the ocean ports. So far from the agents alluded to by Mr. Southworth being appointed to divert immigration from Ontario to the Northwest they are appointed for the sole purpose of securing suitable locations in Ontario for immigrants arriving at ocean points destined for that province who desire occupation in farm work.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. How are these agents paid?

Mr. OLIVER. They are paid a commission of $2 per head for each immigrant suitably located.

EXPORTATION OF ELECTRIC POWER.

On the order :

Third reading of Bill (No. 60) to regulate the exportation of electric power and certain liquids and gases.—Mr. Aylesworth.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister have any objection to letting that stand ? There were some amendments to be moved on the third reading and last night we supposed that the Land Bill was coming up to-day and we are not prepared for this one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the Minister of Justice to be good enough to give at least one day's notice before moving the third reading. If he desires to bring it up to-morrow there would be no objection.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Probably to-morrow will be occupied, let us say on Monday.

Order allowed to stand.

DOMINION LAND ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 21), to consolidate and amend the Act respecting the public lands of the Dominion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think in view of the importance of the Bill and of the fact that it is somewhat complex in its provisions and introduces a good deal of new matter, it would be desirable that the Minister of the Interior should give us a fairly full explanation before we take it up in committee.

Mr. OLIVER. In moving the second reading of this Bill I may say that the subject of legislation in regard to the administration of public lands has necessarily engaged the attention of the government and parliament of Canada ever since the acquisition of the Northwest. For the first number of years we had provision by order in council for the administration of public lands. That was afterwards replaced by legislation and the record seems to show that we had new legislation from year to year upon the subject. It was natural that it should be so and it was so. We were dealing with conditions which were not understood, which could only be understood by experience, and as experience grew and as conditions changed the law providing for the administration of the lands had to be changed accordingly, so that at the present time, or until the recent revision of the statutes, we had a very cumbersome and very difficult mass of legislation on the subject of public lands. The Lands Act of 1886 was the last revision and from 1886 until the present time it appears we have had legislation on the subject of Dominion lands nearly every year. It goes without saying that the mere revision of this mass of legislation by the commissioners for the revision of the statutes, while their work was no doubt well done, did not touch the main questions at issue. That is to say they embodied in a general revision all the varied legislation that was outstanding on the subject but they did not take into account the changed conditions and the fact that some of that legislation had by reason of the changed conditions become obsolete ; they did not take account of the necessity for other changes to meet new conditions and as a result their revision although well done was not what was required in order to bring the law on the subject of the administration of the public lands into line with the present requirements of the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They consolidated but did not legislate ?

Mr. OLIVER. They consolidated but did not legislate. However, before the revision was made, during the last session of parliament and in the intervening period, the necessity for a revision of the land law was pressed very strongly on the attention of the government and steps were taken to secure a revision and an amendment that would bring the law as it might be said up to date. It will be noticed that in the Bill as it is before the House references are made to the Acts then on the statute-book. These references of course are not now in order because all these old statutes are replaced by the present revision. That however is something that could not be provided against if we were to prepare the Bill for presentation at this session of parliament ; it would have been too late to prepare it after the revision of the statutes had been made. There will therefore have to be some amendments made in the Bill to make it conform to that condition.

The principal change in conditions, however, that made an amendment to the Land Act absolutely necessary, was that arising out of the fact that the time had come or approximately come when the great reservations made upon the Northwest in accordance with the policy of the then government in the early eighties, by which provision was made for land grants to railways by setting aside the odd-numbered sections throughout that whole country might be released. Those land grants had been either earned or practically earned; and as it was not the policy of this government to further assist railways by grants of land, it became necessary to provide for the disposition of the odd-numbered sections then remaining in the hands of the government. It was because of the necessity of dealing with that question that an important amendment to the Land Act had to be made, and it was thought opportune, when dealing with such an important question, to have a general revision of the Act. The principal differences between the proposed new Act and the present law are, briefly stated, as follows. We have dropped out certain provisions regarding liens on homesteads, patents without cultivation, hamlets, co-operative farms, wood lots, surveys, and recommendations for patents. Although these provisions may have served a good purpose, we think the time has come when they are no longer required.

With regard to surveys, a Bill has been agreed to which takes that matter out of the Land Act and puts it in a separate Act devoted entirely to surveys. The dropping out of the provision regarding recommendations for patents may require some little explanation. Under the present law, when a settler has fulfilled his duties and has had his claim accepted by the government, he receives, not a patent, but a recommendation for a patent, which recommendation is recognized as a security. That provision was made when the lands were administered from Winnipeg and not from Ottawa, and there was a sort of dual administration. There were a commissioner of Crown lands and a land board sitting at Winnipeg who passed upon the right of the settler to receive a patent, but the patent itself was issued in Ottawa. Some years later that land board was abolished and the administration centred at Ottawa, but the provision for issuing a recommendation for patent still remained. Under the present system, it will be possible to issue the actual patent without serious delay to the homesteader. We have therefore dropped the provision requiring a recommendation for a patent, which will do away with a certain amount of delay now existing in the issuing of the patent and obviate some difficulty which occasionally arises, through the negotiation of these recommendations for patents, which cannot, under certain circumstances, be made good by the actual issue of the patent itself. As regards liens on homesteads, there are abuses under these provisions which rather overbalance any advantage that might accrue from them. I may say that in the very complex work of administering the Land Act, it is difficult to meet all cases, and it would be impossible for any legislature to foresee just what changes may be required from time to time. We find that we have in some cases gone beyond the Act by taking action not provided for in it but which was thought desirable for the proper administration of the land. We have, therefore, embodied some new provisions in this Bill which merely confirm the practice of the department. The principal of these provisions are to permit the holding of land for a person over seventeen years of age, to provide for priority of entry at a sub agency to provide for timber licenses on areas of a mile, half a mile and a mile square. At present if a homesteader has a son who is approaching the age of eighteen it is the practice of the department, should the young man want a homestead, to hold a quarter section for him until he reaches that age.

Mr. FOSTER. How long in practice have you held it.

Mr. OLIVER. One year. We sometimes have exceeded that period. We think that the principle is not a bad one, and in order to recognize it and at the same time provide against its abuse, we have provided that it shall be permitted to hold a homestead for one year for a young man who is seventeen years old.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that provided as a right or favour ?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been a matter of favour but we propose to make it a matter of right. Another provision gives priority to an entry telegraphed from a subagency to an agency. This is the practice and we thought it proper to embody it in the Bill. We have some eight or ten agencies throughout the Northwest. It would not be possible to provide for the accommodation of the work of the land department in those agencies. Therefore we would have to either multiply the agencies or provide, as has been done, subagencies. A subagency does not take an entry ; it is simply a means of communicating the entry to the head office. By not leaving on the subagency the responsibilities of an agency, the work of the subagency becomes practically merely clerical in the narrowest sense of the word. The subagency receives the application and the fee of the proposed homesteader and transmits these to the agent, when the agent makes the entry and transmits the receipt. It is frequently found, however, that the person who applies for entry for a homestead at the office of a subagency is cut out by another person who has actually made entry at the agency. Now, in order to preserve as far as possible a reasonable priority to the man who has made his application to a subagency, we have been in the habit of providing that if he saw fit to pay the cost of telegraphing the fact of his having put in his application at the subagency, the agent would hold that land against the arrival of his application. It is merely to give a fair and reasonable measure of priority to the application at a subagency.

Another provision is to provide for timber permits on an area of half a mile or a mile square. As the law is administered at present, we have only the system of putting up timber berths for sale at auction. Any other timber that has to be cut is cut on permits, and it cannot be cut for sale; it can only be cut for the settlers' own use. It is found that in the wooded parts of the country there are frequently small clumps of spruce near settlements ; and if they could be cut up by local sawmills it would be greatly to the advantage of the neighbouring settlers. At the same time, the area of the clump or its value is not sufficient to warrant any person in incurring the expense or the delay of having such a berth put up to be bid for by tender. So we propose that any person shall be able to acquire a berth of not more than a mile square on application, conditional on his actual operation of the berth during the year within which he takes it. We believe that will be of very considerable advantage to the settlers in many parts of the country. It will obviate the necessity of having to put up a timber berth to competition in order to get any timber for sale, and I think will generally work to the advantage of the settlers and the settlement of the country. It is already provided for by regulation, but we thought it was a provision which might very well be embodied in the law.

Amongst the new provisions is one to permit the residence of a homesteader with relatives other than his parents. At the present time a homesteader may reside with his parents on their land, and still be accounted as fulfilling his residence duties on his own. We think it not unreasonable that that privilege should be extended. A great many cases of hardship have occurred by reason of a son living with his widowed mother in order to enable her to hold her homestead, but not able to earn his own because he was living with his mother and not with his father or his parents; and the same difficulty has occurred frequently as between two brothers or between a brother and a sister. So we thought it was not unfair to extend the privilege of residence with relatives to members of the same family, that is, father, mother, brother, sister, son or daughter.

Hitherto we have not defined the distance at which the homesteader might live from his homestead and still earn his patent. This distance has sometimes been unduly extended. We think it well to provide for a definite and fixed distance within which the residence must be exercised.

Mr. FOSTER. What does it matter, so long as you get the bona fide homesteader on his homestead ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is not on his homestead when he is living with his relatives.

Mr. FOSTER. You get him to make the improvements and complete the homestead.

Mr. OLIVER. It is considered very desirable that every quarter-section should be occupied as far as possible. There is a very strong and very natural objection against the holding of land without actual residence; and so, when residence was permitted at a considerable distance from the homestead, it was considered a grievance and an abuse. We wish to grant the privilege as far as we can, but to restrict it within a reasonable limit.

There is a provision for the issue of the patent to the heirs of a deceased person or to the guardian of a lunatic without residence of proxy. Hitherto the law has been very strict, that if a homesteader died his heirs must either reside upon the property themselves, or must provide some other person to reside upon it. Carrying out the principle which I have just laid down of the necessity of some person being actually in residence on the land in order to earn, the widow or the orphan children have frequently been deprived of any value in the homestead from the husband or the parent, because of this requirement. The circumstances may be such that it is impossible for the heir to live on the property or to get some other person to live upon it, and, while relaxing somewhat the requirements of actual residence on the land, we have thought it a fair and not unreasonable concession to those who were bereaved if that requirement were set aside so that the heir of the deceased person might be secure of the patent at the end of the term of three years from the date of entry by completing the cultivation and building duties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You merely eliminate the requirement of residence ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, in the case of the heir of a deceased person or in the case of a lunatic.

There is another provision which relaxes this condition. We have found that in a number of cases the homesteader has suffered physical disability from one cause or another. He may have lost a leg or a foot or his hands or a hand, and is not in a physical condition to complete his residence on the land. While it is undesirable, we fully admit, to forego the requirement of actual residence, at the same time appeals are made so strongly on behalf of those who have been so unfortunate, and these appeals must necessarily touch almost any one, that we have thought it fair and right to make the provision that in a case of such physical disability the residence might be dispensed with on the order of the Governor in Council.

We have also found necessity for some provision in regard to water-powers. The question of water-powers is, of course, more important now than it ever was before, and the existing law has not made any definite provision for dealing with that subject. We have therefore made provision, which will be more fully discussed later on, for dealing with water-powers in the territory which will come under the jurisdiction of this Act.

Another new provison is in connection with the acquiring of timber berths. There is admitted to be a defect or an abuse as it may be called in this connection. A person who wishes to acquire a timber berth goes out or hires some one else to go out and cruise the berth. This involves considerable expense, and after he has cruised the berth and satisfied himself of its value he asks to have it put up to public competition. It is put up to public competition, and some one else may get the berth perhaps at a very small advance on the bid of the man who cruised it, and first brought it to the view of the public. We are offering for the consideration of the House a suggestion in this connection which is that when a person asks that a timber berth be put up to public competition he is entitled to put in a bill of expenses, of course subject to the revision of the department, which expenses will be added to the tendered price of the berth and will have to be paid by the otherwise successful tenderer. This is rather offered for the consideration of the House than as an amendment to be insisted on but there has been considerable complaint, there has been some confusion and we think it is at any rate a fair matter for discussion——

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose all the contestants have cruised it ?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course that is a question. The position is a difficult one, we want to do something and we possibly may be led into doing harm instead of good. We are putting this in the form of a Bill and if the House is good enough to approve we will take the responsibility.

Perhaps the most important provision of the Bill is that dealing with the subject of pre-emption rights. We believe that the fact that the settler coming from the United States and from eastern Canada has been able to homestead a quarter-section free and to purchase an adjoining quarter-section from the railway company on the odd-numbered section, has been a very great inducement to the settlement of our country so far as it has gone. The belief there is that 160 acres may be a good farm but that 320 acres is a very much better farm, and the fact that a 320 acre farm could be acquired at a reasonable price by locating a homestead on an even-numbered section and purchasing from the railway company on the odd-numbered section we believe has been a very great incentive to the settlement of our country by the best class of people, that is people with means and ability to carry on farming operations on a considerable scale. Now it is a fact that to a very considerable extent the even-numbered sections adjoining the odd-numbered sections which are held by the railway companies have been taken up. There are still of course, it is true, a number of millions of acres, but it is also true that in a very large part of what we may call the railway belt the even-numbered sections are already homesteaded and people are beginning to look in the country which is outside of the railway belt for their homesteads. If we make no provision for their acquiring more than the homestead we believe that the great attraction which brought the better class of settlers to our country will be withdrawn ; that is, if we offered both odd-numbered sections and even-numbered sections simply for homesteading. We believe that by putting as the Bill proposes to do the odd and even-numbered sections in the one class, and offering an adjoining quarter-section at a fair price and on settlement conditions to the homesteader who takes a free homestead, we will as far as we can parallel the existing conditions outside of the territory covered by the railway land grant and thereby we hope to be able to keep up that stream of desirable immigration that has added so greatly to the wealth and prosperity of our country during the past few years.

This I might say is the important feature of the Bill, as it deals with the odd-numbered sections which are now practically released from the control of the railway companies.

Mr. FOSTER. Numbering about how many acres ?

Mr. OLIVER. About 40,000,000 acres, as nearly as we can calculate.

Mr. GREENWAY. Is that surveyed ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, no, unsurveyed, everything. I have some figures here which I will take the opportunity of giving to the House and I have also a map which I shall lay on the table showing the territory to which I allude.

Mr. GREENWAY. Is a portion of this in the semi-arid region ?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Approximately where does this lie ?

Mr. OLIVER. Draw a line at about latitude 52 which is north of Dauphin, across Manitoba, and run it through Saskatchewan and Alberta at about latitude 55. South of this line we have a total area of 175,000,000 acres exclusive of water. There have been of this area alienated or reserved 97,000,000 acres, as follows : for railway land grants, 32,000,000 acres ; for Indian, Hudson bay, school lands, Manitoba swamp lands and forest reserves, 25,000,000 acres ; for homesteads and sales, 40,000,000 acres. The area remaining is about 80,000,000 acres of which, of course, one-half would be odd-numbered sections. The main purpose of this Bill is to declare that the reservation which has hitherto lain on the odd-numbered sections is now withdrawn, and that odd and even-numbered sections stand together for disposal by the government and available to the first applicant. This applies to 40,000,000 acres over which the government hitherto has exercised no control.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These lands are now free from the claim of any railway company or other corporation ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the minister any computation showing what proportion of these lands are suitable for agricultural purposes ?

Mr. OLIVER. It would be impossible to give a computation of that. All these lands are within the lines within which profitable agriculture is carried on, but, of course, it would be impossible to say just what proportion is now valuable and still more difficult to say what proportion may ultimately become valuable. At present, people are looking only for the best, for that land which can be brought under cultivation without difficulty. But, no doubt, many millions of acres are included in this area which are not looked upon as valuable to-day, but, which in course of time will be made valuable by improvement and settlement as it progresses.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Can the minister state what proportion of the land lies within the provinces respectively ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have some figures here relating to that point, but they do not enable me to give an answer to the hon gentleman's question.

Mr. GREENWAY. Can the minister tell us whether he can designate now the sections that are surveyed ? That is, if a man wants a quarter-section, can the minister tell him whether it is available or not ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Can the minister say what proportion of the 40,000,000 acres is surveyed ?

Mr. OLIVER. A very small part. A very large proportion of the country was surveyed many years ago, especially along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in what is called the 'dry country' where there is little settlement. But these surveys are of no value to-day, although the map indicates that the country has been surveyed. The surveys are a very little beyond the boundary of the present settlement. The great part of the country remains to be surveyed.

In dealing with the questions of pre-emption, I might point out, we are dealing not only with the choice part of the country but with all the country. The government, in administering the lands is charged with the responsibility of developing the whole country, not only that which is good but that which is medium and that which is bad. Inasmuch as the railway companies, many years ago, made their selections they, no doubt, took the best. And, their selections having been followed by settlement to a very great extent, we must assume that, however good the balance of the country may be, the best of it, so far as the odd-numbered sections at any rate are concerned, has already been alienated, and a considerable proportion of the even-numbered sections also. When we deal with pre-emptions we are dealing with the question of settling the rest of the country, outside the railway land grants and not within the railway land grants. As I have said it is provided that outside of the railway land grants there shall be the right of pre-emption ; that is, the settler may take a homestead and pre-emption. But, within the land grant, we do not give him that right. Within the railway land grants he takes his homestead as he has always done, and, if he wishes increased area, he buys it from the railway company. This Bill deals with the odd-numbered sections, and, of course, it can deal only with those odd-numbered sections that have not been alienated. We make provision for dealing with the land in the odd-numbered sections where we have them to dispose of, but in the part of the country where they have been alienated, this provision does not apply.

Mr. AMES. What does the minister do about those parts of the country where the railway companies have had the right to select out of a larger area than that which they are empowered to choose, so that when they choose there will be a considerable quantity of secondary land left within the railway belt ?

Mr. OLIVER. The provision in the Bill is that land within the areas chosen by the railway is not subject to pre-emption. So far as the areas which are now held by the railway companies for selection, are concerned, we hope that within a very short time the railway companies will have completed their selection, and the reservation will be withdrawn, and any land that they have not taken will be open to be dealt with under the terms of the Bill. But, for the present, within the limits of railway reserves, the pre-emption does not apply.

Mr. FOSTER. This legislation is not retroactive in any way ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are some sections which are retroactive——

Mr. FOSTER. I mean the pre-emptions.

Mr. OLIVER. I will call attention to any that may be retroactive. Those that relate to the heirs of deceased persons are so worded that they may have a retroactive effect, but otherwise the effort has been to confine the operations of the Bill to the future.

Mr. FOSTER. Your pre-emption provision is not retroactive ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Has the minister any map or calculation showing in what part of the country the railways have selected their land ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly. I could lay the map on the table now if I had an opportunity to go to my room and find it.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Has the minister any idea where the greatest selection has been made—in the south or in the north ?

Mr. OLIVER. The bulk of the country which has been selected is in southern Manitoba, eastern Saskatchewan, running northwesterly, and in northern Alberta. But a glance at the map would give the member a better understanding of the situation than I could give in a long talk. However, the selections of all the railroad companies have actually been made, except by the Canadian Northern in respect of their rights as to a Hudson bay railway and as respects the Manitoba South Eastern. There may be some exchanges to a small extent with other railway companies, but of a trifling character.

Mr. AMES. Is it expected that if a Hudson bay road is built by the Canadian Northern the selection of the lands will come in that same belt as other railway lands are to be chosen from?

Mr. OLIVER. The Canadian Northern will, within a very short time, complete all the railway construction which will entitle them to any land grant, and the land to which they are entitled, what they have earned of it, has been selected, but the selection of what they are earning now, of course, has not yet been made, but will be shortly.

Mr. AMES. The minister referred a moment ago to a new land grant that they were entitled to in case they constructed a line from Erwood to Hudson bay. If they construct such a line will they not be entitled to an additional land grant under existing statutes, and if they are entitled to such additional land grant for such construction is it intended to allow them to select it in what is known as the present railway belt?

Mr. OLIVER. No, they are entitled to a land grant for construction as far as the Saskatchewan river, and they are entitled to select the land pertaining to that construction within the reserves that are already set apart. That construction, I think, is within thirty miles of completion ; it will be completed within a few months. Beyond the Saskatchewan river, while there is a provision in the Lands Act permitting the government to give a railway company completing a line to Hudson bay a grant of 12,800 acres per mile, there is no reservation for such a grant, there is no order in council giving such a grant, and so far as I am aware, that is not the intention of the government.

Mr. AMES. Would these lands have to be selected north of the Saskatchewan river?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY.

Mr. OLIVER. Not under the terms of the statute. The statute does not limit the location of the selection. The former order in council did limit the selection, or did limit the location to that part north of the North Saskatchewan river, but that order in council expired by efflux of time, and has not been renewed.

Mr. HERRON. I presume they have a considerable quantity of land in Southern Alberta, in odd-numbered sections, that is not settled on. Do I understand the minister to say that that land is not now going to be thrown open for pre-emption or homesteads either under this new Bill?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know how the hon. gentleman can understand that. I have said that all the odd-numbered sections which had hitherto been held under reserve will not, after this Bill passes, be under reserve, and will be available for disposition by the government according to the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. AMES. I understand that the order in council which permitted the selection of 12,800 acres of land per mile north of the North Saskatchewan river to any railway company which might construct a line to Hudson bay has expired by efflux of time. Now, is there any legislation presently in force which constitutes, as it were, a sort of mortgage on the remaining part south of the North Saskatchewan river which would entitle a company building to Hudson bay to lay claim to lands south of the North Saskatchewan river in satisfaction of their grant?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a question which my hon. friend can answer as well as I can. He knows the terms of the Act and he knows what the effect is. I will recite to the House again, that the Lands Act of 1886 sets out that the Governor in Council has authority to grant to a railway company building a line, or in aid of a railway built from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Winnipeg to Hudson bay, 6,400 acres of land per mile within the province of Manitoba, and 12,800 acres of land per mile for every mile beyond the province of Manitoba—there is no limitation of any kind. That is the authority that the Governor in Council have; it all depends on how the Governor in Council exercises that authority. Up to the Saskatchewan river the Governor in Council has exercised authority, beyond the Saskatchewan river the Governor in Council has not exercised authority, at least the authority exercised has expired. It would be possible to-morrow for the Governor in Council to grant to anybody under the terms of that Land Act 12,800 acres of land per mile for a railroad from the Saskatchewan river to Hudson bay, and to say where that land might be taken.

Mr. AMES. Anywhere?

Mr. OLIVER. Anywhere, so far as I understand it, but it is not the policy of the government to do that.

Mr. AMES. What I desire to ascertain is whether this Act of which the minister has spoken constitutes, as it were, a hinderance or an embarrassment to throwing open the remainder of the non-selected railway lands for settlement south of the North Saskatchewan river ?

Mr. OLIVER. We do not recognize that it is a hindrance in any way. When the Canadian Northern has completed their line to the Saskatchewan river, all rights, as we understand it, to lands south of that river, have been earned and can be dealt with without any question.

Mr. AMES. All obligations have then been fulfilled?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, as we understand it, although we could create an obligation if we desired to do so.

Mr. LENNOX. Making a provision as to a portion of these lands, in section 76 of this Bill, subsection (d), you re-enact that :

The Governor in Council may make a free grant of land not exceeding in extent 6,400 acres for each mile within Manitoba, and not exceeding in extent 12,800 acres for each mile outside the province of Manitoba, in aid of the construction of a railway from some point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Hudson bay.

You re-enact that provision.

Mr. OLIVER. We re-enact that provision because it has been operated under and its operation has not been completed as far as the Saskatchewan river. Had the line of the Canadian Northern now been completed to the Saskatchewan river, we would not have felt bound to re-enact that provision, but it not having been completed to the Saskatchewan river, and until they have received the land to which they are entitled under that Act and the following orders in council, we are bound to keep that provision alive.

In regard to the general policy of the government as to lands, while I do not wish to enter into any controversy to-day, I think it is only fair to give the House some figures showing the result of the policy of this government as compared with that of the former government. I find that from 1870 to 1896 there were alienated to persons or corporations in homesteads 6,500,000 acres of land; there were alienated in sales 3,500,000 acres; in scrip to half-breeds. 1,500,000 acres in those years.

In the years from 1896 to 1906 the homesteads amounted to 20,000,000 acres and the areas covered by sales and half-breed scrip amounted to 1,750,000 acres. There was twice as much land alienated between 1896 and 1906 as between 1870 and 1896. Over three times as much was alienated as homesteads; and only one-third as much alienated in sales and half-breed scrip. The policy of this government has been to administer the land for the settler, and the object of this Bill is to carry that policy to its legitimate conclusion by opening up to homesteaders the odd-numbered sections, some 40,000,000 acres hitherto held under reserve.

The policy which led to this reservation of all the odd-numbered sections was one radically different from that of the present government. In all the years from 1881 to 1896 the policy of the late government was that the west should pay for its own railways with its own land, and this policy was amplified in two important particulars. One was that the Northwest provided the land grant for nearly a thousand miles of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Ontario and British Columbia, and the other that at one time not only was the land of the Northwest expected to build the railways of that country but the Northwest was required to pay into the general treasury one dollar per acre for the privilege of its lands being used for that purpose. When this government came into power in 1896, the Northwest was put on the same footing with all the rest of Canada in the matter of aid to railways. No more land grants were made, and Northwest railways have since been aided in cash or guarantees, as were railways in the other provinces. The object was to secure the general development of the country by railways running east and west, with the immediate or ultimate object of giving the commercial centres and seaports of eastern Canada the best possible connection with the prairies and to give the prairies the best possible outlets to the Pacific coast.

It may be interesting to know that there have been completed in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, under land grant, three thousand miles of railway and in Ontario and British Columbia 918 miles, so that the total mileage of railways built under grants of land in those provinces was 3,918, and the land grants amounted to 32,000,000 acres.

Mr. FOSTER. Which were Dominion lands.

Mr. OLIVER. That was the policy of the late government.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Has the present administration revived any land grants that have lapsed?

Mr. OLIVER. No, but they have carried out in good faith the undertakings entered into by their predecessors. Since this government has attained power, there have been completed in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, without land grants, 3,337 miles of railway. There are now under contract in these provinces without land grant, 1,591 miles of railway, giving a total railway mileage in these three western provinces, either completed or under contract, of 4,938 miles, as compared with 3,000 miles, under the late administration, built at a cost of 32,000,000 acres of Northwest land. So that nearly 2,000 miles more of railway have been built without land grants, under the policy of this administration, than was built with land grants under the late government. Besides these 3,000 miles in the Northwest, there were 918 miles built in British Columbia and Ontario. We have now in the Northwest, either completed or under contract, nearly 5,000 miles of railway which have not cost the Northwest an acre of land.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. minister allow me? What in the world is he driving at? If he wants the House to consider and discuss the present Dominion land legislation, why does he introduce all this controversial matter, which brings up at once a comparison of policies between a time far back, as the march of events measures it, and a time just present or passing? In such a comparison it would be competent for any one to show the difference between land altogether pioneer and land which is known and settled upon and has come out in the blaze of population and publicity. If the minister wants to have a controversial debate running back over twenty-five or thirty years and involving different policies and changing conditions, he is taking the most approved method of getting it. But in the meantime is he not forgetting that his object in explaining this Bill is to concentrate on it the best attention of the House in order that we may devise the most effective legislation? Let him get through with that and then go into controversial matter afterwards.

Mr. OLIVER. What I wish the House to understand is the importance of this Bill in carrying out the policy of the present government and the bearing that policy has on the welfare of the Northwest. I wish to point out that because of the radical change of policy inaugurated by this government, we have 40,000,000 acres of land in the Northwest open to settlement to-day. Had our predecessors remained in power and continued their policy, those 40,000,000 acres would be now in the hands of the railway companies, and settlers would have to pay the same prices as they are paying for the 32,000,000 acres granted these companies.

Mr. FOSTER. All dependent on two possible 'ifs.'

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Will the hon. gentleman go back a little further and tell us how many acres would have been alienated from the Crown had the policy of the McKenzie government been continued?

Mr. OLIVER. I am perfectly safe in leaving that to the vivid imagination of my hon. friends on the other side.

Mr. FOSTER. That blocks out several days work.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not dealing with possibilities or imagination but with facts, and I think I am perfectly justified in pointing out the advantage of a policy under which it has been possible to bring forward this legislation to-day. Perhaps it may not be out of place to give a little calculation as to what that policy has cost the people of the Northwest, is costing them to-day, and is costing the country at large in retarding development. If we estimate, that, of the 32,000,000 acres of land, 8,000,000 acres have been sold at $3 per acre that will represent $24,000,000. And, if the remaining 24,000,000 acres are sold at an average price of $8 per acre—and that may very well be—the return to the railway companies will be $192,000,000, which the people of the Northwest will have to pay because of that 3,000 miles of railway accommodation. The total charge upon the people of the west at that valuation—and I submit it is a fair valuation, for land which is the pick of the country, and which has the advantage of railway communication and railway development—the total charge upon the people of the Northwest on that valuation is $216,000,000, or, a railway bonus of $72,000 a mile.

Mr. AMES. Does the minister include in the 32,000,000 acres the 9,000,000 (about) which was sold back to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I have charged the Canadian Pacific Railway with a little over 18,000,000 acres on their main line. I will give the hon. gentleman the particulars.

Canadian Pacific Railway main line—

Subsidized in land, 1,902 miles.

Line in Ontario and British Columbia, 900 miles.

Line in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, 1,000 miles.

Total land subsidy, 18,000,000 acres.

On main line in Manitoba—

Saskatchewan and Alberta, 11,000,000.

Away from main line in Dauphin district—

On Saskatchewan, near Battleford, and in north Alberta, 7,000,000.

Canadian Pacific Railway, Souris branch, in southwestern Manitoba and southeastern Saskatchewan, 220 miles.

Land subsidy, 1,400,000 acres on Manitoba and Northwestern Railway in northwestern Manitoba and north of township 35 in eastern Saskatchewan, on Saskatchewan river.

Canadain Pacific Railway, Pipestone extension of Souris branch in southeastern Saskatchewan, 31 miles.

Land subsidy, 200,000 acres, north of Saskatchewan river in Saskatchewan.

Canadian Pacific Railway, Manitoba Southwestern, 278 miles.

Land subsidy, 1,400,000 acres.

1,100,000 near railway line, 300,000 north of Lethbridge, 600 miles distant.

Saskatchewan and Western Railway in Manitoba, 15 miles.

Land subsidy, 98,000 acres at Quill lakes in Saskatchewan, 300 miles distant.

I forgot to say in speaking of the pre-emption question, that while we have provided for the taking of a pre-emption by a settler who comes in and who takes land outside of the railway belt—or the areas within which the odd-numbered sections have been taken by the railway company; while we have made provision for a pre-emption there we have felt it was desirable to meet the conditions that are consequent upon that provision. That is to say, we are apparently giving this new settler, the man who comes into the country now, a better opportunity than the man who has been in the country for some years. The man who came in a year ago, or who came in last month, and who took a homestead, could only get 160 acres from the government, although he has the privilege of buying from the railway company if he should happen to be so situated. But, there is a possibility that the men who are in the country to-day will feel that they are being to some extent discriminated against in favour of the new settler, by the provisions of this Bill as far as I have stated them. We have thought that the men who have been first in the field, the men who have taken the chances, whose labour and whose capital have developed the country so far as it has gone, are certainly entitled to every fair consideration so long as the public interest does not suffer. And we have thought that it was not an unreasonable proposition, that where a settler who is in the country at the passage of this Bill is not so situated as to enable him to acquire a pre-emption immediately alongside his homestead, that he may have the privilege, after he completes his duties on his present homestead, of taking up a pre-emption elsewhere—the same duties being required of him on the second homestead or pre-emption as are required from the new settler upon his.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it is retroactive?

Mr. OLIVER. We do not consider that as retroactive; we create a privilege.

Mr. GREENWAY. That applies to those who will have their patents when the Bill passes.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly. We create a privilege, but we do not think it is retroactive legislation. We have changed the law in regard to one class of people and we have made what we consider fair provision in regard to another.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the third class?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not gone further than the two classes.

Mr. FOSTER. I would point out to the minister that he is still doing a great injustice. He adds this second pre-emption to the man who has not yet completed his homestead, may be by a month, and he does it on the ground that the pioneer must get some consideration. Well, there is a man alongside of him who has just completed his homestead work a month ago; he came in earlier, underwent greater hardships, was obliged to make greater expenditure, and there is just a month's difference between the two. If there is an obligation to go from the absolutely new to the old, there is certainly an obligation just as strong to go a little further back, and a little further back, and a little further back, until you get to the old pioneer; the first pioneer who went in there when nobody else would go; the first pioneer who took his life in his hands and sacrificed the comfort of his family, and made it possible by blazing out the paths that others could go. Are you going to let him lay his grey hairs down without a single recognition from the Minister of the Interior. That is awful.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry my hon. friend has not read the provision.

Mr. FOSTER. I am asking what it is.

Mr. OLIVER. The provision is intended to meet the case not only of those who have not yet received their patents, but those who are in the country and who have enjoyed the right to a single homestead. They are given under the provisions of this Bill what may be called in one way a second homestead.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you go back to the first.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes. But the difference between that and the ordinary homestead is, that they must pay a price for the land, and they must do extra duties upon it.

Mr. GREENWAY. Has the hon. gentleman exempted those who have got a second homestead?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. GREENWAY. You propose to give these, three quarter-sections?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, if they have been in long enough I think they are entitled to it. My hon. friend (Mr. Greenway) asks, if the people who, under the law as it stands, are entitled to a second homestead, will be excluded from the privilege of buying a quarter-section, and doing resident duties. I say no.

Mr. GREENWAY. The hon. gentleman does not understand me. I asked, does he exempt those who, under the law of July, 1892, obtained a second homestead, if they had got the previous homestead prior to 1889 ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. Everybody who under the present law has secured a homestead has earned the right to a second homestead. If there is any injustice in this, it is, I think an injustice on the right side.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Can the minister tell me if under the Act the man who has not got his patent for his homestead can pre-empt any other than the adjoining quarter-section ?

Mr. OLIVER. Until he gets his patent, he can pre-empt only the adjoining quarter-section, but after he gets his patent, he may go and pick out any other quarter section elsewhere, and live on it and pay for it.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY: There seems to be a distinction between the man who has got his patent and the man who only makes his homestead entry, from the date the Act comes into force. If I understand the provision of the Bill, the man who is living on his homestead, but has not completed his homestead duties, and has not got his patent, can pre-empt only the adjoining quarter-section, so that if that quarter-section should not happen to be available, he could not pre-empt at all.

Mr. OLIVER. No. The man who has only made his homestead entry the day before the Act comes into force may pre-empt the quarter-section adjoining his homestead, if there is one, just in the same way as if he had made his homestead entry the day after the Act came into force ; but if there is not such a quarter-section immediately adjoining, then he cannot pre-empt until he has become entitled to the patent of his homestead. Having become entitled to that, he can go elsewhere and pre-empt another quarter-section, and settle on it and pay for it, and become entitled to the patent of it in three years.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. If there are any left ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, if there are any left.

Mr. GREENWAY. Then every one who has got a homestead is entitled to a pre-emption at some time ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HERRON. If a new man makes an entry for a homestead, can he enter for a quarter-section in one part of the country, and enter for another at the same time within a nine-mile radius ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The man who comes in under the terms of this Act must make his entry for his homestead and at the same time his entry for a pre-emption of the adjoining quarter-section. If he does not enter then for a pre-emption of the adjoining land, he loses his right.

Mr. GREENWAY.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Suppose there is none ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is his loss.

Mr. LAKE. Can a man who has obtained his patent and left his farm and taken up some other occupation in the country, make a pre-emption entry ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, he can by fulfilling the terms of the Act. He must reside on it, build a house of a certain value, make certain improvements, and pay a certain price.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to ask one further question on that point. Suppose he has made a previous entry, sold his homestead and left the country and gone to the United States and then returned, can he purchase a pre-emption ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly. The fact of his absence from the country would not make any difference. He would be in the same position as if he had never left.

Reverting again to the railway question, my hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames) has already called attention to the subject of a railway to Hudson bay. That is a matter which has been very strongly in the minds of the western people for very many years. It was so strongly in the mind of the government of the day that as far back as 1886, I am not sure but before that time, provision was made on what must be considered a very liberal scale for aid for such a railroad. As I have already stated, there is a provision in the Land Act of 1886 providing for a grant of 6,400 acres for every mile of the railway in Manitoba and 12,800 acres for every mile of the railway beyond the boundary of Manitoba to the bay. By the introduction of this Bill and the policy it embodies, there are no further reservations of land grants being made for railways. This provision, however, remains in the Act, and of course it may be acted upon ; but the terms of the Act are that all lands are open to settlement, and the expectation is that provision will not be made under the terms of this Bill for a land grant in aid of the construction of a railroad to Hudson bay. This government has not hitherto granted any lands in aid of railway construction, and, as far as I am aware, has no intention of doing so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do you put in the provision ?

Mr. OLIVER. Because the road is not completed to the Saskatchewan river. To that point the people who own the road have their rights, and we put in the provision simply to preserve their rights until the road is completed to that point. We have simply continued the provision under which they have constructed. There is no doubt that the subject is one that cannot be dismissed. The people of the west are strongly of the mind that there should be a railway to Hudson bay, and the government could scarcely come before the House and the country with a proposition which looks to the ignoring of the provision already made on behalf of that railway without some announcement to the House and the country in regard to the matter. The government is fully convinced of the propriety of giving the Northwest an additional railway outlet by way of Hudson bay at the earliest possible date. The government believes that with the increase in production of the west now in progress such an additional outlet will be urgently needed as soon as a railway can be built, even if it were commenced at once. At the same time it realizes that public opinion throughout Canada could scarcely be expected at the moment, in view of the great obligations already incurred in connection with railway enterprise to sanction the additional obligation that would be incurred by providing immediately for the construction of a railway to Hudson bay, unless special provision were made to meet that obligation. It believes, however, that there will be no objection from any quarter if the funds accruing from the disposal of pre-emptions in the three prairie provinces, under the terms of the proposed Land Bill shall be considered as a provision in place of the land grant stated in the Act to meet the burden upon the credit of the Dominion as a whole that must be assumed at an early date—if not immediately—if a railway is to be in operation to Hudson bay in time to meet the urgent need that is now in plain sight for an additional and shorter railway route from the prairies to tide water. I beg leave to move the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. THOMAS GREENWAY (Lisgar). I have a rather unpleasant duty to perform in reference to this Bill, and I think I might as well get it off my mind at the first opportunity. Nothing that I have had under my consideration for a great many years, has given me so much concern as the Bill now before the House. I shall not go into the details of the Bill, more than to say, that any provision which takes away from the department the jurisdiction to deal with individual cases that may come before it in connection with homesteading, is to be deplored. I believe there is only one way by which you can administer that department to the satisfaction of the people, and that is by considering the individual cases upon their merits. If there is one thing that commended itself to my mind, more than another, it was the administration of my hon. friend the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) in that connection. As has been pointed out by the minister (Mr. Oliver) cases arise that the law cannot provide for, and if there is one department of this government that cannot be run by rule—fixed by law or in any other way that you like to fix it—it is the administration of the homestead law in western Canada.

Now Sir, as I have said, I am not going into the details of the Bill, but I want to present this consideration to the House—and I think the minister's speech will bear me out—that, considering the great interests that are involved, considering that this is an entirely new departure, we should give ourselves plenty of time to think over what it is we are doing. We have had a Dominion Lands Act since 1874, and any material amendment to that Act which occurs to me at this moment, has been rather against the western country than for it. I am sure that my hon. friends from the west, who know anything about the working of the Act which was passed in 1892 and which provided for a second homestead, will agree with me that it was one of the worst things that was ever done for that country. And now, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) astonishes me by saying, that he proposes that those who made their entries prior to 1889 under that Act, and got a second homestead, shall be given a third homestead. The hon. gentleman proposes to give them a pre-emption right under this Act, and they will have received 480 acres of land instead of 320. I have considered the land policy of respective governments for a long number of years, nearly 30 years, and I am one of those who have come to the conclusion that it would have been much better in the interests of the west, if 160 acres, and 160 acres alone were given for a homestead. That is my opinion after full consideration. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) spoke of the sparse settlements. Well, the sparse settlements were brought about by giving large areas in homestead and pre-emption. It appears to me that 160 acres of the good land that we have to offer, is a sufficient inducement to any one who wants to get a farm. I know numbers of people in my own country who have settled down upon 160 acres of that fertile land and who have made themselves a competency in a few years. And Sir, when I look over the record what do I find. I find that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), having presented a beautiful map of the Dominion of Canada to the public and distributed it far and wide as an advertisement, sets out upon one prominent corner of it, that the great inducement which he offers is 160 acres of free land. Let us see how this has worked out. In 1874 we had a land Act which remained for a long time, until the railway regulations came in on the first of August 1879, and the odd-numbered sections were set apart for railway purposes. I may say here now, that I have been one of these who have thought that it would be a good thing if the lands coming back into the hands of the government in pursuance of the policy which they adopted—and which I think is a good one. I am one of those who think it would be a good thing if the odd-numbered sections of land had been made something special. But Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) gets appropriations for immigration to induce people to come to the Northwest, and that is a praiseworthy object, but I ask him, what it is that he proposes to do by this Bill. He proposes to give to the people who are presently in the Northwest, all the land he has to give away.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. GREENWAY. That is precisely what he does. Go through the records, if you will, with me, and let us see how it has come out. On the first day of January, 1890 the law came into force which did away with the pre-emption. Up to that time. there had been taken in 16 years, a little less than 45,000 homesteads. Now, what happened after the pre-emption was done away with. Down to the end of the last fiscal year, 197,000 homesteads were taken from the time that the pre-emption was done away with. Then Sir, I have estimated for the few months since the fiscal year ended on the 30th of June last, that on the proportion of what was done last year, there would be 20,000 homesteads, and so we have had altogether 260,000 homesteads; or, 215,000 homesteads that remain to be satisfied. My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) last session, went into a very careful calculation of the quantity of land that was still available in the fertile belt. I asked my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) the other day for a copy of his speech, and I find that my own calculation as to what we have really available, what is surveyed, what is ready for settlement, pretty nearly agrees with the calculation of my hon. friend.

The estimate of my hon. friend covers the country up to township 69. If he (Mr. Oliver) had gone a little further north, the figures of his estimate would have been larger. But I am speaking now of the land available for settlement this year, ready for the immigrant to go on to—ready for any one to go on to according to this Bill. We have now about 20,000,000 acres of land. Now, Sir, what does that mean? My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) is offering an inducement to settlers who are presently settled in Manitoba and Saskatchewan to move away from the places in which they are now settled. The man who years ago, sat down upon his land and has seen it rise in value from $1 or $2 or $3 an acre to $30 or $35 an acre is offered a bonus to go west and get another quarter-section in the hope of accomplishing again the same result. The hon. minister is offering a bonus to do what? To take away people from Manitoba and a great many from Saskatchewan and settle them somewhere west. I say that is not in the interest of that country. It is not desirable that there should be the demoralization of the population which this Bill will effect. I know whereof I speak, for I have numbers of letters indicating the way in which this inducement which the minister proposes to offer is regarded. Knowing the individuals as I do, knowing that they have good homes and all the necessaries for good successful farming, I am not willing that they should be asked, as they are by this Bill, to leave the places they now occupy. These people write me asking where one of these quarter-sections is to be obtained. I have numbers of letters of that kind, and I fancy that my hon. friend's department must have many of the same. I have taken occasion to talk to my friends about this Bill, and many of them have said to me: I find the Bill very popular. Popular. If you are going to give a man a quarter-section of land at $3 an acre that, in some cases, is worth $10 or $15 an acre, is it not quite likely that the offer will be popular? But, is it in the best interests of western Canada—that is the question that I would like to see answered. Consider for a moment the interests that are involved. Let me give you one or two figures. Suppose, for instance, that only 60,000 homesteaders avail themselves this year of the privilege offered. Multiply that by 160 acres, and you have a total of 9,600,000 acres of land. And suppose that, through the policy of the government—which is a good one—in inducing immigrants to come in, we get as many homesteaders as last year. Let us say, 40,000—last year it was 41,800, and there is no reason why the number should not be as great this year. The hon. minister proposes to give the newcomer 320 acres. That would mean, for these homesteaders and immigrants this year a total of 22,400,000 acres of land—more land than we have to offer. My hon. friend may get up and talk about the advantages of this Bill, but here is the point not to be overlooked. (His last declaration in reference to the Bill is a good one—the building of the Hudson bay railway—but I do not know that it is necessary to consider that in connection with the administration of the public lands.) The minister's proposal involves no less than 22,400,000 acres of land. Could any greater calamity happen to this country—for the interests of Canada are bound up with the development of the west—than that it should be said within a year from to-day, as I predict it will be said a year from to-day should this Bill pass, that we have not a quarter-section of desirable land to offer the settler? I do not care to enlarge upon this subject, because it appears so manifest to me that we ought not, without more careful consideration, deal with so grave a question. I asked my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) what area of land he had to offer. He did not appear to have the figures. I think that one thing we ought to have is a very careful consideration of what lands are available and fit for settlement. I asked my hon. friend if he included the semi-arid district, and he said he did. This district, according to figures which I saw years ago, covers 50,000,000, or nearly so. On that point I may say that I fancy there are in that territory, a good many acres of land that are fit for settlement, so that it would be worth the government's while to consider whether it would not be advisable to give 320 acres of land to each settler in the semi-arid region. For the system of farming which has been carried on in similar districts in the United States involves the use of more land than does the kind of farming that we do in Manitoba where all the land is good. I refer to the system of 'dry farming' as it is called, in which the soil is cultivated one year to be cropped the next. Therefore, I say that, in such a section, for instance, as the southwest part of Saskatchewan, where there is a quantity of land that the Canadian Pacific Railway refused to take, this plan might be adopted with advantage. Of course, I do not say that some of that land might not be good for farming in the ordinary way. Nor do I wish to be understood as saying that the area which I have talked about is all that we have left. We have lands in the north the extent of which we do not know. These will be developed by and by, and we shall find there a large area which it will be desirable for us to occupy. These are questions that we must consider so that we may not come to a full stop in the work of developing western Canada. I have already suggested to my hon. friend the propriety of having an expert inspection of such lands as these. I believe that some of them have been alienated, the semi-arid, but a good deal more than half the area still remains. We have trouble with the ranchers. These people say: We have no permanency of holding, and so we do not feel like providing shelters or raising fodder, for we do not know when we may be notified to leave our holdings. My idea is that it might be discovered that some of the lands of which we are talking are only fit for ranchers, in which case it might be good policy for the government to give to the rancher a more permanent right of occupation than he has at the present time—something like the old closed lease, which gave the privilege of purchasing a certain portion.

I do think we ought to take a longer time to consider such a Bill as that now before the House than, as I understand it, we are likely to be afforded this session. The Bill comes down late in the session and proposes a very radical change, to my mind. I certainly hope that this Bill will not be pressed in its present form until we have a longer time and more opportunity to consider what are going to be its results. I repeat that I cannot conceive anything more detrimental to the interests of the people of Western Canada, especially to the province of Manitoba and to the eastern part of Saskatchewan, which I know very well, than to put upon the statute-book such a law as this. I do not need any further evidence than I have in my possession that it is going to be simply cruel to offer people this inducement. A man wrote me the other day, a man who has a beautiful farm, and he said, I have a couple of boys growing up, and I think we will go west, and each of us get a quarter-section of land. Well, I was perfectly amazed to think that that man would consider anything of that kind. But then I know the powerful influence, the desire there is on the part of every one to secure more land, and that is going to be the effect of this Bill. Some one said to me the other day that it was going to depopulate our province. I do not think it will do that, but it will have the effect of taking away from the province of Manitoba a very large number of people whom I would like to see remain.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman on what he bases his estimate that as many as 60,000 people would leaves their homes and go west? Why not 30,000, why not 90,000?

Mr. GREENWAY. Yes, and why not 150,000? I told my hon. friends that I had made the calculation from the report of the Department of the Interior, and that there were 220,000 homesteaders to whom the minister is saying to-day, I will give you another quarter-section of land. Was I not moderate in cutting that into four? I think I was.

Mr. KNOWLES. Again I ask my hon. friend: Is it not true that there are many hundreds and indeed thousands of homesteaders who already have the privilege of a second homestead under the Act, not at $3 an acre but for nothing, and who are not exercising it?

Mr. GREENWAY. I do not think there are a very large number, because that class of people are going to get 480 acres. What excuse is there for that? But my hon. friends tell me: We give one man two homesteads and a pre-emption. That does not look to me like evening things up, to say the least.

Mr. FOSTER. It will be popular for that class of men.

Mr. GREENWAY. Popular to the man who wants the land. But it has been suggested that we have lands in Manitoba. Now, so far as I understand the Manitoba situation, we have no such lands available at the present time, simply because the old Canadian Northern have not satisfied their land grant, the old Manitoba and Southeastern have not satisfied their land grant, the swamp lands that were going to the provincial government have not been handed over, and there are a great many pieces of land which we have to exchange, and which practically tie up the entire province of Manitoba. So that it is not competent for any one, unless he has exercised the right which my hon. friend gives him in another part of the Bill of squatting upon the land, to go in and get a pre-emption in Manitoba. The only effect it can have there is to take away from Manitoba, as I said before, the people who are there now comfortably situated.

Now, what will happen? I would not wish my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior anything bad. I would not suggest that I would like to see him in trouble, but if this Bill goes through, and the people stampede, as I know they will stampede in the western country, for the purpose of getting a quarter-section of this land, what troubles he is going to have! I do not think he has seen any troubles to compare with what he will see when people begin to run after these quarter-sections, which are limited. There are eight or ten agencies. I fancy if a man went to one of these agencies tomorrow, supposing this Bill were passed, and asked if such and such odd-numbered sections were open for settlement, they would have to tell him that they did not know. At least that is my experience. I had occasion, since I came down here, to submit to the department a number of sections of land, and I found that they had to go through three or four departments of the government before I could get my answer to know whether these lands were available. Now that difficulty and delay will be increased tenfold under the provisions of this Bill.

Now in addition to a remark which I made about the semi-arid district, I want to say that I think it would be a misfortune to induce people to go on the semi-arid lands, unless they are conversant with the mode of farming which has to be employed for the purpose of successful agriculture. My hon. friends from the west will remember perhaps, at least I do, when the Lester Kaye farm was bought from the Canadian Pacific Railway, I think, at $2.50 an acre, very elaborately fixed up, with fences, buildings and everything else, and the purchasers went away satisfied that these lands after all were no good, and abandoned them. That was a bad thing for the west, and it would be a bad thing to encourage settlement upon arid districts, a great portion of which is not fit for settlement, and cannot be profitably irrigated.

Now my hon. friends may think that I am speaking warmly. I am very sorry that I have to take this position, but I consider it my duty to do so, knowing as I do the west pretty well. I am sure my hon. friends will give me credit for not wishing to do anything against the interests of western Canada; that is one of the things that I will not do if I know it. But that being the case, I would say to the government that I hope they will not press this Bill through the House. I have already said that I do not object so much to the Bill, although it was a question whether pre-emption could apply in all districts—I did not object so much to that if it were not for its retroactive feature, and if it did not have the effect of inducing that unrest which we should not have in western Canada. I hope the government will consider these things, and I hope they will give us ample time to consider what should be done in the case of these lands. I have no objection to making some provision. My own idea was to sell the odd-numbered sections, somewhat as my hon. friend proposes, but let any one have them who would do the duties which he imposes. In conclusion I will say that I hope we shall have plenty of time to consider a Bill of this unusual character, constituting as it does, a new departure.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). We have seen the rather unusual spectacle this afternoon of a direct disagreement between the government and one of their most prominent supporters from the west, in regard to one of the most vital questions of their western land policy. The views of the hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) who has for so many years been premier of the province of Manitoba, must be given the most respectful and careful consideration by this House. I have no doubt they will receive such respectful and careful consideration. In the meantime, I beg to congratulate that hon. gentleman, at least, for the courage he has displayed in taking the stand he has taken.

I had understood when we met this afternoon that the House was going to consider the question of a consolidation of the Dominion Lands Acts, and that we were not to enter into a long discussion in regard to the policies of the two parties who have controlled successively the destinies of this Dominion.

I regret very much that the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has entered into such a controversial discussion. I was wondering why a measure of such importance to the country had been kept back so long and had only been brought down in the last weeks of the session, but perhaps the reason is to be found in the speech we have just heard. When the Bill creating the new provinces was under discussion some two years ago, I made the strongest protest I could against withholding the land of those provinces from provincial ownership and control. During that discussion the right hon. Prime Minister urged the necessity of adherring to the idea of confederation and keeping to the spirit of our constitution; but in no case was the spirit of our constitution more ruthlessly set aside than when its fundamental principle, the principle of the ownership and control by each province of the lands within its borders, was denied the new provinces. One of the hon. gentlemen sitting behind my right hon. friend on that occasion, who is now the premier of one of those provinces, referred to this principle as being the very keystone of the confederation structure. While the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia has each the sole management and control of its public domain, through its own provincial legislature, composed of members directly responsible to the people most intimately concerned, that right is denied our new provinces. This House, with a representation from the western provinces of very little more than half what the west is entitled to with its present population—this House, with less than one tenth of its members responsible to the parties most concerned, has to legislate on matters which should come entirely within the purview of the provincial legislatures. The legislation on such matters, under such conditions, can never be entirely satisfactory to the people of these new provinces, nor can it be expected that the administration of these Dominion lands from a centre thousands of miles away can ever be satisfactory. When 116,000 square miles of territory were added to the province of Quebec in 1898 from lands previously in the possession of the Dominion, the full ownership and control of those lands was handed over to that province. But when the new provinces in the Northwest were created out of the same Dominion owned lands, the ownership and control of their lands was denied the people of these provinces. Apparently they were not considered worthy to be entrusted with such ownership and control. In my opinion, it would have been infinitely better if the government had this session introduced a measure handing over to the three prairie provinces the ownership of their public lands rather than come down with such cumbersome and complicated legislation as the Bill before us. The conditions in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and parts of British Columbia differ very materially in many respects the one from the other, and legislation which may suit one portion may not be at all suitable for another. What may be good legislation for one province need not necessarily be good for another. But in this Bill we find an attempt to embody in the one measure legislation suitable to the whole of this vast area, extending as it does from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

I do not propose to occupy any more time discussing this particular question. The complexion of the House is pretty much the same as it was two years ago; and even if the government realizes, as it must, the mistake then made, we could hardly expect them now to go back on the legislation they then introduced. I only wish to reiterate my protest against the present conditions and I trust that an awakened pubilc sentiment will in the near future bring about a radical change in those conditions. Having entered my protest, I conceive it my duty to make the best of the situation as it exists and to endeavour to the best of my poor abilities, to assist in making this measure as good as possible. No doubt there is pressing necessity for some changes in the Dominion Lands Act, and that being the case, I do not propose to take any objection to the second reading of this Bill. Nor do I propose to discuss at any length its principle provisions, but shall reserve my criticism until the details come up for consideration.

I desire however to offer a few very brief observations. In the first place I take exception to the enormous discretionary powers conferred upon the Minister of Interior. Some of these are new and some have been acquired from time to time by legislation and by order in council. Let me recite a few in order to illustrate my meaning. Under this Bill, the minister becomes the sole arbiter as to the extent to which one class of duties, the cultivation duties shall be performed in order to enable the settler to claim his grant of free land, and that extent may vary in every individual case. The minister may, in certain cases, cancel entries made in good faith, with or without compensation. He becomes the arbiter in disputes between contending entrants and makes an award to one or the other, and from his award there is no appeal. He may grant compensation or not at his discretion for improvements on lands which have been cancelled for the non-fulfilment of the strict letter of the law. He fixes the price that shall be charged for pre-emptions. Should any entrant fail in his duties, the minister may cancel the entry and give back the money or not as he sees fit, and there is no appeal.

Then again, he may sell agricultural lands—and they are not properly defined in the Act—up to 640 acres, under general regulations by order in council, and without restrictions as to the minimum price which is to be charged, and without public competition. Again, he may sell grazing, hay, and marsh lands in any quantities, at any price, without competition, and under general regulations by order in council. In the same way, he may sell lands suitable for irrigation at any price, in any quantities; he can sell lands required for the development of water-powers; he can sell lands containing coal or other minerals, all under general regulations by order in council and without any restriction upon him with regard to price, or quantity, and without putting them up to public competition. He may also reserve from entry, or throw open to entry or sale, as he sees fit, vast areas of land without giving any due public notice in regard to them. If it is contrary to the interests of the people of this Dominion, and especially contrary to the interests of the people of the provinces concerned, that the parliament of the Dominion, instead of the provincial legislatures, should exercise powers of administration over the public domain of these provinces, how much more is it against the interests of the people that this parliament should delegate so many of its powers to one man. That man in his office in Ottawa, more than 1,000 miles away from the nearest point of the territory which is to be under his control, can exercise in some instances, more arbitrary powers than have been exercised in modern times by any constitutional monarch. In a sense, the Minister of the Interior is an absentee landlord with practically despotic powers over the people who become his tenants in that western country. I believe that some discretionary power should be given to the central authority which has to exercise the administration of the public domain, but I believe that these powers should be restricted within clearly defined limits, and that in all cases where the rights of individuals are concerned, there should be an appeal to the courts of the land. Such is not provided for in this Bill, so far as I can see. The people who are concerned in the administration of this law, the people who are settling our western lands, should know exactly where their rights begin and where they end. They certainly cannot tell what their rights are under the provisions of this Bill. In the hands of a Minister of the Interior like the present, whose attitude is well known in regard to partisan officials under his control these powers become specially dangerous. In spite of the resolution of this House that civil servants should not take part in active politics, the attitude of the Minister of the Interior has practically encouraged the hundreds of officials in his employ in the west to take part in elections. I need not go into details ; the attitude of the minister is pretty well known and pretty clearly understood by the members of this House. Therefore, if you have the settler without defined rights, and if you have at the same time partisan officials upon whose reports the future of that settler depends, you can imagine what tyranny may be exercised, and what injustice may be done. Such a thing should not be possible in a free country like ours. There should be in the Bill, and I hope to see it incorporated in committee, a provision for more publicity with regard to the standing of all the public lands which are open for entry. A person who desires to make an entry with regard to any parcel of land should know all the details in connection with that parcel. If there is a previous entry he should know when it was granted and to whom ; if others are before him on the list of applicants for cancellation he should know who they are and how many they are ; he should know if there have been any extensions of time for completion of the entry, or any leave of absence granted to the persons in possession. All these details should be completely open and above board ; the records of the land office should be open to the personal inspection of any one who chooses to inspect them. In committee, I shall discuss the details of the Bill, but I wish now to refer to one more matter, and it is a thing which has been prominently brought to our attention during the last two or three months. The coal and mineral areas of the Northwest should be under the control of the provincial authority. The regulation and inspection of mines comes under the purview of the provincial legislatures, but the royalties and the profits to be derived from these mines are retained in the hands of the Dominion. That is not as it should be. The events of the past few months point to the vital necessity for some change in the regulations concerning our mines and mining areas. I would stronly urge that such mining areas as still remain in the hands of the Dominion authorities, should be handed over completely to the ownership and control of the provincial authorities. The people of the western provinces hold very strong views in regard to this matter, and in many parts of that country they have passed the strongest resolutions advocating not merely provincial control of the mines but provincial ownership and provincial operation of these mines. During the last few months we have had a confession of impotence on the part of this administration in regard to coping with the very serious condition of affairs which has arisen in the Northwest owing to the shortness of fuel. The provincial authorities believe that is something they themselves could control if they had possession of their own mines. Therefore, I say that if the Dominion government are not able to deal with such a condition of affairs, but simply make a confession of impotence, let them put the matter into the hands of the provincial authorities, who believe that they certainly could have dealt with it. This would have prevented a state of intense anxiety which existed throughout that country in regard to the fuel suuply during the past winter.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my views very briefly before this measure passes its second reading. I regret that we have not received a fuller explanation from the Minister of the Interior in regard to the working of the different clauses of this Bill than we have had this afternoon. I think it would have been more profitable if the minister had, in the time he occupied, confined himself to an explanation of some of the very important and radical changes he proposes to adopt rather than in going back and stating the number of miles of railway constructed in the years 1872 and 1874. I propose to follow him in regard to the very few sections of the Bill to which he has referred. I gather that section 27 is the one which embodies the most radical changes in the law. That is the section which gives the right to every man who has his patent for his homestead of taking up another quarter section of land in any part of the new provinces. All he has to do then is to comply with the duties prescribed as to pre-emption. Any homesteader who has not obtained his patent has the right to take up only the quarter-section immediately adjoining his present one. Hon. gentlemen will see how the limitation of that privilege will in a great many cases work a very great hardship. Again, every person who is at all familiar with the surveys in that country knows that in every township sections 11 and 29 are school sections and sections 8 and 26 are reserved for the Hudson Bay Company; so that the homesteaders in a township where the odd-numbered sections around him are taken up or who is next to Hudson bay section, would be practically cut out of his right of pre-emption. Again, there may be a township which is very thickly settled, all the even-numbered sections being taken up, but for some reason the odd-numbered sections are left, but inferior land not selected by railway companies. The man who has his patent leaves that township and goes to another one and pre-empts 160 acres there, under a law which does not require him to live there at all, and is therefore detrimental to the establishment of schools, social conditions and other matters that are desirable for a dense settlement of the country. Do these considerations not indicate to us the error which this government committed two sessions ago in retaining under their control the administration of the lands in the western provinces? We have heard to-day a gentleman who I suppose knows as much about the present condition of affairs in Manitoba as any other hon. member of this House, stating that in Manitoba 160 acres is all that a man required to make a good living, though there may be people who think that in other provinces 160 acres is not enough. I also understood him to say that under this new law people who had exercised their right to pre-emption under the old law, could come back and get another 160 acres, or in all 480 acres; and the same man may have bought another section from a railway company. Is such an Act which brings about such a condition of affairs going to propose a dense settlement? But if this Bill must pass this House, then I consider it to be my duty to make any suggestions I can to make it more workable than it is at its present shape. If it is going to have the effect, as stated by the hon. gentleman, who was formerly Prime Minister of Manitoba, of doing away in a couple of years with all available land in the country, then I have only to express my regret that the Minister of the Interior has not seen fit to reserve certain portions of land for the purpose of encouraging higher education in the new western provinces. The hon. minister states in the notes to his Bill that the price he has put upon the lands is not for the purpose of profit to the country. Then, surely, if the provinces are not to have the administration of their own lands, we should at least save from the wreck a small portion in different parts of the country for the construction and maintenance of provincial universities. Such a provision has been adopted in many of the States of the Union.

I find that in Minnesota and in many other states they have some such law setting aside land for that purpose. May I ask the Minister of the Interior, before this Bill gets into committee to reconsider it and adopt what has proved to be a wise policy in so far as our school lands are concerned, by setting aside certain sections for the purpose of assisting higher education in that country. There is no necessity for my discussing the advantage of any such grant or of pointing out what a worthy thing it would be for the minister to set aside a portion of these lands, which he admits he is going to give away, for the purpose of promoting higher education.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. When you left the chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was endeavouring to point out that although the Bill is intended, if some of the arguments we heard this afternoon were correct, to alienate practically all the remaining lands in that country, there was no provision for retaining any portion of that land to assist in the construction and maintenance of provincial universities. I also pointed out in that the section referring to the school lands, apparently, the old idea has been abandoned. Apparently, it is not intended, in that section of the country known as the Northwest Territories, that is, the territory outside the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, to continue what seems to me to have been a most admirable provision in the Dominion Lands Act, the setting aside of certain sections for school purposes. This is the change that is proposed, if I read this Bill correctly, and if my interpretation of it is not correct, I would like to be set right by the Minister of the Interior. I was also discussing section 27 which gives the right to pre-empt quarter-sections under certain conditions. I obtained the information from the minister—I must confess it was with some difficulty that the section of the Act could be interpreted—that the man who has his patent to his land before this Act comes into force can obtain another quarter-section under the conditions of the Act anywhere in the territory which the Bill governs. I suppose it would not be necessary that he should even live in the same province. But the man who only has his homestead entered at the time this Act comes into force, although he may have been on the land three or four years, not having got his patent by complying with certain conditions, can only select land adjoining his quarter-section, and then only under certain conditions. I tried to impress upon the minister the fact that this could not but work out in great hardship in many cases. I tried to point out that the man who, for some reason or by some chance, had made his homestead entry next a section of land retained by the Hudson Bay Company would necessarily be limited in his selection of a pre-emption. There are two such sections in a great many townships, sections 8 and 26. So, the man who has entered his land adjoining the Hudson Bay Company's land, is obliged to take a much more limited selection and, in many cases, will be unable to pre-empt at all until he completes his homestead duties and gets his patent three or four years hence when, if there is land left under the operation of this pre-emption clause, he stands on the same footing with the man who has his patent to-day. From the perusal I have been able to give the Bill it seems to me that the man who went into that country with his money and bought a quarter-section of school land or railway land, or, Hudson bay land, has no right to pre-empt any land or get additional land under this Act. If I am wrong in that, I would like to be set right. But if I am not mistaken, then it is plain that there is a discrimination against the man who came in and bought his land for money. That is to say, the man who went there and bought his land gets nothing, but the man who went in there and got his land for nothing has additional rights conferred upon him. Section 27 as it stands cannot be worked except with great hardship upon certain individuals and serious discriminations against them.

When I point out the objections to the Bill that occur to me, I am not necessarily opposing the principle of the Bill, which would give to the people in certain sections of the country the right to acquire some land, nor do I want to be so understood. It is realized in that country, in certain sections—and I take this information from people who have had more practical experience in the business than I have had—a man requires more than 160 acres of land. Therefore I do not speak of the whole country. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) is more familiar with the condition prevailing in the province of Manitoba, and possibly he was speaking from the standpoint of his province, or possibly he was speaking from the national standpoint and wanted to allay the feeling which a scramble for the acquiring of additional land might create. But I am not opposed to the principle, so far as Alberta or Saskatchewan are concerned, which gives the right to a man to acquire more land. And I approve of any principle which will settle up the odd-numbered sections which have been lying idle. These odd-numbered sections should no longer be withheld from settlement. The government, up to the present time, have carried out a rather strange policy with regard to this land. The ordinary settler would apply to buy the odd-numbered sections, and the answer would come back that the policy was not to sell. But certain people seemed to be able to get that land when occasion demanded, without much difficulty. Therefore, I welcome the change in the law which will tell the people in what way the odd-numbered sections are being held by the government. I do not oppose the principle of the Bill which will bring these lands into such position that they can be occupied. But I would point out that section 27 as now prepared will create great contention, and, as it stands, I doubt that it can be worked at all. This is one of the few sections the Minister of the Interior referred to this afternoon. In this Bill of 52 pages, a very cumbersome piece of legislation, so far as I was able to follow the minister this afternoon, he only referred to, or gave explanation of three sections. He may excuse himself on the ground that some of the provisions are old, but, to my mind, that is not an answer, because the conditions have changed very much since some of these conditions were inserted. It will be my privilege to discuss some of these questions when the Bill is before us in committee; at present I will refer briefly to the sections of which the minister spoke this afternoon. If I recollect well, he said he was putting into the law what has been the practice for some time—that is, allowing the heirs of a deceased homesteader to go on and complete the settlement duties and get the patent, even though they lived in a foreign country. That may or may not be wise. But it seems to me that the same end would be attained if the land were sold on settlement conditions and the money realized handed over to the estate of the deceased homesteader. This would put the matter practically in the same position as winding up an estate and would be just as advantageous to the heirs, while the advantage to the country would be that you would probably get an actual settler into the country who would not only fulfil the settlement conditions but would remain, instead of one who, though he completed the settlement duties and got his patent, might only be speculator and would hold the land for speculative purposes. The hon. minister referred also to section 15 which gives the Governor in Council the right, in case of physical disability on the part of the homesteader, to dispense with the homestead conditions. That may be a very excellent provision, and I hope that nobody on this side of the House will oppose it if the government is going into the charity business. You might go a step further, and say that if a man has gone up there and got land under an agreement with deferred payments, if he becomes ill, or accident overtakes him and he cannot make the balance of his payment, why should not the minister extend in his favour the operation of the homestead clause ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY.

Now, I have a few observations to make with regard to one of two other sections of the Bill. When the Autonomy Bills were passed by this parliament the reason assigned for withholding the lands from the provinces was that if they were given to the provinces they would be administered for the sake of the revenue, that settlement would thereby be retarded. But I find that even under this Bill, by section 32, the minister reserves the power to sell the lands in blocks of 640 acres, and at a price not mentioned. The old Act I think fixed the minimum value at $1 an acre. That provision has been struck out, and the Minister of the Interior, whenever it suits his purpose, can turn round and sell 640 acres of land at whatever price he chooses. It does not say that the applications have to come in singly, a syndicate of ten persons can get together and acquire large blocks of that land. To proceed I submit that in passing this Bill we should be careful, to satisfy the settler in that country, that his rights are clearly defined. His rights should not depend on the good will of any official. He should know that his right to a patent depends on a statutory law and not on political favour. I think that the less politics are mixed up in the administration of our public lands, the better for the development of our country, no matter which party is in power. Now look at these wide powers given to the minister or his officials. For example, come back to section 27, subclause 4, which says that the minimum rate payable for land under this section should be $3 an acre. Why not make a special provision to sell land to the settler on easy terms and at a low rate ? Why should the minister have the right to say, it is $3 an acre for you, $5 for somebody else, $10 for somebody else. It seems to me that if the minister fixes a minimum rate under this section, a maximum rate should be fixed also, and that the great powers given to the minister under this section should not be sanctioned. Take also section 13. A man who acquires a patent for his homestead has got to fulfil homestead duties. Among those duties, he has to cultivate a certain amount of land, and the minister can say whether he has cultivated enough land or not. It is absolutely in his power, or in the power of an official, to say to a man : You are entitled to your homestead, I do not care if an acre of land has not been cultivated. There is nothing defined, nothing to point out what should be done. It is a loose way of doing business to put it into the hands of the minister to treat people as he pleases, and for his own political purposes. Section 80 will leave it to the minister to say whether the lands are fit for agriculture or not. You speak about agricultural lands, and at any time the minister may make up his mind, on the report of an official, he can withdraw a certain area of land from homesteading because they are not at present agricultural land. There is that great power reserved to the minister under sections 7 and 80, that a man who has got his homestead entry is liable to have it cancelled upon a report of an official to the Minister of the Interior. The minister upon that report has absolute power to take away the title of that man to his land.

There is another point. It is apparently the intention of the department to continue that iniquitous policy which they have heretofore continued of making the work of the land offices a matter of secrecy. What is the reason ? When a man goes into that country and obtains a title to land for homesteading or pre-emption, why cannot the title to that land be searched just the same as if the land was held under freehold ? People are continually going to the land office and saying, I want to know whether such a homestead is vacant. Nobody is on the land, there are no improvements and they are told that it is covered by a prior application. When they ask for the name of the prior applicant, they are told that it is against the rules to reveal the name ; and they cannot do so. The result is that people suspect that they are being injured far more by the administration of these land regulations than by anything else that is done. Nearly all the correspondence we get on this side of the House from the west is from people complaining that they cannot find out anything about a certain quarter-section that has been vacant for years. I think that the records in the land offices in that country, in order to satisfy the people that they are being fairly dealt with, should be open for inspection, and something in the nature of an abstract should be provided when a man wishes to search out the title of a picee of land, or the land adjoining. If the department has not got enough officials to give applicants the information, or an abstract, to show who was the first man to enter upon that land, when the homestead was cancelled, or who else is applying for cancellation, then I say that a greater number of officials should be provided for by charging a small fee to each applicant for the search, and I am satisfied that a great many people in that country who have gone to a great deal of trouble will be glad to pay a small fee for the information. The Act also deals with lands which are not fit for agriculture except they are irrigated. Well, it seems to me that after the experience we have recently had this session, when these lands are available and are sought after they should be put up to public auction; they should not be handed out to a few friends like what was done in the case of the Robins Irrigation Company, which was recently under discussion in this House. This in another section on which I shall have more to say when the Bill gets into committee; and I shall also have something to say on other sections of the Bill.

Mr. G. H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). I wish, Mr. Speaker, to add my protest against the giving of the great powers which, by this Bill, are to be granted the Governor in Council and the minister. I am aware that the trend of our legislation of late years has been to vest a great deal more authority in the Governor in Council than formerly, but this Bill goes to the extreme in that direction and grants more power to the minister than is at all necessary. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) has mentioned some instances. I wish to refer to subsections (a) and (b) of section 7, under which the minister has the power to cancel homestead entries at his own pleasure or discretion. If he thinks there is any merchantable timber on a homestead or that it can be of any use for the development of a water supply, he has full liberty to cancel the entry. And there seems to be no arrangement made to compensate the person whose land is taken from him because there is merchantable timber on it although there is compensation provided in the case of land being taken on account of its being needed for water purposes. This may be an oversight, and in any event is very unfair.

Section 27, to which my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) has referred is very serious in this respect. It also gives extraordinary discretion to the minister. Under subsection 4, the minimum rate payable for land is fixed, but the minister is given the power to charge as much more as he likes. In fact all of these clauses give the minister, should he feel inclined—and I am not making any personal reflection—the opportunity to show favouritism and sell lands to his own friends at less prices than to others.

Section 32 gives the Governor in Council the authority to sell agricultural lands practically as he may think fit. The section provides:

Agricultural lands shall only be open for purchase, under regulations made from time to time by the Governor in Council, and there shall be no sale to one person, under such regulations, of an area of land in excess of one section without a special order of the Governor in Council.

This is a very extraordinary provision, especially under present conditions in the Northwest when lands are scarce. It seems to me that this power is not one which the Governor in Council should ask to have placed in his hands. Section 34 also gives great powers to the Governor in Council with regard to lands which are unsuitable for cultivation without the aid of irrigation or which are required in connection with any system of irrigation. This section provides that such lands may be sold or leased in such manner and under such terms and conditions as may be fixed from time to time by the Governor in Council.

So the Bill goes on giving the minister great powers and giving him the right to exercise them as he may think fit. Under section 80, he has the right to set aside and reserve from entry for homestead or from pre-emption or from sale as agricultural land any Dominion lands which he considers to be unsuited for cultivation without the aid of irrigation. He is thus to be the judge as to how much need there is of having these lands irrigated.

I wish to refer specially to the clauses dealing with licenses and permits for the cutting of timber. Section 51 provides that the Governor in Council may from time to time make regulations for the disposal by public competition of the right to cut timber. What is public competition? I do not know of any legal definition of the phrase, but under this section the Governor in Council, and the minister himself in fact, is able to give to these words whatever interpretation they may please. Last year on the 17th May, my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), speaking in this House, page 3577, said in reply to an interpellation regarding the sale of timber berths:

There is no sale or disposition of timber berths except by competition. The application is considered in the department, and if it does not conflict with some other berth and some other interests and is approved of, notice is given by advertisement in what is supposed to be the nearest newspaper, and printed slips containing the same information as in the advertisement are distributed as widely as may be to persons interested in tendering for timber limits. The advertisement runs on an average, I think, about six weeks before the tenders are opened.

In other words six weeks would be sufficient notice that these limits were to be put up for public competition. Let me take this opportunity of stating from personal knowledge that for a purpose of t six weeks notice is absolutely inadequate.

When timber limits are advertised for sale by auction in this city, there are often six months given for people to examine the limits. I have never known of a successful sale in which there was less than three or four months given. I remember a sale which took place in this city some years ago, after only six or eight weeks' notice, and it was an absolute failure as far as the sellers were concerned. Only one or two people were able to form any estimate of the value of the limits in the time put at their disposal. To give only six weeks notice of the sale of a timber limit in the Northwest territories, miles away from any city, is really tempting Providence, as far as the Dominion is concerned, because it is practically certain that bids will not come in sufficiently numerous to bring a proper price. That must be evident to any one who will take the trouble to consider the question. In the first place, we have not all of us got men at our disposal to send and examine the limit on the moment. When notice is given of the sale of limits, it is necessary that an intending purchaser should arrange to have a good man go out and examine it. After we have got that arranged, we must get our supplies together and then it takes a man weeks to examine the limit properly so as to be able to make a report on which we may base an offer of purchase. Should the examination be an insufficient one it is manifest that the buyer must make a very low bid in order to be safe. I am positive that a short notice of the sale of timber limits is practically certain to bring about a sale at far less than their value. This section 51 further provides that the berth shall be awarded to the person who offers the highest bonds therefor. With such a short notice, I can well understand that often there is only one applicant for the limit and I can well understand how it has happened that many times in the department there have only been one or two applicants. Under this provision the department is bound to give the limit to the highest bidder. No effort is made by the department to have a survey and report of the limits in order that the minister may be in a position to judge whether the price is a proper one or not. This is not the way they do things in Ontario. Before the Ontario government decided to sell limits, they always have them examined on their own account and then put an upset price on each limit based on the report of their own confidential explorer. Consequently if the limit is worth $1,000 a mile and only $100 a mile is bid, they do not sell. But under this provision in this Bill, the minister would have to accept the bid of $100 a mile for a limit which might be worth $1,000 or $10,000 a mile. He would have no means of knowing—he apparently does not want to know—it is not proposed that he should take any means of ascertaining the real value of these limits. The minister told us in his speeches of last year, that it was customary to insert the advertisement in the nearest newspaper. This practice may quite easily lead to fraud. For instance, if a limit were to be sold near Prince Albert, the advertisement would be published only in the Prince Albert newspapers and there is no provision to have it published in newspapers in Ottawa, Winnipeg, Toronto, or other large centres of population.

I compliment the minister on section 53 of the Bill. On the 17th of May last there was a debate in the House on the system of licensing timber limits and the orders in council regarding them, and it was shown that this government had passed, on the 14th of April, 1903, a very extraordinary order in council, under which, the limit owners would have the right to renewal of the license without any increase in the dues or change in the regulations. By section 53 of this Bill it is provided that we shall practically go back to the old law which was passed by the Conservative government, and which remained in force until changed by the Liberal government on the 14th of April, 1903. The suggestions which were made from this side of the House last year, were paid no attention to in the House, but a short time afterwards the government experienced a change of heart, and decided that after all the Conservatives were right.

Mr. BERGERON. As usual.

Mr. PERLEY. As usual. And on the 23rd of July, 1906, the government passed an order in council stating :

> Whereas by the order of the Governor General in Council of the 14th April, 1903, amending the regulations governing the granting of yearly licenses to cut timber on Dominion lands in Manitoba, the Northwest Territories, and within the railway belt in British Columbia established by order of the Governor General in Council dated the 1st of July, 1898, as amended by subsequent orders, the following section is enacted as section 3 of the said regulations :

I need not read that section ; it is the section put in force by the order in council of April, 1903, which we found fault with last year. Then this order in council goes on to say :

> And whereas there is some uncertainty as to the effect of this section.

That uncertainty was apparently brought about by the debate in this House for there does not seem to have been any uncertainty in the mind of the minister before that :

> Therefore, the Governor General in Council, in order to make the intention clear, is pleased to order that the said section 3 shall be and the same is hereby amended, by adding to the first sentence thereof, immediately after the words 'the area licensed,' the following : 'provided, however, that such renewal shall be granted subject to any changes which may have been made in the regulations increasing or altering the rental or dues to be paid or otherwise varying the terms and conditions under which the licenses are granted.'

That order in council was passed on the 23rd of July last, and it restored the conditions which had been in existence previous to the extraordinary order in council of 1903. Now, this last order in council has been followed out almost exactly in section 53 of this Bill, and to that extent the section is quite satisfactory to me, as I understand it. I notice, however, that although this order in council provided that the government should go back to the old arrangement with regard to the dues and regulations, no change was made with regard to allowing settlement on the lands under license, or, as to allowing the homestead settlers to cut the timber they required for building purposes and for fuel. It will be remembered that previous to 1903, the licenses to cut timber, contained a provision that the minister could, on 60 days notice, sell lands out of these limits if he thought it desirable to do so. I think this was a proper power to give the minister, except that the notice should have been longer than 60 days, which was so short that it was hardly fair to the lumbermen. At the same time it is always usual to have a clause of that kind in timber licenses. I notice that last summer, when the government were setting right one part of these regulations, they did not do anything with regard to restoring the power to the minister to sell lands out of timber limits. The right of the homestead settlers to cut timber for building purposes and firewood must have been a great benefit to them, and I am much surprised that the present minister has not seen his way to insert that provision in the licenses, in order that the homestead settlers should have liberty, under his authority, to cut timber for these purposes. Now, taking section 56, I must say that I do not understand subsection 3 of that section. It says:

The provisions of this section shall apply to all timber berths heretofore disposed of under any Act respecting Dominion lands as if they had been contained in such Act when it was passed.

It would seem, that this subsection 3 is limited in its application to section 56, but surely it is intended that all the provisions of this Act shall apply to all the limits heretofore licensed. If you restrict the provisions of subsection 3 to section 56, it would by implication, seem that it was not intended that the other sections of this Act should apply to limits heretofore disposed of. I said a moment ago, that I was satisfied with section 53, but if it is not to apply to licenses heretofore granted I am certainly not satisfied with it, and I would urge that subsection 3 of section 56 be broadened, and made a separate section in some way, so that it shall apply to all the sections of the Act, and not to section 56 alone. The licenses which have heretofore been granted should most certainly come under the provisions of this Act, as well as any licenses to be granted hereafter. That is always the custom in such matters, and I hope the minister intends to have section 53 apply to licenses heretofore granted, when, by implication, subsection 3 of section 56 would seem to provide otherwise.

Section 59 is a long and curious section. It provides for the granting of permits to cut timber, and entirely under the authority of the Governor in Council, which practically means in this instance the Minister of the Interior. I infer that this section is not intended to cover lands included in timber limits, but I question very much whether it is right and proper that the Minister of the Interior should have authority to grant permits to cut timber for all the purposes mentioned in that section. It seems to me to be an extreme provision, under which a chance might be given to a Minister of the Interior, who did not wish to do his duty as the present one does, to grant permits to people for political purposes and to use discrimination and favouritism in granting those permits. In order that I may show why I feel that way about it, I wish to refer to two orders in council passed by this government during the past year, one on the 19th of February, 1906, and one on the 16th of May, 1906. The one on the 19th of February reads as follows:

The Governor in Council is pleased to order that the order in council, dated 1st July, 1898, establishing the regulations governing the granting of yearly licenses and permits to cut timber on Dominion lands in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and in the railway belt in the province of British Columbia, and amended by subsequent orders in council shall be, and the same is hereby amended by the addition of the following clause:

In the discretion of the Minister of the Interior, permits may be granted without competition in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta to sawmill owners to cut over a definitely described tract of land not exceeding fifty square miles in extent on payment of Crown dues at the rates fixed by section 11, clause (a) of the regulations established by order in council, on the 1st July, 1898, as amended by subsequent orders in council. Permits of this class shall become null and void in the event of the permittee not operating upon the berth described herein to a reasonable extent during the continuance thereof.

Under that order in council the minister in his absolute discretion could grant permits without competition to sawmill owners to cut timber, not on a few acres of land, but on fifty square miles, and he could give them that right at such prices as he chose and without asking for tenders or competition of any kind. That shows to what excess the Governor in Council may go in making these regulations, which he is permitted to do in clause after clause of this Bill. Under clause 59 the Governor in Council has power to issue permits to cut timber for seven different purposes without any limit as to the area in which it may be cut. Under subsection 2 of that section, for certain other purposes the area is limited to one square mile. I am glad to say that the order in council of the 19th of February, 1906, was altered on the 16th of May, 1906, and the rights and powers of the minister in respect to the granting of these permits were very much reduced. I quote this order in council of the 19th of February, however, to show how far the Governor in Council seems to be prepared to go in granting extraordinary powers to the minister to deal with lands and other properties in the Northwest. Now, on the second reading of this Bill I do not propose to say anything more. I simply mention these matters of general interest to show the extraordinary powers given to the minister in almost every clause of this Bill.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of entering into a lengthy discussion of the various clauses of this Bill, but merely to refer to some clauses that have been specially dealt with by the Minister of the Interior, and I will try to avoid repeating the criticisms which have already been made by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me. There is one feature of this debate that strikes me as somewhat peculiar. We have heard what was in my opinion a very strong speech this afternoon by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). It is not often that that hon. gentleman voices my own sentiments, nor am I going to say that I am in harmony with all the views he has expressed to-day ; but I am willing to concede that the hon. gentleman's experience is very much greater than mine along this line, and I would attach a great deal of importance to the opinions he so strongly and so confidently expressed. The hon. member for Lisgar has occupied a very prominent position in the political affairs of our country. When he first went to the Northwest, I think he was engaged in taking out settlers. In that work he took charge of numerous excursion trains, and he therefore knows the inducements which were held out at that time to people who left the older provinces of the Dominion to enter upon their new homes in the province of Manitoba. Having been the premier of that province for eleven years, he has followed the trend of public events and the development of our land laws, and is I think a competent authority on this particular subject. That being so, I would have felt a little more satisfied in my own mind if some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House—and there are a number of them in their places, who listened to the speech of the hon. member for Lisgar to-day—had attempted to controvert the statements made by that hon. gentleman, if they were susceptible of being controverted. I was somewhat surprised that the Prime Minister did not himself consider that even scant courtesy to the hon. member for Lisgar at his hands would demand a reply of some kind to that speech. Time was not very long ago when that hon. gentleman's opinion had great weight in influencing the opinion of the Prime Minister on other matters. How have the mighty fallen when so little attention is paid to that hon. gentleman's utterances as have been paid to his remarks of to-day. The Minister of the Interior has a great task upon his hands in formulating a Bill that will meet the requirements not only of the people now resident in those provinces but also those who are about to make their homes in the far Northwest during the next few years, and I think a great deal of this trouble has been brought upon him by his own action because, as a representative of the west, he had the key of the situation in his own hands prior to his entry into the government. If he had then valiantly stuck out for that which he declared should be given to the provinces prior to the passing of the Autonomy Bills and had insisted on his colleagues handing the lands over to the provinces in order that the local government might handle the lands to the best advantage, he would have avoided his present difficulty, but it seems that through some influence or another the hon. gentleman succumbed to the blandishments of his colleagues who were not of the same opinion and as a result there is now great difficulty in drafting a Bill that will meet the wishes of the people of the Northwest.

There are many clauses of this Bill with which I am in entire sympathy. With the principle of the Bill there is little fault to be found, although it is drafted in such a manner that a great many details are open to very serious objection. One clause to which I might refer with commendation is that relating to the acquiring of a homestead by a young man approaching 18 years of age. Hitherto as a matter of privilege he has been permitted to hold land for about one year ; under this Act it is permitted as a matter of right that he should hold land in this way. That is right and proper because under the provisions of the existing Act as administered I feel convinced that it could be utilized and has been utilized for preference and discriminating in the interests of certain individuals. This clause, making this a matter of right, is one which I think will receive the endorsation of members of this House.

Another clause to which the minister referred is a commendable one so far as it goes, that is, the provision that where an application is made for an entry through a subagent that application can be made (at the expense, I believe of the applicant) by wire, to the agent of the land district; but I think it might go a little further than this, because it might happen that under the provision of this Bill, if it stops there, the agent might act in collusion with some friend of his, possibly in the locality where the land office is situated, and give him a tip that an application had arrived by wire, so that the friend could rush in another application, forestalling the distant application through the sub-land agent. The applicant who makes his application through the sub-land agent is supposed to send in his formal application by mail but before this application arrived at the land office, this manipulation to which I have referred might easily take place so in my opinion it would be a wise provision to have a return wire as well, stating whether or not a prior application has been made. This I think would do away with a great deal of the objection on this score that I have just urged.

The minister referred to subsection 3 of section 8 which provides:

> The minister may reserve for one year any area of agricultural land, not exceeding one quarter-section, for any male of the full age of seventeen years who lives on a homestead with his father, mother, brother, sister or guardian.

Why limit this to residence on a homestead with a relative. Suppose the father or mother resides on land that has been purchased from a railway company or from any land corporation or from the government, why should the boy not have the same right? Why is it so very particular that this son, if he happens to be a son, should only be allowed the privilege of making entry if he resides upon a homestead owned by the father, mother, brother, sister, or guardian? I think that could easily be amended so as to refer to any agricultural land or any land upon which reside the relatives with whom he is living for the time being. My judgment, after a cursory examination of the clause, is that that would be a wise amendment to that particular subsection.

As the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has stated this afternoon I think that this particular Bill is not going to be of any great benefit to the province from which I come, Manitoba. I asked the minister this afternoon if he could give us approximately the amount of lands that would be thrown open by this Bill in the respective provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I do not know whether or not the minister had that information in his possession this afternoon and did not care to allow the members to see it, but I think if he furnished that information it would be seen that but a comparatively small portion of this land lies in Manitoba. Manitoba is a small little province, much smaller than I hope to see it in the very near future—particularly after the verdict last week in that province, largely on that line—but I think that even with the extended boundaries but a small portion of those lands will fall within the area of Manitoba and it is therefore in my opinion an attempt of the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) to boom his own province, and possibly a portion of Saskatchewan, at the expense of the little province of Manitoba. With the views expressed by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) I am quite in accord, I do not see that it is going to work to the benefit of Manitoba. Manitoba may be and very likely will be injured by this Bill through the drawing away of some of the splendid settlers we already have who will be only too eager and anxious to receive free land grants by going farther west and living there while getting the benefit of the increase in the value of the lands.

The power that has been vested in the minister is a most dangerous one. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) ran over a long list of powers that have been vested in the Minister of the Interior which I think will certainly place a very great lever in his hands in connection with the operation of this Bill. The Minister of the Interior, both present and past, has been in the habit of securing by order in council or some means at his command, year after year, more power and more authority, and this centralized power has been exercised for political effect, I have no hesitation in saying from my own exeprience; and it could be used as a powerful lever in connection with the incoming immigrants to that western country. This is something to which I most strongly object. In this connection I might refer to an order in council passed several years ago whereby the then Minister of the Interior took power to permit parties to cut timber over a district of 50 square miles without competion by mill owners. This authority was abused, it was only open for six months, and some friends of the government having availed themselves of the powers conferred on the minister by the order in council secured 50 square miles without competition by mill withdrawn from others, the order in council was rescinded but not until some of the political friends of the government had secured a large portion of timber limits in their hands. At the same time other applications for timber limits made by trade rivals of those who had secured this privilege were denied. In connection with those timber limits, in addition to what the last speaker has said, I may say that there is a well grounded suspicion, I feel convinced it is more than a suspicion, it is a deep rooted conviction in the public mind to-day, that the manner in which the opening of tenders and the granting of timber licenses has been conducted has not been an honest and faithful discharge of duty on the part of officials of this government; the licenses have been manipulated. I understand that in years gone by those tenders were always opened in the presence of three officials. Of recent years that has been abused, and I understand that now the tenders are opened by one official only. I think that in a matter of this kind, the government should avoid the appearance of evil and not leave to one gentleman, no matter how high in authority in the department he may be, the duty of opening those tenders, not in the presence of other officials of the government. It may be answered that this should be provided for by regulation. It seems to me that it should be set forth in the Bill itself that tenders for timber licenses shall be opened by at least three reputable officials of the government and not, as I have been informed they have been, by one alone.

Now, the Minister of the Interior, when everything was sailing along most beautifully this afternoon could not resist his old time proclivity to throw a bone of contention into the debate by harking back a quarter of a century and attempting to compare the policy in vogue then with that of the present time. I asked the hon. minister what I thought a very pertinent question, and one that I think was particularly pertinent if he attempted to make such a comparison. For there can be no basis of comparison between the conditions existing to-day and those that existed when the contract for the Canadian Pacific Railway was signed. Had the hon. gentleman desired to be fair, he would have compared the policy and conditions of 1881-2 with those of 1874-6 when the Mackenzie government attempted to secure the opening up of that country by a transcontinental line by means of large cash bonuses and large land grants, and failed. But, when the hon. gentleman takes a time when the land was practically valueless and compares it with the conditions of to-day which were rendered possible by Conservative statesmanship which led to the opening up of the country with what it is to-day, it is simply child's play. If it was an extravagant bargain from the country's standpoint to give 25,000,000 acres of land to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway line—and many of the hon. gentleman's friends do not regard it as extravagant in view of the development which it has accomplished—what shall we say of the action of the preceding government, which, no doubt, the hon. gentleman supported in offering a land grant twice as large to secure the construction of the line? And yet they failed in their object. This is not imagination on the part of the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) as the hon. minister insinuated at the time, for, if the hon. gentleman will look up the statutes of 1874 he will find the record to be as I have stated. However, if the hon. minister had been in the province of Manitoba during the past two weeks and could have heard the argument put up against the present provincial government in reference to the assisting of railway lines in that province, he would have found a ready answer to some of the arguments he has used here to-night. What is the case? Those opponents of the Manitoba government have been going from platform to platform trying to make capital against the government of the province because of what they call the contingent liability that the province has assumed in guaranteeing bonds for the Canadian Northern to the extent of $10,000 a mile, $2,000 of which is to go for equipment. But this contingent liability which is held up as a great bugaboo for the electors of the province was exceeded by this government in the case of this same Canadian Northern, for they guaranteed bonds to the extent of $13,000 a mile, not a dollar of which was to go into equipment, and this for a prairie section of the line to be constructed for 750 miles to Prince Albert and Edmonton, the Erwood extension and the Grand View. So, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) will not find any particular consolation in comparing the policy of the Conservative government with the policy of the present government so far as the land policy is concerned, or so far as guarantee of bonds is concerned either. Now, I do not think it is even yet too late for the members of the government to retrace their steps and my advice to them is, to avoid the difficulty which the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) who is an authority, states is looming up in the future if the Bill is put through in its present ill-digested form and without the people having an opportunity to investigate its provisions, and even this session, bring down legislation handing over to the several provinces the control and administration of their lands. That is the recommendation I would make as being a far more advisable step than the introduction of this Bill. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) stated that, under this Bill the government are taking authority to give any person going into that country 320 acres of land—a homestead of 160 acres, entirely free, and the adjoining quarter-section at the nominal price of $3 per acre. I do not know that you can go to any other country in the world and find such liberal provisions to induce immigration. And I do not think it is necessary to have such liberal provisions in order to induce immigration to our Northwest. Canada has been so well advertised throughout the world that people have their eyes turned in this direction and the best immigration agent, as the hon. minister well knows, is the contented settler. Those that have settled in the country are already attracting to themselves from their several countries many immigrants. I do not think it necessary at the present stage of affairs of our develpoment to hand out extra inducements in the way of giving up our public lands, particularly as they are so limited in extent. I do not think it in the best interest of the country that such a provision should be incorporated in this Bill. Not only has the new settler the privilege of securing 320 acres of land, but, if he has already had a second homestead and has not already secured a pre-empt, he has the opportunity to secure 160 acres as a pre-emption, making a total of 480 acres that he may acquire in this way, besides what he may purchase from railway corporation or any other. Why is this provision made? Surely, as the minister says, he is not doing it for the purpose of raising revenue or accumulating a vast sum of money for any purpose, even in order to build the Hudson Bay Railway. He candidly admits that he is not introducing this Bill and providing these pre-emptions for the purpose of deriving a large revenue therefrom. What, then, is the reason? It cannot be to encourage dense settlement; because, when one man can go in there, if he has already homesteaded and can acquire a total of 480 acres, that will be productive of sparse rather than dense settlement. I do not know why the minister is doing this unless it is to place the disposition of our public land in his hands to be used by himself and those in authority under him as a lever to his own party advantage. As has been said by the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames), we have but a limited area of land to be drawn upon and it will soon be taken up. In two or three years we shall see practically all the land taken up. Certainly, that will be the case if this Bill goes through in its present form. I do not say that it is not a commendable thing to have this land taken up. It is a commendable thing if we have a reasonable number of settlers on the land, but it is not desirable to allow one man to secure to himself 480 acres of land, whereas, if he goes to any other country where immigrants are received, he is only allowed a quarter-section. Again I say I should feel very much more convinced of the wisdom of this Bill if somebody on behalf of the Prime Minister and his colleagues had reviewed the arguments of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). Why is it that hon. members on that side have not attempted to make any reply to that hon. gentleman? He has made a series of strong statements, and I think they are worthy of some attempt at refutation, if refutation is possible. I would feel much more confidence in passing judgment upon this Bill if some attempt were made to refute these statements, or any portion of them. For myself, while I am quite willing to endorse certain provisions of this Bill which I think will redound to the advantage of the country, there are many others which, in their present form, will not be to the advantage of the country, and as a whole will especially prove detrimental to the province from which I come.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I share the view which has been expressed by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. W. J. Roche) that in a Bill of this importance, and dealing with such a valuable asset, it would be conducive to good legislation if we could mingle our wisdom and express our own opinions, and give to each other the benefit of our information and our experience. It does seem strange to me that under these circumstances we do not find any collaboration on the part of supporters of the government with us on this side of the House who have the interest of the country equally at heart in this legislation. There is no attempt at collaboration or assistance in getting at an understanding of the question in the west with reference to these lands as it is affected by this Bill. It appears that we are coming to the condition in parliamentary evolution when the caucus is to reign supreme, and in the House we are not to have the benefit of the experience, the information and the ability of the members who are sent here. If it were a trivial question, and under certain circumstances, the government might say: We do not want to waste the time of the House, we are anxious to get through. But neither of those excuses avail at the present time, and emphasis is given to this odd condition of things by the fact that one of the most experienced members of the House from the Northwest has voiced his sentiments with reference to this Bill in a very decided way. Those sentiments were strongly opposed to the Bill in its principal provisions, and he made almost a piteous plea to his friends on that side of the House not to urge through the measure in this headlong way to the detriment and confusion of the interests of his own part of the country. Now that statement of a very experienced man from the west emphasizes the suspicion that a conspiracy of silence seems to exist, and that not a word should be spoken from the government side of the House, that this legislation shall be pushed through, and that we shall not have the benefit of the experience and information of members from the west who are presumably favourable to this legislation. They simply rest back seeming to say: Let them have their little talk, we will turn down the old and experienced member who has voiced strong sentiments with reference to this Bill, and when it comes to the vote, we will ring the bell, we will vote the clauses through and the Bill through. Is that a healthy development of parliamentary institutions, or is it not? We are coming pretty nearly to the case when we might just as well let the caucus do the whole business, for all the benefit that we get from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House on a Bill of this importance.

Now so far as the general idea of the lands is concerned, it was my opinion at the time the charters to the provinces were going through this House, it was also the view of many people besides, that these lands could better have been given over as an endowment to the different provinces. I went to the trouble of making what I thought was a pretty well reasoned calculation to prove that if the lands were left in the hands of the provinces, fairly well administered, and with a view to revenue as well as to immigration and settlement in the end the financial returns to each of the provinces would have been far greater than the subventions given to them in their ascending scale by the legislation which was passed here. But two things seemed to rule. The provinces wanted ready money, and were not willing to make financial arrangements in connection with their lands which would give them less at first but a great deal more afterwards; and this government seemed disposed to keep the administration of those lands in their own hands for their own purposes, and one of these purposes seems to have been pretty well developed during the one-sided discussion that has taken place this afternoon. I believe that each of those provinces has varying areas of land, varying conditions of settlement, and that it is pretty well nigh impossible to make a general law which will satisfy them all. If each had the administration of its own, it could suit the legislation to its own peculiarities of soil, of climate, of population, and could do it much more satisfactorily than we can do it by making one flat rule for all. The only way out of that flat rule of restriction, and of injury in many cases, is to have recourse to making the minister a little less than an arbiter of how the lands shall be sold, at what prices they shall be sold, and to whom, giving him a power which, in these democratic days we do not think, many people at least do not think, ought to be given to a single minister. But if these lands were handed over to the people who have a direct interest in them, do not the representatives of the province of Saskatchewan have primarily the greatest interest in the kind of people who are coming in there to become settlers and citizens, and is it not presumable that they, being upon the spot, would be the best judges of the way these lands should be administered on behalf of the incoming settlers, and would they not be the best administrators, if they are fit for responsible and independent government, as we thoroughly think they were and are? That however has not been acceded to and the Dominion carries on the work of administering these lands.

Now, I take up another point. The Minister of the Interior thought that he was getting along too well, that there was not fire enough in the contest, and that he would launch out into a comparison of the land politics of the two parties over a period of thirty or thirty-five years. That has been alluded to by my hon. friend behind me, but there is no use arguing with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). He will go back to the same old assertions and the same old line, however often they may have been disproved; but whenever he does he lays some one on this side under the disagreeable necessity of making a reply so as to keep people's minds and memories active and prevent their being misled by wrong information and misrepresentation. Does any thinking man for one moment believe that it is fair to take two periods in the development of the Northwest thirty years apart and make a comparison between the administrations in those two periods from any point of view? That question, asked and answered as it must be by any one, is really a sufficient answer to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). But if he wants other answers, may I ask him whether he thinks he has more knowledge, acumen and breadth than the late Alexander Mackenzie and his colleagues, who from 1871 to 1874 administered the affairs of this country? My hon. friend lives in 1907; they lived in 1871 and 1872. Translate the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) back to the time and conditions of 1872, would he have been much wiser than were then Mr. Mackenzie and his confreres? Would he have done very much differently? Would he have done as well? Then you had a country whose capabilities and possibilities no one knew, a country almost uninhabited, unexplored, almost unknown, crying out for means of egress and ingress, and a country, the necessary transportation building in which, in the language of the statesmen of that day, we were not able financially to undertake. One of them is on record as having said that it would take all the resources of the British empire to build a railway through that country and sustain it. Another statesman of that day, with as strong mental a grasp as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), equally as full of a variety of information, declared that though you might build that road you would not get profit enough out of it to pay for the axle grease on the wheels of its cars and locomotives. These were the statements made thirty years ago in the conditions then existing, and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is trying to judge what was done thirty years ago by the conditions of thirty years later. Mr. Mackenzie then thought, and so did his colleagues—and there it is in the statute-book —that if they could get a road built from North Bay through to Vancouver by giving 20,000 acres of land and a bonus of $10,000 a mile and a guarantee of interest for twenty-five years upon a sum to be fixed over and above that, they would be doing very well. And they made that offer and put it on our statutes. What did that offer mean? It meant $25,000,000, cash, plus a guarantee of 4 per cent interest for twenty-five years on a sum not stated, which would have added many millions to that amount, and in addition 50,000,000 acres of land. That is what these foolish men were willing to do thirty years ago, and they have been strongly criticised by this wise man of 1907. But then and now are as absolutely different from each other as it is possible to conceive. Make the calculation—land 58,000,000 acres, the people's land, the land of the Northwest, and multiply that by an accretion of $6 an acre and you have hundreds of millions of dollars. Multiply it by $8 an acre, which was the accretion the minister mentioned, and that will give you still more which the Northwest to-day would be paying, had Mr. Mackenzie got any one to take up the offer he spread upon the statute-book. But we do not see any sense in reasoning like that. We have to translate ourselves back to the time and circumstances and ask ourselves what we would then and there, in view of the great necessity and general poverty, have been willing to give out of the Dominion land assets in order to get that country opened up. And whatever Mr. Mackenzie gave or could have given, and whatever the government of the late Sir John Macdonald gave to open up that country, was well given and is repaying us more and more every year, because it was owing to that expenditure that transportation routes into the Northwest were opened up and the Northwest made habitable and explorable and the coming home for millions.

Now as regards land laws, what infinite contempt the Minister of the Interior has for all attempts at land legislation in the past. Well, I dare say the advanced school teacher of to-day looks back upon the methods of fifty years ago—not with contempt if he is wise—but with the idea that they were far behind what they are now, which would be true. But at the same time those were the methods which led to the improvements of to-day, and it ill becomes us to find fault with the methods of fifty years ago because they were not as good as those which time and circumstances and improved financial conditions have enabled us to develop. So it is with your land laws. These laws had to go through their course of development. They had to go through many experiments, made with the honest endeavour to get at what was best, and then to find, through the advantage of experience and experiment, that improvements could still be made, so that on that line again there is no ground for comparison, and we might just as well give our fathers and forefathers credit for having done about all that could be expected under the circumstances. We have no occasion to plume ourselves on having made improvements because, with the better facilities at our hands and the information and experience we have gained, it would be very extraordinary if we had not improved to some extent.

My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), in his speech to-night, with most of which I agree, said that this country gave a princely donation when it offered 160 acres of the best land in the world to any settler who would make his home with us. It is a princely donation. It has brought population into this country, and you can go from one end of the west to the other, and you cannot find any plea that the poverty, and hardship, and disturbance, and difficulty of the settler, makes it necessary for this country to say to him: We will give you another large addition by way of benefice; we will add largess to gift. There is no crying need in the Northwest, asking this country to add to the already princely inducement given to settlers to make a happy and prosperous home. Is the reason of this largess, that you want to add to your settlement? It cannot be. Cannot the Minister of the Interior see that change of population is not increase of population. If you say to 220,000 homesteaders already in various parts of the west: We will give each one of you, in a certain area, a brand new homestead for a nominal sum; I grant you will effectuate a very large change in population, but at the same time you will put a bar against the increase in your population in these western provinces. You have your homesteaders living there now; take 60,000 of them, or 90,000 of them, or one-half of them—which will probably be the least that will take advantage of this offer in the course of time—and grant your 8,000,000, or 12,000,000, or 16,000,000 acres of land to them. When you have done that, you have not added one soul to the population of that country. You have simply vested a benefice and a large one, in a certain class—no, in a certain section of a certain class. That is all you have done. You have not added one soul to your present population, but you have disposed of 16,000,000 acres of land which you might have given to outside settlers and so increased your population. I would invite careful consideration on that phase of the question, because it is very important. The hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) emphasized more particularly the disturbance, and confusion, consequent upon adding some prize, to induce change of population. He gave it as his matured opinion that it would work inestimable disadvantage and inestimable injury, not to say anything of the confusion and the trouble. I believe with him in that to a large degree; but, he did not emphasize the other side of the question; that you have filled up the spaces, which if you had reserved for immigration would have added materially to the population, and you have done that without increasing by a single individual the population you already had when you started. Now, I want to call attention—and I believe it ought to be called attention to—I want to call attention to the principle of this legislation. Have the governmen thought it over? Have the gentlemen on the other side of the House all thought it over? Have we all of us thought over what this means? Those lands that are left there are either Dominion lands or they are not. If they are not Dominion lands, hand them over to the provinces. They ought to have them. Let them be called provincial lands to be used for, and by, and among the people of these provinces, and for them alone, and for their benefit alone. But we have had the jury decide and the judge give his opinion on that. They are not to be provincial lands for the use of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. The judge and the jury have decided they are to be Dominion lands, in trust for the whole people of the Dominion, and to be administered for the good of the people as a whole. They are an asset of this Dominion, just as much as if you had their equivalent in money in the Dominion treasury. I would like to see the legislator who would come into this or any other Anglo-Saxon parliament, and propose to take hundreds of millions of dollars out of the treasury and give it as a bonus to a section of a class in the country. With, whatever power of voice, and of earnestness I have, I want to press that home upon the government, and I want to press it home upon this country. Do we really see what is involved in this proposal? Your agriculturist is just as good a unit of the population and just as good a citizen of Canada, in Ontario, as he is in Saskatchewan or Manitoba. And one of his assets is his share in the public franchises and the public property of this country. Yet, you propose to go to the treasury, and to take out of it millions of dollars, out of which you give him no benefit at all and you give it only to a section of his class, a favoured few (so far as this goes) who reside within a certain area in the country. If those lands that you propose to give as largess, as bonus, to people who are outside of the area of need, not weighed down by poverty, not encountering difficulties, but so peaceful and happy and prosperous in the enjoyment of a princely gift of 160 acres of good land—if those lands which you propose to give to them were transmuted into money, and that money were put into the treasury of this Dominion, it would be just exactly what it is now, though in a transmuted form. The transmutation of it does not change its essential character, does not make it any the less an asset of this country, in which every citizen has his share; and what do you propose to do? You propose to legislate out of the grand treasury of this country, for a few people in one section of it, millions of dollars of value, making them a present of that, and giving to none of the rest of the people of this country any share in the usufruct. You put the case straight, and you put it strongly, when you put it exactly where it ought to belong, as though it were value in the treasury of this country, and the proposal were to make a distribution of a bonus of that kind. Therefore I say the principle of this legislation seems to me to be well worthy of the attention of this parliament and of this country before we carry it out.

Now, I am not disposed at all to quarrel with the idea of giving to the settlers who come into that northwestern country their 160 acres free, as we have been doing, and if in the interest of the immigration and settlement we think it well to add to that the privilege of buying 160 acres more at a reasonable price, that is something I am quite willing for my part to discuss, with the idea of doing what is best for the general good of this country. Let no one say I have gone back on my own argument in taking out of the treasury in that way something that the rest of the people get no share of; because under my plan you would be getting a new stock of citizens to help to bear the burdens of this country and to add to its wealth. By the proposal of the government you block the incoming of new citizens to help to bear our burdens and add to our products; you actually bar that kind of thing and give the bonus to those who are already in that section of the country and making up a part of its population. I do not know whether the Minister of the Interior and the Prime Minister have looked at this matter from all sides or not; but I ask them to point out any legislation which has gone that far, and any example on any scale that can be gleaned from the legislation of this parliament during the thirty-seven years of its existence, based on a principle of that kind. There must be some overwhelming necessity which would drive us to go against the acknowledged fair and equitable principle in this kind of legislation. What is the necessity? I could well understand if we had induced settlers to come in by a gift of 160 acres and put them on sandy plains and imposed upon them some unfavourable conditions out of which they were vainly trying to extricate themselves, and could not unless they got additional lands; but such a state of affairs does not exist.

So much with reference to that. Now, with reference to this Land Act generally, the Minister of the Interior is a despot, as he was before. He is the boss of all of us—parliament, the council, everything. He can make another Robins deal to-morrow; he can give to a member of parliament to-morrow, as he did to Adamson, a valuable privilege, and rob the treasury of the amount of money that was its due in giving it to a member of parliament. He can by order in council vary his leases and let some favoured adherent into a grazing lease, and then shut the door so that nobody else can get in, and enable him to make hundreds of thousands of dollars out of a franchise that did not cost him, comparatively speaking, a mere dollar. He has done it before ; he can do it again. He can stand up now, as he stood up last spring, and pledge his honour as a minister that there are no sales nor transactions of a certain kind going on, and whilst his words are warm in our faces he is putting through an order in council which carries out the very thing he declares he is not going to carry out. He can at his own sweet will sell Tom Jones, who promises him his vote, 640 acres of land for $3 an acre, prime land which is worth $15, or he can say : If John Brown is a Tory, he has to pay $8 an acre, it is well worth that, and he shan't get it for less. There is infinite power for deviltry and harm in the broad powers that you give to the Minister of the Interior. They have been used for deviltry over and over again, and some less strong man than the present incumbent they may lead into deviltry again. Put not temptation in the way of the Minister of the Interior. For his own sake does he not think he would rather be hedged about with principles and regulations approved by parliament and sanctioned by legislation, than to be allowed all these powers ? What to-day can the Minister of the Interior say to the friend who whispers in his ear certain pleasant things —that he is a great administrator and that the applicant is a great supporter, and that there are certain interests that are needed somewhere, and that if he will just give him fifty miles to range over, he will go in and get the timber and sell it to people for a consideration. He can let James Brown have fifty square miles and refuse another man five. That is all in the hands of this despot of the Interior.

Should it be so ? Water-powers, timber berths, permits, everything is in the hands of the minister. Should it be so ? These are the public franchises of the country, Have the government so far lost sight of the principles that they acceded to and that they pressed upon the people when they were in opposition, as to believe that these public franchises now are simply the perquisites of the party in power, and to be farmed out or given at the irresponsible will of any one, and for any purposes whatever ?. Oh, if the sorry story of the administration of the public lands in the Northwest for the last ten years could be written in full it would be a story that none of us would very much like to read and that few of us would care to have published. From the head of the department down to the smallest administrator in the Northwest—the Northwest people know it well—the colonist knows it, the settler knows it,—every breath that they draw until they get their patent secured beyond the powers even of a government, is drawn at their peril if they do not draw it favourably to the administration. Your settler goes to a sub-land office in the Northwest, he comes into the country from a place a thousand miles distant. He wants to make his stake in the Northwest, he wants 160 acres of that land that the government gives away and he goes to a sub-agent and wants to know if such and such a quarter-section is free for homesteading. Can he find it out ? It is practically impossible for him to find out, and it is practically possible for the men behind the scenes to see that he does not find it out until all their own friends are cared for if they want to be cared for with reference to that particular quarter-section or any other. Instance after instance of that occurs and I have known of men who have been bandied from pillar to post over large areas of that country seeking homesteads and finding none until, disheartened and pretty well shorn of their scanty means, they have left the country in disgust and have gone to other places to seek their lands. Why in the world should there not be definiteness with reference to these lands? Why should it be possible for any understrapper of the government in the Northwest to have it in his power in the slightest degree to thwart or hinder or to deal with these applications for the country's lands when they are made by people who wish to become bona fide settlers ? In that Bill I look in vain for any amelioration of this condition. Why should there not be a record, fair and clean and legible, of every application at every station where men apply for free homesteads in the Northwest ? Cost a little more ? When did the idea of cost ever enter into this government's head except it be to increase expenditure ? Cost ? No matter what it costs, the people in this country who want homesteads have the right to a straight square deal and have the right to go into an office and find a record that they can search as to what lands are open to homesteading and what are not, to get every application in its right place and to know exactly the situation of their applications. I look in vain in this Bill for any amelioration of past conditions in that respect, I tell the minister that as we go through these clauses, we propose to ask him the reason why these things cannot be corrected and made plain and made straight in these land dealings in the Northwest.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend has endeavoured to give the debate a turn which nothing that has taken place would warrant. He stated with some dramatic appearance of truth to ask if we had formed a conspiracy of silence on this side of the House, if we were not at all to discuss this Bill and if all that was to be done was simply to ring the bell and call the members in to vote. I ask my hon. friend, upon a Bill of this kind, at the present stage and after the discussion that has taken place, why ring the bell at all? Who asked the bells to be rung? Who wants to divide the House upon this Bill? Not my hon. friend who has spoken half an hour on this Bill; he never intended to say and never said that he found fault with the principle, and yet he wants to have the division bell rung and have the members called to vote. Neither my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) who spoke before him, neither my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) who opened the debate on that side of the House; neither my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy), nor my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley)—no one upon this occasion wanted to divide the House. There is no occasion therefore for the dramatic display made by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) or to say that the matter has been cut and dried in caucus and all that is to be done is to vote. We are all unanimous on the principle of the Bill. My hon. friend himself does not object to it, all the discussion that has taken place this afternoon, whether on this side or the other, has been simply on certain features of the Bill. Therefore the thing to do is not to condemn the Bill in advance in some parts but to go into committee and discuss its different features, since there is cause for honest difference of opinion as to certain features of it, and as we proceed in the discussion of the clauses we will come to the points of difference. There are, as far as I am able to find in the discussion, only two points of difference upon this Bill. There may be some slight differences of opinion here and there, but the main points of contention, the main points of discussion which have been brought up by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, are confined to two points. First, comes the question which my hon. friend has elaborated in his closing remarks: Are the provisions of this Bill too elastic or too drastic. My hon. friend says the provisions of this Bill are too elastic, they give too much power to the Minister of the Interior. They put it in his power to become a tyrant and make it possible for him to use his powers for the purpose of cheating this one or that one. My hon. friend did not use the word 'cheat' but he implied it and went perilously near the expression itself. He at all events said that the minister had it in his power to favour a friend and to injure an enemy, to favour a Grit and to injure a Tory. My hon. friend (Mr. Greenway) who spoke this afternoon with some authority, who is one of the most experienced members in this House in all things connected with the Northwest, and who for once in his life received encomiums from hon. gentlemen opposite, for which I am not sorry, on the contrary, he deserved all the encomiums passed upon him.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) stated that one of the objections he had to the Bill, and one of the reasons why we should pause before adopting it, was that under the Bill the Minister of the Interior had shorn himself of powers that he has under the present law. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) stated in so many words that the only way to administer the lands of the Northwest effectively was to give such power to the minister that he could deal with each case individually and upon its merits. He objected to having the land of the Northwest administered by law and wanted it administered rather by regulation. At present, I do not argue that point with the hon. member for Lisgar; he may be right or he may be wrong. Not being a member for the Northwest, I approach this whole subject with a good deal of diffidence and with the intention of listening to the discussion and forming my judgment as the matter goes along. Naturally I side with my colleague who has given this matter a great deal of attention, who comes from the Northwest, has had great experience and on whose judgment I am prepared to rely. The Minister of the Interior has stated already that he knows of amendments being proposed to his Bill. He says that this is not a cast-iron measure, but that he is prepared to receive suggestions. I do not know what suggestions he is prepared to accept, but at all events, this is a matter on which there may be an honest difference of opinion and a good deal of discussion.

The second point made by the hon. member for Lisgar, and a point upon which he spoke with great force and feeling is as to whether he should allow, as is proposed under the Bill, right of pre-emption to the homesteader. On this point, the hon. gentleman is at total variance with the Minister of the Interior whose opinion is that the homesteader should have a preference over a stranger or a newcomer. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has stated that this is a clause which should be rejected. He says that we have made a princely gift to the homesteader in giving him 160 acres of fertile land. I agree that we have treated him generously, though I do not know that I would say that the gift is a princely one. The hon. gentleman asks: Is there any parliament on earth that would give to a man another largess after giving him such a princely gift? Well, Sir, yes, there is. And that parliament was the parliament of Canada at a time when the hon. gentleman was one of those responsible for its policy. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten that in 1889, when we had the homestead system, the government of which he was a member allowed a second homestead to the settled? My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was guilty of that, if guilt it be, which I do not admit. But the hon. gentleman will see that the whole argument which he built up with great eloquence was as to the rights of the community and the farmer in Ontario who is deprived of this valuable asset which is given to the men of the Northwest alone. The hon. gentleman is guilty of the same thing himself, so that if the Minister of the Interior has made a mistake, he has made it in following my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). At present, I do not say whether he is right or wrong, that is a matter for discussion.

I followed the hon. member for Lisgar with great attention, I do not know that he made a full case. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) says that granting this right of pre-emption to the old settler will depopulate the old settlements. He told us that he had received a letter from a friend who is the possessor of a good farm in Manitoba and is in good circumstances and ought to be satisfied, to this effect: I am the father of two sons; I am going to sell out and move northward and take a homestead pre-emption. Does that mean depopulation for the old settlements? Well, the gentleman says he is going to sell, and, as it takes two to make a bargain, that would mean that somebody else will take over his farm and he will be able to buy another. It simply means, not depopulation, but that somebody else will take hold of the farm in Manitoba, while the present holder will go to the new country, take a homestead and pre-emption, and settle his boys beside him. Will the country lose or gain by that? There is much to be said on one side and much to be said on the other. My own judgment is that the thing to do at the present time is to allow this Bill to pass its second reading, and then take up a discussion of these various questions in committee. I appeal to hon. members on this side, who come from Ontario, Quebec or the maritime provinces, are they prepared, after the scanty discussion we have had, even though that discussion has been taken part by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) to say that the proposal of the Minister of the Interior to allow homesteaders to have the preference over everybody else, is wrong and that the other system ought to be adopted? For my part, I think that a man would be presumptuous, coming from the older provinces, who should say that one system or the other is to be condemned. We ought to hear argument on this subject, and for my part, I want to hear arguments, especially I want to hear the views of the hon. members from the new provinces, and, I hope that when the time comes, they will discuss these questions fully. There is a good deal of information to be had on these matters, and it would be preposterous for us with the scanty information we have to say that this principle should be adopted. I think the hon. member for North Toronto went too far when he said that the man from Europe who comes to find a home is to be repulsed and prevented from having a homestead. It is not pretended that the homesteader will take all the pre-emptions or that all the homesteaders will exercise their privilege. It seems to me that we cannot tell at the present time whether this legislation is right or wrong and the only thing we have to do is to invite discussion. And when we come to this clause we will discuss it and find out what it involves.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) It certainly is a remarkable thing, that after a Bill has been introduced by the Minister of the Interior not only consolidating the law with regard to the lands in the Northwest, but introducing some new principles, after that Bill has been, presumably, passed upon by the government, the Prime Minister should arise in parliament and declare that he really has no opinion about the thing one way or the other. That is a new theory of parliamentary government and of Cabinet solidarity. However, if that is the idea of the Prime Minister as to the manner in which the government business should be brought down and debated, I suppose we must make the best of it, and go on and discuss this clause in the committee.

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior was pleased to pause in his speech and express his horror at the policy of building the Canadian Pacific Railway which was proposed and carried into effect by the government of which Sir John Macdonald was Prime Minister. It did not seem to be particularly relevant to the matter the minister had in hand, but he could not avoid doing so. The principal point that he made was that the land grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of building the road through that country which he and his friends were describing at the time as a wilderness, would, at the present average value of lands in the Northwest, be worth $216,000,000, and that that amounted to a bonus of $73,000 per mile upon all the road constructed under that arrangement. Now I almost hesitate to paralyze my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior by pointing out to him that the government of which his own leader was a member offered land which, at the same valuation, would be worth to-day $464,000,000, and that would amount, not to a bonus of $73,000 per mile, but to a bonus of $160,000 per mile, and this was in addition to a cash subsidy of $25,000,000 and a certain guarantee. I trust that some hon. gentleman on the other side of the House will hand a glass of water to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior to help him recover from the horror which must be inspired by that which his own political leader of to-day was willing to support thirty years ago. However, as my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has stated, this is not an unusual eccentricity of the Minister of the Interior, in the midst of serious debate, and we must make some allowance for these eccentricities and pass on to the real business before the House.

We urged two years ago, we urged not only by speech but by resolution in this House, that these lands in the Northwest should be handed over to the ownership and administration of the people of those provinces. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior opposed it, every member from the Northwest sitting on the government side of the House, opposed that proposition. For what good reason? Could one of them tell us to-day for what good reason? Are the men whom they represent in this House of Commons less capable of administering their own lands than are the people of Ontario, of Quebec, of the maritime provinces? Is that their reason? Is it less convenient to administer these lands in Saskatchewan than at Ottawa, so far as they lie within the province of Saskatchewan? Is it less convenient to administer the lands of Alberta at Edmonton than at Ottawa? Are the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan and Manitoba less capable of determining the methods by which their lands should be administered than the people of eastern Canada? What is the result of it to-day? These very gentlemen who stood up in this House and aided to defeat that proposal which was moved from this side, have been bemoaning, during the present winter, the lack of coal supply in the Northwest, and we have the statement of their political friends, the statement of the provincial secretary (I think that is his office), Mr. Motherwell, in the province of Saskatchewan, that if these coal lands had been available to them as part of the public domain, the difficulties from which the people of those provinces have been suffering might have been and would have been obviated. After the experience we have had of the results of the coal strike at Lethbridge, after the object lesson which has been placed before the people of this country by the action of the President of the United States, who has withdrawn from sale the coal lands in the United States which formed part of the public domain, and has declared that they shall be available for emergencies such as these, after that object lesson we have had a scheme maturely thought out, presumably well considered, brought down to this House, and not one single line in that measure from beginning to end which could be expected as likely to afford to the people of the Northwest any such relief in the future as might well be afforded in this legislation.

What further? We have a Bill brought down for the administration of those lands over a territory comprising I suppose about 800,000 square miles, extending from the eastern limits of the province of Ontario into British Columbia, because there is, as we know, a considerable area of Dominion land in British Columbia. Now the Prime Minister himself, when defending in this House, during the session of 1905, the dividing line as proposed between the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, took the ground that he had so fixed that dividing line as to create the eastern province of Saskatchewan with agricultural resources and lands in some measure different from the western province of Alberta. The very argument which the Prime Minister made in that regard would lead us naturally to the conclusion that what might be a good system of administration for Saskatchewan might not be a good system for Alberta. Then you have an area further west in the province of British Columbia, and the government of this country proposes by an omnibus Bill of this kind to provide for conditions which are to suit the varied conditions of each one of these provinces, the varied uses to which the lands in each province might be put, and thus one province or the other must in the end suffer from the fact that these lands are not left to the local administration of the people themselves.

My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) spoke this afternoon to some extent, no doubt, from a Manitoba standpoint. The conditions in the province of Manitoba would naturally appeal to him more strongly than those of Alberta or Saskatchewan. What might be a proper homestead allowance to give to a man in Manitoba would not necessarily be a proper homestead allowance to give to a man in some part of British Columbia. What might be a proper homestead allowance in one of these provinces under certain conditions might not be a fair and reasonable allowance in another province under other conditions. I suppose that would strike any of us at first blush as the probable result of that inquiry, and investigation, and information which the Prime Minister told us we are to have upon the discussion of this Bill in committee. Now I am content, so far as the pre-emption clause is concerned, to leave it to that discussion which is promised to us by the members from the Northwest who, as the Prime Minister says, intend to consider that clause thoroughly when we reach it in the committee stage. There are some considerations which could be very strongly opposed to the view which the member for Lisgar put forward, but there is one consideration which he did not put forward, and I am speaking entirely from the standpoint of the settler, and not from the general standpoint of the whole country. Would not 160 acres of land in a province with a population of 500,000 be as good to the settler as 320 acres in a province with a population of only 250,000? As I understand it and as the Minister of the Interior has argued, if you double the population of Saskatchewan or Alberta, you make every acre in it worth more than it would be if the population were to remain stationary the next five years. I would think that every one would agree with the argument which my hon. friend made on that point when we were discussing this very question in 1905. The main reason why the government declined to hand over these lands to the different provinces, the only plausible argument made on that side against that proposition, was this, that if you handed them over to the provinces, the provinces would utilize them in such a way as to check immigration and thus affect the value of the land. Well, have hon. gentlemen opposite anything to say to the argument of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) in that regard this afternoon? The right hon. the First Minister has not said much; the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has said nothing. Every member from the Northwest on that side has remained silent. If you admit the checking of immigration, which my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has said will result from this measure, and its effect on the future value of land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, you will have to consider very seriously the different clauses in committee and give to each the best results of that consideration.

But leaving that general aspect of the Bill for the moment and coming to one or two matters which might be described as detail, I may say that I concur entirely in the view expressed by several hon. gentlemen on this side, namely that the right of the settler should be made a statutory right and not be met at every turn by some discretion to be exercised by the Minister of the Interior under political pressure and upon political grounds. I do not think that any government which desires to exercise its powers honestly and to deal fairly by the settlers would wish to extend its power in that regard one iota beyond what is absolutely necessary. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) knows as well as I that the moment he undertakes to exercise his political discretion with regard to the rights of any man in respect of homesteads, timber limits, minerals or anything else, at that very moment he will be subjected to pressure by his political supporters. He will not venture to challenge that statement. Is that a position in which any honest man, whether Conservative or Liberal, would desire to be put beyond what may be absolutely necessary for the efficient administration of this Bill. I say not. The first necessity is that the right of the settler should be made absolutely secure and the least possible discretion given the Minister of the Interior or any of his officials so far as those rights are concerned. For that principle, when we reach the committee stage, I certainly shall contend with all the energy in my power, because I believe it is the right principle, not only from a public standpoint but in the interests of every present and future settler in the Northwest. Another principle I would stand for, and which does not seem to be very well safeguarded in this Bill, is that to all the dealings and transactions of the Department of the Interior or any of its officials respecting lands in the Northwest there should be given the fullest publicity. I have never heard of any such system elsewhere as that which has been pursued in the Northwest. I have not carried my researches very far, but I know that in Nova Scotia, where we have a public domain consisting for the main part of mineral land, under both Conservative and Liberal administrations it is the right of any man to go into the mines office and look at every record and every letter addressed to any minister of the Crown in charge of that department. He has the right, on the payment of the small fee of twenty-five cents, to look at the books of record in the office and to ascertain exactly how the title to any claim stands. Will the Prime Minister inform me of any reason why every man in the Northwest should not have exactly the same right? I can see no good reason. Why should a man going to the land office in the Northwest be told that, although he is a citizen of the country, interested in the public domain, he has not the right to examine the public records with regard to that domain. What reason can be assigned for refusing him that right? The possibility of claim jumping was advanced by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) on one occasion. Well, I believe it would be infinitely better to run any danger of that kind—which I think rests more in the imagination of the minister than anywhere else—than to have it suspected and believed as it is to a very large extent, that the lack of that opportunity to examine the records, has been productive of fraud and that men have been deprived of their rights simply because they were not allowed to examine the public records with regard to the public domain. The Minister of the Interior went so far on one occasion in this House as to declare that public documents relating to the public domain were private documents which not even a member of parliament should have the right to inspect. Private documents—private documents of the Liberal party, I suppose, relating to the public domain—and these forsooth are not to be examined by any citizen of this country, not even by members of parliament.

Then there is one further matter I would urge on the attention of the government and that is with respect to tenders for timber limits. I do not know what area of timber limits remains in the Northwest at present, but people who profess to be well informed say that they are practically all now held—not by this government in trust for the people of the country—but by certain favoured friends of this administration who, under the guise of tender, have acquired practically everything in the west in the shape of timber limits. I do not know if that be true, but we shall endeavour to get some information later on.

But, look, how, under the guise of public tender and competition, these lands have been so extensively acquired. A friend of the government sends out his cruiser, his servant, accompanied by perhaps half a dozen others. These men spend six months or perhaps eighteen months thoroughly cruising and exploring a particular district in the west. What follows? They send notice to the Department of the Interior that they would like to have these lands put up to tender and public competition. What follows? The lands are ostensibly put up to tender and public competition, as my friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has said, but as a matter of fact there is no competition about it, because there is no opportunity afforded any other person to make an effective examination of these lands, and they go to the man, the favoured friend, who has acquired that knowledge which should have been acquired in the first instance by the government. And so these lands are knocked down, without any upset price, for perhaps the one hundredth or one thousandth part of their real value, and they go to swell certain enormous fortunes which have been recently accumulated in this country. Since these timber lands in the Northwest, within the last eight on ten years, have acquired their enormous value, why has not the government of Canada adopted the reasonable and business method of exploring these lands themselves, and of putting an upset price upon them in order that the people of this country could be assured of their reasonable value from the successful tenderer. There is no good business reason against that proposition from the standpoint of the people of this country, and yet, within the last four or five years these timber limits have enormously increased in value, and, greatly to the detriment of the people in Canada, no ordinary business precaution has been taken by this administration in regard to their disposal.

I would like to have seen in this Bill, some definite statutory provision in regard to the way in which these tenders should be received and opened. There is no doubt about it, that the methods in the past have been extremely lax, and the government might as well know it now as at any other time, that there has been a great deal of suspicion and even scandal created because these methods have been so lax. When we come to that provision in the Bill, I will insist so far as my power will permit me, that reasonable provisions—such as my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) pointed out are in use in Great Britain—shall be inserted, so that these tenders shall no longer be dealt with in the extremely lax and irregular method which has hitherto prevailed in the Department of the Interior.

Now let me say a word as to the remarkable provisions in this Bill with regard to the discretion of the Minister of the Interior. The Prime Minister declared that in the opinion of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) this Bill is not sufficiently elastic in that respect. Well, if the member for Lisgar is not satisfied with the amount of discretion conferred on the Minister of the Interior by this Bill, he must be remarkably difficult to satisfy. I find that there are 24 sections in the Bill which confer upon the Minister of the Interior discretion in respect of matters, some of immense importance and some of minor importance. There are 24 different sections under which the minister is given the right to deal with the settler's interest; to say that the settler shall or shall not do this or that; that he shall or shall not hold his homestead, that he shall or shall not receive a portion of the public domain. In addition, there are 12 sections of the Bill which provide for regulation, or power of control, or exercise of discretion by the Governor in Council; and there are one or two other sections which give certain very important discretionary powers to officers of the Department of the Interior. If that be not a sufficiently elastic Bill, so far as the discretion of the Minister of the Interior is concerned, I do not know what the member for Lisgar would desire. I think that a great many of these sections ought to be amended, so that discretion should be given to the Minister of the Interior only in cases of absolute necessity. I admit that there must be some such cases, and that the granting of a discretionary power may be right in order to prevent injustice to the settler in some instances, but I would cut that discretionary power down to the very lowest limit. Above all, I repeat, that the right of a settler to the public domain of this country in the Northwest should be made a statutory right, just as far as it is possible for this parliament to make it. The Minister of the Interior seems to be amused at that idea—well, it may be amusing to him, but I venture to think the people of this country will not be amused at the violation of that principle. There is no reason why any man in Canada should be at the mercy of the whim of any Minister of the Interior, whether it be the gentleman who now holds the office, or, that Conservative successor who will fill the office in the early future. I speak of this without regard to the man who fills the office for the time being; I speak of it because I believe that the principle of conferring a discretion which is likely to be exercised—which in many cases must be exercised under political pressure—s not a good principle, and I hold that its application should be minimized to the very greatest possible degree, in this or in any other law. It has been pointed out by hon. gentlemen on this side, that this power may lead to very important results; that the Minister of the Interior, under this Bill, could give away to his political friends, at any time, for a more trifle all the remaining lands in the Northwest, just as enormous areas of such lands have been given away in the last eight or ten years to political friends of the administration. We may have, under the provisions of this Bill, another Saskatchewan land deal at any time, and one million and a half or two million dollars may flow into the fortunate pockets of some gentlemen who are strong supporters of the occupants of the treasury benches. We may have another Robins deal; and land may be withdrawn from settlement; an irrigation scheme may be put forward, and all these deals may be put through by the Minister of the Interior in his private office, after consultation with a few of his party friends, behind the back of parliament, behind the back of the people of Canada, and without giving to any man or to any group of men in Canada, the right to offer better terms to the people of this country for these concessions. That is not a good principle to act upon; it has been acted upon in the past to the infinite discredit of this government. So far as this Bill is concerned, it should be the united action of members on both sides of the House to see that the application of that principle is reduced to the very lowest limits.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2—interpretation,

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. In section 7 of the Bill we have the mention of agricultural land, merchantable timber, water supply and various minerals. It seems to me that these expressions should be defined. As far as I have been able to ascertain, from looking at the Bill, the Minister of the Interior is to decide whether lands are agricultural lands or not.

Mr. OLIVER. I would be very willing to accept a suggestion from my hon. friend of a definition of agricultural land. For myself, I find it rather difficult to give a definition in words that will apply under all circumstances.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How are you going to determine it?

Mr. OLIVER. It would depend on the merits of each case. It is very difficult to give a definition that would apply to all conditions throughout that extent of territory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who is to decide it?

Mr. OLIVER. The minister of course will decide what is to be considered agricultural land.

Mr. LAKE. Under what conditions would he consider a certain body of land to be agricultural land at the present moment?

Mr. OLIVER. It would be land of such a character and so situated that the growing of crops could be successfully carried on.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Will the minister be guided in forming his decision by the reports of his inspectors?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly, he has to be.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. We know what that amounts to from the experience of the past. In the discussion that took place in this House a couple of weeks ago it was shown that the minister's inspectors had reported that certain lands which were to be granted for a grazing lease were not fit for agricultural purposes, while later on the settlers located on those lands petitioned the minister to have them withdrawn from grazing lease and thrown open to settlement, as they were splendid agricultural lands and were already located on—different from the reports of the minister's inspectors.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend is at sea. My remembrance is that there was no such statement as that they were splendid agricultural lands.

Mr. LAKE. Is it not a fact that some of those lands were recently sold at $10 an acre by the men who obtained that lease?

Mr. OLIVER. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. LAKE. It came out in the discussion on the Robins grazing lease.

Mr. OLIVER. If I am able to read the documents connected with that matter correctly, I think my hon. friend is under a mistake.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to call attention to subsection (f.) It says that homestead means land entered for under the provisions of this Act. It seems to me that homestead includes lands heretofore entered for as well.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the repeal clause at the close of the Bill makes all necessary provision to give effect to the existing Act so far as it affects homesteads. This Act only presumes to affect what comes under its own provisions. It does not presume to alter the effects of the Act which it is intended to displace.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not exactly the point, as I understand it. It is true, there is the usual repealing clause at the end of the Bill; but the point of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel), and it seems to me a good point, is that you have a definition for a homestead in respect to future entries, but you have no definition of homestead in respect to entries in the past.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that the definition of homestead as it exists to-day is either expressed or implied in the Act as it exists to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be implied? I do not know how it would be implied; what is the explanation of this?

Mr. OLIVER. There is either an express definition of the word 'homestead' in the Act as it stands, or else in the administration of the Act a definite conclusion has been reached as to what constitutes a homestead, which comes to the same thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it defined in the existing Acts now being consolidated?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say off-hand that it has, but the result is the same as if there was an express definition in the words of the old Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might lead to confusion, but if the minister is satisfied—

Mr. LENNOX. Taking the different parts of section 27, and the definition of the word 'homestead' as the land entered under the terms of this Act there would seem to be difficulty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you use the word 'homestead' anywhere in this Act with the intention of including a homestead which has been entered for before the passing of this Act, then you cut this out by the definition here given, for this seems to confine it to homesteads entered after the passing of this Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I am willing to accept the judgment of my hon. friend.

Mr. LENNOX. The definite meaning acquired would apply all right if there was not a specific meaning applied to it here, but when there is a specific meaning I think it would govern.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The section might be made to include homesteads under the old Act.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I still suggest that the term 'agricultural land' and merchantable timber' should receive some definition in this Act. It will appear as we proceed to discuss the Act why this will be necessary. Section 7, for example, points out what lands shall be open for homestead entry, agricultural lands. The minister says he is unable to define it and possibly it would be well to let the section stand to see if some definition can be given. For example, would the minister consider land with timber on it, which in the ordinary course of events would have to be cleared, agricultural land? He speaks of land not fit for cultivation without the aid of irrigation. Are these agricultural lands? Take land covered with boulders which would have to be cleared before it could be put into a state of cultivation. It seems to me that it is important that these words should receive some definition. The minister has suggested lands being fit for settlement. Can he place a more clear interpretation upon this expression than that?

Mr. OLIVER. The point raised is very well worthy of consideration. In the case of land in which there are boulders; in a certain condition of country with a certain value of land and certain facilities for farming, that land would not be agricultural land, but the same land in a changed condition, where values had increased, where facilities had improved, would be agricultural land. That is a sample of the difficulty that would occur in putting a definition as to what should be called agricultural land in print in an Act of parliament.

Mr. PERLEY. Subsection (h) refers to lease or license. There is another form under the Act called 'permit' under which fees are charged, and I suggest that that word be included there, lease, license or permit, I suppose that is the intention?

Mr. OLIVER. I shall agree to the amendment suggested.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 6,

None of the provisions of this Act respecting homesteads or tender shall apply to the Yukon territory; but the Governor in Council may from time to time make such regulations in respect to homesteads and to timber in the Yukon territory as he deems suited to the conditions of that territory.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Is there to be some provision for the publication of these regulations that are made from time to time? They should be published in the 'Canada Gazette' and in some paper in the Yukon that the people there may know what these regulations are.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there is provision now for the publication of all regulations relating to the Yukon and also for placing them before parliament for ratification.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Under what statute ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) suggests that it is probably the statute concerning the Yukon territory. I know at any rate, that there is a law governing that point.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The publication in the 'Canada Gazette' and in a Yukon paper ?

Mr. OLIVER. Only in the 'Gazette,' I think.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have not all regulations of the government to appear in the 'Canada Gazette' ?

Mr. OLIVER. All Orders in Council do not appear, but regulations for the disposal of public lands, of course, must always appear in the 'Gazette'.

Mr. LAKE. I presume that there is a Yukon official 'Gazette' and the regulations should be published in that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that they are published in the 'Territorial Gazette', but they are published in the 'Canada Gazette'.

Mr. LAKE. Could not provision be made to have them published in the Yukon 'Territorial Gazette' ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. As a matter of fact, they are published. But I think that, perhaps, it would be a mistake to require by law that they shall be published, because should there be an accidental omission of publication, I presume, the regulation would be invalidated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statute to which the hon. Minister of the Interior alludes was passed about 1903, and the provisions he refers to was inserted by the then Minister at my instance. But speaking from recollection, I do not think it provides for regulations made under any other Act than that in which it is embodied. But why should the minister deal with timber in Yukon by regulation ? Why is it not done by statute ?

Mr. OLIVER. The timber throughout the country generally is dealt by regulation. There is, of course, in the statute, very general provision, but it is believed that it is necessary to have the provisions made by regulation rather than by statute. It is believed that the conditions in the Yukon are so different from what they are in other parts of the country that it is desirable that there should be special privilege of regulation of timber there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know how valuable the timber in the Yukon may be, but unless it is of very trifling moment I would most earnestly suggest that the parliament ought not to delegate to the Governor in Council the absolute and unqualified right to legislate with regard to it. If this part of the public domain is worth legislating about at all, it seems to me, that parliament is the proper tribunal and not the Governor in Council.

Mr. OLIVER. There is of course, a good deal to be said in favour of that view, but the subject covers the scope of the land Bill in connection with the administration of the natural resources of the country in all parts. If it is intended to deal with all this by legislation, it will certainly make the Lands' Act a very cumbrous measure, and the necessity or advantage of this has never been demonstrated. So far as the placer mines in the Yukon are concerned, the conditions having become established, removed them from being dealt with by regulation and provided for them being dealt with by statute. And, so, I presume, if conditions become settled in relation to the timber and if the timber interests become important, we might provide a special statute or amendment to the present Bill to deal with timber in the Yukon.

Mr. FOSTER. What kinds of timber are there, and how are they dealt with now ?

Mr. OLIVER. At the present time the timber in the Yukon is not set out in berths as it is in other parts of the country and as it used to be there. It was considered that, owing to the character of the timber, and the purposes for which it was required, and all the conditions, it was better to deal with it by permitting any person who wanted timber to cut it within a certain area and pay certain dues.

Mr. FOSTER. And the permit is confined within certain limits ?

Mr. OLIVER. It applies only to a certain area, and lasts for one year or less and does not convey any right in or control over the land to which it applies. In the Yukon, where there is a possibility of mineral development anywhere, it is not thought desirable that there should be a partial ownership of the surface areas by the holding of timber limits.

Mr. LAKE. Wherein do the regulations in respect of homesteads in the Yukon differ from the ordinary homestead regulations set forth in the Dominion Lands Act? And have many entries been made ?

Mr. OLIVER. Regulations were passed last session. Up to that time no special provision for homesteads in the Yukon had been made, and the provisions applicable to the rest of the country were not applicable to the Yukon, because the country was not surveyed, and, of course, our homesteads law refers to surveyed territory.

Therefore, provision had to be made for taking up a homestead on much the same principle as a mineral claim. It would be staked out presumably on a river, with a frontage of not more than one-half mile and running back not more than one-fifth mile. I have not the figures at my fingers' end, but residence duties are defined in a rather different way, so that residence is expected only in the summer months, whereas in other parts of the country it may be any time of the year.

Mr. LAKE. Have there been many entries ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. It was to allow any person who wished to take up land to have an opportunity to do so. The intention was to make a survey afterwards just as mineral claims are surveyed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not satisfied with the construction advanced by the minister. It seems to me that if you are to retain the public domain in the hands of the Dominion, it should be dealt with on more general lines. The subject is of sufficient importance to call for a timber Act, as you have a mineral Act. I do not say you should have a special timber Act for the Yukon, but you should have one which would make any exceptional provisions for the Yukon that may be necessary. I protest against the abdication by this parliament to the Governor in Council of the right to deal absolutely with all the timber interests in the Yukon. The Governor in Council deals with the matter without any public discussion, the matter is dealt with by men who are sworn to secrecy as to their deliberations. All through this Bill there is the principle and the tendency of delegating to the Governor in Council legislative powers of a very wide scope. I think the Bill goes altogether too far in that direction.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the minister will leave this section over, and consult with his officers to see whether so large a territory as the Yukon cannot be included.

Mr. OLIVER. I would be willing to hold the section over, only I am afraid I cannot improve it to the satisfaction of my hon. friend. His suggestion that there should be a general timber Act, as there is a Yukon Mining Act, or other special Acts, is a very good one. But as I have pointed out, the conditions in the Yukon do not lend themselves to a satisfactory holding of timber berths. We could embody in an Act provisions which would appertain to the granting of timber permits in the Yukon, but the importance of having provisions in regard to permits inserted in the Act is not as great as in the case where timber berths are held. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that in the case of the Yukon, and under present circumstances, there is no serious departure from the principle which he lays down by acceding to this provision as it stands. If he desires it particularly I will reserve it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it should be reserved for the purpose of providing that these regulations should be published and laid before parliament, and approved by parliament. At my instance, the Minister of the Interior made that provision under the general Act relating to the Yukon Territory. As I have already said, I do not think that provision would apply to any regulations made under another Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I recollect the fact the hon. gentleman alludes to, and I am willing to add that provision of this section.

Mr. LENNOX. We have about twenty sections in this Act dealing with timber lands, and those sections probably could not apply to the Yukon. Then, beginning with section 59, we have permits to cut timber, and following that down to 72 there are various provisions in reference to timber lands. I would ask the minister whether we cannot make the timber provisions of this Act apply generally to the Yukon, excepting the section from 51 to 58 inclusive.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not like to make those apply to the Yukon ; the conditions there being so different, I do not think it would be sound policy.

On section 7,—Disposal of lands for homestead, proviso as to timber as to water supply, and mineral rights.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What quantity of merchantable timber would be necessary to cause the cancellation of an entry ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is something impossible to define in a Bill. The amount of merchantable timber that would warrant the cancellation of an entry would vary with the class of timber and the conditions of the country. In a prairie country, a comparatively small amount of timber would warrant the cancellation of an entry, because that timber, even if it were only poplar, might be of great value to the surrounding settlers for fuel. But in a partially wooded country it would be entirely improper to cancel an entry because there was a considerable amount of practically valueless poplar upon it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is there not some declaration that an applicant for a homestead has to make in regard to the quantity of timber that is upon the place ?

Mr. OLIVER. There is some such declaration, but we find that in practice it does not work out, that is to say that if we insisted on compliance with the terms of that declaration a very large part of the country which is unquestionably suitable for settlement would be held from settlement, because there is timber upon it. In a partially wooded country, if we applied that provision, settlers would simply be kept off the land.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. It would all depend on whether it is brush or whether it is timber. Scrub is not timber ?

Mr. OLIVER. If it was a small island of timber in the open prairie it would be merchantable. But in that country where there is an immense quantity of that kind of timber it has no particular value.

Mr. LAKE. I presume all timber has some value. Can the minister give us a definition of what he means by merchantable timber ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give a definition that will cover all cases. My hon. friend says that all timber has a value. In that I must differ from him. In the part of the country where I live the more timber there is on a man's place the less valuable it is—that is of a certain kind of timber. Yet that same timber, in that part of the country my hon. friend represents, would be considered merchantable and very valuable.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This is one of the most objectionable clauses in the Bill. There would be very much less injury if you would have, as in the old law, twenty-five acres, rather than give this discretion to the minister. He has not only discretion as to the particular locality but also as to the particular holder. And the minister can exercise that discretion in an arbitrary manner to the detriment of the holder. There would be much less objection to having a stipulated amount, say twenty-five acres. I have never heard that any great disadvantage resulted from that to the settlers. While there might be something in what the minister says with regard to the different values of timber in different localities, this discretionary power may be exercised so as practically to confiscate the lands of those who may not agree with the minister or his government.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not see why you need this provision. Careful administration would prevent any necessity for it. Section 5 provides that no land shall be open for entry for a homestead or for sale until the same has been surveyed in accordance with the provisions of the Dominion Land Surveys Act. The land having been surveyed, the minister would have a report of the survey, embodying the general features of the land. If so, I do not see why any reservation should not be made in time to prevent homestead entry. I submit that it is not necessary to have this at all, but if we must have it we should have something definite, as has been suggested. Further there ought to be a distinct provision for compensation to the man who has been disappointed through no fault of his own. In subsection (b) of section 7 we find there is compensation, but not such as there ought to be. The compensation ought not to be left to the discretion of the minister. But I submit that this section is not necessary if proper precautions be taken. The minister should be advised whether land was open for homesteading or not ; and once it is opened for homesteading, the government should stand by it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Under the old Act the homesteader could not get the water-power or anything of that kind, but this Bill is so worded that if a person would homestead a piece of property with a stream running across it, he could develop the water-power on that stream and you could not take it from him.

Mr. OLIVER. The trouble with the old section was that while it assumed to reserve the land controlling a water-power, it did not effectively do so. If a man secured an entry for land controlling a water-power, there was no right to deprive him of his entry, except by arbitrarily depriving him of it without the authority of the Act. We propose that if a man does get an entry for land, he does not get the water-power. His land, however, would command that water-power to a certain extent. We provide that such part of that land as controls the water-power may be taken from him and compensation given.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Suppose a person wishes to build a dam, a man who has homesteaded land two or three miles above the dam might have his land flooded. Would he have to get off his homestead ? Under this section he would.

Mr. OLIVER. No, this section does not confer any right at all. It merely provides that if a person acquires land by homestead which controls a water-power, that part of his land which may be required for the development of the water-power may be taken from him. He takes his chances when he takes his land.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Here is a stream with a little rapid on it where a dam might be constructed and water-power developed. When the dam is constructed, it floods land three miles further up which has been homesteaded by another party. Under this section that land which is flooded may be taken away and that man loses his homestead.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not read it that way. He would lose his homestead as a consequence of the development of the water-power but his land was not necessary to the development of that water-power. Whoever developed the water-power would have to settle with him for the damages.

Mr. ALCORN. Under section 7, in the case put by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes)—if the lands were located above the point where the dam is put and if it was necessary for the development of the water-power at that spot that the lands above should be taken, the minister would have the power to take them. Under the wording of the clause, in the case cited by the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes), the minister might arbitrarily cancel the homestead two miles above the dam.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not read the section that way. My idea is that the land necessary for the development of any water-power is the land which would carry the two ends of the dam. After the water-power was developed, if any other settler suffered damag, he would have recourse against the man who built the dam.

Mr. ALCORN. On the contrary, I would think that the word 'development' would cover the right to flood.

Mr. LENNOX. Certainly.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where a stream passed through a man's property, if he was to place a dam across that stream, he would own that water-power under subsection (c). He might place a dam across the stream, and any other person who wanted to use the water could not go where this man's dam was, and the water-power would practically be spoiled at any other part of the river. In my opinion subsection (c) gives to the homesteader the absolute control of the water-power. If there is any place along any of these rivers where there might be a valuable water-power, I can see no reason why, after this Bill is passed, a person cannot acquire so much land on each side of the river and then he would absolutely own the water privilege if he constructed a dam. The first man who would put the dam across would have the water-power on the river.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to know whether my hon. friend wants the homesteader to have the water-power or not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have no objection to the homesteader having the water-power on his own property, but he has no right to shut it off from the man who has a homestead above.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend from Grenville thinks the settler should not have the power, and as a matter of fact this clause is intended to meet the views of both hon. gentlemen. We let the settler keep his homestead, but we take from him so much as is necesary to build a dam and pay him compensation for it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The clause does not say that.

Mr. OLIVER. We may have wrongly stated our intention, but that is our purpose. The ownership of the water-power is dealt with in section 35 as separate from the land. I will have an amendment to that section which goes very fully into the matter of dealing with the water-power.

Mr. J. D. REID. I wanted to know if it was thoroughly understood to whom the water-power belonged.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I draw the attention of the minister to subsection (c), and I put to him this case: If there is a lake of 60 acres in the midst of a homestead of 160 acres, surely the homesteader should have some right in that lake. Under this section he would appear to have no right at all.

Mr. OLIVER. If the lake is defined by survey it is excluded from the homestead. If there is no definition of the lake, and a patent is issued for the 160 acres, of course the man gets the lake.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the man gets his patent for his homestead and the lake is included in that homestead, surely he is entitled to the lake.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but we say we have no right to require that this man shall take 50 acres of water intead of 50 acres of land. We therefore survey the lake, and we do not require that the lake shall be considered as part of his homestead. If he wishes to consider the bottom of the lake as part of his homestead he is welcome to do so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are cases in that western country where these lakes should be reserved. In some places water is scarce, and these lakes should be reserved for the general benefit of the community.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If I have 150 acres with a lake in the center, my neighbours have no right to trespass on my property unless they are prepared to pay me a compensation. If the minister examines the clause he will see there is that omission.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no omission; the section is as we intended it. A lake in the midst of a homestead, does not necessarily become the property of the homesteader for the reasons set forth by my hon. friend (Mr. Crawford).

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who owns it?

Mr. OLIVER. The principle set out in the Irrigation Act is that the government owns the right to the water.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A lake is not irrigation water.

Mr. OLIVER. The water has a special value in that country, and it is thought wise to provide that the right to the land does not include the right to the water, when water is of an area sufficient to warrant it being called a lake.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have you made any provision in the Bill to keep that water for the neighbours ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not ?

Mr. OLIVER. That matter would come under the control of the provincial government. The water is there for the public use, and the provincial government will find access to it if the homesteader does not allow his neighbours that access. There are many cases where the lake is partially on a homestead and partially on the road allowance, and of course in such cases there would be access to the lake.

Mr. FOWLER. What right would the provincial government have to interfere if a man had a homestead with a lake on it?

Mr. OLIVER. The local government has the responsibility of doing whatever is necessary for the benefit of the people under its control, and if the people of the neighbourhood required access to that water, it would be the business of the provincial government to provide it.

Mr. FOWLER. They could only do it by expropriation.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly, by expropriation.

Mr. FOWLER. I see you include natural gas. That was not in the other Act?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. At Medicine Hat, for example, natural gas is easily obtained. It belongs at the present time to the owners of the soil. You propose that the new homesteader shall not have that right?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.
