A very serious stabbing affray took place at Frank, Alta., on Sept. 14. James Milne, a miner, received no fewer than five wounds from a knife in the hands of Fitzgerald, a man employed in railroad construction. The stabbing was done at midday in the bar-room of the Frank hotel.

From what could be learned there seems to have been bad blood between the two men. Both are unusually muscular men and both have done their devoir in the ring. A desire to try conclusions with one another probably helped to lead up to the tragedy. Early in the morning, Milne, who was very drunk, picked a quarrel with Fitzgerald, who also was intoxicated. Milne had the best of the bout and compelled Fitzgerald, whom he accused of disloyalty to King and country, to say "God save the King" three times. So Milne emerged victorious though with a badly chewed thumb, while Fitz made use of his legs.

It seems his Irish had been thoroughly aroused. He walked five miles to the French camp, borrowed a knife from an Italian, and returned. About noon the two men met again in the bar room of the Frank hotel, and without words of warning Fitzgerald sprang for his man and stabbed to kill. The bartender vaulted over the bar armed with a hammer, and got the butt of the knife in the face. A friend of Milne's who had entered with him, tried to hold Fitzgerald, and barely escaped a swipe in the throat from the bloody knife. It was now gettigg too hot for Fitz so he went out on the street. Milne's sympathizers followed and the battle was continued with rocks. Milne tried to follow, but fell bleeding.

Fitzgerald, afraid then of the men who had now assembled, went to the police barracks to give himself up. The constable on duty brought him over to the hospital where the wounded man had been taken with a view to his being identified. The hospital is surrounded by bush and a sudden longing for liberty having taken possession of the prisoner, he gave the constable a neat slip. But this particular policeman is somewhat of a sprinter, and when he got sight of his man he sent a still swifter lead messenger after him. At the shot the prisoner stopped and was easily recaptured.

Fitzgerald has been along the Crow's Nest for several years, and is known as a thoroughly bad character. About a year ago he attacked a fellow workman with an axe and nearly killed him. After serving a short term for this Fitz was let go on suspended sentence. Since that time his conduct has been exemplary until a month ago, when he began to get quarrelsome again.

Milne is a hard-working miner, very well behaved when sober, but somewhat quarrelsome in his cups.

The wounded man was removed at once to Dr. Malcolmson's hospital, where he now lies in a precarious condition. He was stabbed in the back of the neck, in the right thigh and has three bad gashes in the back. It is doubtful if he will recover.

FROM BOTH HEMISPHERES

Important News Condensed Into Brief Paragraphs.

Coal has been discovered at the headwaters of the Gatineau.

The halfbreeds of the west desire another scrip commission.

Sir Thomas Lipton is suffering from appendicitis in Chicago.

One eastern bank has increased the rate of interest on deposits to 3½ per cent.

An eleven-year-old boy at Schafers, N.D., accidentally shot and killed his eight-year-old sister.

Lake Manitoba's waters have overflowed and destroyed fields of wheat and barley at Longburn.

W. A. Leys, a prominent barrister of Port Arthur, Ont., was found dead in his room with bullet holes in his forehead on Sept. 16.

Turks have continued their brutality at Losengrad; more villages were burned and unheard tortures inflicted on women and children.

A Blue Book issued by the British government shows that Canada's trade is steadily increasing with the United Kingdon; British trade with foreign countries is falling off.

At the continuance of the Alaskan Boundary commission on Sept. 16, Attorney-General Finlay confined himself to a technical argument in which he strongly upheld the Canadian contentions.

An insurgent band of 450 men was annihilated by the Turks, September 14, between Letib and Kratova, 38 miles from Uskub.

A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Hong Kong announces that during a typhoon the steamer On-Ling No. 1 capsized off Kwang-Chau-Wan and 100 persons perished.

George Towns, the celebrated sculler's premises at Newcastle, N.S.W., and his entire stock of boats, were destroyed by fire.

The government of Western Australia will appoint a director of agriculture. The man for the position will be sought for in Canada and the United States.

Owing to a mistake made by a brakeman an express dashed into a loaded freight near Chatham, Ont., on the Pere Marquette railroad, and a score of passengers were injured; some probably fatally.

THE CULTIVATED MAN.

Are Canadians the "Most Common-Schooled and Least Cultivated" People in the World?—What Is Culture?

James Russell Lowell once described his fellow-countrymen as the "most common-schooled and least cultivated" people in the world. His implication that the work of the common schools does not all make for "culture," in the proper sense of that term, is just as true to-day as it was when it was uttered, and is just as true of Canadians as it is of Americans, says the Toronto Globe. Another distinguished American, President Eliot of Harvard University, has undertaken in a recently published paper not merely to give by implication a conception of "culture" but to show the changes through which the general idea of it has passed since the beginning of the nineteenth century.

These may be thus described categorically: The moral sense of the world makes character a more important element than it used to be in the ideal of a cultivated man; the linguistic and literary element in cultivation abides but has become vastly broader than formerly, so that now selection among its various fields is forced upon every educated youth; in consequence of the rapid increase in the store of rationalized and systematized discoveries and experiences culture no longer implies even a little knowledge of everything, and it must be content with a general knowledge of some things and "a real mastery of some small portion of the human store"; and, as there has taken place a large expansion of the fields in which the cultivated imagination may be exercised, the training of the imagination must extend "beyond literature and the fine arts of history, philosophy, science, government, and sociology." Dr. Eliot meant to include also under the last head "the whole field of physical and biological research," which he had mentioned previously in the same connection.

It is not necessary here to raise the question whether he has given us an exhaustive or even the most useful description of the changes which have undoubtedly taken place in educational ideals within the past hundred years. It is, at all events, suggestive and may become helpful to those educationists who take the trouble to think out for themselves what is involved in it. We prefer to bring into comparison with it the remarks on one phase of the same subject made by another apostle of culture, the present Prime Minister of Great Britain. Addressing the recent meeting of representatives of the colonial universities in London, Mr. Balfour, dealing with secondary education, confessed his dissatisfaction with "the old classical ideal," but admitted that he was "still less satisfied with any substitutes" for it he had seen proposed. He did not believe classical education could be successfully defended solely on the ground that the classical languages contained masterpieces of human imagination which had never been surpassed, though that was a true statement; but neither did he think "science alone a good medium for conveying education to classes of boys who do not care a farthing about the world they live in so far as it is not concerned with the cricket or the football ground."

The educational moral to be drawn from these and other high thoughts on the relation of education as a means to culture as an end seems to be that the subject matter of class instruction is of less importance than the manner and the spirit in which the work is done; that while method is all important the field of work to which it is applied is comparitively unimportant; that culture has no necessary connection with any particular area explored by the workers, but is inseparably connected with the way in which the work is done; that culture does not depend on how much the cultivated man knows, but does depend absolutely on the manner in which what knowledge he has was acquired; that mental culture is a condition of intellect and that this condition is to be reached only by making it the result of the practice of research by its possessor.

Every system will be a success, irrespective of its course of study, that puts a premium on investigation, and every system will be per contra a failure that puts a premium on memorization. It will not remedy the present educational distress to dethrone Latin and set up science in its stead unless proper methods of teaching science are adopted, and it is just as easy to secure good teaching of Latin as it is to secure good teaching of science. Until we have the ability to see, the frankness to admit, and the courage to face this culture problem as it should be faced we will go on turning out well trained students as tested by written examinations, only to wonder why we are still the most "common-schooled and least cultivated people in the world."

Parliament Tower.

Climbing the big tower on Parliament Hill and viewing the capital and its environs from this dizzy height is always a pleasant pastime, says The Ottawa Free Press. The number of visitors who registered with Mr. George Vincent, the popular custodian at the entrance, during the year just closed, was larger than in any previous one during the past nine years, being 11,192 in all. Following is the record of visitors who registered from different Provinces and countries from July 1, 1902, to June 30, 1903:—

Province of Ontario	7,099
Province of Quebec	2,073
Province of Nova Scotia	64
Province of New Brunswick	68
Province of British Columbia	62
Province of Prince Edward Island	26
Province of Manitoba	137
Northwest Territories	69
United States of America	1,316
Europe	278
Total	11,192

ITS FIRST SESSION

ALASKAN BOUNDARY TRIBUNAL OPENS IN LONDON.

Attorney-General Finlay Opens the Argument in Favor of Canada's Contention --A Review of the Treaty of 1825 Between Great Britain and Russia.

The first sitting of the Alaska Boundary Tribunal took place at the foreign office in London on Sept. 95 in the large room in which deputations are received by members of the government. The commissioners and counsel for both sides were all present. The attorney-general proceeded to open the case for Great Britain by describing the territory in dispute as being chiefly of value as affording access to the Yukon territory. He went on to say that the question of the boundary has been in dispute since 1872 and for more than thirty years was the subject of difference periodically between the governments though but little was known to the outside world up to 1896 and confined to state papers. In that year the discovery of gold in the Yukon made it a subject of active concern. He alluded to the joint survey of 1895, and the negotiations of the joint high commission in 1898, which, unfortunately, bore no fruit. Coming to the treaty of 1903, he said that this tribunal was organized thereunder to interpret the treaty of 1825. It can only answer questions and has no power to draw the boundary. Referring to the last paragraph of Act III. of the treaty of 1903, he argued that under it the tribunal could take cognizance only of acts of the governments concerned, not of individuals, and that only such actions could be considered as implied an agreement of view between the two governments. Any action outside the treaty could only be relevant so far as it showed united action of both parties. The attorney-general then proceeded to read and comment upon the questions proposed to the tribunal.

Regarding the first, he said that there could be no discussion, the second, also, was a simple question of identity. What channel did the negotiations mean by the Portland channel? He said undoubtedly that passing to the north of Wales and Pearse islands. The third question answers itself. You have the two points and must join them by a straight line. The same answer is for the fourth question. Regarding the fifth question he asked the tribunal to return a simple negative. To the sixth question he asked that it should be answered to the effect that where deep inlets occur that the measurement should be from the line of general direction of the mainland coast and that whether the heads of the inlets should belong to the United States or Canada would depend upon the situation of the mountains, which are the cardinal feature of this treaty. Regarding the seventh question, he asked the tribunal to decide that mountains do exist, and that the line of the summits is that delineated by Mr. King, the Canadian expert. He then indicated the order in which he proposed to deal with the case as follows:

1. The terms of the treaty of 1825.
2. To give a general view of the negotiations which led to the treaty of 1825.
3. To deal with the question before the tribunal, which fall into two groups, the first four and the last three. He then read and commented on the treaty of 1825, pointing out that the latitude and longitude of the southermost point of Prince of Wales Island were given merely for identification, and that the point itself was the commencement, no matter what its latitude was. He then said that de Long de la Parse dite Portland channel did not necessarily mean through the middle of the channel, and argued that throughout the negotiations the southern boundary, contended for by Russia, was 55, touches upon the meaning of the pronoun elle, which, however, he said, was of little practical utility.

Passing the treaty, he contended that the basis of the treaty is the existence of mountains. The contingent portion of the fourth article does not contravene this, for it supposes mountains, though in places they may recede more than ten leagues from the coast. Coming to the meaning of the word coast, he quoted Mendenhall, chief of the United States coast survey, to show that he understood the word to mean the general trend of the coast.

Here Senator Turner inquired if the general trend of the coast and trend of the general coasts were not different in meaning and intimating that Mendenhall did not use the latter phrase, which alone conveyed the British meaning.

The attorney-general saw no incompatibility between the two expressions, and quoted Mendenhall further in support of his view, dwelling on the words of the treaty that the line was never to exceed ten leagues and showed that the United States read this to mean that the line was never to be less than that distance from the coast. He next commented upon the United States contention that there were no mountains within the ten leagues. He showed that for long stretches there were undoubtedly mountains.

He then cited the St. Elias Alps as huge physical facts and that that a French king once said "there are no more Pyrenees," so the United States propose to eliminate from nature the St. Elias Alps. Again he showed that mountains exist ten or twelve miles back of Dyea, where the United States claim ignores them altogether and runs the line 35 miles back from the head of the Lynn canal. In this way they seek to acquire an additional 10,000 square miles, to which they cannot possibly have any claim.

The speaker then took up the negotiations of 1823 and 1825, and showed that these negitiations must have been familiar with Vancouver's narrative, and was proceeding critically to examine the negotiations in support of the claims of Great Britain when the court rose.

BALFOUR'S POLICY.

Premier of Great Britain Announces Himself in Favor of Protection.

London, Sept. 15.—Premier Balfour has issued the advance sheets of a pamphlet on the subject of "Insular Free Trade," in which he presents at length arguments in favor of a change in Great Britain's fiscal policy. He says:

"I am a free trader, but not of the pattern which holds that the doctrine of free trade is so universal in its application and so capable of an exact expression that every conclusion to which it logically leads, must be accepted without hesitation and reserve."

The premier points out that as a result of England's policy of retaining a fiscal policy made for a free trade country in a world of free traders, the ratio of her export trade has not increased, and in fact has seriously diminished. Meanwhile Germany, America, France, Russia and even Great Britain's self-governing colonies, continue to build up a protected interest within their borders. Mr. Balfour declares that the optimists who advocate a continuance of the free trade policy in face of the injury worked by protection on Great Britain's interests, are foolish.

Mr. Balfour concludes: "It cannot be right for a country with free trade ideals to enter into competition with protectionist rivals. The most essential object of our national efforts should be to get rid of the bonds in which we have gratuitously entangled ourselves."

The publication of the pamphlet immediately after the momentous cabinet council indicates that it embodies a statement of policy accepted or rather acquiesced by the majority of the cabinet. If this assumption is correct it means the abandonment of the idea of a preferential tariff with the colonies, and the taxation of food, in favor of a system of retaliatory duties. Even this, however, is tentative.

The most striking feature of the pamphlet is that it does not refer to Mr. Chamberlain's proposals. The whole line of Mr. Balfour's reasoning is opposed to tariffs for purely protective purposes. Hence Mr. Chamberlain is faced with the alternative of either abandoning preferential tariff or prosecuting his campaign unsupported by Mr. Balfour.

Neither does Mr. Balfour admit that Great Britain's trade is on the verge of ruin. He says: "I can find no evidence that we are living on our capital." The premier thinks that this is because protectionist tariffs are less bad than they look, and protectionist countries and the British colonies "are still our most important customers." He contends, however, that in the future the disadvantages that Great Britain suffers must increase with the growth and spread of protection abroad and the absorption of new markets.

Mr. Balfour says further: "The only alternative is to do to foreign nations what they always do to each other and instead of appealing to economic theories in which they wholly disbelieve, to use fiscal inducements which they thoroughly understand."

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Telegrams and Cablegrams Condensed for Busy Readers.

A rich gold strike has been made at Sturgeon Lake, New Ontario.

The owner of Major Delmar has refused $30,000 for the racer.

A party of Canadian Northern surveyors are working towards Hudson's Bay.

During Saturday's storm 85 cattle were caught in a swamp at Whitewater, Man., and perished.

The C. P. R. expenditures in Winnipeg will total $3,000,000 for a new hotel and depot.

Rev. Robert Benson, a son of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, has joined the Catholic church.

The railway companies in the west although notified to withdraw the new storage and insurance schedules by the warehouse commissioner, have got around the legal objection and will charge ⅘c for storage on each bushel of grain.

Canadian chartered banks may raise their rate of interest on deposits from 3 to 3½ per cent.

After an illness of less than one day a Peterboro, Ont., broker died as the result of taking a seidlitz powder.

A dispatch from Dawson City says: Excitement prevails here over the circulation of the report that pay dirt running two to fifteen cents to the pan has been struck at the head of Albert street, in the heart of Dawson. The discovery was made by men hauling gravel in the process of grading. It may literally be said that the streets of Dawson are paved with gold.

Portsmouth, Eng., Sept. 15.—The house in which Charles Dickens was born on Feb. 7, 1812, in this city, is to be sold at public auction on Tuesday, Sept. 29. The house, which is No. 393 Commercial road, is to be disposed of by direction of the trustees of the will of the late Miss Sarah Pearce, its last owner, and the sale will take place at the auction mart of Messrs, Penny & Clark, King's road, Southsea.

Bailey Jones, a young farmer of the Boissevain district, is a fugitive from justice. Warrants were issued last week charging him with having raped and brutally abused a Swedish woman employed near the Jones farm. The accused disappeared, and is supposed to have crossed the boundary line.

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

KNOCKOUT BLOWS.

There Are Many Vulnerable Points In Man's Anatomy.

An impression prevails that there is only one blow—that on the point of the jaw—which really constitutes the knockout blow, says a writer in the British Medical Journal. This is an error. The temple is a very vulnerable part of the head, the lesion usually produced being laceration of the brain substance, with hemorrhage. A blow on the ear may cause rupture in the membrana tympani and collapse. Dangerous points are over the carotid and on the larynx, the danger lying in the concussion conveyed through the large nerve trunks which run down the neck. A blow on the larynx with the bare fist may cause instant death, as may one on the chest well over the heart. Diaphragmatic blows are not so dangerous to life, the shock being temporary. Brisk rubbing and the use of stimulants is the most satisfactory mode of treatment. Blows over the kidneys may cause rupture and hemorrhage, with intense pain and shock. The most dangerous and infinitely painful form of knockout blow is that on the "mark," an area of the abdominal wall corresponding to the center of a triangle formed by the xiphosternal articulation above and a line joining the bony ends of the seventh ribs below. Behind this lies the pyloric end of the stomach. A blow here constitutes the "solar plexus" blow, but in reality it is the stomach which receives and transmits the shock.

Aristocracy of Wealth Not Probable.

Whatever the tendencies of wealthy Americans of the present day, it is extremely improbable that an aristocracy of wealth should ever come into being.

It has been seen that an aristocracy depends chiefly upon two conditions—the continued possession and exercise of power and the consequent unity of aims and ideals.

The aristocratic body in England, for instance, is self conscious; its members are united by mutual understanding. They acknowledge certain well recognized laws of life and manners. They depend upon each other to uphold these laws. Individually, wealthy Americans may be both self conscious and self assertive, but collectively they are antagonistic to one another. The accumulation of wealth implies struggle, and struggle does not bring forth the kind of qualities which make of the gentle and stately men and women of Vandyke's canvases one great family. —Anna McClure Sholl in Gunton's Magazine.

All Timekeepers Are Inaccurate.

The capacity of a watch for keeping good time is very much governed by its construction and its more or less perfect finish. It cannot be expected of the best horizontal watch that it should always keep good time and even less so of the inferior make of machine made watches. The changes of oil, the variation in temperature, the diversity of humidity of atmosphere, all greatly affect the going of a watch. Indeed, it is only the most perfect finish which neutralizes the adverse influences to the greatest degree. As a matter of fact, no watch keeps perfectly correct time, and even the best chronometers used in observatories and on board ships must be regulated according to tables which are kept to fix the variations to which all watches are liable.

A Bad Habit.

"Sixty-eight," murmured a young librarian as a woman waiting for a book leaned forward and touched her cheeks and lips to the top of the brass guard about the desk.

"Beg pardon," said the woman. "Did you speak to me?"

"Oh, no; I'm just counting the persons whose lips have touched that rail this afternoon. You are the sixty-eighth."

The woman started back in disgust and hastily wiped her lips on her handkerchief.

"I was unconscious of what I was doing," she exclaimed.

"I suppose they all are," was the laconic reply.—Youth's Companion.

English Estimate of Emerson.

A single short work of Emerson's, the essay on "Compensation," is enough to convince one that this was a man of true genius. We have never read anything in Thoreau approaching that and other works of Emerson in originality or beauty. But Emerson is the best of the American writers. Was it Henry James who called him "the unfallen man?" One cannot imagine an intellect which failed to admire "Compensation" or which was convinced by its transcendentalism. — London Saturday Review.

Basely Deceived.

"Did you believe him when he said he loved you?"

"No, I didn't."

"Did you believe him when he told of his great wealth?"

"No."

"Then there's no harm done."

"Yes, there is. I was goose enough to believe that the ring he gave me was a real diamond."

Noise and Work.

"You can't jedge a man by de 'mount of noise he makes," said Uncle Eben. "De locomotive engeneer is doin' his easies' work when he's ringin' de bell an' blowin' de whistle."

Tommy's Congratulations.

Reggie—Tommy, do you know I'm going to marry your sister?

Tommy—Then I think I'll go and congratulate mother.

Put a metal spoon or fork in a glass or china dish before pouring hot water into it. The metal conducts the heat away, and the dish will not crack so readily.

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart acts directly and quickly, stimulates the heart's action, stops most acute pain, dispels all signs of weakness, fluttering, sinking, smothering, or palpitation. This wonderful cure is the sturdy ship which carries the heart-sick patient into the haven of radiant and perfect health. Gives relief in most acute forms of heart disease in 30 minutes.—11.

Some men imagine they are the whole orchestra because they have drums in their ears.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever: nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

It has been decided to form an eye hospital and an asylum for the blind as Ceylon's memorial to the late Queen Victoria.

Gentlemen,—While driving down a very steep hill last August my horse stumbled and fell, cutting himself fearfully about the head and body. I used MINARD'S LINIMENT freely on him and in a few days he was as well as ever.

J. B. A. BEAUCHEMIN.

Sherbrooke.

She (reproachfully)—Before we were married you used to say you couldn't live without me. He—A man never knows what he can do till he tries.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

Mattie gives it as her experience that when fortune turns a man down his friends turn their noses up.

A GENERAL FAVORITE.—In every place where introduced Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has not failed to establish a reputation, showing that the sterling qualities which it possesses are valued everywhere when they become known. It is in general use in Canada, the West Indies and Australia as a household medicine and the demand for it each year shows that it is a favorite wherever used.

Miss De Style—"He's a man after my own heart."

Miss Gunbusta—"He was after mine, too, but I jilted him."

A girl never thinks of a young man as a possible husband until she begins to give him advice.

No man is as successful in his flirtations with other women as his wife imagines.

Nervousness, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and kindred ailments, take wings before the healing qualities of South American Nervine. Thomas Hoskins, of Durham, Ont., took his preacher's advice, followed directions and was cured permanently of the worst form of Nervous Prostration and Dyspepsia. He has recommended it to others with gratifying results. It's a great nerve builder.—12.

Assessors place the total worth of property at Atlantic City at $50,000,000.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

The Russians are awaking to the fact that a less reckless deforesting has become absolutely imperative. Their forest resources are not only less than those of Sweden, but even less than those of Austria-Hungary and of the United States.

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT

Removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, ringbone, sweeney, stifles, sprains; cures sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by the use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful Blemish Cure ever known.

Sold by all druggists.

For softening water for bathing purposes nothing is better than oatmeal. Place a small quantity in a cheesecloth or muslin bag, place in the water for a minute or two, then squeeze and remove. The oatmeal must be renewed every few days.

USED FOURTEEN YEARS WITH GOOD RESULTS.

721 E, 164 St., New York, Sept. 8, 1902.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO.,

Gentlemen:—I have used your Spavin Cure on my horses for the past fourteen years and it has always given me good results in every particular. I also have one of your books that I have found very useful. If you have any later edition of the "Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases," will you kindly send me one.

Respectfully yours, B. F. FRISBIE.

It is an absolutely reliable remedy for Spavins, Splints, Curbs, Ringbones, etc. Removes the bunch and leaves no scar. Price $1; six for $5. As a liniment for family use it has no equal. Ask your druggist for KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE, also "A Treatise on the Horse," the book free, or address

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURG FALLS, VT.

WHEAT — OATS — BARLEY — FLAX

FT. WILLIAM

SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY

THOMPSON, SONS & CO.

Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg. Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

GRANTON MAN SPEAKS OUT.

To Let the Public Know Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

John Fletcher had Lumbago and Kidney Disease and Could Get no Relief Till He Tried the Great Kidney Remedy.

Granton, Sept. 21.—(Special)—"I am glad to let the public know that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me of Lumbago and I am now perfectly sound."

These are the words of John Fletcher, a well-known resident of this village, and similar tributes to the great Canadian Kidney remedy can be heard on every side.

"I had been troubled for a year with Lumbago and Kidney Troubles," Mr. Fletcher continued, when asked for particulars. "My urine was of a very bad color and I could get nothing to help me. I consulted the best doctors in Granton and St. Mary's, but got no relief. Finally I bought a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills and commenced taking them. They helped me almost from the first, and I was soon completely cured."

It is cures of this kind that have given Dodd's Kidney Pills their popularity. You can't find a neighborhood in Canada where Dodd's Kidney Pills are not known by their cures. If the disease is of the Kidneys or from the Kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure it.

The best time to drink water or other liquids in quantity is on rising, an hour and a half before luncheon and dinner, and half an hour before retiring.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

A little girl, aged nine, called her father to her bedside the other evening. "Papa," said the little diplomat, "I want to ask your advice." "Well, my dear, what is it about?" "What do you think it would be best to give me on my birthday?"

MAKE BABY FEEL GOOD.

A baby's temper depends upon how he feels. If ailing he will be cross, worry the mother and annoy everybody in the house; if feeling well he will be bright, active and happy. It is easy to keep your baby feeling good by profiting by the experience of mothers who give thier little ones Baby's Own Tablets. One of these mothers, Mrs. C. W. Shore, Castleton, Ont., says: "Our child, eight months old has always been troubled with indigestion. We had medicine from two doctors and tried other remedies without benefit. I then sent for a box of Baby's Own Tablets and found them just what was required. The child is now all right and is doing well."

Indigestion, colic, constipation, diarrhoea, simple fevers, in fact all the minor ailments of little ones are cured by Baby's Own Tablets. They always do good and cannot possibly do harm, and may be given to the youngest infant with perfect safety. Sold by druggists or direct by mail, at 25c a box by addressing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

In Kiating, China, a man was recently executed by being nailed to a wooden cross. He lived three days before he succumbed to his tortures.

Lifebuoy Soap — disinfectant — is strongly recommended by the medical profession as a safeguard against infectious diseases.

An orphan asylum at Moscow, which was founded by Catherine II., is supported by a tax on playing-cards.

THEY ARE A POWERFUL NERVINE. Dyspepsia causes derangement of the nervous system, and nervous debility once engendered is difficult to deal with. There are many testimonials as to the efficacy of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills in treating this disorder, showing that they never fail to produce good results. By giving proper tone to the digestive organs they restore equilibrium to the nerve centres.

No person is so punctual when it comes to keeping appointments as bill collectors.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

No man ever sees a pretty married woman without feeling just the least bit envious of her husband.

It isn't what a man does't possess that makes him poor, but rather what he wants.

There are very few cleansing operations in which Sunlight Soap cannot be used to advantage. It makes the home bright and clean. 13

MARKET REVIEW.

Compiled from The Commercial.

This has been rather a quiet week in the wheat markets, and prices have developed something of a downward tendency. The uncertainty of the weather as affecting the harvesting and marketing of wheat in northwestern Europe and the northern and western areas of the American spring wheat country has for some time had considerable effect in upholding prices. While the weather on both sides of the Atlantic has been unsettled and unfavorable for such harvesting operations, it has not been so bad but that the work has progressed to a fair extent during the more favorable spells coming between stormy days, and the result is beginning to be seen in increased receipts at primary points. While old stocks are well cleaned up, and the new wheat finds a ready demand the anticipated onrush of the first fruits of a new crop has kept millers and exporters from being too eager to buy for more than immediate requirements, hoping that the increasing accumulation of grain seeking its market would bring down prices. These buyers have been kept waiting, but the changing situation being experienced this week is rewarding their patience, and may continue to do so, unless further unfavorable weather or the decision of farmers to hold back grain raises to prevent free and increasing movement of new wheat to market centres. The change in values as compared with a week ago may be set down at a decline of 1c a bushel. A feature of the week has been the September government report on the United States crop. It was issued on Thursday, and gives the condition of the winter and spring wheat combined as 74.7, against 80.0 last year, and 82.2 in 1901. The estimated result in bushels is 641,000,000 bush., against the final estimate of last year's crop, 670,000,000 bushels; and the final estimate of the crop of 1901, 748,000,000 bushels. The world's shipments continue liberal, but are considerably less than last year. Visible stocks are also increasing very slowly compared with last year. Crop prospects in Argentina and Australia continue to be favorably reported of.

Manitoba wheat was firm during the fore part of the week, owing to a good demand for stuff for immediate or early delivery. The movement by rail eastward was, however, increased considerably during the first four days of the week and has had the effect of filling the demand, and prices have eased off. Exporters are not in the market yet, prices evidently being too high for them. During the last seven days over half a million bushels of new wheat has gone east to Fort William and Port Arthur, and as the supply increases prices must come into line with export value. At the close of the market Friday prices were: No. 1 hard, 86c; 1 northern, 84¾; 2 northern, 81½c; spot or en route, for September delivery, 1 hard, 85½c; 1 northern, 83½c; 2 northern, 80c, and for October delivery, 1 hard, 83c; 1 northern, 81¾c; and 2 northern, 78¼, all prices being for in store Port Arthur or Fort William.

A matter of importance to the grain trade and producers has arisen this week in the notification by the railway companies to the warehouse commissioner of their intention to advance the rates of storage for grain in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur from ⅛c to ¼c per bushel, the advance to cover insurance against risk of damage by fire. The increased charge is considered exorbitant by the trade, and the grain exchange is making a vigorous protest against it. The advance cannot take place except with the approval of the governor-general-in-council, so that it is not definitely settled that the change will be made; in the meantime the previous storage rate is still in force.

WINNIPEG PRICES.

The following are the Winnipeg jobbing prices:

Flour has advanced another 5c per sack of 98 pounds, Ogilvie's Hungarian now selling at $2.25, and other grades accordingly.

Oats—At Fort William No. 1 white oats are worth 31¾c; No. 2 white, 30¾c.

Barley—No. 3, 38c per bushel, in store Fort William.

Flaxseed—Nothing doing.

Hay—Baled, $9@410 per ton.

Potatoes—35@40c per bushel.

Poultry—Live spring chickens, 40 to 60c per pair; fowls, 75@80c per pair; ducks, 60@80c; geese, 10c per pound, live weight; turkeys, 11c per pound.

Butter—Creamery, 17@17½c per lb; prints, 19. Dairy, 11@12c; prints, 17c per pound.

Cheese—11c per pound.

Eggs—16c per dozen.

Dressed Meats—Beef, city dressed, 6½c; mutton, 9; veal, 8@9c; lambs, 11c; hogs, 8½c.

Hides—No. 1, 6½c per pound; calfskins, 7c; horsehides, 91.25@$2.

Wool—7½c per pound.

Tallow—No. 1, 4c per pound; No, 2 3c per pound.

Seneca Root—60 cents per pound for clean, dry root.

LIVE STOCK.

Cattle—Ranch cattle, at point of shipment, 3½c; butchers' cattle, 2¾@3½c. off cars here.

THE ROBERT SIMPSON COMPANY, LIMITED

H. H. FUDGER, PRESIDENT. J. WOOD, MANAGER.

Our Fall and Winter Catalogue.

Send us your full name and address, plainly written, and we will be pleased to send you in return a copy of our handsomely illustrated Fall and Winter Catalogue, just issued and now ready for mailing. No home in Canada should be without Simpson's Catalogue. It is a text book for Canadian retail buyers the Dominion over. It is yours for the asking. Write for it.

Two Mail Order Specials.

Black Taffeta Silk Belt, hemstitched and corded, oxidized buckle, special 25c

Black Taffeta Silk Belt, hemstitched and corded, trimmed with buttons at back, pretty oxidized buckle, special, 50c

ADDRESS, THE ROBERT SIMPSON COMPANY LIMITED TORONTO, ONT. DEPT. N. W. T.

"Pinto" Shell Cordovan

is the toughest and best leather ever tanned for mitts and gloves. It is boil and scorch proof—has no oil to draw cold or get stiff—is wind proof, tear proof, wet proof, is always soft, dry, warm. Iron-like wear—handsome appearance—economical. None genuine unless stamped and with this brand.

"Pinto Shell Cordovan" Sold by all leading dealers in Manitoba, N. W. Territories and British Columbia.

H.B.K. BRAND

H. B. K. Duck Jackets and Coats

for wear comfort, and convenience. Built to keep out cold and keep warmth in. Made for the hardest, roughest kind of wear. Lined with lambskin with the wool on and with Mackinaw Woolen—made of Duck, Corduroy or Leather. Leather jackets made reversible. Wide collars, unrippable seams, strong pockets. Every garment branded with this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

Sold by all leading dealers in Manitoba, N. W. Territories and British Columbia.

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.

MONTREAL WINNIPEG

Delicious Breakfast Rolls

And HOT BISCUIT for supper, as well as wholesome and nutritious bread, will always be your good luck when you do your baking with Ogilvie's Flour. It is the acme of quality—made from the choicest wheat and ground by the very latest process.

USE OGILVIE'S HUNGARIAN AND OGILVIE'S GLENORA PATENT

The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Limited.

A carpet industry was started a few years ago in a poor district in Donegal, and commencing with a dozen women workers, it has grown to such an extent that it now finds employment for several hundred people. The carpets are hand-made, after the Turkish and Parisian fashion, in Mosaics of small wooden squares.

Take one of Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills after dinner. It will promote digestion and overcome any evil effects of too hearty eating. Safe, prompt active, painless and pleasant. This effective little pill is supplanting all the old school nauseous purgatives. 40 doses, 10c—13.

Gambling among American workmen is almost unknown as compared with the same evil in Great Britain says the Mosely commissioners.

Though it is said that speech was given men to enable them to conceal their thoughts, it seems to have been a needless precaution in many cases.

MILD IN THEIR ACTION.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are very mild in their action. They do not cause griping in the stomach or cause disturbances there as so many pills do. Therefore, the most delicate can take them without fear of unpleasant results. They can, too, be administered to children without imposing the penalties which follow the use of pills not so carefully prepared.

Since the formation of the German empire its population has increased 17,500,000. On July 1, 1903, it was estimated at 58,549,000—an increase of 1.40 per cent. in a year.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1903.

FOR WHOM TO VOTE.

This is the question which every elector must decide for himself within the next week There are few thinking men in the district who consider that J. R. McPherson, the Socialist candidate, is qualified to represent the various interests in this constituency and few that believe that he stands the slightest chance of being elected. The contest is then between W. R. Ross, the Conservative standard bearer, and E. C. Smith, the Liberal candidate.

A careful study of the platforms of both political parties will soon convince any observant elector that there is but little difference between them. It then becomes a question of men. E. C. Smith, who has served in the House for a period of three years, is admitted by everyone to be an honest, upright man, but whether he has the time and the ability to represent this district as it should be represented in the Legislature, we very much doubt. We have a district here which possesses untold wealth, a district which should rank with the foremost in the province. It produces a greater revenue and gets less in return than any other constituency in B.C. The coal industry of the valley alone pays a royalty of nearly $125000 annually, not to speak of the many thousands of dollars revenue which our lumber industry produces, but nothwithstanding the importance of the district as a revenue-producer we have received practically nothing in return.

We do not believe it right to attribute this neglect on the part of the Government entirely to Mr. Smith, but he has intimated on the public platform that the reason he did not vist the Fernie district and show more interest in its welfare was because he could not afford the time. This statement alone should have sufficient weight to convince anyone that he cannot be expected to properly represent this constituency, living as he does in another district. Everyone knows we need a good live man of some ability to represent us, and we honestly believe that in W. R. Ross we have such a man. Residing in the centre of the riding and conducting a business which brings him in close contact with all classes he must needs know considerable of the requirements of the district. He is an able speaker and a good citizen and even his bitterest opponents admit that he is much better qualified to represent the Fernie Electoral district than Mr. Smith.

A FORECAST.

The Rossland Miner of Tuesday publishes a forecast of the forthcoming provincial elections in which it says that of the 42 seats the Conservatives will win exactly half, while the Liberals will win 19 and one Socialist and one Labor man will receive seats. These latter the Miner concedes will go Liberal and he thus predicts a dead lock upon the assembling of the new house.

It is interesting to note that the Miner is doubtful of only one seat, that of Newcastle which it gives to Bryden the Conservative candidate with some doubts. It may be taken for granted from this fact that the writer of this sure thing article does not class an election on a par with a horse race for uncertainty. We are of the opinion that the Miner has many surprises in store for itself after Oct. 3rd although there is no doubt that the efforts put forwards by that paper to ascertain the feeling in each riding has enabled it to make a very fair estimate. This conclusion is also borne out by the equal expectations of each party which place their strength at 25 each. This is how the Miner divides them.

Conservatives.—Cariboo 2, Comox, Cowichan, Dewdney, Esquimalt, Fernie, Grand Forks, Kamloops, Kaslo, Lillooet, Newcastle, Richmond, Saanich, Skeena, Vancouver 4, (Tatlow, Wilson, Garden and McGowan), Victoria 2, (Helmcken and Hayward.) Total 21.

Liberals.—Alberni, Atlin, Chilliwack, Columbia, Cranbrook, Delta, Greenwood, Islands, Nelson, New Westminster, Okanagan, Revelstoke, Rossland Similkameen, Vancouver 1, (Martin), Victoria 2, (Drury and Hall), Yale, Ymir Total 19.

Labor—Slocan.

Socialist—Nanaimo.

Of the Socialist chances in Fernie riding the Miner says;—"The unthinking and wild-eyed element in the Fernie district is making a desperate attempt to shove a man by the name of J. R. McPherson into the legislature as a Socialist. He will not get there, and it is very fortunate that he won't."

Rev. B Wilson juggles with statements. He first claims that labor produces all wealth. This is correct. He then changes his statement so as to make it appear that the WAGE EARNERS produces all wealth, thus eliminating all labor which does not draw wages. The Socialists claim that in tne U. S. five million wage earners last year produced over 13 billions of wealth and these same statistics show that the wage earners received in wages only one fifth of this. The Socialists claim that they should have received the other four fifths. The fallacy of the whole argument is made apparent when we consider that the vast portion of this wealth was not produced by wage earners but by millions of farmers, their sons and daughters and people in other callings who do not appear as wage earners.

TO THE ELECTORS.

To the electors of the Fernie Electoral District.

Owing to a temporary illness I find myself unable to make a personal canvass of all the electors whose name appear upon the voters list as I had fully intended to do. I am therefore compelled to give a short statement of my views on public matters through the medium of this letter.

I have been selected by the Conservatives or Government party as its candidate and I am fully in accord with its published platform. The platform of Liberals offers no advantage over that of the present government and as this this government has been in power only since June of this year, a bare three months, the principles of fair play would seem to justify a further trial of the present administration in preference to placing the reins of power in the hands of the Liberal party which is at present so lacking in unity amongst its members that it dare not select a leader.

With regard to the disputed areas of coal and oil lands the present government have declared their policy to be one which secures the heritage of the people for the benefit of the people, and on this ground I claim your support, as against the Liberals who have not as yet declared any satisfactory policy with respect to this important matter either on the platform or in their printed manifesto.

Mr. E. C. Smith the late member who is an opposition candidate in the Liberal interests in this riding, is not a resident of the riding and for that reason has not, in the past, taken that interest in the affairs of the constituency which his position as its member imposed upon him. For the same reason I suggest that the interests of the riding will be better served by the election of a resident who has always taken an active part in its affairs, who is familiar with its needs and pledged to look after them. The Socialists have placed Mr. McPherson in the field as an opposition candidate without any practicable platform but rather as a sort of political free lance and I cannot see where the constituency as a whole will gain by securing his election.

The election takes place on October 3rd and your vote may be polled at any polling booth in the riding. On behalf of the present government I take the liberty of soliciting your vote and influence.

Yours Truly,

WM. R. ROSS.

Fernie. Sept. 25th, 1903.

COAL CREEK MINES.

Mr. Drinnan has moved into his new dwelling.

School is still being held by the minister on account of the delay in the permit being granted to Miss McNee.

The Trites-Wood Co. are furnishing the heater for the new church, Mr. Richards has also given the handsome donation of $25 towards the building fund.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The opening of the new church has been postponed from Sept. 27th to Oct. 4th. Rev. S. J. Thompson, of Cranbrook, will preach in the morning and Rev. Robson, B.A., of Fernie, in the evening. On the following Monday evening an entertainment will be held.

On Sunday evening last the late train at the mines had an accident. The engine left the coaches as usual under the control of the brakes while the engine brought up the slacks. For some reason or other the brakes refused to work and the conductor ordered all to jump for their lives, which most of them did before it had attained much velocity. Nearly all were injured in some way. Dr. Kerr receiving a shove as he lighted from the steps received a cut in his forehead requiring a few stitches. Miss S. McNee and her sister with three gentlemen stayed with the flying coach which happily ran off at the switch doing but little damage.

LUMBER CO. ASSIGNMENT.

Cedar Valley Improvement Co. in Financial Trouble.

On Tuesday of this week the Cedar Valley Improvement Company made an assignment in favor of A. H. Cree and the mill and the bush operations are now idle. The statement of liabilities and assets are not yet made out and nothing of an authoritative nature can be stated. The liabilities will exceed $45,000, the most of which has been advanced by the Union Bank at Lethbridge, and Cowdry's private bank at Macleod.

The trouble arose through a notice issued by the Union Bank to the effect that their notes which fall due on the 20th of Oct. would not be renewed as it was verbally agreed upon. Mr. Cowdry who holds second mortgage security on the property is not at home being abroad in the Old Country but his nephew T. Cowdry who is looking after the business during the old gentleman's absence decided that it would not be wise to advance more money in the business until the latter had been consulted, and the company to save the expense of litigation made the assignment. A meeting of the creditors will be held on the seventh of next month.

If Mr. Cowdry will take over the Union Bank's mortgage, as his representatives believe he will, there is good reason to believe that the mill will again be in operation within a short time. This course will appeal to the Fernie creditors as there are none who have not the utmost faith in the Company's layout. The mill is up-to-date in every respect and the bush gang have completed roads and stables and are ready to get out a steady supply of logs. Orders are coming in daily even yet for lumber and there is no reason why the business should not easily wipe out the present liabilities within two or three years.

A SHOOTING AFFRAY.

Thos. Dunn, an employee in the Cedar Valley Improvement Co's. bush camp, narrowly escaped death on Thursday evening from a revolver shot fired by a policeman while in the discharge of his duties. On the evening in question about 6 o'clock a message was received at the police court asking for assistance at Mr. Chew's log-camp which is run in connection with the above mentioned Co.'s mill.

Constables Warren and Kummer upon arriving near the scene saw the crowd of men held at bay by Dunn who stood at the stable door with a revolver in his hands. As the constables approached he demanded to know what they wanted, at the same time raising his gun. The constables quickly separated and drew their guns and Dunn covered Kummer. Warren fired and grazed the man's throat. Dunn then jumped behind the stable door for protection but he was again covered and he submitted to arrest. Dunn was a teamster in Mr. Chew's camp and he had been raising a disturbance during the afternoon by trying to take the team in lieu of payment for debts. The preliminary trial will come up on Tuesday. The bullet passed through an inch or two of flesh making a nasty wound. Another inch would have severed the jugular.

PRAISE FOR MR. BOUSFIELD.

The following resolution passed by the District Miners' Union has been received with a request for its publication:

Resolved. We the undersigned members of the Executive Board of the Crows Nest Valley District Union desire to place on record our appreciation of the services rendered on our behalf, and, on behalf of the labor cause in this district by Bro. Henry Bousfield. His vigorous and earnest advocacy of the rights of labor has resulted in the miners of this district becoming an organized lot of men—out of chaos, he has built up a solid union. His honesty and intelligence has calm and deliberate character, has just brought us out of a serious crisis—for which we are thankful.

This should show the public of Canada that he is not one of the foreign agitators so often refered to. The public of this valley are under a great obligation to him as his work here in our midst has been in the interest of industrial peace,

Wherever his work may take him our earnest hope is that he may always be as successful as he has been in this valley,

Chas. Burrows, president; John Howbrook, F. H. Sherman, Albert Tyas, A. G. Duggan, J. R. McPherson, J. K. Miler, X. Harmer, Sec.-Treas.

Cree & Hutchison

REAL ESTATE

For Sale Cheap for Cash.

if bought within a week, Two Houses, rented for $45 per month.

For Sale

A Saw Mill with large timber limits, all in running order; including pole roads, waggons, sleighs, horses, etc. This is a snap—full particulars at our office.

We are the largest Real Estate Agents in South-east Kootenay.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

McEwing & Slinn

Keep a large stock of choice

Confectionery, Cigars
Tobaccos, Fruits
Vegetables, etc. etc.

It pays to deal with this firm, as thier goods are new and up-to date.

The Bakery Dept.

is stocked with all kinds of choice pastry, bread and cakes

Wedding and other cakes a specialty.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

MEN'S HAT !

MEN'S HATS ! !

With weather like this you will want something new for fall. We have a nice assortment of Up-to-date

AMERICAN BLOCKS

They will be popular as they are good styles at any time.

Will be pleased to have you see them.

The Crow's Nest Trading Company.

ELECT

yourself to call and see our line of horse blankets, different grades and all good value.

The Diamond 64 Chimney is the best that can be made by the manufacturer, therefore we recommend them.

W. J. REID & Co. DIAMOND 64 CHIMNEY LONDON ONT

LATHERS !

We have in stock the genuine Star Boston Underhill Hatchet.

Sheppard & Elliott.

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbing

The Public Know

The Public know a good thing when they get it. When they are in the habit of having their meat done up to perfection you cannot pull them away with a forty-foot logging chain. That is why our trade is continually increasing.

We make a study of our trade and have attained perfection.

Our goods are the best, and our prices are right. Call and be convinced.

Calgary Cattle Co.

LIMITED

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

Tenders will be asked in the next week or ten days for the construction of about fifty small cottages, some located east of Moosejaw, on the Soo line, and others near Banff, Alta. For particulars apply to W. H. ALDRIDGE, Banff, Alta.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a special license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands on the west side of Kootenay river, in the district of East Kootenay:

1. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumchuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence west 40 chains to place of commencement.

2. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumckuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence west 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence east 40 chains to place of commencement.

A. F. GRIMES

Dated at Fernie, July 14th, 1903. 239-4

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have ou tried them?

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

The Proper Treatment for a Sprained Ankle.

As a rule a man will feel well satisfied if he can hobble around on crutches two or three weeks after spraining his ankle, and it is usually two or three months before he has fully recovered. This is an unnecessary loss of time, for in many cases in which Chamberlain's Paip Balm has been promptly and freely applied, a complete cure has been effected in less than one week's time, and some cases within three days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

Lawyer Gurd, of Cranbrook, was in town on Tuesday.

F. Robinson, of Moyie, was in Fernie on Wednesday.

H. G. Gilmour who has been in this section for some time left for the coast this week.

Miss Cameron, of Guelph, arrived in Fernie this week and is a guest at the Royal.

The usual services will be held in the Baptist church tomorrow, morning and evening.

The Shamrock-Nelson lacrosse match yesterday resulted in a victory for the Montreal team by a score of 6--3.

The frame work of the new fire hall is being put up and it will be only a short time until it is enclosed.

C. Mansfield who used to be employed as operator here has lately been appointed to the Cranbrook office.

The C. P. R. bridge at Elko is again giving trouble, and on Tuesday the passengers had to be transferred.

J. S. Thompson, agent of the Great Northern at Morrissey is rapidly recovering from an attack of typhoid at St. Eugene hospital.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

The lacrosse club have secured the celebrated Jas. Fax and his company to give a concert on or about Oct. 12. All should keep this in mind.

Geo. L. Pedlar, the new principal of the Fernie Public School, arrived from New Denver last Saturday and took charge of his new duties on Monday morning.

Mrs. W. B. Ganong arrived from the east on Tuesday morning and will make her home in Fernie for the winter. Mr. Ganong has rented the Coal Co. house at the south end of Victoria Ave.

G. Gordon, of Liphardt's jewelry store, left this week for Frank where he is taking charge of Mr. Cameron's jewelry business during the latter's temporary absence in the east due to the death of his son.

Mrs. A. B. Trites returned from Spokane on Thursday evening, her visit being shortened by the news of her husband's illness. We are pleased to be able to report Mr. Trites' condition to be improving and that he will soon be about again.

When you do not relish your food and fell dull and stupid after eating, all you need is a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They will make you feel like a new man and give you an appetite like a bear. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Lost, strayed or stolen—Somewhere between Crows Nest and Jaffray, one insurance agent. May be recognized by his cheerful countenance and cow-boy hat. Answers to the name of "Hutch." Any information as to his whereabouts will be gratefully received by his sorrowing partner.

A. A. Boak, an insurance man of Vancouver, is looking after the interests of his firm in Fernie today. He expressed much satisfaction with the manner in which the people of the town are improving the fire protection system. He placed the agency of the London Guarantee and Accident Co. with H. G. Watson.

Mr. J. Hutchison held a meeting at the East Kootenay Lumber Co's mill at Jaffray on Wednesday evening last on behalf of the Conservatives and Mr. Ross. Mr. Hutchison spoke for about 35 minutes and was replied to by Mr. Slater on behalf of the Liberals and Mr. Smith. Mr. Hutchison then rebutted Mr. Slater's remarks shortly. The meeting was large and representative and showed that Jaffray is taking a keen interest in things political.

A row occurred on Monday night in the tenderloin district during the progress of a dance held in one of the houses. As a result there are five assault cases awaiting their trial. One of these came up yesterday, in which evidence of a disgusting nature was brought out to show the cause leading up to the quarrel. A large number of witnesses are summoned and the cases promise to drag out for some time. "Paddy" Nolan, of Calgary, was wired for to represent one of the contending factions but when he arrived he was not allowed to plead as he is a non-resident of the province. However he was retained to advise his clients.

Speaking of the baby show at the Nelson fair the News says: "Dr. Douglas Corsan, of Fernie, officiated as judge, it having been found impossible to secure more than one man reckless enough for the position, and except in the opinion of a few of the disappointed mothers, he awarded the prizes in a very satisfactory manner. Before the prize winners were announced Chas. A. Waterman, who was acting as master of ceremonies, asked for five minutes grace for Dr. Corsan, the judge, so that he might have time to reach the baloon at the fair grounds. The doctor was going to stay and face the consequence of his rashness, but finally thought better of it and headed for his hotel with the air of a man who had fully done his duty."

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

Dr. McSorley was in from Michel on Monday.

WANTED.—A tinsmith, apply to Sheppard & Elliott. x

Duncan Ross, Liberal organizer, was in Fernie over Tuesday night.

Mrs. Geo. Bell, of Medicine Hat, is visiting her sister, Mrs. H. Wilkes.

Mrs. Crahan and Miss Crahan, of Michel visited Fernie this week.

W. B. Ferrie, Western Manager of the Canada Life Co., was in town this week.

E. G. Mader, of Berlin, Ont., is spending a short vacation visiting his uncle, Mr. S. Graham, of this town.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Aldridge, of Trail, were in Fernie a few hours on Wednesday on their way west.

G. H. Williams, of Spokane, travelling freight agent for the Great Northern, was in Fernie on Monday.

As for "Griffin Brand" pig's hocks and tongues. They are boneless and cooked ready to serve. The real thing for picnic lunches.

Wm. R. Ross, the Conservative candidate is confined to his bed with a severe attack of lumbago. All parties will wish Mr. Ross a speedy recovery.

The Nelson News published on Wednesday a letter from Frank Phillips, secretary of Nelson Miners' Union to S. S. Taylor, the Liberal candidate of Nelson, signifying that that union had decided to support Mr. Taylor in the coming election.

The Rev. J. G. Shearer, M.A., the general secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance of Canada, held a meeting in the Methodist church on Thursday evening, which was largely attended. Officers for the ensuing year were elected in the local branch. Rev. D. L. Gordon was elected president and A. T. Claxton was appointed secretary.

The marriage of Mrs. I. C. Cooley, formerly of the postoffice staff here, and Mr. F. McKay, of Ainsworth, was solemnized in St. Saviour's church, Nelson, on Wednesday of this week. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. Graham and only the immediate friends of the principals were present. A wedding luncheon was afterwards served at the home of Mrs. B. S. Sharp, sister of the bride.

They Make You Feel Good.

The pleasant purgative effect experienced by all who use Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and the healthy condition of the body and mind which they create makes one feel joyful. For sale by all druggists and deal

General servant wanted, apply to Mrs. Richards.

Judge Forin is in town and is holding a small debts court today.

Dr. Corsan and his two little boys are visiting Nelson during the fair.

Miss Dean has accepted a position in the Crows Nest Trading Co's store, Messrs. T. Spiers, E. Rutledge, Cartiledge and Burton returned from Banff on Tuesday.

Last week in town of Madame Grapho. Call and see with what accuracy the delineations are given.

Jas. McEvoy returned from an extensive prospecting tour in the northern part of the province this week

Lost—On Monday evening, a gold watch charm, bearing initial "C". Finder will be rewarded by leaving same at Free Press office.

Tomorrow is Dominion Rally Day for all Methodist Sabbath Schools. On Sunday morning Rev. John Robson will conduct a children's service to which the public is invited. In the afternoon at 2:30 several addresses will be given by Sabbath School workers to encourage the children. The subject for the evening will be "The sin of Shifting Responsibility." A cordial welcome is extended to all.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

We hav eopened up a variety of sideboards at prices to suit all purses.

J. D. QUAIL..

Hardware. Furniture

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

London and Liverpool Stores.

Stove Department

FALL, 1903

This season finds us better prepared than ever to please you in Stoves.

One Car-load just placed on sale this week, from the very best makers in Canada.

If it is a Cook Stove you are considering, come to us; we have all sizes and at all prices.

Ranges—from the smallest to the hotel size.

Heaters—all the different makes. HOT BLAST.

"THE FAMOUS OAK"

One of the most popular heaters made.

We can also supply you with all kinds of Stove Furniture, Stove Boards, Pipes, Elbows, etc.

Millinery Dept.

FALL, 1903

Thursday, Friday & Saturday

Sept. 24th, 25th & 26th.

On all the above dates we hold our regular Millinery Display. We promise to eclipse all past efforts this year.

Miss Donaldson, direct from the east, who is in charge, will undoubtedly please you with the many new ideas and pretty styles of Hats for this season.

THE TRITES-WOOD CO., LTD.

"ROYAL BRAND"

TAILOR-MADE CLOTHING

Our stock of Men's Ready-to-wear Clothing is now complete, and we invite you to call and compare Price and Quality of Royal Clothing with goods to be had elsewhere.

In Overcoats we are especially strong, our stock comprising all the Newest Styles. Our leaders are the "Brighton," "King" "Raglanette" and "Auto."

In Men's Suits we have an endless variety of Tweeds, Worsteds and Serges, and they are strictly up-to-date in cut and finish.

In Rain Coats we have some very nobby ones made from Priestleys Cravenette Cloths, that are guaranteed waterproof.

In Boy's Clothing Men's Trousers, Etoffe and Mackinaw Coats and Pants, and Leather Coats we have a nice assortment. Also Corduroy Goods—wear like iron.

Remember, in buying from us, you take no chances of getting Shop-Worn Stock, as every garment on our counters is New, Bright and Clean.

CHAS. RICHARDS

NOTICE.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited, after this date will not make connections to any premises which have been wired by any party or parties not its accredited representative, and any consumer adding additional lights without the consent of the company, will not only be liable for damages but will have the entire service discontinued.

Any person or persons making connections to, or tampering with, the Company's water mains will be prosecuted, and their water service discontinued.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited
by T. R. STOCKETT, jr.
General Superintendant

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

Calgary Cattle Co., Ltd., keeps a regular supply of oysters on hand. A choice shipment of dairy butter just received. Also clams. See our ad. x

WHEN BOYS WERE MEN

By JOHN HABBERTON,

Author of "Helen's Babies," "George Washington," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1901, BY JOHN HABBERTON

"In the heart, Jack, but 'twas not the enemy that hit me. 'Twas Mick McTwyny's tongue. Great heaven! I've vowed my life a hundred times to the saving of men—you know I was studying for the ministry. But now I'm trying to kill men! It's all—but why aren't you firing? See that red bearded face sticking out from behind a tree on the other side of the creek? No, no! Don't you fire at him! Here goes!"

Brainard's lips closed so tight that I could not see their dividing line, so I looked toward the Confederate with a red beard, and a second after Brainard fired I saw the red bearded man clap a hand to his shoulder. Then the angles of his elbows and knees indicated that he had gone out of action and sat down behind his tree.

At that instant Brainard himself had a strip of skin and a bit of flesh taken from his cheek by a shot from the other side, but he did not know of it till the fight was over. I was recalled to a sense of duty by Cloyne, who drawled:

"What are you lounging for, Jack? This isn't a Sunday school picnic."

Quickly I covered my confusion by regaining the cover I had left, but I was still curious to know what other men were doing. The Balaklava veterans were side by side on the ground and as flat as the head of a snake about to coil, though they did not seem intent on striking. Not far to my right stood Phil Hamilton, handsome and composed as usual, but in apparent trouble with his pistol. He looked so superb, with his clear cut face, erect figure and broad shoulders, that for a moment I wished my cousin May might see him. Then I was glad she could not, for did not Brainard love May, and was not Brainard my dearest friend?

Still, pistols are made only to shoot with, and the moment of battle is the time to use them, so I hurried over to Hamilton and said:

"Take my pistol and give me yours. Mine is in perfect order, and, as I helped father when he was inventing a revolver, I know something of a pistol's works."

"Don't you fire at him!"

"Thank you, Jack," said he as coldly as if he had been born and brought up in an icehouse, "but I think I'll conquer it in the course of time."

I was somewhat offended by his manner, but I reminded myself that there is a time for everything and that in the thick of battle was not the time to expect a polite reply, even from the Chesterfield of Summerton. When again I chanced to look toward Hamilton, I saw that his face was very white and he was looking at a card photograph. I could not doubt who the original was. On our homeward ride big Pat Callahan snarled:

"Did ye's see our swell commissary sergeant behind the thickest tree there was? I'm thinkin' he was afeard o' gittin' his beauty spots scratched!"

"G'wan to blazes!" snarled Mick McTwyny in reply. "Commissary sarjints don't nade to fight if they don't want to. Besides, it's better that we'd lose the captain—yes, or the colonel—than the man that kapes us in the best of grub that can be made of rations."

"I'm not sayin' ye lie," Pat replied, "but if I had as little stomach for grub as he has for fightin' I'd go to the hospital and stay there."

After unsaddling I was greatly delayed in reaching the quarters, for I "went over" my horse very carefully to learn whether he had been wounded. Horses have their own reasons for not reporting "a mere scratch" that might in time disable them. Climbing our bunk—Brainard's and mine—which was at the top of a tier, I saw my chum lying down, with a pocket mirror in one hand, my cousin May's portrait in the other and with tears in his eyes.

"Brace up, old chap!" said I.

He quickly turned his hands to hide their contents, but his face was too honest to hide anything that was behind it. Besides, he said in fragments between sobs:

"I was homely enough before. Now I'm disfigured for life. The surgeon wouldn't deny it, and Hamilton—he always was handsome. Heaven made him so. Therefore I've no right to complain, but—but"—

"But you fought, and he didn't."

"Eh?"

"He didn't, I say. I was watching him."

Brainard mopped his eyes with his hands and looked proud an instant. Then he groaned:

"'Tis a hard world, Jack."

The cruelest thing about it was that Brainard was the only member of our company that got a scratch, though fully half of us, not being handsome, like Hamilton, coveted the scar which Brainard wore after his wound healed. Among the half that did not covet that "red badge of courage" was Hamilton. He never spoke of it, but many times afterward did I see our handsome commissary sergeant look at Brainard's cheek with an expression that indicated extreme satisfaction and triumph, with a dash of contemptuous pity that made me hate the man, though he had always been so considerate of my abnormal appetite that he had slyly given me double rations of hard tack when we went out scouting.

CHAPTER XIII.

WHICH I HAD NOT COUNTED UPON.

ONE day our company was sent out to rebuild a ruined bridge, several miles beyond the picket lines, which would give us the use of a road by which we might increase our capacity for threatening the enemy. All the material, even to the flooring, was to be cut from the woods near the little river.

The first two days of this work would have been very happy ones to me but for a single circumstance. All day long there wandered among us the farmer who owned the young pine forest from which we were cutting our timber, and his face looked as if his family were dying one by one, with no doctor or medicine within reach. Had he lost his temper and sworn at us we could have got rid of him and our uncomfortable feelings, but he was a gentle, slow spoken, tired looking man, like the American farmer of almost any other state, and he told us how he had been saving that bit of woods from the time he married, so that the timber upon it should pay for educating his sons when they grew up and also to give himself and his wife a little money with which to see something of the world after the boys married and the farm was divided between them. Now it all was being swept away and without a word of warning or a cent of pay.

"Well, sir," said our captain kindly, "I'm awfully sorry for you, but it's one of the fortunes of war. A full half of my company are young men who ought to be in college or learning some business by which to live and perhaps provide for their parents' later years; but, so far as their own future is concerned, their time is being wasted about as thoroughly as your property."

"I suppose that's true," said the farmer, looking around at the men at work. "You've got some likely looking young fellows. But that don't give me back my trees."

"Very well," said the captain, "the government will pay you the full value of your trees if you will certify and prove that you are and always have been a true and loyal citizen of the United States and have never given aid or comfort to the enemy."

The farmer stopped looking gentle and tired as he replied:

"I've given the Confederacy my three sons, and I'm proud of it."

"That's square, honest talk," said the captain, "but it brings us back to the fortunes of war again."

"I didn't bring on the war," said the farmer.

"I believe you," said the captain.

"I only went with my state," continued the farmer. "God knows I never wanted any war; neither did any of my neighbors, except a loafer or two."

"'Twas the same way with me and my neighbors," said the captain. "I suppose if we on our side and you on your side had been more particular about the men we sent to congress and to the legislatures—if we had thought more of our country and less of our party, there wouldn't have been any war."

"There's a right smart lot of sense in that," said the farmer after a moment's reflection. Then he looked sad eyed and continued, "But it doesn't give me back my trees."

As the farmer wandered away I offered the captain an argument or two which seemed to me first class clinches of the rightfulness of his position, but he smiled sadly and replied:

"It's of no use, my boy, to fuss over a man's head when his heart's turned upside down."

"But"—I began.

"Oh, go back to your ax," interrupted the captain. "Any logic that I have I need for use upon myself. If you live through the war and have a farm and a family of your own some day and look back to this particular time, you'll probably believe that I'm about as unhappy over this work as the farmer is at his loss."

(To be Continued.)

BOYS OF TO-DAY

WILL BE THE MEN OF THE FUTURE.

They Should be Rugged and Sturdy, Full of Life and Ready for Work, Play or Study—Keep Them Healthy.

Growing boys should always be healthy and rugged. Ready for play, ready for study, and ready at any time for a hearty meal. This condition denotes good health, but there are entirely too many who do not come up to this standard. They take no part in the manly games all healthy boys indulge in; they are stoop-shouldered, dull and listless; they complain of frequent headaches, and their appetite is variable. Sometimes parents say, "Oh, they'll outgrow it." But they won't—it's the blood that's out of condition, and instead of getting better they get worse. What boys of this class require to make them bright, active and strong, is a tonic, something that will build up the blood and make the nerves strong. There is no medicine that can do this as quickly and as effectively as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mrs. Mary Compton, of Merriton, Ont., tells what these pills did for her sixteen year old son. She says: "About two years ago my son Samuel began to decline in health. He grew very pale and thin and at times experienced serious weak spells, coupled with a tired, worn out feeling, and as the weeks went by he grew worse. This alarmed me, for my husband had died of what the doctors called pernicious anaemia, and I feared my son was going the same way. I had often read that Dr. Williams' PinkPilis would cure anaemia, and decided that he should try them. A couple of boxes made a decided improvement in his condition, and by the time he had taken a half dozen boxes his health was better than it had been for some years previous. His weight had increased, his listlessness had disappeared, and he was blessed with a good appetite. I may add that other members of my family had been benefitted by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I consider these pills the best af all medicines."

Poor and watery blood is the cause of nearly all diseases, and it is because Dr. Williams' Pink Pills act directly on the blood, both enriching it and increasing the quantity, that they cure such troubles as anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, heart troubles, incipient consumption, and the various ailments that afflict so many women. These pills may be had from any dealer in medicine, or will be sent post paid at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. If you value your health never allow a dealer to persuade you to take something else.

Only one out of every 1,000 married couples live to celebrate their golden wedding.

Why go limping and whining about your corns, when a 25-cent bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure will remove them? Give it a trial, and you will not regret it.

"What supports the sun in the heavens?" asked the country school teacher.

"Why, its beams, of course," replied a precocious youngster.

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant to take; sure and effectual in destroying worms. Many have tried it with best results.

Self-important men seldom get out of the wage-working class.

An overdose of the good things of life is apt to make men pessimistic.

Ibsen's Gruffness.

In 1891 Georg Brandes happened to be with some friends at Sandviken, near Christiania, when they heard that Ibsen was staying at the local hotel. They decided to invite him to dinner, but he declined when he was told that there would be nine persons at the banquet. "I never dine with so large a party," he said. Finally he was persuaded to say "Yes," but in the meantime the number of persons whose request to be present Brandes could not possibly refuse had grown to twenty-two. Ibsen was furious when he discovered this, but Brandes managed to get him to the dining room, where, however, the poet looked so forbidding that champagne had to be served immediately after the soup to give courage to the guests. Ibsen acted like a bear all the evening. When one of the guests, an actress, remarked that she liked his roles better than any others he answered gruffly: "I do not write any roles. I represent characters, and I never work for any actor or actress."

The Volcano.

The London Globe contains a number of amusing answers to a recent examination for office boys in a government office. Some of the descriptions of a volcano are graphic:

"A volcano is a hill, and smoke raises from the top."

"A Volcano is a Mountain with solphur and a collection of Iron and led. Soon after a few years they get hot and bursts the mountain Does a lot of Damage to the country."

"A volcano is a mountain which his a large amount of lather and this sometimes overflows and burns villages down."

The most flattering answer runs as follows: "The boundaries of England are united states america and Europe." "Latitude and Longitude," said another student, "are terms used to describe certain spots on the sea."

Zoo Society Note.

Inquisitive Visitor—Do these animals ever seem to engage in anything that might be called a form of amusement?

Park Attendant (with great solemnity)—Yes, ma'am. The kangaroo frequently gives a hop.—Chicago Tribune.

How He Won His Bet.

In a certain office building in the downtown district there is a club on an upper floor, with an express elevator service for members. The other day two of the latter emerged from the dining room, where they had eaten luncheon, and eyed the elevator floor indicator. The arrow moved in two shafts, one of them the club elevator express route.

"It's wonderful how much time a man can save by these expresses," remarked one of the pair.

"Nonsense," said his companion, "I can get to the bottom on a local and beat you while I am doing it."

"Ten dollars that you can't," was the reply.

The cages in both shafts opened with a click, and without further parley the two men separated, entering the different elevators. The local got away a fraction of a moment ahead of the express. When the man in the latter stepped out his acquaintance was waiting for him.

"How did you do it?" gasped the express passenger, digging down for the forfeited bank note.

"That was easy," said his companion. "I gave my elevator man half of the bet—in advance—and he didn't make any stops."

Worked a Living Chain.

Dr. P. L. Hurt's pointer dog was the cause of a good deal of amusement and excitement in Boonville one day. The doctor stopped at a trough to water his horse. A sewer pipe about a hundred feet long passes under a crossing at this place, and the dog, being warm from running, crawled into the pipe to get cool. When the time came to leave he could not turn around, and as the pipe was crooked he could not see the opposite end of it, so there he stuck. After various suggestions had been made for getting him out a small negro boy was sent in after him. The boy got him by the leg, but then found that he himself could not back out. Here was a pretty howdy do. Finally a second negro boy was sent in. His legs remained within reach from the outside, and when he had caught the first boy by the legs and the first boy had got a secure hold on the dog's legs some strong men took the second boy by his legs, and thus they were all pulled out.—Exchange.

To Save the Drowning.

Many a swimmer stops short before learning how to approach a drowning person, but he should add a knowledge of this as of the proper means of artificial respiration before he can be accounted a master of the art. So says the London Chronicle, and adds: "The swimmer in difficulties may always be assisted, even by a tyro, provided he be himself a strong enough swimmer, but the bather who cannot swim at all or who has entirely lost his presence of mind should always be approached from behind and seized by the arms. Then by swimming on the back it is easy to tow him to safety. Further, the bather in difficulties should remember that throwing the arms out of the water tends to sink the whole body, the air being a poor supporting medium for their weight."

The Peculiar Ganges Water.

There is a scientific basis for the universal faith—usually called superstition—among Hindoos in the cleansing qualities of the Ganges as well as in its peculiar sanctity. Careful experiments has shown that the river possesses extraordinary and inexplicable antiseptic properties. A government analyst took water from the main sewer of Benares which contained millions of cholera germs. When emptied into a receptacle of Ganges water in six hours they were all dead. He took undeniably pure water and threw a few of these cholera germs in. They propagated and swarmed. These tests were tried repeatedly.

"Live Bait" For Alligators.

The negroes of Jamaica, in the British West Indies, use "live bait" to catch alligators. They tie a puppy to a tree near the alligator's haunt and await developments with a gun. The puppy's yelp is exactly like the bark of the baby alligator. Naturally Mrs. Alligator comes out of her mudhole in the lagoon, thinking somebody is troubling her offspring. Then the negro gets to work with his gun, and Mrs. Alligator falls a victim to her maternal affection.

The Penalties of Opulence.

The prevalence of dyspepsia among the very rich seems to point to the indigestible quality of dough.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Ayer's

For coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, weak throats, weak lungs, consumption, take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

Cherry Pectoral

Always keep a bottle of it in the house. We have been saying this for 60 years, and so have the doctors.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for 40 years. It is the best medicine in the world, I know, for all throat and lung troubles."
MRS. J. K. NORCROSS, Waltham, Mass.

25c., 50c., $1.00. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for The Lungs

Daily action of the bowels is necessary. Aid nature with Ayer's Pills.

She Peeked.

A gentleman tells a good story on his betrothed sister. Visiting his home after a long absence, he was sitting by the side of his sister, with his arm around her waist. Her head drooped on his shoulder in the old, old way. An aunt in the same room enjoyed the affectionate display and remarked, "Why, that looks as if it might be Will"—the name of the young lady's sweetheart. "Indeed," the sister replied, "you never saw Will in this position." "Maybe I have," said the auntie. "Well, if you did you peeked," was the parting shot, which was a practical admission of the soft impeachment.

WOMEN HAVE KIDNEY DISEASE.

And Often Make the Mistake of Attributing the Resulting Backache to Other Causes.

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Many women have kidney disease and do not know it. They confuse the symptoms of kidney disease with those of ailments of a feminine nature. We would warn you against this danger, as a few days' neglect of kidney disease may mean years of suffering.

Pains in the small of the back or weakness and lameness of the back are the most marked symptoms of kidney diseases; others are loss of flesh, dry, harsh skin, deposits in the urine, swelling of the feet and legs, severe headaches, stiffness and soreness of the muscles, rheumatic pains, cold chills in back and loins, scalding, painful urination, weariness and despondency.

There is, we believe, no preparation extant which affords such prompt relief for backache and the other distressing symptoms of kidney disease as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. That this preparation is a thorough cure is evidenced by the scores and hundreds of statements from reputable people in all walks of life.

Mrs. W. Wilkins, Henry Street, Belleville, Ont., states: "I suffered a great deal with pains in the small of the back caused from kidney trouble. Whenever I stooped I could scarcely rise again, the pains were so great. The disease became so severe that it affected my general health, and I was becoming very much run down. Since using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills I can say that my trouble has entirely disappeared. I can speak in the highest terms of this medicine from the way it acted in my case."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase are on every box.

ARE YOU BUILDING? IF SO USE

EDDY'S IMPERVIOUS SHEATHING

The Best Building Paper Made.

It is very much stronger and thicker than any other (tarred or building) paper. It is impervious to wind, keeps out cold, keeps in heat, carries no smell or odor, absorbs no moisture, imparts no taste or flavor to anything with which it comes in contact. It is largely used not only for sheeting houses, but for lining cold storage buildings, refrigerators, dairies, creameries, and all places where the object is to keep an even and uniform temperature, and at the same time avoiding dampness.

Write our Agents, TEES & PERSSE, Winnipeg, for samples.

The E. B. EDDY CO., Limited, HULL.

Day and Night School. Individual Instruction. One Week's Trial Given.

THE NATIONAL Business College LTD.

Capital, $25,000.00.

Desirable Business Positions Guaranteed to Graduates.

Accounting, Shorthand, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, and all business subjects practically and thoroughly taught. Please call or write for free catalogue and other information to E. J. O'SULLIVAN, C.E., B.A., Manager, corner Main and Market Sts, Winnipeg. 'Phone 1955.

A Servian Idiom.

"Greenlee says that when he was abroad he courted a Servian girl."

"Custom any different from ours?"

"I guess not. Greenlee says when he called on her they usually sat vis-a-vis."

"I don't believe a word that Greenlee says."

"Why not?"

"There's no such expression as vis-a-vis in the Servian language. It's vitch-a-vitch!"

What He Took Her For.

"What! Marry you!" snorted the fiery tempered maiden. "Huh! What do you take me for?"

"For better or worse," he replied promptly. So they were married and lived unhappily ever after, for, alas, she was worse than he took her for.

A Distinction.

"I dislike so much to be called a 'poetess,'" said a young woman who sometimes wrote verses for publication.

"Perhaps," suggested her matter of fact brother, "if you will write a little better quality of poetry people will call you a poet."

For Company Use.

Visitor (during temporary absence of hostess)—What beautiful teeth your mamma has, Tommy.

Tommy—Yes'm; she never wears that set 'cept when she has callers.—Baltimore American.

The Best Way to Preserve a Body.

There is no other way in which a body can be preserved so long, leaving freezing and mummification out of the question, as by burial in a lead coffin. If the receptacle is airtight, lack of oxygen brings putrefaction almost if not quite to a pause, and the face of a defunct person may be recognizable after a long period of time. The attempts frequently made to destroy bodies by covering them with lime usually have the opposite effect, preserving them by keeping out the air.—London Answers.

Poor Boy!

"Your new brother is the eleventh child in the family, is he not?" asked the caller.

"Yes, ma'am," said the little girl.

"Have you named him yet?"

"I think we're going to name him Jerusalem. That's what papa called him when he was born."—Exchange.

Foresight.

Miss Giddy (vivaciously)—My new gown is a dream—very light gray voile.

He (practically)—Ah, yes; very pretty, I'm sure. But doesn't gray soil easily?

Miss G. (leaping before she looked)—Oh, I had it made with a broad black girdle!

When sugar prices are low, German farmers can hereafter utilize their crops more profitably by drying the beets for use as cattle feed. Experiments have shown this method to be feasible, and the dried beets can be easily stored.

Weak Hearts, Weak Blood Weak Nerves

RELIEF IN 30 MINUTES.

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the heart never fails to cure the heart and nerves and to enrich the blood. It relieves in 30 minutes. It is a beacon light to lead you back to health. W. H. Musselman, of G. A. R., Weissport, Pa., says: "Two bottles of Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure entirely cured me of heart palpitation and extreme nervousness. Its value can not be estimated." Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Agnew's Ointment relieves eczema and tetter in a day, 35c. 5

In honor of the King's visit Dublin washed its statues of Dan O'Connell and Henry Grattan.

If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and use it according to directions. It works with wonderful rapidity in subduing that dreadful disease that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and delicate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly and never fails to effect a thorough cure.

Some people have a great deal of pride, and nothing back of it.

Call a man's body his earthly tenement if you will, but don't make the mistake of calling him a flat.

ST. JACOBS OIL

POSITIVELY CURES

Rheumatism
Neuralgia
Lumbago
Backache
Sciatica
Sprains Bruises
Soreness
Stiffness

CONQUERS PAIN.

GREAT NORTH LAND

PEACE RIVER COUNTRY IS DESCRIBED.

A Land Admirably Suited to Mixed Farming—A Traveller Reaches Winnipeg After a Long and Lonely Journey in Northern Country.

Five months of travelling by foot and river through the northern portions of the Territories and following the streams that are tributary to the Arctic ocean into the frigid zone is a chapter in the life of H. A. Conray which has just been concluded. He is one of the inspectors who pays treaty money to the Indians, and his territory for the most part lies in that portion of Canada which is unknown to all save the red man and the few dealers in furs who ply their vocations in those far distant places.

To reach this territory Mr. Conray goes to Edmonton by rail; from there he takes boat to Athabasca Landing, and there he meets the first Indians who are under his especial care in the way of receiving bounty from the Crown.

From this place his objective point was Peace River Landing, which is situated away up in Athabaska. At present this district is almost unknown and almost inaccessible, but when some of the projected transcontinental railways are constructed it is destined to become one of the best agricultural districts of Western Canada. According to Mr. Conray it possesses all the characteristics of the district around Edmonton, and it has besides some advantages; the timber is heavier, the days are longer and the rainfall is more abundant and regular.

Here and at Dunvegan to the one side, and Spirit River to the other, there are Hudson Bay posts and Catholic missions. Around these places wheat is grown in small quantities, but in quantities large enough to demonstrate that it can be grown successfully.

Three hundred miles up the Peace river from the Landing, Vermillion is situated, and here there is already the nucleus of a town.

The Hudson's Bay Company has an up-to-date roller mill and enough wheat is grown in the district to keep the mill running for the most part of the year.

The most extensive farmer in that part of the country is a man by the name of Brick; last year he raised 2,000 bushels of excellent wheat for which he was paid $1.50 a bushel cash by the Hudson's Bay Co.

The flour that is ground at Vermillion has a wide market. Trading companies, three in number, all make this place their headquarters and here they stock up before starting out to barter with the Indians for their furs.

Oats are also successfully grown in this great district and the finest vegetables in the world can be produced here.

After travelling up the Peace river for eight hundred miles, Lake Athabaska is reached. This lake is of immense size, and being dotted with islands is exceedingly picturesque. The point which was to be reached up there was Fond du Lac, which is at the extreme end of the lake.

This concludes the business of the government party in the temperate zone and after this the Great Slave river is traversed far into the Arctic circle. Before returning Fort Reliance is visited, which is at the extreme northeastern point of Great Slave lake.

The return trip was made with expedition. A Hudson's Bay company transport was returning to Athabaska Landing and Mr. Conray and his party joined it.

The trip was made all the way by boat, but not without meeting obstacles, for along the Athabaska river the Indians had to track the transport for forty miles. In all parts the river is rapid and many places the rapid current develops into rugged rapids.

Asked as to the quantity of furs that had been secured by the traders, Mr. Conray said that the Indians had had a successful season and the trading companies' boats made big purchases.

Much of the country is beyond the jurisdiction of any game law and as a consequence no restriction is placed on the slaughter of beaver and otter. In addition to many splendid pelts of these varieties the traders purchased quantities of bear, muskrat, marten and fox skins. Two firms have each secured nearly $100,000 worth of skins.

In conclusion Mr. Conray emphasized the adaptability of the Peace River country to mixed farming and its immense size, which is capable of sustaining a large sized nation. It is plentifully supplied with splendid timber, spruce, cottonwood and poplar.

The trained nurses of Winnipeg have formed an association.

The new C. P. R. grain and flour tariff which comes into effect next week will show considerable reductions.

The police have raided Dawson "social clubs," and fined the inmates on gambling charges.

The Canadian Manufacturers' association has passed a resolution favoring the appointment of a tariff commission.

Mr. Chamberlain's resignation has caused much trouble to Premier Balfour; Lord Milner is talked of as his successor.

The Church of Latter Day Saints (Mormon), now in the seventieth year, has some 400,000 adherents.

BRIEF CABLE NOTES.

Another Resignation From the Balfour Cabinet—A Opinion on Wheat Market.

London, Sept. 21.—Lord Balfour of Burleigh, secretary for Scotland, and Mr. Arthur Ralph Douglas Elliott, financial secretary of the treasury, have resigned and their resignations have been accepted by the king. Mr. Elliott was not in the cabinet. These two resignations make a total of four vacancies in the cabinet; these two and one secretaryship are now at Mr. Balfour's disposal.

With the resignations of Lord Balfour and financial Secretary Elliott, both strongly free traders the list of resignations is complete.

The Duke of Devonshire has decided to remain in the cabinet. It is practically certain that Hon. Austin Chamberlain, Lord Milner and Mr. Broderick will take the exchequer, colonies and India portfolios, respectively; and the only surprise in the new appointments is likely to be the nomination of a strong man to the war office to determine how far the recommendations of the South African war commission can be carried out.

Mr. Griffiths, Lord Strathcona's secretary, when interviewed, said Canadians of whatever political color would freely admit the administration of Mr. Chamberlain as colonial secretary had been a distinct advance in many respects over the past. Mr. Chamberlain in Canada was the most popular of living English statesmen. Lord Strathcona's very high opinion of Mr. Chamberlain was well known.

Thomas Thom, of the Liverpool Corn Exchange, estimates this year's shortage in the world's wheat crop as 36,000,000 bushels available for British needs. Canada's average export of wheat to Great Britain during the past six years was only 6,000,000 bushels. Mr. Thom, therefore, contends that any deficiency can scarcely be supplied from Canada. The natural outlet of Manitoba and Alberta is the Pacific ocean, meeting the increasing bread wants of China, Japan and the Philippines. Mr. Thom thinks those in Britain who expect sufficient supplies may be secured from the Canadian Northwest to meet the shortage will be doomed to disappointment.

At a parish church three-quarters of a mile from Balmoral Castle, which was attended by Queen Victoria, King Edward, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Charles of Denmark, Premier Balfour, Lord Lansdowne, other ministers, and a distinguished congregation to-day, unveiled a memorial bust of the late Queen Victoria by the sculptor Emil Fuchs, and two mural tables in memory of the late Duke of Edinburgh and Empress Frederick of Germany. The three memorials were erected at the expense of the king.

A writer on Greater Britain in the Daily News referring to a Canadian member of the Commons remarks that the British cabinet is composed of fifteen jackasses, says if anything could lower colonial opinion of English public men, it would be the situation that has now come about.

The Australian Commonwealth government have abandoned the idea of running an independent mail service between Australia and England, being convinced that no shipping company would undertake the contract owing to a clause in the contract that no colored labor will be employed.

Sir Gilbert Parker, writing the British and Foreign Bible society on the value of the scriptures, says it is not easy to speak of an influence so sacredly associated with youth and home, travelling far into the world. It has travelled with me, if not always the most intimate, still more faithful than a life-long friend.

A contributed article in The Times on the Northwest Mounted Police force says the reports of their doings is a far surer index of the progress of the country than anything else available.

Major Van Straubenzie, of the Royal Military College, Kingston, is posted to command the 123rd Field Battery at Cahir.

The total annual cost of imperial defence is £87,487,800. The self-governing colonies are not included in this statement.

Birmingham, Sept. 19.—A conference of 330 delegates representing 240,000 workingmen, met the members of unions and co-operative societies here to-day. The conference adopted a resolution expressing belief in the advantage of free trade and condemning preferential tariffs.

Owing to the decline in the Swiss watch trade many emigrants are leaving Switzerland for Canada.

The Honorable Artillery Company of London intends visiting Toronto and Montreal about the middle of October.

Calgary polo team defeated the pick of the east at Toronto on Saturday.

An Italian laborer was killed at Fort William while excavating in a sewer.

The cattle market is disappointing and Alberta range cattle are moving slowly.

The semi-annual meeting of all western curling clubs will be held on October 7.

A Chicago authority states Canada's ports are getting the grain trade away from Americans.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

A BUDGET OF IMPORTANT INFORMATION.

Items of Interest Gathered From All Parts of the Two Hemispheres Presented in Condensed Form For Busy Readers.

Wheat and flour prices were advanced last Saturday.

Prorogation is expected to take place at Ottawa by October 1.

Lou Dillon lowered the Maud S. record driven to a high sulky.

It is stated that 60,000 Bulgarians have been slaughtered by the Turks.

A Duluth journalist has discovered an iron mine in Minnesota worth millions.

British Honduras follows Canada's example in making May 24 Empire day.

Private letters received from Monastir give further details of horrible outrages perpetrated on the Bulgarian women and children.

The recent unfavorable weather for crops has further upset the calculations of Minneapolis millers and a shortage of raw material is anticipated.

Falls of snow are reported as having fallen at many points in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories Sept. 12.

A prehistoric castle, which is believed to have existed four hundred years before Christ, has been brought to light at Casset, Germany.

A milk famine is threatened in Winnipeg.

Pope Pius' first large reception was given to workingmen.

Bulgaria has sent a note to the powers threatening war.

The Salvation army has adopted cavalry to further their work.

The Canadian Northern railway is opening two new town sites west of Grand View.

Two more senators will be given representation from the Northwest Territories.

Workmen will start next week at a forty stall round house for the C. N. R. in Winnipeg.

The building permits issued in Winnipeg for the season, as reported to the city council, totalled $4,430,500.

A terrible gale damaged Florida orange groves and plantations, and destroyed many summer resorts. The loss at Tampa alone is $1,000,000.

Miss Johanna Cleary, of Winnipeg, succumbed to heart disease at Portage la Prairie, on Sept. 14, where she was visiting friends.

The Siberia route for mails to China and Japan is a strong competitor with the other routes. Letters are now being delivered in Paris and Berlin within a period of about eighteen days from China, arriving via Siberia.

As a result of the recent anti-Jewish agitation among the laboring classes at Cardiff, Wales, and in its neighborhood, 100 Jewish employees of the Dowlais works left Merthyr Tydvil on Sept. 15 on their way to America.

Geo. Beeson, of Ottawa, who pleaded guilty last week to the charge of stealing $460 of the funds of Court Royal Albert, of the Canadian Order of Foresters, was allowed out on suspended sentence on Monday. His friends made restitution for the amount stolen and this, along with Beeson's previous good character, led the judge to be lenient.

R. L. Ross, agent in Australia of the department of trade and commerce, reports under date of August 15, that there is no possibility of the crop this year proving a failure. Harvest will be in in about three months. It is a question whether the supplies of wheat and grain will hold out till that date. Mr. Ross reports that there is a good market in Australia for Canadian seeds, but that the samples must be up to standard. The main orders for seeds are cabled during the month of October.

F. Bradshaw, reading a paper at the British association meeting in Southport, England, on the commercial relations between Canada and the United Kingdom, after a historical sketch, said the St. Lawrence navigation was the crux of the whole question. The canals must be improved until the cost of transportation of every bushel of wheat from Port Arthur to Liverpool was only twelve cents. If a preference to Canadian wheat was given, improvement would take place before the American demand arose, but if the American demand came first, the improvement would never take place.

CHAMBERLAIN HOOTED.

Colonial Secretary Meets With a Lively Reception in Downing St.

London, Sept. 14.—Upon the arrival of Mr. Chamberlain at Downing Street he was loudly hooted. A crowd of laborers employed on the new government buildings in course of erection nearby joined in this unusual demonstration against the colonial secretary. Mr. Chamberlain, who was accompanied by Mr. Gerald Balfour, president of the Board of Trade, showed his customary indifference to this reception. The police eventually were obliged to form double lines from Mr. Balfour's house to the foreign office, so as to enable the cabinet ministers to enter the latter place.

It is understood that the rumors of the approaching resignation of the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Ritchie are well founded. He will attend the next cabinet meeting with the determination of resigning. Other minor resignations are likely to occur; but Colonial Secretary Chamberlain and Premier Balfour are reported to be standing together and intend keeping up the cabinet by filling the vacancies.

Mexican Cattle for Northwest.

A Montreal paper has the following dispatch from Phoenix, Arizona: The firm of Gordon, Ironside & Fares, Canadian cattle men have purchased a 200,000 acre ranch in Mexico, where they will maintain a herd of 20,000 breeding cattle. American cattlemen have watched with interest the result of the shipments into Canada from Mexico of one and two year old stock, believing that the low grade would discourage the Canadians. The report is that the Mexican cattle shipped this season go into the winter in as good condition as the native Canadian cattle. The purchase of Mexican cattle continues, but the Canadians have men on the ground negotiating for the purchase of ranches, where they will breed better stock than is supplied by the Mexican breeders. This will affect the American market in Canda.

Indian Killed While Drunk.

A dispatch from Okotoks, Alta., says: Mr. Wm. Janes' hired man, while returning home last Thursday evening noticed an Indian lying on his face in a shallow stream of water. He went to him and lifted him up, but only to find that life was extinct. He then went to the Indian Industrial school and reported the matter and a further examination was made. It was found that he was a Blackfoot, and in some unaccountable way had secured liquor. Bruises were also found on his head and body, and the conclusion was arrived at that while under the influence of fire water his horse had either kicked or trampled him into unconsciousness, and he being unable to help himself had died in the shallow stream. The rest of the Indians, who are at present hay-making in the district, buried him near the spot where he was found.

His Wife Chewed Tobacco.

In the district court at Fremont, Neb., the other day, Judge Grimson granted Gen. S. Lovelady a divorce on the ground of cruelty, and at the same time allowed the defendant enough alimony to pay the expenses incurred in fighting the case.

A few weeks before the decree of divorce was granted, Mrs. Loveday was arraigned on the charge of threatening to pison her husband and his children. It came to light at the trial of the divorce case that Mrs. Lovelady is the divorced wife of three men who are now living, and that she has been married seven times. The testimony did not show whether or not she had been divorced from any of her dead husbands. She declared she did not remember, and Gen. Lovelady said he never knew.

The testimony did show, however, that Mrs. Lovelady had long been addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, and she had been for many years an habitual chewer of plug tobacco.

Awful Cruelties in a Workhouse.

Paul Perwitzsky and Ernest Wahl, directors of a workhouse at Saalhausen, a suburb of Dresden, Germany, and a policeman named Anton Bruch have been sentenced to two years and six months' imprisonment, respectively, in connection with the terrible abuses committed on the inmates of the institution.

The inmates were compelled to climb on a hot stove and march at the double until they were exhausted. One witness testified that he was bitten by a dog which he believed was trained for this purpose. Another inmate, who escaped from the workhouse and was brought back, in order to be released, gave vent to insults against the emperor, which resulted in his getting a longer sentence in a regular prison.

Coal has been discovered near Moose Factory.

A CABINET CRISIS

MINISTERS RESIGN FROM BALFOUR CABINET.

Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Right Hon. C. T. Ritchie, and Lord George Hamilton Withdraw From Balfour Ministry in Great Britain.

London, Sept. 17.—The resignation of Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, as secretary for the colonies; Right Hon. C. T. Ritchie, as chancellor of the exchequer, and Lord George Hamilton, as secretary for India, were officially announced this evening.

The accompanying correspondence passed between the premier, Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, and Mr. Chamberlain: Then follows Mr. Chamberlain's letter, dated Birmingham, September 9, commencing, "My dear Balfour." An extremely interesting feature is the following statement concerning a preferential tariff:

"For the present, at any rate, a preferential agreement with our colonies involving any new duty, however small, on articles of food hitherto untaxed, even if accompanied by a reduction on other articles of food equally universal in their consumption, would be unacceptable to the majority of the constituencies. However much we may regret the decision; however mistaken we may think it, no good government in a democratic country can ignore it. I feel, therefore, that as an immediate practical policy, the question of preference to the colonies cannot be pressed with any hope of success at the present time, although there is a very strong feeling in favor of the other branch of fiscal reform which would give fuller discretion to the government in negotiation with foreign countries for a freer exchange of commodities, and which would enable our representatives to retaliate if no concession was made to our just demands.

"If, as I believe, you share these views, it seems to me that you will be absolutely justified in adopting them as the policy of your government, although it may involve changes in its constitution. As secretary of the colonies during the last few years, I have been in a special sense the representative of the policy of a closer union, which I firmly believe to be equally necessary in the interests of the colonies and ourselves. I believe it is possible to-day, and may be possible to-morrow, to make arrangements for such a union. I have had unexampled opportunities of watching events and appreciating the feelings of our kinsmen beyond the seas. I stand, therefore, in a different position to any of my colleagues, and I think that I should justly be blamed if I remained in office and thus formally accepted the exclusion from my political program so important a part thereof. I think that with absolute loyalty to your government, and with no fear of embarrassing it in any way, I can best promote the cause I have at heart from the outside.

PRESS COMMENT.

Newspaper comments on Mr. Chamberlain's resignation and the stand he has taken, agree that it was the only course open to an honorable and high-spirited politician. The Daily Chronicle believes he goes out of office because, to use his own words, he can best promote the cause he has at heart from the outside.

The Morning Post says: "Mr. Chamberlain, by his resignation, which the King has been graciously pleased to accept, has crossed the rubicon which is but a little stream, but to cross it had an immense significance."

The Times says Messrs. Ritchie's and Hamilton's resignations is a matter of quite subordinate importance compared to Mr. Chamberlain's, by universal admission the strongest member of the government and the statesman who has made out for all time a most powerful and abiding impression on the masses at home and the younger nations growing up to manhood within the empire.

THE WIDE WORLD.

Telegraphic News of Two Hemispheres Briefly Chronicled.

The body of an unknown man was found floating in a lake near Lethbridge last week.

St. Paul baseball team, pennant winners, will play three games in Winnipeg, beginning October 1.

Dozens of lives were lost in Wednesday's gale along the north Atlantic coast.

Sir William Mulock's new bill gives salary increases to all Dominion civil service clerks.

The British steamer Mexicana has foundered near Portsmouth, Va., and 22 of the crew were lost.

A gasoline boat, belonging to Helgi Einarson, on Lake Manitoba, was burned as the result of an explosion on Wednesday. The accident was caused by a lighted match igniting gasoline which was escaping through a leak in the tank. There were two men on the boat at the time, both escaped death as if by a miracle. One of them was blown through a door, into the river, coming out unscathed.

Advices from Berlin, Germany, say that Gen. Von Einem, the new minister for war, has issued a decree forbidding non-commissioned officers and privates from having in their possession or distributing any revolutionary or socialistic writings without the permission of higher authorities; or singing songs, uttering cries, giving expression to any socialistic sentiments, or from attending any meeting, contributing or belonging to any society without the permission of their officers. The decree concludes with citing the articles of the military code under which the offenders will be tried:

USES FOR NETTLES.

They Are Good to Eat and Furnish Thread and Clothing.

There was a time once when the common nettle was not the usually despised weed it is now. People did not root it out of existence or shun it as a nuisance, but cultivated it for use as food, for clothing and for paper manufacture.

It certainly does not look inviting as a food, and yet during the Irish famine hundreds of poor people existed entirely on it, cooking the young plant as greens. There was a method of blanching it by "earthing up," as is now used for sea kale.

Animals, while refusing to touch the growing nettle, devour it eagerly when made into hay, and in Russia, Sweden and Holland it is mowed several times a year for fodder.

The common name given to the nettle in some languages means "that with which one sews," for the fiber was used as a thread several centuries ago.

In Kamchatka the natives use the thread for fishing lines and cordage. In France it is used for paper. In Hindustan and China it is woven into grass cloth, and the Scotch have prepared, spun and woven it into as good linen as the flax makes.

The Chinese nettle yields a fiber as soft as silk, and there is now in Dresden a "China grass" manufactory devoted to the industry of weaving cloth from this and the common nettle.—Stray Stories.

Resourceful Major Pond.

Major Pond was never upset in difficulties. Once he was traveling with Ian Maclaren. There was a breakdown on the railway and the prospect of a lecture engagement being missed and $1,000 lost. What he did was to telegraph a long and merry message to the audience about the breakdown, saying he and Ian Maclaren would be arriving not more than half an hour late. Singing was provided to entertain the audience. When the half hour was up in came another telegram more cheerful than ever, saying that they were coming along and that Ian Maclaren was determined to lecture to that audience if all the railways in the world had broken down.

The Americans are an emotional people, and they were interested. Every twenty minutes in came a fresh telegram with something funny and bright about it and always declaring that the great novelist was advancing. It was half past 10 when the couple reached the platform, and the welcome given them was hilarious.

A Natural Weather Vane.

It was an old belief that if the preserved body of a halcyon or kingfisher were suspended by a thread from the ceiling its bill would always turn toward the quarter from whence the wind was blowing.

Thus Barabas in Marlowe's "Jew of Malta" says:

"But now how stands the wind?
Into what quarter peeps my halcyon's bill?
Ha! To the east? Yes."

Shakespeare also alludes to it in "King Lear" when Kent in his reply to Cornwall rebukes those who—

"Turn their halcyon's beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters."

In more modern days a stuffed kingfisher has been seen hanging from the beam of a cottage ceiling at Botley, near Southampton, and in other places of that neighborhood, where there is a kindred belief that if a dead kingfisher is hung up by its beak its breast will turn with the ebb and flow of the tide.

A Dangerous Item.

"I see that choice Bengal tigers have been marked down to $1,000 each."

"For goodness' sake, don't let my wife read that paragraph! Here's my knife. Cut it out. If those tigers are on the bargain counter she'd want at least two."

The Breaking End.

Cumon—Did your friend Tanker succeed in breaking his terrible drink habit?

Bangs—No; the habit succeeded in breaking him.

He Was Strong.

Employer—Yes, I advertised for a strong boy. Think you will fill the bill?

Applicant—Well, I just finished lickin' nineteen other applicants out in the hall.

It takes a mighty good speller to write with some one looking over his shoulder.

A Beautiful Toast.

On a grand day in the old chivalric times, when the lady of each knightly heart was pledged by name, when it came to St. Leon's turn he lifted the sparkling cup on high and gave them this: "I drink to one," he said, "whose image never may depart, deep carved on the human heart, till memory is dead." With that he paused as if he would not breathe her name in careless mood thus lightly to another, then bent his noble head as though to give that word the reverence due and gently said, "My mother!"

Fatal Plans.

She—I believe every man is the architect of his own fortune.

He—Yes, but the trouble is most men spend so much time on the plans that they have none left for building.

A Hard Subject to Handle.

Dauber—I will guarantee to paint anything called for.

Dealer—Good! Do me a speaking likeness of a dumb waiter.

The park surrounding Blenheim palace is 2,700 acres in extent and twelve miles around.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Constable Tranter received notice this week that the department intends to build a jail as soon as possible. The building will be 20x30, containing three cells.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce will go ahead with the erection of their local branch here this fall. The plans have been altered so that the building will not cost over fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars. We understand that the contract will be let this week.

Several cases of small pox were reported at the G. N. section huose one evening this week, and a special was run down from the mines with Drs. Willson and Howden on board. The report proved to be a canard, however, as the supposed cases were nothing but a slight attack of rash.

One of the miners here swears positively to having shot a snake on the mountain just across the railway track, that measured 10 feet in length, one day this week. As he left the trophy in the hills it is still a guess with his friends as to what particular branch of moisture he is addicted.

James Matheson, an old time prospector of Cranbrook and West Kootenay, was in town this week. Mr. Matheson was on his way to the Flathead country where he expects to winter, making Morrissey Mines his headquarters. It was his first visit to this town, and as is the case with other newcomers, he was most favorably impressed with the place and its future.

On Tuesday morning those on board the express got a scare at Frank. The rumbling which occasionally break out on the crumbling mountain were very severe that morning and the train was backed up for a safe distance and delayed for an hour. As the train was on time that morning pitch darkness prevailed when the train went through, but the alarming rumblings of rocks tumbling down the mountain side intensified the dangers which could not be seen.

MICHEL

The questions of the hour are. "Who shot the deer?" and "who fought the ——?"

The fan at No. 4 mine was shut down Sunday and Monday for repairs.

Harry Clifton is now installed in the new barber shop at No. 2 opposite the station.

Messrs. J. A. Ferguson and B. Owens of the stone quarry, paid Fernie a visit this week.

Mr. Jack Lewis has returned to town after a protracted tour in the Stickeen district.

Messrs. Phillips and Monroe, Pittsburg, Pa., who have been on Bull River on an extensive hunting trip are expected down in a few days.

Mr. Henry Chapman, foreman painter for the Coal Co., here has resigned his position.

Mr. Albert Ferguson paid Fernie and Blairmore a visit this week.

Dr. McSorley was called to Sparwood twice this week. One of the employees at the saw mill had his hand badly mangled in the planer.

An employee in No. 5 mine had his leg run over by a car one day this week.

Dr. McSorley's Ambulance Class meet Monday and Thursday evenings

Rev. Shearer, travelling secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance delivered an address in the hall last evening.

An employee of the the Carbon Creek Lumber Co., while coming down from the Loop on a handcar on Wednesday last had the misfortune to fall off, the car passing over his foot and causing serious injury. He was sent to the hospital at Cranbrook.

A daring robbery took place at Crows Nest station Friday evening of last week. Mr. Leitch a passenger on the east bound train while standing on the platform of one of the coaches was asked for the time when the enquiring miscreant grabbed his watch and made off in the dark.

Two men under the influence of liquor fell into Michel Creek near the bridge on Tuesday night. The cold water sobered them to the extent that they were enabled to escape a watery grave.

The creek has been quite muddy and high owing to the large amount of rainfall this week.

The post office here was burglarized Wednesday night. About $20 in stamps and money are missing. The burglar gained admittance through the window. The postmaster makes daily returns and over 900 was sent away that evening, otherwise the affair might have been more serious.

The event of the week was the drilling contest on Monday afternoon at 4:30 when McDonald and Wilson drilled against Marino and Amonto for a purse of $400. The stone was placed in front of the hotel here in the afternoon then the betting began, mostly on McDonald and Wilson. By the time the drilling started about $1000 was up. MacDonald and Wilson went 30⅝ inches Marino and Amonto 29⅞ inches. The latter's steel was in far shape than that of the winners.

Mr. A. Good the popular host of the Summit Hotel, Crows Nest, has about completed the large addition to his hotel. The improvements include a magnificent front with a large piazza in which will be placed a beautiful fountain in the water of which will be seen in the near future specimens of the finny tribe taken from the lakes near by Mr. Good intends to place in the lake a steam launch and several first class row boats, which will make this point a popular resort for pleasure seekers.

(Too late for last week.)

The frame work of the new stable was started the fore part of the week.

Wm. Austin and a Swede named Anderson were slightly burned by gas in No. 5 mine this week.

Thursday a Slav driving in No. 5 mine was quite badly cut and bruised by the cars. He fell off the front of the trip while coming out

The C. P. R. have completed a cement foundation for the new weigh scales at the end of the yard below the tipple.

Miss M. Evans left for her home at Cowley, Monday evening.

Two new tunnels were started on the west side this week.

Operations have commenced on the new fan house for No. 8. Part of the steel for the fan is already here.

The people of Michel for the first time had an opportunity of attending divine worship in a church in this town when the Methodist church here was opened and dedicated by Rev. Thomson, Chairman of the Board for Kootenay, last Sunday. About sixty were present at the service in the morning and in the evening the church was filled to its utmost. The collections for the day amounted to about fifty dollars. In connection with the opening services and in aid of the building fund the ladies gave a tea meeting Monday evening at which there was an abundance of good things. Tea from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m., after which there was a first class entertainment at which Revs. Thompson, Smith and Marshall gave short speeches. The ladies realized about $125. The church here is a fine building, nicely finished, costing in all about $1200 of which $1000 is already raised.

Notice to Contractors.

HIGHWAY BRIDGE OVER THE ELK RIVER AT MORRISSEY, B. C.

Sealed Tenders properly endorsed "Tender for Morrissey Bridge," will be received by the undersigned up to noon of Thursday, the 8th Oct. next, for the erection and completion of a wooden bridge across the Elk River at the town of Morrissey, East Kootenay District, B. C,

The drawings, specification and conditions of tendering and contract may be seen at the Public Engineer's Office, Lands and Works, department. Victoria, B. C., at the Office of the Government Agent, Fort Steele, B. C., and at the Government Office, Fernie, B. C., on and after the 17th instant.

Tenders will not be considered unless made on the forms supplied for the purpose and signed by the tenderer, and the agreement to execute a bond, appended to the form of tender, is duly signed by the tenderer and and two responsible residents of the Province, satisfactory to the Department, in the penal sum of two thousand [$2,000] dollars each, for the faithful performance of the work.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

W. S. GORE,
Deputy Commissioner of Lands and Works.
Lands and Works Department, Victoria, B. C.
12th September, 1903.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E. corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 aces more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.
T. W. BINGAY.
Located by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

CONSERVATIVE PLATFORM.

[Adopted at Revelstoke, Sept. 13th, 1902]

1. That this convention reaffirm the policy of the party in matters of provincial roads and trails; the ownership and control of railways and the development of the agricultural resources of the province as laid down in the platform adopted in October, 1899, which is as follows:

"To actively aid in the construction o trails throughout the undeveloped portions of the province and the building o provincial trunk roads of public nesessity

"To adopt the principle of government ownership of railways in so far as the circumstances of the province will admit, and the adoption of the principle that no bonus should be granted to any railway company which does not give the government of the province control of rates over lines bonused, together with the option of purchase.

"To actively assist by state aid in the development of the agricultural resources of the province.

2. That in the meantime and until the railway policy above set forth can be accomplished, a general railway act be passed, giving freedom to construct railways under certain approved resgulations analogous to the system that has resulted in such extensive railway construction in the United States, with so much advantage to trade and commerce.

3. That to encourage the mining industry, the taxation of metalliferous mines should be on the basis of a percentage on the net profits.

4. That the government ownership of telephone systems should be brought about as a first step in the acquisition of public utilities.

5. That a portion of every coal area hereafter to be disposed of should be reserved from sale or lease, so that state owned mines may be easily assessible, if their operation becomes necessary or advisable

6. That in the pulp land leases provision should be made for reforesting and that steps should be taken for the general preservation of forests by guarding against the wasteful destruction of timber

7. That the legislature and governmen of the province persevere in the effort to secure the exclusion of Asiatic labor.

8. That the matter of better terms in the way of subsidy and appropriations for the province should be vigorously pressed upon the Dominion government.

9. That the silver-lead industries of the province be fostered and encouraged by the imposition of increased customs duties on lead and lead produce imported into Canada, and that the conservative members of the Dominion House be urged to support any motion introduced for such a purpose.

10. That as industrial disputes almost invariably result in great loss and injury both to the parties directly concerned and to the public, legislation should be passed to provide means for an amicable adjustment of such disputes between employers and employees.

11. That it is advisable to foster the manufacture of the raw products of the province within the province as far as practicable by means of taxation on the said raw products, subject to rebate of the same in whole or part when manufactured in British Columbia.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

"Herbageum"

For Horses, Cattle & Poultry.

"International Stock Food."

Three Feeds for One Cent.

A. W. Bleasdell

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto.

Notice is hereby given that the Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, a corporation having its head office at the town of Fernie, in the Province of British Columbia, saw mill owner and lumber manufacturer has, by Deed of Assignment bearing date the 22nd day of September, 1903, assigned all its real and personal property to Arthur Hamilton Cree, of the said town of Fernie, Insurance Agent, in trust for the purpose of paying and satisfying ratiably and proportionately and without preference or priority all the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited.

A meeting of the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, will be held in Joyce's Hall, Fernie, British Columbia, on Wednesday, the 7th day of October, 1903, at the hour of 3 P.M.

All Creditors are required to file with the said assignee full particulars of all their claims duly proved as required by the provisions of the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto and the nature of the securities, if any, held by them, on or before the 7th day of November, 1903, after which date the assignee will proceed to distribute the assets among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which he shall then have notice.

Dated the 6th day of September, 1903.
ARTHUR H. CREE,
Assignee.

Fresh Fruit AND Vegetables arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert Confectioner

. . The . .

Fernie Free Press

from now

to

Jan. 1st, 1904,

only

50 cents.

Subscribe now.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to procpect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of John Brown's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. C. Tuttle's south-west corner" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains. thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement.
244-4 H. C. TUTTLE
Dated August 31st, 1903- Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of A. Manahan's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Edward Miller's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 EDWARD MILLER
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land; Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and petroleum and marked "Levi Klingesmith's south east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-3 LEVI KLINGENSMITH.
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of Mary Gabbett's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Nellie Bleasdell's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 NELLIE BLEASDELL
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of J. R. Webster's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Alice Tuttle's south west corner"; thence 80 chains east, thence 80 chains north, thence 80chains west, thence 80 chains south to place of beginning.
244-4 ALICE TUTTLE
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agt.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petrolium on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Mary Scott's south east corner" thence 80 chains west, thence 80 chains north. thence 80 chains east, thence 80 chains south to place of beginning.
244-4 MARY SCOTT
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "W. A. Bleasdell's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thenee south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 W. A. BLEASDELL
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.
W. A. CARR.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk river:

Commencing at the north-west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence northerly along the foothills 80 chains; thence east about 40 chains to the East bank of Elk river; thence south along the said west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west about 40 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.
C. J. ECKSTORM.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted on the W. bank of the Elk River about 12 miles north of the 35 mile post and marked John Brown's south west corner, thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south80 chains to the point of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.
JOHN BROWN,
Jas. Miller, Agent.

"Follow the Leader."

Is the name of our new Exercise Books.

We lead in

School Supplies

and can furnish

ribblers

Exercise Books

Note Books, &c

in immense variety.

Our line of READERS, etc., is complete.

Our "Blo-to-fil" Fountain Pen is a trade-winner.

Fernie Drug Store.
N. E. SUDDABY.

Boilers and Engines

ALSO
SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY
We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.
Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.
602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of John Brown's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Steve Podbielancik's south east corner" thence west 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.
STEVE PODBIELANCIK,
JAS. MILLER, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "A manahan's south west corner" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 A. MANAHAN
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Edward Miller's coal and petroleum and marked "MaryiGobbett's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 MARY GOBBETT
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of Edward Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "John F. Wilson's south east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the Place of commencement.
244-4 JOHN F. WILSON
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lan is and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Manahan's coal and petroleum claim and marked "J. H. Wallace's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 J. H. WALLACE
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Jos. Podbielancik's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.
244-4 JOS. PODBIELANCIK
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Mary Gobbett's coal and petroleum claim and marked "J. R. Webster's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 J. R. WEBSTER
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of J. R. Webster's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Gilmore's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
244-4 H. B. GILMORE
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Lib. Legislative Ass.
Dec 31 1901

157

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 13. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 247

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m,
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.
Office :—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

J. G. Cummings,
PROVINCIAL LAND SURVEYOR
FORT STEELE, B.C.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON
PIANO and ORGAN
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J.Barber, L.D.S.D.D.S.
DENTIST
OFFICE AND RESIDENCE
SECOND FLOOR, HILL BLOCK
Opposite Royal Hotel.
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

J. C. Morrison
D.D.S., L.D.S.
Has Located in Fernie, and is prepared to do all kinds of
DENTAL WORK
Crown and Bridge Work, Filling, Plates, etc.

Ask for British Lion or Mainland cigars For sale at all first-class places. Union made. Manufactured by Wm. Lietjan, Vancouver. x

LIST OF POLLING PLACES.

List of Returning Officers and Number of Votes Registered at Each Place.

POLLING PLACE.	DEPUTY RETURNING OFFICER.	NO. VOTES
No. 1. Fernie, H to M School House,...	J. S. T. Alexander	563
2. Fernie, A to G School House...	Sherwood Herchmer
3. Fernie, N to Z, Court House...	D. C. Walmsley
4. Crow's Nest, Good's Bunk House...	A. Good	12
5. The Loop, Nesbitt's Bunk House...	John Nesbitt	20
6. Michel, Post office	J. A. Ferguson	157
7. Sparwood, Wardrop's post office,...	E. Jarvis	18
8. Coal Creek Mines, school house....	G. F. Johnson	97
9. Morrissey, townsite office,	A. W. Drummond	174
10. Morrissey Mines, Cole's House	D. Clarke
11. Tonkin, School House	W. T. Clarke
12. Elko, School House	W. A. Wilmot	19
13. Jaffray, School House	H. Bentley	37
14. Elkmouth, Hayes Lumber Co's office,	W. H. Whimster	23
15. Phillipps, School House	M Phillips	20

TO THE ELECTORS.

To the electors of the Fernie Electoral District.

Owing to a temporary illness I find myself unable to make a personal canvass of all the electors whose name appear upon the voters list as I had fully intended to do. I am therefore compelled to give a short statement of my views on public matters through the medium of this letter.

I have been selected by the Conservatives or Government party as its candidate and I am fully in accord with its published platform. The platform of Liberals offers no advantage over that of the present government and as this this government has been in power only since June of this year, a bare three months, the principles of fair play would seem to justify a further trial of the present administration in preference to placing the reins of power in the hands of the Liberal party which is at present so lacking in unity amongst its members that it dare not select a leader.

With regard to the disputed areas of coal and oil lands the present government have declared their policy to be one which secures the heritage of the people for the benefit of the people, and on this ground I claim your support, as against the Liberals who have not as yet declared any satisfactory policy with respect to this important matter either on the platform or in their printed manifesto.

Mr. E. C. Smith the late member who is an opposition candidate in the Liberal interests in this riding, is not a resident of the riding and for that reason has not, in the past, taken that interest in the affairs of the constituency which his position as its member imposed upon him. For the same reason I suggest that the interests of the riding will be better served by the election of a resident who has always taken an active part in its affairs, who is familiar with its needs and pledged to look after them. The Socialists have placed Mr. McPherson in the field as an opposition candidate without any practicable platform but rather as a sort of political free lance and I cannot see where the constituency as a whole will gain by securing his election.

The election takes place on October 3rd and your vote may be polled at any polling booth in the riding. On behalf of the present government I take the liberty of soliciting your vote and influence.

Yours Truly,
WM. R. ROSS.

Fernie, Sept. 25th, 1903.

COAL CREEK NEWS.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Another car broke away near the upper switch on Saturday last and ran into the tipple causing quite a smash, necessitating a gang of men to repair for continuance of operations.

Mr. Dunsmuir has started his new tunnel near No. 1 fan house and is getting along rapidly.

The Company have great difficulty in supplying the demand for new houses and no doubt many will have to be turned away.

Mr. Partridge, jr., has brought his bride to Coal Creek mines and settled among us. We extend congratulations and wish them a long and prosperous life.

Miss Rosa McNee has failed as yet in obtaining a permit to teach here.

Our new church will be opened on Sunday. Services in the morning at 11 o'clock by Rev. S. J. Thompson and in the evening by Rev. John Robson, of Fernie. A live entertainment of singing, music and speeches will be given on Monday evening. A good time is expected. All are welcome. Some of Fernie's best singers as well as home talent will entertain us.

THE NEW TOWN OF COLEMAN

J. Todhunter is up from Coleman where he has been employed in superintending the construction of test ovens for the International Coal Co. He reports the coal proposition at that place to be a success. Two seams, respectively 6½ and 5 feet, are composed of first-class coking coal, producing coke very similar to the Fernie coke, though it may be a little more dense and contain a trifle more ash.

The International Company are proceeding rapidly with their development work. They are now getting out about 50 tons a day and the C.P.R. have placed a standing order with them for 1000 tons per day. The plans for the tipple and all other similar work are completed and J. B. Bright, C. E., of MacLeod, has the contract. This work will be rushed at once. The coke ovens are being built close by the mines, and a short spur connects the former with the C.P.R.

Coleman is a pretty townsite, even prettier than Blairmore. It is situated 4 miles west of Blairmore and six miles the other side of the summit with an altitude of about 200 feet less than the latter. Several blocks, hotels and dwellings are being erected at this town and everything points to this becoming a lively little place.

Other properties at Blairmore and vicinity are being developed and the future of the eastern end of the Pass is very bright. Proctor and Fishburn are putting a spur into their mines and the Byron Creek property is being developed.

ELECTION DAY

To-day is election day. The weather is fine, the mines are closed, and the town wears a semi-holiday appearance. All parties are in the best of spirits and all are doing their utmost to secure a large vote

During the past week the campaign has been pushed much harder than during its earlier stages. Every train, both West and East, has carried enthusiastic individuals, both principals and agents, who have visited all the outlying points in the district. Meetings have also been held at various places. Morrissey has been particularly well looked after. The Liberals held a series there in the beginning of the week and yesterday the Conservatives did likewise. At Coal Creek a meeting was held by the Liberals and the Conservative candidate responded.

THE LAST GUNS FIRED

Big Conservative Rally on Thursday Evening—Five Speakers Took Part in the Discussion of the Issues of the Campaign.

The Conservatives held their last rally in Fernie on Thursday in which they claim to have scored a big victory. The hall was fairly well filled as it has been in all the meetings during the campaign. Dr. Bonnell occupied the position as chairman, and with him on the platform were the five speakers, including the two candidates of the two main parties and Messrs. Stork, Nolan and Craig.

P. J. NOLAN

The Calgary lawyer, P. J. Nolan, opened the meeting with a half-hour speech in support of the Conservative candidate. He dealt chiefly with the issues between the two parties in federal politics. He favored the building of the G.T.P. railway but condemned the clause in the contract prohibiting the employment of Chinese labor. He also condemned certain labor legislation adopted by the Liberal party as useless and ineffective. Mr. Nolan is a witty speaker and he was given an attentive hearing.

E. C. SMITH

The Liberal candidate who followed stated that as he had already discussed the policy of his party several times before a Fernie audience, he would this time devote his time to explaining his action in the legislature during the time he was there, which had been much criticised by his opponents. He then spoke of the enmity existing between himself and the government owing to the strong opposition he had made to its course, which he claimed was the reason the district had not received the attention it deserved from the government. He then proceeded to outline some of the legislation he had supported and some that he had opposed The opposition he compared with the "thin red line" in maintaining its front to the enemy. He went over the Crow's Nest Southern charter, the extension charter to Michel, the redistribution bill, the Workmen's Compensation bill, the Trades Union bill, and several measures that he had been instrumental in preventing which would have been injurious to the interests of the Province. Mr. Smith expressed his confidence in his election on the 3rd day of October.

FRED STORK

Mr. Stork followed with an eloquent address in which the Conservatives were blamed for many misdeeds both in connection with the province at large and with the town of Fernie in particular. In the latter connection he mentioned Mr. Houston's opposition to the C. N. Southern, the opposition shown by the past governments in the matter of education in Fernie, and to the domination of Fort Steele Conservatives in matters relating to this district. He resented a statement made by Mr. Ross in which it was made to appear that certain individuals supporting Mr. Smith had ulterior motives in the background, and he retaliated by claiming that the charge would be more applicable to the other party. He then read extracts from the sessional reports showing some of the efforts that E. C. Smith had made to aid labor legislation. Mr. Stork ended in a glowing eulogy of the Liberal party and of the wonderful progress that the great Dominion had made under its rule. He predicted the same brilliant victory for the Liberal party in this election that was won in the Dominion elections of 1896.

Ernest Craig spoke for a few moments on behalf of the Socialist candidate who was absent from the town. The speaker took up the same line of argument that has been used by that party at other meetings and he urged that all present support the candidate of the Socialist party as the one best qualified to represent the interests of the working classes.

W. R. ROSS

Mr. Ross was received with a very flattering ovation from which it was evident that the majority of those present were supporters of the party he represented. His speech was delivered in a forcible manner and he was warmly applauded by his friends and supporters. He dealt with challenges made by S S. Taylor on a previous occasion and showed that the Conservative party had put through legislation in the interests of the labor party, and that Liberals had been mixed up in scandals in the past provincial administrations. He again stated his policy with regard to the disposition of blocks 4593-4 but intimated that he had never heard his opponent declare his policy as to these lands. He referred to the divisions in the Liberal party and to the trouble that Martin would create were he not selected leader of the party. The latter part of his address was devoted to local affairs. He referred to the part he had taken at the Coast to have the recent dispute at Morrissey settled and to its probable effect, to the lack of attention that had been given to this district by the government for which he held Mr. Smith responsible, and to the importance of Fernie and his aim to have government offices situated here in the near future. He commented on the selection of an outside man and suggested that it was due to machine work in the Liberal party. Considerable interest was centred in his explanation of his personal references to prominent Liberals of the previous evening. He complained of an undue advantage being taken of him by the dragging in of private matters by those he mentioned and in this connection several documents were read by the speaker and Mr. Stork. Mr. Ross closed with a strong appeal for support. He had no axe to grind and would accept no government position that could be offered him. If the electors voted as their consciences dictated he would be satisfied with the result. He had made no promises in order to secure votes and he conducted the campaign as one who appreciated the public duty which he had been called upon to perform. The meeting closed with cheers for the King and for the Conservative candidate.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT MICHEL

Rope-rider Run Over by the Car in an Unaccountable Manner.

Last Saturday an accident occurred in No. 4 Mine, West slope, Michel, by which an Italian named John Nuzzi was instantly killed. Nuzzi was an experienced rope rider, having followed that work in the mines at Fernie as well as some time in different mines at Michel. At the time when the accident occurred the unfortunate man was riding on his car up the slope when the hoist man felt a jar and stopped the engine. Failing to get any signal he went to investigate the matter and he found the rider under the car, dead. The two wheels had passed over him and the car had been stopped before the others had touched him. He was quite dead and the doctor who gave evidence at the inquest afterwards stated that the deceased had been killed instantly. His chest was crushed in and several vital organs were injured.

Coroner Trites was notified and he held an inquest on Monday. A jury of miners were impannelled, who, after carefully examining the car and finding everything in good working order rendered a verdict that the deceased was accidently killed in the discharge of his duties and that the Company was in no way responsible for the accident. The inquest failed to bring out the manner in which the accident happened as no one had witnessed the occurrence, but it was the general opinion that Nuzzi missed his footing when getting on his car. John Nuzzi was a young man of about 25 years. He was single and leaves an uncle and a cousin, who reside at Michel. The Michel Miners' Union, of which the deceased was a member, took charge of the funeral arrangements, and a procession of about 200 men followed the remains to the grave on Monday afternoon.

GRAND MILLINERY DISPLAY

The Trites Wood Co. exhibit a Magnificent Stock of the latest Fall Fashions.

The millinery opening at the Trites-Wood Co., London and Liverpool store, which commenced last week and which has extended through this week, has been attended by all the ladies of the town. The magnificent stock of fall goods in the latest styles are well displayed in the spacious premises in the second floor of the London and Liverpool store. Here can be found all the latest shapes and models in hats together with a marvellous assortment of new trimmings and children's goods.

A glance at the display is sufficient to show that there will be considerable latitude this year in the size of hats worn, large, small and medium being in evidence. The poke shape in a remodelled form is faintly discernable in some of this year's styles, while the oblong is something quite new. The new styles also include shirrings, fine tuckings, and hats are further beautified by dainty folds and artistic draping.

Quite a number of fur hats will be worn this year made of chinchilla, mink and white shorn lamb. Several very pretty hats of the first named material attract much attention. In trimmings lace and maline is much used, while velvet and plush and sweeping plumes are also worn. Demi-plumes and tips, paradise mounts and osprey and birds are in evidence.

A beautiful hat is a large picture hat of black panne velvet and square front. The under brim is appliqued with white lace and the outer rim is adorned with a broad band of mink. Sweeping black ostrich plumes and long ribbons of black velvet edged with mink tails completed this very pretty hat. A variety of Gainsboro styles are seen. One of nap beaver is trimmed with two ostrich plumes with the tips fastened with knots of faille ribbon. Another very pretty model is a box turban composed of turquoise panne velvet smocking crown with sequin facing.

In children's goods, fur coats, muffs, collars, carriage rugs, etc., are seen in great profusion. A visit to these premises will best describe the many beautiful novelties that are displayed. The department is in charge of Miss Donaldson, an experienced milliner from Toronto.

F. G. Patmore, who has been employed as tinsmith by Sheppard & Elliott left this week for Cranbrook, where he has gone into the tinsmithing business with his brother.

The Shamrock Lacrosse club defeated New Westminster on Tuesday by a score of 4-3, but on Oct. 1 the eastern champions were defeated at New Westminster by the crack Vancouver team in a very exciting game, ending with a score of 5-3.

Messrs. Jas. Falconer and Proctor Joiner left last evening on a trip to Spokane where they will spend a two weeks' vacation. They remained over night in Elko and polled their votes there this morning before leaving on the Great Northern. They will be in Spokane in time to see the last of the fruit show.

J. Bastian was up yesterday from Frank where he is employed as fireboss in the mines. He was awake at the time of the reported big slide on Turtle Mountain last week and he states that the slide was not of large dimensions and that it in no way endangered the town. It was simply a mass of rock near where the big slide occurred, becoming detached and rolling into a depression where it could do no harm. It was not near the remaining peaks and these latter are reported to be perfectly safe, there being no dangerous cracks behind as reported. The Frank mines are progressing rapidly.

A. W. Ross, inspector for the Mainland Board of Underwriters, Vancouver, was in Fernie on Monday and Tuesday to inspect the town with regard to its fire protection system and to rate new buildings. Mr. Ross was favorably impressed with the improvement that the citizens had made in the fire system. With regard to the reduction in the rates he would say nothing definite nor would he hold out any hopes that such a reduction would be made. This matter will be brought before the secretary of the board, Mr. Gilbert.

Several car loads of fruit arrived in Fernie this week and as result every store is well stocked with all varieties and the prices have gone down to the lowest possible notch, much lower than they ever were before in Fernie. This fact is rapidly becoming known to the thrifty house wife and large orders are being placed in nearly every home. This is certainly the best possible opportunity to secure a stock for canning and preserving.

The Fax Concert Company, which will appear in Princess Hall next Saturday, needs no recommendation as James Fax, the leading man, is known from one end of the country to the other. The company has played along the the mainline and is now working east by way of the Crow line. Wherever it has appeared it has met with crowded houses and many have often been turned from the doors. Fax himself is one of America's greatest costume comedians and character vocalists. He is assisted in some parts by his daughter, Miss Bella Fax, a prepossessing young lady with a soprano voice of great range and expression. Miss Ethel Schofield, who is included in the company, is a very beautiful young lady, and is one of the most graceful dancers of the day. Fuller information of this popular company may be gained from the splendid advertising matter that is being distributed through the town. The hall will certainly be crowded and parties wishing reserved seats should apply early. Plan at Liphardt's jewellery store. Price 75c and $1.00. Children 50c.

The delegates of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, who, to the number of about 100, are touring Western Canada, are returning by way of the Crow next week and will arrive in Fernie on Tuesday. Among the party are many distinguished Canadians, who never before were through the western part of this great Dominion. We trust that some action will be taken by the Board of Trade to give these visitors a public welcome and make their short stay both interesting and instructive.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

Hortense did not answer; she made a movement with her head, as if to say: "Read, or don't read, it is the same to me."

Lucie hesitated a moment, then began to read. It was a novel of Heyse, "David and Jonathan," which she had begun the previous afternoon. She did not know whether Hortense was listening; she forgot everything about her as she read, so absorbed did she become in the fate of Hans, deceived by his friend; her voice trembled as she read. A slight noise made her stop; Hortense had risen, and was about to go out of the room.

"Excuse me, I have a headache," she said, scarcely audibly.

"But, dearest, then I will not read any more; you should have said so," said Lucie, feeling hurt. "If it is disagreeable to you, I will go. I only meant to do my best for you."

"Fraulein," cried Frau Nein, suddenly appearing at the door, "will you give me a long table cloth and more silver? The gentlemen are going to stay to dinner.

Lucie nodded and took up the key-basket; Hortense had gone out of the opposite door without a word. The girl turned round with a sigh to give what was wanted. Frau Nein followed her.

"Only for three persons, if you please," she said. "Herr Kostan and one of the gentlemen have gone home. Please give me the fish-forks; we have trout."

Lucie gave her silently what was wanted, then she went through the rooms to find Hortense; she felt terribly worried about her.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Frau Weber was nowhere to be found. Lucie stood still in the sitting-room, and knocked gently with her finger.

"Hortense, dear Hortense, can I do anything?"

All was still within. Through the open window near her she could hear the rolling of the balls and the voices of the gentlemen. She turned the handle of the door very softly, but it was locked. Hortense heard her distinctly, but she did not move. She had put on a dressing-gown, and lay motionless on the sofa, staring at the ceiling, which was draped like a tent with a blue-flowered stuff. Her face glowed as if in a fever; her heart beat as if it would burst with rage and pain. Was she, then, doomed to suffer forever because of her father's dishonored name? What right had people to come up to her so boldly and spitefully and open the old wound? She laughed again. "Fool!" she whispered. What had she wished to do? How came she to be suddenly feeling so gentle, so desirous of pleasing him by receiving this visit—this visit or any other, for she did not know these people? Well, she had had her reward for doing so.

Angry tears stood in her eyes; while still laughing at herself she shrugged her shoulders. She could not complain of it to him; she could not say to him, "Protect me; do not let them pain me!" She did not possess his confidence, or he hers, and she never would possess it, for she had repulsed it, and now it was too late.

"Too late," she repeated, softly. She thought of her wedding evening, and how she had struggled with herself as to whether she should say to him: "I have something to tell you which you ought to have known long ago;" but her mouth seemed struck with dumbness. She remembered how she had sat by his mother's side and how the ice at her heart began to thaw under her gentle, womanly eyes; she had longed to clasp her arms round the old lady's knees, and say: "I am so bad, mother; I have concealed from Waldemar that people point the finger of scorn at the Von Lowens; I have not had courage, out of pride, out of fear that he would leave me."

In vain. The bar was not yet taken from her lips. Driven to desperation, she had thought that here alone with him, in the quiet of her own house, it would be easier; but here, too, she was silent; she was shy and reserved to him, and, by degrees, it had become too late—too late!

At first, she had trodden the path of their daily life near to him; then had withdrawn more and more toward the outside limit of the road, and now he too had left the middle and went on the outer edge, but not the one near her, but the opposite one. The broad way lay between them; they could no longer reach out a hand to each other, could no longer read what was in each other's eyes, not hear each other's whispers; there was no doubt Weber had grown tired; he loved her no longer!

She looked about her, and pressed her hands to her temples. Out in the corridor light steps sounded, and a slight jingling as if of keys. She looked toward the door with a bitter expression.

[CONTINUED.]

Dangerous Bacteria.

It is the bacteria that have become virulent by feasting on human tissues that are dangerous. A soiled bottle returned to the milkman by a mother whose baby had diarrhea will infect the score or more bottles that are washed in the same water with it.

Earthquakes.

Earthquakes are due to discharges of electricity between strata of good conductivity and insulating strata, like granite and silica. The discharges generate gases, to which the observed effects are mainly due.

Pleasure Yachts.

The investment in pleasure yachts in America is about $50,000,000, and the annual cost of their maintenance is about $6,000,000 a season. When a steam yacht is chartered the price usually is $10 a month per yacht ton.

MYSTERY CLEARED UP.

Mrs. Nellie Andrews, of Jasper, Ind. Before Death Makes Confession.

A dispatch from Jasper, Ind., says: Mrs. Nellie Andrews, formerly Miss Nellie Conrad, made a confession, just before her death, which clears up a mysterious tragedy that in 1885 caused much excitement.

Stanford Freeman, young farmer, of this county, was called to his gate by two men and two women the night before he was to be married, and after a scuffle, was found by his intended bride fatally wounded. His slayers escaped. Mrs. Andrews said that she was one of the party which visited Freeman that one of the men who was present is dead and the other in the Tennessee state prison. The woman who accompanied them, she said, and who disappeared several years ago, was murdered because of fear lest she would betray the murderers. Mrs. Andrews said that she was in love with Freeman and one of the men was in love with Freeman's intended wife, and when they went to the gate that night a demand was made that Freeman marry her at once. When he refused he was fatally stabbed and the four had kept the secret so well that no suspicion was aroused.

Trying to Keep Pat at Home.

At a meeting of the committee of the Anti-Emigration society held at Dublin, leaflets giving warning from the Catholic bishops against emigration were ordered distributed to all places in Galway and other counties. A letter from an anoymous correspondent was received which stated that almanacs showing pictures of Manitoba free farms were being distributed in the shops. The committee asked that in view of the exposures by Father Dollard and others of the hardships and destitution which has been the lot of emigrants on these farms sympathizers be asked to look out for these almanacs and forward copies to the society together with particulars of the persons circulating them.

A Socialist on British Preference.

A London cable says: Robert Blatchford, one of the most influential Socialist writers, writing to the Clarion on the fiscal question, says that supposing Canada can supply all the wheat we require, in that case we may tax American wheat; then America must pay that amount to the advantage of our exchequer or lose our trade. If she gave up our trade it would mean that the wheat trade of Russia and America would pass to Canada. This would benefit Canada and would be of advantage strategetically to us and would not make the least difference in the price of the English loaf.

Dramatic Suicide.

A dispatch from Windsor, Ont., says: Passengers on the 8 o'clock ferry boat from Detroit to Windsor on Saturday night witnessed a dramatic suicide. As the boat neared the centre of the river, Charles Quaintance, aged 26 years, who was sitting quietly in the stern with the other passengers, arose, and, walking quietly to the rail, stood up on it. One of the deck hands rushed forward to grasp him, but Quaintance was too quick for him, and with a "Good-bye, everybody" leaped into the dark waters.

Women screamed and excited male passengers threw chairs overboard, but the suicide would not, or could not, secure a hold on any of them and soon sank from sight. The body has not been recovered.

Strange Sights in Arctic Sea.

The steam yacht America which is bearing the Siegler polar expedition northward encountered unusual Arctic conditions during the month of July, according to a letter just received at New York by William Siegler, from Anthony Fiala, who is in command. The letter was written in the Barenez on July 20 and was brought south bya sealer which the American met by chance. Immense quantities of ice were encountered. There was a strange absence of animal life, and many dead birds were seen upon the cakes of floating ice.

It is thought that there must have been some unusual disturbance of nature in that part of the polar region to account for these conditions, and the report of Mr. Fiala will be of special interests to scientists who study Polar life.

Burglars visited Holland, Man., on Sept. 20, and blew open three safes. They got away away, but with very little booty.

The Church of Latter Day Saints (Mormon), now in the seventieth year, has some 400,000 adherents.

PLUCKY MESSENGER

PREVENTS A HOLD-UP ON OREGON RAILWAY.

Shoots With Deadly Effect, Killing One Robber and Wounding another, While Two Others Escaped—Engineer of Train is Also Wounded.

A dispatch from Portland, Ore., of Sept. 25, says: The Atlantir express on the Oregon Railroad and Navigation line, which left here at 8.15 last night, was held up by four masked men near Corbett station, 21 miles from this city. One of the robbers was shot and killed and another seriously injured, while the engineer was wounded by a bullet from the express messenger's rifle, after passing through the heart of the highwayman. The other two bandits escaped without any booty. Two of the robbers boarded the train at Troutdale, and as soon as it started crawled into the cab and covered the engineer and fireman with guns. They stopped the train near Corbett, where the second pair of highwaymen joined them. The robbers then started for the express car, and, mistaking the baggage car for the express, threw sticks of dynamite at the doors.

Express Messenger Kerner heard the explosions and opened fire, killing one robber, the bullet passing through his heart, and wounding Engineer Barret over the heart. After the shooting the three robbers made their escape, but later one was found seriously wounded.

It is supposed the robbers took to a boat moored at the bank of the river. The point where the hold-up occurred is on the bank of the Columbia river and a precipitous mountain is on the other side of the track. The easiest route of escape is by the river.

The body of the dead robber was left behind on the track and the wounded engineer was brought to the city.

The Oregon Railroad and Navigation company offers a reward of one thousand dollars for the arrest of the highwaymen.

SHOCKING DEPRAVITY.

A Half Breed Girl the Victim of Five Brutes at Fort William.

A dispatch from Port Arthur says: Plied with liquor, and kept drunk for nearly a week, the helpless victim of the brutal lust of five men whose present domicile is Port Arthur, a young half-breed girl yesterday related a story to chief of Police Nichols, which laid bare one of the most disgraceful crimes ever perpetrated in this town. According to the girl's story she arrived from Duluth a week ago. Soon after her arrival, and while looking for work, she was accosted by a man in one of the hotels and asked to take something to drink. She consented to drink some ginger ale. From the time she took the drugged liquid until arrested she was kept in a drunken condition, the prisoner of the five brutes who made her the victim of their vicious passions. Last Sunday the girl, still in an intoxicated condition, was turned out into the street, and was later arrested by Chief Nichols, to whom she told her story.

The five men were arrested after a brief search, were summoned before the magistrate and sentenced to heavy fines.

Appalling Poverty.

The Gazette of the British Island of St. Christopher (St. Kitts) says an appalling condition of poverty exists in St. Kitts and Nevis. The estates have been compelled to lessen the expenses owing to the long drought, and able bodied men and women are hardly earning enough to supply their daily wants.

The Times of St. Vincent blames the government for the misery prevailing since the volcanic eruption in that island, adding that starvation and disease are killing many persons and that a large number are half naked and homeless. Laborers of both sexes sleep in sheds and tattered tents erected a year ago, "harbors of disease and immorality and a disgrace to the colony."

The Canadian Manufacturers' association has passed a resolution favoring the appointment of a tariff commission.

Mr. Chamberlain's resignation has caused much trouble to Premier Balfour; Lord Milner is talked of as his successor.

In the Lumberman's Shanty.

One of the hardest things in the life of the lumbermen, the miner and the prospector is being deprived of the good things to eat which men have who live comfortably at home.

The Victor Brand of Evaporated Cream has brought the luxury of good living into the camp and the shanty. For all cooking purposes, for Tea and for Coffee it is fully equal to the richest fluid cream.

Mfd. by The Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P. E. I.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC.

A Toronto Comment on Its Most Successful Year.

(Toronto Globe, Sept. 9. 1903.)

Canadians feel a pardonable pride in the transcontinental railway which has played a most important part in building up the west and consolidating the Dominion. The continuous success of this great Canadian enterprise is an assurance of the substantial growth of the Dominion in agriculture, commerce, and manufacture. Although a private enterprise its magnitude as well as its part in uniting the provinces make it national in character, prosperous and successful. The annual report just issued, the 22nd in the company's history, shows an unusually successful year's business. The feature of greatest public interest and significance is the land sales which aggregated 2,639,617 acres, or 16,497 farms of a quarter section each. These sales yielded $9,695,673, an average of $3.67 per acre. The demand for this land at a fair price is the best possible assurance that the possibilities of the west are appreciated by a substantial class of immigrants. In no department is the success of the railway more completely identified with the success of western Canada than in the administration of this landed estate. The operations of the railway, too, have been eminently successful, the net earnings of $15,836,845 being sufficient to provide a surplus of close on four million dollars after paying all fixed charges and dividends. These results fully and satisfactorily justify the enterprise of the company in extending its operations in so many directions. The faith and confidence shown in Canadian development and Canadian possibilities have not been misplaced. Every extension of transportation facilities has been followed by an advance of settlement and increase of traffic.

A line of railway across the continent, with branches rapidly extending to meet the demands of a growing country, magnificent steamships on the lakes, palatial liners on the Pacific, and a fleet on the Atlantic combine to make a transportation enterprise commensurate with the highest aspirations of the Dominion. The company has been building and acquiring new lines, increasing equipment, and purchasing steamships to keep pace with the growing needs of Canadian commerce and industry. The Canadian fleet of the Elder-Dempster Company, consisting of fifteen vessels, was purchased last year, and the amount, about $6,800,000, was temporarily taken from surplus revenue. Orders were outstanding at the end of the year for cars and locomotives to the amount of $4,221,000, and new orders have been placed, amounting to $1,351,000. It is also proposed to spend $5,000,000 additional on general equipment during the next year. Such heavy expenditures are undertaken while the company is increasing its dividend rate. All this goes to show that the men in control of this truly gigantic transportation enterprise have risen to every opportunity afforded by Canadian expansion and development. They have had sufficient enterprise to anticipate the future by heavy expenditures and costly preparations, and in every case their hopes have been abundantly realized. It is pardonable for a young country to take pride in possessing and sustaining the greatest transportation system in the world. Its growth has not been accomplished without friction. Complaints have at times been loud, and regrets have been freely expressed over the privileges and advantages granted when the future of the Dominion was less certain than it is today. But while such mistakes as have been made may serve as future guidance, they do not deprive the Dominion of the prestige nor the material benefits of one of the world's greatest successes in railway and steamship transportation.

Silk Cargo Valued at $1,728,600.

Vancouver News-Advertiser: The silk cargo of R. M. S. Empress of India, valued at $1,728,600, was shipped east by special train, leaving on Wednesday afternoon. This is the largest silk shipment made from the Orient this year.

More raw silk is being forwarded from the Orient to New York this season over the Canadian Pacific route than ever before in the history of the trade. The steamships scheduled to follow the India inward-bound, will all bring cargoes of the costly material, but at the present it is impossible to estimate the total value of the consignments which will be be received before the season closes.

Vancouver stands forth the greatest silk port on the continent, principally by reason of the fact that the Canadian Pacific steamship and rail service from the Far East to the Atlantic seaboard is the one which offers to shippers the greatest and safest facilities for the transportation of the valuable cargoes from the producing centres of the raw material to the manufacturing mills in New York state. The marine classification of the C. P. R. steamships is so preeminently high that importers are able to secure lower rates of insurance on cargoes shipped by the company's steamships than they could if the shipments were made by other lines.

Canadian cattle can now be shipped to Manchester on the same terms of insurance as to Liverpool.

A horrible accident occurred at Bawtenheimer's saw mill, Red Deer, Alberta, on Tuesday of last week, when J. A. Oliver, of Essex Centre, Ont., has his leg completely torn from his body. The man was taken to the hosuital at Calgary and died the following day.

Colonial residents in England have passed a resolution regretting the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain.

There is a threatened coal strike at Morrissey mines, involving 1,400 men.

FROM OVER THE SEAS

SHORT NEWS ITEMS CULLED FROM CABLES.

Proposed Preferences as Announced by Mr. Chamberlain—A British Visitor to Canada says British Preferential Tariff Does Not Benefit Canadian Consumer.

London, Sept. 23.—Anglo-Canadians are discussing Mr. Chamberlain's propositions as now outlined authoritatively. The fact that they include a 5 per cent. duty on foreign meat and dairy products, as well as two shillings duty on cereals, is accepted as a powerful inducement to Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces, as well as Australasia.

When asked what the colonies would be asked to reciprocate in the way of tariff reduction, Mr. Chamberlain replied: "You misunderstand the position. We now ask the British electorate to give a mandate to carry on negotiations with the colonies. Till the extent to which the British preference might go, the actual negotiations are a matter of inter-imperial conference—it is on a give and take basis. If the colonies are unable to give a fair preference equivalent to the British manufacturers then the British preference is naturally reduced. All British people here, as well as in Canada and Australasia, believe a fair give and take arrangement is easy enough to carry out."

A reputable business man who has been to Canada investigating the market for British goods; also to secure Canadian goods for the British markets, says he found the dealers satisfied with the preferential tariff, but they acknowledged the consumer derived no benefit whatever. He found many articles, foreign and Canadian, being sold at the same price; and inthe shovel and spade industry he learned that the Canadian manufacturers pay £10,000 yearly to the British combine not to compete against them in the Canadian markets. He quoted the price of a shovel, and a large Canadian firm promised him an order of 50,000 if the shovels be supplied at the price quoted. He will endeavor to get a manufacturer here to make the shovels.

The Marquis of Graham, Conservative candidate in Stirlingshire, who has just returned from Canada, opened last night the Grangemouth Unionist club. He confined his address to the industrial prospects of Canada, and to the importance of giving the colonies support from Great Britain. He condemned as selfish that policy whose essential idea of empire building was to raise great nations of customers and to preserve a monopoly of colonial consumption.

The Scotsman says the assumption that Canada's position is to stand alone, and that any undue interference or pressure from the home government might lead to a declaration for independence is foolish in the extreme and savors of ingratitude to boot. Canadian independence would involve a Canadian fleet and an army on a scale scarcely less than the United States, and that is a large order.

Mr. J. Taylor Peddie, of Montreal, has just finished a new wind guage vertical rifle sight. The combination is very simple in construction; five parts can be taken apart and put together by hand. The construction as near as possible is along similar lines to the latest war office and German sights. The war office authorities will consider its adoption.

The Duke of Manchester has purchased for $315,000 Kylemore castle and the estate, comprising 13,000 acres, situated on the Lough Kylemore, Connemara. The place formerly belonged to the late Mitchell Henry, M. P., who built the castle, which is one of the noblest and most romantically situated residences in Ireland. It has often been assigned by rumor as a probable royal residence. It is estimated that Mr. Henry spent $2,500,000 in building the castle and improving the estate.

Interest has been evoked in London by a letter from Secretary O'Callahan, of the United Irish League of America, to Mr. Condon, M. P., saying that since the passage of the Irish Land act many evicted tenants now residing in the United States, have been making anxious inquiries regarding the possibility of re-acquiring their former holdings. Mr. O'Callahan expressed the belief that should a large proportion of the inquirers be able to do so, it would go far toward solving the question of emigration and turn the tide back to Ireland.

"Dogged" Wheat Cars.

Grain inspectors at Toronto have discovered recently that quite a number of cars of wheat, shipped from outside points have been dogged, that is, a quantity of inferior wheat has been placed in one corner of the car in the hope it might pass inspection. A number of dogged cars have been rejected and the chief grain inspector states the next car found in such a condition will be confiscated. The grain standards board will meet Sept. 30 to fix the Ontario standards.

A news item of great importance to western cattlemen was contained in a private cable received in Winnipeg on Sept. 22. It was to the effect that western range cattle were worth 5 to 5½c on the British market and expected to go lower. This represents a heavy decline in values, being from ½ to ¾c.

Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain may visit Canada next spring.

WANTED A RIDE.

Strange Action of a Jury on a Murder Case in Montreal.

Montreal, Sept. 21.—The trial of the Italian Parisi, charged with the murder of another Italian some months ago, ended in the court of King's bench this afternoon with the acquittal of the prisoner, a circumstance said to be without precedent in the Montreal courts, occurred in connection with the jury.

When the jury was locked up on Saturday afternoon to decide on their verdict, Judge Ouimet said he would receive their finding on Monday morning. On Sunday they announced to the officials that they had agreed upon a verdict, but did not state what it was, and asked that they be allowed to take a trolley ride.

They were informed that this could not be allowed.

The jury was so wroth that they decided to disagree, and when they came in court to-day they told the judge that they could not agree.

Judge Ouimet said that there was no reason why they should not agree. He gave them a severe lecture on their request, and reminded them that jurors were now much better treated than in former times.

The jury retired, but came back several times without a verdict, only to be sent back by the judge. Finally they brought in a verdict of "not guilty," and the prisoner was discharged.

NEW DISCOVERIES.

Signor Marconi Well Pleased With His Experiments at Table Head.

Marconi has worked steadily at the installation of his new inventions in connection with the Table Head wireless plant since his arrival there.

When asked how he was progressing he replied somewhat jubilant: "Very well indeed. I have had no opportunity yet, however, to do any experimental work, but now feel confident the result of these improvements will even exceed my expectation. The experimental work will be conducted from on board the steamship Lucania, on which I shall sail from New York on October 3. Yes, the new improvements will necessitate some changes, but whether it will necessitate doing away with the tower system I am not prepared to say. The improvements will effect a new departure for better speed and accuracy. I am greatly pleased with the result of my work here this time. My new inventions will mean big improvements in the whole system of wireless telegraphy. Upon my arrival in England similar improvements will be installed in the station there and if my anticipations are realized, as I feel sure they will, the inauguration of wireless telegraphy for commercial purposes will follow very shortly afterwards.

New Cabinet Appointments.

London, Sept. 21.—King Edward is said to have approved the appointment of Austin Chamberlain, the postmaster-general, to be chancellor of the exchequer in succession to Charles T. Ritchie; Arnold Foster, secretary to the admiralty, to be secretary for war, in succession to Mr. Brodrick; Mr. Brodrick, the secretary for war, to be secretary for India, in succession to Lord George Hamilton; and Lord Selborne, the first lord of the admiralty, to be secretary for the colonies, in succession to Joseph Chamberlain. No official confirmation of the appointments has yet been forthcoming.

Fight Will Be Fierce.

The London Daily Mail's correspondent at Sofia telegraphs:

"One of the revolutionary chiefs has informed me that they are massing thousands of men at various points on the frontier, and their laboratories are working incessantly to replenish their stock of bombs and explosives.

"They do not count much on war between Turkey and Bulgaria, but on the day they hear that the meeting between the Czar and Emperor Francis Joseph has not had the desired result for Macedonia the world will witness the beginning of massacres, burning and destruction, compared with which the Turkish atrocities will seem childish.

"The banner of revolution, my informant says, will be unfurled in all the border districts. We have selected the frontier districts for these final operations so that Europe may hear the despairing cries of the dying nation which the Turks would stifle."

Up Goes Price of Bread.

A dispatch from Montreal says:—Owing to the great advance in the price of flour, which has gone up 70 cents in the last six weeks, the representatives of the two associations of French and English bakers have decided to advance the price of bread one cent per half loaf. The officials of the associations say this action was imperative. The millers had recently raised the price of flour from $4 and $4.10 to $4.80 per barrel, and the cost of baking bread was therefore bound to be more.

John McKenzie, of Portage la Prairie, while out shooting on Saturday afternoon met with a serious accident. He was handling a repeating gun when the cartridges exploded. The breech was blown to atoms and the pieces flying back struck Mr. McKenzie in the face, inflicting serious injury. Mr. McKenzie will recover, but his escape from instant death was very narrow.

James H. Rodgers, the veteran furrier of Winnipeg, was found dead in his bed on Monday morning last.

Burglars visited Holland, Man., on Sept. 20, and blew open three safes. They got away away, but with very little booty.

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

Toast water is made this way:—Toast a slice of bread slowly, so that it is crisp and of a dark brown color. Put it in a quart jug, and fill up with cold water. Let it stand for an hour or two and then strain.

That Awful Breath

IS DUE TO CATARRH AND COLDS

Possibly you haven't noticed it, but others have.

Catarrh and colds if neglected soon develop into chronic forms, accompanied by the most nauseating and disgusting symptoms. Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder is a specific for curing colds, coughs, dealness, headache, sore throat, tonsilitis, cold in the head, influenza, and all diseases of the nose and throat. It relieves in 10 minutes. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Agnew's Ointment is without an equal for all skin troubles, 35c. 6

The birthrate among the foreign-born in Massachusetts is 52 per 1,000; among the native born it is 17.

C. C. RICHARDS & CO.

Dear Sirs,—Your MINARD'S LINIMENT is our remedy for sore throat, colds and all ordinary ailments.

It never fails to relieve and cure promptly.

CHARLES WHOOTEN.

Port Mulgrave.

The London Lancet commends the practice of drinking coffee after dinner, as coffee is an antidote to alcohol.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Yarmouth, England, Corporation forbids smoking on Sunday in its new pier pavilion, as the band plays sacred music.

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT

Removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, ringbone, sweeney, stifles, sprains; cures sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by the use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful Blemish Cure ever known.

Sold by all druggists.

It is almost as difficult for a man to get over a case of love sickness as it is for a woman to get over a barb barbed-wire fence.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

Even a poor man who hasn't a dollar may be well off as long as he doesn't marry.

No person should go from home without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial in their possession, as change of water, cooking, climate, etc., frequently brings on summer complaint, and there is nothing like being ready with a sure remedy at hand, which oftentimes saves great suffering, and frequently valuable lives. This Cordial has gained for itself a widespread reputation for affording prompt relief from all summer complaints.

A dime in the hand is better than a dollar in the pocket of a man that owes it to you.

No man with a full beard has to worry about the bargain counter neckties his wife buys for him.

WHERE WEAKNESS IS, DISEASE WILL SETTLE.—If one suffers from any organic weakness, inherited or contracted, there disease will settle when it attacks the body. Therefore drive out the pains that beset you, do not let a cold or cough harass you, and keep the respiratory organs in a good healthy condition. This you can do by using Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. Prevention is the wisest course.

When the unexpected happens it is usually inferior to what was expected.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

A woman's sphere is the home. Any bride of a week is willing to admit this.

She Had Noticed.

He was talking to the pessimistic, sharp tongued damsel.

"Have you noticed," he asked "that, as a rule, bachelors are wealthier than married men?"

"I have," she replied.

"How do you account for it?" he inquired.

"The poor man marries and the rich one doesn't," she answered. "A man is much more disposed to divide nothing with a woman than he is to divide something, you know."

Novel Sobriety Test.

To ascertain whether a man was drunk or sober a Dublin doctor made him hop twelve feet on the right foot and the same distance on the left and then stand on one leg for seven seconds and the other leg for four seconds. The man stood the test and the magistrate accepted it as proof of his sobriety.—London Mail.

A Perfectly Plain "Direction."

Once upon a time Judge Carter was riding through a rural district in Virginia. He stopped at a negro's cabin to get his direction. "Uncle," said he, "can you direct me to Colonel Thompson's?"

"Yes, sah," replied the negro. "Yo' goes down this yah road 'bout two mile till yo' comes to an ol' allm tree, and then yo' tu'ns sha'p to the right down a lane fo' 'bout a qua'ter of a mile. Thah yo' sees a big white house. Yo' wants to go through the yard to a paf that takes you a spell to a gate. Yo' follows that road to the lef' till yo' comes to three roads goin' up a hill, and, jedge, it don' mattah which one of them thah roads yo' take, yo' sure gets lost anyway."—Stewart Edward White in Outlook.

Betrothed at Birth.

In some parts of west Africa the girls have long engagements. On the day of their birth they are betrothed to a baby boy a trifle older than themselves, and at the age of twenty they are married.

The girls know of no other way of getting a husband, and so they are quite happy and satisfied. As wives they are patterns of obedience, and the marriages usually turn out a success. This way of managing the affairs of the heart would hardly suit an independent American girl, but it seems to answer on the west coast.

SLEEPLESS BABIES.

When a little one is sleepless and cross it is the surest sign in the world that it is suffering from some derangement of the stomach and bowels—the seat of nine-tenths of all baby ailments. In cases of this kind Baby's Own Tablets act like magic. They sweeten the sour little stomach, relax the distended little bowels, cool the parched, fevered mouth, and bring natural health-giving sleep. An experienced mother, Mrs. Ed. Godin, Griffith, Ont., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for many ailments peculiar to babyhood, such as fevers, indigestion, diarrhoea, etc., and I have found them the most effective medicine I have ever tried. I can only add I would not be without them in the house, so much do I think of them."

Other mothers who wish health for their little ones cannot do better than follow Mrs. Godin's example. You can get the Tablets from all medicine dealers, or they will be sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing direct to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

It's a poor wedding ceremony that hasn't a hitch in it.

The more some men talk the more trouble they pile up for themselves.

Lever's Y-Z (WiseHead) Disinfectant Soap Powder is a boon to any home. It disinfects and cleans at the same time.

Brokers who sell short and wait for a fall often get a hard one.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

Many a man is forced to play the game of life who doesn't hold a single trump.

Kidney Duty.—It is the particular function of the kidneys to filter out poisons which pass through them into the blood. When the kidneys are diseased they cannot do their whole duty, and should have the help and strength that South American Kidney Cure will afford in any and all forms of kidney disorder. It relieves in six hours.—14.

Wise is the man who keeps his private opinion to himself.

Some women are not as fresh as they are painted, and some are more so.

That Cutting Acid that arises from the stomach and almost strangles, is caused by fermentation of the food in the stomach. It is a foretaste of indigestion and dyspepsia. Take one of Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets immediately after eating, and it will prevent this distress and aid digestion. 60 in a box, 35 cents.—16.

Many things may be preserved in alcohol, but law and order are not on the list.

A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.—The intrusion of uric acid into the blood vessels is a fruitful cause of rheumatic pains. This irregularity is owing to a deranged and unhealthy condition of the liver. Anyone subject to this painful affection will find a remedy in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. Their action upon the kidneys is pronounced and most beneficial, and by restoring healthy action, they correct impurities in the blood.

Some men who won't trust themselves wonder why others won't trust them.

Ayer's

To be sure, you are growing old. But why let everybody see it, in your gray hair? Keep your hair dark and rich and postpone age. If you will only use Ayer's Hair Vigor, your gray hair will soon have all the deep, rich color of youth. Sold for 60 years.

Hair Vigor

"I am now over 60 years old, and I have a thick, glossy head of long hair which is a wonder to every one who sees it. And not a gray hair in it, all due to Ayer's Hair Vigor."
MRS. H. B. BUNTIN, Becida, Minn.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for

White Hair

All Rich Drawing Tea

ABSOLUTELY PURE AND DELICIOUS.

"SALADA"

CEYLON tea is the pick of the crop of the finest tea producing countries in the world. Black, Mixed or Natural Green.

Sold only in sealed lead packets. 40c, 50c, 60c, per lb. By all Grocers.

WHEAT OATS FLAX BARLEY

PTWILLIAM

SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY

THOMPSON, SONS & CO.

Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg. Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

MARKET REVIEW.

Compiled from The mercial.

There is no doubt but that the great storm of the 12th inst., has had the effect of deteriorating the grade and in some measure lessening the quantey of the Manitoba crop, for all but a very small percentage of it is still on the field and a small portion in the west and northwest is still uncut. However since the day of the storm the weather has slowly improved, and at the time of writing we are enjoying as fine a harvest day as could be desired. A few weeks of such weather would put all the grain standing out in good condition and allow harvesting and threshing to be completed. With the return of favorable weather the markets have shown weakness, and a sharp decline has resulted. Favorable weather means increase of movement in the Northwest. Prices in American markets are quite above export value. Europe is being supplied with large quantities of wheat from Russia and India at lower prices, and this week American exports are less than two million bushels against five and a half million bushels same week last year. Therefore, unless we have a return of bad weather to further spoil the Northwest crops yet unsaved, or liberal increase in the export demand takes place soon, the tendency will naturally be towards somewhat lower prices. With the exception of the harvest situation in the Northwest there is little to say in regard to crops. In the winter wheat states plowing and seeding is in progress the crops are above ground, conditions are generally favorable and a large acreage will be put in. In the Argentine the crop is all seeded and progressing favorably, and crops in Australia are coming on well, so that and in the furthest south districts Australia will have wheat to export instead of being an importer as she was last year.

Manitoba wheat sold up 3c per bushel at the beginning of the week, some spot No. 1 hard having sold at 89c in store Fort William. The price has gradually eased off again and at the close of prices Friday we quote spot or en route 1 hard 87c.; 1 northern, 85¾c; 2 northern, 82¾c.; for September delivery, 1 hard 86¾c; 1 northern, 85¼c; 2 northern, 82¼c; and for October delivery, 1 hard 83; 1 northern 81¾c, 2 northern 79¾c: all in store at Fort William and Port Arthur. There is no export demand yet, prices being too high.

WINNIPEG PRICES.

The following are the Winnipeg jobbing prices:

Flour has advanced another 10c a sack of 98 pounds, Ogilvie's Hungarian now selling at $2.35, and other grades accordingly.

Oats—At Fort William No. 1 white oats are worth 33c; No. 2 white, 32c.

Barley—No. 3, 38c per bushel, in store Fort William.

Flaxseed—Nothing doing.

Hay—Baled, $9@$11 per ton.

Potatoes—35@40c per bushel.

Poultry—Live spring chickens, 40 to 60c per pair; fowls, 75@80c per pair; ducks, 60@80c; geese, 10c per pound, live weight; turkeys, 11c per pound.

Butter—Creamery, 17½@18c per lb; prints, 19. Dairy, 11@12c; prints, 17c per pound.

Cheese—11c per pound.

Eggs—16c per dozen.

Dressed Meats—Beef, city dressed, 6½c; mutton, 9; veal, 8@9c; lambs, 11c; hogs, 8½c.

Hides—No. 1, 6½c per pound; calfskins, 7c; horsehides, 91.25@$2.

Wool—7½c per pound.

Tallow—No. 1, 4c per pound; No, 2 3c per pound.

Seneca Root—63 cents per pound skins, 7c; horsehides, $1.25 to $2.

LIVE STOCK.

Cattle—Ranch cattle, at point of shipment, 3½c; butchers' cattle, 2¾@3½c. off cars here.

Much In Little.

Crusty Old Gentleman—Your singing, Miss Taylor, is like attar of roses—

Miss Taylor (with a gratified smile)—Oh, you are too flattering.

Old Gentleman (continuing)—A little of it goes a very long way.

Currency Preferred.

"So far as I am concerned," observed Spendahl, "I don't care whether we have an elastic currency or not; but, by George, I'd like to have it a little more adhesive!"

EVIDENCE THAT NONE CAN DOUBT

That Dodd's Kidney Pills are the One Sure Cure for Rheumatism.

W. E. Ellis got so He Could not Walk Alone or Feed Himself—He Tells of His Cure.

Cedar Dale, Ont., Sept. 28.—(Special)—Every day seems to furnish fresh proofs that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the one sure and permanent cure for Rheumatism. This village furnishes evidence that no one can doubt in the person of W. E. Ellis. His story is best given in his own words:

"Two years ago," said Mr. Ellis "I got muscular rheumatism. I tried all sorts of medicines, but none of them did me any good.

"At last my wife would send for a doctor. When he arrived I said 'Doctor, can you cure Muscular Rheumatism?' 'No,' said the doctor. 'Then' I said, you are no use to me.'"

"I got so bad I could not feed myself or walk alone. Then I was induced to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took six boxes of them, which drove all the Rheumatism out of me and left me in good health again."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure Rheumatism by removing the cause—by putting the Kidneys in shape to take the uric acid out of the blood. They always cure Lumbago and Sciatica in the same way.

Successful borrowers always get credit for their efforts.

A woman could keep a secret if there were no one to tell it to.

IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD—When the action of the kidneys becomes impaired, impurities in the blood are almost sure to follow, and general derangement of the system ensues. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will regulate the kidneys so that they will maintain healthy action and prevent the complications which certainly come when there is derangement of these delicate organs. As a restorative these pills are in the first rank.

The highest salaried man in America is Mr. Dodd, the legal adviser of the Standard Oil Company. He is paid $250,000 a year and knows all about oil and the laws affecting its production.

Those Worrying Piles!—One application of Dr. Agnew's Ointment will give you comfort. Applied every night for three to six nights and a cure is effected in the most stubborn cases of Blind, Bleeding, or Itching Piles. Dr. Agnew's Ointment cures Eczema and all itching and burning skin diseases. It acts like magic. 35 cents.—15

You may tip the soda clerk a wink but you can't tip the Pullman porter that way.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

Of all newspapers in the world, 68 in every 100 are printed in the English language.

A manless baby carriage would fill a long-felt want in some populous cities.

THE HORSE MARKET

Demands Sound Horses Only.

Lame horses sell at less than half their actual value and are solely desirable for use or sale. The remedy is easy. A few bottles of will work a permanent cure for Spavins, Ringbones, Splints, Curbs, etc., and all forms of Lameness. It cures thousands of cases annually. Such endorsements as the one following are a guarantee of merit.

Cured two Bone Spavins of Ten Years' Standing.

Estelville, N.Y., Mar. 22, 1902.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Gentlemen:—Some years ago I used your Kendall's Spavin Cure on a horse that had two Bone Spavins, and it removed them entirely. These Spavins had been on him from birth, and were of ten years' standing. I now have a case of a mare that was injured by falling through a bridge, and am going to give her complete treatment with your Spavin Cure. Please send me a copy of your "Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases." Yours very truly, CLARK O. PORT.

Price $1; six for $5. As a liniment for family use it has no equal. Ask your druggist for Kendall's Spavin Cure, also "A Treatise on the Horse," the book free, or address

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburg Falls, Vt.

No other 10c. Cigar is equal to it in flavor. Its standard of quality never changes and its sales are increasing every month.

J. M. FORTIER, Ltd., MONTREAL.

"Pinto" Shell Cordovan

is the toughest and best leather ever tanned for mitts and gloves. It is boil and scorch proof—has no oil to draw cold or get stiff—is wind proof, tear proof, wet proof, is always soft, dry, warm. Iron-like wear—handsome appearance—economical. None genuine unless stamped and with this brand.

"Pinto Shell Cordovan" Sold by all leading dealers in Manitoba, N. W. Territories and British Columbia.

H.B.K. BRAND

H. B. K. Duck Jackets and Coats

for wear, comfort, and convenience. Built to keep out cold and keep warmth in. Made for the hardest, roughest kind of wear. Lined with lambskin with the wool on and with Mackinaw Woolen—made of Duck, Corduroy or Leather. Leather jackets made reversible. Wide collars, unrippable seams, strong pockets. Every garment branded with this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

Sold by all leading dealers in Manitoba, N. W. Territories and British Columbia.

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.

MONTREAL WINNIPEG

RECIPE FOR PASTRY

To one cup of Ogilvie's 'Hungarian' add a pinch of salt. After mixing thoroughly add two tablespoonfuls of lard, rubbing and mixing the flour and lard well together. Then add three tablespoonfuls of cold water and roll thin. Pastry dough should be handled as quickly and as little as possible. It improves the dough if permitted to stand 24 hours in a cold place.

OGILVIE'S HUNGARIAN FLOUR

FOR PASTRY

as well as for Bread, is unequalled

Treasure Trove in England.

Not long ago 6,775 English silver pennies which some man had hoarded up for his own benefit in times when pennies were silver were sold to the public at auction in London, realizing $500 for the national treasury. This money was dug up by some laborers at Colchester while laying the foundation of a building The crown stepped in and seized the find, but it rewarded the finders, and a few rare coins in the collection were sent to the British museum. When the hoard was found the price of these silver pennies went down in all the coin collectors' markets. This strange and not particularly reasonable law of a treasure trove" has extended from England to France, Germany, Spain and Denmark. If any one finds hidden treasure and conceals it for his own use he is liable to fine and imprisonment. It used to be a hanging matter.

It is easier for love to find the way than it is for a good many young men to pay the way.

No self-respecting man cares to make love to a girl who makes love to a pet dog.

SUNLIGHT SOAP REDUCES EXPENSE

$5,000 Reward will be paid by Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto, to any person who can prove that this soap contains any form of adulteration whatsoever, or contains any injurious chemicals.

Ask for the Octagon Bar. 217

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, OCT. 3, 1903.

WHO WILL BE ELECTED?

There are 34 constituencies in British Columbia, returning 42 members. Vancouver is entitled to five members, Victoria to four, and Caribou to two, all the others returning one member each. The following is a full list of the candidates. Mark your forecast and keep it a few hours for reference:

Alberni — McInnes, liberal; Hickey, conservative; Taylor, socialist.

Atlin—Kirkland, liberal; Young, conservative.

Caribou — Jones, Murphy, liberals; Rogers, Adams, conservatives.

Chilliwack—Munroe, liberal; Atkinson, conservative.

Columbia—Wells, liberal, by acclamation.

Comox—Young, liberal; Grant, conservative; Halliday, socialist.

Cowichan — Evans, liberal; Skinner, conservative.

Cranbrook—King, liberal; Caven, conservative.

Delta—Oliver, liberal: Ladner, conservative.

Dewdney—Forrester, liberal; McBride, conservative.

Esquimalt — Jardine, liberal; Pooley, conservative.

Fernie—Smith, liberal; Ross, conservative; McPherson, socialist.

Grand Forks—Clement, liberal; Fraser, conservative; Riordan, socialist.

Greenwood—Brown, liberal; Spankie, conservative; Mills, socialist.

Islands — Paterson, liberal; Bullock, conservative.

Kamloops — Deane, liberal; Fulton, conservative.

Kaslo—Retallack, liberal; Green, conservative; Shannon, socialist.

Lillooet—Macdonald, conservative, by acclamation.

Nanaimo — Sheppard, labor-liberal; Quennell, conservative; Hawthornthwaite, socialist.

Nelson — Taylor, liberal; Houston, conservative.

Newcastle—Murray, liberal; Bryden, conservative; Williams, socialist.

New Westminster — Keary, liberal; Gifford, conservative.

Okanagan—Sterling, liberal; P. Ellison, conservative.

Revelstoke — Kellie, liberal: Taylor, conservative: Bennett, socialist.

Richmond — Brown, liberal; Carter-Cotton, conservative.

Rossland—Macdonald, liberal; Goodeve, conservative.

Saanich — Tanner, liberal; Eberts, conservative.

Similkameen—McLean, liberal; Shatford, conservative.

Skeena — Herman, liberal; Clifford, conservative.

Slocan — Davidson, labor; Hunter, conservative.

Vancouver—Martin, Baxter, Turnbull, Monck, Bryden-Jack, liberals; Wilson, Tatlow, Garden, Bowser, Macgowan, conservatives; Perry, Williams, McLaren, labor; Mortimer, Stebbings, Griffiths, socialists.

Victoria—Drury, Cameron, Hall, McNiven, liberals; Hayward, McPhillips, Helmcken, Hunter, conservative: Watters, socialist.

Yale—Henderson, liberal; Macmanamon, conservative.

Ymir—Parr, liberal; Wright, conservative.

THE CONTEST

A few short hours will settle the election contest which is now waging throughout the Province. Reports both as regards the local vote and the strength of the two parties from all the other ridings in the Province differ very widely and this evening there will be many disappointed people in B. C.

In this riding it is conceded, even by Socialists, that J. R. McPherson wil not be elected. Apparently the fight will be close between W. R. Ross and E. C. Smith, the friends of each claiming a majority. On the general result opinions differ even more widely aud both parties claim they will have large majorities. The campaign in the Fernie district has been run in a clean manner and no candidate has grounds for complaint. Each has taken advantage of all legitimate argument and influence and the ballot papers that are being dropped into the box today are marked according to the dictation of the voters' consciences. Both parties have fought their best, and it is up to the losing side to bear its defeat with the same spirit that it has fought its battle, bravely and uncomplainingly.

Today is the birthday of party politics in B. C. This is the turning point in the history of this great province and future generations will proudly point back to Oct. 3rd, 1903, as the time when responsible government was established and when individual, clique government, which had been the curse of the Province during its early history, received its deathblow.

MICHEL

H. H. Trites, J.P., was in town Sunday and Monday conducting the inquest.

A party of young people from here spent Sunday last at Cowley.

Rev. Stoney held Church of England service here on Sabbath last.

The usual services will be conducted in the Methodist church here to-morrow.

There was the largest turn out at the funeral on Monday ever in Michel. The mines were closed from 1 p.m till 11 p. m.

The miners report a shortage of cars this week.

The second row of houses on the west side is almost completed.

Messrs. Tonkin and Stockett were in town this week.

A. Dick, mine inspector, was in town Monday attending the inquest.

Constable Henderson was in Fernie the forepart of the week.

J. S. T. Alexander was in town Wednesday.

W. S. Keay, collector of customs, was in town Thursday.

H. Bentley spent a short time in town Wednesday.

The company are putting a wing on the store here.

Stamp photos are all the rage in town here.

The Socialists held a mass meeting in the hall here Monday night.

Alex. Fraser, who was called east a few weeks ago on account of the serious illness of his father, returned to Michel on Tuesday morning. Alex has the sympathy of his many friends, his father having died shortly after his arrival home.

A. Gammage visited Fernie on Monday.

Wm. McIntosh and Hugh Ferguson returned Tuesday from a trip north, where they were looking up land.

The yard engine was away for repairs this week and a as result there was a shortage of cars here for a day, not being able to place the cars under the tipple.

J. A. Fergusson has been appointed deputy returning officer for the Michel poll.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Tonkin spent Wednesday and Thursday in town. During his stay here the general manager thoroughly inspected all the mines.

A social dance was given at the Australian hotel at the Junction on Wednesday evening last. An enjoyable evening was spent by those present.

The case of A. Frazer against L. Foley was tried in Fernie on Wednesday by L. R. Forbes. Foley pleaded guilty to common assault and was fined $20 and costs.

The hotel bars will be closed to-morrow throughout the Province. The act reads "No spirituous or fermented liquors or strong drinks shall be sold, given, or provided at any hotel, shop, or other place within the limits of any electoral district during the whole of the polling day at any election." The penalty for the above offence is a fine not exceeding $100.

A miner at Michel was killed in the mines on Saturday last. The accident was caused by the breaking away of some cars crushing the unfortunate man to death. Coroner Trites of Fernie went up on Monday to hold an inquest. A verdict was brought in by the jury exonerating the Coal Company from all blame.

Miss Donaldson, milliner for the Trites-Wood Co., at Fernie, spent Monday and Tuesday at their store here. She brought with her a very beautiful display of fall hats.

A. Palpuest while endeavoring to climb on the steps of Saturday evening's express, which was rapidly pulling out, slipped and fell. He maintained his grip on the handles and was dragged quite a distance before he let go. He was badly bruised about the head.

This town has nothing to complain of in the way of premises from the Provincial Government. The erection of a four-room school house, the building of a bridge across the Elk and the road to Fernie, and the new jail, will satisfy the immediate wants of the town for the near future.

Among the visitors from Fernie this week were:—Messrs. D. V. Mott, J. H. Bricker, M. A. Kastner, D. Walmsley, W. R. Ross, A. H. Devlin, F. J. Watson, J. L. Gates, F. Burns and J. Hutchison.

A farewell party will be given by the boys at the Cottage Club at the mines to-night. The occasion is the departure from Tonkin of Dr. Howden. The Doctor while here has made hosts of friends who are all sorry to see him go.

Joe Gladou, a French halfbreed of Michel, was brought to Fernie on Wednesday by Constable Henderson and tried on an unmentionable offence. The magistrate gave the prisoner the maximum penalty of six months in the Nelson jail. He was severely lectured by the magistrate, who told him he wished it were in his power to inflict a flogging upon him with his own hands.

The mine train engine No. 342 at Fernie was run into an open switch when starting on its afternoon trip on Tuesday. The engine tipped at a dangerous angle but did not fall over. A wrecking crew from Cranbrook worked at it all day Wednesday and put it on the track again. In the meantime a temporary track was built around the wreck and the yard engine did duty between the town and the mines, only one shift being lost in consequence.

The plans for the new jail and court-house that is to be erected in this town shows that the government is in earnest in meeting the needs of this district. The building is of a commodious size, providing a large courtroom in the front, a living room for the prisoners behind and three cells behind that again. With an up-to-date court-house and jail and resident magistrates, Morrissey Mines will have nothing to complain of in the way of the administration of justice. The tenders for the new structure are all in and the specifications call for its completion by the 15th of November.

The tent store belonging to J. J. Murphy was burglarized one night last week and a quantity of goods stolen. The matter was hushed up to give the police a chance to discover the thief and on Saturday Constable Tranter located his man in the person of J. F. Perry, who was peddling the goods at the mines, where he was offering bargains to the men. Upon investigation it was found that Perry had secured quite a large quantity of goods and had them concealed under an outbuilding behind the Western hotel. He was taken to Fernie and locked up. The case will come up at the Clark hotel on Monday before Justices of the Peace L. W. Patmore and G. G. Moffatt.

There was a lively row at the Junction on Sunday morning between an Italian named S. Walters and Lee Jim, the local laundry Celestial. Walters went to the laundry to get his washing and accused the Chinaman of charging him too much, whereupon he was assulted by the laundryman and his assistant. With the exception of several bad bites on the hands he escaped serious injury. The matter was reported to the police and the case will come up on Tuesday for hearing.

A man by the name of Lewis was killed on the railway track west of Nelson on Saturday last. The body when found was completely naked. Considerable difficulty was experienced by the authorities in ascertaining who the unfortunate man was. Finally, in the inquest, which was held in Nelson on Monday, it was learned that Lewis had been acting strangely previous to the time that his body was found, and a verdict was rendered to the effect that the deceased was probably insane at the time of the accident.

The Chief of Police has received plans for the proposed alteration in the Fernie gaol. The present four cells are to be torn out and six new ones substituted. The present width of that part of the building will be reduced and the length will be increased. The proposed change is claimed to be only a temporary arrangement until a more permanent building can be erected. A glance at the plan would bear this idea out, as the increased accommodation is not great, and the putting in of new cells will scarcely rid the place of the vermin that is now infesting the prisoners' quarters.

Cree & Hutchison

REAL ESTATE

For Sale Cheap for Cash.

if bought within a week, Two Houses, rented for $45 per month.

For Sale

A Saw Mill with large timber limits, all in running order; including pole roads, waggons, sleighs, horses, etc. This is a snap—full particulars at our office.

We are the largest Real Estate Agents in South-east Kootenay.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON
Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

McEwing & Slinn

Keep a large stock of choice Confectionery, Cigars Tobaccos, Fruits Vegetables, etc. etc.

It pays to deal with this firm, as thier goods are new and up-to date.

The Bakery Dept.

is stocked with all kinds of choice pastry, bread and cakes

Wedding and other cakes a specialty.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B.C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

Burt Ross, car foreman, left yesterday for Cranbrook to poll a vote for Dr. King.

MEN'S HATS!

MEN'S HATS!!

With weather like this you will want something new for fall. We have a nice assortment of Up-to-date

AMERICAN BLOCKS

They will be popular as they are good styles at any time.

Will be pleased to have you see them.

The Crow's Nest Trading Company.

American Coal Oil!

See the BIG SNAP in our window.

We have a nice line of Kitchen Knives at 18c, same as cut.

A heavy sole-leather Gun Case for $5.00

Sheppard & Elliott.

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumb in

The Public Know

The Public know a good thing when they get it. When they are in the habit of having their meat done up to perfection you cannot pull them away with a forty-foot logging chain. That is why our trade is continually increasing.

We make a study of our trade and have attained perfection.

Our goods are the best, and our prices are right. Call and be convinced.

Calgary Cattle Co.

LIMITED

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a special license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands on the west side of Kootenay river, in the district of East Kootenay:

1. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumchuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence west 40 chains to place of commencement.

2. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumckuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence west 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence east 40 chains to place of commencement.

A. F. GRIMES

Dated at Fernie, July 14th, 1903. 239-4

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have o u tried them?

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

The Proper Treatment for a Sprained Ankle.

As a rule a man will feel well satisfied if he can hobble around on crutches two or three weeks after spraining his ankle, and it is usually two or three months before he has fully recovered. This is an unnecessary loss of time, for in many cases in which Chamberlain's Pain Balm has been promptly and freely applied, a complete cure has been effected in less than one week's time, and some cases within three days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

F. Clapp, Cranbrook, was in town this week.

A. J. Mott was down to Cranbrook on Tuesday.

Rev. D. L. Gordon was at Michel over Thursday night.

J. G. Cummings, of Fort Steele, was in Fernie this week.

J. Craigie, millwright of Wardner, was in town on Tuesday.

A. MacDougall paid Cranbrook a business visit this week.

Chas. Estmere and wife, of Cowley, are guests at the Royal.

L. M. Patmore, of Morrissey, was doing electioneering work in Fernie this week.

F. Shipman, the advance agent of the Fax Co. was in town this week. He is accompanied by his wife.

A. R. McDiarmid, a lumber merchant of Brandon, Man., was in town a few days this week on business.

Plan for Fax Concert may be seen at Liphardt's jewelry store. Prices 75 cts. and $1.00. Children 50 cents.

J. H. Crane, night operator, is relieving Agent E. L. Couzens, at Ryan, who is spending his vacation in the east.

F. Paddock returned from a trip to Spokane this week, where he had been called by the death of his sister-in-law.

Dr. Daly, of Ottawa, a member of the Geographical Survey of Canada, was in Fernie this week and looked up his friend, Jas. McEvoy.

F. E. Lawe, of the firm of Ross, Alexander & Lawe, Morrissey Mines, has been in town this week looking after the business of the firm here.

Miss Donaldson, milliner for the Trites-Wood Co. spent Monday and Tuesday at the Morrissey branch store where she held a millinery opening.

Mrs. J. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. Whimster gave an at home to the Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church at the home of Mrs. Whimster on Thursday afternoon.

Chief Constable McMullin returned from his vacation trip to the Okanagan on Tuesday. Politics and wet weather were all the go over in that country according to his report.

The usual services will be held on Sunday in the Methodist church. In the morning the pastor's subject will be "A good conscience." Rev. S. J. Thompson, of Cranbrook will preach in the evening.

The Methodist ladies will give an "At Home" in the parsonage, on Tuesday, Oct. 6th, from 3 to 10 p.m. The evening will be especially for the young people and the afternoon for the ladies Admission 15c. Home-made candy for sale. All are cordially invited.

T. Dodsworth has accepted a position in C. Richards' store. Mr. Dodsworth has held several honorable positions in the British army and he is also a first class all-round athlete. He has played in the best foot-ball teams of England.

The hotel bars are closed today throughout the province. The act reads "No spirituous or fermented liquors or strong drink shall be sold, given or provided at any hotel, shop, or other place within the limits of any electoral district during the whole of the polling day at any election." The penalty for the above offence is a fine not exceeding $100.

The lacrosse club are making heroic efforts to get out of debt, and in securing the Fax Co. to play for them they bid fair to accomplish that aim. The cause is a worthy one and the concert is the best on the road. For these reasons the hall will be packed. The press all along the line speak in flattering terms of the success of the entertainments given. The town will doubtless turn out in masse to the full capacity of the hall.

The service wires are rapidly being attached to the new electric light system. During the past two or three days both systems have been charged, and the wires are thus transferred without interfering with the regular service. It will be only a short time until the transfer is completed when the old wires will be removed. The Company find much difficulty in securing linemen and the work is retarded on this account. The new system is said to work satisfactorily.

The McRae Lumber Company are moving their plant from the old site at Coal Creek to Hosmer. The machinery of the saw mill was moved up some time ago and the planer has been working. The old lumber has been all worked up and operations will now be commenced on their timber claims on the west side of the Elk opposite Hosmer. A mill site has been selected on this side of the river and a siding of over half a mile in length will be put in to connect with the C.P.R. The spur has already been commenced and the work of putting up the new mill will be pushed to completion so that it will be in operation in about two months. The capacity of the new mill will be about 35,000 ft. per day. The company has large timber limits within easy range and will doubtless turn out heavy shipments of first-class lumber.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

WANTED.—A tinsmith, apply to Sheppard & Elliott. x

Messrs. Blundell, McBean and Foss were in from Morrissey this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Tonkin spent Wednesday and Thursday at Morrissey Mines.

A. C. Nelson, assessor from Fort Steele, was in Fernie several days this week assessing property in the town.

Two outing parties were held at the canyons at Elko this week. One went down on Sunday and another on Wednesday.

Dr. Willson was up from Morrissey this week for a couple of days. The doctor is taking a keen interest in politics and he predicts a big majority for the Liberal candidate in that town.

Neil McKellar was taken ill with an attack of appendicitis on Monday. He was removed to the hospital where with good treatment he has been holding his own and it is hoped that he will soon be around again.

Don't forget the lacrosse concert to be given in Princess hall on or about Oct. 10th. Jas. Fax is an entertainer of world-wide renown and he will be assisted by other talent. This will be the concert of the season. Keep the date in mind.

A riding party was organized for Thursday. They proceeded to the Lizzard mountains at the foot of which the horses were left while the party went on foot. On the top was planted a large Union Jack which can be seen from the town.

A number of young men climbed the Three Sisters mountain last Saturday and returned the following day. They took a rifle with them which did effective work on a band of 17 mountain goats that they encountered as they brought back with them four fine heads.

Thos. Dunn was up for trial on Wednesday in connection with the scrape he got into at the Cedar Valley Improvement Company's stables last week. Only one charge was laid, that of pointing a fire arm with intent to do injury. He was unable to put up any defence but as his employers spoke favorably of him and as it was shown that he was under the influence of liquor at the time, the magistrate viewed the offence with leniency and allowed him to go with a fine of $50 which he paid.

They Make You Feel Good.

The pleasant purgative effect experienced by all who use Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and the healthy condition of the body and mind which they create makes one feel joyful. For sale by all druggists and deal

Thanksgiving is set for October 15th.

General servant wanted, apply to Mrs. Richards.

Wanted—A general servant. Must be a good cook. Apply to Mrs. A. B. Trites.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

C. W. H Coles, of Montreal, was in town several days this week making drawings of new buildings for an addition to Goads' Fire Insurance map. Mr. Coles was much impressed with the steady growth of the town which while not in the nature of a boom was of a healthy growth and showed the general prosperity to be most satisfactory. Speaking of the fire protection of Fernie Mr. Coles stated that the filling in of ranges of buildings in Fernie has increased the hazzard enormously and he expressed some surprise that some attempt had not been made to build a fire break in the central part of the town. He stated that no fire fighting system could subdue a fire that once had got under headway in the in the main business blocks of Fernie. The chemical engine would do wonders where a fire was not well started, and it would also be instrumental in keeping alive the interest of the brigade.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

We hav eopened up a variety of sideboards at prices to suit all purses.

J. D. QUAIL..

Hardware. Furniture

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

London and Liverpool Stores.

Stove Department

FALL, 1903

This season finds us better prepared than ever to please you in Stoves.

One Car-load just placed on sale this week, from the very best makers in Canada.

If it is a Cook Stove you are considering, come to us; we have all sizes and at all prices.

Ranges—from the smallest to the hotel size.

Heaters—all the different makes. HOT BLAST.

"THE FAMOUS OAK"

One of the most popular heaters made.

We can also supply you with all kinds of Stove Furniture, Stove Boards, Pipes, Elbows, etc.

Millinery Dept.

FALL, 1903

Thursday, Friday & Saturday

Sept. 24th, 25th & 26th.

On all the above dates we hold our regular Millinery Display. We promise to eclipse all past efforts this year.

Miss Donaldson, direct from the east, who is in charge, will undoubtedly please you with the many new ideas and pretty styles of Hats for this season.

THE TRITES-WOOD CO., LTD.

"ROYAL BRAND"

TAILOR-MADE CLOTHING

Our stock of Men's Ready-to-wear Clothing is now complete, and we invite you to call and compare Price and Quality of Royal Clothing with goods to be had elsewhere.

In Overcoats we are especially strong, our stock comprising all the Newest Styles. Our leaders are the "Brighton," "King" "Raglanette" and "Auto."

In Men's Suits we have an endless variety of Tweeds, Worsteds and Serges, and they are strictly up-to-date in cut and finish.

In Rain Coats we have some very nobby ones made from Priestleys Cravenette Cloths, that are guaranteed waterproof.

In Boy's Clothing Men's Trousers, Etoffe and Mackinaw Coats and Pants, and Leather Coats we have a nice assortment. Also Corduroy Goods—wear like iron.

Remember, in buying from us, you take no chances of getting Shop-Worn Stock, as every garment on our counters is New, Bright and Clean.

CHAS. RICHARDS

NOTICE.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited, after this date will not make wire connections to any premises which have been wired by any party or parties not its accredited representative, and any consumer adding additional lights without the consent of the company, will not only be liable for damages but will have the entire service discontinued.

Any person or persons making connections to, or tampering with, the Company's water mains will be prosecuted, and their water service discontinued.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited
by T. R. STOCKETT, jr.
General Superintendant

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

Calgary Cattle Co., Ltd., keeps a regular supply of oysters on hand. A choice shipment of dairy butter just received. Also clams. See our ad.

WHEN BOYS WERE MEN

By JOHN HABBERTON,
Author of "Helen's Babies," "George Washington," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1901, BY JOHN HABBERTON

I was made so wretched for two days by this sad eyed farmer's manner that I tried to devise ways of escaping it. It wasn't long before I found one. Many of our logs had to be floated to the point where we were massing the timber preparatory for use, and it was not easy for men walking along the shore with long poles in their hands to prevent an occasional log from drifting out of reach and escaping us entirely. I suggested to the captain that a single rowboat or a skiff would help us greatly, and the captain agreed with me, but wanted to know if I had never heard that for military reasons all boats on streams in a fighting country were destroyed.

"If southern boys are as smart as northern boys," said I, "I guess a boat or two escaped and lie hidden away in the bushes somewhere along the shore."

I couldn't forget how many times I had stumbled over boats while roaming along the edge of creeks and ponds not far from our village up north.

"Very well," said the captain, with an odd smile, "if that is true and northern boys are as smart as southern boys, you may go and find one of those boats. Take two or three men with you. Don't go without carbines. And be in a hurry about it. We do need a boat."

Hurrah! Here was to be an outing that would bring back a taste of old times. I wasn't long in selecting my party. Brainard almost danced with joy when I asked him to come along, and two other fellows about as old as we begged to go with us. Just before we started the captain handed me a canteen of whisky, telling me not to use any unless some one fell into the water, in which case I was to dose him frequently, a few swallows at a time. We were on the search within a quarter of an hour, and I felt a year younger in each successive five minutes. Blessed be nature! There isn't much difference 'twixt north and south as to the underbrush and dry leaves along the banks of small streams during winter. It was almost as jolly a trip as if we were out chestnutting in the woods about Summerton. Once in awhile we would startle a squirrel and long to fire at him. It was so hard to be bound by the rule to fire at nothing but the enemy when outside our own picket lines! What enemy could hear us, anyway? There was no road within three miles except that which was broken by the bridge. The temptation to shoot became still stronger when we saw the head of a deer on the other side of the stream, but Brainard reminded us that the deer would do us no good unless we could cross the stream to get him.

So on we tramped. It was as good as an excursion. We continued to be reminded of old times at home. In one place were the remains of a toy boat such as each of us had whittled from sticks in other days. Then we came upon a path which cattle and pigs had made in tramping to the river to drink. A little farther along was a little dock, such as northern farmers with water fronts generally have. All of these discoveries had no suggestion of war about them, and we all agreed with Brainard when he said:

"I feel as if I weren't down south at all."

Suddenly my heart bounded with joy, and I shouted "Hurrah!" for through a screen of bushes I saw the side of a boat. It was only a skiff, made of about four boards, but hadn't just such a boat often been as good as I wanted at home? We surrounded it in an instant and murmured a chorus of delight. The oars were in it instead of being hidden a little way off, as they would have been had the owner been a northerner, and it seemed in as good order as if recently used.

"The captain ought to make you a sergeant for this, Frost," said one of the boys.

Flat bottomed skiffs make up in weight what they lack in grace, so we laid our carbines in a heap and began to lift and drag. The boat was fully 50 feet from the water's edge, so we had a great lot of tugging and shouting of "Now!" "All together!" "Again!" etc., before we reached the water. At last, however, we got it where a single shove would place it afloat; then we straightened our backs and took another admiring look, while one of the boys became ecstatic enough to spring in, seat himself, snatch the oars and go through the motions of rowing.

"Don't fergit to take yer guns with ye," said a voice which none of us recognized. We looked around quickly, and there, kneeling right by our carbines, were three Johnnies, each with his own gun at the position of aim. And two of those three awful guns were double barreled!

This was something that none of us had looked forward to. With one accord, however, we began to look forward to Libby prison.

"Don't ye know it's a sin to steal skiffs?" asked one of the Johnnies, still keeping his piece at the aim. I never saw so unpleasant looking a weapon in my life—two great, yawning, dismal holes that ended in utter darkness and behind them two hammers within an inch or two of which glittered bright red percussion caps. I never again wanted to contemplate any kind of a gun from that point of view. And how everlastingly—it seemed at least a thousand hours—that fellow held his gun in that one position!

"We were not stealing the skiff," said Brainard after the silence had become almost maddening; "we were merely appropriating it, according to the customs of war as recognized in all countries."

"'Properatin', eh?" replied the man, relaxing his aim, though his comrades neglected to follow his praiseworthy example. "Well, 'cordin' to the customs of nations we'll 'properate you. Come up here—one at a time."

Nobody moved.

"D'you hyah me?" shouted the Johnny.

"Yes, sir," said I politely as I stepped forward.

"Gimme yer belt," said he. I obeyed, and he bound my arms behind my back with it, saying as he did so, "You uns bein' four to we uns three, we uns has got to be more'n ord'nary keerful."

We looked around quickly.

I didn't look at the other boys while they were being bound. I was afraid they might be looking at me. Besides, I had too much else to occupy my mind. Capture meant prison, poor food, perhaps sickness and death. It certainly meant no more communication with home for months. Probably my parents would think me dead, and they would daily wonder where and how I met my fate. Oh, what an awful load of punishment belonged to whoever was to blame for the war!

When all of us had been bound, the men who had kept us covered with their guns arose, came in front of us and stared at us. Suddenly one of them exclaimed:

"It's a fact! I was doggoned sure of it from the fust."

"What you talkin' about?" asked another.

"This here," was the reply as I felt a big hand on my shoulder and looked up; "this here is the little cuss that got us coffee the night the Yanks grabbed us three months ago. Mebbe you didn't git some of it. I did, though, an' I shayn't never fergit it. I'm right glad to see you again, my friend, though I wish 'twas somebody else we'd ketched."

I felt much better at once and then felt ashamed that the sound of a friendly voice had made me forgetful of the awful future before me.

"Don't look so down in the mouth," continued my old acquaintance. "We ain't goin' to kill an' eat you. After we git you across the river we'll treat you as well as we know how. Won't we, boys?"

"Of course," growled the leader of the party.

This was kind, but would their good will be of any service to us in Libby prison or Castle Thunder? Still, I thanked him as heartily as I could and told him truthfully that if we had to be captured I was glad we had fallen into the hands of some one who seemed to remember us pleasantly. Then my old acquaintance became chatty and told me they had hung about the edge of our camp all the day before, trying to find out what we were doing, word having been sent to their camp, 15 miles away, that a "lot of Yanks was cuttin' pine by the river." They had followed us, keeping on one flank as my little squad went up the river, for they wanted to learn what we were up to. They were glad they had seen us leave camp; otherwise they would have missed their boat, on which they nightly crossed the river to the house in which they slept.

All this was interesting, but it made cold chills play hide and seek all over me. Suppose, instead of following us through mere curiosity, they had shot us as soon as we were out of hearing of our camp. Ugh!

"Guess we'd better git across the river now," said the man who seemed leader of the party. "The Yanks 'll be sendin' out for these boys pooty soon, like as not, an' we don't want to git into no muss."

(To be Continued.)

It is folly to marry a grass widow for the purpose of having your grave kept green.

She—"Do you suppose a man ever spoke the truth when he told a woman she was the only girl he had ever kissed?" He—"Well, I don't think Adam deceived Eve on that point."

New Zealand's Ownership.

Queer points are raised from time to time in courts of law. For instance, one just seriously reserved for consideration by an Australian judge of the supreme court—namely, whether New Zealand is legally a British possession. It sounds like a joke at the expense of that most ardent and energetic of Imperialists, King Dick Sddon. At the same time it is possible there may be something in the point. Although Captain Cook repeatedly urged upon the Imperial Government the colonization of New Zealand, no practical step was taken until very late in the thirties, when it leaked out that the French were contemplating the annexation of the islands. It was a close race between a British and a French man-of-war, the British ship winning by a few hours. It is conceivable in the excitement of the moment some formality in the proclamation of British sovereignty over New Zealand may have been overlooked. In 1835 a Frenchman who called himself Baron de Thierry proclaimed himself "sovereign chief of New Zealand," but his funds failed, his ninety-three followers deserted, and he sank into obscurity.—London Chronicle.

One of the Strongest.

British papers say that Sir John Fisher, who takes over the Portsmouth command, is one of the strongest men on the flag list. He is generally understood to have had a large share in drawing up the new scheme of naval training, issued by Lord Selborne last Christmas, and his new appointment will give him an opportunity of taking an active part in putting the scheme into practice. He will have under his direct command at Portsmouth the college for cadets at Osborne, the great naval gunnery school at Whale Island, the torpedo school on board the Vernon, the big naval depot, with its huge contingent of stokers, mostly undergoing training, which is about to be moved from the old three-deckers to the new naval barrack at Portsea, and the St. Vincent training ship for boys. He has seen a good deal of active service, and first became really famous in the Egyptian war of '82, when he adapted and commanded the "iron-clad train." In spite of his years, he is an energetic dancer, and as he has daughters, everyone in the district is looking forward to a good deal of entertaining at Admiralty House.

Surprised.

"I suppose," said the physician, smiling and trying to appear witty while feeling the pulse of a lady patient, "that you consider me an old humbug?"

"Why, doctor," replied the lady, "I had no idea you could ascertain a woman's thoughts by merely feeling her pulse."

Sentiment and Business.

"I cannot understand, sir, why you permit your daughter to sue me for breach of promise. You remember that you were bitterly opposed to our engagement, because I wasn't good enough for her and would disgrace the family." "Young man, that was sentiment; this is business."—Sketchy Bits.

Dizzy? Appetite poor? Bowels constipated? Tongue coated? Head ache? It's your liver! Ayer's Pills are liver pills, all vegetable. Sold for sixty years. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Want your moustache or beard a beautiful brown or rich black? Use BUCKINGHAM'S DYE
R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N. H.

WOMAN OF OTHER YEARS.

Never Deemed She Was Great and Made Home Her Sphere.

The woman of other years never dreamed that she was great or that she was specially useful or that she had achieved anything worth living for. Her unconsciousness was her charm. Self consciousness would have spoiled her.

She was not a great woman; at least no one thought her so. In truth, they did not think much about her. They simply loved her. She wrote no books; her letters never circulated in a wider circle than that of a few favored friends. Her song of love was too sacred and she was too shy to sing it to the public or to strangers. She had admiration for women with a "gift;" sometimes she was a trifle tempted to envy them. But she had no "gift" herself. Her only singing was lullaby to her own baby.

Her sphere was her home. It grew up quietly, as quietly as a flower grows, and no one knew—she did not know herself—how much she had done to tend and water and train it.

Her husband had absolute trust in her. He earned the money; she expended it. And as she put as much thought in her expenditures as he put in his earning each dollar was doubled in the expending.

This was the woman who in other years made happy homes and husbands. This is the woman still found in the world by people who know where to look for her.

Ah, blessed home builder! You have no cause to envy women with a "gift," for there is nothing so sacred on earth as a home and no priest on earth so divine as the wife and mother who makes it and no gift so great as the gift which grafts the bud of heaven on the common stock of earth.—Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott.

His Opinion.

"Yes, he's a confirmed bachelor. He thinks there is safety in numbers."

"Safety in numbers?"

"Yes. He says two run a good deal of risk when they become one."

A Take Off.

Harry (looking at his whitened coat sleeve)—That isn't much of a compliment to Carrie's complexion.

Esther—I should say not. It's a regular take off.—Boston Transcript.

SKIN DISEASES

INVARIABLY DUE TO POOR AND WATERY BLOOD.

Pimples, Blotches, Boils and Ugly Rashes Easily Cleared From the Blood.

From the Advocate, Exeter, Ont.

All diseases of the skin and complexion are caused by bad blood. Paleness and pimples, blotches and boils, ugly rashes and open sores, itching eczema and burning erysipelas—all these blemishes come from bad blood. A bad skin is a sure sign of bad blood—thin blood, watery blood, blood poisoned with impurities. You can't have a healthy, clear skin till you make your blood pure and rich with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills are a sure and speedy cure for all skin diseases, for agonizing eczema or bothersome little pimples—for a bad complexion to ugly open ulcers. No claim is ever made for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills not backed by the most positive proof, and in this connection we offer the testimonial of Mrs. Nicholas McAvoy, a life-long, much-esteemed resident of Exeter, Ont. To a reporter of The Advocate Mrs. McAvoy said:—"Some years ago I was taken with a slight itching under one of my arms. I gave it little attention at first, thinking it would pass away, but in this I was mistaken, for as time went on it became worse and developed into an aggravated case of eczema, causing a great deal of pain, irritation and suffering. In fact I was compelled to endure tortures. I consulted a doctor and took his medicine for several months, but the trouble did not leave, neither did it get any better. In fact, it took a turn for the worse and developed into scrofula. As the doctor's medicine did not help me I tried several advertised medicines, but with no better results. Finally a lady friend strongly urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The effect was almost magical. In a few weeks there was a decided change for the better, and as time went on the trouble gradually left, and to-day I am entirely free from it. I owe my complete recovery—if not my life—to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, a fact I wish to put on record that others may benefit as I have done."

There is absolutely no disease due to poor blood—and most diseases are due to this trouble—that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will not cure. You can get these pills from any druggist or they will be sent postpaid at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. Remember that substitutes cannot possibly cure.

Barrie and the Editors.

Soon after J. M. Barrie leaped into fame the editors of three London journals for which he had done a good deal of work determined to give a dinner in his honor. Mr. Barrie accepted the invitation, and in due course the three knights of the pen and scissors and their distinguished guest sat down together. The hosts, knowing their contributor only by his work, fully anticipated a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." However, the soup and fish were consumed without a word from Mr. Barrie, or, at least, with nothing beyond noncommittal grunts. Despite frantic efforts to lure him into conversation, it was not until he rose to put on his coat that he made the first and last remark that he uttered during the evening, "Weel, this is the first time I've ever had dinner with three editors."

A man never fully realizes what a big world this is until he is compelled to walk ten blocks with a strenuous corn on his toe.

One way to beat a retreat is by jumping a summer resort board bill.

When a couple are matched but not mated it is a sort of friction match

When a man attempts to make monkeys of his friends he may be forced into the monkey class himself.

Some men acquire wealth and get into society, while society gets into others and they become poor.

Man proposes—then woman steps in and does the rest.

A LASTING CURE OF ITCHING PILES.

A Chronic Case of Unusual Severity and Long Standing Cured by DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

Piles, or hemrrhoids, are small tumors, which form in and about the orifice of the rectum. They are caused by an enlarged and inflamed condition of the veins, which are very numerous in this portion of the body. Piles frequently attack women during the expectant period or after childbirth.

Any form of piles causes dreadful suffering on account of the itching and burning which accompany them. One can scarcely walk at times, and during the night, when the body gets warm, suffering is intense.

Mr. Alex. McLaughlin, for 30 years a resident of Bowmanville, Ont., writes:

"For twenty long years I suffered from itching piles, and only persons who have been troubled with that annoying disease can imagine what I endured during that time. About 7 years ago I asked a druggist if he had anything to cure me. He said that Dr. Chase's Ointment was most favorably spoken of, and on his recommendation I took a box.

"After three applications I felt better, and by the time I had used one box I was on a fair way to recovery. I continued the treatment until thoroughly cured, and I have not suffered any since. I am firmly convinced that the ointment made a perfect cure.

"I consider Dr. Chase's Ointment an invaluable treatment for piles. In my case I think the cure was remarkable when you consider that I am getting up in years, and had been so long a sufferer from this disease."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is the only absolute and guaranteed cure for every form of piles. It has a record of cures unparalleled in the history of medicine. 60 cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Day and Night School. Individual Instruction. One Week's Trial Given.

THE NATIONAL Business College. LTD.

Capital, $25,000.00.
Desirable Business Positions Guaranteed to Graduates.

Accounting, Shorthand, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, and all business subjects practically and thoroughly taught. Please call or write for free catalogue and other information to E. J. O'SULLIVAN, C.E., M.A., Manager, corner Main and Market Sts, Winnipeg. 'Phone 1955.

The First Post Houses.

The first posts are said to have originated in the regular couriers established by Cyrus about 550 B. C., who erected post houses throughout the kingdom of Persia. Augustus was the first to introduce this institution among the Romans, 31 B. C., and he was imitated by Charlemagne about 800 A. D. Louis XI. was the first sovereign to establish post houses in France owing to his eagerness for news, and they were also the first institution of this nature in Europe. This was in 1470, or about 2,000 years after they were started in Persia.

In England in the reign of Edward IV. (1481) riders on post horses went stages of the distance of twenty miles from each other in order to procure the king the earliest intelligence of the events that passed in the course of the war that had arisen with the Scots. A proclamation was issued by Charles I. in 1631 that, "whereas to this time there hath been no certain intercourse between the kingdoms of England and Scotland, the king now commands his postmaster of England for foreign parts to settle a running post or two between Edinburgh and London to go thither and come back again in six days."

Helter Skelter.

"Helter skelter" has been suggestively defined as a jingling expression, vaguely imitating the hurried clatter of feet rapidly and irregularly moved. Most dictionaries, however, led astray probably by the ordinary orthography, have missed the true etymology of this phrase. It should be "helter kelter."

"Helter" is an old word for "hang," probably connected with halter, and "kelter" is used by old writers in the sense of "order" or the proper state. Thus Barrow, the divine, says, "If the organs of prayer be out of kelter how can we pray?"

"Helter skelter," therefore, is literally "hang order" and means, "Oh, hang order; let us do it, or let it take its chance." Ben Jonson in "Every Man In His Humor" writes, "Helter skelter, hang sorrow, care'll kill a cat," and Shakespeare, using it to express rush and hurry, says, "Helter skelter have I rode to thee."

Her View of It.

"Pshaw!" she exclaimed disgustedly as she came to the most interesting part only to read "to be continued." "I don't see why they call these things 'continued stories.'"

"No?" queried her husband politely.

"No; they should be called 'discontinued stories.'"—Exchange.

How Gluck Composed.

Of Gluck it is said that when he felt himself in a humor to compose he had his pianoforte carried into a beautiful meadow, where, with a bottle of champagne on either side of him, he was able to do justice to his muse.

If you don't pay for your milk promptly the milkman naturally supposes you want it chalked up.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

A henpecked husband, who has at last been separated from his wife, has invented a new seal which he uses for all his correspondence, and which is a hen sitting on a fence or wall with the legend "God help the house where the hen crows."

The Earliest Punctuation.

Punctuation by means of stops or points, so as to indicate the meaning of sentences and assist the reader to a proper enunciation, is ascribed originally to Aristophanes, an Alexandrian grammarian, who lived in the third century B. C. Whatever his system may have been, it was subsequently neglected and forgotten, but was reintroduced by Charlemagne, the various stops and symbols being designed by Warnefried and Alcuin.

The present system of punctuation was introduced in the latter part of the fifteenth century by Aldus Manutius, a Venetian printer, who was responsible for our period, colon, semicolon, comma, marks of interrogation and exclamation, parenthesis and dash, hyphen, apostrophe and quotation marks. These were subsequently copied by other printers until their use became universal.

Most ancient languages were innocent of any system of punctuation. We find in many early manuscripts that the letters are placed at equal distances apart, with no connecting link between, even in the matter of spacing, an arrangement which must have rendered reading at sight somewhat difficult.

Mother Nature is the greatest and noblest of teachers. Study her rules and laws, and if you follow and obey them you will not go far wrong.—Maxwell's Talisman.

Just the same as ever
St. Jacobs Oil
continues to be the sure cure of Rheumatism and Neuralgia

Price, 25c. and 50c.

THE GOSPEL LESSON

CAN ONLY BE LEARNED FROM HIM WHO HAS DIVINE AUTHORITY.

TAUGHT NOT AS THE SCRIBES

Learned as a Human Being What We Ought to Learn, But Is Also Clothed With Divine Authority — Therefore With Confidence May You Sit at His Feet. Because He Has the Right to Teach

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—At this season, when the great army of teachers take up their tasks in our schools, colleges and universities, many of them for the first time, this sermon is peculiarly and widely appropriate. The text is Matthew xi, 29, "Learn of me."

The school-house is the great reservoir in which are collected the streams of knowledge which have flowed down from the ages. It is the place in which man is taught how to harness the winds and lasso the electricity and tap the oil wells and contribute to the common wealth and development of his brother man, so that all working together may cause the "desert to blossom as the rose." "What is the cause of all those fine farms, big barns and immense granaries? Why this thrift and prosperity everywhere?" I once asked a Pennsylvania farmer when bicycling through Lancaster county. "The school-house," he replied. "You cannot go anywhere in this part of the state without finding the public school-house at almost every cross-roads and the small college in almost every town of any size." "What is the cause of your dilapidated farms and the slothfulness and filth I see everywhere around me?" I asked another farmer that same spring in a region a few hundred miles from the one the prosperity of which prompted my first question. "To the absence of the school-house," was the answer. "Most of our people are ignorant and uneducated. What is more, most of our people do not want to learn; neither do they, wish their children to learn." Against such a wall of opposition as that it is almost impossible for intellectual progress to make any true headway.

We would eulogize that compound word of eleven letters called the "school-house." But, after all, the "school-house" is merely a representative term. Its true value is not in the intrinsic worth of the bricks and stones and wood which compose its buildings; it is in the spiritual and intellectual worth of the men and the women who stand behind its teachers' desks.

The Divine Teacher is our theme. If we have not yet learned the value of Jesus Christ as an instructor, then let us learn it now in the command of my text. Jesus in these three words recorded in Matthew emphasizes the great fact that from him, and him alone, we can learn the gospel lessons we ought to learn.

The gospel classroom in the first place, has in Christ an authoritative teacher. I invite you with confidence to sit at his feet because he has a right to teach. He speaks not only because as a human being he has learned what we ought to learn, but he comes clothed with divine authority. His credentials are higher than those of any human teacher. They proceed from God himself. He is the Son and the co-equal of God the Father. He comes to us as a conqueror clothed in white vesture, "and on his thigh a name written, King of kings and Lord of Lords." "For he taught them as one having authority and not as the scribes."

In this age of intellectual progress it is absolutely essential for every true teacher, whether of the higher or the lower grades, to have his or her credentials. For instance: If I wish to educate one of my little girls to be a public school teacher I say to her: "Now, daughter, your future life occupation depends entirely upon yourself and your work. I am going to send you through the common public school. I believe every child should go there, be she rich or poor, black or white, Jew or gentile or Catholic. In order to produce the best types of citizenship all classes of children should stand shoulder to shoulder and hand in hand at the school desk. Then I will send you to the high school, then to the normal. Then, when you have your different diplomas, you can go before the State board or county board of examiners and have your knowledge tested. Then, if you pass, your teacher's certificates will be given you. But, daughter, you cannot teach in any public school unless you are an authoritative teacher—unless you have your credentials. Without them you cannot even be a cadet or a substitute for a day." All the 5,775 teachers of Chicago who faced the 268,392 scholars of Cook County last year were prepared for an instructor's life in this way.

Now, my friends, as gospel students, are you ready to accept Jesus Christ as an authoritative teacher? Are you ready to accept him as the Son of God? You are not to accept him as a seer or prophet, a John the Baptist, an Elias or a Jeremiah. You are to accept him as did Simon Peter when he turned and said, "Thou art Christ, the Son of the Living God." Are you ready to accept the authoritative Jesus as divine?

Oh, the credentials of the teacher, Christ! In the prophecies of Scripture we can read them. In the miracles which he performed we can verify them. In the testimony of John the Baptist and in the Heavenly Father's voice, which sounded over the dripping locks of the Son of God when Christ was baptized, we can prove them. Christ's credentials are of the highest authority. They must be accepted.

Napoleon was one day riding along the lines of the French army, when his horse shied. Instantly a common soldier leaped forth from the ranks and saved his commander from being thrown. Napoleon smiled at his rescuer and said, "Thank you, captain." Quick as a flash the soldier saluted and asked his chief, "Of what regiment, sire?" The delighted Emperor replied. "Of my own guards." He then rode on. With that the soldier threw away his gun and stepped over to where the staff officers of the guards were collected. Indignantly those officers ordered him back to the ranks. With that the new made captain raised his head as he answered: "I am no longer a private soldier; I am a captain of the Emperor's guards." "By what authority do you make such a statement?" asked the colonel. Then the soldier pointed toward the retreating form of his ruler as he answered: "Napoleon said it!" Ah, after that there was no further criticism. Napoleon was the authority. Napoleon was to give him his credentials. So Christ, as the authoritative teacher, comes to us with his credentials. The Father, the Heavenly Father, hath spoken it. Witness the Jordanic revelation: "Behold a light cloud overshadowed them, and behold, a voice out of the cloud which said, "This is my Son in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him." Authoritatively! Christ always speaks authoritatively.

The gospel classroom, in the next place, has a self sacrificing teacher. The word "self sacrificing" can well be applied to all true men and women who follow the noble profession of teaching, I care not whether those men and women are filling conspicuous professional chairs, or whether they are teaching in humble district schools; they are all people who sacrifice themselves for the good of others. There is no business or profession on earth in which there is more wear and tear upon the nervous system than upon those conscientious men and women who, week in and week out, spend their lives expounding and explaining and catechising behind a teacher's desk.

Just think of the fractious human colts the average public school teacher has to train. A great many parents send their children to school in order to get rid of them as well as to have their brains developed. They cannot stand the boy's racket at home, so they expect the public teacher to supply the neglected maternal discipline. God pity the young graduate of the normal school, who herself is hardly old enough to be a mother, and yet has to keep in line every day thirty of forty boys and girls, most of whom have not yet learned what the word "obedience" means!

Then estimate the thickness of the skull which every year the teacher has to pry open to let in the intellectual light. It must be a great pleasure for the teacher, who is a genius, to develop a genius; for a Lord Chatham to have for his disciple a William Pitt; for a Franz Liszt to guide the fingers of an Anton Rubinstein over the ivory keys; for an Ignatius Loyola to mold a Francis Xavier; for a Peter Paul Rubens to have for his pupil an Anthony Vandyke. One day, after having examined some of his famous student's work, the great Flemish master delightedly turned to his class and said: "A greater than Rubens is here! The young man whose brush has done this will some day outmaster his master." But, though it may be a great pleasure for a genius to develop a genius, yet ninety-nine hundreds of all scholars in all public school classrooms are geniuses. They are not only children of ordinary intelligence, but boys and girls, many of them below the ordinary. All of those scholars must be developed. This accounts for the teacher's exhaustion. Then the strain. Then often complete nervous collapse.

But, oh, my brother, what is the sacrifice of an earthly teacher for her pupils compared to that which the Divine Teacher has made for us? Is there any patience like unto his patience? Any forgiveness greater than his forgiveness? Any martyrdom like unto his martyrdom? As a Divine Teacher has not Christ spent years and years and years trying to teach us how to speak just two words in the right way, "Our Father?" We read how the missionary teachers have been martyred in China in the defense of their pupils. But was there ever a death of a teacher like unto that of the martyrdom of my Christ? In order to teach us how to attain eternal life has he not sacrificed for us in his wounded hands and wounded feet and wounded head and gaping side, into which the Roman soldier thrust his spear? Yes. My Lord and my God is a self sacrificing teacher. He gave his life for his gospel students. He died that we might live.

But the Divine Teacher Christ has a far greater purpose than to merely save his gospel students. He teaches his disciples, who sit at his feet in order that they may become like him, how they in turn may carry his message and truth to the farthermost parts of the earth. He looks upon his students with respect to their future, as every true instructor ought to do. He is the Divine Instructor, who teaches his disciples that through them we may learn the way of life. He is teaching his disciples in order that the countless multitudes, groping about in the darkness of heathendom, may through us be brought into saving touch with the cross.

To duplicate the teacher's knowledge and life in the lives of his students is always the far reaching purpose of true teaching. Why does Booker T. Washington's work have the hearty support of the white men both of the north and the south? Because he is trying to duplicate his plain, common sense, practical life in the lives of his students. He is not trying to teach the doctrine that the white and the black races should intermarry. He is the apostle preaching that life means work; that the black race will never lift itself by political agitations, but only by its members being good waiters and coachmen and honest laborers and provident farmers and intelligent wives and mothers. He is preaching "the gospel of the toothbrush." He does not believe a man, colored or white, can be respectable and be chronically dirty. Such is the duplicating purpose of Alabama's foremost negro educator. Now, my friends, Jesus Christ as a divine teacher should have a duplicating power in the lives of his students. It should be found in the lives of his professing disciples, in the lives of some of us who have been crowding the gospel classroom for the last ten, twenty—yes, even thirty and forty years. Christ's duplicating power should be found in us, because through us the gospel must be sent to some sinful and some lost soul to whom otherwise it may never be sent at all.

We have often read how heroic deeds in martial life have saved an army for an earthly king. Can we not realize how our deeds as the representatives of Christ can draw men to or drive them away from the cross? Many years ago a French army was battling under the hot and blasting Algerian sun. The forced marches and the counter marches which that army was compelled to take were enough to kill an African negro, let along a European. Then in order to increase the horror fatal cholera broke out in one regiment. Man after man died. The army became panic stricken, and all seemed to be lost. But one night Colonel Gardarens wanted to prove that this dreaded disease was contagious "wholly through food and drink and in no other way." So he himself lifted one of the cholera corpses out of its bed. Then he turned to his men and said: "Now I will show you that cholera is not infectious. I will pass the night in this man's bed." He raised the bed-clothes and lay down and slept. In the morning he awoke, arose and departed to his own quarters a well man. That power of a personal example inspired his men. They took heart. The French army was saved. My friends, our examples as representatives of Jesus Christ must exert the same kind of a good or bad influence that Colonel Gardarens had over his men. As gospel students we must duplicate Christ's life or we must misrepresent him. We shall lead sinful men and women to his altar or drive them farther away. "We are the light of the world." "We are the salt of the earth." "We are the cities set upon a hill which cannot be hid." As gospel students we are Christ's representatives, Christ's witnesses, and we cannot help it.

But where as Christian disciples shall we build Christ's future classrooms? Everywhere. In them must be gathered the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the white and the black, the Jew, the gentile. For them the applications for membership do not need the indorsement of a wealthy man's check. They must be especially built for the poor and the hopeless and the weak and the lame and the blind and the outcasts, social and spiritual. The command is given unto us in emphatic terms, "Go ye out into the highways and the hedges and compel them to come in." These are the words Christ uses, "Compel, compel, compel them to come in."

What a message it is that the students in Christ's school are commissioned to deliver to the world! It transforms the whole aspect of life. This world, in the light of our Lord's teaching is no longer the scene of meaningless suffering, of useless struggle and inevitable disappointment. It is a scene of preparation, of discipline, of education, in the highest sense of the word, for a larger, fuller life. As the children who are now assembling in our school-houses are being prepared for a manhood and womanhood of useful service, so the men and women in Christ's school have reached a higher grade. They, too, are being educated and trained for a grander career. The lessons are hard to learn, the discipline is often painful. But we go to our tasks with a brave heart when we discover that there is a purpose in it all. We can understand now our Divine Teacher's inaugural message: "Blessed are they that mourn;" "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst," for under his blessed teaching we have learned that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Thus, my Christian friends, by the words of my text, I open to you a life of endless gospel activity. First, as a student, you are to come into touch with Jesus. You are to be like your great Divine Master. This will not be very difficult if you will only come near enough to Christ, if you will only live in his presence day by day. You will become Christ-like; you will become "good," or like God. You will be as one who studies a great original masterpiece. Your model will be Jesus. Intuitively, consciously and unconsciously, by walking in his presence you will absorb his personality in your life.

The second purpose of this text is to send you forth as gospel evangelists. You are to go up and down the street and preach everywhere the sweet story of Jesus. You are to do this because if you are true gospel students you will as naturally talk about your Divine Teacher as a bird hatched under a songstress' wing will sing; as a seed dropped from a rosebush will develop into a rose; as a dewdrop first touched of the morning sun will sparkle like a diamond; as a dying sunset will gild the overhanging clouds with passementeries of gold. May this sermon be the means under the power of the Holy Spirit to lead you into the gospel classroom. May it also be the means of sending you forth, one and all, as gospel teachers.

A Good Thing for Heaven.

The late Dr. Parker, of London, was arguing with a man on the problem of continued existence, and as Mr. Parker was at the door the friend finally declared: "The fact is, I am an annihilationist. I believe that when I die that will be the end of me." Thank God for that!" declared the doctor, and bangod the door.

SHE DISAPPEARED.

Mrs. Luella McConnell Steals Away From Dawson For Good.

One of the most interesting characters in the Yukon has flitted. Mrs. Luella Day McConnell, who has been the cause of no end of exciting incidents there, left the territory in a spectacular way. Stealthily she walked alone by an unfrequented trail to a point below Moose Hide early Sunday morning last; there she took a small boat, and, rowed by a tried friend, she glided gently down the stream, crossing the boundary line with considerable wealth in jewels and money in her possession and leaving a number of creditors to mourn her departure.

Mrs. McConnell has figured in a number of sensational trials and legal struggles. Once she was summoned, and refused to appear, a squad of police was sent to bring her. She feigned illness, took to her bed, and the police, judge and all were completely nonplussed. An order was issued to bring her, bed and all, but an order from Ottawa came at the critical moment ordering the prosecution to cease, and Mrs. McConnell was victorious.

For some weeks she has been playing insane, it is believed for the purpose of escaping a judgment of about $18,000, which she has successfully evaded by crossing the line. She is probably worth $200,000, having been very successful in mining. She was a most determined opponent of the government and the officials generally, having lampooned judges, governors and everyone in authority. She was a great admirer of Joe Clark and backed him for quite a sum when he ran against Governor Ross. She was determined to beat the Bank of Commerce, and it is said she has succeeded. Her disappearance will be a loss to the lawyers and a comfort to a great many more, as she was resourceful, wonderfully active, aggressive, and loved a fight.

Immigrants to Pour In.

Among the passengers of the Hamburg-American steamer Pallanza, which landed 313 passengers at Halifax on Sept. 25, was Burger Izsak, general manager of Falk & Co., Hamburg agents of the Hamburg-American line for Europe. Mr. Izsak intimated that he had come to Canada to look into arrangements for handling and placing about 20,000 immigrants, which will be landed at Halifax by his line during the autumn and winter. The emigrants will include Hungarians, Russians, Germans and others. Arrangements for conveying to Canada of 300 Hungarian families have been completed, and they will be the first of the 20,000 to arrive here. Mr. Izsak will go direct to Ottawa, where he will interview the immigration authorities.

Record Prices for Foreign Fruit.

America is now reaping great benefits from the storms which made the past summer one of the worst on record in Great Britain and the continent. Because of ruined home crops California fruit is being imported in larger quantities than ever before. The sales last week in London marked the record with 27,000 boxes of American fruit, representing about 675,000 pounds in weight. The prices averaged 30 per cent. above what has heretofore been obtained there. The sales were chiefly of California pears and plums, with a fair consignment of New York state Bartlett pears. There is practically no English fruit obtainable, while France, which usually exports large quantities of pears to England, is sending none.

Forty-two thousand barrels of Canadian apples are expected in London at the end of this week, and record prices are expected.

A Trial of Endurance.

Trooper Davis, of the 8th United States Cavalry, has reached West Point, being the first of a detachment of twelve troopers who started from Oklahoma thirty days ago on a test ride of 2,000 miles. The men were allowed to eat and sleep when they pleased. Relays of horses were provided every thirty miles, the object of the ride being to cover the distance in the shortest practicable time. Davis, the lightest man of the party, led his comrades at the start, and had the advantage of getting the pick of mounts at the relay stations. He rode up the east bank of the Hudson river, after reaching New York until near Garrison, where his horse gave out. Davis weighed 137 pounds when he started, and now weighs but 108 pounds. The ride is one of several taken to test the stamina of men and horses, made at the suggestion of General Young, the new chief of staff.

NEWS NOTES.

A pulp mill will be erected next spring near Rainy Lake.

A strike for an 8-hour day has tied up all the flour mills in Minneapolis.

Japanese sealers are poaching in Behring sea, contrary to terms of the modus vivendi.

The Dominion Trades and Labor congress in session at Brockville, has passed a resolution condemning the fiscal policy of former Colonial Secretary Chamberlain.

On Nov. 10 a section of 750,000 acres of old Indian reserve land in Northern Minnesota will be thrown open to settlers.

Chief Justice Dubuc and party have returned to Winnipeg from holding court at Norway House; McKay was found not guilty of manslaughter for having caused the death of a half-breed in a drunken quarrel.

A Cincinnati rabbi believes a Jewish world congress would force governments to respect their Jewish subjects.

THE KING TAKES A HAND

British Ruler Is Not a Figurehead in Present Cabinet Crisis.

A London cable, dated Sept. 24, says: The political crisis has taken on a phase which lends to the present situation an historical and constitutional importance of almost unprecedented interest. The King has interfered in the exercise of his prerogatives to an extent never dreamed of in the Victorian era.

Premier Balfour's continued presence at Balmoral has given rise to much surmise and comment, but it is stated definitely that it is due to the King's determination not to assent to the formalities of a new cabinet until thoroughly satisfied that its personnel and combination is such as to ensure the efficient carrying on of affairs of the empire pending the resumption of parliament. For years previous cabinets were formed or ministerial vacancies were filled with the mere formal presentation to the sovereign of the names of the new ministers.

King Edward has done away with this tradition. He has spent the last few days in constant discussion with Mr. Balfour as to the advisability from the point of view of the national welfare, and at the latter's suggestion the ministers and those nominated for office have been summoned to Balmoral to join in these conferences, and all have been subjected to a degree of interrogation such as has surprised even those who knew King Edward intimately as Prince of Wales.

The King is said to have expressed the opinion that Lord Lansdowne's record as war secretary was due more to the badness of the system in vogue than to any defect in Lord Lansdowne's own judgment. King Edward has not shared the keen public indignation against Lord Lansdowne aroused by the report of the South African war commission, and after a minute examination of the circumstances it is understood he has consented to his lordship continuing as foreign minister. This decision has not prevented his majesty from frankly telling the ministers that he wanted something done to improve the military muddle.

The question of having some general, notably Lord Kitchener, as head of the war office, has been discussed at Balmoral between the King and the ministers, and it is learned that the concensus of opinion was that such an appointment would be interpreted as a modified form of military dictatorship which the public would not sanction.

ANOTHER SLIDE AT FRANK

Deafening Noise Heard From Opposite Side of Turtle Mountain.

Passengers arriving at Nelson, B. C., on Tuesday night over the Crow's Nest line report that another immense slide has occurred at Turtle Mountain, near Frank, Alberta. As far as known no lives were lost, but all the people of Frank have deserted the town again, being taken on to Blairmore and other towns. The slide occurred just as the train was near Frank, and as quickly as possible the brakes were applied and the train backed for several miles. After waiting over an hour the train was run into Frank, and the people, who were all waiting at the station, were taken on board.

All thought for a time that the slide was in the course of the original one and the train was backed as rapidly as possible. Later it was found that the slide was apparently on the opposite side of the mountain from Frank, but the noise was so deafening that no chances were taken a wait of over an hour ensuing four miles east of the town.

NEWS NOTES

Short Items Culled From Telegraphic Dispatches.

The Soo steel works will be sold by auction on October 1.

Conservatives carried the Rochester bye-election in England.

Prince Alert paced a mile on Empire track, New York, in 1.57.

Walks in the damp atmosphere has given the pope rheumatism.

It is believed at Washington that Columbia will not ratify the Panama canal treaty.

Col. Underwood, who assisted in locating the C. P. R. line through the Rockies, died on Tuesday last.

Sixty schools will be erected in the Doukhobor colonies in the Northwest at once.

The rate of taxation at Portage la Prairie will be 25 mills on the dollar of the town's assessment.

The Birmingham (Eng.) Chamber of Commerce has decided in favor of a policy imposing duties on foreign goods.

A new million dollar flour mill will be built at Keewatin of 3,000 barrels daily capacity.

Peter Veregin, the Doukhobor leader, has made immense purchases of horses, and farm, flour and saw mill machinery for the colony at Yorkton.

Mr. Chamberlain is charged with having been ignorant of Canada's attitude when he launched his fiscal scheme.

It is reported that the British battleships Russell, Illustrious and Renown have been ordered to Suda Bay, Isle of Crete, it is supposed in connection with the Balvan crisis.

Peter Hemmingway, of Corinth, Ont., was killed by a bull on Sept. 23. While attending to his duties in the barn the animal suddenly turned on him, and although dehorned, it trampled and bruised him. A hired man with a pitchfork drove the animal from the barn. Mr. Hemmingway lived only a few minutes after being released.

SCIENTIFIC MURDER.

Poison Hypodermically Injected Under the Skin of the Forehead

A case of murder by the injection of poison by means of a hypodermic syringe is reported by the Moscow correspondent of the London Daily Mail, who writes that an unpleasant smell proceeding from a wicker basket, which arrived as luggage at the Beest railway station in Moscow, and for which no claimant appeared, caused an examination to be made when the body of a well dressed man was found. An examination showed that death had resulted from the injection of poison under the skin by means of a syringe. Inquiries were instituted which proved the murdered man was a well to do land owner named Martin Tomesheffsky.

The perpetrators of the crime have been discovered and have admitted their guilt. The circumstances under which the deed was committed are of a highly sensational character.

Tomesheffsky had no occupation and resided at an hotel. He was passionately fond of card playing and visited a club every night, where he played for heavy stakes, and was as a rule very fortunate. On the day of the murder his cousin called at the hotel and asked him to come to his mother's house to play cards with two other friends of the family. At a given signal he was seized, his mouth covered so that he could not cry for assistance, and the poison was injected under the skin of the forehead. The three men then watched the effect of the poison for about half an hour, at the same time taking his money from his pocket, which they divided among themselves. After their victim died they placed the body in a basket and one of them tied a cord tightly around the neck to make sure, as he says, that there could be no further trouble about the murdered man. They were confident that their social position would prevent any suspicion falling on them. It was only after a strong chain of evidence had been completed that they confessed.

Largest in the World.

A Chicago dispatch says: One of the most extensive real estate deals in the history of the city has practically been completed for the University of Chicago. The transaction involves the purchase of the entire south frontage of the Midway Plaisance between Cottage Grove and Madison avenue, at a total consideration estimated at $1,000,000 for the land and $450,000 for the buildings.

The news of the extensive purchase confirms the reports which have been circulated in university circles for some time that the largest medical school in the world is to be established on the Midway. Rush Medical college will form the nucleus of the institution and will be supplemented by the McCormick Memorial institute for Infectious Diseases, extensive hospitals for which probably will be constructed on the "cottage" plan, and possibly the Chicago Polyclinic hospital.

Dastardly Work.

An attempt was made to wreck the C. P. R. train from Toronto on Monday night about eighteen miles west of Ottawa. Two planks were set on end in the culvert, so that about three feet of each projected above the track. The pilot of the engine broke over the planks, which were only two inches high, else the train would have been derailed. M. McGrath, who gives his place of residence as Montreal, has been arrested in connection with the accident. He was seen walking on the track a few miles from the point where the obstruction was placed.

South Africa Wants No. 1 Hard.

A report from Mr. Jardine, Canada's commercial agent in South Africa, says that he would be pleased to place Canadian wheat dealers in communication with millers in South Africa. Mr. E. R. Watson, of South Cape Colony, wrote to Mr. Jardine on May 20, asking for the names of two or three large Canadian wheat dealers from whom could be bought say 100,000 bushels of good spring wheat, such as No. 1 hard Manitoba, and to say if such could be sent by regular monthly steamers, cargoes to be paid for on arrival in East London.

NEWS NOTES.

The Independent Order of Foresters may build a temple in Winnipeg.

Several wheat cars were wrecked on the C. P. R. at Tyndall, Man., Sept. 22.

Cecil Beeson, a young Englishman, ended his life in a Winnipeg hotel last Monday by taking morphine.

The Canadian Pacific contemplate building many branch lines in Ontario.

Killarney and intermediate points have been connected by telephone with Winnipeg.

The ex-Lord Mayor of Dublin, while in Toronto, extolled Canada, and voiced Irish appreciation of the Dominion.

Fort William is endeavoring to secure the lake terminals of the Grand Trunk Pacific and will offer inducements.

The German state railway authorities are sending a number of engineers and traffic managers to Canada to study her railway system and methods. Five are leaving Hamburg on October 3.

The steamship Texan sailed Monday last for Delaware Breakwater direct, on the longest trip for a steamship ever attempted without stops. The distance is 13,900 miles. Capt. Morrison hopes to make it in fifty days. She has an immense cargo of sugar, canned salmon and general freight.

Map Showing Route of Grand Trunk Pacific R.R.

The accompanying map shows the proposed route of the new transcontinental line to be built within the space of seven years. The entire line from Moncton, its terminus on the Atlantic seaboard to Port Simpson on the Pacific will be 3,025 miles in length. The line from the Atlantic to Winnipeg will be built by the government and leased to the Grand Trunk on terms already known to our readers. From Edmonton the line strikes for the Peace River Pass, which is declared by engineers to offer the least difficulties to the building of a railroad of any pass in the mountains. Port Simpson is next to Vancouver, the best harbor in B. C. Surveyors are now busy in the mountains but no great progress will be made in this direction till next summer. A branch line will some time be run to Vancouver, and should the Alaskan Commission decide against Canada's claims a branch line on Canadian territory will in all probability be built to Dawson.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E' corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 aces more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

Notice to Contractors.

HIGHWAY BRIDGE OVER THE ELK RIVER AT MORRISSEY, B. C.

Sealed Tenders properly endorsed "Tender for Morrissey Bridge," will be received by the undersigned up to noon of Thursday, the 8th Oct. next, for the erection and completion of a wooden bridge across the Elk River at the town of Morrissey, East Kootenay District, B. C.

The drawings, specification and conditions of tendering and contract may be seen at the Public Engineer's Office, Lands and Works, Department, Victoria, B. C., at the Office of the Government Agent, Fort Steele, B. C., and at the Government Office, Fernie, B. C., on and after the 17th instant.

Tenders will not be considered unless made out on the forms supplied for the purpose and signed by the tenderer, and the agreement to execute a bond, appended to the form of tender, is duly signed by the tenderer and and two responsible residents of the Province, satisfactory to the Department, in the penal sum of two thousand [$2,000] dollars each, for the faithful performance of the work.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

W. S. GORE,

Deputy Commissioner of Lands and Works,
Lands and Works Department, Victoria, B. C.
12th September, 1903.

CONSERVATIVE PLATFORM.

[Adopted at Revelstoke, Sept. 13th, 1902]

1. That this convention reaffirm the policy of the party in matters of provincial roads and trails; the ownership and control of railways and the development of the agricultural resources of the province as laid down in the platform adopted in October, 1899, which is as follows:

"To actively aid in the construction o' trails throughout the undeveloped por tions of the province and the building o provincial trunk roads of public nesessity

"To adopt the principle of government ownership of railways in so far as the circumstances of the province will admit, and the adoption of the principle that no bonus should be granted to any railway company which does not give the government of the province control of rates over lines bonused, together with the option of purchase.

"To actively assist by state aid in the development of the agricultural resources of the province.

2. That in the meantime and until the railway policy above set forth can be accomplished, a general railway act be passed, giving freedom to construct railways under certain approved resgulations analogous to the system that has resulted in such extensive railway construction in the United States, with so much advantage to trade and commerce.

3. That to encourage the mining industry, the taxation of metalliferous mines should be on the basis of a percentage on the net profits.

4. That the government ownership of telephone systems should be brought about as a first step in the acquisition of public utilities.

5. That a portion of every coal area hereafter to be disposed of should be reserved from sale or lease, so that state owned mines may be easily assessible, if their operation becomes necessary or advisable.

6. That in the pulp land leases provision should be made for reforesting and that steps should be taken for the general preservation of forests by guarding against the wasteful des truction of timber

7. That the legislature and governmen of the province persevere in the effort to secure the exclusion of Asiatic labor.

8. That the matter of better terms in the way of subsidy and appropriations for the province should be vigorously pressed upon the Dominion government.

9. That the silver-lead industries of the province be fostered and encouraged by the imposition of increased customs duties on lead and lead produce imported into Canada, and that the conservative members of the Dominion House be urged to support any motion introduced for such a purpose.

10. That as industrial disputes almost invariably result in great loss and injury both to the parties directly concerned and to the public, legislation should be passed to provide means for an amicable adjustment of such disputes between employers and employees.

11. That it is advisable to foster the manufacture of the raw products of the province within the province as far as practicable by means of taxation on the said raw products, subject to rebate of the same in whole or part when manufactured in British Columbia.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

"Herbageum"

For Horses, Cattle & Poultry.

"International Stock Food."

Three Feeds for One Cent.

A. W. Bleasdell

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto.

Notice is hereby given that the Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, a corporation having its head office at the town of Fernie, in the Province of British Columbia, saw mill owner and lumber manufacturer has, by Deed of Assignment bearing date the 22nd day of September, 1903, assigned all its real and personal property to Arthur Hamilton Cree, of the said town of Fernie, Insurance Agent, in trust for the purpose of paying and satisfying ratiably and proportionately and without preference or priority all the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited.

A meeting of the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, will be held in Joyce's Hall, Fernie, British Columbia, on Wednesday, the 7th day of October, 1903, at the hour of 3 P.M.

All Creditors are required to file with the said assignee full particulars of all their claims duly proved as required by the provisions of the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto and the nature of the securities, if any, held by them, on or before the 7th day of November, 1903, after which date the assignee will proceed to distribute the assets among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which he shall then have notice.

Dated the 6th day of September, 1903.

ARTHUR H. CREE,
Assignee.

Fresh Fruit AND Vegetables

arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert
Confectioner

. . The . .

Fernie Free Press

from now

to

Jan. 1st, 1904,

only

50 cents.

Subscribe now.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to procpect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of John Brown's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. C. Tuttle's south west corner" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement.

244-4 H. C. TUTTLE
Dated August 31st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of A. Manahan's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Edward Miller s south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 EDWARD MILLER
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land; Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and peroleum and marked "Levi Klingesmith's south east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence north to chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-3 LEVI KLINGESMITH.
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of Mary Gabbett's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Nellie Bleasdell's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 NELLIE BLEASDELL
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of J. R. Webster's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Alice Tuttle's south west corner"; thence 80 chains east, thence 80 chains north, the ice 80chains west, thence 80 chains south to place of beginning.

244-4 ALICE TUTTLE
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agt.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petrolium on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked, "Mary Scott's south east corner" thence 80 chains west, thence 80 chains north, thence 80 chains east, thence 80 chains south to place of beginning.

244-4 MARY SCOTT
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "W. A. Bleasdell's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thenee south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 W. A. BLEASDELL
Dated Septembei 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk river:

Commencing at the north-west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence northerly along the foothills 80 chains; thence east about 40 chains to the East bank of Elk river; thence south along the said west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west about 40 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

C. J. ECKSTORM.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted on the W. bank of the Elk River about 12 miles north of the 35 mile post and marked John Brown's south west corner, thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south80 chains to the point of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.

JOHN BROWN,
Jas. Miller, Agent.

"Follow the Leader."

Is the name of our new Exercise Books.

We lead in

School Supplies

and can furnish

ribblers
Exercise Books
Note Books, &c

in immense variety.

Our line of READERS, etc., is complete.

Our "Blo-to-fil" Fountain Pen is a trade-winner.

Fernie Drug Store.
N. E. SUDDABY.

Boilers and Engines

ALSO
SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.
Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.
602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPE

Notice is hereby given that 30 day after date I intend to apply to the Chi Commissioner of Lands and Works for license to prospect for coal and petroleu on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at th south west corner of John Brown's co and petroleum claim and marked "Ste Podbielancik's south east corner" then west 80 chains; thence north 80 chain thence east 80 chains; thence south chains to the place of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.

STEVE PODBIELANCIK,
JAS. MILLER, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after dat intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descri lands: Commencing at a post planted at north west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and troleum claim and marked "A Manahan's so west corner" thence east 80 chains, thence no 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 A. MANAHAN
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Age

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after dat intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descri lands: Commencing at a post planted at north west corner of Edward Miller's coal petroleum and marked "Mary Gobbett's so west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence no 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 MARY GOBBET
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Age

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after dat intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descri lands: Commencing at a post planted at south west corner of Edward Miller's coal petroleum claim and marked "John F. Wilso south east corner" thence west 80 chains, the north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, the south 80 chains to the Place of commencement

244-4 JOHN F. WILSON
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Age

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after da intend to apply to the Chief Commissione Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descri lands: Commencing at a post planted at south west corner of A. Manahan's coal and troleum claim and marked "J. H. Wallac south east corner", thence west 80 chains, the north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, the south 80 chains to the place of commencem

244-4 J. H. WALLACE
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Ag

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after dat intend to apply to the Chief Commissione Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following describ land: Commencing at a post planted at south west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal a petroleum claim and marked "Jos. Podbiele cik's south east corner", thence west 80 chai thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chai thence south 80 chains to place of commenc ment.

244-4 JOS. PODBIELANCIK
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Age

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after dat intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect f coal and petroleum on the following describ lands: Commencing at a post planted at th north west corner of Mary Gobbett's coal a petroleum claim and marked "J. R. Webster south west corner", thence east 80 chains, then north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, then south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 J. R. WEBSTER
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Willer, Agen

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect fo coal and petroleum on the following describe lands: Commencing at a post planted at th south west corner of J. R. Webster's coal an petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Gilmore south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thenc north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains thenc south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 H. B. GILMORE
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agen

Lib. Legislative Ass. Dec 31 1901

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 14. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 248

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m,
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.
Office :—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

J. G. Cummings,
PROVINCIAL LAND SURVEYOR
FORT STEELE, B.C.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON
PIANO and ORGAN
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J.Barber,L.D.S.D.D.S.
DENTIST
OFFICE AND RESIDENCE
SECOND ELOOR, HILL BLOCK
Opposite Royal Hotel.
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

J. C. Morrison
D.D.S., L.D.S.
Has Located in Fernie, and is prepared to do all kinds of
DENTAL WORK
Crown and Bridge Work, Filling, Plates, etc.

Ask for British Lion or Mainland cigars For sale at all first-class places. Union made. Manufactured by Wm. Lietjan, Vancouver. x

W. R. ROSS CARRIES THIS RIDING

Very Close Election---Returns give Ross a Majority of Five.

The Socialists Poll a Good Vote. Official Count of Ballots Being Made To-day.

The election in this district on Saturday last resulted in the election of W R. Ross, the Conservative candidate, by a majority of five votes over E. C. Smith the Liberal, according to the count given by the different Deputy Returning Officers. These returns are:

POLLING PLACE.	ROSS	SMITH	MCPHERSON.
Fernie	180	157	85
Coal Creek	14	10	44
Sparwood	3	6	3
Michel	19	36	57
Loop	3	4	0
Crows Nest	0	11	4
Morrissey Mines	27	12	5
Tonkin	18	30	2
Morrissey Junction	20	11	0
Elko	6	16	1
Elkmouth	6	6	10
Jaffray	15	8	12
Phillips	5	4	1
Total	316	311	225

Majority for Ross, 5 votes.
Total vote—852.

All the parties worked hard on election day and nearly every available vote was polled. The fact that nearly 300 on the list did not take advantage of their franchise is explained by the fluctuating nature of the population in the lumber and mining camps. The three candidates spent the day in Fernie and were busily engaged in looking after their respective interests.

At the close of the polls at 6 o'clock the suspense of the crowd was not kept waiting long in learning the result in the town. The returns from the three polling places gave Ross a majority of 23. It was then apparent to everybody that the contest would be very close. Sparwood gave Smith a majority and Coal Creek reversed it. The returns from the distant points were received by a special wire in the Royal Hotel offlice room where a large number of citizens gathered. As the figures came in, first favorable to one side and then to the other, the countenances of those in each party brightened or fell. Interspersed with the local figures the wires told of results in other parts of the Province. When the wires closed at 1:30 Sunday morning the suspense both as to the local fight and the results throughout the Province was at its height. In the latter the Libera ls appeared to be exactly even with the Conservatives, while Ross was leading by about 12 votes in the Fernie riding, with Crow's Nest, Elkmouth, Jaffray and Phillips to hear from.

The returns were not received from Phillips, Jaffray Elkmouth and Crows Nest until Sunday and as the contest was known to be very close the suspense was keen duriug the interval.

SUPREME COURT SITTING.

The next sitting of the Supreme Court will be held at Nelson on Oct. 19th. Two cases from this district will be heard,

Scott vs. Fernie Lumber Co., a damage suit. The plaintiff, John Scott, of Fernie, claims that while driving a team of horses for the defendant company, the horses went in a wrong direction resulting in him being thrown which resulted in his losing a leg. He claims that the horses were unfit for use at the time.

Wm. Moon will be tried on the charge getting away with the post-office funds while acting as postmaster at Michel.

FOR B. C. RAILWAYS.

Where Dominion Subsidies Will be Spent.

Ottawa, Oct. 6.—Of the two million dollar subsidies which come to British Columbia railways this year, as announced in a special dispatch a few days ago, it is understood that the following roads will secure the amounts mentioned.

For a line from Spence's Bridge to Nicola and Similkameen, 42 miles $150-000.

For an extension of the E. & N. line from Wellington to Comox, 60 miles, $200,000.

For a line from Vernon to Midway, $600,000.

For a line from Cranbrook to Golden, $600,000.

It is understood that Maclean Bros. for the Coast-Kootenay line will receive no aid.

BORN.

RICHARDS—At Fernie on Monday, Oct. 5th, the wife of Mr. Charles Richards, of a daughter.

GENERAL NEWS.

W. A. Galliher, M. P., has returned to Ottawa where he will remain until the end of the session, which may be another month yet.

Hon. Mr. Justice Walkem this week announced his retirement from the bench of the Supreme Court of this province. Mr. Justice Walkem has served the province for 21 years in his present capacity, and is the oldest judge in point of service in British Columbia.

Paul Babcock, a prominent capitalist, died last night at his home in Mount Clair, N. J., aged 63 years. Mr. Babcock had been director in the Standard Oil Company until this year, and was formerly president of the Liebig Manufacturing company, and a director of the British Columbia Copper company.

The Shamrock Lacrosse Club was defeated in its third game at the coast on Saturday last by the Westminster team. The score was 7 goals to 3. On Tuesday the eastern champions defeated Vancouver by 9 goals to nothing.

An attempt was made early Wednesday morning by some one believed to be among the dissatisfied employees of the Consolidated Co., to blow up a portion of the Algoma Central railway track near the brick plant at Sault St. Marie. Dynamite was used, and although the attempt was partially successful, and several feet of track were torn up, it was easily repaired, and trains were running the next day. Ten militia men are now distributed over the three miles ef track each night to watch for such occurrences but the number is too small. The miners and others have plenty of dynamite on hand and further trouble is feared.

MET A HORRIBLE DEATH

Hugh Robinson killed on the Railway Track on the High Line.

A shocking accident occurred on Thursday evening when the mine engine was shunting cars on the high line preparatory to making the eleven o'clock trip to the mines. The body of a man was observed lying on the track and before the engine could be stopped it struck him. He was removed to the Fernie hospital where he died the next morning. The name of the unfortunate man is Hugh Robinson who lived on the mine road just above the high line switch. His son, who works for the C. P. R. at Cranbrook, was wired for and he came to Fernie last evening. The body will be buried by the authorities in the Fernie cemetary.

An investigation by the police was made and the trainmen told a clear story of the accident, which made an inquest unnecessary. Frank Rutley was the engineer and his fireman, John Healy, was in the cab with him. The engine was running up the high line backwards, after empties. Two brakesmen, named A. Casley and F. Cameron were standing on the foot-rail holding a lantern which was doing duty for the headlight. They saw the body lying lengthwise between the rails and some distance ahead but before the engine could be stopped it had run over him crushing his chest and the back part of his head. The deceased was somewhat addicted to the liquor habit and it is said that he was under its influence earlier in the evening. He had evidently lain down on the track while on his way home. The deceased has been a resident of Fernie about three years. He was a stout man and was approaching 50 years of age. He formerly worked at Coal Creek saw mill and has since been running a hennery.

OFFICIAL COUNT

Returning Officer Alexander finished the official count at 5 p. m. to-day. The figures are :

W. R. Ross	316
E. C. Smith	309
J. R. McPherson	221
Rejected ballots	50
Total vote	896
Majority for Ross	7

COAL CREEK NEWS.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

The church opening which took place last Sunday was a decided success. Rev. Thompson, of Cranbrook, preached in the morning to a very appreciative audience and the pulpit in the evening was taken by Rev. Robson, of Fernie, who preached to a full house. On Monday evening a programme of music, singing and recitations was rendered. Rev. Thompson and Robson gave able addresses on the importance of churches and church work. Much of the programme was furnished by Fernie talent and thanks is due to the Fernie Methodist choir for their assistance as well as as to Mrs. Bell and Miss Gracie Dudley who recited. The church was decorated for the occasion by the ladies with large inches of evergreen and autumn leaves. A lunch was served at the close of the programme. The contribution amounted to thirty two dollars.

Mr. Webber rebroke his leg while walking about the yard Thursday night. He has just lately recovered from the first. The second break was due to tripping on a wire.

Dr. Keith, of Cranbrook, is to succeed Dr. Ker who is returning east shortly to take up practice in the city of Montreal.

Fifty men have lost their job here lately owing to the deeps being closed in No. 3 mine.

T. C. Colwell spent Sunday in Cranbrook supplying for Rev. S. J. Thompson who was occupied here.

Services on Sunday will be held in the new church. In the morning at 11 a.m. and in the evening at 7 p. m. All are welcome.

Miss McNee has succeeded in securing her permit and will assume charge of school on Monday.

TO BE OR NOT TO BE.

CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT SUSTAINED BY A NARROW MAJORITY.

Returns to Date Give Conservatives 22 Seats, Liberals 17, Labor 1, Socialists 2.

The returns from the elections held a week ago are not all in but the only doubtful seats are Similkameen and Skeena. Up to the time of writing Shatford in the former, and Clifford in the latter, both Conservatives, are in the lead and these seats are generally counted Conservative. Upon this supposition the government has 22 supporters against an opposition of 20 members made up of 17 Liberals, 1 Labor and 2 Socialists. After the former eleet a speaker they will have a majority of one over all the other members. The following are the returns from each constituency. Many of the large ridings have small places yet to hear from but the general results will not be affected.

Alberni.
McInnes, Liberal....253
Hickey, Conservative.... 91
Majority for McInnes, 162.

Atlin.
Stables, Liberal....
Young, Conservative....
Majority for Young, 34.

Cariboo.
Jones, Liberal....223
Murphy, Liberal....255
Rogers, Conservative....191
Adams, Conservative....216
Majority for Jones, 7. Murphy, 39.

Chilliwack.
Munroe, Liberal....207
Atkinson, Conservative....189
Majority for Munroe, 18.

Columbia.
W. C. Wells, Liberal, acclamation.

Comox.
Young, Liberal....241
Grant, Conservative.... 282
Majority for Grant, 41.

Cowichan.
Evans, Liberal....164
Skinner, Conservative....158
Majority for Evans, 6.

Cranbrook
King, Liberal....462
Caven, Conservative....412
Majority for King, 50.

Delta.
Oliver, Liberal....365
Ladner, Conservative....235
Majority for Oliver, 130.

Dewdney.
Forrester, Liberal....155
McBride, Conservative....336
Majority for McBride, 181.

Esquimalt.
Jardine, Liberal....208
Pooley, Conservative....234
Majority for Pooley, 26.

Fernie.
Smith, Liberal 311
Ross, Conservative....316
McPherson, Socialist....225
Plurality for Ross, 5.

Greenwood.
Brown, Liberal....380
Spanke, Conservative....265
Mills, Socialist....332
Plurality for Brown, 48.

Grand Forks.
Clements, Liberal....175
Fraser, Conservative....345
Riordan, Socialist.... 88
Plurality for Fraser, 170.

Islands.
Patterson, Liberal....
Bullock, Conservative....
Majority for Patterson (estimated) 37.

Kamloops.
Deane, Liberal....447
Fulton, Conservative....467
Majority for Fulton, 20.

Kaslo.
Retallack, Liberal....286
Green, Conservative....325
Shannon, Socialist....179
Plurality for Green, 39.

Lillooet.
A. McDonald, Conservative, acclamation.

Nanaimo.
Quennel, Conservative....325
Hawthornwaite, Socialist....486
Shepherd. Liberal....294
Plurality for Hawthornwaite; 161.

Nelson
Houston, Conservative....442
Taylor, Liberal 375

Newcastle.
Murray, Liberal....202
Bryden, Conservative....207
Williams, Socialist....289
Plurality for Williams, 82.

Okanagan.
Sterling, Liberal....366
Ellison, Conservative....548
Majority for Ellison, 182.

Revelstoke.
Brown, Liberal....
Cotton, Conservative....
Majority for Cotton, 123.

Rossland.
MacDonald, Liberal....437
Goodeve, Conservative....345
Majority for MacDonald, 92.

Saanich.
Tanner, Liberal 241
Eberts, Conservative....210
Majority for Tanner, 31.

Similkameen.
McLean, Liberal....
Shatford, Conservative....
Majority for Shatford 66.

Skeena.
Herman, Liberal, partial....126
Clifford, Conservative, partial....157
Majority for Clifford, 43.

Slocan.
Davidson, Liberal....324
Hunter, Conservative 297
Majority for Davidson, 32.

Vancouver.
Conservatives
Hon. R. G. Tatlow....2540
James F. Garden....2463
Hon. Charles Wilson....2416
W. J. Bowser....2304
A. H. B. McGowan....2300
Liberals
Joseph Martin....1546
Dr. Brydone-Jack....1461
T. S. Baxter....1411
F. Williams....1357
C. R. Monck.... 910
J. T. Mortimer, Socialist....1328
A. G. Perry, Labor....1248
J. D. Turnbull, Liberal....1193
J. McLaren, Labor....1165
A. R. Stebbings, Socalist.... 956
W. Griffiths, Socialist Labor.... 284
Messrs. Tatlow, Garden, Wilson, Bowser and Macgowan elected.

Victoria.
Conservatives
Hayward....1396
McPhillips....1352
Helmcken....1342
Hunter 1223
Liberals
Cameron....1860
Drury....1745
McNiven 1627
Hall 1554
Waters, Socialist.... 697
Messrs. Cameron, Drury, McNiven, and Hall, Liberals, elected.

Yale.
Henderson, Liberal....265
McLanamon, Conservative....183
Majority for Henderson, 82.

Ymir.
Parr, Liberal....276
Wright, Conservative....393
Majority for Wright, 116.

Later returns confirm the report as given above. Similkameen, Skeena, Comox, and Revelstoke, about which there were some doubts have all elected Conservatives with safe leads.

Two of the cabinet were defeated, Goodeve, of Rossland, and McPhillips, of Victoria. Mr. C. E. Pooley member for Esquimalt, has been appointed Attorney-General, but the remaining minister has not been chosen.

COAL OUTPUT FOR SEPTEMBER.

Serious Decrease on Account of Car Shortage.

The output for the month of September dropped down to 63,191 tons, a decrease of 10,000 tons from that of last month. Coal Creek showed a steady increase but the closing down of the mines at Morrissey pending the dispute between the miners and the management seriously lessened the output at that colliery while at Michel the mines were closed several times owing to the shortage of cars supplied by the C. P. R.

The coke shipments also fell short on account of the latter reason. The following are the figures.

Coal Creek	10,665 tons
Michel	6,698 "
Total	17,350 ton

CUSTOMS RETURNS

Customs and Inland Revenue for month of September.

Customs collections made at the outport of Fernie for month ending Sept. 30, 1903.

Value of imports,
Duteable	$13,322 00
Free	8,072 00
Total	$21,394 00
Duty collected	$3,050 41

Inland Revenue collections at Fernie for month of Sept., 1903.

Spirits	$ 476 82
Malt	528 45
Cigars	19 50
Total	$1,624.77

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HABBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Habberton

CHAPTER XIV.

A FRIENDLY CANTEEN.

TWO Johnnies got into the boat, putting two of us, still bound, in the stern, and crossed the river; then one brought the boat back and took over the remainder of the party, first stowing our carbines in the bow under the legs of a man who held a double barreled gun ready for use. When all had crossed, the boat was hauled up into the bushes just as we had found it on the other side. Then we were marched about half a mile from the river to a big log hut.

"Now, boys," said my old acquaintance, "we'll make you feel as much at home as we can without bein' unsafe. We'll onloose one of you at a time, so you can stretch your arms an' eat, an' we'll send word to our camp soon ez we can for somebody to come an' take you 'long to Richmond."

"We're in no hurry to get there, I'm sure," said I.

He looked at me sharply a moment and replied:

"Mebbe they ain't as well fixed thar as you uns at Fort Monroe, where they tuck us when we got ketched, but they'll do the best they can for you. Besides, you'll be exchanged 'fore long, just as we was."

It was real kind of him to say this, and I told him so, but my heart grew heavier and heavier. What would father and mother think? Who would write them about my disappearance? What would the writer say? Could there be any possible way of getting word home from Richmond? I asked my old acquaintance this question and told him I was afraid my disappearance would kill my parents unless they knew what had happened.

"That's so, my friend," said he. "Just you write a scrap to some friend of yours in your camp, an' I'll see it reaches him in a week. Nuthin' else, though, mind, except that you're captured."

"How will you get it there?" I asked, with natural curiosity.

"Ask me no questions, an' I'll tell you no lies," said he. "You give me coffee one time, don't you remember? Well, that's enough."

As it happened that just then was my turn to be unbound, I got some letters out of my breast pocket and found a blank half sheet of paper, on which I penciled:

Dear Hamilton—We were captured by the enemy. Tell my father not to worry. Our captors say we'll be exchanged pretty soon.

JACK FROST.

My old acquaintance looked over my shoulder while I wrote. When I had finished, he said:

"Put in a little more. Say 'The man that I gave coffee to when he was ketched is the man that's got me, an' he says I'll be well treated or his name ain't Clay Hillyard.' That ought to make 'em feel easier to home, oughtn't it?"

"I'm sure it would if they knew you," said I. "I wrote them a long letter after that scout in which you were captured, about how you fixed fried bacon and hoecake for us that night and how you showed me how to parch corn in bacon fat. I wrote how awfully hungry I was on that trip, too, and my mother wrote back that she'd pray for you every night of her life for being kind to her boy."

"Sho! You git out! Is that so though?" said my particular Johnny, with a sheepish look. "Well, mothers is all alike, I s'pose." Then he and one of his party began to prepare a meal of bacon and hoecake, for it was now nearly dark.

The aroma of the cooking diverted my thoughts from the situation, for we had started near noon and in such haste that we had forgotten to bring our haversacks. The Johnnies evidently intended to feed us, for they were preparing an immense quantity of food.

"Say, sarge," remarked my friend to the large, quiet man who seemed to be the leader of the party, "these boys cayn't eat with their arms tied. S'pose we tie their legs instead. They'll be safe ag'in runnin' away, an' they'll be more comfortable."

The sergeant muttered assent. The change was made, and then, as we sat on a long, low bench against one wall, we were bountifully fed. We chatted freely, our captors being quite willing to converse, and the conversation ran as entirely to farming methods as if there was no war or other special subject of interest. Two or three hours after dark the sergeant said to us:

"Now, gentlemen, any of you that tries to get away 'll be shot like a dog, but if you behave yourselves you can sleep as comfortable as if you was at home. Just lie down on the floor where you are whenever you like, or sit up, but keep to that side of the room. We'll keep to this side. If you even put your hands to your feet you'll be shot, so don't do it."

I said something to the effect that we weren't fools. Meanwhile my friend and the third man dropped upon the floor, with their guns and our carbines, while the sergeant sat down upon a box in front of the fire, cocked a double barreled shotgun and kept his eyes upon us. Conversation languished after that. It is hard to talk to a man whom you know is ready to take

UNDERWEAR FOR NORTHWEST WINTERS.

Stanfield's is the underwear for Northwest wear. Special weight—specially woven—to keep you "warm as toast," no matter how low the mercury drops.

Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear

comes in all sizes to fit every figure—large and small—thin and stout. And every "Stanfield" garment is guaranteed absolutely unshrinkable.

Good Dealers Everywhere Sell "Stanfield's.

"All I want, you said?"

your life on sufficient provocation. We exchanged remarks occasionally with one another, but they weren't at all hilarious. I was just dropping asleep, still sitting on the bench, when Brainard whispered:

"Any water in your canteen, Jack?"

I hadn't thought before of the captain's canteen of whisky. Would it be safe to tell Charley in the hearing of the guard that the canteen across my shoulder was full of whisky? Suppose the Johnnies should learn of it, drink it and get fighting mad and kill us? I answered Brainard, "No."

Then, remembering some jar inscriptions that he and I had spelled out together in our village drug store and persuaded the druggist to translate, I continued, trusting the sergeant did not understand Latin, "Spiritus frumenti."

The surprise that gleamed through Brainard's eyes would have startled the sergeant had he seen it. Before I dropped asleep again the guard was changed by the sergeant rousing the man of the three who seemed to amount to least. He was a thin, rather feeble looking fellow, with a stupid face, the lower half of which had been left unfinished soon after it was begun. He threw fresh wood on the fire so as to keep the room alight, then he sat down with the gun and yawned so fearfully that I feared he might fall asleep with his hand on the trigger and rouse the house, perhaps to our serious injury. Finally, however, he got entirely awake, and then he seemed to feel dismal amid so much silence, so he tried to chat with us. He was a poor talker, but Brainard helped him along to the best of his ability. They drawled along for an hour, and under the soothing influence of their monotones, the snoring of the sergeant and the wheezing of the other Johnny I began to drop asleep again just as the guard was explaining a lot of bad feelings he had from time to time.

"I could cure you, I think, if you wouldn't get me into trouble," said Brainard.

"Ef you've got any medicine of any kind, stranger," said the guard, "fo' the Lawd's sake, gimme some. I don't keer what it is. I know it'll do me good some way."

"Wouldn't whisky be the very best medicine you could have?" Brainard asked.

The man's face looked like a beatified saint in a fourteenth century picture as he placed a hand on his waist and murmured "Oh!"

"If I find you some right here without stirring, will you promise to leave me a little of it?" asked Brainard.

"Of co'se I will," said the guard softly. "But how— Sho! Quit your foolin'."

"I'm not fooling," said Brainard. "You promise, too, not to wake your friends to help drink it all? I don't believe in whisky except for sickness, and your friends don't look or act as if they had any bad feelings."

"Stranger," said the guard hoarsely, "I'd promise anything, excep' to be a Yank or to let you git out, fo' one drink of whisky."

"All right," said Brainard, taking the captain's canteen from my neck, drawing the cork and holding it out to the guard.

What Brainard was up to I could not imagine, and I closed my eyes as the guard stepped toward him. I feared Charley had some desperate idea of seizing the man's gun as he passed the canteen. In such case discretion would be the better part of valor—for the rest of us. But there was no scene. The guard quickly resumed his seat, and out of a mere slit of my eye I could see he had his gun ready for us with one hand while he raised the canteen to his mouth with the other.

"All I want, you said?" he whispered after he had ascertained that it really was whisky.

"All you want," was the reply, "so you leave me a little in case of sickness."

How that canteen did gurgle for a full minute! When the drinker was compelled to stop for breath, he held the canteen in front of him with a "you have saved my life" expression of countenance that was really touching. Then he began again and drank for a full minute longer, it seemed to me. As he breathed a long sigh of content he placed the canteen at his feet and said:

"Stranger, you're a gentleman. Nobody ever done me so much good befo'."

"I'm glad to have been of service," said Brainard. "My friend here helped your friend there to a good drink of coffee about three months ago, and I'm glad to be about even with him."

"You're a gentleman. I say it again, an' I'll say it always."

Evidently whisky really was the medicine he needed, for he began to be quite happy, though quiet. Then he fixed his eye on something on the floor. He appeared to go into a brown study. Finally he closed his eyes and loosened his grasp on his gun, which fell softly across his knees. I looked toward Brainard to wink, but to my horror I saw him loosening the strap at his feet and motioning me to do likewise. Then he rose softly, took the guard's gun, handed it to me and proceeded to tie the fellow's feet.

Then I understood what Charley was up to, and, although I was so frightened that I was afraid I would drop the gun, I covered the sergeant and my rebel friend with it. I wasn't going to be outdone in appearance of bravery by any five foot ex-student of theology alive, even if he happened to be my particular friend. Nevertheless as I stood there with that gun I devoutly prayed that the slumbers of the recumbent Johnnies might continue to be very sweet.

Meanwhile Brainard carefully unbound the two other men of our own party. I wondered why he didn't wake them and tell them to loosen themselves, but I offered no suggestions. I don't believe I could have spoken had I tried. With the belts taken from our boys Brainard softly bound, or hobbled, the feet of the sleeping graycoats. Then he cut the sling strap from our captain's canteen and bound their hands also. They became somewhat restive under this operation, and the sergeant suddenly opened his eyes. The fire that shot from those eyes when the sergeant saw me with his gun at a point made me tremble, and when he strained at his bonds I recalled the story of Samson.

"We're awfully sorry, sergeant," said Brainard, "that it had to be done, but duty is duty, you know."

The sergeant was speechless. Perhaps 'twas just as well, for I learned afterward that he was a member of the church. He did, however, arouse my old acquaintance by nudging him with his tied feet, but when that matter of fact fellow grasped the situation he ejaculated, "Well, I'll be ——."

Charley took one of our boys and went out of the hut. They came back in about half an hour and said they had the boat ready. In the interval my old acquaintance had exclaimed about once in five minutes and each time apparently after profound thought, "Well, I'll be ——."

I finally told him I hoped not, and it wasn't his fault we had turned the tables on him.

"Jest tell me how you done it all," said he, "an' I won't ask no more."

"We didn't do it," said I, thinking to get off a practical temperance lecture that might be repeated after the war. "We didn't do it; whisky did it." Then I nodded suggestively toward the guard who had wanted medicine.

"Whisky?" exclaimed the questioner, with a wide eyed look. "An' you didn't offer me a toothful?" Then he looked reproachfully and remarked, "I wouldn't hev thought it of you."

This made me feel so bad that I hastened to say:

"I didn't do it. I never thought of the whisky. 'Twas given to me to use in case we got a soaking. I wouldn't have thought of it again. I haven't tasted whisky three times in my life."

The poor fellow looked at me searchingly and finally said: "I've got to b'lieve you. I do b'lieve you. But, say, whar was you brung up?"

"Score one for the north," said I to myself, as I shortly answered, "York state."

"Now, gentlemen," said Brainard, "we'd better move before any of your friends drop along and upset our plans. Two of us will first take the sergeant and the firearms across the river."

As the sergeant didn't demur Brainard loosened his feet and took him down to the skiff, the other boys staggering under all the weapons except the gun, which I held. In about 15 minutes one came back with the boat, and the remainder of us crossed, the disembarkation being covered in the starlight by Brainard and a Confederate double barreled gun.

Then we sat, or stood, on that river bank until dawn began to break, Brainard having whispered to me that it would not be safe to approach camp in the dark. We did not dare to make a fire, and as we had not worn our overcoats when we started the morning before we were chilled to the bone. I suggested we should try to warm ourselves with single sips of the whisky, if any was left, but Brainard objected, saying it was no time for experiments. As for the Johnnies, they dropped upon the ground and slept as peacefully as if nothing unusual had occurred.

(To be Continued.)

Seeing With One Eye.

A great many, perhaps the majority, of otherwise well informed people believe that they see the same with one eye as with both eyes. That this is not the case one can easily convince himself by the following simple experiment: Cover one of the eyes with a hand or a bandage and let the experimenter attempt to snuff out a candle suddenly placed within a few feet of him. He will almost invariably miss the flame, either overreaching, underreaching or putting the fingers too far to the right or left of the flame. With both eyes normal and open the accommodation for distance and direction is instantaneous.

Washing a Sweater.

Sometimes a sweater that has been sent out to be laundered will come back distorted in shape. Often it is the sleeves, which will be abbreviated to nothing or stretched to almost twice their natural length. In the latter case, procure some thick boards, just the length that you would have the sleeves. Dip the sleeves into boiling water, push a board into each so as to stretch it transversely, then dry in the hot sun. When dry, dip again in boiling water, this time slightly salted, and dry again in the sun on the boards.

Size of the Oceans.

Most men seem to be as ignorant about the size of the sea as they are of the distance between the heavenly planets. Invention gives a few interesting facts: The Pacific covers 68,000,000 miles, the Atlantic 30,000,000 and the Indian, Arctic and Antarctic oceans 42,000,000. To stow away the contents of the Pacific it would be necessary to fill a tank a mile long, a mile wide and a mile deep every day for 440 years. Put in figures, the Pacific holds in weight 948,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons. The Atlantic averages a depth of not quite three miles. Its water weighs 325,000,000,000,000,000 tons, and a tank to contain it would have each of its sides 430 miles long and deep.

WELL AND STRONG

AFTER ELEVEN YEARS OF GREAT SUFFERING.

A Wonderful Tribute to the Power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to Cure Stubborn Disease.

Proof upon proof has accumulated that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure when doctors, hospital treatment and all other medicines fail. Paralyzed limbs have been restored to strength, rheumatic sufferers made well, weak, anaemic girls and women made bright, active and strong; neuralgic pains banished and the poor dyspeptic given a new digestion when it seemed almost hopeless to expect a cure. Here is a bit of strong proof that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills bring health and strength after years of suffering. Mr. Louis Brien is a well known resident of St. Didace, Que., and tells of his years of suffering as follows: "Eleven years ago, while working in the bush, I strained myself and brought on terrible pains in my stomach and back, where the trouble seemed to locate. I had frequent fits of vomiting, which caused much distress. Sometimes I could work, and then again for months at a time I would be wholly unable to do anything; but even at the time I could work I was always suffering. At different times I was treated by three doctors, but they were unable to help me. Then I went to Montreal and put myself under the care of a doctor there. His medicine relieved me while I was inactive, but as soon as I attempted work or exertion of any kind the pains returned worse than before. All this time I was growing weaker and less able to resist the inroads of the trouble. Then Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were brought to my notice, and I began to use them. From that time I began to regain my health and by the time I had used thirteen boxes I was once more a well strong man. The proof of this is that I can do as hard a day's work as anyone and never have the slightest symptoms of the old trouble. I am only sorry that I did not know of the pills sooner—they would have saved me much suffering and money as well."

With such proof as this, that even apparently hopeless cases can be cured, there can be no reasonable doubt that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will restore health in all cases where given a fair trial. These pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50c. per box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. See that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around every box.

Carelessness at the Track.

"It was sheer carelessness on somebody's part that caused Charley to lose money on that race," said young Mrs. Torkins sympathetically.

"How do you know?"

"I saw it in the paper. The horse was left at the post. The idea of putting a horse in a race and then neglecting to unhitch him!"

English as She Is Spoke.

"Think of it! For three days and three nights that quartet sat about a table, shuffling, dealing and cashing in jackpots, and when the game was finally broken up every man had exactly the amount he had begun with."

"Humph! Odd the way they came out even, isn't it?"

Afraid of the Signs.

Mrs. Brown—How do you like your neighbor, Mrs. Black?

Mrs. Green—Oh, I like her well enough, but I suspect she doesn't think much of me. I saw our girl talking to her over the fence last evening.

John L. Meyers, a wealthy lumberman of Tennessee, returned after 28 years' absence to his native place, Darlington, Indiana. He was recognized as the man who had killed a neighbor 28 years before and was promptly arrested, charged with the offence, and lodged in jail.

A double-headed snake has been discovered at Half Moon Bay, California. It can crawl backwards as easily as it can forwards. It is about 32 inches long.

A fairly brisk trade exists in skulls and they fetch anything from 75cts to $25, according to their antiquity and rarity. Anatomists are not the only persons who purchase them, for they are bought by private people and by museum authorities.

MANY HELPLESS WITH PARALYSIS

Who Could Now be Well Had They but Known of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

We do not claim that every one who is paralyzed can be cured by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, for many are beyond the reach of any medical treatment and must finish their days in helplessness and suffering.

It is rather to those who are only partially paralyzed and to those who are slowly but surely developing the symptoms which indicate the approach of such ailments that we would suggest the advisability of using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the great food cure for diseases of the nerves.

When you find yourself lying awake nights, suffer from indigestion and headache, feel drowsy after meals and losing energy, ambition and courage, it is time to pay attention to the nerves. You may find yourself irritable at times, worried over little things, unable to concentrate the mind, forgetful and absentminded, disheartened and discouraged. Better give some attention to the nerves.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures and prevents paralysis and locomotor ataxia. It does not ease by inducing unconsciousness and unnatural sleep. It does not deaden the nerves as do opiates and narcotics. But, on the other hand, by assisting nature and supplying the elements from which are formed new blood and nerve force, effects thorough and lasting cure and is bound to benefit all who use it.

Seldom, if ever, has any medicine secured such hearty endorsement of physicians and people alike. The cures which it has brought about have often been most extraordinary, and anyone who regularly and persistently uses this great food cure is sure to find it of inestimable value as a nerve restorative and blood builder.

By noting your increase in weight while using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food you can prove that new firm flesh and muscular tissue are being added to the body. 50 cents a box, six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

How Mosquito Got His Revenge

"Do you see the glancing sheen of yonder silvery pond?" inquired the mosquito leader of his faithful followers.

They stared long and earnestly at the object he pointed out.

"We do," they hummed.

"When the shadows fall," the leader went on, "a girl and a guitar will appear at the margin of the shining waters. She will play the guitar, my brothers, but only one note. You know the note. It is that fatal note that the murderous men of science have learned that no mosquito can hear and live. While the maiden plays that note we may not approach the pond. But my soul hungers for revenge against this cruel siren, and I mean to have it. This night I venture to the pond."

"No, no!" hummed the distressed followers.

"Do not seek to dissuade me," cried the mosquito leader. "I must go, but I will return. Keep silence that you may listen. Let some of you gather the filaments of the fuzzy bush and with them fill my ears. Yes, yes; that's the stuff. A little more in the left. There, I am quite deaf. The note cannot harm me. And now for vengeance on the siren."

Two hours later he winged his way back to his anxious followers. He flew slowly, because he was heavy with loot.

"Clear my ears," he huskily cried as he sank upon a poplar leaf. They flew to obey.

"And your revenge, master?" eagerly asked the second in command.

"My revenge is complete," the hero answered, with a hum of triumph. "I bit the siren nine times!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Unique Command.

At Boulogne, during a royal reception, a number of English ladies in their anxiety to see everything pressed with such force against the soldiers who were keeping the line that the latter were forced to give way and generally were—to use the expression of policemen—"hindered in the execution of their duty." The officer in command, observing the state of affairs, called out:

"One roll of the drum—if they don't stand back kiss them all."

After the first sound of the drum the ladies took to flight.

"If they had been French," said a Parisian journal, "they would have remained to a woman."

The Blow on the Jaw.

A man struck with any degree of force upon the mental area of the jaw, although he may be in perfect physical condition, instantly collapses and falls to the ground. The attitude assumed in recovery, which may be instantaneous or delayed some minutes, is most characteristic. He squirms about, raises his head and rolls his eyes in an attempt to locate himself. He tries to get on his side and elbow; he endeavors to rise upon his hands and knees. If he regains his feet he staggers like a drunken man, and should he proceed to reopen hostilities he is usually promptly "put out" by his adversary. The blow is practically never fatal; the heart's action is never unduly accelerated; the pulse and respiration are normal; the pupils are normal; there is no headache, no sweats, no cold extremities, no pallor—none of the ordinary signs of shock or concussion.

A Widespread Vanity.

In these days there seem to be as many writers as there are readers. The spread of authorship and its egregious pride is hit off in this dialogue from the Fliegende Blatter:

A guest at a hotel table reading the bill of fare says, "Your bill of fare is great!"

"I am glad to hear it," replies the head waiter. "I am its author."

A hen at Holbeach, England, is said to have laid an egg measuring 10 inches in circumference round the longest part and 9 inches at the widest, and weighing 6½ ounces. This contained another perfect egg.

When Rheumatism doubles a man up physician and sufferer alike lose heart and often despair of a cure, but here's the exception. Wm. Pegg, of Norwood, Ont., says: "I was nearly doubled up with rheumatism. I got three bottles of South American Rheumatic Cure and they cured me. It's the quickest acting medicine I ever saw." 18

It is said that when Mr. Gladstone read a book by Mr. Carnegie, he remarked that he admired the courage of a man, who, without knowing how to write, wrote on a subject of which he knew nothing.

A LETTER TO MOTHERS.

Mrs. Jas. E. Harley, Worthington, Ont., gives permission to publish the following letter for the benefit of other mothers who have young children in their homes. She says:—"I have many reasons to be grateful to Baby's Own Tablets, and to recommend them to other mothers. Our little girl is now about fourteen months old, and she has taken the Tablets at intervals since she was two months old, and I cannot speak too highly of them. Since I came here about a year ago, every mother who has small children has asked me what I gave our baby to keep her in such even health, and I have replied 'absolutely nothing but Baby's Own Tablets.' Now nearly every child here gets the tablets when a medicine is needed, and the old-fashioned crude medicines, such as castor oil and soothing preparations which mothers formerly gave their little ones, are discarded. Our family doctor also strongly praises the Tablets, and says they are a wonderful medicine for children. Accept my thanks for all the good your Tablets have done my little one, and I hope other mothers will profit by my experience."

Baby's Own Tablets can be given with absolute safety to the youngest, frailest child, and they are guaranteed to cure all the minor ailments of little ones. Sold by all medicine dealers or mailed at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Use Lever's Dry Soap (a powder) to wash woolens and flannels—you'll like it.

The importation of tombstones into Ireland from Italy and their sale as of Irish manufacture is the subject of protest by the Dublin Trades Council.

The old, invariable virtue of

St. Jacobs Oil

makes it the king cure for

Sprains and Bruises

Price, 25c. and 50c.

NEWS BY THE CABLE

GOSSIP FROM THE HUB OF THE UNIVERSE.

Lord Strathcona's Fiscal Ideas—He Says a Two-Shilling duty on Wheat Would not Raise Price of Bread in England one Farthing.

London, Sept. 29.—Lord Strathcona, when interviewed on Canada's attitude towards Mr. Chamberlain's proposals, said that free trade within the empire is not possible as far as the colonies are concerned. A two shilling duty on wheat and the same on flour, would not raise the price of bread here a farthing. Referring to the Canadian manufacturers resenting a preference on foodstuffs only, Lord Strathcona said he was sure traders and manufacturers will show themselves reasonable, rational and fair to the people. They will consider, Lord Strathcona had not the slightest doubt, the interests of Canada as a whole. Some people think profits will decrease with the preference; on the contrary, he believes profits will increase with the greater volume of trade.

Speaking of the Canadian mail service Lord Strathcona looks forward to the proposal being carried out at no distant date. The question of a fast steamship service could not be settled without taking the turbine into consideration; it is better to delay the scheme a few months for this purpose than appreciate the importance of the invention when it is too late.

A Canadian four per cent. loan, guaranteed by the imperial government, for a million pounds sterling, and an unguaranteed loan of half a million were paid to-day in cash to the Bank of Montreal.

Lord Strathcona says there was no private report on the war commission. All recognized from the evidence submitted that the administration of the navy has been relatively superior to the administration of the army and the war office, but the commission did not consider the terms of reference necessitated their going into matters more fully.

The Daily Chronicle has an article on Mr. Goldwin Smith's essay in the Monthly Review on the fiscal question, and says his warning against any violent attempt to interfere with the commercial relations between the Dominion and the republic of the United States need not be ignored.

A letter in the Standard complains that the Canadian immigration office in London always brings forward the that the Canadian emigration office Northwest as a desirable spot for settlers, quite ignoring the Maritime provinces.

The secretary of the Eighty club, writing to the Morning Standard respecting the suggestion given by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain to a correspondent to apply to Sir Charles Tupper for information concerning the Canadian tariff, refers first to Lord Aberdeen's use of the veto to annul Tupper appointments after the defeat of the Conservative government in 1896, and the defeat of Sir Chas. Tupper four years later, in 1900, and asks if that is the way to knit Canada to us securely. After the s[illegible] given by the Canadian cabinet to Lord Minto's appearance before the Canadian Manufacturers' association, the writer asks if Mr. Chamberlain's support of a defeated leader of the Canadian opposition is not a serious step? What will the loyal Canadian government say to that?

The Montreal Locomotive Co. have asked to be allowed to tender on any contracts for engines which may be required on the Transvaal railway. The hope is expressed here that the same company may have the opportunity of tendering for the engines required on the India railways. Any difficulty of inspection might be solved by the assistance of the Canadian government.

Wholesale Extermination.

A dispatch from Sofia to the London Times says that a document purloined from Hilmi Pasha's archives and which has fallen into the hands of one of the consuls, gives confirmation of the wholesale extermination carried out in Macedonia. It records that 93 villages have been destroyed in the villayet of Monastir alone, and that the total number destroyed reaches 111.

Reports from other reliable quarters represent that a much larger number of villages have been destroyed. The correspondent continues that the attention of the humane and charitable should be directed to the starving population.

The American missionaries, who have addressed appeals to the United States and Great Britain for the dispatch of a contingent of the Red Cross, are prepared to assist in the distribution of relief.

At a meeting of the aldermen of the City of London in the Guildhall on Sept. 29, Alderman Sir James Thompson Ritchie, brother of the late chancellor of the exchequer, was elected lord mayor for the ensuing year, in succession to Sir Marcus Samuels.

Manitoba farmers have petitioned the government at Ottawa to be relieved of excessive railway rates on cream and milk.

The New Ontario exposition, the first held by Fort William and Port Arthur, was formally opened on Tuesday last.

MYSTERY CLEARED UP.

Mrs. Nellie Andrews, of Jasper, Ind., Before Death Makes Confession.

A dispatch from Jasper, Ind., says: Mrs. Nellie Andrews, formerly Miss Nellie Conrad, made a confession, just before her death, which clears up a mysterious tragedy that in 1885 caused much excitement.

Stanford Freeman, young farmer, of this county, was called to his gate by two men and two women the night before he was to be married, and after a scuffle, was found by his intended bride fatally wounded. His slayers escaped. Mrs. Andrews said that she was one of the party which visited Freeman that one of the men who was present is dead and the other in the Tennessee state prison. The woman who accompanied them, she said, and who disappeared several years ago, was murdered because of fear lest she would betray the murderers. Mrs. Andrews said that she was in love with Freeman and one of the men was in love with Freeman's intended wife, and when they went to the gate that night a demand was made that Freeman marry her at once. When he refused he was fatally stabbed and the four had kept the secret so well that no suspicion was aroused.

Trying to Keep Pat at Home.

At a meeting of the committee of the Anti-Emigration society held at Dublin, leaflets giving warning from the Catholic bishops against emigration were ordered distributed to all places in Galway and other counties. A letter from an anoymous correspondent was received which stated that almanacs showing pictures of Manitoba free farms were being distributed in the shops. The committee asked that in view of the exposures by Father Dollard and others of the hardships and destitution which has been the lot of emigrants on these farms sympathizers be asked to look out for these almanacs and forward copies to the society together with particulars of the persons circulating them.

A Socialist on British Preference.

A London cable says: Robert Blatchford, one of the most influential Socialist writers, writing to the Clarion on the fiscal question, says that supposing Canada can supply all the wheat we require, in that case we may tax American wheat; then America must pay that amount to the advantage of our exchequer or lose our trade. If she gave up our trade it would mean that the wheat trade of Russia and America would pass to Canada. This would benefit Canada and would be of advantage strategetically to us and would not make the least difference in the price of the English loaf.

Dramatic Suicide.

A dispatch from Windsor, Ont., says: Passengers on the 8 o'clock ferry boat from Detroit to Windsor on Saturday night witnessed a dramatic suicide. As the boat neared the centre of the river, Charles Quaintance, aged 26 years, who was sitting quietly in the stern with the other passengers, arose, and, walking quietly to the rail, stood up on it. One of the deck hands rushed forward to grasp him, but Quaintance was too quick for him, and with a "Good-bye, everybody" leaped into the dark waters.

Women screamed and excited male passengers threw chairs overboard, but the suicide would not, or could not, secure a hold on any of them and soon sank from sight. The body has not been recovered.

Shaving Record.

Joseph H. Mills, a barber of Vancouver, has entered the Richard K. Fox contest for quick shaving. He can lather and shave a man in ten seconds. He made this record at Attleboro, Mass., three watches being held on him. He says it is dead easy to shave a man in a minute.

Mills says his record of ten seconds is authenticated and he is sending the sworn statements to New York of the men who held the watches on him. He says men do not like to be shaved in a minute, and he does not get up much speed in his ordinary work.

Strange Sights in Arctic Sea.

The steam yacht America which is bearing the Siegler polar expedition northward encountered unusual Arctic conditions during the month of July, according to a letter just received at New York by William Siegler, from Anthony Fiala, who is in command. The letter was written in the Barenez on July 20 and was brought south bya sealer which the American met by chance. Immense quantities of ice were encountered. There was a strange absence of animal life, and many dead birds were seen upon the cakes of floating ice.

It is thought that there must have been some unusual disturbance of nature in that part of the polar region to account for these conditions, and the report of Mr. Fiala will be of special interests to scientists who study Polar life.

Very Kind of Mr. Kelso.

A Toronto dispatch says: J. J. Kelso, superintendent of neglected children states that he is thinking of establishing a matrimonial bureau in connection with his department, under whose care at present there are about 2,000 boys and girls in various parts of the province.

Many of the girls, he says, are from 15 to 18 years of age, and in two or three years would make excellent wives for young farmers in Manitoba and the Northwest if they could become acquainted through some such medium as he suggests.

RAILWAY HORRORS

EXPRESS RUNS DOWN A FAMILY PARTY.

Passenger Train Ploughs Through a Group of Twelve, Killing Five,—Trolley Car Crashed into by a Wisconsin Central Train at Chicago.

A dispatch from Philadelphia of Sept. 30, says: A merry party, composed of about a dozen persons, was run down by a passenger train to-night at Sharon hill, seven miles south of this city, on the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington railway, killing five and injuring three others.

The accident occurred in front of the Sharon Hill station while the party was waiting for a train. There had been a family reunion. The party supposed the train would come on the fourth track, and waited for it on the third. The engine ploughed through the group before anyone had time to escape.

COLLISION AT CHICAGO.

Chicago, Sept. 30.—Five persons were killed and a score of others were injured in a collision between a Wisconsin Central Limited passenger train and a 23rd avenue street car at 52nd avenue to-night. The street car was crowded with men returning from the Harlem race track, and everyone in the car was injured. The motorman had received the signal to cross the tracks when the passenger train crashed into the car.

FIENDISH CRIME.

Dead Body of a Little Girl Found on the Bank of a Stream.

Brantford, Sept. 30.—The body of Irene Coles, a little girl aged nine years, daughter of Peter Coles, the expert for the Massey-Harris company, was found on the river bank this evening shortly after 7 o'clock. Irene had not been going to school as her arm was broken and carried in a sling. She had been playing on the bank of the mill race and was last seen alive shortly after one o'clock. Her people became anxious about her, and when not getting home after 4 search was started and after a time Mr. Fowler and her father found the lifeless body of the child near the willows on the bank on the opposite side from her house. The child's underclothing was all saturated with blood, and it is supposed she was ravished and bled to death or perhaps strangled. A heavy-set Englishman was noticed loitering around the river bank, and it is thought this man enticed the girl across the mill race or carried her over, as the water was very shallow at that place.

THE WIDE WORLD.

Telegraphic News of Two Hemispheres Briefly Chronicled.

The elevator capacity at Qu'Appelle is nearing 125,000 bushels.

There are several serious cases of diphtheria at Douglas, Man.

William McMillan, aged 103 years, died at St. James, near Winnipeg.

It is stated that the Canadian Northern will erect a $150,000 hotel and depot at Port Arthur.

Charles Jackson, of Melford, Saskatchewan, a homesteader, killed himself by hanging.

The C. P. R. firemen have asked for a 20 per cent. increase in wages.

Sixty-four homesteads were entered at the Edmonton office last Monday.

Men on construction at the Canadian Northern elevator, Port Arthur, have gone on strike.

The Dominion inspector of binder twine has discovered large quantity of American made twine of dishonest measure, which was imported into the Territories.

The Czar of Russia met with a cold reception by the populace of Vienna on his visit to that city.

A London cable says the State Children's association are anxious to promote emigration of children to Canada. The secretary points out that there are 22,000 children in the workhouses, and the cost of sending a child to Canada is £24, while the cost of a child for school and sustenance is £30 per annum.

A correspondent in the Imperial Colonist, relating the romance of a young couple falling in love on a voyage to Canada says that no girl should come to Canada without protection of some sort. The London Morning Leader, referring to the foregoing, says the ease with which marriage licenses can be procured in Canada is stated to be one of the pitfalls waiting unwary girl emigrants to the west.

TWO FATALITIES.

Alfred Gault and William Cartwright Killed on C. P. R. Track.

A sad accident occurred about half a mile west of Keewatin on Tuesday morning, when an eastbound train, in charge of Conductor Hargrave and Engineer O'Neil, struck and killed Alfred Gault, who was sitting on the track, apparently asleep. Immediately the engineer saw him the emergency brake was applied, but the train was so close to Gault that he was run over and instantly killed.

The train was brought to a standstill, and while standing a couple of men came rushing up the track, saying that another man had been killed a quarter of a mile further east, it is thought by the Imperial Limited. This latter man was afterwards identified as William Cartwright, employed by the Keewatin Lumber Co. He was unmarried and had no relatives in Keewatin. Gault was also an unmarried man and lived with his parents on Ottawa street.

TERMINAL STORAGE.

Increased Rate Effective on C.P.R. After October 1.

The Winnipeg Grain Exchange was officially notified on Tuesday last by the traffic department of the Canadian Pacific railway that on and after October 1st the charge for handling and storing wheat at their Fort William terminal elevators would be advanced one quarter of a cent per bushel, and would include insurance against loss by fire. On September 1st the C. P. R. notified the Grain Exchange, in accordance with the provisions of the Grain act, that there would be an advance in the storage rates, but the new tariff was not then put in effect. The Canadian Northern railway gave similar notice and took the initiative in making the new rate effective. The Grain exchange protested against the increased charge on the ground that it was exorbitant, and made an appeal to the government at Ottawa. It is understood that a reply has been received from Ottawa stating that the government has no power to interfere under the provisions of the Grain act. The previous rate for handling and storage was half a cent per bushel for the first fifteen days, but did not include insurance. The new charge is three-quarters of a cent per bushel for the first fifteen days and an additional three-quarters of a cent for each succeeding thirty days, and insures the shipper against loss by fire from the moment that his shipping bill is signed by the railway agent.

Canada in Kipling's New Verses.

London, Sept. 29.—Rudyard Kipling is quite unmoved by Canadian criticism. His new book, to be published here Thursday next, will include "Our Lady of the Snows." Kipling inserts as a sub-title—"The Canadian Preferential Tariff of 1897"; and by republishing it at the present moment reminds Englishmen that Mr. Chamberlain is only following the path which Canada first struck years ago. One passage, curiously enough, is paraphrased by Chamberlain himself in a letter published in to-day's papers. The poem as published reads:

"They that are wise may follow
Ere the world's war trumpet blows;
But I—I am first in the battle,"
Said the Lady of the Snows.

"Favor to those I favor,
But a stumbling block to my foes.
Many there be that hate us,"
Said our Lady of the Snows.

Drowned in the Lardo.

A drowning accident occurred on Monday afternoon in the Lardo river near Agenta, at the head of Kootenay lake. A young Englishman, named Johnston, in company with two other men, attempted to cross the Lardo river in a small scow. When half way across the boat in some way upset. One of the men swam ashore as soon as the upset occurred, but Johnson and the other clung to the boat until they became almost numb. Then they decided to swim ashore, but Johnston sank almost immediately after relesing his hold on the boat and did not come to the surface again alive. Johnson's companion reached the shore safely, although greatly exhausted.

The body was found at the mouth of the river, nearly a mile below where the accident occurred. Johnson had only been in this country a short time and no particulars have been learned yet as to where his home was.

Baby's Breakfast

The best breakfast, dinner or supper for a child is

Victor Brand Evaporated Cream

It is the full cream cows milk, evaporated and sterilized. It contains all the bone, flesh and muscle building elements.

Makes Happy Healthy Babies.

Mfd. by Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P.E.I.

CHAMBERLAIN'S IDEA

EX-COLONIAL SECRETARY EXPLAINS HIS VIEWS.

He is Very Severe on His Critics, and Says Misrepresentation is the only Hope of His Opponents—A Concise Statement.

Mr. Chamberlain contributed to the London Daily Telegraph on October 1 a letter which is intended to serve as a preface to the re-publication in book form of a series of articles which have appeared in the Daily Telegraph on the fiscal question. The letter, however, is practically a complete exposition of his proposed policy.

After disclaiming the credit ascribed to him in some quarters for the authgraph, which, he says, constitute the conclusive indictment of the present one-sided system of free imports, Mr. Chamberlain proceeds: "It is not well with British trade. After a long period of success the policy of unrestricted free imports has shown evident signs of failure. We receive from our competitors a larger proportion of manufactured goods and we send them a larger proportion of raw materials than we used to. Our supremacy, in what have always been considered our standard industries, has been wrested from us, or is seriously menaced. Our colonies alone continue to increase their purchases, and even here we must abandon all hope of expansion, and we are threatened with the loss of our existing trade if we are unable to meet their requests for reciprocal preference.

"Our competition, which is already so acute, is not fair competition. It is supported by bounties, fostered by the operation of trusts and strengthened by the commercial advantages which our opponents enjoy in the shape of cheaper labor, and in the absence of all those regulations which we have assented to in the interest of the working classes, and in order to raise their standard of living. The cause for inquiry is overwhelming and these articles suggest that the case for reform will be overwhelming also. The supporters of our antiquated policy resort naturally to well worn devices which have always been at the service of every opponent of reform. They abound in statements for which there is no foundation, culminating in the bold assertion that those who called attention to the dangers of our present system are prepared to restore all the evils of the ante-corn law times and reduce the masses to actual starvation. It is not easy to characterize such perversions of the truth in parliamentary language. They are founded on garbled and incomplete extracts from speeches, selected without regard to the general tenor, and they attribute motives and intentions which exist only in the imaginations of the free food controversalists.

"The line of argument, concisely stated, seems to be as follows:—Firstly, it is intended to preference our colonies, whose chief exports are articles of food. It will, therefore, be necessary to put a duty on food. This statement implies that food is free now, and deliberately ignores the fact that a large part of our revenue is raised by taxes on food and drink, the bulk of which is consumed by the working classes.

Secondly, the whole amount of the new duty will be paid by the consumer. This is contrary to the doctrine of the most eminent of modern economists, who say that where an article is imported from a foreign country and is also produced at home and in the colonies, a tax upon the foreign article alone will not raise the price proportionately with the duty, but that the cost to the consumer will be mainly regulated by the supply and demand. This is especially the fact when the duty is small. There is much experience to confirm the theory of the economists. Neither in France, Germany, nor in any other protected country have the prices risen by the amount of protective duty, while in this country the small tax of one shilling on corn did not raise the price at all.

"It should be noted that the danger of the future is not a raise in prices, owing to taxation, but a failure in the supply, due to natural causes, such as drought, or to artificial combinations such as the Leiter corner. This danger is the greatest when the sources of supply are few, and lend themselves to monopoly, while the policy that develops new markets and increases the food producing areas of the world will tend to cheapness, and, above all, to stability of price.

"Thirdly, it is said that the duty to be imposed will be a very heavy one; at least 5, and perhaps 10 shillings a quarter. There is absolutely no foundation for this assertion in any of the statements made by the advocates of tariff reform. It is a pure invention of the opponents of all change; a bogey, raised solely for the purpose of frightening timid people.

"Fourthly, it is said that the duty must be a high one in order to meet the cost of the old age pension. This ignores the fact that the question of old age pensions is entirely independent of fiscal reform. The amouot gained by the exchequer from any new duty might, if the working class who form the majority of the electors, desire it, be applied to making better provision for old age, but not as a necessary consequence, and it cannot be done without their authority and good will. If, as seems probable, they prefer a bird in the hand to a bird in the bush; if, that is, they prefer an immediate advantage to the more distant prospect of a pension, their decision will be final, and in this case there will be no increase at all in the duties on food, but only a transfer of an existing tax from one article of food to another, from tea and sugar, for instance, to corn; so that the cost of living to the consumer will not be increased in the slightest degree.

"To sum up, any duty on food imposed to secure preferential trade our colonies will be a small one. It may probably be wholly paid and will certainly be paid by the foreigner. The additional cost if any, to the working classes will be fully met by an equivalent reduction in other articles of food equally necessary to their existence.

"The 'dear food' cry is an imposture, and the 'little loaf' a bugbear. The question of tariff reform may be considered on its merits without any fear that the cost of living will be increased to the poor. On the other hand our tariffs may be revised so as to secure the following advantages:

"First, an increase of trade with our fellow subjects and best customers, who not only take much more per head from us than foreigners, but take it in the shape of manufactured products, whose production involves the employment of the greatest amount of labor; second, the power of bargaining with our competitors and thereby securing that they shall take more of the products of our labor in return for the products of their labor or that they shall leave the British market more completely to British labor; third, in either case this change and the increased trade with our colonies will provide more employment for our own people and a greater demand for our own labor; fourth, if the demand of labor increases, the wages of labor must rise also and full work at fair prices will enable our manufacturers to pay higher wages without loss to themselves; lastly, we shall have made a great advance towards the union of the empire and have taken the first step towards freer trade with the rest of the world.

"All the points here mentioned are developed with a wealth of facts, figures and original illustrations in the articles now reprinted. These form a complete popular handbook on the subject and will be most valuable to students and speakers in the coming campaign.

(Signed) CHAMBERLAIN."

ELECTROCUTED.

The Three Van Wormer Brothers Enter the Death Chair at Sing Sing.

A dispatch from Dannemora, N.Y., of October 1, says: The Van Wormers were executed just before noon to-day. Willis Van Wormer entered the death chamber at 11.33.30, the current was turned on to his body one minute later, and at 11.37 he was declared dead.

At 11.41.30 Frederick entered the death chamber, and at 11.42 the current was turned on. He was declared dead at 11.43.30.

Burton entered the death chamber at 11.47. The current was turned on at 11.47.30. He was declared dead at 11.48.30. The entire proceeding, from the start of the first man from his cell to the doctor's declaration of the death of the last, consumed but 15¼ minutes, and no untoward incident marred the execution of the law.

THE CRIME.

In the evening of Dec. 24, 1901, Frederick Burton and Willis Van Wormer, aged respectively 20, 22 and 26 years, in company with their cousin, Harvey Bruce, started from Kinderhook, N.Y., for Greenport, on the way to the home of their paternal uncle, Peter Hallenbeck, a well-to-do farmer, who had incurred their enmity because of his action in dispossessing the brothers from one of his houses which they occupied. The four young men were armed with revolvers, and turned their coats wrong side out in order to disguise themselves. On the way to Greenport they stopped in front of a church in which a Christmas celebration was being held and stole a number of lap robes from the sleighs near by. Arriving at the Hallenback home, they called the old man to the door and shot him to death. Bruce turned state's evidence and thus escaped the death penalty. The brothers pleaded that they had intended merely to frighten their uncle, and that he was accidentally shot. They were convicted, but got a reprieve from Governor Odell, who, after an exhaustive examination of the papers, announced that he was unable to find any extenuating circumstances and that the law must take its course.

NEWS NOTES.

The Northwest Territories legislature will be opened on October 27.

In September there were 180 deaths in Winnipeg.

The prices of bread and milk in Winnipeg have been advanced.

A casket factory, with $10,000 capital, will be established in Winnipeg.

The Ontario government will advance $250,000 to pay the Soo workmen.

An anarchist plot against the Queen of Wurtemburg has been discovered.

An order has been received for 30 cars of Canadian flour for Japan.

A new Pacific steamship company to compete with the C. P. R. lines will soon be in operation.

Senator Kearns, of Utah, believes Sir Thomas Lipton should be the next British ambassador to Washington.

The birthplace of Charles Dickens, 387 Commercial road, Landport, near the Portsmouth dock yard, where his father was a clerk and in which the author spent the earlier part of his life, was sold by auction at Portsmouth on Sept. 30 for $5,625 to the City of Portsmouth. Dickens' museum will probably be established in the house.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

J. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, OCT. 10, 1903.

THE RESULTS

The smoke from the political battlefield is slow to disappear, and now, after a lapse of a whole week, it is not yet known whether McBride has a working majority or not. So far as the general results are concerned many of the forecasts given have proved correct. The election has been very close, the conservatives apparently having a majority of one over all other members. The results in many individual ridings, however, were most surprising to all parties concerned and baffled the shrewdest guessers. In Victoria the complete victory of the liberals surprised the conservatives as much as the latter's straight win in Vancouver surprised the former party. These results do not make it altogether clear that the fight in those cities was fought out on straight party lines. In Victoria it was rather a fight against Dunsmuir domination, while in Vancouver there is no doubt that Martin's influence was a serious detriment to the liberal cause. In Nelson Houston was not expected to win his seat and the Cariboos surprised both parties by returning two liberals.

In the Fernie district the total for each man is not far from that expected. Mr. McPherson pulled a somewhat larger vote than was counted for him, while it was known that the vote would be very close between the Conservative and Liberal candidates. The Morrissey polling places gave Mr. Ross more support than was expected of them, while Michel developed unexpected strength for Mr. Smith. The Socialists secured a larger vote in Coal Creek, Jaffray and Elkmouth than was expected and this conflicted with the count of the other two candidates.

The official count being made to-day by Returning Officer Alexander will make more certain the exact vote that was polled in this riding last Saturday. The Conservatives claim a majority of five votes over those polled for Mr. Smith on the face of the returns made by the Deputy Returning Officers. Many ballots were disallowed by the latter and the nature of and the exact number of each kind, for each party, will doubtless largely influence the Liberals in determining their further action. Reports as to the rejected ballots place their number at between [illegible]. Some of these, about [illegible] in number for each side, have been marked with a black, instead of a red, pencil. These will doubtless be counted. Of the remainder many are marked opposite the name but outside the disc, and of these ballots the Liberals claim a majority for their man. If this majority is shown to be sufficient to off set the other majority and if favorable precedents are known to exist an appeal may be made to the county court judge, Judge Forin in this case, for a recount.

AN over-zealous Socialist at Morrissey spoiled his vote by marking his ballot opposite Mr. McPherson's name and writing "nit" opposite each of the other names.

* * *

Some difference of opinion evidently exists in the interpretation of the law with regard to closing of hotel bars on election day. The act states that the bars shall be closed during the whole of the election day. In Rossland the police took the literal interpretation of the clause and ordered the hotel bars closed during the entire twenty-four hours. Nineteen of the hotel proprietors obeyed the order while the remaining four opened in the evening. This naturally led to much dissatisfaction on the part of the former. In Fernie the bars were opened after the polls were closed.

* * *

"It is not altogether pleasant to contemplate the election situation in the Fernie riding. It it not necessary to presuppose that the returning officer will not do his whole duty in the matter or that his deputies have "fixed" any of the ballots, but with the result of a whole provincial election practically turning upon the final count up in one small riding, the temptation for one side or the other to do some fine work is certainly very great. Mr. Smith, the Liberal candidate, has apparently left everything to the returning officer, having gone off on a visit to Spokane, and until yesterday not even retaining a solicitor to watch his interests in the mean time. We may be better in the west than they are in, say, Ontario, but what would anyone think of a Ontario election with the whole business depending upon one riding, and the returning officer—an appointee of the government on trial, whose existence depends on the result—left entirely in charge?

"There are altogether fifteen polling subdivisions in the Fernie riding, and consequently fifteen deputy returning officers and one returning officer. What should be in the hands of Smith's representatives or whoever is looking after his interests, is a detailed scrutineer's report from each one of the fifteen divisions of exactly how the vote stood on Saturday night, including a description of each one of the ballots thrown out as "spoiled." With only five of a majority for Mr. Ross and admittedly any number of so-called spoiled ballots, the temptation for some one to make the election sure is almost overwhelming. The first re-count will be had before the returning officer on Saturday and a final appeal will doubtless be made to the county judge later."—Nelson News.

While agreeing with the writer of the above in regard to the importance of the present official count that is made today, we wish to emphatically repudiate the slur on Mr. J. S. T. Alexander, the returning officer, that is discernible in that article. Whatever may be the defects in the election act we are not called upon to discuss, but of this we do know, that Mr. Alexander has strictly carried out the letter of the law, and that everything connected with the election is being conducted in a perfectly fair and honest manner. Mr. Alexander is the possessor of a character that is beyond reproach and the Liberals join with the Conservatives in taking up arms against the slightest suggestion of any action at variance with that known character.

TYPHOID AT ELKMOUTH.

Serious Epidemic. One Death This Week.

Typhoid made its appearance at Elkmouth some time ago and several cases have since developed. On Monday of this week one victim succumbed to the dread disease. This was Frank Robbins, who formerly lived in Fernie and was employed at Coward's factory. He was a young man of about 28 and was married. Mrs. Robbins recently came out from Brantford and nursed him during his illness. Mr. Robbins's father also lives at Elkmouth.

Miss Fall also and Mrs. Coward are recovering from the disease. Miss Coward is at present ill with it and at work. The Fernie doctors attend the cases but owing to the great distance they were unable to make the trip very often. It is difficult to understand the source of the disease as the water is apparently pure and comes through plenty of gravel.

The Coward family are making preparations to come back to Fernie again. They have leased their machinery to the Hayes Lumber Co. and Mr. J. Coward, sr., was in town this week to take steps to fit up the office building next to their factory for a temporary dwelling.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

Operator Knowles, of Fernie, is relieving Operator Steadman at Cranbrook, temporarily.

Dan McFeish and young son came in from Fernie yesterday on their way to Fort Steele.

L. B. VanDecar of the Royal hotel has let the contract for an addition to his already large building and work is now under way. James Greer has the contract. The addition will be built on the north side of the present building. It will be two stories and a frontage on Cranbrook street of 70 feet and a depth of 32 feet.

A very serious accident occurred at Sirdar on Friday, in which Switchman Jos. Ouellette had one leg cut off below the knee and the other leg badly bruised. About 11:20 the yard crew were making a drop of the car and Ouelette was cutting the car off and in doing so fell in front of the car sustaining the above injury. His leg was bound up by Mr. Losby, yardmaster, and he was put on No. 4 to be brought to Cranbrook for medical attendance. He died on the train on his way to the hospital. Mr. Ouellette is a French-Canadian and had worked in Fernie about one year leaving the service to work on the section. He was re-employed on October 1st, and sent to Sirdar and he had only been working about a day when the accident occurred. He is a married man and his family lives in Montreal. The remains were sent east on Monday in charge of Conductor F. Dumont.

Claude Trotter, formerly a clerk in G. T. Roger's store, and well known in Cranbrook as a young artist of promise, met with an horrible accident at Moyie last Monday night. He had been working in the sawmill at Ryan and boarded a freight train to come to Cranbrook. When he reached Moyie he changed his mind and concluded to stop there. The train was going through the town at full speed, and he jumped on the platform. He was thrown over and rolled off the platform under the train, having one leg crushed by the wheels. He was brought to Cranbrook Tuesday and taken to the St. Eugene hospital and yesterday the injured leg was amputated. The accident is a bad one, and the young man's many friends sympathize with him in his misfortune.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Rev. A. R. Poole, of Nelson, has been appointed regular pastor of the Fernie Baptist church. Services will hereafter be held regularly at 11 a.m. and 7.30 p.m. every Sunday. Mrs. Poole arrived last evening. They will make their home in Mr. Blakemore's house next the Park, on the River bank.

The meeting of the creditors of the Cedar Valley Improvement company which was called for Wednesday of this week had to be adjourned as the assignee was not prepared to proceed with the business. Mr. J. S. T. Alexander was appointed solicitor for the assignee and the meeting was postponed till next week.

Engineer John Jamieson met with a painful accident on Monday morning which will necessitate his laying off work for several days. He was adjusting a screw with his left hand when not looking he was caught by a rod which cut the end of his first finger clean off at the first joint. Mr. Jamieson is spending his enforced vacation visiting friends at Pincher Creek.

Seven boys were brought up in the police court this morning charged with breaking the windows in car No. 812 as it was standing in the yard on Sept. 29th. The boys names are, Jos. Shingara, John Shingara, George Wycroft, S. Boly, Jos. Balayti, John Margot, and John Goudish. The boys owned up to their guilt and implicated three other boys, named Sam. Stewart, Thos. Dungree and Vicent Dungree. The boys were each fined $5 and costs, and they were ordered to return at 2 p.m. with the money when they would each receive a flogging. The police believe that these boys opened the switch which derailed the engine last week.

A meeting largely attended by the prominent young men of the town was held last evening to form a dancing club. The new organization will be known as the Minto Club. Two committees were formed one to attend to the invitations and the other called the managing committee. The first dance will be given on Thursday evening, Oct. 15th, Thanksgiving evening. The club will endeavor to hold a dance every Tuesday evening thereafter. Princess hall has been engaged.

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

The Proper Treatment for a Sprained Ankle.

As a rule a man will feel well satisfied if he can hobble around on crutches two or three weeks after spraining his ankle, and it is usually two or three months before he has fully recovered. This is an unnecessary loss of time, for in many cases in which Chamberlain's Pain Balm has been promptly and freely applied, a complete cure has been effected in less than one week's time, and some cases within three days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

NOTICE.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited, after this date will not make with connections to any premises which have been wired by any party or parties not its accredited representative, and any consumer adding additional lights without the consent of the company, will not only be liable for damages but will have the entire service discontinued.

Any person or persons making connections to, or tampering with, the Company's water mains will be prosecuted, and their water service discontinued.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited
by T. R. STOCKETT, jr.
General Superintendant

Cree & Hutchison

REAL ESTATE

For Sale Cheap for Cash.

if bought within a week. Two Houses, rented for $45 per month.

For Sale

A Saw Mill with large timber limits, all in running order; including pole roads, waggons, sleighs, horses, etc. This is a snap—full particulars at our office.

We are the largest Real Estate Agents in South-east Kootenay.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON
Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

McEwing & Slinn

Keep a large stock of choice Confectionery, Cigars Tobaccos, Fruits Vegetables, etc. etc.

It pays to deal with this firm, as thier goods are new and up-to date.

The Bakery Dept.

is stocked with all kinds of choice pastry, bread and cakes

Wedding and other cakes a specialty.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4368, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner, south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 28th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a special license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands on the west side of Kootenay river, in the district of East Kootenay:

1. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumchuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence west 40 chains to place of commencement.

2. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumckuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence west 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence east 40 chains to place of commencement.

A. F. GRIMES

Dated at Fernie, July 14th, 1903. 239-4

American Silk Waists and Skirts at The Crow's Nest Trading Co.

This is It!

It will outlast forty brooms.

We carry a complete line ranging from $3.00 up.

Come in and get that Stove off your mind and into your house. We can assist you materially.

Sheppard & Elliott.

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbin

The Public Know

The Public know a good thing when they get it. When they are in the habit of having their meat done up to perfection you cannot pull them away with a forty-foot logging chain. That is why our trade is continually increasing.

We make a study of our trade and have attained perfection.

Our goods are the best, and our prices are right. Call and be convinced.

Calgary Cattle Co.
LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY
MacLeod, Alta.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

Calgary Cattle Co., Ltd., keeps a regular supply of oysters on hand. A choice shipment of dairy butter just received. Also clams. See our ad.

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

E. Evans, of Michel, was in town this week.

Thanksgiving Day is next Thursday, Oct. 15th.

H. F. Martin, of Tonkin, was in town this week.

T. Label was up from Pincher on Wednesday.

WANTED.—A tinsmith, apply to Sheppard & Elliott. x

R. S. Day, of the Guardian Insurance Co., was in Fernie this week.

T. R. Morton, of Morrissey, was in Fernie over Wednesday night.

J. F. Armstrong and J. A. Harvey were in from Fort Steele on Wednesday evening.

B. G. Walker, Inspector for the Ont Accident Co. paid Fernie an official visit this week.

Two drunks were disposed of in the police court on Thursday. They were fined $10 and costs.

James Joyce returned from the east on Tuesday after spending several weeks visiting friends in Ontario.

A. T. Hamilton, of Macleod, arrived this morning to accept the position as tinsmith in Sheppard & Elliott's.

The Fax concert to-night. If you have not ordered your seats do so at once as they are selling fast. Plan at Liphardt's.

H. E. Macdonell, general freight agent C. P. R. at Nelson, came to Fernie on Wednesday evening to meet a friend coming from the east.

R. W. Wood returned to Fernie on Sunday last after spending some months in the east. Mrs. Wood is expected to arrive home shortly.

The Maridor Goulding Company are billed to appear in Princess Hall next Friday. Miss Goulding is said to be an accomplished cornet player.

The Ladies Aid of the B[illegible] who for several months [illegible] making up fancy [illegible] hold their sale [illegible]

[illegible] wedding [illegible] Fernie, and [illegible], to Mr. John [illegible] Creek to take place [illegible] at the home of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Trites left on Monday on a trip to Spokane where they will take in the fair. Mr. Trites has not yet recovered from his recent indisposition and the trip is expected to fully restore him to his usual good health.

Mr. J. Herron, the Conservative candidate for South Alberta in the coming Dominion elections, is working hard already and he has strong hopes of carrying the constituency against whoever the Liberals may bring out.

E. Bricker, of Hawkesville, Ont., who has been visiting friends in the territories spent a couple of days in town visiting his brother, J. H. Bricker. He was accompanied by a friend, George Schweitzer, of the same place.

The Board of Trade held an executive meeting on Wednesday evening. The matter of raising security on the chemical engine, by which the manufacturer might realize his money, was discussed, and various methods were suggested. It was decided to leave the matter over until a general meeting was held.

Board of Trade Meeting.

An important general meeting of the Board of Trade will be held in Joyce's hall on Monday evening. Matters of importance will be brought up, especially in connection with the new fire engine and it is desired that every member of the board as well as the members of the fire brigade will be present.

Mr. H. B. Wright has recently arrived to take a position as chief engineer for the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company. Mr. Wright is a Canadian and was born in Quebec. He has had very wide experience in coal mining in West Virginia for the past 15 years. He is greatly impressed with the possibilities of this valley on account of its vast coal deposits, and he predicts a bright future ahead for Fernie.

Fax, the famous comedian, plays here to-night. He will be assisted by Miss Fax and Miss Schofield. Fax is so well known as to need no introduction to the concert-goers of Fernie. He has delighted large audiences in eastern cities for years, and his trip through the west has been a very successful one, in many cases people being turned away from the overcrowded halls. Fax, fun and folly represent the nature of his concerts. Come and enjoy yourself.

A. Banks, of the Perry Creek Placer Mining Company, was in town several days this week. He says that the new machinery ordered by that company will not arrive from the east before winter but it will be used early next seaso[illegible]n. The steam shovel is doing good work [illegible] in hoisting the dirt in their operations [illegible] on bed-rock. They have cross-cut [illegible] the channel and have drifted up [illegible] stream. Every bucketful of dirt bore evi[illegible]dence of coarse gold, but on Monday ju[illegible]st before he left, the men had struck [illegible] the pay-streak.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

G. G. Henderson, of Sarnia, is in town on a business trip.

The Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. are clearing a site for their new mill at Hosmer.

Save your tennis rackets during winter by getting a press, $.100 and $1.25. Fernie Drug Store. x

Mrs. C. W. Sheppard returned on Thursday from Leduc where she has been visiting friends.

Plan for Fax Concert may be seen at Liphardt's jewelry store. Prices 75 cts. and $1.00. Children 50 cents.

H. B. Rose, of Winnipeg, organizer for the Oddfellows, was in town this week and visited the lodge on Thursday evening.

The attention of our readers is called to a new advertisement appearing in this issue for the Union Meat Company, of MacLeod.

Mr. Staebler will form a class this fall for those desiring instruction in sight singing. Apply at the studio two doors north of Christ Church

Pincher Creek held its agricultural fair on Thursday. The display of vegetables was very creditable, and the exhibition of horses was especially good.

On Monday the police gave notice to all the hotel proprietors that gambling must be stopped in their houses. As a result there are a number of tin-horns in town without any employment. The town has been fairly free from this evil since the last stop was made until about two weeks ago when it gradually started up in different places. The police are determined to fight the evil to a finish so that a number of undesirable [illegible] will likely leave [illegible]

[illegible] people [illegible] Two men [illegible] of the McRae [illegible] situated on the opposite [illegible] they carried their blankets and as they slipped on the rocks in the darkness their blankets became wet and consequently heavier. When near the opposite shore where the current was strongest, one of the men was carried down several yards but he still retained his feet. He dropped his blankets but the chilling water up to his waist unnerved him and he was unable to move either way but stubbornly held his ground and remained motionless. His comrade seeing his predicament went to his assistance and with much difficulty got him ashore where it was some time before he regained the use of his paralyzed limbs.

General servant wanted, apply to Mrs. Richards.

Dan Hayes and Mr. Fullerton were in from Elkmouth this week.

Wanted—A general servant. Must be a good cook. Apply to Mrs. A. B. Trites.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

The pastor will conduct the services in the Methodist church on Sunday. The morning subject will be "Visions of Fulfilment" and the evening "Working to win." Everybody welcome.

E. C. Smith left on Monday morning for Spokane. He was interviewed by the Nelson News which quoted him as saying that he was confident that a recount would give him a safe majority.

Don't forget the lacrosse concert to be given in Princess hall on or about Oct. 10th. Jas. Fax is an entertainer of world-wide renown and he will be assisted by other talent. This will be the concert of the season. Keep the date in mind.

Thanksgiving Social will be held in the Methodist Church on the evening of Thursday, Oct. 15th, at eight o'clock. An excellent program has been prepared, consisting of solos, quartets and recitations. There are also tempting refreshments. All are cordially invited to spend an enjoyable Thanksgiving evening. Admission, 25c.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

We hav eopened up a variety of sideboards at prices to suit all purses.

J. D. QUAIL..

Hardware. Furniture

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd

London and Liverpool Stores.

Shoe Department ---- Clothing Department

THIS is the season of the year when you require warmer clothing, shoes that keep you feet dry. In Fernie no place can meet your wants for as little money as the

London & Liverpool Stores

Saturday we place on sale special lines from the above departments and mention just a few of the Bargains offered by us for the coming week . . . . . .

From the Shoe Department

Read this List

Men's Working Shoes 1.00 Great Value.	Men's Working Shoes Nailed . . . 1.50	Nailed Working Shoes 1.75
High Cut Solid Leather Nailed . . . 2.90	The Leader . . . 2.85 Extra fine goods.	Fine Shoes 2.00 Just 50c less than regular price.

Shoe Pac's—high and low cut. Rubbers of every description.

From the Clothing Department

Read this List

Men's Heavy Wool Pants while they last at 1 40	Fine Serge Pants in Blue and Black.... 1 90	Good Serge Suits at $5 Blue or Black
Good Tweed Suits 6 50 Extra Value	Suits at $8.00 This is the Bargain	SUIT — $9 — SUIT We save you just $3.50 on this line.
UNDERWEAR— Wool fleece at $1	Wool Fleece--extra heavy 1.25	German Sox—All Prices. Gloves and Mitts — the best values on earth.

The Prices quoted on the above lines means a saving to you—Don't pass it up.

THE TRITES-WOOD CO., LTD.

LONDON AND LIVERPOOL STORES

"ROYAL BRAND"

TAILOR-MADE CLOTHING

Our stock of Men's Ready-to-wear Clothing is now complete, and we invite you to call and compare Price and Quality of Royal Clothing with goods to be had elsewhere. . . .

In Overcoats we are especially strong, our stock comprising all the Newest Styles. Our leaders are the "Brighton," "King" "Raglanette" and "Auto."

In Men's Suits we have an endless variety of Tweeds, Worsteds and Serges, and they are strictly up-to-date in cut and finish.

In Rain Coats we have some very nobby ones made from Priestleys Cravenette Cloths, that are guaranteed waterproof.

In Boy's Clothing Men's Trousers, Etoffe and Mackinaw Coats and Pants, and Leather Coats we have a nice assortment. Also Corduroy Goods—wear like iron.

Remember, in buying from us, you take no chances of getting Shop-Worn Stock, as every garment on our counters is New, Bright and Clean.

CHAS. RICHARDS

UTTERS A WARNING

JEREMIAH, LAMENTING, PLEADS WITH HIS COUNTRYMEN.

TO RETURN TO THE OLD PATHS

Uses Homely Similie to Point Out the Way to the Throne of God, in the Ordinary Country Paths or Rough Roadways Over Which Eastern Caravans Traveled.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Sally, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—Amid the distractions and temptations of modern life this sermon utters a warning cry, a timely call for a return to the simple ways and upright, honorable, Christian lives. The text is Jeremiah vi, 16, "Ask for the old paths."

Most simple is the text's figure. Its simplicity gives it a homely beauty. It has in it the aroma of the woods. It is one of those simple similes of country life that bring back to the weary city dweller, whose feet have been long accustomed to the hard paving stones of the city sidewalks, the memory of the footpaths over turf covered hills and the narrow lanes between the banks bejeweled with sweet wild flowers that he used to walk in his childhood days. The old paths—we can never forget them. It will do us good if we think of them this morning and see if there are any moral lessons we can learn from them. Jeremiah, among the greatest of the prophets, lamenting that his countrymen had deserted their God and disobeyed his laws, pleads with them to avert the impending punishment by returning to him, and he employs this simple figure to portray their condition. He describes them as travelers lost upon the mountains of sin, hunting for a path which will lead them out of their moral difficulties. He represents God as telling them to "ask for the old paths, which is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, "We will not walk therein." Jeremiah points the right path leading to the throne of God by using the homely simile of the ordinary country paths or rough roadways in common use at the time, over which the eastern caravans have traveled and the cows have come home for the evening milking and over which have passed tired men and women when, with daily tasks well done, they have sought the home firesides for physical refreshment and for blessed sleep.

Like Jeremiah, I would to-day carry your thoughts back to the reminiscences of the country and from the sweet, fresh flowers of the village hedgerows pluck blossoms which will remind you of old time associations and resolves. The greatest of horticulturists is not the gardener who fashions his beds in the "many colors" of a Joseph's coat or a grandmother's crazy quilt. It is he who makes his floral designs simple—very simple. One bed looks as though it were a bit of Alpine lake flung among the crowded regiments of flowers. It is planted entirely with violets. Another bed looks like a great collection of leaping flames. It is planted only in roses. It is very simple. It is as simple in colors as a cardinal's robe. Another bed has the jaundiced look of a Malay's skin. It is only planted in golden glows. Another will be an azalea bed, another a a dahlia, another planted in white lilies, another in geraniums. The horticulturistic genius thrives best in the simplicity of colors. From this sermonic bed I would pluck only the sweet for-get-me-nots of tender memories. Like Jeremiah the prophet I would try to lead you over some of the old paths which your feet have trodden in the past, and in the leading I would lead you to the foot of the cross.

The old path which wound its way toward the old homestead is the first one I would bid you to seek. That path by the side of which was once builded your father's and mother's nursery is to-day in all probability covered up with underbrush. Here it is blocked by the rotting trunk of a tree which has fallen sideways. There it has been scooped out by a freshet and yonder covered up with a landslide. It looks a great deal like one of those old deserted log roads which once wound their way through the woods toward the town. After the new highway or pike was opened the farmers and the farmers' wives always went the other way to market. The result is that the small bushes and the weeds have begun to grow over that path which led to your mother's nursery. It has long been untrodden by any human foot. Five, ten, fifteen, twenty, thirty years! What? What? Have your mother and father been dead as long as that? My, my, how time does go! No wonder you have forgotten a great deal about your mother and her ways.

But, come, let us take our axes today and clear away some of that rubbish. Let us explore the old path which once led up to the old homestead. When the first settlers entered the Michigan woods they used to "blaze" the trees. That means that with their axes they would chop a notch out of this tree and that and the other tree as they went along. Thus, if they could not find the right place to settle in one direction, they would retrace their steps by these notches and start out in the woods from another direction. Well, these old paths which once led up to the homes of our childhood may not have been used for a quarter of a century, but they can be easily followed. Our parents "blazed" them all the way along.

As I follow these "blazings" I find they were morally straight paths. They were as straight as a die. Your father may not have had much money In all probability you, as a farmer's boy, remember him for the most part clothed in overalls and a woollen shirt. But under that rough exterior there beat a heart as true as honesty itself. Looking back over the long years, you remember him traveling that "straight path." You cannot think of one act your father ever did which was dishonorable. Ah, that old father of yours may have worn shabby clothes and may have been poor in pocket, but he was rich in character. The path he traveled to and from the old homestead was always a "straight path." Though the "last will and testament" which he signed made provision for a few trinkets, a Bible and a gold headed cane, and perhaps a snuffbox, that father left you the grandest legacy a boy ever received. He left to you an untarnished name, the example of a father's life well and honestly lived. Even as I speak now and talk about his past life a blush mantles your cheek. When you contrast his pure life with yours and you remember some of the mean, sneaking things you are accustomed to do in your dealings with your fellow men, you say: "I wish I had always followed in the footsteps of my father. I wish I had always followed in his straight path." Why don't you, my brother? Why don't you now? Are the thickets too strong about you? Are the jungles of sin too dense? God is telling you to-day to seek the old paths. Ask for the old path, the straight path, the honest path, which your father once trod. Seek it now!

Then, again, I further study the "blazing" marks along the paths which led up to the home of our childhood. I find out that these paths were Christian paths and always led toward the throne of God. How do I know? Simple enough. Let me illustrate: When I go to Europe as far as possible I live there among the natives, and for the most part among the common people. Now, again and again, when I have turned my back upon European cities and climbed the unfrequented paths which lead over the mountains, I have been startled with finding here a cross and there an altar. I would find these crosses and altars far, far away from any house or church. Then, as I have concealed myself among the trees and waited, I have seen weary peasants come along with great big packs strapped to their shoulders. Then I have seen them stop and look around to see if any one was watching. Then I have seen them unstrap their burdens and lay them at the feet of the image of Christ and then and there kneel in prayer. Well, my friend, in going along the pathway which was "blazed" by your mother's bread knife and knitting needle, I come upon altars everywhere. I find that there was hardly a step that she took in life but she had a place where she could stop and kneel in prayer. And at every altar I find indentations in the rocks where she laid her burdens at the Saviour's feet.

And, oh, my friend, what a lot of burdens she had to lay upon her Saviour's breast in her journey of life! There was that awful burden of physical sickness. I do not know how you may remember your mother, but most of us think of mother when she was physically sick. She seemed to be so long dying. Now it was the pain in the head; now it was the disordered nerves. Then it was that long, long time, when we had a trained nurse. "How is mother to-day?" the younger children would ask, and we would answer, "Not very well, my dear; not very well." Yet for the most part, our mothers lost their physical health by living and doing for us.

I go a little farther along this Christian path of your dead mother. I find also the place where she laid at Christ's feet the burden of her anxiety for the salvation of her children. Some people love to think of their mother, first by picturing her sitting and sewing for their advent. It is a beautiful sight to see the young wife, by the evening lamp with her needle in her hand, making the little white garments for the stranger soon to come. Our mothers thought and planned for the cradle and the little wardrobe weeks before we were born. They did it so that when they should lie down upon a bed of suffering all might be well for the little one's welcome. That is a beautiful vision. But, oh, to me it is a far more beautiful sight to see a young wife upon her knees in prayer. To think of her praying to God that her unborn child might grow up to be a good man, a good woman. And you, my friend sitting before me, from that moment when your mother first prayed for you until her death she never left that altar before which she was continually beseeching God for the salvation of your soul. Along that Christian pathway she first led your tottering feet. In that Christian pathway she first taught you to utter the baby prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep." In that Christian path she gave you her dying benediction. Will you not seek the old path? the Christian path of your glorified and sainted mother? It is a path covered with wild flowers and fragrant with perfume. Those flowers and that pathway have been watered with your mother's tears.

But there is another path to which I would call your attention to-day. It is that which you once traveled when going to Sunday school and to the church of your childhood. If that church was in the country, then there was poetry in your going. When the call of the village bell rang those notes would press their way through the atmosphere like bubbles of air working their way up from the bottom of a stream. They would come nearer and nearer to your ear, as the bubbles come nearer and nearer to the surface of the waters. Then with a happy laugh they would seem to burst. You would first hear those notes when you would be riding toward the town. Father and mother, brothers and sisters would all be crowded together in the one carriage. My, there was a big load of you who used to travel that road!

If the path which you first traveled to Sunday school was along the sidewalk of a city, then in all probability you walked. You walked by the side of your father or mother, because you were the youngest. But as you rode or walked to that Sunday school and to your first church services a great change came over your family party. One of your sisters or brothers left your side and went up to the church altar. One by one they there gave their hearts to Christ and publicly confessed him at the communion table. After awhile your turn came. You can see yourself now as you came before the church session. You remember how the old minister wiped his glasses. He put his hand upon your shoulder and said: "My boy, why do you want to join the church? Do you love Jesus? Will you promise to live for him and give your life to his service?" Then you remember the great big lump that stuck in your throat. You remember how between your sobs you said: "The reason I want to be a Christian is because my father and mother and brothers and sisters are all Christians. I want their Saviour to be mine. As we have a united family here I want an unbroken family circle in heaven." Aged, gray haired men, that was a beautiful path over which you went to church for the first time. That was a holy drive you took on the morning you went to take your first communion. You did not speak much that morning, but your thoughts were very deep and very high. They were as deep as your sins, as high as and as great as the forgiveness of God. Oh, why have you not always kept walking in that path? Christ walked with you there twenty years ago. Jesus as guide is ready to lead you back to that path and walk with you there now. Will you seek the old path—the path over which you went for the first time to the communion table of the Lord?

There is still another path which you once trod. This path is fragrant with blossoms. It is the path which once led up to your marriage altar. It is the path over which the fallen rice is strewn and where the merry laughter of the bridesmaids is trying to drown the joyful salutations soms which line this pathway are orange blossoms. The silver bells are those which once played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." Where did that path which ended at the marriage altar first lead you? "Oh," you answer, "it led me first among the briers and over the stony grounds. My courtship days were not all sunshine. For a long time I did not know whether I could win the hand of my heart love. In the first place, I was not socially her equal. Then I was penniless and had nothing to offer but my two hands and a willing heart. Then, my life was not what it ought to have been. But she had faith in me. I promised her to reform. I went to church with her. I gave up drinking, and I promised her I would surrender my heart to Christ. And, do you know, the night she gave herself to me she made me kneel with her and we both made a prayer that God would hear and help me keep my vows." Ah, yes, my brother, I know just how you feel when you think of that old path which led up to your marriage altar! When you took the trembling hand of that young girl in yours you truly felt that you wanted to be good. You promised God, then and there, for her sake as well as your own, to live a good, true, pure, noble, Christian life. Have you kept your vow? Are you willing to go to church with her now as you did when you were engaged to her? Are you helping her to set the right example before your children—your children and hers? Remember, man, you made a promise to her and to God on the night of your wedding. Will you seek the old path of consecrated love, which wound through the days of your courtship and ended on the night you took your heart love as a bride from her father's home?

Besides that, my brother, have you also tried to follow out that pledge you made to God in the night when your baby was very sick? You well remember the grave faces of the physicians. You well remember how you knelt by the crib and said, "Oh, God, if you will make my baby well I pledge to you my future life." You well remember the pledge you made to God on the night your baby died. Nearly every one of us has had a child's death in our families. Have you kept that pledge? Have you kept the pledge you made to God on the old path which once led down to the cradles of your living children and now also leads down to the graves of your dead babies?

But how are you going to find your way back to these old paths? Some of you have been away from these paths for many years. You are lost, completely lost. You will never find your way out from the mountains of sin unless you have a divine guide. The importance of a guide to one lost in the mountains of earth or of sin can never be overestimated. To-day, ye lost and wearied sinners, Christ is ready to be your guide. He will lead you out of the mountains of sin. He will lead you to the old paths which are all converging into the one Christian path that leads to the foot of the heavenly throne. Will you let him lead you? Will you let him parden you? Will you let Jesus save you?

May the old paths of Christian love to-day become to you the new paths of Christian service. We have read that, in 1892, a party of men were encamped upon the battlefield of Pea Ridge, in northern Arkansas. While they were cooking their supper by the camp fire they exploded a buried twelve pound Parrot cannon shell which had been fired there out of a Federal gun on June 12, 1862, thirty years before. Would that this sermon, like that buried shell, might have an explosive power. May it awaken all the sweet and holy memories of the past—memories twenty, thirty, forty and even fifty years old—and start each one into a new Christian life. "Stand in the way and see and ask for the old paths! The old paths!"

Ground Around Poultry Houses.

Before the fall rains set in the surroundings will be more healthful if the ground about poultry house and coops is spaded or plowed and a dressing of lime added.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. EECHUDS.

There was the one who trod in the middle of the path between them, whose ear heard and whose eye saw what she, the wife, should have seen and heard, but who would make it impossible that she should ever again go side by side with him.

"Hortense," cried the soft and loving voice. She saw them both at that moment as they had walked down the carriage-road in the morning, talking eagerly to each other, while he had had no word for her. Then she had jumped on her horse and had ridden about for hours in the woods, fighting with herself and mingling her tears with the rain-drops. She had paused under an oak at the edge of the road, and gazed at the wet landscape. The midday chimes in the village were just over, and she folded her hands and cried:

"It shall be different. I will try to gain his confidence. I will go where Lucie goes, will do what she does, take on myself the cares of the house. I can not bear that—"

How sadly her first attempt had been frustrated! She felt that she could not make another such effort for a long time, perhaps never. She would draw back into herself more and more, and Lucie—perhaps she some day would reign over his heart as she now did over the keys, not that she would deceive in any way, but it would come of itself, would be so natural, and then—

"Hortense, I have a message for you from your husband; open the door, please!"

She sprung up. Again the hard smile came upon her lips. She went slowly across the room and opened the door.

Lucie looked anxiously at her. "Hortense, you are ill. You took cold early this morning," she said, laying her little cold hand on Hortense's brow.

With an involuntary movement Hortense started away from her touch, and stepped back.

"Herr Weber wishes to know if it would be agreeable to you if he were to dine alone with the gentlemen; it might save you from some embarrassment, he thinks." She spoke hesitatingly.

"Very considerate!" whispered Hortense. "Of course, with pleasure."

"I will have our dinner brought into the green room, and we will dine again by ourselves, Hortense, as we used to do. Shall we?"

"As you like."

"I will send him word, Hortense, and just look at the table again, and will be with you immediately. Excuse me a moment."

"Certainly," was the answer, in an indifferent tone. Frau Weber turned back and began to walk slowly up and down the room.

Why did he not come himself? Had he really not noticed how impertinent they had been to her?

(CONTINUED.)

Frankfort Death Houses.

In Frankfort the body of the dead is removed as soon as life is extinct to "leichen hausen" or death houses, where it rests until the first signs of decomposition appear. Such a death house consists of a warder's room, with five death chambers on each hand. A ring on the finger of each body is connected with a bell, and should one rouse from a trance that had been mistaken for death he could summon the warder. Since Frankfort has had death houses several young girls have been rescued from being buried alive. Munich has a similar system.

Ink Spots on Paper.

A blotter can be made that will remove ink spots from paper. Take a thick blotting paper and steep it several times in a solution of oxalic acid. While the ink is moist apply the blotter, and the ink will be entirely removed.

White and Red Heat.

We often speak of "white heat" and "red heat," by which is meant the appearance of bodies, such as masses of iron, raised to different degrees of temperature. A white hot body is hotter than a red hot one.

The Day Did Come.

His chest heaved convulsively, and the veins stood out upon his forehead. In his anger he advanced toward the other with outstretched fist. But by a strenuous effort he controlled himself.

"No matter!" he muttered savagely. "The day will come!"

Sure enough, at dawn the next morning faint streaks of gray penciled the east Later, at its accustomed hour, the sun arose.

Thus was the prophecy fulfilled.

Under Water.

Ordinarily a diver is able to remain under water from one to two and a half minutes. James Finny, a professional diver, in London, stayed under water 4m. 29s. Professor Enochs stayed under water at Lowell, Mass., for 4m. 46s. Professor Beaumont of Australia made a record of 4m. 35s.

God never imposes a duty without giving the time to do it.—Ruskin.

Persian Newspapers.

Persian newspapers are not printed from type. When the reading matter is ready it is passed to a scribe, who makes a clean copy. From this a beautifully written, fine copy is made by a handwriting expert, and this is finally reproduced by lithography.

Fontenoy.

The battle of Fontenoy is the only large battle ever fought in which the opposing sides were equal—each 70,000 men—and the losses of victors and vanquished equal also, both being 7,500 men.

BLOODSHED AT SOO

NON-PAYMENT OF WAGES CAUSES A RIOT.

An Angry Mob of Workman Completely Wreck the Offices of the Consolidated Lake Superior Company—Militia Sent From Toronto.

Sault Ste. Marie, Sept. 28.—The expected has happened, and in the Soo to-day there has been considerable riot and a little bloodshed. This afternoon saw the turning out of the local militia and to-night they are on duty about the works of the Consolidated Lake Superior company.

The trouble began shortly before noon, and as a result of the disturbance the general offices of the company are a scene of wreck and ruin, presenting an appearance that is for all the world like what would be caused by a fire, with the marks of the flames unseen. Every window in the magnificent big building is broken and the office effects are scattered about the floors, mingled with the broken pieces of glass and stones, which were hurled by the angry mob, and the lower floors are flooded with water.

Early in the morning the employees of the company began to gather about the office looking for the payment of wages which had been promised them to-day. From their conduct at first it was thought there would be very little trouble, for most of them showed a disposition to accept the inevitable, although it was manifest that there was much unrest as the word went around that there would be no more pay for them coming for perhaps thirty days.

When the crowd about the offices had reached the number of about 500, Acting Manager Coyne issued a circular for distribution among the men, informing them that the president and directors in New York had been unable to raise the money to pay the wages, as was hoped, but that they were now working upon a plan, which it was believed, would result in the obtaining of money not only for the payment of the wage bills, but to start the works once more in operation.

The plan, so the circular said, was endorsed by Premiers Laurier and Ross. The men were called upon to accept the situation as it presented itself, with the assurance that they would get their money just as soon as possible, and surely, from the fact that the government would hold the company's property as guarantee for the payment of the wage bills. This for a time seemed to have the effect of pacifying the men and it looked as if the crowd would disperse, for several began to disperse. Many remained, however, and began cheering and talking in a loud tone.

The trouble began in a quarrel between a couple of French Canadians, in which Policeman Littlewood, of the general companies' force, interfered. This started the uproar. Someone grabbed a baton from his hands and another policeman and another man hit Policeman Littlewood in the face with a heavy rock. He was very badly injured, and was afterwards removed to his home. All the doors of the offices were locked and as policemen began to place themselves on guard the crowd commenced to throw rocks. They continued until nearly every window in the building was demolished, even to the third story.

During all the time the stones were being thrown through the windows the office hands were inside. A telephone message was sent to the city fire department to come and disperse the mob, and they responded quickly.

At the offices they turned the hose on those gathered outside and this quickly put them to rout, although not before there had been several shots fired, none of which hit anyone. Just before the use of the hose Police Magistrate Quibell read the Riot act and called upon the men to go to their homes, which they showed little disposition to do. In the short space of half an hour the town was thrown into a furore of excitement, and a number of business blocks were locked up, while crowds blocked the streets.

A number of special constables were sworn in and Lieut.-Col. Elliott, commanding the 97th regiment, was called upon to turn out the militia. The men of the "Soo" company were immediately ordered for duty. They assembled at the fire hall down town and marched to the vicinity of the general offices thirty strong. Magistrate Quibell also went along and again read the Riot act from the steps of the offices. No violence was attempted and the crowds very soon dispersed.

The militiamen were served with forty rounds of ball ammunition each, and marching about the streets had bayonets fixed ready for serious business. The march of the militia up the streets was greeted with cries of "scab" and other shouts of derision from the workingmen.

Most of the damage at the general offices was done in the afternoon before the arrival of the militia. The police captured two of the men who they believe to be among the ringleaders of the mob.

Toronto, Sept. 28.—The regulars here received orders shortly after midnight to proceed to Sault Ste. Marie, to be prepared for further rioting should it occur.

While running at a high rate of speed the southbound fast mail on the Southern railroad jumped from a trestle 75 feet high, half a mile from Danville, Va., on Sept. 27. Nine of the crew were killed and seven injured.

Sir Edmond Barton having been appointed as one of the judges to the federal high court, has resigned the premiership of Australia. Alfred Deakin, M.P., is now premier.

SINGLE TAX.

Successful Application of the Theory in Fairhope, Alabama.

Fairhope is in Alabama. It is the name of a place which embraces some fourteen hundred acres of land. This land was bought some eight years ago and occupied as an experiment. It has often been said in regard to the single tax theory that you might possibly apply it in a new community, but that you never could make it work in a complex condition of urban life. A small group of men determined to try the theory in the raw, so to say. The land referred to was a forest of pine, The original committee began, first of all, to work on their own lands. Others joined them. The community grew. Professors, students, reformers of all sorts began to find their way to the little place, which was fittingly baptized Fairhope. The theory was at once applied. Leases were given for ninety-nine years in every case. There was to be but one tax in the community—a tax upon land values, which were to be determined, in a last resort, by a vote of the people themselves.

Some took ten acres, others twenty, and so forth, but in Alabama you can grow three crops in the year, and as the crop is chiefly garden truck, which is sold across the river in Mobile, a man can live upon a few acres. Mr. James Bellangee, who is the treasurer of the colony, and who was one of the original founders of it, is on a tour of the north, for the purpose of telling to the press and the public what has been done in this new colony.

The experiment, as stated, was made eight years ago. There are now schools and churches, a post-office, water supply, baths, good roads, a public library, a paper, and all the adjuncts of civilization. And all these have been provided, not by taxes levied, after the fashion of the outside world, but out of the single tax, which is levied according to opportunity and value, upon the land itself. A man in Fairhope is not fined for making improvements. He can build the finest house that money could produce (if he had enough of it), and there would not be one cent of tax levied upon it. The land rises in value according to opportunity. At first the value is slight; population increases, there is a home market, and land goes up. And the tax is not paid to an individual. It is paid to the community, which, in turn, uses it upon public utilities. A wharf and a steamer have been built, and the steamer takes passengers and freight every day to Mobile.

Mr. Belangee, who was himself a mathematical professor, says that he does not pretend that the millenium has been actually brought in, or that human nature has been radically changed in eight years. He reminds you that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation, and he says: 'Give us four generations.' But he does say that the people are happy and prosperous; that a man is encouraged to make improvements, for which he will always get the value; that a young generation is growing up without the degrading effects of liquor, jails or poorhouses; that the young people may live out their lives and never hear a word about land speculation or money lending, which are the two great factors of business life in the South, and that, though the soil is never owned by the individual, so sure is he of possession so long as he pays the rent, that the home-like sense at once begins to grow. There is not a dollar of debt upon the community. The secretary receives $100 per annum; the treasurer, $25. These are the only salaried officials in the community. There is the referendum, and every safeguard for equalization of opportunity.

Of course, in this ideal community, which looks so like Utopia, there are state taxes to pay, for Fairhope is under the jurisdiction of Uncle Sam, who has not officially adopted the single tax, but even with these taxes they have a surplus to be disposed of for the good of the community, out of the single land tax. And the curious thing is, nobody complains of the increase of this tax, because the increase means that there is increase of opportunity—either better land, or a larger home market, so that the products are greater and more profitable, enabling the increase to be levied without hurt.

A Wonderful Women.

A dispatch from Linares, Mexico, says: Miss Manuela Flores is mayor, treasurer, secretary, city attorney, city clerk and stenographer of this city, all the officials having fallen victims to yellow fever. Senor Flores was the mayor and was the first person to be attacked. Miss Flores acted as her father's secretary. When he was stricken the governor appointed her acting mayor. So well has she filled the position that she has been commsissioned to remain in office until the expiration of her father's term. The city had a population of 15,000, but there are now less than 3,000 residents, the others having either died or fled.

President Diaz has commended the work of Miss Flores highly, and it is stated that congress will vote her a medal for bravery during the epidemic.

Another speed trial of electric traction has been made on the Zossen military road in Germany, when 108¾ miles was covered in one hour. On the previous trial, Sept. 16, the electric car attained a speed of 106 4-5 miles.

The powers finally refuse to interfere in the Balkan situation and will help neither Turkey nor Bulgaria.

King Edward has authorized the publication of certain portions of the late Queen Victoria's correspondence.

An Alaska railway will be built by the Rockefellers.

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

THE GENTLEMAN BURGLAR.

He Can Exist Only In Fiction, Never In Real Life.

Whenever a thief who is dressed otherwise than in rags falls into the police net there are chronicled the adventures of a "gentleman burglar."

Such a being is, of course, impossible. He is a literary creation, like the "Invisible Man," the Frankenstein monster, Kipling's Mowgli and the rest of the crew of prodigies that dwell within book covers.

As a character in fiction the "gentleman burglar" could be made plausible and picturesque, for when we get into the realm of fancy there is an implied contract that the reader shall accept the author's premises and not bother about possibilities.

A burglar is just a thief—about the meanest of thieves.

To a man endowed with qualities of refinement and consideration of others and honor—which are the attributes of a gentleman—burglary or other theft is impossible. The pride of such a man, his regard for his own opinion of himself, would prevent his sneaking into another man's house and taking his plate or his wife's jewelry. Then it must be remembered that the burglar is prepared to do murder to accomplish his robberies, and the idea of a gentleman committing murder for gain is too inconsistent even for fiction.

A "gentleman burglar" is a contradiction of terms, like a brave coward or a tall pygmy. He may be better dressed or his booty may be larger than that of most burglars, but when it is all summed up he is a thief—just a plain thief—with the moral code and impulses of a pickpocket or a card swindler or any other predatory creature whose natural home is a prison and whose deserved and fitting raiment is a suit of stripes.

STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, } ss
LUCAS COUNTY

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for each and every case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure. FRANK J. CHENEY.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 6th day of December, A. D. 1886.

A. W. GLEASON,
(Seal) Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Lightning clouds are seldom more than 700 yards from the earth.

Only 835 acres of flax were grown last year in the United Kingdom. In 1870, 13,000 acres were cultivated.

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT

Removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, ringbone, sweeney, stifles, sprains; cures sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by the use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful Blemish Cure ever known.

Sold by all druggists.

In England and Wales the railways own, on an average, 12 acres of land for every mile of railway.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

A large bronze eagle with one wing broken and drooping is the main feature of the French national monument which is to be erected on the field of Waterloo.

Pupils in the public schools of Austria are compelled to learn English.

Eyes and Nose Ran Water.

C. G. Archer, of Brewer, Maine, says: "I have had catarrh for several years. Water would run from my eyes and nose for days at a time. About four months ago I was induced to try Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder, and since using the wonderful remedy I have not had an attack. It relieved in ten minutes." 50 cents.—17

Siberia possesses one-ninth of all the land on the globe. It runs through 120 deg. of longitude.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

The Napoleonic Arch.

The grand triumphal arch begun by Napoleon is 147 by 75 feet at its base and rises to a height of 162 feet. The central archway is 95 feet high and 48 feet wide. The inner walls are inscribed with the names of 384 generals and 96 victories.

What's In a Name?

In New South Wales is a farmer named Stealing. He has just named his infant daughter Worth in the hope that her name will not harmfully affect her future.

Aged Fish.

A few of the fish in the Royal aquarium at St. Petersburg are known to be 150 years old, and the age of the sacred fish in some of the ponds attached to the Buddhist temples in China is to be counted by centuries, if we are to believe the priests.

To Clean Parchment.

Benzine gently applied with a sponge will remove almost every stain and will not destroy the texture in the least.

Just Saved From Starvation.

When in 1891 Miss Balfour was visiting the west of Ireland and studying the condition of the people she asked one of them how they were getting on in a particular village. "Arrah, miss, sure and if it wasn't for the famine we'd be shtarving!"

She Got the Wool.

"A young American girl, on her first trip to Italy, entered a shop in search of black darning wool," says a writer in Harper's Bazar. "She spoke no Italian, the clerk spoke no English. She pantomimed darning a hole and pointed to her stocking. The clerk brought white darning cotton. She showed that her stocking was black, and black darning cotton was produced. But she wanted wool. A long pause, then Ba-a!' bleated the American girl. She got the wool."

A Natural Mistake.

"I was just telling our friend here, Molly, that it was storming on the day of our marriage."

"Surely not, Hiram! The weather was perfectly lovely!"

"Well, well! I don't know how I got so mixed up about it—probably because it's been storming ever since!"

She Knew Her Dad.

Smithers—Do you know any one who has a horse to sell?

She—Yes; I suspect old Brown has.

Smithers—Why?

She—Well, papa sold him one yesterday.—London Punch.

Sincerity is the basis of all true friendship. Without sincerity it is like a ship without ballast.

Heart relief in half an hour

A lady in New York State, writing of her cure by Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, says: "I feel like one brought back from the dead, so great was my suffering from heart trouble and so almost miraculous my recovery through the agency of this powerful treatment. I owe my life to it."—19

The military posts at the German naval port of Wilhelmshaven are fitted out with watch-dogs. Each sentry has one dog by the leash, and lets it loose when suspicious people refuse to stop.

NIP DISEASE IN THE BUD.—It is difficult to eradicate a disease after it has become seated, therefore it is wise to take any ailment in its initial stages and by such remedies as are sufficient, stop it in its course. Cold is the commonest complaint of man, and when neglected leads to serious results. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will cure the severest cold or most violent cough.

The abolition of the Royal Buckhounds has effected a saving of £6,200 a year.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

It must have been a fallen angel who invented angel cake.

When squashes get into the pie class they are considered some pumpkins.

It is a good thing for some people that the necessities of life do not include brains.

To the self-made man all other self-made men are nothing but upstarts.

All men are born without intelligence and a good many never get over it.

Policeman's Caution Wasted.

Just now the companions of a recent recruit to the police force are poking fun at him because of a remark he made a few nights ago when he found it necessary to arrest a very old offender. Arrived at the police station, he ushered the culprit in with the injunction to "mind the steps."

"G'lang with you!" said the prisoner scornfully. "I knowed these steps afore you was born!"

Harmony Was In Danger.

"I have here," began the chairman of the political caucus, "some charges against this organization which"—

His voice was overwhelmed by the rumble of rising indignation. When the noise subsided he continued:

—"which I will refer to the treasurer. They're for hall rent and light."

And harmony continued to reign.

His Mark In the World.

"I reckon Josh 'll make his mark in the world one of these days," said the fond mother.

"Mebbe he will," answered Farmer Corntossel, "but I can't help wishin' I could git him to take hold of a hoe an' put a few dints into it by way of practice."

He is richest who is content with the least, for content is the wealth of nature.—Socrates.

Ayer's

Doctors first prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral over 60 years ago. They use it today more than ever. They rely upon it for colds, coughs, bronchitis, consumption. They will tell you how it heals inflamed lungs.

Cherry Pectoral

"I had a very bad cough for three years. Then I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. My sore lungs were soon healed and my cough dropped away." MRS. PEARL HYDE, Guthrie Centre, Ia.

25c., 50c., $1.00. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Old Coughs

One Ayer's Pill at bedtime insures a natural action next morning.

FOR SALE! By all grocers from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"SALADA"

CEYLON tea. "Pure and Delicious." Black, Mixed or NATURAL GREEN. Sold only in sealed lead packets. 60c., 50c., 40c., per lb.

By all grocers. Steadfastly refuse all Substitutes.

WHEAT OATS BARLEY FLAX

SHIP to a strictly commission firm—Try

THOMPSON, SONS & CO.

Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg. Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,

GRAIN MERCHANTS,

TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. BOX 585

McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.

Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

MARKET REVIEW.

Compiled from The mercial

Wheat—The wheat market during the past week has been a very discouraging one to holders, as there has been a continual decline on a heavy scale. This has been especially the case in the American speculative markets, which show a drop of 3½c to 3¾c in prices as compared with a week ago. It is very evident now that the American markets have been quite out of line with the rest of the world's markets, and that export business on this side had got to a low ebb, the result being a large increase in visible supplies, and although there has been a big domestic demand for cash wheat and farmers have only delivered their wheat at a moderate rate, the time has come when someone must buy the overplus of the deliveries and carry the wheat until it can be exported, consequently prices have to come down to the point where traders who carry the grain are willing to buy it. It is is probable that this point has been reached. The movement of wheat in the States has been very moderate as compared with a year ago, and taking the past two week's exports from both coasts are only about 50 per cent. of what they were last year at the same time. Owing to the large shipments from Russia, the Danube country and India, Europe has been getting along nicely without calling on America for very much wheat, but should the shipments from these countries fall off materially in the near future as some authorities predict, this side will be looked to for larger supplies. The finishing of harvesting in Europe has been done under more favorable weather than the beginning, and it is believed that the crops in western Europe will yield considerably more than previously estimated, so much so that France is not now expected to require to import any more wheat during the present crop year. England, Germany and other countries will, however require a very large quantity, so that there is little doubt but that the surplus of the world's crop will find an ample demand at good prices. The Northwest spring wheat harvest would have been nearly completed if there had been continuous good weather, but there is still a great deal to do in North Dakota, Manitoba and the Territories, and the result of the unfavorable weather of the last four or five weeks is beginning to be recognized. There is no doubt that the bulk of Manitoba and northwestern crop is going to be of the lower grades and that 1 hard will be a scarce commodity. The larger portion of the crop will probably grade 2 northern and 3 northern. The car inspections so far show a large percentage of 1 northern, but these first shipments are from the districts where the crop was threshed early. Seeding is progressing favorably in the winter wheat states, and the new crops in Argentina and Australia are making fine headway and promising well. These crops will have to be watched in regard to their influence on prices after the new year.

Manitoba wheat has had a decline during the week in line with the course of outside markets, and prices at the close of business Friday were 3c less than a week ago. September delivery is out of the market owing to scarcity, but for October delivery we quote: 1 hard, 80¼c; 1 northern, 79c; 2 northern, 76c; 3 northern, 70½c, all in store, Fort Willian and Port Arthur.

WINNIPEG PRICES.

The following are the Winnipeg jobbing prices:

Flour—The price of flour remains steady at last week's advance, Ogilvie's Hungarian selling at $2.35 and other grades accordingly.

Oats—At Fort William No. 1 white 32c; new oats, 2c less.

Barley—No. 3, 38c per bushel, in store Fort William.

Flaxseed—Nothing doing.

Hay—Baled, $9@$11 per ton.

Potatoes—30@35c per bushel.

Poultry—Live spring chickens, 40 to 60c per pair; fowls, 75@80c per pair; ducks, 60@80c; geese, 10c per pound, live weight; turkeys, 11c per pound.

SUFFERED HALF A LIFE TIME

One More Splendid Cure Credited to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Doctors Said Nicholas Ecker had Gravel or Bright's Disease, or Something Else—Dodd's Kidney Pills Gave Him the Vigor of Early Manhood.

St. Catharines, Ont., Oct. 5.—(Special)—Nicholas Ecker, the well known farmer, living near St. John's P.O., on the dividing line of Pelham and Thorold Townships, who has been restored to health after twenty-nine years' suffering from Kidney Disease has given a statement for publication. It reads:

"I had been a sufferer from Kidney Complaint for twenty-nine years. I had the most distressing Backache, Irritation of the Spine, and Headaches, coupled at times with an excruciating circular pain about the lower part of the body. What I suffered no pen can describe. Insomnia too added its terrors and I was greatly reduced in flesh.

"Three different doctors attended me. One said I had Gravel, another called it Bright's Disease, while the third said I was in a dangerous condition. None of them gave me any permanent help and my friends thought I could not live much longer.

"At this stage I gave up other treatment and started using Dodd's Kidney Pills. After taking two boxes I found they were helping me and I continued till I had taken sixteen boxes when I was again enjoying the splendid vigor of earlier manhood."

London within the police area uses just over 15 million tons of coal a year.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

Five millionaires died in the United Kingdom during the past financial year. Of these the largest fortune was left by Earl Fitzwilliam; it amounted to £2,949,000.

THEY WAKE THE TORPID ENERGIES.—Machinery not properly supervised and left to run itself, very soon shows fault in its working. It is the same with the digestive organs. Unregulated from time to time they are likely to become torpid and throw the whole system out of gear. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills were made to meet such cases. They restore to the full the flagging faculties, and bring into order all parts of the mechanism.

During the last year there were 119 deaths from accidents on the Alps.

20 Years of Vile Catarrh

Wonderful Testimony to the Curative Powers of Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder.

Chas. O. Brown, journalist, of Duluth, Minn., writes: "I have been a sufferer from Throat and Nasal Catarrh for over 20 years, during which time my head has been stopped up and my condition truly miserable. With 15 minutes after using Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder I obtained relief. Three bottles have almost, if not entirely, cured me." Sold by all druggists. 7

Dr. Agnew's Ointment relieves piles instantly

Lack of interest in a story is enough to prove its truthfulness.

Nearly all the sandpaper in use is made with powdered glass.

A little Sunlight Soap will clean cut glass and other articles until they shine and sparkle. Sunlight Soap will wash other things than clothes. 48 is the toughest and best leather ever tanned for mitts and gloves. It is boil and scorch proof—has no oil to draw cold or get stiff—is wind proof, tear proof, wet proof, is always soft, dry, warm. Iron-like wear—handsome appearance—economical. None genuine unless stamped "Pinto Shell Cordovan" and with this brand. Sold by all leading dealers in Manitoba, N. W. Territories and British Columbia.

"Pinto" Shell Cordovan

H.B.K. BRAND

H. B. K. Duck Jackets and Coats

for wear comfort, and convenience. Built to keep out cold and keep warmth in. Made for the hardest, roughest kind of wear. Lined with lambskin with the wool on and with Mackinaw Woolen—made of Duck, Corduroy or Leather. Leather jackets made reversible. Wide collars, unrippable seams, strong pockets. Every garment branded with this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

Sold by all leading dealers in Manitoba, N. W. Territories and British Columbia.

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.

MONTREAL WINNIPEG

MOST LOAVES TO THE BARREL

A Customer says: "I have been in the Bakery Business for over twelve years and have tried almost all makes of flour, but "OGILVIE'S" certainly beats them all in the quantity of bread made from each barrel of flour, and where a flour excels in that particular I know it's got to be "A Tip-top flour."

The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Ltd.

MILLERS TO H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

ARE YOU BUILDING?

IF SO USE

EDDY'S IMPERVIOUS SHEATHING

The Best Building Paper Made.

It is very much stronger and thicker than any other (tarred or building) paper. It is impervious to wind, keeps out cold, keeps in heat, carries no smell or odor, absorbs no moisture, imparts no taste or flavor to anything with which it comes in contact. It is largely used not only for sheeting houses, but for lining cold storage buildings, refrigerators, dairies, creameries, and all places where the object is to keep an even and uniform temperature, and at the same time avoiding dampness.

Write our Agents, TEES & PERSSE, Winnipeg, for samples.

The E. B. EDDY CO., Limited, HULL.

Fritz Adolphy, of Clifton, Arizona, who died recently, was the proprietor of a large place of amusement in St. Louis, employing over 90 barmaids and waitresses. When a bylaw was passed probibiting such employments for women, Adolphy went to the registrar and adopted all his 90 employees as his daughters. As such they were allowed to continue their services.

SURE REGULATORS.—Mandrake and Dandelion are known to exert a powerful influence on the liver and kidneys, restoring them to healthful action, inducing a regular flow of the secretions and imparting to the organs complete power to perform their functions. These valuable ingredients enter into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, and serve to render them the agreeable and salutary medicine they are. There are few pills so effective as they in their action.

According to latest returns there are 702,083 paupers in England and Wales.

Are you a sufferer with corns? If you are get a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It has never been known to fail.

In France there are 4,000,000 acres devoted to the culture of the grape.

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

When two women get wound up the third is apt to be run down.

The Germans are especial lovers of cities. In the 19 cities of above 200,000 population 36 per cent. of all the Germans in the country live.

Nearly all infants are more or less subject to diarrhoea and such complaints while teething, and as this period of their lives is the most critical, mothers should not be without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial. This medicine is a specific for such complaints and is highly spoken of by those who have used it. The proprietors claim it will cure any case of cholera or summer complaint.

Stanstead Junction, P. Q.,
12th Aug., 1893.

MESSRS. C. C. RICHARDS & CO.

Gentlemen,—I fell from the bridge leading from a platform to a loaded car while assisting my men in unloading a load of grain. The bridge went down as well as the load on my back and I struck on the ends of the sleepers, causing a serious injury to my leg. Only for it being very fleshy would have broken it. In an hour could not walk a step. Commenced using MINARD'S LINIMENT and the third day went to Montreal on business and got about well by the use of a cane. In ten days was nearly well. I can sincerely recommend it as the best Liniment that I know of in use.

Yours truly,
C. H. GORDON.

In an article on "The Age of the World," Sir Edward Fry, the famous English geologist declares that 450,000,000 years must have elapsed since the existence of life on the globe.

AROUND THE WORLD.

Little Hungarian Globe Trotter Reaches Fernie.

Yesterday afternoon about five o'clock a small, travel-stained personage walked into Fernie from the east. His upright little figure, his sturdy physique and his intelligent eye together with his compact travelling sack strapped across his back attracted much attention and led people to guess that he was on a long pedestrian trip. The name of the foreigner is Andrew Chrometz who left Turocz-Szt-Marton, Hungary, on Sept. 1. 1901, to walk around the world, intending to return to his native home in 1906. When he left he had only 18 cents in his pocket and since then he has kept himself in food and clothing by selling pictures of himself. The traveller bore a letter of introduction to a Hungarian by the name of John Heber from a fellow countryman at Lethbridge. One of the first places Chrometz visits is the post office where he gets the stamp impression in his book of memoirs. After this he called on the Free Press and told his interesting story in very good English. Upon leaving his home he started west and travelled through Germany, Holland and Belgium. Crossing the channel he walked all over England, Scotland and Ireland, where he picked up his knowledge of English. He next landed in Quebec and walked to Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, thence down through the New England States to Washington, D.C. He then proceeded by way of Buffalo and Detroit to Chicago and finally reached Winnipeg via St. Paul. From Winnipeg he followed the C. P. P. In the Moosejaw district he had a hard trip. He walked for 60 miles without meeting a post office and he found water very scarce. At Michel he found many Hungarians with whom he stayed while there.

Chrometz finds the Canadian people much more hospitable than the American. He enjoys the bracing air of Fernie "Good climate!" he says "makes one feel good." He carries a diary in which he writes an account of his travels. When he reaches home he intends to write a book which he will have printed in several languages. On his coat are many Hungarian badges, one of which was presented to him in Michel.

Chrometz walks 20 to 35 miles per day according to conditions. During the three years he has worn out only ten pairs of boots. He leaves on Monday on his way west. He goes to Victoria, thence south to San Francisco and across the Pacific to Japan.

ADMIRED MOUNTAIN SCENERY.

Canadian Manufacturers' Association Remained in Fernie over Tuesday Evening.

The special train of 11 coaches containing over 170 people of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association excursion steamed into Fernie late on Tuesday evening. Owing to the lack of previous notice of their arrival no action could be taken by the Board of Trade and only a few individuals who happened to be around the depot at the time knew of the arrival of the distinguished visitors. It appears that a wire had been sent to Mr. A. B. Trites from Cranbrook notifying him, but as he had that day left for the west he did not receive it.

Among the few who were at the depot was D. V. Mott who assisted in showing some of the visitors around. At first the excursionists intended to remain only an hour in town but when they learned of the interesting scenery through the mountains, including the slide at Frank, that they would miss by proceeding on their way that night they decided by a vote to remain over until morning. The night was perfectly clear and calm and the beautiful moonlight brought out with marvellous distinctness the contour of the lofty mountains crowned with dazzling snow. The extreme beauty of the moonlight scenery impressed the visitors greatly.

Mr. Mott was made an honorary member of the association and wears a badge of membership. An invitation was extended through him to all the lumber manufacturers of the district to join the association.

Of the 170 visitors about 100 were members of the association and the remainder were wives and friends of members. A number of people in town had friends on the excursion train and it is unfortunate that they did not have an opportunity of looking them up. Among the visitors were men at the head of large business concerns in the east, such as Geo. C. Heintzman, C. Gurney, A. C. Knight, of the Sunlight and Life Bouy soap fame; Fortier the big Montreal tobacco man; J. J. Gibbons of the Commercial Publicity Co. The Standard Fuel Co., The MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., The Standard Silver Co., the Canadian Iron Furnace Co., and many other leading manufacturing concerns were represented.

Leslie Mills and Jos. Goupell returned on Thursday from a six weeks' holiday in New York.

The Fax concert tonight will not commence till 9 o'clock. This will give the clerks an opportunity to attend.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E. corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

Notice to Contractors.

HIGHWAY BRIDGE OVER THE ELK RIVER AT MORRISSEY, B. C.

Sealed Tenders properly endorsed "Tender for Morrissey Bridge," will be received by the undersigned up to noon of Thursday, the 8th Oct. next, for the erection and completion of a wooden bridge across the Elk River at the town of Morrissey, East Kootenay District, B. C.

The drawings, specification and conditions of tendering and contract may be seen at the Public Engineer's Office, Lands and Works, department, Victoria, B. C., at the Office of the Government Agent, Fort Steele, B. C., and at the Government Office, Fernie, B. C., on and after the 17th instant.

Tenders will not be considered unless made out on the forms supplied for the purpose and signed by the tenderer, and the agreement to execute a bond, appended to the form of tender, is duly signed by the tenderer and and two responsible residents of the Province, satisfactory to the Department, in the penal sum of two thousand [$2.000] dollars each, for the faithful performance of the work.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

W. S. GORE,

Deputy Commissioner of Lands and Works,

Lands and Works Department, Victoria, B. C.

12th September, 1903.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Only one tender was received for the erection of the jail here. The figure asked was about $1,300. It was decided to wait until next Monday before letting the contract in order that other contractors might be given an opportunity to put in tenders.

General Freight Agent McInnes, of Montreal, accompanied by Divisional Supt. Jamieson, of Calgary, and Divisional Supt. Taylor, of Cranbrook, visited the mines in a private car yesterday afternoon. They spent about an hour inspecting the works and then proceeded on their trip west.

T. F. Perry, the man accused of breaking into J. J. Murphy's store and stealing a quantity of gloves, was given a preliminary hearing on Monday afternoon before L. W. Patmore, J. P. The prosecution of the case was very strong and the defence weak. After the examination of a number of witnesses Perry was sent up to stand trial at the Nelson fall assizes.

At Morrissey and Michel the difficulty of obtaining fire brick in sufficient quantity is still keeping back the construction of the new coke ovens. If the contractors had been able to secure enough brick the ovens would have been completed over a month ago, but as it is there is still quite a lot of work to do Outside of the delay at the ovens the work of developing the capacity of the coal properties at both points is progressing rapidly. The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co. are having a large amount of surveying done on their lands east of the Elk near Coal Creek. The output of the mines at each of the principal camps is steadily climbing upwards, the total shipments for September having been the largest on record.—Nelson News.

They Make You Feel Good.

The pleasant purgative effect experienced by all who use Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and the healthy condition of the body and mind which they create makes one feel joyful. For sale by all druggists and deal

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

"Herbageum"

For Horses, Cattle & Poultry.

"International Stock Food."

Three Feeds for One Cent.

A. W. Bleasdell

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto.

Notice is hereby given that the Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, a corporation having its head office at the town of Fernie, in the Province of British Columbia, saw mill owner and lumber manufacturer has, by Deed of Assignment bearing date the 22nd day of September, 1903, assigned all its real and personal property to Arthur Hamilton Cree, of the said town of Fernie, Insurance Agent, in trust for the purpose of paying and satisfying ratiably and proportionately and without preference or priority all the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited.

A meeting of the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, will be held in Joyce's Hall, Fernie, British Columbia, on Wednesday, the 7th day of October, 1903, at the hour of 3 P.M.

All Creditors are required to file with the said assignee full particulars of all their claims duly proved as required by the provisions of the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto and the nature of the securities, if any, held by them, on or before the 7th day of November, 1903, after which date the assignee will proceed to distribute the assets among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which he shall then have notice.

Dated the 6th day of September, 1903.

ARTHUR H. CREE,
Assignee.

. . The . .

Fernie Free Press

from now

to

Jan. 1st, 1904,

only

50 cents.

Subscribe now.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of John Brown's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. C. Tuttle's south-west corner" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement.

244-4 H. C. TUTTLE
Dated August 31st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of A. Manahan's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Edward Miller's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 EDWARD MILLER
Dated September 1st. 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and petroleum and marked "Levi Klingesmith's south east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence north to chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-3 LEVI KLINGENSMITH.
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of Mary Gabbett's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Nellie Bleasdell's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 NELLIE BLEASDELL
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Fresh Fruit

AND

Vegetables

arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert

Confectioner

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of J. R. Webster's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Alice Tuttle's south west corner"; thence 80 chains east, thence 80 chains north, thence 80 chains west, thence 80 chains south to place of beginning.

244-4 ALICE TUTTLE
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agt.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petrolium on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Mary Scott's south east corner" thence 80 chains west, thence 80 chains north, thence 80 chains east, thence 80 chains south to place of beginning.

244-4 MARY SCOTT
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "W. A. Bleasdell's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thenee south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 W. A. BLEASDELL
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk river: Commencing at the north-west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence northerly along the foothills 80 chains; thence east about 40 chains to the East bank of Elk river; thence south along the said west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west about 40 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

C. J. ECKSTORM.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted on the W. bank of the Elk River about 12 miles north of the 35 mile post and marked John Brown's south west corner, thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south80 chains to the point of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.

JOHN BROWN,
Jas. Miller, Agent.

"Follow the Leader."

Is the name of our new Exercise Books.

We lead in

School Supplies

and can furnish

ribblers

Exercise Books

Note Books, &c

in immense variety.

Our line of READERS, etc., is complete.

Our "Blo-to-fil" Fountain Pen is a trade-winner.

Fernie Drug Store.

N. E. SUDDABY.

Boilers and gines

ALSO

SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.

Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.

602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of John Brown's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Steve Podbielancik's south east corner" thence west 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.

STEVE PODBIELANCIK,
JAS. MILLER, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "A Manahan's south west corner" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 A. MANAHAN
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Edward Miller's coal and petroleum and marked "MaryiGobbett's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 MARY GOBBETT
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of Edward Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "John F. Wilson's south east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the Place of commencement.

244-4 JOHN F. WILSON
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Manahan's coal and petroleum claim and marked "J. H. Wallace's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 J. H. WALLACE
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Jos. Podbielancik's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.

244-4 JOS. PODBIELANCIK
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner or Mary Gobbett's coal and petroleum claim and marked "J. R. Webster's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 J. R. WEBSTER
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Willer, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of J. R. Webster's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Gilmore's south east coruer", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 H. B. GILMORE
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Lib. Legislative Ass.
Dec 31 1901

165

The Fernie Free Press

Vol. X. No. 15. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1903. Whole Number, 249

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m.
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. Ross. J. S. T. Alexander
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Fernie - - - - - - B.C.
Office:—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. Herchmer Sherwood Herchmer
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

J. G. Cummings,
PROVINCIAL LAND SURVEYOR
FORT STEELE, B.C.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON
PIANO and ORGAN
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
John Williams, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J.Barber,L.D.S.D.D.S.
DENTIST
OFFICE AND RESIDENCE
SECOND FLOOR, HILL BLOCK
Opposite Royal Hotel.
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

J. C. Morrison
D.D.S., L.D.S.
Has Located in Fernie, and is prepared to do all kinds of
DENTAL WORK
Crown and Bridge Work, Filling, Plates, etc.

Ask for British Lion or Mainland cigars. For sale at all first-class places. Union made. Manufactured by Wm. Lietjan, Vancouver. x

MORRISSEY DISASTER

FOUR MEN ASPHYXIATED BY GAS IN NO. 1 MINE

TWO OTHER MEN REPORTED MISSING AND THE MINE IS BEING SEARCHED FOR THEIR REMAINS.

As the result of a sudden outburst of gas in No. 1 mine, Tonkin, four men are dead and two others are reported missing. The disaster, which took place on Wednesday at 2:30 is the worst that has ever occurred at this colliery and has caused a deep feeling of depression throughout the camp.

The first intimation those employed in the mine had that anything unusual had occurred was when their lamps went out and they were left in utter darkness. There was at once a rush for the outside and the speed of the fans was increased in order to clear the mine of gas as rapidly as possible. In a few minutes the air had cleared enough to enable rescue parties to go through the mine to ascertain if anyone had been overcome. In the main entry they came upon two men, Jos. Kruppa, a Slav and Alfred Herbineux, a Frenchman, lying prostrate on the ground. They were immediately carried out and everything possible done to resuscitate them, but in vain. Meanwhile two more bodies had been discovered at the working face at the extreme end of the mine, apparently where the blow out had taken place. They also were conveyed to the surface and proved to be those of John Rogers and Jos. Gauilinian. Like the first two they were quite dead when discovered.

Many reports were in circulation as to the number of men missing, some saying that there must be four or five still in the mine, but a careful search failed to bring to light any new victims and it was concluded that only four had been killed. However the Slavonians state positively that two of their people are still in the mine and another careful search is being made.

General Manager Tonkin happened to be at the Junction at the time of the accident and he immediately came up and made a careful investigation of the mine.

No. 1 mine is very gaseous and has caused a good deal of trouble. Extra large fans are used and everything possible done to keep it in a safe condition, but it is almost impossible to guard against a large gas blow out such as the present one. Frequent small outbursts no doubt have made many of the miners careless and instead of making for the outside at once the victims doubtless took their time and were thus overcome before they realized their danger. This theory is borne out by the fact that the men working immediately adjacent to them escaped.

Coroner Trites, of Fernie, was notified and came up on Thursday morning. It was decided to hold an inquest and a jury consisting of Messrs R. Strathearn, C. Farrell, R. W. Rogers, G. Roughead, Wm. Millan and Thos. Altas was sworn in, C. Farrell acting as foreman. The jury viewed the bodies and then adjourned until next Thursday to give the Provincial Mine Inspector an opportunity to be present.

The funeral of John Rogers took place at Morrissey Mines on Thursday, the union attending in a body.

The remains of A. Herbineux were taken to Lethbridge for interment and those of the other two men to Fernie.

THE FAX CONCERT.

The Favorite Comedian Draws a Large House.

A very large audience gathered in Princess Hall on Saturday evening last to hear the Fax Company. The hall was crowded to the doors and though the terms upon which the lacrosse club secured the company were somewhat stiff the boys were able to clear about $55.00 above expenses.

Jas. Fax is an old favorite and his songs and jokes are always good even if heard frequently. The comedian is perhaps showing something of the wear and tear of life, but he still possesses the art of promoting fun and laughter. His daughter, Miss Bella Fax, assisted him in one or two selections, and she also gave a couple of solos. The reciting of Miss Scofield was not of the best, but her dancing was of the first order. Her pretty face and figure together with her light, elastic step combined to make her one of the most pleasing dancers we have seen. The entertainers were not backward in granting numerous encores.

BASE-BALL AT MACLEOD.

Fernie Wins Again. Game Played in a Heavy Gale.

At the last moment the Macleod people learned that the proposed base-ball tournament set for Oct. 15th. could not materialize owing to the inability of the Calgary and Medicine Hat teams to get away. A wire was sent to Fernie notifying them that the tournament was cancelled and that they would pay the team's expenses to go down and play an exhibition game. The invitation was accepted and a team was gathered together upon short notice. Several of the best players were unable to go and substitutes had to be taken. The boys went down on Wednesday evening returning Friday morning.

The game was played under difficulties. A very heavy wind was blowing which reduced the science of the game to something like guess-work, especially in the outfielding. The game was evenly contested throughout, the score at the close of the 9th innings standing 9 goals to 7 in favor of Fernie The teams who played were.

Fernie.		Macleod
Jamieson	pitcher	Roberts
C. Whalen	catcher	Torrie
Eacrett	1st base	Sylvester
Hamilton	2nd base	Ross
Ferguson	3rd base	Fowler
Taylor	short stop	Shirbino
Shoemaker	right field	McClement
Sunberg	centre field	Nevin
Wilson	left field	Moffatt

Umpire, Mr. Richardson.
Scorer, Geo. Shear.

The cold wind seriously interfered with the success of the fair, which in point of exhibits and the horse racing features, was fully up to its past average.

THE RE-COUNT.

E. C. Smith came in from Spokane last night and went home on this morning's train. He stated that the recount of the ballots had been set for Monday at Nelson before Judge Forin but that owing to the inability of the authorities to have the ballot boxes returned to Nelson from Victoria at the time stated it would have to be postponed, and he wired to that effect. The ballot boxes can only be returned by an order from the returning officer and as Mr. Alexander is away from town on a hunting expedition to the prairie it was impossible to get the required paper. The new date will be set sufficiently distant to give ample time to overcome this difficulty.

Mr. Smith predicts trouble ahead for Premier McBride. The government, he thinks, cannot depend upon the socialists for support, and the filling of the vacant cabinet seats will cause dissatisfaction among the unsuccessful aspirants.

LOGAN—WHITE.

Married, at the residence of John Leask, Wednesday evening at 6. p.m., Miss Mina White, of Beaverton, Ont., and Roderick Logan, of Cranbrook, Rev. Fortune officiating. Miss White arrived last week for the ceremony, and the marriage is the happy termination of many years acquaintance.—Cranbrook Herald.

Mr. Logan is well known in Fernie where he lived for some time, and his friends here join with those in Cranbrook in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Logan all kinds of blessings and prosperity.

THREE DOLLARS FOR TWO

Or How to get the Montreal Weekly Herald Free.

The Fernie Free Press has made a very liberal clubbing arrangement with the Montreal Weekly Herald by which subscribers to this paper may receive the Montreal weekly entirely free. Any new or old subscriber who pays two dollars in advance for a year's subscription to the Fernie Free Press will receive the Montreal Weekly Herald free. The Herald is the best family weekly in Canada and the regular price is $1.00 so that our subscribers are saving a straight dollar by accepting this liberal offer. Call or write at once and have your name on the two lists.

BURIED IN COAL.

F. J. Scott Meets a Horrible Death in Coal Creek Mine.

A cave-in occurred in No. 4 room of No. 1 mine, Coal Creek, on Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock which resulted in the death of Frederick Joseph Scott, one of the two occupants of the room. Mr. Scott was employed in putting in the last board of the lagging on the booms, when a heavy mass of dislocated coal fell from the ceiling, 16 feet above the boom. The terrific force broke the boom and pinioned the man beneath, and the fallen coal buried the latter out of sight. His companion, George Smart, summoned comrades from nearby workings who worked like demons to rescue the suffocating man. Their superhuman efforts were apparently to be rewarded with success, for his whereabouts was located by groans which penetrated the mass of coal, and soon one of the anxious workers reached a part of his body which proved to be his arm. It was found to be still pulsate with life-blood and renewed efforts were made to clear the choking coal from the man's head. But such was not to be, for at this juncture another mass of loosened coal fell, a mass estimated at 40 tons, burying the doomed man beyond hope of recovery and seriously endangering those at the rescue.

The work of digging for the body continued without abatement though none dared to hope that he would be found alive. Nor were their predictions unfounded. When his body was recovered about 40 minutes after the first cave-in, life was quite extinct and though Dr. Ker was on hand and tried artificial respiration it was without avail.

Coroner Trites commenced an inquest on Thursday, when after impanelling a jury and viewing the body an order was given for its burial and an adjournment was set for to-day. No mark was found on the body and it is thought that the deceased died from suffocation.

The deceased was a practical contract miner and was regarded as a careful man in timber work. Had the cave-in occurred two minutes later he would have been safe as after he had completed the lagging work he would have been working in another place and out of danger.

Fred J. Scott is an Englishman of 43 years of age. He came with the excursion of miners from Durham County about two months ago, among whom are several friends of many years' standing. He leaves at home in England a widow and two daughters to mourn his sad and sudden death.

The funeral took place yesterday morning from Christ Church, Rev. C. W. Houghton officiating. The work was suspended in the mine and over a hundred miners followed the corpse to the grave. The deceased possessed many admirable qualities and much sympathy is felt for the bereaved relatives and friends.

INJURED AT MICHEL.

John Edwards Dangerously Injured by a Fall of Rock.

A serious accident occurred in No. 4 mine, Michel, this morning in which John Edwards was dangerously injured. The accident was due to a fall of rock. The unfortunate man was brought down on the morning express and taken to the Fernie hospital. Dr. McSorley who attended the case at Michel is here assisting Drs. Bonnell and Corsan. Both legs are broken and his back is probably broken. A thorough examination is being made this afternoon. John Edwards is a practical miner of 50 years of age and he is one of the best known characters in Michel.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SYSTEM.

The new electric light system was completed this week and the work of painting the new poles is now under way. The upper part will be painted drab while the lower seven feet will be a dark red. All the old poles and wires have been taken down. The latter are being taken to Michel where they will be used in the new plant that is being put in there. The town can now boast as fine an electric light system as can be found in any other town of its size in the country. The power is ample to supply all demands made upon it and the transformers render an even 16 candle power light.

DUNN—BROWN.

Mr. Frank Dunn, the genial proprietor of the Hotel Fernie was married at Nelson on Wednesday of this week to Miss Kathleen Florence Brown, of Wardner. The ceremony took place at the church of Mary Immaculate, Rev. Father Althoff officiating. Mr. Charles Lombard of Victoria acted as groomsman while Miss Lillie Clark, of Nelson, performed the duties of bridesmaid. The newly married couple returned to Fernie on Thursday evening and they have since been receiving the congratulations of a large circle of friends. On Thursday evening a large number of Frank's abquaintances marched in a body to the hotel and took possession of the bar.

COAL CREEK NEWS.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Dr. Harvie paid us a short visit early in the week greeting old friends.

The miners have been beating their record lately, turning out about 1200 tons per day.

The motor cable has been strung over part of the new road which facilitates bringing the coal from the tunnels by meeting the cars part way.

The waterworks system will soon be complete. It will prove a boon to many who previously had to carry their water supply long distances.

The only child of one of our Slavonian friends was badly burned on Wednesday morning. The little one, while her mother was out, was playing with matches which set fire to her night dress burning half her body. Recovery is doubtful. She was taken to the hospital.

Mr. A. Berridge has gone on a trip to St. Paul via Spokane. Our bookkeeper has relatives there and no doubt will have a splendid time.

A number of our citizens here were present at the Thanksgiving social and entertainment given in the Methodist Church at Fernie.

We congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Burr on the birth of a little daughter.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

W. R. Ross, M.P.P., was down to Cranbrook on a business trip on Monday.

James Macdonell returned on Monday from an extended trip in the east.

G. P. Tisdale and Miss Nellie Page, both residents of Cranbrook, were married on Tuesday.

Mrs. (Dr.) Higgins, of Fernie, is in town visiting with her sister, Mrs. P. J. McMahon.—Moyie Leader.

Wanted at once, a first-class pant maker at union wages. Apply to F. J. Mitchell. x

P. T. Smyth, who was at one time connected with the late Frank Sentinel, returned last Saturday from Fernie and will locate in Blairmore.—Blairmore Times.

Some valuable horses have been killed at Coleman by the C. P. R. trains, amongst the number being one of P. Anderson's and one belonging to Anderson & Dunham.

The Orangemen are preparing for a big night on November 5th. A grand torchlight parade will be held, after which a free entertainment will be given in Princess Hall and this will be followed by a ball. See advertisement.

G. G. Henderson is erecting a large ware-house at the rear of his store building occupied by Messrs. Sheppard & Elliott. The business of this firm has so increased that an addition to the building became a necessity.

Constable Dow arrested a man named John Clark at Elko on the charge of assaulting James Laughton at that place on June 10th last. The accused was tried in Fernie yesterday morning and was found guilty. He received a sentence of two months.

R. Hammond is opening up a fine stock of assorted electrical supplies in the little building just south of the Northern hotel. This business is one that was needed in the town and there is no doubt that Mr. Hammond, who is an expert electrician, will make a great success of it. All repairs and supplies for telephone and electric light, etc., can be had at that store.

F. G. Robertson, one of the heaviest shareholders in the Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co., and who has unlimited capital at his command is turning his attention to the iron ore deposits at Bull river. He recently sent Prof. Lenham, a metalurgist and iron ore expert, of St. Paul, to examine the proposition and if his report is favorable an important deal will likely follow.

The Ring.

A glove contest between Kid Lee and Silent Rowan will take place in Princess Hall on Tuesday evening. Two preliminaries have been arranged between Dummy Rowan and Jim Burrows and between Pete Kennedy and Jack Jabez. W. W. Tuttle will referee the contests.

J. S. T. Alexander left yesterday on a hunting trip to the prairie.

See that the union label is on your fall suit. Mitchell, the tailor, puts it on. x

A. H. Cree is building a large cottage on his lot on Howland Ave. This residence will be occupied by Mr. Bird when completed.

Tobacco Plains Journal, is the name of a new paper published at Dewey, Flathead Co., Montana. It is a good local sheet with a decided American air.

A. W. Bleasdell and his son William spent a couple of days on the prairie hunting, and they succeeded in bagging about 70 ducks and 5 geese.

The ladies of the Methodist church held a very successful social on the evening of Thanksgiving. The church was well filled. A program consisting of music, instrumental and vocal, and several recitations, was rendered, after which refreshments were served.

James Barney Guinon, age 38 years, died Thursday, Oct. 8, of heart disease, after an illness lasting only two days. "Barney" as he was familiarly known was an old timer around these parts, coming here as an engineer on construction and he has been here ever since.—Cranbrook Herald.

An outbreak of the most virulent type of smallpox is reported from Spokane. Owing to the fair being on the authorities attempted to keep it quiet. Rossland and Nelson will take steps towards protecting themselves from the danger of infection through railway transportation.

Thanksgiving was observed as a general holiday in town, the stores were all closed and work was practically suspended. Many took advantage of the splendid weather to shoulder a gun and tramp in search of game. A suitable service was held in the Presbyterian church.

Seven men returning home from Rat Portage on a hand-car met the special train containing the manufacturers' excursion last Saturday. The men all jumped but the car in being swept from the track with great force struck three of the men injuring two severely and killing the third outright.

The Ladies Aid of the Baptist church will hold their sale on Tuesday, Oct. 20th in Mr. Lundy's store. The sale will commence at 1:30 p.m. and continue late on in the evening. Lunch will be served to all who wish at 15 cents each and music and games will be the programme for the evening. All are cordially invited to attend,

W. H. Whimster was at Cranbrook on Monday to attend a meeting of the license board. Only one other member of the board, J. D. McBride, was present Two Cranbrook applications were considered, those of L. B. VanDecar and Peter Matheson. The former was granted and the latter was laid over until the next regular meeting in December.

Messrs. C. A. Olmstead and J. J. Grady, representing a lot of Spokane capital were in Fernie this week on business which may result in the bonding of the coal properties up the Elk held by several Fernie citizens. The first named gentleman has returned to Spokane while the latter has gone to the coal areas to investigate them for himself.

Several Fernie people leave for Nelson tomorrow morning to attend the assizes as witnesses in the case of Scott vs. The Fernie Fumber Company. We were in error last week in stating that Mr. Scott was driving the horses at the time of his accident. He was on the top of a skid-pile and the injury was caused by a log rolling onto him.

J. J. Mason, president and general manager of the Globe-Wernicke Co., Ltd., of Stratford, Ont., was in town this week, accompanied by his wife. They were guests of Mr. & Mrs. Bricker. He is looking up trade in the west for the office furniture, etc., that they manufacture. He states that the marvellous growth in the west easily accounts for the renewed activity in the manufacturing industries of Ontario.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Presbyterian church are making preparations for a "birthday" social at the church on Thursday evening next. Invitations are being numerously circulated, accompanied by little silk bags in which is to be placed as many cents as the donor is years old. An interesting programme is being prepared. A Birthday social is something unique, and no doubt this enterprise on the part of the ladies will be very successful.

MARRIED.

Cogan-Keylock—On October 10th, by Rev. Houghton, in Christ church, J.S.M. Cogan, of Fernie, to Flora Isabel Keylock, of Cricklade, Eng.

RUN OVER BABY.

A WINNIPEG STREET CAR ACCIDENT.

Three-year-old Child Run Over on River Avenue, Winnipeg, and Loses Parts of Both Feet—Indignant Passengers.

The cars of the Winnipeg Electric Street Railway Company, which run along River avenue, have become famous for the speed at which they pass crossings. Many narrow escapes occur from time to time, but every now and then there is an accident. Often it is slight and never comes to the ears of the street railway officials and occasionally it is of such a serious nature that it is impossible to hush the matter up.

One of the accidents of the latter kind occurred on Wednesday. Shortly after 4 o'clock the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McClay was crossing this avenue when one of these cars swooped down on her. She was only three years of age, and did not know what to do when she noticed the car. For a moment she looked at the approaching danger and then made a dash for safety, but it was too late. The fender knocked her down and the wheels went over both her feet.

The motorman stopped the car and several passengers ran to her assistance and carried her to her home at 112 River avenue.

The passengers in the car were highly indignant at what they called the carelessness of the company and some of the men muttered dire threats against the motorman.

Dr. McQueen was called to the little sufferer, and he found that it was necessary to amputate a portion of her right foot and also the index toe of her left foot. The doctor ordered her removal to St. Boniface hospital, where she was reported to be resting quietly at an early hour this morning.

The doctor's description of the little girl's feet was most pathetic. The tiny boots were all crushed and torn and some of the leather was driven into the flesh. Although the injuries are very serious, no fatal termination of the accident is expected.

It was reported around Fort Rouge last evening that Mr. McClay would start an action against the company for damages, but the truth of this could not be learned last night.

FROM BOTH HEMISPHERES

Important News Condensed Into Brief Paragraphs.

British merchants will submit Atlantic fast line proposition to Canadian parliament.

Dynamiters at Canadian Soo blow up tracks of Algoma Central railroad, causing intense excitement.

Tornado swept over Kansas, killing several persons and doing immense damage.

Wheat prices were stronger and higher.

Over 108,000 settlers have come to Canada this year.

Sir Thos. Lipton has sold out his Chicago interests.

W. Steele, of Macdonald & Steele, Calgary, killed himself.

A Galt firm has purchased a large business interest in Winnipeg.

Marconi's new invention at Table Head, is giving good satisfaction.

The Russian minister has declared Russia will not evacuate Manchuria.

An escaped convict in a desperate battle in Oregon, killed two deputy sheriffs.

The first refined silver ever shipped from Canada has been sent from the Trail smelter.

Nine members of the crew of the British ship Crompton have reached Victoria, B.C., in irons.

Cable reports have been received by Winnipeg Hebrews of a terrible massacre in Southern Russia.

A small boy in Winnipeg, who was being remonstrated with for smoking cigarettes, shot the lady.

It is believed in England that the success of Chamberlain's scheme will be decided by the colonies.

Mr. Armour, of Chicago, will establish Lorenz chairs in the leading cities of United States and Canada.

The 22nd annual meeting of the Canadian Pacific was held in Montreal. The sum of $9,500,000 will be expended in rolling stock and terminals.

A Journey To the Moon

It was just a plain, ordinary, commonplace two weeks' honeymoon. Somewhere beneath them in a vague, distant atmosphere was a thing called earth. They touched it occasionally with the tips of their toes and then rose to heaven again.

Once they seemed to sit in two chairs. Once some one spoke roughly to him, and it was like an echo. Once they had some tickets punched, or was it twice? At methodical, uninteresting intervals food was placed before them—by whom they did not know. Dishes may have rattled in their ears. They did not hear.

They have a tradition between them that they had once seen together a huge waterfall, and they longed to think that after all such a thing might be possible.

One day they came back, and a friend whom he had not seen for he could not remember when said:

"Why, hello, old man! Where did you go?"

And he replied:

"Why, on my honeymoon, of course."

—Tom Masson in New York Times.

SUNK IN YUKON.

Steamer Sarah Founders with 400 Tons of General Cargo.

A despatch from Dawson City says: The Northern Commercial Company's steamer Sarah struck a rock and quickly sank near Nation City, seventy miles below Eagle City. The hold contained 400 tons of general cargo, which was wholly lost. The full amount of the damage is not known, but the total will run far up into the thousands.

The steamer may possibly be saved, but great haste will be necessary, as ice is already beginning to form in the Yukon, and with lowering temperature, any sort of craft is liable to become ice-bound in a few hours. A steamer with a large wrecking crew, fully equipped for the work of rescue, left Dawson.

Several big steamers are still due to arrive at St. Michael. It is feared that some of them may not be able to get their barges through. If the ice forms rapidly the steamers will have a hard task to pull through to Dawson unincumbered.

The upper river is the scene of a great rush. It is thought probable that at least 2,000 tons of cargo will fail to get away from White Horse. All the available steamers are in use, and numerous barges are loaded and towed. Shallow water occasions great trouble and delay. It is reported here that a cargo of twenty steers and 100 sheep was wrecked on the steamer Crimson near Hootlingua, but the story has not yet been corroborated. Many minor mishaps to shipping are also reported.

It is expected that Yukon navigation will last ten days longer. Hundreds of people are now leaving Dawson for Seattle on the last boats. Many big gold shipments are now en route to Seattle. A big revival in the output is promised this fall, and it is believed that the camp will produce heavily this winter.

Hints for Duck Calling.

Do not call too loud or too often.

Call or attract the bird's attention to decoys, then modulate your call. In a marsh remember that the birds can detect the imitation much more easily in a loud than in a muffled call.

For deep-water birds call louder for the wind will not always favor you.

When birds are coming into decoys stop calling, or else give a low chuckle that they can just hear.

If birds start to circle away a few low calls will often bring them back.

If in open water, the birds often will go entirely beyond you to discover what the suspicious bunch of weeds contain, and at such a time lie low and do not try to keep them in sight all the time. Your moving will scare them quicker than anything else.

Lie down and stay low, and if the birds come in do not jump up if you happen to be on shore. Rest just high enough to clear your blind when you shoot. Be assured the ducks' eyes are on the shore side, for there is where they watch first for danger, and any movement sends them scattering.—A. G. Holmes, in October Outing.

California's Relics.

The expedition conducted by Prof. John C. Merriam, of the Zoological department of the University of California, has made several new finds of interest to science. Two new caves discovered have proved very rich in paleontological remains, and of a species hitherto unknown to scientists. Bones of mountain lions, bison, wolf, porcupine, cave bear and ground sloth were found, with all the bones of the extinct specimen, and also an almost complete specimen of small cave bear. In one of these caves an old tradition had it that an Indian woman wandering about had stumbled into a well, the bottom of which could never be reached. This well was explored, and at the bottom was found the skeleton of a woman well preserved, whom they judged to have fallen or been thrown into the well about 1,000 years ago. All the specimens will be shipped to the university.

A party of 219 boys from the Barnardo Home at Liverpool have lately come to Canada, all being distributed in homes throughout the province of Ontario, except a few of the smaller boys. Most of the arrivals were spoken for some time ago. Each child has two suits of clothing and an overcoat, and has spent at least six months in the home in Liverpool. With the boys came 126 girls, who were left at Peterboro, from where they are being distributed. Thus far this year 1,200 children have been brought out, about 100 more than last year.

The prosecuting witness testified that the defendant had knocked him senseless, and then kicked him in the head and face for several minutes

"If he knocked you senseless," asked the magistrate, "how do you know that he kicked you after you were down."

The witness reflected. "I know it," he replied, "'cause that's what I'd 'a' done to him if I'd got him down—so there!"

THE WIDE WORLD.

Telegraphic News of Two Hemispheres Briefly Chronicled.

Wheat market has advanced sharply.

Salaries of teachers in Brandon have been advanced.

The Portage Plains farms are to be connected by telephone.

The United States has sent a trade mission to Abyssinia.

Toronto's population is now 219,000; the assessment is $141,000,000.

A Russian fleet has anchored near the Japanese in a Corea harbor.

The Canadian Northern will store "tough" wheat at Port Arthur.

M. Gardenier, a C.N.R. brakeman, was badly injured at Headingly.

The Westinghouse interests in Canada have been consolidated at Hamilton.

Sir Thos. Lipton will offer a cup for a yacht race across the Atlantic Ocean.

A young prisoner sentenced in Winnipeg escaped from Portage la Prairie guards.

The steamer Sarah foundered in the Yukon near Nation City, with 400 tons of cargo.

Sir Frederick Borden made an important speech on the militia estimates, outlining many advances.

A county poor farm inmate saved the N. P. Limited, near Butte; it was in danger of being dynamited.

Circumstances point to murder in the finding of the dead body of a foreigner in a Winnipeg lumber yard.

A. J. Gallagher, a homeseeker from Kingston, Ont., had his foot badly crushed in a railway accident at Tyndall.

The Earl of Dundonald, general officer commanding the forces in Canada, is expected in Winnipeg next week on a tour of inspection.

Two Galicians were arrested in Winnipeg charged with murdering the man found dead in Black's lumber yard. Coroner Benson will hold an inquest.

Allan line manager predicts there will be no rate war between Atlantic steamship lines.

Fight over possession of Soo properties is likely to show that U. S. steel trust caused closing of plant.

Montreal police unearthed a gang, the object of which is to induce seamen to desert vessels arriving at that port.

Latest advices from Japan indicate that war with Russia is only a question of days.

Reported that Britain has arranged the demobilization of the Bulgarian and Turkish forces.

Great Britain and France have signed a treaty providing for arbitration to settle matters in dispute.

The commercial treaty between U. S. and China has been finally signed. Two open ports granted by China.

Mrs. Jas. Badger, 25 years of age, who came from Parry Sound to undergo an operation in St. Joseph's hospital, Hamilton, Ont., took convulsions on the operating table and died before any anaesthetic had been given her.

Charles A. E. Harriss, who conducted Sir Alexander Mackenzie's musical festivals in Canada, is in Winnipeg. He discussed examinations to be conducted on this side in connection with the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music in London, Eng.

Verdict in Cole Murder.

The coroner's jury at Brantford empanelled to enquire into the circumstances surrounding the death of the eight-year-old Irene Cole, brought in this verdict: "We find that Irene Cole was wilfully murdered by a person or persons unknown. It is the unanimous opinion of this jury from the evidence produced that suspicion points to the prisoner Kennedy." Prof. Ellis has not finished his analysis of the spots found on Kennedy's clothes.

Race Across the Ocean.

The New York World says: Sir Thomas Lipton is to improve his ardor for international yacht racing. He desires to put the constructive ability of Herreshoff and other designers of both the old and new world to a test, and also to try out the seamanship of sailor of all nations in crossing the ocean. A $2,500 cup, a perpetual challenge trophy, for which the nations of the world may compete annually, is to be the offer of the Irish Baronet.

Of the 1,600,000 natives of Liberia there are 60,000 civilized negroes, who have been deported or have emigrated from the United States.

From the fragrant meadows of Prince Edward Island—to your table.

Victor Brand Evaporated Cream

Good Pasture, Pure Spring Water, Healthy Cattle, Perfect climatic conditions, make the milk of P.E.I. cattle, the purest, richest and best. VICTOR CREAM is this milk, minus the water. Equal to fluid cream for all purposes and more convenient. Its flavor is something delicious.

Mfd. by Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., • Charlottetown, P. E. I.

GOOD PAULINE IDEA

APOSTLE SAID: "LET YOUR MODERATION BE KNOWN UNTO ALL MEN."

TALMAGE READS ITS MEANING

Plea For Tolerance and Forbearance Between Man and Man—Become a Well-Rounded Man—Do Not Condemn in Others Faults and Weaknesses That May Be Paralleled in Ourselves—Wisdom in Moderation.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Oct. 4.—In this sermon the preacher teaches a timely lesson on the wisdom of exercising tolerance and forbearance between man and man and reminds us that the faults and weaknesses which we condemn in others may find a parallel in ourselves. The text is Philippians iv, 5, "Let your moderation be known unto all men."

What does the Pauline word "moderation" mean? "I know," says one. "It means: Do not be an extremist. Do not ride a hobby to death. Do not focus your eyes upon one truth so long that you become blinded to the relative importance of other truths, nor upon one error until you lose sight of the evil effects of all other errors. 'Virtue is a road which has a hedge and a ditch on both sides,' once wrote a famous writer. A man may be moderate in one thing and not in another."

"Let your moderation be known unto all men" means: Do not be a fanatic, a one sided monstrosity, like a dove with one wing cropped, flapping about in the barnyard and yet unable to rise ten feet into God's great heaven of blue. Do not expend all your energies preaching against the evils of intoxication and at the same time be a glutton. Do not preach against gambling with cards when you gamble with railroad stocks. Do not berate the thief who steals a loaf of bread and honor the thief who cheats his neighbor in a real estate deal. Be a well rounded man. Be like a plant with leaves and pistils and stamens and sepals and petals growing upon a supple stem, able to bend every whither yet with roots anchored in the solid earth, and not like a balloon filled with a noxious gas, tossed about in the air, the plaything of every stray wind.

That the Pauline idea? No, my friend, you are wrong. When Paul said, "Let your moderation be known unto all men," he was not, as Bishop Villiers once expressed it, "alluding to the gratification of our desires generally, but especially temperance or self restraint in our relation to others, in our abstinence from anger and harshness and vengeance." He is saying, as the revised version translates the sentence, "Let your forbearance or gentleness be known unto all men." To-day instead of preaching upon what you should eat and drink and wherewith you be clothed and how much exercise you should take I shall preach upon how you should smile and talk and shake hands and forgive and love. This sermonic theme is not how we should live, but how we should be willing to let others live.

Be patient, in the first place, even with the irritating idiosyncrasies and the offensive mannerisms that are found in almost every one with whom we come in contact. Be patient with their peculiarities, especially if they are nonessentials in reference to the honesty and noble characteristics of a man. Be patient especially because wrong types of marked individuality, if harnessed in the right way, will often mean great success for us and for those whom it is our privilege to influence.

A strange law decrees that insanity is sometimes the handmaid of genius. The inspired eye, which afar off can discover a star, is often so nearsighted that it cannot see a diamond glittering close at hand. Joseph Cook was the intellectual and the mental and spiritual Hercules who stood year after year in old Boston forging Scriptural thunderbolts and damming back the pernicious and dangerous teachings of the leaders of anti-Christian doctrines. Yet Joseph Cook, great as he was, would have been utterly unfitted for an ordinary pastorate. His last days were passed in a sanitarium, in a place consecrated to the work of caring for mental incompetents. Joseph Cook's brain was a magnificent piece of mental machinery, that, like other delicate machinery, was easily thrown out of gear. Thus we find that the greatest poets and musicians and artists and sculptors, statesmen, dramatists, lawyers, physicians and ministers have sometimes been men of startling strength.

The startling characteristics, good or bad, which can be found in the ten talent men on a big scale can also be found in the one talent men on a small scale. In the ordinary walks of life everywhere are people cursed or marred with various imperfections They are good people in one sense, but bad in another. We define them as "peculiar" people. We call them "peculiar" because through each runs a mental or physical weakness, as a mineral vein runs through the rocks of a mighty mountain. We say: "I like So-and-so, but he has one fearfully irritating characteristic. He will muss up a room every time he enters it." Or you say: "I like Mrs. So-and-so, but every time she calls she makes some nettlesome remark that stings like a brier bush. When she comes to visit me I am always glad to welcome her. When she leaves I am always gladder to see her go. She is never with me ten minutes without making me unhappy. She says something disagreeable about my dress, my house, my children or my husband. Yes, I feel and know that Mrs. So-and-so is a good woman and that she loves me, but she has the tantalizing faculty of always unintentionally saying something mean."

Ah, yes. All of us have had such bitter experiences as these from the irritating peculiarities of our friends. So Paul comes to us to-day in the words of my text. He says: "My brother, you must be lenient and gentle in your dealings with the faults and failings of others. You must be yielding, as the wave of an incoming tide is yielding. It first breaks itself into pieces and then crawls up and fits itself into all the nooks and crannies of the seashore. You must be yielding in the nonessentials, so that you can cause your life to be successfully fitted into the peculiarities of others, as one factory wheel will fit into the cogs of another wheel."

Would that we might always practice Benjamin Franklin's gospel of moderation! His toleration of the nonessentials of life was never more grandly demonstrated than in the last great public service which he rendered to his country. When over eighty years of age he made the peroration of his life in pleading for the adoption of the constitution of the United States in the great constitutional convention which met in Philadelphia in 1787. He admitted, during his address, that the constitution under discussion did not satisfy him in toto. He wanted one legislative assembly, not two. He wanted an executive council, with the president at the head, instead of all executive power being invested in one man. He wanted the president of the United States to serve without salary. "But," said the grand old sage of Philadelphia, "the older I grow the more I doubt my own infallibility and the more I believe that others may occasionally be right. I am not like the French lady who one day said to her sister, 'I do not know how it happens, sister, but I meet with nobody but myself that is always in the right.' Therefore, though I may not like this constitution in toto, I do feel that it is the best for all parties upon which we could ever agree. And, Mr. President, I cannot help expressing a wish that every member of this convention who may still have objections to it would with me on this occasion doubt a little of his own infallibility, and to make manifest our unanimity put his name to this instrument." That plea of Benjamin Franklin is a good exposition of what Paul's moderation means. It means giving up a little in order to fit your life into the nonessential peculiarities of other people.

Blood should be thicker than water. Blood should be a potent factor in the making or unmaking of a man. I am in no sense a fatalist. I am not one of those indifferent, never may care men who try to excuse their sloth and laziness by advocating the doctrine, "What is to be will be, and what is not to be will not be!" I am not foolish enough to think that "a man can be born to be eternally destroyed, no matter how he may try to prevent it or what he may do or say." But I am one of those believing people who are ready to grant that, by reason of the operation of the laws of heredity, it is harder for some people to do right than for others, and to grant also that, because of heredity, it is easier for some to do wrong than for others. Blood thicker than water? Of course it is. All of us should believe what our eyes everywhere behold. Baldwin apples do not grow upon fall pippin trees unless ingrafted. In the spiritual as well as in the vegetable and animal kingdoms, "like always produces like."

The heredity law in all its different aspects being agreed upon, why should you not be patient in your dealings with those whose ancestors were not good and true and pure Christian, as were your fathers and grandfathers and great-grandparents? Have you the right to expect the child of an Aztec sun worshiper, within the first year of his conversation, to have as beautiful a conception of the cross as the child of that Indian missionary who last year gave up his life for Christ within sight of a horrible ghat burning upon the banks of the Ganges? Have you a right to expect that young boy whom you took from the foundling home and adopted to have as easy a time living the Christian life as your own flesh and blood? Perhaps that boy is the son of two thieves, while your child is the son of a good mother. Remember, as a spiritualist oculist, you cannot in a day open the visual windows of one born blind. Oh, my brother, do not fret and worry and lose your patience in your dealings with those of bad spiritual ancestry. Be gentle! Be forbearing! Be forgiving! Be kind! Be merciful! Be moderate in all things. Forgive not only seven times, but seventy times seven.

Be patient, in the next place, with the Peters of the three denials. There are many, very many, of them. They are not the sinners who mean to do wrong, but they are the sanguine temperaments who overestimate their own abilities. They at times love the Lord with all their strength, but, then, underestimating the strength of evil, they deliberately run into temptation, to be overthrown not once, but twice and thrice.

The Peters of the three denials! Perhaps that young man whom you discharged only last week was one of them. He was a fine young fellow. Everybody who came in touch with him liked him. Bright? There was no brighter boy in your store. He was not only bright, but he was the son of a good Christian father. He knew better, but he would drink. He came into your office drunk about one year ago. You forgave him once. You forgave him twice. When he did it the third time you said, "Out you go!" And out of the store last week he went. You loved him for his own sake. You liked him on account of his father and mother. Then, my brother, if you like that lad, if you think he has even yet the making of a good man in him, if he can overcome that one fault, why not take him back again? Why not give him another chance? "No, no," you answer. "I have given him three different chances. Three times are enough." Are they enough, my brother? Remember the lad's parents. Remember that he is an impulsive fellow and not bad at heart. Remember that Christ forgave Peter again and again until at last Peter rose above his weaknesses and gave his life fully and freely back to Christ. Will you do as much for that young man in your employ as Christ did for his impulsive and denying disciple?

From the filthy pieces of clothes gathered by the ragpickers in Germany and France I have seen the manufacturers of Watervliet, Mich., make the purest and whitest writing paper. From even the modern Peters of the three denials there have been developed the Peters of the martyred blood. One day General Charles George Gordon, more widely known as "Chinese" Gordon, saw a handsome Chinese youth being led out to execution. The condemned had been guilty of many crimes. Gordon was struck with the looks of the lad and begged for his life. He said that he himself would guarantee that the boy would do right. Gordon's request was granted. The famous soldier of Queen Victoria and of Jesus Christ took the lad to his own quarters. He made the Chinese boy then and there promise never to do wrong again. Did he fulfill his pledge? From that day on the most faithful servant Gordon ever had about him was that boy, rescued by the Christian general from the executioner's axe. He followed Gordon to Egypt. And the Chinese lad's blood mingled with Charles George Gordon's blood when the massacre at Khartoum ended the earthly life of England's most famous Christian soldier. Ah, the Peters of the three denials are worth saving.

But, steady, my brother. Be patient also with those who are harsh in their criticisms of others. Remember that for them a day of reckoning is coming, or perhaps has come. Who among your brothers and sisters to-day is having the hardest times? Is it not the sister who never had in her heart any love for the common people? Is it not the sister who felt she was socially and mentally a little higher than any one else? Who to-day is most mercilessly laid upon the dissecting table of criticism and having his whole life cut to pieces? Is it not the man who himself once most vigorously wielded the censorious scalpel? Do not worry that these sinners who are so harsh in their criticisms against the sins of others will not have their just rewards. Verily, verily, I say unto you, their condemnation will come from God. It is better for us not to try to snatch the divine thunderbolts out of God's hand.

But there is still another class of aggressive critics against which I would plead with you to apply the teachings of my text. They are those who have no sympathy with you in your work. I do not mean those who are maliciously falsifying, but those who are honestly, truthfully and positively do not like your way of doing things. Now, my brother, the best way for you to overcome such criticism is not by going out and trying to destroy your neighbor's influence for good, but simply by being patient; by simply saying nothing against your honest though antagonistic neighbors, but by going ahead and doing your own work in your own way and proving beyond all peradventure that God has blessed you and will continue to bless you in what you are doing in his name.

Nine-tenths of all the criticisms made against us would soon die if we ourselves did not go forth to fight those criticisms and thus make matters worse. Hugh Clifford, the old jungle traveler, once vividly described a startling experience he had when traveling in the Malay peninsula. He and his men were attacked by a huge swarm of angry, revengeful bees. Immediately the party swung their blankets around their heads and tried to fight them off, but it was useless. They were stung everywhere. "Take to the water!" Clifford cried to his men. The Malays ran for their lives. The bees not only drove them into the water, but continued stinging them there. The furious insects threatened to kill them while they were in the river itself. "With hands like boxing gloves and heads like inflated footballs from the awful stinging," wrote Clifford, "my suffering party then limped away to the next village. Half an hour later one of my men came into the village uninjured. He had seen the bees coming and had sat down and waited the assault. They covered him from head to foot, but as he offered no opposition they did not sting him." What is true of the Malay bees is true also of the human bees. With buzz and threatenings in great swarms they may light upon you. They may crawl all over you and aggravatingly tickle your face and hands and heart, but if you will not fight them, but simply go on doing the work that God has given you to do, your assailants will become harmless, and after awhile they will leave you in peace and in ease.

Thus, my friends, the whole teaching of this text is this: Drop your battle ax and as a Christian farmer go to gospel seed planting. Drop your war clubs and go to driving an ambulance. Do not boast of how many enemies you have killed, but speak rather of how many friends you have been able to win through gospel love. This text has in it the language of pardon, not the hiss of hate. It is a flower garden whose most fragrant blossoms grow best upon the grave hillocks under which are buried the hideous corpses of bitter strife. It is a lighthouse to warn voyagers off the dangerous rocks and to guide them into the harbor of safety and not the search light of an invader, ready to single out for destruction a hiding foe. Oh, my brother and sister, will you not try to practice Paul's moderation? Will you not let your forbearance and gentleness and Christian forgiveness be known unto all men?

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

As to Old Ages.

Thomas Parr and Henry Jenkins are respectively credited with the ages of 152 and 169. Jeanne Serimphan was married when she was 127 and died when she was 128. Dr. Dufournel married at 116 and became the father of two children and died at 120. Marie Priou reached the age of 158. A woman of Metz, the mother of twenty-four children, died at the age of 100. Surgeon Politman celebrated his one hundred and fortieth birthday. Patrick O'Neil buried seven wives and died at 120, and a Norwegian peasant is recorded as dying at 160 and leaving two sons, one aged 108 and the other only nine summers. Mr. Robert Taylor lived to be 134 and died of excitement on receiving the picture of Queen Victoria signed by herself. An Irishman named Brown, who was a habitual drunkard, lived to be 120. A French drunkard lived to be 112. He had a daily debauch for ninety years. Durand d'Etivel of Cahors lived to be 128. A woman of 124 drank strong coffee in great quantities all her days, while a man of 114 lived on fruit, chiefly melons, and chewed lemon peel.

Color Tones For Whistler.

About the time James MacNeill Whistler, the artist, was causing a sensation with the painting which he called "A Harmony In Black and Red," "A Nocturne In Blue" or some such name he had a misunderstanding with his club regarding dues. The secretary finally wrote to Mr. Whistler saying that the club would be glad to receive from him "an arrangement in gold and silver."

Handy For Speechmaking.

"Yes," said the nervous man, "I have a habit of talking in my sleep."

And the eminent citizen who is expected to respond to an ovation in every town that the train goes through murmured:

"What a valuable accomplishment!"

South American Kidney Cure is the only kidney treatment that has proven equal to correct all the evils that are likely to befall these physical regulators. Hundreds of testimonials to prove the curative merits of this luquid kidney specific in cases of Bright's disease, diabetes, irritation of the bladder, inflammation, dropsical tendency. Don't delay.—22.

It is stated that nine of the most successful of modern novels aggregated a sale of over 1,600,000 copies. The paper on which these books were printed was made of wood fibre—cellulose—and the Pawtucket Gazette figures out that it required about 4,000 trees to furnish this paper.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

Whether Ireland is the finest country in the world for growing flax, it is beyond dispute the finest in the world for bleaching linen—an operation which requires from six to eight weeks, according to the nature and weight of the fabric.

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT

Removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, ringbone, sweeney, stifles, sprains; cures sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by the use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful Blemish Cure ever known. Sold by all druggists.

In 1861 there were in London 37,000 tailors, in 1871 38,000, in 1881 40,300, in 1891 52,300, and in 1901 80,074.

THERE IS ONLY ONE ELECTRIC OIL.—When an article, be it medicine or anything else, becomes popular, imitations invariably spring up to derive advantages from the original, which they themselves could never win on their own merits. Imitations of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil have been numerous, but never successful. Those who know the genuine are not put off with a substitute, but demand the real thing.

The Livingston Mission in Africa of the Presbyterian Church of Great Britain, which was founded in 1875, now occupies six chief centres, has a staff of forty-two European missionaries, and one hundred out-stations.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

Cork has the best-dressed and most prosperous looking population in Ireland.

Lever's Y-Z (Wise Head) Disinfectant Soap Powder is better than other powders, as it is both soap and disinfectant. 34

Some of the English medical papers are advocating the appointment of trained nurses as stewardesses on steamships.

Ayer's

Do you like your thin, rough, short hair? Of course you don't. Do you like thick, heavy, smooth hair? Of course you do. Then why not be pleased? Ayer's Hair Vigor makes beautiful heads of hair, that's the whole story. Sold for 60 years.

Hair Vigor

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a long time. It is, indeed, a wonderful hair tonic, restoring health to the hair and scalp, and, at the same time, proving a splendid dressing." DR. J. W. TATUM, Madill, Ind. T.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for

Weak Hair

Why Foam Is White.

The question as to why all foam is white is not an easy one to understand, but the fact is that foam is always white, whatever may be the color of the beverage itself. The froth produced on a bottle of the blackest ink is white and would be perfectly so were it not tinged to a certain extent by particles of the liquid which the bubbles hold in mechanical suspension. As to the cause of this whiteness, it is sufficient to say that it is due to the large number of reflecting surfaces formed by the foam, for it is these surfaces which, by reflecting the light, produce upon our eyes the impression of white.

If we remember that all bodies owe their colors to the rays of light, which they cannot absorb, and all bodies which reflect all the light they receive, without absorbing any, appear perfectly white, we shall be prepared to understand how the multitude of reflecting surfaces formed by the foam, and which do not absorb any light, must necessarily give the froth a white appearance. It is for the same reason that any very fine powder appears white, even the blackest marble, when ground to dust, losing every trace of its original color.

The Doctor Knew Best.

A Pennsylvania farmer named Hans was subject to some kind of fits which rendered him totally unconscious for hours at a time and on several occasions convinced his good wife that she was a widow. It was pretty generally known that she was by no means averse to the widowed state, for she and the doughty Hans did not live in peace and amity.

One day Hans was stricken as usual. The good wife applied the usual remedies, but this time they failed to revive the unconscious man. A doctor was called, and after a thorough examination he shook his head and said solemnly:

"Dot iss zu bed. Hiss iss todt (dead)."

The widow pretended to be overcome with grief, and, leaning over the prostrate form of her husband, she wailed:

"Oh, mein Hans iss todt! Mein Hans iss todt!"

But Hans, reviving suddenly, exclaimed:

"Nein, nein! Ich ben nit todt!"

"Hans," said his wife reprovingly, "lie still. Der doctor knows best."

Singing Cattle to Sleep.

A curious instance of the power of music comes from the western ranches, where the cowboys have learned that they can sing cattle to sleep. At "bedding time" a rider will ride to the front of a herd, stop it, and then he will ride rapidly around and around it till the cattle are herded close together. He usually sings or whistles while he is doing this, and presently one of the herd lies down, to be followed in quick succession by the others, till in ten minutes a herd of 500 may be all down. The cowboy now rides slowly around them, stopping occasionally if he desires to, and whistling or singing, as he likes. But should the herd get up or become excited in the night he rides around rapidly and sings until they are quiet.

Seeing With One Eye.

A great many, perhaps the majority, of otherwise well informed people believe that they see the same with one eye as with both eyes. That this is not the case one can easily convince himself by the following simple experiment: Cover one of the eyes with a hand or a bandage and let the experimenter attempt to snuff out a candle suddenly placed within a few feet of him. He will almost invariably miss the flame, either overreaching, underreaching or putting the fingers too far to the right or left of the flame. With both eyes normal and open the accommodation for distance and direction is instantaneous.

Washing a Sweater.

Sometimes a sweater that has been sent out to be laundered will come back distorted in shape. Often it is the sleeves, which will be abbreviated to nothing or stretched to almost twice their natural length. In the latter case, procure some thick boards, just the length that you would have the sleeves. Dip the sleeves into boiling water, push a board into each so as to stretch it transversely, then dry in the hot sun. When dry, dip again in boiling water, this time slightly salted, and dry again in the sun on the boards.

The Skeleton at Large.

"Do you know," she said, "the Browns have a skeleton in the closet?"

"Oh, no," he replied carelessly.

"But I'm sure of it," she insisted.

"And I'm just as sure you're wrong," he returned. "The comments I've heard are enough to prove that that skeleton of theirs isn't in the closet at all; it's wandering all over the neighborhood."

The "Grain of Truth."

"Pa, what's a grain of truth?"

"It is generally the thing that keeps all the women in the neighborhood saying: 'Well, I declare!' 'I never would have thought it!' 'You don't say!' 'I never did believe she was as innocent as she tried to make out!' and 'I feel so sorry for her children!'"

Just Saved From Starvation.

When in 1891 Miss Balfour was visiting the west of Ireland and studying the condition of the people she asked one of them how they were getting on in a particular village. "Arrah, miss, sure and if it wasn't for the famine we'd be shtarving!"

Two Sides of a Case.

Slowpay—Doctor, I suppose you can recommend your tailor to me?

Doctor—Certainly, but you will have to get some one else to recommend you to my tailor.—Medical Brief.

"BLUE LABEL"

40 cents per pound.

"SALADA"

CEYLON TEA. A 20th century Luxury. Positively Incomparable. Black, Mixed or NATURAL GREEN, Sold only in lead packets. 40c., 50c. and 60c per lb.

By all grocers. Steadfastly refuse all Substitutes.

WHEAT — OATS — BARLEY — FLAX

ST. WILLIAMS ALBA

SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY THOMPSON, SONS & CO.

Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg. Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,

GRAIN MERCHANTS,

TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. Box 585

McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Lead Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.

Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

SHE HAD TO SIT UP IN A CHAIR

Mrs. Jas. Kinsella Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Peculiar Medical Case Ends in Another Victory for the Great Kidney Remedy

St. Malachie, Dorchester Co., Que., Oct. 10.—(Special).—A medical case of particular interest, especially to women, is causing much talk here. Mrs. James Kinsella suffered from Kidney Disease, which so affected her that she could not sleep, and she was obliged for two summers to pass her nights sitting in a chair. To-day she is practically a well woman. Interviewed regarding her cure she said:

"I had a pain in my right hip, in the back and was swollen all down that side of the abdomen. I could not sleep at night and I was obliged to sit up in a chair for two summers.

"Reading of cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills I bought one box. That gave me such relief that I continued to use them. They did me a world of good, and now I can go to bed like other people. I have never had to sit up in a chair since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Female complaints are caused by bad Kidneys Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure them.

There are, it is said, three millions of women and girls in the Philippine Islands without a knowledge of the Bible. They have been taught to trust in charms and in scapularies bought from the friars for a large price.

Never Worry.—Take them and go about your business—they do their work whilst you are doing yours. Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills are system renovators, blood purifiers and builders; every gland and tissue in the whole anatomy is benefitted and stimulated in the use of them. 40 doses in a vial, 10 cents.—21.

Surpliced, vested or gowned choirs are now to be found in nine of the Methodist churches of New York city.

SUFFER NO MORE.—There are thousands who live miserable lives because dyspepsia dulls the faculties and shadows existence with the cloud of depression. One way to dispel the vapors that beset the victims of this disorder is to order them a course of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are among the best vegetable pills known, being easy to take and are most efficacious in their action. A trial of them will prove this.

Governor Taft has offered $6,000,000 for the friars' property in the Philippines, and they demand $12,000,000 for it.

I was cured of terrible lumbago by MINARD'S LINIMENT.

REV. WM. BROWN.

I was cured of a bad case of earache by MINARD'S LINIMENT.

MRS. S. KAULBACK.

I was cured of sensitive lungs by MINARD'S LINIMENT.

MRS. S. MASTERS.

A fine deaconess house and hospital has been erected by the German Evangelical Church at Cincinnati, at a cost of $100,000 for the buildings alone.

Sunlight Soap will not burn the nap off woolens nor the surface off linens.

SUNLIGHT SOAP REDUCES EXPENSE

Ask for the Octagon Bar.

A Tale of Tailless Cats.

Travelers have noted that in the Bismarck archipelago cats without tails are very numerous. The explanation as given in the World Today is curious. The natives of the islands have a superstitious belief that remnants of food falling into the hands of an enemy enable him to cast a spell over the eaters of the meal at which the remnants were left. Now, the natives value their cats less as pets than as a convenient source of fresh meat. It follows that thefts of cats are frequent, or rather were frequent until some genius evolved the happy scheme of cutting off their tails and storing them away in a safe place. "For," said he, "if a thief should steal my cat and eat it, an incantation muttered over its residue will make the miscreant so sick that he will be sorry he ever tasted stolen cat's flesh." It was an idea worthy of the great chancellor himself, and the humble, brown Bismarckian, in pursuing the blood and iron policy which it entailed, was, like him, serenely indifferent to bloodshed, pain and caterwaulings so long as he secured his ends or his cats' ends.

Tree and Plant Leaves.

The general arrangement of the leaves on limbs and stalks of trees and plants secures between each sufficient space to prevent one leaf from interfering with another. And not only are leaves so arranged as to exist independently of each other, but in a general way they have taken upon themselves the forms best adapted to secure the maximum of sunlight as it is showered upon them in different latitudes. At the equator, where the sun's rays are vertical, we find large flat leaves like those of the banana, plantain and the various species of the cactus.

Farther north, where sunlight strikes at an angle, small leaves and pine "needles" are found. Then again note the peculiarity of the Australian gum tree. Instead of exposing their broad faces to the sun the edges only are so turned. Were it otherwise the sun would rob them of all their moisture, it being a well known fact that the gum tree grows in the driest region on earth.

The Bald Dr. Smith.

While Dr. Theobald Smith was a lecturer on bacteriology in the medical department of the Columbian university a boy came to him with a message from a relative who was visiting in Washington. When the boy saw the doctor he put the note back in his pocket, saying, "It's another Dr. Smith the note is for."

"Let me see the name on the envelope," said the doctor curiously. "That is my name. The note is for me."

"But I was told," replied the boy, "to give it to the bald Dr. Smith."

"Oh, you got turned around a little on the name, that's all," replied the doctor, reaching for the note.

And it took considerable argument to convince the boy he was the right man.

Sun Drunkenness.

To become sun drunk is a condition into which any one may fall in the tropics. Exposure to the sun's rays will reduce a man to a condition almost exactly resembling drunkenness. He staggers about and is usually compelled to lie down and "sleep it off." Sun drunkenness is sometimes accompanied by nausea. Another curious fact in connection with life in the tropics, where the sun rises at the same time all the year round, is that if you do not get up before sunrise you do not feel well all day. You feel heavy, out of sorts and have a tendency to sickness.

Smart Girl.

"Do you know," said Miss Bunting, "Mildred Gildersleeve almost coaxed Mr. Fillmore to propose to her. That's how she became engaged."

"Ah, begged the question, did she?" replied Mr. Larkin.

How easy, is it not, for the strong to advise the weak, for the well to advise the sick.

To live long it is necessary to live slowly.—Cicero.

H.B.K. Caps

For all kinds of wear—rain, sleet, snow, wind or just plain cold.

A score of styles.

Lighter than fur, warmer than fur because designed to protect exposed parts.

Cost less than fur—wear better than fur.

Leather, corduroy, cloth, flaps, neck masks, drop fronts, wool, fleece or fur lined. Stylish and durable—all prices. Sold at all dealers—see that they have this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

H. B. K. "Pinto" Shell Mitts and Gloves

A hundred styles of mitts and gloves made of "Pinto" Shell Cordovan, that new, tough, boil proof, scorch proof, tear proof, rip proof, wind and rain proof leather made from the hide of the western bronco.

Knit wrister mitts; double wrists, one inside sleeve, another outside; fleece lined, fur lined, scores of styles for all kinds of uses. None genuine unless branded.

H.B.K. BRAND

H. B. K. Moccasins

Made of "Pinto" Shell Cordovan, buckskin and oil dressed steerhide.

Sewed with unrippable thread in lock-stitched seams.

Strongest and best moccasins for all kinds of wear.

See that they are branded with this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

SOLD BY DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.

MONTREAL WINNIPEG

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE

Used it ten years. Washington, D.C., Nov. 20, 1908. Please send me your "Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases." Have used Kendall's Spavin Cure for ten years and gladly testify to its merits. Yours truly, Justus C. Nelson.

Five Cases of Spavin Absolutely Cured. Buffalo, N. Dakota, Jan. 26, 1909. I have cured five horses absolutely of Spavin in the last four years with your Kendall's Spavin Cure. Very truly yours, Harry D. Raettel.

THE OLD RELIABLE

And Most Successful Remedy Ever Discovered for Spavins, Ringbones, Splints and all Lameness.

This is the unqualified experience of thousands of horsemen and others in this and other countries and there is no reason why you should not share in these benefits. Just read what the above people say about "Kendall's." Write to them for your own satisfaction.

In addition to being the best stable remedy known, it is unequaled as a liniment for household and family use. Sold generally by all druggists. Price $1; six bottles for $5. We send valuable book, "A Treatise on the Horse," profusely illustrated, free upon request.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburg Falls, Vt.

Needs But One Trial

To know that "Ogilvie's Hungarian" is the best Bread-Flour to be had. If particular, so much the better, because is made to please particular people.

OGILVIE'S HUNGARIAN FLOUR

The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Ltd.

MILLERS TO H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

(ASSESSMENT SYSTEM).

It's up to you to protect your loved ones to the best of your ability.

CANADIAN ORDER OF CHOSEN FRIENDS

Will furnish you with an insurance from $500 to $2,000 at as low a cost as is consistent with safety.

The Canadian Order of Chosen Friends is thoroughly reliable.
The Canadian Order of Chosen Friends is purely Canadian.
The Canadian Order of Chosen Friends is registered.
The Canadian Order of Chosen Friends is growing rapidly.
The Canadian Order of Chosen Friends has 470 Councils.
The Canadian Order of Chosen Friends has 25,000 members.
The Canadian Order of Chosen Friends has $400,000 surplus.

JOIN NOW. Local members show this ad. to your friends. If you are not a member, full information will be furnished by writing to

W. F. MONTAGUE, Grand Recorder, Hamilton, or
W. F. CAMPBELL, Grand Organizer, Hamilton.

A painted sarcophagus, dating from 2,500 B.C., has been found at Crete. It is said to be the oldest painting ever found in Europe.

Death or lunacy seemed the only alternative for a well-known and highly respected lady of Wingham, Ont., who had travelled over two continents in a vain search for a cure for nervous debility and dyspepsia. A friend recommended South American Nervine. One bottle helped, six bottles cured, and her own written testimony [illegible] words: "It has saved my life."—20.

Knife wounds heal a great deal quicker than tongue wounds.

It is estimated that about twelve new places of worship are completed each day in the year in the United States. The average cost is $7,000, or an aggregate of from $85,000 to $105,000 daily for church buildings.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

A church at a Massachusetts seaside resort has a strong searchlight turned upon it, thus reminding visitors of the time and place of evening service.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, OCT. 17, 1903.

WANTED—A SKATING RINK.

Now that the old skating rink has been sold, and the town is without any provision for a rink for the coming winter, it is full time that the citizens awake to the true situation of affairs. The old rink though it is not large and though its management was sometimes open to criticism has held a very important part in the social and athletic life of the town during the long winters of the past three years, and to find ourselves face to face with a proposition which threatens to snatch this means of enjoyment from us should be a sufficient incentive to encourage most energetic efforts towards securing anothar rink.

Several weeks ago some of the enterprising young men of the town began to talk up the formation of a joint stock company for the purpose of purchasing the old rink and remodelling it. Since its sale was put through these people have seen plainer than ever the absolute necessity for some such steps to be taken, and they are now busily engaged in looking for a site where a rink might be built. A site which meets with the general approval is that on the west side of the recreation grounds, and if suitable terms can be arrived at with the Coal Company this will doubtless be chosen.

A new rink will cost anywhere from four to six thousand dollars according to size and equipment. The latter amount will build a rink of which any town double the size of of Fernie might well be proud, while the former amount will build a rink suitable in every way as an average-sized skating rink, without the curling department. Plans have already been submitted, and upon the selection of the lot being made everything will be in readiness to proceed with the incorporation of the Company and to put stock upon the market. Every citizen who can afford to invest a little spare cash in this enterprise should not fail to do so. In the first place from a business standpoint the proceeds will pay handsome dividends as the company will take the precaution to place the enterprise under first-class management. In the second place, many reasons can be advanced to prove that the proposition is a worthy one, which will benefit the town directly and indirectly in many ways, and as such it is the duty of every citizen to help it along. Much might be said under this second heading. The wholesome exercise and pleasure afforded the children, and grown-up folk, the encouragement to to the grand old game of hockey and the incentive to the scientific sport of curling might all be dilated upon, but the mere suggestion is sufficient.

The meeting of the Board of Trade called for Monday evening did not materialize as a quorum failed to make their appearance at the hall. This is an unfortunate state of affairs, as business of an important nature was on hand for discussion.

* * *

THE locators of coal lands in East Kootenay will expect, now that the government has been sustained, to have their licenses either granted or refused. At all events a decision can no longer be postponed. It is known that Mr. McBride is of the opinion that all those locators, who have complied with the statutory regulations, should have their licenses granted and that the C. P. R. claims are not to be allowed to stand in the way. There is therefore every reason to expect that the licenses will be issued, and these coal lands will come into the hands of the people of the province, who have under the laws of the province located their claims in good faith.—Grand Forks News Gazette.

DEATH OF ROSE COWARD.

The town was shocked to learn of the sudden death of Miss Rose Coward at Elkmouth on Thursday afternoon. The news was conveyed by a telegram to Dr. Corsan annulling a previous summons to go down.

Miss Coward had been ailing for some time with what is now known to have been typhoid fever. No medical aid was called until it was too late and death came suddenly on Thursday. The body was sent to Brantford, Ont., on last evening's train.

Miss Coward during her residence in Fernie made many friends who mourn her decease in the early dawn of young womanhood.

ELK RIVER COAL.

Opinion of Hugh Gilmour, Ex-M. P. P.

The following is clipped from the Vancouver Ledger, in which H. Gilmour who recently spent some time investigating the coal areas north of Michel was interviewed upon his return home

"There are big black walls of coal wherever you look," said H. B. Gilmour in speaking of the Elk River country in Northeast Kootenay. "I have just returned from there, and it's hard to believe until you see for yourself the great bodies of coal in sight. The place where I camped was about 50 miles north of Michel, B. C., and when the camp fire got low one of us went and knocked off a piece of coal from one of the seams and replenished the flames.

"I walked through one gulch for a mile and a half and counted twenty one separate leads of coal, running from four to thirty feet wide, and one of the seams was composed of cannel coal highly prized by gas makers, owing to its inflamability. You can set fire to it with a lighted match. In this section, which is on the next block to the disputed territory, the C. P. R. owns 45 claims and the Elk River Coal and Oil company 22 claims.

"I had some of the coal assayed that I knocked off the surface, and it showed only 5.3 ash and went 67.7 in fixed carbon. As for the surface showing I do not believe there is anything in British Columbia like it.

"I understand that the C. P. R. is sending surveyors to ascertain if there is a feasible route from their main line to these coal fields from Fernie, about 50 miles, the grade is but one per cent. but it would be far more desirable to have a branch into the Elk river fields directly from the main line."

Mr. Gilmour brought some fine samples of coal with him and the portion of cannel coal shown was successfully lighted with one lucifer match and burnt like a candle.

Mr. C. J. Digby sold his skating rink property this week to Messrs. Dobson & Willingham of the Fernie Dairy Co. The property includes three 60 foot lots. The new owners intend fitting the building up for a store-house for feed and produce. The price paid was $2,250, part of which was in trade for another lot on the townsite.

Messrs. G. G. Henderson, Dalzell and Laidley returned this week from a trip up the Elk to the new coal claims in that locality. They all returned more satisfied than ever with the marvellous richness of the coal deposits of that locality. They brought back with them samples of first class looking coal picked up on the surface, which can be found in abundance. They also brought back some excellent coke burned in a can for only two hours.

A. S. EMPY'S ...Restaurant

Wardner, B. C.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

"Herbageum"

For Horses, Cattle & Poultry.

"International Stock Food."

Three Feeds for One Cent.

A. W. Bleasdell

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and petroleum and marked "Levi Klingesmith's south East corner" thence west 80 chains, thence north to chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-3 LEVI KLINGENSMITH.
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of Mary Gabbett's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Nellie Bleasdell's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 NELLIE BLEASDELL
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Mary Scott's south east corner" thence 80 chains west, thence 80 chains north, thence 80 chains east, thence 80 chains south to place of beginning.

244-4 MARY SCOTT
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Alice Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "W. A. Bleasdell's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 W. A. BLEASDELL
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Jos. Podbielancik's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.

244-4 JOS. PODBIELANCIK
Dated September 1st, 1903 Jas Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Mary Gobbett's coal and petroleum claim and marked "J. R. Webster's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 J. R. WEBSTER
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of J. R. Webster's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Gilmore's south east coruer", thence west 80 chains thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 H. B. GILMORE
Dated September 1st, 1903- Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of H. C. Tuttle's coal and petroleum claim and marked "A Manahan's south west corner" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 A. MANAHAN
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Edward Miller's coal and petroleum and marked "MaryiGobbett's south west corner", thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chaims, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 MARY GOBBETT
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of Edward Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "John F. Wilson's south east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the Place of commencement.

244-4 JOHN F. WILSON
Dated September 1st, 1903. Jas. Miller, Agent.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Manahan's coal and petroleum claim and marked "J. H. Wallace's south east corner", thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

244-4 J. H. WALLACE
Dated August 31st, 1903 Jas. Miller, Agent

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of John Brown's coal and petroleum claim and marked "Steve Podbielancik's south east corner" thence west 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.

STEVE PODBIELANCIK,
JAS. MILLER, Agent.

Cree & Hutchison

REAL ESTATE

For Sale Cheap for Cash.

if bought within a week, Two Houses, rented for $45 per month.

For Sale

A Saw Mill with large timber limits, all in running order: including pole roads, waggons, sleighs, horses, etc. This is a snap—full particulars at our office.

We are the largest Real Estate Agents in South-east Kootenay.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

McEwing & Slinn

Keep a large stock of choice Confectionery, Cigars Tobaccos, Fruits Vegetables, etc. etc.

It pays to deal with this firm, as thier goods are new and up-to date.

The Bakery Dept.

is stocked with all kinds of choice pastry, bread and cakes

Wedding and other cakes a specialty.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a special license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands on the west side of Kootenay river, in the district of East Kootenay:

1. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumchuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence west 40 chains to place of commencement.

2. Commencing at a point 160 chains west and 80 chains south of the north west corner of M. J. Claxton's timber license No. 2310, on Skookumckuck river, thence south 160 chains, thence west 40 chains, thence north 160 chains, thence east 40 chains to place of commencement.

A. F. GRIMES
Dated at Fernie, July 14th, 1903. 239-4

Flannelette

Prices will rule on Monday and Tuesday as follows:

25	Yards of good Flannelette for.....	$1.00
15	" " " 28 in. wide for	1.00
15	" Plain Blue, 29 inches wide for...	1.00
14	" Nice dark patterns, 27 in. wide for	1.00
10	" Dark and Light, 33 inches wide..	1.00
8	" Extra Heavy, 36 inches wide for..	1.00

Nice Dark Wrapperettes 10 yds. for $1

10 Different Patterns to choose from

Other nice patterns 12 1-2; 15; 20 and 25c

The above prices will only prevail during Monday and Tuesday

Crow's Nest Trading Co.

Fernie and Morrissey, B.C.

WE THINK WE HAVE THE NICEST ASSORTMENT OF Lamps..

in town and we want you to come in, look them over and get our prices. See the new lines of

Night Lamps and Crepe Shades

Take a look in our windows to-night; don't overlook the big snap reduced to 10 cents.

Sheppard & Elliott.

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbing

The Public Know

The Public know a good thing when they get it. When they are in the habit of having their meat done up to perfection you cannot pull them away with a forty-foot logging chain. That is why our trade is continually increasing.

We make a study of our trade and have attained perfection.

Our goods are the best, and our prices are right. Call and be convinced.

Calgary Cattle Co.

LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY

MacLeod, Alta.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have ou tried them?

Calgary Cattle Co., Ltd., keeps a regular supply of oysters on hand. A choice shipment of dairy butter just received. Also clams. See our ad.

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

To-day is pay-day.

R. A. Lennie, of Nelson, was in town this week.

General servant wanted, apply to Mrs. Richards.

Your credit is good at the B. C. Furniture Co 4t

See our fine coal heaters for $7. B. C. Furniture Co. 1t

F. W. Fenton, of Cranbrook, was in town on Thursday.

Ed. Hazelwood was down from Michel on Thanksgiving Day.

Mr. and Mrs. Oldland, of Morrissey, were in town yesterday.

Keith Whimster, of Frank, spent Thanksgiving with his parents.

Wanted—A general servant. Must be a good cook. Apply to Mrs. A. B Trites.

We buy and exchange new and second hand furniture. B. C. Furniture Co. 4t

Wanted—Nurse girl, to attend child only from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. daily. Apply Mrs. A. Joyce.

N. E. Suddaby received a large consignment of musical goods of various kinds this morning.

The Maridor-Goulding Co. which played in Princess hall last evening will play again to-night.

Birth-day social, Presbyterian church, Thursday evening. An interesting event which will draw a full house.

A. Klauer who has been visiting at points in Montana for a couple of weeks returned yesterday morning.

WANTED—Tenders for the building of an addition to the Fernie Club. Apply to H. Bentley, chairman of committee.

M. Young, a business man of Lethbridge, was in Fernie on an important business deal of which we may have more to say in our next issue.

Don't be backward is owning up to your age on Thursday evening. An appeal for secrecy to the ladies in charge will always receive their best attention.

W. J. Goepel was in town on Wednesday on business connected with the registrar offices situated here. Mr. Goepel holds a government position as inspector of these offices.

There will be a game of football on the recreation grounds. Fernie, next Saturday afternoon between Morrissey and Fernie teams. Michel has also written for a game and another match may be arranged for the following week.

The Minto Club held its first dance on Thursday evening. Owing to other attractions the number that attended was not large but those that did thoroughly enjoyed the evening. Music was supplied by Messrs. Staebler, Whimster and Mazzanobile.

The C. P. R. commenced work this week to fill in the long trussle opposite the brewery. A long train of gravel cars are in use, together with a steam shovel, and a large force of men are employed. The gravel is taken from the cut on the north side of the creek.

Rifle for Sale—A 30-30 Marlin, half magazine, with peep and sheard front sights, case and shoulder strap, and about $4.00 worth of ammunition. The whole outfit is just new and in first-class order. $22.00 takes the lot. Enquire at this office.

Mr. and Mrs. Reville, of Brantford, were in town for a day or two this week. Mr. Reville is the editor of that first-class paper, the Brantford Courier, and he paid the FREE PRESS a fraternal call. They are making a tour of the west and for a time they were with the Manufacturers' excursion but they found that gait too fast and they dropped behind to take it more leisurely.

In our last issue we referred to a statement copied from the Fernie Free Press stating that the present failure of The Cedar Valley Improvement Co. Limited was due to the refusal of the Union Bank of Canada to renew the Co's notes although the Bank had agreed to do so. We are now informed by the best authority that this statement is incorrect and that the Union Bank never promised or agreed to renew the notes referred to. We are glad to be able to withdraw the imputation of bad faith which the extract from the Free Press seemed to imply.—Lethbridge News.

Miss Edna Sutherland, elocutionist, and Miss Merrielle G. Patton, contralto, will give their delightful entertainment on Monday evening in Princess Hall. The entertainment will be given under the auspices of the Fernie Tennis Club. Miss Sutherland, in Story and Sketch, and Miss Patton, in Song and Ballad, have received many very complimentary notices from most critical press of the country. We quote two of these :— "Montreal Witness—'Miss Sutherland is considered one of the ablest, most brilliant and most accomplished elocutionist in the country.'" "Winnipeg Free Press Press, speaking of Miss Patton says :—'Good contraltos are exceedingly rare in this day and generation, and Winnipeg may be proud of having produced one who, on her merits, without influence or booming, is able to command a high standing.'"

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Miss McMillan returned on Monday from an extended visit in the east.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

A. B. Trites returned from Spokane on Thursday.

A literary and musical society has been organized in Cranbrook.

R. Duthie spent several days recently at Lethbridge renewing old acquaintances.

Miss Sutherland and Miss Patton stand in the front row of high class entertainers.

Miss Richardson left this week for Nelson where she has accepted a position in a store.

Save your tennis rackets during winter by getting a press, $.100 and $1.25. Fernie Drug Store. x

Messrs. Falconer and Joiner returned from Spokane this week. They report the fair up to its usual standard, the cattle exhibit and the horse-racing being particularly good.

A. C. Liphardt, the jeweler. has in his store an anniversary clock which runs for 400 days with only one winding. It is a very pretty piece of mechanism and it is also a first-rate time keeper.

A piece of sidewalk built opposite the Free Press corner this week will be of great advantage to those living on that side of the street as it connects with the walk to the depot.

The services to-morrow at Christ Church will be held as follows: Matins and Holy Communion, 11 a.m.; Sunday School, 2:30 ; Thanksgiving service, 7:30. Special music will be rendered by the choir. Collections in aid of church expenses.

Don't forget the high class concert on Monday evening. Plan at Fernie Drug Store, seats 75 cents and 50 cents. The hour has been set for 9 o'clock to allow the store clerks and others an opportunity to attend.

As will be seen in an advertisement in another column the new townsite of Coleman will be placed on the market next Thursday. This town apparently has a bright future before it, and no doubt the lots will sell readily.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

BOARD.

By the Day, Week, or Month.
Everything first-class.

WM. R. McDOUGALL,
Victoria Ave.

Grand Torch Light Parade

and free entertainment will be given under the auspices of Fernie L.O.L. No. 1713, of Fernie.

Princess Hall November 5

EVFRYBODY WELCOME-COME ONE, COME ALL.

Ball After Entertainment.

$1.50 per couple.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

London and Liverpool Stores.

Shoe Department ---- Clothing Department

THIS is the season of the year when you require warmer clothing, shoes that keep you feet dry. In Fernie no place can meet your wants for as little money as the

London & Liverpool Stores

Saturday we place on sale special lines from the above departments and mention just a few of the Bargains offered by us for the coming week . . . . . .

From the Shoe Department
Read this List

Men's Working Shoes 1.00 Great Value.	Men's Working Shoes Nailed . . . 1.50	Nailed Working Shoes 1.75
High Cut Solid Leather Nailed . . . 2.90	The Leader . . . 2.85 Extra fine goods.	Fine Shoes 2.00 Just 50c less than regular price.

Shoe Pac's—high and low cut. Rubbers of every description.

From the Clothing Department
Read this List

Men's Heavy Wool Pants while they last at 1 40	Fine Serge Pants in Blue and Black.... 1 90	Good Serge Suits at $5 Blue or Black
Good Tweed Suits 6 50 Extra Value	Suits at $8.00 This is the Bargain	SUIT — $9 — SUIT We save you just $3.50 on this line.
UNDERWEAR— Wool fleece at $1	Wool Fleece--extra heavy 1.25	German Sox—All Prices. Gloves and Mitts — the best values on earth.

The Prices quoted on the above lines means a saving to you—Don't pass it up.

THE TRITES-WOOD CO., LTD.

LONDON AND LIVERPOOL STORES

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, at 8 o'clock, p.m.

This is the hour that our great Bargain Sale Began and it will continue until 11 o'clock Saturday evening, Oct. 25th. For particulars see the small bills being distributed daily.

CHAS. RICHARDS

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HABBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Habberton

At the first streak of dawn Brainard ordered the prisoners into the boat, two of them in the stern and one in the bow, while he sat amidships and rowed, first cautioning our two boys to keep along the bank abreast of him and fire on any prisoner who chanced to change his position. He suggested that I, being the commander of the expedition, should hurry on in advance and report, so that the prisoners should not be fired at on suspicion that they were coming on a business errand.

I acted upon his suggestion, and as I hurried along it occurred to me that although I officially was in command Brainard had been doing all the planning and work. Why hadn't I instead of he thought to get that stupid fellow drunk and thus prepare the way for our escape, instead of accepting our fate and dropping unquestioningly to sleep? Brainard's head had been alert, mine in a daze. That was the only difference, but it was enough to make me feel uncomfortable. Still, "honor to whom honor is due." I would see to it that Charley got full credit. I could be glad, too, that the man who had been smarter than I was my dearest friend.

I entered the camp without being fired at, and the captain was as glad to see me and hear the story as if I had been his own son. I told everybody the news, got them all on the river bank as a reception committee and got Hamilton to propose "three cheers for Brainard." Charley himself loosed the bonds of the Johnnies as our boys crowded around. My own special Johnny no sooner found his hands free than he whispered something to Brainard.

"Yes; certainly. Thank you for reminding me." Then he shook the captain's canteen inquiringly and handed it to the prisoner, who swallowed some of its contents and passed the remainder to the sergeant, saying as he pointed indignantly to the third prisoner:

"Don't leave none for him, durn him!"

"You've done handsomely, corporal," said the captain to Brainard.

"'Twasn't I, captain," Charley replied, with a salute; "'twas your whisky that did the business."

There was at least one duty of the expedition remaining in which Brainard shouldn't get ahead of me. I took those prisoners under guard down to the brush hut where our company cook had been installed and I provided them with a big breakfast. To my delight, they enjoyed our white bread and cold corned beef as heartily as I had enjoyed their bacon and corn bread three months before. As to coffee, they nearly emptied the half kettle that had been standing since our own boys had been served half an hour before. When he could drink no more, my own special prisoner caressed the place where he had put the coffee, gazed contemplatively at the kettle and remarked:

"There's always some good luck can be dug out of trouble ef you'll look at it right. Here I am a prisoner ag'in; but, on t'other hand, I'll have genuine, sure 'nough coffee twice a day till I'm exchanged ag'in. Um-m-m!"

CHAPTER XV.

ON PICKET.

AFTER mature deliberation upon samples of all sorts of military service that falls to the lot of cavalry soldiers we recruits agreed that picket duty suited us better than anything else. To be an actual picket was not pleasant when one's turn of duty came during a driving rain or in the middle of a dark night, but in ordinary weather and at decent hours it was quite pleasant to sit on horseback at crossroads, look about the country and chat with such farmers as had passes enabling them to visit the town. Northern and southern farmers were radically unlike each other in some respects during the war, but they were exactly alike in their willingness to rein up and have a long chat with a stranger. I found the average Virginia farmer had quite as large a bump of curiosity as his northern brother, and generally he was able to absorb all the family history that a Yankee soldier might care to unload.

It was great fun for me to be on post on a prominent road at daybreak, for the chances were that a large detachment of fugitive slaves would come in. How these people managed to travel 30 or 40 miles without being seen and hounded back by the enemy's scouts I never could understand, for instead of coming singly they would travel in large bodies, all the men, women and children leaving a plantation together and not separating during the trip. Any one would imagine they would be discovered, for they always dressed in their best when they started toward us, and the colors of some of their clothing were as startling as the plumage of a tropical bird, besides being more variegated, but they never complained of having been annoyed while en route. Another mystery was their knowledge as to where to find our lines and just where to halt to wait for daylight. They were not always received in the spirit of the emancipation proclamation. Some of our fellows were in mortal fear of "nigger equality," so they would order the fugitives to return to their masters.

"Yas'r," would be the usual reply, and the entire gang would retrace their steps until they reached a friendly screen of trees. No sooner would the man on post be changed than the crowd would come plodding back. As one old leader told me one day:

"We'se ben tole ter keep a-tryin, 'cause some sojer or udder would let us in some time or udder."

There was nothing funny about these colored people unless it was their extreme gravity. They weren't even excitable. They didn't throw up their hands and thank the Lord that at last they were on freedom's soil. They seldom laughed, and as for joking, one could get as much response from an oak stump as from the brightest of them. They apparently knew just where to come and just what to expect. In fact, I afterward learned from one of them that for 50 miles around us the slaves were thoroughly informed about each post and its treatment of contrabands. They said there were plenty of colored news carriers and guides—"de woods was full of 'em"—yet in nearly a year of prowling about the woods between the lines I never once saw a colored man except on a plantation. To this day their ways are as mysterious to me as the traditional "underground railway" was to the slave hunters of old.

"Only Confederate lips can ever touch mine."

The special delight of picket service, however, was the privilege of visiting the few white natives who lived near by. All of them professed to be Unionists; all, I believe, were earnest Confederates, but it was policy for them not to allow any harm to befall a Union soldier who visited them. So we never feared that we would be captured by skulking Confederates, much less shot while in a native's house. To tell the truth, I think most of us were about as welcome as we would have been in any farming community at the north. We could generally tell them about much that was going on in the world, thanks to our steady supply of newspapers; we could give them an occasional book or magazine, but had we only our presence to offer it was gratifying to the people, nearly all of whose own men were in the Confederate army and whose women did not dare to exchange visits over roads where they might at any time encounter marching troops.

At most of the native houses there were girls, and each girl had about 500 adorers in our regiment alone, as well as an equal number in other cavalry regiments at our post. There was little or no lovemaking. No man dared absent himself long enough from the picket reserve to attend to business of so serious a nature, nor could he easily find opportunity to speak to a damsel alone. If father or mother or grandparents chanced to be out of the room for a moment, some other trooper was almost sure to be present. This was misery for sentimental young men of the class that regards lovemaking as an absolute necessity of daily life.

It was great fun, however, for the girls. Not one of them would have married a Yankee had he been Apollo and Crœsus combined, but it wasn't unpleasing to get an adoring, heartbroken glance from one not unhandsome fellow after another and to realize that all the sufferers were from the enemy's ranks. I used to imagine, probably correctly, that the southern girls looked prettier and more vivacious when we appeared than they possibly could do at the humdrum routine of housework. Most of them had lost their slaves, in the usual manner, before our town became a military post, and they would remind us of this when anything in the house seemed to them to lack proper attention or when they invited us to sit down with the family to a dinner or supper, which they assured us was not what they would have given us in other days. They got so many compliments, however—some awkward, but all honest—on the skill of pretty hands and heads that I don't doubt one of them told the truth when she said to me in a burst of confidence that she was more than half glad that the house servants had run away and given her and her mother a chance to have things just as they wanted them. Some of these southern girls asked innumerable questions about the duties and diversions of our mothers and sisters, and they heard enough to make them open their pretty eyes in wonder.

[CONTINUED.]

Now, What Did He Mean?

He—This is the ladies' gallery. Over there is the men's gallery. Just above the speaker's desk is the press gallery.

She—Oh, yes, and where is the rogues' gallery?

He—Why—er—the congressmen sit down there on the main floor.

Her Nightly Habit.

The Doctor—Is your wife a good sleeper, Mr. Stubb?

Stubb—Yes; pretty good.

The Doctor—Does she go to sleep as soon as she touches the pillow?

Stubb—Well—er—she goes to sleep as soon as she touches my vest pocket.

OXFORD ECONOMY STEEL RANGES.

The bodies of these Ranges are made of the best quality range steel, all outside exposed parts are interlined with heavy sheet asbestos. They have cast iron extensions with white Enamelled Reservoirs, nickel plated drop Tea Pot Stands, Nickeled Towel Rods. They are made to burn any kind of coal, can be changed in two minutes to burn 29 inch wood. Highly nickeled throughout.

For full particulars send for illustrated booklet.

NOTE :—The following prices for these high grade ranges as illustrated, fully guaranteed.

No 9-18 oven 18x21x14 in. $50.00
No 9-20 oven 20x21x14 in. $52.50
(F. O. B., Winnipeg.)

Ask your dealer for them or write to us.

The GURNEY FOUNDRY Co.,
153 - 155 Lombard St., Winnipeg.

One Methodist minister has proposed to his people a month of self-denial to enable his church to raise $1,000 towards the funds of the Preachers' Aid Society.

A RECOGNIZED REGULATOR.—To bring the digestive organs into symmetrical working is the aim of physicians when they find a patient suffering from stomachic irregularities, and for this purpose they can prescribe nothing better than Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which will be found a pleasant medicine of surprising virtue in bringing the refractory organs into subjection and restoring them to normal action, in which condition only can they perform their duties properly.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

The two mission study books, "Via Christi" and "Lux Christi," have had a large sale; the former of 45,000 copies; the latter of 40,000.

The first Baptist Missionary to Japan, was a seaman, Jonathan Goble, in Commodore Perry's expedition of 1854, who was sent out in 1860 as a missionary.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquillizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

It is stated that at least 1,500,000 women are studying India this year in the united mission study course prepared by the woman's committee.

Liver Pills

That's what you need; something to cure your biliousness, and regulate your bowels. You need Ayer's Pills. Vegetable; gently laxative. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Want your moustache or beard a beautiful brown or rich black? Use BUCKINGHAM'S DYE
FIFTY CTS. R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N. H.

Explaining a Puzzle.

Bings—Yes; a singular thing happened to me on my wedding day. I accidentally swallowed a silver dime.

Bangs—Well, I've always wondered what your wife could have seen in you. —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

She Looked It.

"I've a real good idea," said the manager as he pulled the gilt band off a 5 cent cigar. "Going to give the people the old songs and stir up old memories."

"Pretty good," said the friend.

"Well," continued the manager, now lighting the 5 cent cigar, "did you see that lady in my outer office? I've engaged her to sing 'The Last Rose of Summer' for 200 nights."

"Yes?" said the cold friend. "Can she sing it? I know she ought to, for she certainly looks it."

And the manager threw away the 5 cent cigar.—New York Times.

An Ancient "Frickaise."

A manuscript cookbook of the year 1734 contains this recipe for "a frickaise:" "Take ye fowls, cut them in pieces and clean them season with peper & salt a little mace nuttmeg cloves some parsley, a little bit of onion. Let them lay 2 hours then flowr them very well, fry in sweet butter & make ye butter hott before you put them in. Fry a fine brown. Wash ye pan & put them in a gain with a pint of gravy. Lett them swimyer in ye gravy. Take the yolks of 3 eggs with a little grated nuttmeg & a little juce of lemon & 2 spoonfulls of wine. Shake it over he fire till it is as thick as cream, pour over yr frickaise and so serve it to ye table hott."

Solicitous About Him.

An artist who was spending a month in the neighborhood had asked Mrs. Lawton's permission to make a sketch of the little bridge in her meadow. The permission was given, and Bobby had been spending the morning with the artist.

"I stood close to him all the time," announced Bobby triumphantly, "and I watched him, and I talked to him a good deal so he wouldn't be lonesome."

"I'm afraid perhaps you bothered him, dear," said Bobby's doting mother.

"Oh, no, I didn't, mother," said Bobby. "He liked me. He said he was real interested in me. He kept looking at his watch so he could tell me when 12 o'clock came, so I needn't be late for dinner. He even made me show him what thick shoes I had on, for he said 'twas so damp he was most afraid I might catch cold."

Checks and Drafts.

A bank check is really a sight draft on the depositor's bank. It differs from a draft in wording and is used in paying a creditor, whereas a draft is commonly used as a means of collecting money from a debtor. The bank is obliged to pay a check if it has funds enough of the drawer to meet it, but the person on whom a draft is drawn may or may not honor it at pleasure. Another use to which merchants put drafts is in sending remittances from one part of the country to another, for as banks keep money on deposit in all of the large commercial centers a bank draft is simply the bank's check drawing on its deposit with some other bank which it calls its correspondent. Banks sell these drafts or "cashier checks" to customers.

Professional Jealousy.

Brignoli, the famous singer, was intensely jealous of all other tenors, never admitting for an instant that any one of them could sing even passably well. When the handsome, talented Tom Karl burst upon the New York stage Brignoli turned up his nose.

"What do you think of Tom Karl?" Tagliapietra asked him one night.

"Oh, he is a very nice little boy," he replied, with a shrug. "I like him very much, but he has missed his vocation. I think he was born to be a policeman."

Karl was tall and of fine proportions and was singing at the time with Titiens in "La Favorita."

No American Horse Type.

Notwithstanding the importance of horse breeding as an industry in this country, there is at this time no distinctly American horse type. The racing thoroughbred is English, the heavy draft horse is French, the hackney is English, and the trotting horse, as bred at present for track and road service, is not a type at all. An animal type cannot be said to be established until it reproduces itself with reasonable certainty.—John Gilmer Speed in Century.

Dangerous Examples.

Mrs. Long (who recommended a servant)—Yes, she was an excellent girl in every way, except she would imitate me in dress and things like that.

Miss Short—Ah, yes. I noticed she began doing it when she came to me, but she's given it up now.

Mrs. Long—I'm glad to hear it. I expect she saw she was making herself ridiculous.

His Idea Exactly.

Uncle—How do you like your Sunday school teacher?

Tommy—Oh, she's got good sense. She's smarter than mom is.

Uncle—Indeed? So you believe in her, eh?

Tommy—Sure! Her an' me thinks alike. She says Sunday school don't do me no good.

Lucky Inspiration.

Young Bride (looking over the new house)—Why, Herbert, do you call this little pigeonhole a shoe closet?

Young Husband—My love, that will hold a hundred pair of shoes of the size you wear.

Young Bride—Well, perhaps you are right. It's neat and cozy anyway.

Refused.

"Yes, he proposed to Miss Coke while they were standing at the edge of one of her father's deepest coal mines."

"And what did she do?"

"She threw him down."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

While we never trouble trouble till trouble troubles us, still we are not kept waiting long between times, are we?—Atlanta Journal.

Freezing Cream.

It is a mistake to throw away the salt and slush which remain in the freezer after the ice cream has been made. The salt will do perfectly for the next freezing, and if some of it is still slushy and wet use it for the top layer the next time the freezer is filled. The freezing process will be greatly hastened.

Siamese Delicacies.

Among the articles of diet relished by the natives of Siam are snails, crocodile eggs, ants, silkworms and horse beef.

A Long Walk.

The longest walk on record is a little jaunt of 3,395 miles. The distance covered was from San Francisco to New York city, and the pedestrian was Mr. Zoe Gayton. He left San Francisco on Aug. 27, 1890, and arrived in New York March 27, 1891.

Belgian Pigeons.

The Belgians are great pigeon breeders, and one of the choicest birds of this kind is the true Antwerp carrier, which is comparatively rare.

There are now three colored bishops of Western Equatorial Africa, Bishops Johnson, Phillips and Olurole, whose total diocese embrace an area of 700,000 square miles, with an estimated population of 35,000,000.

St. Mary's, Whitechapel, is one of the London churches which carries on its work actively during the summer. There is a daily service during the dinner hour and a service inside or outside the church every night.

It is but equal that our heart should be so much on God, when the heart of God is so much on us. If the Lord of glory can stoop so low as to set his heart on sinful dust, methinks we should be easily persuaded to set our hearts on Christ and glory.—Richard Baxter.

BILIOUSNESS FROM THE LIVER

A Common and Distressing Ailment Which is Promptly Cured by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

"Biliousness" is the one word used by most people to describe their trouble when the liver gets out of order, leaves bile, and brings on sick headache and irritable temper, stomach troubles, and irregularities of the bowels.

People who suffer much from biliousness become pale and yellow in complexion, irritable, and morose in disposition, and are liable to find themselves among the chronic grumblers, to whom nothing seems to go right.

The trouble begins with the liver becoming torpid and sluggish in action, and disappears when the liver is set right. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure biliousness promptly, because of their direct action on the liver. They thoroughly remove all the symptoms because of their combined action on kidneys, liver and bowels.

Mrs. Faulkner, 8 Gildersleeve Place, Toronto, says:—"After doctoring without success for biliousness, liver complaint and sick headache for over three years, I am glad to testify to my appreciation of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. At first they seemed a little strong, but being both searching and thorough in their action amply repay any inconvenience by after results. I am feeling better in every way and my headaches have entirely disappeared. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are certainly the best I ever used, and I freely recommend them."

After all, it pays to stand by the tried and proven medicines instead of running after every new-fangled treatment that is brought out. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are considered well night indispensable in thousands of the best homes. They stand supreme as a reliable family medicine. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

"The honorable gentlemen opposite may scarcely credit this, but it is my firm belief that if a few boxes of these most excellent cigars had been judiciously distributed among the Boer Generals their savage natures would have been soothed and that cruel war might never have taken place."

The Chamberlain CIGAR

The acknowledged Leader.

J. M. Fourtier, Limited, Montreal.

Write for Ambrose Kent & Son's Illustrated Catalogue

Showing hundreds of elegant articles in Jewelry, Silverware, Gift Goods, etc. It will show you how easy it is to make selection, and how economical it is to order by mail from us. We quote a few unmatched values:

3536 Handsome Pearl Brooch, 14 k. setting, - - - - - $5 00
6591 Hair Brush and Comb, mounted in Sterling Silver, in case complete, - - - - - - - - - - 7 50
4338 Ladies' Solid 14 k. Gold Watch, richly engraved, "A. Kent & Sons" movement, - - - - - - 30 00
3979 Fine Diamond Solitaire Ring, - - - - - - - 50 00

156 YONGE ST. AMBROSE KENT & SONS LIMITED MANUFACTURING JEWELERS. TORONTO.

Ashbury Methodist church in Pekin, which was barricaded by the missionaries, but ruthlessly destroyed by the Boxers in 1900, has been rebuilt and recently dedicated.

There are now six chapel cars of the Baptist Publication Society, operating in Indian Territory, Texas, Colorado, Wisconsin, Michigan and Oregon.

HEART DISEASE

Most Sudden and Dangerous of Ailments.

Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure relieves in 30 Minutes.

Stealthy as a thief in the night, heart disease heralds its coming only by the deadly grip it lays upon its victims. If you have palpitation, short breath, smothering spells, or vertigo, do not delay the use of Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure. It will relieve every case in 30 minutes and will radically cure ninety-five per cent. of those affected. It is a perfect remedy for nerves and stomach. Sold by all druggists.

DR. AGNEW'S OINTMENT CURES ALL SKIN ERUPTIONS, 35C.

A great majority of the county councils in Wales have declared hostility to the education act, and have threatened to render it unworkable.

No one need fear cholera or any summer complaint if they have a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentary Cordial ready for use. It corrects all looseness of the bowels promptly and causes a healthy and natural action. This is a medicine adapted for the young and old rich and poor, and is rapidly becoming the most popular medicine for cholera, dysentery, etc., in the market.

Right Rev. Francis Bourne, who has been appointed Archbishop at Westminster, is, with one exception, the youngest of the Roman Catholic Bishops of England.

A committee has been appointed to raise $12,000,000 to supplement the resources of the Presbyterian college and theological seminaries.

The eight societies at work in the Congo Free State are represented by 211 missionaries, 283 native evangelists, 327 native teachers, 5,641 Sunday schools.

The great Sunday school at Stockport, Cheshire, Eng., will celebrate its centenary in 1905 by the erection of a large building to accommodate over 3,000 scholars.

The meeting-house of the old First Church at Bennington, Vt., has an interior which is considered the most beautiful old colonial type in New England.

The Universalists are to have a great celebration at the Hinchester (N.H.) church, which was built in 1794. The great historical address will be given by Dr. Cantwell.

The Church of England provides in England and Wales about 7,000,000 sittings in places of worship. The Non-conformists provide over 8,000,000. The number of Church communicants is about equal.

Patience and Patients.

"You have not taken the medicine I left," asked the physician with some anger. "I declare such actions as that simply make me lose my patience!"

"Well, doctor," meekly smiled the suffering one, "I was afraid if I continued to take your medicine you would lose another of your patients."

Realizing that the case was hopeless, the physician left the house.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY V. MCGUIRE.

Was he so very angry with her because she had received these visitors? He had looked at her with such a displeased expression as she stood with the guests. She had made a very awkward beginning; she never did do the right thing. How came he to notice that they had been deficient in respect to her? If it had been Lucie—

She stopped before the long mirror and gazed into it. A flushed, distorted face looked back at her, the eyes swollen as if from weeping, and her dressing-gown looked so tumbled. She compared herself with the dainty, graceful figure in the black woolen dress, the embroidered white apron round her waist, and the velvet bow in her blonde hair, the key-basket on her arm, so lithe, so womanly and lovable. Had she been out of her mind when she resolved to place this girl at her side in the first blush of their married life?

She shuddered, as Lucie just then entered the room. Lucie had in her hand a little tray with a glass of something so cold that the moisture stood on the outside and slices of lemon were floating about in it.

"Drink, Hortense," she begged, affectionately; "it is lemonade. You are so warm, poor heart!"

"No, thank you," stammered Hortense; it would have been impossible for her to touch the glass.

"Will you not eat something?"

"No."

"Shall I send your husband to you, Hortense? Perhaps we ought to send for a doctor."

"I will not have you send Waldemar; perhaps he will—perhaps come himself." She sunk on the nearest chair at these words; she felt she could no longer stand upright.

"Hortense, come, let me put you to bed," begged Lucie.

"Let me be alone," cried the young wife, passionately, no longer able to control herself. "I beg of you."

Lucie stood motionless, a look of horror on her face. "Are you angry with me? What have I done?" she asked, softly.

"Do not tease me. Do me the favor to leave me alone."

The girl went out silently. In the corridor she met the maid; she sent her in, telling her to ask her mistress if she wished anything.

Lucie stood a little while waiting; the maid did not return; Hortense had accepted her assistance.

Lucie sat in her room, unable to collect her thoughts, and asked herself in vain what she had done to Hortense. She could find nothing. A feeling of dread, like the presentiment of coming misfortune, came over her. The room looked strange and unhome-like in the twilight. She lighted a lamp, and it seemed to her it had never burned so dimly. From the garden room beneath hers she could hear the voices of the gentlemen at table.

The master of the house had ordered dinner here, as if he wanted to keep the guests away from the part of the house where Hortense was.

About half past nine there was a knock at Lucie's door; she was still sitting in the same spot. "Hortense," she thought, and turned her head. It was Frau Nein.

"Yes, yes; you sit here, and my mistress lies over there, and my beautiful trout stands untouched in the green room, and not a morsel of the venison is eaten."

"How is Frau Weber?" asked Lucie.

"She lies perfectly still, and does not even turn her head. The master went to her once, but got as little of an answer as I. There are some queer things going on in this house, fraulein," chattered the old woman, seating herself comfortably in a chair. "The officer who rushed away so excitedly with Herr Kostan has been back again alone, and has been walking up and down the garden with Hauptmann von Koder, and now he is off again. I just wish the gentlemen would go to their homes; I am afraid our mistress is more ill than we think. I took her hand just now, and it was as hot as a heated iron."

Lucie could stand it no longer; she hurried noiselessly into Hortense's bedroom. The red lamp burned under its shade; the young baroness lay motionless among the white pillows. The girl stepped softly up to the bed and leaned over it.

"Hortense," she whispered, anxiously, "let me stay with you."

A motion of the hand, repulsing her, was the only answer.

"Hortense, be good to me; say why you are angry with me? If I have offended you, I will apologize most fully. You know we have always done so to each other," begged Lucie, her voice breaking into sobs.

Hortense passed her hand over her temples, and there was such nervous impatience in the action that Lucie turned and went away.

CHAPTER XXX.

The next day Lucie and the young master of the house were sitting opposite each other alone at dinner. Hortense had not left her room; she had had her breakfast brought to her bedside by Frau Nein, and had kept the old woman by her to do duty as sick nurse. Waldemar Weber had wandered with anxious looks the whole morning between Hortense's couch and his writing-table. Now they were eating in silence; that is, Lucie took a few mouthfuls of soup. It was hard for her to speak, a sleepless night and her anxiety had so upset her. She had all at once lost the feeling of being at home here, and regret for what she had once so lightly thrown away came upon her with a force which it never had before.

She had not gone again to Hortense's room, but kept expecting every minute that either Waldemar or the maid, or Frau Nein would come to summon her, but in vain.

"May I beg you, Fraulein Lucie," said Waldemar, at the end of the dinner, "to be so good as to come to my room in about an hour? I have something to say to you—a request to make."

She bowed a silent assent. "I shall drive off this evening and will probably be away until to-morrow evening; I have a— But of this later; now I must attend to something at my desk." At the door he turned and said: "What is the matter between you and Hortense?"

"Nothing; I keep asking myself in vain what I have done to her."

"You do not know either what this Herr Kostan said to her yesterday?"

"No; Hortense has, for some time, ceased to make a confidante of me."

"Oh, it is nothing, can not be anything," he said, wishing to comfort her, but in an absent manner, as he left the room.

Lucie took a short turn in the park. She was in the habit of going out there to gather wild flowers for the young baroness, but to-day she did not do so. She sat down outside the park on a hill, on the slope of which the cherry orchards belonging to the estate were situated, and gazed across the country to where the mountains met the horizon. The harvests were already gathered from the fields; the red berries hung from the branches of the mountain ash-trees, and in the warm air of the September day was the first messenger of autumn, a silvery thread of misty light.

She sat there for an hour, only occasionally turning her head toward the park, through the thick shadows of whose trees the little castle shone; once in awhile she made an affort to rise and go back, then she would yield to another feeling and remain where she was. At last she heard steps coming rapidly through the park gate. Behind her came a man, a postman apparently, from the little black satchel he carried in his hand. He bowed to her as he passed, but as she walked after him through the park he turned and said:

"A telegram for Fraulein Walter."

"Please give it to me." She paid the man and read it as she stood:

"Baron yesterday evening a stroke; one side paralyzed. Tell Hortense gently. BERTIN."

And this too! What effect would this news have upon Hortense? She went slowly toward the house.

"The master has been asking for you fraulein," sounded in Frau Nein's voice out of the basement.

She had entirely forgotten. Now she could at the same time tell him of the telegram; it was certainly for him to break it to Hortense.

He was waiting for her in his room. The dark-green hangings made it seem already dark, though the last rays of the setting sun were still in the sky, and the twilight made the faces of the riders and archers in the Gobelin tapestry look more ghost-like than ever. The soft carpet made the steps of the man pacing up and down before the fireplace quite inaudible. Now he stood still.

"I have a request to make of you," he began— "a great one." He spoke slowly. "To-morrow morning I shall fight with Kostan, and—"

A stifled cry of alarm answered him.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THINGS NOT TO DO.

To contradict your friends when they are speaking.

To say smart things which may hurt one's feelings.

It is bad to make remarks about the food at dinner.

To talk about things which only interest yourself.

To grumble about your home and relatives to outsiders.

To speak disrespectfully to any one older than yourself.

To be rude to those who serve you either in shop or at home.

To dress shabbily in the morning because no one will see you.

To think first of your own pleasure when you are giving a party.

To refuse ungraciously when somebody wishes to do you a favor.

To behave in a street car or train as if no one else had a right to be there.—Gem.

Boston the Literary Center.

The assertion that Boston was the literary center—without quotation marks—during the period in which American literature acquired a shelf of its own in the library of the race is hardly open to dispute. The production of books possessing something like permanence is perhaps the most characteristic mark of a center to which the term "literary" in its true meaning of "related to literature" may be applied. Name the American writers whose work has stood the test of half a century, and, with a few notable exceptions, they belong to Boston and its neighborhood. All this is thrice familiar. The record of it in outline or detail is a story which has been told by many tongues and many pens.—M. A. De Wolfe Howe in Atlantic.

The Salmon Industry.

At a single federal hatchery on the Pacific coast 20,000,000 salmon eggs have been taken from the early run, and it is expected that 50,000,000 will be the total for this year. The artificial raising of fish and the stocking of streams and lakes have been of incalculable benefit to this country already, and it is likely that this fruitful and beneficent work will be conducted on even a larger scale hereafter.

A Dream Indeed.

Wife—I dreamed last night that I was in a store that was full of the loveliest bonnets and—

Husband (hastily)—But that was only a dream, my dear.

Wife—I knew that before I woke up, because you bought me one.

ROOSEVELT ESCAPES.

Man With a Gun Attempts to See the President—Ejected From White House Grounds After a Struggle.

Washington, Oct. 6.—What is believed to have been another attempt to assassinate President Roosevelt, was frustrated to-day at the White House by a policeman, who is now in the hospital as the result of injuries received in a tussle with the man who wanted to see the president.

A man giving his name as Peter Elliott, and claiming Minneapolis as his home, appeared on the grounds of the White House yesterday and asked a policeman to show him to the president. The policeman stated that the president was busy, and could not be seen. The man insisted on seeing the president, and the policeman and an attendant then attempted to put the intruder off the grounds. Elliott objected, and, when the policeman got him into the cab he pulled a gun. In the fight that followed both Elliott and the policeman received injuries, the extent of which have not yet been ascertained, and both men were taken to the hospital.

The officer, who engaged the intruder is named Cissell, and in the fight he succeeded in disarming Elliott, after the latter pulled the revolver. It is believed here that Elliott is mentally unbalanced, and an effort is being made to ascertain his home and names of his relatives.

When Elliott realized for the first time that he was under arrest, he began the furious struggle with his captors for liberty. He drew a revolver from the right side pocket of his trousers and attempted to shoot Officer James Cissell. The officer grabbed his hand and wrenched the weapon from his grasp. Elliott's struggles were so fierce, however, that the two officers in the cramped quarters of the van were unable to overcome him. Officer Cissell then drew his revolver and fired two shots to attract attention.

Chief Usher Thomas Stone and Officer Parker, of the White House force, who had assisted in carrying Elliott to the van, attracted by the shots, rushed back to the vehicle and assisted in overpowering him.

In the struggle within the police van, Elliott had broken a glass panel with his head, severely cutting his head and face. Officer Cissell sustained a serious cut on his right arm two inches of flesh being cut out of the fleshy part of the arm. He suffered considerably from loss of blood, but his injury is not serious.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 6.—The directory gives the names of two Peter Elliotts. "Peter O. Elliott," a machinist, is mentioned, and a "Peter P. Elliott," who is an oiler in a flour mill. The name "Peter Ell" does not appear in the directory. Up to a few months ago, a Peter Elliott roomed at 245 Cedar avenue.

Inasmuch as he was a familiar figure on the South Side and has not been seen for several months, residents in that vicinity incline to the belief that he is the hero of the Washington incident.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Telegrams and Cablegrams Condensed for Busy Readers.

An N. P. freight train was dynamited west of Helena.

A gigantic fur garment fraud has been unearthed in Montreal.

Judge Killam has taken his seat on the supreme court bench, Ottawa.

President Castro has ordered foreigners to pay taxes and customs duties twice.

The remains of the late Ambassador Herbert were laid to rest at Wilton, Eng.

Mr. Gray, of Beausejour, Man., had his entire grain crop destroyed by fire.

Over 1,000 homestead entries were made in the Canadian West in September.

The Salvation Army is sending a large party of settlers from England to Canada in the spring.

The C.P.R. engineers and firemen on the western division are asking for an advance of pay.

North end residents have waited on Winnipeg aldermen to protest against the closing of wells.

The Swedish Lutheran congregation, Winnipeg, has called Rev. Mr. Edquist, of Percival, N.W.T.

An immense crowd heard Mr. Chamberlain at Glasgow deliver his first speech in favor of his fiscal policy.

The U. S. circuit court has appointed a received for the Soo companies and all actions at law hape been restrained.

A Minneapolis resident, armed with a revolver, attempted to see President Roosevelt at the White House, but was ejected from the grounds, after a struggle.

Rev. F. Swindlehurst, of the Eskimo missions at Rupert's House, Hudson's Bay, has asserted that stories of Andree's death being due to Eskimo, are false.

Several gypsy women were arrested by the Winnipeg police for telling fortunes.

A leading merchant of Toronto predicts that at no distant time Winnipeg will outstrip Toronto as a commercial centre.

A high tribute was paid to the late Chief Justice Armour at the opening session of the high court at Ottawa.

The failure of Russia to evacuate Manchuria increases desire for war in Japan.

Active preparations being made in Japanese military circles for war with Russia.

BRITISH CABLES.

Many Items of Special Interest to Canadian Readers.

London, Oct. 5.—Mr. Alfred Baldwin, M.P., speaking before the West Worchester Conservative Association, said: "If we refused the proposals of colonial premiers for retaliatory and preferential tariffs we should lose the colonies, who might in return adopt preferential treaties with foreign countries."

Hon. T. Brassey, speaking in Liverpool on his arrival from Winnipeg, where he went to view Canada's wheat growing resources, said: "I am convinced the territory is capable of producing all the wheat the Empire needs for generations to come. I believe Mr. Chamberlain has taken the right course by resigning."

Professor Ashley, formerly of Toronto University, has come out with a book presenting a strong case for preferential tariffs within the Empire. He does not believe the colonies are ungrateful to the mother country, but are eager to develop their commercial advantages. He says that if they do not enter into some scheme with Great Britain they will ultimately range themselves against her.

The Canadian government's commercial agent, Mr. Ball, at Birmingham, says, that one of the largest flour dealers in Great Britain, which lately gave a trial order of 500 bags of flour to the Kent Milling Co., of Chatham, Ont., says: "We beg to say this is the finest Canadian patent we ever saw. It makes a splendid loaf in both bloom and texture. We are trying to buy a line for shipment, and we feel bound to say if your Canadian millers can ship us flour of this kind and keep shipping up to this quality, they will have very little trouble in displacing the fine winter patents on our market that we are now getting from the United States."

The Times says: "The colonies are capable of supplying nearly all our requirements and they are also capable of keeping our factories in full and steady work. Our system of unrestricted imports was the policy of the Little Englander who regards the colonies as encumbrances. We have come to regard them as the brightest jewels in the crown of the Empire, and we plainly owe it to them as well as to ourselves to mark and accentuate a relationship which both sides may well be proud to claim.

The Morning Standard says: "So far as appearances go the colonists are quite as anxious, nor should we blame them, to develop their industries, as do our foreign rivals."

The German press continues to urge all manner of objections to the adoption of a protectionist tariff by England. The Chamber of Commerce, at Chemnitz, Germany, reports that the increase in import duties into Canada has hit the Saxon textile industry very hard, especially cotton woven gloves and stockings, which were largely exported from Saxony to Canada. The additional increase of 33 1-3 per cent. will completely prevent a continuation of the Saxon export to Canada. The toy industry is also seriously affected, and the whole of this export trade to Canada will be lost if the increased 33 1-3 per cent. duty becomes permanent. The Chemnitz Chamber of Commerce urges a friendly arrangement with Canada on a basis of mutual concession, it points out the serious consequences of a customs war with Canada as it would endanger German commercial relations with England, and German industries could not stand the consequences of a customs war with England.

Regarding Premier Balfour's concealment of Mr. Chamberlain's resignation, the Times says: "We are in a position to affirm that the proceedings at the cabinet council of September 14 made it clear to the other ministers that Mr. Chamberlain was unable to accept for himself the policy laid down by the premier, and that he might in consequence be expected to resign."

The Allan line company have placed a contract with a Belfast firm for a turbine steamer. Her dimensions will be: Length over all, 500 feet; gross tonage of about 12,000 tons; horsepower, 10,000 indicated, and a speed of 17 knots. The steamer is expected to be ready early next season.

Mr. Vince in his pamphlet says a duty of ten shillings a quarter is equivalent to a duty ad valorem of 7 to 8 per cent. Any tender who obtains the advantage of such a percentage over his competitors is in a satisfactory position. It seems reasonable to expect that ten shillings wheat duty will be sufficient to stimulate Canadian and other colonies farming.

In reply to an inqdiry as to the truth of the report that the delay in settling the cabinet crisis was due to the indecision of the Duke of Devonshire, the lord president of the council, who, it is alleged, has sent his conditional resignation to Premier Balfour, the duke telegraphed to-day: "I have no communication to make." This was accepted in Liberal circles as tending to confirm the report. Official circles, however, were equally as reticent as the duke.

Anti-Clerical Riots.

According to the correspondent of the Gaulois, Paris, some disturbances occurred at L'Orient, a fortified seaport in Brittany, where a band of anti-clericals broke through a cordon and attempted to set fire to the church of St. Louis, but were charged by cavalry, who arrested fifteen of them. Another mob assembled near the church at 10 o'clock at night and threw stones at the troops, who were again compelled to charge. The ministerial papers and the semi-official agency, however, declare that no disturbances occurred.

NEWS NOTES

Short Items Culled From Telegraphic Dispatches.

The G.T.R. is making arrangements to ship freight direct to Australia.

Lighthouse men reaching Port Arthur, have described September as a month of severe storms.

On Sir Wm. Van Horne's farm, at East Selikrk, a field of wheat yielded 50 bushels to the acre.

The steamer J. H. Hackley went down in a squall on Lake Michigan, and eleven persons were lost.

The British Columbia elections has resulted in the return of 18 Liberals, 18 Conservatives, 2 Socialists, with four seats in doubt.

The finding of the bodies of two Indians near Hnausa, Lake Winnipeg, adds suspicion to the loss of the Rev. McLaughlin party.

An immense cooker in a distillery, at Peoria, Ill., exploded, killing a number of employees and wrecking a portion of the building.

The trial of the Soo rioters has concluded.

The C.P.R. has decided to prosecute ticket scalpers.

A $75,000 fire visited the Hasting's Mills in Vancouver.

Four laborers were killed in the Southern Pacific yards at Los Angeles.

The G.T.R. will soon have a double track from Chicago to Montreal.

At Grand Forks the St. Paul ball team defeated the Winnipeg Maroons, 2 to 1.

The janitor at the Springhill, N.S., post office was killed by an explosion in a furnace.

Mr. F. W. Thompson, of the Ogilvie Mills Co., believes the west will surpass the east.

Sir Henry Howard, minister to The Hague, is a favorite for the Washington ambassadorship.

Japan has officially intimated its unwillingness to leave Corea or allow any other power to enter.

Mr. Willard, the Canadian commissioner of immigration, is at present in the west studying conditions.

The authorities are believed to have strong evidence against Kennedy, the alleged child murdered at Brantford.

According to the assistant Dominion dairy commissioner, J. A. Ruddick, Canada is developing a splendid trade with Japan.

Another lodge of the Trainmen's Brotherhood has been formed in Winnipeg.

The bodies of Rev. J. A. McLachlan and party of Indians, who were drowned in Lake Winnipeg, have, with one exception, been recovered.

Alleged fraud in connection with the organization of the Dominion Oil Co., which operated in the Chatham, Ont., district, will necessitate it being wound up.

A hot spring, or something of that nature, has been discovered on Black Bear Island, Lake Winnipeg.

It is reported that Frederick Proudfoot, of Winnipeg, mining brover, has sold an iron mine in Black Island, Lake Winnipeg, for $60,000.

An American inventor in Winnipeg claims to have solved the problem of aerial navigation, and got his idea from Jules Verne's book.

Fire destroyed the C. P. R. depot and freight shed at Gladstone last Monday afternoon.

Calgary's attempt to secure lease of Sir Sanford Fleming's coal mines for its winter supply failed.

Two unknown men committed a fiendish assault on a young Galician girl near Emerson.

E. S. Clouston, general manager of Bank of Montreal, says he is delighted with western prosperity.

Little is expected in Bulgarian cabinet circles from the joint action of Russia and Austria in Macedonia.

The newly constructed British Cabinet has been announced. The Duke of Devonshire has resigned his seat.

Shareholders of Consolidated Lake Superior Company ask injunction from courts to prevent sale of company's securities in hands of Speyer & Co.

Movement of Grain is Slow.

Owing to the slow movement of grain from the West the transportation companies doing business on the Upper Lakes and the St. Lawrence announce that for the balance of the season they will lay off a large portion of their fleet of barges, keeping only the steamers in commission. It is claimed that up to the present only about 300,000 bushels of wheat have come to Montreal compared with about a million and a half for previous years at this time.

Even the man who pays as he goes may go broke.

Sir Michael Herbert, the British ambassador to the United States, died on Sept. 30 at Davos Platz, Switzerland, after a long and plucky fight against consumption.

It is said that between the Island of Madagascar and the coast of India there are 16,000 islands, only 600 of which are inhabited. In most of these islands a man can live and support his family in luxury without working more than 25 days in the year. In fact on some of the islands he need not work at all, as nature provides the food and no clothes are required.

An Esher cow had a novel experience recently. It strolled into the front office of a printer. Thence it passed into the works, where it got wedged between a printing press and a paper-cutting machine. It was a long time before the printer got rid of that unweildy "form."

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Telegrams and Cablegrams Condensed for Busy Readers.

The wheat market was nervous and erratic.

Dawson's first fair was a great success.

Sir Thomas Lipton has sailed for England.

John Morley's life of Gladstone will be issued immediately.

Another new six storey warehouse is announced for Winnipeg.

W. J. Cleverly, a pioneer citizen of Winnipeg died in Brandon.

The annual meeting of the Ogilvie Mills Co. was held in Montreal.

Ex-Mayor Carthew, of Cumberland, B.C., killed his daughter by accident.

The United Garment Workers Union may call out 30,000 employees in Rochester.

The Dominion agent in South Africa pictures a blue outlook for trade in that country.

Canada's side on the Alaska boundary case was ably prepared by Hon. Mr. Sifton.

There is a serious blockade to shipping by the sinking of a boat in St. Claire flats.

The Dominion revenue for the past three months has reached nearly $18,000,000.

Premier McBride may endeavor to elect his defeated provincial secretary, Goodeve, in Ymir.

The coroner's jury on the death of the late Il'o Seleaka did not throw any light on the tragedy.

The 90th team, which won the Dundonald Cup at Ottawa, has presented it to Lieut.-Col. Chambre.

There have been marvellous increases in the exhibits of Canada's agricultural products in recent years.

The Canadian Manufacturers Association members have arrived in Winnipeg, returning from a trip to the Pacific coast.

Mr. William Whyte, of the C.P.R., has described the work in progress in irrigating 3,000,000 acres of Alberta land.

School of Domestic Science is reopened in Winnipeg.

The Hon. T. Nosse, Japanese consul-general to Canada, is in Winnipeg.

All points in Canada report most satisfactory trade conditions.

A sensation has been caused in Halifax at the discovery of large thefts on government contracts.

Recent arrivals of diseased immigrants in Montreal will probably result in stricter regulations affecting immigrants.

The need of more federal aid for the Territories was discussed by the senate on Friday. Many complaints were made of the parsimonious spirit shown by Dominion.

France and Great Britain have arrived at an understanding on the situation in the far east.

Terrific rain storms flooded New York and surrounding country, doing immense damage to property.

Col. Evans, C.B., was on Friday presented to King Edward, who praised bravery of colonial troops in South Africa.

From British Papers.

Agent-General Tozer, of Queensland, laments the enacting of the Australian exclusion laws. It is simply a waste of time to try to attract population until the measure is removed. He says Canada's "welcoming" policy is contributing to her unexampled prosperity.

Government Commercial Agent Ball of Birmingham, advises Canadian apple shippers to be careful and not send too large quantities to glut the market; but to send shipments gradually. It says shippers make better prices if they send small quantities weekly to interior towns, instead of sending all such through Liverpool, London and Bristol.

A member of the corn exchange of Dublin doubts that the colonies can supply the demands of the nation, but the difficulty will in time be met principally by the rapid influx of American farmers into Canada, where many additional millions of acres are certain to be under grain in the course of ten years. Other members of the corn exchange doubt if the wheat grown in California can be done without, but others contend that the California wheat can be replaced with advantage by Canadian number 1 hard.

The Post publishes a glowing letter by its special correspondent on the life of the wheat belt. It calls westerners the "pith of an imperial nation." Their unfailing hopefulness is characteristic of the western mind, and he says Canada has found her Kipling in Albert Hickman's "Sacrifice of the Shannon."

The Times publishes a letter from a member of the Barr colony stating he is amused and annoyed by the onesided statements appearing in English papers from those who have returned to England and left Canada for the country's good. The writer is thankful to be in a land of promise.

Increased Canadian Exports.

The final report of the House Committee on Agriculture at Ottawa makes reference to the great increase in the exports of Canadian farm and and dairy produce during recent years. It is pointed out that the export of cheese and butter has risen in value from $12,700,000 in 1892 to $25,300,000 at the end of last year; and that $12,500,000 worth of pork and bacoon was exported in 1902, compared with $600,000 worth in 1890. The total export of farm and dairy produce has increased from $24,000,000 in 1890 to $80,000,000 last year. The report attributes this excellent showing to the favorable conditions of soil and climate, the enterprise of Canadians' scientific instruction in agriculture and a ultization in cold storage.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

The men working on the Government road between the Junction and Fernie have been laid off and work will cease for this season. It will be recommenced, however, in the spring. This will be a severe disappointment to the people of this district as all thought the road would be completed before winter.

Thos. Huber and J. A. Manning returned Monday from a trip to the Spokane fair. It was Mr. Huber's first visit to Spokane, and he has not yet ceased to dilate in the beauties of that enterprising western city. The boys report a splendid trip and say the fair was a great success this year.

Gillis & Richardson and the Alexandra hotel have materially added to the appearance and convenience of their places the past week by the addition of good substantial sidewalks. Their example could be emulated with great success by the balance of the merchants on Third street.

Although it is rather late in the season there is still some very good fishing in the Elk river, and some fine strings of speckled beauties have been caught by enthusiastic desciples of Isaac Walton the past week. Last Sunday P. Pous and Matt Rockendorf brought in a 20 pound bunch, some of which run over a pound in weight.

It is a fact not generally known that within the city limits, and near the red-light district, is an old burying grounds with upwards of two score of graves. It is evidently a relic of the times when the Alberta Indians used to run up against all kinds of trouble with the Kootenays as a result of their encroachment upon the hunting grounds of the latter, and no doubt some of the old braves in this district could tell interesting tales of early life in this section, could they only be induced to talk.

MICHEL

Rev. Stoney held Church of England service here on Sunday.

E. P. Miller was to Fernie on a business trip Thursday.

Ed. Wriglesworth spent most of the week in Fernie.

The local sports have been hunting hard of late but as yet no big game has been brought in here.

C. Laidley returned Wednesday from his hunting and prospecting trip about 40 miles up the Elk from here.

Mr. E. K. Stewart spent Thanksgiving Day on the prairie.

F. Sample spent several days in town this week.

Miss Evans left for her new home at Lubreck, Alta., Saturday evening last.

Quite a number of men have left town and gone to Frank to seek employment.

Mr. Dryden has taken to the prairie and is now living at Cowley.

A. Mutz spent Monday in town.

C. Richards was down for a day this week on business.

The coal lands above here on the Elk seem to be attracting a great deal of attention at present. Two more parties went up this week to stake claims and to do a little hunting on the side.

The coke ovens at the end next the tipple are being pushed along as quickly as possible, about fifty of them have already been lighted. This is being done that the slack may be handled and thus give the miners more mine cars. The lower ovens will not be finished this fall as it is impossible to get the material.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

A number of the young people of Cranbrook are organizing a dancing school and will meet every two weeks to learn to trip the light fantastic toe.

F. H. Marsh, Dr. Green and Charley Armstrong were duck hunting last week and bagged 50 birds.

J. A. Harvey, the solicitor, is establishing his offices in Cranbrook this week in the new Hazel block. The name of the firm will be Harvey, McCarter & Dunbar. Mr. C. H. Dunbar will be in charge of the Cranbrook offices for the present, and Mr. Harvey states that as soon as he can make arrangements he will locate permanently in this town.

The men at work on the government trails up Wild Horse canyon and up the St. Marys to Whitefish have been laid off and work stopped for the season. The trail up Wild Horse is complete, but the late storms prevented the completion of the trail to Whitefish.

The Canadian Manufacturers' association, as stated in the Herald last week, issued a paper during their trip named "On the Go." The number gotten out while passing over the Crow had this to say of Superintendent Taylor. "We are now on Jack Taylor's section and Jack is hustling us as we never were hustled. Pulling out draw bars, climbing hills and trees and small things of that kind are mere incidents and we do not expect to lose more than 49 minutes out of 60 of our regular schedule while with Jack We will recommend that Jack get an increase of pay."

J. J. Miller got mixed up in a rock slide at the works of the Wisconsin company on Perry Creek last Monday. He was working on a side hill, and the men were sluicing away the gravel beneath him. Suddenly the bank gave away and a rock slide followed, carrying Miller with it. He was carried to the foot of the hill and completely buried in the rock. The men present got him out without loss of time, and found him badly cut and bruised, but apparently not seriously injured. Gust Theis brought him in to the St. Eugene hospital that evening, and he is getting along all right. It was a narrow escape from death or a serious injury.

Every Convenience.

There is a dock laborer in Glasgow who is possessed of a great sense of humor. Perhaps it's because he's an Irishman. Pat had been disturbed several times in his single apartment by a well meaning lady missionary. Seeing Pat was rather an exemplary sort of a husband, she suggested that he might be able to afford a room and kitchen soon.

"An' phwat wad Oi want lavin' such a comfortable house as this for?" asked Pat.

"Well," she replied, "you would have more room—more conveniences."

"Convaniences is it?" said Pat, with a smile. "Sure, an' at prisint if Oi want to go to the drawin' room or the dinin' room or the conservatory, begorra, Oi've just got to sit still Phwat could be handier?"

The lady couldn't say.—London Answers.

Not an Occasion For Haste.

During the Sikh war the late Field Marshal Sir Neville Chamberlain, who then held the rank of colonel, called for volunteers to assist him in blowing up a bastion. Three or four responded, and the colonel led the little party close up to the point where the mine was to be fired. As soon as the explosives were in place and the fuse lighted the volunteers started to run in order to get out of the way of the explosion no less than to effect, as speedily as possible to retreat to the safety of the British lines. They had not gone a dozen yards before Chamberlain shouted: "Come back! There's to be no indecent haste, young men. We'll walk." And walk they did, while the fuse slowly sputtered down to the waiting powder.

A Minor Consideration.

The ambitious young woman was attracted by an advertisement, one line of which read, "How to Become an Author." The advertiser claimed that by his method failure was impossible.

So the ambitious young woman sent on the necessary trifling sum of money, and by return mail she received a slip on which was printed this bit of advice, "Write something."

"But," she protested by letter, "I already have done that, and it hasn't been printed."

"We congratulate you," was the reply. "If you have written something, you already are an author. Publication is a minor consideration, with which we have nothing to do."

Managing the Baby.

Young Matron (with theories on the care of children, to nurse)—Jane.

Nurse—Yessum.

Young Matron—When the baby has finished his bottle, lay him in the crale on his right side. After eating a hild should always lie on the right ide. That relieves the pressure on he heart. Still (reflectively) the liver is on the right side. Perhaps, after all, you had better lay him on the left side. No, I am sure the treatise on "Infant Digestion" said right side. On the whole, Jane, you may lay the baby on his back until I have looked up the matter more thoroughly.

An Earnest Salutation.

"Ah," said Biggs as a prosperous looking man who had cordially saluted Diggs passed on, "that's the way I like to hear a man speak. He seemed sincerely glad to find you alive and well."

"Yes," replied Diggs. "He probably was. He's the president of the company my life's insured in."

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands:

Commencing at a post planted on the W. bank of the Elk River about 12 miles north of the 35 mile post and marked John Brown's south west corner, thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement.

Dated the 31st of August, 1903.

JOHN BROWN,
Jas. Miller, Agent.

COLEMAN!

This new townsite will be placed on the market at Coleman, Alberta, which is situated on the mainline of the Crow's Nest Division of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Thursday, the 22nd of Oct. at 11 a.m.

The bituminous coal mines of the International Coal & Coke Co. are located at Coleman which is destined to be the principal city in the Crow's Nest Division.

The Company will be mining 2,000 tons of Coal and manufacturing 500 tons of coke daily by Midsummer, 1904. A market for the entire product has been secured.

For terms and particulars respecting lots, apply to the British American Trust Co., Grand Forks, B.C., or Coleman, Alt.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase eighty acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 3062, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 274 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 20 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 20 chains to place of commencement.

249-8 VALANTIN ZINI

Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Ft. Steele, B. C. for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum upon the following described lands: beginning at a post marked D. Adams' south-west corner post which is situated along Fording river and four miles north of the northern boundary of Lot 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district B. C. and which corner post is near the south-east corner post of F. T. Griffin's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 814, thence from said south-west corner of D. Adams east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

249-4 D. ADAMS

Located by W. Bovin, Sept. 18th, 1903.

NOTICE.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited, after this date will not make with connections to any premises which have been wired by any party or parties not its accredited representative, and any consumer adding additional lights without the consent of the company, will not only be liable for damages but will have the entire service discontinued.

Any person or persons making connections to, or tampering with, the Company's water mains will be prosecuted, and their water service discontinued.

The Crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power Co., Limited
by T. R. STOCKETT, jr.
General Superintendant

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto.

Notice is hereby given that the Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, a corporation having its head office at the town of Fernie, in the Province of British Columbia, saw mill owner and lumber manufacturer has, by Deed of Assignment bearing date the 22nd day of September, 1903, assigned all its real and personal property to Arthur Hamilton Cree, of the said town of Fernie, Insurance Agent, in trust for the purpose of paying and satisfying ratiably and proportionately and without preference or priority all the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited.

A meeting of the Creditors of the said The Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, will be held in Joyce's Hall, Fernie, British Columbia, on Wednesday, the 7th day of October, 1903, at the hour of 3 P.M.

All Creditors are required to file with the said assignee full particulars of all their claims duly proved as required by the provisions of the "Creditors' Trust Deeds Act 1901" and amendments thereto and the nature of the securities, if any, held by them, on or before the 7th day of November, 1903, after which date the assignee will proceed to distribute the assets among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which he shall then have notice.

Dated the 6th day of September, 1903.

ARTHUR H. CREE,
Assignee.

. . The . .

Fernie Free Press

from now

to

Jan. 1st, 1904,

only

50 cents.

Subscribe now.

"Follow the Leader."

Is the name of our new Exercise Books.

We lead in

School Supplies

and can furnish

Scribblers
Exercise Books
Note Books, &c

in immense variety.

Our line of READERS, etc., is complete.

Our "Blo-to-fil" Fountain Pen is a trade-winner.

Fernie Drug Store.
N. E. SUDDABY.

Boilers and Engines.

ALSO
SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.
Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.
602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk river: Commencing at the north-west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence northerly along the foothills 80 chains; thence east about 40 chains to the East bank of Elk river; thence south along the said west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west about 40 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

C. J. ECKSTORM.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E. corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 aces more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Tuttle.

Fresh Fruit

AND

Vegetables

arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert
Confectioner

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 16. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 250

Lib. Legislative Ass. Dec 31 1901

METHODIST CHURCH.

FERNIE, B.C.

SERVICES:

Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m,
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.

REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER

Ross & Alexander,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.

FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.

Office:—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER

Herchmer & Herchmer

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.

Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler

TEACHER ON

PIANO and ORGAN

Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47

I.O. O.F.

Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.

JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35

A.F A.M.

Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.

W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,

Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.

Fernie, B.C.

J.Barber, L.D.S.D.D.S.

DENTIST

OFFICE AND RESIDENCE
SECOND FLOOR, HILL BLOCK

Opposite Royal Hotel.

Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Moffatt's Cigar Store

Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.
A full line of Stationery.

Next Door to the Free Press.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk river:

Commencing at the north-west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence northerly along the foothills 80 chains; thence east about 40 chains to the East bank of Elk river; thence south along the said west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west about 40 chains to the place of commencement.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

C. J. ECKSTORM.

CANADA ILL TREATED

ALASKAN COMMISSION DECIDE IN FAVOR OF AMERICAN CONTENTION.

Americans Gain Practically all They Ask For.—Canadian Commissioners Greatly Dissatisfied With the Award.

"London, Oct., 20—The Alaskan award so far as it relates to the Portland canal gives the United States two islands, Kannaghut and Sitklan, commanding the entrance of Portland channel and the ocean passage to Port Simpson, and destroying the strategic value of Wales and Pearce islands, which are given to Canada.

The mountain line, adopted as the boundary, lies so far from the coast as to give the United States substantially all the territory in dispute.

The line completely clears all the bays and inlets and means of access to the sea, giving the United States a complete land barrier between Canada and the sea, from the Portland canal to Mt. St. Elias. Around the head of the Lynn canal, the line follows the watershed, somewhat in accordance with the present provisional boundary. The Canadian commissioners not only declined to sign the award, but said they would publicly withdraw from the commission.

The Associated Press publishes on Tuesday a lengthy statement from the Canadian Commissioners in which they clearly defined their position. They claim that the four islands in the Portland canal all belonged to one country or the other and that a division was suggested by neither counsel. Continuing on the mountain line they declare. "The line northward from Portland.—Substantially the Canadian contention regarding this line was that there are mountains parallel with the coast, within the meaning of the treaty of 1825, and the tops of such mountains should be declared the boundary, the mountains nearest the sea being taken. The United States contention was that there are no mountains parallel with the coast within the meaning of the treaty, and that the boundary must therefore be fixed under the provision of the original treaty relating to ten leagues, and so be run a distance of 35 miles from the shore, including in the term "shore" the heads of all inlets, bays etc, The tribunal finds that the Canadian contention is correct as to the existence of mountains within the terms of the treaty, but the fruits of victory have been taken from Canada by fixing as a boundary line a row of mountains so far from the coast as to give the United States substantially all the territory in dispute.

"Around the head of the Lynn canal the line follows the watershed, somewhat in accordance with the present provincial boundary. We are of the opinion that the mountain line traced by King, the dominion astronomer, along the coast, should have been adopted at least so far as the shores of the Lynn canal.

"If effect were given to the contention that Great Britain had by acquiescence to adverse occupation deprived herself of her right to claim the head of the Lynn canal, we would have regarded such a conclusion as perhaps an open and reasonable justification. No such opposition can, however, be taken regarding the inlets lower down the coast. King's line, running along the coast to the Lynn canal, and the line thence around the head of the Lynn canal, following the watershed, would have given Canada the heads of tha lower inlets, with at least one fine harbor, from which easy access to the interior of the Atlin and Yukon country could have been had. It would not, so far as we have been made aware, have taken any territory ever actually occupied by United States citizens, it would have given the United States the whole of the Lynn canal, including Skagway, Dyea and Pyramid harbors, and it would have been, we think reasonably satisfactory to Canada. Instead of taking the coast line of mountains, a line of mountains has been chosen far back from the coast, clearing completely all the bays, inlets, etc. The mountain line adopted as the boundary lies so far from the coast as to give the United States substantially all the territory in dispute. The line completely clears all the bays and inlets and means of access to the sea, giving the United States a complete barrier between Canada and the sea, from Portland canal to Mt. St. Elias.

"We have not been able to derive any understanding from our colleagues on the commission as the principle on which they have selected their line of mountains and our observations of the discussion which resulted in the settlement of this line have led us to the conclusion that instead of resting on any intelligible principle, the choice of this line has been a compromise between opposing and entirely irreconciliable views of the true meaning of the original treaty. The result of this compromise has we think been a distinct sacrifice of the interests of Canada. When it was shown that there were mountains parallel with the coast, within the meaning of the treaty, the only logical course, in every judgement, was to adopt as a boundary the mountains in the immediate vicinity of the coast.

"Regarding the general question of inlets, the tribunal finds against the contention of Canada. We are both strongly of the opinion that this conclusion is wrong, and we have put upon record at length the reason for our views in this respect,

If the six members of the tribunal had each given an individual judicial decision on each of the questions submitted, we would have considered it to be our duty under the treaty of 1903, however much we might have differed with our colleagues, to have joined in signing the document which constituted the official record of answers. We do not consider the finding of the tribunal as to the islands at the entrance of Portland canal or as to the mountain line a judicial one. We have therefore declined to be parties to the award.

"Our position during the conference of the tribunal has been an unfortunate one. We have been in entire accord between ourselves and have severally and jointly urged our views as strongly as we were able to, but we have been compelled to witness the sacrifice of the interests of Canada. We were powerless to prevent it, though satisfied that the course which the majority was determined to pursue in respect to the matters above specially referred to ignored the just rights of Canada."

SUTHERLAND-PATTON CONCERT

The concert given by Miss Sutherland, elocutionist, and Miss Patton, contralto, in Princess Hall, on Monday evening was a marked success. Miss Sutherland recited from choice selections of literature in a manner which revealed the true feelings of their authors, and which proved the wide range of the talented elocutionist. Miss Patton possesses a good contralto voice which gave evidence of first class training.

The house was not a large one and the tennis club had all they could do to meet expenses. An unfortunate feature of the performance, and one which should be guarded against on future occasions was the lack of good order from a number of seats at the rear of the hall occupied by boys. The annoyance was so great that the performers were obliged to cancel several numbers of their program, much to their regret and also to the regret of the great majority of the audience. This feature reflects somewhat upon the management of the concert as it could easily have been avoided.

COMMUNICATIONS

Editor Fernie Free Press

Dear Sir: We have, for some time past, advertised the town of Coleman as a wide open town in the sense that any business man might buy a lot and conduct business. We did this in good faith having every reason to believe it was so. We now find that the contract for the sale of lots discriminates against hotel keepers and any person engaged in the liquor traffic. Having advertised the town in the way we have, we feel that it is due not only to our clients, but to the public in general, to make this point clear. We have tonight wired our resignation to the townsite company and only regret that we have (through no fault of our own) misled some of the people.

Yours truly
CREE & HUTCHISON.

Fernie, B.C., Oct 21st, 1903.

KNOCKED OUT IN THE 18TH.

The glove contest between "Kid" Lee and "Silent" Rowan which took place in Princess Hall on Tuesday evening was one of the most scientific boxing events ever held here. Lee was the bigger and stronger man but Rowan made up for this in his greater skill and agility. The contest was very even up to the 16th round but after that it gradually became apparent that the heavier man's weight and power of endurance would win him the battle. Rowan went down in the 16th but was up on the 8th count. He fought on into the middle of the 18th round when his speed began to fail him and a rush from his adversary put him out of business. W. W. Tuttle refereed the bout to the satisfaction of everybody. The house was a large one, there being about 200 people present.

MOON GETS FOUR YEARS.

For Confiscating Post Office Funds at Michel.

Wm. Moon, ex-postmaster at Michel, was tried at the Fall assizes at Nelson before Judge Irving and a jury on Tuesday of this week.

R. L. Henderson, constable, and Inspector Dorman, of the post office department, were the the witnesses for the prosecution, and they told the same story as at the preliminary hearing here. Suspicions were first aroused in the mind of the latter that things were not going right as far back as July and when he visited Michel the next month he found a shortage of over $600. The office was being allowed to run itself and over $3,000 was on hand, which should have been remitted long before to headquarters. After failing in every way to make good the missing funds Moon had fallen back upon the story that the place had been robbed but as he had never reported the robbery at the time, nor even mentioned it to the inspector until the necessity for some such story became apparent, the story of Moon was discredited.

Constable Henderson explained the prelude to the crime by explaining the drunken, gambling habits of the accused which gradually got him entangled with debt and led him to "borrow" government funds.

Moon conducted his own defence but had no witnesses to call. The trial lasted two hours of the morning and after lunch the jury brought in a verdict of "guilty." The judge in sentencing Moon to four years of penal servitude in the penitentiary gave him a few words of kindly advice. Moon has many friends in this district who blame the whole trouble upon his loose habits of living and who believe that he himself has been his worst enemy.

FORTUNATE FERNIEITES.

Invest in Oregon Coal Fields with Gratifying Results.

A little over a month ago four Fernie gentlemen, Messrs. Geo. H. Scott, A. Mutz, L. Dobbin and O. Meier leased two coal properties in Oregon State three miles from Roseburg which is on the Southern Pacific railway. They incorporated themselves into the Fernie Coal Mining Co. and commenced work to develop the property under the superintendence of H. Smith, a practical coal miner.

The properties lie close together and a lease for 25 years was secured on each on very reasonable terms. The evidences of coal in the neighborhood are very general but the old seams had been lost. The new promoters, however, had faith in the property and the energetic steps that they have taken towards putting the property in shape have already resulted in a very flattering offer from the Portland Fuel Co. who agree to lease the two properties at $20,000 each per year. Mr. Scott, who is over at the properties now, is expected home soon when the above offer will be considered.

The coal is of a fine lignite quality, first class for domestic and steaming purposes. Several seams, varying in width from 3 to 7 feet, are known to exist. The Southern Pacific have offered to put in a three mile spur for the company. A steam pump for the purpose of pumping out the old prospect holes, has been ordered and it is estimated that little time would be required to put the proposition on a paying basis. This is one case where the shrewdness of Canadian investors has stolen a march on the alert American and we congratulate these Fernie men on the apparent success of their enterprise.

MORRISSEY INQUEST.

The inquest into the death of the four men at Morrissey mines last week was held on Thursday and Friday before Coroner Trites and a jury consisting of three members of the Miners' Union and three business men. A Dick, mine inspector, was also present and assisted the coroner.

The evidence went to show that the accident was due to a blow out of large dimensions, the pressure of the gas being so great as to force inward a wall of coal nearly forty feet thick. This was due to natural consequences which could not be prevented. The gas thus released suffocated the men.

Mr. Sherman, of the Miners' Union was permitted to examine the witnesses on behalf of the men and Messrs. Tonkin and Stockett who were present showed an interest in the proceedings. The verdict stated that the men came to their death as shown above and the jury expressed the opinion that had the direct air shaft to the main entry been completed, upon which the men were working at the time two of the deceased might have escaped.

Two of the miners gave evidence of a very conflicting nature which did not bear out the opinion expressed in the latter part of the verdict.

THE RECOUNT.

The recount of the Fernie ballots, which was set for last Monday at Nelson before Judge Forin was adjourned for a week owing to the ballot boxes having been sent to Victoria. It was thought that an order from the returning officer would be required for their return to Nelson, and as that gentleman is still away from town it was feared that another adjournment would be necessary

A Victoria despatch on Wednesday stated that the Provincial Secretary Goodeve was prepared to forward the boxes on receipt of an order from the County Court Judge and S. S. Taylor, K. C., who is representing E. C. Smith's interests, at once wired Judge Forin who was at Revelstoke, to wire the Provincial Secretary to have the boxes returned to Nelson. If this was done promptly the recount will likely take place on Monday next.

THE ALASKAN AWARD.

The Editor of the Fernie Free Press.

Sir;—Will you please allow me a space in your paper to comment on the result of the Alaskan Boundary Arbitration which has just been made public.

It is well remembered that before the treaty was signed the United states refused to consent to the appointment of an Umpire should the arbitrators not be able to agree and further that the American arbitrators chosen were men who have expressed themselves as determined not to sacrifice one iota of the American contention, no matter what argument or proof were advanced against that view.

We see in this refusal to leave the matter to a disinterested umpire a determination, either to bamboozle one of the British arbitrators to their way of thinking or to have the so called arbitration end in a disagreement when the dispute would remain statu quo.

As I have above stated the result of the arbitration has been now made public and it is reported that the three American commissioners and the British commissioner have decided in favor of the United States contention, not, however on an honest legal decision on the merits of the case; but in the nature of a compromise, which gives everything to the Americans.

The Canadian representatives, Sir L. Jette and Mr. Aylesworth have refused to sign the award on these grounds, though unfortunately the same must stand. Our representatives rightly considered that the Canadian interests have been sacrificed by Great Britain with the apparent object of cultivating the friendship of the American nation: but when will the British diplomat learn that the American friendship, instead of being quoted above par, should rather be taken at a discount which is the valuation Canadians have learned to place on the commodity.

The sole idea of the United States, and perhaps its settled policy, as deeply rooted as the Munroe Doctrine, is to detach Canada from Great Britain, when perhaps the fond hope that we will be more amendable to their advances may be realized We have already on one occasion defended ourselves from the friendly advances of our southern neighbor and are quite prepared to repeat the operation should necessity compel us to and that without the aid of Great Britain.

It is keenly felt in Canada that our interests have once more been sacrificed to English ignorance of conditions obtaining on this continent. The English conception of Canada is apparently limited to the information conveyed in "Our Lady of the Snows," and perhaps because Lord Alvestone considered that the Yukon and Alaska were near the Arctic Circle, it was not worth anything and the United States might as well have what they wanted. We lost territory in the State of Washington as one of the British Commissioners came to the same conclusion in respect to the ground in dispute; that genius, however, arrived at his decision because salmon would not rise to fly in the Columbia, ergo, the Americans ought to have the disputed territory as it was not fit for the Englishman. Canada also lost a portion of territory on the Maine and New Brunswick frontier through the crass stupidity of Lord Ashburton.

Canadians are disgusted with British appreciation of their loyalty and intelligence, as exemplified in the action of the only British Commissioner. What has the United States ever done to seek the favor of England, for surely we cannot in all conscience claim that the war of 1812, the Fenian invasion, or the Venezuela affair would indicate any such desire. What lesson, on the contrary, can be drawn from the Canadian contingents who fought in South Africa, and what of the British preference? Perhaps whispers speak louder than actions and if so, Britain should certainly seek to obtain the friendship of the States, even if she has to sacrifice Canada. We must unfortunately look to facts and we can come to no other conclusion than that our interests, our absolute proofs of loyality and our pride, have all been sacrificed to the possibility of a chance of securing a friendship which is as certain a quantity as the barometer in variable weather.

If Great Britain uses the same modicum of common sense in the management of her foreign affairs as she does in affairs colonial, all I can say is "May the Good God preserve the Empire," for her own statesmen will never do it.

Yours Truly,
U. E. LOYALIST.

Fernie, Oct., 22nd, 1903.

CREDITORS' MEETING.

Affairs of the Cedar Valley Improvement Co. are in a Serious Condition.

A meeting of the creditors of the Cedar Valley Improvement Co. was held in Joyce's hall on Wednesday afternoon when a fuller statement was given by the assignee. The meeting was attended by nearly all the creditors and the business was conducted harmoniously.

The assignee reported the total liabilities to be in the neighborhood of $70,000. This amount would be reduced by probably $10,000 on account of customers' paper for which lumber had been given. Of this amount between thirty and thirty-five thousand dollars was under mortgage. The total assets had been approximately estimated at $85,000 Of this amount $44,000 was the price valued on the timber belonging to the company. Conservative lumber men consider this a safe valuation.

The meeting appointed three inspectors to assist Mr. Cree in his duties as assignee. These inspectors are Messrs. J. R. Pollock, J. F. McCuaig and J. D. Quail. Nothing further can be done by the creditors until a complete list of liabilities is made out. The books of the company are not in good condition, which renders it difficult to get at the exact condition of affairs. A new set of books will be opened and accounts as they are proved will be entered. Two or three months will probably lapse before this will be completed. In the meantime the plant will be idle, and afterwards it may be sold as the banks involved do not favor it being run by the creditors.

The assignee will sell the lumber on hand at once. This will amount to about half a million feet. There is $5,000 of insurance on the mill plant now and this amount will be doubled. Steam is kept up day and night and two watchmen are employed as a protection against fire.

SEPTEMBER PAY ROLL.

The pay roll for September which was paid out at the three collieries last Saturday was as follows:

Coal Creek	$ 63,991.60
Michel	49,861.25
Morrissey	34,004.05
Total	$ 147,856.90

This is a decrease from the previous pay roll of about $13,000. Coal Creek barely held its own while Morrissey and Michel fell short owing to several stoppages.

RAN A NAIL THROUGH HIS HAND.

While opening a box, J. C. Mount, of Three Mile Bay, N. Y., ran a ten penny nail through the fleshy part of his hand. "I thought at once of all the pain and soreness this would cause me," he says, "and immediately applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm and occasionally afterwards. To my surprise it removed all pain and soreness and the injured parts were soon healed." For sale by all druggists and dealers.

An important deal was completed yesterday by which the name of C. Richards' business was changed to C. Richards & Co. M. Young, of Lethbridge, has been negotiating with Mr. Richards for some time for an interest in the business, and partnership papers were signed yesterday. Mr. Young runs a general store at Lethbridge and he will take no active part in the running of this business. Mr. Richards with the aid that the increased capital will give him, expects to extend his trade.

GRAIN INSURANCE.

RAILWAY VS. INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Intention of Railway Companies to Accommodate the Farmers, Barked by Insurance Companies, May Possibly Place Risks with English Companies.

The railway companies desire to insure all Manitoba grain going into their terminal elevators at Port Arthur and Fort William in order to accommodate the farmers who have hitherto been unable to obtain insurance and at the same time be able to guarantee delivery without specifying the elevator in which the grain shall be placed. With this object in view they decided to increase the storage charge from ½ cent to ¾ cent, the latter to cover insurance as well as storage in elevator.

The insurance companies, who have in the past been making a good thing out of this insurance, as high as 9 per cent. or 10 per cent. on the actual risk carried, objected, and notified the railway companies as per the following resolution: "Resolved that where policies are issued to railway companies or transportation companies on grain in terminal elevators, double the ordinary rates shall be charged; or the railway companies given the alternative of paying insurance companies the additional charge imposed this year to cover insurance, viz., ¼ per cent. per bush. for fifteen days or fraction thereof, and ¼ of a cent per bush. for each succeeding thirty days or fraction thereof."

It is understood that the railway companies have specified their willingness to give to the insurance companies the additional ¼c collected for such grain as they insure, they proposing, however, to carry the insurance themselves in their steel elevators. The insurance companies have now come out flat-footed, and say they will not insure any of the grain on the terms unless they can insure all of it, and that they must get double rates or every cent additional that the railway companies collect, whether they run any risk or not. It is difficult at this time to say how the matter will end—whether the railway companies will decide to carry the whole of the insurance themselves, or place it in England, or give in to the demands of the Canadian insurance companies.

THE WIDE WORLD.

Telegraphic News of Two Hemispheres Briefly Chronicled.

Mr. Jos. Chamberlain is ill with gout.

Another South American war is looming up.

The school attendance in Winnipeg has reached 7,469.

The Archbishop of St. Louis, Mgr. Kain, is dead.

Canadian industries continue to weaken in sympathy with U. S. securities.

Military prisoners have been released from California on forged pardons.

Malpractice is suspected in the case of Annie Johnson, of Winnipeg, who died at Rat Portage.

Fifteen shipwrecked sailors have been picked up at sea near New York after great suffering.

Local counsel has advised Winnipeg merchants to openly defy the Early Closing by-law.

A. H. Marchant, a young farmer of Marquette, Manitoba, was seriously wounded while out shooting.

No information was obtainable from the secret session of the Alaska boundary commission held in London.

Thirty-five miles of the Rosendale branch of the Canadian Northern railway will be constructed this fall.

Insurance companies have objected to railway companies' method of insuring grain in terminal elevators at lake ports.

Lord Alverstone has denied that he has intimated his desire to favor the U. S. contention in the Alaska boundary case.

Police investigation into the late Isakel Slater's death in St. Paul hospital is likely to follow on the part of the parents in Winnipeg.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

A. H. Marchant Is Seriously Wounded While Out Hunting.

Another case of accidental shooting occurred Tuesday afternoon about 5 o'clock, at Woodlands, Man., just north of Marquette. The victim was Arthur H. Marchant, a farmer of 23 years of age, who lives in that locality. It appears that yesterday afternoon he went out shooting alone and when loading the gun he accidentally touched the trigger and the gun was discharged, the shot lodging in his right arm and shoulder. When found he was in a very critical condition. He was immediately bandaged and taken to Marquette by his father, where they caught the local and came into the general hospital.

Later reports from the hospital are to the effect that the patient is doing well, but he is very weav from the loss of blood, owing to it being so long before medical assistance was received.

Young Man's Grief.

Miss Hatton, a young lady passenger from England, an the steamer Kensington, died envoyage. She was on her way out to meet her affianced husband, and they were to have been married immediately on arrival. Her lover was at the wharf to meet his fiancee on the arrival of the vessel, and his grief on being told that she was dead and had been buried at sea was pitiable.

HEAD BADLY CRUSHED.

Switchman Stothard Receives Frightful Injuries in C.P.R. Yards, Winnipeg.

Jos. Stothard, foreman of the coachyard switching crew of the C. P. R., Winnipeg, was seriously injured about 11.30 o'clock Wednesday. He was uncoupling cars when his head was jammed between the cars and frightfully crushed.

Althouth there were several witnesses of the accident no one can tell just exactly how the unfortunate man placed his head in so precarious a position. There was a long string of coaches and baggage cars coupled on a side track and the crew were engaged in uncoupling cars for the train going east. Attached to these cars was a Great Northern coach, and the car coupling being of a different pattern it is a hard matter to uncouple the cars owing to the fact that the lever used to pull out the bolt will not act as the C.P.R. cars are higher. It was necessary therefore for Stothard to lean down between the cars and pull up the chain with his hands. As the cars were on a curve in the track the couplings were all pulled tight, and it was necessary to have them slackened. Stothard gave the signal for what is known in railway parlance as a "quick slack." The cars may have jarred him in coming back and his head was jammed between the car buffers. He was frightfully cut, and those who rushed to his assistance believed there was no chance for his recovery. He was carried to the baggage-room in an unconscious condition and Dr. Richards summoned. A priest was called and administered the last sacraments of the church as he lay there. He was conveyed to St. Boniface hospital. It is impossible to say whether he will recover or not.

Switchman Stothard is a man of about 50 years of age, and has been employed by the C.P.R. for nearly twenty years, being one of the best known men around the Winnipeg terminals. He has a large family.

THE MODEL WIFE.

Some Pointers for Cranky, Nagging Wives to Ponder Over.

Rev. J. M. Lee, of the Methodist church in Camden, N. J., recently preached a sermon on "A Model Wife," and here are a few of the expressions he used:

"It is not good for man to live alone. God took a rib from a man's side and of it formed a woman. He thus created a vacuum in man's life that nothing but a sweet woman can fill.

"The model wife accords to her husband full authority in general affairs, but realizes that she must be the head of the house. I do not mean boss. From a boss in petticoats, good Lord deliver us.

"The model wife is a good housekeeper. If the carpet contains samples of everything cooked for a month; if the table linen looks as if soap costs $10 a cake; if the walls are festooned with cobwebs, I charge such wives with driving their husbands from home. Go to the saloons thou sluggard, and learn the art of shine and sparkle.

"If some wives would use the same energy in their housework that they do in gossip and gadding, many saloons would be vacant.

"Better a thousand times to be a bachelor than to wed a long-tongued, ball-bearing jawed woman.

"The model wife lives within her husband's income. Many a man has been strangled by the rope of his wife's fine lace.

"I pity the man who, after marriage, finds all he has to show for his marriage fee is a dress form, a medicine chest, and a whinning voice.

"A whining, fault-finding wife is worse than a fit of chills and fever. I don't wonder that men drink whiskey to get over the attack.

"Many a suicide's rifle has been loaded with unpaid bills and aimed by a careless wife."

CANADA'S TRADE GROWS.

Three Months of Present Fiscal Year Shows an Advance of $21,500,000

The trade statement issued by the customs department, Ottawa, shows that the aggregate trade of Canada for the first quarter of the fiscal year ending with September, was $133,758,124, which was $21,506,588 more than for the same time last year.

The imports for consumption were $66,895,837, and the exports of domestic produce $61,479,884, as against $51,505,768 of imports and $57,493,585 for the same time in 1902.

There was an increase of $6,409,382 in the dutiable goods and of $7,226,986 in the imports of free goods. There was an increase of $2,517,499 in the exports of agricultural products; of $1,692,793 on mineral products; and $535,168 in manufactures.

FLOODS IN ENGLAND.

The Situation Becoming Serious, Acres of Grain Under Water in Yorkshire.

The rain and flood situation in England shows the outlook as becoming hourly more serious. There has been an abatement of the downpour in London, but the total rainfall is rapidly approaching a point equal to the highest since the meteorological office was established in 1866. The rivers are high everywhere and in many places have broken their bounds. Railway traffic has been interfered with, and great inconvenience caused in several towns by the inundations. Acres of grain are under water in Yorkshire and reports of general floods came from the north of England.

Customer—"Why doesn't that spinster, Miss Brown, deal at your shop any more?" Grocer—"One of my shopmen insulted her." Customer—"How?" Grocer—"She overheard him telling one that she was our oldest customer."

A STRANGE CRUSADE.

Dowie, the Zionist Leader and a Party of 400 Invade New York.

A dispatch from New York, dated Oct. 16, says: Under the direction of an advance agent, four hundred and twenty members of John Dowie's Zion hosts arrived from Chicago on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad early to-day to participate in a crusade for the regeneration of New York. They landed at The Battery and boarded cars for Madison Square Gardens. As the first car started the crowd began singing a hymn, and a large crowd of curious spectators gathered round those waiting outside the ferry house. Men in the Dowie party distributed tracts among them. The men were dressed in a uniform resembling that worn by the United States infantry. The women did not wear uniforms.

The crowd around the ferry house grew so large that it blocked the street and the police drove the spectators back to the curb. One of the features of the party was the junior choir of about fifty little boys. There was also a drum and fife corps of thirty men dressed in khaki uniforms. Thirty per cent of the party were women and children of all nationalities, including one little colored girl.

Dr. Dowie arrived in his special train at the Grand Central station, disappointing the crowds who were awaiting him at the West Shore railroad ferry, the train having come from Albany over the Hudson river division. His private carriage was awaiting him at the West Shore depot, and the Zion leader, with his son and two lieutenants, took a public hack to the hotel. A number of his own people greeted Dr. Dowie, but there was little demonstration. Another train bringing Dr. Dowie's adherents had previously arrived on the New York Central railway.

It required more than ten trucks to haul all their baggage to this city. Some of the trucks were decorated with small gold crosses printed on white paper and stuck on the baggage.

CALLS IT A "BLUFF."

British Leader of the Opposition Criticizes Balfour's Policy of Retaliation.

London, Oct. 16.—Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, addressing a meeting at Bolton last night, said that Mr. Chamberlain's case was completely vitiated by his figures. The issue before the country was protection. Mr. Balfour had ousted the free traders from his cabinet, but fearing to go before the country on protection had adopted a retaliation as a makeshift issue which appealed to the selfish instincts of individuals and the fighting instincts of the nation. A policy of retaliation, continued the Liberal leader, could only mean ultimate landing of the country on protection. Nothing could be more shortsighted than to sacrifice the known benefits of the most favored-nation treatment for the problematic benefits of retaliatory tariffs. Retaliation never had broken down and never would break down any tariff walls. It was pleaded that retaliation would be kept in reserve. In brief, Great Britain was to play a game of bluff with the world. Mr. Chamberlain had tried to bluff the late President Kruger, and the game had caused Great Britain thousands of valuable lives and £250,000,000 in money. The government, concluded Sir Henry, ought to have had enough of the game of bluff. The Liberals would oppose protection root and branch. He believed that economy in finance and reform of the educational and land systems would do more for the prosperity of the country.

Trade Conditions.

Special telegraphic advices to the International Mercantile Agency of New York from correspondents thruout the United States and Canada are summarized as follows: Anxiety as to money and the crops has almost disappeared, and merchants west and south look for a livelier demand for the country districts now that good corn and wheat yields are assured.

Mercantile collections are better than expected in the territory tributary to Chicago, New Orleans, and St. Louis, except from parts of Texas, but the most significant trade feature of the week is found in a tendency to greater ease in money for mercantile uses at Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and Pittsburg.

In the Canadian Dominion is a good demand for heavy winter goods. The wheat harvest here is exceptionally large and growers are receiving about 75 cents a bushel for it.

Wants a New Party.

The Edinburgh Review, which is edited by the Hon. Arthur Elliott, who resigned the financial secretaryship of the treasury because of his difference with Mr. Balfour on the fiscal question, makes a strong appeal for a reorganized Liberal-Unionist party under the leadership of the Duke of Devonshire and to include men of all parties devoted to free trade, like Mr. Ritchie and John Burns. It invites the assistance of the independent labor party also.

The gas pocket blew out in No. 9 mine at Morrissey, B.C., on Thursday last with such force as to throw hundreds of tons of coal out in the room 80 feet. Four miners were killed by asphyxiation. Twenty others, hearing the crackling of oncoming gas, fled for their lives and escaped. The gas did not ignite and very little damage was done to the mine.

A monument at Washington to General Sherman, costing $90,000, was unveiled on Thursday last in the presence of President Roosevelt and a great concourse of people.

Additional British warships have been ordered to China.

"Goodyear Certainty"

The only certain way to get a genuine Goodyear Welt Shoe is: Buy only the "SLATER SHOE," because it is made by no other process and therefore must be Goodyear Welt.

Slater Shoe

For Men — $4.00 / $5.00 — For Women

Sole Agents :-- JOYCE BRO'S., FERNIE, B. C.

DONDONALD COMING.

Will Inspect Regiments in Manitoba N. W. T. and British Columbia.

A dispatch from Ottawa says: Lord Dundonald has just returned from inspecting the military camps of instruction in the maritime provinces. He is well pleased with the announcement of the policy made in the House by the minister of Militia.

Being interviewed his lordship said: "Although the camps did extremely good work of a practical nature, it was evident to me that it is impossible to teach the instructor and the men whom he has to instruct at the same time and in the short period of twelve days. Therefore a central camp of instruction where officers and non-commissioned officers can gain experience of the conditions of modern warfare is a necessity. The provisions of the policy announced by the minister will work an important step onward in the military effort of the Canadian militia. In this connection I may say that I have recommended an entirely new system of instruction and examinations for promotion, which, I hope, will assist officers and non-commissioned officers to render themselves efficient. The provision of the company armory serving as a meeting place for the company during the winter months, with the clothing and equipment ready to turn out when the alarm sounds, and its wall ornamented with placards of instructions on military subjects will be another great factor in promoting the efficiency of the militia."

Lord Dundonald will inspect the corps in Toronto after Col. Otter returns from England. Before the close of the year he will make an inspection of the regiments in Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia.

THE KING RETURNS.

A Quick and as Usual an Easy Journey Back Home.

In a special cable from London the New York Herald has the following: King Edward has returned to London from Scotland. He had a wet arrival on Thursday night, but the heavy rain did not prevent great crowds waiting all along the route from Euston to Buckingham palace to welcome His Majesty back to his metropolis.

It was an easy and a quick journey the King had from Balmoral. As usual the Royal train was preceded by a pilot engine, fifteen minutes in advance, and was hand-signalled throughout the entire journey, a distance of 58½ miles. The longest run without a stop was between Carlisle and Euston, a distance of 299 miles. The train's length was 555 feet. Its weight, apart from the locomotive, was 232 tons.

Coming at Last.

The days of waiting for population are drawing to a close. Canada has been discovered, or rather rediscovered, for over half a century ago the Irish famine and the clearings in the Highlands drove great swarms of settlers into Upper Canada, and raised it from the position of a series of straggling settlements into a powerful and populous province. The West seems destined to have a similar rush. Figures issued at Ottawa this week show that the immigrant arrivals in Canada for the nine months of the present calendar year ending on October first numbered 108,014, or 39,182 in excess of the total for the same period of last year. Of this year's immigrants 43,187 came from the British Isles, 32,498 from the Continent of Europe, and 32,329 from the United States. In 1902 the immigrant arrivals were: British, 16,979; continental, 25,236; the United States, 26,617.

Has no equal for richness and purity—Keeps perfectly in any climate. The best for all household purposes.

Ask for VICTOR Brand.

Manufactured by Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P. E. I.

For the first quarter of the present fiscal year ending on Sept. 30th the arrivals were 26,987, as against 23,381 for the same three months in 1902. The British arrivals were 12,478, an increase of 6,133; the continental arrivals 7,218, an increase of 208, and the American 7,291, a decrease of 2,735.

The extraordinary diversion of British emigrants from the United States is made evident by the fact that in the period between 1891 and 1900 726,000 persons emigrated from Great Britain, and of these 520,000, or seventy-two per cent., went to the United States, and only 90,000, or thirteen per cent., to British North America.

Foster's Weather Forecast.

The last bulletin gave forecast of the disturbance to cross the continent 12th to 16th, warm wave 13th to 17th, cool wave 14th to 18th. Next disturbance will reach the Pacific coast about the 17th, cross west to the Rockies by the close of the 18th, great central valleys the 19th to 21st, northeastern states the 22nd. The warm wave will cross west of the Rockies about the 17th, great central valleys the 19th, eastern states the 21st. The cool wave will cross west of the Rockies about the 20th, the great central valleys, the 22nd, eastern states the 24th.

This disturbance will belong to a period of great extremes in temperature. Both the warm wave and cold wave following it will be of short duration, but they will make very high and very low temperatures.

The dangerous storms will probably occur on the continent and along the northern steamship routes of the Atlantic and Pacific. There is some probability of a tropical storm also, but the land storms are more probable.

With the exception of that disturbance near the 15th we will probably have several days of quiet weather, and after the 24th we will probably get a long rest from weather extremes except the low temperatures as the month goes out.

Madame Melba arrives in New York.

Erick Walter Polson, a fugitive from Portage la Prairie reformitory, has been recaptured.

Jewish merchants of Winnipeg form league to fight early closing by-law.

Winnipeg golf club's links to be subdivided into building lots.

Manufacturers association officers strongly favor Dominion exhibition for Winnipeg.

General Hamilton is in Washington.

Mr. Peter Jansen, of Nebraska, has purchased 50,000 acres of land in Saskatchewan, on which to settle a colony of Mennonites.

End of the Ottawa session is in sight.

Millionaire morphine fiend meets a tragic end.

FROM BOTH HEMISPHERES

Important News Condensed Into Brief Paragraphs.

Saturday's wheat market was higher.

The Manitoba Grain bill has been amended.

Western curlers are organizing for the winter.

More sawmills are announced for Rainy River, Ont.

War rumors continue to be ominous in the Orient.

Bulgaria has decided to mobolise her reserves.

Samuel Williams, a white man, was lynched in Florida.

Lord Dundonald will inspect western regiments this fall.

Major Delmar and Lou Dillon broke world's trotting records.

Canadian lady golfers have carried off honors at Philadelphia.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt welcomed the British artillerymen.

St. Paul Yacht club will try next year for the Seawanhaka cup.

Valuable Whitney horses have been purchased for the Kirkfield stables.

The American steamship combine has been forced to cut grain rates.

Richard Henry Savage, the United States author and soldier, is dead.

A daring system of Chinese smuggling has been unearthed at Port Huron.

Frederick J. Reinhardt, a C. N. R. brakesman, was killed at Clanwilliam, Man.

A son of Sir John Boyd was seriously injured while playing football at Ottawa.

Some 1,500 employees of the Venderbilt system shops have been let out of work.

Ven. Archdeacon Fortin, Winnipeg, has severely criticized phrenology and palmistry.

Daniel Macdonald, of Ottawa, killed himself. He had been brooding over real estate worries.

Fearful floods have devastated Paterson, N.J., and district, the loss amounting to millions.

The son of a wealthy Chicago banker, Abram H. Kohn, met a mysterious death in 'Frisco.

Ian Maclaren, the author, believes the world is on the eve of a great religious revival.

The farmers' exodus from the U. S. to Canada has alarmed the United States government.

Mr. Nosse, the Japanese consul-general to Canada, in a Winnipeg interview, spoke of trade conditions in the Orient.

William Woodhouse was killed, and two companions injured, a handcar on which they were riding, colliding with the express.

Winnipeg Roman Catholics are preparing to welcome papal delegate, Monseigneur Sbarretti.

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

The First American Bible.

In 1663 the first Bible printed in America was published in Cambridge. It was unlawful to print an English version of the Scriptures, that right being a monopoly enjoyed by privilege and patent in England. The one printed in Massachusetts was Eliot's famous "Indian Bible," and, although 1,500 copies were struck off, they are quite rare and "sealed books," as the tongue in which they are written is literally a "dead language," the tribe and all who had a knowledge of the dialect being long extinct.

Eliot's work is unique, being at once a monument to his piety, perseverance and learning. Its literary successor was Newman's "Concordance of the Scriptures." This was compiled by the light of pine knots in a log cabin in one of the frontier settlements of Massachusetts. It was the first of its kind and for more than a century was admitted to be the most perfect, holding its place in public esteem until superseded by Cruden's, which it suggested.

Uncovering the Past.

"All right," says the rich father, after the count has stated his terms. "I'll let Sadie marry you and agree to turn over to you $1,000,000. Now, let's get fixed up properly. Suppose we say $1,000 down and the balance at $2 a week?"

Here Sadie bursts into tears and leaves the room.

"Now, ma," says the rich father to his wife, "what on earth's the matter with that girl?"

"Well, I don't blame her at all, pa. It seems as if you never could keep from betraying the fact that we are of plebeian origin."

"What have I done now?" asks pa.

"Why, you talk as if you were buying the count from an installment house."—Judge.

When a man moves to another town and has it in for the town he left, you can depend upon it that he has never done anything to help the town along, and was an undesirable citizen.

Wash greasy dishes, pots or pans with Lever's Dry Soap (a powder). It will remove the grease with the greatest ease. 36

Taking too much liberty may deprive a man of his liberty.

A PILL FOR GENEROUS EATERS.—There are many persons of healthy appetite and poor digestion who, after hearty meal, are subject to much suffering. The food of which they have partaken lies like lead in their stomachs. Headache, depression, a smothering feeling follow. One so afflicted is unfit for business or work of any kind. In this condition Parmalee's Vegetable Pills will bring relief. They will assist the assimilation of the ailment, and used according to direction will restore healthy digestion.

Born diplomats handle the truth with care.

HOW'S THIS?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRUAX, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.
WALDING, KINAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75c per bottle. Sold by all Druggists. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

There are two portions of every man's life when he should not use profanity: first, when he is mad, and second, when he is in a good humor.

Dear Sirs,—This is to certify that I have been troubled with a lame back for fifteen years.

I have used three bottles of your MINARD'S LINIMENT and am completely cured.

It gives me great pleasure to recommend it and you are at liberty to use this in any way to further the use of your valuable medicine.

Two Rivers. ROBERT ROSS.

A machine that washes and dries 8,000 dishes an hour has been invented, and it is guaranteed that plates, cups, saucers, and other dishes come out of the wash without a scratch.

MERRY, HAPPY BABIES.

There is no greater treasure on earth than a healthy, happy, merry baby. Anything therefore that will keep the little one in this condition is a priceless boon to mothers. Mrs. Wm. Bull, Maple Creek, N.W.T., tells how she accomplished this end. She says:—"I am happy to say that Baby's Own Tablets have done my baby girl a world of good. She was badly troubled with constipation and very cross and peevish, but since using the Tablets she is all right. I give her the Tablets once or twice a week and she is now such a merry, happy little thing that there can be no doubt Baby's Own Tablets are just the thing for little ones."

Here is a lesson for other mothers who want a safe and certain medicine for the ailments from which their little ones suffer from time to time. These Tablets are sold under a guarantee to contain no opiate or harmful drug, and they are good for all children from the new born babe to the well grown child. Sold at 25 cents a box or sent by mail by writing direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

W. N. U. No 451.

WHALES AS THEY DIVE.

Something About the Habits of the Ocean Monsters.

Both whalers and naturalists have usually held that when whales "sound" they descend to great depths, says Knowledge. One writer on the subject estimates that the larger members of the group dive fully a thousand yards. In a memoir published in Belgium Dr. Racovitza challenges this belief and states that in his opinion 100 yards is the maximum depth to which any whale can dive and that many species cannot reach anything like that limit. Says the writer:

Why should whales want to go to such depths? All whales sound for the purpose of obtaining food, and in the profound darkness of 1,000 yards what food could they get? Those species which feed on animalcules might, perhaps, obtain what they want. But how about the species which feed on fishes and cuttles? At a depth of 1,000 yards they certainly could not use their eyes to detect nonluminous species, and we have no evidence whatever that they feed on the self luminous deep sea fish and cuttles, if, indeed, there be any of the latter. On the contrary, the available evidence indicates that they feed on ordinary light dwelling fishes and cuttles which live in much shallower zones. But this is not all. It is known that the effects of a pressure of more than three atmospheres prove fatal to human life; and, although we may believe that whales can stand treble this pressure, or nine atmospheres, which would occur at about ninety yards' depth, is it conceivable that they could resist the effect of ten times the latter pressure, or ninety atmospheres? Moreover, does it seem possible that a whale whose body is only slightly heavier than water at ordinary pressure could exert the muscular force necessary to propel that body to a depth of 1,000 yards?

COLD WAVES.

They Purify the Atmosphere and Benefit the Human System.

The cold wave, so much dreaded by most people, is really a blessing in disguise. It charges the atmosphere with fresh oxygen and a surplus of free electricity, which produces a most exhilarating and beneficial effect upon mankind. Torpid energies are aroused, physical vigor and resistance increased, by the advent of a cold wave to such an extent that any incidental damage is more than made up for.

The American climate has always been recognized as a strong factor in causing the aggressiveness and enterprise which have lifted our people into the first rank among nations and made us commercially supreme. The cold wave, with its results of increased energy and vigor, is a meteorological phenomenon peculiar to this country. The chief of the weather bureau at Washington explains the origin of this wave.

It appears that with a high pressure system, rotating with great velocity, large volumes of cold air are drawn down from above the clouds, so that the cold wave is "homemade," being simply a product of motion. The system of motion originates in the northwest, but the cold air comes from above the clouds.

The cold wave is not only useful for its beneficial effect upon the human system, but as a cleansing and purifying agency. It dissipates the deadly carbonic acid gas, the product of respiration and combustion, and the foul effluvia of decaying matter, increasing atmospheric circulation generally and thereby relieving stagnation.

A Water Test.

It is one of the easiest things in the world to tell pure water from the impure. If you want to test the color of the water just fill a colorless glass bottle with the water and look through it at some black object, and the distinctiveness with which you can see the object will give you an idea as to the amount of clay or sand there is in the water. Then pour out one-half the water, cork the bottle tightly and set it in a warm place for about twenty-four hours. Remove the cork and smell the air in the bottle. If there is an offensive odor, even the slightest, the water is unfit for domestic uses. Well water, no matter how bright and sparkling, is nine times out of ten putrescent. Then, as a matter of course, decomposition is sure to set in in a day or two if you put the bottle in a warm place.

A Slap at Whistler.

A young San Franciscan, the owner of a large and valuable collection of autographs, once wrote to James MacNeill Whistler, politely requesting his signature. The letter was sent in care of the London Royal academy, with which the famous American painter was at outs. After four months the letter was returned to the San Francisco address from the dead letter office in Washington. Covering the envelope was the word, repeated numberless times, "Unknown."

The Real Force.

"Man does his best when he is hard put to it. Necessity, you know, is the mother of invention," said the observer of men and things.

"Yes," replied the benedict, "but if necessity were invention's mother-in-law then you'd see how invention would have to hump itself."

Evidence of an Eyewitness.

Guest—Why do you believe in second sight, major?

Major Darby (in an impressive whisper)—Because I fell in love at first sight!—Punch.

If a row threatens you don't let it go so far that you become bitter and are willing to hurt yourself in order to hurt your enemy.

"WHY NOT"

demand the very best, especially as it costs no more than Teas of uncertain reputation.

"SALADA"

CEYLON TEA is positively unrivaled. Black, Mixed or NATURAL GREEN. Sold only in sealed lead packets, 40c, 50c and 60c per lb.

By all Grocers.

WHEAT OATS BARLEY FLAX

SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY THOMPSON, SONS & CO.

Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg. Grain Exchange, Winnipeg. S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros., GRAIN MERCHANTS,

TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. Box 585

McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.

Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

POSTMASTER IS MADE HAPPY

After Years of Sickness Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Plain Statement of a New Brunswick Postmaster whose Kidney Pains have Gone Never to Return.

Lower Windsor, Carleton Co., N.B., October 17.—(Special)—T. H. Belyea, postmaster here, well known and widely respected, is happy in the discovery of a permanent cure for the Kidney pains that have troubled him for years.

"I have been bothered with Kidney Trouble for years," Postmaster Belyea says. "I have tried many medicines and plasters without getting any lasting benefit till hearing Dodd's Kidney Pills so highly spoken of I determined to try them. They seem to have made a complete cure in my case, as I feel as well as ever I was.

"I believe that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the right medicine for Kidney Trouble, and will do all they are claimed to do."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys and with healthy Kidneys no one can have Bright's Disease, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Dropsy or Pain in the Back. Thousands will tell you this out of their own experience.

Don't give a drunkard ten cents requiring him to promise you he will not spend it for strong drink. You would only be educating a liar.

GOOD DIGESTION SHOULD WAIT ON APPETITE.—To have the stomach well is to have the nervous system well. Very delicate are the digestive organs. In some so sensitive are they that atmospheric changes affect them. When they become disarranged no better regulator is procurable than Parmalee's Vegetable Pills. They will assist the digestion so that the hearty eater will suffer no inconvenience and will derive all the benefits of his food.

No one ever fooled the people with false teeth.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

It is a good sign when a community endorses husbands and wives being in love with each other.

Is there anything more annoying than having your corn stepped upon? Is there anything more delightful than getting rid of it? Holloway's Corn Cure will do it. Try and be convinced.

All things come to those who stop waiting and go after them.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

Yes, Alonzo, it is just as well to beware of the dog when courting a coy maid of 30, but you needn't worry about the old man—he won't bother you.

DO NOT DELAY.—Do not let a cold or a cough fasten upon you as it will if neglected. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will break up a cold and cure a cough, and should be resorted to at once when the first symptoms appear. It can be disguised so that any unpleasant taste it may have will be imperceptible to the delicate. Try it and be convinced.

Lots of men, like bad musilage, stick to nothing.

If you want to know anything about club life, ask a policeman.

A bird in the hand is worth two that begin to warble at 4 a.m.

It is easier to whip some men than it is to keep some whipped.

Shirt waists and dainty linen are made delightfully clean and fresh with Sunlight Soap. 6B

Whistler and His Model.

James MacNeill Whistler once owed a female model $5 for sittings. She was a Philistine of the Philistines, who knew nothing of her patron's fame and was in no way impressed with his work. One day she told another artist that she had been sitting to a little Frenchman called Whistler, who jumped about his studio and was always complaining that people were swindling him and that he was making very little money. The artist suggested that if she could get any piece of painting out of Whistler's studio he would give her $50 for it. Although skeptical, the model decided to tell her "little Frenchman" of this too generous offer and selected one of the biggest and finest works in the studio. "What did he say?" asked the artist who had made the offer when the model appeared in a state of great excitement and looking almost as if she had come second best out of a scrimmage. "He said: 'Fifty dollars! Good heavens! Fifty dollars!' And he got so mad—well, that's how I came in here like this."

Henley's Sufferings.

In fifty-four years of his life—he was born in 1849—W. E. Henley never knew what a day's perfect health meant. When little more than a boy he was attacked by a disease which necessitated the amputation of one foot. He was told later by the doctors that the sacrifice of the other leg was necessary were he to live. The fame of Dr. Lister had reached Henley, and, penniless and almost friendless, he determined to try Edinburgh infirmary. Thither he traveled third class in physical suffering such as few have known, and when he reached the infirmary his whole possessions amounted to a few shillings. His confidence in Lister was justified and his leg was saved. He was and remained a cripple, but neither hopeless nor helpless. His astounding nimbleness under these conditions suggested to Robert Louis Stevenson the physical sketch of John Silver.

The Red Sea.

Here is an interesting theory: What made the Red sea red? The blood of locusts. Read a few lines from Exodus: "And the locusts went up over all the land of Egypt and rested in all the coasts of Egypt; very grievous were they. Before them there were no such locusts as they, neither after them shall be such. For they covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened. And the Lord turned a mighty strong west wind, which took the locusts and cast them into the Red sea. There remained not one locust in all the coasts of Egypt." The Red sea today is no more red than any other sea. Its reddening was temporary.

What Is Gossip?

There has been complaint from the beginning of history that women are "curious." What is curiosity? It is the uneasy appetite of an ill fed mind. People fully educated and fully employed are not curious. Civilized woman has inherited the mental growth of man and then has had to confine that enlarged capacity to precisely the same field of activity which was sufficient for a squaw. Women have been accused for centuries of a tendency to "gossip." What is gossip? It is small talk about other people. The tendency to this vice is a reaction from the persistent presence of our own affairs.—Success.

Alas, Too Late.

Kitty—What did you do when he threatened to kiss you?

Blanche—I didn't do anything. Why should I? I just waited until he had committed an overt act.

Kitty—And then?

Blanche—Why, then it was too late to punish him.

She Struck Too.

O'Toole—Muldoon sthruck his woife yisthidy.

McKick—Is he in jail?

O'Toole—Naw; he's in th' hospittle!—

H.B.K. Caps

For all kinds of wear—rain, sleet, snow, wind or just plain cold.

A score of styles.

Lighter than fur, warmer than fur because designed to protect exposed parts.

Cost less than fur—wear better than fur.

Leather, corduroy, cloth, flaps, neck masks, drop fronts, wool, fleece or fur lined. Stylish and durable—all prices. Sold at all dealers—see that they have this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

H. B. K. "Pinto" Shell Mitts and Gloves

A hundred styles of mitts and gloves made of "Pinto" Shell Cordovan, that new, tough, boil proof, scorch proof, tear proof, rip proof, wind and rain proof leather made from the hide of the western bronco.

Knit wrister mitts; double wrists, one inside sleeve, another outside; fleece lined, fur lined, scores of styles for all kinds of uses. None genuine unless branded.

H.B.K. BRAND

H. B. K. Moccasins

Made of "Pinto" Shell Cordovan, buckskin and oil dressed steerhide.

Sewed with unrippable thread in lock-stitched seams.

Strongest and best moccasins for all kinds of wear.

See that they are branded with this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

SOLD BY DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.

MONTREAL WINNIPEG

HOME BAKING

Success is assured if Ogilvie's Hungarian Flour is the foundation upon which it depends.

It has never yet been found lacking in any element that counts for success, and the bread or pastry it produces cannot be equalled.

The OGILVIE FLOUR MILLS Co., Ltd.

ARE YOU BUILDING? IF SO USE

EDDY'S IMPERVIOUS SHEATHING

The Best Building Paper Made.

It is very much stronger and thicker than any other (tarred or building) paper. It is impervious to wind, keeps out cold, keeps in heat, carries no smell or odor, absorbs no moisture, imparts no taste or flavor to anything with which it comes in contact. It is largely used not only for sheeting houses, but for lining cold storage buildings, refrigerators, dairies, creameries, and all places where the object is to keep an even and uniform temperature, and at the same time avoiding dampness.

Write our Agents, TEES & PERSSE, Winnipeg, for samples.

The E. B. EDDY CO., Limited, HULL.

The man whose wife makes it hot for him never speaks of her as the sunshine of his existence.

Cholera morbus, cramps and kindred complaints annually make their appearance at the same time as the hot weather, green fruit, cucumbers, melons, etc., and many persons are debarred from eating these tempting fruits, but they need not abstain if they have Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, and take a few drops in water. It cures the cramps and cholera in a remarkable manner, and is sure to check every disturbance of the bowels.

A sensible woman seldom wastes her time on a handsome man.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

A pessimist doesn't enjoy life unless he doesn't.

If all flesh is grass the vegetarian is up against a meat diet.

As a rule the man who isn't afraid to stand up for his rights imagines that he has a right to anything he wants.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

Carpenters and poker players are known by their chips.

Love and hate have good memories; only indifference forgets.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

Any man is liable to make mistakes, but it is the other fellow who blunders.

A mean man often has a powerful influence over a good woman.

Just what it was 25 years ago,

St. Jacobs Oil

is now.

The prompt, sure cure for

SORENESS AND STIFFNESS

Price, 25c. and 50c.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, OCT. 24, 1903.

ALASKAN AWARD.

The Canadian commissioners have plainly intimated that the Alaskan finding is a political rather than a judical one. A. B. Aylesworth, is one of Canada's brightest legal lights and Sir Louis Jette was for twenty years one of the ornaments of the Quebec bench, so that such an opinion emanating from these gentlemen is worthy of most profound respect, and must not be regarded as merely the outcome of disappointment.

The best informed people of Canada were prepared for the worst. The best that could happen, in their opinion, was a dead lock for they regarded the three American commissioners as merely tools of the government, men who were determined to accept their own terms or none at all. In this they acted with perfect frankness and courtesy and they have given Canadians little reason for complaint.

But if the decision is not a judical one and from the arguments presented by the Canadian commissioners it would seem that such is the case, the Chief Justice of England, Lord Alverstone, comes in for very heavy censure, inasmuch as he has sacrificed very important Canadian interests, apparently for the purpose of furthering the Imperial policy of the British government, from whom he evidently received his cue.

The damage is irremediable ; and as the great north west corner of this continent becomes opened up, when the new continental line with its branching road to the Yukon is a matter of reality, when the unknown riches of the lands thus conceded as American territory can be properly estimated, and when the untold commercial and strategic value of the hundreds of arms and inlets of sea water is fully appreciated, when, in other words, the "Alackan Award" goes into history and its importance pales into insignificance the Ashburton Treaty and other past awards in which Britain has failed to protect Canadians interests, then and not till then will the true significance of the present decision be realized.

Of course there is a slight possibility that Lord Alverstone has decided the question according to his honest convictions, in which event he is the most abused man in the Empire. It is most unfortunate that the composition of the commission was of such a nature that the responsibility for the whole matter could by any chance rest upon a single individual.

EDITORIAL NOTES

A few months ago J. H. Tillman, the Lieutenant Governor, of South Carolina, shot and killed Editor Gonzales who differed with Mr. Tillman in politics. At the trial last week the murderer acknowledged the act and the jury acquitted him. It is somewhat reassuring to know that this sample of South Carolina justice is raising a storm of disapproval through the United States.

* * *

A very fair summary of the Alaskan award has been given by Hon. Mr. Sifton, Agent for Canada. He says. "The award is substantially in favor of the United States all along the line. We, it is true, have succeeded in establishing two of our main contentions; first, the Portland canal; second, the existence of the mountain boundary line; but while the finding is in favor of our contentions upon these phases of the case the tribunal has worked out a line in such a way as to deprive us of all practical benefit. While we get Wales and Pearse Islands, of which the Americans have been in possession for some years, they are deprived of value to Canada by the fact that two islands which lie immediately outside, and command the entrance to Observatory Inlet and Port Simpson, are given to the United States. I do not profess to understand the principle upon which these islands are given away. The mountain boundary line, while adopted as contended for by Canada, is drawn so far back that the United States gets all that she has seriously contended for. As to our position on the subject of heads of inlets, it has apparently not received any consideration from the majority of the tribunal."

The Morrissey Despatch

The Boundary Creek Times with its usual presumption and lack of judgment and veracity comes out last week in a strong attack on Returning Officer Alexander in which it insinuates that that officer "fixed" things to suit his law partner in the official count of the ballots. The charge is too childish to command any attention and in refutation it is only necessary to state that the most ardent supporters of the defeated candidate do not breathe the slightest suspicions of unfairness on the part of Mr. Alexander.

The Liberals believe that the returning officer acted quite within his right in rejecting the ballots marked outside of the disc, and their appeal to the judge for a recount casts no reflections on his decision. Their appeal to the judge is based on the prerogative they believe is invested in the judge to determine the honest intention of the voter. It is clear that this power is not possessed by the returning officer and under the circumstances Mr. Alexander could give no other decision. Mr. Smith's agents in this district are wide-awake gentlemen who would be the first to note the least irregularity on the part of the returning officer and it seems a little strange, to put it mildly, that an outsider should raise such a cry when the local representatives of the party, men of intelligence and shrewdness, have no complaint to make. The provincial organizer is apparently a little sore that the district has not been won by his party, but he should not allow party feeling and ambition to overcome his good judgment and his sense of justice.

MICHEL

A number from here were down on the prairie shooting the fore part of the week.

Constable Henderson spent part of the week in Nelson attending the assizes.

Messrs. Nesbitt and McGuire have sold out at the Loop and intend going into the hotel business again up Edmonton way.

The mines were not working Monday and Tuesday on account of the slack bins being full.

Constable Kummer was in town in charge during Constable Henderson's absence.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church here gave a very successful Birthday Party Thursday evening. The program was one of the best ever gotten up in the town.

Some of the young men contemplate starting a boarding house on the west side some time in the near future when they can secure a suitable house.

The entertainment Tuesday evening given by Misses Sutherland and Patton was well attended and appreciated by all, but the lack of a piano in the hall was quite noticeable.

Sunday evening Rev. Marshall will deliver his third sermon of the series on the Prodigal Son.

Milt Kastner was in town for a day this week.

W. S. Keay spent a day or two here on business at beginning of the week.

Mr. Bird, the manager of Bank of Commerce at Fernie was down here Saturday and Monday receiving deposits at the provincial building.

Chas. Richards spent several days in town on business.

F. J. Mitchell was in town for a day or two looking after his business here.

SALVATION ARMY NEWS.

Sunday evening Ensign Lily Scott and Lieut. Margaret Lewis will conduct their farewell meeting in S. A. Barracks.

After seven months labor in Fernie, marching orders have come and it is with regret that we leave, but the kindness of the Fernie towns people in our recent Harvest Festival effort and all through the illness of the Ensign will never be forgotten. So we take this opportunity of thanking one and all.

A farewell supper will be held on Wednesday evening at 8 p.m. Coffee and cake in S. A. Barracks. Admission 15c. Everybody welcome. The officers leave on Thursday for Montana.

—Com.

Three prairie fires have occurred within a week near Pincher Creek. All three were started by sparks from passing locomotives, and one of them could easily have been extinguished at the beginning but for the apathy of a gang of section men. A stretch of 7 miles was burned on one side of the river, including several thousands of dollars worth of farm buildings, grain and hay. The Pincher Creek fire brigade did good work in putting out another fire on the north side of the track.

Fresh Fruit

AND

Vegetables

arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert
Confectioner

J. C. Hutchison

Merchant Tailor

Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings.

We Guarantee Our Work.

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.
Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

"Follow the Leader."

Is the name of our new

Exercise Books.

We lead in

School Supplies

and can furnish

Scribblers
Exercise Books
Note Books, &c

in immense variety.

Our line of READERS, etc., is complete.

Our "Blo-to-fil" Fountain Pen is a trade-winner.

Fernie Drug Store.

N. E. SUDDABY.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase eighty acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 3062, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 274 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 20 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 20 chains to place of commencement,

249-8 VALANTIN ZINI

Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to th Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works a Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E' corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 aces more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Tuttle.

Cree & Hutchison

The Largest Real Estate Agents in East Kootenay.

FOR SALE

2 Victoria Avenue Lots.
House and Lot, $1,500.
Chicken Ranch, furnished House and 100 hens, $250.
House and Lot $2,000.
House and Lot $2,500.
Two cottages $800.
Three Timber Limits.
Six coal claims.

We can sell you reeal estate no matter where it is.

Don't forget that insurance—Do it now.

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.

By the Day, Week, or Month.
Everything first-class.

WM. R. McDOUGALL.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

We are always trying to cater to the wants of our customers, and we honestly think that we have succeeded in getting something in the way of fancy biscuits which they will appreciate.

We have secured the exclusive control of the celebrated W. & R. Jacob & Co's biscuits.

These biscuits are mannfactured in Dublin, Ireland, by the most modern and improved machinery, out of the very best materials and are imported by us direct from the factory, and as they come packed in air tight packages our customers are assured of getting them nice and fresh. Although the price may range a little higher than the ordinary, everyday fancy biscuit, we think that the quality more than compensates for the extra price, and upon trial we feel assured that the purchaser will bear us out in this. We have 51 different kinds to select from and can give you anything from Oatcakes and Shortcakes to Iced Christmas Cakes, and would like the ladies of Fernie to give these goods a trial.

Crow's Nest Trading Co'y

We are sole agents for

The Scottish Rubber Co'y

Of Montreal,

The acknowledged leaders in the manufacture of Ladies' Coats and Waterproof Clothing. We have just opened our fall shipment of these goods and we are showing them this week and making a great many sales as a result of their splendid value and beautiful appearance. Don't forget we control the Scottish Rubber Co's goods, also Royal Clothing.

CHAS. RICHARDS

Boilers and Engines.

ALSO

SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.
Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.

602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Ft. Steele, B. C. for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum upon the following described lands: beginning at a post marked D. Adams' south-west corner post which is situated along Fording river and four miles north of the northern boundary of Lot 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district B. C. and which corner post is near the south-east corner post of F. T. Griffin's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 814, thence from said south west corner of D. Adams east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

249-4 D. ADAMS

Located by W. Bovin, Sept, 18th, 1903.

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

The Public Know

The Public know a good thing when they get it. When they are in the habit of having their meat done up to perfection you cannot pull them away with a forty-foot logging chain. That is why our trade is continually increasing.

We make a study of our trade and have attained perfection.

Our goods are the best, and our prices are right. Call and be convinced.

Calgary Cattle Co.

LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY

MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

See our fine coal heaters for $7. B. C. Furniture Co. 1t

Miss Pennell, of Michigan, is visiting at Mrs. L. M. Proctor's.

We buy and exchange new and second hand furniture. B. C. Furniture Co. 4t

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have ou tried them?

Miss Leith left on Thursday for Vancouver where she will in future reside with her brother.

Mrs. Proctor and Miss Dorothy returned on Monday from a visit with friends at Ogdensburg, N.Y.

At the Miners' Union meeting this evening several representatives from the national executive of the U. M W. of A. will be present.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

The hockey season is approaching and the boys need funds, therefore buy a ticket for the Firth-Eaton concert. Plan at Liphardt's. Seats 50 and 75 cents.

The services in the Methodist church will be conducted by the pastor. "The Apex of the Mighty Prayer" will be the subject in the morning, and in the evening "The urgent invitations."

W. S. Keay who has been acting as deputy collector of Inland Revenue has received notice of his permanent appointment to that office. His salary is considerably augmented in consequence.

Frank D. Alexander writes us that he completed his oven contract at Michel on Wednesday and that the Coal Company management has expressed its satisfaction with the manner in which it has been done.

On Wednesday evening Rev. John Robson went to Michel and united in marriage John Ranter and Augusta Vogel two popular young Germans of that town. A small company of relatives were present as witnesses.

Night School

Learn to write a good hand. Learn Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. Our methods are up-to-date. Class room 1st door west of Methodist church. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

R. L. Henderson, constable at Michel, returned on Wednesday evening from Nelson where he was attending the assizes. He reported a heavy docket of civil cases which might extend into next week. He took two prisoners up from Fernie to the Nelson jail.

A new lumber company has been formed at Mayook siding just below Fort Steele junction. James Ryan is president and C. D. McNab is general manager. The mill will be ready for operation within a couple of weeks and the men are already cutting logs.

Messrs. T. H. Whelan and A. Johnson have purchased Joyce Bros'. interests in the Muskoka Hotel. John Balko retains his interest. The transfer was made this week and some improvements are now being made in the house. See the new advt. in another column.

The Kootenay Mail has this to say of the Firth-Eaton Co. which shows here Tuesday night. "The Firth-Eaton combination played at the opera house Thursday to a good audience. The entertainment was an excellent one, the singing of the 'White Star of Heaven' by W. F Firth being a splendid number."

The hockey club is a worthy institution which appeals to everybody for support. They now offer the people of Fernie the means of assisting without resorting to charity. Those who attend the Firth-Eaton concert will be more than repaid in mirth and music and at the same time they will be giving a helping hand to the king of sports.

The Ladies' Aid of the Baptist Church wish to extend their thanks to all who so kindly assisted them at the sale, not excepting the gentlemen who, with their musical talent and liberal purse assisted most generously. To all those who donated articles of fancy work, cakes, etc., the ladies also feel very grateful and are pleased to announce that they realized the handsome sum of $140.

Mr. W. Blakemore, Mrs. Blakemore and their three daughters arrived in Fernie from Montreal on Monday morning and left the following morning for Nelson where they have taken a house and make their home for the winter. Mr. Blakemore's business during the winter will require his presence in the west very frequently during the next few months which fact largely determined this step.

Birthday Social.

The Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church held a birth-day social in the church on Thursday evening. The building was well filled and the handsome sum of $85.00 was realized. It is needless to add that some, contrary to the usual custom, represented their ages to be much greater that they really were. A short but very interesting program of music was provided after which ample refreshments were served. A birth-day cake of huge dimensions and delicious flavor adorned a table on the platform and its maker Mrs. S. Graham, was called upon to cut it. The usual interest was centred in locating the ring, the match the button and the thimble.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

Christ Church is receiving a much needed coat of paint.

Forty electric lights are being installed in the Roman Catholic Church.

W. &. R. Jacob & Co's. biscuits are the best. Crows Nest Trading Co.

Mrs. A. G. Trelle and little girl, of Blairmore, are visiting at Mrs. R. E. Winnett.

Mrs. Stanley, of London, Ont., sister of the late R. J. Swanson, is visiting Mrs Whimster.

51 different kinds of biscuits to choose from. Give them a trial. Crows Nest Trading Co. x

C. Richards shipped a carload of vegetables and another of groceries to Michel this week.

The Crows Nest Trading Co. have secured the exclusive control of W. & R. Jacob & Co's. biscuits. See their advt.

ROOMS TO LET.—Comfortable rooms over Sheppard & Elliott's hardware store. Apply F. J. Watson. x

J. S. Volume, of Lethbridge, arrived this week to accept the position as bookkeeper in C. Richards & Co.'s store.

Ask for British Lion or Mainland cigars For sale at all first-class places. Union made. Manufactured by Wm. Lietjan Vancouver. x

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

The Maridor-Goulding Co. which played in Princess Hall last Friday and which advertised a show for the following evening were obliged to cancel the latter engagement. as only abont a dozen people purchased tickets.

E. Graham, C.P.R. Inspector of Agencies, was in town on Tuesday on his way west on an official trip. Mr. Graham held the position of C.P.R agent at this point several years ago and he has many friends in the town. His present duties take him all over the system and his head quarters are at Montreal.

The Cranbrook Herald is the authority for the statement that building operation to the value of $50,000 has taken place in that town during the past six months. This amount does not include the improvements that have been made by the mills that are adjacent to the town, which amounts to $35,000.

The inquest into the death of F. J. Scott was concluded last Saturday before Coroner Forbes. Inspector Dick was present and his evidence as well as that of the miners called went to show that the timbering was of the best and that the accident was not due to any person's fault. A verdict in accordance was rendered by the jury.

Grand Torch Light Parade

and free entertainment will be given under the auspices of Fernie L.O.L. No. 1713, of Fernie.

Princess Hall

November 5

EVFRYBODY WELCOME-COME ONE, COME ALL.

Ball After Entertainment.

$1.50 per couple.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

The Muskoka Hotel,

....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

T. H. Whalen, Manager.

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

Something Worth Knowing

All Goods Purchased from

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

carry a guarantee of entire satisfaction to our customers or money refunded———We purchase from the best markets in the world, always in Car Lots for Spot Cash, and therefore can sell you better goods for less money than any other House———No occasion to send away for any goods, as all our departments are brim full of this season's goods, fresh, new, and up-to-date.

Our Grocery Department

has made big strides lately and has been successful in reaching the top ———It is our intention that with Quality and Price in your favor, and courteous treatment on our part, to merit your patronage which we assure you will always be appreciated.

S P E C I A L

AS A LEADER we will sell for a few days:

1 Large Tin Fresh or Smoked Halibut	10c.
1 Large Tin Baking Powder	10c.
1 pound Tin Special Blend Mocha and Java Coffee	40c.
8 Tins Condensed Cream	$1.00

Oranges, Lemons, Plums, Celery and all kinds of Garden Vegetables in Stock Get our prices for your winter supply.

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

Departmental Stores———Fernie—Michel — Morrissey — Coal Creek

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchans

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

"Herbageum"

For Horses, Cattle & Poultry.

"International Stock Food."

Three Feeds for One Cent.

A. W. Bleasdell

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

A. S. EMPY'S ...Restaurant

Wardner, B. C.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HABBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Habberton

But all this had nothing to do with love. As was natural to suppose, and as we afterward learned, each of the girls was already engaged to some good or bad fellow in the Confederate army. Their hearts were already disposed of, so they could laugh at all would be suitors and break hearts cheerily with the sublime consolation that they were weakening the enemy in one of his most vulnerable points. Their manner was as proper as that of any northern girl, as the more impudent of our fellows discovered when they proposed a kiss at the door. The experience of one of these fellows was quite interesting to every one but himself. He was so handsome that he had made great havoc among feminine hearts at home and had come to regard himself as irresistible. He asked a little Virginian, pretty enough to break the heart of an anchorite, for a kiss, but she replied:

"Only Confederate lips can ever touch mine."

One day when this man had been on post the relief found his place vacant, although there was no sign of bloodshed or a struggle. As soon as this was reported at the reserve a squad was sent out to look for him.

Inquiry was made at every house on the road, and at one we learned from the heartbreaking beauty just referred to that he had stopped there two hours before and announced that he was deserting to the Confederacy.

Almost half a year afterward the rear guard of one of our scouting parties was harassed for the last two miles of its return by shots from a small mounted force, which scattered and took to the woods whenever we turned and attempted to charge them. Our commander arranged a strong ambuscade of the advance, with a view to capturing the entire party, and this hidden force suddenly surrounded them when they were directly in front of the house in which the little beauty lived. There were only a dozen of the enemy, and they quickly saw that their game was up. As we approached them they recognized the inevitable and ceased fighting, but one man in gray suddenly drew a revolver, fired three shots in rapid succession at the house, then pointed the weapon at his own breast, fired and fell from his saddle. We were upon them in a moment, and under the cap of the man upon the ground we saw the face of our handsome deserter. He gasped before he died that he was as loyal as ever. He had deserted in a wild desire to kiss that girl. Now, seeing her at the window, he had fired to kill her and hoped he had succeeded. Then he had killed himself rather than be shot as a traitor.

He had missed the pretty mark he had aimed at. The girl was unhurt except from a severe scare. We had lost more than 20 men most unaccountably from that post, all of them violent admirers of that very girl. Somehow her father's house was burned to the ground that very night. I hope the pretty girl escaped, but we were told she did not. Not one of us attended the funeral. It would be hard to tell how many lives on both sides were lost thereafter as the result of those two deaths.

"War is hell!"

CHAPTER XVI.

SOME NEW NEIGHBORS.

ONE morning there came to a picket station where I had charge of six men an old colored woman, bent, twisted, perspiring and wild eyed, who exclaimed, "Good Lawd, boss, dey's two strings of reb sojers ober yander. Dey's so long dat you can't see neither end of 'em."

The old woman seemed so earnest that I was half inclined to believe her, so I asked, "Where are they, aunty? How far?"

"Jes' beyan' de woods, boss. Dey's jes' millions of 'em."

I knew the road for miles beyond the station. It was so straight that a man could see a long way ahead. I had a horse fast enough to get me out of trouble should I suddenly find myself within rifle range, and he needed exercise, so I mounted and galloped out to reconnoiter. I passed the woods without seeing any one, and from a little hill I could see that there was no one in the fields beyond, so I returned to the station and rebuked the old woman for lying.

"It's true as de Bible, boss, whut I tole you," she replied earnestly. "Dey dun tuck my two shotes 'long wid 'em. You t'ink dese ole eyes cayn't see? Yas'r, dey kin dat."

As it was about time for us to be relieved I told her to go back home and take another look and return.

A few hours after we reached camp we were startled by the bugle blowing "boots and saddles," the most peremptory alarm known in the cavalry service. As we hurried to the stables we heard the "long roll" sounded in the infantry camp near us. By the time the "assembly" sounded, the word had gone through camp that the outposts on every road, on a circuit of ten or more miles, had been driven in or captured.

As we rode out at a trot we could see infantry moving into the works on every side, light batteries taking positions behind breastworks and men at the heavy guns in the forts, while toward a series of roads different from that which we were approaching another cavalry regiment was moving. In the town we divided so as to reconnoiter three roads to find out who and where the enemy was. It did not take long to get the desired information. A Confederate gun or two on each road sent a shell or two to let us know where they were, and a dash of skirmishers at the gallop yielded two or three prisoners, who told us that the troops who had caused the alarm were two corps of Lee's army.

Well, we had gained the information for which we had gone in search, but it didn't please us at all. It foreshadowed a change of habit for us. Up to that time we had been able with a single battalion to send flying back to their camps any force that had approached the town. We could scarcely expect to do so with the newcomers. A single Confederate corps numbered more than 20,000 men; the entire force at our post numbered less than 8,000. There was nothing to joke about. Men spoke to one another about the situation and reasoned about it, but in sentences no longer or more sensible than those above. Every one seemed laboring under a sense of personal affront—affront which he was unable to resent.

We went to camp, and the enemy went to fortifying, as we soon afterward learned when on one reconnoissance or another we stumbled upon forts and breastworks where once had been clear roadway and fields. Weeks afterward we learned from Richmond papers that Longstreet had been in our neighborhood for forage and food for Lee's army. Had General Longstreet explained his purpose to us when he came, a great lot of unprofitable worry might have been spared. We might even have complimented him on the wisdom displayed in the selection of the territory, for the country round about us was fertile and well tilled and had not been laid under contribution by soldiers, except perhaps to the extent of a few sweet potatoes, chickens and turkeys. By driving in our pickets Longstreet got possession of two railroad lines which gave him free communication, barring the few miles within our lines, between Richmond and North Carolina.

But none of these things did General Longstreet explain to us. Whatever may have been his own intentions as he meandered from farm to farm for corn and bacon, his men acted as if they would like to draw forage from the commissary department of our own post and get anything else the town might hold, ourselves included. If a man doesn't want peaceable intentions misconstrued, he shouldn't intrust them to thousands of fellows with guns in their hands. Such men always get things mixed.

Of one thing we felt assured—the enemy could not cut our line of retreat, which also was the route of our supplies, for this was over causeways through the Dismal Swamp, a dark, deep, but friendly ally, which could have swallowed an army like Longstreet's without more than whetting its own appetite. The swamp was not exactly mud, but almost any part of it could be turned to mud in a few minutes by the tramp of a few men. And such mud! A rich, black ooze of decayed vegetation, into which, except in midsummer or midwinter, the foot would sink as into moss, while right under the surface was a tangle of roots which never tired of playing bootjack for the pedestrian. To have one's boot pulled off without warning is amazing. To afterward drag the same boot from a net full of ooze into which the other boot is slowly sinking is still worse. One of Longstreet's men got through the swamp to the railroad track and captured one of our pickets, but he admitted that he was sorry he did it. He had trouble enough in returning to wish he had only himself to think of. To get enough men through to destroy our railroad track would have been impossible.

So we could run away if the post became too hot to hold us, and we couldn't be starved. After thinking this over the situation didn't seem so bad as at first. We wished that General Lee had sent us cavalry instead of infantry to fight. We were not accustomed to meeting infantry and might make mistakes. Still, there was a chance of improving our military education under so able a tutor as Longstreet.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Enough.

A New York man says that one of the most pathetic remarks he ever heard was made by a youngster who belonged on New York's east side. The little fellow was taken to Coney Island on an outing conducted by a charitable organization. He went down on the beach and stood for several minutes watching the waves rolling in. As far as he could see there was nothing but water, and the expanse of waves and whitecaps fascinated him. Heaving a deep sigh, the little fellow remarked, "Well, this is the first time I ever saw enough of anything."

Birds Flee Disease.

Professor Mascart has reported to the Paris Academy of Sciences that his observations proved the truth of the statement made by ancient writers that birds flee from cities and countries that are threatened with pestilence. He has found that birds that live in large cities, particularly sparrows and swallows, fly away when serious epidemics begin.

The Idler.

An idle man never encourages good citizenship or progress or peace or decency. Idle men hanging around a town are always a pest. Mischief is always easy to stir up, and every useful, progressive man finds his efforts handicapped by loafers.

Nova Scotia leads the world in the quality of its wool. The hardy climate—salty sea breezes—rich grazing—all impart a strength and elasticity, a peculiar texture and velvety softness — that is unmatchable anywhere else.

Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear

is the only Underwear in the world that is made of Nova Scotia wool—cleaned, treated, combed and woven in our own mills—has the Stanfield guarantee that it is absolutely unshrinkable. A perfect fit for every man.

All good dealers sell it.

OXFORD ECONOMY STEEL RANGES.

The bodies of these Ranges are made of the best quality range steel, all outside exposed parts are interlined with heavy sheet asbestos. They have cast iron extensions with white Enamelled Reservoirs, nickel plated drop Tea Pot Stands, Nickeled Towel Rods. They are made to burn any kind of coal, can be changed in two minutes to burn 26 inch wood. Highly nickeled throughout.

For full particulars send for illustrated booklet.

NOTE:—The following prices for these high grade ranges as illustrated, fully guaranteed.

No 9-18 oven 18x21x14 in. $50.00
No 9-20 oven 20x21x14 in. $52.50
(F. O. B., Winnipeg.)

Ask your dealer for them or write to us.

The GURNEY FOUNDRY Co.,
153 - 155 Lombard St., Winnipeg.

The Fountain of Youth.

Like pretty much everything else, this matter of having children has two sides to it. As a great many children are failures and as children are the joint product of heredity and environment, both elements preponderantly under parental control, it would seem more sensible to say that there were too many people undertaking parental responsibility instead of too few. And, further, parenthood has many cares and sorrows and exasperations. Still, when all is said, how many persons who have found themselves childless at forty-five have been able honestly to congratulate themselves?

Children have a use as an assurance against destitution and loneliness in old age. They are satisfactory to the vanity for family immortality. But more than these and all other advantages is the advantage of prolonging one's life. Growing children will keep any proper man or woman young in spirit and in mind, will retard the development of that sour yet complacent cynicism which curses old age both for oneself and for those about one.

The man or the woman—again, the right sort of man or woman—who has children drinks every day a deep draft at the fountain of eternal youth.

Characteristic to the Last.

Squibbs—Cræsus, the miser, was drowned last evening.

Hibbs—How did it happen?

Squibbs—He fell from a steamboat. I reached down and asked him to give me his hand. He said he had nothing to give and sank.

A Fiery Manager.

"I didn't see Ranter play Hamlet, but I understand that he threw a great deal of fire into the part."

"I don't know about that, but the manager did. Ranter is back in vaudeville."

His Plea.

"Have you started on that job of work?"

"No, suh," answered Mr. Erastus Pinkley. "I specks I might as well put it off till nex' week."

"Why, this is only Monday."

"I knows it, but de mawnin's half gone, an' den it's only a few days till Friday, an' dat's bad luck, an' I dasn' work on Sunday, so I reckons I better wait till I kin git a clean staht."—Washington Star.

More Active.

Hicks—Oh, I never even notice him any more.

Wicks—Is that so?

Hicks—Yes; nothing disgusts me more that a deadbeat.

Wicks—Oh, they don't bother me. It's the live ones that make me tired.—Philadelphia Ledger.

HEARING OF FISH.

Harvard Zoologist Shows That New England Killifish Have Ears.

As long ago as the seventeenth century it was noticed that fish have what appeared to be ears, and from that time till well in the nineteenth century nobody doubted that the fish were able to hear with them. Then a European scientist, experimenting with goldfish, surprised his fellows by declaring that the goldfish of his experiments had proved that they responded to sound by "feeling" rather than by "hearing," as human beings ordinarily understand it, and an English scientist discovered that several kinds of fish, evidently disturbed by any land concussion that vibrated the water, were apparently deaf to inner sounds that didn't vibrate it. From that time the hearing of fishes has been one of the mooted questions of science.

One of the latest investigators, Professor G. H. Parker of Harvard university, has lately shown by yet another series of experiments that a certain fish, the little New England minnow, or "killifish," does hear, and the result of the experiments so far conducted seems to show that some fish hear sounds as men and women do, while others are genuinely deaf, living in perpetual silence and "feeling" a sound impression simply as the vibration which it produces in water is communicated to their sensitive bodies.

Many fish, however, although they do not use their ears to hear with, find them of the greatest value in maintaining their equilibrium in the water. Without their ears these fishes would be no more able to swim straight than an intoxicated man is able to keep a direct path on his way home from the club. The ears, in other words, are an important part in the nervous mechanism by which the fish keeps a straight and upright course through its native element.

Hearing itself, as has been pointed out in the long series of scientific investigations that have been centered about fishes' ears during the past decade, was probably the last of the five senses to be developed. Frogs, toads and the like, for example, have a very deficient sense of hearing as compared with birds and particularly with dogs and cats. The natural conclusion is therefore that the more highly developed fish have a distinct sense of hearing, as shown by Professor Parker's experiments, while others less developed are entirely deaf. Izaac Walton, who knew so much about fish from the angler's point of view, may in the light of present knowledge have been giving moral rather than practical advice when he warned fishermen "to be patient and forbear swearing."

Only One Gas Yet to Be Solidified.

Professors Moissan and Dewar have lately succeeded with the aid of liquid hydrogen in solidifying fluorin, and they remark that helium is now the only gas which has not been obtained in the solid state. An interesting result of the experiments was the demonstration that, although chemical activity tends to cease at extremely low temperatures, yet fluorin, which is known to possess more powerful affinities than any other element, is capable, even when reduced to the solid state, of combining with liquid hydrogen. Such a combination, accompanied with a violent explosion, was produced when the solid fluorin and liquid hydrogen were kept at a temperature of 252.5 degrees C., equivalent to 422.5 degrees F. below zero.

Patti's Generosity.

Though by no means lacking in business instincts, Mme. Adelina Patti is not at all niggardly when it comes to spending money. That she is as big hearted as she is famous was demonstrated by her courtesy to a fellow artist in San Francisco, Mme. Inez Fabbri-Muller, who at one time was in very straitened circumstances, with a mortgage about to be foreclosed on her home. Mme. Patti heard about the troubles that beset her old comrade of the operatic stage and at once arranged for a benefit. For some reason or other it was impossible to prepare for such an event, and the famous prima donna sent Mme. Fabbri-Muller a check for an amount more than sufficient to cancel the mortgage that shadowed her home.—Exchange.

Wonders of Modoc County.

Probably no other part of the world, excepting perhaps the Yellowstone park, contains so many natural curiosities as Modoc county, N. M. The first, from a historical point of view, is the famous lava beds, scene of the Modoc war, a country of rocks so full of caves that lakes and rivers are swallowed up, leaving nothing but a faint murmur to show their course through the bowels of the earth. In many of the caverns an army of men could hide, and in some places the intense heat of the rocks is evidence that internal fires are raging. In all parts of the county can be found mammoth hot springs belching forth water strongly impregnated with minerals, and often close by will be caves of the purest ice.

Rostand Objects.

Edmond Rostand is just now enjoying the rare experience of protesting against himself and of proceeding by way of injunction to his own repression. In 1888 he offered to the Cluny theater a piece entitled "The Red Glove," which was accepted on condition that M. Marot should revise it, which he did, and it was then played seventeen times. Since then "The Red Glove" has been shelved, but things have changed somewhat with M. Rostand, and the manager of the Cluny despite the protest of the dramatist proclaims his purpose again to produce it, with M. Marot billed as joint author. M. Rostand has protested and asks for an injunction.

A sack of flour dumped into the empty flour-barrel of a hungry man's home is worth more to that man than all the tracts and flowery sermons in Christendom.

The man who wears the best clothes may have the most creditors.

It isn't always the most palatable medicine that cures the quickest.

If you are in hard luck don't weep, cheer up and wait t'll the clouds roll by and you will get a glance at the silver lining.

If a man has plenty of nerve he will soon get coin.

A baby isn't necessarily afflicted with jaundice because it's a little yeller.

DREADFUL CASE OF ITCHING PILES

Doctor Wanted to Burn the Skin With a Red Hot Iron—Patient Was Cured by DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

Mr. Alex. McLean, Tarbot Vale, N. S., writes:—"For two years I worked as sectionman on the Dominion Coal Company's Railroad between Sydney and Glace Bay, N.S., and during that time was exposed to all sorts of weather. Gradually my health failed, and I became a victim of protruding piles. At first I did not know what my ailment was, but consulted a doctor, and though he treated me for piles, they only grew worse.

"I was forced to give up work and return to my home. My suffering could scarcely be described. I could not walk or lie down, but while the rest of the family was sleeping I would be groaning and aching from the excruciating pains.

"Again I decided to consult a doctor. This one stripped me, and said the piles would have to be burned with a red-hot iron. I shivered at the thought of burning the flesh, and told him I could not think of undergoing such an operation, so he gave me some salve, for which he charged me two dollars, but it did not do me any good.

"I was in a desperate condition, and had about given up hope of ever being freed from this dreadful suffering when a friend told me about Dr. Chase's Ointment. He said he had seen so many cases that it had cured that he would pay for it himself if it failed to cure.

"My experience with Dr. Chase's Ointment is that the first application did me more good than did the two doctors, and it has made me as well and as free from piles as any man. Since being cured I worked during the winter in the lumber woods and experienced no return of my old trouble. I am not putting it too strong when I say that Dr. Chase's Ointment was worth $100 a box to me. You are free to use my testimony for the benefit of others, as I feel it my duty to make known this great ointment."

Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers; or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box of his remedies.

THE FIERY DRAGON.

Ancient and Mediæval Descriptions of the Monster.

Dragons were important animals in ancient and mediæval natural history. Until comparatively recent time no scientist ever thought of questioning the existence of this most formidable of beasts. The annals of Winchester for 1177 gravely state that "in this year dragons were seen of many in England." Gesner, professor of natural history at Zurich, gives a detailed description of the dragon, while Aldrovandus, in his "History of Serpents and Dragons," published in 1640, devotes fifty pages to the monster. A good specimen of a dragon would seem to have been a beast about the size of a sheep, incased in a coat of scales which shone like silver. Its back was serrated like a saw. It possessed a long tail, a pair of batlike wings, four heavily clawed feet and a wolvine head, the jaws of which were armed with very formidable teeth. The tongue was barbed with fire, and fury issued from the monster's mouth, and the head bore a crest. Dragons were the most wicked and vindictive of creatures. They seem always to have been in a towering rage and spent the greater portion of their time in rushing up and down the earth destroying everything that came in their path. The origin of dragons was a disputed point among mediæval naturalists. Some maintained that these animals were generated by the heat of India; others were of opinion that the volcanoes of Ethiopia used to belch forth the monsters. One scientist, John Leo by name, declared the dragon to be a hybrid, a cross between an eagle and a wolf.

Temperature and Atmosphere.

That a body can acquire during the night a different temperature from that of the surrounding atmosphere has been demonstrated by an English physicist. If a thermometer is taken from the window, wrapped in cotton and placed on the ground its mercury will descend seven or eight degrees. Vegetables similarly situated, and being bad conductors, may freeze at a time when the thermometer does not mark the freezing point—proof that the cold experienced by the plant may be entirely different from the temperature of the surrounding air. This low temperature of plants, however, only occurs when the night is clear, since at this time the plant sheds its heat throughout space and becomes chilled, whereas if the night is cloudy the phenomenon does not occur. This gives rise to the popular superstition that plants and buds are frozen by moonlight.

Curious Case of Mind Reading.

A very curious case is related in the Annales Psychiques. A child of seven years, in good health, lively and robust, belonging to equally healthy parents, showed a strange facility in learning all that his mother taught him. He recited the whole multiplication table at the first trial, solved instantly complicated problems and made not a single mistake in his first spelling lesson. It was soon realized that the child did not calculate by himself and did not spell of his own accord. He was reading his mother's mind, and he did this even when his eyes were shut and his back turned, provided only that she were near him. One day she had the idea of interposing a screen between her and the child, and there was no more calculation, no more spelling. The screen was sufficient to prevent the child from reading the mother's thoughts.

A Moving Sermon.

"I once had a parishioner who was a miser," said an English clergyman. "For this man's benefit I preached one Sunday a strong sermon on the necessity of charity, of philanthropy—a sermon on the duty and the joy of giving. The miser, at whom I gazed often, seemed impressed.

"Next day I met him on the street.

"'Well, John,' I said, 'what do you think of yesterday's sermon?'

"'It moved me deeply, sir,' he answered. 'It brought home to me so strongly the necessity of giving alms that honestly, sir, I've a great mind to turn beggar.'"

Light and Heat and Eyes.

Looking into the fire is very injurious to the eye, particularly a coal fire. The stimulus of light and heat united soon destroys the eyes. Looking at molten iron will soon destroy the sight. Reading in the twilight is injurious to the eyes, as they are obliged to make great exertion. Reading or sewing with a side light injures the eyes, as both eyes should be exposed to an equal force of light. Those who wish to preserve their sight should preserve their general health by correct habits of living and give their eyes just work enough, with a due degree of light.

Inconsiderate Fellow.

"He said he'd die if I didn't marry him."

"And still you refused?"

"Yes. I wished to find out before promising whether he really loved me as much as that or not. Oh, Harriet, I'm p-p-perfectly miserable! He seems to be wretchedly healthy, and I d-do love him so much!"

Debts In China.

In China one can always borrow money on the strength of having a son, but nobody would advance him a cent if he had a dozen daughters. The former is responsible for the debts of his father for three generations. The latter is only responsible for the debts of her own husband.

Anxious to Assist.

Doctor—It may be, madam, that there is something wrong with your vocal cords. I will—

Husband of Mrs. Vick-Senn (hastily interrupting)—You will find nothing the matter there, doctor. I am almost sure the trouble is with her liver.—Chicago Tribune.

Women are more forgiving than men because men need more forgiving.

About the only establishment that makes money without advertising is the mint.

A good many spirit manifestations come after a visit to the bar.

A sensible woman seldom wastes her time on a handsome man.

Ayer's

Take cold easily? Throat tender? Lungs weak? Any relatives have consumption? Then a cough means a great deal to you. Follow your doctor's advice and take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It heals, strengthens, prevents.

Cherry Pectoral

"For 40 years I have depended on Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for coughs and colds. I know it greatly strengthens weak lungs."
MRS. P. A. ROBINSON, Saline, Mich.

25c., 50c., $1.00. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Weak Lungs

Ayer's Pills increase the activity of the liver, and thus aid recovery.

DIES OF LOCK-JAW

A WINNIPEG GIRL DIES IN A ST. PAUL HOSPITAL.

Miss Isabel Slater, aged 25, Succumbs to the Disease. Very Little Known of Her at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Miss Isabel Slater, Winnipeg, aged 25, is dead at St. Joseph's hospital, in St. Paul, of lockjaw. The disease followed a slight injury of her right foot. Dr. Ida Pearson, who conducts a woman's hospital, in Harrison St., signed the death certificate. "I know very little of the girl," said the woman doctor. "Last fall she came to my hospital and spent some time there. About two weeks ago she came again and spent a week with me. Then she left. Thursday she came into my office to be treated for neuralgia. I sent her out to the hospital, and Friday she was so much worse that I diagnosed the soreness in her jaws as tetanus. She told me she had stepped on a pin. She didn't say where. She was taken to St. Joseph's hospital, and died there."

Trainman's Leg Broken.

Monday evening shortly before six o'clock, A. Getchell, a C.P.R. trainman, broke his leg while working on a yard train. Getchell was running from a switch to the engine, and catching his foot in a frog fell, breaking his leg below the knee.

Shot in His Office.

Monday morning William S. Russell, manager for James Coristine & Co., Montreal, shot himself through the head with a revolver shortly after arriving at the office. He now lies at the hospital in a dying condition. The motive for the deed is not known.

NEWS NOTES

Short Items Culled From Telegraphic Dispatches.

Russian troops leave for Korea.

The Alaska commissioners have commenced their private sittings.

Serious flames broke out in a Vancouver island colliery.

James Beck, a wealthy farmer of Fiddicks Junction, B.C., killed himself.

The cost of the 1901 census was discussed in the House of Commons, Ottawa.

The remains of the late Rev. J. A. McLachlan were laid to rest at Beren's River.

W. S. Russell, manager of a Montreal wholesale house, shot himself in his house.

Seven Indians were killed in a drunken row on the Blackfeet reserve in Montana.

Farmers around Middlechurch, Man., have suffered heavy losses by prairie fires.

The new Port Arthur steamer Neebing has arrived at Fort William with steel rails.

D. Turner, a Winnipeg lacrosse player, met with a shocking accident at Port Arthur.

Rules for the Inter-university debate, Manitoba vs. North Dakota, have been arranged.

The expected session of the lumber combine commission in Winnipeg did not materialize.

John Williams, of Minnesota, was killed while adjusting a belt on a separator near Mather, Man.

The amount of wheat in store at Canadian terminal elevators, Lake Superior, was 1,689,000 bushels.

Graduation exercises at St. Mary's Academy, Winnipeg, were conducted by Archbishop Langevin.

The Children's Aid Society, Winnipeg, is moving to compel all children in the city to attend school.

The question of holding a Dominion Exhibition in Winnipeg in 1905, is discussed by Manager Heubach.

A Philadelphia man has sent a unique proposal to the C.P.R. whereby he may become a bonanza wheat grower.

Hon. Jos. Chamberlain will rest for a fortnight; four interesting speeches were made in Britain on the fiscal campaign.

Winnipeg Hebrews have discussed the proposal of the British authorities to establish a Jewish colony in South Africa.

Mr. John Redmond has issued a warning to Irish landlords in connection with the anticipated refusal of owners to sell land in Connaught.

Winnipeg police confiscate alleged gambling devices.

Bell Telephone Company contemplate extension of Winnipeg plant.

The Dowd Milling Company will establish branches in the west.

Lieut.-Col. Macdonald, Northwest rebellion veteran, is dead.

Austin Chamberlain announces that English parliament will not dissolve until war reforms are inaugurated.

Ft. William Man's Escape.

J. P. St. Louis, a Fort William brass finisher, was found about eight o'clock Monday morning in an unconscious state as the result of blowing out the gas in his room at the power house, corner of King street and Spadina avenue, Toronto. He will recover.

At Beamsville fair, E. Fry, an aged and wealthy farmer from the south, was robbed of a gold watch and $200 by pickpockets.

SHE WAS KILLED

A DRUNKEN MAN'S AWFUL CRIME.

Beats the Child on the Head With a Bottle.—Revenge the Cause—He Admits His Guilt.

Napoleon Fouquette, a well-to-do farmer of Compton county, Que., is held on a charge of murdering his two-year-old step-daughter. Evidence produced at the coroner's inquest tends to show that the prisoner, while intoxicated, beat the child with a bottle in revenge because her mother had taken another of the children to the hospital at Sherbrooke, after he had been ill treated by his step father. The prisoner admits his guilt.

A CANADIAN CABLE.

An All-British Cable Between Canada and England.

It has been settled that a conference of the contracting parties of the all-British Pacific cable, will be held shortly in London. The composition of the tribunal has not yet been definitely settled, but there will be a representative of each colony concerned, and, of course, the colonial secretary. At this conference, it is probably that the question of an all-British cable between Canada and England will be discussed.

Wheat Delivery.

For the first time this season, the wheat delivery at Fort William is beginning to assume large proportions. There was a general lull for several weeks, owing no doubt to the delay in threshing operations in the west. The hauling capacity of the trains is being greatly increased by the reducing of the grades between there and Winnipeg. In connection with the lake shipping this season it is pleasing to note that all the grain that has gone from Fort William so far, has been shipped in Canadian bottoms, and except, perhaps, for a small percentage of wheat just before navigation closes, American boats will not be required for the grain trade.

THE BULGARIAN CAPITAL.

Sofia a Bright and Bustling Town That Suggests Paris.

A wide, smiling valley, and, far beyond, the steep incline of an endless mountain range, the Vitosch chain, still snow capped when we saw it against a bright blue sky, while nearer the earth was clad with a cloak of the softest verdure, a lush green seeming to round the contours of outline here and there. Such, says The Pall Mall Gazette, was the first impression of the panoramic setting within which we found enshrined Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, from which source many of the reports of the recent massacres in Macedonia reach the public. It is as bright and modern looking a little town as, say, Baden-Baden, and indeed more reminiscent of some small German residenz stadt in style and structure than anything one generally associates mentally with the near east. Two days are, of course, not much in which to judge of any place. It is merely the obvious then that strikes the visitor's eye and is retained upon his mental retina, and therefore to our mind the name of Sofia is lastingly associated with sundry broad and shady streets, boulevards beneath which we watched with untiring interest the constant flow of traffic, the coming and going of soldiers, mondaines, peasantry and curious semi-Oriental figures.

It was late spring, and the sun's heat had something of the coming summer in it, yet these stolid, slowly moving figures wore their fur caps and long skin coats, of which the sheep's wool turned inward forms the lining. Most of them led their oxen, harnessed to cumbrous carts, while again near these the smart electric trams whizzed by—a strange and incongruous mixture of the east and west. The most picturesque element in the street traffic was the peasant women, many of the girls being quite beautiful, their garments gay with red and blue embroideries and their persons loaded with barbaric looking silver ornaments, silver coins even glinting here and there amid their long, thick raven plaits. Another touch of color was given to this scene by the numerous different uniforms which distinguished le militaire, the general appearance of which reminds one of the Russian military dress, although the men seemed of a better physique, generally speaking. Toward evening this picture became even more animated, for the inhabitants of Sofia love the open air. The cafes and restaurants then assume the aspect of some lesser Paris, pretty faces, elegant toilets, music and laughter dominating the scene in the smartest town quarter.

It Was a Success.

A young lady who engages largely in church and mission work was recently the moving spirit in some amateur theatricals which were got up in the interest of a deserving local charity. The entertainment was billed, and the performance was duly given. But somehow or other no notice was taken of it in the local newspapers. A few days later a friend met the young lady in question, when the conversation turned to the theatricals.

"Was the entertainment a success?"

"I should think it was," replied the lady, with a smile. "Why, we got over $100."

"Is that so?" said the friend. "Then you must have had a large audience."

"Well, no," she replied. "We only took $1.50 at the door, but father gave us a check for $100 if we would promise never to do it again."

CABLE NOTES.

New Cabinet Appointments—Chamberlain Replies to Questions.

London, Oct. 16.—Lord Onslow, president of the board of agriculture, in Edinburgh received a large and influential deputation representing the local authorities, the harbor trust and the agriculturalists. The deputation impressed upon him the necessity for the removal of restrictions on the importation of Canadian cattle. Lord Onslow, replying, said that after the recent vote in the House of Commons it was an impractical suggestion to ask the members of the government to bring in a bill to repeal the restriction. It did not appear that there was a scarcity of cattle, nor had the price of store cattle seriously risen. He thought the government was correct in adhering to the policy of retaining the restriction against Canadian cattle.

• • •

The Earl of Hardwicke has been appointed under secretary of state for India; and the Earl of Donoughmore has received the appointment of under secretary of state for war.

• • •

The Longmans have published a fascinating book on "Climbs and Explorations in the Canadian Rockies." The authors are two Alpinists. Stutfield and Collie, who declare that the view from Athabasca peak is the grandest known to human eye. They believe the Rockies must soon come within the scope of Cook's excursions.

• • •

Mr. Chamberlain, replying to the question whether his intention to tax yarns, spun into thread, and leather, said an expert committee would collect evidence from manufacturers before fixing a tariff. Such will take consideration of the special circumstances in each trade.

• • •

Mr. Chamberlain, replying to a question, "would oats, beans, rice and farinaceous foods be included under corn as under the late corn tax?" said, "Yes, everything in the recent corn tax, except maize."

• • •

Colonel Lee, now financial secretary of the war office, taught military history at the R. M. C., Kingston, Ont. His maiden speech on the army estimates was so successful that Lord Roberts has so declared that this young man with the gypsy face has a future before him.

• • •

President Horton, of the Congregational union, in welcoming the Congregationalists of the empire, said the real bond between the home country and the colonies, was not imperialism but the spirit of brotherhood existing between the churches. If they wanted to find Puritanism in the seventeenth century they must go to Canada. The most ludicrous thing to see is the upper classes putting the colonies in the background. Rev. Mr. Silcox, of Ontario, praised the work of the Nonconformists in connection with the education act. Canadians would not be passive resisters but active (cheers) supposing any one dared introduce such a measure in the Dominion.

• • •

The News says for years Mr. Chamberlain has been occupied in upsetting the balance of the empire. The colonies were flattered and £45,000,000 in debt added to England to satisfy one set of colonies in a passion for race ascendancy. The colonies so encouraged believe their arms alone has saved the British empire; now the country which sacrificed £250,000,000 for South Africa is asked to live on maize and bread on behalf of Canada and New Zealand.

HE WAS INNOCENT.

Report of Commission Proves that "Fighting Mac" Was Killed by Slander.

London, Oct. 16.—The finding of the commissioners appointed by the government of Ceylon to investigate the charges made against the late Sir Hector Macdonald, "Fighting Mac," has been received by the war office and is now issued to the public. The commissioners, individually and collectively, declared on oath that after the most careful, minute and exhaustive enquiry and investigation of the whole circumstances and facts connected with the sudden and unexpected death of the late Sir Hector Macdonald, they found absolutely no reason or crime whatsoever which would create feelings such as would determine suicide, in preference to conviction of any crime affecting the moral and irreproachable character of so brave, so fearless, so glorious and unparalleled a hero. The commissioners firmly believed the cause which gave rise to the inhuman and cruel suggestions of crime were prompted through vulgar feelings of spite and jealousy; and while they took the most reliable and trustworthy evidence from every accessible and conceivable source, and came to the conclusion that there was not the slightest particle of truth or foundation of any crime, and they find that the late Sir Hector Macdonald was cruelly assassinated by vile and slandering tongues.

While honorably acquitting the late Sir Hector Macdonald of any charge whatever, the commissioners could not but deplore the sad circumstances if the case that have fallen so disastrously on one whom they found innocent of any crime attributed to him.

The yacht Shamrock I is to exhibited at the St. Louis fair.

W. Lothian, a Pipestone farmer, was seriously injured on a thresher.

The Winnipeg Chess club defeated the Montreal club in a match by wire.

Lord Armstrong's firm and the Vickers-Maxim company may get the Soo iron works.

Owing to low water in the rivers there is fear of a food shortage in Yukon and prices have already advanced.

OPPOSED TO DIVORCE

BISHOP SCARBOROUGH VETOES A CALL.

Because Rev. George F. Kettelle Married Divorced Woman His Bishop Refuses to Sanction a Call.—A Priest's Will in Court.

A dispatch from Philadelphia, of Oct. 16, says: A matter that may become an important case in the Protestant Episcopal church in America became public today when announcement was made that Bishop John Scarborough, of the diocese of New Jersey, had refused to approve the call to a church within his jurisdiction of a clergyman who was married to a woman that had been granted a divorce from her first husband—also an Episcopal clergyman.

The case is that of Rev. George F. Kettelle, formerly assistant rector of Christ Church, Baltimore. His wife was originally Miss Bessie Broughton, of Pocomoke City, Md. She was married to the Rev. Clarence Frankel, in February, 1900, and in six months later they moved to Nebraska, where her husband was a missionary. Later she secured a divorce on the grounds of non-support, unfaithfulness and cruelty. She then came back to Pocomoke City, became acquainted with the Rev. Mr. Ketelle, and the couple were married on July 29 last.

Christ Church at Palmyra, N. J., offered the rectorship of that church to the young rector on the recommendation of Bishop Scarborough, before he was married. He accepted, but when he went to Trenton, N.J., to get the approval of the bishop he was refused. The rector vacated the pulpit and accepted a position as instructor in the Episcopal academy in the controversy.

The parishioners of Christ church this city pending the settlement of took up the matter, and appealed to the bishop to reconsider his decision, but this he would not do.

Bishop Scarborough had this to say: "I have made my decision in the matter as my duty as a bishop prompts me, and I shall make no further move. The divorce question is the most grievous that the church has to deal with. It is too bad when it reaches even into the ranks of the clergy. The law against divorce is the law of God. I am emphatically oposed to divorces, no matter what the pretext for such action."

PAYMENT FOR MASS.

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 16.—The most sweeping ruling that has been made by an American court concerning a matter of Roman Catholic belief since it was held in the east years ago that a priest cannot be compelled to testify to the secrets of the confessional, was handed down to-day by the Surrogate judge, Geo. A. Benton.

The case is that of John S. Keenan, an administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of Rev. James P. Kiernan. Keenan put in a claim for $500 willed to Father Kiernan for masses by Daniel Lane. Mr. Lane died July 3, 1897, and Father Kiernan May 13, 1900. Judge Benton says: "It is not natural to suppose that the testator making a bequest for such a purpose would so distrust his legatee as to insist that the service should be performed before the money was paid."

The substance of the decision is that the performance of the masses by the priest in such a case is a duty laid upon the conscience of the clergyman alone, and that the legacy rests in the priest, and passes to his legal representative who is in a position to claim its payment. The case has no exact parallel in the history of United States courts.

Cable Notes.

London—The Duke of Devonshire, late lord president of the council, has conditionally accepted the presidency of the Free Food League, which is organizing a campaign against the fiscal policy of Mr. Chamberlain and Premier Balfour. This important move in the fiscal contest developed at a meeting of the parliamentary committee of the league, when a letter from the Duke of Devonshire to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Ritchie's predecessor as chancellor of the exchequer, accepting the proffered presidency of the league on certain conditions, was read.

A syndicate has been formed with a registered capital of half a million pounds to facilitate the distribution of food products from all parts of the empire. Sir Gilbert Parker writes of the possibilities as enormous, and whatever benefits the company may reap the empire will reap them in greater proportion.

Lord Aberdeen yesterday told those at the Liberal meeting in Skipton that Mr. Chamberlain's scheme would seriously impair the fraternity and friendliness of the colonies. He would rather remove the embargo on Canadian cattle, which was really the right kind of protection. The available supply of wheat from the United States cannot be increased without increasing the price and we have reached a critical position in Britain and one full of peril unless it be dealt with boldly and judiciously.

A strike affecting all union carpenters in Winnipeg, is imminent.

Dan Patch has clipped two seconds off the world's pacing record to waggon.

The Ontario government has decided not to erect a separate building at St. Louis World's Fair.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"Be calm," he continued, in a low tone. "You know the reason. I have perfect confidence in your discretion. Here, in my writing-desk, in the right-hand drawer, is my will and a letter to Hortense, in case that— You understand me. Here, I give you the key. I have only one urgent request to make of you; do not leave the poor creature; she will need your friendship more than ever. I have told her that I am invited to a supper-party, to be followed the next morning by some pheasant-shooting, and have already taken leave of her. She suspects nothing; she did not once press my hand. In the letter there—" He stopped. "And you, too, Lucie, tell her afterwards that I have loved her very dearly."

He had taken the girl's hand and pressed it to his lips.

"Farewell, Lucie. Many thanks! The carriage is waiting. God grant we may meet again!"

He hastily seized his coat and hat, and left the room. Lucie, who had stood for a moment motionless, then hurried to the door of the dressing-room, which was next to the bedroom; she knew now that she must not leave Hortense a moment alone—all else was forgotten. She started back; for there behind the portiere stood Hortense.

"I have startled you," said the young wife, in an unnaturally quiet tone.

"Only for a moment, Hortense. Thank God you are better!"

"Come here," said the latter, seizing Lucie's hand. "Sit down here by me." She drew the trembling girl down by her on the divan. "I want to beg something of you."

"What is it, Hortense?"

"Go away from here. If it is too much to ask of you, I will do it!" she gasped out.

"I do not understand you, Hortense, except one thing—that I am to leave Wottersdorf."

The young wife, in her white dressing gown, trembled violently.

"Lucie, you have always said you loved me. If it were true, you must long ago—"

"Have gone away?" cried out the girl.

"Yes; you must have seen how I have suffered."

"Oh! have I been blind all this time?" moaned Lucie. "Hortense have I deserved that you should think this of me, that you should accuse me of the worst that can be thought of a girl, that you should come spying after me to—" She was suddenly upon her feet. "Farewell; I am going."

"Stay, I have not finished yet, Lucie. You must know first—"

"I will know nothing; you have mortally wounded me."

"Lucie, no, indeed! I was not spying after you," cried Hortense. "I do not think any harm of you. I wanted to say adieu to Waldemar; I felt troubled and anxious about him, and then— Oh, Lucie, you could not help it; he must have loved you. You are the sunshine in the house, the only bright spot for him. If it had not been for you, who knows if he would have borne with me so long?"

She slipped down to the floor before Lucie, and clasped her knees.

"Lucie, you must hear it—must know that I love him, that I can not give him up to you. No, I will not—I can not! Tell me the truth: what has happened? Is he indifferent to me? Has he confessed it to you?"

Lucie sprung up, trembling, her cheeks burning. She pressed her forehead, and with the other hand pushed back the young wife who was still on her knees before her.

"Speak, Lucie!"

"Yes," said the girl, slowly gasping out the words. "I will speak. I shall break my word, but you—you are responsible for it, for I can not wait a moment before exonerating the man who just stood before me. He brought me a message for you; he begged me to say to you that he loved you more than you had ever thought; he begged me not to leave you if—" She stopped.

Hortense remained motionless; her white fingers outlined so distinctly against the dark carpet on which she knelt.

"If anything should happen to him," continued Lucie. "He is to fight a duel with Kostan on your account." The last was almost unintelligible.

Hortense was still silent.

"Get up," said Lucie, almost roughly. "There, in the writing-desk, is his farewell letter." She seized the young wife's arm. "Get up. I can not spare you this hour, for his sake and your own. I will stay with you till to-morrow, as I promised him, and help you to bear it; then I will go. Come, control yourself."

Hortense dragged herself slowly up, as if her limbs refused to move.

"The carriage!" she whispered. "Let me go after him! The carriage!" And the next moment she was at the door and had pressed the knob of the electric bell.

"For what?" said Lucie. "We neither of us know where he has gone. Think, even if you were to reach him, your appearance would only unnerve him at a moment when he needs all his self-possession. A bottle of soda-water," she said, turning to the servant who had just entered. She now went up to the young wife. "Compose yourself; it must be borne. I could not act otherwise." Her voice had a strange tone in it; all the life had gone out of it, and as she lighted the candle on the writing table its rays showed her features strangely altered. It was no longer the soft, girlish face; it was a hard face with the lips compressed as if in pain.

Hortense sat as if stunned on the little chair, the arms of which, made of deer's horns, seemed to offer her but little support. Her hands were clasped in her lap, and she stared vacantly before her.

"Drink," said Lucie, offering her a glass of seltzer that she had just poured out.

Hortense raised her eyes, and they looked at each other. In Lucie's eyes was the same expression that Hortense had seen once before, as Lucie, after receiving the notice of Mathilda's death, had stood before her, threatening and contemptuous.

"Lucie, do not leave me," she whispered.

"I will stay with you till he comes back, Hortense."

Till he comes back! Will he come back? No, Lucie, I can not bear this torture. I think I am losing my reason." She walked up and down the room, then stood before the writing-desk. "Where is the letter?"

"In the upper right-hand drawer; here is the key."

Hortense took with trembling hands the letter from its place, seated herself at the table and read:

"When you hold this paper in your hands you will be free, Hortense—will be a widow. I almost wish that this may not be written in vain, for I see you will never be happy with me. I believe I know now that I can never win your heart. I have suffered more bitterly at this knowledge than I have let you see. I must not blame you; you have never pretended to care for me; it was presumptuous in me to believe that a love so true, so deep as mine, must in time find a response. I have been mistaken. That is my fault. I am to fight with Kostan; you will know more from Lucie. Farewell, Hortense; take my thanks for the little you have given me. May you be happier in your later years!

Waldemar."

A deep blush had gradually overspread her face; she stretched out her arms over the paper and hid her face in them; her body shook. "He will die because I love him—for my sake; and I can not tell him that he is dearer to me than anything in the world!" Again she sprung up. "Tell me, why has he challenged Kostan? Merely because he behaved so impolitely? He could not have heard what the man said to me."

"He had spoken disrespectfully of you and your father, Hortense. Do you remember the letter Peter brought just as you were driving off for the civil marriage? From that time your husband determined to challenge him, but did not know positively that he was the writer; and besides that, Kostan has been in Sweden until now."

"Waldemar knew about papa—knew—"

"Everything, Hortense, before he ever spoke a word to you—before he knew you."

"He is in A—, Lucie, I am sure!" cried the baroness. "Where else should he be? Kostan's place is in that neighborhood. I must speak to him. Do you hear? I must. I will drive over—do not hinder me!" At the same time she rang so loudly that it sounded through the house. "He must be in A—, do you not think so, Lucie? I entreat you, do speak to me. Put Hella in the little wagon, and be ready to go with us," she gave orders to the servant who answered her ring.

Without a word, Lucie collected some cloaks and wraps, and silently she took her place beside Hortense on the high seat. And now the fiery animal flew through the dark lanes of the park with her light load, and soon reached the high road. The moon shining through the clouds gave a dim twilight light; the turnpike lay like a white stripe before them. Hortense let the animal go as if it were mad. All that passion of feeling of which she was capable was expressed in her beautiful face that shone like marble from beneath her dark felt hat. Both were perfectly silent. Their way led through a village. Everything was already in the deepest slumber; a perfume of mignonette was wafted from a little garden, and here and there a light shone in a window. At the toll-house at the end of the village the gate was shut; Hortense knocked with the handle of her long whip on the window. No one answered. A fever of impatience was visible in every feature.

[CONTINUED.]

Not Sufficiently Strenuous.

The Friend—And so you don't trust your lawyer?

The Farmer—No, sir! He and the lawyer on the other side are too awfully polite; don't call each other no names at all.

Business Sure Enough.

Mother—Do yo' 'spect that young Jackson means business?

Daughter—Suttinly! He's already painted a washin' and ironin' sign.

Life is an age to the miserable, a moment to the happy.—Bacon.

Used the Whole Book.

"That count," said Miss Baltimore, "will never do for me. He is too wasteful and prodigate in his habits."

"Why, what has he done now?" asked her friend.

"Done! Why, he had the nerve to write his full name, titles and addresses in my autograph album."

Thespian Recollections.

"You do not take much interest in baseball?"

"No," answered Mr. Stormington Barnes. "I never could understand why it should be so hard to throw a ball straight when it is so easy to send an egg straight to the mark."—Washington Star.

Good Business Sense.

"Is Simpson, the tombstone maker, a good business man?"

"Good! I should say he is! Why, that man's business foresight is simply wonderful. He has just started a quick lunch restaurant by way of extending his operations." — Baltimore News.

Equal to Your Ideas

Just what you want and exactly what you need; this is what you are sure to find in our entirely new fall importations of . . . . .

STEWART STOVES & RANGES

For HARD COAL or SOFT COAL

The Stewart Hot Air Blast

In the construction of this stove the use of A Patent Swinging Top Central Down-Draft Invention is employed, with the hot blast principle of forcing heated air upon the surface of the fuel, thus consuming the gases and more than two-thirds of the smoke, and by that method utilizing those properties of combustion which heretofore were allowed to escape at the chimney flue. Soft coal is reduced to coke, making it an easy matter to keep fire and control it. It positively will save 33⅓ per cent. of the fuel. It is the cleanest of all solt coal stoves, and possesses the greatest radiating power. The stove is absolutely air-tight. A heavy fire pot and cast lining extending seven inches above same insures durability. Large space is provided for the accumulation of ashes, which can be easily removed through the front swinging draft door. The steel body is of extra thickness and made by the W. D. Wood cold rolled process. The feed opening in top is large and provided with lift-up cover. In ornamentation and finish the stove has no competitor. Very wide nickel plated top band. A special designed nickel plated foot rail. Nickel swing top cover. Nickel name plate. Nickel shaker. Elaborate urn.

No. 70	Weight 122 lbs.	Price	$15.00
" 71	" 156 lbs.	"	18.00
" 72	" 190 lbs.	"	22.00

STEEL PLATE RANGES

A FEW POINTS OF INTEREST

MANY REASONS may be advanced why our Steel Plate Ranges should receive fullest attention.

Amongst others we claim that THE STEEL PLATES used are several gauges heavier than usually used giving greater wearing quality.

THE DESIGN of ovens is such as to allow of full space being utilized.

OUR GUARANTEE

Our absolute guarantee goes with each and every range we sell. This guarantee covers satisfactory baking, heating of water and general cooking requirements.

A LOW-PRICED HEATER For COAL or WOOD

"The Bonny Oak"

HIGHLY FINISHED

Prices According to Size

$10.00 to $18.00

This cut does not do justice to our Leader. The

No. 9-18 MERIT RANGE

WITH

6 Holes, Enameled Reservoir and Highly Finished High Closet

Weighs 485 lbs.

Price $55, Less 5 per cent. off for cash.

Here is a medium priced Cook Stove, size of oven 18x18x11.

Weight 305 lbs.

Price $30.00

Medal Stewart Cook

For Hard or Soft Coal and Wood.

With Reservoir. Pouch Feed.

SPECIAL FEATURES—Oval Fire Box, Aluminine lined Oven Doors, Convex oven tops, but top plates, heavy covers and centers, cut long centers, enameled iron reservoir, japanned reservoir covers.

We want your trade, and all the trade we can get and would be pleased to have you come in and look over our stock. Yours for business

SHEPPARD & ELLIOTT, SOLE AGENTS

LOCALS CONTINUED.

McLaren's mill near Blairmore was burned to the ground on Monday night last.

A game of foot-ball between the locals and the Tonkin Thistles is billed for today at 3 p.m.

Mrs. Kate S. Hayes, of Winnipeg, is in town on a return trip through the west. Mrs. Hayes is on the staff of the Winnipeg Free Press but she has been engaged by the C. P. R. to gather information about the resources and industries of the western country which they will publish in pamphlet form for the benefit of many who write the Company for such information. Mrs. Hayes finds the task a heavy one.

H. A. Jackson, general freight and passenger agent Spokane and Northern Ry. and commencial agent for the Great Northern Ry., accompanied by G. H. Williams, travelling agent for the Great Northern, were in town in their special car on Tuesday, and gave the Free Press a call. These gentlemen are both Canadians and they claim that many other Canadians hold responsible positions on that line.

The case of Scott vs. The Fernie Lumber Co. for damages sustained by the plaintiff while in thee mployee of the defendants last February was completed yesterday at the Nelson assizes, the jury returning a verdict of $1400 and costs against the defendants. The latter claim they will appeal the case. Scott, it will be remembered lost a leg from injuries sustained while skidding logs, and which he claimed was owing to the use of wild horses that were unfitted for the work.

The Firth-Eaton Company plays in Fernie on Tuesday evening next under the auspices of Fernie hockey club. Judging from the many very complimentary comments this company has received from the local press wherever they have appeared their entertainment is of the highest order. Mr. Eaton, the impersonator, has a world wide reputation. He much resembles and fully equals Alba Hayward, the famous comedian, who delighted crowded audiences through these parts two years ago. Mr. Firth, baritone and composer, is spoken well of, as is also the third member of the company, Miss Flora Higgins, contralto. This is the best entertainment of its kind on the road and no doubt it will be greeted by a crowded house.

Mrs. James Mitchell, of Coal Creek Mines desires through these columns to thank those who so generously subscribed towards the fund which was raised in her behalf this week.

On Wednesday of last week Mr. T. H. Cowdry, of Cowdry Bros, bankers, and Miss E. G. Lamb were made man and wife, the Rev. Mr. Jaffray officiating. The wedding was a very quiet one, only a few of the intimate friends of the contracting parties being present. The bride was the recipient of many valuable presents from her Macleod friends. —Macleod Advance.

Minto Club Dance

The Minto Club give their next dance on Monday evening next, October 26th. Notice of this dance was inadvertently mitted from our last issue and friends are asked to accept this intimation. Invitations issued last week are intended to answer for the season, so that all who received cards are cordially invited to be present on Monday evening.

The Ladies of the Baptist Church held their bazaar in Mr. Lundie's store on Tuesday afternoon and evening. Tea and cakes were served and numerous articles of fancy work of many kinds were displayed for sale. The bazaar was well patronized by the ladies of the town during the afternoon and in the evening many young people took it in. The sale was a great success and a large sum of money was realized. The success of the affair reflects much credit upon the ladies who had charge of it.

A REMARKABLE RECORD.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has a remarkable record. It has been in use for over thirty years, during which time many million bottles have been sold and used. It has long been the standard and main reliance in the treatment of croup in thousand of homes, yet during all this time no case has ever been reported to the manufacturers in which it failed to effect a cure. When given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even as soon as the croupy cough appears, it will prevent the attack. It is pleasant to take, many children like it. It contains no opium or other harmful substance and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Rev. Mr. Houghton, Mrs. Houghton and Mrs. Saunders started out early Tuesday morning to climb Mount Fernie The latter lady found the climb more difficult than she had expected and she also sufiered from a sprained ankle. Darkness overtook the party on their return when they were yet above the foothills. Rather than run the risk of getting lost they decided to camp. They forthwith lighted a fire and proceeded to make themselves comfortable. A search party started out to look up the missing mountain climbers and the latter were awakened by rifle shots from the relief party who lighted the belated ones home with lanterns. They reached home none the worse for their escapade, about one o'clock in the morning. While descending the mountain in the afternoon the mountain climbers came within close proximity to a bear whose presence was made known behind a ridge of rock by very unmistakable growls. An examination showed that master bruin had lost no time in taking his departure.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

Lester Flett, of Elko, has gathered up 110 horses and shipped them to Alberta.

There are prospects of a larger hotel going up at Bayne's lake in anticipation of the saw mill to be erected there. Mr. Dilse intends having extended accommodations, with probably some cottages in addition. The lake would make a splendid resort.

Joseph Locke died of typhoid fever, Saturday, October 17th, at St. Eugene hospital. Funeral was held Monday, the 19th, and the remains were interred in the Cranbrook cemetery. The deceased was 22 years of age, and his parents live in Winnipeg.

J. F. Armstrong, the government agent, has purchase the two lots on the corner south of Tom Gill's residence, and expects to build.

In some manner not yet explained, engine 85, while standing in the round house last Sunday, suddenly started forward and broke through the doors and landed in the turntable pit. Whether it was caused by maliciousness on the part of some one, or due to carelessness of an employee is not known. The engine was badly damaged.

COLEMAN !

This new townsite will be placed on the market at Coleman, Alberta, which is situated on the mainline of the Crow's Nest Division of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Thursday, the 22nd of Oct. at 11 a.m.

The bituminous coal mines of the International Coal & Coke Co. are located at Coleman which is destined to be the princpal city in the Crow's Nest Division. The Company will be mining 2,000 tons of Coal and manufacturing 500 tons of coke daily by Midsummer, 1904. A market for the entire product has been secured.

For terms and particulars respecting lots, apply to the British American Trust Co., Grand Forks, B.C., or Coleman, Alt.

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 17. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 251

Lib. Legislative Assembly Dec 31 1901

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.

SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m.
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - B.C.
Office:—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON
PIANO and ORGAN
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J. Barber, L.D.S.D.D.S.
DENTIST
OFFICE AND RESIDENCE
SECOND FLOOR, HILL BLOCK
Opposite Royal Hotel.
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Moffatt's Cigar Store
Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.
A full line of Stationery.
Next Door to the Free Press.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk river: Commencing at the north-west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence northerly along the foothills 80 chains; thence east about 40 chains to the East bank of Elk river; thence south along the said west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west about 40 chains to the place of commencement.
Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.
ECKSTORM.

OVENS MAY BE BANKED

THE COKE INDUSTRY HAMPERED BY LACK OF CARS.

About 4,000 tons of Coke Piled up at Michel and Fernie awaiting Shipment—A Plan to Relieve the Situation.

The coke situation at the Fernie and Michel ovens has reached an acute stage and uuless it is relieved at an early date it may result in the banking of the ovens and in a very material reduction in the mine operations. The Coal Co. are unable to secure cars from the C. P. R. to ship their coke and as a result the industry is in such a congested condition that the ovens are now running only at about one third their full capacity which in turn cripples the coal output.

The coke piled upon the wharves on Monday evening at Michel represented 1600 tons and at Fernie ovens over 2000 tons await shipment. A walk around the oven plant here convinced the writer of the seriousness of the situation. The coke is stacked high on all sides and roads have been made through to unload fresh ovens. At the present time only 130 ovens out of a total of 424 are being used and every time they are drawn room has to be made for over 500 tons of coke. As a matter of fact this cannot always be found and the industry is still further retarded.

At Michel not only are delays caused by the lack of coke cars but often coal cars are not to be had. Already this month the mines have been closed 5½ days for the latter reason. The C. P. R. has pressed every available car into the grain transportation service on the prairie and although their contract with the Coal Company calls for a sufficient supply of cars they fail utterly to live up to it, and their only reply to urgent requests for more cars is, "we have none." The C.P.R. seldom will accept mine-run coal and in screening it the Coal Company gets large quantities of slack which is of no value except for coking. The Great Northern on the other hand takes the coal as it comes from the mines. The latter railway can take much more than is supplied by Morrissey, empties are often provided by them at Morrissey for the C.P.R to take to Michel or Coal Creek to fill them. The C.P.R., however, shows a disinclination towards this method of relieving the congested conditions, for twice this week long rows of empties have waited at Morrissey for transportation to Michel, while train after train went through without instructions to hitch on to them.

The output of the mines is being seriously handicapped by the car shortage. The returns for October will be in the neighborhood of 75,000 tons but the output would have reached the 100,000 mark had no delays occurred. The daily output at Coal Creek is limited to about 1,300 tons, while at Michel the total often falls to 1,000 when it could easily maintain an average of 1,400 tons.

The Coal Co. are now negotiating with the C. P. R. for a suitable rate on slack between Fernie and Morrissey. If a sufficiently low rate can be secured the surplus slack at Fernie will be taken to the Morrissey ovens for treatment. The coke will be shipped from that point to the Northport smelter via the Great Northern instead of from Michel or Fernie as heretofore. The many advantages of this plan are obvious. It will greatly increase the capacity of Coal Creek mines by providing means of disposing of surplus slack, it will relieve the C.P.R. of coke shipment so far as Northport is concerned, and Morrissey will receive a boom in consequence of the ovens being run full blast. At the latter point 120 of the 252 ovens are completed, but only 30 are as yet being run. Twenty five cottages are being rushed to completion for the use of the coke-oven men at that place.

At Michel 98 ovens are now completed and the balance will be completed this fall if the material can be got here in time. The construction of the ovens at both points has been hindered by the failure of the transportation companies to bring the brick from Pittsburg where they are awaiting shipment.

The smelters as yet are not complaining of the shortage in coke. This is no doubt owing to the fact that they have been stocking up. When they do run out of coke, they doubtless will follow their customary policy of blaming the Coal Company for the whole trouble.

Last year during the grain carrying season the present difficulty did not exist to any noticable extent for the reason that the coal output was only about half what it is now, for instance during September last year only 37,049 tons were mined while in the same month this year 63,191 tons was the total, and this is much below the present average.

ROUGH HOUSE AT MICHEL

A Finlander probably Fatally Injured—Five Arrests Made.

A Finlander, named Andrew Johnson, was brought to the hospital on Wednesday morning suffering from a severe wound in his forehead above his eye On the same train Constable Henderson brought five prisoners who were implicated in the crime.

Johnson received his injury on the night of Oct. 20th. He lives with a number of fellow country men at house No. 70, and on the night in question a regular jollification was held. Beer and whiskey were served out like water and after they were properly under the bacchanalian influence a genuine fight ensued.

When Constable Kummer was called he found eighteen in the house, eight of whom were laid out as a result of the general set-to. That the fight had been no sham was not hard to prove, as blood covered most of the victims, and some were unconscious from more causes than one. Emply bottles lying around suggested the nature of the warfare.

Investigation showed that Johnson was the only one seriously hurt. A hole about the size of a four bit piece was found in his head just above the eye. Under Dr. McSorley's care the injured man seemed to improve, until Tuesday evening when he became unconscious. An operation has been performed since at the hospital where the man now lies in a precarious condition.

While at Michel Johnson with an apparent desire to shield his friends maintained a resolute silence as to who committed the crime, but on Wednesday when the seriousness of his condition was made known to him he made a dying declaration fastening the deed upon Edward Meriel. He claimed that he went outside and was followed by Meriel who threw a large stone at him.

The names of those brought to the Fernie goal are, Ed. Meriel, Elias Parke, Petter Esquet, Wm. Michle and John Boried. The injured man according to a statement made to the constable while at Michel was not merely a spectator at the fight. He related how he had felled one of his comrades by striking him on the back of the head with a bottle.

FERNIE WON BY 1-0.

Tonkin Thistles Unable to Score.

The game of foot-ball last Saturday afternoon between the locals and the Tonkin Thistles resulted in a victory for the former by the narrow score of 1 goal to 0. During the first half no score was made, but in the second the Fernie forwards succeded in getting the ball past the almost invincible goal-keeper in the Morrissey flags.

The game was a comparatively slow one as both sides lacked practice. The locals certainly played the best all-round foot-ball and their attacks were much more frequent than their opponents'. The defence of the latter however was very fine and the work of the goal-keeper Sam McDonald, was of the best.

170 FEET OF COAL.

J. Wilson, who has been engaged in uncovering the coal seams of the Elk River Coal and Oil Company's property on their 19 claims above Michel, returned this week after an absence of over two months.

He reports that he uncovered 16 seams in all, which aggregated 170 feet, 9 inches in thickness. These seams extend over the entire property. Mr. Wilson is of the opinion that there are other seams still uncovered, but nothing more will be done by the company this season towards further development. Mr. Wilson left this week for the prairie where he has some coal properties to look after.

HOME—HAMILTON.

Mr. Edgar S. Home and Miss Mary A. Hamilton were married at Christ Church, Cranbrook, on Wednesday at 8 a.m. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Beacham in the presence of a few intimate friends. The newly married couple left on the morning train for the coast where they will spend their honeymoon. Mr. Home has many friends in Fernie, he having lived here for some time, and these will join with their friends in Cranbrook, where both are deservedly popular, in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Home a prosperous and happy life.

NO FERNIE RECOUNT.

Through a Technicality of the Law the Ballot Boxes Cannot Be Returned.

Nelson, Oct. 27.—The recount of the Fernie ballots came up before Judge Forin yesterday but the ballot boxes and all the papers in the case are still in Victoria in the custody of provincial secretary Goodeve, and the proceedings were adjourned a week.

S. S. Taylor, K. C., who is acting for E. C. Smith in the matter, duly obtained an order for the production of the boxes and papers from Judge Forin and this was served on Mr. Goodeve, who promptly replied that a county judge had no power to make an order directing him to send down the ballot boxes here. Mr. Goodeve says that the order must come from a supreme court judge, and Mr. Taylor stated last evening that he would apply to Mr. Justice Irving in chambers this morning before the regular work of the court was taken up for an order directing the provincial secretary to send the boxes here. Those who have looked up the statutory provisions regarding recounts are awaiting with some curiosity the outcome of the Fernie affair.

Nelson, Oct. 29th.—In chambers yesterday Mr. Justice Irving made an order directing the provincial secretary to forward the Fernie ballot boxes and all the papers in connection with the recent election, to the local registrar of the supreme court here.

The order was made ex parte on the motion of S. S. Taylor, K.C., solicitor for the applicant, Fred J. Watson, and was forwarded to Victoria by mail.

The delay in connection with the Fernie recount has been due to the refusal of Hon. Mr. Goodeve to part with the ballot boxes on the order of a county court judge and his demand for an order from a judge of the supreme court.

At present the matter stands adjourned until Monday next when if the provincial secretary forwards the ballot boxes and papers in accordance with the terms of the order, the recount will be made.

Nelson, Oct 30.—Yesterday W. A. Macdonald, K. C. received from Attorney-General McPhillips a telegram instructing him to fight the order of Judge Irving, and the matter was brought up before the latter with the result that the order has been definitely refused and the ballots will remain in the keeping of the provincial secretary.

Mr. Macdonald showed that the act states that, when the ballotts have been transmitted to the custody of the provincial secretary, as is the case here no person shall be allowed to inspect any of the rejected ballots except under the order of the speaker of the legislative assembly, or a judge of the supreme court, to be granted by such speaker or judge on being satisfied by evidence on oath that the inspection or production of such ballot papers is required for the purpose of instituting or maintaining a prosecution for an offence in relation to ballot papers or for the purpose of a petition questioning the election or return.

Mr. Macdonald argued that there was no mention of a recount in this section, no provision for the return of the ballots for that purpose, and that if a judge made an order for their return the provincial secretary would not be obliged to obey it.

Judge Irving delivered his decision as follows:—"I think the onus was on the applicant to estublish his right to the order. There is a most unfortunate hiatus here. The section providing for a recount contemplates that during ten days the ballots would remain in the hands of the returning officer, while section 152 provides for the immediate return of the ballots by that officer to the deputy provincial secretary. In the present case the papers have passed out of the hands of the returning officer into the custody of the provincial secretary and under section 154 I can only make the order when satisfied on oath that the ballots are required for the purpose of instituting a prosecution or questioning an election or return. Now the legislature ought to have made these sections consistent, and added words to section 154 which would have given me power to order the return of the ballots in the present case.

"I cannot agree that the application for a recount is a petition within the meaning of section 154 for at the time that section was drawn there was no such thing as a recount, and it clearly could not have been in the contemplation of the legislature.

"Under the circumstances I am afraid that the view I took the other day is wrong, and the order must be refused."

Mr. Taylor then called attention to the section of the act which says that the returning officer on being served with a summons for a recount must produce the ballot boxes.

To this the judge replied that it might be that the returning officer had power to demand the ballots from the provincial secretary, but he preferred not to express any opinion on that point.

MONTANA'S TROUBLES.

Amalgamated Copper Co's Shut-down Throws Many Thousands Out of Employment.

By a decision given last Friday by Judge Clancy the Amalgamated Copper Company is practically wiped out of business. The entire works have been suspended and a sum of $300,000 due the shareholders is withheld by the law.

The closing down of the Company's operations cuts off a daily pay-roll of $50,000 in Butte alone, while it is estimated that the pay-roll throughout the state of Montana will be reduced by one million dollars a week.

Butte streets have been filled with the miners thrown out of work. The city resembles a mob town. Boarding house keepers, store keepers, etc., whom the miners owe, besiege the justice courts, seeking garnishment orders. The constables cannot serve the papers fast enough, the justice clerks are working overtime filling them out.

The actual number directly thrown out of employment in Butte is 6500. These include the men in the Boston and Montana mines, the Anaconda mines, the Syndicate Group, the Butte and Boston mines, the Parrot group, the Colorado mines, the Colorado smelter, the Washoe group, the Butte and Boston mines and the switching crews, and other employees of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific railway, who have to do with shipping ore from the hill mines to Anaconda and Great Falls. At Anaconda, the Amalgamated employees at the new Washoe smelters, at the lime kilns, at the silica quarrries, at the brickyards and at the foundry are thrown out.

The closing of the Boston & Montana smelter at Great Falls will leave many hundreds of men there out of employment. Then, too, there are the employees of the Blackfoot Milling company in the woods and in the sawmill at Bonner the same class of men working for the Anaconda Copper Mining company's lumber department which centres in its big mill at Hamilton, probably the coal mines at Storr's, the coal miners at Belt—all these go out.

The company operates extensive coal mines at Diamondville, Wyo. While these will not be entirely shut down, because they supply coal to the trade as to the company, the output will be limited. The Butte, Anaconda & Pacific railway will be able to dispense with practically all its freight crews because there will be no ore to transport to the Anaconda smelters. Ore shipments from Butte to Anaconda have aggregated about 5000 tons a day.

A despatch from Anaconda on Wednesday stated that at least 600 people had left that town since the crisis and that many were still leaving.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Steve Bennuick was arrested this week for stealing a trunk and clothes belonging to Andre Kasak. The theft is alleged to have been committed while the latter was serving a term in the Nelson jail for fraud in connection with a post-office money order.

Frank Lewis, of Spokane and formerly of this place is billed for a wrestling match at Nelson to-night. The other principal in the bout is G. C. McLaughlin, of Salt Lake City. Lewis to win the match is to throw his opponent twice within the hour.

Notice has been published by the assistant timber inspector, that thirty days hence the property of the Carbon Creek Lumber Co. will be sold by the government for non-payment of royalty. The saw mill plant, machinery, horses, wagons, lumber, etc. will be sold.

A. J. Purdy & Co. are enlarging their premises at the rear of their main store building. The large room formerly occupied as the cigar factory is being converted into a toy room and when the Christmas stock arrives it will be filled to overflowing. Another smaller room is reserved for dolls alone.

When you want a physic that is mild and gentle, easy to take and certain to act, always use Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

HOUSTON REJECTED

Recommended for Cabinet Position by Premier but turned down by Sir Henri Joly.

John Houston returned to Nelson without the much desired position of Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works. He claimed that Premier McBride favored his appointment but that the lieutenant governor refused to accept him as his adviser.

When the Nelson member returned he succeeded in arousing a great deal of sympathy and a public meeting was held in the opera house to discuss the matter. Mr. Houston stated his case in a short speech in which the following letter was read:

Victoria, Oct. 24th, 1903.
John Houston, Esq., M.P.P.,
Nelson, B.C.

Sir—I have received your letter of yesterday, inquiring if it is true that I have objected to your being made a member of the Hon. McBride's government. It is true. I objected on account of the unfortunate incident of last session when you forgot what was due to the legislative assembly as well as to yourself in your responsible position. There was no intention on my part to insult either your constituents or yourself, as to judge by your letter, you appear to think. I considered that I had a duty to perform, I may add, a painful duty, and I performed it. I am your obedeint servant,

H. G. Joly de Lotbiniere.

The following resolution was then adopted:

"Resolved, that we, the people of Nelson, in public meeting assembled, protest against this action of the lieutenant-governor, in denying to a representative elected by the people, a right accorded him under constitutional government and be it further

"Resolved, that we deplore the fact that British Columbia has as premier a man who allowed the lieutenant-governor to reject his advice without resenting it by tendering him his resignation:

"Resolved, that copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the lieutenant-governor, the premier, and to Sir Wilfred Laurier, premier of Canada."

Messrs. S. S. Taylor and F. J. Deane objected to the clause censuring the lieutenant-governor.

FIRTH-EATON CONCERT.

One of the most enjoyable concerts ever given before a Fernie audience was that supplied by the Firth-Eaton combination on Tuesday evening. The hall was not half-filled and it is regrettable that more did not turn out to hear these talented artists. The hockey club cleared only a few dollars above the guarantee amount.

Mr. Eaton is one of the cleverest impersonators we have seen. He chooses selections of the New England and Hoosiery dialects, with which he is perfectly at home, and which also show a happy blending of the humorous and pathetic. As Josiah Allen's wife in "A Day of Trouble" he succeeded in arousing much enthusiasm by his very natural presentation of that well-known American character. As "The Prima Donna" he brought the house down, especially when at the last note he brought his voice down to a low bass. He responded three times to encores.

Mr. Firth, baritone singer, has a voice of marvellous accuracy, distinctness, fullness and mellowness. He sang "The Bandolero", "The Island of Dreams", and "The White Star of Heaven" each of which called for encores. The last is of his own production and is one of the most popular of all sacred songs.

Miss Flora Higgins possesses a voice of wonderful trueness and sweetness which captivated the audience from the beginning. She sang "A Dream" and the "The Shade of the Palm" and in response to hearty encores she gave two other selections.

The last item on the programme was a duet in costume taken from the operas, "Ernani" and "The Fencing Master", Mr. Eaton as the Prima Donna and Mr Firth as Called V. Should this company come this way again they may be sure of a large house and very flattering reception.

GOODEVE RESIGNS

Vancouver, Oct. 29—Provincial secretary Goodeve today resigned the provincial secretaryship, although the announcement of the resignation will not be made known until next Saturday.

It is reported that George Fraser, of Grand Forks, now at the capital, will be given the place, and that the constituency will be opened forthwith.

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HABBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Habberton

For the next few days our principal duty was to find out where the enemy was. We always succeeded. We had only to go a mile or two outside our own lines to be loudly assured that it was not necessary to go farther, and the mounted skirmishers who dashed in the direction of the first shots always saw gray figures lying down in shallow rifle pits, with breastworks far in the rear. Sometimes we would take some infantry with us—enough to engage the enemy smartly after we had found them and fallen back. But this became unpopular so far as we troopers were concerned. We always had to stand by as a reserve, near enough to protect the "doughboys" in case they were charged by the enemy. To sit still and be fired at or even to be within range of guns fired at some one else and not be allowed to reply is the most depressing experience a soldier can possibly have. It was new to us, and we didn't like it. We preferred our own old way of fighting—the dash,

Lying down in shallow rifle pits.

the chase, the battle perhaps, but no standing around under fire after we were done shooting.

Within a few days this sort of duty became unnecessary. The enemy relieved us of it by themselves reporting their whereabouts. They were continually building new forts, and whenever they finished one and got a heavy gun mounted in it they sent a shell or two over us to let us know about it.

In the meantime re-enforcements and siege guns came pouring in upon us by rail, and some double ended gunboats came up the river in search of rebels and glory. They found the former without the least trouble and deserved a good deal of glory for fighting their boats at much closer range than was common at that day with ships engaging forts. One Confederate artilleryman, who was captured, said the boats came so close that his shell fuses might have been lighted and the shells themselves thrown aboard, thus saving the powder charge of the gun.

We found places for some new forts of our own, and as some of them constructed on the river bank crushed through the crumbling soil and fell into the river the work had to be done over again. The bridge crossing the river had been burned just in time to prevent a dash of Confederate cavalry into town the day of the surprise, but now we needed it again, and timber for it had to be cut within easy range of the enemy's guns.

Oh, there was plenty of work for everybody—except the cavalry. We indulged in an occasional reconnoissance just to let the enemy know we hadn't left town, but hoped he had. For the rest of the time, however, we enjoyed more leisure than we could have had at home. It became tiresome; then it became absolutely wearing.

After the works on both sides had been making faces at each other for several weeks, and a great lot of powder had been burned without hurting many people, and thousands of men had been kept awake at night when they wanted to be asleep, the word was passed through our camp one evening that General Longstreet was to be made to feel very sick next morning and that we were to assist at the operation. Between dark and dawn the bridge was secretly repaired, right under the enemy's military nose. The most difficult part of the work, that of repairing the frame, was done silently. Then an army of contrabands went down in couples, each couple carrying a young pine log to be used as planking. When these had been laid, other contrabands packed the cracks with straw, and still others carried out bags and boxes of dirt and strewed over all, so the bridge should be noiseless under footfall of man and horse. Eight hundred Africans were kept awake all night by that job, and I do not believe the occasion would have been favorable in which to interview them on the blessings of freedom. Just before dawn several companies of our regiment passed over and learned that the enemy had not expected them. Close behind came a large body of infantry, which prolonged the surprise we had caused and prepared to make it permanent. Then some of our light artillery took a hand. We struck the enemy's line near its center and behaved so disagreeably to the Johnnies that General Longstreet took them back to General Lee.

CHAPTER XVII.

AFTER THE SIEGE.

As I am told that General Longstreet is a gentleman of fine sensibilities, I am very glad he did not hear the expressions of delight with which the Thirty-eighth received the announcement that he had gone back to his old familiar hunting grounds. Nobody meant to speak unkindly, but all were glad that he was gone, and we said so with as much intensity as was in us. We took the road at once, not to delay his departure, but just to see how he had left things. We did not at all approve of what we saw; neither did the natives. The woods and fields were scarified with miles upon miles of ditches and embankments. Among the natives the conclusion seemed to be that if they were to have their forests shorn and their land turned upside down it didn't much matter who might do it—Yank or Johnny.

Free colored people who lived outside the lines had grievances too. They had been able to hide some cows, pigs, chickens and turkeys from occasional Union soldiers who prowled about alone, but against a few thousand hungry men who were fully informed on the secretive ways of the African it was useless to contend. They followed us when we returned to camp and became part of the colony of which Possum Ben was a bright and shining light.

For some weeks after Longstreet's departure we spent most of our time in the field. The general commanding preferred that Longstreet should have as few excuses as possible for coming back again on the plea of looking for forage, so he proceeded to take up 20 miles of railroad track on each of the two roads leading from our post. It was a tedious job, but as we troopers had little to do but look on and occasionally be killed while repelling inquisitive Johnnies we rather enjoyed it. A large force of infantry and light artillery was with us. So were some hundreds of contrabands, and while we kept the enemy on the river too miserable to come across in a body and visit us the contrabands raised the rails, loaded them on platform cars and burned the ties. We worried General Lee's overburdened heart a good deal for two or three weeks, but that was one of the jobs for which we had enlisted. We made so many feints at attempting to cross the stream and advance in force on Richmond from the south that he had to send some of his men down to watch us.

We worried the natives too. Our horses ate all the grass, hay and fodder that Longstreet's men had left, and the assurance that the owners would be paid could they prove that they were good Union men did not seem to comfort the said owners a bit. They did not doubt that our officers told them the truth, but—there were some stubborn facts in the way of their getting their pay after peace should be declared. A one legged farmer with a military look and a pair of crutches was a picture of agony while his barns were being emptied and his stacks melted away. His wife went stark crazy over what seemed the impending starvation of her family.

Immediately after beholding such experiences or hearing of them a man who had any heart under his jacket would a little rather be shot than not, so after hearing that demented woman's ravings I was delighted to be assigned to very dangerous duty. It was to carry a dispatch to the general commanding a brigade on our extreme left. We felt so secure in our superior strength that the right, left and center were isolated commands rather than parts of a line. I started an hour or two after dark and was told that another man who had been sent on the same errand returned with the report that there was Confederate cavalry in the woods. I had been selected because I had a fast horse which ought to be able to dash through any ordinary line before an alarm could be given, and the chances of a single rider being fired upon and killed in the dark were not very serious. I could not miss the road, for it had no forks or branches.

I halted an instant.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Her Degree of Courage.

Amie had been suffering from toothache for several days. At last she consented to go with her papa to the dentist. When she was starting, her mamma said: "Now, dearest, be a brave little girl. Show fortitude, and mamma will be proud of you."

In due time Amie returned. "And did you show fortitude?" mamma inquired. Amie hesitated. "It hurted awful, mamma. I guess"—reflectively—"I showed about twentytude."

THE ORIGIN OF COFFEE.

Why the Berry Defies Production In the United States.

As to the history of coffee, the legend runs that it was first found growing wild in Arabia. Hadji Omar, a dervish, discovered it in 1285, 617 years ago. He was dying of hunger in the wilderness, when, finding some small round berries, he tried to eat them, but they were bitter. He tried roasting them, and these he finally steeped in some water held in the hollow of his hand and found the decoction as refreshing as if he had partaken of solid food. He hurried back to Mocha, from which he had been banished, and, inviting the wise men to partake of his discovery, they were so well pleased with it that they made him a saint.

The story is told that coffee was introduced into the West Indies in 1723 by Chirac, a French physician, who gave a Norman gentleman of the name of De Clieux, a captain of infantry on his way to Martinique, a single plant. The sea voyage was a stormy one, the vessel was driven out of her course, and drinking water became so scarce that it was distributed in rations. De Clieux, with an affection for his coffee plant, divided his portion of water with it and succeeded in bringing it to Martinique, although weak, not in a hopeless condition. There he planted it in his garden, protected it with a fence of thorns and watched it daily until the end of the year, when he gathered two pounds of coffee, which he distributed among the inhabitants of the island to be planted by them. From Martinique coffee trees in turn were sent to Santo Domingo, Guadaloupe and other neighboring islands.

The coffee tree is an evergreen shrub, growing, in its natural state, to a height of fourteen to eighteen feet. It is usually kept trimmed, however, for convenience in picking the berries, which grow along the branches close to the leaves and resemble in shape and color ordinary cherries. The tree cannot be grown above the frost line, neither can it be successfully grown in the tropics. The most successful climate for production is that found at an altitude of about 4,000 feet. Anything much above this is in danger of frost, which is fatal to the tree, and when coffee is grown much below this it requires artificial shade, which materially increases the cost of production and does not produce as marketable berries. It is owing to this particular requirement that coffee has never been successfully produced in the United States.—Success.

MAKING BREAD.

Biscuit and rolls require a hotter oven than bread.

Bread should rise to twice its original quantity before it is ready to bake.

The sponge should be set at night if the baking is to be done in the morning; otherwise set it early in the morning.

Bread and biscuits should rise in a moderately warm place, for if too cold it will be heavy or if too hot it is likely to sour.

Milk is preferable for mixing. In some cases the quantity used will have to be varied a little, as some flour will absorb more moisture than others.

A good sponge can be made of one pint of sifted flour, one cake of compressed yeast dissolved in a cupful of warm water and liquid enough to make a batter. It should be left to rise till light.—Exchange.

The Bride's Critics.

"Now that we are married, dear," said the bridegroom, "you have a serious task before you."

"Why, George, what is it?"

"You must prove to my three sisters that you are worthy of me."

A large bronze eagle, with one wing broken and drooping is the main feature of the French national monument which is to be erected on the field of Waterloo

Love is a fire that is dreaded by those who have been burned.

Virtue may be its own reward, but some people make a trade mark of it.

According to astronomers the Star of Bethlehem, which conducted the wise men to the birthplace of Jesus, will appear once more in 1910 or 1911.

Riches come better after poverty than poverty after riches.

Most of the things that seem too good to be true are not.

She Nursed the Sick And Ruined Her Health

For Months Mrs. Myles Lay a Helpless Sufferer From Nervous Prostration and Gradually Grew Weaker and Weaker.

Mrs. John Myles, Sr., of South Woodslee, Essex Co., Ont., is well known throughout the surrounding country because of her work among the sick and suffering and it was on account of over exertion in this regard that her health broke down and she lay weak and helpless, a victim of nervous prostration. Doctors could not help her and she resolved to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. As a result she has been thoroughly restored and by recommending this treatment to others has been the means of bringing back health and happiness to many a weakened and discouraged sufferer from diseases of the nerves.

Mrs. Myles writes:—"When I began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was confined to my bed with what the doctors said was nervous prostration. My stomach was very weak and I could not sleep at all for any length of time. Nervous chills and trembling would come over me at times and I seemed to be getting weaker and weaker all the time. There were also pains on the top of the head which caused me much suffering and anxiety.

After using half a dozen boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I began to gain in weight and to feel stronger. Since then I have been gradually restored to health and in looking back can say that the improvement has been something wonderful. I used in all forty boxes of this preparation and feel it a duty as well as a privilege to recommend it to all who are suffering from nervous disorders. Several persons to whom I have described my case have used it and been cured and I am sure that I owe my present good health, if not life itself to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Nervous prostration and exhaustion, headaches, dyspepsia, dizzy and fainting spells, paralysis, locomotor ataxia, feelings of weakness, depression, and despondency are overcome by this treatment, working, as it does, hand in hand, with nature. Though gradual, the results are all the more certain and lasting, and by noting your increase in weight, you can prove to your satisfaction that new, firm flesh and tissue is being added. Fifty cents a box, six boxes for $2.50. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Mind This.

It makes no difference whether it is chronic, acute or inflammatory

Rheumatism

of the muscles or joints

St. Jacobs Oil

cures and cures promptly.

Price, 25c. and 50c.

HOUSES OR LANDS

For $2.25 a month you become entitled to a loan of $1000.00 without interest. Our depositors absolutely guaranteed against loss, remember this. On our plan you can build a house or buy a farm cheaper than renting. Membership fee $4.00. Agents wanted.

Send for circulars.

The Prairie City Loan Co.
Room 38 Merchants Bank Blk.
Winnipeg.

OXFORD ECONOMY STEEL RANGES.

The bodies of these Ranges are made of the best quality range steel, all outside exposed parts are interlined with heavy sheet asbestos. They have cast iron extensions with white Enamelled Reservoirs, nickel plated drop Tea Pot Stands, Nickeled Towel Rods. They are made to burn any kind of coal, can be changed in two minutes to burn 26 inch wood. Highly nickeled throughout.

For full particulars send for illustrated booklet.

NOTE:—The following prices for these high grade ranges as illustrated, fully guaranteed,

No 9-18 oven 18x21x14 in. $50.00
No 9 20 oven 20x21x14 in. $52.50
(F. O. B., Winnipeg,)

Ask your dealer for them or write to us.

The GURNEY FOUNDRY Co.,
153 - 155 Lombard St., Winnipeg.

In the public eye and in everybodies mouth. Always reliable—popular everywhere.

J. M. FORTIER, Limited, MONTREAL.

The Old Reliable Remedy

for Spavins, Ringbones, Splints, Curbs and all forms of Lameness. The use of a single bottle may double the selling price of your horse.

GOOD FOR EVERYTHING.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO.,

Dear Sirs:— Gallatoe, N.M., June 18, 1900.
I have been using your Kendall's Spavin Cure for some time. I use from twelve to fifteen bottles a week and find it an excellent remedy for Spavins, Sweeney, Galls and all Cuts and Swellings. I have two hundred head of horses in my care.
I enclose a stamp for your "Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases."

Yours very truly, H. W. LAIRD.

Thousands of Men report equally good or superior results from its use. Price $1; six for $5. As a liniment for family use it has no equal. Ask your druggist for Kendall's Spavin Cure, also "A Treatise on the Horse," the book free, or address

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURG FALLS, VT.

Warranted Watches

We will not sell a watch that we cannot positively guarantee.

Do not understand from this that we sell Watches of extravagant price only.

Our No. 915 Silver or Gun Metal Watch at $6.50 is a warranted time-keeper.

When we state that we sell Watches in price as high as $100, you can judge of our great assortment.

Write for our new catalogue. Ready for delivery Nov. 15th. It will cost you nothing, and it may be the means of saving you considerable money.

RYRIE BROS.
JEWELERS
118, 120, 122 and 124
Yonge St., Toronto

It is a great strain on some men's eyes when they look for perfection in themselves.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

Why is it that a man always offers a bunch of theories to his neighbors that he does not practise himself?

IT IS A LIVER PILL.—Many of the ailments that man has to contend with have their origin in a disordered liver, which is a delicate organ, peculiarly susceptible to the disturbances that come from irregular habits or lack of care in eating and drinking. This accounts for the great many liver regulators now pressed on the attention of sufferers. Of these there is none superior to Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. Their operation though gentle is effective, and the most delicate can use them.

The lazy man would rather sit down and hope than go after a certainty.

If we had no failings ourselves, we should not take so much pleasure in finding out those of others.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

The guides Ulrich and Henri Fuhrer, with a tourist, have succeeded in making the descent from the Jungfrau from the eastern side, which has never before been done.

Cholera and all summer complaints are so quick in their action that the cold hand of death is upon the victims before they are aware that danger is near. If attacked do not delay in getting the proper medicine. Try a dose of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, and you will get immediate relief. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

It is probably a woman's funny bone that makes her laugh in her sleeve.

OVER ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF MILLING EXPERIENCE.

FLOUR CHAT

Our history of "Millers for a Century" is a guarantee of having learned thoroughly "How to make it."

In the brand "Ogilvie's Hungarian" the word Hungarian typifies the very best process of milling that the world has yet discovered. Every pound of Ogilvie's Flour is now made by The Hungarian process. In this you have "How to name it."

The Royal Coat of Arms against our signature is Royalty's endorsement of "Best Quality." They know. They use OGILVIE'S flour from choice. It makes bread for the King's eating, as well as hundreds of thousands of his loyal subjects. This is "How users like it."

The OGILVIE FLOUR MILLS CO. Ltd.

BY ROYAL WARRANT MILLERS TO H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

REFUSED TO SIGN

WALKED OUT OF THE ROOM INDIGNANT.

Canadian Commissioners on Alaska Boundary Tribunal Display Their Intense Chagrin at Findings of the Majority of the Commission.

London, Eng., Oct. 19.—A draft of the decision reached by the Alaska boundary commissioners, as announced previously, was signed by a majority of the commissioners this evening. Mr. Aylesworth, K.C., and Sir Louis Jette, the Canadian commissioners, refused to sign.

The Alaskan boundary decision grants all the American contentions with the exception of the one relating to the Portland canal; the signatories were Lord Chief Justice Alverstone, Senator Lodge, Senator Turner and Secretary Root, the American commissioners. They constituted a majority, and ensured finality.

Mr. Aylesworth and Sir Louis Jette carried their outspoken disapproval of the decision to the point of refusing to sign even that section of the decision giving the Portland canal to Canada, and they emphasized their attitude by walking out of the cabinet room in the foreign office before the signatures of the others had been affixed to the historic document.

The only thing remaining to be done at the session is that the majority of the tribunal complete and sign the map which accompanies the decision and which minutely determines the course of the boundary in favor of the American contention. The engrossed copy of the decision also will be signed to-morrow.

There is no hope expressed that the Canadian commissioners will reconsider their attitude.

At the Goldsmiths' company banquet to the commissioners to-night, the absence from the gathering of Hon. Clifford Sifton, Canadian minister of the interior, was noticeable.

PREACHED TO HIS SONS.

Emperior William's Advice to His Boys on the Occasion of Their Confirmation.

Berlin, Oct. 20—At a banquet given in the new palace recently in honor of the confirmation of Princes August William and Oscar, respectively the fourth and fifth sons of Emperor William, his majesty addressed the princes as follows: "My dear sons—This day is in its spiritual relation to be compared to the day an officer or soldier takes the oath of loyalty. To-day you have, so to speak, come of age in your beliefs. I speak intentionally in the military sense, because I assume that you also know that beautiful allegory in which the Christian is compared to a warrior. You will, of course, carry out what you have to-day so beautifully promised in your vows to your spiritual master. With justice you have emphasized the fact that you intend to be personages; that in my opinion is the point which most concerns the Christian in his daily life, for undoubtedly we can say with comfort of the Saviour that He was the most personal personage who ever walked the earth among men.

"In your lessons you have read and heard of many great men who have elevated and even inspired you, but theirs are only human words and no human words can be considered equal to any single word of our Lord. Never has a human word succeeded in inspiring the people of all races and all nations equally to the same goal, and strive to imitate Him. Yes, even to yield their lives for Him. This miracle can only be explained in the assumption that His words are words of everlasting life. From my own experience I can assure you that the angle and turning point of human, and especially a responsible and a busy life, lies alone in the attitude adopted towards our Saviour. There cannot be doubt but that our Lord lives to-day as an entire personality which cannot be ignored. I am ready to believe that many persons take the view that in modern life it is impossible that anyone should concern himself so intimately with the Saviour, or take Him into consideration as formerly, but the only helper and rescuer remains the Saviour. I advise you from the bottom of my heart to toil and work without ceasing. That is the kernel of Christian life. He who will be most heavily punished is he who does nothing, who goes with the stream and lets others work. May each of you strive to do his best in his province to become a personage and to grow up with his tasks according to the example of his Saviour. Strive so that what you undertake shall be a joy to your fellow men or at least be of service to them; then you will have accomplished what is expected of you. That you may not be wanting in the help of God and of our Saviour, to this let us empty our glasses."

A Perilous Voyage.

The Snaefell, a 79-ton schooner, laden with codfish, reached Queenstown from New England on Oct. 18, says a cable dispatch. She was navigated for the entire trip, which lasted nineteen days, by her captain and mate alone. The men suffered terrible hardships. The schooner encountered a succession of gales and cold weather and fatigue caused the captain and mate extreme suffering. They never slept in their bunks from the time they started. For five days the schooner was on her beam ends, and then the two men subsisted on bread and water, as they were unable to light a fire.

WHY HE REFUSED.

Mr. Aylesworth Tells Why He Would Not Sign Award.

London, Oct. 22.—The Times this morning publishes the dissenting opinion presented to the Alaska boundary tribunal by A. B. Aylesworth, one of the Canadian commissioners. It is dated October 17 and takes up three columns in The Times and is a most minute discussion of the whole treaty question and a recital of Mr. Aylesworth's reasons for disagreeing with the majority. It concludes as follows:

"I have merely to say that the course of this tribunal has decided to take with regard to the islands at the entrance of Portland channel, is in my humble judgment, so opposed to the plain requirements of justice and so absolutely irreconciliable with any disposition of that branch of this case upon principles of a judicial character, that I respectfully decline to affix my signature to their award.

(Signed) "AYLESWORTH."

Mr. Aylesworth regrets the decision of the Alaska tribunal, but says: "It will be of some value if it convinces this and future British governments of the folly of pandering to American goodwill at the expense of colonial feeling. If our statesmen imagine that in the temporary goodwill of the United States they have secured an offset for the deep and permanent wound inflicted on Canadian sentiment they are making a disastrous mistake.

GIVES HIS REASONS.

Lord George Hamilton Tells Why He Deserted the Balfour Cabinet.

A London cable says: In an address to his constituents at Ealing, Lord George Hamilton, late secretary of state for India, has given for the first time his version of the recent cabinet resignations.

He said that at the cabinet meeting on the last day of the parliamentary session, Premier Balfour produced a programme which included a preferential tariff and the taxation of food. The cabinet adjourned that day without reaching a decision.

After the meeting on September 14 Lord Balfour of Burleigh, then secretary for Scotland, C. T. Ritchie, then chancellor of the exchequer, and he agreed to place their resignations in the hands of the Duke of Devonshire, then lord president of the council, who would present them with his own. It was not until September 16 that Lord George learned of Colonial Secretary Chamberlain's resignation, and that the Duke of Devonshire had retained his. He declared that Premier Balfour had treated the members of the cabinet, other than the Duke of Devonshire, unfairly.

With regard to the general fiscal policy, Lord George Hamilton believed thoroughly in retaliation, which would give the country a better chance for the negotiation of reciprocity treaties. He thought no member of the cabinet would have resigned on such a proposition. He said the present propaganda was protection pure and simple.

Homestead Entries Still Growing.

The number of homestead entries made at the principal Dominion land offices in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories during the month of September exceeded seventeen hundred, and when all the agencies have been heard from it is expected the total for the month will exceed two thousand. The reports received are as follows:

	Sept. 1903.	Sept. 1902.
Edmonton	252	183
Regina	463	291
Yorkton	213	172
Minnedosa	21	15
Prince Albert	124	86
Calgary	206	69
Red Deer	99	118
Brandon	41	155
Alameda	165	146
Lethbridge	127	104
Winnipeg	62	41
Total	1775	1480

Lucky Portage Waiter.

George A. Cleaver, who has been working as a waiter in the Palace restaurant in Portage la Prairie for some time, has received word that, as the result of the death of his father in Leicestershire, England, he was heir to £15,000 cash, besides an interest in real estate which will run up over £5,000. In all, the young man will get in the neighborhood of $100,000 (£20,000). His father was a very wealthy soap manufacturer and chemist, and several other brothers and sisters share alike. The young man, who had seen service in South Africa, is married. He expects to take up his residence in Winnipeg shortly.

Found Murdered.

Advices from Fort Saskatchewan say: The eastern mail driver was informed by the postmaster at Wostok when he called for his mail on Friday morning last that a little girl had found her father in his stable dead, with finger marks on his throat, the arm scratched, shot in the mouth by a gun, his leg broken and otherwise disfigured as to look as if murder was committed. It appears that Galicians had some trouble over some money matters which led to hot words, and hence the finding of the body.

A government immigration hall will be built at Lloydminster, Sask.

The rumor is again current that Hon. Mr. Emmerson will enter the Dominion cabinet.

Shareholders in the defunct Commercial Bank of Winnipeg, will shortly receive a final dividend.

Mgr. Sbaretti, the papal delegate, was warmly welcomed to Winnipeg and took part in a number of ceremonies.

At Memphis, Tenn., Dan Patch lowered the world's pacing record three-quarters of a second, making the mile in 1.56¼.

The formal reorganization of the Soo company has been announced. The year's profits were $950,000.

DOWIE AND CARRIE

TEMPERANCE CRUSADER ALMOST CAUSES A RIOT.

The Prophet of the Zionist Host in Madison Square Garden, Has Trouble With Carrie Nation, the Saloon Smasher—Other Incidents.

A New York dispatch says: Carrie Nation tried to butt in on Elijah at Madison Square last night and she was put out by the police. She made two attempts to divide the audience with Dowie. The first time Dowie addressed her with loving and kindly words and persuaded her to obey some of his Zion guards and sit down. The second time she persisted with such vehemence in getting into the game that she caused a small riot.

Dowie, with that generalship and executive ability of which he is an acknowledged master, put down the racket and sent the audience away quietly after Carrie had been ejected. Elijah had been trying to furnish an answer to Dr. James M. Buckley's magazine article about him, when Mrs. Nation interrupted him. With his absolute inability to talk continuously on any one subject he had branched off into every subject under the sun—but mostly on the vileness of reporters, whom he called "razor-backed swine," and other names less printable.

When he began the huge garden was crowded and the police say that 6,000 persons who could not gain entrance were turned away. In half an hour, however, the crowd began to surge out, and then the police refused to admit any late comers, saying they feared a riot. It was with some difficulty that any semblance of order was kept. The speaker was repeatedly interrupted with hisses and shouts of disapproval. At one point Dowie ordered the police to arrest two men in different parts of the building who had interrupted him. Dowie had announced that he would reply to an attack by the Rev. James M. Buckley, published in a magazine last year. But he only referred to this subject casually. He attacked the Rev. Dr. P. H. Henson, the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, J. P. Morgan and others, and said that hereafter he intended to keep the newspaper reporters out of his meetings.

In the midst of one of these fits Carrie bobbed up with her usual urbane smile in the centre of the aisle, rather forward of the middle of the garden.

"Doctor," she shouted, "I want to ask you a question."

Elijah had never seen this distinguished competitor before, and with his usual promptness yelled back to her:

"Sit down. I won't answer any questions. Guards, make that woman keep quiet."

The irresistible Carrie bobbed up and smiled in her own glad, good-natured way.

"But doctor," she cried in a voice to be heard all over the room, "just one question."

A number of Elijah's overseers went up to him as he ran up and down the platform shouting to the guards. One of them must have told him who the interrupter was.

"I am informed," he shouted, "that it is Carrie Nation."

Carrie, who had been compelled to sit down, bobbed up again and courtesied.

"Yes, doctor," she cried, "and I want——"

"My dear Mrs. Nation," said Dowie in his most gentle tones, "my dear sister, sit down. Please sit down. I love you, my sister, and admire your courage, though we may not approve of your methods. Nevertheless, I admire your spirit. We are glad to have you with us—and will you please sit down, and not allow yourself to be used by those who have organized to break up these meetings?"

Carrie blushed and sat down.

Elijah went on with his remarks on Dr. Buckley and the rest of the universe. He called Dr. Buckley a micro-maniac, to say nothing of denominating him a liar and no gentleman. But he had no sooner finished his address than Carrie was up and screaming again. This time there was a lot of uproar, and she was not heard after her first shrill request:

"Now, dear doctor, can't I please talk?"

Mrs. Nation a moment later found herself being escorted out of the building.

BOW LOW TO MRS. DOWIE.

When Mrs. Dowie after conducting the mid-day meeting yesterday, left Madison Square Garden, the ceremony was a cross between a royal function and the exit from the theatre of a popular actress.

Slowly descending the steps from the platform a guard of honor formed two lines, four in each line. With the wife of the prophet thus protected, they passed from the view of the common people. Mrs. Dowie, with a woman attendant, went into a dressing room and the guard remained alertly on duty outside the door.

As the knob turned there was a hushed cry, "She is coming"; and the guard became more vigilant and another uniformed official went ahead clearing the way, saying, "Fall back, there; fall back," and the awed crowd fell back, while Mrs. Dowie with serene majesty swept by. Her carriage, with its fine horses, was waiting inside the entrance on Twenty-seventh street, near Madison avenue.

"Make way there," cried the guards again, and stood all attention while the pleasant faced woman was helped obsequiously into her carriage. The bearded coachman took up the reins, the footman got up beside him and a plain Zionist threw open the doors. The carriage passed through and the faithful adherents turned back to get their meagre luncheons.

A woman had been waiting to see Mrs. Dowie. Those in authority were astounded at her effrontery. "Do you want to be prayed with?" she was asked.

"Yes."

"Well, go to the prayer room. You can see someone else about it."

Saturday's Canada Gazette will contain a proclamation appointing May 24 as the day for the celebration of the King's birthday. The 9th November will not be a holiday.

A FEW BUFFALO LEFT.

Three Show Places in Manitoba Where They May Be Seen.

It may not be generally known that Western Canada is not entirely without buffalo. Aside from the more or less mythical herd of about 200, supposed to be roaming in the natural state in the Peace River country, there are over forty buffaloes in semi-captivity at Winnipeg and in the National Park at Banff, west of Calgary. These were originally two herds in the neighborhood of Winnipeg, one belonging to Col. Bedson, warden of Stony Mountain Penitentiary, and the other owned by Lord Strathcona, at Silver Heights. After Col. Bedson's death his herd was sold to Lincoln Park, Chicago. Later Lord Strathcona gave his herd, which contained seventeen animals, to the National Park at Banff. Winnipeg City Council viewed with dismay the removal of the last of the bison, and finally secured a portion of the herd, while the rest were sent to the Rockies. Those sent to Banff seem to have thriven better than those left at Silver Heights, and they now number thirty-six, while there are only seven at Silver Heights. The keeping up of two herds, however, is being found advantageous, as animals are exchanged from time to time to prevent too close inbreeding. This year, also, three more bison were brought to Winnipeg by the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company to form part of the "Zoo" which they are establishing at River Park. These came from the herd of about two hundred originally owned by Allar & Pablo, of Flathead County, Montana. This is probably the last remnant of the great wild herds left in the United States, and it is now being dispersed among parks and zoological gardens in various parts of the country. Eaton Brothers, of Montana, have now the largest part of the herd. Thus the visitor to Winnipeg has two chances of "seeing the buffalo." He can take an electric car to River Park and see them browsing about in a five-acre field, protected from the public (and vice-versa) by a high and stout fence, or he can drive out about seven miles to Silver Heights and see a herd of seven grazing with other cattle on the prairie. The number of buffaloes in the West will doubtless increase, owing to the immense interest taken in them by all classes, but that they will ever be bred because of their utility is very doubtful. Domestic cattle probably surpass them in every respect, save that of hair, which made the buffalo robe so popular throughout the world. As objects of curiosity, however, they are worth too much to be sacrificed for their robes, a full-grown bull being worth, it is stated, $1,000, while a good mounted head is worth $200 or more. There is no reason why they should not increase in captivity as rapidly as domestic cattle, especially when the so-called captivity consists of a run over a whole valley or a thousand acres of prairie.

Canadian Women in New Role.

I wonder how many people in Canada realize that there are seventy women who own and manage steam vessels, and fifty-six sailing vessels, in the Dominion? I am often amused at the scorn with which the majority of people regard the idea of agriculture for women being practicable and desirable. As a matter of fact, both in the United States and in Canada, farms of all kinds are most successfully run by women, and all branches of horticultural work are being taken up by women in every part of the world. For the sixth time in eight years a woman has headed the list of successful candidates and won the medal in the Royal Horticultural Society's examination in London! and the Swanley Agricultural College in Kent, run by private enterprise, has had so many applications from women that the governing body have reorganized the institution and made it a woman's college. The colonial training branch is under a strong committee, and at present from the report presented in the biennial leaflet of the W. A. and H. I. U., it appears that the efforts of the management are being directed towards fitting students for life in South Africa, where situations open to well educated and capable gentlewomen are to be found. Canada, it appears, furnishes no opening for women of this class, so little attention need be paid by English authorities to training students for life in Canada. In the article by the Secretary of the Colonial Training Department at Swanley the following notice is given a conspicuous place, and should, I think, apply to Canada as well as South Africa: "No woman should proceed to South Africa unless under the protection of her relatives, or of this society, and to a definite home or definite engagement."—Lally Bernard, in The Globe.

Forty-Three Feet of Flesh.

A Whitby family of seven brothers measure at least 43 feet. No family is more widely or favorably known in Whitby than the McGillivray family, and the aged mother of these interesting and conspicuous children may well be proud of her offspring. And not only are the seven McGillivrays all tall men, but they are heavy weights, and will average over 210 pounds, the combined weight being not less than 1,480 pounds. The seven brothers met in Toronto on Friday last, and six of them spent Sunday in Whitby. The genial doctor and T. A., the barrister, are residents of the town; George, a veterinary surgeon, of Spring Valley, Minn., had journeyed across the line to see the Dominion Exhibition; William, a medical doctor of Pipestone, the same State, also took in the Exhibition; J. A., of Forestry fame, whose home is in Uxbridge, and Norman, Presbyterian minister, of Carp, Ont., were the sextette who spent the Sabbath in town. And they were all at the Presbyterian Church at the evening service, one of their number, Norman, being the preacher.—Keystone.

AT NEWCASTLE.

Chamberlain Replies to Recent Speeches of Liberal Leaders.

London, Oct. 20.—Mr. Chamberlain addressed an enthusiastic meeting of 4,000 persons at Newcastle to-night. It was his first public appearance since his recent illness. A novel feature was a battery of telephone receivers connecting the speaker's desk with the local newspaper offices.

The former colonial secretary devoted considerable attention to ridiculing Lord Rosebery, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Earl Spencer. He said that considering the fact that he had been termed an electioneering quack, he was surprised at the amount of popularity and newspaper comments his proposals had elicited. Mr. Chamberlain said he had not raised a party but rather a national question. He had not pretended that his system could be instituted without costing anything at the start, but he did urge that taxation would be transferred from points where it benefitted nobody to points where the empire would profit. If the country had done well in the past it was not the cause of free trade.

Replying to the charge that he had based his whole system on the boom year of 1872, Mr. Chamberlain said his opponents would find if they took the five year periods working back from 1875, that these would show better still for his side of the case; and he went at length into statistics with the view of proving this contention. He said he did not claim that the empire would break up immediately if his system was not adopted, but there was already a certain tendency toward cleavage, and commercial preference was the only mode of binding the colonies to the mother country.

The colonies contained 11,000,000 whites who had offered to make sacrifices, if necessary, in order to build up an empire such as the world had never yet seen. The United Kingdom should not turn a deaf ear to such an offer and thereby lose a chance which if now neglected never would recur.

DOWIE IS COARSE.

Dr. Parkhurst Tells the Zionist Leader so in Plain English.

A dispatch from New York says:—The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst has sent the following open letter to Mr. Dowie:

"Rev. John Alexander Dowie:

"Dear Sir,—I do not want to be presuming, but doubt if it is any more presumptive in me to come and try to clarify you than it is for you to come and try to clarify New York; and I do not know which of us has undertaken the heavier contract. I attended your service at Madison Square Garden last evening, and I went determined to enjoy it if I could and be benefited by it, and to go away and refute some of the charges that I had heard alleged against you; but it is of no use. Your behaviour on the platform crushed every throb of sympathy I had with you. I never heard from a public speaker such a discharge of effervescent wrath and coarse invective.

"I went to hear you preach the gospel and you preached Dowie, Zion City, 'stink pot'.

"I was ashamed of you, and almost ashamed to be in your audience. It was a long way below the standard of even the circuses that I have attended in the same garden. The only consolation I could derive was that it was so abominable and so far beyond the bounds of the respectable, that even those in your congregation who did not know what Christianity is, would have no idea that it had anything to do with what you were saying. Of course, the ridiculousness of the performance was only enhanced by the immensity of your pretensions. If you claimed to be only an ordinary man there might be some hope for you, even with what you call the "rabble," but the rabble is discriminating and can discriminate as keenly as the keenest between a prophet and a juggler, between an Elijah and a mountebank.

"I say this in no spirit of anger, but either your head is twisted or your heart infected, or you have blundered badly in your method. You cannot bully people into Zionism nor blackguard them into the Kingdom of Heaven. I hope you will take this in the kindly spirit in which it is offered and that it will be a blessing to you. Yours sincerely,

"C. H. PARKHURST."

Big Stampede Expected.

On November 10 many thousand acres of land in Northern Minnesota, bounded on the west by Warroad and on the east by Beaudette, and extending fifty miles southward from the Lake of the Woods and Rainy River, will be thrown open for settlement. As these lands are all arable, a big rush of locators is looked for, in fact the railway companies and other public caterers have been informed to prepare for a rush that will almost parallel the historical stampede that occurred when Oklahoma was opened up for settlement. The rush in Northern Minnesota is expected to begin about the 1st of November.

A special session of the United States Congress has been called for November 19.

The Cardstone-Edmonton long distance telephone line will be in operation in December.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made an important statement in the House of Commons on Monday last respecting an all-Canadian route to the Yukon, as a result of the findings of the Alaska boundary tribunal.

NEWS NOTES

Short Items Culled From Telegraphic Dispatches.

The King of Belgium met with a cool reception in Vienna.

Mr. John Morley has again entered actively into British politics.

Union carpenters to the number of 600 are on strike for increased pay.

Port Arthur now ranks first in Canada in owning municipal franchises.

Winnipeg aldermen are considering the advisability of establishing free skating rinks.

The ringleader of the gang of dynamiters who have been operating along the Northern Pacific has been arrested.

Cresceus has broken the world's record by a quarter of a second, making the distance in 1.59¾.

Winnipeg city council has decided to stand by the early closing bylaw, although threatened with action in the courts.

The Hudson Bay railway line has now been completed to a point fifty miles from Winnipeg to near Oak Point on Lake Manitoba.

A graduate of Guelph Agricultural college, Manager Palmer, of a Toronto dairy company, has received a $6,000 position in Orange River colony, South Africa.

Montreal police raided some Chinese dens and found twelve white women there.

Dominion educationalists will meet in Winnipeg next June.

David Thom dropped dead in Wawanesa on Monday last while reading a paper.

Over 300 men are employed on the C. P. R. docks at Fort William.

The amendments to the Grain bill have been approved by both houses.

The fur trading steamer Eldorado has been wrecked near Hudson's Bay. The crew walked 600 miles to a railway.

The Canadian Northern will be within 45 miles of Prince Albert this fall.

Grand Trunk Pacific engineers are taking soundings of Port Simpson harbor.

Morden has decided to exempt the cement company's property from taxation for twenty years.

Thirty-seven battalions of troops have been called out in Salonica and district.

The Furness liner Evangeline, which sailed for London from Halifax on October 20, took 20,000 barrels of apples.

A dispatch from Middleton, N. Y., of Oct. 20, says: C. E. Norris reached here to-day after an 8,000 mile walk from San Francisco, undertaken to cure consumption. He started on August 8, 1901, and followed the railroads as far as possible. He continued his journey to New York next day.

Hon. Mr. Sifton's Views.

A London cable says: Hon. Mr. Sifton, when asked by the Canadian Associated Press to express his views respecting the Alaskan boundary award just made, said: "The award is substantially in favor of the United States all along the line. We, it is true, have succeeded in establishing two of our main contentions; first, the Portland canal; second, the existence of the mountain boundary line; but while the finding is in favor of our contentions upon these phases of the case the tribunal has worked out a line in such a way as to deprive us of all practical benefit. While we get Wales and Pearce islands, of which the Americans have been in possession for some years, they are deprived of value to Canada by the fact that the two islands, which lie immediately outside, and command the entrance to Observation Inlet and Port Simpson, are given to the United States. I do not profess to understand the principle upon which these islands are given away. The mountain boundary line, while adopted as contended for by Canada is drawn so far back that the United States gets all she has seriously contended for. As to our position on the subject of heads of inlets, it has apparently not received any consideration from the majority of the tribunal."

"Have you anything to say in regard to the conduct of the case by the representatives of the United States?"

"I have to say that the agent and counsel of the United States acted in perfect courtesy and faith throughout."

"Have you anything to say regarding the merits of the case?"

"No."

Boat Drawn By a Kite.

A man named S. F. Cody left Dover for Calais recently in a collapsible boat drawn by a kite. A good northwesterly breeze was blowing. Great interest was manifested in Cody's attempt to cross the Channel, which, however, failed. The kite was somewhat on the principle of a box kite and capable of lifting several tons. The boat weighed four tons, and was decked with canvas. It resembled a miniature submarine boat. A steering gear manipulated the kite and the boat's rudder alike, and enabled Cody to manoeuvre with comparative ease. When he was a mile and a half off shore the navigator appeared to be in difficulties, and abandoned his attempt after being three hours at sea. The boat was towed back to Dover. In an interview Cody said the kite served well till the wind failed, when the boat drifted with the tide. In favorable weather he is confident he can accomplish the trip.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, OCT. 31, 1903.

A VITAL MATTER

The question of car shortage in connection with the coke industry is one of vital importance not only to the operating company but to every resident of the town and district, for the coal-mining industry is fully recognized as the foundation of all commercial and industrial activity in this valley, and anything which threatens its progress threatens the progress of the whole community.

The situation is quite simple. The Coal Company are obliged to have a profitable means of disposing of the slack and it will not pay them to mine more coal than will produce the maximum amount of slack that can be manufactured into coke. Mine-run coal contains over 50 per cent. of slack. The mines at Michel and Coal Creek are at the present time running much below their full capacity for the reason that the slack cannot be handled. The situation is growing more serious every day and Manager Tonkin is driven to consider the possibility, even the probability, of banking all the Fernie ovens. Only a third are being used, and these can be drawn only at such times that room can be found to stack the 500 tons of coke they contain. The output this month is reduced to 75 per cent. of what it might have been. It is true that the C. P. R. contracted to supply sufficient cars but as the breach of the contract has no penalty attached to it, it is of little weight.

After 18 months of hard struggling the Coal Company has recovered from the dire effects of explosions and strikes only to find itself face to face with another drawback, the transportation question. If the coal industry of this district could only have an uninterrupted period of twelve months of steady progress the results would be such as to open the eyes of those unfamiliar with the many disadvantages that has blocked its progress in the past.

THE SKATING RINK

The movement on foot to build a skating rink on a joint stock company plan has made considerable progress. Three lots between the hospital and the river bank have been offered by the Coal Co. for $800 on reasonable terms. Plans are being prepared for a rink, 180 x 75, and these will be finished by Monday, when tenders will be called for without delay. Already about $2,500 have been offered in $100 shares, and the committee who are looking after it hope to secure at least $4,000.

We cannot urge too strongly the necessity for this institution. The present owners of the old skating rink will not see the town without a rink but they prefer that a new one be built. The old rink was entirely too small to accommodate the heavy patronage it received in former years and this year that patronage could be largely increased. Nearly every boy and girl in town owns a pair of skates and it will be something to regret if suitable provision be not made that the children of the town may have this means for exercise and pleasure.

The proposition is a business one, pure and simple. Any money invested in it will certainly pay handsome dividends, very probably reaching 15 or 20 per cent. Another point, a rink must be built next year if not this. It is almost certain that a year hence it will be impossible to find a location so suitable as the one in view. This property will undoubtedly double its present value in a year or two and the new company will thus have its stock value increased by that amount.

The object is a worthy one, and it is based on solid business principles. Get in line, fellow citizens, and help it along.

EDITORIAL NOTES

GEORGE Turner one of the American "commissioners" is to be boosted into the Governorship of the state of Washington because, while acting ostensibly in a judicial capacity, he stood pat for his country and secured nearly everything the United States claimed.

* * *

THE Dominion House was prorogued this week by Lord Minto, after being in session since March, a term of seven and a half months, which is by far the longest session ever held in Canada. During the sitting nine members of the two houses have died. The belief that there will be another session before the general elections are held is gaining ground. The date of the session will be in January it is said.

* * *

IT is reported that a syndicate of English capitalists are prepared to take up the charter of the Kootenay Central railway which will extend, from Golden on the mainline to Elko on the Crow line. The line will connect with the Great Northern system near Elko, thus weaving closer the network of railways in the Kootenays. The line will run through the Bull River country and no doubt the iron properties of that locality as well as the water power will be developed in consequence.

* * *

THE sum of two thousand dollars was voted during the last session of the late legislature to be expended on the streets of Fernie during the present year. Only two small improvements have as yet been made and the bulk of the money is as yet coming to us. It cannot be for the lack of opportunity that further improvements are withheld for there are streets in Fernie not yet opened up and others are in a deplorable condition. As for sidewalks the government has never been guilty of such extravagant expenditures in this town. As for this $2000 the money is ours and we should insist that every cent of it is spent for the purpose for which it was voted.

* * *

The Harold Nelson Co. are touring the west. They play at all the small towns along the line but give the metropolis the go-by. This is unfortunate as Mr. Nelson is a bright star of the theatrical stage and his is the only company that puts on plays with anything like the scenery that is seen in first class plays that visit the larger cities. The people of Fernie are themselves to blame for this apparent snub. As soon as they show a proper appreciation of first class shows, and turn down those which are of no account, the grievance will be remedied. These shows are out after business and the advance agents have a peculiar knack of finding out where business is likely to be good.

* * *

THE Alaskan award continues to be the chief topic of discussion in the press of Canada and with few exceptions the award is regarded as a diplomatic arrangement rather than a judicial decision, in which Canada's interests have been ignored and sacrificed. British feeling is undergoing a change if the press of the country is a criterion by which to judge. The London Times at first regarded the settlement as perfectlp fair but later it says. "We admit that it is regrettable that Lord Alverstone, after coming to a fresh conclusion about islets, failed to make the nature of his decision clear to his Canadian colleagues, but we believe the actual point of difference involved to be so exceedingly unimportant from a practical view point that we trust it will not stand in the way of an unreserved acceptance of the award by Canada.

* * *

THE police complain bitterly of the unchecked habit that many young boys of the town have of loitering and playing on the streets late into the night. As a matter of fact it is doubtful if the police have the power to stop the evil under the Provincial vagrancy act and until the town is incorporated and a curfew law is adopted the hands of the officers will be more or less tied. The condition is a deplorable one, which reflects with stern reproof upon the parents of those children that are allowed to roam about at will after they ought to be in bed. A prominent man said to us this week, "we are raising a lot of boys in this town who stand excellent chances of becoming first-rate criminals." Parents, keep your eye on your boys. When they are absent from your family circle ascertain the cause. Provide your boys with healthful amusement at home, and make them feel that home is the best place in the world to them.

Fresh Fruit

AND

Vegetables

arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert
Confectioner

J. C. Hutchison

Merchant Tailor

Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings.

We Guarantee Our Work.

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

"Follow the Leader."

Is the name of our new Exercise Books.

We lead in

School Supplies

and can furnish

Scribblers
Exercise Books
Note Books, &c

in immense variety.

Our line of READERS, etc., is complete.

Our "Blo-to-fil" Fountain Pen is a trade-winner

Fernie Drug Store.

N. E. SUDDABY.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase eighty acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 3062, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 274 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 20 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 20 chains to place of commencement.

249-8 VALANTIN ZINI

Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to th Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works a Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1903, thence from S. E. corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Little.

Cree & Hutchison

The Largest Real Estate Agents in East Kootenay.

FOR SALE

2 Victoria Avenue Lots.
House and Lot, $1,500.
Chicken Ranch, furnished House and 100 hens, $250.
House and Lot $2,000.
House and Lot $2,500.
Two cottages $800.
Three Timber Limits.
Six coal claims.

We can sell you reeal estate no matter where it is.

Don't forget that insurance—Do it now.

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.

By the Day, Week, or Month. Everything first-class.

WM. R. McDOUGALL.

The production of the Best Makers in the World are none too good for the people of Fernie.

Get the Best

by using

W. & R. Jacobs & Co.'s

Biscuits

Crow's Nest Trading Co'y

Lumbermen

Don't forget

We are Headquarters

Rubbers and German Sox.

Our stock consisting of 64 cases of the Canadian Rubber Co.'s goods, every pair guaranteed. It will pay you to Get Our Prices on rubber footwear before purchasing elsewhere as we are confident we can save you money. Reasonable Profits and Fair Treatment of our customers is what's bringing the trade to

Chas. Richards & Co.

Boilers and Engines.

ALSO

SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.

Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.

602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Ft. Steele, B. C. for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum upon the following described lands: beginning at a post marked D. Adams' south-west corner post which is situated along Fording river and four miles north of the northern boundary of Lot 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district B. C. and which corner post is near the south-east corner post of F. T. Griffin's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 814, thence from said south-west corner of D. Adams east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

249-4 D. ADAMS

Located by W. Bovin, Sept, 18th, 1903.

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

The Best Is None Too Good For the People of Fernie

WE aim to supply the very best in every line of meats

Fish, Game and Poultry always on hand.

We receive WEEKLY SHIPMENTS of Choice Dairy Butter and Eggs - - - -

Calgary Cattle Co.

LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY

MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

Tonight is All Hallows eve.

Girl Wanted—Apply Mrs. J. A. Rennie.

A. E. Keys, of Macleod, was in town this week.

Blake Wilson, of Nelson, was in town this week.

G. A. Leitch, of Jaffray was in Fernie on Tuesday.

J. G. Cummings, of Fort Steele, was in town this week.

Dr. McSorley, of Michel, was in Fernie on Wednesday.

Mrs. Tonkin is giving a Hallowe'en party this evening.

F. Clapp, Cranbrook, paid a business visit to Fernie on Wednesday.

J. R. Martin, assistant timber inspector of Nelson, was in town yesterday.

W. & R. Jacob & Co's. biscuits are the best. Crows Nest Trading Co.

Mrs. Jas. Rice, of Grands Forks, is visiting Mrs. Carmichael in town.

Messrs. D. Hayes and R. Quance, of Elkmouth, were in town on Tuesday.

Mrs. Fred Drew, of Kimberly, was the guest of Mrs. Brown for the past week.

We buy and exchange new and second hand furniture. B. C. Furniture Co. 4t

Mrs. Herchmer gave an afternoon tea to a large number of her friends on Tuesday.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

51 different kinds of biscuits to choose from. Give them a trial. Crows Nest Trading Co. x

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Wilson, of Michel, were visiting friends in town before leaving for their new home in Moncton, N. B.

ROOMS TO LET.—Comfortable rooms over Sheppard & Elliott's hardware store. Apply F. J. Watson. x

Lou Dillon broke the world's trotting record to wagon at Memphis, Tenn., on Wednesday, doing the mile in 2 minutes flat.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

Night School

Learn to write a good hand. Learn Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. Our methods are up-to-date. Class room 1st door west of Methodist church. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

A report current on the streets last week and published in our news columns of last issue to the effect that McLaren's mill near Blairmore was burned is incorrect. The report evidently originated from the fact that prairie fires were burning all around it. The mill however was saved.

For Sale—I have the following in use at my saw mill, Blairmore, which will be for sale at the end of sawing season, 1st. December. Two boilers 50 h.p. on skids, with 50 feet of smoke stack: also one McGregor, Gourlay & Co's planer and matcher, with double cylinder, ane one Economist planer. Particulars can be had by writing Peter McLaren, Macleod, Alta.

A runaway in which the delivery rig of C. Richards & Co. figured conspicuously occurred near the Victoria corner on Tuesday evening. The horse became frightened and its sudden dash for liberty threw the delivery boy to the ground. The horse ran around the corner to its stables where the waggon was upset. The boy has a swollen leg as a result of the wheel passing over it.

A new post office has been created at Coal Creek mines, under the name of Coal Creek. W. W. Thompson, manager of The Trites-Wood Co. store at that point, has been appointed postmaster. Necessary papers were forwarded by the department this week and the office will be opened on Nov. 1st. It is expected that on the start the office will be largely dependent on the Fernie office.

Nine boys ranging in age from 15 years down were brought up before Stipendiary Magistrate Forbes yesterday on information laid by Solicitor H. W. Herchmer charging them with disturbing a public meeting on Oct. 19 The names of the boys were, Robert Ferguson, John Todhunter, Percy Graham, Wm. McDougall, Arthur Chapman, Roddie Dunlap, Alfred Howard, Stanley Todhunter and Albert Todhunter. The magistrate after lecturing the boys severely allowed them to go on suspended sentence.

A special meeting of the Mountain Lumbermen's Manufacturing Association was held in Nelson on Monday and Tuesday. Messrs. D. V. Mott and A. McDougall were present from Fernie and G. Moffatt, from Morrissey. One of the important measures taken by the meeting was the appointment of a committee to deal with the matter of asking for a duty on American lumber. A. Leitch, of Granbrook, the president of Association, in his address stated that he employed about 500 men in his business.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Jas. McEvoy is laid up with an attack of lumbago.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

W. R. Ross returned on Monday from attending the assizes at Nelson.

The Ladies Guild of Christ Church will hold their annual bazaar on Dec. 3rd.

Robert Black, of the McRae Lumber Company is suffering from an attack of appendicitis.

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

J. Cosgrove was in town this week making arrangements for an appearance of his company in Fernie.

H. T. Ceperley, the well-known Vancouver insurance man, was in Fernie several days this week looking up his business in the town.

J. S. Clute, of New Westminister, collector of customs for B. C. was in town on Monday and Tuesday inspecting the office at this point.

The commercial travellers have been here in full force during the past two weeks. The Royal which is the headquarters for this trade has had its capacity taxed to the utmost.

An error was made in our last issue in a paragraph re the transfer of the Muskoka hotel. Instead of A. Johnson it should read C. E. Johnson. Mr. Johnston comes from Phoenix.

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church will give another of their popular teas at the residence of Mrs. (Dr.) Bonnell on Tuesday next from 3 to 6 p m. All are cordially invited to attend.

The Minto Club held its second dance on Monday evening. The event proved a great success, there being about 35 couples present and all enjoyed themselves. The club holds its next dance on Nov. 10th.

Miss Dora Beck left on Thursday evening for her home at Ponoka, Alta., where she will reside with her parents. On the evening prior to her departure a party in her honor was held at the home of Mrs. Dudley.

HE LEARNED A GREAT TRUTH.

It is said of John Wesley that he once said to Mistress Wesley: "Why do you tell that child the same thing over and over again?" "John Wesley, because once telling is not enough." It is for this same reason that you are told again and again that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cures colds and grip; that it counteracts any tendency of these diseases to result in pneumonia, and that it's pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Grand Torch Light Parade

and free entertainment will be given under the auspices of Fernie L.O.L. No. 1713, of Fernie.

Princess Hall

November 5

EVFRYBODY WELCOME-COME ONE, COME ALL.

Ball After Entertainment.

$1.50 per couple.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

The Muskoka Hotel,

....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

C. H. Whelan, Manager.

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

Something Worth Knowing

All Goods Purchased from

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

carry a guarantee of entire satisfaction to our customers or money refunded——We purchase from the best markets in the world, always in Car Lots for Spot Cash, and therefore can sell you better goods for less money than any other House——No occasion to send away for any goods, as all our departments are brim full of this season's goods, fresh, new, and up-to-date.

Our Grocery Department

has made big strides lately and has been successful in reaching the top——It is our intention that with Quality and Price in your favor, and courteous treatment on our part, to merit your patronage which we assure you will always be appreciated.

S P E C I A L

AS A LEADER we will sell for a few days:

1 Large Tin Fresh or Smoked Halibut	10c.
1 Large Tin Baking Powder	10c.
1 pound Tin Special Blend Mocha and Java Coffee	40c.
8 Tins Condensed Cream	$1.00

Oranges, Lemons, Plums, Celery and all kinds of Garden Vegetables in Stock Get our prices for your winter supply.

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

Departmental Stores——Fernie—Michel — Morrissey — Coal Creek

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

"Herbageum"

For Horses, Cattle & Poultry.

"International Stock Food."

Three Feeds for One Cent.

A. W. Bleasdell

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

A. S. EMPY'S

...Restaurant

Wardner, B. C.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river: thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

GRAND TRUNK PLANS

WHAT IS BEING DONE ON WESTERN DIVISION.

President Hays Lets the Public Know What His Company is Doing Towards the Construction of the New Transcontinental Road.

Mr. C. M. Hays, general manager of the Grand Trunk, has made the following announcement regarding the plans for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific road:

"The Grand Trunk Pacific incorporation act having been passed by the senate and the amendments offered therein concurred in by the House, the bill is now only awaiting the royal assent to place the matter in a position where the company can be organized and take definite form to inaugurate the necessary action preparatory to underlying the obligations entered into by the company with the government.

"The reconnaissance survey is proceeding vigorously and in fact has been in progress since early last spring. We have between fifteen and twenty parties in the field, some of whom have about completed the work on their division. Others will keep on all through the winter.

"Great care is being taken with a view to obtaining a line with a minimum grade, not to exceed fourtenths per cent., with no greater than two or three degrees, and on some portions of the route where the country is comparatively unknown and owing to the lack of transportation where fair supplies are difficult to obtain, progress is not as rapid as would otherwise be the case.

"As to plans for construction, and the points at which a beginning will be made, that is dependent upon the completion of surveys.

"We have the territory well covered. The first parties we sent out, which were started before the government policy as to the eastern division was developed, were located between Winnipeg and North Bay, the theory being that was the section of the country that was most in need of additional facilities.

"While it is undoubtedly true that for several years to come a large proportion of the grain crop of the Northwest will move out by water during the season of navigation, there is to-day a very considerable quantity moving during the winter months by rail north of Lake Superior, and this quantity will be increased in a constantly growing volume as rail facilities for the economical and expeditious movement of the traffic are provided.

"The new line with its four-tenths per cent. grade will have a great advantage in this respect.

"Our surveying parties are also well distributed across the territory from Winnipeg and the construction of that portion of the line will be pushed as soon as the results of our survey are known; as also the construction of the branches from a port on Lake Superior (which port is yet to be determined) to a junction with the eastern division, and a line from North Bay north, also intersecting the eastern division.

"As to the plans and intentions in connection with the work on the eastern division, I will have to refer you to the government, that portion of the undertaking being, as you are aware, in their control.

"You ask within what time the line will be completed, and replying thereto will state, of course, while this is dependent upon conditions generally, the results of surveys, the situation as regards labor, the movement of supplies and material, it is not likely that the road will be completed short of five years."

From another official source it was learned that the western portion of the road will be built by the Grand Trunk Pacific and the work will be done by contracts.

Tenders are being asked for of contractors. It is not yet decided definitely where the Pacific terminus of the line will be. Port Simpson, B. C., has been most frequently spoken of, bdt it is now known that the Butte inlet, and at least one other port in Brit'sh Columbia have been considered. Just will be chosen depends upon the reports made by the surveyors.

A Fast Electric Train.

An electric car on the Marienfelde-Zossen experimental line, Germany, has reached a speed of 125 4-5 miles an hour, or a kilometer more than the previous highest record. The machinery and road bed were unimpaired. The engineers are determined to try for still higher speeds, and venture the opinion that they will be able to attain the rate of 140 miles an hour.

The current was between 13,000 and 14,000 volts, capable of driving the car at the rate of 200 miles. This power is reduced by transformers to about 450 volts. The car used had four motors, having altogether about 1,100 horse power. It was the car used in previous tests this year, and is constructed on the Siemens-Halske system. Another car of somewhat different equipment as to motors and transformers has been built for additional high speed tests. A French observer remarked that the new sensation of the power of velocity, inspired by the car's flight was worth travelling from Paris to see. The lives of all on board the experimental car were heavily insured.

The Italian cabinet has resigned.

English elections are expected next Easter.

A terrific wind blew down the Brandon general hospital annex on Wednesday night last.

"Wearer's Protection"

Could the makers of the Slater Shoe dare imperil the value of a $250,000 trademark by putting out unworthy shoes bearing their brand? And the value of that brand represents the difference between the protection of the wearer of unknown shoes and the famous Goodyear Welted

Slater Shoe

For Men — $4.00 $5.00 — For Women

Sole Agents :-- JOYCE BRO'S., FERNIE, B. C.

THINK IT IS GHOSTS.

Some Mysterious Disappearances in a Yorkshire Home.

The united efforts of ten chemists and policemen have so far failed to solve the mystery of the disappearing loaves, over which the whole of the West Riding of Yorkshire is deeply excited, says a cable from London. For nearly eight months a large family in Beverly has had to go breadless every morning because the loaves baked at night had decayed or shrunk almost to nothingness. Efforts to solve the matter have eliminated any question of human or rodent agency. The only resource has been to accuse spooks or hobgoblins of playing tricks.

The Webster family, to which this strange occurrence has been manifested, is one of unquestioned respectability and honesty. One evening last March, Mrs Webster baked bread and placed it on a stone floor to cool. In the morning it looked as if it had been gnawed by rats mice. Next night the bread was placed on a high shelf in a dairy inaccessible to rodents. The same thing happened, and the crumbling continued.

Another kind of flour was used; the loaves still dwindled. This went on for some time. There were no servants in the household. Mrs. Webster suspected a practical joke, placed fresh bread in a closed pan, set a rat trap inside, another on the lid, sprinkled flour on the dairy floor, and not only locked the door, but stretched two lengths of cotton across it. In the morning she found the threads undisturbed, the floor unmarked, and the rat trap undisturbed, but one of the loaves had entirely disappeared and the other had dwindled to half its original size.

For nearly three months the Websters kept the mystery to themselves, but the situation became desperate and uncanny, so they called in a policeman and put him in sole charge of the dairy. For several days the same thing happened, and loaves secreted in various places about the house dwindled in the same way. The microscopes of the chemists revealed the presence of no microbes or fungus, the bread being pronounced absolutely pure.

To avoid this lamentable waste of bread, Mrs. Webster began to bake cakes for her household. She was relieved to find that, though they lay side by side with the blighted bread on the dairy shelf, they showed no sign of harmful contact except when the last crumb of bread had disappeared, when they were attacked. So now she is reduced to the necessity of baking bread for the voracious goblin, or whatever it is, in order to have cakes enough to go round in the morning.

Chinamen Will Hang.

A dispatch from Vancouver says: The two rich Chinamen, of Big Bar, on the Fraser, who paid a poverty stricken countryman to take the onus of the murder of Ah Chee, in which all three participated, have had their scheming brought to naught. At the Clinton assizes the three were found guilty of the crime and Chief Justice Hunter sentenced them to hang on Dec. 4.

Sack Chun, the man who was paid by Ah Gum and Gum Tai to swear away his own life, ttuck to his story at the trial. But the little wizened up old fellow was obviously physically incapable of slaying the two hundred pound Ah Chee and dragging his body unaided a considerable distance and throw it into the Fraser, as was done on the night of the murder. Circumstantial evidence went strongly to show that Ah Gum and Gum Tai had no small part in the crime. Superintendent of Police Hussey also told of damaging statements they had made to him. No witnesses were produced for the defence. The jury was only out twenty minutes and returned with a verdict of guilty.

"Victory" Had a Narrow Escape.

Portsmouth, England, Oct. 23.—Nelson's old flagship, the Victory, was nearly sunk in Portsmouth harbor this morning by the battleship Neptune. The battleship Hero and some minor craft were also damaged.

In the Mining Camp

With the Victor Brand of Evaporated Cream the miner in his camp and the lumbermen in his shanty can have all the good things to eat and drink that would be possible with a Jersey cow in the outfit.—For purity, richness and keeping qualities "Victor" is unequalled.

Sold by all Grocers, Dealers and Outfitters.

Mfd. by The Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P. E. I.

The Neptune, which was being towed into Portsmouth preparatory to being taken to the Thames to be broken up, broke adrift and ran amuck. After desperate efforts the Neptune was secured by the Hero, but not before the former had knocked a six-foot hole in the Victory's port quarter. The Virtory's lower decks were flooded, and she began to settle, the crew standing at quarters, but the arrival of tugs enabled the old flagship to be kept afloat until she was docked.

NEWS NOTES.

Hon. Wm. Edward Lecky, the British historian, died on October 23.

The Manitoba university sports were held on Friday last, Manitoba college landing the championship.

Port Arthur's tax rate for the year is 24 mills; local franchises have yielded good profits.

An advance of 23 per cent. is noted in Winnipeg bank clearings, the total being $6,608,000.

The cost of the recent Alaska boundary arbitration is estimated to be close on $400,000. Canada spent nearly $200,000 preparing the case and the fees of British lawyers. The United States expenditure is about $100,000.

The sum of 5,000,000 in gold was landed at Plymouth, England, on Oct. 23 from Bombay. This is the largest shipment ever brought to England on one steamer.

The Edinburgh Scotsman says that Chamberlain moves from success to success. The most remarkable feature of the situation is that outside party politics pure and simple, there is no real hostility to his scheme. Nowhere is there a shadow of a sign that the workingmen of the country are opposed to the new fiscal policy as outlined by the late colonial secretary.

In spite of the fact that W. H. Lever, of Birkenhead, near Liverpool, has denied having any intention to challenge for the America's cup, the fact that he has asked George L. Watson if he would undertake the work of designing and superintending a cup challenger is now admitted indisputable. Mr. Watson has neither definitely declined nor accepted and this, possibly, explains Mr. Lever's denial.

The Shamrocks are the Rugby champions of Winnipeg.

Lou Dillon has lowered the world's mile trotting record to 1.58¼.

The Union Stock Yards Co., of Winnipeg, has been incorporated.

Portage la Prairie hockeyists desire the senior schedule extended.

St. John, N.B., harbor has been found inadequate for the C. P. R. liners.

None of the medical journals comments on this circular.

TEACHERS IN TROUBLE.

Accused of Frauds in Connection With Timber Limits.

A row in the Minneapolis board of education has disclosed a sensation in connection with timber frauds in Washington.

During the early summer, under contract with a Minneapolis man, the Great Northern road sent west in one week 75 school teachers of Minneapolis to file on homesteads containing timber. They filed principally in the Chelan district.

The matter was kept quiet. The teachers returned, but a few were dissatisfied, and they did not resign their positions in the schools. Within a few weeks the teachers have applied for an absence of two weeks, offering substitutes. This resulted in inquiry. Finally 30 were allowed to go on representation that they had valuable interests at stake. Now it is openly asserted that the school teachers were employed by a lumber syndicate, the intention being to commute the homesteads to a preemption claim at the end of three months and deed the land to the synemption claim at the end of 14 dicate for premiums ranging from $500 to $1,500 each. It was because some of the teachers secured $1,500 claims while others did not that the disclosures occurred, those securing the smaller claims returning home in a huff.

Advices from Washington are to the effect that warrants are on the way and that wholesale arrests of lumber kings and their tools will be made in a few days. The land in question is valued for its timber at from $40 to $100 an acre.

Medical Ethics in England.

A question of medical ethics has been brought before the public by a letter from the secretary of the British Medical association respecting mention in the newspapers of the names of the physicians in attendance upon distinguished invalids.

Some time ago a surgeon whose name had thus been given in a paragraph in the leading London journals wrote to the editor asking that in the future his name be struck out from such notes, and enquiring as to the possibility of a general rule being adopted of omitting the names of medical men. The editor intimated that he would make such a rule if recommended by the medical profession. Thereupon the British Medical Association, which, the secretary points out, is the executive of a society including nineteen thousand members of the profession, took the matter up and passed the following resolution:

That a circular be sent to the principal London newspapers, deprecating the mention in paragraphs relating to the illness of persons other than members of the royal family, or the names of the medical men in attendance.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

She suddenly turned round, trotted back some distance, turned in a farm lane, and came back into the turnpike beyond the toll-gate, where the ditch at the side of the road was not too deep to cross. The light cart was, however, nearly upset. The servant muttered something between his teeth; she did not seem to notice it. Lucie held on to the edge of the seat with all her might; she looked paler than ever, but not a word of fear passed her lips. With a touch of the whip Hella sprung into a gallop, which soon turned into a fast trot, and at last at the end of the road the towers of the town were visible against the sky. A few minutes later the wagon was rattling over the pavements of the quiet streets, and stopped before the only inn of any importance in the place, the Hotel of the Golden Trout. The animal was trembling and covered with foam. Hortense had no eye for the favorite she had always hitherto so petted and cared for. A waiter, half drunk with sleep, came out of the half-lighted gate-way, and the porter rang the bell.

"Is Herr Weber, of Wottersdorf, here?"

"No, madame."

The hand holding the reins dropped down. "Not here—really not here?" she repeated, in a voice full of pain.

"No."

She turned round and they retraced their way.

"Madame is taking the wrong road. We can never get to C— with Hella; it is over three miles," the servant ventured to expostulate, as they turned to the right in leaving the town. She must have seen he was right, for she turned the animal back. "She limps badly, madame."

It was so, indeed. "This ought not to have happened," she muttered. Slowly, as if it were a funeral, they drove the two miles back in the cool night air. By the time they arrived at Wottersdorf the gray light of morning was over the park and the castle; the sparrows were chattering in the chestnut-trees, and there was moving about in the court-yard. Damp and chilled from the dew and night air, they hastened into the house. Hortense retired again to her room, and Lucie ordered tea. She then went to her room to put on a warmer dress. Just then a paper rustled in her pocket, and she recollected, with a start of horror, the sick old man in Hohenberg; but still she dared not tell Hortense. She wrote a dispatch, asking how he was to-day, saying Herr Weber was away, Hortense not well, and she had therefore postponed telling her, and begging for news.

She then went to Hortense's room and sat down gently by her.

Feverish and exhausted, the young wife lay on the sofa. Frau Nein looked in every now and then with an anxious expression.

Not a word was exchanged between the two friends. As the first rays of the rising sun streamed in the window, Hortense seized the girl's hand.

"Pray for me—I can not!"

Lucie took down Hortense's little black velvet book of prayers, in which was a text for each day in the year. She opened it at September 8th. "Be faithful unto death." Strangely enough, it was the text of their marriage sermon. The young wife turned away, her hands covering her face, and remained motionless. An unnatural stillness was over everything; the servants went about on tiptoe, as if there were a death in the house. In the dining-room there was a subdued sound of plates and cups, and old Frau Nein put her head shyly in at the door.

"Fraulein, whatever may happen, do eat something, and make madame eat, too. Man must eat and drink, however much he has to bear."

Lucie took a few mouthfuls of tea; Hortense refused everything.

Who can say how such hours as these pass? It was morning — it was noon. In the master's room there was the same picture, two silent women with an agony of anxiety weighing them down, making them feel as if they were on the edge of a precipice and the least movement might dislodge the little earth on which their feet rested, and dash them down with itself. Occasionally Hortense would start; it would seem to her that she heard a wagon. At last Lucie sent Frau Nein up to the tower room, and the old woman stood there with her hand shading her eyes from the dazzling September sun, and gazed toward a little eminence over which the turnpike passed, and where she could perhaps descry her master's carriage. Good heavens! what a sad fate was hanging over them! She did not believe the story Fraulein Walter had told her; she had lived too long in the world and gone through too much. Pheasant shooting! Yes, yes, she knew about that; she had seen that kind of shooting; from such a hunt she had once seen one of the sportsmen brought back stiff and lifeless. It had been called an unhappy accident.

"God protect our master from such an unhappy accident. That bad man that Kostan!"

At last something came over the mountains, and kept moving slowly toward them. The old woman had sharp eyes; she thought she recognized horses and carriage, only it puzzled her that Johann drove so slowly, it was not like him. She stood, and stood. Yes, it was the sorrels, who looked thin and hungry, but could go so fast. She hurried down the narrow stairs, and made signs behind the portieres to Lucie with a mysterious manner. "What is it?" asked Hortense, who felt Lucie had risen from her side, a deathly anxiety showing itself on her face.

"I think—the carriage," said Lucie; and she, too, felt all the blood rushing to her heart.

Hortense tried to rise, but her strength failed her; she remained sitting, her head turned toward the door. The dark-blue scarf round her neck rose and fell with her rapid breathing as she grasped with both hands the arm of the sofa. The wheels crunched the gravel of the road, and then all was still. After awhile steps came up the stairs.

The young wife was on her feet in a moment and rushed to the door; she heard his voice outside.

"Only a slight accident, my good Frau Nein; nothing more. Where is my wife?"

The portieres closed quickly behind Lucie as she hastened through the dining-room into her room. She heard a cry, half sob, half delight, of "Waldemar! oh, Waldemar!" such a cry as could only come from a heart that had looked at death and suddenly sees happy life before it.

CHAPTER XXXI.

She stood a moment bewildered in her cozy rose-colored room, then bolted the door behind her. It had ended as they all had prophesied — Hortense had turned from her. What should she do? She began to take her things out of the drawers and her dresses from the wardrobes, and threw them over a chair. They could be sent after her—only let her go as soon as possible.

"Fraulein, may I disturb you?" called Frau Nein; "the doctor wants some old linen."

She stood irresolute a moment, then came out with the keys.

"You know, Frau Nein, where it is. I—"

"You look dreadful," cried the old woman, anxiously. "Do lie down and take a little rest. You know the master has had a shot in his arm, not dangerous, but painful — an unfortunate accident while shooting — oh, yes, of course. One may thank God that this 'pheasant shooting' has had no worse consequences."

As she said these last words she was at the end of the corridor and disappeared through a door.

Lucie kept thinking and thinking as she collected what was necessary for a journey, braided her hair, and washed her face with cold water. She felt so cold and indifferent, as if something were dead within her. Should she go to George—at least for the present?

If he would not take her in, then she had a school friend in the village who had lately married. She would give her a home for a few days.

Frau Nein brought back the keys. Lucie put them in the basket, did up the account books, and took the little house money she had from the drawer; then she seated herself at the desk to write a few lines to Hortense. The train that she must take did not go until evening; she would walk to the station; it was only about half an hour's walk. It would be impossible for her to take leave. Besides, it was already afternoon; nobody had asked for her all this time. She put her things all in order. Only her water-proof, her little hand-bag, and her umbrella were ready to take with her. Then she seated herself idly at the window and gazed with burning eyes at the splashing water bubbling out of the upturned amphore held by the faun with the cunning expression standing in the midst of the group of nymphs.

At last it was time to go.

She went to the glass, and was putting on her hat when a door opened behind her and she saw in the mirror Hortense's face, her eyes wide open with surprise.

"What are you doing, Lucie?" and her eyes wandered over the little preparation for a journey.

The girl turned.

"I am going, as I promised you."

"Lucie!" cried the young wife, her voice full of pain, "has a word spoken in despair hurt you so deeply that you cannot forgive it?" And bursting into tears she threw her arms round the girl's neck. "Stay with us; we both love you so much! I was crazy when I thought he had turned from me. I know it now so well since these last few hours, since last night, that I have never lost my place in his heart. Forgive me, and let me atone for what I have done."

[CONTINUED.]

A Magnate.

"Is he very rich?"

"Rich? Why, he's so rich he daren't look twice at a girl for fear she'll bring a breach of promise suit."

When you dance don't avoid the fiddler next day, hoping he will forget to present his bill. The fiddler never forgets.—Atchison Globe.

Fatal Words.

McJigger—Poor fellow! He's terribly cut up because Miss Oldenritch rejected him.

Thingumbob—Rejected him! I thought she'd jump at a proposal.

McJigger—She was going to, but first she asked him if he would love her when she was old, and he absent mindedly replied, "I do."—Brooklyn Life.

A Bavarian Holiday.

South Germans seize upon every possible excuse for a holiday. At a Bavarian village not long ago a postman who had served twenty-five years was made the hero of a celebration which consisted of a procession followed by a concert and a banquet lasting till late at night.

Mid-Pacific Harbors.

It is generally conceded that Pearl harbor, in the Hawaiian group, and that of Pango-Pango, in the Samoan, are far the best if not the only valuable harbors in all the mid-Pacific.

London Store Detectives.

The women who are employed as detectives in London department stores receive about $10 a week or twice as much as the saleswomen. When a woman is caught stealing the usual method is for the detective to ask to see her bill just before it is paid and to add the cost of the stolen article.

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

NIAGARA'S RELICS.

Museum Is the Aim of the Old Town's Historical Society—A Valuable Canadian Collection.

There are few places in Canada as full of the traditions of the past as Niagara, and the Niagara Historical Society is doing an important work in collecting and preserving those of a material character. It has chosen the 17th of September as its anniversary, because on that day in the year 1792 the first Parliament of Upper Canada met at Niagara-on-the-Lake. The settlement was at first called West Niagara, then Butlersburg, from the leader of the Rangers, whose name has been preserved in Butlers Barracks. Col. Simcoe, who was made the first Governor, changed the name again to Newark, and that became the first capital of Upper Canada. In the short space of seven years the society has made one of the best collections of historical documents and articles in Ontario; it has placed eight stone posts to mark historic spots, and has printed ten pamphlets, all bearing on the early and vital history of Canada. The credit for the work that has been done to preserve from oblivion these relics of the past is chiefly due to the President, Miss Janet Carnochan.

There is much doubt as to where the first sitting of Parliament was held, but the weight of testimony is in favor of the old wooden building still standing and known as Navy Hall. The Parliament first met on Sept. 17, 1792, and The Upper Canada Gazette published there says that on June 4, 1793, Governor Simcoe held a levee at Navy Hall And so the probability is that Navy Hall was the meeting place. It is certain that many of the official documents of the early part of the year were dated from the hall. The building is still standing, though in a sadly dilapidated condition. The worst wrench was given by a farmer who used the hall as a stable. Through the efforts of the society the attention of the Government was called to this, and the farmer was ordered to vacate, but in doing so he tore down a portion of one wall in order to carry out his cattle stalls. If this is really the first seat of constitutional Government in Upper Canada, more than the antiquarian will approve of its rescue from destruction.

The stone markers which have been placed are: (1) The site of the first burial of Sir Isaac Brock, Fort George, 1812-1824; (2) site of military council and Indian council house; (3) site of Gleaner printing office, 1817, and of Masonic Hall, 1792; (4) site of Government House, burned in 1812; (5) spot of burial of bodies of three soldiers who fell in battle, May 27, 1813; (6) residence of Count de Puisaye, built in 1798; (7) site of Navy Hall and first Parliament House; (8) Court House of Counties of Lincoln, Welland and Haldimand, 1847.

Among the pamphlets which the society has issued are: (1) Taking of Fort George by Col. Cruikshank, edition exhausted; (2) slave rescue, Fort Niagara, centennial poem; (3) blockade of Fort George, Col. Cruikshank; (4) Memorial to U.E. Loyalists, battle of Queenston Heights; (5) historic houses; (6) Niagara library, 1800-1820, early schools, by Janet Carnochan; (7) historic buildings; (8) family history, by Wm. Kirby, F.R.S.C.

The collection of the society, numbering over 1,600 articles, is now in a small room on the second floor of the old Court House. It includes books and papers printed in Niagara or relating thereto, starting with The Upper Canada Gazette of July 3, 1794, a large number of portraits, pictures, maps and drawings which have proved of great assistance in settling disputed points of historical interest, military clothing, weapons, household utensils, Indian and other relics. One result of the energetic president's researches has been to show that St. Mark's Church was built in 1804, and not in 1792, as stated on the brass tablet set in the wall.

Notwithstanding the inconvenience of location, the collection has been inspected every year by thousands, and forms a valuable addition to the historic memories of the place. The space, however, is altogether too limited to permit of proper exhibition and arrangement, and there is always the danger of fire.

Recently the following were appointed a committee to devise steps for obtaining a suitable building for the collection from private sources, the municipal authorities and the Government: Miss Carnochan, President; C. C. James, David Boyle, John Ross Robertson, Mrs. H. Thompson, Dr. Withrow, Mayor Aikens, R. E. Denison, W. Kirby, H. Pafford, Alfred Ball, A. Servos, A. W. Wright.

Minnows in Milk.

A well-known Grand Rapids milkman was recently made the victim of a cruel joke by a fisherman friend who happened to be passing the milkman's wagon just as that worthy man was dodging around the corner of a house with a bottle of lacteal fluid. The fisherman had a pint or so of minnows in an oyster can. Quickly he dumped the little fish into the milk tank and fled. Patrons that morning were dazed to find the finny little fellows in the seasoning of their coffee provided by their faithful purveyor, and nearly mobbed him before the truth came out.

Not Out of the Ordinary.

Cadley—I must confess I was pretty cranky yesterday. Did the girls say anything about it?

Kandor—Oh, no!

Cadley—Strange they didn't notice my behavior.

Kandor—I guess they didn't see anything unusual about it.—

FALLING FROM ALOFT.

Peculiar Exemption of Sailor Men From Accidents of This Kind.

"One of the wonders of seafaring life," writes Charles Protheroe in "Life In the Mercantile Marine," is the singularly small proportion of sailors who meet with death or accident by falling from aloft. Whether or no the cherub who is supposed to sit aloft and watch over poor Jack is responsible for it I am not prepared to say, but the fact remains.

"Having to tumble up aloft at all hours and in all weathers to perform acrobatic feats that would almost puzzle a monkey, the saying among sailors about 'hanging on by the eyebrows' becomes almost a truism.

"One would think the situation was highly spiced enough by danger without needlessly increasing it. Yet it is not altogether an uncommon thing to see a man, if he happens to be barefooted, run out along the yard in preference to using the footrope placed under it for the purpose, to reach what is a post of honor, the weather earring.

"In spite of all this, although not knowing the actual percentage, I make bold to say that not more than one sailor man in hundreds is killed or injured by falling from aloft. If I use my own experience as a base, the proportion would be less, for in over twenty years of sea life I was never caused the pain of witnessing such a catastrophe."

Parents as Teachers.

Of all the teaching in the world ninety-nine one-hundredths at least is done by fathers and mothers. Every child learns more in the way of actual facts from the day of its birth until the end of its seventh year than it can possibly learn in all the rest of its life put together. During these first hours and years of life the child learns to walk, to talk, and, what is far more important, it learns the beginnings of self control. During the first years the child puts itself in touch with the world into which it is born, and in these early years the parents, and the mother especially, are the teachers. They start the operations of the mind, giving it its first bent. And however able the teachers of the future may be, however conscientious and learned, in the great majority of cases the child's future, its success or failure, depends upon the first teaching influences of the mother and father.

A Live Oak Too.

The bride was fair and slight and the bridegroom was dark and stalwart. They made a most interesting pair, and the people on the long distance train who had watched them more or less openly from San Francisco were cheered by the sight of a shower of rice which fell out of the bride's parasol two days later.

The bridegroom saw the smiles, and, putting his arm round his blushing wife, he faced the carful of friendly strangers.

"I reckon there's no need for me to say we haven't been married long," he announced in full chest tones, "but I can tell you one thing. You don't want to smile any more than 's polite, for she's my violet and I'm her sheltering oak, and I weigh 204 pounds."

A Quaint Examination.

Silence, it appears, is an unknown quantity at a divinity examination in Mandalay. The commencement is signaled by the clashing of cymbals and the beating of drums. While the candidates are writing their answers they are surrounded by a jabbering crowd, who pass audible remarks about what is being done. The test lasts ten days, and the people make the examination the occasion for gaining merit by feeding the candidates, and cart loads of provisions of all sorts find their way to the pagoda precincts, and Burmans from every quarter go round collecting money to provide the competitors with the necessaries of life and luxuries as well.

The Death of Mark Antony.

Mark Antony gave the world for a woman's love, but found himself so poorly compensated by the exchange that in desperation at the approach of Octavius and being informed that Cleopatra was endeavoring to make terms for herself by surrendering him he stabbed himself with his dagger. Being revived, he received the message sent by Cleopatra that she desired to see him. He was carried to her place of refuge. Cleopatra and her maids raised him by ropes to the window of the tower where the fallen queen found her last home. He was lifted in and died in her arms.

Peculiarities of Fish.

There are two popular delusions about fish—one that they cannot live out of water and the other that they can live in any pure water, the food supply taking care of itself. As a matter of fact, there are fish in Africa which, having to exist in absolutely dry rivers for a portion of the year, have developed lungs, while in many an amateur's aquarium fish cannot live in the water provided owing to lack of food.—London Field.

Reasonably Certain.

"I understand old Skinflint has got religion."

"It's possible."

"Do you really think so?"

"Well, if Skinflint and religion have come together at all I think it is safe to say that he has got religion. There certainly is nothing to indicate that religion has got him."

The same boy who is taught to believe that the drumstick is the best part of the turkey grows up to imagine that his wife always gives in to him.—New York Press.

WHEAT
OATS — FLAX
BARLEY
SHIP to a strictly commission firm—THY
THOMPSON, SONS & CO.
Write to-day for particulars
GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS
Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?
If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction.
Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.
The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg.
Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.
S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,
GRAIN MERCHANTS,
TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. BOX 585
McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.
Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.
Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

DID HIM GOOD AND NO MISTAKE

What Simon V. Landry has to say of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

He was Weak, Run Down and a Total Wreck—Three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills put him to Work Again.

River Bourgeois, Richmond Co., Que., Oct. 19.—(Special)—Simon V. Landry, well known here, adds his testimony to the thousands of others all over Canada who owe their health and even life itself, to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I was bothered for over a year with Lame Back, Weak Back, Palpitation of the Heart and General Weakness," says Mr. Landry. "In fact I was a total wreck. I could not work as I got tired and weak so easily and I had a weakness in my stomach so that I could not bend down to do anything.

"I had tried different kinds of medicine without benefit till I gave Dodd's Kidney Pills a trial. From the first they did me good and I had only taken three boxes when I was able to start work again. They did me good and no mistake."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are known by their cures in every corner of Canada. They cure the Kidneys. Sound Kidneys ensure pure blood. Pure blood means good health, cheerfulness and abundant energy. That's how Dodd's Kidney Pills make new men and women out of run down, worn out people.

Water freezes every night of the year at Alto Crucero, in Bolivia, while at noonday the sun is hot enough to blister the flesh.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northron & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

The gem cannot be polished without friction, nor the man perfected without trials.

Lever's Y-Z (Wise Head) Disinfectant Soap Powder dusted in the bath, softens the water and disinfects.

There are people who seem to take more interest in our affairs than we do ourselves.

The man who is really great is willing to leave the discovery to other people.

Books are man's best friend: when they bore him he can shut them up without giving offense.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, etc.

A great decrease has been noted in Ireland in the number of prisoners sent to penal servitude during recent years. In 1892 there were 471; in 1901, 292, and in 1902, 270.

'TIS A MARVELLOUS THING.—When the cures effected by Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil are considered, the speedy and permanent relief it has brought to the suffering wherever it has been used, it must be regarded as a marvellous thing that so potent a medicine should result from the six simple ingredients which enter into its composition. A trial will convince the most skeptical of its healing virtues.

When a girl begins to speak of a male acquaintance as being a man after her own heart it's his fault if he doesn't get it.

But few women show discretion in the selection of things to be left unsaid.

What shrunk your woolens ?
Why did holes wear so soon ?
You used common soap.
SUNLIGHT SOAP REDUCES EXPENSE
Ask for the Octagon Bar.

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

Wheat—The wheat market has continued to advance during the past week, at least it has done so in the American speculative markets to a good extent, and in the European markets to a moderate extent. The present situation in the world's wheat markets, however, is an abnormal one, and the trade generally is at sea in its opinions regarding it. Dealers are in a large measure working their trade blindly. There are two sides to it, one being the domestic situation in the States, and the other the export or foreign position. In America there is the fact of a continuation of moderate primary receipts, with a very large portion of them grading low, so that the quantity of contract grades necessary for delivery on what are usually considered speculative sales is very small. Along with this the milling demand for the higher grades is very sharp, so that there is a strong market with advancing tendency. In contrast to the situation in America the European market is one of easiness. While America is busy keeping up prices within itself and advancing them so that the export is not half the size it was a year ago, other countries having plenty to spare have not been slow to supply European customers, and so well satisfied have they been to do so that although the American exports for the three months to end of September have been thirty million busheis less than for the same time last year, the world's shipments for the same periods show no falling off. The outcome of the situation must be that if Europe continues to get an ample supply from other countries prices for American wheat must come down to export value in order to dispose of the surplus. Russia, the Danube and India continue to ship large quantities to Europe, and as yet there is little sign of their supply slackening, but if a time should come in the next month or two that Europe will make a demand on America for wheat the market will advance further quickly and strong. Beyond the supplies from this year's crops there is the confident expectation of a continued large supply from the new crops of the southern hemisphere. In Australia the crop outlook is very promising. In Argentina the crops are doing well. This week it has been reported that there is frost in Argentina, but it would take very severe frost to do any harm to the crop at its present stage. In India the seeding of the new crop is progressing under favorable conditions. In the United States the progress of the winter wheat crop is also very satisfactory.

In Manitoba wheat there has been more activity this week and influenced by the course of the American markets prices are 1½ to 2c higher than a week ago. The grading of the cars moving eastward is very disappointing, and it is not likely to improve, the bulk of the wheat inspecting two and three northern. At the close of business Friday prices were 84½c 1 northern, 79c 2 northern, 75c 3 northern, 69c No. 4 wheat, 56 feed wheat, spot or October delivery. For delivery first half November prices are ½c under October delivery. Tough wheat has buyers at 78¼c tough 1 northern, 75c tough 2 northern. Foregoing quotations are all for instore Fort William or Port Arthur. Scoured or dried 1 northern is worth 81c, and 2 northern 75¼c in store King's elevator, Port Arthur.

WINNIPEG PRICES.

The following are the Winnipeg jobbing prices :—

Flour—Ogilvie's Hungarian, $2.35 per sack of 98 pounds; other grades accordingly.

Oats—No. 1 are worth 33@34c per bushel in car lots at Winnipeg; No. 2 white, 32c; feed grades, 29 to 30c. At country points farmers are getting from 23 to 25 cents for wagon loads.

Barley—Feed grades, 35 to 36c per bushel; or 28 to 30c at country points.

An Italian has invented a cloth which is quite impervious to any weapon. Shots from a revolver, which bored holes in a steel plate, could not affect it.

The female who is homely enough to stop a clock isn't a success when it comes to stopping a street car.

The fool says "I'll take things as they come," but the wise man goes after what he wants.

Some people think that, if they cannot be great themselves, it is almost the same thing to chum with a great man.

A great deal of knowledge, which is not capable of making a man wise, has a natural tendency to make him vain and arrogant.

Pinto Shell Cordovan Mitts and Gloves

—Toughest wear, flexible, warm, light
—Boil and scorch proof
—Rip and tear proof
—Rain and wind proof
—That's what H.B.K. Pinto Shell Cordovan mitts and gloves are —Made from the hide of the Western Bronco, the toughest animal with the toughest hide, light enough to make mitts and gloves.
—Sold by dealers everywhere.
Genuine only with this brand.
H.B.K. BRAND
Write for "Strayed," the funniest piece of literature ever written about a Bronco—Free

H. B. K. Warm Duck Coats

H.B.K Duck Coats are warm, hard wearing garments. They are made in scores of styles—fleece lined, mackinaw wool lined, leather reversible—high storm collars, large "Kantilever" unsagable pockets.

Made to keep out the wind and the cold, the rain and the sleet. Made to keep people warm
Branded with this brand.
Sold by up-to-date dealers everywhere.
H.B.K. BRAND

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.
MONTREAL. WINNIPEG.
MAKERS OF WARM WEARABLES FOR EVERYBODY

Mail Us Your Watch Order

We carry the largest stock of Watches and Clocks in Canada and can fill orders promptly by mail—just as well as though you shopped in person—giving you the best values on this continent. Here are a few items;

4311 Ladies' Solid Silver Case Watch, American Movement, $5 00
4349 Ladies' Gold Filled Watch, Waltham Movement, guaranteed to wear for 25 years, - - - - - - - 13 00
4312 Gents' 14 k. Gold Filled Extra Case Watch, A. Kent & Sons Jewelled Movement, - - - - - - 25 00
4320 Ladies' 14 k. Gold Case Watch, Richly Engraved, Full Jewelled Movement, - - - - - - - - 35 00

SEND FOR OUR NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE AND PRICE LIST

156 YONGE ST AMBROSE KENT & SONS LIMITED MANUFACTURING JEWELERS. TORONTO.

Recent statistics show that serpents kill more persons in India than in any other country. During 1901 the number of victims was 28,810, and it is estimated that almost, if not quite, as many were killed in 1902.

C. C. RICHARDS & CO.

Dear Sirs,—I have great faith in MINARD'S LINIMENT, as last year I cured a horse of Ring-bone with five bottles.

It blistered the horse, but in a month there was no ring-bone and no lameness.

DANIEL MURCHISON.
Four Falls, N. B.

To-day the empire of Japan has a population of 45,000,000. In other words, she contains 160 people within a square mile.

TESTED BY TIME.—In his justly-celebrated pills Dr. Parmelee has given to the world one of the most unique medicines offered to the public in late years. Prepared to meet the want for a pill which could be taken without nausea, and that would purge without pain, it has met all requirements in that direction, and it is in general use not only because of these two qualities, but because it is known to possess alterative and curative powers which place it in the front rank of medicines.

It may not be easier to coax a woman than it is to drive her, but it is safer.

If everybody told the truth in this world, what a miserable old place it would be.

A committee has now been formed in Paris to erect a public monument to the memory of the carrier pigeons that rendered such signal service during the siege of Paris.

A cotton umbrella often proves a better friend in a rainstorm than a silk parasol.

A friend is a man who can forget our faults, but few men have such bad memories.

Minard's Liniment Cures Dandruff.

As riches and favor forsake a man, we discover him to be a fool, but nobody could find it out in his prosperity.

He is a poor humorist whose jokes may be seen coming a mile off.

How many people believe us when we blame our fits of bad temper upon our sensitive nervous system.

Some people seem to find a great deal of comfort in the thought that they are misunderstood.

Three persons claim to have the field-glasses that Napoleon used on the field of Waterloo.

To Buy Toronto Street Railway.

A Toronto alderman has a scheme to buy the Street Railway when the franchise expires eighteen years hence. The gist of the proposal is that all the money received from the Street Railway Company, over and above what is required to pay the interest and sinking fund on the street railway pavement debt, should be put into a fund. The result of it, if adopted, will be that when the Toronto Railway Company's agreement expires the city will have $4,000,000 with which to purchase the rails, plant and equipment.

Exciting.

The City Boy—There isn't much excitement on a farm, is there, uncle?

Uncle Hi—Mm! Ye never teached a part weaned calf to drink out uv a pail, did ye?

Appropriate.

Mrs. Henpeck—I wonder why they always put a woman's head on coins?

Mr. Henpeck—Oh, well, money talks, you know.—Milwaukee Journal.

Equal to Your Ideas

Just what you want and exactly what you need; this is what you are sure to find in our entirely new fall importations of . . . . .

STEWART STOVES & RANGES

For HARD COAL or SOFT COAL

The Stewart Hot Air Blast

In the construction of this stove the use of A Patent Swinging Top Central Down-Draft Invention is employed, with the hot blast principle of forcing heated air upon the surface of the fuel, thus consuming the gases and more than two-thirds of the smoke and by that method utilizing those properties of combustion which heretofore were allowed to escape at the chimney flue. Soft coal is reduced to coke, making it an easy matter to keep fire and control it. It positively will save 33⅓ per cent. of the fuel. It is the cleanest of all solt coal stoves, and possesses the greatest radiating power. The stove is absolutely air-tight. A heavy fire pot and cast lining extending seven inches above same insures durability. Large space is provided for the accumulation of ashes, which can be easily removed through the front swinging draft door. The steel body is of extra thickness and made by the W. D. Wood cold rolled process. The feed opening in top is large and provided with lift-up cover. In ornamentation and finish the stove has no competitor. Very wide nickel plated top band. A special designed nickel plated foot rail. Nickel swing top cover. Nickel name plate. Nickel shaker. Elaborate urn.

No. 70	Weight	122 lbs.	Price	$15.00
" 71	"	156 lbs.	"	18.00
" 72	"	190 lbs.	"	22.00

STEEL PLATE RANGES

A FEW POINTS OF INTEREST

MANY REASONS may be advanced why our Steel Plate Ranges should receive fullest attention.

Amongst others we claim that THE STEEL PLATES used are several gauges heavier than usually used giving greater wearing quality.

THE DESIGN of ovens is such as to allow of full space being utilized.

OUR GUARANTEE

Our absolute guarantee goes with each and every range we sell. This guarantee covers satisfactory baking, heating of water and general cooking requirements.

A LOW-PRICED HEATER For COAL or WOOD

"The Bonny Oak"

HIGHLY FINISHE

Prices According to Size

$10.00 to $18.00

This cut does not do justice to our Leader. The

No. 9-18 MERIT RANGE

WITH

6 Holes, Enameled Reservoir and Highly Finished High Closet

Weighs 485 lbs.

Price $55, Less 5 per cent. off for cash.

Here is a medium priced Cook Stove, size of oven 18x18x11.

Weight 305 lbs.

Price $30.00

Medal Stewart Cook

For Hard or Soft Coal and Wood.

With Reservoir. Pouch Feed.

SPECIAL FEATURES—Oval Fire Box, Aluminine lined Oven Doors, Convex oven tops, but top plates, heavy covers and centers, cut long centers, enameled iron reservoir, japanned reservoir covers.

We want your trade, and all the trade we can get and would be pleased to have you come in and look over our stock. Yours for business

SHEPPARD & ELLIOTT, SOLE AGENTS

MICHEL

Mr. Gammage visited Fernie on Thursday.

Superintendent Stockett spent a day in town this week.

A number of shacks in "Dago" town are about complete.

F. J. Watson spent a few days this week in town looking after business.

The ware house and addition at the rear of the store are completed now.

Rev. Stoney conducted Church of England services here Sunday evening.

The miners lost considerable time this week owing to the breaks in the machinery.

The church here is to have a new organ in the near future, the old one having given out completely.

Poles are being put in for the electric light system and it is expected all will be complete in a short time.

Mr. McTavish, agent of the International Correspondence School was in town a few days this week.

The new stable is almost completed now and in a short time all the horses will be at the lower end of the town.

J. F. Rickey, of the Calgary Cattle Co., spent several days this week here on business in connection with the company.

Messrs. Bordett and Raines have opened a boarding house across the creek in the building formerly occupied by J. R. Wilson.

James Turner, pioneer missionery, of B. C. will conduct service in the Methodist church Sunday morning at 11 a.m., evening 8 p.m. Monday evening, Nov. 2nd, he will deliver a lecture.

A. C. Liphardt, jeweller of Fernie, has made arrangements to have a representative here at the hotel every Wednesday and Thursday. Mr. Gordon was here in that capacity this week and reports business pretty fair.

There is considerable talk among the boys about a rink for this winter but as yet nothing has been done toward getting one. It is now time steps were taken in this direction if they wish to have a place for skating this winter.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

A. Palquest returned from Fernie on Monday and is now engaged in putting a cement floor in the cellar of the Windsor hotel.

A coat of paint which is being put on the Clark hotel, much improves its appearance. Lafortune & Levesque are doing the work.

W. J. Moore, the postmaster at Tonkin, has the record for this season for catching big fish. He caught one in the Elk which tiped the scale at 4¼ pounds.

The Miners' hotel is rapidly nearing completion. It is without doubt the best built structure in the district. Mr. Morton expects to have it opened next pay-day.

In reply to a communication asking for a station on the the C. P. R. line below the town a letter has been received saying that no steps will be taken in the matter this fall.

Invitations are out for the big Alexandra ball, which will take place on the 9th of November. The management are making every effort to give their guests an enjoyable evening.

G. G. Moffatt went to Nelson on Sunday to attend the re-count, but it did not come off as the Prov. Secretary would not allow the ballot boxes to leave Victoria. Mr. Moffatt returned on Tuesday evening.

A large force of carpenters are busy on the erection of the twenty-five cottages for the company. Some of the houses are already well under way and an effort will be made to complete them all before winter.

It is rumored at Macleod that a new time table will shortly go into effect on the C. and E. line between Macleod and Calgary. By the new schedule trains will leave Macleod every morning at 7 a. m., returning the same day at 8 p. m.

It is rumored that the Crow's Nest Southern railway will build a depot and freight sheds here in the near future, making Morrissey Mines its terminus. This together with reduced rates on the line, should greatly help our town.

What might have been a serious accident occurred on Saturday afternoon at the Junction when Jas. Mecready's team ran away. Mecready tried to stop them, but one of the horses kicked him in the head, inflicting a nasty wound. Dr. Willson was called and put five stitches in the wound. Mr. Mecready will soon be around again if concussion does not develop.

J. Miller, the white laundryman, was assaulted by a crowd of foreigners on Sunday evening. He was on his way down from the mines when he met the gang, who were considerably under influence of liquor. They demanded his money and knocked him about roughly, but he finally made his escape and reported the matter to the police, but Constable Tranter has not been able as yet to locate any of the gang as Miller failed to recognize them.

A hot fight occurred at Tonkin on Sunday evening last at one of the Slav houses. A number of them came home drunk and started a row at the home of Mike Kratz. Two of them became very abusive and a fight occurred in which knives, clubs and fists were freely used. Dr. Willson was kept busy the next day dressing the wounds of those mixed up in the fracas. No arrests were made. It is thought that this was the gang who assaulted Miller earlier in the evening.

RAN A NAIL THROUGH HIS HAND.

While opening a box, J. C. Mount, of Three Mile Bay, N. Y., ran a ten penny nail through the fleshy part of his hand. "I thought at once of all the pain and soreness this would cause me," he says, "and immediately applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm and occasionally afterwards. To my surprise it removed all pain and soreness and the injured parts were soon healed." For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

Robt. Shaw has gone to Michel to look after the stables of the coal mines.

James Wardner the well-known mining man, passed through Cranbrook Tuesday for St. Paul.

The North Star has completed its contract with the Hall Mines smelter and will close shipping for the present.

Charles Campbell, the undertaker, has sold out his business to the Macconell Furniture company and will return to Duluth, Wis., where he will engage in the same line of work.

Stephens Brothers & Co., proprietors of the Alexandra hotel at Morrissey Mines will give a ball on the evening of the King's birthday, November 9. Quite a number will go from Cranbrook.

Dr. King returned last Friday from Victoria, where he attended the meeting of the liberals elect. He says that the selection of Mr. Macdonald as leader meets with the approval of liberals all over the province.

A number of the railroad boys have organized a dancing club, to be known as the C. P. R. Quadrille club. They held their first meeting last night at Wentworth Hall, and it proved a most gratifying success to the members.

THE COSGROVES ARE COMING.

The Fernie Fire Brigade have made arrangements with the famous Cosgrove Concert Ochestra for a two night engagement on Nov. 18th and 19th.

A public meeting of the brigade was held in Joyces' hall on Wednesday evening when the above was decided upon. The company will give their popular concert on the first evening and on the second a grand ball will be held, the music for which will be supplied by the splendid seven piece orchestra of the company. The seats for the concert wil sell at $1.00 and 75 cents and children 50 cents, and the ball tickets at $2 per couple.

Cosgrove's Concert Orchestra is assisted by Miss Agatha Berkhoel, contralto, of Chicago, and Miss May Hudson-Havener, violinist, of Chicago. The company has the name of being one of the best on the road and wherever they have appeared they have met with a flattering reception.

The fire brigade have taken up the company with a view to raising money to meet some of their liabilities. Although the contract gives the performers a liberal percentage the brigade believe they have a first-class company which will draw big receipts on each evening. The concert will be the grandest musical treat of the season, the dance will be the leading social event of the season, and the profits from the two evenings will go to support a very excellent cause which will no doubt meet with the heartiest response from all classes.

Two committees were appointed at the public meeting. Committee to arrange for the first evening, Messrs. Bentley, Stork, Stevens, Rogers and Cree. Committee to arrange for ball, Messrs. Tuttle, Bell, A. C. Liphardt, Sherwood Herchmer and Ganong.

GENERAL NEWS.

Sir Wilfred Laurier in speaking of the Alaskan award regretted that the Canadian government had not the power to make treaties, and he stated his belief that the British government should be asked to grant more extensive powers to Canada.

The two Ontario bye-elections resulted in the election of one Conservative and one Liberal. Algoma elected Smith, Liberal by 200 majority and Muskoka, Mahaffay, Conservative by the same majority.

G. M. Annabel of Moose Jaw has accepted the Conservative nomination for the next Dominion election.

BORN.

MILLS—At Fernie on Oct. 21st, the wife of H. P. Mills of a son.

McCORMICK—At Fernie on Oct. 19th the wife of J. McCormick of a son.

McDONALD—At Fernie on Oct. 18th, the wife of R. McDonald, of Morrissey, of a son.

COAL CREEK NEWS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

A choir is being formed in the Metl dist church.

An oyster supper will be in the c penter shop on Guy Fankes' Day, No 5th.

Rev. Gordon has made arrangemen to hold bi-weekly services here on Su days at 4 p.m.

Mr. Stewart the head carpenter is t ting up one of the new houses in t lower row for a residence.

Mr. Hillegas is filling the place book-keeper during the absence of M Berridge who is visiting in St. Paul.

Four gentlemen of the Rev. Bar colony spent a few days in town t week. They report the colony in a fav able condition, most of them have tak up homesteads. Their chief difficulty in getting supplies from Edmonton, 2 miles east. In the summer they s shipped down the Saskatchewan on rai

The mines here are outreaching ar thing yet recorded. Thursday record 1320 tons net. The daily output is n about 1200 tons per day, which is t best record of the three colleries. T tunnels of Nos. 1, 2, and 3 mines are b ing widened and No. 1 table is being ca fully refitted for work. A new table w soon be ready for work.

A REMARKABLE RECORD.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has remarkable record. It has been in u for over thirty years, during which ti many million bottles have been sold a used. It has long been the standa and main reliance in the treatment croup in thousand of homes, yet duri all this time no case has ever been r ported to the manufacturers in which failed to effect a cure. When given soon as the child becomes hoarse or ev as soon as the croupy cough appears, will prevent the attack. It is pleasa to take, many children like it. It co tains no opium or other harmful s stance and may be given as confiden to a baby as to an adult. For sale by druggists and dealers.

Lib. Legislative Ass.
Dec 31 1901

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 18. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 252

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m,
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.
Office :—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON
PIANO and ORGAN
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J. Barber, L.D.S., D.D.S.,
DENTIST
Opposite ROYAL HOTEL
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Moffatt's Cigar Store
Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.
A full line of Stationery.
Next Door to the Free Press.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. H. L. Bleasdell's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
J. H. L. BLEASDELL,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of J. H. L. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Florence Erickson's south.east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
FLORENCE ERICKSON,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

DEATH OF E. BLOOMER.

A Bright and Promising Life Instantly Cut off in Coal Creek Mine.

Shortly after 5 o'clock on Wednesday evening a rock fall in No. 2 mine Coal Creek, instantly killed Emanuel Bloomer, one of the two miners at work in the room. Mr. Bloomer and his companion, T. A. Thompson, went on shift at 3:30. Their room was No. 7, district No. 1, south level.

The accident is said to have been caused by the roof giving away, owing to undue pressure of gas behind it. The tremendous weight of the loosened rock caused the bridge stick to break and the whole mass was precipitated upon the floor of the room, a drop of about seven feet.

The men had a second's warning and they jumped in opposite directions. Mr. Thompson very fortunately almost cleared himself and escaped with slight wounds on his forehead and his foot. Mr. Bloomer was less fortunate. He received the full weight of the falling rock which buried him under many tons of it. Willing hands were lent to the rescue, but despite their best efforts almost two hours elapsed before the bruised and broken body of the unfortunate victim was recovered. His head and chest had received deadly injuries and both legs were broken. No doubt exists but that death came quickly to release the sufferings of the deceased.

The funeral was held on Friday at noon from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Coombs, opposite the depot, where the deceased had boarded. The mines were closed for the morning shift and the miners attended in a body. The body was taken to the Presbyterian church where an impressive service was conducted by Rev. D. L. Gordon.

Coroner Trites empanelled a jury and they viewed the body after which an adjournment was declared until Tuesday evening to allow Inspector Dick, who had been summoned, to attend.

Emanuel Bloomer came from Pontypridd, South Wales, in May of this year. His 22nd birthday occurred a few days ago and he was the eldest of a family of eight children, the remainder of which, with the father and mother mourn their sudden and grievous loss in their far-distant home.

During the short time Mr. Bloomer was in our midst he formed many fast friendships, and all who knew him respected him.

He was a young man of far more than average intelligence, and he always took every opportunity to improve his natural gifts. He had applied himself to the study of his work. He had already passed an examination entitiing him to a fire-boss' certificate and he then continued to study for an underground manager's certificate. In addition he was taking an engineering course from the Scranton Correspondence school. It is said that he also entertained the ambition of secnring a university education.

Mr. Bloomer was an enthusiastic worker in the Presbyterian church of which he was a member. He taught a class in the the Sunday School, and he attended the weekly bible class meetings, where his wide knowledge in historical and biblical subjects created no little surprise.

Among his possessions is a watch presented to him by the Pontypridd church prior to his departure for Canada, many interesting books along the line of his studies and a $60 microscope. The sympathy of the community goes out to the bereaved friends in their heavy hour of mourning.

OCTOBER OUPUT.

Output Though Large was Hampered by Car Shortage.

The total output of coal for the three collieries of the C. N. P. Coal Company amounted to 71,300 tons. This is about 2000 tons below the highest record.

The coke shipments were.

Coal Creek	10,753 tons
Michel	6,157 "
Morrissey	357 "
Total	17,267 tons

There are about 5000 tons of coke stacked at the ovens awaiting shipment. The transportation question has undergone no change during the week and it is still impossible to secure anything like an adequate supply of cars.

The lack of cars has been felt at Michel to a greater extent than at either of the other collieries and as a result much time was lost there. It is estimated that the total output would have been at least 20,000 tons more had plenty of cars been supplied throughout the month. It is expected that the heaviest grain shipments will soon be over and that the shortage of cars will gradually be relieved.

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING.

Matters to be Brought up Before the Associated Boards of Trade.

An executive meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade was held on Wednesday evening and it was well attended. The approaching meeting of the Associated Boards of Trade, which occurs at Rossland on Dec. 3rd, the first Thursday after the meeting of the legislature, afforded ample business for the evening.

The executive talked over several matters which in their opinion should be brought up at the associated meeting and secretary Alexander was instructed to draft up resolutions on the various matters. These resolutions will be submitted to the general meeting to be held on Monday evening for further discussion as to the advisability of placing them before the Rossland meeting.

The following are the principal subjects discussed:

Improved jail accommodation and a small debts court.

The need for a government post office building.

The C. P. R. car shortage question on the Crows Nest.

The need for a telephone system in and around Fernie.

The amendment of the statutes relating to mechanics' and mill-men's lien on lumber.

These are important matters which will be fully discussed on Monday evening. In addition Monday's meeting will be required to select two delegates, besides the president, to represent the Fernie Board at Rossland. A full meeting is urgently required on Monday evening.

OCTOBER SCHOOL REPORT

MONTHLY REPORT.

Pupils enrolled	332
Pupils attending 1st Div.	37
" " 2nd Div.	62
" " 3rd Div.	50
" " 4th Div. (Mine)	63
" " 5th Div.	95
Total	307
Average daily attendance	248

HONOR ROLL.

DIVISION I.

Jr. IV—Mary McClintock, John McLeod, Gertie Graham. Sr. IV—Muriel Whimster, Ethel Dunlop, Tom Corsan.

DIVISION II.

Class III—Possible marks 500.—Aileen Lutty 445, John Macdonald 426, Leota Pollock 424. Senior II—Possible marks 400—Mabel Graham 341, Lottie Archdekin 333, Kate Balayti 331. Junior II—Possible marks 400—Eliza Holmes 327, Wm. Ross 314, Christmas Davis 311.

DIVISION III.

First Reader—Florence Read, Katie Regats, Herbert Ross. Second Reader—Annie Novak, Leonard Dudley, Mike Guzzi.

DIVISION V.

First Primer—Annie Klodic, Lotsy Boddy, Marion Corsan. Class B—Jennie Cody, Louis Malacca, Steve Poperinchik. Class A—George Regats, James Easton, Murray McLeod.

CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

Customs collections at the the outport of Fernie for the month ending October 31, 1903.

Value of goods.
Dutiable	$14,681,00
Free	10,354.00
Total	$25,035.00
Duty Collected	$3,870.90

Inland Revenue collections for the month of October, 1903.

Spirits	$1,756.82
Malt	679,77
Raw Leaf Tobacco	54.90
Cigars	48.00
Brewers' License	50.00
Total	$2,589.49

THE ACCUSER ACCUSED.

An amusing time was experienced at the police court last Saturday when a prominent citizen of the town was arranged before the magistrate on a charge, laid by a game warden, of having shot a fawn. The accused from the dock ably defended himself. The animal was produced and experts on the subject declared it to be over a year old, though undersized for its age, and the case was dismissed. The accused then turned informant and charged the game warden with having sold a sheep's head. In proving the charge he produced the man to whom the heod had been sold. The magistrate fined the party $5 and costs. The tables were turned and the party who laughed last got enough out of it for his share to set up the drinks for the crowd.

CABINET RECONSTUCTION.

F. J. Fulton, of Kamloops, Taken Into the Cabinet.

Victoria, Nov. 5. — Hon. Richard McBride completed his cabinet this evening, after a long executive meeting.

McPhillips resigned his position as attorney-general, being succeeded by Charles Wilson, who has been president of the council. Wileon is succeeded in the latter office bv F. J. Fulton, of Kamloops. Both were sworn in late this afternoon.

Wilson will go back for re-election, the bye-election to be pulled off in about two weeks. Fulton does not have to be re-elected.

Later there will be another shuffle of portfolios. McBride will leave the department of lands and works, taking that of mines, and combining with it the provincial secretaryship, while Green goes to the lands and works department.

FUNERAL NOTICE

The following is a clipping from a Brantford paper.

The funeral of the late Miss Rosa Coward took place from the residence of her uncle Mr. Herbert Robbins, 152 West Mill St. to Greenwood cemetery. Rev. Dr. Gee conducted the service both at the house and grave. The pallbearers were cousins of the deceased—Messrs. William, Reginald, Herbert, Edward, Norman and William. The funeral was very largely attended, the cortege being three blocks long. Among the many floral tributes were.

Pillow—Father, mother, and brother.

Wreath—Mr. and Mrs. William Carson.

Anchor—Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Quinn.

Anchor—Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Robbins, Sr.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. Eli Robbins.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Robbins.

Sheaf—Mr. and Mrs. H. Robbins, Jr.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Robbins.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. A. Phipps.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Robbins.

Carnations—Miss Susie and Mr. Ed. Robbins.

Carnations—Misses Thomas.

Carnations—Miss Elvira and Miss R. Shellard.

Carnations—Mr. Andrew and Mr. Robert Shellard, Jr.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Belk.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. Roelfson.

Spray—Mr. and Mrs. Allen, Hamilton.

Spray—Misses Gertie and May Robbins.

The late Miss Rosa Coward died of typhoid fever at Elkmouth, B. C. on Oct. 15. Deceased went from Brantford to Fernie, B C., some two years ago and after residing there some time removed to Elkmouth, B. C., only a few months ago where she died. She was ill but a short time and passed very peacefully and unexpectedly away. She leaves to mourn her loss, a father, mother, one brother and two sisters. The brother is Mr. John G. Coward, of Fernie, B. C., and the sisters are Mrs. Wm. Carson, of Brantford, and Mrs. J. H. Quinn, Bay City, Mich.

MINE MANAGER'S EXAMINATION

Nanaimo Herald.—"The Board of Mine Managers Examiners held their usual annual meeting last evening to arrange preliminaries for the mine manager's examinations. The meeting was held in the Coal Mine Inspector's office in the provincial court house. The following members were present, Mr. Geo. Williams and Mr. Tully Boyce, representing the men; Thos R. Stockett, of Fernie, representing the mine owners, and Inspector Morgan, on behalf of the government. Mr. Andrew Bryden was unavoidably absent.

The board decided that the manager's examinations will take place in Nanaimo and Fernie on January 19, 20 and 21. Messrs. W. H. Wall and F.H. Sheppard, C.E., were appointed to prepare a list of questions to be submtted to the board for its approval. These two appointees will also conduct the examinations."—There will be at least 10 and probably 12 candidates for this examination at Fernie and 4 or 5 at the coast.

MACDONALD—LANG.

Mr. John Angus MacDonald and Miss Mary Lang were married at Blairmore on Tuesday of this week. The newly married couple spent their honeymoon in Fernie the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Walker. They returned to their home on Friday evening. Mr. MacDonald is employed in the coal mine at Frank. Both Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald are well known in Fernie, they having lived here for some time. The FREE PRESS joins with their friends in extending congratulations.

STILL AFTER A RECOUNT

Judge Forin Summons Officials for Recount on Monday.

The following notices were served yesterday upon Messrs. Alexander and Moffatt.

In the matter of the Provincial Elections Act and in the Provincial Elections Act Amendment Act 1899.

In the matter of the election of a member for the Fernie Electoral district of the Province of British Columbia held October 3rd, 1903,

In the matter of Edwin C. Smith and William R. Ross, nominees,

To J. S. T. Alexander, returning officer of the Fernie Electoral District,
And to Gerald George Moffatt, election clerk of the Fernie Electoral District,

You and each of you are hereby summoned and commanded to attend before me on Monday the 9th day of November, 1903, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon at the Court House, Nelson, in the county of Kootenay, in the Province of British Columbia, with all ballot boxes and statements used in and connected with the said election of a member to represent the said Fernie Electoral District in the legislature of the Province of British Columbia which election was held on the 3rd day of October, 1903. This summons and command is issued pursuant to section 44 of chapter 25 of the Statutes of British Columbia for the year 1899 and is a renewal of the summons issued by me on the 26th day of Oct., 1903 returnable this day, which was a renewal of the summons issued by me on the 19th day of October, 1903, returnable on the 26th day of October, 1903, which was a renewal of the summons issued by me on the 15th day of October, 1903, returnable on said 19th day of October, 1903.

Witness my hand at the City of Nelson this 2nd day of November, 1903.

J. H. FORIN,
County Court Judge of the County of Kootenay,
British Columbia

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Halloween passed off quietly this year. The police kept an eye on the boys and a few who showed signs of trespassing beyond the bounds of reason were put in the cooler until a late hour when their ardor for adventure was considerably cooled.

Constable Kummer has received instruction to collect the regular poll-tax in the town and he expects to start out next week on this work. Get your three dollars ready for him. This revenue is applied to a very worthy cause which is yearly growing in importance and in the cost of maintenance.

Thursday's west-bound express was delayed over 7 hours owing to the engine breaking down midway between Lethbridge and Macleod. The trainmen had to walk about 10 miles and ride another ten miles on a hand-car to reach the nearest telegraph office to wire for an engine.

Two hotel license transfers will be asked for at the next regular meeting of the license commissioners. A. P. Chenette is petitioning to have N. Garreau's license transferred to him and the new proprietors of the Muskoka hotel are applying for a transfer.

A Court of Revision was held on Monday by W. H. Whimster, collector of votes, on the new names added to the list since Aug. 30th. Only 16 names were on the new list and no protests were entered. Eighteen names mostly from Morrissey arrived too late to be entered. Names put on now will be held until the next court of Revision, which will be held in May. The Dominion elections will likely be run on the present list.

The Same Story

The shipping business here and along the Crow is almost at a standstill for want of cars to handle the stuff. The warehouses at the station are full of produce waiting to be shipped. Agents are powerless to provide cars and complaints to headquarters are useless since there are no cars to be had in the West. It appears they have all been rushed east to handle the big the grain trade of Manitaba. There is plenty of business to be done here, but the Western Peter has been robbed to pay Manitoban Paul. It is a sin and a shame that the development of the country should be arrested for want of proper transportation facilities. The evil of railway monopoly in the west will be worse before it is better but it is bound to come to a head and right itself. In the meantime, the cry of the merchant and shipper for relief falls on ears of brass. We all devoutly pray that J. Hill may hear and grant our petitions for another road. What do you think James?—Pincher Creek Echo.

J. F. Richie, coal inspector, came up from Frank on Thursday.

The regular dance of the Minto Club will be held on Tuesday evening.

Mrs. A. B. Trites returned last evening from a visit with friends in Washington State.

The Orangemen gave a social and dance in Princess Hall on Thursday evening.

E. C. Thompson, a commercial man from Toronto, was in Fernie several days this week accompanied by his bride.

Messrs. H. E. Macdonell and O. H. Becker, two C.P.R. officials from Nelson, were in Fernie several days this week.

Nothing can take the place of your photo for a Xmas token. Your last chance for 1903 to have it taken at Prest's studio will be Nov. 19th to 28th.

A. Leitch, of Cranbrook, was in town this week and took back with him two teams of horses purchased from the assignee of the Cedar Valley Improvement Co. Mr. Leitch will use these horses in his lumber business.

C. Clinginsmith who has had charge of the dining room, the second and third floors of the Hotel Fernie for some time has severed his connection with the hotel. He left on Tuesday for St. Paul where he may make his home. Messrs. Dnnn & Laderoute who have had charge of the bar have taken over the other department.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Schram succumbed to a severe attack of pneumonia on Saturday evening. The little one took suddenly ill the day before, and despite every effort of skill and nursing it's life could not be saved. The funeral took place on Monday, Rev. D. L. Gordon officiating. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved parents.

Subscribe for the FREE PRESS and secure a year's subscription to the Montreal Weekly Herald free. Two dollars in advance pays your subscription for both papers for one year. Several subscriptions have already been received and there should be more. The Montreal Weekly Herald is acknowledged by many to be the best weekly in Canada.

An old lady in Scotland is advertising in Canadian papers for tidings of her son, Thos. Blair, from whom she has not heard for three years. He has been traced to Strathcona, Alta., and from there he is said to have come to Fernie about two years ago. Any information relative to his whereabouts that is sent to this office will be forwarded to the enquiring party.

Important Business

A general meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade will be held on Monday at 8 p. m., in Joyce's Hall, for the purpose of appointing delegates to attend the Associated Boards of Trade meeting which is to be held at Rossland on Dec. 3rd, and to decide upon and give due notice of any business which the delegates will bring up before that body.

For Sale—I have the following in use at my saw mill, Blairmore, which will be for sale at the end of sawing season, 1st. December. Two boilers 50 h.p. on skids, with 50 feet of smoke stack: also one McGregor, Gourlay & Co's planer and matcher, with double cylinder, ane one Economist planer. Particulars can be had by writing Peter McLaren, Macleod, Alta.

UNFAIR CRITICISM.

An unknown writer by the name of J. A. Reilley has been making himself ridiculous by contributing Fernie recount literature to the Nelson News. Criticism to be fair must be substantiated by sound argument based on fact. The statements made by Mr. Reilley are apparently made without any regard for the truth It is well-known that the recount question rests entirely upon a legal technicality with which neither the returning officer nor the member elect had anything to do.

The latest attempt from this writer is couched in the following nursery jingle.

B, for the ballots marked out in the square.
A's for Alexander who counted them there.
L, for the Lawyer: a recount he bucks,
Leaving the province and going for ducks.
O for the outrage that here is displayed.
T, for the technical tricks that were played.
B, for the boxes that never can be Opened again by a judge who can see
X's like this for Ed. Smith, M. P. P.
B for the Battle of right against wrong
I, for Iniquity, shameless and strong.
L, for the Law, Oh! pardon this tear.
L, is for Liberty—she's buried here.

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HABBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Habberton

There seemed enough risk in all this to insure my remaining awake. I stuffed the dispatches inside my shirt, put fresh percussion caps on my revolvers and started. Nothing unusual occurred for a quarter of an hour or more, but as I descended a gentle slope I was sure I heard the clank of sabers in front of me. My horse, too, gave the usual equine indications of being suddenly interested in something ahead. I halted an instant, and the noise ceased, but when again I rode forward the clanking was resumed so noisily that I became thoroughly frightened, reined my horse under partial cover at the side of the road, turned pale—or felt that I did—and galloped back to camp.

The captain frowned when I reported my failure. So did the colonel, who, with the captain, had been awaiting the result of my effort.

"I'll try still another man, if you think best," said the captain.

"Try me, captain," said Brainard, who was always among the first to greet me when I returned to camp.

"You?" asked the captain, looking quizzically at the little fellow.

"Yes, sir," said Brainard. "You see, I'm so small that it would be hard for a marksman to hit me, even by daylight."

This remark made both officers smile, and I was told to give my dispatches to Brainard. The little chap was on his horse in an instant and, taking straps from his saddlebow, bound his legs to the tops of the stirrup straps.

"What is that for?" asked the captain.

"So," said Brainard, "that if I'm shot I can't fall out of the saddle. The horse will be sure to hurry back to camp, and the enemy won't get the dispatches, as they might if I were to fall."

The captain nodded to the colonel, who raised his eyebrows, and Brainard hurried out the road at an easy gallop. I walked a little way in the same direction and strained my ears for shots, but heard none. I did not sleep much that night. Should Brainard be killed I would always feel that I had sacrificed his life to save my own; should he succeed, why, confound him, I would again have to feel as uncomfortable as I did when he did the work and got the glory of our rescue when we were made prisoners. I did not feel any easier at learning that about an hour before I had started a man on a harnessed horse had come galloping wildly out of that same road and hurried to the rear. Until tattoo I paced the ground on which our troop was camped. After tattoo I resumed my tramp. The guards were changed at 10 o'clock, midnight, 2 in the morning, and I was still awake, for Brainard had not returned. The captain, who felt responsible for the safe delivery of the dispatches, awoke, joined me and said he hoped my chum had got through all right; then he also began to pace to and fro, which increased my anxiety. Toward dawn I fell asleep through sheer exhaustion. Just after sunrise I was aroused by being shaken. When I opened my eyes, over me bent Brainard, very pale of face, but wonderfully bright of eye.

"Tell me about it," I demanded.

"Oh," said Brainard, "I never was so frightened in my life. After loping along a few minutes it occurred to me that I had better know my way before trying it, so I dismounted and hid my horse in the woods beside the road, leaving my saber there also. Then I sneaked down the road, with my revolver in my hand and my heart in my mouth, to find out where and what that cavalry was. It might have been some of our own men, you know. Pretty soon I heard the clanking you spoke of. Didn't it sound dreadful in the dark, though? I crouched and sneaked from one tree to another, and the noise grew louder, but not a human voice could I hear, nor was there any odor of tobacco in the air. These two facts bothered me greatly, for when soldiers who are awake cease talking and smoking there's something serious on hand.

"Pretty soon I heard a splash. 'Aha!' thought I. 'Somebody is watering his horse in a brook or pond.' I crept still closer. The ground became lower, as if there might be a brook there. I got nearer still until I made out a bridge at my left, but not a trooper could I see. I began to shiver and recall ghost stories. I don't believe in ghosts, you know, but the dim light and mysterious noises made me think of them in spite of myself. Finally I got right on the bank of the brook and looked over. Then I was more surprised than scared, for I could make out three horses without riders and something that looked like a tent, but all in the water. I made bold to challenge, but there was no reply. Then I became so excited that I thought I might as well be shot as die through bursting a blood vessel, so I got some matches out of my jacket, struck a light and made a little fire of dry leaves and twigs, and what do you suppose I saw? An ammunition wagon lying on its side and three of its four horses partly hitched. Apparently it had fallen from the bridge, which was very narrow and had no rail. It was the rattle of the chains of the harness that made the noise you and I and the other fellow had mistaken for the clank of saber scabbards. But wasn't I provoked with myself for having been frightened?"

"No worse, I'll bet, than I am at having been scared back to camp by such a bogy."

"I felt so ashamed," continued Brainard, "that I really wished there might be soldiers somewhere in the neighborhood to give me some honest excuse for being frightened. My wish was gratified pretty soon, for after going along pretty lively for a few minutes I heard 'Halt!' right in front of me as a couple of men sprang from a fence corner. Awfully hard to swallow one's heart sometimes, isn't it? I soon saw, however, in spite of the semidarkness, that they weren't dressed like Johnnies, so I swallowed my heart and gave them the countersign. Then they asked me if I had seen any cavalry in the woods. Three of the general's orderlies in succession had tried to reach the center and had been frightened into returning. So, you see, you and I and the man who started before us are not without company."

"Ye-es," I replied. But the information didn't comfort me much. Brainard had succeeded. I hadn't. That reflection filled my mind to the exclusion of all others. Brainard went on:

"I found the headquarters in two or three minutes, passing through a road full of men who had been posted to repel an expected cavalry dash. There was a half battery of artillery with them. The general, too, was awake and nervous—all on account of those three horses standing knee deep in a brook and shaking in their harness! The general kept me until dawn to bring back some dispatches. But here I am."

The lucky little rascal! At least men called it luck.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AGAIN THE UNEXPECTED.

AFTER the night riding at which I failed and Brainard succeeded we spent several days in worrying the enemy on our front, but when several cavalry dashes on a single day proved to us that the enemy had become weary of us and had abandoned the vicinity we all went back to camp and began to do our spring housecleaning. This work was greatly needed, for only the make believe sick men had occupied the camp in the last fortnight, and they made the place look like a lot of houses that had been abandoned to tramps. Indeed, in later days I've been compelled to believe that the war was the origin of the great army of tramps that has invested and infested the country ever since 1865.

After careful inspection our colonel decided that the best way to have a clean camp was to make a new one, so he formally asked for ground for the purpose, but the general said that all the troops at the post would have to make new camps elsewhere very soon, for since our trouble with Longstreet the war department had determined that the post was not worth the cost of holding it. Further, General Halleck, the president's right hand military adviser, declared that he could not understand why the post was ever occupied.

When this information reached us, all of us were amazed and disgusted. We had gone out almost a year before to help save the Union. We had spent all our time and suffered innumerable discomforts, privations and fears. Now, according to the highest authorities, we might as well have remained at home. Cloyne, Brainard and I held an indignation meeting over it, and Cloyne moved formally that we join the Mick McTwyny gang and assist big Pat Callahan in cursing the government, but Brainard objected, saying that governments, being human, had to learn some things by experience, and as on general principles I always sided with Brainard, Cloyne's resolution was voted down by a two-thirds majority.

Meanwhile preparations for evacuating the post had been made. The heavy artillery was removed, one regiment after another followed it, and finally there came an early July morning when we were informed we were to pack our own effects at once and be ready to abandon camp.

Up to that time we had supposed that our effects were only what could be carried on our horses, but some of us soon learned to our sorrow that we had accumulated enough stuff to load half a dozen horses. I, for one, had collected at least a ton of war relics, ranging in weight from a Johnny's iron stirrup to unexploded shells and solid shot weighing a hundred pounds. All of this old iron lay in a row on the topmost log of our room and directly over the inner edge of my bunk. I tried to bribe teamsters to provide transportation; I even labored with the sergeant of our howitzer battery, hoping to coax him to carry them in unoccupied corners of his gun caissons, but he, too, was obdurate—he had luggage of his own—so I had to content myself by selecting a single three inch shell that could go in my box of extra clothing without exciting suspicion by its weight.

One day the entire regiment except the stable orderlies were ordered on picket, the reserve station of which was the main street of the village. At 4 o'clock in the morning the pickets, instead of being relieved, were entirely withdrawn, and the relief was posted within a quarter of a mile of the main body of the regiment. The men on these new posts were relieved at 8 in the morning by members of a single troop, which happened to be our own. From the new outposts—I was the corporal in charge of one and Brainard of another—we were soon drawn in to camp.

On entering camp the order was given to prepare to fire the houses, stables, etc. The signal, the officers told us, would be the fall of the camp flagstaff, at which a man with an ax already stood, while the entire band, mounted, stood near by, playing "Auld Lang Syne." To prepare for firing camp was simple enough. It was merely to "stand by" with matches ready to light, for every bunk was of pine and contained a mattress full of hay, straw or leaves that had been well sunned and seasoned. The walls were of pine, and so were the roofs. No plaster or partitions could delay the spread of flame, and everything was as dry as a July sun could make it.

Down crashed the pole, hundreds of matches cracked, and the band began playing some solemn music, familiarly known as "Old Hundredth," and then dashed into "There's No Luck About the House," for "A Hot Time In the Old Town" had not yet been written. In a moment all the men were hurrying to the stables, where the horses stood all saddled. Orders had already been given to dash to the road as soon as mounted; the guidon bearers were already there as rallying points for the men of their respective troops. Already flames poured from the windows of all the houses and even from some of the roofs. The remaining hay in camp had been thrown by the stable orderlies upon the pine brush roofs of the stables. The instant a stable was entirely cleared of horses the roof was lighted and the fire quickly spread.

The spectacle that followed was as good as a fight, so some of our best fighting men said. At least 60 buildings were aflame, and 900 mounted men were dashing between and around them in their effort to reach the road. Some of the slower men were obliged to make a detour of half a mile, for the heat of that aggregation of burning pine was intense, even to men already in the road.

Finally, however, when the orderly sergeants called the rolls, the entire command was present or accounted for. The column was formed quickly. Then the bugles sounded "forward," and the band once more did the appropriate thing, for it played "Ain't I Glad to Get Out of the Wilderness?" a popular air of the period. But before half a dozen bars had been played the music ceased and the column halted instinctively, for we heard a shot like that of a field gun.

"Fours about!" shouted our captain. As we were the rear guard, the men who had dropped behind in rear guard manner had already turned their horses and brought their carbines to the position of "advance."

"Look sharp!" said the captain. "Find the direction from which the next shot comes."

The instant we heard another report we saw a mass of shingles go skyward from the roof of our troop's house.

"Strange about that!" muttered the captain. "I heard only one report, that of the shell. I didn't suppose a field gun could be fired without being heard."

Then came a deafening report.

By this time the colonel and the major of our battalion were beside us and scanning the surrounding country with their glasses. Then came a deafening report, and blazing logs as well as shingles flew from the late abode of our troop.

"That beats me," said the colonel—"bursting shells, but no gun reports. I don't see any balloon from which the enemy could drop them."

I, too, was mystified and looked inquiringly at Brainard, who in turn looked pale and as if a heavy load of guilt was on his conscience.

[CONTINUED.]

His Argument.

Stanley was planning to penetrate darkest Africa.

"But," protested his friends, "think of the danger of exploring an absolutely unmapped country!"

"That's nothing," he replied. "I shall use a fashion pattern diagram."

Realizing that any possible road would surely be there, they could think of no further objection to offer.—Judge.

As It Were.

"So the audience jumped on the pianist, broke both his legs and both arms, four ribs, cracked his skull and swung him up to a pole."

"And by that time I suppose he was a finished musician."—Baltimore News.

Equality.

Mr. Crabshaw—Aren't there an awful lot of officers in your club?

Mrs. Crabshaw—I suppose so, my dear, but we found the only way to preserve harmony was to give every member an office.

Marital Amenities.

"Hateful thing!" she cried in the midst of their spat, "I was a silly goose when I married you."

"Perhaps so," replied the great brute, "at any rate, you were no chicken."—San Francisco Examiner.

A JOYOUS EYE.

I am a most sedate young man,
Opposed to all flirtation,
But ever since my life began
I've met with castigation,
Because I have a wicked eye
Beyond my own controlling.
Where'er I go, where'er I fly,
It constantly is rolling.

For it will shut and then will ope
All of its own volition,
And with adventures make me cope
In spite my opposition.
I meet a maid upon the street;
Her face is quite attractive;
On her I think my eye to treat,
And, lo, it grows most active.

It opes and shuts and gayly winks,
Its actions are contagious,
For she at me then wildly blinks
In manner most outrageous.
Her escort then perchance sees this
And on me quickly pounces,
And, thinking something's sure amiss,
My person soundly trounces.

Though maids be here and maids be there
I dare not look on any;
My eye will flirt with maidens fair
And does not care how many.
And so through life I sadly fly;
My eye does the flirtation.
It gets the sport, forsooth, while I
But get the castigation.

—Brooklyn Eagle.

Not a Characteristic.

"That was your wife with you at the railway station, wasn't it?"

"What makes you think it was my wife?"

"Well, she gave you such a short answer."

"That wasn't my wife."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

All Will Be Discovered.

Barnes Tormer—I am in a quandary. I have been offered an engagement by two managers, and I don't know how to act.

Sue Brette—Well, don't worry. They'll soon find it out.—New York Times.

The harder you cough the worse the cough gets.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure The Lung Tonic

is a guaranteed cure. If it doesn't benefit you the druggist will give you your money back.

Prices 25c., 50c. and $1.00

S. C. WELLS & CO. Toronto, Can. LeRoy, N.Y. 1

Kind Lady—"So you were in one place for three years? Why did you leave?

Tramp—"I wuz pardoned, ma'am."

A Veteran's Story.—George Lewis, of Shamokin, Pa., writes: "I am eighty years of age. I have been troubled with Catarrh for fifty years, and in my time have used a great many catarrh cures, but never had any relief until I used Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. One box cured me completely." 50 cents.—25.

Many a man who poses as the architect of his own fortune would be in hard luck if the building inspector were on to his job.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

The wise man has sense enough to take good advice, and generally takes his own.

To Starve is a Fallacy.—The dictum to stop eating because you have indigestion has long since been exploded. "Von Stan's Pepsin Tablets introduced a new era in the treatment of stomach troubles. It has proved that one may eat his fill of anything and everything he relishes, and one tablet taken after the meal will aid the stomach in doing its work. 60 in a box, 35 cents.—24.

It will ruin any man to be henpecked. We never knew such a man to amount to anything.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Love Is the Mainspring.

Political economists have told us that self interest is the mainspring of industry. It is not true. Love is the mainspring of industry. It is love for the home and the wife and the children that keeps all the busy wheels of industry revolving, that calls the factory hands early to the mill, that nerves the arm of the blacksmith working at his forge, that inspires the farmer at his plow and the merchant at his desk, that gives courage to the soldier and patience to the teacher.

Erskine was asked how he dared, as an unknown barrister, face a hostile court and insist on his right to be heard. "I felt my children," he replied, "tugging at my robe and saying, 'Here is your chance, father, to get us bread.'" It is this vision of the children dependent on us that inspires us all in the battle of life.—Rev. Lyman Abbott in Atlantic.

To the Best of His Knowledge.

"To what do you attribute your longevity?" asked the reporter.

"My which?" queried the oldest inhabitant.

"Your longevity," repeated the reporter.

"Never had it. As far as I can remember I ain't never had no sech complaint."—Puck.

Often Snubbed.

"Why does every one refer to him as 'a rising young society man?'"

"Well, I suppose that's what he is."

"But why do they always speak of him as 'rising?'"

"Perhaps because he has to keep rising every time he's sat down upon."—Philadelphia Press.

The most interesting place of pilgrimage in Dublin is St. Michan's Church, where the organ is still to be seen upon which Handel is said to have composed his "Messiah."

Newton is the most common of town names in England. It occurs either alone or with some affix no less than 22 times.

It takes a genius to be a financier without being the possessor of any finances.

There are three thousand male "domestics" in London, England.

American imports have increased $159,000,000 in ten years, and exports $573,000,000 in the same period.

WOMEN HAVE KIDNEY DISEASE.

And Often Make the Mistake of Attributing the Resulting Backache to Other Causes.

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Many women have kidney disease and do not know it. They confuse the symptoms of kidney disease with those of ailments of a feminine nature. We would warn you against this danger, as a few days' neglect of kidney disease may mean years of suffering.

Pains in the small of the back or weakness and lameness of the back are the most marked symptoms of kidney diseases; others are loss of flesh, dry, harsh skin, deposits in the urine, swelling of the feet and legs, severe headaches, stiffness and soreness of the muscles, rheumatic pains, cold chills in back and loins, scalding, painful urination, weariness and despondency.

There is, we believe, no preparation extant which affords such prompt relief for backache and the other distressing symptoms of kidney disease as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. That this preparation is a thorough cure is evidenced by the scores and hundreds of statements from reputable people in all walks of life.

Mrs. W. Wilkins, Henry Street, Belleville, Ont., states: "I suffered a great deal with pains in the small of the back caused from kidney trouble. Whenever I stooped I could scarcely rise again, the pains were so great. The disease became so severe that it affected my general health, and I was becoming very much run down. Since using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills I can say that my trouble has entirely disappeared. I can speak in the highest terms of this medicine from the way it acted in my case."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase are on every box.

MAKE EXERCISE A HABIT.

An Easy and Simple Way of Securing Health and Good Looks.

Exercise is much more necessary to human life than most women think.

Healthy stimulation is an absolute need; without it the body will rust and fall to bits. The baby that never creeps about or kicks or exercises at all either wastes into a tiny midget of bones and wrinkles or else takes on pounds of unhealthy fat and becomes soft and short breathed and without vitality.

The brain that never calls upon itself for work must become dull and stupid, and it is the same way with the muscles of the body. They are filled with blood vessels that should be up and doing. The blood has several purposes, and one is to carry away much of the waste fluids of the body. The lungs are a sort of refinery, and the blood is a distilling agent. If the blood becomes thick and unhealthy and sluggish the body does not keep its youthful state. Eyes grow dull; lips lose their redness; the complexion is sallow and unlovely.

It is an easy and simple matter to make exercise a habit—just like the habit of putting out the lights at night and wondering if burglars will show up before morning.

A most excellent scheme is to take long, slow full breaths whenever you have a chance—when you are waiting for a car, when you are walking, when you are going to sleep, when you have just awakened.

Such habits are valuable, most valuable, but because they don't cost anything and are a little trouble lots of women fancy there is nothing in such practices. Nonsense! Look at the athletic men that train. They are the healthiest, strongest, finest looking creatures in existence.

Go thou and do likewise on a little scale.

Court Room Repartee.

In a suit relating to brewery property reported in Case and Comment an eminent and very dignified counselor was one day reading to the court some manuscript affidavits which were not overlegible and by mistake read the word "mash" as "wash." Counsel on the other side, who was small of stature and polite in manner, but keen in intellect and frequently sarcastic, was immediately on his feet and, with a somewhat irritating deference of manner, begging his opponent's pardon, etc., asked liberty to suggest that the word which the eminent counselor read "wash" was really "mash." Somewhat nettled, the counselor thus corrected thanked him for the information and added that he was not himself very familiar with terms used in the brewery business, as he had never spent much of his time in a place of that kind. "Are we to understand, then," said his opponent in the suavest manner, "that the eminent counselor wishes us to infer that his early days were spent in a laundry?"

Realistic.

"What are you standing still for, Willie? That's no way to play horse."

"I'm playin' I'm a hitchin' post now."—New York Times.

Getting Desperate.

Poet—I left a little poem of mine with you called "I Would Live Forever."

Literary Editor—Well, let me tell you that you won't if you leave any more poems here.—Boston Transcript.

Every cloud has a silver lining—and here's where clouds have the bulge on trousers pockets.

Some men brag about their wives as if they wanted to sell them.

The more the average man sees of others the more he respects himself.

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT

Removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, ringbone, sweeney, stifles, sprains; cures sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by the use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful Blemish Cure ever known. Sold by all druggists.

Many a man who has an aim in life never gets a chance to shoot.

The healthy glow disappearing from the cheek and moaning and restlessness at night are sure symptoms of worms in children. Do not fail to get a bottle of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is an effectual medicine.

A man thinks there is only one man in the world whose whistling is not a nuisance.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc.

Brazil's crop of coffee this year equals fifteen-sixteenths of the world's consumption.

Piles cured in 3 to 6 nights.—One application gives relief. Dr. Agnew's Ointment is a boon for Itching Piles, or Blind, Bleeding Piles. It relieves quickly and permanently. In skin eruptions it stands without a rival. Thousands of testimonials if you want evidence. 35 cents.—23.

A mule by any other name would be a kicker.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by all druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The stained glass window to the Temple, London, represents St. Paul's farewell to the elders at Ephesus. The faces of the elders form a noble and striking group. In the memory of Dr. Parker in the City lower panel there is a very fine portrait of Dr. Parker.

Ayer's

Give nature three helps, and nearly every case of consumption will recover. Fresh air, most important of all.

Cherry Pectoral

Nourishing food comes next. Then, a medicine to control the cough and heal the lungs. Ask any good doctor.

"I first used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral 55 years ago. I have seen terrible cases of lung disease cured by it. I am never without it."
ALBERT G. HAMILTON, Marietta, Ohio.

25c., 50c., $1.00. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Consumption

Health demands daily action of the bowels. Aid nature with Ayer's Pills.

BRITISH CABLE NEWS

CHAMBERLAIN'S POLICY MAKES HEADWAY.

It Causes Some Very Heated Arguments, the Contestants Sometimes Coming to Blows—Comment on Canada's Attitude on Boundary Award.

A dispatch from London says: One of the illustrated weeklies, The Sphere, gave a full page last week to a sketch of an incident which occurred in a first-class railway carriage, where two passengers fell to arguing on the fiscal question, and ultimately came to blows. These two victims of what Mr. Asquith has called "fiscalities," a disease from which the British nation is suffering, to a man—and not even women are immuned—are depicted in the heat of their arguments, while other passengers are shown cowering in corners or standing on seats to escape damage. Such an incident may not be common, but it is symptomatic. The fiscal plot has thickened, and Mr. Chamberlain has undoubtedly secured one object of his desires, namely, that the country should make enquiries into the subject. In London it is generally agreed that the man from Birmingham is making great headway. I heard one person call him a miracle worker. This enthusiast a month or so ago thought it would take Mr. Chamberlain five years to educate the country. He is now of the opinion, that at the present rate of progress, the task will take less than half that time, and that about two years hence the former colonial secretary will receive from the country that mandate to negotiate with the British colonies which he asked for in his speech on Wednesday. Provincial opinion, as reflected in a dozen leading country papers, is, however, not so favorable.

NEITHER FOOL NOR PLAYTHING

The Daily Mail devotes a column to its correspondent's (Edgar Wallace) letter on Canada. Canada, he says, is no longer the plaything or fool of the family. Canada is a separate, distinct and unique nation.

It is no more a colony than India is a colony. Its vigor, its great strength, its possibilities frighten one, when there seems a danger of secession if Great Britain loses the present opportunity.

Wrecked at Whitefish Point.

The steamer W. F. Sauber was wrecked off Whitefish Point, 30 miles from Sault Ste. Marie on Oct. 26, and Captain W. E. Morris and an oiler named Frank Robinson were drowned. The rest of the crew of 19 men were taken off the Sauber by the crew of the steamer Yale.

The Yale's crew worked four hours rescuing the crew of the Sauber. Robinson was pinched between a yawl boat and the Yale and went down before help could reach him. Capt. Morris was on the deck of the Sauber after all the others had been taken off, and when the steamer's boiler burst he was blown into the lake. The gale on Lake Superior is reported to be the worst in 28 years.

Ante-Christian Era Monument.

Advices from Rome say: Excavations which have been carried to a depth of 20 feet under the Palazzo Fiano, in the centre of Rome, have brought to light so many remains of the Ara Pacis set up by Emperor Augustine in B.C. 9, the handsomest monument to peace at that time, that the government has decided to restruct it. Fragments of the same monument, which were unearthed in the sixteenth century, are in the Vatcan, in the Uffizi gallery at Florence and in the Louvre in Paris. Efforts will be made to have them returned to Rome. The reconstruction of the monument will be the most important restoration of modern times.

Mysterious Shooting Affair.

A mysterious shooting affair has occurred in Vancouver. A man named Ruluvic was found near Chinatown, shot through both legs and hands. The man says that Chinamen shot him. He is too sick to give any further details except that he was attacked by two Chinamen, who shot him from all sides.

Expects to Be Dead in a Week.

A dispatch from Des Moines, Ia., says: Dr. L. D. Rood, a prominent physician accidentally inoculated himself with anti-tetanic serum, while attending a child who was dying with lockjaw, and his friends were startled by his announcement that he expected to be dead in one week.

NEWS NOTES.

A municipal gas plant is in prospect for Winnipeg.

Peter Anderson was scalded to death near Rosthern, Sask.

Mackenzie and Mann will build a big elevator at Depot Harbor.

The building record in Winnipeg for the year touched $5,522,400.

About 1,000 Turks were killed in a battle with Arabs on the Red Sea coast.

Lord Strathcona has defended Sir Wilfrid Laurier's recent utterances on the Alaska boundary decision.

The Winnipeg Board of Trade and Grain Exchange have decided in favor of a Dominion exhibition for 1904 in Winnipeg.

The steamer Advance was destroyed by fire at the Soo on October 26. The cargo was billed for Winnipeg and Port Arthur merchants.

ON SANITATION.

American Public Health Association in Session at Washington.

The first regular session of the 31st annual meeting of the American Public Health association convened in Washington on Oct. 27, prominent bacteriologists and students of sanitation from the United States, Canada, Mexico and Cuba being present. Surgeon-General Sternberg, U. S. A., retired, delivered an address in which he dealt at length on the efforts which have been made to stamp out disease and to guard against epidemics. He digressed from his paper to remark that since it was written the present attack of yellow fever in Texas had developed, and declared he would not have believed it possible, with the association's present knowledge that yellow fever would have been allowed to obtain a foothold there. "Somebody is responsible," he said. "Although cholera, yellow fever and bubonic plague," he continued, "are no longer feared by sanitarians, we have not yet conquered our epidemic filth disease, typhoid fever, and tuberculosis still claims nearly 150,000 victims annually within the limits of the United States."

The report of the committee on animal diseases and food was presented by Dr. D. E. Salmon, of the bureau of animal industry, Washington. Clinical evidence, statistical and experimental, he declared, all favor the conclusion that bovine tuberculosis was a factor in human tuberculosis. The source of the milk supply, he urged, should be carefully attended to.

In the discussion which followed, Dr. Juan Guiteras, of Havana, the yellow fever expert, said that although in Cuba the invariable custom is to boil milk, he believed the infantile tuberculosis in Cuban children is as frequent as anywhere else.

The committee on car sanitation reported through Dr. J. N. Hurty. There is a unanimity of opinion, he said, regarding the transportation by common carriers of persons sick with smallpox, diphtheria, scarlet fever; and typhoid leprosy, he declared, is not as easily transmitted as tuberculosis is, and compared to the latter in its destructiveness of human life, it amounts to nothing at all. Yet he said a riot would follow the introduction of a leper into a railway car. "The house on wheels," he declared, "is a potent factor in the transmission of consumption."

IN INTEREST OF HUMANITY.

The following day the association further considered the subject of infection of human beings with animal tuberculosis, and listened to several papers on the collection and disposal of garbage. In discussing the former subject, Dr. Mazyck Prapenel, of Philadelphia regretted the disinclination of federal and state authorities to permit criminals condemned to death to be inoculated with the tubercule germ in the interests of science. He emphatically controverted the common theory that sputum is the underlying cause of tuberculosis and said that there is not a whit of evidence that it ever caused a single case of the disease in mankind.

BIG VICTORY FOR CANADA

Bishop Ridley Believes the Alaskan Award Means Much to the Dominion.

The opinion of Bishop Ridley, of Caledonia, from his long residence at Port Simpson and an intimate knowledge of the territory in dispute between Canada and the United States, should carry some weight. He considers that insecuring the ownership of Wales and Pearce Islands Canada has gained more than was expected. In the early days the United States government had a fort and a custom house at Tongas, and the middle of the Portland channel was always regarded as the boundary and never questioned until the Klondike excitement and the construction of the White Pass railway made the ports on Lynn canal of value. In fact, Bishop Ridley considers the award a victory for Canada. President Roosevelt's note of congratulation he regarded as a ruse to cover his retreat from an unsuccessful attempt to retain possession of Wales and Pearce Islands, awarded to Canada, which really command the situation.

These two large islands are rich in timber and minerals as well as salmon streams. From a strategic point of view their value is inestimable. They command the harbor of Port Simpson and its approaches and at the western end of Wales island is an eminence some 1,100 feet high, a natural location for fortifications. Sitkan and the other islands are small, rocky islets of no value and useless for strategic purposes as they are low and could be swept from Wales Island. Wales and Pearce Islands also have splendid harbors and shelters. A further point to be considered is that the entire entrance to the Haas, on which are located several salmon canneries goes to Canada.

No Love Microbes.

A dispatch from Salt Lake City says: Lorin Farr, head of what is probably the largest family in the world, is sharply opposed to the theories advocated by Dr. A. C. Cotton, of Rush Medical college, that love is a disease due to a microbe. Mr. Farr has had six wives, 39 children, 231 grandchildren, and 56 great-grandchildren. "Dr. Cotton," said Mr. Farr, "'s a lunatic! It's balderdash! I know what the love of good, pure and beautiful woman is. When a man gets down to calling it a disease, he has lost his reason and his judgment.' Love is the natural affection between man and woman that has its foundation in the desire to propagate the species, to perpetuate the race. That's love.

Believing that war between Russia and Japan cannot be long delayed the marine underwriters decline to accept war risks on Japanese steamers, even at 25 guineas per cent.

JOE AT LIVERPOOL

HE IS RECEIVED WITH GREAT ENTHUSIASM.

Appealed Chiefly to Trades Unionists to Support His Policy of Preference, as Against the Advice of Their Leaders.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain addressed another monster meeting in the Hippodrome at Liverpool on October 27, under the auspices of the Workingmen's Conservative association. Mr. Chamberlain was given a tremendous reception. The meeting was organized as an offset to the recent action of the representatives of labor unions in denouncing Mr. Chamberlain's proposals.

Mr. Chamberlain devoted the first portion of his speech to the "dumping" of the manufactures of the United States and Germany into England, which he said must result in depression. With regard to the cry of "dearer food," he pledged himself that his proposals would not add anything to the cost of living; on the contrary, they would decrease the cost of living to the poorest families in the country.

The speaker devoted the greater part of his speech, which lasted an hour and a half, to a powerful argument addressed to the working classes of the United Kingdom. He pointed out that when the movement for free trade was carried, the working classes were neither represented nor consulted, but it was a movement of the manufacturers and the middle classes; now that the working classes were represented in parliament, their support was absolutely essential to the carrying out of his proposals, which he said meant more employment.

Emphasizing the statement that it was impossible to reconcile free trade with trade unionism, Mr. Chamberlain pointed out the inconsistency of supporting a policy which admitted the product of the cheapest kind of labor without taxation. He said he believed the working classes of the United Kingdom were more advanced than many of their leaders, and said if this were true, he was confident his proposals would win.

The meeting adopted a resolution eulogizing Mr. Chamberlain's services, endorsing the government's fiscal policy and declaring the advisability of building the empire more closely together.

Mr. Chamberlain dealt especially upon the shipping industry. He pointed to the greater growth of foreign ship-building as compared with that of Great Britain. He referred pointedly to Great Britain's loss of trade with Cuba, where he said British conditions of trade had not been respected.

"All our representations have been fruitless and America proposes a preferential arrangement treating Cuba exactly as I want you to treat Canada."

He said that the adoption of his policy would encourage and stimulate the colonial shipping trade and would not prevent the development for foreign trade. He said he wanted to see less foreign manufactured articles imported but more raw material brought here in return for British finished goods.

In conclusion, Mr. Chamberlain declared that Holland had tried and failed to keep cammand of the sea and her position as carrier and merchant of the world without a productive capacity, and that Great Britain would be no more successful than Holland if she neglected to bind her colonists together.

BRITISH PRESS COMMENT.

The Mail referring to the speech says its note was "stand together," the spirit that Montrose, who went forth to battle resolved to win or lose all. Chamberlain calls to all the British industries "stand shoulder to shoulder in a national cause and support trades threatened by foreign competition."

The Express says: "The Liverpool reception was the greatest personal triumph yet received by Chamberlain. His argument pointing out to trades unions what a mistake their officials had made in championing Cobdenism, trade unionism being an absolute violation of Cobden principles, was hailed with enthusiasm."

The News says: "Mr. Chamberlain's statement that British trade has been diminished by the high tariffs of other countries is untruc; protection diminishes employment and the Liverpool proposal, if adopted, is sure to make the poorer people suffer, and will benefit the rich, particularly colonials in Melbourne and Manitoba."

The Daily Chronicle says: "Two mottoes over Mr. Chamberlain's platform at Liverpool were 'Down with imports' and 'Up with exports.' But he must not ask us to take his word that there will be no increase in the expense of living if we abandon free trade."

The Sultan of Turkey is seriously ill.

A Hamilton policeman was killed on October 26 by a burglar.

Hon. Edward Blake, M.P., is seriously ill at Florence, Italy.

The Italian rioters were let off easily in the court; fines of $20 being imposed at Portage la Prairie.

The bat-shaped kite invented by S. F. Cody, F.R.M.S.—the letters indicate him a Fellow of the Royal Microscopical Society—has been adopted by the British admiralty. The kite is made from bamboo and silk, and will carry a man. It may be used for reconnoitering on land or sea, and will be able to haul a sledge over Arctic ice with but one man to steer it.

A LONDON SENSATION.

Sagatel Sagouni, President of the Armenian Revolutionary Society, Assassinated.

London, Oct. 28.—Saggatel Sagouni, president of the Armenian Revolutionary Society in London, was murdered in the suburb of Nunhead last night. The crime has created a sensation, as it has every appearance of being of a political character and has been preceded by the assassinations of other officials of branches of the same society on the continent.

Sagouni, who only returned to London yesterday, after settling up the affairs of an associate in Switzerland, who was recently assassinated by stabbing, was entering his residence, when a man rushed across the road and fired four shots at Sagouni in quick succession, the last bullet entering the region of the heart. The murderer, who appeared to be a foreigner, fled. The only clues to the man in the possession of the authorities are a felt hat and a silver-plated revolver, both made in New York, which he dropped in his flight.

The murdered man, who was a mining engineer, became wealthy in the Caucasus, and devoted his money to the Armenian cause. His society was entirely passive and opposed to violence, and it is thought this attitude inspired the advanced section of the Armenians with the desire for vengeance, the latter claiming that Sagouni's society devoted their funds to charity which would have been better applied to violent remedies for the Armenian grievances.

It is stated that Sagouni's life has been threatened on account of his participation in the exposure, by the editor of a Boston newspaper, Young Armenia, of the misappropriation of funds by a fraction of the Armenian revolutionists. Three men are alleged to have collected $20,000 in America in 1902 and to have put the money in their own pockets instead of pushing the propaganda for the emancipation of the Armenians, for which the money was subscribed.

CASHEL TO HANG.

Murderer of Rufus Belt to Pay Penalty on December 15.

Calgary, Alta., Oct. 27.—Ernest Cashel was this morning found guilty of the murder of Isaac Rufus Belt. He was sentenced to be hanged on December 15.

The judge asked the usual question for a statement.

Cashel replied: "I have nothing to say except I hain't guilty." The judge referred to the extensive nature of the trial, and said that in the light of the evidence he did not see what other verdict could be given.

Rufus Belt, a rancher, in the Red Deer country, disappeared last fall. Belt's body was found this spring in Tail Creek, a tributary of the Red Deer river, with a bullet wound in his back. Cashel was arrested and has been on trial at Calgary for the past two weeks.

Killed at Niagara.

A dispatch from Niagara Falls, Ont., says: Three men were killed and two others badly injured at Lawson Riley's wheel pit at the Canadian Niagara Power company's works this morning. George Hiller, employed as pumpman, and five Hungarian laborers were being lowered in a bucket used for the purpose, when the bucket caught on a cross bridge and dumped Hiller and four of the Hungarians out. The men fell to the solid rock below, some 50 feet. Two of the Hungarians were killed instantly, and Hiller had both arms and both legs broken and was internally injured, and died in the ambulance on the way to the Emergency hospital. The other two Hungarians are still alive but cannot recover.

Two Tragedies at Qu'Appelle.

At Qu'Appelle, a German, Sebastian Dedding, died instantly on Saturday as the result of the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of Raymond Walyur. The two men were looking at the gun and did not know that it was loaded.

J. C. Abhart, while under the influence of liquor at Fort Qu'Appelle attempted suicide on Saturday by cutting a gash in his arm. Corporal Dubuque took him to Regina, but he died before reaching there. The wound alone was not sufficient to cause death, but his system was weakened by recent excesses.

Body Torn to Shreds.

A dispatch from Galt, Ont., says: John Gerlie, aged 15, was killed in Perine's woollen mills at Doon on Monday. He was cleaning one of the card machines when his coat was caught in the revolving cylinder, which was filled with sharp points of steel. He was drawn into the pickers and before the machinery could be stopped his body was almost torn to shreds.

Hagersville Horror.

The large barns of J. U. Murray, at the west end af the Grand river bridge, about ten miles from Hagersville, were destroyed by fire on Oct. 27, and Miss Maggie Short, was burned to death. She went to the barn with a lighted lamp, which exploded. Three horses, three cattle and much crops were burned.

Steamers with $2,000,000 of Klondike gold on board, are ice-bound and in a perilous position.

The Fiala-Zeigler South Polar expedition has failed to get through the ice.

Emperor William has decided to erect a bronze monument to the late Herr Krupp, the gunmaker, before the Imperial Yacht Club at Kiel. The monument will be over life size. His majesty gave the commission for its execution to Professor Haverkamp. The emperor himself will make the drawings.

LUCKY FISHERMAN.

A Nova Scotian Buys a Fortune for Five Dollars.

"After 70 years of undisturbed repose at the bottom of the sea, the brig Barbaric is now yielding up golden treasure to a homely fisherman, who purchased the wreck a few months ago for 45."

The Barbaric foundered in deep water off Seawall, Nova Scotia, in a terrible gale, and all her crew went with her. As there were few salvage appliances in those days, and her value was supposed to be but small, the brig was left there to go to pieces.

This is the story as told by John Burns, a British Columbia miner, who is going east to join his friends in Nova Scotia.

Burns' brother Thomas, who is a fisherman at Seawall, offered to purchase the wreck this summer, and as it would cost almost all they were worth to get up her anchors and copper fastenings and other gear, the Barbaric was sold at a nominal price.

But fisherman Burns had heard of an old story which associated the brig with treasure in gold dollars, totalling to $60,000, accumulated during a three years' cruise in South American waters, and with some difficulty he induced a diver to come over from Halifax, N.S., and start operations to recover it.

Up to the time Burns last heard from his brother the latter and the diver had brought up $18,000 gold dollars from the wreck and the diver had located some $30,000 more, so that the chances are that by this time almost the whole of the treasure had been recovered.

HONOLULU MORALS.

Japanese Association For Trading in Native Women Unearthed.

Advices from Honolulu say: The federal investigations of the cases of the Japanese importations of women for immoral purposes has resulted in highly sensational testimony before the grand jury, and there are twenty Japanese now in custody on charges of holding women as slaves and illegally importing them, perjury in connection with such importations, or conspiracy to violate the federal laws on the subject.

United States District Attorney Breckons has exposed to the jury an association of Japanese, who collected a large monthly fund to maintain the brothels in which its members were interested, to import girls from Japan and to prevent and oppose criminal prosecution of the members. The association, whose books are held by the attorney, collected between five and six hundred dollars a month, a large part of which went of which went to white attorneys who may also be involved in the criminal proceedings.

MARCH OF IMPERIALISM.

Canada Offers Her Preference to the South African Colonies.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—It was decided at to-day's cabinet meeting to offer to the South African colonies the tariff preference of 33 1-3 per cent. now granted to the mother country in return for the preference contained in the customs union tariff of South Africa.

In March, 1903, there was a customs union formed in South Africa. The parties to it were the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Orange River colony, Transvaal, and Southern Rhodesia. It provides for a common tariff, with a preference to goods produced and manufactured in the United Kingdom.

This preference is somewhat variable. The tariff is divided into five classes. The first class comprises specific and advalorem duties. The second class is a mixed ad valorem; the fourth class is free goods and the fifth class is non-enumerated at 10 per cent. The preference is 25 per cent. on any duty chargeable on the ad valorem rate on classes one, two and five; in respect to class three, the ad valorem is 2½ per cent. all round and this is rebated entirely under the preference. The offer of Canada, therefore, is that she will give to South Africa her preference in return for South Africa's preference.

Miscarriage of Justice.

A dispatch from Vancouver says: Through the ill-advised leniency of Magistrate Abrams of Nanaimo, in accepting bail in the small sum of $500, Hiram Kells, of Cumberland, a fiend in human form, escaped punishment for his atrocious crime.

Kells was guardian to a hapless little chap of ten, constitutionally fragile. The child was a nuisance to him, and he decided by abuse and starvation to rid himself of the burden. When rescued the child was insane from abuse and hunger, while reduced in weight to less than 24 pounds.

Kells was to have faced trial at the Nanaimo assize, when a true bill was returned gainst him, but had jumped his bail and at last reports was near Abbotford, making for the American boundary.

Mr. Justice Martin made the incident the text of a severe reprimand to the magistrate, saying that in such a case at least four times the amount of bail allowed should have been insisted upon.

Two Toronto rinks are already booked for the Winnipeg bonspiel.

The new C. P. R. stock yards in Winnipeg will hold 150 cars of cattle.

Prince Galitzen, governor-general of the Caucasus, was stabbed by an assassin on October 28.

The prospects for cheaper money in Canada are good, banks having more money on hand than they can handle.

A LIVELY TIME.

A Hypnotist Mauled by an Infuriated Mob and Nearly Killed.

A hypnotist, named Brown, has recently got into serious trouble at Lamont, S.D. At an entertainment he put Ole Rasmussen, a young man, to sleep and went through the usual business with him.

Brown then made repeated attempts to restore his subject, but without success. The lecturer became excited, lost his self control, fainted and fell to the platform in a swoon.

Realizing the desperate situation, the audience was instantly in a state of the greatest excitement.

Brown was trampled under foot by an infuriated mob, and would have been killed, had it not been for the presence of a few cool-headed men, who took charge of him, removed him to a farm house near by and locked him in a bedchamber. In the midst of the uproar at the schoolhouse, where the entertainment was given, he regained consciousness, and realizing the situation he was in, fled through a window.

Rasmussen was still alive at last accounts, but the doctors say he cannot survive in his present condition for many days, and it is feared he will die before hypnotic experts can be procured to revive him.

CHILDREN CREMATED.

Tragic Affair in a Quebec Town—Heroic Rescue.

Advices from St. Philemon, Bellechase county, give details of an accident which occurred at that place Wednesday night, when three young children were burned to death, while a brave resident of St. Philemon lies badly injured, with an infant of five months, whom he saved from death in the flames.

The parents of the children, Mr. and Mrs. Francois Derhard, left to visit neighbors, and during their absence people residing in the vicinity of their home noticed the building was on fire. Many persons hurried to the scene, but ere their arrival, the flames had augmented to such an extent as to render the premises almost impossible of approach. One heroic fellolt rushed into the burning building, and a few minutes later issued forth with a babe in his arms. He had snatched the child from the cradle, where it lay partly suffocated by the dense smoke. Both rescuer and rescued were severely burned, and it is feared the infant will not survive its present condition. One was saved, but the three others, the oldest of whom was five years, were cremated.

Got a Scare.

A dispatch from Montreal says:—Great consternation was caused at Bonaventure station last evening by the discovery of what was supposed to be an infernal machine. Between 8 and 10 o'clock a stranger was observed acting oddly. He wandered up and down the platforms and halls, occasionally addressing some of the people who were standing around. About 10 o'clock he was observed to place something in a corner and hurry away, taking to his heels as soon as he got outside of the station.

Some young men, who had noticed his actions, picked up the supposed infernal machine and hunted up J. Maybury, the night station master, who took it into his office. Upon investigation, however, it was discovered that the dangerous looking little package was no more than a small pocket dry-battery. It is supposed that the stranger was not quite compos mentis.

"John Bull & Sons."

In his Newcastle speech, Mr. Chamberlain, in the course of his remarks on colonial trade, said: "I would go to our friends and kinsmen and say, gentlemen, we believe, looking to the future, that it is high time 'John Bull & Sons' entered into partnership."

A number of London business men, acting upon this suggestion, have formed a syndicate, to trade exclusively in manufactured goods, foodstuffs and raw materials produced within the limits of the British empire. "British Goods for Britishers," is the password of this new undertaking. Subsidiary limited companies will be formed in all the companies, each of which will send one director to London to act on the parent board.

How to Deal With Vagrants.

A dispatch from Toronto says: At the closing meeting of the W.C.T.U. on Friday this resolution wass passed: "Whereas, there have been numerous brutal assaults committed on our sex, attributed to vagrants, we earnestly implore our civic authorities in every case to impose a penalty on all vagrants, in preference to giving the men a few hours to leave the place to be a menace to other municipalities, and further that the members of the W.C.T.U. emphatically refuse to encourage them by giving them money or other gifts unless to relieve present necessity."

NEWS NOTES.

France is taking an active part in settling the Corean trouble.

Winnipeg's bank clearings for the past week show a 41 per cent. increase.

Another big strike of gold is announced in the White Horse district.

It is said that King Edward will compete for the Atlantic yacht trophy.

Miss Eva Booth may succeed the late Mrs. Booth-Tucker in New York.

A rich gold strike is reported at Webbwood, on the C. P. R., in New Ontario.

Andrew Carnegie does not consider Alaskan award a victory for the United States.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS. FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, NOV. 7, 1903.

NEEDED XMAS PRESENTS

The subjects for discussion by the Board of Trade on Monday evening are of an important nature as they vitally affect the interest of this town. Some of the matters, however, are limited to local issues and can scarcely claim the attention of the other boards of trade comprised within the association.

The need for greater and improved jail accommodation has been repeatedly acknowledged by the government, which has even gone to the extent of drafting plans for promised changes, but it was then dropped.

A new post office building is needed in this town. The present office has long ago outlived its purpose, and it is entirely inadequate for the present demands made upon it. The Fernie office is an important money order office as many thousands of dollars are transferred through it every month. It is also more or less of a distributing point for surrounding places.

The C. P. R. car shortage, the effect of which is felt directly in the coal mining industry and in every line of mercantile business along the line, and which indirectly affects every citizen of the district, is a subject with which the associated boards should have considerable weight.

G. C. Hodge, district superintendent of the Canada Western Telephone and Telegraph Co. was in Fernie early in September for the purpose of taking initial steps towards putting in a telephone system in this town. His proposition met with a flattering reception, the only drawback being that the Coal Company also possessed a charter for a telephone system in the town. The assistance of the associated boards might be valuable in securing an amicable agreement between the rival companies.

The amendment re lien on lumber is a matter of general interest, though its necessity was clearly shown in a local sense recently, when the Cedar Valley Improvement Co. became insolvent.

THE CABINET SHUFFLE.

The new cabinet as shown by the latest despatches is as follows.

Premier, Minister of Mines and Provincial Secretary—Hon. R. McBride.

Minister of Finance—Hon. R. G. Tatlow.

Attorney-General—Hon. Charles Wilson.

Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works—Hon. R. F. Green.

President of the Council—Hon. F. J. Fulton.

The arrangement is probably the best the premer could make under the circumstances. By giving Fulton a cabinet seat without a salary attached to it he avoids the necessity of opening a constituency in the interior. He himself shoulders the heavy duties of two portfolios, thus avoiding another possible defeat, and Wilson in Vancouver has good chances for re-election. One thing that will help Mr. Wilson is the long standing rivalry existing between Victoria and Vancouver for cabinet representation.

INCORPORATION

The subject of incorporation is one which ought to be taken up by the Board of Trade at this time if advantage is to be taken of the approaching session to secure the necessary recognition from the legislature. If the matter be brought up at this session everything will be in shape for going a head with municipal organization next spring, but if delayed until the session of 1904 it is doubtful if the municipality could be satisfactorily set in working order the same year.

There is now a clear understanding as to the position of the Coal Company towards incorporation, and many of those who thought the Company unreasonable in its demands now believe that it has taken the only course open to it. There are of course many details which would have to be arranged with the Coal Company as to the water and electric light plants, and no doubt steps could be taken to induce many living outside of the proposed boundary to come into the municipality.

The subject resolves itself into a business proposition. Will it pay or not? We contend that with a proper adjustment of license fees and the same tax as levied now there will be much more funds for public improvements than there are now, and Fernieites will have the satisfaction of determining how that money is to be spent.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Complaint has been made to us that of the $1,600 subscribed to the fire protection system only about $800 has been collected, and that considerable difficulty is being experienced in securing sufficient funds to pay the necessary expenses connected with the construction of the new fire-hall. The committee do not accuse the delinquent subscribers with lack of good faith in the matter but they believe they are showing a woeful lack of interest in a matter of public benefaction. The subscribers in arrears should either send their subscriptions or deliver them personally to the secretary and thus save the latter the trouble and annoyance of looking them up. The committee deserve praise for the good work they have done during the past few weeks in rushing the new fire hall. The hall is now ready for plastering. It is a very creditable building, and, best of all, it has been built on economic principles. Funds are needed to complete the job. Be prompt and settle your amount at once.

* * *

The low lying situation of several blocks north of the FREE PRESS corner requires that the Government should take steps to have this part drained. The FREE PRESS has been held responsible for the water lying on this part of the townsite and after several attempts and considerable expense we have at last constructed a cess-pool which carries off all the water from our motor and yet the water covers just as much ground and pedestrians experience just as much difficulty in walking the side-walk dry shod now as when our old cess-pool overflowed. This area is naturally low and the water from the surrounding blocks drains into it. The government agent apparently knows this for in the spring he called for tenders for the construction of an open ditch which would drain the entire section down past the hospital to a decided depression leading to the river. Mr. Armstrong thought the ditch could be dug for $200 and the lowest sender was in the neighborhood of $250. As Mr. Armstrong could not get the work done at his valuation he decided that the town must get along without the ditch, and the water still lies there, a menace to the public health and a disgrace to the town. If Mr. Armstrong believed that the figure was too high why did he not let the contract by day labor? There are plenty of reliable contractors who would have undertaken the work on those terms This is only one example of many ways in which the government of his town is mismanaged by means of pretexts and technicalities. The time is indeed ripe when Fernie should have a Government Agent of its own, and when the suzerain of Fort Steele over this town should be overthrown forever.

C. N. P. COAL CO. SUITS.

Vancouver, Nov. 5.—In the full court today in the action of Maude, Bessie and Maggie Leadbeater vs. the Crow's Nest Coal Co., fos damages in consequence of the death of the plaintiff's husband and father in the Fernie mine disaster, the company appealed from the order of Judge Forin empowering the plaintiffs to amend their statement of claim. S. S. Taylor, K.C., appears for the plaintiffs respondents. E. C. Davis, K.C., and E. V. Bodwell, K.C., for the defendants, appellants. The case was not concluded when the court rose for the day.

A REMARKABLE RECORD.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has a remarkable record. It has been in use for over thirty years, during which time many million bottles have been sold and used. It has long been the standard and main reliance in the treatment of croup in thousand of homes, yet during all this time no case has ever been reported to the manufacturers in which it failed to effect a cure. When given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even as soon as the croupy cough appears, it will prevent the attack. It is pleasant to take, many children like it. It contains no opium or other harmful substance and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Fresh Fruit

AND

Vegetables

arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert

Confectioner

J. C. Hutchison

Merchant Tailor

Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings.

We Guarantee Our Work.

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

"Follow the Leader."

Is the name of our new Exercise Books.

We lead in

School Supplies

and can furnish

Scribblers

Exercise Books

Note Books, &c

in immense variety.

Our line of READERS, etc., is complete.

Our "Blo-to-fil" Fountain Pen is a trade-winner

Fernie Drug Store.

N. E. SUDDABY.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 160 acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 1966, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 273 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 40 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 40 chains to place of commencement.

JOSEPH BAUER

249-8

Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to th Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works a Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E' corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Tuttle.

Cree & Hutchison

The Largest Real Estate Agents in East Kootenay.

FOR SALE

2 Victoria Avenue Lots.
House and Lot, $1,500.
Chicken Ranch, furnished House and 100 hens, $250.
House and Lot $2,000.
House and Lot $2,500.
Two cottages $800.
Three Timber Limits.
Six coal claims.

We can sell you reeal estate no matter where it is.

Don't forget that insurance—Do it now.

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.

By the Day, Week, or Month.
Everything first-class.

WM. R. McDOUGALL.

The production of the Best Makers in the World are none too good for the people of Fernie.

Get the Best

by using

W. & R. Jacobs & Co.'s

Biscuits

Crow's Nest Trading Co'y

Lumbermen

Don't Forget

We are Headquarters

Rubbers and German Sox.

Our stock consisting of 64 cases of the Canadian Rubber Co.'s goods, every pair guaranteed. It will pay you to Get Our Prices on rubber footwear before purchasing elsewhere as we are confident we can save you money. Reasonable Profits and Fair Treatment of our customers is what's bringing the trade to

Chas. Richards & Co.

Boilers and Engines.

ALSO SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.

Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.

602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Ft. Steele, B. C. for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum upon the following described lands: beginning at a post marked D. Adams' south-west corner post which is situated along Fording river and four miles north of the northern boundary of Lot 4588 in group one. East Kootenay district B. C. and which corner post is near the south-east corner post of F. T. Griffin's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 814, thence from said south west corner of D. Adams east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres,

249-4 D. ADAMS

Located by W. Bovin, Sept, 18th, 1903.

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

The Best Is None Too Good For the People of Fernie

WE aim to supply the very best in every line of meats

Fish, Game and Poultry always on hand.

We receive WEEKLY SHIPMENTS of Choice Dairy Butter and Eggs - - - -

Calgary Cattle Co.

LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY

MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

Girl Wanted—Apply Mrs. J. A. Rennie.

A. E. Ingham, of Elko, was in town this week.

Get your pictures framed at the B. C. Furniture Co.

H. Kershaw was in from Fort Steele on Thursday evening.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

The Raymond sugar factory commenced operations this week.

Rev. Docksteader, of Elko, returned from a trip east this week.

John Bastian came up from Frank this week. He will remain in Fernie.

Mrs. (Dr.) Willson of Morrissey Mines, visited friends in town this week.

A. J. Mott has left on a business trip up the Calgary and Edmonton district.

A very enjoyable dance was held at the home of Mr. A. C. Liphardt last evening.

Hugh B. Gilmour ex.-M.P.P. for Vancouver, came in on last evening's express.

Mrs. George and Mrs. Oldland, of Morrissey Mines, spent several days in town this week.

Miss Fullerton, of Elkmouth, and Miss Thompson, of Brantford, are the guests of Mrs. Stork.

D. A. McRae left on Wednesday for Sparwood where he has accepted the position of sawyer.

We buy, sell and exchange new and second had furniture. stoves, etc. The B. C. Furniture Co.

L. M. Proctor returned on Thursday from the prairie where he spent several days on a business trip.

J. D. Quail is putting in a plate-glass front in his hardware store. The change makes a marked improvement.

J. S. T. Alexander and R. Randall returned from their hunting expedition to Lethbridge and vicinity on Monday.

Want your photos for Xmas? No time to lose. Prest's studio open from Nov. 19th to 28tn. 252-3

It is reported that the Kootenay Valley Lumber Co. will erect a mill near Elkmouth where they have large timber claims.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

Mrs. Elliott left on Sunday for Didsbury and Leduc on a visit to friends. Mr. Elliott also left a couple of weeks ago for the latter place.

Wanted—Work in hotel by man and wife. Man to tend bar and wife to wait on table. Both experienced at work. Address H. Lewis, Macleod.

The Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. have reduced their bush staff by about 30 men. The mill was shut down some time ago for want of logs.

John Mott, of Elko, has purchased the Hoffman Hotel from J. Stevenson. The price was $1,800. The new proprietor has moved his family from his ranch.

Xmas. photos should be taken this month to insure reaching your friends in time. Prest's studio opposite the Methodist Church open from Nov. 19th to 28th. 252-3

Andrew Jonson, the Finlander, is slowly improving from the severe wound he received in a scrap at Michel and the doctors think he will recover. The prisoners charged with complication in the crime have been twice remanded until the extent of the injuries was better known.

H. Bentley is putting up an addition to the rear of his store that is occupied by C. Richards & Co. This enterprising firm has increased its business to such an extent that more room was required. They now use the boarding-house building and two extra cellars and all are taxed to their utmost capacity.

On Wednesday evening last the lives and fortunes of Mr. Francis R. Clarke and Miss Edith E. Rikley were united for life. The marriage ceremony was performed at the home of Mrs. Raney, Howland Ave., by Rev. John Robson in the presence of a large number of guests. The many beautiful and useful gifts to the bride, attested the popularity of the young couple. Mr. Clarke is an engineer of the Coal Co. and will make his home in Fernie.

Cosgrove's Concert Orchestra are billed for Nov. 18th and 19th. On the first evening they will give their celebrated concert and on the second evening their seven piece orchestra will supply music for a dance. Both events will be given under the auspices of the Fernie Fire Brigade. The orchestra will be assisted on the first evening by Miss Berkhoel, contralto, of Chicago, and Miss Hudson-Havener, violinist, of Chicago, two talented artists. The program contains many novel features and the performance is well spoken of wherever they have appeared. The ball will be one of the leading society events of the season as the music will be of the finest, and the cause of the fire-brigade appeals to every citizen.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Your credit is good at The B. C. Furniture Co.

J. Hegley was down to MacLeod several days this week.

Mrs. Bricker entertained a number of her friends on Thursday afternoon.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

Mr. G. G. Jewel and family have moved their place of residence from Coal Creek to Fernie. They have moved into the house formerly occupied by Mr. Fulljames.

The pastor will conduct the services in the Methodist church to-morrow. The subject at 11 a.m. will be, "Fellowship with Jesus", and at 7:30 p.m., God's Eternal Supply".

We have been asked to announce that all applications for hotel license renewals must be in by Nov. 15 in order to come up before the general meeting of the commissioners on Dec. 15th

Night School

Learn to write a good hand. Learn Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. Our methods are up-to-date. Class room 1st door west of Methodist church. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

The beautiful Fall weather with which this district has been favored for several weeks past is at an end and grim winter is about to place his rigid grasp upon us. During the week his approach was seen upon the surrounding mountains, as the snow line dropped lower and lower. The heavy rainfall yesterday crystallized into snow flakes at Coal Creek Mines and over six inches of the beautiful covered the ground, and the line descended as low as the cemetery hill.

DIED.

SCHRAM—At Fernie on Oct 31st, Elma Tena, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Schram, aged 10 months and 20 days.

HE LEARNED A GREAT TRUTH.

It is said of John Wesley that he once said to Mistress Wesley: "Why do you tell that child the same thing over and over again?" "John Wesley, because once telling is not enough." It is for this same reason that you are told again and again that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cures colds and grip; that it counteracts any tendency of these diseases to result in pneumonia, and that it's pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Grand Torch Light Parade

and free entertainment will be given under the auspices of Fernie L.O.L. No. 1713, of Fernie.

Princess Hall
November 5

EVFRYBODY WELCOME-COME ONE, COME ALL.

Ball After Entertainment.

$1.50 per couple.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

The Muskoka Hotel,
....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

T. H. Whelan, Manager.

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE
Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

Something Worth Knowing

All Goods Purchased from

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

carry a guarantee of entire satisfaction to our customers or money refunded——We purchase from the best markets in the world, always in Car Lots for Spot Cash, and therefore can sell you better goods for less money than any other House——No occasion to send away for any goods, as all our departments are brim full of this season's goods, fresh, new, and up-to-date.

Our Grocery Department

has made big strides lately and has been successful in reaching the top——It is our intention that with Quality and Price in your favor, and courteous treatment on our part, to merit your patronage which we assure you will always be appreciated.

S P E C I A L

AS A LEADER we will sell for a few days:

1 Large Tin Fresh or Smoked Halibut ..... 10c.
1 Large Tin Baking Powder ..... 10c.
1 pound Tin Special Blend Mocha and Java Coffee ..... 40c.
8 Tins Condensed Cream $1.00

Oranges, Lemons, Plums, Celery and all kinds of Garden Vegetables in Stock Get our prices for your winter supply.

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

Departmental Stores——Fernie—Michel—Morrissey—Coal Creek

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON
Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

"Herbageum"

For Horses, Cattle & Poultry.

"International Stock Food."

Three Feeds for One Cent.

A. W. Bleasdell

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

A. S. EMPY'S
...Restaurant

Wardner, B. C.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

SALVATION ARMY LEADER KILLED

Mrs. Emma Booth-Tucker Meets Sudden Death.

WRECK ON SANTA FE ROAD

Consul in America to the Salvation Army, and Col. T. C. Holland Die as the Result of Injuries Received on a Railway-Train Ran Into an Open Switch.

A dispatch from Kansas City, Mo., dated Oct. 29, says: Mrs. Emma Booth-Tucker, consul in America of the Salvation Army, wife of Commander Booth-Tucker, and second daughter of Wm. Booth, founder of the Army, and Col. T. C. Holland, in charge of the Salvation Army colony at Amity, Colo., died at Marceline, Mo., after midnight, from injuries received in a wreck of the east bound Californ'a train on the Santa Fe railway at Dean Lake, Mo., 80 miles east of Kansas City, at 9.30 last night. Both lived several hours. Fifteen others were injured more or less severely.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker was on her way home from a visit to the colony at Amity. She left Kansas City last evening and was to have met Commander Booth-Tucker, her husband, at Chicago, to-day.

The wrecked train was the eastbound California No. 2, which left Kansas City last evening for Chicago. The train ran into an open switch, striving a steel water tank, and all save the mail, express and day coaches were wrecked. Consul Booth-Tucker and Col. Holland were in one of the Pullmans.

Dean Lake, the scene of the wreck, is an isolated place, and there was great delay in taking care of the injured and getting them started for Marcelline.

After the train bringing the injured was finally started it was delayed by the breaking of a truck and did not reach Marcelline until nearly five hours after the wreck occurred. At the Salvation Army citadel in Kansas City news of the death of their favored leader caused great grief, and at first the officers refused to give credence to the report.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker, who was Miss Emma Booth, married Frederick Tucker in 1888. He assumed her name as part of his own. He was born in India, and lived there several years after the marriage. He was commissioner of the Army in India. Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Tucker were appointed to command the army in America in March, 1896, succeeding Eva C. Booth, who had supplanted her father, Ballington Booth, who had been removed by the generalf Mrs. Booth-Tucker was said to be the ablest of all the Booth children. She had enthusiasm tempered with cold judgment and executive ability. It was these qualities which induced her father to send her to America in 1896 to try to bring about harmony in the American branch of the Army.

The following characterization was made of her at that time: "She has that rare quality of perfect sympathy. She is a well educated womanman in the sense that she can think and write clear, good English. She has no class prejudices, and is just as much at hame in the parlors of a house in Fifth avenue as in the one and only room of a squalid family. But it is in public meetings that her real power shows itself. As as orator she ranks with less than half a dozen Americans of both sexes."

An Australian Talks Up.

Melbourne, Victoria, Oct. 30.—Alfred Deakin, the new federal prime minister, in announcing the ministerial policy to a meeting at Ballarat, said he was prepared to reciprocate the proposals of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain concerning the British fiscal policy.

The adoption of this policy, he said, would require that Australia grow vast quantities of wheat and increase her dairy output. It would result in turning the tide of immigration towards the Commonwealth. The government, the prime minister said, would support the development of national trade. He said the watch word should be "fiscal peace and preferential trade for white Australia."

A vote of confidence in the federal ministry was passed unanimously.

To Curtail Expenses.

It is stated that the Canadian Pacific railway, following the example set by American lines, will curtail its expenditure to a greater extent than usual this fall. Some little apprehension was caused by the decreased September earnings, although the slow movement of wheat in the West would probably account for it. The officials deem, however, that under the circumstances, it is best to be on the safe side and adopt a conservative policy.

Caught in a Machine.

A fatal accident happened at the annual field sports of the Western University, on the campus at London, Ont., on Oct. 28. During the contest of throwing the heavy iron weight it was thrown wide by one of the competitors. The crowd fell back but the seven year old son of W. D. Broderick, manager of Molson's bank, was not quick enough, and the weight struck him on the head. He was rendered unconscious and died the same night.

The Boers in South Africa and their late enemies, the English residents, have formed a syndicate to exploit a spectacular military display at the St. Louis exposition next year. The plan is to show many of the pictures illustrating queer affairs of the late war.

"Fool" Shoes

Sometimes expert shoe men are fooled by imitation Goodyear Welts.

Sometimes they buy these imitations to fool you.

Buy the real "Slater Shoe"---made by no other process but Goodyear Welt.

Slater Shoe

For Men - $4.00 $5.00 - For Women

Sole Agents :-- JOYCE BRO'S., FERNIE, B. C.

ROW AT THE PORTAGE

ITALIAN RAILWAY NAVVIES ATTACK THE POLICE.

Shots Were Exchanged, and Sticks and Stones Were Freely Thrown by the Dagoes—Detective Cox Is Rather Badly Knocked About.

Portage la Prairie, Oct. 25.—A pitched battle between the local police authorities and a gang of fifty Italian navvies who are working for the C. P. R., occurred here about noon to-day, and during its progress some fifty shots were fired, while the air was also thick with stones, clubs and other missiles.

As a result of the fracas Detective Wm. Cox is sorely wounded, having been hit with a huge stone in the head, and injured in the back and leg by flying debris. Three of the Italians were safely lodged behind th? bars gnd mor? arrests will follow.

The trouble originated last night when the foreigners assaulted their foreman. The latter, whose name is Macdonald has been regarded with hatred by his men, who have freely threatened him lately. Last night, while walking along the business portion of Saskatchewan avenue, Macdonald was attacked by a number of the men, who crept up from the rear, and one of them brought down a crushing blow with a large club on the foreman's head, which felled him. The thugs retired hastily. With the idea of arresting the culprit who had struck down the foreman, Detective Cox, Chief McDougall, and Constable Corfield repaired to the work cars about 1 o'clock to-day. They caught the navvies unawares and spotted their man sitting beside the track. The chief took him in charge, and was about to return when a signal outcry was made by the interpreter, an Italian who appears to be a leader of the mob. Instantly the crews responded, and armed with clubs, stones and knives commenced an onslaught on the unlucky officers. Three of the railroaders had revolvers and a fusilade of shots began. There were quite a number of cars at various parts of the yards, and by making a detour the rabble tried to head off the officers and rescue their companions.

In the meantime the police were at bay with drawn guns slowly backing out with their man. Constable Corfield, who unfortunately was unarmed, had taken over the prisoner and managed to get away with him. The assailants became bolder, and by suddenly rushing around the end of a car one leader was about to grapple with the chief when he was felled with a blow from the latter's revolver, and blood began to flow freely. About the same time a huge rock struck Detective Cox in the head and he was badly cut. The police had been firing repeatedly, but had refrained from shooting to kill. At this stage the officers had exhausted their ammunition, and as the scene of the conflict had gradually become more frequented they retreated to the cars, while Messrs. McDougall and Cox repaired to a medical man's office, the latter's injuries being dressed.

About an hour later the above mentioned interpreter, who was evidently reconnoitering, was noticed down town, and was promptly taken in tow, and later a drunk belonging to the gang was locked up, although it is not thought he took a part. Of the injured none are really seriously hurt. E. King, a young man of the town, who heard the sounds of warfare, went to have a look and was struck in the arm by a huge rock. The trouble is not yet over, and it is effpected more arrests will be made. The laborers, who have been engaged in surfacing work for the C. P. R., have plenty of money, as a total of $458 was found on the men arrested.

There is also trouble in a gang of C.N.R. Italian steel layers who are putting down steel on the Rosendale line. One of them stole the belongings of a Galician and on the latter trying to recover his possessions an assault occurred, the Galician being badly used up. Constables Garrioch and Dawson left this afternoon for Beaver, where this crew is now located, but they arrested their man without any difficulty. There has been intense excitement in town today over the various mix-ups, and there is great indignation among citizens, many favoring calling out the militia and cleaning out the gang. None of the names of the Italians have been secured, as they go by numbers in the crews.

One Can of

Victor Brand

Evaporated Cream

will tell the story better than many words.

Victor Cream is fully equal to the richest fluid cream.

No other brand compares with it for all household purposes. It is simply the purest of Jersey Cream with the water evaporated.

Mfd by Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Had a Small Majority.

A London cable says: Colonial Secretary Lyttleton has been re-elected a member of the House of Commons from Warwick and Leamington with a majority of 190. At the last election Mr. Lyttleton secured a majority of 031.

The reduced majority of Mr. Lyttleton in Warwick and Leamington, occurring as it did in Mr. Chamberlain's own district, is taken by the Unionist press as an indication that the fooh tax argument of free traders will figure heavily in the general election whenever the government goes to the country.

It is rumored in Newfoundland that Canada may refuse bait to U. S. fishermen.

The Scotch curlers who visited Canada last winter have sent an official letter testifying to their appreciation of the visit.

ENDS A WORLD CHASE.

After Sixteen Years John Healy Faces Trial for Murder.

Sixteen years a fugitive in this and other countries, John Healy is about to answer to the law for the murder of Ferdinand Pommeranz, who was shot to death in Chicago on July 3, 1887.

The records of the state attorney's office show no case wherein a man has been brought to trial in Cook county so long after the commission of the crime of which he was accused. The nearest approach to it was the trial some time ago of a man of Stone, who was accused of committing a murder thirteen years before.

Healy in his efforts to elude the police travelled all over the world. In Kansas City he was accused of having killed a man, but escaped, and a few years afterwards joined Roosevelt's Rough Riders. He was serving as a soldier in Manila when arrested for the Kansas City crime, but in that case the crime had been committed so long before that the authorities were unable to secure witnesses.

But in the Chicago case there are a number of persons who saw Healy run away after Pommeranz was shot down in the yard of his home, 2641 Hickory street, now known as Hillock avenue. Among them is Policeman Fitzgerald, then a city detective.

On the morning of July 3, 1887, Pommeranz was in the yard in the rear of his home. His wife was ill and already the premature celebration of the fourth had begun. Healy began discharging a revolver in the yard adjoining and Pommeranz protested.

Healy, it is charged, leaped over the fence, revolver in hand, and shot Pommarenz, killing him. Healy then fled to the street, where he ran into the arms of Detective Fitzgerald.

Healy quickly explained that somebody had been shot accidentally and that he was on his way to summon a doctor. Fitzgerald released Healy, who was then about 17 years old, and that was the last seen of him in Chicago until this year. The fugitive was traced to a number of cities, but always managed to elude the Chicago police, who, in the Kansas City case, failed to recognize Healy as the man wanted here. Finally Healy ventured back to Chicago, and when the car barn murders were committed he was one of the suspects caught in the police dragnet.

The police were unable to connect Healy with the double murder and were about to release him when Policeman Fitzgerald called at the Woodlawn station to see the prisoner. "That's Healy, the Hickory street murderer," he exclaimed at once. "When he eluded me sixteen years ago, I swore I'd get him some time."

Other witnesses were found, the identification of Healy made complete, and the state is now prepared to prosecute Healy with as much ease as if the murder were a crime of yesterday.

J. C. Davis received a seven years' sentence in Winnipeg for shooting at a resident of the city.

Jock Burpee, of New Brunswick, assistant postmaster at [illegible] Roll, has been arrested [illegible] letters.

Mr. Goodeve has resigned as provincial secretary of the British Columbia government.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEMMURG.

"No, Hortense; it is better so; better that we should end this quickly."

"I will not. Do not repulse me, Lucie; I have so much for you to forgive. Do not be so terribly hard." She drew the girl down on the little sofa. "I will entreat your pardon for everything now and here; I will not spare myself anything! I have taught you to be discontented with the modest lot you had chosen. I dragged you about the world, and prevented you from doing your duty to your dying sister. Forgive me, Lucie. I never knew till now what love and peace meant." She pressed the cold little hand humbly to her mouth and looked up with streaming eyes. "Forgive me, and show me we have made up everything by staying with us."

"I have nothing to forgive, Hortense; do not shame me by making me out a creature entirely without will of my own. I was not a child, and for what I did and where I failed I alone am to blame. And let me thank you, too," she continued, as Hortense wanted to speak; "you have taught me to know much that is beautiful and grand; the remembrance of it and of you will always make me happy. Let me go, Hortense. I will—I must!"

"The master begs that the ladies will come to him," said a servant at the door.

Lucie took up her gloves. She looked at Hortense. "Come," she said, "I want to thank your husband, too."

He lay on the sofa in his room, his arm bound up. A little table with a caraffe of water, some broken ice, and all the little necessaries needed at such time stood beside him. Hortense walked up to him in silence, and kneeling down by him said, in a sobbing voice:

"She will go, Waldemar; she will not forgive me."

With a grave look he had stretched out his hand with a paper in it to the girl.

"Read, Fraulein Walter; the telegram has just come."

Lucie shuddered.

Oh, heavens! I had not the courage to speak of it yesterday. Have you news? How is the baron?"

Hortense looked inquiringly from one to the other.

"Your grandfather is ill; it is not dangerous; he has had a slight stroke," he explained, as he smoothed tenderly her pale cheeks. "And now he wants to beg Lucie from you. Mademoiselle implores her to come; she can not stand it any longer alone with the old man, though he is not much worse than usual," and turning to the girl, he said: "Will you do this, Lucie?"

She stood and looked out of the window with tired eyes. It was, after all, a matter of such perfect indifference to her where she should spend her days. A momentary thought of Adler passed through her mind. But what had she now to do with him?

"Oh, yes, willingly, if I can be of use," she said, listlessly.

"Lucie, stay here," sobbed Hortense. "Lucie, I entreat you."

She looked at the young wife, who was still kneeling by her husband, clinging to his unhurt arm. What was there for her to do here? She shook her head softly.

"Let me go; it is—"

"If you would rather stay here, Lucie," he began, cordially, "believe me you will always be a welcome member of the family. Grandpapa can surely find another companion."

"No, no! I thank you. I will go to Hohenberg."

"I do not know but what I ought to scold you," he said, in a grave, kind tone. "How you did frighten my poor little wife. But I must forgive you, Lucie, for but for this fright I might not have known yet how much she loved me."

She took his offered hand.

"I could not do otherwise," she said; and a deep blush mantled her cheeks. "Farewell, Herr Weber; get well as soon as possible. Hortense, I must go now. Farewell."

"What, walk?" he cried. "No, indeed! Please ring, Hortense."

The young wife walked with hesitating steps to the bell, then followed Lucie into her room.

"I feel I have been so bad—so very, very bad," she whispered.

"Why, Hortense? See, I could stay here. You have invited me most cordially. That I go is my own doing. Farewell." She swallowed down her tears with a great effort. "My things—will you send them after me? Do not get ill, Hortense; you look so white. If you ever need me—it might be—you know I will come. Can you forgive me that I—It was only the wish to be of use to you."

She was already partly down the stairs; the carriage was at the door—the same one which had brought here here. Hortense said no more; she had to press her lips together tightly that the servants should not hear her sobs.

"I will take good care of your grandfather," said Lucie, leaning out of the carriage to Hortense with her white face. Once again they pressed mouth to mouth, clasped hands, then the horses started, and the carriage rolled through the dark.

Hortense turned, fled upstairs, and wept upon her husband's neck as if she would never cease. But how sweet to weep out a sorrow when one is sure of possessing a great happiness.

Lucie did not weep as she was carried on through the darkening evening. There was not in the whole world a single heart upon which she could weep—not one.

Lucie arrived at Hohenberg the next morning. A light autumnal mist hung [illegible] the landscape, veiling [illegible] and houses of the [illegible] had no heart-beating when the train stopped at the little station as she had had that other time when she thought she was hastening to the happiness of her life, nor yet the painful feeling she had at her second arrival there. She stood quiet and tired at the door of the carriage, and handed Peter, who greeted her with a friendly look, her little traveling bag. They had telegarphed from Wottersdorf that she was coming. The fat gray horse and the landau stopped before the station; she got in and drove through the streets in the stillness of the early morning.

The Frau Counselor Adler was just shaking a duster out of the window, and recognized, with surprise, the well-known pale face in the carriage.

"There, now," she grumbled to herself, "and now she is here again." She stepped back with a look of annoyance, and killed a fly on the curtain with her cloth. "Useless thing! what does she want here? Frau Hortense has probably found out by this time what a burden she has taken upon herself and her family with this friendship."

At the door of the Meerfeldt house stood mademoiselle with outstretched arms.

"Oh, quel bonheur, Lucie!" she cried. "God bless you! It was absolutement impossible to stand it any longer here."

She pressed the slight form to her, and caressingly led the girl to her room. She scarcely let her speak; the whole history of the baron's sufferings, the dreadful shock when they found him unconscious, his fits of rage when he could not make himself understood—all was poured in a ceaseless stream into Lucie's ear, while she without the least appetite sat before the steaming coffee, and held her handkerchief to her throbbing temples.

"The night journey, ma petite. Oh, yes, of course that gives one a headache. How is Hortense? Oh, I can well imagine how heart-broken she is at your coming away. Do not scold me for begging you to come to us as a sister of charity, to be an angel of comfort to us. You have such a way with you, so gentle and sweet, and I am so awkward. I can not turn and bend, and stoop down. Come—the baron is waiting for you most impatiently."

Lucie went across to the old gentleman; he was lying in a movable arm-chair.

"Lucie, my child," he said, indistinctly, "will you stay with us? I have become an old cripple. Thank you, Lucie;" he drew her hand to his lips in a courteous manner. "Thankful," he stammered, "thankful to the grave!"

She seated herself by him and told him about Hortense—how happy she was, and of her beautiful home; about her husband, and how devoted he was to her.

"A fine man, a splendid man," said the old baron, and a ray of happiness shone out of his eyes.

As Dr. Adler entered the room to make his usual visit to the sick man, a slight figure in black disappeared behind the portiere of the opposite door. He looked after her without recognizing her.

"Doctor, there are still angels in the world. A little one has come to take care of me. I am so thankful! Poor child! A poor pleasure to take care of a half-dead fellow."

Adler's face had a gloomy expression. "How do you feel?" he then asked, seating himself in his usual manner, and beginning his examination of his patient.

Lucie stood in her old room and looked about her. Nothing was altered. There was the quiet little garden beneath the windows; the yellow silk curtains of her bed canopy seemed to be in exactly the same folds as before. On the bureau, however, stood a bouquet of dahlias and asters, and a few late roses that seemed crowded among them. Apparently mademoiselle had put them there.

[CONTINUED.]

Relieved.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "didn't I overhear you tell that man that you were going to plunge again?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm glad to hear it. I'd so much rather you'd go swimming than go to the races."—Washington Star.

Killed at Prayers.

At Mittenburg, near Strassburg, lightning struck a family while assembling for prayers, killing the father and injuring all the others.

Serious, Indeed.

"Miss Summergal must be quite seriously ill. She hasn't any appetite at all."

"Oh, a girl isn't always ill when she has no appetite!"

"But she has no appetite even for ice cream and candy."—Philadelphia Press.

The Sartorial Incident.

"Aw, come off!" said the suspender strap to the trousers button.

The button obeyed.

Then all that was necessary was for the housewife to get a needle and thread.

And sew on.—Baltimore American.

Pointer For Poets.

"I don't see anything in this new poem of Jones'," said the assistant editor.

"Of course you don't," replied the editor in chief, "because I opened it first and took a five dollar bill out!"—Atlanta Constitution.

It Was Both.

"What do you think of old Uncle Peter devising all his money for the erection of a mausoleum over his remains?" said the first needy relative.

"Awful!" replied the second. "It's just a willful waste."

"Huh! I call it a wasteful will."

Asked For A Compliment and Got It.

Alice (looking at her portrait)—Don't you think that Mr. Van Brush has managed to make rather a pretty picture of me?

Edith—Yes, he really has. What a remarkably clever artist he is!

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

SCRAPS OF SCIENCE.

An electric pickpocket alarm has been invented by a man in Manchester, England.

The experiments of Muller prove that if microbes be placed in a gun barrel the wound made by a bullet fired from it would be infected by the microbes.

Commercial phosphorus is satisfactorily made by mixing the finely powdered phosphate material with carbon and sand in the electric furnace and then, when heated, distilling the phosphorus from the mass and collecting it under water.

Such common substances as sugar, glucose and chalk having been found to absorb sunlight all day and to give it off in rays during the night, the discovery of some means for rendering these rays useful in illuminating houses at night with little expense seems a possibility of the near future.

The thorium atom, universally believed since its discovery by Berzelius three-quarters of a century ago to be a single and indivisible particle of matter, now appears as the progenitor of five new substances, even more elemental than itself, evolved by successive and spontaneous changes within its substance.

The scientific reason for the popping of corn has been investigated by Professor Kraemer of Philadelphia, who finds that the endosperm is more or less translucent and horny and its cells contain closely arranged polygonal starch grains having a central rarefied area. The degree of the expansion of these cells depends upon the relative amount of water and air in the grain.

Business.

"Is your sister going to marry the count?"

"What business is it of yours?"

"Well, the count owes me money, and I want to know."

C. C. RICHARDS & CO.

I was very sick with Quinzy and thought I would strangle. I used MINARD'S LINIMENT and it cured me at once. I am never without it now. Yours gratefully,

MRS. C. D. PRINCE,

Nauwigewauk, Oct. 21st.

Walther Kuntze, of Halle, Germany who has been deaf and dumb from his birth in 1869, has taken out the degree of doctor of philosophy at the Leipzig university.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea, and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking, and green fruit, is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops are taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Profit sometimes monopolizes honor in its own country.

No man ever brings suit against the assessor for underrating his worth.

One-half the time of Count Tolstoy is devoted to answering letters and receiving visitors.

Lifebuoy Soap—disinfectant—is strongly recommended by the medical profession as a safeguard against infectious diseases.

In the coal mines of Bohemia the average wages inside for nine hours is 86 cents.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

Mosquitoes bite more readily than fish, but they are equally hard to catch.

Are your corns harder to remove than those that others have had? Have they not had the same kind? Have they not been cured by using Holloway's Corn Cure? Try a bottle.

Americans imported $25,412,776 worth of precious stones last year.

OXFORD ECONOMY STEEL RANGES.

The bodies of these Ranges are made of the best quality range steel, all outside exposed parts are interlined with heavy sheet asbestos. They have cast iron extensions with white Enamelled Reservoirs, nickel plated drop Tea Pot Stands, Nickeled Towel Rods. They are made to burn any kind of coal, can be changed in two minutes to burn 28 inch wood. Highly nickeled throughout.

For full particulars send for illustrated booklet.

NOTE:—The following prices for these high grade ranges as illustrated, fully guaranteed.

No 9-18 oven 18x21x14 in. $50.00
No 9 20 oven 20x21x14 in. $52.50
(F. O. B., Winnipeg.)

Ask your dealer for them or write to us.

The GURNEY FOUNDRY Co.,
153 - 155 Lombard St., Winnipeg.

The most expensive Underwear that money can buy is not better made—won't fit better—wear better or longer—and be more comfortable and more satisfactory in any way—than

Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear

Made in Canada—of Nova Scotian wool, and guaranteed unshrinkable. A size for every figure.

Get your size and it will fit perfectly until worn out.

The best dealers everywhere sell Stanfield's.

DAY AND NIGHT SCHOOL

THE NATIONAL Business College LTD.

Opposite City Hall, WINNIPEG, MAN.
THOROUGH COURSES in Book-keeping, Shorthand, Typewriting, etc. One week's trial given.
Catalogues free. 'Phone 1955.

An Extraordinary Offer.

Our Regular No. 7 High Grade $40 BELT for only $5

Warranted to be superior to all others.

DON'T buy an electric belt before seeing our No. 7 - 20th Century Belt.

Call or write for book. It is free. We are the largest dealers in electric body appliances in Canada. The genuine Kara Belt can only be obtained from us. Never sold in drug stores.

THE P. E. KARN CO. 132 Victoria St. Toronto, Can.

Your Liver

Is it acting well? Bowels regular? Digestion good? If not, remember Ayer's Pills. The kind you have known all your life. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Want your moustache or beard a beautiful brown or rich black? Use

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE

PRICE 50c. R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N. H.

HOUSES OR LANDS

For $2.25 a month you become entitled to a loan of $1000.00 without interest. Our depositors absolutely guaranteed against loss, remember this. On our plan you can build a house or buy a farm cheaper than renting. Membership fee $4.00. Agents wanted.

Send for circulars.

The Prairie City Loan Co.
Room 38 Merchants Bank Blk.
Winnipeg.

Birth Stones

Together with number and price, we publish here a list of special Birthday Rings.

All stones mounted in 14k. gold.

January . . . Garnet No. 4675—Price, $2.50
February . . . Amethyst No. 4677—Price, $2.50
March . . . Bloodstone No. 4679—Price, $2.50
April . . . Diamond No. 4681—Price, $14.00
May . . . Emerald No. 4683—Price, $7.50
June . . . Agate No. 4685—Price, $2.50
July . . . Ruby No. 4687—Price, $7.00
August . . . Sardonyx No. 4689—Price, $2.50
September . . . Sapphire No. 4691—Price, $6.00
October . . . Opal No. 4693—Price, $6.00
November . . . Topaz No. 4695—Price, $2.50
December . . . Turquoise No. 4697—Price $3.50

These with innumerable other choice Rings at very low prices are illustrated in our new catalogue, ready Nov. 14th. Write for a copy.

RYRIE BROS.
JEWELERS
118, 120, 122 and 124
Yonge St., Toronto

Poverty is no disgrace, but it's a mighty good excuse for heading off a borrower.

A good many of the things people buy are too cheap for the price.

WHEAT SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY
THOMPSON, SONS & CO.
Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.
OATS BARLEY FLAX

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg.
Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,
GRAIN MERCHANTS,
TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. Box 585
McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.
Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

STRUCK THE ROOT OF HIS TROUBLE

James Atwell Cured his Kidneys by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

And His Lumbago and Urinary Troubles Vanished once and for all--He Tells his Story.

Campbellford, Ont., Nov. 2.—(Special)—That Urinary Troubles and Lumbago are result of disordered Kidneys has been proved by James Atwell of this place. He had Lumbago and pains in the bladder, and in passing his urine would hurt him so as to almost cause tears of pain to come to his eyes.

He cured his Kidneys by using Dodd's Kidney Pills and his pains of all kinds vanished.

Speaking of his case, Mr. Atwell says:

"I think Dodd's Kidney Pills made a permanent cure in my case, but I will never be without them in the house. I had Lumbago and Bladder Trouble for years. I tried other medicines and a bandage prescribed by the doctor, but I could get no relief till I used Dodd's Kidney Pills, and they cured me."

If the disease is of the Kidneys or from the Kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it.

Geological experts, both English and American, are unanimous that the south of England promises to be a larger natural oil field than any America has yet known.

BABY'S FIRST TOOTH.

Every mother knows how much baby suffers while cutting teeth. Swollen, tender gums cause a feverish, fretful condition, sometimes seriously affecting baby's health. This can be overcome, and the teething process made easy by the use of Baby's Own Tablets. Proof of this is given by Mrs. J. Peckover, New Liskeard, Ont., who says: "I am the mother of six children, and I can truthfully say that Baby's Own Tablets is better than any other medicine I have ever used for the ills of little ones. I can especially recommend them for teething children, and would advise all mothers to use them."

The Tablets cure all the minor ills from which infants and young children suffer, and are guaranteed to contain no opiate or harmful drug. Sold by all medicine dealers, or by mail at 25 cents a box by writing direct to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A feature of Iowa's dairy exhibits at the St. Louis Fair will be a statue in butter of John Stewart, the pioneer creamery man of that State. It will be kept frozen in a glass case.

DON'T BECOME AN OBJECT.

Of Aversion and Pity. Cure Your Cold and Catarrh. Purify Your Breath and Stop the Offensive Discharge.

Rev. Dr. Bochror, of Buffalo, says:—"My wife and I were both troubled with distressing Catarrh, but we have enjoyed freedom from this aggravating malady since the day we first used Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. Its action was instantaneous, giving the most grateful relief within ten minutes after first application. Sold by all druggists.

Some men are as anxious to find a complimentary notice of themselves in a newspaper as others are to find something bad about their neighbors.

A SURE CURE FOR HEADACHE.—Bilious headache, to which women are more subject than men, becomes so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile, which has become secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieves the pressure on the nerves which causes the headache. Try them.

In some parts of Ireland it is considered unlucky to view a funeral procession while the beholder is under an umbrella.

More than half the battle in cleaning greasy dishes is in the soap you use. If it's Sunlight Soap it's the best. 6B

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

It has been an uneventful week in wheat markets, but the feeling has been nervous and expectant, with moderate changes in prices from day to day. The course of the American speculative markets has been one day up and next day down, influenced by the gossip of the market more than by anything else, the principal matter of influence being the recurring rumors of trouble between Russia and Japan. This keeps sentiment bullish and the market prepared to respond quickly to every fresh report, nevertheless prices show a decline of ½c to 1c from a week ago. In the world's wheat situation there is little or no change from a week ago. In the States primary receipts still run considerably less than last year, although there is expectation that with fine weather making good roads deliveries from farmers will soon increase. This week there has been some talk of increased export trade at the Atlantic seaboard, but as yet the weekly exports are running about only half the quantity compared with same time last year. Other countries continue their large shipments to Europe, and visible supplies are increasing. The growing crops in Australia and Argentine continue to make favorable progress and are another week nearer harvest without any drawback. This season's crop in the Argentine is estimated to cover 9,000,000 acres and Beerbohm estimates the present outlook for the crop in that country to indicate a yield of probably 110,000,000 to 120,000,000, allowing a probable surplus for export of eighty to ninety-five million bushels. Last season the exports from Argentine were about sixty million bushels and the season before eighteen million bushels. It will, therefore, be well for dealers to keep the development of this important crop in view, for it has much to do with the price of wheat after New Year. Australia has also the prospect of fifteen to twenty million bushels for export this year against an import of ten to twelve million bushels last year. In Europe the present supply of wheat is much larger than present requirements and markets over there remain steady. In the States the cash situation remains strong on the higher grades of spring wheat, and there is a good flour trade. The Pacific coast is doing almost nothing in export to Europe this year, prices being too high locally, but there is a good trade in flour to Japan and other eastern points. The winter wheat crop in the States is in excellent condition and making steady progress.

The trade in Manitoba wheat has been moderately active whenever the American market showed an advancing tendency. At other times it has been extremely dull. Local prices are still above the line at which a free export trade could be done. This prevents a good demand, and along with the uncertainty of wheat bought at country points grading for what it was bought causes trade to be very unsatisfactory. There is not much change in prices during the week, except that 1 northern has declined 1c, other grades do not show much change, and we quote 1 northern 83½c, 2 northern 78⅞c, 3 northern 74⅞c, No. 4 wheat 68½c, feed wheat 55c, October delivery. For delivery first half November prices are ¼c under October, and for delivery all November 1c under October. All prices are for in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

WINNIPEG PRICES.

The following are the Winnipeg jobbing prices:—

Flour—Ogilvie's Hungarian, $2.35 per sack of 98 pounds; other grades accordingly.

Oats—No. 1 are worth 32 to 33 per bushel in car lots at Winnipeg; No. 2 white, 32c; feed grades, 29 to 30c. At country points farmers are getting from 23 to 25 cents for wagon loads.

Barley—Malting grades, 38c; feed grades, 33 to 35c per bushel; or 28 to 30c at country points.

Flaxseed—At country points, 83 to 84c per bushel for farmers' loads.

Hay—Baled, $8.50 to $9.50 per ton.

Potatoes—Dealers are paying 35 to 40c per bushel.

Butter—Creamery, 18c per pound. Dairy, finest, 16c; ordinary 12 to 13c.

Cheese—12 to 13c per pound.

Eggs—17c per dozen.

Poultry—Chickens, 9 to 10c, live weight; ducks and geese, 10c; turkeys, 11c.

Seneca Root—Clean, dry root is worth 65c per pound.

LIVE STOCK.

Cattle—Choice exporters, 3¼c per pound off cars at Winnipeg; butchers' grade, 3 to 3¼c.

Sheep, 4c per pound; lambs, 5c.

Hogs—Best weights, 5c per pound; inferior 1c less.

Unshrinkable H. B. K. Underwear

Made from the best sidewool in the fleece—elastic ribbed knit—shaped to fit body—absolutely non-shrinkable—wool treated by H.B.K. exclusive process to make it so—every particle of oil, grease, slivers, etc., removed by the H.B.K. patent cleaning process—tough wear, light, fleecy, all wool, clean, pure, luxurious underwear, and absolutely non-shrinkable, emphasize non-shrinkable

Sold by dealers everywhere.
Only genuine with this brand. H.B.K. BRAND

Tough

A pinto bronco is tough from the end of his nose to the tip of his tail. And the toughest part of him is the light, muscular hide that covers his back and hips. From that part of his hide the famous "Pinto" Shell Cordovan leather is made for H.B.K. mitts and gloves. Scorch, boil, wind, rain, cold proof.

Genuine only with this brand. H.B.K. BRAND

Sold by enterprising dealers everywhere.

Write for "Strayed," the funniest bronco story ever written.—FREE

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.
MONTREAL. WINNIPEG.
Makers of Warm Wearables for Everybody.

Going to Paint?

If so, you should procure the best Paint Brush on the market, absolutely the most satisfactory Paint Brush made to-day.

BOECKH'S Flexible Bridled Brush

The bridle can easily be removed or replaced. It is not affected by water, oil or paint and works on a pivot, thus keeping the bristles elastic. The name "Boeckh" is branded on each brush. Sold by all reliable dealers.

WE SHOULDER THE RESPONSIBILITY

when we tell you that OGILVIE'S HUNGARIAN Flour is as good or better than any other Brand for all Baking, and our guarantee goes with every Sack.

Your Grocer sells it with that understanding.

The Ogilvie Flour Mills Company, Limited,

ARE YOU BUILDING?
IF SO USE
EDDY'S IMPERVIOUS SHEATHING
The Best Building Paper Made.

It is very much stronger and thicker than any other (tarred or building) paper. It is impervious to wind, keeps out cold, keeps in heat, carries no smell or odor, absorbs no moisture, imparts no taste or flavor to anything with which it comes in contact. It is largely used not only for sheeting houses, but for lining cold storage buildings, refrigerators, dairies, creameries, and all places where the object is to keep an even and uniform temperature, and at the same time avoiding dampness.

Write our Agents, TEES & PERSSE, Winnipeg, for samples.
The E. B. EDDY CO., Limited, HULL.

More than 8,000,000 of the 13,000,000 people of Mexico do not work.

TO THOSE OF SEDENTARY OCCUPATION—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more prone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

Some men are unable to think when drunk or talk when sober.

It is a good idea to have a telephone in the house; it gives a man something else to get provoked about beside the baby.

PAIN IS A PUNISHMENT.—Pain is a protest of nature against neglect of the bodily health, against carelessness regarding the physical condition. It steals in at the first opportunity and takes up its abode in a man and it is sometimes difficult to eject it. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will drive it out in short order. Pain cannot stay where it is used, but immediately flees away.

Equal to Your Ideas

Just what you want and exactly what you need; this is what you are sure to find in our entirely new fall importations of . . . . .

STEWART STOVES & RANGES

For HARD COAL or SOFT COAL

The Stewart Hot Air Blast

In the construction of this stove the use of A Patent Swinging Top Central Down-Draft Invention is employed, with the hot blast principle of forcing heated air upon the surface of the fuel, thus consuming the gases and more than two-thirds of the smoke, and by that method utilizing those properties of combustion which heretofore were allowed to escape at the chimney flue. Soft coal is reduced to coke, making it an easy matter to keep fire and control it. It positively will save 33⅓ per cent. of the fuel. It is the cleanest of all solt coal stoves, and possesses the greatest radiating power. The stove is absolutely air-tight. A heavy fire pot and cast lining extending seven inches above same insures durability. Large space is provided for the accumulation of ashes, which can be easily removed through the front swinging draft door. The steel body is of extra thickness and made by the W. D. Wood cold rolled process. The feed opening in top is large and provided with lift-up cover. In ornamentation and finish the stove has no competitor. Very wide nickel plated top band. A special designed nickel plated foot rail. Nickel swing top cover. Nickel name plate. Nickel shaker. Elaborate urn.

No. 70	Weight 122 lbs.	Price	$15.00
" 71	" 156 lbs.	"	18.00
" 72	" 190 lbs.	"	22.00

STEEL PLATE RANGES

A FEW POINTS OF INTEREST

MANY REASONS may be advanced why our Steel Plate Ranges should receive fullest attention.

Amongst others we claim that THE STEEL PLATES used are several gauges heavier than usually used giving greater wearing quality.

THE DESIGN of ovens is such as to allow of full space being utilized.

OUR GUARANTEE

Our absolute guarantee goes with each and every range we sell. This guarantee covers satisfactory baking, heating of water and general cooking requirements.

A LOW-PRICED HEATER For COAL or WOOD

"The Bonny Oak"

HIGHLY FINISHE

Prices According to Size

$10.00 to $18.00

This cut does not do justice to our Leader. The

No. 9-18 MERIT RANGE

WITH

6 Holes, Enameled Reservoir and Highly Finished High Closet

Weighs 485 lbs.

Price $55, Less 5 per cent. off for cash.

Here is a medium priced Cook Stove, size of oven 18x18x11.

Weight 305 lbs.

Price $30.00

Medal Stewart Cook

For Hard or Soft Coal and Wood.

With Reservoir. Pouch Feed.

SPECIAL FEATURES—Oval Fire Box, Aluminine lined Oven Doors, Convex oven tops, but top plates, heavy covers and centers, cut long centers, enameled iron reservoir, japanned reservoir covers.

We want your trade, and all the trade we can get and would be pleased to have you come in and look over our stock. Yours for business

SHEPPARD & ELLIOTT, SOLE AGENTS

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Jas. Bryan, foreman for the Fernie Manufacturing Co. on the construction of the large slack bins, resigned his position on Monday. He expects to go to Edmonton shortly.

Owing to an insufficient number of members turning out there was no meeting of the Board of Trade was held last evening. A meeting will be held next Thursday evening in the Alexandra.

The output at the mines is steadily increasing and if nothing unforseen happens November will be the banner month for Morrissey Mines. Shortage of cars at Michel and Coal Creek may have a tendency to restrict the output at those camps.

Last Sunday evening while the peace loving citizens of Tonkin were on their way to chnrch they were much frightened and much annoyed by a general uproar on the back row in which several families seemed to be participating. It seems strange that law and order cannot be maintained here as elsewhere and if a general complaint was made by the citizens it might have the effect of bettering our condition. We need a resident constable at Tonkin whose presence would strike terror into the hearts of the boisterous and unruly.

On Wednesday a public meeting was held in the Methodist church Tonkin to consider the advisability of forming a society of a literary, social, temperance and religious nature. After some discussion a society was formed which shall be called the Social Club of Tonkin. The officers were then elected, consisting of A. E. Hall, president and R. Evans, secretary-treasurer. A large committee was also appointed, which shall have the program in hand for each night. The first meeting will be held on Friday evening Nov. 13th and the public will be invited to attend. An invitation is extended to all interested to join the club, and we hope through the winter months to spend many happy and prosperous evenings together.

Hallo... ve'en was rather quiet here. The small bo... does not seem to have developed to the ... same degree as in some of our neighbo... ing towns.

Lachlan D... Donald returned yesterday from Winn... peg, where he has been for several days. He surprised his many friends here by bri... nging back a bride with him. The you... g couple have the best wishes of their m... any friends here.

A party of a dozen ... ladies from the Junction gave the gues... ts of the Alexandra a pleasant surprise party on Hallowe'en. Quite a numb... of young people came in from around town and enjoyed the social dance.

A pleasant dance was given in honor of the marriage of Miss McLellan and Mr. Mawdsley, at the Clark hotel on Wednesday evening. A large numb... of invited guests were present to celebrate the occasion and a most enjoyable evening was spent—at this, the first wedding that has taked place in Morrissey Mines.

The stopping of all government work has given the new town a set back so far as a new school building and jail are concerned. However it is to be sincerely hoped that the work will be commenced after the coming session of the House.

The construction of these two buildings is absolutely necessary and cannot long be delayed.

The big Windsor hotel will be completed in a few days and will be ready for opening by pay-day. It is furnished and fitted throughout with every modern convenience. In fact it is doubtful if there is an hotel outside of the coast cities that approaches in equipment anything like the Windsor. The Miners' hotel will also be ready for opening by pay-day, and although it is not quite so elaborately finished as the Windsor, is a building which the town may well feel proud of.

Thos. Hardy, of Forks, has purchased several lots of the new townsite at Coleman. He paid for them in cash and received a receipt for the same, and he ignores the contract pressed upon him by the company restricting liquor selling, by refusing to accept it. He is building a large hotel upon two lots and is already petitioning for a license, Messrs. L. Manley and Anderson who have been given the sole right for 15 years to sell liquor on the townsite are also erecting a large hotel and trouble which may entail legal proceedings is feared.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

Thomas Drummond, representing the B. of L. E., and E. Brown, representing the B. of L. F., left this week for Montraal, to join other representatives of the two organizations from every division of the C. P. R. in their efforts to secure an advance in wages.

L. M. Mansfield, manager of the Laurie Lu... mber Co., was in town yesterday looking after business for the company. The ... ors have changed the name to the ... ys River Lumber Co.

C. A. W... Watkins, of the local branch of the Canad... ian Bank of Commerce, has been transf... red to the Fernie branch. Mr. Watkins, during his residence in Cranbrook, ha... made many friends who regret very muc... indeed his departure.

Married at the residence of the bride's parents, Cranbrook, on Oct. 28th, by Rev. S. J. Thompson. Mr. John D. Duncan to Miss Mabel Arnott Kelsey both of Cranbrook.

News has been received a... s we go to press of the sudden death of Mrs. (Dr.) McSorley which occurred at Mi... ichel this morning.

RAN A NAIL THROUGH HIS HA... ND.

While opening a box, J. C. Mount, of Three Mile Bay, N. Y., ran a ten penny nail through the fleshy part of his hand. "I thought at once of all the pain and soreness this would cause me," he says, "and immediately applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm and occasionally afterwards. To my surprise it removed all pain and soreness and the injured parts were soon healed." For sale by all druggists and dealers.

IN THE COUNTY COURT OF KOOTENAY HOLDEN AT FORT STEELE.

In Probate

NOTICE is hereby given that on the 26th day of October, 1903, it was ordered by J. H. Forin, Esq., Judge of the said Court, that James Ferguson Armstrong, Official Administrator of the County of Kootenay, be administrator of all and singular the estate of FRANK WILLIAM ROBBINS of Elkmouth, planeman, Deceased, intestate.

Every person indebted to the said deceased is required to make payment forwith to the undersigned.

Every person having in possession effects belonging to the deceased is required forthwith to notify the undersigned.

Every creditor, or other person, having any claim upon or interest in the distribution of the personal estate of the said deceased is required within thirty days of this date to send by registered letter, addressed to the undersigned, his name and address and the full particulars of his claim or interest, and a statement of his account, and the nature of the security (if any) held by him:

After the expiration of the said thirty days the Administrator will proceed with the distribution of the estate having regard to those claims only of which he shall have had notice.

Dated at Fort Steele this 3rd day of November, 1903.

JAMES FERGUSON ARMSTRONG,
Official Administrator,
Fort Steele, B.C.

IN THE COUNTY COURT OF KOOTENAY HOLDEN AT FORT STEELE.

In Probate

NOTICE is hereby given that on the 26th day of October it was ordered by J. H. Forin, Esq., Judge of the said Court, that James Ferguson Armstrong, Official Administrator of the County of Kootenay, be administrator of all and singular the estate of JO N SIROTA of FERNIE Labourer, Deceased, intestate.

Every person indebted to the said deceased is required to make payment forthwith to the undersigned.

Every person having in possession effects belonging to the deceased is required forwith to notify the undersigned.

Every creditor or other person, having any claim upon or interest in the distribution of the personal estate of the said deceased is required within thirty days of this date to send by registered letter, addressed to the undersigned, his name and address and the full particulars of his claim or interest, and a statement of his account, and the nature of the security (if any) held by him.

After the expiration of the said thirty days the Administrator will proceed with the distribution of the estate having regard to those claims only of which he shall have had notice.

Dated at Fort Steele this 3rd day of November, 1903.

JAMES FERGUSON ARMSTRONG,
Official Administrator,
Fort Steele, B.C.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Hugh McLean's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

HUGH McLEAN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "A. Mutz's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

A. Mutz.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1906. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "John Kubala's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOHN KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Annie McIntyre's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ANNIE McINTYRE.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "C. J. Tuttle's south- east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

C. J. TUTTLE,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "P. Kubala's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains ro the place of commencement.

P. KUBALA,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Joe Masura's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOE MASURA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Eva Fairfield's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

EVA FAIRFIELD,
James Miller, Agent,
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked, "Annie Dobbin's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of begginning.

ANNIE DOBBIN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Maude May Barber's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

MAUDE MAY BARBER.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Peter Podbielancik's south-east corner;" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.

PETER PODBIELANCIK.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of Octocer, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Augustus Fairfield's south-west corner;" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

AUGUSTUS FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petrolefim claim, and marked "Robert Gilmore's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ROBERT GILMOUR.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Gus Erickson's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

GUS ERICKSON,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903.

Lib. Legislative Ass.
Dec 31 1901

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 19. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 253

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m,
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.
Office :—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON
PIANO
Classes in Burrowes' Musical Kindergarten System.
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F. A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J. Barber, L.D.S., D.D.S.,
DENTIST
Opposite ROYAL HOTEL
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Moffatt's Cigar Store
Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.
A full line of Stationery.
Next Door to the Free Press.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. H. L. Bleasdell's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
J. H. L. BLEASDELL,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of J. H. L. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Florence Erickson's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
FLORENCE ERICKSON,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

J. H. TONKIN RESIGNS.

A. H. REEDER THE NEW MANAGER FOR THE C.N.P. COAL CO.

D. Davies, of P.E.I., is Appointed to the New Office of Comptroller. G.G.S. Lindsey in Town.

G. G. S. Lindsey, K.C., director of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company has been in town since Sunday. On being asked if the rumor were true that a change in the general management of the company had taken place,he replied that it had. A. H. Reeder will take charge of the management next week, and Mr. Daniel Davies has already assumed control of the Accounting and Lands Departments under the title of Comptroller. Mr. Stockett and all other officials continue in their present positions.

Mr. Davies took charge of his new duties on Wednesday. Mr. Davies is a Canadian and comes from Prince Edward Island. He is a brother of Sir Louis Davies, Minister of Fisheries in the Laurier cabinet. The new Comptroller has had a wide experience in coal mining During the past three years he has filled the position of General Manager of the Virginia Iron, Coal and Coke Company and the Virginia and South Western Railway which were almalgamated under one management with headquarters at Bristol, Va. These mines had a total output of 100,000 tons per month. They employed 11 blast furnaces and turned out 30,000 tons of pig iron per month. The railway is 136 miles in length.

Mr. Davies' duties will consist in the management of the financial, accountant and purchasing departments and he will be the land commissioner.

Mr. Tonkin in an interview with a representative of the FREE PRESS on Thursday stated that he had resigned his position as manager owing to differences between himself and the directorate. Owing to the sudden change he had as yet not been able to complete his plans for the future but he believed those plans would include the departure of himself and family to the east. He expressed regret at leaving Fernie, for the citizens of which he entertained nothing but the kindliest feelings.

Mr. A. H. Reeder is not unknown in Fernie. He has been in the employ of the C.P.R. as coal expert for some time and was through this section in that capacity during the past summer. He has had experience in coal miuing in Virginia and Pennsylvania.

COAL MINES CLOSED.

10,000 Miners out on Strike in Colorado.

Denver, Nov. 9.—More than 10,000 coal miners in Colorado struck to-day, for an eight hour day, increased wages and other concessions, as the result of an order from the United Mine Workers after the coal companies refused to confer with union representatives concerning the demands of the men.

One hundred mines have been closed down. A few independent properties have agreed to the strikers' demands, and will continue in operation, but in these works less than one thousand men are employed.

The Colorado Fuel and Iron, Victor Fuel and the Northern Coal and Coke companies are the largest producers in this section, and practically all this property has been tied up.

Efforts are being made to continue operations under a strong guard. There are about 14 coal mines in the state, with an output of 8,000,000 tons of coal a year and 1,000,000 tons of coke. The United Mine Workers will attempt, it is stated, to depopulate the coal districts by sending idle men to other states. The storm centre will be about Trinidad, in the southern fields, where there are 8,000 miners.

GOT ONE MONTH EACH.

Several Miners Convicted of Carrying Matches Into The Mines.

A heavy docket of cases were disposed of at the police court on Wednesday before Stipendiary Magistrate Forbes. They were all up on the charge of carrying matches into the mines. A systematic search was conducted at the three collieries, Morrissey on Nov. 3rd, Coal Creek on the 4th, and Michel on the 5th.

Three cases were found at Coal Creek, Dennis Murray of No. 1 mine found with a pipe and a match in his pocket was allowed to go on suspended sentence as he pleaded that it was his first shift and he had on borrowed clothes.

Mike Kipta, of No. 1 mine charged with having a pipe and seven matches in his possession when found was sentenced to one month at hard labor.

Andrew Borsak of No. 3 mine also got a month. Messrs. Geo. O'Brien and Evan Jones were witnesses for the prosecution in the two former cases and Messrs. Lanfear and Duncan in the latter.

Two cases were up from Michel. Mike Conway an Irish miner with eight years experience in the Old Country mines got into deep water in trying to explain how he happened to have a couple of matches in his pocket when on duty. He got one month with hard labor.

John Wesley Wright from Michel had 2 matches and a pipe. He got a similar sentence. Messrs. Mather, Fisher and Briscoew were the Michel witnesses.

An examination of the miners for matches on Nov. 3rd at the Morrissey colliery resulted in the discovery of twelve with matches in their clothes, the names are:

No. 1 mine.

David Reid, miner, 4 matches.
Wm. Phillips, miner, 1 match and one pipe.
Wencel Vanecheck, miner, 3 matches.
Jas. Lennox, back-hand, 1 match.
Andrew Smith, back-hand. 3 matches.
V. Verko, miner, 2 matches.
Frank Pilz, miner 2 matches.
Frank Metha, back-hand, 2 matches.

No. 4 Mine.

Jas. Lambardo, miner, 1 match.
Frank Kusth, back-hand, 13 matches.
Jos. Kovack, back-hand, 2 matches.

The examination took place in the presence of P. Murray and Jno. Coughlin at No. 1 mine, and Alex. McGregor and Geo. Smith at No. 4 mine.

Constable Warren, of Fernie, came down to take the cases up for trial and when they were looked up many could not be found, and it is supposed that they have left the camp. Those that could not be found are, David Reid, W. Phillips, Wencel Vancheck and Jas. Lambargo.

FERNIE RECOUNT

Again Adjourned till Monday Next.

Returning Officer Alexander went to Nelson on Sunday last to answer the summons from Judge Forin to appear at the Nelson court house on Monday for the purpose of holding a recount. The ballot boxes were not on hand when the court sat and in answer to a question by the judge Mr. Alexander said:

"When I received a summons from the county court judge to produce the boxes I wired to the provincial secretary telling him I had been summoned to produce the ballot boxes. In reply I received a telegram as follows: 'Have no authority to forward ballot boxes'."

James O'Shea, who appeared for E. C. Smith, the liberal nominee, then asked for an adjournment to enable Mr. Alexander to write to the provincial secretary and make every effort to secure the boxes. The adjournment was granted and the case stands until next Monday when it will come up again at Fernie.—Nelson News.

Judge Forin will be here on Monday holding county court so that the adjournment will cause no one much inconvenience should Mr. Alexander be unsuccessful in his effect to get the boxes as is generally expected.

DEATH OF MRS. McSORLEY.

A deep gloom has been cast over the town of Michel by the sudden death of Mrs. (Dr.) McSorley, which occurred last Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. Death was caused by premature childbirth. The body was sent on Sunday morning to Enderby, B. C., where the parents of the deceased, Mr. and Mrs. Lawes, reside. The brother of Mrs. McSorley who is employed at the Michel store, and Dr. McSorley accompanied the body. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved doctor. The deceased lady was highly respected by a wide circle of friends.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Jury Found No Blame Attached to Any One.

The inquest into the death of E. Bloomer was resumed before Coroner Trites on Tuesday evening at the court house. Inspector Dick was present.

The first witness called was Thos. A. Thompson the working companion of the deceased. After answering preliminary questions he said, "I put in a hole on left side of the place and deceased put one in the right side. Evan John came and fired both. We loaded one car and the driver took it out. We both tried the roof and found it was a little defective and while we were discussing the condition of the place it came down with a crash and buried the deceased and partly buried myself. I shouted and I heard a groan. The driver came to our rescue. I told him to go for more assistance, and before help arrived I had extricated myself. There was only a short time elapsed before plenty of help arrived to rescue the deceased. I did not wait until his body was got clear of the fall." To Mr. Dick he said, "The timber was not very far from the face. The bridge-stick broke. The bridge-stick looked to be all right. If I had thought it wasn't alright I would have put in another. I don't think the timber was struck by the shot, but we did not look to see as we did not suspect such a thing. There were four booms resting on bridge-stick. I thought the place was well timbered when we started to work. The height of the place was about 7 feet." To Juryman Tuttle, "We had all the timber we wanted. If there was not plenty of timber we would not have remained at work."

Leander Totten, the driver, told of the rescue. He heard the fall of rock when about 70 feet away. The location of the wounded man was made clear to the rescuers by his groans. When the body was recovered an hour and a half later it exhibited no signs of life. There must have been 6 or 7 tons of rock in the fall. "The deceased told me that he wanted two sets of timber for that shift and I told him I would take it as soon as I could get it."

Evan John, fire-boss gave a full account of his visit to No. 7 before and after the disaster but threw little new light on the subject. He examined the place before firing the shot. It was a good timber. Deceased examined the place after shot was fired and said it was alright. In answer to a question by Juryman Joyce he said that according to his theory the rock in the roof got too heavy for the timbers. From the end of the boom to the face would not be over half a yard. He examined the timber after the accident and found it a little defective in the heart. It showed all right on the outside and could not be detected as faulty unless it was bored. The work was not far enough advanced at the time to require another set of timber. Had they suspected the timber he would have ordered a prop put in centre or another bridge stick put in alongside.

Peter Connor the miner who had occupied the room in the previous shift swore that he had put in the timber that afterwards broke. It looked good and it was larger than that generally used for such work.

The jurymen brought in the following verdict. "The deceased came to his death by falling rock from the roof of No. 7 room in No. 2 mine at Coal Creek. We find that according to the evidence there can be no blame attached to anyone."

Signed. W. W. Tuttle, foreman.
Chas. Richards.
A. Joyce.
Louis Carosella.
W. F. Cuthbert.
J. L. Gates.

Prest's Studio will be open for business from the 19th to the 28 inst. This is an excellent opportunity of securing first-class photos with which to remember your friends in the east.

Constable Henderson took two of the Fernie prisoners to Fort Steele on Thursday. The jail here has been over crowded of late. Last week there were fourteen prisoners crowded into the space where only four should be quartered, and there are still 9 left.

A switchman met with an accident on the Crow east of here on Thursday night in which he lost part of his foot. He got his foot caught in the frog of the track and could not extricate it before the approaching engine was onto him. He leaned well over and fell backward when the engine wheel cut off his foot. He was taken through yesterday to the Cranbrook hospital for treatment.

Do you want the news of the approaching session free? Subscribe for the Victoria Daily Times for 1904, and receive the paper free until the end of this year. This offer is for cash-in-advance, subscribers to the Daily $5.00, or the Twice-a-week $1.00. Full and impartial reports, halftone cuts of members, cartoons and corridor gossip. Four page colored comic supplement every Saturday. Remit to the "Times", Victoria. 253-2

MARRIED.

HARDMAN—SHARPLES—At the home of Mrs. H. M. Smith, by the Rev. D. L. Gordon, Jas. Hardman and Mary M. Sharples, on Friday evening, Nov. 13th.

FERNIE'S TROUBLES.

TO BE PRESENTED BEFORE THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

Messrs. Rennie, Joyce and Tuttle will Represent Fernie—An Important Meeting on Monday.

The Board of Trade met on Monday evening to complete arrangements for the Associated Boards Meeting at Rossland on Dec. 3rd. Vice President Joyce occupied the chair and S. Herchmer acted as secretary.

The matter of the telephone proposition was first taken up, and a committee consisting of Messrs. Bird, Tuttle and Reunie was appointed to wait on G. G. S. Lindsey with regard to getting the Coal Company's co-operation re the erection of a telephone system.

It was moved by W. R. Ross, seconded by Mr. Hutchison, that Messrs. Joyce, Tuttle and President Rennie be appointed delegates to the Associated Boards of Trade Meeting and that the last named be empowered to nominate a substitute.—Carried.

The following resolutions to be presented at the Rossland meeting were read by the secretary and adopted.

1. FERNIE POST OFFICE.—Whereas the present Post Office accommodation for the public is very inadequate, there being only about 150 square feet floor space; and whereas the present population of the town of Fernie and vicinity which is served by the said post office is in the neighborhood of 3500, be it therefore resolved as follows:

That the Government be memoralized to immediately provide a suitable building for the Fernie Post Office.

Moved by Mr. Tuttle, seconded by Mr. Ross, that the resolution be passed and a copy sent to Mulock and Galliher in a very urgent manner.—Carried.

2. CAR SHORTAGE. — Whereas, the daily tonnage of coal and coke from Coal Creek, Morrissey and Michel Collieries is on the increase; and whereas the said collieries are unable to supply the increasing demand for the said coal and coke, owing to the failure of the Canadian Pacific Railway to supply the necessary cars when required for the transportation of the same, be it therefore resolved as follows:

That the attention of the Provincial and Dominion Governments be brought to this failure in the transportation facilities of the common carriers of the country.

3. LIEN ACT AMENDMENT.—Whereas neither the Mechanics' Lien Act nor the Woodmen's Lien Act give any lien to workmen employed in and about a mill property, for wages earned by them in such employ; and whereas it is considered that a laborer or workman employed in or about a lumber mill should have a lien on the manufactured lumber which has gone through the mill in connection with which he is employed, be it therefore resolved as follows:

That the Woodmen's Lien Act be amended so that any laborer or workman employed in or about a lumber mill shall have a lien for wages due to him on all lumber manufactured in said mill and sold in the ordinary course of business.

4. JAIL ACCOMMODATION — Whereas, the town of Fernie is the principal town and the centre of the Electoral District of Fernie; and whereas the present court house is entirely inadequate for the requirements of the government offices and court purposes; and whereas, there are in the course of a year a great many criminal cases originating in East Kootenay which should properly be tried on the spot, instead of requiring all witnesses and prisoners to travel to Nelson as at present; be it therefore resolved, as follows:—

That the Provincial and Dominion governments be memoralized as their respective jurisdictions may appear with a view to the immediate enlargement of the present court house at Fernie, and further, that a registry of the Supreme Court be established at Fernie.

This resolution was thrown out on account of its local nature.

Another re the Kootenay Central R. R. was adopted.

C. P. R. CAR SHORTAGE

The car-shortage is becoming more acute. The C.P.R. supply the Coal Co. with less than half the cars they require. The regular coal output requires 90 cars per day. On Thursday they got 35 and yesterday 40. Yet the company received a wire yesterday in answer to an appeal for more cars, denying that a shortage existed.

As a result of the congested condition of affairs about 6,000 tons of coke are now piled up awaiting cars and the Michel colliery was closed for 24 consecutive hours on Thursday and Friday.

FIRE AT MICHEL

Hotel Burned Down. A Hard Fight to Save Neighboring Buildings.

Word was received early yesterday afternoon over the telephone that the Michel Hotel was on fire. Later messages stated that the entire building was burned to the ground.

The fire started about two o'clock. A heavy wind was blowing at the time and the big boarding house situated 100 feet distant was with difficulty saved. The small police station, situated between the two buildings was burned. The big store, 100 feet beyond the boarding house, would have had a scorching had the latter caught fire.

Though the water-works system is in use in the town it is inadequate for fire protection. A bucket brigade succeeded in preventing the ignition of the boarding house, which received a severe scorching.

The hotel was valued at about $3,000 and it was well protected with insurance. The stock was insured to the extent of $1800. Besides these losses there is no doubt that the aggregate losses of boarders and guests will be heavy. Mr. Doberer, manager of the Michel store was in Fernie at the time of the fire and he stated that he had $500 worth of property in one of the rooms which he expected was burned.

Messrs. Trites and Wood went to the scene of the fire by special train soon after the news reached the town. Nothing could be learned yesterday as to cause of the conflagration.

Reports received today give more particulars of the fire. The cause was due to a defective flue in the furnace. The ignition took place at the upper part of the house and the roof was in flames before it was noticed. Most of the furniture and personal effects were saved and much more might have been but for the disgraceful conduct of the majority of the men present who seemed to think of nothing more than securing free booze. These men despite the efforts of Mr. Eckstorm and his friends to prevent them broke into the cellar and looted the contents. Hundreds of kegs of beer and cases of liquors of all kinds were carried off by the frenzied crowd of struggling, fighting plunderers.

Strange to say the first floor did not burn through. The contents of the cellar would therefore have been saved but for the despicable action of these men. So general was the pilferage that scarcely enough help could be secured to defend the Dudley boarding house and the big store, and both caught fire several times from the burning shingles, etc., which filled the air.

Owing to the absence of Constable Henderson the town was without police protection. Assistance was telegraphed for and eight specials were sent up from Fernie last night at 11 o'clock, but at that time all the looting was over and the cellar was practically empty.

Many weird tales are told of incidents that occurred while the building was going up in flames. Old cans, oil cans and all other available cans picked up in back yards or anywhere, were pressed into the service, to convert the barrelled goods to "safer" storing places. Guns, axes and other instruments were used as weapons of offense and defense and more than one broken head required the doctor's attention.

WANTED—Faithful person to travel for well established house in a few counties, calling on retail merchants and agents, Local territory. Salary $20.00 per week with expenses additional, all payable in cash each week. Money for expenses advanced. Position permanent. Business successful and rushing. Standard House, 330 Dearborn St., Chicago. M5

The skating rink proposition which has been advocated in these columns has fallen through owing to the lateness of the season when it was first mooted. It is probably fortunate, as the early winter would have rendered its completion for this season a difficult task. Mr. Digby has made arrangements with the new owners of the old skating rink to run that institution for this season and he has already commenced the work of getting it ready. This morning the thermometer registered 30 degrees of frost, and by the present indications the skating season promises to open early.

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HALBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Halberton.

"Colonel," said he, saluting, "I think I can explain it. I—some of the men brought in unexploded shells after the siege as mementos, and they were too big to carry away and were carelessly left in the houses, and the fire has reached them and made them hot, and"—

"Thunder!" roared the colonel, turning almost black with anger. "Bugler, blow 'forward!' "

Again the column moved. Brainard and I had been glad we were of the rear guard, for we had planned to be together, if only for a moment, the last men to leave the post. Now, we almost wished we might never leave it, for the colonel's anger boded no good to the men who were to blame for the false alarm, and it would be easy for the colonel to learn who the men were.

CHAPTER XIX.

BETTER THAN WE HAD EXPECTED.

OUR destination, which we soon reached, was the Union line on the Peninsula, on the road by which McClellan had started in 1862 for Richmond, and we were cheered by quite a lot of letters from home. It appeared that the evacuation had been ordered for an earlier date, so mail matter for our regiment had not been forwarded.

No sooner had I opened one of my letters than I began to be mystified, for the writer, my mother, was praising me extravagantly for something gallant which she assumed I had done. I read rapidly, but only to be further mystified. A letter from my father was equally confusing. It informed me that the whole town was ringing with praises of me and that our district's member of the state senate had called to hear the story and declared that all the district as well as Summerton was talking of me and was proud of me.

I called Brainard to my assistance, but he was reading a letter from my cousin May and was utterly unresponsive, so I opened other envelopes, only to find congratulations from old schoolmates and even from some of the solid men of the village. What could it mean? Evidently some other John Frost in the cavalry service had done something in particular, and my family and fellow townsmen, like villagers in general, had not thought that there might be two men of the same name.

Little by little I learned from the letters that the deed of which I was supposed to be the hero was a midnight ride alone into a country swarming with the enemy. I had made no such ride unless it was on the night I was scared back to camp by the rattling trace chains of the artillery horses that Brainard afterward discovered. I had not recovered from my mortification at my failure that night, so of course it could not be for that affair that all Summerton and our senatorial district were praising me.

Slowly it occurred to me that some one of our Summerton troopers had heard of Brainard's successful ride of the same night and had known that I started to make the trip. He had got Brainard and me mixed in his mind, and so I was being glorified for work at which I had shamefully failed, and the real hero of the affair was being defrauded of his right.

"Charley!" I groaned. He was looking idiotically happy when I spoke, but said afterward that my face alarmed him. I quickly told him of the contents of my letters and of the only possible explanation.

"Is that all?" asked Brainard when I had concluded. "Do feel easy about it, for I'm not a bit jealous." Then he fell to rereading his letter from my cousin May, but I exclaimed:

"Stop being a fool! Listen to me! You know perfectly well that I'm not going to sail under false colors. The story will get pretty soon to the other Summerton men of our company, and they'll chaff me most unmercifully. I must find the man who wrote the yarn home, and you must help me, and we must make him correct the blunder before the story gets back here."

For the first time in my acquaintance with him Brainard looked irresolute. Still worse, he looked sheepish. Then he said:

"I'm afraid I'm the guilty man."

"You?"

"Yes. Don't be angry, Jack, when I explain. Of course I didn't suppose that your cousin May"—

"What has May to do with it?"

"Nothing. That is, she isn't in any way to blame. Say, old chap, I suppose you'll think me a fool, but—you can't understand. I'm not so modest that I couldn't see that my ride with dispatches that night was quite creditable to me, and I did wish your cousin May could know of it and that I might know how she regarded it. I began to write her about it, but my pen simply wouldn't work. Somehow I can't blow my own trumpet. Suddenly it occurred to me that you'd gone through all that I had—the sense of danger, the loneliness, the expectation of running into a camp of Johnnies or at least of being fired upon at short range. So I wrote up your ride just as I knew you felt while making it, and I didn't leave out a single heart quake."

"You infernal, blessed hypocrite! Did you make me deliver the dispatch? I never imagined you could lie, even for the sake of telling a good story. I"—

"I didn't lie. I said that despite the scares the dispatches finally reached their destination. And, oh, Jack, the letter she's written in reply! I'm taking all the praise to myself, every bit of it, but you may read it."

"Read it? I'll send back a denial by the first mail, and if ever again you trust a big hearted, excitable girl with any story that you don't want known by the whole world I'll dump you into a lunatic asylum for your own protection and for mine. Can't you see what an awful position you've put me in? I shall never dare face the boys again unless you explain to all of them, and, of course, you can't do that. I almost wish I could be shot or made a prisoner. Besides"—

"Heard the news, boys?" asked Cloyne, stopping a moment in front of our tent. "Hamilton has been promoted—a big jump, too, for he's made first lieutenant."

"It's an insult to the army!" exclaimed Brainard. "Hamilton's a— No, I won't say what I was going to, but he always dodges fighting."

"Yes, so our captain told the colonel, or so they say, but the colonel replied: 'It may be that he's no stomach for fighting, but he knows how to care for the stomachs of men who do fight, so he's to be regimental commissary and feed the regiment as well as he's fed his company. In war bellies count for as much as bullets.' "

"There's something to that," said Brainard, "and I'm glad Hamilton's found his proper place. That isn't all. I'll go at once and congratulate him on it."

"Don't!" said Cloyne, putting an arm about Brainard and looking down into the little chap's face with sad, tender, pitying eyes.

"Why not?"

"Because—oh, hang the mysteries of this tormenting world—because he's got a ten day leave of absence. He'll be a fool if he doesn't go to New York, get into an officer's uniform, then hurry out to Summerton, call on—oh, the girls—and"—

Brainard twitched himself from Cloyne's arm, looked up to heaven and shook his fist savagely at the great white throne. Then he dashed into our tent and dropped on his knees. I quickly tied the tent strings on the outside, an intimation that no one was at home, and hurried to Cloyne's tent. Cloyne exclaimed:

"Git on yer horse."

"Poor Brainard!"

"You knew—about her—and them?" said I.

"Haven't I eyes?" he replied.

"Yes," I answered, for I saw that his eyes were wet. "But give me paper and pen and ink and envelope—quick—and I'll try a flanking movement."

I wrote my cousin May a long letter, telling her of Hamilton's luck and also of its cause and intimating that should Hamilton's father ever lose his money Phil would be abundantly qualified to become head cook in a restaurant. This might have been an insult to the personnel of the army's entire commissary force, which contained thousands of superb fighters, though none of them was expected to fight, but I knew May wouldn't construe it in that way. Then I told of Brainard's successful dispatch carrying, which he had pretended was done by me, and of his work in the fight at the bridge and how many compliments he had received for it. I continued with a description of Brainard in his bunk after the fight looking with tearful eyes alternately at her picture and in his mirror at his bullet furrowed cheek, and I concluded by saying that the scar that remained was more coveted by all of us as an honorable decoration than if it had been a major general's shoulder straps. To be sure that the letter would reach its destination as soon as possible I rode with it to the general postoffice at post headquarters in the fort, a mile away.

[CONTINUED.]

Sex Peculiarities.

A man will run as fast as he can to cross a railroad track in front of a train. Then he will watch it till it goes out of sight. Then he will walk leisurely away. He seems to be all right and probably is. That is a man.

A woman in a street car will open a satchel and take out a purse, take out a dime and close the purse, open the satchel, put in the purse, close the satchel and lock both ends. Then she will give the dime to the conductor, who will give her a nickel back. Then she will open the satchel and take out the purse, put in the nickel, close the purse, open the satchel and put in the purse, close the satchel and lock both ends. Then she will feel for the buckle at the back of her belt.

Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder is a Catarrh Cure that Cures Colds and Catarrh.

Actually, positively, indisputably, irrefutably cures Colds and Catarrh! Not always with first application, although even that invariably brings relief in 10 minutes. Sold by all Druggists.

But it Cures, it Cures Colds and Catarrh! 10

It's easier for the average woman to land a husband than it is to keep him landed.

Madras has taken to designing and building its own motor cars.

For each big man at the top there are a million little ones at the bottom.

SLEEPLESSNESS.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep but will act so beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

Because a man goes around in public babbling for the rights of his fellow men is no proof that at home he doesn't sleep on his wife's pillow as well as his own.

Her Heart like a Polluted Spring—Mrs. James Srigley, Pelee Island, Ont., says: "I was for five years afflicted with dyspepsia, constipation, heart disease and nervous prostration. I cured the heart trouble with Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, and the other ailments vanished like mist. Had relief in half an hour after the first dose."—27.

A very popular couple—two dollars.

Explorers have reached within 238 miles of the North Pole, but no one has yet approached nearer than 772 miles of the South Pole.

A dentist in Moscow is a wonder in his line. He has invented a system by which false teeth can be made to adhere to the gums so firmly that in three months it is difficult to extract them. This Russian toothgrafter hopes in time to be able to rival nature by making artificial grinders that ache.

A law recently enacted by the Legislature of Louisiana punishes with imprisonment and hard labor husbands who desert or fail to support their wives and children. The wives of lazy husbands hang over the mantel a framed copy of the law, with this query in red ink, "Now Will You Be Good?"

A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM

Even the Most Stubborn Cases of this Painful Malady Can be Cured.

Rheumatism is caused by acid in the blood. That is an undisputed medical truth. Liniments, outward applications and alleged electric treatment can never cure what is rooted in the blood. A blood disease, like rheumatism, must be cured through the blood. That is why rheumatism always yields like magic to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—they actually make new, rich, red blood. This new blood conquers the painful poison, sweeps out the aching acid, soothes the nerves, loosens the muscles and banishes rheumatism from the system. Proof of this is found in the case of Mr. Charles Leatherdale, a popular young druggist's assistant of Tilbury, Ont. He says: "I know from personal experience that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure rheumatism, because they cured me of a severe attack that for months caused me many sleepless nights and painful days. I had tried a number of other medicines, but they failed. Then I decided to give the pills a trial. Before I had finished the second box the pains began to leave me, and by the time I had taken two more boxes the pains were all gone, and I felt like a new man. That is more than six months ago, and I have not had a twinge of rheumatism since. It is my belief that a fair course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will drive the most stubborn case of rheumatism out of the system, and as a result of my own experience I cheerfully recommend them for this trouble."

The pills cure all blood and nerve troubles such as rheumatism, sciatica, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, anaemia, neuralgia, indigestion, headaches, backaches, kidney troubles, and the ailments that make the lives of so many women a source of almost constant misery. Imitations and substitutes are sometimes offered, and the buyer should see that the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" is printed on the wrapper around every box. If in doubt send direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be mailed at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

A lady once purchased some myrrh,
And the druggist said galy to hyrrh
"If it's for your lips, Miss,
Have a care how you kiss."
And she myrrhmyrrhed indignantly,
"Syrrh!" —Life.

Under the Nerve Lash

torture and torment of the victim of nervous prostration and nervous debility no one can rightly estimate who has not been under the ruthless lash of these relentless human foes. M. Williams, of Fordwich, Ont., was for four years a nervous wreck. Six bottles of South American Nervine worked a miracle, and his doctor confirmed it.—28.

Most women take too much medicine and some men don't take enough.

Very few men are clever enough to lie well, yet they all keep trying it.

Many a man is unhappy only because he believes himself so.

Horse Sense.

During a heavy downpour of rain an Irish farmer sent his boy to a distant field to bring home a horse. Some time elapsed, and the messenger returned without the horse.

Father—Didn't Oi send ye for the horse, ye gamoch? Is your head in your brogues?

Little Boy (drenched to the skin)—Sure, he was standin' in shelter as dry as ye loike. Bedad, he knows more than the two of us.

Figuring on Prospects.

"Whah's yoh father?" asked Aunt Cordelia.

"Gone huntin'," answered Pickaninny Jim. "He said you might as well git de fire stahted an' peel de taters foh a fine stew tomorrow."

"Hum! Which did he take wif 'im, de gun or de dahk lantern?"

A Precautionary Measure.

Mr. Kidder—Ah, how-der-do, doctor? If you have a few minutes to spare I wish you would come over to my house and chloroform my youngest boy.

Dr. Price—What is the matter with the lad?

Mr. Kidder—Oh, his mother wants to comb his hair.

Just His Luck.

"I long to go about doing good," said Mrs. Henpeck.

"Don't hang back on my account," replied Mr. Henpeck wearily. "I know a woman who will come to take care of the children for her board and clothes."

Then she flared up and wouldn't go.

Pleasures.

"Pleasures," said Uncle Eben, "is a good deal like mushrooms. De right kind is fine, but you has to be on de lookout foh toadstools."

Neglect a cough and contract consumption.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure The Lung Tonic

cures consumption—
but don't leave it too long.
Try it now.
Your money back if it doesn't benefit you.

Prices 25c., 50c., and $1.00

S. C. WELLS & CO.
Toronto, Can. LeRoy, N.Y.

Something Fatal.

"She had the fatal gift of beauty, had she not?"

"Well, I don't know whether it was her beauty or her money that was fatal, but anyhow she married a titled nonentity."—Chicago Post.

Never Wore Them.

"That chap must have come out here to starve," said Ambler Pete.

"Why so?" asked the new arrival in the western town.

"He's a collar salesman."—Chicago News.

Wasted No Time.

"The manager says he engaged the forty chorus girls in twenty minutes."

"Gracious, but he's quick at figures."—Town Topics.

One of Bill Nye's Jokes.

When Bill Nye one day happened on the modest sign of Major Pond, the lecturer manager, in a window of the Everett House, in New York, he said to a friend who accompanied him: "Here's the man that incites the lecturers. Let's go in and see if we can't induce him to lead a better life." Entering, Nye removed his hat and ran his hand over the hairless expanse of his head and after staring about for a moment said, "This is Major Pond, I believe." "Yes, sir. What can I do for you?" answered the major. "I want to get a job on the platform," returned Nye. "Ah, yes," said the major slowly. "Have you had experience?" "Well, I've been before the public for a couple of years." "Yes? May I ask in what capacity?" "I've been with Barnum. Sat concealed in the bottom of a cabinet and exhibited my head as the largest ostrich egg in captivity."

The Boyhood Friend.

Before he was elected to be the chief executive of the Old Dominion Governor Montague of Virginia met an old classmate on the train. They had not met for years. Mr. Montague was a candidate for governor and the other a plain country lawyer with a small income.

"What can I do for you when I'm governor?" said the candidate as he put his arm around his friend. "What can I do for you, old boy?"

"Just what you have done now," quietly replied the lawyer.

"Why, what's that?" said the other.

"Simply put your arm around me and call me 'old boy.' That's all I want," was the reply of the true friend of boyhood days.

Tact.

"Laura," said Mr. Ferguson, "this is Mr. Klippinger of Harkinsville," the town where I used to live. He's the editor of the Echo. I was telling him we had the files of his paper for the last ten years. I'll show them to you, Mr. Klippinger. They're"—

"Why, George," interrupted Mrs. Ferguson, with a mechanical sort of smile, "I ought to have told you, but—but they're under the dining room carpet."

Some men are so generous they give their wives liberal allowances, and then win it back from them at poker.

A woman gets as furious with the woman who won't admire her husband as she gets jealous of the one who does.

He (on the beach)—What a pity to go into the water with that pretty bathing suit. She—Oh, I am not going into the water. This is the suit I take my sun bath in.

She—Did your father live to a green old age? He—Sure. He was swindled several times after he was 75.

A LASTING CURE OF ITCHING PILES.

A Chronic Case of Unusual Severity and Long Standing Cured by

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

Piles, or hemrrhoids, are small tumors, which form in and about the orifice of the rectum. They are caused by an enlarged and inflamed condition of the veins, which are very numerous in this portion of the body. Piles frequently attack women during the expectant period or after childbirth.

Any form of piles causes dreadful suffering on account of the itching and burning which accompany them. One can scarcely walk at times, and during the night, when the body gets warm, suffering is intense.

Mr. Alex. McLaughlin, for 30 years a resident of Bowmanville, Ont., writes:

"For twenty long years I suffered from itching piles, and only persons who have been troubled with that annoying disease can imagine what I endured during that time. About 7 years ago I asked a druggist if he had anything to cure me. He said that Dr. Chase's Ointment was most favorably spoken of, and on his recommendation I took a box.

"After three applications I felt better, and by the time I had used one box I was on a fair way to recovery. I continued the treatment until thoroughly cured, and I have not suffered any since. I am firmly convinced that the ointment made a perfect cure.

"I consider Dr. Chase's Ointment an invaluable treatment for piles. In my case I think the cure was remarkable when you consider that I am getting up in years, and had been so long a sufferer from this disease."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is the only absolute and guaranteed cure for every form of piles. It has a record of cures unparalleled in the history of medicine. 60 cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Why Not Buy by Mail?

Whether you require Silverware or Cut Glass for the table, or Jewelry for your personal adornment, or a good Watch or Clock for utility, you will find that

You Can Save Money By Ordering from Us

Send for our New Illustrated Catalogue, giving full description and prices of one of the largest and best selected stocks on the American continent. Our prices defy competition.

156 YONGE ST. AMBROSE KENT & SONS LIMITED MANUFACTURING JEWELERS. TORONTO.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE

the old reliable remedy for Spavins, Ringbones, Splints, Curbs, etc., and all forms of Lameness. It works thousands of cures annually. Cures without a blemish, as it does not blister.

Complete Cure for Bone Spavin.

Russell, Manitoba, Jan. 22, 1903.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Gentlemen: I had to treat a young horse of mine four years ago which had a Bone Spavin and got kicked on the same leg and was very badly swollen; so bad that I had to bathe it in warm water, then applied Kendall's Spavin Cure. I had Typhoid Fever the same winter and only gave the Kendall's Spavin Cure half a chance, and it only took one and a half bottles to cure his leg with very slim treatment, and it did so completely that you would never know that he had a spavin; he never has gone lame since.

Very truly yours, GEO. S. HARRIS.

Such endorsements as the above are a guarantee of merit. Price $1; six for $5. As a liniment for family use it has no equal. Ask your druggist for Kendall's Spavin Cure, also "A Treatise on the Horse," the book free, or address

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURG FALLS, Vt

An electrical gridiron has been devised to kill flies. It stands vertically, and the moment a fly alights upon it death ensues from electric shock. The dead fly drops onto a horizontal shelf underneath.

There are a number of varieties of corns. Holloway's Corn Cure will remove any of them. Call on your druggist and get a bottle at once.

Of the 8,000 Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor in the United Kingdom more than 1,300 are associated with the Baptist churches.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

You can depend on Ayer's Hair Vigor to restore color to your gray hair, every time. Follow directions and it never fails to do this work. It stops falling of the hair, also. There's great satisfaction in knowing you are not going to be disappointed. Isn't that so?

"My hair faded until it was about white. It took just one bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor to restore it to its former dark, rich color. Your Hair Vigor certainly does what you claim for it."—A. M. BOGGAN, Rockingham, N. C.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Fading Hair

Some of the healthiest and most gracefully formed people of Europe are the gypsies of Hungary. They are rarely ill, their cheeks are rose-tinted, and so pure is their blood that their wounds quickly heal without the application of medicaments.

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT

Removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, ringbone, sweeney, stifles, sprains; cures sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by the use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful Blemish Cure ever known. Sold by all druggists.

Consider the ways of the humble dray; it has a tongue, but it never gossips.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc.

It is easier to keep out of the matrimonial harness than it is to get out.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by all druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Probably some men meander around all night for the purpose of satisfying themselves that there is no place like home.

THE FLAGGING ENERGIES REVIVED.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there be no relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These come from stomachic troubles. The want of exercise brings on nervous irregularities, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative power, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

Some ministers do not practice as they preach, and some baseball players do not play as they practice.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

You may not get all that is coming to you in this world—but look out for the next.

Do not delay in getting relief for the little folks. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is a pleasant and sure cure. If you love your child why do you let it suffer when a remedy is so near at hand?

It is said that a single grain of gold, after having been converted into gold leaf, will cover forty-six square inches.

People who have nothing to do sometimes think they are the busiest.

The boy stood on the Shipping Trust
Whence all but him had fled,
The water that was in the stock
Came almost to his head.
—Chicago Tribune.

TELEGRAPHING WITHOUT BATTERY

Electricity Supplied From the "Aurora Borealis."

SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT

When the "Aurora Borealis" was at its Height the Northern Pacific sent Messages Without Batteries, over a Distance of 650 Miles.

The Northern Pacific telegraph department has telegraphed a distance of 650 miles without batteries. Saturday night last, when the aurora borealis display was on, electrical waves were noticed as early as seven o'clock by Supt. Green and Asst. Supt. Dildine, of the system. They decided to experiment with the atmosphere as a current and accordingly had the lines opened from St. Paul to Dickinson, N.D., with the batteries along the line removed. The electricity was taken from the atmosphere during the disturbance, which lasted 20 hours and was the greatest since 1875. Supt. Green says:

"The greatest range shown was 370 degrees swinging from the negative to the positive polarity. The greatest pressure at any time was 300 volts registered by the voltmeter. Both milimeters and voltmeters were used in the experiments. We found that the electricity from the over charged atmosphere registered from 23 milimeters positive back to the same figure negative. A wire leading to Dickinson, N.D., was cleared of all battery and other artificial current and subjected to the atmospheric tests. This line is 666 miles long and was successfully operated numerous times by using only the electricity which descended from the skies.

"A pale green light shot forth at stated intervals toward the earth. Each time these points descended it charged the electric wires all over the country to such a degree that communication was stopped for a time and disturbed for many hours.

THE ELECTRICAL WAVES came with the regularity of pendulum movements. They lasted about three minutes each. They swung from negative to positive polarity, in almost perfect rhythm, and our instruments showed a maximum intensity of 370 volts. When the current was at its maximum, positive polarity, we could talk to Dickinson very easily by using the regular Morse code. As the pendulum swung back to the negative pole the sounds from the instruments used became fainter and fainter until the pressure came back. Our voltmeter was not of a high register, 300 volts being its limit. How much higher it would have registered can only be conjectured. The disturbance commenced at 2 o'clock Saturday morning and lasted until midnight on Sunday, a total duration of twenty hours. It was one of the most remarkable atmospheric disturbances that has come within my knowledge for 30 years."

WAS IT SUN SPOTS.

Scientists Attribute the Recent Magnetic Disturbances to Sun.

Scientists attribute the recent magnetic disturbance in London to sun spots. The worst effects of the phenoma appear to have been experienced in France, but Berlin was not affected and apparently neither Austria, Italy, nor Denmark suffered. In Switzerland, however, there occurred a most strange phenomenon. The telephone service ceased suddenly and remained suspended for half an hour, while the telegraphs were rendered unintelligible and useless. In Geneva all the electrical street cars were brought to a sudden standstill, and the unexpected cessation of the electric current caused consternation at the generating works, where all efforts to discover the cause were fruitless.

The meteorological office reports a magnetic storm, accompanied by aurora borealis, in several parts of Ireland and Scotland. The telegraphic disturbance was one of the most extraordinary on record. Late in the morning before it had been settled where the disturbance originated, although Siberia was strongly suspected, a slight seismic disturbance was reported from the Riveria.

Sir Oliver Lodge and Sir Norman Lockyer were interviewed on the matter and agreed in attributing the cause to the sun spots and an increase in solar activity, which would also account for the unusual wet season now being experienced.

HAS 400 BUFFALO.

The Valuable Asset Possessed by a Montana Rancher.

It has been customary for us to accept the fact that the buffalo were becoming extinct. That is, of course, the prairie buffalo. Just of late, naturalists and others interested in these splendid pioneer cattle of the Northwest were glad to learn that the United States, in the Yellowstone Park and elsewhere, the Canadian government at Banff, the City of Winnipeg at Silver Heights, and another privately run collection, had each some buffalo, more or less, which would help to perpetuate the breed of the noble "wallower" of the plains. All this is, however, somewhat put in the shade. Within 100 miles of our border, in Montana, a native rancher on the Flat Head reservation has a herd of over 400. They are his property. They are not fenced in or coralled. At times he sells some to a park, a circus or a menagerie. They roam, under his personal supervision of course, as of yore, over the priaie. As not one of the animals is valued or sold at less than $300, it follows that these wild cattle are worth $120,000 at least. A thoroughbred Hereford or shorthorn herd would not exceed this value per head.

RUSSIANS AND JAPS.

Serious Affray at Chemulpo, Corea, Between Blue-Jackets of Both Nations.

The Tokio correspondent of the Daily Mail reports a serious affray at Chemulpo, Corea, between Russian blue jackets belonging to the gunboat Bohr, and Japanese blue jackets from the cruiser Chiyoda and a number of Japanese residents of Chemulpo. Ten Japanese and several Russians were injured.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily Mail says the Russian government has decided to expel all of the Japanese living along the route of the Manchurian railroad, having discovered that many of them are spies.

GERMAN GARRISON KILLED

Reported that the Hottentot Slaughtered the Entire German Force.

It is reported that the German garrison at Warmbad, in German Southwest Africa, has been annihilated by the Hottentots.

The German consul at Cape Town confirms the rumor of a native rebellion in Demaraland, a country of Southwest Africa forming a part of the German possessions there. A German non-commissioned officer commanding at Warbad has been killed and the chief of the rebels shot down. Other rumors to the effect that a commanding officer and a band of troops have been killed indicates a greater disaster.

YOUNG THIEF REPENTS.

Clarence Leonard Who Stole $10,000 in New York, Makes a Confession.

Clarence Hough Leonard, the 18-year-old messenger who stole over $10,000 from his employers, Haskins & Sells, accountants, and who was arrested in Vancouver, where he had been with his young wife, has made a full confession. He is thoroughly penitent, and it is expected that Judge Cowing will suspend him next Friday.

Leonard stole the money that he might marry Miss Kathryne Miller, who is three years older than he, and with whom he has kept company for six months. He tells in his confession that he got the money on forged checks and then married the girl. They went to Hoboken and took the train for Buffalo. He said the girl knew nothing of his stealings.

Mr. N. J. Halpin, druggist, died at 12.30 Wednesday morning, after an illness of about five weeks. He was an ex-alderman and prominent Freemason of Brandon.

Sixty men were discharged from the C.P.R. shops at Toronto Junction Tuesday and more will be laid off.

Major Leckie, Second Royal Canadian Rifles, while prospecting in Somaliland for minerals, was seriously mauled by a tiger.

THE WIDE WORLD.

Telegraphic News of Two Hemispheres Briefly Chronicled.

The town of Basin, Mont., was burned.

Eugene Clark, a car repairer, was killed at Calgary.

Chamberlain had another triumph, this time in Birmingham.

Tommy Ryan, the pugilist, is in Winnipeg, arranging a match.

Natural gas has been discovered on a Dominion City farm.

Canada's cheese exports will this year show an advance of $6,000,000.

Thos. Garnet, of Rosebank, Man., was fatally injured by a gun discharge.

Earthquake shocks were felt at St. Louis, Mo., Memphis, and other points.

The Winnipeg Gas company has announced a cut of 20 per cent. in gas rates.

A true bill for murder was rendered against Lucas Kyrk, at Winnipeg assizes.

All public works in British Columbia have been stopped, owing to money stringency.

The C.P.R. will experiment with a telegraph and telephone system on the same wire.

The Northwest Grain Dealers Association has estimated the wheat yield at 50,290,000 bushels.

Fishery Inspector Young estimated the spawn of whitefish in the Selkirk hatchery at 5,000,000 eggs.

The proposed big canal barge in New York carried in Tuesday's elections will reduce Canadian wheat rates.

A Democratic judge in Louisville, Ky., was probably fatally injured at a polling booth by a Republican sheriff.

At the Winnipeg assizes no bills were found in the case of the Snowflake, Man., robbery, in which Wilson was extradicted from West Superior.

Came by It Honestly.

"You have twice told me," said the benevolent Balham man to the wooden legged mendicant, "that your leg was lost at Balaklava. Now, I'm sure you were too young to enlist at that time."

"Well, sir, I can't deceive you; you are right. It was my father who lost a leg in the war, an' the blamed thing runs in the blood. I simply inherit it. I am a wounded veteran by birth."—Tit-Bits.

On His Mind.

Long—Have you forgotten that $10 you borrowed of me some time ago.

Short—Oh, no, I still have it in mind.

Long—Well, don't you think this would be a good time to relieve your mind of it?

'Shoe Backbone"

A weak inner sole is spinal disease to a shoe. Goodyear Welt stitching forces the makers to use best leather for inner sole because its powerfully drawn stitches cut through soft material like cheese. That's one reason why the Slater Shoe is strong in the unseen, hidden parts. It's Goodyear Welted

Slater Shoe

For Men - $4.00 $5.00 - For Women

Sole Agents :-- JOYCE BRO'S., FERNIE, B. C.

IMMIGRANTS NOW NUMBER 121,115

An Excellent Showing For Ten Months Work.

AGGRESSIVE WORK DONE

For Ten Months of the Present Calendar Year—47,541 Came from Great Britain, 39,046 from U. S. and 34,528 from Europe—French and Belgians Coming.

A return given out at Ottawa on Tuesday by the department of the Interior shows the total arrivals for the ten months of the present calendar year to be 121,115. Of this 47,541 are from the British Isles, 39,046 from the United States, and 34,528 from the Continent of Europe. For the month of October the arrivals were 7,892. It is understood that the department will soon be making a greater effort for a larger immigration than ever from the British Isles next year, and even now the department is arranging plans for aggressive work in this connection. In addition to this the department is arranging for a campaign in both France and Belgium. This work will be altogether amongst the rural population, where the most desirable settlers for not only the province of Quebec, but also for Manitoba and the Northwest Territories can be secured. This work will mean a great deal to us by securing a good class of settlers.

Mr. Paul Wiallard, who has been appointed the general agent for emigration in France by the minister of the interior, has returned from a tour of the western country, and will leave at once for France. Although born in France, Mr. Wiallard has had a very long residence and much experience in Canada and is undoubtedly possessed of special qualifications for the work he has undertaken.

Special publications for the active propaganda in France and Belgium are now being prepared, and nothing will be left undone to bring Canada prominently before the attention of the agriculturalists of those two countries. It is understood that Mr. Jas. A. Smart, deputy minister of the interior, will undertake the general supervision of the work, as he has done in connection with special work in Great Britain during the past year and which has been so eminently satisfactoty.

KILLED BY THE CARS.

Willie Stuthard is Found Mangled in C.P.R. Yards Winnipeg.

One of the bodies lying at Thomson's undertaking rooms is that of a bright looking boy of 13 years, named Wm. Stuthard. This body was found in the C.P.R. yards, Winnipeg, Wednesday morning, near the yard office. No one so far as could be learned was a witness of the accident. The body was found with the head and the right hand severed. The head lay outside the rail and the body between the rails. John Tubler, inspector of passenger coaches, made the ghastly find and reported it at once to police headquarters.

Circumstances point to a most distressing accident. The boy was a student of the Immaculate Conception school, and when killed was on the way to his studies. The school bag, which held his dinner, and a number of books, belonged to William Stuthard, 120 Robinson street. The boy was the son of Joseph Stuthard, the C.P.R. yardman who suffered injury in the yards some weeks ago, and is now in the St. Boniface hospital. No explanation can be found for his tragic end but that in crossing the yards on his way to school he was getting through under the cars, which caught and ran over him. Coroner Benson thinks an inquest unnecessary.

Enquiry among the trainmen and those in the yards at the time when the accident occurred throws very little light on the sad affair. Willie was evidently on his way to school all alone, and no one can be found who actually saw him crossing the tracks. Mr. Robt. Duncan, of the C. P. R., first found the boy lying across the track. This was near Salter street on the west side of the overhead bridge. The boy was evidently on his way to the bridge. The position in which he was found indicates that he was crawling under the train of cars standing on what is known as track No. 10, and the shunting of the cars, according to the trainmen's story, caught him unawares. The wheels had severed his head almost from his body, and one hand had been cut off. When Mr. Duncan found the body it was still warm and one arm was doubled under the chest as if the train had run over him as he was caustiously getting across the track on his hands and knees.

The most sincere sympathy is felt for the lad's father, who is still in St. Boniface hospital, suffering from the effect of his recent accident.

Senseless Hallowe'en Jokes.

John Fox, a laborer employed at the county quarry near Rymal station, got the loan of a pipe from a young man with whom he was working Monday, and when Fox began to smoke the pipe exploded, seriously injuring both his eyes and burning his face. The pipe had been primed with gunpowder, and Fox is likely to lose the sight of one eye, if not both, as the result of this practical joke.

Owing to a practical joke played on Hallowe'en, the train from Port Dover was an hour late yesterday. Someone in Port Dover broke into the shed where the engine was kept, and firing up, ran it up the track for a mile. When the crew went to get it the joke was discovered and the engine located.

Victor BRAND EVAPORATED Cream

This trade mark on every tin.

For Miners, Lumbermen or Household use it is the pure cream with the water taken out of it by evaporation—No sugar—Nothing but the Cream—

Add Water and you have the purest and richest of cream — as produced by the milch cows of Prince Edward Island. The most celebrated Dairy District in North America.

All Grocers and supply houses sell it.

MUCH NEEDED ADVICE.

Observations by the Old Man of the Cranbrook Herald.

There are a large number of young men who are making all kinds of fools of themselves. They have come west to better their condition, and have done so, since they are receiving better wages, but at the end of the month they are no better off. In fact, in many cases they are in debt. Any young man with no one to provide for but himself who cannot have a margin over expenses at the end of each week, is forming habits that will make him all kinds of trouble in the future. You say you are going to start to save next pay day. Let me tell you one thing, the young chap who is always waiting until next pay day to start to save something from his salary, will never have a bank account big enough to pay a week's board. What is the matter with you fellows, anyway? Don't you know you are letting the opportunity of your life slip by? It is not necessary to be stingy to be economical. It is not necessary to be so mean that your mother would be ashamed of you, to save something from your salary. But it is necessary to use a little judgment and common sense in your expenditures, instead of acting like a gibbering idiot. The trouble is, the young fellow who is getting ten dollars a week, wants to live like the fellow who is getting twenty. He spends twenty-five cents to-day, fifty cents to-morrow, a dollar now and then, and at the end of the month wants to stand his landlord off for his month's eating. And right here, we want to say that any young chap who is earning a regular salary and does not pay his board at the end of the month, is a bigger fool than the man who sat on the end of the limb when he sawed it off.

The time to get a start is now. Quit blowing and get down to business. Pound a little business sense into your head. If you had $150 in cash now, it would be enough to buy a lot and get a house built on it thatwould bring you in $15 a month. Then you would work to pay for it. Or, if you get $100 in the bank, you will then work to get another hundred. And $100 is made up of quarters and halves. Don't wait ta get $100 before you start to save. If you do you will always be too poor to take a week off for fishing. Save your money like a man, and spend a dollar, don't hold on to it until you squeeze the printing off the bill. Spend it like a prince, but don't spend it unless you can afford it. This country offers unparalleled opportunities for the energetic young man. One hundred to five hundred dollars here, backed by energy and horse sense, will do more for a young man than five thousand in the east. But get in and drill. Patronize the bank. Get your name on their ledgers and keep it there. Build up a reputation by building up a bank account, and then, when you have a chance to invest some at an advantage, invest it. Ten years of that kind of life will make a substantial citizen of you, and ten years as a spendthrift will probably make an irresponsible loafer of you.

Brace up boys and try it.

The Manitoba and Northwest Postmasters' Association will meet in convention in Winnipeg November 11 and 12.

REV. JOHN M'DOUGALL.

Pen Picture of the Northwest Missionary Who Delighted Toronto Church Circles During Recent Visit.

There are some men who absorb the West. There are others whom it absorbs. Most of the transplanted Easterners rave about space and ozone. Here and there you find a man on the prairie who, in a sense, is space—is ozone. To him there is no East; the sun rises in the West. He has known three kinds of pemmican and the unreadable soul of the red man; can himself be a red man, if he chooses; for with the Indian he is eloquent, before an audience of his fellow white men somewhat tame and ordinary. Yet he carries that unecclesiastical breeze, as though you heard it in the spruces up the banks of the Saskatchewan, or saw it blow the smoke of tepees.

Such a man is the Rev. John McDougall, Superintendent of Indian Missions under the Methodist General Board, one of the hand-full of living white men that have hunted the prairie buffalo.

Now, the writings of most missionaries on the West are about as native to the prairie as patent medicine pamphlets are to a pipe-organ solo by Guilmant. They usually estimate the population-hungry basin of the two Saskatchewans, reaching from the Rockies to Hudson's Bay, by the number of Indians who take sacrament. To read such literature engenders the "tired feeling." To hear McDougall describe a buffalo hunt is a tonic. No—I should not care to read it. Like most greenhorns, I expected word-painting and weird halftones. McDougall's story was sheer outline, as matter-of-fact as a clothespin on your nose. There was no analysis, no lurid portraiture of blood, smoke and glazing eyes, simply rollicking masses of exuberant life, the rampant jolting of almost cosmic hunger against boundless beef—outlined by one who was in it. The story was about fifteen minutes long. It contained half a million acres of primeval prairie, a few thousand buffaloes, a hundred Indians on ponies and a huge red death on the grass under the smoke, with a huge red feast in the camp after it. Most of the words in it might have been found in a tale as simple as that in one of our school books, "I See An Ox." Which makes you wonder how such a picture would look painted in the words of Cutliffe Hyne or Frank Morris.

What the swamps and karroos of Africa were to Livingstone, the unwritable sky-spaces of the prairie are to McDougall—a life-experience. In a pipe-organ solo he might not be able to tell you the pedal notes from the vox celeste in the echo. On a prairie hill at five miles you will see a blurr of dots where he will pick out the horses from the cattle. The father was frozen on the prairie with his gun across his breast in the snow. The old-timer on the train between Calgary and Edmonton will point you out almost the exact spot of that tragedy in a coulee where the roses bloomed this summer among the bunch-grass. The prairie of today is as deeply real to the son. From Fort Macleod to Hudson's Bay and from Rat Portage to the Peace River is the parish of McDougall, just as it is of Father Lacombe, and as most of it was to Evans and the late Presbyterian, Robertson. And if you have never traveled that country off the railroad, and would know how it felt in the blood during the decade after the McDougalls went there, read "The Great Lone Land," by Col. Butler.—Kodak, in Toronto News.

Students' Vacation Experiences.

One could write a book on the vacation experiences of Toronto students, says the News. A good 90 per cent. of the men have to earn part or all of the money required for their courses, and they earn it in very many ways indeed. The Knox and Wycliffe men have their mission stations, and come back with tales of life in the scattered settlements of New Ontario or the far West. The School of Science men have their trips with surveying parties, or their four months of draughting or of work as mechanics in the great foundries of Pittsburg or Cleveland. The senior meds, have been assistants to surgeons, or have even served as local tenentes, while the junior medical and the arts students have engaged in so many callings that one cannot be sure of accounting for them all. A few have crossed the Atlantic in the humble guise of cattle-tenders, and can now spin forecastle yarns like any Jack Tar. Others have worked on farms or as mechanics; perhaps a dozen have gone back to an earlier love, and have taught a summer school. Agencies of one kind or another have employed a great many more, while the departmental stores have profited by the labors of scores. Even the dangerous employment of the river driver has fallen to one or two, the lot of a newspaper reporter to certain others, and no one knows how many have been waiters or pantrymen on the lake steamers, or butlers and clerks in summer hotels. To the majority the vacation has been long enough, but the holidays very few, so that the work habit still rules to the gratification of the teachers.

Silver Lead Industry.

There seems to be hope of the extension of the silver lead industries in Ontario as a result of the bounties bestowed some time ago by the Federal Government on its production. Galena and its kindred ores has never been regarded as a staple mineral product of this Province, but there is one silver lead enterprise at Bannockburn which has been working for some time. The appeal for bounties came from British Columbia, where the industry is a very important one, but the effect on Ontario has been to stimulate existing enterprises. A party of Americans is now looking into similar propositions at Echo Lake, near Sault Ste. Marie, with a view to establishing a smelter.—Toronto News.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, NOV. 14, 1903.

THE CHANGE.

It is with regret that we announce the severance of J. H. Tonkin with the Coal Company and the contemplated departure of himself and his estimable family from our midst, who during their eighteen months' residence in Fernie have made many friends.

We believe that Mr. Tonkin in his official capacity has done splendid work since he came to Fernie. He has developed the mines at the three collieries to a high state of perfection, far exceeding anything like what they had attained before. These results have been accomplished under difficulties that few appreciated. The damaging effect of the dire explosion was grapled with shortly after his arrival. Serious strikes have occurred and the brunt of the whole trouble was placed upon his shoulders. He took a firm stand and convinced the public mind and the government commission of the correctness of that stand. Today he resigns his position with these labor questions permanently settled and the mines in a position to turn out 100,000 tons per month with proper transportation facilities supplied by the railways.

Not only this, Mr. Tonkin has taken a broad view of the situation. He has always had unbounded faith in these collieries, which he believes will some day rival the greatest collieries of America. He has conducted the management of the company with that idea before him. The development of the mines have therefore been along broad principles, the full significance of which will not be felt for years to come.

Mr. Tonkin frankly condemned the company stores which were is full swing when he arrived, and he did not rest content until he had succeeded in influencing the directorate to abolish them. For this service the merchants of Fernie owe the retiring manager their heartfelt gratitude. In other matters Mr. Tonkin has succeeded in improving the feeling between the town and the company.

The town of Michel is a monument to the ability of Mr. Tonkin as a town builder. Most of the houses were wiped out by fire last summer and Mr. Tonkin has completely remodelled the town and made it one of the neatest camps in the whole country.

During the five years of its history the C. N. P. Coal Company has had as many managers. This is largely responsible for the fact that the development of the mines has not been as rapid as it should have been. Mr. Tonkin's successor, be he ever so clever and capable, will not be able to step into the vacant office and cause the work to go on as smoothly as if no break had occurred, and it will be impossible for him to understand and take full advantage of his predecessor's plans.

We hope that the citizens of Fernie will show in some public manner their appreciation of the worth of Mr. and Mrs. Tonkin. We would suggest a banquet in their honor, so arranged that the ladies might attend.

SELF PRESERVATION.

The extensive business carried on by the department stores of the east drains the west of a very perceptible share of its net earnings. In this respect Fernie suffers perhaps no more, perhaps no less than its sister towns. The fact exists that many thousands of dollars are annually sent from this town to purchase from eastern departmental stores, goods that might be bought from the merchants of the town.

The dollar sent to Toronto for goods will never find its way back to Fernie, but the money which buys goods from a Fernie merchant is retained here, will be kept in circulation in Fernie, may be used in the purchase of goods many times, and may eventually come back to the original purchaser. A town is simply a large-sized family, in which every member is more or less dependent upon the other, and it is clear that whatever benefits anyone directly must necessarily be advantageous to all the others in an indirect way. Therefore our self-preservation demands that we keep our money at home and spend it among ourselves.

We do not wish to be unfair to these eastern concerns. Their business is a legitmate one and they cannot be blamed for extending it by means of the mail order department, but at the same time we have grave doubts that any advantages are to be gained by dealing with these distant stores. They have admirable opportunities sor misrepresentation and we believe that they avail themselves of these opportunities more or less. Then an honest comparison of prices shows that the freight, express or postage rates about cover the difference between Toronto and Fernie prices. Why the C. P. R., the Dominion Express Co., or the Postal department deserve this rake-off is scarcely apparent.

Then there is another phase of the question which is often lost sight of. T. Eaton expects his customers to pay cash in advance. or on delivery. If the Fernie merchant was insured against bad debts by similar treatment from his customers he would be able to sell at lower prices, prices that would compare favorably with Eaton's plus transportation charges.

Patronize home industry. Stand by your town, which stands by you. Fernie's stores are first class and up-to-date and its merchants are enterprising and energetic. Show your appreciation of these facts by spending your money with them.

EDITORIAL NOTES

SLIPPERY sidewalks, especially the inclined approaches at the street crossings will be more or less of a nuisance for the next four or five months. Fernie will have to struggle through another winter without incorporation and the public will have to depend on the good nature of neighboring residents to throw an occasional pail of ashes on the dangerous places. A little kindly precaution may prevent much discomfiture and even broken bones.

* * *

The strongest temperance lessons are those learned from scenes like that which was witnessed at Michel yesterday afternoon. When human beings so far lose their sense of humanity, when they so far lose their respect for themselves and the law of the land as to plunder and loot to satisfy their craving appetites while their assistance is required to save property,—when human beings get down to this level it is time to call a halt. The law of temperance is not that of teetotalism. "Be ye temperate in all things" is a law which should govern every life.

* * *

The sentence of one month at hard labor without the option of a fine may seem somewhat heavy for the seemingly trivial offense of carrying a match into a coal mine. The ignition of a match in the workings is attended with grave danger of an explosion that might cause enormous loss of life and property. The law is stringent on this point and it was made more for the protection of the miner's life than for the mine-owner's property. Offenders in the past have got off with fines but this method of punishment does not seem to have had the desired effect in checking the criminal practice.

* * *

THE Vancouver bye-election will be held next Wednesday, the nomination taking place two days earlier. The Liberals have nominated Captain Duff Stuart, a young business man, to oppose attorney-general Wilson. Several other Liberals, including Joe Martin were nominated but they all withdrew excepting Dr. McInnes, James McGeer and Capt. Stuart and the latter polled the large majority of the votes. The seat is generally conceded to Mr. Wilson though it is not by any means certain that he will have the walk-over that he had at the general election. There were several features in that election adverse to the Liberal interests which have been eliminated in this. Many Liberals voted against their party owing to their antagonism to Martin. In this election the Liberals will be united. The Labor and Socialist candidates probably robbed the Liberal party of more strength than the Conservative party. In the present contest it is a clear fight between the two parties. On the other hand there is in existence among business men of the non-extremist class a dread of another general election, and these show an inclination to give the McBride government an opportunity to display their ability.

Fresh Fruit AND Vegetables arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert Confectioner

J. C. Hutchison
Merchant Tailor
Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings.
We Guarantee Our Work.

Fort Steele Brewing Co.
Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine
Beer and Porter
Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER
Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.
First-class work. Prices moderate.
Satisfaction Guaranteed.
Cement Work a Specialty.
BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

Among Xmas Books just received we have some very attractive
Art Works
by
Margaret E. Sangster
Ernest Thompson-Seton
W. J. Long
J. Whitcomb Riley
John Burroughs
and other popular and standard authors.
Also
a well assorted stock of
CHILDREN'S ILLUSTRATED BOOKS
Prices Right Call and Inspect
Fernie Drug Store.
N. E. SUDDABY.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 160 acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 1966, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 273 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 40 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 40 chains to place of commencement.

249-8 JOSEPH BAUER

Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to th Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works a Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E' corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to, point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 25th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by R. C. Tuttle.

Cree & Hutchison
The Largest Real Estate Agents in East Kootenay.
FOR SALE
2 Victoria Avenue Lots.
House and Lot, $1,500.
Chicken Ranch, furnished House and 100 hens, $250.
House and Lot $2,000.
House and Lot $2,500.
Two cottages $800.
Three Timber Limits.
Six coal claims.
We can sell you reeal estate no matter where it is.
Don't forget that insurance—Do it now.

Louis Carosella & Co.
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.
By the Day, Week, or Month.
Everything first-class.
WM. R. McDOUGALL.

The production of the Best Makers in the World are none too good for the people of Fernie.
Get the Best
by using
W. & R. Jacobs & Co.'s
Biscuits
Crow's Nest Trading Co'y

Great Business
That's what we are doing during these cold days
Customers say
Our Prices
ON
Men's Overcoats = Ladies' Coats and Ladies' Skirts
Cannot be equalled elsewhere and prices talk.
Give Us a Call.
Chas. Richards & Co.

Boilers and Engines.
ALSO SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY
We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.
Write us.
J. L. Neilson & Co.
602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Ft. Steele, B. C. for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum upon the following described lands: beginning at a post marked D. Adams' south-west corner post which is situated along Fording river and four miles north of the northern boundary of Lot 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district B. C. and which corner post is near the south-east corner post of F. T. Griffin's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 814, thence from said south-west corner of D. Adams east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

249-4 D. ADAMS

Located by W. Bovin, Sept, 18th, 1903.

FERNIE DAIRY
Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .
Dobson & Willingham

The Best Is None Too Good For the People of Fernie
WE aim to supply the very best in every line of meats
Fish, Game and Poultry always on hand.
We receive WEEKLY SHIPMENTS of Choice Dairy Butter and Eggs - - - -
Calgary Cattle Co.
LIMITED

MEATS
BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON
at reasonable prices.
For Quotations apply to
THE UNION MEAT COMPANY
MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

Girl Wanted—Apply Mrs. J. A. Rennie.

Get your pictures framed at the B. C. Furniture Co.

A. R. Wilson, of Michel, was in town this week.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

B. R. Dawson, of Nelson, C. P. R. Inspector, was in town this week.

B. R. Monan, of Winnipeg, arrived on Thursday to accept a position with the Trites-Wood Co.

We buy, sell and exchange new and second had furniture. stoves, etc. The B. C. Furniture Co.

W. Dunlop, of the Crow's Nest dining service is spending the winter holidaying at his former home in Nova Scotia.

Want your photos for Xmas? No time to lose. Prest's studio open from Nov. 19th to 28tn. 252-3

The Venerable Archdeacon Pentreath, D.D., will preach at both morning and evening services at Christ Church tomorrow.

Wanted—Work in hotel by man and wife. Man to tend bar and wife to wait on table. Both experienced at work. Address H. Lewis, Macleod.

Mr. J. H. Schofield, of Pincher Creek, has publicly announced that he will not appear as a Liberal candidate in the forthcoming federal elections.

Wm. Hanley, of The Trites-Wood Co., severed his connection with that store this week. He left on Wednesday for Winnipeg where he has secured a position.

Xmas. photos should be taken this month to insure reaching your friends in time. Prest's studio opposite the Methodist Church open from Nov. 19th to 28th. 252-3

A. H. B. MacGowan, a prominent Vancouver insurance man and one of the successful candidates in the late election, was in town this week looking after his business interests here.

Services at the Baptist church to-morrow at 11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. The pastor, Rev. C. R. G. Poole will preach. At the evening service he will speak on "Jonah and the Whale." Visitors are cordially welcome to all the services.

Harold Nelson, the well known actor wired Mr. Trites this week from Grand Forks, asking for an option on Princess Hall for a 3 night engagement, The option was granted and it is probable that this talented company will yet play in Fernie.

The insurance branch of Cree & Hutchison's business has been making rapid strides of late. The business done by this enterprising firm last month surpassed all previous records. They carry a long list of the best insurance companies, which possess the confidence of the public.

Mr. D. Davies, the new Comptroller for the C. N. P. Coal Company, accompanied by his wife and his family of four, arrived from Charlottetown, P. E. I. They are at present stopping at the Royal Hotel but will shortly take up their residence in Park cottage, now occupied by Mr. Wood.

A. B, Smith, of Fernie, is going to Ontario about the 5th Dec. to purchase a car- load of pure bred live stock and poultry of all kinds. He will have the assistance of The Dominion Live Stock Association in the selection and shipping of the stock, actual expenses only charged. All parties thinking of purchasing pure bred stock or poultry would do well in getting him to bring out what they require.

A shocking case is being tried at the police court today. R. Wilcox is charged with assault upon his 9-year-old daughter. The story as told by the little girl in the police court behind locked doors this morning is a pitiable one. Ross & Alexander are prosecuting and Herchmer & Herchmer are defending the accused. The little girl was in the witness stand all morning and the cross-examination by the defence is being continued this afternoon. Dr. Higgins will also give evidence.

Messrs. Dobson and Willingham, the owners of the rink, with characteristic energy, and determination to do anything in their power to improve the existing conditions, are about to let a contract for a 14 foot addition across the back end of the rink, and extending onto the lane. This addition will be torn down in the spring. They are putting themselves to considerable expense to provide as large a rink as possible for the winter. The hockey boys and the skating public will appreciate this act.

P. N. Vibert, manager of the Union Bank at Lethbridge, and lawyer L. M. Johnston of the some place came up on Wednesday on business connected with their mortgage on the Cedar Valley Improvement Co's property. They have foreclosed their mortgage and have taken control of the whole property. Mr. Cree the assignee, still represents the creditors, but as the property gives little promise of paying anything beyond the claims of the mortgagors he has cut off all expenses and discharged the men he had employed looking after the property. The mortgagors have employed Mr. Chas. Tuttle as overseer.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Your credit is good at The B. C. Furniture Co.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

Mrs. R. W. Wood arrived from an extended visit to Toronto and vicinity yesterday.

W. A. MacDonald, K. C., of Nelson, was in town this week on business connected with the explosion suits.

Misses Mabel and Rhoda Campbell, of Morrissey, are spending a few days in Fernie this week visiting Mrs. J. W. Nunn.

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

Don't forget the concert and ball on Wednesday and Thursday. The effort of the fire brigade to raise funds are deserving of the freest kind of patronage from the public.

The Minto club held its regular dance on Tuesday evening. A very pleasant evening is reported. They will have no meeting next week owing to the Cosgrove dance.

Night School

Learn to write a good hand. Learn Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. Our methods are up-to-date. Class room 1st door west of Methodist church. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

Three more protests have been filed with the registrar at Victoria, viz. against Dr. King, of Cranbrook; Brown, of Greenwood, and Tanner, of Saanich. The previous protests were: Victoria 4, Esquimalt, Kamloops and Revelstoke or 10 in all.

Fernie has had one week of regular winter weather. The first snow fell on Saturday evening last. Since then more or less has been daily added. This morning's storm would do credit to Dakota's fame. The clothing merchants are reaping the benefits of the change in largely increased sales.

Passenger trains along the C. P. R. will be illuminated by acetylene entirely. Experiments with it which have been in progress for some time have been so entirely satisfactory that its general use has been ordered. A plant to generate the gas for recharging the storage tanks will be put in at Vancouver yards —Kamloops Sentinel.

"Our Kids". a minstrel show, struck town on Thursday and they raked in a good number of four bit pieces in the evening. It was one of the poorest excuses for a show we have seen but the crowd bore it patiently and most of them waited to the end. One, philosophically inclined, was heard to remark as he climbed down the stairs, "Oh well they're all right, we are the suckers."

Miss Chambers, professional nurse, came up from Blairmore this week to take charge of a case in town.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

Services at Christ Church will be held tomorrow as follows: Matins and Holy Communion, 11 a.m.; S. School, 2.30 p.m.· Evensong, 7.30 p.m. Preacher, The Venerable Archdeacon Pentreath, D.D.

BORN.

FORBES—At Fernie, on Nov. 12th, the wife of Mr. L. R. Forbes, of a daughter.

MCMULLIN—At Armstrong, on Nov. 11, the wife of Mr. J. H. McMullin, of Fernie, of a daughter.

WAKEFUL CHILDREN.

For a long time the two year old child of Mr. P. L. McPherson, 59 N. Tenth St. Harrisburg, Pa., would sleep but two or three hours in the early part of the night, which made it very hard for her parents. Her mother concluded that the child had stomach trouble, and gave her half of one of Chamberlains Stomach and Liver Tablets, which quieted her stomach and she slept the whole night through. Two boxes of these tablets have effected a permanent cure and she is now well and strong. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Yours for $15

Works are Elgin and Waltham, as you choose. Case is 14 K., gold inside and out, but not all through; as pretty as solid gold, and stronger; guaranteed to wear 25 years.

If you think of buying a Watch you ought to learn about the "Gold Filled" case. I can show you five sizes and a good variety of patterns, and would like to describe its construction.

A. C. Liphardt.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

Something Worth Knowing

All Goods Purchased from

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

carry a guarantee of entire satisfaction to our customers or money refunded——We purchase from the best markets in the world, always in Car Lots for Spot Cash, and therefore can sell you better goods for less money than any other House——No occasion to send away for any goods, as all our departments are brim full of this season's goods, fresh, new, and up-to-date.

Our Grocery Department

has made big strides lately and has been successful in reaching the top ——It is our intention that with Quality and Price in your favor, and courteous treatment on our part, to merit your patronage which we assure you will always be appreciated.

S P E C I A L

AS A LEADER we will sell for a few days:

1 Large Tin Fresh or Smoked Halibut	10c.
1 Large Tin Baking Powder	10c.
1 pound Tin Special Blend Mocha and Java Coffee	40c.
8 Tins Condensed Cream	$1.00

Oranges, Lemons, Plums, Celery and all kinds of Garden Vegetables in Stock Get our prices for your winter supply.

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

Departmental Stores——Fernie—Michel — Morrissey — Coal Creek

The Muskoka Hotel,

....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

T. H. Whelan, Manager.

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

ACCURACY

We pride ourselves on our Prescription Department. There is a great deal in knowing that your Prescription will be filled just as your physician wishes it to be filled.

PURITY

This is where we aim to excel, we buy only the best drugs and chemicals, and supply only the best, just what your doctor orders, always

"COMPETENCY"

Our Prescription Department is under the management of the proprietor, whose Thirty-five Years Experience should be sufficient guarantee.

Our prescription clerks are qualified and competent, the drugs and chemicals may be relied upon and our system of checking is a positive safe guard against errors.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B.C.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

A. S. EMPY'S

...Restaurant

Wardner, B. C.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

"THE RICH WIDOW."

SORROWFUL LOT OF WIDOWHOOD MAY BE FULL OF CONSOLATION.

CURIOUS TITLE IS PROVED.

Rich in All That Makes Life Truly Great and Happy—Widows Rich in Opportunities to Do Double Service in Life—Become Father as Well as Mother—Their Histories Rich in Inspiring Examples of Duty Well Done.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Nov. 1.—The consolation and encouragement that religion affords in the sorrowful and distressing lot of widowhood are pointed out by the preacher in this sermon on the text Luke vii, 12, "And she was a widow."

The rich widow! Who ever heard of such a title for a sermon on this text? Better call her "the poor widow," "the friendless widow," "the dying widow"—anything but "the rich widow." This funeral procession winding its way out of the Syrian city is one of the most pathetic spectacles of the gospel history. How much heartbreak is contained in those three phrases, "A dead man, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow!" In Arizona is a mountain aptly named "Starvation peak." There the Indians many decades ago drove the Spaniards and hemmed them in and kept them until for the want of food the little band of living men were changed into a band of decomposing corpses. So this text is one of the "Starvation peaks" among the gospel hills. It is the place where a wife first lost her husband, her breadwinner. And now a wife without her husband and a mother with only a cold body for her son is slowly wending her way to the cemetery. She was a wife and a mother only of the grave. "The rich widow?" Nonsense! Change the title. Call it "the poor widow of Starvation peak."

No, my brother, I want to keep the title I have chosen. I want to show how even a woman so desolate as the one in the text may find consolation in life and in the performance of her duty and in the sympathy of humanity, and, more than all, in the resources of divine power her life may become rich for herself and for others. I have seen too many adjectives hitched to this heroic and conquering nominative. I believe thousands and tens of thousands of mothers who have been bereft of the companion who once stood with them at the marriage altar have attained true and abiding wealth. They have been rich in all that makes life truly happy, great and good; rich in their opportunities to do a double service in life. To their children they have become father as well as mother; rich in their inspiring examples of duties well done; rich in the faith with which their trials led them to test the goodness and greatness of God; rich in the heights and depths and lengths and breadths of their love, and, above all, rich in eternal as well as temporal rewards.

The widow is rich in her opportunities of maternal usefulness; rich because all the physical, mental and spiritual resources of her nature are developed in the struggle which her loneliness involves; rich because for her children every word she speaks and every thought she thinks and every deed she performs shall bring forth their maximum of results for good or evil. For her offspring every mountain which she has to climb can become a gold mine and every thicket into which she has to plunge a bank of roses and every shower of tears can return as a tossing, tumbling fountain and every land for her can become a harvest field of yellow grain or of white checked, sweet scented clover tops. Literally, by taking away a wife's husband, God makes it possible for a widow with children to make more out of her life, in a maternal sense, than in any other way. At once, by the mere fact of widowhood, she becomes the father, the mother, the breadwinner, the guide and the all in all for her offspring.

Now, every one should want to make the most out of his life. Therefore, O widow, ought you not to feel honored because God has singled you out as one of his favorite daughters for great and vital work? A few years ago the United States—north, east, south and west—united its many voices in praising the greatest of American jurists, John Marshall, who year after year as chief justice of the supreme court rendered the decisions which made it possible for the United States government at Washington to be what it is to-day. Shall you, O widow, not feel honored in the same way as we honor John Marshall, since God has placed you in a position where your children and your children's children may be molded and started forth into Christian usefulness by the consecration and faithfulness of your life? In the glorious opportunities which have come to you in reference to your children you are rich! You are magnificently and gloriously rich. God has made you sole guardian of your little ones.

Oh, the paternal as well as the maternal opportunities which are offered to the consecrated Christian widowhood of the present century! Some time ago a beautiful faced lady was going through one of the great department stores in Columbus, O. She saw there a large eyed, wistful looking cash boy, who was watching her and her son. "My child," said she, "would you like to go home and be my little boy? There you could have money and playthings and horses and carriages to make your life happy, as my little boy's life is happy?" "I do not know, mum, whether I would like those things or not," he answered. "Has your little boy a papa? If I go with you will his papa be my papa? I want a papa. Because, mum, before my papa died I had all those things, and now that my papa is dead I have nothing." Ah, yes, there was pathos, unfathomable pathos, in the answer of the little cash boy. But that answer is not true in reference to all fatherless children. When their fathers died they did not all lose everything. Their mothers not only remained their mothers, but they became their fathers also. O woman who art a widow, I sympathize with you in your sorrow and your hard lot, but let me congratulate you, too, on the opportunity God has placed within your reach of honorably and heroically performing a double duty. In a paternal as well as in a maternal sense you are accomplishing much for the temporal and the eternal lives of your children.

It is amazing how many kindnesses there are in this world if only one stops to catalogue them. You can see those kindnesses manifested everywhere. A few years ago a man was caught in a crowd that surged into the cars of the Brooklyn bridge. He was jammed this way and that. His hat was battered and crushed. The more he vehemently denounced the people as savages the more he was hustled and pushed along. When he was at last seated and was still complaining a gentleman next to him turned and said: "My friend, I am afraid that you have got into the condition of only looking upon the bad side of human nature. Now, I have schooled myself to look upon the good side, and to help me in my task of looking upon the bright side every day I carry a note-book and jot down every good thing I see people do to other people. For instance, to-day on my way to the bridge my hat blew off. I chased it, but before I could get it three other men whom I had never seen before ran after that hat. One of them caught it and brought it back to me. Now, that action was certainly unselfish on his part, and yet you can see the same unselfish act performed on any windy day.

"As I was crossing City Hall park," he continued, "a woman in front of me lost her glove. Two newsboys saw it and ran to get it for her. That certainly was unselfish. These are but little things, but everywhere you will see men and women doing just such kind things to their neighbors. When this car stops, you will see four or five gentlemen take their papers and give them to the newsboys for them to sell them over again. All these facts certainly show that the human race is not a collection of savages."

The sermon which the Christian gentleman preached in the cable car of the Brooklyn bridge is certainly true. Everywhere one can see many kindnesses manifested toward those who are in distress, if those people in distress are worthy of human kindness. And so, widow, though you may have had your bumps and knocks as that indignant passenger had who was trying to get into the train, though you may have injustices practiced upon you—for thieves and murderers from time immemorial have always felt that widows and orphans were their legitimate prey—you have also had many kindnesses shown you and yours. Every true and faithful widow always gathers around her true and faithful friends.

The consecrated widow is rich in the heights and depths and intensities of the love she bears toward those who are dependent upon her. It is one of the inevitable laws of this world that we generally value an article just in proportion to what it is worth to us. If it costs nothing, we care for it but little. If it costs much, we value it much. I enter your home. You show me the results of your travels. You say: "This is a rug I bought in Damascus. Here is a beausiful piece of ivory I found in India. Here is a boomerang of Australia. Yonder is a trinket I picked up in Pompeii. But this picture is my treasure. It was painted by a Spanish master and was placed upon the walls of a Mexican cathedral. One night that picture was cut out of its frame and carried away. That picture must be worth at least $20,000. I, myself, paid $10,000 for it. Yes, I value that picture above all my other possessions. It cost me so much money."

But though the value of some articles may be judged by the criterion of silver and gold others are sometimes judged by the higher standard of flesh and blood. If in order to save your country you had to sacrifice upon the field of battle an arm or a leg or an eye, would you not on account of that sacrifice love your country more than if, like John Jacob Astor, you merely made to it the gift of an artillery battery, or, like old Cornelius Vanderbilt, you fitted out for it a man-of-war? If in order to save your child, who had been gripped with the poisonous bite of a dangerous serpent, you had placed your mouth against the bleeding lips of the wound and sucked that poison into your own system, would you not love that child more for whom you were willing to imperil your life than if you had given to her a mere offering of silver and gold? Yes, yes! Of course you would. The law is universal. The greater the sacrifice we make for our loved ones the greater becomes our love for them.

This premise is granted. Where, then, can you find richer, deeper, truer sacrifices and therefore richer love than that exhibited by a widowed mother toward her helpless children? Tenderly as you and I love our children, does our love glow with such fervent heat as does that of the widowed mother who has toiled and contrived and denied herself for their welfare? In order to raise them she has to pay for their education and food with the price of blood. Does not that young girl's graduation day address mean more to her mother, who perhaps had to scrub for it as well as sew together the white dress in which it was delivered? So, O widow, by your very sacrifices I see with what intensity you love your children because of the self-denial and the toil you have given them. By the very sacrifices which you have made for their physical, intellectual and spiritual development I congratulate you upon the heights and depths and intensities of your maternal affections. It is one joy to plant a garden within a stone wall inclosure for your own eyes to see. It is a greater and holier happiness to plant a flower garden that others may enjoy also.

The consecrated widow is rich because she has been able by personal experience to prove the certainty and faithfulness of God's promises. A lifeboat is sometimes used as a pleasure craft along the shores of Massachusetts and Long Island. You can see the fishermen take and rig in it a small sail and go spinning over the waters, while they laugh and joke as they draw in the bluefish or the shad. So people sometimes use the gospel lifeboat merely for a pleasure craft. When the sky is clear and the sea smooth they set sail for a frolic. But, oh, my friends, the lifeboat is a far different craft when on a stormy night the life saving men launch it into the surf to fight their way out to the ship aground in the offing, where it is being shattered to pieces by the ceaseless bombardments of the mighty seas. And the promises of God, out of which the gospel lifeboat is made, mean far more to a widowed mariner sailing the seas of life alone than they do to the young daughter who has always been shielded from every storm. And yet, mother, I would ask you a pertinent question, which I know you will answer well. Though you may have buried your husband many years ago, was there ever a time when if you trusted in God his love and protection and care failed you? Was there ever a time when Christ was not willing to stand by the cradle of your living child, as in olden times he once stood by the bier of one who was the only son of his mother, and she was a widow.

Oh, the blessed enjoyment of having had the opportunity of fully testing the love and care and the gentleness of a protecting God! Many years ago at a large infidel meeting in England, at which Charles Bradlaugh, the noted English agnostic, was speaking, an old, gray haired woman arose. As she looked about her she slowly said to the speaker: "Sir, it is very easy for you to attack the Best Friend I ever had. You do not know him as I know him. I once knew him merely as an acquaintance, but after my husband died he was more to me than an acquaintance—he was a friend, a blood friend. Sir, that friend helped me to feed and clothe my babies. That friend gave me physical strength to go on when I thought I must die. That friend, sir, is my dear Saviour. That is what my Christ has done for me. Now, sir, what has your infidelity been able to do for you?" O mother, bereft of your husband, it has been a blessed opportunity for you to test the greatness and goodness of God! Do not tell me you are poor. You are rich; rich hemispherically and celestially rich; rich as God is rich.

But though in a divine sense the consecrated widow is rich, yet she shall be far richer in the next world. Woman, whom have you loved of all human beings the best on earth? "Well," you say, "that is a hard question to answer. I loved my mother and father in one way and my children in another way and and my sisters and brothers in another way. But, taking it all in all, I think I loved my husband best, truly best. We were one in thought, one in life and one in everything. My one ambition in life was to please him." Yes, I think your answer is correct. The relations between a husband and a wife are so close that you were one, and your one desire was to live for him and to please him. Now, my sister bereft of her husband, when you reach heaven and meet the long separated father of your babies, do you not feel he will be pleased to know how you have worked and slaved for his flesh and blood? When you reach heaven, will you not be rich in the knowledge that he appreciates all you have done for your children and his? You have done your task well. It has been a hard journey to travel alone, but at the end of the journey you will be rich in his blessing as well as that of your Saviour, the dear Christ.

Most of us know what the rapture of an earthly reunion means, but such a welcome will pale into insignificance before the heavenly embrace of a risen father and a long separated wife. After the famous battle of Five Forks General George E. Pickett of Gettysburg fame was reported to have been killed. Day after day his wife sat with her baby in her arms in the silence of despair. But one day there rode up the lane of the Virginia home a familiar figure. He cried to his horse: "Whoa, Lucy! Whoa!" With that the mother, with a wild cry of joy, arose, and said: "George! George! Is that you?" "I do not know how to describe it," wrote Mrs. Pickett, "the peace, the bliss of that moment! It was too deep and too sacred to be translated into words." And so, my widowed friend, when in the heavenly reunion you shall greet your dear one, carrying with you your children and his, the sacredness of that moment will be too deep and holy to be translated into words.

Thus, widows of Nain and widows of Europe and America and widows wherever you may be, I call you rich. Go ahead bravely and truly, fighting the battles that are before you. Christ shall be your protector in this world. Your rewards for duties well done await you in the next. The truest way for you to be true to your dead husband is for you to be true to the noble tasks God has given to you to do here. Remember that Christ knows all about a widow's troubles. He sympathized with the sorrowing widow of Nain. In his great heart there is sympathy for all who struggle and suffer, and the divine help and consolation are never more generously bestowed than upon those who bear that heaviest of human bereavement — widowhood. This loss and all the blessings it brings will make you rich indeed.

THE COLOR FAD.

Of the Influence of Variously Colored Walls in Homes.

It is quite the fad nowadays to have rooms where one color predominates, green rooms, red rooms, blue rooms, etc., says Public Opinion. In view of this fad it is interesting to read an article which appears in the October number of Medical Talk for the Home on the peculiar influence of different colors upon the body through the mind. "Purple," it is stated, "is the most dangerous color, having a fatal effect upon the mind. If a person were confined for a month in a room with purple walls, with no color but purple around him, by the end of the month he would be a madman. Scarlet is as bad, but has a different effect. It produces a madness that drives a person to kill his friends, especially his nearest relatives. Scarlet has something of this effect on animals. It will drive a bull or a tiger to desperation, causing them to fight till death. Blue has a drug-like effect on the brain and excites the imagination, but if you get too much of it and cannot get away from it, its effect is terrible. Green is the king of preserves and strengthens the eye-colors. It is soothing in its effect, sight, and no amount of it can do any harm. The sky, which appears to be blue, is really white, tinged with green, and it is only the distance and clearness that make it appear blue. Green is so soothing that it helps the system to fight disease, and, therefore, all sick rooms and hospital wards should have everything possible about them colored green. Sage green is the most soothing tint of all. Yellow is one of the healthiest and cheeriest colors there is, and will make a dark room bright where even green would be cold and depressing. But solitary confinement within a yellow cell for a month or six weeks would helplessly weaken the system and produce chronic hysteria. Sheer, dead-white walls will destroy the eye-sight in a short time, while the effect on the brain is so maddening that blindness is almost a relief. An example of this is found in the Arctic explorers who have to wear green-tinted glasses to avoid snow blindness, which is, really white blindness."

Queer Taxes.

Though London bridge has had no houses upon it for about 150 years, taxes are still paid on the houses that formerly stood there. When, about the year 1756, it was decided to clear the houses from the bridge certain taxes and tithes survived and have been paid ever since to the rectors of St. Magnus and St Olave churches. Not less than $300,000 has been paid to these two parishes since the decrepit houses which formerly yielded them were pulled down. They survived not only the house, but the old bridge itself. And now there is a movement to stop this serial ghost story of taxation.

Romance of a Potato.

Such fortunes have this year been made by Lincolnshire potato merchants that potato culture is becoming the one theme of conversation among the depressed agriculturists. On Saturday it was ascertained that two growers at Bardney, near Lincon (Messrs. Varlow and Blanchard), last year gave £125 for 5 cwt. of Northern Stars, and from this quarter of a ton they have secured about 36 tons, each potato practically producing 144 times its own weight. The selling price of Northern Stars is £150 per ton, and it is easy to calculate, therefore, that the investment of £125 last year, plus the labor, has yielded about £5,400.

The Chance of Life.

Those persons who find life so well worth living that they would not be sorry to become centenarians, will surely be interested in the following statistics, which were recently compiled by an indefatigable French scientist. Out of every million persons who are born in the same year, 312,000, he says, live for 70 years, 107,000 for 80 years, and 8,811 for 90 years. Two hundred and forty-five persons out of every million live for 97 years, 119 for 98, 54 for 99, 23 for 100, 9 for 101, 3 for 102, and 1 for 103 years. A very few among the million may attain even a greater age than this.

The World's Rarest Bird.

To find the rarest bird in existence you must go to the mountains between Anam and Loas, where there is a certain kind of pheasant. For many years its existence was known only by the fact that its longest and most splendid plume was in much request by mandarins for their headgear. A single skin is worth $500, and the bird living would be priceless, for it soon dies in captivity.

"Kettle" Bridges in Russia.

Perhaps the most remarkable bridges in the world are the kettle bridges used in Russia and Siberia, of which Cossack soldiers are expert builders. They are built up of the soldiers' lances and cooking kettles. Seven or eight lances are placed under the handles of a number of kettles and fastened by means of a rope to form a raft. Each of these rafts will bear the weight of half a ton.

Lambs Gain Faster Than Sheep.

As with other animals, the most profitable age in sheep for mutton purposes is when young. Experiments conducted in England by Professor John Scott show that sheep under one year will eat 20 per cent. less food and make a much larger gain than sheep over one year. The average daily gain in weight is about 50 per cent. more in lambs under twelve months than between twelve and twenty-four months.

Silencing Von B.

Von Blumer—I came near being taken for a deer in the Adirondacks.

Mrs. Von Blumer—That's singular, when you're such a bear at home.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

A feeling of utter weariness came over her after her two sleepless nights; she lay down on the bed and fell in a heavy sleep. But it did not refresh her as it generally did after any great fatigue. She woke up feeling exhausted, dried her damp forehead, and began the daily task she had set herself. She was soon engrossed in her new duties; they were not too much for her, but they required endless patience, especially by the sick man, whose speech she alone could understand rightly. And now the days followed each other in a dull uniformity; each hour seemed exactly like the other; her life ran on like a wound-up clock. It is hard when a young life longs for sleep to be able to forget the day which only brings it work and sadness, when it wakes in the morning only to take up again the burden of gloom, and looks out upon the golden sunshine with eyes as dull as if looking into a gray sky.

"Another day—would it were over! What shall I do in the world? what do I live for?"

Each morning Lucie stood before the glass and wound her light braids into a knot, and each morning she went down to the old baron and asked how he had slept, and then read the papers to him. And each morning mademoiselle would sign to her to come into her room, and would then talk to her and retail every little occurrence in the town. And in the afternoon they sat opposite each other in the large, cool dining-room, and Peter brought the soup, to which Lucie helped, and then the roast which she carved. Every afternoon the carriage was at the door at the same hour, and the ladies drove for exactly an hour and a half by the clock—always the same way out to the Wasserthor. Mademoiselle never went in any other direction; on that side there was no railroad to pass, and to cross the track always made her nervous. The fat gray horse knew exactly the spot to turn—he always did it himself without the slightest hint from the coachman, and he trotted home at a little quicker pace than he had come away from it. Then came the most dreaded time of all, the time she was alone upstairs in her room. Lucie would sit there hours at a time without moving. The little hands that used to be so busy by her work-table now lay tired in her lap; her eyes looked out at the quiet little garden, but without seeing anything. Sometimes she brought up some books, trying to read herself into forgetfulness; but she seemed unfortunate in her choice—everything that she read seemed to depress her. She looked over "Manfred," and the dull despair of the hero had given her a sleepless night. Another time she had taken up Chamisso's poems, and some verses in them brought before her the picture of a modest little house beaming in the evening sunlight — that paradise that she had lost, lost forever through her own fault. She threw the book on the table and ran out into the garden, trying to master her painful thoughts.

She found herself standing again by the garden wall and noticed listlessly some bunches of purple grapes that were peeping over the wall from the neighboring garden. They swayed and nodded to her in the wind as if they would say, "Shall we not know you, you blonde maiden? Did you not only last year sit on the bench in our arbor with your lover? Then we could not see over the wall, we only knew the little garden over there. Why are you here, and so alone?"

And then she went on as hurriedly as if it were for a wager; and memory brought back every word, every look as she had sat there with him; and the present seemed to say to her, "It is all over, another waits for him there." It was frightful to think she had lost him through her own fault, and that he was able to forget her, and so soon — that was to her the hardest of all. And yet she had no right to reproach him, no indeed!

And still it was anger and pain together that made her spring up and dart from the old man's side when she heard his steps in the hall. And then again she would spend hours picturing to her self how she would beg for forgiveness, and he would put out his hand to her and say, "Let us forget it all, Lucie. I love you as much as ever." Then she would scold herself and try to comfort her poor heart with pride, and try to justify herself; but it was so weak and battered—had become so small and humble that that old way of keeping up a heart that was full of sorrow and regret would not serve her any longer.

Hortense wrote often; they were short, unfinished letters, always begging for forgiveness, and asking about the condition of the patient, as if the writer had no time, and still would perform a duty. And still through the ordinary lines a carefully concealed happiness would steal. Why did not Hortense confess it openly to her? Did she fear to tell her, the lonely one? Ah, she knew so well what a dazzling ray of light had made its entry into Wottersdorf. Might God protect it! She felt herself doubly poor after such letters. In the whole wide world there was nothing more for her to fix her longing thoughts upon in hope or secret happiness.

CHAPTER XXXII.

September passed sad and still, then October was over. November came. The fires burned in the porcelain stoves, and the dining-room was so dark that one of the lights in the chandelier had to be lighted for dinner. Mademoiselle put her feet upon the fender and wore a red shawl in which she wrapped herself like an Esquimau.

The baron rarely left his bed; he was always cold. Lucie sat patiently by him, reading the papers or talking to him, or listening to him as he would tell anecdotes of his active life, in the broken manner caused by his illness. He told her of things that had happened before her time. She learned from them that there was always trouble and sorrow in the world, and that they had the hardest lot to bear who suffered through their own fault.

Mademoiselle and Lucie dined alone in the large dining-room. Those were painful silent meals; why speak of them? Except Dr. Adler, no stranger came to the house; and he had remarkably little time, and told no news. The old Major von Schenk had been ill for several weeks. And when once mademoiselle had been to see Fraulein Dettchen, and was telling about it on her return, Lucie changed color at the mere mention, and kept her head down for fear she would add, "So the engagement is announced."

She knew she must hear it some day, and she had confused feelings as to what would happen to her if she did; it seemed to her she should not be able to live any longer.

They were sitting at dinner one gloomy November day; outside the clouds were dark and heavy; a few large snow-flakes were tumbling down in the air, and lay like stars against the window-panes. The little French woman even spoke but little to-day; the leg of mutton, which Peter was serving with green beans, took her whole attention. They were, in her opinion, almost as good as those at her home in her beautiful France.

At last she wiped her mouth, laid her napkin on the table, and asked: "Lucie, will you do me a favor? Will you take coffee with me? I expect a visitor."

The girl's eyes came back from some far corner and fastened themselves with astonishment on the old lady's round face.

"A visitor?"

"Yes; why not? You see, Lucie, I really had to invite Fraulein Dettchen, she is always asking me to something—coffee, cake, or lemonade. I am a little nervous, entre nous, always a little before this evenement, but what can I do? At first, indeed, I wanted to invite her for the evening to tea with the doctor—of course then I should not have troubled you; but just think, he declined, and she—the German ladies are odd, at least this kind—she would rather, she said, come to a sociable cup of coffee. She does not like to go out in the evening, she said; she can not stand it. Well, I was there yesterday, and invited her for to-day, and she has accepted, but regretted at the same time that she could not stay long, for she had to go to her sister-in-law's to see Fraulein Selma in her balldress, and then must go home, as her nephew too is going to the ball. I believe some club has its anniversary ball. Oh, well, that will suit me very well. Will you come, little one. Oh, you will be doing me a great favor," and as Lucie hesitated and was silent, she added: "I know Fraulein Dettchen will be pleased; she never says anything but what is nice about you."

Lucie had not seen the kindly little lady since that last morning in the mother-in-law's house, and a longing seized her to see that loving face again.

"If you will allow me," she said, half against her will, "I will come."

"Charmant! Very well, at four o'clock. I will take a nap until then. I feel frightfully tired."

In fact mademoiselle hid a yawn behind her plump little hand. As Peter brought in the dessert, and instead of one of her favorite puddings, she saw only apples and some of the small cakes the cook always kept in a tin box for such occasions, she imperceptibly shrugged her shoulders, and reaching out her hand to Lucie in passing said, "Au revoir," and tripped out of the room.

Lucie had taken a letter from the servant. It was from Hortense; but she could not make up her mind to read it at once; she was having one of her hardest days. As she had been sitting that morning at the baron's bedside and he had been complaining of unusual exhaustion, Dr. Adler had come in without its being possible for her to escape. He had bowed to her, looked at her for a moment, and then utterly ignoring her presence, had occupied himself with his patient. A feeling that had something of defiance in it had made her keep her place for a few minutes near the baron's arm-chair; but when he, after a few questions about the old gentleman's health, began to speak eagerly about some ordinance passed yesterday, and then began to describe some project concerning the building of an hospital, she rose slowly and walked out. She could still hear him say: "And I will not rest until I have proved to them that the spot offered to them by the town is the most unhealthy in the whole district."

"It is all over," she said to herself.

[CONTINUED.]

Can't Lose Her.

"The doctor," said Mr. Henpeck, "has ordered me away for a good, long rest."

"Good!" exclaimed Mrs. Henpeck. "I will go with you."

"In that case the doctor has ordered me to stay at home and save my money for the funeral."—Chicago Record-Herald.

What Else Were They For?

Stranger—I notice that this part of the country seems fairly teeming with horses.

Anne Arundelite—Yessir. And when it comes to teamin' they ain't nothin' much better t' team with than horses.

The Lay of the Bird.

"Oh, Mr. Jones, which of the song birds are you most fond of?"

"I prefer the hen, Miss Dorothy."

"But the hen isn't a singing bird."

"Well, it's the only bird whose lay I care for."

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

THE CROSSROADS STORE.

Ye can talk abaout yer congressman
An' senators an' such
Debatin' daown to Washin'tun
In a way to beat the Dutch;
Wavin' their arms wild in the air
An' stampin' on the floor,
But the place where things get settled is
Daown to the crossroads store.

We gather there most every night
When all the work is through
An' sorter glance the kentry o'er,
Takin' a birdseye view
Of politics, diplomacy,
Religion, crops, and soar
To patriotic heights, you bet!
Daown to the crossroads store.

When Russia gits a leetle fresh
Or England throws a bluff
Or Germany shoots off some more
Retaliation stuff,
Or Turkey holds her fingers to
Her snubby, turn up nose,
Wigglin' 'em in the direction
Yer Uncle Samyel goes,
We ca'mly takes the matter up,
Prepared fer peace or war;
Don't keer much which when we gits rilled
Daown to the crossroads store.

Sometimes our argymints grow hot,
An' Deekin Brown rips out
A good old cuss word, like "Gol darn
Whut Italy's about!"
Then Gran'pop White jumps from his cheer
An' grabs an ole ax helve,
"By gum!" he squeaks. "That's what we done Way back in eighteen-twelve!"
Ye can believe the eagle screams,
An' cannons crash an' roar
When we're settlin' mighty questions
Daown to the crossroads store.

—Harper's Magazine.

Averting the Evil.

Mildred (very superstitious)—Oh, dear, I would never have accepted you, Jack, if I had remembered it was Friday evening!

Jack—There's only one way to avert the evil omen, darling. We must very carefully kiss each other seven times at least every seven minutes during the first seventy minutes of our engagement.

Dear Sirs,—I was for seven years a sufferer from Bronchial trouble, and would be so hoarse at times that I could scarcely speak above a whisper. I got no relief from anything till I tried your MINARD'S HONEY BALSAM. Two bottles gave relief and six made a complete cure. I would heartily recommend it to anyone suffering from throat or lung trouble.

J. F. VANBUSKIRK.

Fredericton.

"I am very sorry, Victor, to think you were such a glutton. Are you not sorry yourself that you ate so much turkey?"

Lever's Y-Z (Wise Head) Disinfectant Soap Powder is a boon to any home. It disinfects and cleans at the same time. 30

"Yes, mother, 'cause I hadn't any room left for the mince pie."—Harper's Bazar.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

Chronic complaining doesn't make a hard lot any softer.

If you haven't any enemies to forgive, pardon a few of your friends.

Helpless as a Baby—South American Rheumatic Cure strikes the root of the ailment and strikes it quick. R. W. Wright, 10 Daniel street, Brockville, Ontario, for twelve years a great sufferer from rheumatism, couldn't wash himself, feed himself or dress himself. After using six bottles was able to go to work and says: "I think pain has left me forever."—26.

Thackeray's Satire.

Thackeray created quite erroneous impressions of himself by often indulging in irony in the presence of people who were incapable of understanding it. One curious instance which he gave was this: Thackeray had been dining at the Garrick and was talking in the smoking room after dinner with various club acquaintances. One of them happening to have left his cigar case at home, Thackeray, though disliking the man, who was a notorious tuft hunter, good naturedly offered him one of his cigars. The man accepted the cigar, but, not finding it to his liking, had the bad taste to say to Thackeray, "I say, Thackeray, you won't mind my saying I don't think much of this cigar?" Thackeray, no doubt irritated at the man's ungraciousness and bearing in mind his tuft hunting predilections, quietly responded, "You ought to, my good fellow, for it was given me by a lord." Instead, however, of detecting the irony, the dolt immediately attributed the remark to snobbishness on Thackeray's part and to the end of his days went about declaring that "Thackeray had boasted that he had been given a cigar by a lord."

Mythical as Thirteen.

Modern occultists maintain that the number four plays quite as important a part in mundane affairs as the number thirteen, and for the following reasons:

There are four cardinal points, four winds, four seasons, four rules for arithmetic, four conjugations and four quarters of the moon. Moreover, the Olympiad lasted for four years, a pack of cards is composed of four equal parts and of four suits, an hour is divided into four quarters, and most pieces of furniture have four legs. The occultists even point out that every human being has four canine teeth, that a fork has four prongs, that corpses are placed between four planks and prisoners between four walls, and that at a funeral the coffin is usually borne by four persons.

A faultless fit for every figure.

Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear

No matter what shape a man may be, normal, too stout or too thin—too tall or too short—there's a perfect fit for him in Stanfield's.

It's made for men of every size and weight—made to fit the unusual figures, as well as the average man.

And Stanfield's Underwear holds its shape. Every garment tested and unconditionally guaranteed to be absolutely unshrinkable.

All good dealers sell Stanfields.

DAY AND NIGHT SCHOOL

The National Business College Ltd.

Opposite City Hall, WINNIPEG, MAN.
THOROUGH COURSES in Book-keeping, Shorthand, Typewriting, etc. One week's trial given.
Catalogues free. 'Phone 1955.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

ELECTRIC BELTS IN THE REACH OF ALL

We are Selling the Best Electric Belt in the World at a Price Within the Reach of the Poorest Sufferer.

Our Regular No. 7 High Grade $40 BELT for only $5

Our No. 7 Electric Belt (with suspensory for men or ladies attachment) is guaranteed to possess more power, more current, more equal distribution of current, better quality and finish than any other Electric Belt made, regardless of price.

The Pref. Karn Belt is a sure cure for Nervous, Weakness, Kidney, Liver and Stomach Complaint, Rheumatism, Lame Back, Pain or Aches in all parts of the body. Wear the Belt while you sleep, and in the morning you will feel years younger than when you went to bed.

Beware of those who ask you to pay from $10 to $40 for an Electric Belt, not half so good as the Pref. Karn's which we sell for only $5.00. We have only one price. We do not ask you 40 dollars first, and if you do not buy, try and sell you the same belt at any old price.

Our Honest Offer.—If you do not care to send us five dollars we will send you one of our Belts to your nearest express office, C.O.D. $5.00, with privilege of examination, if satisfactory, pay the express agent $5.00 and express charges and take the Belt. If not as represented you need not pay one cent. If you send cash with order we prepay the postage.

We are manufacturers of all kinds of electric appliances. Write us for our book, giving prices and full particulars. It is sent free.

Do not buy until you see our No. 7 High Grade Belt. Write at once. Address

THE P. L. KARN CO. 132 Victoria St. Toronto, Can.

Whether for immediate or future consideration our prices for Copper Plate Engraving are worthy of note.

For instance, we engrave a plate like this for $1.00.

Mrs. William Ernest Burns

From the plate we print 100 choicest quality cards for $1.00.

The "plate" will last a lifetime.

Write for a copy of our new handsomely illustrated catalogue, ready Nov. 15th. On request we will send it to any address free of cost.

RYRIE BROS.
JEWELERS
118, 120, 122 and 124 Yonge St., Toronto

The number of medical students in the United States for the last college year was 27,615.

WHEAT OATS BARLEY FLAX

SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY
THOMPSON, SONS & CO.
Write to-day for particulars
GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS
Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg.
Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,
GRAIN MERCHANTS,
TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. Box 585
McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.
Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

WAS INCURABLE BUT IS CURED

Joseph Boon at Work Again After Seven Years Illness.

Discharged from the Hospital as Incurable he used Dodd's Kidney Pills With Splendid Results.

Cottle's Cove, New Bay, Nfld., Nov. 8.—(Special).—After being for seven years a hopeless invalid, unable to work and racked by aches and pains, Joseph Boone, of this place, is back at his old work as a fisherman. It sounds like a miracle, but it is not—it was Kidney Disease was the matter with him. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him.

"It is something worth relating what Dodd's Kidney Pills have done for me," says Mr. Boone, "and I am glad to tell it. I had doctored with several doctors and after 7 months in the hospital was sent home as incurable.

"Richard Quirk, who had been cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills, advised me to try them and I did. I took 21 boxes before I was able to go to work. But I can hardly believe it is myself is in it at all after all those years of suffering."

Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure all forms of Kidney Disease from Backache to Bright's Disease. Thousands of cured will tell you so.

When a girl is being taken to Europe to make her forget somebody her family doesn't want her to marry it is just when she has decided she could never notice any other man, even if she remained single all her life, that she begins to wonder why some chap is looking at her in such an interesting way.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

A curious superstition prevails in the highlands of Scotland, that if a cat be carried in a cart, and the wind blow from it to the horses, the latter immediately tire; and if any part of the driver's clothing be made from catskin, the horses will feel as if they were drawing a double burden.

Most women suspect there is some mischief on tap every time their husbands smile.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

At the age of 16 a girl stops crying and begins to weep.

Many men want to be great, and a few try to be good.

GREAT MEDICINE.—Tonti, one of the pioneers of French Canada, lost a hand and wore an iron hook as substitute. He was in the habit of boxing the ears of refractory Indians with this iron hand, and they have remarked that it was "great medicine." Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is great medicine, it takes hold of pain with an iron hand and knocks it out of the system.

The new British Blue Book gives the average weekly wages of fifteen skilled trades at $10.50 in London and $18.75 in New York.

Eight lady sanitary inspectors are now employed by the Dublin Corporation.

Few of us manage to keep pace with our good intentions.

The Foam on Soda Water.

Foam is a natural product, being caused by the escape of air or gas from a viscid liquid. In the case of soda water it is the escape of the carbonic acid gas from the sweetened beverage that causes the attractive sparkling appearance, but the sweetened water alone would give rise to but a small quantity of foam, as the gas would too easily escape. In order to prevent this some mucilaginous substance is usually added to the sirup, which renders the mass more viscous, so preventing the gas from escaping and producing the attractive head of foam so familiar to all.

"Pure soap!" You've heard the words. In Sunlight Soap you have the fact.

SUNLIGHT SOAP REDUCES EXPENSE

Ask for the Octagon Bar. 831

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

WHEAT—This week the wheat market has lapsed into a dull, dragging situation. There was a slight advance at the beginning of the week, but since then the tendency has been towards a little lower level of price, although without any pronounced break. At times there have been strong spots in the American speculative markets, showing a nervous feeling, but these subsided again to dullness, and towards the end of the week the dullness and inactivity have become more marked. The result of the week's trading has been that prices, after having advanced 1c close at practically the same price as a week ago, but with the market sentiment inclined to be bearish and prepared to probably anticipate somewhat lower prices. The differing situations in the American and European sections of the trade remain much as previously. The European situation still shows large consumption, amply filled by large shipments from Russia, the Danube and India, also Argentina, and even last week Australia again came on as an exporter, shipping 120,000 bushels for the week. In England, notwithstanding large imports, visible stocks are not increasing, and there is no doubt their own crop is poor in quality and small in quantity. Against that there are immense stocks accumulating at the Black sea ports, showing that the last two Russian crops must have been extraordinarily large to supply the large shipments during recent months and still allow of an accumulation well nigh as large as the American visible supply.

Manitoba wheat in the Winnipeg market has been quiet and dull all the week, and towards the end of the week it is stagnant. Prices for spot wheat have been rather held up by the idea that short sellers might find it difficult to fill contracts for October delivery. In the last two days any anticipated difficulty in this respect has disappeared, and as prices have been rather above shipping value and outside markets show a tendency to decline, our prices must follow to induce business. There is an irregular change in prices from a week ago. No. 1 northern and the lowest grades show a decline of about 1½c, while 2 northern and 3 northern are only ½c lower. At the close of business last week prices were: No. 1 northern 82¼c, 2 northern 78½c, 3 northern 74½c, No. 4 wheat 67½c, for immediate delivery, and for delivery first half November ½c under these prices; all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—The export movement continues light, as the British markets do not improve, and are on a much lower basis than is generally the case at this season. Ranchers have adopted the policy of holding over this stock, and are sticking to it. The stagnation in export trade makes butchers' cattle easy, as they are offering very freely here. About 3c is the prevailing figure for butchers' choice off cars. Exporters are going at about 3 to 3¼c, point of shipment.

SHEEP—Mutton sheep are worth 4c per pound off cars here. Lambs 5c per pound.

HOGS—Receipts are increasing. As predicted last week, the price has declined and 5¾c is now the ruling quotation for bacon hogs, weighing from 150 to 250 pounds. From 250 to 300 pound weights bring 5c and over 300 pounds 4¾c off cars Winnipeg.

MILCH COWS—Milch cows are scarce and dear. Very high prices are paid at times for choice animals, and the market ranges from $35 to $55, according to quality.

HORSES—There is a steady buying movement in general purpose horses, and prices keep high. Ontario is still shipping freely to this market. Teams of good weight and quality are worth from $300 to $400 here.

Antimony.

That terrible poison, antimony, known most familiarly in the compound called tartar emetic, has a very interesting history. It was introduced into medicine some centuries ago by Paracelsus. Its name signifies that it is "against monks," as some on whom it was tried displayed the now familiar symptoms. Its use in modern medicine has been reduced to the vanishing point with other depressing measures, such as bleeding. In the table which arranges the elements in series and shows their connections—so that all are probably modifications of one universal substance—there is a sequence, nitrogen, phosphorus, arsenic, antimony, bismuth. Sir Lauder Brunton has shown that these possess many common properties in their action upon man and that these properties vary in relation to the place of each in the scale. In the days before chloroform antimony and tobacco were used to produce the partial unconsciousness which attends their action.

Pinto Shell Cordovan Mitts and Gloves

—Toughest wear, flexible, warm, light
—Boil and scorch proof
—Rip and tear proof
—Rain and wind proof
—That's what H.B.K. Pinto Shell Cordovan mitts and gloves are —Made from the hide of the Western Bronco, the toughest animal with the toughest hide, light enough to make mitts and gloves.
—Sold by dealers everywhere.
Genuine only with this brand.

H.B.K. BRAND

Write for "Strayed," the funniest piece of literature ever written about a Bronco—Free

H. B. K. Warm Duck Coats

H.B.K Duck Coats are warm, hard wearing garments. They are made in scores of styles—fleece lined, mackinaw wool lined, leather reversible—high storm collars, large "Kantilever" unsagable pockets.

Made to keep out the wind and the cold, the rain and the sleet. Made to keep people warm

Branded with this brand.

Sold by up-to-date dealers everywhere.

H.B.K. BRAND

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.

MONTREAL. WINNIPEG.

MAKERS OF WARM WEARABLES FOR EVERYBODY

CHAMBERLAIN

IS THE PREFERENTIAL 10¢ CIGAR
You'll Enjoy Every Bit Of It.

MADE BY J. M. FORTIER LTD., MONTREAL

will not down, and the FACT that

Ogilvie's Hungarian

Flour is without a peer is as thoroughly understood in particular homes, as is the fact that good bread can't be made with poor Flour.

A single sack is argument enough to convince you.

THE OGILVIE FLOUR MILLS COMPANY LIMITED.

Morality Versus Intellectuality.

As a man grows older he perceives that the moral qualities are worth a good deal more in friendship than the intellectual qualities and that no brilliancy of mind, no charm of conversation, can make up for lack of loyalty, charity and generosity in social intercourse. Young men of brains are disposed to value mainly mental power in other people, and it is a human quality to forgive much in men and women of genius. This is a false appreciation of the respective values of mentality and the moral qualities. The time comes when a man learns that unselfishness and affection are better in wife or friend than intellectual power accompanied by intense self love. Fortunate the man who does not come to this knowledge too late.—San Francisco Bulletin.

His Idea of Pleasure.

"Yes; we went all over the continent, but papa really only enjoyed himself in Venice."

"Ah, yes, no wonder! The gondolas, St. Mark's, the"—

"Oh, it wasn't that. But he could sit in the hotel, you know, and fish out of the windows."

Easy Enough.

"Johnnie," asked a gentleman of a little kindergarten pupil, "do you know how to make a Maltese cross?"

"Yes, sir; I sho' do."

"Well, tell me how you do it."

"Why, you just step on her tail."—Exchange.

The Patient Ones.

"Some men," said Uncle Eben, "sits down an' does a day's loafin' an' calls it bein' patient an' resigned."

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

The present fall of snow is bringing the deer from the mountains, and several have been shot the past week by local nimrods.

There were a couple of runaways on the tracks to the mines this week. A number of cars were slightly wrecked, but no serious damage was done.

Joseph Goupille, a carpenter employed on the new tipple work at the mines, met with a very serious accident on Tuesday morning. He was working on the elevated tracks trying to pinch a heavy timber over with a cant-hook when the piece he was standing on slipped the opposite direction, and he lost his balance and fell a distance of about 30 feet. One leg was badly broken and he was otherwise badly injured, but hopes are entertained for his recovery. He was removed to the Fernie hospital for treatment.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Trade took place at the Alexandra on Thursday evening. Present:—Dr. Willson and Messrs. McBean, Patmore, Stephens, Murphy, Miller, Moffatt, Liphardt, Carruthers, Martin, Clark, Aiello and Drummond. Several matters were disscussed and the question of a train service between the townsite and the mines again came up, the following committee being appointed to interview the Coal Co. management in regard to the matter: Messrs. D. Clark, A. McBean, and H L. Stephens. The meeting then adjourned.

Prof. Hepburn, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Williams, musicians and vocalists, gave an entertainment in the Alexandra hotel Wednesday evening. Owing to the inclement weather the audience was rather light, but this feature in no way detracted from the entertainers' efforts to give the people their money's worth, and in this they were successful. Mr. Hepburn is also an instructor in dancing and he will return in a short time to organize a dancing class in Morrissey Mines.

A fatal accident occurred in No. 4 mine on Monday last which resulted in the death of Stephen Kubensick, a rope rider. How to account for the accident is a difficult problem. The man's work required him to ride up the incline on a trip of cars to a certain point, where he was supposed to notify the engineer above that a trip was approaching. This was done by striking a wire at that point which conveyed the signal to the engineer. Cubensick, however, rode up on the front of the cars without giving the signal and the engineer failing to note the approach of the trip allowed them to crash into the drum. Kubensick was caught between the front car and the drum and crushed in a horrible manner. The engineer heard the crash and rushed to the drum, where he found the injured man lying on the track, but nothing could be done for him and he expired a moment later.

Coroner Forbes, of Fernie, came up on Tuesday and held an inquest upon the case and after hearing the evidence the jury brought in a verdict to the effect that deceased came to his death accidently by being crushed between the car and the drum and that no blame could be attached to anyone. A further clause was also added suggesting that some automatic device should be used to warn the engineer of the approach of the trip and that he should be placed in such a position that he could command a view of the incline at all times.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

Wm. Kay, customs collector at Fernie, and Wm. Simmons, private secretary for J. H. Tonkin, manager of the Coal Co., were in town Saturday. Mr. Keay is a former resident of Cranbrook, and his friends here are many.

Superintendent Taylor, in company with divisional engineers Dawson and Brooks of Calgary, has been on a bridge inspection tour over the Crow the past week.

J. McKee, one of the most popular bridge foremen on the Crow, intends to make his home permanently at Elko. Mrs. McKee and family move from Regina this week.

John Rogers, the newly appointed manager of the Moyie Lumber Co., has severed his connection with that company and has left for the east.

The population of the Crow has been depleted to the extent of nearly 600 souls this week. On account of the reduction of the staff to a winter basis, the extra gang, consisting mainly of Italians and Galicians, have either been laid off or transferred to service on the main line. The gangs included in the latter category were:—Worth's, Carlson's, Hansen's, Newland's and Proxenzanos'. They other dispersed far and wide over the country, some to the mines at Fernie, others to Edmonton and Calgary. Not a few were passed back to Montreal, en route to sunny Italy, to spend an idle month or two on the dollars they had been piling up almost since the time of construction.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

H. W. Ross, of the Cranbrook Herald was in town this week.

W. Simmons has resigned his position in the Coal Company office.

Mrs. (Dr.) Bonnell entertained her friends on Wednesday afternoon.

Messrs. Rennie and Bricker were at Macleod in the early part of the week.

W. Somerton is acting agent at Elko during Mr. Austin's absence on a month's vacation.

Mr. G. G. S. Lindsay left on yesterday's west bound train. He expects to return to Fernie in about a week.

Now is the time to secure good wall paper at a great reduction. Crow's Nest Trading Co.

Nothing can take the place of your photo for a Xmas token. Your last chance for 1903 to have it taken at Prest's studio will be Nov. 19th to 28th.

We will sell out the balance of our stock of wall paper at 7 cents a roll.
Crow's Nest Trading Co

The Young Ladies' Sewing Circle of the Presbyterian church purpose holding a bazaar on Dec. 15th. A program of entertainment will be provided.

Miss Inez Jones, formerly of this place, and Mr. John N. Kettles, of Pincher Creek, were united by marriage at the home of Mr. G. N. Jordan, Pincher Creek, on the 4th inst.

Don't forget the concert next Wednesday evening and the ball on the following evening. Cosgrove's orchestra has earned a wide-world reputation and their varied program of excellent music is sure to please.

A. Taylor of Laidley's tailor shop accidentally ran a needle into his leg yesterday. He went to the hospital where Dr. Bonnell, after considerable probing, located the troublesome piece of metal imbedded an inch deep in the flesh.

Hockey Organization.

A meeting of the hockey club for the purpose of organizing for the coming season will be held in the rear of Mr. Cuthbert's store on Monday evening at 8:30. All interested in the game are urgently requested to attend.

A change is to be made in the Morrissey townsite agency. The report, however, that Mr. Crahan had lost the agency and that his successor would be Messrs. Cree and Hutchison is probably a little premature. We understand that the latter have been approached with a view to their handling this business, but that the negotiations under way have not as yet been completed.

BETTER THAN A PLASTER.

A piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound to the affected parts is superior to any plaster. When troubled with lame back or pains in the side or chest give it a trial and you are certain to be more than pleased with the prompt relief which it affords. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

The Ladies' Guild of Christ Church have arranged to hold their Bazaar on the 2nd of December and a high class concert on the 3rd. The Schubert Symphony Concert Co. have a splendid reputation and it is expected that the music lovers of Fernie will have a treat on that date. Full notices will be given later.

Musical Kindergarten

This important branch of musical instruction has been thoroughly studied by Mr. H. L. Staebler who has secured teaching privileges from Miss Katherine Burrows, of Detroit, Mich., the inventor of the Burrows Musical Kindergarten This method breaks down all the difficulties of elementary study, eliminates all its difficulties and drudgery, and makes the lesson a pleasure to the teacher, and a delightful recreation to the pupil. Mr. Staebler's experience with child pupils combined with this very attractive system secures a degree of success which has heretofore been unattainable. Applications may be made at the studio from 4 to 6.

For Sale—I have the following in use at my saw mill, Blairmore, which will be for sale at the end of sawing season, 1st. December. Two boilers 50 h.p. on skids, with 50 feet of smoke stack: also one McGregor, Gourlay & Co's planer and matcher, with double cylinder, ane one Economist planer. Particulars can be had by writing Peter McLaren, Macleod, Alta.

SPENT OVER $2,000 DOCTORING.

Mr. Joseph Pominville, of Stillwater, Miss., after having spent over $2,000 with the best doctors for stomach trouble, without relief, was advised to try a box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and is a well man to-day. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

This is the season when the careful and prudent housewife replenishes her supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy It is certain to be needed before the winter's over, and results are much more prompt and satisfactory when it is kept at hand and given as soon as the cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system. In almost every instance a severe cold may be warded off by taking this remedy freely as soon as the first indication of the cold appears. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains no harmful substance. It is pleasant to take—both children and adults like it. Buy it and you will get the best. It always cures. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Notice is hereby given that under and by virtue Section 67, Chap. 113 of the revised statutes of British Columbia, I shall, 30 days after date offer for sale by public competition at Carbon Creek, the saw mill plant formerly operated by the Carbon Creek Lumber Company at Carbon Creek, three miles east of Michel in the district East Kootenay.

J. R. MARTIN,
Asst. Timber Inspector.
Nelson, B.C., October 30th, 1903. 253-3

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted on a bench on the east side of the Kootenay River, thence forty chains north to the south east corner of lot 41-41, thence west to the north west corner of said lot, thence south following slew down stream 40 chains, thence east to place of commencement containing 160 acres more or less.

DAN HAYES
Dated this 8th day of October, 1903. 253-4

Full Stock Carried

Prices $2.00, 2.75, 3.25, 4.00

We will give a discount of 10 per cent. off any lamp in our store.

Sheppard & Elliott

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbing

The Fernie Free Press
and
Montreal Weekly Herald
for
$2.00 per Year
In Advance.
Subscribe Now

Fernie Free Press	-	$2.00	per year
Montreal Weekly Herald		1.00	" "
The Two papers	bought separately	3.00	" "
" " "	under our offer	2.00	" "
	Saving -	1.00	" "

IN THE COUNTY COURT OF KOOTENAY HOLDEN AT FORT STEELE.

In Probate

NOTICE is hereby given that on the 26th day of October, 1903, it was ordered by J. H. Forin, Esq., Judge of the said Court, that James Ferguson Armstrong, Official Administrator of the County of Kootenay, be administrator of all and singular the estate of FRANK WILLIAM ROBBINS of Elkmouth, planeman, Deceased, intestate.

Every person indebted to the said deceased is required to make payment forwith to the undersigned.

Every person having in possession effects belonging to the deceased is required forthwith to notify the undersigned.

Every creditor, or other person, having any claim upon or interest in the distribution of the personal estate of the said deceased is required within thirty days of this date to send by registered letter, addressed to the undersigned, his name and address and the full particulars of his claim or interest, and a statement of his account, and the nature of the security (if any) held by him:

After the expiration of the said thirty days the Administrator will proceed with the distribution of the estate having regard to those claims only of which he shall have had notice.

Dated at Fort Steele this 3rd day of November, 1903.

JAMES FERGUSON ARMSTRONG,
Official Administrator,
Fort Steele, B. C.

IN THE COUNTY COURT OF KOOTENAY HOLDEN AT FORT STEELE.

In Probate

NOTICE is hereby given that on the 26th day of October it was ordered by J. H. Forin, Esq., Judge of the Court, that James Ferguson Armstrong, Official Administrator of the County of Kootenay, be administrator of all and singular the estate of JO N SIROTA of FERNIE Labourer, Deceased, intestate.

Every person indebted to the said deceased is required to make payment forthwith to the undersigned.

Every person having in possession effects belonging to the deceased is required forwith to notify the undersigned.

Every creditor or other person, having any claim upon or interest in the distribution of the personal estate of the said deceased is required within thirty days of this date to send by registered letter, addressed to the undersigned, his name and address and the full particulars of his claim or interest, and a statement of his account, and the nature of the security (if any) held by him.

After the expiration of the said thirty days the Administrator will proceed with the distribution of the estate having regard to those claims only of wh ch he shall have had notice.

Dated at Fort Steele this 3rd day of November, 1903.

JAMES FERGUSON ARMSTRONG,
Official Administrator,
Fort Steele, B.C.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Hugh McLean's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

HUGH MCLEAN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "A. Mutz's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

A. Mutz,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "John Kubala's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOHN KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Annie McIntyre's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ANNIE MCINTYRE,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "C. J. Tuttle's south- east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

C. J. TUTTLE,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "P. Kubala's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

P. KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Joe Masura's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOE MASURA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Eva Fairfield's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

EVA FAIRFIELD,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked, "Annie Dobbin's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of beginning.

ANNIE DOBBIN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Maude May Barber's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

MAUDE MAY BARBER.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Peter Podbielancik's south-east corner;" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.

PETER PODBIELANCIK.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of Octocer, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Augustus Fairfield's south-west corner;" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

AUGUSTUS FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Robert Gilmore's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ROBERT GILMOUR.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Gus Erickson's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

GUS ERICKSON,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903.

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 20. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 254

Lib. Legislative Asb. Dec 31 1901

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m,
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.
Office :—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON PIANO
Classes in Burrowes' Musical Kindergarten System.
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J. Barber, L.D.S., D.D.S.,
DENTIST
Opposite ROYAL HOTEL
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Moffatt's Cigar Store
Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.
A full line of Stationery.
Next Door to the Free Press.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. H. L. Bleasdell's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
J. H. L. BLEASDELL,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of J. H. L. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Florence Erickson's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.
FLORENCE ERICKSON,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

GIVES UP THE FIGHT.

C. P. R. Acknowledge Legality of Bill 16 By Withdrawing Suits.

The suits brought at the instance of the Columbia and Western Ry. (C.P.R.) against the holders of crown grants, coal and timber licenses, on Lot 4594 have been discontinued by the plaintiffs.

The C. P. R. presented their action with the expectation that the Dominion government would disallow "Bill No 16" of the local legislature, and as the suits had no status in law from their inception the Company took the only course open to it in withdrawing the actions when it found that the Dominion government would not interefere with the act of the local legislature.

The names of some of those against whom action had been taken are.

W. S. Keay--crown grant.
S. F. Wallace—coal license.
A. J. Farquharson—timber license.
G. H. Scott—erown grant.
J. D. Quail—coal license.
D. V. Mott, Son & Co.—timber lease and crown grant.
Bentley, Kanouse and Graham—crown grant.
Wm. Fernie—crown grant.
Fernie Manufacturing Co.-crown grant.
C. H. Levers—crown grant.
Kootenay Valley Co.—crown grant.
Geo. Walker—crown grant.
Macdonell & Foss—crown grant.

DEATH OF T. J. GOUPILLE.

Died from Injuries Received from fall from Tipple. Nakusp family Bereaved of its Head.

Mr. T. J. Goupille who received terrible injuries by falling off the 30 foot tipple at Morrissey last week succumbed to his injuries at the Fernie hospital on Sunday evening. Besides suffering from a compound fracture of one leg there were internal injuries which gave the physicians grave fears from the beginning. The deceased was buried on Tuesday morning in the Fernie cemetery by the Roman Catholic priest.

The deceased was 52 years old. He was born in New Brunswick from where he emigrated when he was a young man. He has lived in B.C. for 11 years, most of this time being spent in Kamloops and Nakusp. At the latter place his wife, a son and three daughters reside. Two of the daughters are married, their names being Mrs. J. Genall and Mrs. J Climants. The only relative in Fernie is a son, J. A. Goupille, a cigar-maker, working in the Fernie factory. Mrs. Goupille arrived in Fernie last Friday and remained with her husband till the end came. She returned this week to her home. The other son also came to Fernie this week. Mr. Goupille was a carpenter by trade and had charge of the tipple work.

COUNTY COURT SITTING.

Many civil cases Disposed before Judge Forin this week.

Judge Forin came in on Tuesday evening and held court on that evening and during Wednesday. The following is a summary of the cases, the first named being the plaintiff:

Wallace v Collings, judgement for plaintiff.

McLean v Treleaven, judgement for plaintiff.

C. N. P. Coal Co. v A. Hamilton, case not settled.

Byers v Esterbrook, judgement for plaintiff.

Gall v Podbielancik, judgement for plaintiff.

Gall v Haesler. The defendant failed to appear and he was committed to jail for a week for contempt of court.

Mrs. Robinson v Handler, judgement for plaintiff.

Dunlop v Balko and Manahan, judgement for defendants.

Timlick v A. D. McRae, a dispute over wage scale. Judgement was a compromise in which the defendant's claims were largely recognized.

Turner v Balko, judgement for plaintiff.

Hang Lee v Nong One, former judgement against plaintiff disallowed and case reopened for next court.

Lablanc v Canadian Bank of Commerce and C. N. P. Coal Co., the former representing the employees of the Carbon Creek Lumber Co. and the latter the mortgagees of the property. The action is an attempt to place a mechanic's lien upon the lumber of the company. Argument was presented by W. F. Gurd, of Cranbrook, who represented the plaintiff, as to the legal definition of timber and lumber. The case was adjourned and argument will be submitted to the judge in writing.

ITALIANS IN A SCRAP.

One Shot Near the Heart—The would-be Murderer Roughly Handled.

A serious row occurred among some Italians on Tuesday eveni g at the house of Enrico Coccioloni in the Italian quarters north of the town limits. As a result of the quarrel one was shot near the heart another had his head cut open with a pitcher and the prime cause of the whole trouble was badly butchered with knives.

About 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday the police were summoned to this place where they made the arrest of four men, whose names are J. Gemma, Nicola Pitrocco, Anerico Diangelis and Peter Somma. Among those who witnessed the fracas were Coccioloni and his two brothers. The story as gathered by the police is as follows;

A keg of beer had been placed in the middle of the room where quite a number were gathered. Gemma acted as bar tender and served out the beverage. One of those present did not get his drink and he complained of the seeming insult. Hot words ensued which finally developed into a general quarrel. Gemma as master of ceremonies attempted to quell the disturbance. He picked up a water jug and threw it at the head of Anerico Diangelis, inflicting a nasty cut. Peter Somma then drew a gun and threatened to use it on behalf of Gemma.

At this stage on the suggestion of one present an adjournment was made to the open air where the fight continued.

Somma had in the meantime transferred his weapon into the hand of Gemma who turned it upon Nicola Pitrocco and fired. The bullet penetrated the man's clothing and entered the flesh near the heart but struck a rib where it lodged. The bullet was afterwards picked out by the man himself. Several then turned upon the would-be murderer and made short work of him. When found by the police he had a long clean cut wound on the top of the head evidently the work of a razor. A long cut across the upper lip and a deep stab in the back near the kidney, the latter apparently done by a dirk. Upon arriving at the police court Dr. Higgins dressed the wounds of the three men. Those of Gemma required many stitches. On the following morning further investigation by the police resulted in the finding of the revolver and a knife supposed to have been used in the fight. The revolver was hidden in the snow. It was a little 22 calibre containing 5 empties and 2 cartridges. It also bore blood stains.

The case came up last evening before Magistrate Trites and was remanded until Tuesday to allow the accused to secure legal assistance.

THE TRUTH WILL OUT.

A long and "interesting" letter appears in a red-hot socialist paper of Seattle of a recent date over the name of Thomas Craig. The writer styles himself a "black listed wage-slave" who devotes his energies towards the emancipation of his fellow slaves. In this letter he tells his American "comrades" all about that terrible corporation known as the Crows Nest Pass Coal Co.

The whole letter is a fabrication of falsehoods but this does not deter the writer as he imagines that none of his American readers will be in a possession of the facts to contradict them. For instance in reviewing the explosion of last year we find the following astonishing verdict credited to the jury who set on the inquest:—"We find that the death of these miners was caused by the carelessness and neglect of the company and its officials."

As a matter of fact the verdict contained not a word of censure, and the only adverse criticism was implied in three suggestions to the government re simple changes in mining regulations, all of which have since been complied with.

The concluding paragraph is the most interesting part of the letter as it relates to events of which many of our readers are cognizant and it supplies some connecting links. It reads:—"The next butt for the company's shots was myself, the secretary of the Miners' Union. Being informed one night by a friend as I lay asleep in bed that a warrant was out for my arrest and knowing well that it would not help me to prove my innocence by forty witnesses, I decided that discretion is better than valor, and after walking 20 miles 'beat a freight' and arrived safely over this side of the line before the police could make me a guest of the King in his majesty's jail."

Want your photos for Xmas? No time to lose. Prest's studio open from Nov. 19th to 28th. 252-3

HOCKEY CLUB ORGANIZE.

Enthusiastic Meeting—Election of Officers.

A meeting to organize the Fernie Hockey Club was held in the Cuthbert block on Monday evening. A fair number were present but others would have been there had the meeting been better advertised.

The election of officers was the first business of the evening. The following is a list of those elected

Hon. President—W. R. Ross, M. P. P.
President—A. C. Liphardt.
1st Vice-president—J. H. Bricker.
2nd Vice-president—A. Mutz.
3rd Vice-president—J. R. Wallace.
Secretary-Treasurer—J. McLaughlin.
Manager—W. B. Ganong.
Coach—J. R. Lawrence.
Trainer—Jas. Sheppard.
Team Committee.—Messrs. Ganong and Lawrence and one player selected by them.
Rink Committee—Messrs. Kastner, Laidley and Ganong.
Patrons of the Club—Messrs. W. F. Cuthbert, R. W. Wood, C. Richards, J L. Gates, Dr. Bonnell, C. W. Sheppard and L. M. Proctor.

Rink accommodation was discussed and the rink committee was authorized to make arrangements.

CONCERT AND BALL.

The Cosgrove Orchestra Co. arrived on Monday two days ahead of time, having cancelled their engagements at Blairmore and Michel. The company came in on a freight but their baggage followed on Wednesday's delayed express which did not get in till 10 p m. The concert therefore could not commence until some time later, and many went home not caring to wait for such a late performance. The audience was therefore not a large one and little was realized by the fire brigade.

The entertainment is a good one and it gave general satisfaction. The violinist and the vocalist, though not the same ladies as advertised, pleased the audience in their respective parts, while the orchestra gave evidence of skill and careful training.

The ball on the following evening was largely attended. The music was first class and the dances were greatly enjoyed. A matinee advertised for Thursday did not materialize as few turned out. The fire brigade cleared only about $25 on the whole affair.

COAL CREEK NEWS.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Mr. Hillegas is employed as assistant bookkeeper to A. Berridge.

New tracks for No. 1 tipple are being laid.

No. 3 mine has been closed for a few days owing to flooding by the water pipes.

Dr. Ker leaves next week for Montreal. He has through the conscientious and faithful discharge of his duties won many friends in this community.

Rev. A. E. Marshall, of Michel, assisted in the special services in the Methodist church on Thursday.

Mr. Wm. Bailey is returning from Moosojaw this week with his young bride. We wish them a long and prosperous life.

Mr. Thomas is recovering rapidly from his injuries caused by the motor last week.

The ladies realized $50 from their oyster supper.

Miss S. McNee has resigned her position as bookkeeper for the Trites-Wood Co.

ANOTHER HOTEL FOR MICHEL.

An application was considered last evening by the license commissioners to transfer the license for the Michel Hotel to the building formerly occupied as a store. The petitioner agreed to increase the size of the building by an addition at the rear. The building would have 6 rooms down stairs and the same number in the upper storey. The transfer was ordered to be made as soon as the building was fitted up according to the agreement. This building will be used as an hotel temporarily only, until a new building can be erected. Plans are now being prepared for a large 30-room hotel.

Xmas. photos should be taken this month to insure reaching your friends in time. Prest's studio opposite the Methodist Church open from Nov. 19th to 28th. 252-3

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

G. H. Meadows, of Fernie, is the successor to H. E. Davidson, lately night operator at Macleod.

The Fraser brothers have taken the management of the old Oriental hotel at Fort Steele and are conducting it as a first-class house. It is their intention to make the meals service a special feature of the house.

During the last week developments of considerable importance were made at the Sullivan. For some time the work of sinking a new shaft has been going on to take the ore body on the dip of the vein about 100 feet to the south and 60 feet below the old workings. Recently the shaft broke into the vein and disclosed the same quality of ore as at the levels above. At this point another level will be run. The development is the most significant that has occurred for some time.

M. McInnes has disposed of his meat market to the Calgary Cattle Company, and will relinquish possession on December first. Mr. McInnes retains an interest in the business and will remain in charge for the present at least. The Calgary Cattle Company is a strong organization and at present has markets at Fernie, Calgary, Wetaskiwin and Golden, and the purchase of McInnes' business gives them a foothold in this part of East Kootenay. The people of Cranbrook will be pleased to know that Mr. McInnes will remain in town as the departure of himself and family would be a source of universal regret.

The official representatives of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches have mutually agreed in reference to the supply of two of their mission stations in the East Kootenay district. The Presbyterian Home mission committee agree to withdraw from Kimberley and Marysville field leaving this to be worked by the Methodist missionary in charge, while on the other the Methodist Home mission authorities agree to withdraw from Wardner and Fort Steele mission. This agreement will obtain for 18 months at least, perhaps longer.

In the early morning hours of Friday Brakeman A. C. Choquette, of Cranbrook, met with a painful accident which may necessitate his enforced absence from duty for several weeks. On the arrival of express 500 at Crows Nest, Choquette attempted to cut the hose between cars that had hardly come to a standstill, when in some manner, the heel of his boot caught in a rail, and tripped him, throwing his foot under the wheel. With considerable promptitude Conductor McKillop had the injured brakeman conveyed to Michel, where Dr. McSorley was soon in attendance. Medical examination revealed that Choquette had suffered a painful injury, two of his toes were smashed and the side of his foot was split open. Dr. McSorley, however expressed the opinion that the injuries were not sufficiently serious to endanger the foot.

ON PERMANENT FORCE.

Several Special Constables are Made Provincial Police.—Constable Kummer Dismissed.

The provincial government has made a change in the police force of the district, which means considerable retrenchment in expenditure. Four special constables, Messrs. Tranter, Henderson, Dow and Farquharson have been put on the permanent force of the province. Special constable, E. Kummer, of Fernie has been laid off, and the government intimate their intention of getting along with four officers in Fernie. The salary of a provincial policeman is $70 per month while specials get $2.50 per day. It will be seen from this that the change will mean a reduction of from $5 to $7.50 per month per man.

SPENT OVER $2,000 DOCTORING.

Mr. Joseph Pominville, of Stillwater, Miss., after having spent over $2,000 with the best doctors for stomach trouble, without relief, was advised to try a box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and is a well man to-day. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

MICHEL

Pay-day here to-day.

The miners lost a couple of shifts this week owing to lack or cars and break on the tipple.

During the fore part of the week the weather was quite bitter, being 23 below zero but on Friday it changed.

J. McDonald had his foot badly crushed, by a piece of rock falling on it from the roof, while at work in No. 8 Thursday night. He was taken to the Fernie hospital Friday morning.

C. C. Simmons has resigned his position in the ware house and will shortly leave for the east where he is again going to engage in railroading. Mr. Simmons while here has made many friends and his pleasant ways will be missed by a great many.

One misfortune is always followed by another, first the fire, then a flood out. Some person left the tap open up-stairs in the barber shop Wednesday evening and as a result the roomers above paddled around in water about a foot deep, and all the stamps in the post-office were frozen up so that no mail could be stamped that evening.

The Cosgrove Concert Orchestra Company postponed their entertainmen there Tuesday as they could get no place for it since the hall was burned. Unless something is done towards building a hall here we cannot expect to have any entertainment or dances here this winter as there is not a suitable place in town. It is hoped by all that in a short time we may have some sort of a place for such purposes.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

Wm. Piper while at work at Coal Creek Mines last Saturday evening fell dead from heart failure. The funeral took place on Monday, the Orangmen accompanying their departed comrade to the grave. A special train was run from Coal Creek where the deceased lived and an impressive funeral service was held in Christ church.

The deceased had lived in this town and vicinity for several years and was popular among young and old. He was an active supporter of athletic sports and took a prominent place in the Fernie Football team. He was married about three months ago and much sympathy is felt for the mourning widow. The deceased recently took out a $1000 policy in the Sun Life Co.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Jim Burrows, of Fernie, and Barney Mullin are billed for a 20 round glove contest in Princess Hall next Thursday evening.

A bear story comes from the Old Town. Bruin climbed upon the roof of the Waldorf Hotel by means of a ladder. The noise attracted the attention of those within, who seeing the bear, went in search of fire-arms. When they came bach the bear had disappeared. It would have been a simple matter to remove the ladder.

Do you want the news of the approaching session free? Subscribe for the Victoria Daily Times for 1904, and receive the paper free until the end of this year. This offer is for cash-in-advance, subscribers to the Daily $5.00, or the Twice-a-week $1.00. Full and impartial reports, halftone cuts of members, cartoons and corridor gossip. Four page colored comic supplement every Saturday. Remit to the "Times", Victoria. 253-2

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

This is the season when the careful and prudent housewife replenishes her supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy It is certain to be needed before the winter's over, and results are much more prompt and satisfactory when it is kept at hand and given as soon as the cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system. In almost every instance a severe cold may be warded off by taking this remedy freely as soon as the first indication of the cold appears. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains no harmful substance. It is pleasant to take—both children and adults like it. Buy it and you will get the best. It always cures. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

LORD MAYOR'S SHOW IN LONDON

Time Honored Procession Took Place Nov. 9.

SOME UNUSUAL FEATURES

Sir Thomas Ritchie formally Installed as Chief Magistrate of Capital of the Empire—Customary Banquet Was Held at Guildhall.

The time honored lord mayor's show took place in London on Nov. 9, and the new lord mayor of London, Sir James Thomson Ritchie, was formally installed in office, succeeding Sir Marcus Samuel. The old established custom showed little sign of becoming obsolete, and owing to the popularity of the new lord mayor and some unusual features in the street parade, the occasion was a most interesting one.

The procession started from the Guild Hall shortly after 10 o'clock. The pageant passed through dense masses of cheering people, while windows, balconies and roofs were very generally utilized, and the larger open places, such as Trafalgar square were crowded to their capacity. The handsome floats, typifying epochs in the national history, various trades, industries, etc., were enthusiastically received.

When the procession reached the Law Courts, the lord mayor, in his full civic robes, preceded by the recorder, and attended by the retiring lord mayor, the mace bearer, sword bearer, chaplain and aldermen in their sable-trimmed gowns, together with other civic functionaries, proceeded to the court of the lord chief justice, where they were received by the judges attired in scarlet robes, full-bottomed wigs and cocked hats. There the usual solemn courtesies were exchanged, the lord mayor, in the exercise of an immemorial right, remaining covered, while the recorder read a eulogistic review of his career. It was in the usual Sunday school style, referring to his blameless youth, successful commercial career, and well spent life, crowned by the attainment of the highest civic honors. From this court, after the retiring lord mayor had been formally presented to the judges, the procession went to the court of appeals and was received by the master of the rolls and the appeal judges, attired in their robes of black and gold. The ceremonies here were merely formal. The dignitaries then returned to their coaches and resumed the march to the city.

The day's pageantry concluded in the evening with the customary banquet in the Guild Hall. The speakers included members of the government and other public men of prominence. United States Ambassador Choate was among the honored guests. The lord mayor sat at the south table, near the centre of the room, with the two sheriffs at his right and left. The scene in the banquet hall was a brilliant one. The huge oaken rafters were decorated with flags and bunting, the hall was brilliantly lighted, showing to the best advantage the glittering uniforms and the dresses and jewels of the women.

Sir James Thomson Ritchie, the new lord mayor has been an active member of the city corporation and is head of the firm of W. Ritchie & Sons, in which his brother, who recently resigned the chancellorship of the exchequer, was at one time a member. The new lord mayor is the elder of the two brothers by three years, having been born in 1838. He is a native of Dundee, where his father was engaged in the jute trade. He is reported to be very wealthy.

Soo Works Will be Restarted.

A dispatch from Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., says:—J. S. Fackenthall, left in charge of industries here by Speyer & Co.'s receiver, made a definite statement on Friday that the pulp mill would be started just as soon as men could be secured to operate it, and instructions to that effect have been given to Superintendent Millington. Many of the former employees are now out of town, but those whose addresses are known are being telegraphed for, and Mr. Millington expects to have a sufficient number on hand to commence on Wednesday.

A German Move.

The German government have established control stations on the frontier of Saxony in order to prevent intending emigrants passing the frontier en route to Holland or Belgium ports, consequently compelling every German emigrating to embark at a German port and sail on a German steamer. This move will seriously interfere with the Canadian Pacific line of steamers, probably causing the line a loss of 50,000 passengers.

Steamer for Peace River.

A dispatch from Edmonton, N.W.T., says:—C. C. Chipman, commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company, who has been in Edmonton for the past few days in connection with the company's business, informed the Bulletin that the company has now made final arrangements for a steamer on Peace River. The steamer will have, besides a carrying capacity for freight, one upper deck throughout its whole length for passenger accommodation. Capt. Johnson, who has been in command for many years of the company's British Columbia steamers, will superintend the construction.

The German nation is agitated over the rumor that the Kaiser has cancer.

MARRIED MUCH MONEY

Duke of Roxburghe Weds Miss May Goelet at New York.

Miss May Goelet was united in marriage in the Protestant Episcopal church of St. Thomas, New York, on Nov. 10, to Sir Henry John Innes-Ker, Duke of Roxburghe, Marquis of Bowmont and Cessford, Earl of Roxburghe, Earl of Kelso, Viscount Broxmouth, Baron Roxburghe, and Baron Ker of Cessford and Cavertoun in Scotland, Earl Innes in the United Kingdom, and a baronet of Nova Scotia.

The church edifice was guarded by fifty poilce officers, specially detailed to hold in check the immense crowd of spectators who began to gather as early as 8 o'clock in the morning. As upon previous occasions, when American heiresses have bestowed themselves upon titled foreigners, the ceremony was witnessed by the select and exclusive body known as "society." The wedding itself, however, was devoid of lavish display as the family of the bride is in mourning for Sir Michael Herbert, who was related by marriage to the Goelet family.

Following the ceremony at the church, for which about 500 invitations were issued, there was a reception at the home of Mrs. Ogden Goelet, the guests for the latter function being limited to 50 in number.

THE BRIDE.

The bride is the only daughter of Mrs. Ogden Goelet, and is one of two children who are heirs to a vast fortune, principally in real estate. Her father, Ogden Goelet, was one of the heirs of his uncle, Peter Goelet, who died unmarried. There were two brothers, Ogden and Robert. Ogden Goelet married Miss Mary Wilson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, and the new Duchess of Roxburghe is consequently closely related to the Astors and the Venderbilts.

The present fortune of the new Duchess is estimated at about $20,000,000. Her mother holds with her children, the beautiful Ochre Court at Newport and the town residence 608 Fifth avenue, besides the large tract of improved realty embracing a large part of Broadway between thirty-second and forty-second streets down to the East River.

The duchess is about 23 years of age. She made her debut abroad and was presented at a drawing-room at Buckingham palace. Last summer she was a guest of her aunt, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, on the yacht North Star during the famous visit to Kiel, where the party were entertained by the Kaiser. Mrs. Ogden Goelet, who was also on the North Star, returned in July, but Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Miss Geolet went to London, where they were joined by the Duke of Roxburghe. The engagement was announced then privately to the members of the family.

FORTUNE IN GIFTS.

The Duchess of Roxburghe will take with her to England some wonderfully exquisite gifts. It is said that if all were converted into cash the figure would reach into millions. Not to be outdone by the bride's American friends and relatives, the Dowager Duchess of Roxburghe, mother of the Duke, has presented to her daughter-in-law the famous Roxburghe collection of emeralds, a fact that in itself has made the green stone the fashionable jewel for the year. The emeralds are valued at several hundred thousands of dollars. The Roxburghes have had them in their possession for two hundred years. The most important of the emerald presents is a necklace of big stones, the largest one in the centre, the others graduating to the clasp, which is studded with tiny emeralds. This necklace is valued at $25,000. A beautiful pair of emerald ear-rings made of pear-shaped stones and three large emerald pins are among the collection. The pins are in the shape of sunbursts and are set in the finest Indian gold. Each pin has fourteen emeralds and around each stone are very small diamonds used to set off the brilliancy of the green stones. In keeping with her mother's present one of the duke's sisters has given the bride a very handsome emerald and diamond ring. From the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough has come a pearl pendant. It consists of two perfectly matched large perals from which four or five pear-shaped pearls hang. Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wilson, Sr., grand-parents of the bride, gave her a wonderful string of pearls several yards long. The mother of the bride presented her with a tiara of diamonds as expensive and beautiful a present as was ever designed in this country. Four diamond experts assisted in collecting the stones for the tiara. Among the other notable presents received by the bride were a dozen solid gold dinner plates from Mrs. Ogden Mills, a pearl and turquoise bracelet from Miss Mills, a massive gold pitcher and tray to match from Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay, and a magnificent silver set from Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge Gerry.

A Brave Boy.

A Claresholm lad deserves recognition at the hands of the C. P. R., says the Calgary Herald. The other day the boy was riding along when he noticed that a prairie fire had burned a small bridge over a culvert. He saw the train approaching at a distance. Getting on the track he took off his coat and just got the train stopped as it reached the danger spot. The passengers on the train when they heard of the lad's brave act took up a collection. The young fellow was so modest that he didn't give his name.

A wine merchant at Eisenstadt, Hungary, found guilty of adulterating wines, was sentenced to twenty days' imprisonment and costs, including those of advertising the judgment in the principal newspapers of Hungary.

GAS PLANT WRECKS A HOTEL

Acetylene Explodes and the Place Blows Up.

LOZAR HOUSE, RIDGETOWN

J. Atkinson, London, and A. B. Weir, an Auctioneer Among the Dead—Many Others Injured and Two More May Die.

An explosion of an acetylene plant in the cellar of the Lozar House, Ridgetown, Ont., resulted in one of the worst disasters in the history of the town. The explosion occurred shortly after 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, when the place was well filled with people, and the roll of the victims shows two killed and six injured, of whom a couple may not survive.

For some time before the explosion the inmates noticed the smell of escaping gas, but were apparently unaware of the danger until the lights suddenly went out, and the proprietor went to investigate. He groped his way to the cellar door, in rear of the front hallway, and as he opened the door was met by a blinding puff of flame, and then came the roar of an explosion. In an instant the floors parted, and the hotel was riven from the cellar up to the floor of the top storey. The whole front was blown out, the walls tottered from top to bottom, and the first and second floors fell with a crash. The hotel was a complete wreck, and the windows were smashed on the opposite side of the street.

THE VICTIMS.

Buried beneath the ruins were at least a dozen people and to the rescue of these townspeople set to work. One of the first to be taken from the debris was J. Atkinson, a canvasser for the London Advertiser. He was frightfully injured and died in a near-by store within half an hour.

A. B. Weir, auctioneer, of that place, was taken to the Queen's hotel but his injuries were such that from the first no hope was entertained. He died at 9.50, never having regained consciousness.

The following is the list of the injured removed from the ruins:—

Capt. Thos. P. Watson, Col. Wm. Barclay, Ridgetown; John W. McKenzie, Howard township; Miss Adamson, Michael Doherty, H. W. Pursell, John Peddard, aged seven, Ridgetown. McKenzie's skull is fractured, but he has regained consciousness, but may not recover. Miss Adamson has a bad scalp wound, but will recover. Capt. Watson has a slight concussion of the brain, but will recover. Pursell's injuries are on the head, but are not serious. The others are not seriously hurt.

Shooting Fatality.

A sad shooting fatality occurred Monday morning a few miles east of Birtle. It appears two young men were in a rig going chicken shooting, and one of them, seeing some chickens on a stack, got out of the rig and in passing behind it with the gun at full cock, it in some way was discharged and the charge, passing through the back of the buggy, struck the other young men, whose name was Quinn and said to be a Barnardo boy, in the back, killing him instantly. The occurrence was witnessed by others and is so clearly a case of accident that it is not likely an inquest will be held. Mr. Struthers, of the Barnardo Home, happened to be in town when the news reached Birtle and visited the scene of the accident to learn fuller particulars.

Old Glory Hooted.

At a performance of "Prince of Pilsen," the new opera, at the Academy Wednesday night, the "Star-Spangled Banner" was vigorously hooted. In the last act the red ensign of Great Britain is brought on with the Star-Spangled Banner, and between them stands the figure of Britannia. The American flag came on first and was greeted with a howl of derision from the gods. When the British flag came out things quieted down by the loyal feelings of the audience being aroused, and before it dispersed the national anthem was sung with enthusiasm.

FIRED THROUGH A DOOR

Luigi is Worried and Wants to Kill, but only Hits Plaster.

Magentelli Lugi, 24 years of age, has been arrested by the police on the charge of attempting to shoot James Cordasco, who lives at No. 197 St. Antonie street, Montreal. According to Cordasco's story, Lugi, who lives in the same house, came into the kitchen where he and his wife and another boarder were eating and asked for something to eat, with which he was accommodated. Then he became obstreperous and declared his intention of killing somebody. The people became alarmed and put him out of the room and shut the door. Lugi tried to re-enter, but his efforts being futile, he pulled out his revolver and discharged it. Luckily, the bullet, which struck the door, was deflected from its course and glanced off to the ceiling, afterwards harmlessly falling to the floor. He then made off, but was arrested later.

The Winnipeg Parks Board has favored the Munro site, opposite Silver Heights, on the south side of the Assiniboine, for a suburban park.

"Maker's Valuation"

Common shoes are priced by the dealer who charges what he thinks he can get. "Slater Shoes" are price branded on the soles by the makers who know the wear value of each pair of the Goodyear Welted

Slater Shoe

For Men - $4.00 $5.00 - For Women

Sole Agents :— JOYCE BRO'S., FERNIE, B. C.

IS FLOGGED BACK TO LIFE

Portage Resident Takes Too Much Morphine.

TELEPHONES HIS DOCTOR

He is Forced By Elews to Keep Walking in the Yard at the Court House—His Piteous Appeals to Be Allowed to Sleep.

Prothonotary John McDonald, of Portage la Prairie, on Friday afternoon telephoned Dr. Lundy, of the same place, saying that he had taken poison.

Proceeding hastily to the courthouse the doctor found his old friend and client in a sinking condition, having taken eight grains of morphine, a sufficient dose to kill a man in the prime of life, mush less an ailing old gentleman of sixty.

Dr. Lundy at once sent for a stomach pump and for further medical assistance. The pump was used, and strychnine, which, although a deadly poison is an antidote to morphine, and a tonic to the stomach, was administered.

The doctors then took McDonald down into the prison yard in the rear, and two strong men made him walk briskly up and down, despite his refusals, and his pitiful cries to be allowed to sleep—the sleep of death.

For three hours the struggle continued. The effect of the morphine made McDonald so very drowsy that he fell asleep almost as he walked so the doctors and others beat him with switches with all their full strength.

The walking and flogging had the desired effect. The unfortunate man was kept awake until the poison had lost its potency and the desire to sleep was gone.

Then he was taken home and put to bed, bruised from head to foot and thoroughly exhausted, but the medical men have no doubt of his recovery. Mr. McDonald is a well known resident and has occupied the position of prothonotary at the courthouse for many years. He has been ailing for some time and had not eaten anything for the past week.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Telegrams and Cablegrams Condensed for Busy Readers.

H. Lajoie, of Eli, Man., was waylaid by footpads.

John Ashlam, a Winnipeg laborer, was found dead in a barn.

The architect of Toronto's city hall will ask for $175,000 in fees.

Hon. J. H. Davidson, Manitoba treasurer, is again at death's door.

The Railway Expressmen's strike in Missouri has been declared off.

Canadian immigration returns for ten months show a total of 121,115.

Rev. John Clark has been inducted as pastor of Know church, Calgary.

Winnipeg bankers report November paper as having been promptly met.

Willie Stuthard, 13 years of age, was found mangled in C.P.R. yards, Winnipeg.

A boiler burst on the dredge, J. Israel Tarte, near Sorel, Que., killing two workmen.

The Winnipeg bank clearings for the week were $7,192,000, the largest on record.

Victor Brand Evaporated Cream

For Household Use

takes the place of fluid milk or cream. Never sours or causes disappointment at the last moment. It is handy, pure, digestible, nutritious and appetizing. Makes delicious ice cream, custards, puddings, etc.

Ask your Grocer for it.

Mfd. by The Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Efforts to avert a mining strike in Utah, Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming, have proved futile.

HIGH FEELING.

"The Star Spangled Banner" Hissed at Vancouver—Due to Boundary Award.

A dispatch from Vancouver says:—Public sentiment excited by the success of the United States in the Alaska boundary matter is not quickly allayed, and on each possible occasion finds expression among the general public of this province. Thursday evening West's minstrels were at the opera house. Their first part finale is a very beautiful example of electrical effects, an elaborately set and lighted stage picture melting into iridiscent American flags, while the company octette sings "The Star Spangled Banner." The music of the American anthem had no sooner been recommenced than the gallery broke into ominous hisses, and when the flag formed itself into the stage lights the expressions of dissent from all parts of the house became so loud that the curtain was rung down.

A GOLD PLATED CHIN.

A Sergeant's Broken Face Mended With Wires, Plates and Rivets.

An operation almost unknown in the West has been performed on the chin of Sergt. Meredith Jones, of the battery at Fort Snelling, Minn.

A few weeks ago Sergt. Jones, who was on guard with a battery of horses, was thrown from his horse and sustained severe injuries. His chin bone was split, both jaws were dislocated, his nose was broken and the left side of his forehead was deeply gashed.

How it happened he could not tell. The sergeant was taken over to the State University, where the best medical talent in the state is to be found. The doctors fastened together the broken bones and ligaments with gold wires, gold plates and rivets. The physicians say there will be no disfiguring marks on Sergt. Jones, neither will there be any impediment in his speech, to disclose the existence of his goldplated chin.

ENGLISH CROP FAILURE

Potatoes Rotting in the Ground—Destitution in Parts of Ireland.

The following extract from a letter dated Oct. 23 ult., written by a gentleman of position in Yorkshire to a Mr. Thomas Gill, of Winnipeg, bears out, in plain, unmistakable language much that has been already indicated in less pointed language in the public press in regard to the deplorable state of the crops in the old country He says: "What a wretched time it has been for the harvest; it has been raining for a month, and it is all wasted and the potatoes are rotting in the ground. It is indeed a very dismal outlook for the farmers. How they are going to balance accounts, I am sure I don't know."

The same disastrous state of affairs seems to exist more or less over the entire country. He goes on to remark that the hay and fruit crops have been completely ruined by the continuous cold wet weather. Also that, owing to the same unfavorable weather in Ireland, the potato crops, upon which the poorer classes depend almost entirely, have been a complete failure. This applies particularly to the west and north, where great destitution is already apparent among the poor. With the farmers practically ruined, her manufacturers practically ruined, her manufacturers hampered by foreign competition and the shipping industries, for the first time in her history, suffering a serious setback, the immediate condition of commercial Britain is indeed a matter that will tax the ingenuity of both the man of state and commerce.

THE WIDE WORLD.

Telegraphic News of Two Hemispheres Briefly Chronicled.

Jamacians have offered Canada a preference.

Wheat prices advanced and closed stronger.

The W.C.T.U. convention at Ottawa has been opened.

The C.P.R. has laid off 200 men in the Winnipeg shops.

Canadians on Alaska commission may shortly receive honors.

Ohio State University students were injured by a boiler explosion.

English crops are a failure. Potatoes are rotting in the ground.

Canadian cities report largely increased bank clearings for the week.

The new republic of Panama has been recognized by President Roosevelt.

Emperor William will race the Meteor in ocean yacht contest next summer.

President Roosevelt has declined an invitation to hunt in British Columbia.

The Dominion Dump Car Co. has been organized in Ottawa, capitalized at $2,500,000.

Police in Lyons, France, were attacked by men with revolvers and paving stones.

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

DOT LEETLE HANS.

Dot leetle Hans, he vos so cute
Ven gompany it gome ar-r-round
He do a handspr-r-ring dot's a beaut,
All ubside downside on der gr-r-round.

Dot leetle Hans, he vos so str-r-rong
He bick oop dot pig Kreutzer poy
Dot's dr-r-ree foot dick uhd six foot long
Und smash him down—oh, vot a choy!

Dot leetle Hans, he vos so kvick
He r-r-run a mile pefore I dink,
Und ven I dink chust vunce as slick
Like kr r-rease he's gone chust like a vink!

Dot leetle Hans, he chump der fence
Dot's eight foot tall mitout his hands;
I somedimes dink he chust gommence
Mit circuses und pig pr-r-rass pands!

Dot leetle Hans, he turn und tvist
Und tumble lige a poneless kid,
Und ven ve pox mit his pig fist
He smash der topknot off mine lid!

Dot leetle Hans, vot he gan't do,
Vy, I don't know; chust lige a cat
He tumbles till he's plack und plue—
Mine little Cherman acrobat!

Dot leetle Hans is vild, und he
Is active as dot Actor Turk
Dot's in de show; but, oh, py chee,
He always vos too str-r-rong to vork!
—Baltimore News.

Took Him at His Word.

In the year of 1083 the forces of King Alfonso VI. attacked the Moors and drove them out of Madrid. In this connection there is a legend that the Segovians, who were allies of Alfonso, had been checked by the snows in the mountain passes of Fuenfria and were therefore late in overtaking the main body of the army, which had sat down before Madrid. "Sire," they inquired of the king, "where shall we camp?" "Inside the city," returned Alfonso, with a sneer, being angry with them because of their tardiness. They took the king at his word, carried the walls and the next morning the banner of Segovia was floating from a turret of the gate of Guadalajara.

The names of habitual drunkards in Lauben, Prussian Silesia, are printed, and a list is given to each innkeeper. The person who supplies them with intoxicants is liable to a heavy fine.

Dr Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets.—Medical science by accident discovered the potency of the pineapple as a panacea for stomach troubles. The immense percentage of vegetable pepsin contained in the fruit makes it an almost indispensable remedy in cases of dyspepsia and indigestion. One tablet after each meal will cure chronic cases. 60 in a box. 35 cents.—32

The National Bank of Norway was started by the Government compelling its well-to-do inhabitants to subscribe for the stock, and in sums divisible by five to facilitate bookkeeping. The bank is also a pawnshop.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

A shower of toads recently fell on the railroad track in Topeka, Kansas, and so impeded the progress of a freight train that it came to a halt.

Salt Rheum, Tetter, Eczema—These distressing skin diseases relieved by one application. Dr. Agnew's Ointment is a potent cure for all eruptions of the skin. Jas. Gaston, Wilkesbarre, says: "For nine years I was disfigured with Tetter on my hands. Dr. Agnew's Ointment cured it." 35 cents.—31

Our deeds determine us as much as we determine our deeds.—George Eliot.

"To-morrow is the reef that has wrecked many a financial ship.

A Lost Island.

Of the various buildings which adorned the island of Philæ there remain today above water only a portion of the colonnade, the top of the kiosk and a part of the temple of Isis. The traveler approaches the ruins in a small boat, in which he may pass down the colonnade and row about in the once sacred chambers. It is a novel and interesting experience, but to those who were familiar with the island in all its beauty it is full of sadness. Of the columns which formed the colonnade only the capitals remain above water. Upon these one sees, beautifully chiseled and ornamented with delicate coloring, Tiberius offering gifts to the gods or Nero presenting two eyes to Isis. A short distance to the right the roof of the kiosk is visible resting upon its exquisite columns, which are partly submerged. By it two unusually large palm trees rear their heads above the inundation.—Century.

Who Are "They?"

"They say; what say they? Let them say," said Bishop Berkeley. Who are the "they" thus so boldly apostrophized? We may say with one of the fathers, "I know when you do not ask me," but how difficult it is to get nearer! We all have these mysterious "they" on our lips, and yet we cannot define them. Yet, though we cannot define "they," partly because there are so many of them and partly because none of the great elemental things like time, love, death and sleep are capable of definition, we can still know and say a great deal about "they." "They" in Dolly Winthrop's mouth meant Providence. "I wouldn't speak ill o' this world," she was accustomed to say, "seeing them as put us in it knows best." In her sense it is of course rarely used, though the slang expression "as good as they make 'em" recalls it. Still, "they" has generally a slightly mysterious significance. When we say it we allude to some power we cannot define or to the incomprehensible element in some set of people.—London Spectator.

Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear

has the shrink taken out in the wool. Every fibre is straightened—every strand is shaped—before the fabric is woven. When the garments are cut, they fit perfectly, and they don't shrink.

STANFIELD'S is unconditionally guaranteed to be absolutely unshrinkable. Right sizes to fit every figure.

At all dealers in men's furnishings.

Rupture

In marked contrast with all ordinary truss dealers, this firm stands alone in this field as an institution engaged in the real work of manufacturing and fitting trusses guaranteed to hold and cure Rupture of any kind.
Buy Direct from the Makers. We can save you 100 per cent. of what you would have to pay so-called Rupture Specialists. Write for our Book on Trusses—its FREE
We Guarantee Perfect Fit by Mail. Address
The F. E. KARN CO.
182 Victoria St., Toronto
(4) Canada's Leading Mail Order House.

Would You?

If you knew positively that you could purchase a Diamond of guaranteed quality at a great saving in price, would you invest?

That is precisely what we offer in our No. 947 Solitaire Diamond Ring, No. 916 shown here.

Price, $100.

Order by mail. If on receipt it does not fully satisfy you, your money will be refunded without question.

49 years of honorable dealing speak for the reliability of our house, "Diamond Hall." Write for our new catalogue. Ready Nov. 15th.

RYRIE BROS.
JEWELERS
118, 120, 122 and 124
Yonge St., Toronto

Good Pills

Ayer's Pills are good liver pills. You know that. The best family laxative you can buy. They keep the bowels regular, cure constipation. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Want your moustache or beard a beautiful brown or rich black? Use BUCKINGHAM'S DYE
FIFTY CTS. R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N. H.

A Detroit paper announces, as an astonishing fact, that a young lady of that city had a needle enter her waist about a year ago, and that it recently worked its way out of the arm of a young man who dwells in another city.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly subdues the pain and disease.

In Hamburg a dog is taxed according to his size; a little tax for a little dog, and a big tax for a big dog.

WE ALL HAVE MISSIONS IN THE WORLD.—There is a work to do for every man on earth, there is a function to perform for every thing on earth, animate and inanimate. Everything has a mission, and the mission of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is to heal burns and wounds of every description, and cure coughs, colds, croup and all affections of the respiratory organs.

There was speech in their dumbness; language in their very gesture. Shakespeare.

Teacher—"Suppose you were a king Tommy, what would you do?" Tommy—"I'd never wash my faces any more."

WHEAT OATS BARLEY FLAX
SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY
THOMPSON, SONS & CO.
Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?
If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.
The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg.
Grain Exchange, Winnipeg. S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,
GRAIN MERCHANTS,
TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. BOX 585
McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.
Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

GOOD NEWS FOR HIS OLD HOME

Vernon Bromley Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

For Years he Was Crippled by Rheumatism and Sciatica—Dodd's Kidney Pills made Him a New Man.

Morristown, N.Y., Nov. 9.—(Special).—Vernon Bromley, now of this place, but formerly of Trenton, Ont., relates an experience that will prove of great interest to his old friends in Canada.

"I have been a great sufferer from Rheumatism and Sciatica for years," Mr. Bromley states. "The citizens of Trenton will remember what a cripple I was. I could neither work or lie down, the pain was so great.

"Reading of cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills finally led me to try them, and from the second box I began to feel relief. I continued to use them till I had taken twelve boxes, when I was completely cured.

"Dodd's Kidney Pills have made a new man of me."

Rheumatism and kindred diseases are caused by uric acid in the blood. If the Kidneys are sound they will take all the uric acid out of the blood. Dodd's Kidney Pills make sound Kidneys.

An automatic tire-pump, connected with the bicycle saddle, is the latest invention. Whenever the rider is bounced on his saddle air is forced into the tires.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

The pretty face and coquettish ways of a waitress at a country club house near Chicago aroused the indignation of several of the wives and daughters of the members. Their concerted action caused the dismissal of the beauty. When she asked the reason she was curtly informed "For conduct becoming a lady, but unbecoming a waitress."

THE BLOOD PUMP

GIVES YOU HEALTH OR DISEASE ACCORDING TO ITS CONDITION.

If the heart, the blood pump of the human system, is out of order the nerves are starved for want of blood, and indigestion, sleeplessness, sick headache, lack of vigor and nervousness are the result. Dr. Angew's Heart Cure relieves heart disease in thirty minutes, cures and strengthens the organ so that rich blood courses through the veins and health reigns where disease was supreme. The better the blood pump the more vigorous the health. Ninety-nine out of a hundred hearts are weak or diseased. The first dose of Agnew's Heart Cure relieves. Sold by all druggists. 11.

It is the custom in Bulgaria for newly married women to remain silent for a month after marriage, unless when addressed by their husbands. When it is desirable for the customary restriction to be permanently removed, he presents a gift to her, and then she can chatter to her heart's content.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

Some of the towns of Germany have their water pipes made of glass, protected with an asphalt covering, to prevent fracture.

The Backache Stage may be just that incipient form of kidney disease which, if neglected, will develop into stubborn and distressing disorder that will take long tedious treatment to cure. Don't neglect the "backache stage" of the most insidious of diseases. South American Kidney Cure stops the ache in six hours and cures.—30.

Agent—"Sir, do you need any typewriter supplies?" Merchant—"Yes; send me about four pounds of candy."

At the funeral of Linton, the professional bicyclist of London, his wheel, draped in black, was led behind the hearse.

Sunlight Soap will not injure your blankets or harden them. It will make them soft, white and fleecy. 29

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

Wheat—The week in wheat trade has been dull, and for the most part the tendency of prices has been downward. In the American speculative markets there has been a gradual decline until yesterday, when a fair reaction took place. The result on the week's trading in these markets shows a decline of 1c to 1⅛c on the December delivery, but the May delivery is practically unchanged. There is not much change in the general condition of the trade the world over, but last week the Black Sea shipments were less, and American exports were larger. This week, with slightly lower prices, export trade has been more active, and this week's exports from both coasts are the largest of any week since the first week in June. Primary

Demand by European countries continues on a liberal scale, and consumption of breadstuffs, both in Europe or America shows little or no falling off, although latterly there are reports that the American milling trade finds business less active. Crop news shows no variation from a week ago, and the Australian and Argentine harvests are a week nearer being secured. Growing winter wheat in America is generally doing well, some parts where complaints of dry weather were beginning to be heard have had good rains.

Trade in Manitoba wheat shows no change in character from a week ago. Prices have declined in sympathy with the decline in American markets, but the volume of trade is on a moderate scale. Exporters still find their business very slow and difficult to work, and so unsatisfactory is the handling of wheat at country points that the principal elevator companies have decided to decline buying, and only keep their houses open for storing and shipping for farmers or other shippers. This decision has been arrived at on account of the uncertainty of the grading of much of this year's crop. Much money has been thrown away by buying at country points losing grades on the wheat bought and it would seem that the only remedy is to stop buying and allow farmers to ship their wheat themselves and take the risk of the grading. As showing the extreme difference in quality between this year's crop and last year's the following are the car inspections at Winnipeg for the month of October this year as compared with last:—

Grade.	Oct., 1903 Cars.	Oct. 1902 Cars.
1 Hard	94	4,981
1 Northern	1,787	2,727
2 Northern	3,244	858
3 Northern	1,812	390
No Grade	666	13

At the close of business Friday the prices of Manitoba wheat were: No. 1 northern 80c, 2 northern 77c, 3 northern 73c, No. 4 wheat 64½c, feed wheat 52½c, spot or delivery up to 25th inst., in store, Fort William or Port Arthur.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—The export movement continues light, as the British markets do not improve, and are on a much lower basis than is generally the case at this season. Ranchers have adopted the policy of holding over this stock, and are sticking to it. The stagnation in export trade makes butchers' cattle easy, as they are offering very freely here. About 3c is the prevailing figure for butchers' choice off cars. Exporters are going at about 3 to 3¼c, point of shipment.

SHEEP—Mutton sheep are worth 4c per pound off cars here. Lambs 5c per pound.

HOGS—Receipts are increasing. As predicted last week, the price has declined and 5¼c is now the ruling quotation for bacon hogs, weighing from 150 to 250 pounds. From 250 to 300 pound weights bring 5c and over 300 pounds 4¾c off cars Winnipeg.

MILCH COWS—Milch cows are scarce and dear. Very high prices are paid at times for choice animals, and the market ranges from $35 to $55, according to quality.

HORSES—There is a steady buying movement in general purpose horses, and prices keep high. Ontario is still shipping freely to this market. Teams of good weight and quality are worth from $300 to $400 here.

Appropriate.

Mrs. Henpeck—I wonder why they always put a woman's head on coins?

Mr. Henpeck—Oh, well, money talks, you know.—Milwaukee Journal.

Quieting.

Mrs. Futty—Do you really think Dr. Duckman is a skillful physician?

Mrs. Giblin (the patient)—I don't know so much about that. But he has such a quieting way with him! When I said I hoped I shouldn't be buried alive he said he'd look out for that. Wasn't that thoughtful of him?

Unshrinkable H. B. K. Underwear

Made from the best sidewool in the fleece—elastic ribbed knit—shaped to fit body—absolutely non-shrinkable—wool treated by H.B.K. exclusive process to make it so—every particle of oil, grease, slivers, etc., removed by the H.B.K. patent cleaning process—tough wear, light, fleecy, all wool, clean, pure, luxurious underwear, and absolutely non-shrinkable, emphasize non-shrinkable

Sold by dealers everywhere.
Only genuine with this brand. H.B.K. BRAND

Tough

A pinto bronco is tough from the end of his nose to the tip of his tail. And the toughest part of him is the light, muscular hide that covers his back and hips. From that part of his hide the famous "Pinto" Shell Cordovan leather is made for H.B.K. mitts and gloves. Scorch, boil, wind, rain, cold proof.

Genuine only with this brand. H.B.K. BRAND

Sold by enterprising dealers everywhere.

Write for "Strayed," the funniest bronco story ever written.—FREE

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.
MONTREAL. WINNIPEG.
Makers of Warm Wearables for Everybody.

OVER ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF MILLING EXPERIENCE.

DAILY CAPACITY 10,500 BARRELS

OGILVIE'S FLOURS

Have been selected as the Standard for Manitoba Spring Wheat Flour in the Dominion of Canada by the Government Flour Committee.

This is conclusive proof of their strength, color, and general high quality.

Brands
"OGILVIE'S HUNGARIAN"
"OGILVIE'S GLENORA PATENT."

The OGILVIE FLOUR MILLS CO. Ltd.

BY ROYAL WARRANT MILLERS TO H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

CANE'S

TUBS, PAILS, WASHBOARDS and CLOTHESPINS.

make easier the labor of wash-day. The name "Cane, Newmarket," is branded on this reliable woodenware—absolutely the best woodenware money can buy. Your dealer sells them.

ARE YOU BUILDING?
IF SO USE
EDDY'S IMPERVIOUS SHEATHING
The Best Building Paper Made.

It is very much stronger and thicker than any other (tarred or building) paper. It is impervious to wind, keeps out cold, keeps in heat, carries no smell or odor, absorbs no moisture, imparts no taste or flavor to anything with which it comes in contact. It is largely used not only for sheeting houses, but for lining cold storage buildings, refrigerators, dairies, creameries, and all places where the object is to keep an even and uniform temperature, and at the same time avoiding dampness.

Write our Agents, TEES & PERSSE, Winnipeg, for samples.
The E. B. EDDY CO., Limited, HULL.

Valor would cease to be a virtue if there were no injustice.—Agesilaus.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS. FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, NOV. 21, 1903.

THE VANCOUVER ELECTION.

Hon. Chas. Wilson, the new attorney-general, was re-elected in Vancouver on Wednesday over Capt Stuart by a majority of 971 out of a total of 4699 votes. The large majority piled up by the Conservatives is even larger than that of Oct. 3rd and it surprised the Liberals not a little. The results, it is claimed by the latter, were due to the non-support of the labor party. There is another reason for the strong support given Mr. Wilson. Vancouver is essentially a business city, composed of hustling business men who fully realize the detrimental effect that political disturbance has upon commerce. The dread of another general election has no doubt strengthened the government support from the business men of the city.

The McBride government, backed up by Vancouver's endorsation, will doubtless have little difficulty in getting through the coming session if they are careful to introduce no contentious legislation. The country is tired of elections. The condition of the province is a deplorable one. The finance department is discredited, the civil service needs weeding out and the laws of the land, many of them at least, need reforming and simplifying. The McBride government will now have an opportunity of displaying its ability in forming an economic and stable administration. If they succeed in improving existing conditions they will receive their reward in increased confidence from the electorate of the province.

LUMBER DUTY NEEDED.

The present condition of the lumber market in Canada and the condition of the industry in the Northwestern states make it imperative that the matter be taken up by the Dominion government with a view to protecting home industries by placing a duty on rough lumber. The present customs regulations allow rough lumber to pass in free. Any lumber that is surfaced on one side with rough edges is classed as rough lumber.

The matter has been taken up by the Lumbermen's Manufacturing Association but all the facts of the case have not been made public. It is conservatively estimated that during the present year 250 millions of feet of lumber have been imported from the northwestern states to Manitoba and the territories, and the stock on hand in these states immediately to the south of us will aggregate many times this amount which is held by the different banks, and owing to the stringency in the money markets these products will be forced on the market upon the maturity of the paper, which in many cases will occur in the early spring, so that we can rest assured that under present customs conditions the Canadian market will be flooded with lumber from our American competitors at prices below or at cost. The state of the American money market has been growing tighter for some time and the lumber industry has felt the stringency to such an extent that the banks have advanced very largely upon their lumber products. These facts are reliable, having been gathered from undisputable sources.

The lumber industry in Canada is now in a flourishing condition, and it is in a position to supply all the Canadian demands. At the recent meeting in Nelson it was estimated that at least 80 millions of feet of lumber in B. C. was awaiting territorial shipments, which does not include the stock held for export. This amount will be increased to such an extent during the winter that by the time the spring trade opens it will exceed the territorial and Manitoba demands by many million feet.

The rapidly increasing population of the north-west territories and Manitoba is largely composed of monied American settlers, whose sympathies for a time at least will be largely in favor of American products, and many of them will act as agents for American lumber manufacturers and will use their best endeavor towards furthering this import trade.

These facts deal largely with western conditions, but we believe that similar arguments can be advanced all along the Canadian line to the distant Atlantic in support of a duty on American rough lumber. The matter thus becomes a national one which effects the whole Dominion. It is the duty of Canadian legislators to protect the lumber industry of this country that our marvellously rich timber resources may be turned to the best advantage possible. The importation of American lumber means sending Canadian money across the border; it means the closing down of Canadian mills; it means the stagnation of commercial interests dependent upon the Canadian industry; and it means that financial embarassment will attack Canadian lumbermen as it has those to the south of the line.

The matter should be taken up at once by Boards of Trade and the press in all localities where the industry has a foothold, so that it may be discussed with intelligence in the next session of the Dominion parliament. Statistics should be prepared to show actual facts in figures with regard to the possible output of the Canadian lumber mills together with approximate estimates of the Canadian demands. These facts will convince the most ardent free trader that "Canada for the Canadians" should be our watch word so far as our timber heritage is concerned.

EDITORIAL NOTES

While "Jim" Hill is building 28,000-ton freighters for his Pacific trade, the C. P. R. hasn't enough enterprise to meet the local demand for ore and coke cars.—Rossland Miner.

* * *

THE United States knows a trick worth two of buying a canal. She spends a few thousand dollars in starting a revolution, recognizes the revolutionists, lands marines to protect the property of the citizens, and gets the canal for nothing. That's statesmanship in a big nation; for it an individual would go to jail.

* * *

The travelling public complain that the passenger accommodation over the Crows Nest branch is inadequate, so far as the first-class is concerned. There is only one first class coach and most of it is utilized by the culinary department, occasions are rare when this coach will accommodate all the first class passengers, and they are either forced to incur the extra expense of riding in the Pullman or take to the second class coach. The C.P.R. should take steps to give their patrons a better service in this respect.

* * *

It is a difficult to understand why the C. P. R. do not extend their excursion rates farther west than Pincher Creek. Scores of Fernie people took advantage of this offer last year and doubtless as many will this season. The present arrangements necessitate some trouble and annoyance in order to get a ticket as one goes through, and it is also obviously unfair to charge these people the full rate between Fernie and Pincher while at the other end a difference of several hundred miles in the destination makes no difference to the cost of the ticket.

* * *

THE London correspondent of the Toronto Mail and Empire cabled that paper the following on the 15th inst. "Within three months probably before New Year, direct telegraphic communication, without intermediate repeating stations, will be established for the first time between New York and London, and telegrams will be exchanged at a speed of more than four times the previous capacity af any cable. I am tempted to go a step further and express the strong expectation that within a year it will be as feasible to converse by telephone between New York and London as it is across the city of New York. Perhaps it is well to confess that it is easy to prophesy when you know. The feat of rapid communication between London and New York as a matter of fact has been greatly surpassed recently in actual practice: in other words, the problem of cheap and rapid long-distance communication has been solved, and the credit for this signal triumph of modern science belongs to England. I am compelled to await the permission of the inventors before making more than this general announcement.

BETTER THAN A PLASTER.

A piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound to the affected parts is superior to any plaster. When troubled with lame back or pains in the side or chest give it a trial and you are certain to be more than pleased with the prompt relief which it affords. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Fresh Fruit AND Vegetables arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert Confectioner

J. C. Hutchison
Merchant Tailor
Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings.
We Guarantee Our Work.

Fort Steele Brewing Co.
Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine
Beer and Porter
Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER
Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.
First-class work. Prices moderate.
Satisfaction Guaranteed.
Cement Work a Specialty.
BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

Among Xmas Books just received we have some very attractive
Art Works
by
Margaret E. Sangster
Ernest Thompson-Seton
W. J. Long
J. Whitcomb Riley
John Burroughs
and other popular and standard authors.
Also
a well assorted stock of
CHILDREN'S ILLUSTRATED BOOKS
Prices Right Call and Inspect
Fernie Drug Store.
N. E. SUDDABY.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 160 acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 1966, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 273 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 40 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 40 chains to place of commencement.

249-8 JOSEPH BAUER

Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E. corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 aces more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Tuttle.

"Insurance is Like an Oyster. If it is not good, it is no good."
We Only Handle the Best.
The Fernie Free Press says: "They carry a long list of the BEST Insurance Companies, which possess the confidence of the public."
Cree & Hutchison
Over the Post Office Fernie, B.C.

Louis Carosella & Co.
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.
By the Day, Week, or Month.
Everything first-class.
WM. R. McDOUGALL.

We have just unloaded
A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods
and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL
Hardware
Furniture

Great Business
That's what we are doing during these cold days
Customers say
Our Prices
ON
Men's Overcoats = Ladies' Coats and Ladies' Skirts
Cannot be equalled elsewhere, and prices talk.
Give Us a Call.
Chas. Richards & Co.

Boilers and Engines.
ALSO
SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY
We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.
Write us.
J. L. Neilson & Co.
602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Ft. Steele, B. C. for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum upon the following described lands: beginning at a post marked D. Adams' south-west corner post which is situated along Fording river and four miles north of the northern boundary of Lot 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district B. C. and which corner post is near the south-east corner post of F. T. Griffin's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 814, thence from said south-west corner of D. Adams east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

249-4 D. ADAMS

Located by W. Bovin, Sept, 18th, 1903.

FERNIE DAIRY
Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .
Dobson & Willingham

The Best Is None Too Good For the People of Fernie
WE aim to supply the very best in every line of meats
Fish, Game and Poultry always on hand.
We receive WEEKLY SHIPMENTS of Choice Dairy Butter and Eggs - - - -
Calgary Cattle Co.
LIMITED

MEATS
BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON
at reasonable prices.
For Quotations apply to
THE UNION MEAT COMPANY
MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

To-day is pay-day.

Girl Wanted—Apply Mrs. J. A. Rennie

The provincial legislature meets next Thursday.

C. W. Sheppard was down to Macleod this week.

Get your pictures framed at the B. C Furniture Co.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

The Associated Boards of Trade meet at Rossland on Dec. 3rd.

The great sale of French pattern hats at London & Liverpool stores, 25 per cent discount. x

We buy, sell and exchange new and second had furniture. stoves, etc. The B. C. Furniture Co.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Coutlee, of Frank, are spending a few days in town this week visiting friends.

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd., London & Liverpool stores, offer 25 per cent discount on all pattern hats. x

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

London & Liverpool stores, The Trites Wood Co., only a few of the very newest French pattern hats left and must be sold this week, 25 per cent discount. Many bargains in ladies headwear unheard of. x

The west bound train has been very irregular during the past week. On Monday it was detained about 14 hours at Grassy Lake where part of the train was derailed. On Wednesday the train was still later, as it did not arrive until 10 p.m.

People like to laugh, and this fact is not overlooked by the Schubert Symphony Club. Several numbers on their program as well as all their encores are full of fun, and you will be highly entertained by their program at the Opera House on December 3.

Mrs. J. H. Bricker will give a tea at her home next Friday afternoon, Nov. 27th, from 4 to 6 o'clock and also from 8 until 10 in the evening for the young people. Admission 15c. Proceeds to go for the new organ of the church. All are cordially invited to attend.

Engine 342 met with a mishap on Wednesday evening. A car was left standing on a switch too close to the main line, and the engine passing on the fireman's side had the cab torn off by the projecting edge of the car. The engine was sent to Cranbrook for repairs.

E. L. English, of Calgary, agent for the "Victor" fire extinguisher will be in town next week to push the sale of these excellent fire extinguishers. The Victor is one of the best on the market and merchants and others would do well to protect their property by providing themselves with them.

The Schubert Symphony Club which has been secured by Christ Church for Dec. 3rd gives a program of the greatest variety, consisting of Lady Quartettes, Mandolin and Guitar Club, String, Violin and Vocal solos, Amusing Readings. In the Schubert's we will get a musical entertainment that is enjoyable from first to last. Not a long dull classical affair, but a bright, interesting program of music's choicest gems.

The cold snap which struck Fernie at the beginning of the week was one of the severest ever experienced in Fernie in the month of November. The mercury fell to 18 degrees below zero on Monday morning. This however was not so cold as at Blairmore where the mercury was down to 24 and at Macleod where it fell to 35. Cranbrook to the west also experienced a colder snap thon did Fernie. The spell was broken on Wednesday.

Chief Constable McMullin has notified the prostitutes of the north end that they will not be allowed to attend concerts or any public meetings until provision is made for their special accommodation. This is the result of the habit these people have got into of taking prominent seats in different parts of the hall. This step is made in the general interests of the town and it cannot fail to meet with the approbation of the public.

Wm. McDonald was sentenced on Monday to 6 months in Nelson jail for stealing a watch from W. Powers in the Alberta Hotel on Friday last. The theft took place in the bar-room, the victim being under the influence of liquor and asleep in a chair at the time. The deed was reflected in the mirror where it was witnessed by two men present who nabbed the offender and used him roughly, at the same time sending for the police.

On Monday at 3 a.m. a certain citizen of the town heard a crashing noise below. Hastily donning his clothes he proceeded to investigate the cause of the disturbance and he found a year old steer contentedly warming itself beside the furnace in the cellar. The animal had walked on the outside trap-door which gave way under its weight. Help was called and the trespassing quadruped was dragged out by the neck, the veranda post being used as a hitching post.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Rev. Robson was down to Elkmouth this week.

The Minto club holds its next dance on Dec. 1st.

Your credit is good at The B. C. Furniture Co.

Get your fresh eggs at the Calgary Cattle Co. Best on the market.

G. Phair, the Nelson cigar man, was visiting in Fernie several days this week.

A new five hundred dollar organ has been ordered for the Presbyterian church.

Now is the time to secure good wall paper at a great reduction. Crow's Nest Trading Co.

Alex. Farquharson had his hand jammed this week by a heavy timber falling upon it.

W. R. Ross, M.P.P., left today for Victoria to attend the legislature which meets next week.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

Miss Reading arrived in Fernie on Sunday after an extended visit with friends in England.

An Italian, Michel Bofsio, took out his naturalization papers before Judge Forin on Wednesday.

Conductor Waghorn, of the Alberta Railway and Coal Co., dropped dead in Lethbridge on Thursday.

Fresh Eggs—Just received 50 cases choice fresh eggs. Selling at lowest prices. Calgary Cattle Co.

We will sell out the balance of our stock of wall paper at 7 cents a roll.
Crow's Nest Trading Co.

Mrs. Pitblado left on Thursday for Lethbridge where she will reside permanently. She will be greatly missed by her many friends.

Messrs. A. P. Walker and Arch. Farquharson came home from a hunting expedition to Jaffray last Sunday bringing with them four fine white-tail deer.

Nothing can take the place of your photo for a Xmas token. Your last chance for 1903 to have it taken at Prest's studio will be Nov. 19th to 28th.

Thos. Hardy has secured a license for his new hotel at Coleman, having beaten the townsite company in its attempt to prevent him from selling liquor on property purchased from it.

Prest's Studio will be open for business from the 19th to the 28 inst. This is an excellent opportunity of securing first-class class with which to remember your friends in the east.

At Elkmouth, B. C. on Wednesday November 18th, Lucy Gertrude, daughter of R. M. Fullerton, was married to Daniel Hayes, of the Hayes Lumber Co., at the home of the bride's father. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Robson, of Fernie.

Night School

Learn to write a good hand. Learn Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. Our methods are up-to-date. Class room 1st door west of Methodist church. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

The C. P. R. are again offering their Christmas rates to the east. Tickets to Montreal and all points west of there can be bought at Pincher for $52.45 good to return within 3 months. Tickets are on sale throughout the month of December.

The Calgary Cattle Company are extending their business in B. C. Last week Chas. Knight, the manager of this company purchased M. McInnes meat business at Cranbrook. The new company takes possession on Dec. 1st. The same staff will be retained with the exception of a new book-keeper.

On Tuesday Geo. Hunt and John Payne were ordered to pay a fine of $10 and costs or spend two weeks in jail for residing at a house of ill-fame. They paid the fine. Hugh McMillan was up for being a vagrant, without visible means of support. He was given until Thursday morning to go back to his home in Montana.

Mrs. Robbins, widow of the late Frank Robbins, who died of typhoid fever at Elkmouth, is now down with the same disease in the Fernie hospital. The father of the deceased has been ill for some time with the same disease. Both are severe cases and they are very low this week.

An Indian was killed last night at Elko by a Great Northern engine.

Unloading today car XXX choice Ontario apples.—A. J. Purdy & Co. x

D. Wilson, school inspector, has been in town during the last few days on his official tour of inspection.

The skating rink was opened last night. The management deserves credit for getting it ready so early in the season.

Do not fail to investigate the splendid bargains offered by The Crows Nest Trading Co. They will bear the closest inspection.

"Griffin Brand" brix butter is fresh from the churn and retains that peculiarly delicate flavor that only the best and freshest butter can have. x

The attention of our readers is called to the half page advt. of The Crows Nest Trading Co. Marvellous bargains are offered at this store.

R. Wilcox was committed for trial yesterday on the charge mentioned last week. Bail was fixed at $2,000, five hundred of which was allowed on his own bail. It is expected that the balance will be made up.

Wm. Quigg received a serious injury in No. 1 mine last Saturday, by being run into by a motor in the main passage. His leg was severely crushed, and complications afterwards set in. His condition is critical but the physicians have hopes of his recovery.

The Fernie recount came up before Judge Forin on Tuesday. Returning officer Alexander presented a letter from the Provincial Secretary stating that he had no authority to forward the ballot boxes under Judge Forin's order. The Judge enlarged the case until Dec. 17th at the Nelson court house.

For Sale—I have the following in use at my saw mill, Blairmore, which will be for sale at the end of sawing season, 1st. December. Two boilers 50 h.p. on skids, with 50 feet of smoke stack: also one McGregor, Gourlay & Co's planer and matcher, with double cylinder, ane one Economist planer. Particulars can be had by writing Peter McLaren, Macleod, Alta.

WANTED—Faithful person to travel for well established house in a few counties, calling on retail merchants and agents, Local territory. Salary $20.00 per week with expenses additional, all payable in cash each week. Money for expenses advanced. Position permanent. Business successful and rushing. Standard House, 330 Dearborn St., Chicago. M5

WAKEFUL CHILDREN.

For a long time the two year old child of Mr. P. L. McPherson, 59 N. Tenth St. Harrisburg, Pa., would sleep but two or three hours in the early part of the night, which made it very hard for her parents. Her mother concluded that the child had stomach trouble, and gave her half of one of Chamberlains Stomach and Liver Tablets, which quieted her stomach and she slept the whole night through. Two boxes of these tablets have effected a permanent cure and she is now well and strong. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE
Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

Something Worth Knowing

All Goods Purchased from

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

carry a guarantee of entire satisfaction to our customers or money refunded——We purchase from the best markets in the world, always in Car Lots for Spot Cash, and therefore can sell you better goods for less money than any other House——No occasion to send away for any goods, as all our departments are brim full of this season's goods, fresh, new, and up-to-date.

Our Grocery Department

has made big strides lately and has been successful in reaching the top——It is our intention that with Quality and Price in your favor, and courteous treatment on our part, to merit your patronage which we assure you will always be appreciated.

S P E C I A L

AS A LEADER we will sell for a few days:

1 Large Tin Fresh or Smoked Halibut ..... 10c.
1 Large Tin Baking Powder ..... 10c.
1 pound Tin Special Blend Mocha and Java Coffee ..... 40c.
8 Tins Condensed Cream $1.00

Oranges, Lemons, Plums, Celery and all kinds of Garden Vegetables in Stock Get our prices for your winter supply.

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd.

Departmental Stores——Fernie—Michel—Morrissey—Coal Creek

Xmas Presents

Now is the time to select your Xmas presents with a small deposit and have us put them away for you.

New Stock

arriving daily, we will have the finest stock in the Kootenay to choose from.

A. C. Liphardt

Watchmaker and Jeweller

Our Motto:

"Often the Cheapest, Always the Best."

The Muskoka Hotel,
....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

T. H. Whelan, Manager.

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

ACCURACY

We pride ourselves on our Prescription Department. There is a great deal in knowing that your Prescription will be filled just as your physician wishes it to be filled.

PURITY

This is where we aim to excel, we buy only the best drugs and chemicals, and supply only the best, just what your doctor orders, always

"COMPETENCY"

Our Prescription Department is under the management of the proprietor, whose Thirty-five Years Experience should be sufficient guarantee.

Our prescription clerks are qualified and competent, the drugs and chemicals may be relied upon and our system of checking is a positive safe guard against errors.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

A. S. EMPY'S

...Restaurant

Wardner, B. C.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4558, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE
Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HALBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Halberton.

I had scarcely reached the fort when a sound somewhat resembling the rumble of a distant railway train caused me to look over my shoulder, and I saw half a mile behind me the entire regiment approaching at the gallop. "I see here a divided duty," I quoted to myself from "Othello," but I did not hesitate. Whatever the danger to the post and the nation, both had hundreds of champions in the regiment; Brainard had but one, so I rode into the fort and did not leave until I had found the postmaster and placed my letter in his hands.

When I emerged, the regiment had passed the fort and was disappearing in the village. To return to camp for my saber, carbine and pistol would leave me 10 or 15 minutes behind my comrades, and "a stern chase is a long one." I had no weapon with me but the sheathknife I always carried in my boot, for it was a tool of all work—hatchet, carving knife, root digger and half a dozen other things. It would at least serve for self defense in a hand to hand fight, and fights of this character were almost unknown to us, thanks to the enemy's objection to getting within close reach of us. At the worst I would have the honor and pleasure of being "present for duty" should the affair prove serious.

My horse was as good as the best, so I soon passed through the village and galloped along the Richmond road, for the hoof prints in the dust showed that the regiment had taken that route. Charmed though I was, my sense of exhilaration was intense. Over this same road had passed in other days the patriot soldiers of two wars, even great Washington himself. I—my regiment—was no longer at an out of the way outpost that had been held a year only to be told that it was not worth holding. We were now really in the enemy's country and with a possibility of seeing service of sufficient importance to be mentioned in the newspapers.

In fact, my head got so far into the clouds that I neglected to keep my eyes on the road, which is the worst blunder of which a trooper can be guilty. When I did chance to glance downward, it was to discern that only a few horsemen had preceded me. It did not take me long to learn that the few did not belong to the enemy, for on the moist ground beside a small stream that crossed the road I saw the prints of horseshoes and their nail heads. The enemy's troop horses were unshod, as a rule. I rode some minutes longer and was suddenly stopped by a familiar voice shouting:

"Come in here, ye little dhivil!"

'Twas the voice of Sergeant Mick McTwyny, who had been detached, with his platoon, to "watch" a portion of a crossroad far to the right of the old postroad. His platoon of 16 men consisted principally on this occasion of his own gang. "Birds of a feather flock together." But Brainard was also in it.

"Somebody lend me a revolver merely as a matter of form," said I, "in case anything may happen. I was in the fort when the regiment came out. I hadn't time to go back to camp for my things, so I just came along on general principles."

"That's the thing!" said Sergeant Mick, with a tigerish grin that was meant for an approving smile.

The platoon seemed to me to be in great luck. It was a hot day; the men were dismounted and resting at ease, their sabers strapped to the saddles, in the shade on the edge of a forest in front of which was an abandoned, bare plantation at least half a mile square. A gentle breeze from the northwest blew refreshingly. The line between the open ground and the forest was marked by a rail fence; how this had escaped the campfires of the hundreds of thousands of northern and southern soldiers who had tramped the Peninsula was a mystery to me, except that it seemed a great way from the Richmond road, which had been the bone of contention.

Mick leaned upon this fence and appeared to undergo a transfiguration, for he looked intelligent and seemed to have something on his mind besides liquor, tobacco and a desire to snarl at some one. As already intimated, my head had been in the clouds for an hour, so I "pulled myself up sharp" by reminding myself that Mick, though a sergeant and therefore my superior officer, was merely a Summerton "tough," with all that the name implied. Besides, I still was without "shooting irons." I looked about me at the men lying at ease beside the fence, their horses being tied to trees near them. I started to ask Brainard for carbine or revolver, it mattered not which, when Mick shouted:

"Coppyral Frost, take me carbine an' lift into yer pockets the cattridges from me box an' take some av me percussion caps. Oi think Oi'll be afther doin' most av me foightin' wid me eye an' wits." Then he looked about the men on the ground, approached a small man who owned a big horse, kicked him gently and said:

"Git on yer horse an' go like a milkman that's been on a dhrunk an' woke up two hours late. Foind the rigimint an' tell the colonel that the whole ribil army is a-comin' across the field beyant."

All the men on the ground jumped to their feet as the messenger proceeded to obey orders, and they saw almost half a mile away a gray line that might have been mistaken for the shimmering "heat band" that lies near the surface of any flat, open, dry ground on a very hot day had not the line been flecked with spots of color and topped at regular intervals by spots that resolved themselves, through troopers' eyes, into mounted men. 'Twas not as Mick had said, the whole rebel army, but it was at least a regiment, probably a brigade, advancing slowly in line of battle formation, the mounted officers in the rear. We were but a quarter of a company. And our regiment was—where? And we were so far from Summerton or any part of the north!

CHAPTER XX.

THE FIGHT AT THE FENCE.

"YES," said Sergeant Mick as I made haste to get his carbine, ammunition and some percussion caps, "we are here to bould the fince till the rigimint comes. D'ye moind me?"

"If the gov'ment"— began big Pat Callahan, but Mick snarled:

"Hould yer jaw an' talk wid yer carbine! All av ye fix yer carbine soights at 600 yards. Loie down an' take good rest on the fince rails. Count off from the roight up to 16. Whin I give the worrud, number wan is to foire at the first mounted officer at the right forninst him, number two at the nixt, an' so on, an' aich av ye kape on shootin' till yez bring down yer man. Whin they ain't got any ginerals an' colonels an' majors an' things, mebbe they'll shtop to talk about it an' give our rigimint a chance to come up an' charge 'em. Them min that ain't got no mounted officers to shoot at, foire loike blazes at the colors. Don't any man shoot till I holler 'toime!'"

The jacket filling heart throb that all soldiers can recall came upon me as I lay down and selected a "rest" where there was a clear way between the shrubbery and weeds which always infest a country fence row. The promise was of a fight of a kind for which I had always longed—a fight with a mass of troops instead of with occasional heads and shoulders half screened by trees and stumps. But I had also longed to be in the saddle and following a dashing, trusty commander and with an even chance of success. Now I was hugging the ground, with an unfamiliar carbine in my hands, a Summerton ruffian for my commander and the odds against me at least 50 to 1.

"Toime!" screamed Mick.

Our carbines reported almost in volley force style. The heat shimmer prevented good aim, yet there were three less heads visible above the gray line when the smoke had been blown away.

"Kape peggin' at 'em!" said Mick as he leaned on the fence, shaded his eyes and peered forward. A few more shots were fired in quick succession by each man, after which no more mounted officers were visible. The gray line stopped quivering like a heat band. Evidently it had halted.

"Kape on foirin'," Mick ordered, "an' make aich shot tell! Pepper all along their loine! Take a lot of ground to the roight an' lift, youse fellers on the flanks, so they'll think our loine is longer an' there's more of us than there be."

The order was obeyed. The gray line had decreased the distance between us to about a quarter of a mile, so we could note breaks in the ranks whenever our shots told.

"Aim careful!" Mick ordered. "It's no toime to fool away cattridges."

I was of the same opinion, and I was beginning to wonder what would happen should we run out of cartridges. There was a standing order in the regiment that every man should always have 40 carbine cartridges in his box and 10 full rounds for his revolver, but so short had been our many previous fights that all of us had become careless as to quantity of ammunition. Seldom had any man more pistol ammunition than that already in his revolver. No one was astonished to hear big Pat Callahan growl:

"Dhivil another cattridge hev I to me name."

"Nor I," said Brainard.

"Ye're dhivils, both av ye! But kape yer revolvers—all av ye—fer close action!" shouted Mick, "an' pray fer the rest av our rigimint to come up."

The carbine fire continued, but more slowly, while men who were out of cartridges borrowed from comrades with fuller boxes. Soon the firing ceased entirely. Mick frowned, glared wildly and said to me:

"Coppyral Frost, ye've the biggest ears in all Summerton. Go out to the road an' lay yer ear down to it an' see av ye can hear the rigiment a-comin'."

I obeyed orders and at first mistook my heartbeats for hoofbeats, but I was obliged to report that I could hear nothing.

The silence was becoming appalling, for the enemy had not yet fired a shot. The Johnnies, more sensible than their adversaries, seldom or never wasted their bullets on smoke puffs and "covers" behind which figures did not show.

[CONTINUED.]

Crushing.

He was an awful swell, and if there was one thing more than another that he prided himself on it was the fit of his clothes.

"I can never get a dress coat really to fit," he said to his partner as he glanced down at a perfectly made garment, with a hope, of course, that she would at once disclaim the insinuation. "Look at this thing."

"Well, it is atrocious," she said coolly. "But why not save your money and buy one? It is so much cheaper in the long run than hiring."

CHARM OF DAMASCUS.

City to Which Paul Journeyed Still Retains Most of Its Ancient Habits and Appearance.

To Damascus belongs the peculiar charm of being the most unspoiled of any Oriental town that the ordinary traveler to the East has the opportunity of seeing. It has indeed a huge hotel, says a writer in The Sunday at Home, an ugly barracks, and a railway station, but those lie far from the heart of the city and are soon forgotten in the labyrinth of its bazaars, the novelty of its purely native houses and streets, and the kaleidoscopic changes and groupings of its manifold Eastern costumes. The tiny railway is indeed a great advantage to travelers, and most will consider the hotel the same. The train from Beyrout is the most easy-minded, contented little creature we have had the pleasure of traveling upon. In its leisurely course dwellers by the railside are able to exchange remarks with passengers at the carriages, have a promenade on the platform, and discuss the last news from Beyrout or Damascus. But one does not grudge the time spent in drawing one up to ever lovlier views of the rich seacoast, washed by the deep-blue waters of the Mediterranean, or in threading the hoary fastnesses of the Lebanons.

The chief lion of Damascus is of course the ancient Christian Church, supposed to stand on the site of the House of Rimmon, and now a Mahammedan mosque. The mosque has three minarets, the one to the left being called "The Jesus" because the Mahommedans say the Lord will alight upon it when He comes to judge the world.

Through the midst of the town stretches "the street which is called Straight," running under its long arch like a railway tunnel from east to west. Towards its eastern end the Jews have still their quarter, and there the blind, restless Saul, with the fierce fires of his perfervid temperament at white heat, yet finding no vent, was found and healed by the humble Ananias. The eye wanders enchanted over the variegated and novel scene that is spread out below—the roofs, some flat, some rounded in quaint domes, the secluded courtyards, the lovely minarets, the old castle to the right (successor of that kept by the Governor under Aretas, the King in the days of Paul), the wealth of green foliage girdling the grey old town, or away in the distance the low hills of the sandy desert, the mountains of Lebanon, and the dazzling snow summit of Mount Hermon rising to kiss the deep blue of the Syrian sky.

With His Own Eyes.

A certain British regiment was on the march from Dover to Aldershot. It was the rule to march by companies, with a few minutes' interval between each, and to keep each other in sight, the band and drums leading.

Starting off at a good pace, and not taking notice of the regulation halt, the band soon got a long way ahead of the others. On reaching a bend in one of the hills they halted for a few minutes to have a rest.

Presently up galloped a mounted officer in hot haste and shouted for the band sergeant.

"What do you mean," he said, "by getting out of sight of the leading company?"

"We were not out of sight, sir," answered the sergeant.

"What do you mean by telling me that?" exclaimed the officer in a rage. "You were out of sight! I saw you myself!"

Only Thing to Do.

The successful farmer is not the man who follows the same routine year after year. Every season has its peculiarities, every year brings new problems, and these things calls for some change of methods to suit them. The farmer cannot work by rule, like the workman in a factory. He must see and think and act in accordance with his best judgment at every turn, and then he is often "up against it" on account of the weather or the market. But there is one consolation in the midst of all his difficulties—he is in a safe business and seldom confronted with a total loss of his year's work. If he does his part well he will succeed somewhere. The only thing to do is to keep a-thinking and a-doing.—Stockman and Farmer.

"On the Rocky Road."

It is fun for the boys. One boy sits down on the floor with his knees up, another sits down in the same fashion on the other fellow's toes, and the other fellow sits on his toes.

Then each holds on to the upper part of the other's arms and rocks. You can go a long distance this way.

THE FIRST BABY.

What joy there is in the home when the first baby comes, and yet to the young and inexperienced mother who has to care for it there is no other period of her life so trying. In the little ills that are certain to come the inexperienced mother scarcely knows what to do. To the young mother—to all mothers—Baby's Own Tablets are a real blessing. They promptly cure such troubles as constipation, colic, sour stomach, diarrhoea and simple fevers. They break up colds, destroy worms, allay the irritation accompanying the cutting of teeth and prevent more serious ills. These Tablets are sold under a guarantee to contain no opiate, nor any other of the harmful drugs always found in the so-called "soothing" medicines. They are good for all children from the new born babe to the well grown child. If you do not find the Tablets at your medicine dealers send 25 cents to The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and a box will be mailed you post paid.

Walk in the light and thou shalt see thy path, though thorny, bright.—Barton.

OUT OF SEASON.

What time the bulbous barkeep flies
To tap the beery barrel
The sweltering poet sits and tries
To write a Christmas carol.

And "in the good old summer time,"
When days are hot and murky,
The poet tries to weave a rhyme
Around Thanksgiving turkey.

When debutantes their dimpled backs
Hide under filmy tissue
He pens an ode to sealskin sacks
For the December issue.

And then when round the leafless tree
December breezes roister
He writes a touching eulogy
To the departing oyster.

So I shall not write poetry,
And here I state my reason:
A poet's mind perforce must be Forever out of season.
—Clarice W. Riley in New York Times.

The Reason.

He—She called him her angel.
She—She was flattering him.
He—No; she meant it. He was backing her first venture as a theatrical star.

Coughing is the outward sign of inward disease.
Cure the disease with

Shiloh's Consumption Cure The Lung Tonic

and the cough will stop.
Try it to-night.
If it doesn't benefit you we'll give your money back.

Prices 25c., 50c. and $1.00

S. C. WELLS & CO.
Toronto, Can. LeRoy, N.Y. 3

THE TOWER OF SILENCE.

Bombay's Grewsome Cemetery and Its Well Fed Vultures.

The Tower of Silence on top of Malabar hill is the prettiest spot in Bombay. There is a circle of concrete walls twenty-five feet high. Inside this wall, six feet from the top, is an inclined floor of concrete, divided into three circles and surrounding a pit. The outer circle is widest and is for the men; the second circle is a little narrower and is for the women; the inner circle, surrounding the pit, is narrowest of the three and is for the children. The center pit is deep and filled in the bottom with sand and charcoal. There are five of these. When a Parsee dies he is laid in one of these. No one ever sees the inside but those who bear the bodies in, and they do not look around, but walk right out. Overhead and perched on the tops of the walls are many vultures. When a body is borne in these vultures swoop down, and in two hours they have eaten it clean. Then the bones are swept into the pit, and the rain washes the circles clean, and the bones in the pit crumble to dust, and the water drains off through the sand and charcoal into the earth. The vultures sometimes become so large and heavy they can hardly fly. They allow no other birds near the place. That is how the Parsees dispose of their dead.

All Fixed Beforehand.

It is said that one of the most inveterate writers out of speeches was the late Lord Derby, of whom the story went that the manuscript of one of his most statesmanlike discourses, being picked up from the floor, where it had fallen, was found not only to be freely sprinkled with "Hear, hear!" "Laughter," and "Applause," but also to contain a passage beginning, "But I am detaining you too long [cries of 'No, no!' and 'Go on!']."

How Sea Birds Quench Their Thirst.

The means by which sea birds quench their thirst when far out at sea is described by an old skipper, who tells how he has seen birds at sea, far from any land that could furnish them water, hovering around and under a storm cloud, clattering like ducks on a hot day at a pond and drinking in the drops of rain as they fell. They will smell a rain squall a hundred miles distant or even farther off and scud for it with almost inconceivable swiftness.

"I understand Jigson has a financial interest in the concern he is with."

"Yes, they owe him six months' salary."

The Sincerity of Advice.

Gabber—Are you going to housekeeping?

Benedict—(Answer drowned by passing car.)

Gabber—That's right; nothing like it. Have your own—

Benedict—I said I wasn't.

Gabber—Oh, well; that's where you're wise. You'll miss, etc.—Baltimore American.

The burglar climbed over the office partition. "It is well to be on the safe side," he said. Then he began work on the vault.

In the El Pinal vineyard, Southern California, is the largest brandy still in the world. It is capable of converting 15,000 gallons of wine into brandy every twenty-four hours.

The finger nails of the King of Ashan are as long as his fingers, and the chief duty of five of his wives is to take care of them. He has over one hundred wives.

A brilliant signal light at Atlantic City is visible nineteen miles at sea. Each year it burns 2,200 gallons of oil.

MANY HELPLESS WITH PARALYSIS

Who Could Now be Well Had They but Known of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

We do not claim that every one who is paralyzed can be cured by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, for many are beyond the reach of any medical treatment and must finish their days in helplessness and suffering.

It is rather to those who are only partially paralyzed and to those who are slowly but surely developing the symptoms which indicate the approach of such ailments that we would suggest the advisability of using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the great food cure for diseases of the nerves.

When you find yourself lying awake nights, suffer from indigestion and headache, feel drowsy after meals and losing energy, ambition and courage, it is time to pay attention to the nerves. You may find yourself irritable at times, worried over little things, unable to concentrate the mind, forgetful and absentminded, disheartened and discouraged. Better give some attention to the nerves.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures and prevents paralysis and locomotor ataxia. It does not cure by inducing unconsciousness and unnatural sleep. It does not deaden the nerves as do opiates and narcotics. But, on the other hand, by assisting nature and supplying the elements from which are formed new blood and nerve force, effects thorough and lasting cure and is bound to benefit all who use it.

Seldom, if ever, has any medicine secured such hearty endorsement of physicians and people alike. The cures which it has brought about have often been most extraordinary, and anyone who regularly and persistently uses this great food cure is sure to find it of inestimable value as a nerve restorative and blood builder.

By noting your increase in weight while using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food you can prove that new firm flesh and muscular tissue are being added to the body. 50 cents a box, six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

"Popper," the little boy asked, "what kind of a horse is it that they call a plug?" "A balky one, my son. They call him that because he is a stopper."

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently stated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

Enfant terrible—"And did they go into the ark two by two?" Mamma—"Yes, dearest." Enfant terrible—"Well, who went with auntie?"

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT

Removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curbs, splints, ringbone, sweeney, stifles, sprains; cures sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by the use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful Blemish Cure ever known.
Sold by all druggists.

"How married life does change one." "From what I have observed I should say it changes two."

C. C. RICHARDS & CO.

Dear Sirs,—A few days ago I was taken with a severe pain and contraction of the cords of my leg, and had to be taken home in a rig. I could not sleep for pain, and was unable to put my foot to the floor. A friend told me of your MINARD'S LINIMENT, and one hour from the first application I was able to walk, and the pain entirely disappeared.

You can use my name as freely as you like, as I consider it the best remedy I have ever used.

CHRISTOPHER GERRY.
Ingersoll, Ont.

He that swells in prosperity will be sure to sink in adversity.—Colton.

Upright simplicity is the deepest wisdom.—Barrow.

If there were no future life our souls would not thirst for it.—Richter.

Ayer's

We know what all good doctors think of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask your own doctor and find out. He will tell you how it quiets the tickling throat, heals the inflamed lungs, and controls the hardest of coughs.

Cherry Pectoral

"Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is well known in our family. We think it is the best medicine in the world for coughs and colds."
KATIE PETERSON, Petaluma, Cal.

25c., 50c., $1.00. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Hard Coughs

One of Ayer's Pills at bedtime will hasten recovery. Gently laxative.

The finger nails of the King of Ashan are as long as his fingers, and the chief duty of five of his wives is to take care of them. He has over one hundred wives.

A brilliant signal light at Atlantic City is visible nineteen miles at sea. Each year it burns 2,200 gallons of oil.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

"Which would you rather do, Jarley, kiss a girl on her lips or on her eyes?" "Her eyes, of course. You have to do it twice to cover the ground."

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc.

"How does Jibson stand prosperity since he came into his fortune?" "Oh, he stands it all right, but it's pretty rough on his friends."

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

The Master—"Is it raining very hard, Thomas?" The Servant—"No sir, only hailstones, sir."

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Where there is room in the heart there is always room in the house.—Moore.

Gambling is the child of avarice, but the parent of prodigality.—Colton.

Use Lever's Dry Soap (a powder) to wash woollebs and flannels,—you will like it. 32

The world is crowded only in spots. There are still 20,000,000 square miles of the earth's surface that have not been explored.

Gruesome Watch Charm.

A young man visited Strathroy recently, and who lived there in his early barefoot days, in conversation with a reporter, was relating his ups and down since he had left the burg for a more flourishing city to the east. He related how he had been subject to epileptic fits since leaving and it became necessary for him to undergo a very critical operation in the hospital. The doctors removed a small piece of the skull, and his troubles were soon over. He very coolly showed a watch charm he was wearing, almost the size of a 25-cent piece, nicely polished, being a light grey in color, and no other than the piece of his own skull—rather an odd watch charm.

Criminal's Eyes.

A Russian savant lays claim to a discovery for detecting criminals. According to M. Karloff, the scientist in question, you can tell a criminal by the color of his eyes. Murderers and thieves have maroon or reddish-brown eyes, tramps light blue, and so forth. M. Karloff has classified eyes into families and has drawn up rules which he declares to be infallible. Honest folk have dark gray or blue eyes.—London Globe.

Greek Palace Discovered.

In the course of the exploration work now proceeding in Boeotia on the site of Orchomenes, at one time a small Greek state, which was destroyed by the Thebans in 367 B.C., a fine royal palace has just been discovered. A number of frescoes adorn the walls of the state rooms.

Mamma—"Willie, where are those apples gone that were in the storeroom?" Willie—"They are with the gingerbread that was in the cupboard."

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

"Which would you rather do, Jarley, kiss a girl on her lips or on her eyes?" "Her eyes, of course. You have to do it twice to cover the ground."

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc.

"How does Jibson stand prosperity since he came into his fortune?" "Oh, he stands it all right, but it's pretty rough on his friends."

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

The Master—"Is it raining very hard, Thomas?" The Servant—"No sir, only hailstones, sir."

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Where there is room in the heart there is always room in the house.—Moore.

Gambling is the child of avarice, but the parent of prodigality.—Colton.

Use Lever's Dry Soap (a powder) to wash woollebs and flannels,—you will like it. 32

The world is crowded only in spots. There are still 20,000,000 square miles of the earth's surface that have not been explored.

Gruesome Watch Charm.

A young man visited Strathroy recently, and who lived there in his early barefoot days, in conversation with a reporter, was relating his ups and down since he had left the burg for a more flourishing city to the east. He related how he had been subject to epileptic fits since leaving and it became necessary for him to undergo a very critical operation in the hospital. The doctors removed a small piece of the skull, and his troubles were soon over. He very coolly showed a watch charm he was wearing, almost the size of a 25-cent piece, nicely polished, being a light grey in color, and no other than the piece of his own skull—rather an odd watch charm.

Criminal's Eyes.

A Russian savant lays claim to a discovery for detecting criminals. According to M. Karloff, the scientist in question, you can tell a criminal by the color of his eyes. Murderers and thieves have maroon or reddish-brown eyes, tramps light blue, and so forth. M. Karloff has classified eyes into families and has drawn up rules which he declares to be infallible. Honest folk have dark gray or blue eyes.—London Globe.

Greek Palace Discovered.

In the course of the exploration work now proceeding in Boeotia on the site of Orchomenes, at one time a small Greek state, which was destroyed by the Thebans in 367 B.C., a fine royal palace has just been discovered. A number of frescoes adorn the walls of the state rooms.

A PROMISE OF REST

RELIEF FOR HUMANITY FROM OPPRESSIVE BURDENS OF LIFE.

THE SIMPLE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

Those Who Labor and Are Heavy Laden Will Find a Tonic For Their Everyday Trials in the Spiritual Food Provided So Freely by the Saviour of Mankind —A God Given Blessing.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—In this sermon the preacher urges a return to the "old paths"—the simple Christian faith in the Saviour and his promises—as the only means of securing the greatest of blessings, relief from the oppressive burdens of life, which bear heavily on humanity. The text is Matthew xi, 28. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Like the sensitive opal, this text shines best when it has been heated by the fires of tribulation. Like the diamond, it glitters and sparkles brightest when it has been cut by the lapidary of trouble. Like some of the autumnal fruits, it is sweetest to the parched lips when it has been frost-bitten. Like the morning sunrise, it is the most gladly welcomed by the poor, tired invalid, who, unable to sleep during the long, weary hours of the night, has tossed upon the hot, fevered pillow and wished for the day. Like the sight of the old homestead, it is most desired by the ragged outcast of a repentant prodigal, wearied with his journey from the far country, who sees again his father's home, where he shall find forgiveness and love.

These old promises of the Bible, offering rest and peace to those who are troubled and in pain and sin, have a far different meaning to us after we have been compelled to lift the cup of sorrow to our lips and drink its contents to the bitter dregs. When young men and young women first open the Bible the gospel promises in reference to sorrows and heavy burdens do not appeal very strongly to them. Their horizons are always rainbowed. Their hillsides are always hanging gardens and terraced vineyards. Their bodies always seem to have the warm, rich blood of perpetual youth coursing through their veins. A physician's prescription is not sought after by the well nor an oculist by those having good eyes. But when, after we have been compelled to take a long course in the "school of adversity" and then post-graduate course after postgraduate course, oh, then how different God's sweet promises appear to us!

To-day I would talk to those who have floundered knee deep and chin deep in the quicksands of trouble. I would try to interpret for you what the gospel rest of my text means. I would interpret it not only for those who have found this rest, but also for those who may be persuaded to seek it as a God given blessing at the foot of the cross. What is your burden, my brother? Perhaps it is some sorrow common to the whole human race. It is very heavy and no lighter from the fact that others are bearing the same load. Perhaps it is some trouble peculiar to yourself that you cannot bear to describe even to a friend. "Every heart knoweth its own bitterness;" but, whatever it may be, the invitation Christ gives is for you.

The past and the present, like the Siamese twins, are inseparably joined. From a human standpoint we cannot live in the "to-day" without feeling the blistered lips of the "yesterday" breathing upon our cheeks. In Dante's "Inferno" there was one region in which suffering spirits had their necks twisted by the king of terrors. While they might be walking in one direction their eyes were always turned to the rear. In life's journey the remorseful eyes of the unforgiven sinner are always turned to the rear. They are always looking at the threatening results of evil deeds which may have been committed years ago. The evil results of those sins, like a hound upon the track of a hare, never lose their scent.

An unforgiven man can never get any rest from the heavy, remorseful burden of sins, no matter when they were committed. These unpardoned sins will curse his life as they bespattered the beautiful hands of Lady Macbeth with the blood of the murdered Duncan. They will hiss at him as the haunting spectres terrified the sleeping King Richard after the murder of his two nephews or as the cries of the dying during the St. Bartholomew's massacre never ceased to echo in King Charles' ears.

You tell me that a sin committed can never be undone. You say that the guilty can never become innocent; that the soul stained and polluted with transgression can never be made clean. From a human standpoint that is true, but there is a divine remedy that effects even that miracle. Christ has borne the penalty for the sins of the world, and through his blood shed for you your soul may be cleansed. "He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and by his stripes we are healed."

Many years ago a young Russian officer became hopelessly in debt. By the law of that time he would have been expelled from the army on account of these debts. One night he sat up in his tent making an account of these debts and wrote under them these words, "Who will pay my debts?" Then in utter discouragement the young man fell sound asleep, with his head on the table. That night the Emperor was making his rounds of the camp. He saw the candle burning in the young man's tent and stepped in. There he saw the paper and the troubled look upon the young officer's face. He read the memorandum, and then he picked up the pen and wrote under the question, "I, Nicholas, the Emperor of all the Russias, will." To-day, like the Russian Emperor, Christ the divine sufferer, will pay the price of your sins; Christ the King will lift the heavy burden of our evil past; Christ's death shall cancel our well deserved sentence of capital punishment. Oh, the joy, the peace, the rapture, the glorious triumph of feeling, that Jesus can lift the heavy load of sin off from every crushed heart! Brother, sister—man, woman and child—if you have not yet received this glorious rest which comes from the forgiveness of sins will you not at the foot of the cross kneel and take it now?

The Heavenly Father offers rest from financial distress. The older I grow the more I realize that the greatest struggle on earth is after daily bread. Most people are not fighting for the luxuries, but for the bare necessaries. If a man gets $50 or $100 ahead in the bank then comes some dangerous sickness in the family. His daughter is threatened with blindness, and she has to go to the best oculist and have most expensive glasses, or his wife breaks down, and she must go off for rest, and extra servants are hired, and the whole sum of money is soon swept away.

The financial burden is the heavy one to bear. Most of us are ready to grant that. That burden, too, Christ will bear if you commit it to his hands. Your anxiety, your distress, your forboding, he will relieve, and he will give you rest. "Now," says some one, "the preacher is talking simple nonsense! If I do not get out and hustle and work and worry and get the money to feed and clothe and educate my children God will never do it for me. I do not believe in expecting that God will relieve me of my financial distress any more than I would expect the water to boil in the kettle if I did not have a fire in the stove or my cupboard be full of food unless I could order it at the grocer's or the butcher's. When you begin to talk about God carrying the burden of financial distress then you are simply talking about something you know nothing about."

No, my brother, you are wrong. The mightiest men of God have always rolled at Christ's feet the burden of financial distress, and God has never failed them. By that I do not mean these men have been lazy or indolent. But I do mean that while they were physically and mentally doing their level best to earn the necessary amount for their livelihood they were at the same time placing their financial obligations before Christ and asking him to furnish in his own way the necessary means. Study the life of Moody. Who furnished him the money with which to carry on his great work? God; emphatically God. When Mr. Moody received his invitation to go and hold evangelistic services in England and Scotland he practically did not have a cent. He accepted the invitation. He engaged passage upon a trans-Atlantic steamer. The time grew nearer and nearer for him to sail. Some one asked him where he was going to get the money with which to sail. "I do not know," he answered, "but God will send it in time. I am going upon his mission." About two or three days before he was to sail a gentleman walked into his office and said: "Mr. Moody, I hear you are going to Europe. I thought you might want a little money. Here is $500, if you will take it." "Thank you," answered Moody. He took it. He took not as from man, but from God. That $500 paid Mr. Moody's passage over to England, so that he could preach Jesus Christ in the home of Robert McCheyne and John Robertson and Rowland Hill.

And, my dear Christian friends this plea to roll the financial distress of your life upon Christ brings up a very pertinent lesson which ought to be practiced by all our churches. Do you know why the average Christian church is having such hard work to get along financially? At the end of the year a few rich men have to put their hands in their pockets and make up the heavy deficit. It is because these churches in looking after the temporal life of their members instead of the spiritual are not doing their duty. The best way to get a full church treasury is not, as some people suppose, to have a bazaar, or an oyster supper, or an evening's entertainment of Mrs. Jarley's waxworks, or a concert. The true way to get a full church treasury is to have a full prayer meeting. If the rich men of a church, the leading men officially, would set the right example to the average church members and come to the weekday meetings and take a Sunday school class and practice prayer in public as well as in private then there would be no difficulty in meeting the financial obligations of the boards of trustees.

The Heavenly Father offers rest also in reference to the salvation of our children and loved ones. Nearly every healthy normal man has two ambitions. The one is to live long. If I had my own way and could still live in health and strength and live amid the surroundings I am having to-day as far as I can make out I would like to live on earth at least 1,875 years. When I think of all the glorious opportunities of working on earth for my Lord and Master I would not voluntarily change places with the brightest robed denizen of all the redeemed immortals in heaven. I feel a great deal in reference to my earthly work as did the elder of a Presbyterian church. When he was very sick some one came to him and said, "My brother, how happy you ought to be that you may soon associate with the angels." "Yes," answered the sick man, "that may all be true, but as far as I can make out I would on earth for a little while at least rather associate with one woman of flesh and blood, called my wife, whom I know and love, than with any twenty angels with whom at the present time I am unacquainted."

The second ambition which nearly every healthy, normal man has is not only to live long in an earthly sense, but some day to own a large home, in which he can gather all his children and grandchildren and friends and loved ones about him. And if a man longs to have an earthly home, where he can collect his loved ones, how much more must the Christian long that in his heavenly home he may be able to collect all his dear ones, his children and brothers and sisters and parents and friends—those who are bound to him by ties of love as well as of blood. There is not a true Christian man or woman who has not felt at heart the heavy burden of an unsaved child or relative or friend. Ah, that is a heavy burden to bear! If I would throw this meeting open to ask for requests for prayers from all over this house people would rise and say: "Pray for my husband," "Pray for my child," "Pray for my brother," "Pray for my roommate," "Pray for my sister." But, friend, why do you ask this pulpit to pray for your loved one? Why do you not bring that burden, that heavy burden of the salvation of your child or husband, to Christ? Does not Jesus want you to do this to-day? If Christ will carry the heavy burden of financial distress surely he will bear the heavier burden of the salvation of your children.

Some years ago a noted evangelist was holding a series of meetings in the church of which I was then pastor. Among the thrilling incident which he told was one that appeared to me at that time very farfetched. I said it could not be so. He described how a mother had a wayward boy who had run away to sea and was at that time in an Asiatic port. This mother carefully studied the Bible and came to the conclusion that she had a right to ask for the salvation of her boy and that she would then and there throw the burden of his salvation upon Christ. She went to her room, after giving word that under no condition was she to be interrupted. Then she opened the Bible, laid it upon a chair and knelt down. Then she began to pray for the salvation of that boy. She said: "Oh, God, Jesus has said that if I ask anything in his name thou wilt grant my request. I am going to stay here pleading upon my knees for the salvation of my child until thou hast given to me the sweet consciousness that he is saved." She stayed there from 6 until 7, 7 until 8, 9 until 10, 10 until 11, until 5 o'clock in the morning that woman stayed. Then she arose from her knees and said, "My heavenly Father thou hast answered my prayer." "At that very time," said the evangelist, "the boy in the foreign port was convicted of sin and sent a letter home to his mother that he had given his heart to Christ." But as I afterward began to ponder over the story, in the light of the Scriptures and of personal history, I came to the conclusion that that story was true or at least by gospel promise could be true. We have a right to ask for the salvation of our loved ones. And if we ask and plead faithfully and truly God will answer our prayers.

Oh, that we might, one and all, here and now, enter into a holy conspiracy of prayer for the salvation of our loved ones! This was the way a great revival wave was started in one of my old churches. It was by Christian people, members of that church, getting together week after week and praying for distinct individuals. It was in this way that my grandmother and grandfather were converted. Some of you may have heard the wonderful story written by the pen or spoken by the lips of my father. It was by a company of earnest and tearful mothers gathering together at a certain time of the day in the barns to pray for the salvation of their children until scores and hundreds stood up in the little village church of Somerville to confess Christ, and the whole region was moved by the power of the Holy Ghost. It is by a conspiracy of prayer that a revival can always be started an our loved ones swept into the kingdom by a tidal wave of mercy.

The great trouble with the Christian church as a whole and with Christians as individuals is that we have broken away from the old anchorage of gospel truth. We have lost faith in God that he is able to do all things; we have lost faith in prayer; we have lost faith in the power of the Holy Ghost. And the great mission of the Christian pulpit to-day is to revive in the pew the old gospel seeds of faith and hope. The people are hungering and thirsting after the simple gospel truths. And it is because the simple, salient gospel beliefs are so much needed to-day that I am preaching this sermon upon faith and the belief that Christ can save our loved ones if we only pray.

Thus, my dear friends, tired and heavy hearted, tramping along the highway of life, I want to lift the heavy burdens off your hearts. It is these burdens that are crushing you, not the journey. It is these extra burdens which we can cast at the foot of the cross that make us labor and heavy laden. Will you not accept the invitation of my text? Will you not live in the faith of that blessed promise and die in the hope, as did the beautiful Princess Elizabeth, the daughter of Charles I. of England? Upon her marble monument in Newport church, erected by Queen Victoria, is recorded the fact that she was one morning found dead, with her head pillowed upon the open Bible and her finger pointing to the simple words, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." To-day I urge upon you this wide invitation, with its glorious promise, Christ bids you come with all your burdens and trials, and he will bear them for you. He offers you rest in this life, rest in death and eternal rest beyond the grave. "Come unto him all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and he will give you rest."

"Biddleford is a hard drinker, isn't he?"

"No; I should call him an easy drinker."

NEWS NOTES

Short Items Culled From Telegraphic Dispatches.

The tinsmiths of Winnipeg went through a short-lived strike.

Dr. Hanson has been declared "not guilty" at Rat Portage assizes.

A customs officer has seized a Masonic regalia in a St. John, N. B., lodge room.

A Barnardo boy named Quinn was accidentally shot dead near Birtle, Man.

A freight train and an engine met on a switch at Indian Head. No one was injured.

Bank of Commerce has entered an action against a number of large United States financial institutions.

William Notter, a former furniture salesman of Winnipeg, jumped from a high bridge in St. Paul to his death.

A verdict of manslaughter was the finding of the jury in the Brokenhead trial for murder at the Winnipeg assizes.

By the explosion of an acetylene gas plant at Ridgetown, Ont., in a hotel, two people were killed and several injured.

A serious blockade of ships has taken place near Toledo, Ohio, owing to a break in a bridge.

A submerged wreck, which is believed to be the lost British warship Condor, has been located.

The members of the R. T. of T. in Winnipeg, commemorated the establishment of the order here twenty years ago.

C. P. R. Paid Off Italians.

Two hundred Italian laborers were paid off and discharged by the C.P.R. at Brandon on Wednesday morning. These men have been engaged during the summer in construction work and improvements to the railway yards, and the major portion of this work is now finished.

Not Going to St. Louis.

A conference of horse and cattle breeders held at Toronto on Wednesday decided not to exhibit live stock at St. Louis. They object that Canadian herd books are not recognized and there is no test for tuberculosis.

Died of Opium Poisoning.

Thomas Donges, until two weeks ago inspector for the York County Loan and Savings Company, died on Wednesday in Grace hospital, Toronto. Death, the doctors say, was due to opium poisoning.

Cut in Two by a Saw.

While at work in Kennedy & Davis' sawmill at Lindsay, Ont., Monday morning, Amy Labberte, a Frenchman, aged 45, and married, accidentally fell on a large circular saw, and was almost cut in two, dying instantly.

Human Breath and Bees.

Bees are revived by human breath, even when apparently dead. An old writer on the subject describes how, during a very wet May, he discovered a hive which had been working well previously whose tenants seemed to be dead, but by putting a few of them into his hand and breathing upon them for several minutes he at last observed some motion at the second joint of their horns. By persevering he revived them all, and they became the best hive in his garden. He is, however, careful to remark that those who use pomatum, perfume or hair powder should not make too free with the insects during the process of restoration.

The secret, of course—though at one time the thing was regarded as miraculous—is in the warmth conveyed; but, besides this, there is no doubt that bees are roused by human breath, to which they have such an antipathy that they are much more easily handled if the operator draws his breath gently and takes care not to direct it against them. —London Standard.

A State That Breathes.

If ever a state might be said to breathe, that state is California. It has a magnificent lung action, says the Sunset Magazine. Deep and long drawn are the breaths of ocean air taken by the great valleys. And you can almost see this breathing if you will go to the top of any of the hills bordering the bay of San Francisco. In general, air movement or wind is initiated by difference of temperature. Therefore on summer afternoons while the broad ocean lies tranquilly sleeping at a temperature of 55 degrees F. the inland valleys are basking in the same sunlight, but the air a few feet above the ground is quivering at a temperature of 100 degrees F. In other words, there is a temperature gradient of 1 degree per mile, and this brings about a marked movement of the air, the motion being from the cool to the warm locality.

The Rhodum Sidus.

An amusing story told by Hood describes how a country nurseryman made a large sum out of sales of a simple little flower which he sold under the name of the Rhodum sidus. This charming name proved quite an attraction to the ladies, and the flower became the rage of the season. It was one of those freaks of fashion for which there is no accounting. At length a botanist who found that the plant was not an uncommon weed requested to know where the nurseryman got the name from. He elicited the following reply: "I found this flower in the road beside us, so christened it the Rhodum sidus."

Needs Prodding.

"It is a great mistake, Mabel, to trifle with the affections of a man who loves you by encouraging some one else."

"Well, he's a little slow, auntie. I think he needs a pacemaker."

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. REIMBURG.

Again to-day "All is lost!" and she shuddered as she recalled his cool, indifferent look. She took up her shawl, that was hanging over the arm of the chair, and went upstairs again; she had for the moment nothing more to do down here; the old baron always rested until five o'clock.

But upstairs, too, she had nothing to do, indeed hardly anything in the whole world; she was so superfluous—so entirely superfluous. She sat by the stove in the twilight on a wooden chest that Hortense had had made from a Renaissance model, and that had been left here because it did not suit the rococo style of Wottersdorf, and as she sat the same gloomy thoughts coursed through her brain.

"I have become really bad," she said half aloud to herself. "Mine is one of those natures that unhappiness imbitters. Well, if I am to be good I must be better treated. I do not believe I can ever love any one again. I do not seem capable of any good feelings."

She began to think of all who had been dear to her. Hortense? What was she to her now? The tired old man below? He was a worn-out rope that still held her little boat in a safe harbor before it was driven out into the waves and storm of life. But this still, smooth water oppressed her more dreadfully than the storm which awaited her without. George? She shrugged her shoulders. George was glad to be rid of this burden; what was the sister of his dead wife to him? He had not the slightest interest in her; that he had proved plainly, abundantly. He had never even asked after her. She rose and looked on the work-table for her crochet work, then smoothed her hair with her little tortoise-shell comb; she stood by the glass, but did not look in it. As she she was in the act of going down she thought of Hortense's letter. She drew it with a quick movement out of her pocket, stepped up to the window, and began to read.

"My dear little Lucie,—You are more and more miserly with your letters, and do not give me a single loving, cordial word. I am feeling anxious. You may be ill, or you may not like being there, now that grandpapa is better again. But you know how welcome you will be here at any time; and then—I am telling tales out of school—we had another plan for you. Waldemar thinks you would just suit his mother, and might have a very happy life with her as a petted, adopted daughter. This idea has made me very happy. You know, Lucie, how I suffer at the thought of you not being happy.

"I belive, too, Lucie, that mamma would provide for you after her death; for if the Webers once love they never change, they are such true, faithful people. Have I already told you that Waldemar has sent papa to Hungary to an estate that belongs to my mother-in-law? He is to be a sort of inspector there. May he only stay there. I can not deny that I am worried about him; but Waldemar says papa knows this is his last chance. Another piece of news, Lucie. Can you guess what my husband's birthday gift to me was?

"You would never guess. He has bought back Dillendorf! He surprised me with the deed, which he put in a bunch of roses. You know, Lucie, I do not often cry, but I sobbed on his neck for very happiness. Ah, Lucie, let me speak out for once, let me put it on paper that I have found the best husband in the world.

"I pray God every day that you may have the same happiness. Do you look with surprise at the spots on the paper? Lucie, they are tears of joy—forgive me that I give way so. I have a request to make of you. In my bedroom in the wardrobe, on the lowest shelf, is a little trunk of Russia leather. It contains the first little clothes I wore. Mamma made them for me herself. I want to have them. Do you guess, Lucie? Ah, you can not think how happy we are! Farewell. I hope we shall see each other at Christmas. Waldemar has promised me the journey. How glad I shall be!

"I must close. We expect guests this evening, so I have all sorts of things to do. Waldemar sends a greeting, as does your

"Hortense."

Lucie crushed the paper in her hand. She laid her head against the window-panes and looked out. The last rays of daylight lay over the little garden, the snow-flakes were tumbling softly down, a flock of rooks flew back with hoarse cries to their nests in the old watch-tower. An ice-cold shudder ran through the girl's veins; so must a beggar feel as he looks from the cold, windy street into a warm, comfortable room. Oh, no, he might have some other soul to hunger and suffer with him; she was alone, quite alone!

With these bitter thoughts she went down-stairs. The lamp was not yet lighted in mademoiselle's room; from the sofa sounded Tante Dettchen's familiar voice:

"Yes, my sister-in-law thinks they understand each other; he is so reserved and so absorbed in his profession. We do not know certainly; but this evening surely—I—"

She stopped; it seemed to her that she heard a faint cry.

"What was that?" she asked.

"Ah, it is you, Lucie," sounded the voice of the French woman. "I had indeed quite given up all hopes of seeing you. Be careful; it is quite dark here. Fraulein Adler did not want the lamps yet."

"Good-evening," said a gentlewoman's voice, and Lucie, who had come over to the table, felt her hand clasped. "How are you, Lucie?"

"Thank you, very well," she replied, in a lifeless tone. She sat down by Tante Dettchen, and looked out of the window, and then at the stable roof, lightly covered with snow, standing out against the evening sky, and at the stars shining through a break in the clouds. She heard the two talking, the light noise of the coffee cups, the crackling of the fire in the stove, but she paid no attention to anything.

"But what were you going to tell me, my dear?" said the hostess, in her own frank way.

"I do not remember," stammered Dettchen.

The maid came in at that moment with the lamp, and the kind-hearted little lady saw a pair of such sad-looking eyes that she stopped.

"Lucie," she said, after a pause, and seized the girl's hand, "Lucie, are you ill?"

"No," she answered, and straightened herself up while a slight blush spread over her thin face. She took up her work-bag, and with trembling fingers began to crochet.

The conversation dragged on rather slowly. Mademoiselle asked questions, and Tante Dettchen answered them. She spoke of the many sick people in the town, and of the ball which was to take place that night. It was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of these reunions, Dettchen related, and was to be celebrated with special splendor this year. Selma was to wear a green dress with dots on it like dewdrops, and the garniture was to be water lilies and grasses she announced when asked about the toilets.

"Oh, how poetical!" cried mademoiselle. "Hortense once wore such a dress—of course silk and tulle—magnifique! She was bewitching that evening. My dear, does he dance?"

"Who? Ah, no! I don't think he cares at all for such things; but as he lives here he has to take part in them—you understand?"

The words stuck in Tante Dettchen's mouth; she could not say his name before this girl. In her embarrassment she looked at her silver watch, which she wore on a hair chain with gold slides, and said: "A quarter to six already! I really must—"

"Oh, heavens!" cried mademoiselle. "Why, you have only just come; and my maraschino—creme—Lucie, please ring."

The girl rose.

"Oh, thank you, thank you," protested Fraulein Adler, "but I really must go. I want to help Selma to dress, for Clara has enough to do with herself. I think they must be waiting for me."

She would not allow herself to be detained. Lucie put her wadded mantle round her shoulders, and gave her her hood.

"This has been a great honor to me," said Tante Dettchen, in a shy, timid way to mademoiselle, who was accompanying her to the door with the airs of a princess. "Many thanks, heartfelt thanks for your kindness. Farewell, Lucie. I had an umbrella—many thanks."

Lucie stood at the window and watched her trip through the snow across the court-yard, accompanied by Peter.

"How dull you are!" grumbled mademoiselle.

But the girl did not answer; she was staring across where, through the gate that Tante Dettchen had just passed, a man's figure was entering. Peter's lantern cast a flickering ray of light upon him as the gate shut behind him, and they came up to the house. Lucie saw that a little figure was accompanying the stranger. With a start she drew back and hurried out of the room.

"What is the matter?" cried mademoiselle; but Lucie had already opened the door.

"George!" she cried, breathlessly. "is it you?"

There was a note of joy in her voice; he had come to her, he had not quite forgotten her!

CHAPTER XXXIII.

The Oberforster stood in the hall, with his youngest little girl beside him. He took off his fur cap and stretched out his hand to Lucie.

"Yes," he said, "it is I. I missed the train in I—, so I have arrived very late. I wanted to speak to you, Lucie"—he stopped— "and Anne Marie must see the doctor. Am I disturbing you?"

She shook her head. "No, no," she answered, and looked up at him.

He seemed so depressed, so much older.

Mademoiselle, who had been listening, shut the door noisily. What she saw was not interesting to her. Peter had gone away after setting the lantern down on the floor in the hall. The three were still standing in the cold vestibule.

"I am so cold," said the little girl, in a tearful voice.

"Come," said Lucie, and went toward the stairs. Then she turned and led the unexpected guests into the dining-room. There was still some fire on the hearth, and one of the lamps was still lighted in the chandelier over the table in the centre of the room.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A Thrilling Novel.

"Lizette," said Mrs. Goldrich to her maid, "I wish you would run up to my room, get the novel on my writing desk, cut the pages, take it back to Miss Bookhides, present my compliments and thanks and tell her the story aroused my most profound interest."

Be true to yourself, and you do not need to worry about what the neighbors think.

Changing a Snake Into a Rod.

In a volume on the snakes of Egypt Hippolyte Boussac states that the incident referred to in the Scriptures of changing a snake into a rod is still practiced by the snake charmers. They touch the snake at a certain place in the neck, when it falls into a cataleptic condition and becomes straight and stiff. It is then restored to its former condition by taking its tail between the hands and firmly rolling.

For One Week Only

Beginning on Saturday, 21st inst.

We have a list of bargains which should be closely studied by shoppers

Men's Department

Our Stock of Men's Winter Suits is too heavy and we have cut the price of $8.00, $10.00, and $12.00 suits to..... $5

Men's Heavy Mocha lined Gloves suitable for work or street only..... $1

Unlaundried Shirts, regular 75c. for..... 25c

Heavy Freize Overcoats, Storm Collar..... $6

Ladies' Department

Underskirts

We have secured a snap from the manufacturer in this line. They aro all mercerized with ruffles and Accordian Pleating at

65c., 1.00, 1.25, 1.50
1.75, 2.00, and 2.50

A few soft wool skirts only $1.50

Hosiery

All wool heavy winter Hose for Children

Size 5 at..... 12 1-2c
" 5½ and 6 at.. 15c
" 6½ and 7 at.. 20c
" 7½ and 8 at.. 25c

Sewing Needles done up in books
5 packages in a book 2 books for 5c

The Balance of our
Wall Paper at 7c. a double roll

The Crow's Nest Trading Co.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Stephens Bros. entertained a large number of friends at the Australian hotel last evening. Dancing was the main feature of the evening.

The literary society, which was recently organized at the mines, held a very successful concert in the Methodist church on Wednesday evening.

Fritz Bachor, who has been up in the Edmonton district looking up a ranch, returned this week. Fritz got hold of a good property and left his brother in charge. He intends to spend the winter at Tonkin.

There were only half a dozen present at the meeting on Monday night to discuss the rink proposition. It was decided to find out the cost of building a rink and also the cost of getting an open-air rink under way.

The frequency with which runaways are occurring on the spur line to the mines is becoming alarming, and something should be done to prevent them or a terrible railroad disaster is almost sure to be the result. Hardly a week passes without one or more of these runaways taking place and as a result coal cars have been wrecked and much money lost, but fortunately as yet without the loss of a single life. The brakemen in charge of the cars can not be too careful in leaving cars standing on the track to see that they are properly braked and thus avoid these accidents.

Two loaded cars got loose at the tipple on Monday and made a flying trip down the long steep grade to Swinton. They kept the track all the way down and narrowly escaped crashing into the Great Northern train which had just pulled off the mainline into a siding. The cars ran two miles further, where they finally stopped, owing to the steep grade leading to the tunnel at that point.

A Scotchman named Wm. Taylor complained to the police on Monday morning that he had been held up on the track and robbed of $17.00. He told a pretty smooth yarn and the snow trampled down showed that a struggle had taken place. Taylor accused A. Slinn, of the City Bakery, and had him arrested. The case came up the same afternoon in the Clark hotel, before L. W. Patmore, J. P., but it was dismissed.

All Up to Sheppard & Elliott's
To-Night
for

Hockey Club... Ladies

Skates

Our Special Hockey Stick has no equal in the town.

Skates put on while you wait, by our expert.

Take a rubber in our windows to-night, and see "The boy who can't find it."

DROP IN AND GET A CALENDAR.

Sheppard & Elliott

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbing

Notice is hereby given that on the 18th day of December, 1903, at the Cedar Valley Improvement Coy's. mill site, I shall hold a sale of the saw mill plant and lumber belonging to the Cedar Valley Improvement Coy. Ltd.

J. R. MARTIN,
Asst. Timber Inspector.

Fernie, B.C., Nov. 18th, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands. Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "M.E.Brown's north east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains to place of commencement.

M. E. BROWN
J. G. Cummings, locator.

Dated the 9th of November, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and pretroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Fairfield's south east corner"; thence west 80 chains; thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

H. B. FAIRFIELD
J. G. Cummings, locator.

Dated November 9th, 1903. 255-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 dys after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Selwyn Gwillym Blaylock's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. G. Cumming's south-east corner"; thence north 80 chains' thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains to place of commencement.

J. G. CUMMINGS

Dated November 11th, 1903. 255-4

For cheap and reliable winter goods see Crows Nest Trading Co's. advt.

IN THE COUNTY COURT OF KOOTENAY HOLDEN AT FORT STEELE.

In Probate

NOTICE is hereby given that on the 26th day of October, 1903, it was ordered by J. H. Forin, Esq., Judge of the said Court, that James Ferguson Armstrong, Official Administrator of the County of Kootenay, be adminpistrator of all and singular the estate of FRANK WILLIAM ROBBINS of Elkmouth, planeman, Deceased, intestate.

Every person indebted to the said deceased is required to make payment forwith to the undersigned.

Every person having in possession effects belonging to the deceased is required forthwith to notify the undersigned.

Every creditor, or other person, having any claim upon or interest in the distribution of the personal estate of the said deceased is required within thirty days of this date to send by registered letter, addressed to the undersigned, his name and address and the full particulars of his claim or interest, and a statement of his account, and the nature of the security (if any) held by him:

After the expiration of the said thirty days the Administrator will proceed with the distribution of the estate having regard to those claims only of which he shall have had notice.

Dated at Fort Steele this 3rd day of November, 1903.

JAMES FERGUSON ARMSTRONG,
Official Administrator,
Fort Steele, B.C.

Notice is hereby given that under and by virtue Section 59, 60 & 62, Chap. 113 of the revised statutes of British Columbia, I shall, on Nov. 30, '03 offer for sale by public competition at Carbon Creek, the saw mill plant formerly operated by the Carbon Creek Lumber Company at Carbon Creek, three miles east of Michel in the district East Kootenay.

J. R. MARTIN,
Asst. Timber Inspector.

Nelson, B.C., October 30th, 1903. 253-3

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchace the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted on a bench on the east side of the Kootenay River, thence forty chains north to the south east corner of lot 41-41, thence west to the north west corner of said lot, thence south following slew down stream 40 chains, thence east to place of commencement containing 160 acres more or less.

DAN HAYES

Dated this 8th day of October, 1903. 253-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Hugh McLean's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

HUGH MCLEAN.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "A. Mutz's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

A. Mutz.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "John Kubala's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOHN KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Annie McIntyre's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ANNIE MCINTYRE.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "C. J. Tuttle's south- east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

C. J. TUTTLE,
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "P. Kubala's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains ro the place of commencement.

P. KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 12th of October. 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Joe Masura's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOE MASURA.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Eva Fairfield's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

EVA FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked, "Annie Dobbin's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of begginning.

ANNIE DOBBIN.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 9th of October. 1903, 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Maude May Barber's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

MAUDE MAY BARBER.
James Miller.

Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Peter Podbielancik's south-east corner;" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.

PETER PODBIELANCIK.
James Miller.

Dated the 9th of Octocer, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Augustus Fairfield's south-west corner;" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

AUGUSTUS FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Robert Gilmore's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ROBERT GILMOUR.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Gus Erickson's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

GUS ERICKSON.
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 10th of October, 1903.

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 21. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 255

Lib. Legislative Ass. Dec 31 1901

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m.
Epworth League. ....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.
Office :—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON PIANO
Classes in Burrowes' Musical Kindergarten System.
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK,
Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,
Millinery and
Dressmaking Parlors.
Fernie, B.C.

J. Barber, L.D.S., D.D.S.,
DENTIST
Opposite ROYAL HOTEL
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Moffatt's Cigar Store
Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.
A full line of Stationery.
Next Door to the Free Press.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. H. L. Bleasdell's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

J. H. L. BLEASDELL,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of J. H. L. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Florence Erickson's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

FLORENCE ERICKSON,
James Miller, Agent.
he 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

POOLEY IS SPEAKER.

LEGISLATURE MET ON THURSDAY. SEVERAL MEMBERS ABSENT.

Speech From The Throne Deals Chiefly With The Financial Condition.

Victoria, Nov. 26.—In spite of a downpour of rain, there was a large attendance at the opening ceremonies of the house this afternoon and an unusually large and brilliant staff was in attendance on the governor.

The governor having entered, the premier, acting as provincial secretary, intimated that it was necessary to elect a speaker before proceeding with the speech from the throne. The governor then withdrew and Cotton, in a felicitous speech, in which he referred to the responsibility of the office and fitness of the candidate for it, proposed the name of C. E. Pooley (Esquimalt). Munroe (Chilliwack) seconded the motion in a short speech, in which he referred to the urbanity of Pooley during the trying hours of last session. He was then declared elected by acclamation, and acknowledged the honor in a graceful speech.

The governor, re-entering, delivered the speech from the throne. The usual formal motions followed, and the house adjourned to meet tomorrow at 2 p.m.

The only absentees today were Houston, who is in town, but who did not take his seat; Wells and Ellison, both of whom have yet to arrive. The two socialists have been given seats on the opposition side, and Davidson, labor, on the government side.

Macdonald, the new liberal leader, is flanked by Henderson and Oliver, with McInnes and Drury behind him.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

"Mr. Speaker and Gentleman of the Legislative Assembly:

I have much pleasure in welcoming you to the first session of the tenth parliament of British Columbia. Our financial affairs demand most earnest consideration on your part, and I appeal, with hope, to your patriotism and to your love for the province, whose future destinies under providence are in your hands. There is no reason why British Columbia, with its great natural resources, should not occupy in the Dominion of Canada, a position of which we may all be justly proud. You have, therefore, been convened thus early in order that my finance minister may be enabled to make such fiscal arrangements as may be necessary. Having in view the immediate requirements of the country but the unfavorable condition for obtaining a loan from the London market, you will be asked to authorize the issuance of treasury warrants extending over a short period of years, and repayable in annual instalments. A considerable increase of revenue each year will, in consequence, be necessary, not only to meet ordinary expenditure, but to provide for the redemption of warrants. The legislation proposed will, therefore, include a new Assessment Act, and amendments to the Land Act, the Railway Assessment Act and the School Act. As a part of the plan of financial reconstruction, substantial economies in the civil service have already been effected, as well as material reductions in the expenditure on public works. These will be continued, consistent with a due regard to the requirements of the province.

"My government has already taken up the proposed readjustment of the financial relations between the province and the dominion, as also the question of the control of the fisheries, and the regulation of alien immigration. These subjects will be persistently pressed to a settlement satisfactory to the province.

"As a result of a recent decision in the Alaskan boundary enquiry, a strong feeling exists in favor of an all-Canadian route to the Yukon and northern British Columbia and my government will cooperate in any reasonable efforts which may be made to bring about the construction of such a railway.

"I am pleased to note the probability of the construction at an early date, not only of another Canadian transcontinental system having its terminus at the Pacific ocean, but also other important lines within our province.

"You will be pleased to know that the British Columbia Immigration Act, passed last session has been successful in excluding undesirable immigrants.

"I now leave you to your deliberations trusting that they may receive the divine blessing and result in much benefit to the province."

BURROWS WON OUT.

Got the Decision in the 20th Round Against "Barney" Mullin, of Rossland.

The 20 round contest between "Jim" Burrows and "Barney" Mullin on Thursday evening was one of the most scientific and straight-forward pugilistic encounters ever pulled off in East Kootenay. The fight lasted the full 20 rounds, and the coal miner got the decision on points.

The large hall was well filled. W. W. Tuttle acted as referee and his decisions gave general satisfaction. Burrows had the advantage in weight, being about 15 lbs heavier than the Rossland fighter but the latter was much better trained for the bout. From the start the coal miner had the fight well in hand and by the fifteenth round he practically had his opponent defeated, but the smaller man tenaciously held on and took a lot of punishment in the last quarter of the contest.

A lot of money changed hands on the fight, it being roughly estimated at $1500. Jack Curly who accompanied the Rossland party is now attempting to arrange a fight with Burrows.

FIRE-BRICK MANUFACTURE.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Oldland left yesterday to spend the holiday season in their former home in Pennsylvania. They go by way of Colorado where they will spend a few days. They expect to return to Fernie in February.

Mr. Oldland is taking with him a sample of fire-brick rock which he will have thoroughly tested in the east. This sample is similar to that from which Mr. Todhunter's excellent fire-bricks were manufactured, and the property from which it was taken possesses the additional advantage of being close to the C. P. R.

If the property is a good one, and Mr. Oldland is confident that it is fully equal to the best, he will form a company for the manufacture of fire-bricks. A plant with a capacity of 30,000 bricks per day will cost about $60,000. The freight on a car of bricks is $800 so that the transportation charges alone would quarantee a local manufacturer very handsome profits.

A BIG SLIDE.

A rather extensive mud slide occurred on the C.P.R. near Kitchener on Saturday night. Although the accident fortunetely entailed no casualities it delayed the east bound train on Sunday for a period of five hours. The exact scene of the slide is mileage 57 reckoned from Cranbrook. A steam shovel has been at work all the week excavating clay from an immense bank for the purposes of filling a bridge near by. On Saturday evening, shortly after the men engaged in the work had ceased their labors for the day, the bank collapsed with a loud crash, overturning the steam shovel, and covering the railway track with debris for a distance of 100 yards, and to the depth of several feet. For 24 hours 80 men worked strenuously to clear the track for the passing of No. 4, but it was not until 6 o'clock on Sunday evening that the line was sufficiently free to admit the passage of the train. The slide is supposed to have been caused by the sudden thaw, which set in on Friday evening.—Cranbrook Herald.

COMPLIMENTARY COMMENT.

E. R. J. Forster, of the Forster Lumber Co., Crows Nest, in renewing his subscription this week comments as follows on our editorial re the duty on lumber in the last issue of the FREE PRESS:

"Have noted with pleasure your admirable editorial in the last issue of your paper on the lumber situation. Have been looking into this question somewhat myself, and your editorial is the clearest statement we have yet seen."

BORN.

MACPHERSON—At Fernie on Nov. 23rd. the wife of Mr. Wm. MacPherson of a daughter.

CAMPBELL—At Fernie on Nov. the 14th the wife of Mrs. Walter Campbell of a daughter.

SPENT OVER $2,000 DOCTORING.

Mr. Joseph Pominville, of Stillwater, Miss., after having spent over $2,000 with the best doctors for stomach trouble, without relief, was advised to try a box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and is a well man to-day. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

CAPITALIZED AT $500,000

East Kootenay Placer Mining Company Reorganized under another Name.

The East Kootenay Placer Mining Co. has been reorganized under the name of The Perry Creek Gold Dredging Co. The new company is capitalized at $500,000 at $1.00 per share. $250,000 of this amount is held as treasury stock and will be placed on the market and the proceeds used for the purchase of new machinery and in developing the property of the company. The former company was capitalized at only $50,000. The officers of the new company are: Pres., W. R. Ross; Vice pres., J. A. Macdonell; Sec. Treas., G. O. Foss: Manager, A. Banks.

The purchase of automatic machinery to facilitate the work of the big steam shovel will enable the company to make rapid progress on their claims when the next season opens up. The property will be worked to rock-bed and there is little doubt that the results will fully justify the sanguine expectations of its promoters.

A MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

A Drunken Slav uses a Knife on his Brother and his Sister-in-law.

Joe Janiga, a Slav who lives in the Old Town, made a murderous attack on his brother and his brother's wife on Wednesday evening, with a knife. Had his weapon been in good condition there is little doubt but that murder would have been committed.

The three were more or less under the influence of liquor. Joe attacked the other two with an old and dull jack-knife. He struck the woman a severe blow over the heart the blade being stopped by a rib which saved her from serious injury. The knife was then turned against his brother. Cuts were inflicted on the head and in the vicinity of the stomach.

The woman laid information against Joe on Wednesday night but he could not be located until the following morning. The trial came off the same day. The victims of the fray seemed anxious to get the prisoner off and they made light of the affair. The magistrate sentenced Janiga to 3 mos. in the Nelson jail.

DEATH OF WM. QUIGG.

The death of Wm. Quigg occurred at his home on Baker St. on Wednesday morning at 5 o'clock, from the effects of an injury received accidentally in No. 1 mine, Coal Creek, on Nov. 14th.

The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon and was largely attended by the Fernie Union of which the deceased was a respected member. Rev. Father Milleux performed the burial ceremony.

The deceased leaves a widow and a family of thirteen children to mourn his death, and as he was the bread-winner for nearly the whole family this death is a particularly sad one. The Miners' Union with a commendable spirit of brotherly kindness decided that each miner should contribute one dollar towards a relief fund to be handed to the widow. This amount will be augmented by contributions from outsiders.

The accident which resulted in this lamentable death occurred in No. 1 mine two weeks ago. The deceased had assisted an injured comrade to the entrance of the mine and was returning to his work again when he was struck by a motor. The passage is double tracked and he thought the approaching car was on the other track. The lower part of one leg was terribly crushed. He was nursed at his own home where everything possible was done to save his life. His constitution was in a weakened condition at the time of the accident which rendered his injuries more dangerous The authorities decided that an inquest was not necessary.

ANOTHER VICTIM TO TYPHOID.

Alfred Robbins succumbed to an attack of typhoid at the hospital on Tuesday night. The deceased contracted the fever at Elkmouth several weeks ago and has since been in the hospital. The interment took place yesterday at Elko where his son Frank, who died a short time ago from the same disease, is buried The deceased was a brother of Mrs. John Coward. He leaves a widow and a son in Fernie, ann a son in Brantford to mourn his death. The family came from Brantford some time ago and the old gentleman was associated with the Coward factory here and at Elkmouth. He was 56 years of age.

Six cases of fever have resulted from the typhoid epidemic at Elkmouth and this is the third fatal case.

HELD FOR MURDER.

Johnson is Dead and Merrille May be Tried For Murder.—Inquest is now on.

Andrew Johnson the Finlander who was injured at Michel over a month ago died in the Fernie hospital on Sunday morning. The body was buried on Tuesday.

The inquest commenced on Monday at the court-house, Coroner Forbes presiding. Little evidence was taken and an adjournment was ordered until today to allow the medical attendants an opportunity to give the results of their post mortem examination.

This examination revealed the fact that the deceased died from mengingitis, or inflamation of the membranes of the brain. This inflamation was caused by the wound on the head. Edward Merrille who according to the ante mortem statement of the deceased threw the rock which inflicted the fatal wound is confined in the Fernie jail, and he will likely be tried on the charge of murder. He does not seem to realize his terrible position. None of the Finlanders speak good English and an interpreter is employed at the inquest.

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

The Free Pree Christmas Number is now under way and will be in the hands of our patrons in time for Christmas presentations to absent friends. As in former years, we are sparing no efforts to make our Christmas number attractive and interesting. It will contain a comprehensive history of the year in matters pertaining to the town and district. It will deal fully with the industries and commercial interests of the valley in which careful regard to facts and figures will be observed. The number will be profusely illustrated. In addition to local matter there will be some excellent reading of a family magazine nature making up a book of considerable size. The merchants and other business men of the town are liberally assisting in the work by contributing to the advertising columns for which we wish to express our due appreciation. The book will sell for 25 cents per copy.

POLICE COURT NEWS.

Arthur Wearing who has figured in several fights was given two weeks in jail.

William McRae pleaded guilty to carrying matches into the mine at Morrissey. He was given a month in jail.

M. McIntosh who assaulted a police officer when the latter was arresting another man was ordered to pay a $15 fine or spend 10 days in jail. He took the latter course.

Harry Clifton accused of assaulting Reginald Landry, of Michel, was fined $15 and costs. Clifton accused the latter with having turned the water on in his bath-room Words ensued and Clifton finally struck Landry.

John Rogers, of Elko, was convicted on Thursday of selling liquor to an Indian. He was fined $100 with the option of two months' imprisonment. He chose the latter. Arthur Trent, proprietor of the Columbia Hotel, Elko, was tried on a similar charge, but the case was dismissed. A Sheridan, of Elko, was the chief witness.

James Tisdale charged with the theft of $25 from C. E. Johnston chose to be tried by the Stipendiary Magistrate and to plead guilty. The accused had stolen the money from Mr. Johnston's room in the Muskoka Hotel but upon being cornered afterwards had returned the money. He was given one year in the Nelson jail.

Geo. Mesmere, "Steamboat Bill" as he is more popularly known, dropped into town on Wednesday after "doing" forty days at Lethbridge. He had breathed Fernie air only a few hours when he was n the toils for assaulting a man in the Royal hotel. The magistrate released him on condition that he would go back to the prairie, where he expressed a desire to be. He left on Thursday evening.

Tony Morasco was given a month in jail for carrying fire-arms. Night watchman Randall at the mines saw Morasco hanging around the office at 2 o'clock in the morning and he ordered him off. The Italian was partially drunk and refused to go. Finally he drove his hand through the window of the office in an attempt to get in. Later Randall caught him in the act of drawing a gun on him and he promptly knocked him down and took the weapon from him.

SEEN BY EASTERNERS.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association after their trip across Canada have published a short account of their journey. Their rapid passage through this section is treated in three short paragraphs, which though containing a few technical errors are nevertheless interesting.

"Reaching Fernie in the evening, it was decided to wait here till morning, and the wondering visitors viewed by moonlight the great coke ovens of the Crows Nest Coal Co. Four hundred and eighty of these immense ovens are now in operation in this live mining town, and to see their lurid blaze by night is a sight long to be remembered.

"One can scarcely comprehend the importance of Fernie and the almost unparalled progress which the town has experienced since it was founded in 1896. The daily output of the mines is now 3,000 tons, and it is expected to reach 5,000 tons before the close of the present year. To give some adequate idea of the immensity of the deposit, it has only to be stated that every expert who has examined the mines has corroborated the estimate that, at the present rate of consumption, the Crows Nest contains a sufficient supply of coal to satisfy the demands of the world for the next two hundred years.

"Leaving Fernie next morning a short stop was made before breakfast at Michel, where a large number of coke ovens are being operated. Here, much to the pleasure of the party, they were joined by Mr. Tonkin, the genial manager of the Coal Co., who accompanied them as far as Lethbridge."

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Mr. and Mrs. Tonkin, Marjoria and Miss Fry leave to-night for Pennsylvania via Toronto.

A. H. Reeder, the new general manager for the C. N. P. Coal Co., accompanied by Mrs. Reeder and child, arrived on this morning's train. They are stopping at the Royal.

A meeting will be held in the rear of Mr. W. F. Cuthbert's store on Monday evening at eight o'clock for the purpose of organizing a junior hockey club. All interested are invited to attend.

The trial of several Italians for assault upon Gemma was held before Magistrate Trites on three evenings of this week. The evidence of the several witnesses was of such a contradictory nature that the magistrate was obliged to dismiss the case. The four will be tried today on the charge of being mixed up in a fray.

J. L. Nave, one of the old timers of the Michel colliery was in town on Wednesday. He holds the position of road foreman in No. 3, 4 and 5 mines and has just completed the construction of a fine new road system in No. 4 mine, planned by Manager A. R. Wilson. Mr. Nave has been in Michel for five years

The concert to be given by the Schubert Symphony club under the auspices of the Ladies Guild of Christ church is deserving of the patronage of all true lovers of music as well as those who enjoy a hearty laugh. The programme to be rendered will be strictly high class in every particular. The singing of the Lady Quartette is something to remember. Note the date Thursday, Dec. 3rd., at 8:30 p.m. Reserved seats $1.00, admission 50 cents. Plan at Fernie Drug Store.

THE FREE PRESS is in receipt of a sample of the first run of sugar produced by the Knight Sugar Company, of Raymond. The company has had many difficulties to overcome in the construction of its new factory but it has at last established an industry in Western Canada, that, with a fair support from the people of the west, will keep thousands of dollars annually at home for distribution amongst the farmers and others of the Canadian west. The sugar manufactured by this company is of the highest excellence, both in appearance and in taste. This company has evidently worked up a great industry, and by its enterprise and general ability the management gives promise of progressiveness. The western trade will not be slow to recognize the advantages of encouraging this home industry.

CATASTROPHE ON THE "BIG FOUR."

Freight and Work Train Collide in Illinois.

SEVERAL WORKMEN KILLED

Terrible Accident Caused by an Error of the Conductor, Who Failed to Stop at a Station When Ordered to do so—Train Crew Jumped.

Peoria, Ill., Nov. 20.—Thirty-one men were killed and at least fifteen injured in a head-on collision between a freight and a work train on the Big Four railroad between Mackinaw and Fremont yesterday afternoon. The bodies of twenty-six victims have been taken from the wreck, which is piled thirty feet high on the tracks. Five bodies yet remain buried under the huge pile of broken timber, twisted and distorted iron and steel.

On a bank at the side of the track lie the bodies of the victims, cut bruised and mangled in a horrible manner; so far twelve only have been identified, the remaining being unrecognizable. All the dead and most of the injured were members of the work train, the crews of both engines jumping in time to save their lives.

The collision occurred in a deep cut at the beginning of a sharp curve, neither train being visible to the crew of the other until they were within fifty feet of each other. The engineers set the brakes, sounded the whistles and leaped from the cabs. The two trains struck with such force that the sound was heard for miles. A second after the collision the boiler of the work train engine exploded throwing heavy iron bars and splinters of wood two hundred feet.

Conductor John W. Judge, of Indianapolis, who had charge of the freight train, received orders at Urbana to allow a train to cross. Instead of doing this he failed to stop. The engineer of the work train, Geo. Becker, had also received orders to pass the freight at Mackinaw and was on his way to that station.

After working two hours the remains of twenty-six men were taken out. One of the last bodies recovered was that of Wm. Bailey, of Mackinaw, who had been lifted thirty feet in the air and held in place by two rails, which had been pushed up between the engine and tender of the work train.

CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

A Russian Effects Remarkable Cures Among Tuberculosis Patients.

Remarkable cures for consumption have recently been effected in Russia by Kisel Zagoranski, formerly a mining engineer, and now specially licensed by the Russian medical department to practice medicine in the case of tuberculosis. Hearing a rumor that John D. Rockefeller, of the United States, had offered an immense prize for the discovery of a consumption cure, he consulted with United States Consul Smith, who, with his brother, began a systematic observation of the cases of several patients, especially that of an English lady, an acquaintance of the consul, who had been given up by the doctors and was about to leave for England to die. She, however, submitted to Zagoranski's treatment, which was given under professional medical observation. At the end of a week the proportion of tuberculosis baccilli in the saliva had been reduced ten per cent., and at the end of six weeks the patient had gained twenty-two pounds and there was no trace of baccilli observable. This occurred last spring and the cure appears to be permanent.

Zogoranski's treatment, according to Mr. Smith, consists merely in the drinking of his specific in large quantities, together with a life in the open air, and the observance of a careful dietary. Prince Oldenburg, a philanthropist of St. Petersburg, who maintains several hospitals in Russia and a big sanitarium in the Caucassus at his own expense, has offered to place three beds at Zagoranski's disposal in a St. Petersburg hospital, where he could accurately observe the results of his experiment.

A Warning.

James M. Macoun, who was sent to the Peace River country by the geological survey last summer, is preparing his report on the agricultural and other resources of the district. In view of the fact that no surveys have been made and that there is neither a market for the produce nor employment for those without means he will report that no man should go to Peace River now who lacks such means to maintain himself until railway construction has actually begun there.

A company will instal 400 coke ovens at Coleman, B.C.

King Edward has been robbed by a member of his household.

Winnipeg photographers have discovered a means to photograph by artificial light.

Members of the French chamber of deputies are in favor of a preference for Canadian salt meats.

It is said the Great Northern of Quebec system is to be acquired by the Grand Trunk; in fact, the entire Canadian Northern may be a part of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

A MODERN DON JUAN

He Raised Spinster's Hopes and Lowered Their Bank Accounts.

A dispatch from Toronto says:—Detective Forrest went to Georgetown on Saturday and returned with Albert H. Whitesell, who is wanted here to answer to a charge of obtaining money under false pretences, to wit, $150, from Emily Patte. Whitesell, it is claimed, got the money last April by representing to Miss Patte that he had a fine drug business at Newmarket, and needed money to furnish his new store which cost him $3,500 to build. At that time the woman believed she was engaged to Whitesell and would eventually marry him. For some months the man did not call on her, because, according to his own story, he was very ill with fever at Napanee.

As a matter of fact, Whitesell was in jail there, awaiting trial on the charge of obtaining $200 from Miss Emma Allison. He was tried last Wednesday, when it developed he had been engaged to Miss Allison for several years and managed to get some $600 from her. In November of 1901 he married another woman at Belleville, without apprising Miss Allison of the fact, and in July, 1902, he got $200 from Miss Allison for what she supposed was to start housekeeping. Numerous letters were produced in court showing the love of the various parties. Judge Price found the prisoner guilty of obtaining $200 by fraud, and he was let out on suspended sentence, after promising to pay the money back.

Whitesell came to Toronto next morning and called on Miss Patte, who congratulated him on his recovery. The man had dinner and left, saying he was going to visit his mother in Georgetown. Miss Patte, a few hours later, read a paper containing the report of Whitesell's trial at Napanee. She was much surprised and annoyed, and visited police headquarters, where she swore out a warrant for his arrest. Whitesell is 47 years old, but looks much older. Local police say they have heard of one or two more cases in which the prisoner is said to have obtained money under similar circumstances. He has raised the hopes of many fond spinsters, and has, at the same time, having an eye to business, lowered their bank account. It is stated that a well known Chicago publishing house has engaged the indomitable Whitesell as country book agent, as soon as he has complied with the necessary formalities of the law.

SEEDS FREE FROM FROST

Remarkable Discovery Made by a Swedish Professor

A cable from Stockholm, Sweden, says: Prof. Paul Hellstrom, chief of the biological institute of Lulea, has discovered a process by which the seeds of oats, barley and a number of small grains may be rendered immune to the action of frost.

Prof. Hellstrom plants seeds in a glass house fitted with a refrigerating plant by means of which he gradually lowered the temperature till he ascertained the lowest point at which they would grow and not become frost bitten. Then he reduced the temperature slightly below this point and kept three plants which survived to mature seed for use next year.

In the spring the seed thus obtained will be sown and its results planted and subjected to the same treatment as the parent plant. Thus by a number of experiments and a process of elimination he says he will obtain a stock of seed immune to all frost likely to assail it. Then he will distribute his seed among farmers in the north and do away with much of the danger surrounding agricultural operations along the Arctic border.

Professor Hellstrom declares, indeed, that his seed and the plants grown from it will withstand the early frosts which so often nip growing crops and cause a failure, partial or complete, in the grain yield of his country. He explains also that his discovery will benefit other countries, particularly Canada, which has an immense uncveloped country to the north of her present rich farming belt, which will by his discovery be made available for cultivation. The government is bearing the full expense of the experiments.

Giant Locomotives.

Two giant locomotives from Germany, for the Canadian Pacific road, have recently arrived at Boston on the steamers Balgia and Nicomedia. They have been unloaded for transfer to the Boston and Maine tracks, over which they will begin their westward journey to Manitoba. Several more are to come within the next few months for this road for use in its heavy western traffic. The boilers alone weigh 19½ tons each, and when all the engines and parts have been received they will aggregate 200 tons dead weight.

Premier Seddon has introduced in the New Zealand parliament his proposals for preferential trade between Great Britain and New Zealand. They provide, after March, 1904, for a tax of 20 per cent. on existing duties on specific articles not of British manufacture. The proposals include reciprocal agreements with foreign countries.

Nothing has been heard of the Hubbard expedition into the interior of Labrador since August.

The C. P. R. will grant reduced Christmas excursion rates to residents of Nebraska and Missouri.

The Moros attacked a company of United States infantry, killing three.

Many hitherto unknown sayings of Jesus Christ have been unearthed in Egypt.

The Winnipeg city council is considering the exemption from taxation of Catholic schools.

A GRUESOME MESSAGE.

An Operator Telegraphs That He is Being Murdered.

A dispatch from Elmira, N. Y., says: W. H. Clendennin, a telegraph operator at Browne, Pa., a station fifteen miles north of Williamsport, on the Beech Creek division of the New York Central railway, was found dead in the telegraph tower shortly after 7 o'clock on the night of Nov. 19. At ten minutes to seven the operator at Oak Grove, Pa., on the same road, received this message from Clendennin: "Send switch engine to me. I am being murdered by——"

The wire opened and not another word came. A switch engine was sent to the scene and reached Browne in a short time.

The body was found lying under the desk, the head crushed in. A bloody spike maul lay on the floor beside it. Robbery was apparently the motive, the watch and money of the operator being missing.

A freight conductor saw a well-dressed stranger, who he described as five feet eight inches tall, with light moustache, loitering near the tower fifteen minutes before the murder.

No trace of the murderer has been found. Clendennin resided in Jersey Shore. He was 28 years old and unmarried. He evidently recognized his assailant and was about to wire his name when death struck him from the key.

ALCOHOL THE CAUSE.

Young Icelander is Put Off a Train and Freezes to Death.

Charles Handley, of Winnipeg, has just returned from a trip in the district around Brandon, and brings information of the death of a young Icelander, 21 years of age, found frozen in the snow on Saturday last near Belmont.

The Icelander was going from Brandon to Baldur to join a colony of his fellow countrymen at that place. He was under the influence of liquor and when the change of conductors was made at Belmont his mind was so befuddled that he could not produce his ticket. The conductor was obliged to put the man off the train, which was then a short distance outside of Belmont, and the Icelander was found alongside the track the next day, frozen stiff in death.

To Protect Forests.

In accordance with the regular yearly custom, the Crown timber office is arranging to have a couple of mounted policemen stationed at the boundary this year east of Emerson, in order to protect the bush on the Canadian side of the line from the depredations of American settlers. The woods on the United States side of the boundary are cleared off right up to the line and the reserve of forest on the Canadian side has great attractions for the American settler in search of firewood. The Canadian government has allowed the Americans to come across and collect fallen timber for fuel purposes, charging them a fee for each cord hauled away. This keeps the Americans in good humor and prevents them from ravaging the standing timber. In order that the regulations may be properly carried out a couple of policemen are stationed at the bush and inspect each load taken out, besides exercising supervision over the settlers when they are cutting. Similar precautions are taken at the Turtle Mountain reserve, but the need there is not so great, as there is still plenty of wood on the American side of the mountains.

NEWS NOTES

Short Items Culled From Telegraphic Dispatches.

The Italian King and Queen were welcomed to London on Nov. 19 by the lord mayor.

Conductor Waghorn, of the Alberta railway, dropped dead at Lethbridge on Nov. 19.

Canada is proving a dangerous rival to the United States in the iron and steel market in Britain.

Minnesota capitalists will build an electric railway from Trout Lake, B.C., to the Lardo-Duncan district.

The Canadian Northern wreck in St. Boniface, resulting in G. T. Hewlett's death, was due to the negligence of the crew, according to the jury's decision at the inquest.

A cable from Devonport, Eng., of Nov. 19, says: The torpedo boat destroyer Falcon collided in the Channel during the night with a fishing smack. The latter sunk and all hands were drowned. The Falcon's bows were smashed and one of her crew killed. She put into Devonport for repairs.

Truth, Labouchere's well-known weekly, asks why London's smart society runs after American and South African women and ignores Canadians and Australians. The journal says London has become a colony of America, and English ladies have formed an Empire League to remedy that grievance.

For nine months of this year ending Sept. 30, about 135 wolves have been killed in various parts of Ontario, particularly the Temiskaming, Rainy River and Thunder Bay districts. A bounty of $15 is given by the Ontario government for every wolf.

A dispatch from Montreal says:—The death of Jean Brisson, who, it is claimed, had more children than any other man in the Province of Quebec, has just occurred in the town of Danielson. Mr. Brisson, who was in his eightieth year, had been married three times and had 41 children. His third wife and 30 children survive him.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Telegrams and Cablegrams Condensed for Busy Readers.

Chas. E. Parcor has given the public the language of cats.

An interesting G. T. Pacific announcement was made at Quebec.

A "get rich quick" scheme has been exposed in Winnipeg.

C.N.R. grading contractors are closing operations for the season.

Mr. Oliver Simmons, M. P., for East Lambton, died in Kansas City.

John Macdonald, prothonatory at Portage la Prairie court house, is dead.

The Hague arbitration court hearing the Venezuelan claims, has ended.

Ships sought shelter at Fort William owing to a severe gale on the lakes.

At the Winnipeg assizes, McCauley, accused of horse stealing, was acquitted.

The C. P. R. steamer Alberta encountered a severe storm on Lake Superior.

Street cars have been started running in Chicago under police protection.

The grand jury at Portage la Prairie assizes have made their presentment.

Mr. D. A. Ross, the chairman, details some problems ahead of the Winnipeg school board.

The increase in Canada's aggregate trade for the past four months over 1902, same period, is $22,000,000.

The vote at Morden to give a bonus to the Manitoba Cement Co. was carried almost unanimously.

The finance committee of the Winnipeg city council approved of subdivision plans, and discussed the question of tenants paying taxes to support the school at the Quarry.

Targets and Electricity.

Steps are being taken at Ottawa by the executive of the Dominion Rifle Association to introduce electrical power for the movement of targets at the Rockliffe ranges. Col. Tilton is working on a scheme by which it will be possible for the marker by simply pressing a button to raise and lower the target. In this way it is proposed to so lessen the work of the marker that his entire attention shall be paid to the marking of the targets. Under the present system it is held that the labor of raising and lowering the target so fatigues the marker as to interfere with his vision in the latter part of the day and in consequence the marking is faulty. If arrangements can be made the new system will be in working order by the Dominion Rifle Association meet of 1904.

CAR SHORTAGE.

C. P. R. Said to Be Making Every Effort to Cope With the Situation.

Regarding the statement from Winnipeg that there was again a shortage of cars in the Northwest, Gen. and Manager McNicoll and Mr. Leonard of the C.P.R. pointed out Saturday that according to the reports to hand at Montreal there is now in store at several stations which are supposed to be congested very much less grain than was present at this time last year, when admittedly the company was unable to cope with the situation through the lack of rolling stock.

Through the general disinclination on the part of farmers to market their grains, the company is now rapidly approaching the record attained in 1902. In the last two weeks it has gained one million bushels in shipments. The figures for the season are from September 1 to November 11.

Last year there were marketed along the line 17,674,559 bushels, while during the same period this year there have been marketed 13,707,000 bushels. It is held by railway officials generally that merely because some companies have enlarged somewhat upon their regular winter retrenchment, it is unfair to assume that traffic is falling off on the part of the country. As far as the C.P.R. is concerned since last fall, when the tremendous crop of 1902 (a wholly unexpected outcome) found the company somewhat unprepared to cope with the situation, very large additions have been made to the rolling stock in all departments, and efforts are still being exerted in this direction.

To Be Dug by the United States.

In the course of his Washington message on the Panama revolution, President Roosevelt said that the canal was demanded by the interests of his nation, and by those of the civilized world.

"The events of the last few years," he said, "warrants us in saying not only that the canal shall not be constructed by any foreign government, but that it is not to be constructed by any private company. It must, therefore, be dug by the government of the United States."

Further along the President wrote: "It is time to declare that the building of the canal cannot be much longer delayed. This nation does not desire to be unreasonable or impatient, but it can not and will not permit any body of men permanently to obstruct one of the great world's highways of traffic, and a refusal to permit the building of the canal amounts to such obstruction."

Germany and France Agree.

There is much satisfaction at the result of the Czar's visit abroad, says a St. Petersburg dispatch. It is believed that a complete understanding was reached with Germany and France regarding the near and far East, making for peace and rendering Russia's rear secure in the event of future hostilities with Japan.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEINBURG.

"Take off your wraps," said Lucie to her brother-in-law, and she knelt down before the child to take off her little coat. "You must be very hungry, and almost frozen; you shall have something to eat at once."

"My little girl, perhaps," returned the Oberforster; "but I would rather dine at the hotel where I am staying. Can you keep Anne Marie here?"

He had taken off his fur coat and looked over to Lucie, who had just taken off the child's hat and was kissing her over and over again.

She assented, her eyes full of tears. "What is the matter with her?" she asked, standing up.

"Always the same; she gets thinner and thinner every day. It is no wonder."

Lucie went into the kitchen and got some milk and white bread for the child, and then she went up to the old baron's bedside. "My brother-in-law has just arrived most unexpectedly," she said, in a voice that had a ring of gladness in it, "or I should have been here before to read the paper to you. May I send mademoiselle to take my place?"

"Thanks, thanks!" stammered the old gentleman. "What does Kemmert want? Not to take you away, Lucie? Would he like to see me? I should be very glad."

"I will send him in after awhile," returned the girl. "I do not know what he has come for."

"It will be better to-morrow morning early," said the baron. "Yes, that will be better—better. I am so tired to-day." He held out his hand to her. "Sleep well, Lucie!"

She went back into the dining-room. What did he want? And with this question in her large eyes, she seated herself opposite him in the high arm-chair by the chimney. He was holding his child in his arms and gazing into the fire.

"How are you getting on?" he asked, without looking up, and in that low, hoarse voice that is with many people the sign of great agitation.

"Thank you, very well; and you?"

"How should it be with me? You can imagine—alone with the children! Only don't be angry with me that I have not written to you," he continued. "At first I do not know how it was. I felt so bitter; and with you, too; and then I thought I would talk to you myself. You know I never was much at writing."

Lucie did not answer; a deep feeling of compassion filled her heart. She noticed how his right hand, that was holding the child's little one, trembled, and how agitated his gray face looked. He was so unkempt, so neglected. And the child. The pretty blonde curls had been wet and braided tightly; that little dress of some black woolen stuff with white dots was made in such a common tasteless way like a peasant's; the little handkerchief round her neck was ragged at the corners.

"I am to blame, too," she said. "I am not angry with you; but if you had only understood how I was circumstanced! George, tell me what I can do for you."

"Lucie," and he let the child slip from his lap and motioned it toward her, "you know how I loved Mathilda."

"Yes," she said.

"And you—you, too—although you did not come to us?"

"Yes, I did too, George, God knows I did."

He was silent, then drew out a bright red handkerchief and wiped his brow.

"It can not go any longer so," he said, "or the children will be entirely ruined."

"You wish, George, that I—"

"My cousin does not get on with governesses; she hunted away the third one last week; she scolds round the house the whole day long; the children are afraid of her; and I see nothing but tearful faces. I am called upon to scold and punish as soon as I appear; and truly I never needed rest more than now."

"You mean that you want me to come on account of the children?" she asked again. "You know I was ready before to stay with them."

"They are more neglected than you think, Lucie," he said, evasively.

"Do you think your cousin could get on with me, George?" She had risen, and was taking from Peter's hands the little tray with a smoking cup of milk.

He did not answer; he gazed at her as she led the child to the table, put her in a chair, and poured the hot milk out to cool. There was something like anxiety in his look. "No, my cousin will not stay with you—"

Lucie came back and stood before her brother-in-law with a look of surprise on her face.

"Sit down," he said, "I want to ask you something."

She sat down obediently.

"I can not make any fine speeches, Lucie," he began, catching his breath.

"It is not necessary, George," she interrupted with a tired voice. "If Mathilda's children need me I will go; they must manage to do without me here."

"Yes; that is very good! But you do not understand what I mean. That is, Lucie, it would be best for us—for us to marry—if you—if you—"

He did not get any further. She sprung up from her seat and put out her hands as if to ward off something horrible. She tried to speak, but could not articulate a word.

"Think how I am situated," he said, as if excusing himself. He also had risen; but now he seated himself again. "At least, hear me out, Lucie. I have no idea of making you declarations of love. I can promise you nothing but respectful, honest gratitude for what you will do for me and the children—gratitude all my life long. Why will you not, Lucie? You slave for strangers and will become imbittered and discontented. For myself I desire so little, but they"—he pointed to the child, and was silent; a large tear hung on his lashes.

She stood motionless, her arms had fallen to her sides. It seemed to her as if the slightest movement would throw her into an abyss. A long pause followed. The child slipped down from her chair and ran across the room with short steps.

"It hurts!" she said, pointing to her throat.

He took the little creature on his knee and smoothed her curly hair.

"It will soon be better," she said, soothingly.

"Why are you crying then, father?" and the little face that was so like Mathilda's looked ready to cry too. "My head aches, father."

"She is feverish," he said, anxiously, to Lucie. "I hope she is not going to be ill."

"I will put her to bed," said Lucie, recovering her power of speech. "Come, Anne Marie."

The little thing went to her obediently.

"I will go, then, Lucie," he said. "You know what I wish. I do not want to persuade you. I will come for your answer to-morrow. Good-night, Lucie."

"Good-night," sounded back in a lifeless tone; but the hand that was stretched out to her she did not take.

He put on his fur coat without a word, took his hat, and left the room without looking round.

She stood still and looked about her; it seemed to her she must have had a horrible dream.

"Aunt Lucie!" said the little child, sobbing.

She took the little hand and went into the hall with the child. Mademoiselle opened the door of her room and looked out.

"Are you coming to dinner, Lucie? Mon Dieu! is la petite going to stay here? How old is she?"

"Four years old," answered the girl, taking up the child and going upstairs with tottering steps.

"Heavens! what is the matter with you?" cried Mademoiselle, as Lucie supported herself by the balusters. "You will let the child fall!"

"Oh, no; only a temporary faintness. I will lie down. I often—"

She stood as if exhausted; the floor of the hall seemed to be rising before her, and the lamps seemed to be flying round in a fiery circle. With an immense effort she summoned all her strength, ascended the stairs, and reached her room. She struck a light and began to undress the child, doing everything in a mechanical way.

"Is Tante angry?" asked a timid little voice.

She did not hear her. She laid the child in her own bed, then retreated to the darkest corner of the room and pressed her hands wildly to her temples.

"Must I? Must I? Is there no other way?"

But what did she wish to do? Once more a future opened before her. What other hopes had she that her innermost soul revolted at the thought of stepping into Mathilda's place? Oh, it was frightful! So frightful to be the wife of a man she did not love. Never! Never! She saw him before her so broken, so worn out, as he offered her gratitude, nothing but gratitude. But must she not do it for the sake of the poor children? No! Could she have done it if she had been Adler's wife? Ah, then, then—

And stronger than ever awoke in her the longing for what she had lost. A sobbing cry sounded through the room.

"I can not, I can not do it!" She would do everything—take care of the children, look after his house—everything but become his wife.

"Never," she said, passionately clasping her hands. "Never! I will not!"

"Tante, come here," moaned the child. She went across and bent over the feverish little face. "I am thirsty, Tante; my head aches so."

She gave her some water, and laid her cold, trembling hand on the child's hot brow. She then seated herself on the edge of the bed, and gazed vacantly at one spot on the floor. Fiery sparks seemed dancing before her eyes, then a bright green light seemed to be over everything. There is his affianced bride in her ball dress. "Go away," she muttered, "go away; what do you want here?" But it seemed to come nearer and nearer. She shuddered; had she been asleep? A little whisper sounded in her ear; it was the old prayer that Mathilda had taught her children.

"Mude bin Ich geh' zur Ruh. Amen! My head aches so." The child tossed restlessly about. "Will you stay here, Tante? Don't go away as the cousin does. I am afraid."

Lucie had sunk upon her knees by the side of the bed. She thought how she had once been ill, and her sister had never left her day or night.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Nerve.

She (with an idea of choking him off)—There are only two men in the world I could love.

He—Indeed! And who is the other one?

Praise undeserved is satire in disguise.—Broadhurst.

The Grafter.

Who is it that smiles, and ever so sweet
Angelic smiles, whenever you meet
While crossing, up and down, the street?
The grafter.

Who is it that pats you on the back?
Who cheers you up when you're out of whack
And hits you for ten most ev'ry crack?
The grafter.

Who says: "Old fellow, I'll see you ag'in.
If you're down my way, why, just drop in,"
And scuttles away with the borrowed ten?
The grafter.

Who is the fellow you never can find
When you want to give him a piece of your mind?
Who, if he sees you first, just burns the wind?
The grafter.

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

The Strain on the Eye.

There is no reason why a muscle or muscles of the eye should not be fagged out just as the muscles elsewhere do. Let one bear a weight all day long, does he not attribute his consequent headache to the heavy burden he has borne? It seems without elaborate thinking we could conceive of the results following upon prolonged use of the eye. Nature has done all she could to protect and prolong the usefulness of the eye. No earthly architect ever yet planned a structure that would not yield, crumble and fall, and the house human, so exquisitely uplifted in curious and mysterious ways, falls and returns to dust more rapidly and surely than need be, for the reason that we do not realize how much one part is sustained or overthrown by another. One tiny muscle is potent enough to disturb the whole economy, especially if intercurrent diseases exist in addition to "eye strain."

Extremely Small.

Tom—You called on Miss Milyun last night, didn't you?

Dick—Yes.

Tom—Spent the evening indulging in "small talk," eh?

Dick—Well, her talk was entirely too small. She said, "No."

Character has a commercial as well as an ethical value.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

In Hamburg a dog is taxed according to his size; a little tax for a little dog, and a big tax for a big dog.

A CLEAR, HEALTHY SKIN.—Eruptions of the skin and the blotches which blemish beauty are the result of impure blood caused by unhealthy action of the Liver and Kidneys. In correcting this unhealthy action and restoring the organs to their normal condition, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will at the same time cleanse the blood, and the blotches and eruptions will disappear without leaving any trace.

Women are bound to have the last word, even if they have to turn to the last page of a book.

Lever's Y-Z (Wise Head) Disinfectant Soap Powder is better than other powders, as it is both soap and disinfectant.

"Whatever is, is right," says Pope. So a woman must be right when she says she is.

I believe MINARD'S LINIMENT will cure every case of Diphtheria.
Riverdale. MRS. REUBEN BAKER.

I Believe MINARD'S LINIMENT will produce growth of hair.
MRS. CHAS. ANDERSON.
Stanley, P.E.I.

I Believe MINARD'S LINIMENT is the best household remedy on earth.
MATTHIAS FOLEY.
Oil City, Ont.

It is easier to imagine the world owes you a living than it is to collect it.

Severe colds are easily cured by the use of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, a medicine of extraordinary penetrating and healing properties. It is acknowledged by those who have used it as being the best medicine sold for coughs, colds, inflammation of the lungs, and all affections of the throat and chest. Its agreeableness to the taste makes it a favorite with ladies and children.

In New Jersey there is a saloon for every 179 persons—men, women and children.

Give Holloway's Corn Cure a trial. It removed ten corns from one pair of feet without any pain. What it has done it will do again.

When a minister has a praying congregation behind him he doesn't have to lay awake at night worrying about his back salary.

Ayer's

One dose of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral at bedtime prevents night coughs of children. No croup. No bronchitis. A doctor's medicine for all affections of the throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs. Sold for over 60 years.

Cherry Pectoral

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for eight years. There is nothing equal to it for coughs and colds, especially for children."—MRS. W. H. BAYNES, Shelby, Ala.

25c., 50c., $1.00. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Night Coughs

Keep the bowels open with one of Ayer's Pills at bedtime, just one.

Silver Ware

A selection made from our Catalogue will be delivered at your door at precisely the same cost to you as if purchased in person at our store.

No. 11—Price, $25.00

This handsome 5-piece Tea Set—non-heat-conducting handles, finest quality silver plate—is a marvel of good value.

Our new Catalogue will be ready Nov. 15th. Write for a copy.

RYRIE BROS.
JEWELERS
118, 120, 122 and 124 Yonge St., Toronto

Infants Rubber Diapers

These Diapers are made of the finest quality, thin white rubber cloth, are very pliable and may be adjusted over cloth diaper to protect bed clothes and dresses. They fasten with buttons. Made in small, medium and large sizes. A blessing to mothers. One of our Rubber Diapers lasts longer than a doz. ordinary ones. Price by mail post paid—75 cts. Write for illustrated catalogue of sanitary supplies. French and American rubber goods, Toilet Sundries, etc. It is free. Address

THE SANITARY RUBBER CO.
152 VICTORIA ST., TORONTO, CAN.
Lady agents wanted)

London is supposed to have 170,000 inhabitants to the square mile, but on the East side, New York, there are 345,000 people to the square mile.

BE THERE A WILL, WISDOM POINTS THE WAY.—The sick man pines for relief, but he dislikes sending for the doctor, which means bottles of drugs never consumed. He has not the resolution to load his stomach with compounds which smell villainously and taste worse. But if he have the will to deal himself with his ailment, wisdom will direct his attention to Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which, as a specific for indigestion and disorders of the digestive organs, have no equal.

The largest room in the world is the room for self-improvement.

A man seldom knows when he is well off until he is away off.

WHEAT SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY
THOMPSON, SONS & CO.
Write to-day for particulars. GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS Winnipeg.
OATS BARLEY FLAX

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg. Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,
GRAIN MERCHANTS,
TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. BOX 585
McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.
Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

MANITOBA GIVES STRIKING PROOF

That Dodd's Kidney Pills Cure when Other Means Fail.

Mr. J. J. Perkins Disabled by Kidney Pains Finds New Health in the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Tyndall, Man., Nov. 23.—(Special)—All over Manitoba and the Territories people are telling of benefits received from the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and this place furnishes a striking example of how they will cure when all other means have failed in the person of Mr. J. J. Perkins.

"For two years I was troubled with my Kidneys," Mr. Perkins says. "I got so bad that the doctor attending me declared me incurable.

"At times, I had such severe pains in my back that I thought I would have to give up hopes and die. I was unable to work and was becoming destitute.

"One day a friend asked me, 'Have you ever tried Dodd's Kidney Pills?' I answered 'No,' and he persuaded me to try them.

"The first box made me feel like a new man; five boxes cured me completely. Dodd's Kidney Pills saved my life."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys. Sound kidneys take all impurities out of the blood. Thus Dodd's Kidney Pills cure Rheumatism, Sciatica, and other diseases caused by uric acid in the blood.

The secretary of the Aeronautical Society of Great Britain expects the kite to be the base of the future instrument of aerial navigation, the aeroplane.

Dr Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets.—Medical science by accident discovered the potency of the pineapple as a panacea for stomach troubles. The immense percentage of vegetable pepsin contained in the fruit makes it an almost indispensable remedy in cases of dyspepsia and indigestion. One tablet after each meal will cure chronic cases. 60 in a box. 35 cents.—32

The average political complexion is seldom more than whitewash deep.

Tombstones remind us that the average man isn't as white as he is sculptured.

HAS NO EQUAL For Spavins, Ringbone Splints, Curbs, and all forms of Lameness, bunches or bony enlargements.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., I have used your Kendall's Spavin Cure for 20 years and have found it an infallible remedy. Please mail me your book at once as I have a colt I am now having trouble with. Yours truly, L. L. JARVIS, Dayton, Texas.
As a liniment for family use it has no equal. Price $1; SIX for $5. Ask your druggist for KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE; also "A Treatise on the Horse," the book free, or address Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vt.

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

WHEAT—The downward trend of the wheat markets became more pronounced with the advent of last week, and every day until Friday recorded more or less sharp breaks in the price in the American speculative markets. Friday a sharp rally took place being a natural reaction after several days of decline. By Thursday prices had slid off 3c per bushel from a week ago; the rally Friday was from ⅞c to 1c over the previous day's close, so that on the week there is a decline of around 2 cents. The outlook at present writing, however, is not encouraging for any material advance in the near future. The decline in American prices is having the effect of bringing them nearer in line with export value, and to that extent the general situation has become nearer the normal. The movement of wheat from first and second hands in America is showing considerable increase during this week, and the average quality of the primary receipts has been higher, which in part is the cause of lower prices, but the main reason for these is no doubt found in the slimness of the demand from Europe. Higher prices on this side, and plenty of wheat to be had in other exporting countries has given these countries the opportunity of supplying America's foretime customers, and with the prospect of immense crops in Australia and the Argentine, which are already on the eve of harvesting, and the product of which is being freely offered on European markets for future delivery, it will require that prices on this side be kept down in order to bring back customers if we have a surplus for sale as crop estimates figure.

Manitoba wheat has continued dull and there has been a sharp break in prices. Receipts as shown by the car inspections at Winnipeg are daily running considerably in excess of same date last year. Exporters are still inactive although prices are touching export basis. On the week there is a decline of 3c per bush. and we quote values 1 Northern, 77c; 2 Northern, 74c; 3 Northern, 70c; No. 4 wheat, 62½c. Feed wheat 50c, immediate delivery or up to 25th inst., in store Fort William or Port Arthur. 1 Northern for December delivery has this week been sold at 75c. and for May delivery at 79c in store Fort William, but only a very little trade in these months has been effected yet.

CATTLE—The export movement is nearly over, and there is very little doing in this branch. Shippers are offering 3c to 3¼c per pound for choice animals at points of shipment. Butchers' cattle are plentiful at 2¾c to 2¾c per pound, off cars Winnipeg.

SHEEP—Mutton sheep are in good supply, and the market is easier at 3½c to 4c per pound, off cars Winnipeg.

HOGS—Receipts are increasing and the market is easier in sympathy with Montreal and other eastern centres. On Monday the price was reduced ¼c, when choice bacon hogs, weighing from 150 to 230 pounds will be worth 8½c, off cars Winnipeg. From 250 to 300 pound weights bring 8¾c, and over 300 pounds 8¼c, off cars Winnipeg.

MILCH COWS—Good milkers are scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55, according to quality.

HORSES—There is not so much doing in the horse market as the working season is drawing to a close. Many of the horses used in railway construction work are now available for other purposes. Prices hold steady at $300 to $400 per team, according to weight and quality.

A Change.

"You certainly look better. You must have followed my advice and had a change."

"Yes, doctor, so I have."

"Where did you go?"

"I went to another physician."

The Word "Hurrah."

Some authorities connect "hurrah" with a Hebrew shout of joy to Jehovah, which occurs in the Psalms. Others derive it from "Thor aide!" a war cry of the ancient Northmen. Others point to the Swedish and Danish "hurra" and the German "hurren," to move quickly, or the Danish "hurre," to buzz, with which our hurry is associated.

Sir Francis Palgrave in his "History of Normandy and England" says: "It was a wise custom in Normandy, established by Rollo's decree, that any one who had reason to fear damage of goods, life or limb could raise the country by the cry 'Haro!' "Ha Raoul,' justice in Duke Rollo's name; hence our 'hue and cry.' The old English 'harrow' and our 'hurrah' are but variations of this." There are some who regard it as merely an imitative interjection akin to "whurra," used by Addison in a play, 1715, or of "huzza," found in Evelyn's Diary, 1665.

Pinto Shell Cordovan Mitts and Gloves

—Toughest wear, flexible, warm, light
—Boil and scorch proof
—Rip and tear proof
—Rain and wind proof
—That's what H.B.K. Pinto Shell Cordovan mitts and gloves are —Made from the hide of the Western Bronco, the toughest animal with the toughest hide, light enough to make mitts and gloves.
—Sold by dealers everywhere.
Genuine only with this brand. H.B.K. BRAND

Write for "Strayed," the funniest piece of literature ever written about a Bronco—Free

H. B. K. Warm Duck Coats

H.B.K Duck Coats are warm, hard wearing garments. They are made in scores of styles—fleece lined, mackinaw wool lined, leather reversible—high storm collars, large "Kantilever" unsagable pockets.

Made to keep out the wind and the cold, the rain and the sleet. Made to keep people warm Branded with this brand.

Sold by up-to-date dealers everywhere. H.B.K. BRAND

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.
MONTREAL. WINNIPEG.
MAKERS OF WARM WEARABLES FOR EVERYBODY

CHAMBERLAIN

IS THE PREFERENTIAL 10c CIGAR You'll Enjoy Every Bit Of It.

MADE BY J.M.FORTIER LTD., MONTREAL

(Liquozone was formerly known in Canada as Powley's Liquified Ozone.)

We Paid $100,000

For Liquozone—Yet We Give You a 50c. Bottle Free.

This company, after testing Liquozone for two years in the most difficult germ diseases, paid $100,000 for the American rights. That is by far the highest price ever paid for similar rights on any scientific discovery.

We publish this fact to show you the value of Liquozone. The most worthless product may have great claims made about it; but men don't pay a price like that save for a discovery of remarkable worth to humanity.

Kills Inside Germs.

Liquozone alone kills germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. It is so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. Liquozone destroys at once and forever the cause of any germ disease.

And there is no other way to do it. Any drug that kills germs is a poison to you, and it cannot be taken internally. Liquozone alone can attack a trouble that is caused by inside germs; and it cures diseases which medicine never cured.

Liquid Oxygen.

Liquozone is simply liquid oxygen—no drugs, no alcohol in it. It is the discovery of Pauli, the great German chemist, who spent 20 years on it. His object was to get such an excess of oxygen in staple form into the blood that no germ could live in any membrane or tissue.

Liquozone does that. Oxygen is Nature's greatest tonic—the very source of vitality. Its effects are exhilarating—purifying, vitalizing. Nothing else in the world is so good for you. But germs are vegetables; and this excess of oxygen—the very life of an animal—is deadly to vegetable matter.

We spend 14 days in making each bottle of Liquozone; but the result is liquid oxygen—a product which will cure diseases which no medical skill can cure without it. It is now employed in every great hospital, and indorsed by every medical authority, the world over.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone kills the germs, wherever they are, and the results are inevitable. By destroying the cause of the trouble, it invariably ends the disease, and forever.

Asthma	Hay Fever—Influenza
Abscess—Anæmia	Kidney Diseases
Bronchitis	La Grippe
Blood Poison	Leucorrhea
Bright's Disease	Liver Troubles
Bowel Troubles	Malaria—Neuralgia
Coughs—Colds	Many Heart Troubles
Consumption	Piles—Pneumonia
Colic—Croup	Pleurisy—Quinsy
Constipation	Rheumatism
Catarrh—Cancer	Skin Diseases
Dysentery—Diarrhœa	Scrofula—Syphilis
Dandruff—Dropsy	Stomach Troubles
Dyspepsia	Throat Troubles
Eczema—Erysipelas	Tuberculosis
Fevers—Gall Stones	Tumors—Ulcers
Goitre—Gout	Varicocele
Gonorrhea—Gleet	Women's Diseases

All diseases that begin with fever—all inflammation—all catarrh—all contagious diseases—all the results of impure or poisoned blood.

In nervous debility Liquozone acts as a vitalizer, accomplishing what no drugs can do.

50c. Bottle Free.

If you need Liquozone, and have never tried it, please send us this coupon. We will then mail you an order on your local druggist for a full-size bottle, and we will pay your druggist ourselves for it. This is our free gift, made to convince you; to show you what Liquozone is, and what it can do. In justice to yourself, please accept it to-day, for it places you under no obligation whatever.

Liquozone costs 50c. and $1.

CUT OUT THIS COUPON

for this offer may not appear again. Fill out the blanks and mail it to the Liquid Ozone Co., 221-229 Kinzie St., Chicago.

My disease is .....

I have never tried Liquozone or Powley's Liquified Ozone, but if you will supply me a 50c. bottle free I will take it.

.....

67 .....

D C A .....

Give full address—write plainly.

Liquozone—our trademark name—now appears on every bottle of genuine liquified ozone.

OVER A HUNDRED YEARS MILLING EXPERIENCE

"Well begun is half done."

Start the day well. Much depends on eating a good healthful, hearty breakfast. Food Fads, Flakelets, Pre-digesteds, etc., served cold with cream to "excuse haste," will not serve the place of a good hot dish of thoroughly cooked

OGILVIE OATS

Tasty and invigorating.

The OGILVIE FLOUR MILLS CO. Ltd.
WINNIPEG CANADA MONTREAL

Some men trust to luck in this world, and some others are lucky to get trusted.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

There are 380 packs of hounds maintained in the United Kingdom for hunting the fox, the stag, the hare, and the otter.

As a rule an heiress is more interesting than she looks.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

A boil in the pot is worth two on the back of your neck.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, NOV. 28, 1903.

A FRIENDLY WARNING.

The Toronto News in a long editorial deals with the lack of proper appreciation of the needs of the west by the eastern manufacturer and shows that the manufacturers of the western States keep in closer touch with this market. The article concludes with :

"The importations last year ot the five ports of Manitoba and the Northwest were $9,700,000 of dutiable goods for consumption, out of $136,800,000 imported by the entire country. This does not look reasonable, until it is remembered that by geographical position the imports of these ports are restricted almost wholly to the products of one nation, whose total export to this country was but $68,500,000. Manitoba imports very little that can be further treated by a Canadian industry, and very little from other sources than the United States through her own ports. Last year, therefore, Manitoba and the Northwest did one-seventh of the Canadian buying of dutiable manufactured goods from the United States. For the month of June, the last of the fiscal year, the figures are still more impressive, giving the west one-fifth of the total. The population in 1901 was one-eleventh that of the whole country.

"The explanation is largely that our new American population will continue buying in their old markets until it is properly brought to their attention hat they can buy the same things in tCanada without paying duty. In cases where the Canadian is not answering or cannot answer this demand, American industries are already following the American purchaser across the border, to the greater profit of Canada. That the exodus of Dakotans and Minnesotans into Canada has had much to do with the erection here of branches of American industries cannot be doubted. Such an invasion will not benefit the country if it merely displaces Canadian industries which could fill the demand ; yet some of those industries seem to be inviting it. It is an invasion from which no amount of protection can altogether save them. They must go out and occupy the and."

TIME TO ACT.

The action of the C. P. R. in withdrawing their suits against would-be property-holders on block 4594 is indicative of the Company's intention to drop its claim on this block and to acknowledge the validity of Bill 16 which rescinded a former order transferring this property to the C. P. R.

The government, therefore can have no good reason for delaying longer the adoption of a decisive policy in regard to the disposition of these lands. Premier McBride promised to make known his policy in regard to this matter as soon as the people had endorsed his government at the polls. Hon. Mr. Wilson, more conservative in his promises, said the government could not take any active measures until the year allowed for appeals had elapsed. As the C. P. R. has apparently relinguished its threat to appeal the case to the Privy Council there does not seem to be any necessity for awaiting the fulfillment of the legal term.

No doubt our member will lose no opportunity of pressing this important matter upon the government during the present session. The tie-up of these immensely valuable lands involves the interest of many individuals throughout the country who are impatiently awaiting developments.

READ YOUR POLICY.

Storekeepers, factory owners and others, let alone the ordinary householder, often display a most remarkable amount of carelessness concerning the exact agreement made with the companies which insure them against loss by fire, says the Insurance Chronicle Oftentimes open confession is made that they have not even looked at the conditions governing payment in the event of loss. Would they ever dream of buying or leasing a piece of property, or entering into any ordinary contracts, laboring under any such hazy notion as seem to govern them in this particular? The company makes a bargain. True, but the insured makes a bargain too, if ho would only realize it. And it would be greatly to his own interest as well as to that of the other party to the transaction if he would realize at the beginning instead of, as sometimes after expensive quarrelling.

Though the policy is signed by only one party to the contract, it, under no circumstances, becomes a sight draft for its face, and there are mutual obligationt involved. The payment of a nominal premium or assessment once or twice a year is not all there is in it. The company does not gamble with you at odds against itself of twenty-five fifty or one hundred to one without your assuming some responsibility. The policy is a contract involving a certain sum the same as a contract to construct an elevator, and under conditions it agrees to indemnify you against loss and damage to the extent of your interest in the property described, to an amount not exceeding its fee. For those conditions read your policy.

EDITORIAL NOTES

HIGHER taxation does not necessarily follow incorporation. The taxation is rated according to the expenditure and the expenditure is determined by the people. Why send large sums annually to Victoria and receive a pittance in return when we have the power to keep the money here and to spend it as we see fit?

* * *

Certain reliable papers in Montreal and Ottawa state that the Dominion elections will take place in January or February and they even go so far as to give the exact date. While the members of the cabinet deny that the subject has been mentioned in their cabinet meetings there is little doubt that the premier is contemplating an early appeal to the country and that he is getting outside opinion on the subject before bringing it before the cabinet.

* * *

APROPOS our remarks of last week re the extension of the C. P. R. midwinter rates to Fernie we have since learned that the matter is of more vital importance than we at first supposed. To our personal knowledge there are many people in Fernie contemplating a trip to the east during the coming winter. The completion of the Great Northern branch to Morrissey with regular passenger transportation facilities offers fair competition to the Canadian road. Some of our citizens will undoubtedly patronize the American road if the C. P. R. does not extend the rates to this town. The matter is a purely business affair and we draw attention to it with the belief that the C. P. R. management has not given it the attention it requires.

* * *

It is because many municipalities within the knowledge of most of us have made flagrant mistakes in their government that this town hesitates to make the plunge into the self government current. This hesitation is natural and perhaps wise but it also may be interpreted as indicative of cowardice and inactivity. The Boundary Creek Times has the following timely advice to offer : "Fernie and Cranbrook are both clamoring for incorporation. Both are busy, hustling towns and have reached such proportions that there are many requisites which are evidently impossible to secure without municipal government. There is no good reason why incorporation should not be secured by these two towns. The evils do not lie in incorporation itself, but rather in the bad municipal government which usually follows incorporation. Should these towns be incorporated, they should profit by the experiences of other ambitious cities. It is so easy to start out wrong ; it is so easy to pile up a bonded indebtedness and squander money on non-productive works ; it does not require any great municipal statemanship to sow the wind ; but the whirlwind which must necessarily be reaped in later years is sure to give a great deal of worry and anxiety to those whose duty it is to meet a too heavy municipal debt and an impaired credit. New cities should avoid getting into debt as much as possible and should turn a deaf ear to the wily promoter who is after municipal franchises, and thus destroy the chief source of revenue."

THE Cranbrook people held a rousing meeting this week to discuss incorporation. They appointed a committee "to look into the matter." Fernie got that far several times.

* * *

THE Associated Boards of Trade meeting at Rossland will consider the advisability of a duty on American rough lumber. This matter is already causing considerable discussion and there is no doubt that it will become a live question in the next session of the Dominion House. One argument omitted from our editorial on this subject last week is the freight rates, which discriminate in favor of the American product. It is a fact that Michigan lumber is hauled to the territories for less money than from B. C. though the distance is much greater.

* * *

The Fernie jail has of late been terribly overcrowded, the number of prisoners constantly varying from 19 to 24. This is a disgraceful state of affairs, the like of which has rarely existed in modern times. To crowd a score of men into the space intended for only a third of that number is an exhibition of inhumanity only credited to the barbarous ages, especially when it is considered that the present wretched condition of the jail renders it unfit for human habitation under any consideration. The government has no work on its hands needing more urgent attention than this and it is to be hoped that it will have the matter remedied at the earliest possible moment.

We will sell out the balance of our stock of wall paper at 7 cents a roll.

Crow's Nest Trading Co

Fresh Fruit AND Vegetables arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert Confectioner

J. C. Hutchison

Merchant Tailor

Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings. We Guarantee Our Work.

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to th Assistant Commissioner Lands and Works a Fort Steele, B. C., for a special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following land: Beginning at the southeast corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4568, group 1, on the east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim, which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1904, thence from S. E. corner north eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river, thence southward along said river about eighty-three chains to a point due west of the S. E. corner thence eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July, 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Located by H. C. Tuttle.

Acquiring Homes or paying off Mortgage Debts on easy monthly Instalments just as you now pay Rents

CREE & HUTCHISON

If you prefer we can get you a straight loan.

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.

By the Day, Week, or Month. Everything first-class.

WM. R. McDOUGALL.

Boilers and Engines.

ALSO SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES. Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.

602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Ft. Steele, B. C. for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum upon the following described lands : beginning at a post marked D. Adams' south-west corner post which is situated along Fording river and four miles north of the northern boundary of Lot 4588 in group one, Eas Kootenay district B. C. and which corner post is near the south-east corner post of F. T. Griffin's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 814, thence from said south-west corner of D. Adams east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

249-4 D. ADAMS

Located by W. Bovin, Sept, 18th, 1903.

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

Great Business

That's what we are doing during these cold days

Customers say

Our Prices ON

Men's Overcoats = Ladies' Coats and Ladies' Skirts

Cannot be equalled elsewhere, and prices talk.

Give Us a Call.

Chas. Richards & Co.

The Best Is None Too Good For the People of Fernie

WE aim to supply the very best in every line of meats

Fish, Game and Poultry always on hand.

We receive WEEKLY SHIPMENTS of Choice Dairy Butter and Eggs - - - -

Calgary Cattle Co. LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY

MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

Get your pictures framed at the B. C Furniture Co.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

Come and take tea with us on Wednesday at the bazaar in Princess hall.

The great sale of French pattern hats at London & Liverpool stores, 25 per cent discount. x

We buy, sell and exchange new and second had furniture, stoves, etc. The B. C. Furniture Co.

Liphardt, the jeweler, does the best of engraving from script letter to the finest of monogram work. x

Ebony sets, engraved and filled in with white enamel, make good Christmas presents. At Liphardt's. x

The Trites-Wood Co., Ltd., London & Liverpool stores, offer 25 per cent discount on all pattern hats. x

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Armstrong, of Fort Steele, were the guests of Mrs. Bleasdell for a day or two this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Rennie entertained a large number of friends at a progressive euchre party on Thursday evening.

There will be more fun at the Princess hall on Wednesday and Thursday evenings than you have seen for a long time.

Miss Peters left Monday for Fernie She will be much missed in the work of the Presbyterian church.—Golden Star.

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

Don't forget the grand bazaar to be held in Princess hall on Wednesday next, Dec 2nd, afternoon and evening, commencing 3 p.m. Admission free.

Knights of Pythias badges are very much in evidence in town, W. B. Ganong having presented each member of the Fernie lodge with a beautiful gold button.

G. G. S. Lindsey, K. C., of Toronto, and Jas. McEvoy returned from their trip to the Coast on Tuesday evening. Mr. Lindsey will remain in Fernie several days.

London & Liverpool stores, The Trites Wood Co., only a few of the very newest French pattern hats left and must be sold this week, 25 per cent discount. Many bargains in ladies headwear unheard of. x

The famine for cars is gradually being relieved by the C. P. R. The surplus stock of coke has been steadily decreasing until now it is all gone. At Michel only a small quantity of the big pile remains for shipment.

B. L. Thorne who has charge of the C P. R. development work in their coal property recently acquired at Crows Nest was in town this week to secure miners for the work. He was successful in getting as many as he required.

People like to laugh, and this fact is not overlooked by the Schubert Symphony Club. Several numbers on their program as well as all their encores are full of fun, and you will be highly entertained by their program at the Opera House on December 3.

A meeting of the Ladies Hospital Aid will be held at the home of Mrs. Mott, Gemmill St., Saturday, Dec. 5th, at four o'clock. All members are requested to be present as business of importance is to be transacted. Anyone interested in hospital work will be welcome. By order of the Secretary.

Another gun episode occurred at Coal Creek on Thursday. An Italian named Pat Terranova who was dismissed from the employ of the Coal Company used threatening language to A. Cameron, blacksmith. The latter dispossessed him of a gun which he knew was concealed in his clothing. The Italian was later arrested and prosecuted.

Unloading today car XXX choice Ontario apples.—A. J. Purdy & Co. x

Constable Dow and Coroner Trites went to Elko to investigate into the death of the Indian killed there on the previous day. From the information gathered it was evident that the Indian had been drunk, and his deadened sensibilities prevented him from noticing the approach of the train which killed him. They concluded that an inquest was unnecessary.

For Sale—I have the following in use at my saw mill, Blairmore, which will be for sale at the end of sawing season, 1st. December. Two boilers 50 h.p. on skids, with 50 feet of smoke stack; also one McGregor, Gourlay & Co's planer and matcher, with double cylinder, ane one Economist planer. Particulars can be had by writing Peter McLaren, Macleod, Alta.

The Nelson representatives to the Associated Boards of Trade meeting next week will introduce the following resolution: "That the Associated Boards of Trade of Eastern British Columbia approves of a commercial policy between the Mother Country and her colonies as outlined by the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, and are of the opinion that such a policy would materially benefit the colonies and would tend to strengthen and consolidate the British Empire."

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

H. S. Brandow was at Nelson this week.

A. Good, of Crows Nest, came up on Tuesday.

Your credit is good at The B. C. Furniture Co.

J. A. Cryderman, of the Nelson News is in town.

W. H. Wardrop, of Sparwood, was in town most of the week.

W. W. Tuttle visited Nelson in the early part of the week.

D. L. Dover, the jeweler from Nelson, was in Fernie yesterday.

R. Williams and M. Campbell were in Nelson on Tuesday of this week.

Now is the time to secure good wall paper at a great reduction. Crow's Nest Trading Co.

The Minto Club have arranged for special music for their dance on Tuesday evening.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

The 14 feet annex to the end of the rink makes a very appreciable difference to the skating area of the rink.

Fresh Eggs—Just received 50 cases choice fresh eggs. Selling at lowest prices. Calgary Cattle Co.

Constable Dow took four prisoners to the Nelson jail yesterday. They were R. Wilcox, J. Tisdale. Joe Janiga and J. Rogers.

The hockey boys held their first practice on Wednesday evening. The recent soft weather has put an end to the skating season for the time being.

Nothing can take the place of your photo for a Xmas token. Your last chance for 1903 to have it taken at Prest's studio will be Nov. 19th to 28th.

J. R. Martin, timber inspector, has received instructions from the government to withdraw the seizure from the Carbon Creek Lumber Co's. property so there will be no sale next week.

Another of the popular teas will be given by Mrs. H. A. Wilkes, Tuesday, Dec. 1st, from 3 to 6 for the ladies and from 8 to 10 for the young people. Admission 15 cents. All are cordially invited.

Night School

Learn to write a good hand. Learn Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. Our methods are up-to-date. Class room 1st door west of Methodist church. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

To-morrow being St. Andrews Day the services at Christ Church will be as follows. Matins and Holy Communion, 11 a.m.; Sunday School, 2:30 p.m.; Evensong, 7:30 p.m. Special hymns will be sung. Collection in aid of church expenses.

Lawyer Thompson, of Cranbrook, was here on legal business yesterday.

R. L. Galbraith, of Fort Steele, was in town this week.

E. E. Phair the Nelson hotel man, was in Fernie this week.

Dr. J. K. Barrett, a specialist from Winnipeg, was a visitor at Fernie this week.

J. S. Carter and B, R. Dawson, C. P. R. officials from Nelson, were in Fernie this week.

WANTED—Faithful person to travel for well established house in a few counties, calling on retail merchants and agents, Local territory. Salary $20.00 per week with expenses additional, all payable in cash each week. Money for expenses advanced. Position permanent. Business successful and rushing. Standard House, 330 Dearborn St., Chicago. M5

WAKEFUL CHILDREN.

For a long time the two year old child of Mr. P. L. McPherson, 59 N. Tenth St. Harrisburg, Pa., would sleep but two or three hours in the early part of the night, which made it very hard for her parents. Her mother concluded that the child had stomach trouble, and gave her half of one of Chamberlains Stomach and Liver Tablets, which quieted her stomach and she slept the whole night through. Two boxes of these tablets have effected a permanent cure and she is now well and strong. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Xmas Presents

Now is the time to select your Xmas presents with a small deposit and have us put them away for you.

New Stock

arriving daily, we will have the finest stock in the Kootenay to choose from.

A. C. Liphardt

Watchmaker and Jeweller

Our Motto:

"Often the Cheapest, Always the Best."

IMPROVE and Keep Your Health by drinking fragrant and reliable brands of

Teas

such as

Ram Lal's

The oldest standard on the Canadian market.

Lipton's

World's Celebrated.

Maple Leaf

Reliable as the Emblem of Canada.

Try a sample of them.

Crow's Nest Trading Company.

The Muskoka Hotel,

....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

T. H. Whelan, Manager.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

Fernie Coal Creek Trites-Wood Co., Limited Michel Morrissey

London & Liverpool Stores

- Fernie -

Hot Sellers for Cold Weather

The days left in this month we are going to devote to the selling of Men's Goods. You know what we mean when we advertise bargains for men. We cannot name all prices here but enough to satisfy you the values are right.

Underwear Specials

Fleece Lined at..... 85c suit

Good Wool at..... 1.50 "

Wool Fleeced at..... 1.25 "

Extra Heavy Wool at... 2.25 "

And then one Table loaded with odd garments clean the lot up at Half Price

Clothing Specials

$1.50 per pair for good heavy wool pants the price just a little more than good pay for overalls.

$2 buys a splendid Blue or Black Serge Pants just what others ask you 2.75 for.

The next three lines 2.50, 3.00 and 3.50 never in B.C. in any one store has there been such a collection of fine Pants and the price almost half the regular one. Fine Serges, self-colored stripes, neat checks, fine stripes and all made in the latest and correct styles.

Men's Suits

as we expect this sale to surpass all past clothing sales you must come and see for yourself the values we place before you at this sale; to write the merits of each of the prices quoted here space will not permit. Here are the prices:

4.50, 5.00, 5.50, 6.00, 7.00, 9.00 and 10.00 Pants, Coat and Vest.

Other Lines of Men's Goods in this sale, German Sox, all kinds of Rubbers, the best 25c Wool Sox in Canada, Mitts, Gloves, Collars, Ties, Hats & Caps

The Trites-Wood Co.

Limited

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

ACCURACY

We pride ourselves on our Prescription Department. There is a great deal in knowing that your Prescription will be filled just as your physician wishes it to be filled.

PURITY

This is where we aim to excel, we buy only the best drugs and chemicals, and supply only the best, just what your doctor orders, always

"COMPETENCY"

Our Prescription Department is under the management of the proprietor, whose Thirty-five Years Experience should be sufficient guarantee.

Our prescription clerks are qualified and competent, the drugs and chemicals may be relied upon and our system of checking is a positive safe guard against errors.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

A. S. EMPY'S

...Restaurant

Wardner, B. C.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk Rive Commencing at the south west corner of A Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HALBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Halberton.

"Oi'd loike to luk into the olye av the felly that's a-bossin' 'em an' see fhat his thrick'll be," said Sergeant Mick. "Av Oi was him an' things so quoit in front av me, Oi'd think he was sneakin' for a back holt. Coppyral Brainard, fhat's yer own opinion?"

"Same as yours, sergeant," Brainard replied. "He doesn't know how few we are, for we've fired a great many shots, and he doesn't imagine we have breechloaders. Probably he thinks his enemy has left his front and is trying to flank him. I wonder, though, that he doesn't send out skirmishers to look into the situation over here."

"Thrue fer yez. It's ividint yez didn't lave yer brains in yer bunk back in camp. Now moind whoile Oi spake to yez all. Call in thim min on the flanks—tell 'em to come on their han's an' knees. Are yez all here? Thin listen: Av they sind skirmishers over, we mustn't let none av 'em git back, ilse their boss'll know how wake our line is, an' they'll try to cut off our rigimint from camp, unless maybe the rigimint's already done the same by them, an' they'll ate us up intoirely.

"So we must kape ivery dhivil av 'em from gittin' back. Scatter to the roight an' lift whin the skirmishers come. Let 'em git over the fince an' toward the horses. Thin close in an' give it to 'em in the back wid yer pistols, an' don't foire till yer so close that yez can't miss 'em. They can't foire more than wan shot apiece—the skirmishers can't—if ye don't give 'em a chance to reload."

"An' how'll we git away then, with the Johnnies close to our horses?" asked big Pat Callahan.

"Git away, is it? Ye don't git away till ye kill me—ye or any av ye. We're here to hould the fince, an' here we stay till the rigimint comes, or we go to glory. If yer pistol gits impty, pick up a fince rail an' use it loike a lance or a polke. Glory be to the polkes av auld Oireland that me gran'father an' his neighbors used ag'in the English! Thim pine rails is loight, an' they're longer than a musket with a bay'nit on it. Punch below the belt wid 'em. Don't fear, for Oi'm the referee in this foight, an' Oi won't cry 'foul!' no matter fhat ye do to 'em. A fince rail jab below the belt 'll kape any wan av 'em quiet till we can rayson wid him. Whin"—

"Sergeant," said Brainard, "I beg your pardon, but the enemy's going to do something."

"Attin-tion!" Mick commanded. All of us peered between the rails. There was a perceptible movement along the enemy's front, and at their left flank a single fieldpiece was pushed forward. Suddenly that fieldpiece was fired, and we heard a loud volley of musketry and hundreds of bullets whistling over us, nitting tree trunks and cutting twigs. Sergeant Mick, the only man who was standing, turned suddenly on his heel and looked behind him as if he had dropped something. Apparently shot or a bit of grape from the fieldpiece had come his way, for Mick's left arm was severed just above the elbow and hung by a strip or two of his sleeve.

"Will somebody loose that thing from me?" said Mick.

I drew my knife from its sheath in my boot and cut the shreds of sleeve, dropping the arm to the ground. Two other men quickly bound the stump with a handkerchief twisted rope fashion, putting under it a bit of dead stick in lieu of tourniquet. It was every trooper's duty to know what to do in case of accident. Mick turned and looked again toward the enemy, laughed and said:

"Do yez moind the cunnin' av the baste? That volley was to hoide the skirmishers wid shmoke. Here they come! There's not more than wan comp'ny av 'em. Oi hope it's big. Reminber the fince rails, min. Glory be to the poikes av auld Oireland! Don't let a man git back! Scatter, now, roight an' lift. Coppyral Frost, would yez moind givin' me that arm av moine?"

It struck one of the Johnnies and knocked him down.

"What in"— I began. Mick opened three middle buttons of his jacket and said softly—the first time I had ever heard a soft note in the nutmeg grater voice of Mick McTwyny:

"It's been around me swateheart. If Oi'm kilt, Oi'd loike it buried wid me."

'Twas no time for ceremony, yet I bowed twice, first to the arm, then to its owner, as Mick thrust the fragment of himself into the front of his jacket, and he and I made way to the left under cover of the fence.

The skirmishers came on in fine style, fixing bayonets as they ran. We afterward learned that they had supposed the way clear and had merely come to make assurance doubly sure. They soon found themselves in error and the next few minutes were uncomfortable in the extreme for all concerned. Shooting at men at short pistol range is depressing work unless the shooter is drunk. Shooting any man in the back is unmanly work. To fire into the backs of brave soldiers for whom you know that fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters and sweethearts and wives and children are longing and hoping and praying is not doing as you would be done by. But war is war. Besides, not all our shots took effect. Revolver shots seldom do except when men are never out of practice. I begged Mick to save his own revolver charge for self defense, but he snarled at the suggestion. Then I reminded him that an empty revolver would do some effective work if held by the barrel and used as a hammer. When the pistol firing began to slacken, Sergeant Mick shouted:

"Don't fergit the fince rails! Glory be to the polkes av auld Oireland!"

A fence rail could not be wielded with one hand, but Mick did not seem embarrassed. He thrust his empty revolver into his belt and fought with his uninjured arm, the winner in many a fist fight. He did wonders at dodging, tripping and "slugging" as he ran to and fro near the fence to head off such gray skirmishers as might attempt to fall back. I, with my fence rail, followed him closely and succeeded in preventing some awkward situations, for the reach of an arm does not equal that of a musket with a bayonet on it. When either of us downed a man, Mick followed with a vigorous kick below the belt. The kicks were brutal, but it was Mick's duty to hold the line of that fence. The odds were heavily against him, and he was obliged to use any and all means within reach.

Fighting with fence rails as weapons was new to us, but we took to it kindly. We had to. They demanded a lot of free space, which was not always to be had, for the tree trunks would not get out of our way, and some of us came to grief while downed by our weapons having collided with trees. Once I rushed to Brainard's assistance, supposing him in deadly peril, for two of the few remaining Johnnies closed on him with their bayonets ready to lunge. But Brainard turned like a teetotum, holding his rail horizontally. It struck one of the Johnnies and knocked him down. In an instant Brainard jumped and landed with both feet on the stomach of the fallen man. He also said, "I beg your pardon," but the fallen man's reply was couched in language unfit for publication. Then Brainard's rail struck the other man below the belt, and he, too, fell. Sergeant Mick saw the encounter and screamed:

"Hooray, Brainard! Ye little dhivill I'll thrain ye up to the loightweight championship av Ameriky whin we git back to Summerton."

About this time there was a visible scarcity of Johnnies in fighting trim. In fact, there was but one—the only officer who seemed to be with the party. He had an eye like a hawk and had dashed to and fro as rapidly as if trying to learn our number and resources. Suddenly it occurred to him that he had done and learned all in his power and that it was time to return. I tried to head him off and bring my rail to bear upon him. At the same moment Mick roared:

"Grab their muskets an' their ammynition! Git back to the fince an' foire wid 'em as fast as yez kin! Niver moind aimin', but make all the noise yez kin, so they'll think we've cleaned out their skirmishers an' are beginnin' the foight ag'in!"

Fully half of us had had some militia practice with muskets, and all the others had used muzzle loaders against large or small game before the war, so we made quite a racket, which, to my delight, caused the enemy to break into companies and move to the rear under the natural impression that their skirmishers had been overcome and we had resumed business at the old stand.

But I was still in chase of the officer. Once I succeeded in knocking him down by tripping him, but he was on his feet again in an instant. Suddenly I saw Sergeant Mick near me, brandishing his severed arm. The sleeve had fallen from it, and it was really a sightly though displaced human member. I would give half my possessions and hopes for one like it, for 'twas a mass of muscle, with an elbow joint as big and protuberant as a cobblestone. Mick raised it to the position of "rear cut against cavalry" and landed it fairly on the back of the officer's neck. The officer instantly landed on his own back, and the fight for the fence was over. Then Mick looked across the fence, saw the retiring enemy and croaked:

"They've throwed up the sponge! Niver moind the killed an' wounded just yet. Look quick to the Johnnies as was punched wid the fince rails! Glory be to the polkes av auld Oireland! An' tie the han's an' fate av thim that's gittin' over bein' groggy."

We obeyed orders and found some very sick men, whom we bound so they could not get away when they recovered. Then we did our best for the wounded. Mick had already sent another mounted messenger in search of the regiment to report that the enemy was retiring, and there was a fine chance for a chase and a charge. But the regiment was not found. It found us two hours later. The affair appeared to have been one of many of its kind, in which an advance of the enemy, reconnoitering in force, had been reported so imperfectly by negroes from beyond the lines that our regiment had taken the wrong road, found nothing and, like many times before, cursed "the reliable contraband" and grumbled at a long, hard ride for nothing. But they buried the enemy's dead for us, which was great comfort, for to kill a man and then have to bury him is worse than war. I think it's worse than hell.

"Hadn't you better go back to camp, sergeant, now that the fuss is over?" suggested Brainard as we waited for the regiment. "Your wound needs attention."

Mick did not seem to hear. He was leaning against his horse, looking tenderly at his severed arm, and we heard him say, as if he were alone with it:

"Ah, Norah, little did yez iver know av the strength ye was puttin' into that arm whin 'twas around yer swate waist!"

CHAPTER XXI.

A CHAT WITH THE COLONEL.

FOR Brainard's sake I was glad the fight had occurred, for it seemed to me that it should have put Phil Hamilton's possible chance out of his mind. But as soon as we reached camp the few sick list men and shirkers who had remained behind began to croak a story supposed to have filtered from the colonel's tent through several intermediaries that the colonel had been in a rage about the explosions of my relics in our old camp, that had made him suppose the enemy were shelling us as we evacuated the post, and that he was going to make an example of the guilty party. Sure enough, we had not been in camp more than two hours when the orderly sergeant of our company came to our tent and said:

"The colonel wants to see you two at once."

We looked at each other and tried to smile, but failed.

"It seems to me," said I, "that our share of the fight at the fence ought to mitigate our punishment—I mean my own punishment, for you did nothing in that shell affair but tell about it, like a fool. I suppose that even now you'll try to make the colonel believe that you had some share in it, so as to shield me."

"I wish I could," replied Brainard meekly. "I wish I hadn't told of it when the colonel was so mystified about the shots, but really it did seem for the good of the service."

"You're too good to live," said I. "Come along. I hope you'll come in for some share of the punishment, you unspeakable lunatic."

Nevertheless for a corporal to be summoned by his colonel has a sobering effect, so I fought down my feelings and tried to assume a bold front as I dragged Brainard across the parade ground.

"Pass them in, sentry," said the colonel from the open front of his tent as we drew near. We stopped at the tent flaps, saluted and stood at "attention."

"Come in, gentlemen," said the colonel, with an odd smile which nevertheless seemed not ugly. "Sit down."

Both of us dropped nervelessly on the colonel's camp bed, the only seat visible. The colonel was handling some papers which I promptly assumed were court martial charges against us.

"I was greatly surprised and also pleased," continued the colonel, still handling the papers, "at receiving today commissions for both of you—commissions as first lieutenants."

I looked at Brainard, and Brainard looked at me, and I don't understand why both of us did not drop dead with astonishment. The colonel went on:

"I had hoped to promote both of you in the course of time, after you had reached sergeant's grade—Brainard, because of your rescuing your party from the enemy after capture and for getting that dispatch through to the left a few nights ago, and, Frost, because I've learned that you spent a lot of money in trying to get recruits for the regiment at the time you entered it. I'm not the only influence with the appointing power. Political and other strings are being pulled for scores of my noncommissioned officers, and some of this sort of work seems to have been done for you boys."

"Not for me, sir, that I know of," said Brainard quickly.

"Eh? Well, so much the more to your credit. Nevertheless 'tis true. You're both commissioned to the Forty-third. It seems from a letter accompanying your commissions that the Forty-third is in a bad way—good men, bad officers—so bad that the command can't be trusted to take the field. A lot of the officers have been weeded out, and the governor wished to replace them with men from regiments that are in good shape and have seen hard service. The senator from your district strongly recommended you, Frost, and called your father up to Albany, and it seems that your father took with him a handsome young woman who told an extraordinary story of your bravery and produced a letter in evidence. I can't understand how I, your colonel, failed to have learned the facts, but"—

[CONTINUED.]

Sad Part of It.

"What did you do with that fellow who stole the horse?" asked the tenderfoot.

"Nothin' much," answered Broncho Bill—"jist took the hoss away from him."

"Is that all?"

"Yep. He war settin' in the saddle with a rope around his neck tied to a tree when we took the hoss away, though."

INSECT PESTS.

Dr. O. Howard's Lecture on Fruit Scales—Little Insects That Destroy Orchards and Fruit—Where Nature Comes In.

The first of the series of lectures endowed by Sir Sandford Fleming, under the auspices of the Canadian Institute, was delivered on Saturday night in the new medical building, Toronto, by Dr. L. O. Howard, chief entomologist of the American Bureau of Agriculture, upon "Some International Work With Insects," Sir Sandford Fleming being unavoidably absent, the chair was occupied by the President of the Canadian Institute, Prof. Coleman, who spoke briefly in introducing Dr. Howard.

Dr. Howard is one of the greatest living authorities on the subject of entomology. Referring to the principal insects which affect agriculture and horticulture in North America, he stated that they are not native species, but have been imported from abroad, and mainly from Europe. He said that European species when accidentally imported into the United States, particularly into the southern States, seem to thrive and multiply with extraordinary facility and fecundity. One reason for this is the longer summer and the greater sum total of heat during the breeding period. Another reason is that the natural enemies which keep them in check in their native home have been left behind.

Enormous sums have been spent by fruit-growers in their attempts by spraying and other means to destroy noxious insects. The orange and olive trees in California were almost destroyed by various kinds of scale. Twenty years ago the white scale was overcome by a ladybug from Australia. The same insect was afterwards sent to Egypt, Portugal and South Africa, where it accomplished the same beneficial results. More recently the olive trees have been similarly relieved of the white scale.

He told in some detail of the search for the parasite that is the natural enemy of the San Jose scale, first in Japan and then successfully in China, where the home of the scale was found, and along with it the insect that feeds on it and keeps its ravages within bounds. Two of these insects were brought to Washington two years ago and cared for until they multiplied and proved their worth, and this year 400 colonies of these insects were sent out, and on the whole the results have been satisfactory, altogether satisfactory in certain States. Investigation is to be made in South America for an insect that will destroy the San Jose scale in northern as well as southern climates.

Another beneficial importation from abroad was described: the Smyrna fig crop of Mediterranean regions is the standard crop of dried figs of the world; America had never been able to raise any Smyrna figs; at several points in California the trees had been planted, but the fruit would fall without ripening; an investigation showed that in Asia Minor it is the custom of the natives to bring wild figs and hang them in the branches of the Smyrna figs, whereupon minute insects issued from the wild figs, and covered with pollen, entered the Smyrna figs and fertilized them; wild fig trees were then imported into California, and after several failures the fertilizing insect was also imported and established. The result is that in certain places in California many tons of dried Smyrna figs of a superior quality are now put upon the market annually.

The Seychelles.

The King has approved the issue of letters creating the Seychelles (hitherto a dependency of Mauritius) a separate colony. The formal ceremony of publication was postponed until November 7, when Sir C. Bruce, Governor of Mauritius, arrived. Mr. E. B. Sweet-Escott, the present Administrator of the group, will be the first Governor of the new colony. The Seychelles are among the hundred or more islands scattered over the Indian Ocean, which have hitherto been dependencies of Mauritius. They are between the parallels of S. lat. 4 deg. and 5 deg., 934 miles from Mauritius, 600 from Madagascar, and 970 from Zanzibar. Their total area is 50,120 acres and the population is nearly 20,000 the largest and most populous island being Mahe, which is about seventeen miles long and four to seven miles broad. Mahe was originally captured from the French in 1794, and on the capture of Mauritius in 1810 the whole group was formally taken possession of. The finances of the Seychelles were separated from those of the Mauritius in 1872, and in 1888 they were given a separate Administrator and Council, while in 1897 the Administrator was given the full powers of a Governor.

Staggered Our Tactful King.

There are times when the most tactful of men are taken aback by some unexpected retort. Such an experience befell King Edward of England, in connection with the visit colonial troops to London at the of the South African contingent of termination of the Boer War. One of the Cape scouts was an unmistakable mulatto, with a magnificent record for gallantry, however. The King was reviewing the men, walking down their extended line, and occasionally speaking to one of them. Opposite the colored man he stopped.

"And who are you, my man?" he asked.

The soldier straightened up, saluted, and replied gravely:

"I'm a nigger, youah Majesty."

The "most tactful ruler in Europe" was nonplussed by the unlooked-for reply. But he managed to say:

"Good! Then remain so, my brave fellow." With this he passed on.

The English Mile.

The English statue mile was first defined in the thirty-fifth year of Queen Elizabeth. Before that time it was put down at 5,000 feet.

A brilliant signal light at Atlantic City is visible nineteen miles at sea. Each year it burns 2,200 gallons of oil.

There was a decrease of over 30 per cent. in the exports of cheese from the United States in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, as compared with the year preceding.

Twelve million pounds' worth of leather is required every year to provide boots and shoes for the inhabitants of Great Britain.

The first prune tree was planted in California in 1870 by a Frenchman, who brought the tree to this continent from France. The first orchard—of 10 acres—began to yield in 1876.

IS THERE POISON IN YOUR BLOOD ?

Then the Liver and Kidneys Have Failed to Perform Their Mission and You Need

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

If you are not well there must be a reason for it. Most of the common ills of life arise from poison in the system. If you would be well you must remove this cause of disease.

The work of the blood is two-fold. It supplies nourishment to the body and collects the impure and poisonous waste matter. This poisonous material is removed from the blood by the action of the liver and kidneys. When these organs fail the poison is carried back through the system in the circulation of the blood and causes disease.

Where is your weak spot? Just there you may first expect to feel the effects of poison in the system. It may be stomach trouble or lung trouble, kidney disease or heart disease, but the beginning is with the inaction of the great filtering organs—the liver and kidneys.

Nine-tenths of the ills of everyday life may be cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, because they set the liver, kidneys and bowels right, and so cleanse and invigorate the system.

Have you come to realize the importance of keeping the bowels regular and the liver and kidneys active? You will appreciate Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, not only on account of their wonderful promptness, but also for their lasting effect on the system. They get at the very foundation of ill-health, and by removing the cause bring cure.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, the comfort of old age, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Reliable Jewelry by Mail

We make all our Jewelry in our own factory, hence the reason for our extraordinary values. We mention a few items:

4181	Amethyst Ring,	$2 50
4276	Ladies' Signet Ring, 14 k. Gold,	3 00
4247	Opal and 6 Fine Pearls,	5 00
4222	14 k. Ring, 3 whole Pearls,	10 00
4062	14 k. Ring, 3 Turquoise and Pearls,	10 00
3959	Diamond Ring, 3 Fine Diamonds,	25 00

SEND FOR OUR NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE AND PRICE LIST.

156 YONGE ST. AMBROSE KENT & SONS LIMITED MANUFACTURING JEWELERS. TORONTO.

Some children comfort their parents when old age overtakes them, and some prevent old age from overtaking them.

PAINS, LIKE THE POOR, ARE ALWAYS WITH US.—That portion of man's life which is not made up of pleasure is largely composed of pain and to be free from pain is a pleasure. Simple remedies are always the best in treating bodily pain, and a safe, sure and simple remedy is Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. You cannot do wrong in giving it a trial when required.

No man knows what it is to be a woman—and ought to be glad of it.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc.

Love usually renders a man colorblind as to complexions.

A physician who is a specialist in nervous diseases says that nervous women should sleep at least nine hours at night and one in the daytime.

When a fleet goes on a cruise the crews go on the fleet.

If a play has a short run it usually means a long walk for the players.

The woman who is first to adopt a new fad is also the first to draw the at a new wrinkle.

Gypsy Smith well says that he believes in a fence at the edge of a precipice rather than a hospital at the bottom.

Worry won't cure a cough.
When you find a cough holding on —when everything else has failed—try

Shiloh's Consumption Cure The Lung Tonic

It is guaranteed to cure.
Try a bottle—
if it doesn't cure you
we'll refund your money.

Prices 25c., 50c. and $1.00

S. C. WELLS & CO.
Toronto, Can. LeRoy, N.Y. 4

Detected by a Misspelt Word.

In a case of political importance, the whole case of which hinged upon the question of the genuineness of certain letters, the most important witness was, while under examination, suddenly taken by surprise by being called upon to write down a particular word which occurred in the letters. The slip of paper was handed back with the word misspelt in an identically similar fashion to that in which it appeared in the correspondence, and the clever forger was soon after detected in the witness himself.

It isn't the shortcomings of a young man that the girl's father objects to; it's his long stayings.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by all druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

It's useless for some women to deny that they married for money after you see their husbands.

Lieut. W. E. Safford, recently of the navy, but now of the department of Agriculture at Washington, has about 200 books from the library of Robert Louis Stevenson. Among them is the Bible which belonged to Stevenson's father.

No matter which way an election goes, the members of a brass band are usually sure of a job.

Character is the poor man's capital.

If you hate another, it is slow suicide for yourself.

Men call their own carelessness and inactivity fate.

The lucky man is the one who grasps his opportunity.

"What do you go to Sunday-school for, little girl?"

"Because my mamma makes me."

"What do you do when you get there?"

"I wait till it's out."

Pleasant as syrup; nothing equals it as a worm medicine; the name is Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. The greatest worm destroyer of the age.

Sometimes it is difficult to distinguish between contentment and laziness.

People seldom appreciate anything they can afford.

A woman's idea of a secret is something worth telling.

Results from common soaps: eczema, coarse hands, ragged clothes, shrunken flannels.

SUNLIGHT SOAP REDUCES EXPENSE

Ask for the Octagon Bar 837

CAN SOON TALK ACROSS OCEAN

Transatlantic Telephone Promised Within a Year.

FASTER CABLE MESSAGES

Repeating Stations in Telegraphic Communication to be Established Within Three Months—Four Times Faster Than Cable.

Prophecy is dangerous, but with a full realization of its pitfalls a London correspondent of the Mail and Empire (Toronto) ventures the following prediction: Within three months, probably before New Year, direct telephone communication, without intermediate repeating stations, will be established for the first time between New York and London, and telegrams will be exchanged at a speed of more than four times the previous capacity of any cable.

I am tempted to go a step further and express the strong expectation that within a year it will be feasible to converse by telephone between New York and London as it is across the City of New York.

Perhaps it is as well to confess that it is easy to prophesy when you know. The feat of rapid communication between London and New York as a matter of fact has been greatly surpassed recently in actual practice; in other words, the problem of cheap and rapid long distance communication has been solved and the credit for this signal triumph of modern science belongs to England.

I am compelled to await the permission of the inventors before making more than this general announcement.

SHIP GRAIN ALL WINTER

C. P. R. Will Handle Two Hundred Cars of Wheat Daily.

A dispatch from Fort William says a busy winter is promised for the trainmen on the eastern division of the C. P. R., as it is the intention of the Canadian Pacific to ship a large proportion of the grain now in the west to the east by all-rail. Superintendent Erickson has received word from Montreal to have his division in readiness by December 1 to handle 200 cars of east-bound freight daily during the close of navigation. A special rate is to be given any shipments of wheat to European markets.

The C. P. R. have inaugurated a winter steamship service from St. John, N.B., and the grain will be carried to that port for trans-shipment to England by their own steamers. By this service the company is in a position to quote a rate which it is expected will be taken advantage of by a large number of western shippers, and it is anticipated that by the opening of navigation there will be but little export grain for shipment by the lake route.

Previous to this winter the large proportion of grain was stored in the C. P. R. elevators at Fort William and the Northwest to be transshipped east by boat via the lakes at the opening of navigation. With the grain going east by the all-rail route it will naturally affect the shipping trade at the head of the lakes next season. Large shipments of flour will also be made by the all-rail route.

New Railroad Deal Rumored.

The Manitoba Free Press representative at Fort William is informed that a new railway deal is now pending whereby the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern are going to be independent of any connection with the Grand Trunk. It is said the Canadian Northern propose building a line from North Bay or Sudbury on the C. P. R. to Toronto, over which the Canadian Pacific will have running powers, and in return for this the C. P. R. will grant the Canadian Northern running privileges over the C.P.R. line from Port Arthur to Sudbury. The informant of the above deal says it is from pretty reliable sources and that in time it will be a reality. The C. P. R. at present utilizes the Grand Trunk between North Bay and Toronto for direct Toronto business.

New Pass Through Rockies.

A dispatch from Dawson City says: N. W. Cragie and George Bull, Mackenzie river hunters, have discovered a new pass across the Rockies, which shortens the distance to Mackenzie river over three hundred miles. The old trail by Porcupine river swung around Dawson in a great semi-circle. The new trail through the Zola pass gives a direct course to Twelve Mile river, and joins the Yukon just below Dawson. The Zola pass was even unknown to the Indians. It is much easier than the one formerly used. The Zola pass leads direct to Blackstone river, a tributary to the Peel, which is a tributary of the Mackenzie.

A resident of St. Jean, Man., has invented a new riding gang plow.

The grain boats Erin and Danforth are believed to be lost on Lake Superior.

Two prizefighters have been arrested at Vancouver on a charge of being highwaymen.

The five-year-old daughter of Chas. Thompson, of Penetanguishene, climbed up on a buggy and fell with her head in the spokes of the wheel and was strangled.

GIVEN TO INDIANS.

White Children Said to Be in Keeping of Siawashes.

In a recent number of the Victoria Times (B.C.,) was published an interview with W. F. Best, a Vancouver man who has just returned from a 200-mile trip up the Skeena, who reported that he found white children of tender age in the keeping of Indian families. These children, he said, have been turned over to northern tribesmen and are being reared under native environment, with all its superstitions and unwholesome influences, and in many cases are being unkindly treated by their Indian guardians. The Times continues:—"These children, of whom there are several in the north, have, Mr. Best learns, been taken from orphanage institutions, a number having come from Vancouver. One was brought south on the steamer Danube. It is a bright little child of about 5 years of age. An Indian woman accompanied the youngster, and both were going to New Westminster. There the child was to be taken from the woman and returned probably to the institution from which it was taken when very young. Complaints have been made of the miserable creature who was acting as its guardian. She had been drinking heavily and was giving the child scant nourishment, and altogether improper care. But this case is only one of several which came to the notice of Mr. Best. Probably a more pathetic case was reported from Masset, over on Queen Charlotte Islands. A white child was there given to a family of natives at a time when they had no children of their own. At first much fuss was made over the little one. The natives lavished a great deal of kindness on it. But after a while Indian children were born in the family and the attention which the tiny white stranger received grew gradually less until now the child is reported to be severely ill-treated. Mr. Best says that there are three white children in the care of Indians at Essington. They were given them, it is understood, through the medium of an Indian missionary, and astonishment has been expressed that so little interest has been manifested in the welfare of the little ones."

Rev. Dr. E. D. McLaren, who spent fourteen years in Vancouver, and during that time travelled extensively in British Columbia and knows conditions there probably as well as any one, when shown the clipping from the Times said he was pretty certain that Mr. Best had been mistaken. "I never heard of such a thing while I was in British Columbia," said he, "and I may say that I know the two children's societies, the Alexandra Orphanage and the Children's Aid, thoroughly, and would not hesitate in saying that I do not believe the story in the slightest particular. As for missionaries giving white children to the Indians, the idea is preposterous."

KILLS TO BE HUMANE.

Mrs. Murray, Vegetarian and Farmer, Sows But Never Reaps.

A dispatch from New Brunswick, N.J., says: Mrs. Evelyn W. Murray, owner and occupant of the old Snyder Frelinghusen farm, on the road from Somerville to South Branch, is disposing of the live stock on the farm by having it put to death, although the stock is in the best of health.

Mrs. Murray is one of the wealthiest women in Somerset county. She is prominent in the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and has a horror of having any suffering come to the animals on her farm. Many of the animals have been on the place since she bought it. She does not believe in eating meat and will not allow any of her stock to be sold lest it go into the hands of the butcher. Of late she has been having all the calves born on the place chloroformed immediately after birth, so that they will not become veal.

Last week, by Mrs. Murray's direction, Dr. E. R. Voorhees, veterinary, of Somerville, killed four full-grown cows and a bull about three years old, by poison injections which brought about the quickest death possible to them. Mrs. Murray has planned this for about two years. The carcasses of the cattle were brought to this city.

Two dogs were put to death at the same time. Mrs. Murray is preparing for a systematic slaughtering of the rest of her stock, including two fine carriage horses, also an old horse and mule which have been for many years on the farm. She has given up driving and goes about the country in a large automobile.

Mrs. Murray is said to have other peculiar ideas regarding her farm. Crops are raised but never harvested, and wither away in the fields while food for the stock is purchased in large quantities.

A CLEVER CAPTURE.

How the London Police Caught the Great Jewel Thieves.

A London cable says: Four men were arrested simultaneously in different parts of London on Nov. 15 in connection with the great robbery of West End jewellers two months ago, when they got away with $60,000 worth of valuables. The thieves seemed to have left no clue, but the detectives found finger prints on a piece of candle. These were photographed and then compared with the police records. The prints were found to resemble those of a well known thief, and he and his confederates were traced and watched. They returned to their London haunts some days ago with plenty of money. All were caught in their beds by detectives disguised by milkmen. Part of the stolen jewellery was recovered.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier observed his 62nd birthday on Nov. 20.

"Advertised Responsibility"

The liberal advertising of many years has created in the public a justifiable expectation that the "Slater" Shoe combines comfort, durability, fit, shape-retention and beauty and to hold its trade its makers are compelled to make it as good as the public expects.

Goodyear Welted

Slater Shoe

For Men - $4.00 $5.00 - For Women

Sole Agents :-- JOYCE BRO'S., FERNIE, B. C.

TO RENDER SHIPS NON-SINKABLE

Successful Experiments Tried at Portsmouth.

A NEW AUTOMATIC DEVICE

Watertight Bulkhead Doors Can be Closed Simultaneously From the Bridge—Hamburg-American Liner is Fitted With New Device.

A London cable says: A large party of experts journeyed to Southampton recently to inspect a new patent fitted on the Hamburg-American liner Deutschland by an English firm, by means of which a steamer can be rendered practically unsinkable. The method is one known as the Stone-Lloyd system, and the demonstration took place in perfect smoothness, and fully showed the value of the invention. All steamers are now-a-days divided into watertight compartments by bulkheads, and for greater security passenger steamers of the first-class are so divided into numerous compartments. For the purpose of working the ship these bulkheads have to be pierced with openings for the passage of officers, engineers, firemen and others, which openings are fitted with watertight doors. There are twenty-four of these in the Deutschland. At the approach of danger orders are issued for all bulkheads to be closed, and if these orders are carried out each compartment is rendered individually watertight and secure. On the other hand, should mishap occur suddenly or any other cause prevent the closing of the bulkhead doors the division of the ship's hull into water-tight compartments is ineffective. The list of disasters arising from a failure to close the bulkhead openings is the measure of the importance of a system that removes the possibility of failure.

By means of the Stone-Lloyd system all the water-tight doors in a ship can be closed in a few seconds, either individually or collectively, from the captain's bridge or any other convenient point, and should this precaution be neglected the entrance of water into any one or more compartments would automatically close the bulkhead doors of those compartments. The system obviates all risk of failure from any conceivable cause. A warning bell sounds before the door commences to descend. The door descends gradually. The violent method in other systems of allowing doors to fall by their own weight in order that the impetus may be sufficient to crash through obstacles in the path of the descending door is entirely obviated, and the doors close at a regulated speed under pressure amply powerful to cut through three or four feet of coal. In the event of a sudden mishap—say a collision—the officer in charge on the bridge by moving a lever sounds warning bells throughout the ship, and at the same time releases the action which sets all the bulkhead doors in motion. Within a few seconds all are effectively closed. An automatic indicator fixed on the bridge shows the position of every bulkhead door, so that the officer in charge can never be in doubt as to whether one or all are open or closed.

South Africa has now become one of Britain's best customers.

Col. Evans, C.B., Winnipeg, may be transferred to Lord Dundonald's staff.

In the Lumberman's Shanty.

One of the hardest things in the life of the lumbermen, the miner and the prospector is being deprived of the good things to eat which men have who live comfortably at home.

The Victor Brand of Evaporated Cream has brought the luxury of good living into the camp and the shanty. For all cooking purposes, for Tea and for Coffee it is fully equal to the richest fluid cream.

Mfd. by The Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P. E. I.

A Farmer Wrote Us Recently:

"The Berliner Gram-o-phone I bought of you was a God-send during the long cold winter of last year. It cheered us and made us glad and happy. I would not part with it for ten times what it cost if I could not get another." We have thousands of similar letters telling of the pleasure and entertainment derived from the Berliner Gram-o-phone.

It will sing your favorite hymns or songs, or play for you to dance anything, from a Cake-Walk to a Mazurka. It will entertain the entire family and the neighbors as well. Costs one-twentieth as much as a piano or organ, and gives a thousand times more variety and pleasure. "A child can operate it"—so can you in five minutes.

Prices of Gram-o-phones complete with 3 Records $15 to $45

Guaranteed for five years. "It is made in Canada."

Sold on easy monthly payments if desired. Write for particulars, Catalogue and list of Records.

Manufactured by

E. BERLINER, 2315 St. Catherine Street, Montreal.

FOR SALE BY

A. J. PURDY & CO., AGENTS, FERNIE, B. C.

ALLANS EXTENDING.

Two 17-Knot Turbine Steamers to Be Added by This Line.

In the near future the Allan Line will be operating two turbine steamers of 12,000 tons each on the St. Lawrence route.

The first of these steamships, both of which will be capable of making an average of 17 knots an hour, will be the Victorian, and it will be ready for service early in the spring of 1905.

In discussing the project the Messrs Allan stated that as soon as the Victorian was in commission the mail and passenger service between Montreal and Liverpool would be maintained by the Victorian, Tunisian, Bavarian and a fourth steamer, either the Ionian or the Parisian. With the advent of 1905 the as yet unnamed steamer would be added to the fleet, thereby giving them two vessels of 17 knot speed, and twelve thousand tons burden, together with the Tunisian and Bavarian.

With the advantage of distance which Canada possesses in the route between this continent and Great Britain, this would enable the Allans to to give as good mail and passenger service as New York now enjoys with the twenty-knot steamers.

For instance, mails via the Allan boats would leave London at eight o'clock at night on Thursday of each week, would be on board the steamer at Moville at half past one on Friday afternoon and arrive at Rimouski at half past one on the following Thursday afternoon and be delivered in Montreal the following morning. This is allowing some eight or nine hours for the trip by rail from Rimouski to Montreal, which, no doubt can be considerably reduced.

A dispatch from Denver, Col., says: Rev. Felix M. Lepore, pastor of Mt. Carmel Catholic church, was found dying in his church from a gunshot wound. He was shot in a duel with Joe Sireci, supposed to have arisen over a game of cards they were playing in the priest's study. Sireci was also mortally wounded.

Captain Bernier has almost given up hope of financing a North Pole expedition in Canada.

Thirty-five miles of steel have been laid on the Rosendale branch of the C. N. R. west of Portage la Prairie.

Occasionally a woman spends a lot of time looking for a husband after she gets him.

LOVE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

A Disappointed Swain Brings Suit to Recover Cost of Presents.

In the backwoods of New Brunswick, where hard work is plentiful and money very scarce, the course of true love is often as rough as a corduroy road, and Cupid is inclined to be businesslike. This has recently been illustrated at Sheffield, where Charles McBeath has adopted a most ungallant course toward Sadie Gordon.

He had courted her for over a long period and showered her with gifts, when she suddenly changed her mind and told him that she "had no notion" of marrying him. Charles was willing to charge up his time to profit and loss accounts, but the memory of the presents was bitter to him, and so he brought suit against Sadie's father, she being under age, to recover $24.14, the value of the said presents.

The case was tried before Squire William Harrison, and was heard by the entire population of Sheffield village. Charles sued to recover on the ground that Sadie had broken her promise to marry him, on the strength of which alleged promise and for no other consideration, the presents had been given.

The jury gave verdict for the plaintiff, allowing the full bill with costs, and McBeath was for a few moments jubilant. His triumph was, however, short-lived, for as he was about to leave the court-room he was arrested by a provincial constable, upon warrant sworn out by Miss Jordon, charging him with assault. He was remanded to await trial.

LADIES OF LONDON

Will Publish a Daily Paper To Be Know as The Mirror.

The women of London will shortly have their own daily newspaper, and will have the enterprising Brothers Harmsworth to thank for the privilege.

The Daily Mirror, as the new venture is aptly named, is believed to be the only publication of its kind in the world, now that La Fronde of Paris is dead. Unlike the latter paper, which was entirely written, edited and printed by women, The Daily Mirror will have the advantage of talented writers of both sexes in its production.

It is to consist of twenty pages of handy size, illustrated on a scale hitherto unattempted in a London daily, excepting the professedly pictorial Daily Graphic. All kinds of news that can possibly interest female readers will be printed, with the addition of society, sporting, musical, dramatic, art and literary gossip, and the inevitable "chiffons."

The Daily Mirror will be sold at a penny, and will be the third of Messrs. Harmsworth's daily papers published in London. They own several provincial sheets, as well as innumerable weeklies of a cheap and popular kind. Their gigantic business, which is by far the greatest newspaper concern in the British Isles, has been entirely built up within the last ten years.

Kite Experiments Successful.

After experiments lasting for a long time and during which the life of the inventor was more than once put in jeopardy, S. F. Cody, a son of the redoubtable Buffalo Bill, has perfected his kite-airship. Only a few days ago he succeeded in crossing the English channel.

He left Cania at 11 o'clock in the evening and reached the English coast at Dover thirteen hours later. The voyage was one fraught with much danger, and during the night on the sea he had many encounters with the shipping in the Channel.

The advantages of the kite in war time are many and it is understood that Mr. Cody is now in negotiation with the British war office with a view to having it adopted by the army officials.

For purposes of observation it has much the advantage over the balloon as it is easily transported and can be elevated at a minute's notice, while the balloon requires loss of time while being filled with gas.

Must Have Faster Ships.

The Atlantic mail contract, held by the Allan Steamship company, expires in August next, and the likelihood is that if the company wishes to secure a renewal they will be required to provide faster ships. Sir Richard Cartwright is about to take the matter up and the probability is that an improved steamship service on the Atlantic will be introduced next summer.

Through Thin Ice.

A double drowning is reported from Bottineau, N.D. Mrs. Frank Downing lost her life in trying to save her sister who had ventured upon thin ice on Moose river and had broken through. Mrs. Downing plunged in and was carried under the ice. Neither of the bodies have been recovered. Mrs. Downing was a bride of only two months and was a recent arrival from Minnesota.

Dispatches from San Domingo tell of the capture of San Domingo city, capital of that republic, by the insurgents under General Jimenes, whom his followers have proclaimed president.

Mr. Wallace, correspondent of the London Daily Mail, compares Montreal to a beautiful woman "down in the heels." He says it is the worst paved city in the world. The town and one-third of the people carry the stamp of America.

The dirty-faced boy evidently want wants the earth.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

The town is full of men seeking work. The closing down of several of the mills has deprived many of a position.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Breckenridge left yesterday for Banff, where Breckenridge & Lund have a piece of railway work to do for the C. P. R. They will be gone about six weeks or two months.

C. H. Pollen returned last week from Ottawa where he has been in the interests of the Kootenay Central railway. He left this week for Victoria where he will endeavor to secure provincial assistance for the enterprise.

The new town of Lubreck is named after Peter Lund and John Breckenridge. "Lu" is from Mr. Lund's name, and "Breck" from the first syllable of Mr. Breckenridge's name. The station is on their new coal property near Cowley.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

A. J. Mott returned from a trip through Alberta on Monday.

Constable Hoskins, of Kimberley, is to be transferred to Fernie.

A freight train went through a bridge west of Cranbrook on Thursday. No one was hurt. Since then the express trains have had to transfer, causing several hours delay each time.

Inspector Wilson is trying to make arrangments to secure the Methodist church building at Morrissey Mines for school purposes until the new school is completed.

A curious robbery case occurred at Michel last Saturday. A miner left $204 on the table and went up stairs to change his clothes. He was attracted below by a suspicious noise and was in time to see a thief hastening off with the roll of bills. Later with the aid of Constable Henderson search was made in the snow for tracks, and pieces of torn bills were found. The search was resumed by day light and many more pieces were found. The total money consisted of the following denominations: 2 fifties, 3 twenties, 3 tens, 2 fives and 2 twos. The bills had been torn into five pieces each and little difficulty was found in matching the recovered parts, which made up complete bills for 2 fifties, 1 twenty, 1 two and a piece of another two. This money was since redeemed by the bank here. No clue could be found of the thief. He evidently feared that he would be caught and in his excitement tore the bills and flung them to the wind, which scattered them for fifty yards No trace could be found of the remainder of the bills.

BETTER THAN A PLASTER.

A piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound to the affected parts is superior to any plaster. When troubled with lame back or pains in the side or chest give it a trial and you are certain to be more than pleased with the prompt relief which it affords. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works of Fort Steele, B.C., for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Beginning at a post marked J. D. Viets' south west corner post which is situated along Fording river and three miles north of the Northern boundary of 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district. B.C., and which corner post is near the south east corner post of J. L. Doupe's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 813, thence from the said south west corner post of J. D. Viets, east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

255-4 J. D. VIETS
October 26th 1903. W. Boivin Locater.

IN THE COUNTY COURT OF KOOTENAY HOLDEN AT FORT STEELE.

In Probate

NOTICE is hereby given that on the 26th day of October, 1903, it was ordered by J. H. Forin, Esq., Judge of the said Court, that James Ferguson Armstrong, Official Administrator of the County of Kootenay, be administrator of all and singular the estate of FRANK WILLIAM ROBBINS of Elkmouth, planeman, Deceased, intestate.

Every person indebted to the said deceased is required to make payment forwith to the undersigned.

Every person having in possession effects belonging to the deceased is required forthwith to notify the undersigned.

Every creditor, or other person, having any claim upon or interest in the distribution of the personal estate of the said deceased is required within thirty days of this date to send by registered letter, addressed to the undersigned, his name and address and the full particulars of his claim or interest, and a statement of his account, and the nature of the security (if any) held by him:

After the expiration of the said thirty days the Administrator will proceed with the distribution of the estate having regard to those claims only of which he shall have had notice.

Dated at Fort Steele this 3rd day of November, 1903.

JAMES FERGUSON ARMSTRONG,
Official Administrator,
Fort Steele, B. C.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

One hundred and fifty coke ovens are now in operation at Morrissey Mines. The remaining hundred will be completed in the spring.

J. McDonald, of Michel, had his foot badly crushed by a piece of rock falling upon it in No. 8 mine last Thursday. He was taken to the Fernie hospital.

There was a row in the Chinese quarter on Monday night in which clubs appear to have been trumps. The case was aired in the police court next day, but was dismissed.

Work on the construction of the new coke ovens was stopped last Saturday for the season, owing to unfavorable weather. Mr. and Mrs. Oldland leave shortly for California on a visit, thence back home to Pennyslvainia.

F. Trynoski met with a painful accident at the mines on Wednesday last. He was engaged in coupling cars, when one got away on him running over his foot and injuring hfs toes very badly. He is under the care of Dr. Wilson.

Harry Simmons has resigned his position as accountant in the Coal Co's office here. Mr. Simmons' departure will be rogretted as he has made hosts of friends during his residence in Tonkin. Wm. Mitchell will take his place in the office.

The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co. are taking steps which will have a tendency to remove an undesirable class of men from this camp. It has become a regular thing for a large number of the employees to go on a week's spree after pay-day and as this is a great inconvenience to the company all such men will in futnre be summarily dismissed. This will lead no doubt to a vast improvement in the quality of the men employed in the mines.

Do you want the news of the approaching session free? Subscribe for the Victoria Daily Times for 1904, and receive the paper free until the end of this year. This offer is for cash-in-advance, subseribers to the Daily $5.00, or the Twice-a-week $1.00. Full and impartial reports, halftone cuts of members, cartoons and corridor gossip. Four page colored comic supplement every Saturday. Remit to the "Times", Victoria. 253-2

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

This is the season when the careful and prudent housewife replenishes her supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy It is certain to be needed before the winter's over, and results are much more prompt and satisfactory when it is kept at hand and given as soon as the cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system. In almost every instance a severe cold may be warded off by taking this remedy freely as soon as the first indication of the cold appears. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains no harmful substance. It is pleasant to take—both children and adults like it. Buy it and you will get the best. It always cures. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Among Xmas Books just received we have some very attractive

Art Works

by

Margaret E. Sangster
Ernest Thompson-Seton
W. J. Long
J. Whitcomb Riley
John Burroughs

and other popular and standard authors.

Also

a well assorted stock of

CHILDREN'S ILLUSTRATED BOOKS

Prices Right Call and Inspect

Fernie Drug Store.

N. E. SUDDABY.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 160 acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 1966, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 273 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 40 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 40 chains to place of commencement,

249-8 JOSEPH BAUER
Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Notice is hereby given that the half yearly meeting of the Board of License Commissioners, Fort Steele License District, will be held at Cranbrook on Tuesday the fifteenth day of December, 1903, at the hour of ten in the forenoon, when the following applications for liquor licenses will come before the Board;

Andrew Good	Summit Hotel	Crows Nest
John Nesbitt	Loop Hotel	Loop
S. Herchmer	Michel Hotel	Michel
W. W. Tuttle	Royal Hotel	Fernie
J. L. Gates	Alberta Hotel	Fernie
A. Mutz	Fernie Hotel	Fernie
J. F. Jarvis	Victorta Hotel	Fernie
Wm. Eschwig	Northern Hotel	Fernie
Sarah Jennings	Central Hotel	Fernie
James Joyce	Muskoka Hotel	Fernie
T. H. Whelan, transfer from
James Joyce	Muskoka Hotel.	Fernie
A Mutz	Union Hotel	Fernie
P. Carosella	Roma Hotel	Fernie
N. Gareau	Queen's Hotel	Fernie
A. P. Chenette transfer from
N Gareau	Queen's Hotel	Fernie
Joseph Jean	Waldorf Hotel	Fernie
Pollock Wine Co.	Wholesale	Fernie
L. Carosella	Wholesale	Fernie

J. H. McMULLIN.
Chief License Inspector.

Fernie, Nov. 21, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchace the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted on a bench on the east side of the Kootenay River, thence forty chains north to the south east corner of lot 41-41, thence west to the north west corner of said lot, thence south following slew down stream 40 chains, thence east to place of commencement containing 160 acres more or less.

DAN HAYES
Dated this 8th day of October, 1903. 253-4

. . Pointing to . .

Christmas

ON account of our large stock and proportionally small time and space to display Holiday Goods, we will change our windows frequently, and ask you to keep tab on them. . . .

Cutlery and Table Ware on view to-night. . . .

Sheppard & Elliott

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbing

The Fernie Free Press
and
Montreal Weekly Herald
for
$2.00 per Year
In Advance.
Subscribe Now

Fernie Free Press	=	$2.00	per year
Montreal Weekly Herald		1.00	" "
The Two papers bought separately		3.00	" "
" " " under our offer		2.00	" "
Saving	=	1.00	" "

Notice is hereby given that on the 18th day of December, 1903, at the Cedar Valley Improvement Coy's. mill site, I shall hold a sale of the saw mill plant and lumber belonging to the Cedar Valley Improvement Coy. Ltd.

J. R. MARTIN,
Asst. Timber Inspector.

Fernie, B.C., Nov. 18th, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petrolenm on the following described lands. Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "M.E.Brown's north east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains to place of commencement.

M. E. BROWN
J. G. Cummings, locator.
Dated the 9th of November, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and pretroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Fairfield's south east corner"; thence west 80 chains; thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

H. B. FAIRFIELD
J. G. Cummings, locator.
Dated November 9th, 1903. 255-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 dys after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Selwyn Gwillym Blaylock's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. G. Cumming's south-east corner"; thence north 80 chains' thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains to place of commencement.

J. G. CUMMINGS
Dated November 11th, 1903. 255-4

Notice is hereby given that under and by virtue Section 59, 60 & 62, Chap. 113 of the revised statutes of British Columbia, I shall, on Nov. 30, '03 offer for sale by public competition at Carbon Creek, the saw mill plant formerly operated by the Carbon Creek Lumber Company at Carbon Creek, three miles east of Michel in the district East Kootenay.

J. R. MARTIN,
Asst. Timber Inspector.
Nelson, B C., October 30th, 1903. 253-3

For cheap and reliable winter goods see Crows Nest Trading Co's. advt.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Hugh McLean's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

HUGH MCLEAN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "A. Mutz's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

A. Mutz.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "John Kubala's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOHN KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Annie McIntyre's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ANNIE MCINTYRE.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "C. J. Tuttle's south- east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

C. J. TUTTLE,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "P. Kubala's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

P. KUBALA,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Joe Masura's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOE MASURA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Eva Fairfield's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains; then north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; then south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

EVA FAIRFIELD,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 25

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after da I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect f coal and petroleum on the following describ lands: Commencing at a post planted at t south-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal a petroleum claim, and marked, "Annie Dobbi south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, the north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, then south 80 chains to the place of beggining.

ANNIE DOBBIN.
James Miller, Agent
Dated the 9th of October.1903. 2

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after da I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descril lands: Commencing at a post planted at t north-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal a petroleum claim, and marked "Maude M Barber's south-west corner," thence east chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west chains, thence south 80 chains to the place commencement.

MAUDE MAY BARBER.
James Miller
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 25

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after d I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descril lands: Commencing at a post planted at south-west corner of Maude May Barber's c and petroleum claim, and marked "Peter P bielancik's south-east corner;" thence west chains, thence north 80 chains, thence ea chains, thence south 80 chains to place of c mencement.

PETER PODBIELANCIK.
James Miller
Dated the 9th of Octocer, 1903. 25

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after d I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descril lands; Commencing at a post planted at north-west corner of Maude May Barber's c and petroleum claim, and marked "Augus Fairfield's south-west corner;" thence east chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west chains, thence south 80 chains to the place commencement.

AUGUSTUS FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 25

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after da I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following descril lands; Commencing at a post planted at t south-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's c and petrolefim claim, and marked "Robert G more's south-east corner," thence west 80 chai thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chai thence south 80 chains to the place of commen ment.

ROBERT GILMOUR.
James Miller, Agent
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 25

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after da I intend to appy to the Chief Commissioner Lands and Works for a license to prospect coal and petroleum on the following describ lands: Commencing at a post planted at t north-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's c and petroleum claim, and marked "Gus Eric son's south-west corner," thence east 80 chai thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chai thence south 80 chains to the place of commen ment,

GUS ERICKSON.
James Miller, Agent
Dated the 10th of October, 1903.

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

Vol. X. No. 22. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 5TH 1903. Whole Number, 256

Lib. Legislative Ass. Dec 31 1901

193

METHODIST CHURCH.

FERNIE, B.C.

SERVICES:

Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m.
Epworth League, ...Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.

REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. Ross. J. S. T. Alexander

Ross & Alexander,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.

Fernie - - - - - - B.C.

Office:—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. Herchmer Sherwood Herchmer

Herchmer & Herchmer

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.

Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler

TEACHER OF

PIANO

Classes in Burrowes' Musical Kindergarten System.

Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47

I.O. O.F.

Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.

JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35

A.F A.M.

Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.

W. J. TIMLICK, Secretary.

Mrs. E. Todd,

Millinery and Dressmaking Parlors.

Fernie, B.C.

J. Barber, L.D.S., D.D.S.,

DENTIST

Opposite ROYAL HOTEL

Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Moffatt's Cigar Store

Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.

A full line of Stationery.

Next Door to the Free Press.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. H. L. Bleasdell's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

J. H. L. Bleasdell,
James Miller, Agent.

Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of J. H. L. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Florence Erickson's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

Florence Erickson,
James Miller, Agent.

he 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

LEGISLATIVE NEWS.

SEVERAL IMPORTANT BILLS INTRODUCED.

Ross' Maiden Speech—Government Sustained on Loan Bill—The Houston Incident Fernie Recount.

The debate on the speech from the throne has occupied the attention of the House most of the time during the week. The address in reply to the speech was moved by Wright, of Ymir, and seconded by W. R. Ross, of Fernie.

Mr. W. R. Ross, said that he shared with his colleague the full sense of the honor conferred upon him by being asked to support this motion, and he was heartily in accord with all that he had said in commenting upon the address. This legislature could be called at all events, a business House especially for the manner in which it had commenced its duties. He then took up the clauses of address seriatim, and laid special stress upon the financial situation The people of the province now found themselves almost in a condition of poverty, and he was thankful that he was no party to it. (Laughter and applause.) Yet, there was nothing to be gained by indulging in vain regrets over the past or in trying to seek the causes of that poverty. They should commence a new page and do their best to remedy the evils before them. (Applause.) He then spoke of the great natural resources of his own district and the Kootenays generally. His constituents hoped to see those wonderful resources still further developed under wise government. If it got the assistance that it should, he had no doubt that part of the country would double its capacity of production. He agreed with the member for Ymir that there were now no labor troubles with which to distress themselves. In his own constituency there was a large element of workingmen and he had to look after their interests as well as that of his other constituents. He hoped the government would anticipate the future as far as possible and legislate so as to keep labor conditions in a state of quietude. Capital was necessary to the development of the country, but labor goes hand in hand with capital. (Applause.) He was pleased to see a reference in the address to civil service reform. This was a highly important matter to the country, and one to which the opposition had pledged themselves to the people The government could therefore, safely claim the assistance of the opposition in this important matter. Mr. Ross then commented briefly upon the readjustment of the financial affairs of the province in regard to the Dominion government, On the Alaskan boundary question he was not in a position to take any particular stand. Perhaps the decision was a blessing in disguise. Railways to open up the province were most desirable if they could be secured on favorable terms to the province. He concluded by declaring that the government in its stated policy, was entitled to ask the opposition for its support to the measures that would be laid before the House. He was much pleased to second the adoption of the address, and thanked the House for its hearing.

On Friday the government proceeded to lay befor the house several very important bills, introducing drastic changes in the revenue production of the province. The first of these measures provide for the borrowing of one million dollars by the issue of 5 per cent treasury debentures, repayable in ten annual installments.

The next measure is an amendment to the Coal Mines Act. It provides that when a prospector for coal or petroleum discovers either of them under license, he may, on making affidavit of that fact, secure a lease of the property for five years at a rental of 15 cents an acre. At the expiration of 5 years he becomes entitled to purchase it if he has prosecuted exploratory and development work, the purchase price being $1 per acre, payable in full in one payment. If the land in question is held under lease he is entitled to a crown grant of the coal and petroleum at $5 an acre. He is also obliged to pay 5 cents a ton on coal and 2½ cents a barrel on petroleum. The governor-in-council has power to impose general regulations. Coal prospectors licenses are increased from $50 to $100

Under amendment to the act brought down timber leases are to be obtained by public competition for a period of 21 years, and these are to be subject to 50 cents a thousand royalty and 25 cents an acre rental. Where a saw mill runs in conjunction six months in the year and cuts 1000 feet a day for every 100 acres this is reduced to 15 cents an acre.

Special timber licenses for logging purposes will not be granted for more than 640 acres, or for more than five years, at the following rates: One year, $160: two years, $320; three years, $480; four years, $640; and five years $800. Provision is made for the collection of a royalty of 50 cents per thousand board measurement, and 25 cents a cord for wood.

An additional tax is imposed upon lumber where no royalty is collected, but a rebate is allowed of all over 50 cents a thousand is payable on lumber manufactured in the province. Taxes on piles, post, shingle bolts, etc., are also raised.

A blow will be levelled at the railway companies by amendments to the Railroad Companies' Act which provides for an increase of assessment on right of way, rolling stock, sidings, etc., from $3,000 to $10,000 per mile.

The amendments to the Assessment Act provide for an increase in the following items: Real estate 1 per cent; wild lands, 3 per cent; personal property 1 per cent, with considerable increase in the income tax.

Regarding the mining tax it stands at 2 per cent on all ore raised, minus cost of transportation and treatment, with provision for the remission of one-half the tax where the returns do not exceed $5000. The whole tax is remissable in the case of a placer or hydraulic mine not shipping $2000 worth. Crown granted mineral claims unworked are liable to a tax of 25 cents per acre.

The speech of Hon. Chas. Wilson was particularly interesting in that it showed the government's attitude toward John Houston. He characterized the prominence in the present debate of the Houston incident as being in very bad taste. But he held that the premier need only resign when his advice on a matter of public policy was ignored by the lieutenant-governor. Resignation followed only when the governor rejected something essential to the welfare of the country. Houston's reception into the cabinet could not be so construed. (Opposition Laughter.) The course of the premier, he contended, had been perfectly constitutional throughout.

Lieutenant-Governor Joly had declined to accept Houston as a minister, had given his reason therefor, and none could claim they were not good and sufficient. The action of Houston since his rejection had proved how wise the governor was in rejecting him. He added that the province could well exist without Houston in the cabinet.

Mr. Houston in his reply maintained a surprising self control. He hurled withering invictives against the government and against individual members of that party. The lieutenant-governor also came in for a share of sharp criticism.

The Fernie recount matter is also engaging a good deal of attention. The opposition speakers have several times introduced it and the Premier in reply claimed that the government could not break the law as this would inevitably be followed by an appeal to the courts. He promised an amendment of the election act to prevent a recurrence of the Fernie incident. Regarding the Fernie case, Mr. Wilson claimed the government had no option in the matter and promised a revision of the election Act, of which he declared he was ashamed. It was the work of Joseph Martin. He pointed out the difference between the Manitoba and British Columbia Acts. In the former the ballot boxes are returnable on the expiration of the time for the recounts, in British Columbia they are returnable immediately.

The first division came up on Thursday over an amendment to the loan measure, offered by Oliver. The government defeated the amendment by a majority of 6, the Socialists and Davidson supporting McBride. McInnes in speaking to the amendment stated that if leases were granted in Southeast Kootenay half a million in revenue could be very quickly obtained.

Mitchell the tailor has the best range of goods in Fernie.

B. C. COAL PRODUCTION.

Some Facts Regarding the Supply and the Demand of This Fuel.

Vancouver, Nov. 30.—Another large body of anthracite coal is to be opened up by the Canadian Pacific railway. The coal is situated at Banff alongside the railway track. A short spur is to be built to the mine. As the coal is what is known as anthracite, it is not thought that the fire boxes of the engines will have to be altered. There are millions of tons in sight, but the mine will be worked to produce from 15,000 to 20,000 tons a month.

The enormous output is a bagatelle in comparison to what is used on the railway. Between Vancouver and Lagan, on what is known as the Pacific division every twenty four hours 750 tons of coal are used, while in the Kootenays, 250 tons a day goes up in smoke.

A pile as big as the Canadian Pacific railway station here is shovelled into the fire-boxes of the locomotives and steamships of the Canadian Pacific railway every day. The actual bills that come in for coal to the railway show that 7,500 tons are burned every day, and there is in actual measurement thirty-five cubic feet in a ton.

Seven thousand five hundred tons a day means 225,000 tons a month, or 2,700,000 tons a year. Still there are some who say that there is too much coal discovered; that there will be no market for the coal to be mined from the vast measures of Nicola and Similkameen; that the Crows Nest Pass and Vancouver Island measures can supply every market in the province and the outside.

The Diamond Vale Coal company, with its enormous acreage of coal in the Nicola valley, it has been said by some will have so much coal to sell that it will be unprofitable to mine. It is a well known fact that the measures of the Diamond Vale company which have been proved up give promise of having almost inexhaustible storehouses of bituminous coal, and still, it is stated by a well known Canadian Pacific railway official that in spite of all the coal, discovered and undiscovered, in the Kootenays, Crows Nest, Nicola, Similkameen and Vancouver Island, there is a danger of a shortage.

The Canadian Pacific railway is to use coal from Nicola where the Diamond Vale mine and other mines are situated.

This is no longer a secret, but other roads are coming in, the Great Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and many shorter lines, while the steamship traffic has just commenced, and really only a beginning has been made. The Empress lines each burn 1,800 tons of coal in one trip across the ocean, and when one wants to make up a day it cost 400 tons of coal to do it.

Five years ago the Pacific and Kootenay branches of the Canadian Pacific railway burned 500 tons a day and they are burning now 1,000 tons a day and business is increasing enormously. The work of laying in a network of long spurs and switches throughout the line has practically commenced already. It will mean almost a new pair of rails across the continent. This means a greatly increased volume of business, and more coal. The consumption of coal will be trebled in another five years.

Five years ago ten cars of coke a day was sufficient to do all the smelters in Kootenay. It now takes thirty cars of coke to supply the demand. So that instead of a pile as big as the Canadian Pacific railway station shovelled into the fireboxes of the land and marine engines every day, British Columbia transportation companies will daily use a pile of coal three times as large in five years.

THE SCHUBERT SYMPHONY CO.

This company played to a somewhat undersized house on Thursday evening, under the auspices of Christ church. The concert as a whole was strictly high-class and all present thoroughly enjoyed each number.

The singing of the Lady Quartette was particularly good and evoked the heartiest applause. The voices consisted of first and second soprano and first and second alto and they blended perfectly.

The Symphony Club, consisting of five stringed instruments, rendered several excellent selections in a manner which evinced a thorough training, coupled with a skilled musical touch.

Karl Hunter proved himself to be an accomplished violinist. Miss Parker greatly pleased the audience with her recitations. Several solos completed the program. The individual parts of the program, though very satisfactory, was inferior to that given by the quartette and the Symphony Club. It is only necessary to state that the audience insisted upon an encore for each number to show that the concert was a great success.

ASSOCIATED BOARDS MEET.

Endorse Chamberlain's Policy.—Other Important Resolutions Adopted.

Rossland, Dec. 2.—The Associated Boards of Trade of Eastern British Columbia commenced its annual convention here to-day, the affiliated boards represented being Rossland, Nelson, Kaslo, Cascade, Greenwood, Fernie, Trail, Fort Steele and Cranbrook. The annual address by president George Buchanan reviewed the chief events of the year in the interior, and was heartily received. Mr Buchanan was re-elected president, and Archibald B. MacKenzie, of Rossland, was appointed secretary.

The convention endorsed the Nelson board's resolution approving Chamberlain's policy defeating the amendment approving of a preferential tariff, without reference to any particular statesman.

A resolution carried petitioning the C. P. R. to keep open the Lardeau-Gerrard railway service throughout the winter.

Others resolutions carried were as follows: To assure efficacy in the provincial department of mines and for the appointment of a commission to report on the needs of the mining industry. To secure publication by the government of bulletins on new processes for the treatment of refactory ores. Directing the attention of the mines department to the existence of the rarer metals in the Kootenay and Boundary ores. To secure more definite interpretation of the respective rights of placer and lode miners. Asking the Dominion government to establish a bureau of mines in connection with the geological survey.

The delegates were entertained at a theatre party and supper to-night. They will visit the Elmore concentrator to-morrow.

On Thursday resolutions were adopted favoring an import duty on American rough lumber; the publication by the government of maps of unoccupied districts; the cash bonusing of provincial railways, especially the Kootenay Central, and the abolition of the 2 per cent. mineral tax.

The discussion of the east Kootenay coal and oil lands question resulted in a resolution denouncing the policy of locking up the lands urging the government to throw the territory open and adjudicate upon the rights of bona fide locators and to safeguard the interests of the province in respect thereto.

Fernie's two resolutions, re car-shortage and mechanics' liens, were turned down.

Next year's meeting will be held at Nelson.

CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE

Cuftoms collections made at the outport of Fernie for the month of November, 1903:—

Value of goods imported
Dutiable.....	$ 3,705 00
Free	10,355 00
	$14,060 00
Duty Collected...	$838 77

Inland Revenue collections for the month of November, 1903:—

Spirits.....	$764.01
Malt.....	578.92
Cigars.....	42.30
Total	$1385.23

NOVEMBER SCHOOL REPORT.

Pupils enrolled.....	340
Pupils attending during Nov.....	306
Average daily attendance.....	220

HONOR ROLL

DIVISION I.

Sr.—Ethel Dunlop, Tom Corsan, Muriel Whimster. Jr.—Mary McClintock, Donald McLeod, N. Aileen Tutty.

DIVISION II.

Senior IV, possible marks 500—Roderick McLeod 422, Marguerite Ganong 380, Leota Pollock and John Macdonald 374 each. Jr. III, possible marks 400—Della Robinson 329, Mabel Graham 297, Viola White 296. Second class, possible marks 300—Eliza Holmes 237, Billie Ross 227, Laura Telfer 200.

DIVISION III.

First Reader—Florence Read, Frank Dunlap, Katie Regats. Second Primer—Mike Guzzi, Annie Novak, Florence Davis.

DIVISION IV (MINES).

Willie Burrows, Charlie Burrows, Elfrida John.

DIVISION V.

First Primer—Annie Klodic, Marion Corsan, Lotsy Boddy. Class B—Jennie Cody, Bertha Wheatcroft, Steve Poperinchik. B Class—James Easton, Herbert Sundstrum.

WRECK NEAR CRANBROOK.

Express Derailed By a Bull—Miraculous Escape of Passengers and Crew.

The east bound express was wrecked 6 miles west of Cranbrook last Saturday. The story as related by passengers on board the ill-fated train is a thrilling one.

The train was steaming along at a 30-mile gait attempting to recover the 25 minutes that it was behind the schedule time. Rounding a curve near Loco it encountered a bull on such short notice that the engineer was unable to pull up his train. The animal unfortunately, caused the engine to leave the track and all the coaches with the exception of the Pullman followed suit.

The bumping on the ties gave the passengers a warning of disaster. The engine and tender finally breaking loose from the remainder of the train pitched down the enbankment where they tumbled in a heap. The engineer, Jas Caslake, jumped and escaped with a slight cut over the eye. The fireman stayed with the engine and crawled out of the opposite window, unhurt.

The express and bargage cars ran on for some distance and finally went over the bank and lodged among some stumps These cars were badly wrecked, especially the trucks. The occupants had narrow escapes.

The tourist car struck a stump with terrible force, giving the 20 passengers a very severe shaking up, but without seriously injuring any of them. The first class did not overturn but it was knocked off its trucks. The wreck was a destructive one, and as one viewed the scene it seemed almost impossible that all on board should have escaped injury.

Conductor Niblock made up a new train at Cranbrook with the aid of the sleeper and the belated train reached Fernie at 11 o'clock.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

The passenger caboose, which was badly wrecked some weeks ago, has been repaired and is again in use on the spur line.

Mrs. Hewitt, accompanied by her family, arrived from England this week to join her husband, who has charge of the coke ovens here.

Several small mud slides occurred on the high line at the mines this week, but apart from interfering with the general output very little damage was done.

H. Ruff, brewer for the the Crow's Nest Brewing Co., met with a severe accident last evening. He stumbled and fell over a lantern cutting an artery in his right hand. He went to the Cranbrook hospital to-day.

General Manager Reeder and General Supt. Stockett visited Morrissey Mines yesterday. It was Mr. Reeder's first visit in an official capacity to this camp, and he made a careful inspection of the Company's property.

Owing to the recent election of Frank Sherman to the position of District President of the miners' union it became necessary for the men to fill the position of check weighman which he had occupied. The election took place in the Alexandra hotel yesterday and resulted in Mr. Robert Evans securing the position.

Several bad mud slides on the spur line during the past few days have interrupted railway traffic and in consequence the mines are closed down. The first slide occurred on Tuesday night about half a mile from the Junction and on Wednesday another bad one took place a short distance from the first. At the latter place a large part of the cribbing sustaining the railway was completely undermined and carried away, destroying about three hundred feet of track. Supt. Martin immediatly put all the available men he could procure at the work constructing a new piece of roadbed aronnd the slide, but this was hardly well under way before another slide occurred burying the track a short distance from where the men were at work, under about four feet of mud. Large forces of men are engaged on all three slides and it is expected the roadbed will be clear some time to-morrow

UNLUCKY IN LOVE BECAME A HERMIT

Romance of Woman Who Lived in Cornish Cave.

WELL BORN AND EDUCATED

Comes of a Distinguished Russian Family of Scholars—Will Return to Her Native Land and try to Forget Her Strange Conduct.

A London cable says: Some few months ago a Cornish lady, who lived as a hermit in a cave dwelling on the cliffs of the wild Cornish coast, disappeared. She had been taken by the authorities to a workhouse, which she resented, and made her escape by means of blankets. She was found several days later in an emaciated condition.

Now the mystery is cleared up. The Cornish lady hermit, as she is called, is named Jeannie, and comes of a well known Russian family of scholars living in Scharvellguj-Rolons. She was well brought up and educated. Misfortune, however, befell the family, and it became poverty-stricken. She emigrated to the United States, settling in Philadelphia. There she became engaged to a Russian, but he deceived her. Jeannie, who is a good looking, intelligent girl, appears to have taken her unfortunate love affair so much to heart, that the sight of her fellow-creatures, especially men, caused her terror and repulsion, and she determined to disappear from her friends and kindred. She came to England, where she sought a refuge.

Her father desires to come over and take her back to Russia, where, it is hoped that, surrounded by her relatives, she will forget the cause which made her so widely known as the "Cornish lady hermit."

MILITIA TRANSPORT.

General Order Giving Details of the Proposed Service.

A militia general order just published, gives the details in connection with the new scheme of transport which it is intended to bring into force at once. The scheme is for the purpose of providing for the transportation of the militia on mobilization, for the conveyance of ammunition, baggage, blankets, camp equipment and rations. The plan is to secure the necessary horses, wagons and carts, and harness from those who are willing to enroll them voluntarily. For this service they will receive remuneration as follows: One dollar per day for each horse; fifty cents per day for each wagon or cart, including serviceable harness. Any owner may enroll more than one horse or wagon. In the case of the transport being required in winter, he must furnish sleighs. In order that the headquarters may always know that these articles as required are kept on hand those who enroll for the service must at least produce the equipment once a year for inspection at a convenient locality. For the day's inspection they will receive one day's pay.

All wagons enrolled must be in condition, capable of carrying at least 3,500 pounds. Carts will be required to carry at least 1,600 pounds. The harness must also be in good condition. Another condition of the enrollment is that the department of militia reserves the right at any time considered necessary to purchase at a fair market value all of the equipments enrolled. In the case of destruction by fire of any of the wagons or harness or of the horses by death the owner must at once report it to the military headquarters. In the event of his failing to do this he will under the terms of enrollment be liable to a fine of at least $5. If at any time when required to furnish the equipment the owner fails to do so he will also be liable to a fine of $5.00.

Under the new regulations issued the adjutant-general, the director of intelligence and the military secretary shall approach the minister through the general officer commanding. The quarter master general, the chief of the engineer service and the chief of the ordinance branch shall advise the minister with regard to the estimates required for their respective branches, as shall also the director general of the medical service.

Lost His Fortune.

Ruinous speculation has brought the world-famous pianist, Paderewski, to the brink of poverty, according to reports from Warsaw, where he has recently been staying. In less than two years the fortune of more than 2,500,000 francs which he earned by his recitals, has almost entirely disappeared. It is said that he is now contemplating another world tour in order to replenish his empty coffers.

An intimate friend of the great pianist denies that he has lost all his fortune, but admits that he has met with serious financial reverses. Some years ago Paderewski bought a large estate at Kesnia, in Galicia. The property costs a small fortune in itself to keep up. It has now been sold, and Paderewski is living unostentatiously.

Grain Buyers at Reston have been forced by the warehouse commissioner to obey the law.

LEAVE MAVERICKS ALONE

Judgement by Chief Justice Sifton of Great Interest to Ranchers.

The custom of selling by auction "maverick" cattle, that is, unbranded animals found roaming at large on the prairies during the round-up, which has been forbidden by Chief Justice Sifton, is an indictable offence. This decision was rendered at the recent sitting of the supreme court at Macleod, when Jas. Crawford, captain of the Grayburn round-up, under whose direction a "maverick" was disposed of, was charged with stealing the animal.

In delivering judgment the chief justice said he had no doubt the defendant was guilty of the offence charged. Although the custom of which evidence had been given had been followed for several years, it did not give the round-up or any other person the right to sell unbranded cattle found on the prairie. In the present case the other members of the round-up were quite as guilty as the defendant and the members of the stock association by whom the round-up was instructed and who received the proceeds of the sales were no less guilty. In the future the members of the round-up would do well to refrain from interfering in any way with unbranded cattle found on the prairie, and to leave such cattle severely alone.

It had been urged that to allow unclaimed, unbranded cattle to run at large would offer great temptation to "rustlers," and would otherwise be a serious injury to the stock industry. He could only say that the Stock association were justified in anticipating prospective stealing on the part of others by stealing such cattle themselves.

Crawford was found guilty and released on suspended sentence.

FATAL BRAWL.

Andrew Johnston Dies in Fernie Hospital, as a Result of a Drunken Row.

Andrew Johnson, a Finlander, died at the Fernie hospital on the 22nd inst., from the effects of a wound received four weeks ago in a drunken fight at Michel. Edward Meriel is held on the charge of murder. Johnson's wound was caused by a stone, evidently thrown with violence, which broke a small hole in the skull above the right eye, exposing the brain. For a time the patient seemed to rally, but the brain developed serious symptoms, an abcess formed, and he finally succumbed.

The occasion of the fight was a big spree among a number of Finlanders in which the deceased did not take a prominent part. A number of the inmates of the house were knocked out and when the constable visited the place he found evidences of a genuine drunken fight in broken bottles and unconscious victims lying around. The most injured, however, was the man Johnson. Several arrests were made, though the victim attempted to shield his comrades. The police, however, secured an ante-mortem statement from him, fixing the blame upon Edward Meriel, and the other prisoners were dismissed. In this statement he says that he went outside and was followed by the prisoner, who threw a rock at him, inflicting a wound above his eye.

'Frisco Shooting Scrape.

A dispatch from San Francisco, of Nov. 26, says: Major A. J. McClung, a well known broker and club man was shot and probably fatally wounded last night at the Palace hotel by Alec. Garnet. The shooting took place in the rooms of Mrs. Lily Hitchcock Coit, who is famous as the only woman ever actively connected with the local fire department.

In pioneer years she ran to fires with the firemen and was later elected a member of the company. Garnet was her business agent in minor matters, and Mrs. Coit had a disagreement with him a few days ago that resulted in his dismissal from her employment. Major McClung, who is an elderly gentleman, was visiting Mrs. Coit last night when Garnet appeared in an intoxicated condition. He drew a revolver and attempted to shoot Mrs. Coit, when Mr. McClung attempted to save her and received the bullet intended for the woman.

Four Burned to Death.

A dispatch from Omaha, Neb., says that four men were burned to death and property loss amounting to $300,000 was the result of a fire on Nov. 26 in the wholesale grocery house of Allen Bros., at Ninth and Jones streets.

The fire is presumed to have originated in the furnace room of the Allan building. The buildings were filled with the most inflammable material. The firemen, who were killed, were working about forty feet inside the Allan building when the floor unexpectedly collapsed, catching the men with no chance of escape and with no possibility of their comrades rescuing them. Their bodies were not even recovered.

Israel Zangwill, the famous author, was married in London on Nov. 26.

The post office and a store at Baldur, Man., were entered by burglars on Thursday last.

The British expedition into Thibet has aroused the suspicions of the Russians.

King Edward has conferred a baronetcy on Lord Mayor Ritchie in commemoration of his recent entertainment of King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena of Italy at Guildhall.

Baby's Breakfast

The best breakfast, dinner or supper for a child is

Victor Brand Evaporated Cream

It is the full cream cows milk, evaporated and sterilized. It contains all the bone, flesh and muscle building elements.

Makes Happy Healthy Babies.

Mfd. by Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Melody and Mirth

During the Long Winter Evenings

with

The Berliner Gram-o-phone

Winter's dreary evenings lose their monotony, and you have a constant source of pleasure and profit in a Gram-o-phone. It will tell you funny stories or sing "Coon Songs"—if you feel humorously inclined. If you want to dance, anything from a two-step to a minuet—awaits your pleasure or that of your friends and neighbors.

It will play masterpieces of the Piano or Organ; Solos by famous violinists, mandolin, guitar or banjo players; give you a Band Concert by Sousa's or the Coldstream Guards' Band or the Bagpipes; sing or talk, which you will.

Prices of Gram-o-phones complete with 3 Records $15 to $45

Guaranteed for five years. "It is made in Canada."

Sold on easy monthly payments if desired. Write for particulars, Catalogue and list of Records.

Manufactured by

E. BERLINER, 2315 St. Catherine Street, Montreal.

FOR SALE BY

A. J. PURDY & CO., AGENTS, FERNIE, B. C.

DECREASE IN EARNINGS

Falling off of Twenty per Cent in Receipts on C. P. R.

For the first time in four years the weekly report of the gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific railway has shown a decrease over the corresponding week of the year previous. From November 14 to 21, of this year, the Canadian Pacific gross earnings amounted to $910,000, as compared with $933,000 for the third week in November, 1902, a decrease of $23,000 or almost 21½ per cent.

This showing is a remarkable one for the reason that each year has shown a great increase in Canadian Pacific railway earnings, as the business of the road has increased and developed, but while it is remarkable for the Canadian Pacific railway, it was not unusual as railroads go.

Officials of the road would not discuss the reasons for the decrease, however, beyond saying that in all roads the earnings fluctuate with the amount of traffic, and the case of the Canadian Pacific was in no way different from that of its many competitors.

DIVORCES WANTED.

Seven Petitions are Listed for Present Session of Parliament.

A dispatch from Ottawa says: Already seven divorce cases have been listed for the next session of parliament. Six of them are applied for by residents of Ontario and one by a resident of the Northwest Territories. During the year 1902 only two divorce caset were granted by parliament. Since confederation 332 divorces have been granted in Canada.

The greatest number in a province was 111 in Nova Scotia, where they have a divorce court. Next comes New Brunswick and British Columbia, where also there are divorce courts, with 74 and 59 divorces respectively. In Ontario there were 53 divorces, in Quebec 19, in Manitoba 3, and in the Territories 5. In these provinces and in the Territories there are no divorce courts.

Thirteen Miners Killed.

A dispatch from Fort Smith, Ark., dated Nov. 25, says: Thirteen miners were killed and great damage was done by accidental explosion of gas in coal mine No. 20 at Bonanza, Ark., twelve miles from this city. At nightfall only six of the victims had been recovered. When the explosion occurred there were about 175 men in the various shafts. All escaped without injury except the thirteen who were employed in entry K, the scene of the explosion. The force of the explosion was terrific, and timbers were torn from the walls of the passages for several hundred yards at the mouth of entry K. The passages were completely obstructed so that the work of rescuing the entombed men was tedious in the extreme, and several hours were consumed before the first body was found. It is thought that the gas was accidentally ignited by a miner's lamp. The miners who escaped with the aid of others summoned from nearby shafts, immediately set about clearing the passages in the vain hope that some of the thirteen entombed men might have survived the explosion.

Improvement in Telegraphy.

Advices from Berlin, Germany, say: William Van Siemens, of the Siemen-Halske company, has exhibited before an audience of postal and telegraph experts a new telegraphic apparatus on which he, Dr. Frahke, Dr. Thomas and Dr. Erhardt have been working for several years. Perforated paper ribbon is used in the apparatus, and the experiments show that the instruments send 2,000 words per minute for long distances. The message is received on a strip of sensitized paper, which emerges from the letters fully developed. The post office authorities also have made experiments with Poulson's telegraph, which combines the use of ordinary telephone with the telegraph instrument.

Strike Picketing Lawful.

The Prussian supreme court has decided that strike picketing is lawful if conducted from a building where the picket's presence is not objectionable to the tenant. A policeman at Posen ordered a picket to leave the entire neighborhood. The picket thereupon entered a saloon immediately opposite the entrance of the strike locality. The local court held that the police had the right to order persons whose presence might occasion disorder to leave particular streets, which included premises opening on said streets; but the supreme court has decided that the police street ordinances do not extend beyond the street.

NEWS NOTES.

A $50,000 fire visited St. John, N. B., on November 25.

Smallpox has broken out at Lenore seventeen miles north of Virden.

A mutual understanding has been reached in the Chicago street car strike.

In the Fitzsimmons-Gardner fight, the former got the decision after 20 rounds.

The Order of Railroad Telegraphers is about to make demands on all American railways.

The Winnipeg Board of Trade passed a preferential trade resolution on November 25. The question of the alleged unsatisfactory handling of grain in Winnipeg was debated.

Lord Rosebery addressed an enthusiastic crowd in Surrey theatre, London, on Nov. 25, and severely criticized Mr. Chamberlain's policy of preferential tariffs.

Forest Fires in Texas.

A dispatch from Dallas, Texas, on Nov. 23, said: The forests in the southeastern Texas pine lands are burning with no prospects of stopping or being controlled. In churches prayers were being offered for rain. No one can get to the fire-swept districts, and estimates of the extent of the damage is mere guesswork. It is known that the flames have crossed the Sabine river at several points and are burning large areas in Vernon and Calcasieu patishes of Louisiana. The smoke is becoming almost stifling at and beyond Nacogdoches. Many persons have been made sick. Reports reached here last night that extensive forest and prairie fires are raging in the Indian territory in the country east and west of Antlers.

DEVONSHIRE'S DECLARATION

His Utterances Cause Joy to Free Traders.

GREAT MEETING IN LONDON

The Duke is Opposed to a Tax on Food, but Favors a Measure of Retaliation of Duties—An Enthusiastic Gathering at Queen's Hall.

The Duke of Devonshire was the principal speaker at a great demonstration in Queen's Hall, London, on Nov. 24, under the auspices of the Free Food League. It was the duke's first public speech since his resignation as lord president of the council and the first really important meeting of the Free Fooders as an offset to the active propaganda of the Tariff Reform League. The hall was packed and the prominent personages were given a tremendous reception.

The Duke of Devonshire was given a great welcome. He said there might be difference of opinion concerning the extent to which retaliation might legitimately go. Some members of the league were not altogether opposed to some form of protection; but they were all united and prepared to resist to the utmost the imposition of any protective taxation on food, or protective duties generally. He himself claimed the right to oppose anything in the nature of a return to protection. Prolonged cheering followed this statement of the duke.

Continuing, the speaker said that while the fiscal policy was not yet a party question, there was nothing which the advocates of the scheme, which emanated from the brain of a single eminent statesman, would like better than a general election which would turn on this question alone. The duke said the meeting was one of Unionists desiring to urge on the government the danger of taking a certain course, and the expediency of resisting a certain course. It was not the policy of the Unionist government which was before the country. The public liked a clear issue and such an issue had been placed before them by Mr. Chamberlain who left the government in order that he might be free. Cheers and hisses followed this mention of Mr. Chamberlain.

The duke urged that the policy of the government must be more clearly defined. At present it was indefinite. He had tendered his resignation because he could not as the representative of the government in the House of Lords express unqualified confidence in the policy of the cabinet concerning which he had grave misgivings and insufficient knowledge. Had he been assured that a moderate use of the proposed power of retaliation would be made by the premier he might still be a member of the government. With certain limitations much might be said of the policy of retaliation, but it would only make matters worse for, in addition to the existing hostile tariffs against themselves, they built up walls which would prohibit and restrict the importation of goods which for their own advantage they took from other nations.

The duke said he was opposed to the taxation of food because he thought that such taxation was the keynote of the entire policy to which he took exception. Should the price of food be raised some compensation must be given to the workingmen. He recognized the great services of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, but he was prepared to prove that Mr. Chamberlain's Glasgow budget would entail a tremendous loss to the consumer, while the workingman's expenses would be increased ten per cent. He believed that no greater fallacy has ever been produced than that prohibition or restriction of imports from abroad would increase the profitable employment of capital and labor at home. The country was prospering everywhere, yet Mr. Chamberlain asserted that only stagnation existed.

Alluding to Mr. Chamberlain's charge that he (the Duke of Devonshire, was "a drag on the wheels of progress," the speaker said he was content to act as a drag on the engine which was running down grade against all signals.

Lord Goschen moved and Lord Geo. Hamilton seconded the following resolution, which was passed by an overwhelming vote: "This meeting, while prepared to consider in a friendly spirit, any measures which the government may submit to parliament in special session for mitigating the effects of hostile tariffs, is of the opinion that strenuous opposition should be offered to any fiscal policy involving the protective taxation of food and the establishment of a general preferential or protective system."

Frozen to Death.

A dispatch from Kaministiqua, Ont., says: Two men who left here last Wednesday for a camp located about twelve miles north lost their way and became demented from cold hunger. One was brought in to-day badly frozen and sent to Fort William; the other was found about two and a half miles north of the station dead. The name of the man sent to Fort William is William Burns; he came from Newcastle-on-Tyne. The name of the dead man is unknown.

Local option has carried at Hartney, Man.

E. W. Rathbun, a Canadian millionaire, died on Nov. 23 at Deseronto.

The Northwest Legislature prorogued after passing 35 bills on November 24.

A TERRIBLE REVENGE.

A Sailmaker Induces His Shipmates to Drink Carbolic Acid.

A dispatch from Los Angeles, Cal., dated Nov. 24, says: The German ship Octavia, 143 days out from Antwerp with a cargo of cement and steel rails to Port Los Angeles, has dropped anchor a mile off shore of the latter port. The captain of the vessel brought ashore his first officer in a dying condition and had him conveyed to a hospital in this city. The Octavia arrived in port with the sailmaker in irons, charged with murder, and the vessel's log showed three sailors buried at sea.

The story, so far as it can be learned, is that shortly after rounding the Horn, the sailmaker, who, it is said, was drinking heavily, induced three sailors to join him in a raid on the whisky portion of the cargo. In a drunken fight the three sailors assaulted the sailmaker. Subsequently, the sailmaker induced the same three men to make a second raid on the cargo, and it is said, purposely caused them to drink a carboy of carbolic acid, and they died. It is supposed that the first officer also drank of the poison and that his present condition is the result. It is impossible at this time to give the names, inasmuch as the vessel has not been officially declared in port. The captain, it is understood, has communicated with the German vice-consul at San Francisco, and with the consignees of the Octavia's cargo.

FOXY HUNTERS.

Substitute Scalps of Cats and Rabbits for Those of Wolves.

It is charged that a great wolf bounty fraud is being practiced in Dunn County, Wis. Wolves are brought from adjoining counties, and sometimes the scalps of cats and rabbits are successfully substituted for young wolves. Cases have been known where a wolf scalp has been glued or stuck on a carcass, after having been once removed, and the bounty thus collected twice on the same animal.

In killing hundreds of wolves in the county every year, the hunters very rarely, if ever, kill the females, preferring to leave them for breeding purposes, no matter what inducement is offered for their scalps. They are said to have carefully bred wolves in order to sell their scalps.

Wolf hunters of the county are strongly organized, and though they work only part time, they make $500 to $1,500 a year. The recent importation into the county of many thousands of sheep of improved breeds, makes it doubly necessary that the wolf pest should be kept down. Thus it will be seen that the wolf hunters hold the winning cards, and are reaping large profits by reason of the peculiar conditions.

The Dominion Fleet.

A blue book, issued on November 24, gives the total of Canada's fleet for the past year. There were on Dec. 31 last on the register books of the Dominion 6,836 sailing vessels, steamers and barges, measuring 652,613 tons register tonnage, being an increase of 44 vessels and a decrease of 11,780 tons register as compared with the previous year. The number of steamers was 2,285, with a gross tonnage of 303,353 tons. Assuming the average value to be $50 per ton, the value of the registered tonnage of Canada would therefore be $19,578,390. The number of the new vessels built was 296, the estimated value being $1,359,720.

A Shocking Crime.

Mrs. Galloway, wife of J. W. Galloway, quarter-master-sergeant in the Royal Canadian regiment, was arrested in Toronto on Nov. 24, charged with shooting with intent to kill her 14-year-old son.

The lad was shot through the mouth and the bullet came out at the cheek. The shot was fired at close range, but it is hoped he will recover. The mother has been on a debauch for a long time.

Acetylene Gas Explosion.

The Presbyterian Church Sabbath school room at Kippen, a small place on the Huron and Bruce division of the Grand Trunk, was wrecked by an acetylene gas explosion on Tuesday night while a tea meeting for children was in progress. Nine persons, mostly children, were injured. Rev. Mr. McLennan, pastor of the church, is among the most seriously hurt. Several cases will likely prove fatal.

Murderer Takes to the Mountains.

A dispatch from Victoria says:—Superintendent Hussey, of the provincial police, has received a letter from Alexandria, in the Cariboo district, telling of the murder of Lumpy George, an Indian, by Charles Boucher, a half-breed, who shot him after a drunken carouse, and threw the body into the river. The murder occurred Oct. 21.

The murderer has fled into the mountains, and has not been seen since the tragedy.

Little Girl Scalped.

The daughter of Herman Thorton, a farmer near Folden's Corners, Ont. had her scalp torn off on Nov. 24. She was playing in her father's barn near the wind motor, when her hair was caught in the machinery. The child narrowly escaped being drawn bodily into the machine.

A telegram was received at the Indian office in London on November 24 from the viceroy, Lord Curzon, saying that, according to reports received at Madras, a recent flood in the Pala river destroyed half the town of Manizambu[illegible] [illegible]d persons were [illegible]

FERNIE FREE PRESS.

FERNIE, B.C.

Such Birds Come High.

There used to be in a store on Ninth avenue, New York, a very valuable canary whose owner and teacher, the wife of the German proprietor, refused an offer of $500 for it. Sometimes as one entered the place there came from a corner in the rear a liquid peel of music so sweet and high and clear that it sounded like a piccolo without the metallic shrilness of that instrument. In a small wicker cage a black and yellow canary waltzed round and round, never quiet, and as it danced it sang the air of "Lauterbach" from beginning to end without a false quantity, without missing or changing a note. When the solo was finished the bird whisked up to its perch, trilled an improvisation and then began the melody again, breaking off in the middle, warbling a little in self willed fashion and then finishing the air. It was a beautiful and unique performance.

Dr. Robert Collyer says that a man's best friends are his ten fingers.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

There have been 170 lives lost on the Alps this year.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by all druggists, 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

In several Russian trains second-class sleeping carriages are now provided.

I believe MINARD'S LINIMENT will cure every case of Diphtheria.
Riverdale. MRS. REUBEN BAKER.

I Believe MINARD'S LINIMENT will produce growth of hair.
MRS. CHAS. ANDERSON.
Stanley, P.E.I.

I Believe MINARD'S LINIMENT is the best household remedy on earth.
MATTHIAS FOLEY.
Oil City, Ont.

An act of heroism is but temporary, while an act of charity is ever-lasting.

A BENEFACTION TO ALL.—The soldier, the sailor, the fisherman, the miner, the farmer, the mechanic, and all who live lives of toil and spend their existence in the dull routine of tedious tasks and who are exposed to injuries and ailments that those who toil not do not know, will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil an excellent friend and benefactor in every time of need.

Many a good woman can see where she might have been better looking.

Wash greasy dishes, pots and pans with Lever's Dry Soap, a powder. It will remove the grease with the greatest ease.

Can advice be very valuable when so many people are willing to give it and so few to take it?

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

It is a waste of time to look for a substitute for truth.

Promises which are easily obtained are not the most valuable.

It is easy to explain why others should not make mistakes.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

It's impossible to convince a lazy man that there is such a thing as easy work.

The British army under the new scheme requires 50,000 recruits annually.

When you think you have cured a cough or cold, but find a dry, hacking cough remains, there is danger. Take

Shiloh's Consumption Cure The Lung Tonic

at once.
It will strengthen the lungs and stop the cough.

Prices 25c., 50c. and $1.00

S. C. WELLS & CO.
Toronto, Can. LeRoy, N.Y. 5

MACHINERY
MILL AND FACTORY

There is no time like the present to order your new machinery. Let us know what you require. We have the BEST at the BEST PRICE.

J. L. NEILSON & CO.,
602 Main St., Winnipeg.

Don't Snuffel!

You make people sick—you keep yourself sick. Secure relief in 10 minutes from Colds, Catarrh, Headache or Influenza.

Cure that cold, you can do it if you exercise common sense and use only Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. It relieves colds and Catarrh and cures headache in a few moments. Rev. L. McPherson, Buffalo, N. Y., says: "Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder relieved me in 10 minutes and is a blessing to mankind." 12

Fortunate is the man who doesn't have one-half the troubles that his neighbors think he has.

The art of keeping the mouth shut should be taught in every school.

PREVENT DISORDER.—At the first symptom of internal disorder, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills should be resorted to immediately. Two or three of these salutary pellets, taken before going to bed, followed by doses of one or two pills for two or three nights in succession, will serve as a preventive of attacks of dyspepsia and all the discomforts which follow in the train of that fell disorder. The means are simple when the way is known.

Sleep as long as you can, but employ your time judiciously when you are awake.

Love can neither be bought nor sold, but it can be exchanged.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc.

Some families are relegated to the spinster class because of their cuteness.

So rapidly does lung irritation spread and deepen, that often in a few weeks a simple cough culminates in tubercular consumption. Give heed to a cough, there is always danger in delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup and cure yourself. It is a medicine unsurpassed for all throat and lung troubles. It is compounded from several herbs, each one of which stands at the head of the list as exerting a wonderful influence in curing consumption and all lung diseases.

Don't owe your neighbor a grudged cancel the debt at once.

When a man deserves respect he does not need to look for it.

When the downpour is heavy and the clouds are black people somehow lose interest in the silver lining.

LETTER WRITING.

Its Decline as an Art Caused by the Modern Newspaper.

The wonderful development of the newspaper may be looked upon as a very potent factor in the decline of letter writing as an art. The letter no longer can be regarded as primarily the carrier of news. The expression of one's opinion about great contemporary events is indeed still left to the letter, but how much of an incentive to friendly correspondence is lost by the fact that every part of the world knows of important happenings almost simultaneously is not to be lightly estimated, says Gunton's Magazine. The stimulus to writing that comes from having "news" to impart is done away with, and it is not always that even the gifted letter writer can afford to lose that incitant. It is only the correspondent par excellence who knows how to attain the perfection of his art by writing delightfully of nothing. If indeed that may be called nothing which affords him a means for the employment of his delicate perceptions. For the saving quality of the genuine letter is in the ability of its author to put himself into it. If he writes about trivial things he does it with a grace of interest that disguises the triviality. He must not make his little fishes talk like whales, but he should, as Goldsmith himself knew how to do, make his letters of perpetual interest because of the aptness of their style to the simplicity of their thought.

The Delights of Nudity.

I cling to that perhaps fanciful theory that no primitive instinct of man is altogether lost. It is modified, amplified, refined; that is all. With all our culture we are barbarians still. Man is a clothed savage. And now and again he delights in doffing the clothing and returning heartily to savagery. How delightful the feel of the briny breeze and the boisterous wave on the bare pelt! Mr. Edward Carpenter rails at the, I think, eleven layers of clothing that intervene between our skins and the airs of heaven. Walt Whitman reveled in his nude sun bath. What a treat, too, sometimes to get away from the multicoursed dinner and to bite downright audibly into simple food in the fresh air and to lap water noisily from the brook! Well, walking perhaps is the primal instinct, ancient as Eden, where the Lord God walked in the garden in the cool of the day. And if my theory is correct walking will persist till in recovered paradise man walks with his Maker again. No mechanical contrivance for locomotion will extirpate the tribe of tourists, of those who walk from love of walking.—Arnold Haultain in Atlantic.

Forests Turned Into Books.

A statistician studying the question of the use of wood pulp in the manufacture of paper, has lately estimated the amount of material used in the production of nine popular novels. Of these books 1,600,000 copies were sold. In making of them 2,000,000 pounds of paper were employed, and as one spruce tree yields about 500 pounds of paper these nine novels are stated to have caused the destruction of 4,000 trees.

Business Principles.

Dolly—So Simpkins, the cashier of the bank, proposed to you last night.

Polly—Yes; and I promised to marry him.

"Did he ask your father's permission?"

"Yes; he said he would ask papa to indorse my promissory note."

WHEAT OATS BARLEY
ST. WILLIAMS
SHIP to a strictly commission firm—TRY
THOMPSON, SONS & CO.
Write today for particulars.
GRAIN COMMISSION MERCHANTS
Winnipeg.

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction.
Cash advanced on consignments. References: Union Bank of Canada.
The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg.
Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.
S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,
GRAIN MERCHANTS,
TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. BOX 555
McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.
Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

DROVE AWAY BOTH DISEASES

Geo. Robertson Cured His Kidneys by Using Dodd's Kidney Pills

And His Rheumatism and Dropsy Departed Never to Return—He Makes a Statement.

Montreal, Que., Nov. 30.—(Special)—The illness and cure of Mr. George Robertson, of 39 Antoine St., this city, is further convincing proof that Rheumatism and Dropsy are both the results of Diseased Kidneys. Mr. Robertson had Dropsy and Rheumatism for five years. He cured his Kidneys by using Dodd's Kidney Pills and both diseases departed for good. Speaking of his case Mr. Robertson says:

"I had been troubled with Dropsy and Rheumatism for five years. I am now well and it is all owing to Dodd's Kidney Pills. Before I started using them I could hardly put my feet to the floor they were swollen so much from Dropsy. My arms used to swell at times so that I could not put my coat on.

"A friend advised me to use Dodd's Kidney Pills offering to pay for them if they did not help me. Before I had used the second box I felt a great improvement. I took seven boxes in all and I don't know what it is to be sick since."

A well equipped eye sanitorium will soon be travelling through Egypt in a tent.

Some live men remind us of dead who forgot to get buried.

Strong Words by a New York Specialist.—"After years of testing and comparison I have no hesitation in saying that Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart is the quickest, safest, and surest known to medical science. I use it in my own practice. It relieves the most acute forms of heart ailment inside of thirty minutes and never fails."—55

What children need is more models and fewer critics.

Only the man who understands women admits that he doesn't.

Deafness of 12 Years' Standing.—Protracted Catarrh produces deafness in many cases. Capt. Ben. Gonnor, of Toronto, Canada, was deaf for 12 years from Catarrh. All treatments failed to relieve. Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder gave him relief in one day, and in a very short while the deafness left him entirely. It will do as much for you. 50 cents.—35

Glass houses of a very substantial tial kind can now be built. Silesian glass makers are turning out glass bricks for all sorts of building purposes.

Few men are appreciated until they take up their residence in a cemetery.

Sciatica put him on Crutches—Geo. Smith, dairyman of Grimsby, Ont., writes: "My limbs were almost useless from sciatica and rheumatism, and, notwithstanding my esteem for physicians, I must give the credit where it belongs. I am a cured man to-day, and South American Rheumatic Cure must have all the credit. It's a marvel.—34

Some rules work both ways and some others won't work either way.

When a man receives a cup of coffee that has not been properly settled he has grounds for complaint.

DO NOT DELAY—When, through debilitated digestive organs, poison finds its way into the blood, the prime consideration is to get the poison out as rapidly and as thoroughly as possible. Delay may mean disaster. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a most valuable and effective medicine to assail the intruder with. They never fail. They go at once to the seat of the trouble and work a permanent cure.

The dog grows for two years, and lives for ten or twelve. The cat grows only for about eighteen months and may also live for ten years, in very exceptional cases for twice as long.

The satisfaction of having the washing done early in the day, and well done, belongs to every user of Sunlight Soap. 10B

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

Last week recorded a gradual decline in the American speculative market, but this week the tide of the market has been running the other way, and a gradual advance has taken place since Monday, which has resulted in prices showing 3c to 3½c higher than a week ago. The sentiment in these markets from being moderately bearish and inclined at the end of last week to look for lower prices, has turned quite bullish and strong. The general view taken of the Northwestern spring wheat situation is the cause of the strength in speculative markets, and there is also the comparatively small visible supply, and the continued good demand for cash wheat. There are great possibilities in this situation for the wealthy and experienced speculative operators manipulating the market, and whip-sawing the wide-spread army of small speculators who forever continue to come forward to be shorn. In the trade of actual wheat the action of speculative markets is having a strengthening effect over America, but makes little difference to the trade abroad. The interior movement of wheat in the States during the week has been about the same as a year ago, but this week's exports show considerable falling off. In the meantime Europe keeps well supplied from other countries, and it is reported new crop from Argentine and Australia for January-February seaboard shipment is freely offered to Liverpool and other ports. Russia is also reported as offering freely and stocks at Black Sea ports are extraordinarily heavy. Every day at present the news from Argentine is eagerly watched for. Late reports are that harvesting is progressing satisfactorily. It is estimated that the Argentine will have a probable surplus for export of around 110,000,000 bushels if harvest is completed under ordinary conditions, but there is always the risk of weather setting in to damage the crop. In the year ending the actual exports from Argentine have been around 60,000,000 and last year only 18,000,000 bushels. The crop situation in other countries is generally favorable. Seeding conditions have improved in Europe, and the winter wheat crop in the United States seems generally to be in very favorable condition, with the area planted about the same as last year.

Manitoba wheat has been firm all the week and prices have advanced under the influence of the American advance. The demand, however, is not so active as it usually is at this time of year, there being a lack of life in the export trade. Winter weather set in suddenly and sharply on Sunday and caused a sharp falling off in the movement by rail. It is becoming more evident that the extent of the crop has been overestimated, and the quantity of grain badly damaged by frost in the west and northwest districts is quite extensive. Friday afternoon prices closed at No. 1 northern 79¼c, 2 northern 77¼c, 3 northern, 73¼c No. 4 wheat 64¾c, feed wheat 51 ¼c, feed No. 2 41¼c, spot or delivery by 25th inst., in store Fort William or Port Arthur. Navigation at Fort William will probably close not later than in two weeks time.

WINNIPEG JOBBING PRICES

The following are the Winnipeg jobbing prices:—

Flour—Ogilvie's Hungarian patent, $2.35 per sack of 98 pounds; other grades accordingly.

Oats—No. 2 white, 31c, in car lots; 28 to 29 cents for feed grades; at country points farmers are receiving 25 cents per bushel.

Barley—Malting grades, 36 to 37c; feed, 30 to 33c.

Flaxseed—80c per bushel for farmers' loads at country points.

Speltz—35c per bushel.

Hay—Baled, $8 to $9 per ton.

Butter—Creamery, 22½c per pound dairy, best in bricks, 20c; tubs, 16c; ordinary grades, 12 to 14c.

Cheese—13½c per pound.

Poultry—Chickens, ducks and geese, 10c per pound; turkeys; 12 to 13c

Potatoes—45 to 50 cents per bus.

LIVE STOCK.

Cattle—Butchers' cattle, 2¼ to 2¾c. per pound.

Sheep—3¾ to 4c per pound; lambs, 5c per pound.

Hogs—Choice weights, 5¼c per lb.

What She Likes About It.

"What's the moral of that story?" asked the young man.

"Oh," replied Mrs. Ka Flippe absentmindedly, "I don't know as it has one but the immoral of it is just too thrilling for anything."—Chicago Record Herald.

Quite Up to Date.

Day—I find there is a $2,500 mortgage on the property you told me. You never said anything about it.

Gay—Certainly I did. Didn't I distinctly tell you it had all modern improvements?

Unshrinkable H. B. K. Underwear

Made from the best sidewool in the fleece—elastic ribbed knit—shaped to fit body—absolutely non-shrinkable—wool treated by H.B.K. exclusive process to make it so—every particle of oil, grease, slivers, etc., removed by the H.B.K. patent cleaning process—tough wear, light, fleecy, all wool, clean, pure, luxurious underwear, and absolutely non-shrinkable, emphasize non-shrinkable

Sold by dealers everywhere.
Only genuine with this brand. H.B.K. BRAND

Tough

A pinto bronco is tough from the end of his nose to the tip of his tail. And the toughest part of him is the light, muscular hide that covers his back and hips. From that part of his hide the famous "Pinto" Shell Cordovan leather is made for H.B.K. mitts and gloves. Scorch, boil, wind, rain, cold proof.

Genuine only with this brand. H.B.K. BRAND

Sold by enterprising dealers everywhere.

Write for "Strayed," the funniest bronco story ever written.—FREE

Hudson Bay Knitting Co.
MONTREAL. WINNIPEG.
Makers of Warm Wearables for Everybody.

OVER ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF MILLING EXPERIENCE.

"THE 'FLOUR' OF THE FAMILY"

OGILVIE'S HUNGARIAN

Every package, sack, or barrel carries with it our Guarantee of

"BEST QUALITY"

The OGILVIE FLOUR MILLS CO. Ltd.

TO THE EAST THRU THE STATES

Burlington Route

Are you going home for Christmas on the $40.00 Excursion? Why not go by way of St. Paul and Chicago, using the Burlington Route—300 miles daylight ride along the banks of the Scenic Mississippi River. Elegant Free Reclining Chair Cars.

Write the undersigned for all detail information in arranging for your trip. You will receive prompt attention.

A. L. EIDEMILLER,
Travelling Passenger Agent, Box No. 1315, Winnipeg, Man.
F. M. RUGG, N. W. P. A., St. Paul, Minn.

BOECKH'S SCRUBBING BRUSHES

Take the Backache out of Cleaning.

They are absolutely the best brushes money can buy—the best made—backs do not warp off—bristles do not fall out of Boeckh's Scrubbing Brushes. Your grocer sells them.

None Genuine Without Name "Boeckh" on back of Brush.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, DEC 5, 1903.

FERNIE'S TURN NOW.

The time has come that Fernie should be seperated from Fort Steele rule by the appointment of a government agent for the Fernie division of South East Kootenay. Ever since the beginning of Fernie's history the injustice of the government system of this district has been growing more apparent, until now it seems almost increditable that the government offices for this vigorous and growing town are situated in a little country hamlet sixty miles distant and several miles from a railway. It is hard to believe that every subject of public improvement, no matter how trivial, and every question involving government control must first be submitted for approval to a Fort Steele resident who has never lived in Fernie.

The division of the East Kootenay riding renders the position of affairs more ludicrous, for even if there were some excuse for the existing conditions before there can be none now. The Fernie district has been formed, it is represented in the legislature, and still the local affairs are administered from another district. Our representative in the legislature is well versed in this illogical arrangement, and his constituents believe that he will do everything in his power to establish the government offices in this town at the earliest date possible.

In conjunction with this matter is the need for decent government buildings. The present ramshackle affair that goes by that name is totally unfit for the purposes for which it is now used. With the appointment of a government agent for this district proper buildings must be provided. In planning for this building it will be necessary to keep in view the fact that only a short time can elapse until regular sittings of the assizes and the supreme court are held in this town.

In the appointment of the first government agent for the Fernie district the government should avoid the mistake that it has so often made in the past of bringing in outsiders to fill positions that could have been filled by old-time residents. Such a person cannot know the requirements of the districts so well as one who has lived in it for years, and surely such favors fall more becomingly upon the latter.

NEW TIMBER RATES.

The contemplated legislation of the Provincial Government affecting the logging and lumbering industries is meeting with considerable opposition from those directly concerned. The measure, if passed, will increase the license fee from $100 to $160 per year for each section. The fee on leaseholds is also increased from 15 cents to 25 cents per acre. A rebate is allowed however, where a saw mill is run in conjunction with a timber lease six months in the year and which cuts 1000 feet per day for every 100 acres.

The tendency from the increase of license fees will be to cause more leases to be taken out. Timber is generally taken up in blocks and it can be handled more advantageously under one management. Hitherto most of the timber has been held under the license system as it appeared to be a more favorable system os holding timber. The cost of holding timber under either system is now identical, and the lease system possesses the advantage of extending the claim for 21 years. It also possesses another advantage, in guaranteeing a rebate of 40 per cent. of the rental where active milling operations are conducted. Those who hold timber licenses for speculative purposes will find the new tax burdensome.

EDITORIAL NOTES

FERNIE does not contain a vacant house. Families arriving in town often experience much difficulty in securing a house, and not infrequently they are forced to find accommodation for some time at hotels. Rents are high and it is something of a surprise that more money is not invested in such property in Fernie.

* * *

THE advent of winter serves to remind us of the increased danger from fire during the cold season when stoves and furnaces are required to run at full blast. Care should be taken to see that chimney and pipe connections are made safe and that the exposed wood-work is not in danger of ignition. A little care in this direction may serve to prevent serious conflagrations. Those who have neglected to give the protection afforded by fire insurance their serious consideration would do well to think it over at this season of the year.

* * *

IT is a noticeable fact that Fernie possesses only one Justice of the Peace. Most of the work that was formerly done by Justices of the Peace is now performed by the Stipendiary Magistrate but that fact does not explain why there should not be the usual number of Justices for the town. The present incumbent of that office, Mr. H. H. Trites, is a busy man and he often finds it inconvenient to attend hurried cases. Then the law is so regulated that certain cases can be tried by two Justices but not by one. In the past it has more than once been necessary to alter the charge against the offender of the law in order to avoid this technicality and to render the case amendable to trial by a single Justice of the Peace. Again it may happen from various reasons that the Stipendiary Magistrate is unable to attend to his regular duties, in which case the need for more Justices at once becomes apparent. The authorities generally err in making too many of these appointments, peddling them for political purposes, but the present administration could appoint two or three more in this town without laying themselves open to this charge.

* * *

WE again call the attention of the Government Agent to the disgraceful condition of the townsite along Victoria Ave. in the neighborhood of the Roma Hotel. During wet seasons the water lies on this part of the townsite to the depth of nearly a foot and is a cause of great annoyance to the residents and to those who have to use the roads and sidewalks. A very small outlay would remedy the matter and there does not appear to us any sound reason why a ditch should not be dug at once and and thus relieve the town of one of its worst eye-sores at a time when it would be most appreciated. The question of drainage in Fernie should never be a serious one as the town could not be more favorably located to ensure easy and cheap drainage. As a matter of fact this drain could be built free of cost if the government would utilize prison labor. At the present time the jail is full of prisoners who have little to do except to provide fuel fer the building they occupy. This force could construct the drain in a very few days. Speaking of this drain reminds us again of the promise of $2,000 by the late government for expenditure on the streets of this town. Only a couple of small jobs have as yet been done on this grant and the great bulk remains to our credit.

THE NEW MANAGER.

A. H. Reeder, the recently appointed manager of the C. N. P Coal Co., took charge of his new office this week. Mr. Reeder comes highly recommended. He is a graduate in mining engineering of Lafayette University. For three years he was connected with the Davies Coal and Coke Co., of West Virginia, and for several years following he assisted in the management of the H. C. Frick Coke Co. which is the fuel department of the Carnegie Steel Co. He afterwards was superintendent of the fuel end of the Virginia Iron, Coal and Coke Co.

COAL CREEK MINES.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

A Junior Epworth League has been formed for the younger people.

Mr. Wilson, I.P.S., of Nelson, promised more new seats for our school. They are a necessity.

John Thompson had a leg broken and his back injured in the mines on Friday, He was taken to the Fernie hospital for treatment.

Jas. Hevenor, who left some time ago for the Lethbridge hospital to undergo treatment for rheumatism, purposes leaving for a southern climate.

Dr. Ker left on Thursday for Montreal where he will remain for the winter. In the spring Dr. Ker will take a position as medical practitioner in the construction work of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Dr. Keith, of Michel, has succeeded Dr. Ker at this place.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alder on Monday last when Mr. Jesse Beers and Miss Jennie Alder were united in marriage. Both the bride and groom are well known here. Rev. John Robson, of Fernie, was the officiating clergyman. Miss Sadie McNee acted as bridesmaid and T. C. Colwell as groomsman. After the wedding the party retired to their own home and partook of a sumptuous repast. The home was prettily decorated for the occasion. When supper was over the party thoroughly enjoyed themselves at different games. The presents were costly and well chosen including a beautiful centre table, a complete set of dishes, two rocking chairs and numerous other presents.

Princess Hall ONE NIGHT ONLY

THURSDAY EVN'G DEC. 10

The distinguished Canadian actor

Harold Nelson

AND HIS COMPANY

in an elaborate scenic production of the great religious drama

Quo Vadis

FIRST TIME HERE

Prices, $1 and 75c.

Reserved Seats on sale now at Bleasdell's Drug Store.

Fresh Fruit AND Vegetables arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert Confectioner

J. C. Hutchison

Merchant Tailor

Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings.

We Guarantee Our Work.

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

The Best Remedy for Croup.

(From the Atchison, Kan., Daily Globe.)

This is the season when the woman who knows the best remedies for croup is in demand in every neighborhood. One of the most terrible things in the world is to be awakened in the middle of the night by a whoop from one of the children. The croup remedies are almost as sure to be lost, in case of croup, as a revolver is sure to be lost in case of burglars. There used to be an old fashioned remedy for croup, known as hive syrup. but some modern mothers say that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better and does not cost so much. It causes the patient to "throw up the phlegm" quicker, and gives relief in a shorter time. Give this remedy as soon as the croupy cough appears and it will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Mitchell is the only tailor that pays fair wages.

Acquiring Homes

or paying off Mortgage Debts on easy monthly

Instalments

just as you now pay

Rents

CREE & HUTCHISON

If you prefer we can get you a straight loan.

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.

By the Day, Week, or Month. Everything first-class.

WM. R. McDOUGALL.

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

If You are ... Undecided

as to what would be much appreciated as a

Christmas Gift

by your

Wife, Mother or Daughter

Give us a call and let us show you our

Special Silks and Fancy Blouse Lengths

We have a range unequalled in Fernie and our Prices are Right.

Special Prices from now till Christmas on all Fancy Dry Goods.

Chas. Richards & Co.

Boilers and Engines.

ALSO SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES. Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.

602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

The Best Is None Too Good For the People of Fernie

WE aim to supply the very best in every line of meats

Fish, Game and Poultry always on hand.

We receive WEEKLY SHIPMENTS of Choice Dairy Butter and Eggs - - - -

Calgary Cattle Co. LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY

MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

Get your pictures framed at the B. C Furniture Co.

Use "Griffin Brand" brix butter, you can get none better. x

N. Hansen, of Wasa, was in town on Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Coutlee, of Frank, was the guest of Mrs. L. R. Forbes this week.

Miss Heron, of Pincher Creek, is visiting at the home of Rev. D. L. Gordon.

F. Clapp, of Cranbrook, was in town on Thursday looking after his business interests here.

Will execute orders for painting and give lessons. Terms reasonable. Mrs. C. H. Levers.

We buy, sell and exchange new and second had furniture. stoves, etc. The B. C. Furniture Co.

Sheppard & Elliott have increased their store space by transferring the office to the rear building.

Liphardt, the jeweler, does the best of engraving from script letter to the finest of monogram work. x

Mrs. W. S. Keay left on Monday for Edmonton where she will make a lengthy visit with friends.

S. P. Dawson, of the Fernie Mfg. Co., left on Friday for Toronto and Ottawa, to spend the Christmas holidays.

When will the watch stop? This is a unique contest that is sure to create much interest.

Mr. Cohoon has severed his connection with the Crows Nest Trading Co. He expects to go to Cranbrook to reside next week.

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

C. C. Brown, of Port Arthur arrived in Fernie on Wednesday to accept a position with Mitchell the tailor. Mr. Brown is an acquisition to the hockey club.

C. Richards & Co. have greatly improved the appearance of their store and added a lot of room also, by moving the office and the cellar way to the annex in the rear.

Constable Hoskins arrived in Fernie last Saturday to take a position on the police force of the town. He has secured Mr. Bentley's residence across the river for the winter.

John Hunter the well known porter of the Royal Hotel left on Wednesday on an extended visit to his old home in Scotland, after an absence of 18 years. He will stop off at Arnprior, Ont., to visit friends. John will be greatly missed by the travelling public, with whom he is a great favorite.

Messrs. A. J. Mott and A. T. Claxton gave a dance on Monday evening on the occasion of the opening of the new office building of the Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. A very pleasant evening is reported to have been spent by the numerous guests. The new office is a commodious building containing several rooms. It is well finished and is a credit to the company.

As will be seen from an advertisement in another column, the Harold Nelson Co. are billed here for next Thursday when the strong and graphic story, Quo Vadis, will be dramatized. Mr. Nelson is too well-known in Canada to need any recommendation. He is supported by a a company of 16, only four of whom were with him last year. The company is said to be much stronger than it was last year.

Your credit is good at The B. C. Furniture Co.

Louis Carosella's business on Baker St. was closed last Saturday owing to the decision of the mortagees to foreclose. J. Y. Griffin & Co. holds the first mortgage and the Trites-Wood Co. the second, both of which amounts to $3,500. As the stock on hand will more than cover this amount and the books show several thousand dollars of outstanding accounts, Mr. Carosella hopes to be able to make arrangements whereby his business may be continued.

"Quo Vadis," as presented by Mr. Harold Nelson and his company, is a dramatic success unequalled in the history of the stage of Western Canada. Mr. C. P. Walker, of the Winnipeg theatre, has given his star a scenic and electrical equipment equal to that used in the larger cities, the entire Carpenter production, which was used in Chicago and other large western cities of the United States has been purchased, together with a lighting plant, which gives all superior and realistic effects. The costumes have all been prepared under the direct supervision of Mr. Nelson and the models taken from the most eminent classical authority. No expense has been spared to make this the dramatic sensation of the year. In Marcus Vinicius, Mr. Nelson has a part which particularly suits his romantic and artistic style of acting, besides affording him opportunities for great power. His costumes and armor have been procured at great expense, and are remarkable for historical accuracy. He has surrounded himself by a company of exceptional strength, each one being adapted for the part taken. Mr. Nelson will produce "Quo Vadis" here on Thursday, Dec. 10th.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

J. A. Cryderman, of the Nelson New is in town.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

Mutz & Scott, owners of the Fort Steele Brewing Co., intend shortly to establish a branch brewery in Blairmore and have already secured a site for the building.

A. Joyce attended the Associated Boards of Trade meeting this week at Rossland. Messrs. Rennie and Tuttle the other delegates were unable to attend.

H. F. Brandow, who held the position of chief clerk in the Coal Co. office for a year and a half, has resigned. Mr. Brandow expects to remain in the west, probably in Fernie.

Night School

Learn to write a good hand. Learn Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. Our methods are up-to-date. Class room 1st door west of Methodist church. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

The manager of the North-West Cattle Co. has decided to locate slaughter houses, refrigerating plants and other buildings at Blairmore. The site is a short distance above thetown and work upon the plant will be commenced at once,

A. Macleod has disposed of his interest in the Sanitarium hotel to R. Evans, of the Alberta hotel, Blairmore, and J. Myllie, of Pincher Creek. Mr. Boyce still retains his interest in the hotel, which will be owned and run in future by the three partners Messrs. Boyce, Evans and Myllie.

Jas. H. Schofield, president of the Crows Nest Hockey Lergue, is arranging for the annual meeting of the league to be held in the near future at a place to be decided on by the different teams. Fernie, Blairmore, Pincher Creek, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat and probably Cranbrook will constitute the league this year. Macleod has decided to have a league of their own.—Macleod Gazette.

The Fernie Public School is overcrowded and lacks space to accommodate the increasing demands of the town. Two of the rooms are particularly overcrowded and the work of the teachers is not only rendered more difficult but less effective. The matter was brought before School Inspector Wilson when he was here recently. He admitted the need for more room and stated that he would take the matter up with the Department. He was of the opinion that another wing would be added to the present building in the spring. The question of the insufficiency of the government grant for incidental expenses was also taken up. It was shown that $240 was not enough to pay all incidental expenses, as the Coal Creek branch alone required about half that amount. Mr. Wilson promised to try to get a larger grant.

THE FREE PRESS file for this year is lacking in four numbers. We will pay 50 cents per copy to secure the missing papers. The dates are Feb. 14th, May 2nd, May 16th and May 31st.

WANTED—Faithful person to travel for well established house in a few counties, calling on retail merchants and agents, Local territory. Salary $20.00 per week with expenses additional, all payable in cash each week. Money for expenses advanced. Position permanent. Business successful and rushing. Standard House, 330 Dearborn St., Chicago. M5

Bailey & Penney's Pork factory is now an accomplished fact. Operations were commenced two weeks ago and business is daily increasing. The total number of hogs delivered at the factory has already reached the respectable figure of 110: and from this on, the Canadian Western Pork Packing Co. as this infant industry has been christened, will be in a position to handle all the fat hogs that the district can supply and pay for them the highest market price current on the day of delivery. The buildings, pens and equipments are modern and convenient and in a month or so it is the purpose of the management to instal a steam plant which will greatly facilitate the handling of the hogs and their conversion into hams, bacons, sausage. head cheese and all the other delicious products of the succulent porker. The sample of sausage already turned out is equal to the best in the market, as many who have tasted it can testify.—Pincher Creek Echo.

Xmas Presents

Now is the time to select your Xmas presents with a small deposit and have us put them away for you.

New Stock

arriving daily, we will have the finest stock in the Kootenay to choose from.

A. C. Liphardt

Watchmaker and Jeweller

Our Motto:

"Often the Cheapest, Always the Best."

IMPROVE and Keep Your Health by drinking fragrant and reliable brands of

Teas

such as

Ram Lal's

The oldest standard on the Canadian market.

Lipton's

World's Celebrated.

Maple Leaf

Reliable as the Emblem of Canada.

Try a sample of them.

Crow's Nest Trading Company.

The Muskoka Hotel,

....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

T. H. Whelan, Manager.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

Fernie Coal Creek Trites-Wood Co., Limited Michel Morrissey

London & Liverpool Stores

- Fernie -

Hot Sellers for Cold Weather

The days left in this month we are going to devote to the selling of Men's Goods. You know what we mean when we advertise bargains for men. We cannot name all prices here but enough to satisfy you the values are right.

Underwear Specials

Fleece Lined at..... 85c suit

Good Wool at..... 1.50 "

Wool Fleeced at..... 1.2 "

Extra Heavy Wool at... 2.25 "

And then one Table loaded with odd garments clean the lot up at Half Price

Clothing Specials

$1.50 per pair for good heavy wool pants the price just a little more than good pay for overalls.

$2 buys a splendid Blue or Black Serge Pants just what others ask you 2.75 for.

The next three lines 2.50, 3.00 and 3.50 never in B.C. in any one store has there been such a collection of fine Pants and the price almost half the regular one. Fine Serges, self-colored stripes, neat checks, fine stripes and all made in the latest and correct styles.

Men's Suits

as we expect this sale to surpass all past clothing sales you must come and see for yourself the values we place before you at this sale; to write the merits of each of the prices quoted here space will not permit. Here are the prices:

4.50, 5.00, 5.50, 6.00, 7.00, 9.00 and 10.00 Pants, Coat and Vest.

Other Lines of Men's Goods in this sale, German Sox, all kinds of Rubbers, the best 25c Wool Sox in Canada, Mitts, Gloves, Collars, Ties, Hats & Caps

The Trites-Wood Co.

Limited

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B.C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 4588, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty, three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON

Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

ACCURACY

We pride ourselves on our Prescription Department. There is a great deal in knowing that your Prescription will be filled just as your physician wishes it to be filled.

PURITY

This is where we aim to excel, we buy only the best drugs and chemicals, and supply only the best, just what your doctor orders, always

"COMPETENCY"

Our Prescription Department is under the management of the proprietor, whose Thirty-five Years Experience should be sufficient guarantee.

Our prescription clerks are qualified and competent, the drugs and chemicals may be relied upon and our system of checking is a positive safe guard against errors.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted on a bench on the east side of the Kootenay River, thence forty chains north to the south east corner of lot 41-41, thence west to the north west corner of said lot, thence south following slew down stream 40 chains, thence east to place of commencement containing 160 acre more or less.

DAN HAYES

Dated this 8th day of October, 1903. 253-4

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 60 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works for permission to purchase 320 acres of land on the west bank of Elk River: Commencing at the south west corner of A. Weigert's pre-emption about one half mile west of the west bank of Elk river; thence east to the west bank of the Elk river 40 chains more or less; thence south along the west bank of the Elk river 80 chains; thence west to the foot hills 40 chains more or less; thence in a northerly direction along the foot hills 80 chains to the place of commencement containing 320 acres more or less.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1903.

W. A. CARR.

When Boys Were Men.

By JOHN HALBERTON.

Copyright, 1901, by John Halberton.

"Your cousin May!" exclaimed Brainard. Then he sprang to his feet and hit me between the shoulders with a force which I could not have believed was in his tiny frame. The colonel looked surprised, and Brainard murmured "I beg pardon" and collapsed in confusion.

"It seems, further," continued the colonel, "that the governor said he wished he knew of some other trooper of equal courage and ability, upon which the young lady said she could name one and straightway praised you, Brainard, without stint and declared that if you two could be sent together you could end the war. I can't imagine where the young lady obtained her knowledge of the special requirements of the service or how she came to know so much about the soldierly qualities of two of my corporals, but these commissions are the result."

"We can't accept them, sir," said Brainard, "if they've been granted on such hearsay and misapprehension."

I didn't approve of Brainard's "we." He had the right to decline for himself, should he insist on being so foolish, but I wanted my own commission, no matter through what mistake it was issued. The colonel, too, was of my way of thinking, for he replied:

"Nonsense! Never lose a chance to reach higher rank, especially to move your insignia of rank from your sleeve to your shoulder."

"But, sir, there are other men more deserving of it," said Brainard. "I'd feel ashamed to wear shoulder straps if McTwyny must go on with only a sergeant's stripes. You ought to see him fight!"

"Eh? McTwyny? That freckled Irish tiger that's a sergeant in your troop? Oh, he couldn't help fighting if he tried!"

"But there's brains behind his fighting, sir. If you'd seen and heard"—

"There's brains behind all real fighting, corporal—er—lieutenant. Don't ever forget it, or your enemy will get the better of you."

"But there's such a lot behind McTwyny's, sir," persisted Brainard. "Think of the odds that were against him. He had only 18 men with whom to fight what looked like a brigade—certainly a thousand—and he talked and acted like a general instead of a mere sergeant."

"When? Where? How do you know?" asked the colonel, with a quizzical smile apparently at Brainard's assuming to know how a general would act.

"This afternoon. Way off to the right of the road our regiment took. We saw him. We were in the fight with him and were proud of it and of him."

"Bless me! I heard such wild stories of that skirmish that I've already asked your captain for a written report. Tell me all about it."

Brainard told him without a word of exaggeration, yet as he talked the colonel arose and paced his tent like an excited lion in a cage. He clinched his hands, and his eyes flashed, and he sputtered small groups of Scriptural words that were not prayers. Brainard stopped abruptly after telling how Mick felled the skirmishers' captain.

"The tiger!" exclaimed the colonel. "I wish there were more of his kind in the regiment."

"But isn't he a man, too?" asked Brainard. "And shouldn't he be rewarded"—

"It shan't be my fault if he isn't a man from this day forth," interrupted the colonel. "Come with me. I suppose he is in the hospital."

"Or dead," I suggested.

"Nonsense!" growled the colonel. "Loss of a fore paw never kills a tiger. Lieutenant Baslow of our regiment has shot them in India. He was in the British service and has told me all about it."

Instead of going direct to the hospital the colonel stopped at a captain's tent and asked for one of the occupant's jackets—an old one. The captain looked surprised, but complied with the request. The colonel strode rapidly to the hospital tents, followed by Brainard and me. Entering the surgical ward, he asked:

"Is McTwyny here?"

"Prisint, sorr," came from a red face on a cot, and a big freckled hand came to the side of the face in the position of salute.

"I'm sorry to hear of your loss," said the colonel, "and I've brought you the best consolation I could think of. This is the jacket you shall wear when you get up again, Captain McTwyny."

"Whooroo!" exclaimed Mick. He closed his eyes an instant, then opened them and said, "Av Norah cud only see it!"

"She shall see it, with you inside of it, as soon as you're fit to go north on leave of absence. Is there anything else I can do for you?"

Mick pushed aside his sheet, displayed his severed arm lying on his breast and said:

"Don't let 'em throw this away."

"He knocked me down for trying to take it from him," whispered the nurse, "but of course a thing of that kind can't be kept."

For a moment the colonel seemed to be choking. When he recovered, he said:

"Let me take it. I'll have it buried with the honors of war. The company you're to command, captain, shall fire a salute over it."

"Oi thank yez very koindly, sorr, for that an' fhat ilse ye've done, but how about thim two little dhivils forninst ye? In the foight wid the fince rails—glory be to the polkes av auld Oireland—they were wort' more than all the rist av the platoon put together. Little Brainard, ah, fhat a shillelah twister he'd make! An', as for Frost, he saved me own loife two or three toimes in succession."

"Good!" exclaimed the colonel. "They shall be taken care of. Now keep as quiet as you can, captain, so as to get well quick—and see Norah. Nurse, hang this jacket at the foot of his cot in some way so he can always see the shoulder straps when his eyes are open. Come along, men—I beg your pardon—gentlemen."

"Now," said the colonel, "as you two have declined (I hadn't) the commissions granted, as you think, under a misapprehension and through the imagination of a young woman, I shall at once recommend you for commissions in your own old regiment, and you may be sure that you'll get them.

The colonel looked surprised.

I've no more captaincies at my disposal. To make a vacancy for McTwyny I'm going to force a good for nothing captain to resign. But you shall both have lieutenancies—first lieutenancies, if possible."

"In the old regiment?" exclaimed Brainard. "Hurrah!"

"Hurrah!" I echoed. The colonel grasped our hands and almost crushed them in his own. Then he said:

"Meanwhile, on the basis of the commissions to the Forty-third, I'll have both of you as enlisted men discharged at once. That will enable you to go home and tell your story, and McTwyny's—he came from your town, I believe. 'Twill also enable you to see that imaginative young woman."

Brainard's pale face became a sunburst in an instant. The colonel continued:

"'Twill also enable you to draw your pay, and, as the paymaster is about six months overdue, you'll be able to go home in officers' uniform—shoulder straps and all—eh?"

I looked into Brainard's eyes and saw that the fight with Phil Hamilton was on.

"Give a man an inch, and he'll take an ell, colonel," said Brainard. "Would it be possible to get our papers at once? I think it—it might save a life if I could start for home tonight."

"It shall be done. Please say to your captain that I would like to see him."

* * * * * * *

After tattoo, and also after a bowling time in our company street, our comrades having learned of our good fortune, we started for Yorktown, 12 miles distant, to catch the morning boat for Fort Monroe. We were in time for the Fort Monroe boat for Baltimore and the morning train for New York. We got officers' uniforms, and I made it my special business that Brainard's should fit perfectly. He was in such haste to reach Summerton that he would have been content with anything topped with shoulder straps. I even saw to it that he wore sash and sword belt. Meanwhile I prayed that my letter about Brainard might reach Summerton before us.

We did not reach town till long after dark. As our house was on the direct way to Brainard's I suggested that he should stop with me, if only for a moment, and he did not refuse. As we approached the house I was glad to see that it was still lighted. Village people retire early, and I had feared I might have to rouse a sleeping family. On reaching the piazza I tiptoed to the parlor blinds and open window to reconnoiter and to increase the pleasure of anticipation. There sat my cousin May, and I was startled at the change that a single year had wrought, for she was no longer a girl, but a vision of womanly beauty. I could have stood there many moments for the joy of gazing at her, but I heard a familiar voice and then saw, at the left of the room, Phil Hamilton. How handsome he was, confound him! Oh, if I could know that my letter about Brainard had reached May! For Hamilton was saying:

"I asked you an important question in two or three successive letters, but you did not answer it, so I've used my earliest possible opportunity to repeat the question in person."

Quickly I drew Brainard after me through the doors and pushed him into the parlor. Hamilton rose quickly, and despite his habitual and superb composure he literally staggered as he saw two of his late brother noncommissioned officers in lieutenant's uniforms. Apparently May had received my letter and been properly affected by it, for, though she turned pale as she rose and looked at us, she quickly became rosy, courtesied to Hamilton and said:

"I like you very much, but here is my answer."

Then she hid the red scar on Brainard's cheek with two red lips. At that moment our dog Rover entered the room and sprang upon me with a joyous whine, and as I tried to abate his frenzy of affection I heard Hamilton say:

"Lieutenant Brainard, I esteem it an honor to be the first man to congratulate you."

* * * * * * *

Of course we called on McTwyny's Norah, a rosy, modest, dainty girl who compelled us to recall the story of "Beauty and the Beast." We had not intended to tell her all the details of the fight for the fence, but she extracted them from us, and she shivered, shuddered, cried and laughed. She also kissed us both and commended us to the eternal guardianship of all the saints.

Brainard and May were not married till after the war, by which time Brainard was a brigadier general in a high staff position, and General Grant and many other general officers attended the wedding; so did Phil Hamilton and his wife, who was as handsome and distinguished looking as he; so did Norah and Mick McTwyny, the latter in the uniform of a lieutenant colonel of cavalry. But, as "journeys end with lovers' meeting," this story, too, must end.

THE END.

The Foot Astray.

William F. Cody was once relating a story which concerned an Indian who had met with an accident in a Buffalo Bill show. It was necessary to amputate the Indian's leg, and in the description of this operation Cody was interrupted frequently by a young doctor who injected technical and medical terms into the straight vernacular of the scout. He was irritated, but ignored the doctor. "A few days after the operation," continued the narrator, "the Indian learned that his leg had been buried. With a whoop he leaped from his bed and jumped upon the doctor with both feet."

"Jumped with both feet after an operation?" shouted the doctor, exulting in his exposure of the great scout's absurd story.

"I said upon the 'doctor with both feet,'" explained Cody, "in order to distinguish him from the other hospital physician, who had only one foot, having put the other into people's affairs so often that he lost it."

The Way Home.

When the bishop of Truro, Dr. Gott, was dean of Worcester his absent mindedness was so notorious that he earned for himself the sobriquet of "Dean For-Gott."

On one occasion he had invited some friends to dine with him. On their arrival, a short time before the dinner hour, he suggested that in the interval of waiting his friends would perhaps like to walk through the grounds.

After spending about a quarter of an hour in admiring the flowers, shrubs and greenhouses they suddenly came upon a door in the garden wall.

"Ah!" said the dean to his astonished guests. "This will be a much nearer way for you to go home than by going back to the front!" And, forgetting his invitation, he opened the door and bowed them out.

An Offensive Cravat.

A good story of Whistler and his peculiarities is told in the Free Lance. A gentleman went to Whistler with a letter of introduction and sent up his card with the letter. The servant presently brought down the card with a note in pencil on it—"Who is the greatest painter?" The visitor promptly wrote "Whistler" and was immediately shown upstairs. An amusing scene followed, arising out of the fact that the visitor was wearing a red necktie. Whistler declared it interfered with the color scheme of his room and "put him off" a picture he was painting in quite a different "key." Finally he obliged him to take off the offending cravat before he would condescend to exchange another word with him.

Lucky Man.

In crossing the ocean a father and son both became very seasick. The father recovered quickly, but the son was so exhausted with the attack that he sank into a state of apathy, from which it seemed impossible to arouse him.

The steamer physician, thinking he would try a sudden shock, said: "I have bad news for you. Your father is dead!"

The son, raising his expressionless eyes to the doctor, replied, "Lucky man!"

Getting Up Early.

"I can't get up early," said a wealthy gentleman to his doctor.

"Oh, yes, you can," was the reply, "if you will only follow my advice. What is your usual hour of rising?"

"Nine o'clock."

"Well, get up half an hour later every day, and in the course of a month you will find yourself up at 4 in the morning."

Misers.

"Did you ever notice that almost all the misers mentioned in the papers are single men?" asked Mr. Watts.

"Yes," answered Mrs. Watts. "Married misers are too common to be worth mentioning."

Everything comes to him who waits, but this doesn't include books that have been borrowed.

His Sobriety.

A gentleman who had grave doubts as to a servant's sobriety one day accused him of intemperance and as a test chalked a line across the floor and commanded him to walk along it.

The fellow looked at the line for a bit, then at his employer, and said: "No jokes, now, sir. Which line do you want me to walk on?"

Nothing delights a woman who loves nature so much as gathering wild flowers and grasses for the purpose of dyeing them.

SUDDEN CHANGES OF TEMPERATURE

Bring Hosts of Coughs and Colds—Serious Results Are Prevented by the Use of

DR. CHASE'S SYRUP OF LINSEED AND TURPENTINE.

Coughs and colds usually arise from sudden changes of temperature. It may be a change of weather, passing from a warmer to a colder room or exposure to a draught.

It is not always possible to prevent exposure in these ways, but it is possible to prevent serious results by using Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine.

This great medicine has saved thousands of lives by preventing pneumonia, consumption and other forms of lung trouble.

It is mother's favorite remedy for croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, and the coughs and colds to which children are subject. Being pleasant to the taste, the little ones delight to take it.

It is prized by the old people because of the prompt and thorough relief it brings for asthma and other chronic ailments of the bronchial tubes.

The very fact that the sale of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is more than three times that of any similar remedy, and was never so large as it is to-day, is sufficient proof of its merit. In the great majority of homes it is kept on hand for cases of emergency.

Mrs. J. Provost, Renfrew, Ont., states:—"My fourteen-year-old boy had a very severe cold in the chest last winter and I really thought he was going to die. He coughed nearly all the time and sometimes would spit up blood. We had about given up all hopes of his recovery when I heard of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. After using one bottle there was a great change in his condition, and I can positively say that he was completely cured by two bottles and he has not been troubled since. I never saw medicine take such quick effect and can sincerely recommend it."

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, 25 cents a bottle, family size (three times as much) 60 cents, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every bottle.

Awe is the feeling with which one woman regards another who wears imported gowns.

Some men think it is up to them to go a little slow in order to keep from getting too far ahead of the times.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

A London eating house is to be opened near the Bank at which the waitresses will be octoroons of the genuine chocolate-cream tint, specially imported from the Southern States.

Ayer's

For hard colds, bronchitis, asthma, and coughs of all kinds, you cannot take anything better than Ayer's

Cherry Pectoral

Cherry Pectoral. Ask your own doctor if this is not so. He uses it. He understands why it soothes and heals.

"I had a terrible cough for weeks. Then I took Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and only one bottle completely cured me."
MRS. J. B. DANFORTH, St. Joseph, Mich.

25c., 50c., $1.00. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Coughs, Colds

You will hasten recovery by taking one of Ayer's Pills at bedtime.

Pickwicks in Livery.

The dignity of some fat coachmen in New York is very impressive. Their development is outlined distinctly by their coats. They have swelled steadily and persistently year after year, and every now and then the coats have been let out and the buttons moved to accommodate increasing inches of girth. A coachman's figure has a great deal to do with his success. The attempts of fat men to look lean sometimes verge on the humorous. They hold their heads high to escape the imputation of obesity and puff out their chests heroically. But with all their hauteur, pomposity and pretentious bearing they look only like very fat men in tight clothes, reminiscent of Pickwick in livery.

The Dead Man's Threat.

Returning home recently, a woman who had taken out a summons against her husband, a painter's laborer, on account of his ill treatment, saw by the light of the moon her husband standing, as she thought, behind the door ready to strike her. She ran away, but it was afterward discovered that the man was hanging by a rope from a ventilator over the door with his feet almost touching the floor. He was dead.—London Mail.

Without Trimmings.

Payne, an examiner at Cambridge university, whose questions were always of a peculiarly exasperating nature, once asked a student at a special examination to "give a definition of happiness."

"An exemption from Payne," was the reply.

Extra Value

By the accompanying illustration we can but suggest the exceptional values offered by us in Brooches.

No. 918—Price, $24.00

In this beautiful Sunburst Brooch there are 65 Pearls, mounted in 14k. Solid Gold.

Order by mail. If you are not perfectly satisfied with it your money will be promptly refunded.

Write for our handsomely illustrated new Catalogue. Ready for delivery Nov. 15th.

RYRIE BROS.
JEWELERS
118, 120, 122 and 124 Yonge St., Toronto

An Extraordinary Offer.

Our Regular No. 7 High Grade $40 BELT for only $5

Warranted to be superior to all others.

DON'T buy an electric belt before seeing our No. 7-20th Century Belt. Call or write for book. It is free. We are the largest dealers in electric body appliances in Canada. The genuine Karn Belt can only be obtained from us. Never sold in drug stores.

THE F. E. KARN CO. 132 Victoria St. Toronto, Can.

Bilious?

Dizzy? Headache? Pain back of your eyes? It's your liver! Use Ayer's Pills. Gently laxative; all vegetable. Sold for 60 years. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Want your moustache or beard a beautiful brown or rich black? Use BUCKINGHAM'S DYE
"FIFTY CTS." R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N. H.

Leather waste is no longer wasted. Manufacturers use in a compressed form, instead of iron to make cog-wheels.

Gray's Syrup of Red Spruce Gum

For Coughs and Colds.

ARE YOU BUILDING? IF SO USE

EDDY'S IMPERVIOUS SHEATHING

The Best Building Paper Made.

It is very much stronger and thicker than any other (tarred or building) paper. It is impervious to wind, keeps out cold, keeps in heat, carries no smell or odor, absorbs no moisture, imparts no taste or flavor to anything with which it comes in contact. It is largely used not only for sheeting houses, but for lining cold storage buildings, refrigerators, dairies, creameries, and all places where the object is to keep an even and uniform temperature, and at the same time avoiding dampness.

Write our Agents, TEES & PERSSE, Winnipeg, for samples.

The E. B. EDDY CO., Limited, HULL.

When You Consider Christmas Gifts

Consider the convenience and Economy of ordering from us by mail. Our new Illustrated Catalogue and Price List Mailed Free on application. It's easy with its aid to make gifts appropriate to the circumstances in Watches, Jewelry or Silverware. We quote a few of our unparalleled values, as catalogued:

7088	Pearl Sunburst,	$5.00
7176	Fine Diamond Solitaire Ring,	5.00
4457	Lady's Gold Filled Lorgnette Chain,	5.00
4147	Gentleman's Gold Filled Watch Chain,	4.50
4514	Heavy Chased Solid Gold Cuff Links,	4.00
4286	Fine Walrus Chatelaine Bag, French Grey Silver Mounting,	2.75
3208	Gentleman's Military Hair Brush, Real Ebony,	1.50
4954	Lady's Bonnet Duster, Sterling Silver Handle,	75
6076	Rabbit's Foot Charm, Sterling Silver Head,	40

Our Catalogue will please you—it contains values that cannot be duplicated elsewhere in Canada. Send your name and address on a post card. It is sent free.

156 AMBROSE KENT & SONS LIMITED
YONGE ST. MANUFACTURING JEWELERS. TORONTO.

FIERCE FIGHT FOR FREEDOM

Chicago Car Barn Murderers Captured.

SHORT CAREER OF CRIME

Capture of Three Beardless Chicago Youths Who Have Led a Life of Murder and Robbery Almost Unequalled in Criminal Annals.

A dispatch from Chicago, dated Nov. 27, says:—Chained wrist to wrist, their hair matted with dried blood, their clothing covered with dust and dirt, two beardless boys, Peter Neidermeier and Harvey Van Dine, sat to-night in the presence of Mayor Harrison and Chief of Police O'Neill calmly confessing to their share in a three months' career of crime which has included nine murders, the wounding of five other men, and a long series of robberies.

The two young bandits, neither of whom is over 21 years of age, together with their companion, Emil Roeski, who is no older, were captured near Liverpool, Ind., to-day after a fight in which they fought against policemen, railroad detectives, railroad laborers and farmers. One man was killed, another fatally wounded, and all three of the young bandits were wounded, but not seriously.

STORY OF THE CRIMES.

The three men were wanted by the police for complicity in the murders at the Chicago car barns of the Chicago City Railroad Company on August 30, when two men were killed a third badly wounded and $2250 stolen from the company. Gustave Marx, who last Saturday night murdered Officer John Quinn, when the policeman endeavored to place him under arrest, confessed after his capture, that he, in company with the three men had committed the crimes at the car barns. The hunt for Van Dine, Neidemeier and Roeski has been hot ever since. Although they knew the police force were looking for them, the three men remained in the city until Wednesday morning.

Word was brought to the police last night by T. S. Reichers, a school teacher near Clark Station, Indiana, that three men answering the description of those wanted for the car barn murders, were living in a dug-out. The police, placing no great reliance in the information, sent only eight men, Detectives Zimmer, Fitzpatrick, Qualey, Gleason, Sheehan, Driscoll, Baumer and Hughes to Indiana, Sheehan being placed in charge of the squad.

The men reached the dug-out at about 8 o'clock, guided by Reichers. As soon as they were in sight of the place the officers advanced in a circle upon the dug-out, where the robbers were supposed to be concealed. Driscoll, who was walking in closer than the others, called out:

"It does not look as though there is anybody there."

"Don't anybody fire," ordered Sheehan, "until we know if they are the right people."

As Sheehan spoke, Driscoll picked up a chunk of wood and hurled it at the dug-out. Instantly there was a flash, a report and Driscoll fell in a heap, shot through the abdomen. One of his fellow officers stooped to raise him, and the other six opened fire on the dug-out, from which the shots were coming thick and fast. While the fire was at its hottest Van Dine and Roeski rushed out, followed a few minutes later by Neidermeier. The latter ran to the tracks of the tracks of the Michigan Central railroad and throwing himself flat on the roadbed, rested his arm on the rails and kept up a rapid fire with three revolvers. Roeski ran for the bush, but Van Dine retreated slowly although the air around him was filled with bullets, and the snow at his feet was kicked up by them. He is a splendid marksman, and catching sight of Detective Zimmer, who was behind a tree, he fired. Zimmer went down with a bullet in his head. As he fell, Van Dine fired again, and the second bullet tore through Zimmer's arm. After his arrest, Van Dine said: "His head and arm were all I could see. I hit all there was of him." Roeski had by this time disappeared and Van Dine and Neidermeier, placing their revolvers in their pockets, made a run for freedom. The detectives fired constantly but the bandits escaped.

After running about a mile across country they came to the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad. An engine with a train of cars was close at hand and hurrying up to it the men ordered Brakeman Sovea to uncouple the train from the locomotive. He refused and attempted to take Neidermeier's revolver from him. The latter instantly sent a bullet through the brakesman's brain, laying him dead in the snow. Springing past Sovea's body, the bandits mounted the locomotive with revolvers in hand and ordered the engineer to move out in a hurry, which he did, going in the direction of Liverpool, Ind. After two miles had been covered the men ordered the engineer to slow down, and leaping to the ground they disappeared in the woods.

After the train had carried Van Dine and Niedermeier away, Detective Sheehan hurried to the nearest telegraph station and wired to Chief of Police O'Neill, asking that men be sent out with rifles. The message met with a prompt response. Chief of Police Schuettler and fifty officers armed with rifles were on their way to Millers. The officials of the Pennsylvania railroad also rose to the emergency. Captain Briggs, of the detective service of that road, was given a special train as soon as the news of the murder of Brakesman Sovea was known, and with orders to take no chances, spare no expense and get the three men dead or alive, he and his men were off toward Liverpool. The entire system of the Pennsylvania road was placed temporarily under the orders of Captain Briggs.

The News of the fight at the dug-out had spread with great rapidity through the country, and by the time the two panting men rushed up to the locomotive, a hundred farmers and railroad laborers were after them. These were left behind with the Chicago detectives, although one farmer, armed with a shot gun, got in his work as the train started away. Catching sight of Van Dine as he poked his face through the cab window, he turned loose with both barrels. A number of shots struck Van Dine in the head and face and one hit him in the throat, causing him trouble. When they left the train both men were nearly exhausted and unable to travel.

The country at that place is rough and sandy, and cut up by gravel piles. The farmers, railroad laborers, and officers of the Pennsylvania road were coming up fast and soon were close on the fugitives' heels. It was easy to track them in the new fallen snow. The men were seen as they dodged about in the sand, and the farmers, most of whom were armed with double-barreled shotguns, opened fire. Neidermeier received a full charge in the head and the blood streamed down his face and into his eyes, blinding him so that he could hardly see. A shot grazed Van Dine's head, carrying off some of his hair, and his wounded leg was weakening.

The posse was close in on all sides. There was no escape and it was evident that the time had come either to surrender or fight to the death. Both men were heavily armed and able to take more lives before they lost their own; but, as Van Dine said to-night in discussing his surrender: "There would have been no good in that as we have not shot anybody unless we had to, and killing any of those fellows would not have let me off. The jig was up for us, no matter how many we killed. I says to Pete, 'Well, what do you think?' He nodded his head and dropped his guns, and that's how they got us."

Van Dine, who has served in the army in the Philippines and shows his military training in many ways, is full of scorn for the men who had taken him. "I could have killed no end of them," he said. "They came walking along like a drove of quail and I could have covered the ground with them. I had plenty of cartridges and I generally hit what I shoot at. It would not have done me any good, though, and I don't shoot unless it's necessary."

The men were at once handcuffed, placed upon a train and hurried to Chicago and taken into the office of Chief of Police O'Neill and there in the presence of Mayor Harrison and a throng of officers, they discussed the events of the day as calmly as though it had been nothing unusual for them.

Roeski was arrested subsequently.

DAWSON NEWS.

Miraculous Recovery of a Man Who Was Shot in the Stomach.

A dispatch from Dawson City says: George Steele, who accidentally shot himself in the stomach while in the Pelly River country, is in a serious condition at the Good Samaritan hospital, where he had an operation for perforation of the bowels. That Steele did not succumb to peritonitis a few hours after the accident, is a miracle, which set the physicians guessing. Steele did not undergo the operation until 23 days after the shooting, yet he lives. The bullet, however, in its course through his abdomen, performed the operation of colotomy as perfectly as any surgeon could have done.

While Steele was handling a gun in the Pelly River country it was accidentally discharged. The bullet passed through his waist and lodged in the abdomen. The victim was taken to Dawson on a stage over a rough trail, and taken to the Good Samaritan hospital, where his wounds were dressed. All the indications pointed to the wound in the abdomen being of an insignificant nature. Steele had lived through the long trip to Dawson and did not have very much fever. A few days after he was taken to the hospital it was discovered that Steele's bowels had been perforated by the bullet and an examination showed that the missile itself had nearly performed the operation of colotomy. An operation was performed at the hospital and the wound closed. Steele is a young man, aged 22 years, and of good constitution which may pull him through, though at present he is in a serious condition. His escape from peritonitis is one of the most marvellous acts of the kind on record.

John Burpee, tried this week of robbing a letter from Bonanza post office, was declared insane by the jury. Consequently he was not convicted, although numerous acts were proved. He will be sent to New Westminster Asylum.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: Five remarkable patients have arrived from the Trans-Caspian territory. The heads and bodies of these persons are perfectly normal, but their hands and feet are not completely developed. They present the appearance of grown-up persons upon whom the extremities of children of twelve have been fixed. The patients are descendants of Russian Cossacks who emigrated to the Trans-Caspian country. Half of these Cossacks are deformed in a similar manner, according to official statements.

ANTIPODEAN NEWS.

Items from Australasia Brought by Steamer Moana.

The steamer Moana, which arrived at Victoria, B.C., on Nov. 23, from Australia, via Honolulu, met with an accident at William Head quarantine station, as a result of which she may have to go into dry dock.

The Moana brought news from Australia of the picking up at sea of seven escaped French convicts from the penal settlement at New Caledonia, who had been drifting at sea in an open boat for 53 days. The prisoners, who had secured a fishing smack, converted a sapling into a mast and put to sea, intending to escape to the Australian coast. The boat had been supplied with oars but only one remained, and she had no compass, and none of the prisoners had the slightest idea of navigation. All would have perished had they not been rescued by the British steamer Cromarthy, 500 miles north of New Caledonia, which took them to Sydney. The convicts, who were all armed, were weak and emaciated from the privation endured when rescued. They are being held by the Sydney police, pending advices from the French authorities.

There was some excitement at Suva when the Moana called there over the reported hauling down of the British flag at Tonga, it being said at Suva that the Friendly Islands were to be handed over to Germany by the British in exchange for some German islands in the Solomon group known as the German Solomon islands.

An interesting dispute has arisen at Sydney as a result of a decision of the arbitration court there against the American ship Andromeda, from Puget Sound with lumber. Captain Ranstrus was discharging his timber over the side on to scows with his own crew. A complaint was made by the Longshoremen's union, and the arbitration court cited Captain Ransetius to appear, but he refused and an injunction was granted restraining him from committing further breaches of an award made by the court giving preference to union labor, by his continuing discharging over the side in the stream with his own crew, with a penalty of $250 for each offence. The American captain, backed by the American consul, refused to allow any one on board to serve the summons, the American consul having quoted Daniel Webster's letter to the British government that the deck of the vessel is the territory of the country to which she belongs. The case was exciting great interest at Sydney when the Moana left.

WANT A SALE.

Live Stock Men Ask Manitoba Government to Grant Them One.

That Manitoba is rapidly becoming one of the leading live stock raising lands in the Dominion was proven the other day when a delegation of breeders called on the Hon. R. P. Roblin and asked for a special grant for a purebred cattle sale to be held in Winnipeg some time next March. The delegation was composed of several members of the Live Stock Association of the province, and the government gave the gentlemen an attentive hearing, and stated that it would take the matter under consideration.

The rapid growth in the raising of purebred live stock is one of the many things of which every farmer and business man in the province is proud. The proposing of a sale of these cattle in Winnipeg next spring shows that the men who are engaged in this business are awake and up-to-date in the matter. Purebred stock sales are common all over the United States and Eastern Canada and the fact that the American breeders are beginning to fear their neighbors of the north, as shown in the matter of the arrangement of the entries to the St. Louis Fair next summer. From this date on, live stock bred in Manitoba must be reckoned with by all those who enter cattle at public expositions.

Cured of His Bad Habits.

A few months ago the son of a railway director was, through his father's influence, given a position of some importance on a large railway. He was fresh from Cambridge, and in the orders which he from time to time issued to the men under him always made use of the longest, most unusual words. This habit led to some rather expensive blunders, and, the matter coming before the general manager, he wrote the young official the following letter:

"In promulgating your esosteric cogitations and in articulating your superficial sentimentalists and amicable, phisolophical, or psychological observations, beware of platitidinous ponderosity. Let your conversational communication posses a clarified conciseness, a compacted comprehensibleness, a coalescent consistency, and a cancatenated cogency. Eschew all conglomeration of flatulent garrulity, jejune babblement, and asinine affectation. Let your extemporaneous descantings and unpremediated expatiation have intelligibility and veracious vivacity without rhodomontade or thrasonical bombast. Sedulously avoid all polysyllabic profundity, pompous prolixity, psittacious vacuity, ventriloquial verbosity, and vaniloquent vapidity. Shun double entendre, prurient jocosity, and pestiferous profanity, obscurant or apparent. In other words, talk plainly, briefly, naturally, sensibly, purely and truthfully. Don't put on airs; say what you mean; mean what you say, and don't use big words."

The young official took the gentle hint and changed his style.—Los Angeles Times.

Lady Horse Thief Arrested.

A dispatch from Bowmanville, Ont., says: An alleged woman horse thief, giving her name as Mrs. Ryan, alias Jones, and about 45 years of age, was arrested by Chief Jarvis about half an hour after she came into town. She hired a horse in Napanee and drove to Belleville, where she sold it, and going to another livery stable hired another horse and drove to Cobourg and sold this one. She took the train and came to Port Hope, but got off and walked to Bowmanville, where she was arrested, as stated.

DROUGHT IN AFRICA.

Col. Steele Writes That Dry Period Has Caused Heavy Losses.

Col. Steele, who is commanding B division of the South African Constabulary, in a letter dated from Pretoria to a friend in Montreal, writes of the great drought which is prevailing in South Africa now. No rain has fallen there for eight months, and the result is that the grass on the veldt and vegetation of every kind is burned to a crisp. The constabulary was forced to send many of its men and horses to Belfast, thirty miles from Pretoria, to avoid the horse sickness.

Many of the Canadians who held commissions in the South African Constabulary have taken up positions with the large firms in that country. According to all reports they are doing well, and are highly thought of.

Life in South Africa, writes Col. Steele, is now uneventful. The Boers are proving tractable, indeed, and no trouble whatever is experienced with the new subjects, who have taken kindly to their new masters. South Africa has been a disappointment to many who went out there expecting to find it a land of milk and honey. The country is arid and is difficult to cultivate. A system of irrigation has been started in places, but it is thought that the expenses attendant upon such an enterprise will be enormous.

The question as to whether negroes or Chinese should be employed in the mines has long been a disturbing element in labor circles, and has considerably delayed the opening of the mines. This question has at last been settled, and Chinese labor will be the only kind employed. It is thought by many well informed people that a mistake has been made, as the idle blacks threaten to be a constant menace to the peace and quiet of the country.

WAGES REDUCED.

Cotton Workers in New England Factories Are Cut 10 per cent.

A dispatch from Boston, dated on Nov. 23, says: The first of the numerous reductions in wages announced in the cotton mills of southern New England, and at half a dozen points outside that territory, went into effect in all but one Fall River corporation to-day, and at a number of outside mills. Although about 32,000 operatives had their pay cut down, no general strike occurred in any mill, the textile workers recognizing that the great cost of cotton and an unsatisfactory goods market would operate against the success of any radical step. To-day's cut averages 10 per cent., and places the pay schedules on a basis with those paid previous to the advance of March, 1902. The reduction affected seventy-eight mills in Fall River and about a score of corporations elsewhere in New England. The Fall River Iron works, operating four print cloth mills, will cut down wages next Monday, and on that day also nearly all Rhode Island and Connecticut manufacturers will adopt the lower schedule. A cut in New Bedford will occur in two weeks.

BRYAN TO BRITISHERS.

Former Presidential Candidate Speaks at National Liberal Club.

Mr. W. J. Bryan, former Democratic candidate for president of the United States, addressed the banquet at the National Liberal Club in London on November 23. He said that from the experience of the United States protection was wrong, while retaliation implied fear and reminded him of the man who drank whiskey to prevent snakebite and soon had the snakes inside of him instead of out. The speech was received with frantic applause. When asked by the Canadian press for his views on rumored trouble in Hudson Bay, replied that Canadians need not worry on that score, as the recent arbitration tribunal had settled everything.

Sir Edward Grey, speaking at Salisbury, said Premier Balfour was "playing the dummy face downwards." He had retaliation on his lips, protection in his thoughts and free food taxes up his sleeve.

Sir Gilbert Parker, speaking at Oldham, said England had trained the world to manufacture, but the apprentices were taking possession of the master's business. Technical education, which had been offered as a solution of British trade troubles, was of no use. It was like giving ruffles to a man without a shirt. We were threatened with punishment if we preferred, and if we did not prefer we got the punishment without being threatened.

Editor Stead's new paper, to be published on Tolstoi lines, will be issued January 4.

Clyde yachtsmen will challenge for the America's cup.

A Main street, Winnipeg, corner has been sold for $90,000.

The C.P.R. will establish a steamship line between New Orleans and Europe.

A serious wreck occurred near Chatham, Ont., Fireman Flowers being killed.

Senator Hale, in the United States Senate, predicted Canada would join the union.

A quiet little game is one in which money does nearly all the talking.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"I must, I must," she whispered. "I will stay by you, Anne Mariechen; go to sleep so that your headache will be better."

"Dear, dear Tante!" and a little arm was flung about her neck.

She did not dare to move until the child was asleep. Then she rose and crossed over to the seat by the stove, where she sat motionless for hours struggling with herself.

"Ah, merciful God!" she cried at last. "I can not do it, I can not do it." And her head sunk heavily against the stove.

* * * * * *

Tante Dettchen had walked into her sister-in-law's sitting-room where in honor of the fete three lamps were burning and a suffocating heat was reigning, mingled with a smell of almond soap, freshly ironed skirts, pomatum, perfumes of a doubtful quality, lilies of the valley and white roses.

Fraulein Selma looked vexed; she had been scolded by her mother. When the hair-dresser had arrived, who of course to-day was in great demand, she was nowhere to be found, and only appeared just at the moment when that lady, not accustomed to being kept waiting, was taking her departure with the remark that she could not tell whether she would be able to come again. She had only been getting a little glove powder from the druggist's, said the girl, excusing herself, so that her gloves would go on more easily.

"At the druggist's again," scolded the Frau Counselor. "Nobody knows how much you spend there, Selma. Day before yesterday you got a carbonic acid powder there, and yesterday Hoffmann's drops. I can not understand how you allow it," she said, turning to Selma's mother; "besides, it is bad to dose one's self so, and so unnecessary when there is, so to say, a physician in the family."

"Tante," said Selma from under the hair-dresser's comb, "you take Konigstrank yourself; I have seen you; and there are four empty bottles in the cellar."

The Frau Counselor colored deeply, but did not answer. "Just wait," she thought, "you will do very differently when you are once Alfred's wife."

At this moment the little maid brought in a large bouquet of red camellias and white primroses tied with a red satin ribbon. Fraulein Selma turned as red as the flowers themselves.

"Who sent that?" asked the Frau Counselor, rushing over to the door in her gray silk.

"A man brought it; he did not say who sent it."

Frau Adler held the bouquet for a moment meditatively in her hand.

"I do not understand Alfred," she whispered to Dettchen. "He knew perfectly well that Selma was to wear a green dress. Look at this combination; it is like a peasant's wedding; but she must carry it, I suppose."

Dettchen shook her head incredulously.

"From Alfred?" she asked, in a doubting voice. "He is not at all so—so—"

"You think he should have asked you beforehand, Dettchen? Men like to do these things without telling any one."

As the Frau Counselor sprinkled the flowers from a pail of water, she said aloud to Selma's mother, who was standing before the mirror putting in a pair of ear-rings adorned with diamonds:

"See, my dear cousin, we can not say it is very pretty, but if the heart is only right—"

"The bouquet is very pretty," interrupted Selma, angrily, in her peculiar deep, somewhat rough voice, and she rose to her full height, for the hair-dresser had just put the last hair-pin in the blonde puffs.

Her mother said nothing. She was a stout little person and short-breathed, and would much rather have gone to bed than to the ball, as he had assured them many times that day.

Dettchen took immense pains with the young lady's toilet; one minute she was up on a footstool, the next kneeling on the floor. At last the Water Nymph, as the little maid admiringly called her, stood ready—nothing more, either better or worse, could be thought of—with the water-lilies, reeds, and wax pearls. She had now only to cover her satin slippers with a pair of thick woolen socks which had belonged to the late Herr Counselor, and over these a pair of wooden sabots, cover her poetical head arrangement with a scarf, and her clouds of green gauze with a cloak. And now the three ladies, accompanied by Tante Dettchen, whose way led past the ball-room, set out for the Goldenen Krone followed by the little maid carrying the bouquet and some wraps for the ball-room.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Dettchen took leave, wishing them "much pleasure" and promising to hurry off the somewhat tardy doctor in good time to the Krone. She went on through the slippery streets, where the snow had already turned into mud, toward her home. Well, indeed, the light was still burning in Alfred's study. The little lady hurried through the garden and into the house and knocked at his room door.

"But, Alfred," she cried out to the man who was busily writing, "they are already dancing the polonaise at the Krone, and you are sitting here in your morning-coat, forgetting everything! And I had laid out your shirt and cravat and coat all ready for you in your room."

He looked up at her quite bewildered.

"Is it so late already, Tante? Well, then, I must make up my mind to it. But really it requires great strength of mind, I can tell you. Tante, I would rather drive out many miles into the country this evening—"

"Come, Alfred do come!"

"Were you at mademoiselle's, Tante?"

"Yes."

"Was it pleasant?"

He put up his books as he asked this question, and looked at the book-case.

"Oh, yes, Alfred; at first, when we eat in the twilight and talked; but then—"

She came up nearer to him and clasped her hands.

"Oh, Alfred, what is the matter with that girl? So pale! so thin! and her eyes so large—poor little Lucie!"

He put the key hastily in his pocket.

"Why do you say that to me, Tante?" he said quietly. "Let that alone—it is over. Besides, I observed the same thing myself this morning, and hope with all my heart I may not see it again. We can not help her—it is is her own choice."

"It makes me feel so badly," said Dettchen, turning away and straightening the cloth on the table, and then picking up a piece of coal that had fallen out of the stove. Then she turned the latch of the door softly and went out, wiping her eyes as if by stealth.

He seemed to take an eternity for his toilet that day. Once he found himself, cravat in hand, before the mirror, and had to think some time before he could remember what he was about to do.

As he entered the door of the ball-room of the Goldenen Krone, several couples floated by him in a waltz.

Dazzling lights, gay walls, laughing eyes and rosy eyes under wreaths of flowers, and added to all this the soft melody of the "Fledermaus," that was what he next saw and heard. Then he saw his mother across the room piloting her way toward him with a festive expression and pink cap-ribbons flying.

"Alfred, won't you come and speak to the Mahnerts? Alfred, have you engaged Selma for supper? As you do not dance, that is the only thing that—"

He nodded absently, and followed her, trying to keep out of the way of the dancers, to the sofa at the end of the room, where the matrons were sitting in long rows.

"Who is that eager little man who is dancing for the second time with my daughter?" asked Frau Mahnert, sleepily.

"He is the head clerk at the Elephant drug store—a good fellow."

"H'm! scarcely the height of three cheeses. How it looks!" muttered the mother, angrily.

The Frau Counselor had her lorgnette at her eye and followed the tall green figure which the little dancer steered so easily and lightly through the crowd. The red bouquet appeared like a fiery rocket, first here, then there.

"Where did you order the bouquet, Alfred?"

But her son did not answer. He was speaking to some gentlemen. His mother heard the word "Skat," and they disappeared into the adjoining room. He was soon seated at a card table with the Circuit Judge Bohm, the burgermeister, and the kreisphysicus. But before they had even taken up their cards they were in a dispute about the new hospital.

"You doctors would most likely have preferred we should give you the best site in the town in the new villa street?" said the burgermeister, as he arranged the cards in his hand.

"We simply will not take the place that you offer us," said the kreisphysicus, "you may be sure of that; so the turf may stay there till you dig it up to heat the Rathhaus. Adler, you know how, when we were there yesterday, the water was standing all over the grass that grows there so much more luxuriantly than anywhere else?"

"Certainly," said Dr. Adler, absently, but he looked as if his thoughts had been far away. He was thinking of a pair of brown girlish eyes, that he had seen that morning when talking on this same subject, that looked at the same time angry and sad. He had certainly acted badly; but what good would it be to him to act indifferently? "Certainly," he repeated, "the government can be persuaded with a few words."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The First Glass Cups.

The first glass cups were made at Alexandria. Some were colored like Bohemian glass and decorated with glass pastes, imitating precious stones and cameos. Some were opaline, others clear as crystal and still others formed of opaque layers welded together like the famous Portland vase, in which the white upper layer had been cut away like that of a cameo, leaving a blue ground around the figures.

Serving Cabbage.

The more a cabbage looks like a cabbage the comelier it appears on the table. Serve a boiled cabbage in a cup fashioned of the outside leaves and in that way copy its original grace which the taste of all the cooks in the world cannot rival.

Giant and Dwarf.

Daniel Lambert, the Leicestershire giant, was the most corpulent man of his generation and weighed upward of 700 pounds. General Tom Thumb once walked through the arm of his coat.

Animal Exercise.

Many animals never take exercise for its own sake. The muscular system of animals is kept in the most perfect condition, however, by their search for food. With them exercise is natural and therefore perfect of its kind.

Cork.

All the cork used in the world in a year weighs a little over 1,000 tons.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

Mitchell the tailor puts on the genuine union label.

T. Roberts, of Fort Steele, was in Fernie recently.

The Minto club holds its next dance on Monday evening.

Dan McNeish, of Fort Steele, was in town several days last week.

Lady with seven years experience wishes to secure a situation in a store. Apply at this office.

It is reported that Carter-Cotton, the polished editor of the News Advertiser, has been engaged to edit the Victoria Colonist.

J. W. Nunn has severed his connection with The Trites-Wood Co. to accept a position with the Crows Nest Trading Co.

The Minto Club dance on Tuesday evening was not well attended owing doubtless to the inclement weather. The music was excellent.

Fred Adie, of Waneta, Government Fruit Inspector, was in town yesterday on official business. He caused 60 boxes of apples to be destroyed on account of scab.

Mrs. H. B. Wright and little daughter arrived last evening from West Virginia to make their home with Mr. Wright, who a couple of months ago accepted the position of chief engineer for the Coal Company.

J. W. Dobson leaves tonight on a trip to the East. Various conjectures are offered by his friends as to the cause of the journey, but those who claim to be "in the know" hint that he may not return alone.

W. T. Healey left on Tuesday for his former home in Michigan where he will spend a well-earned holiday during the winter. Mr. Healy is a foreman at the Elk Lumber Co's mill and is one of the old-timers of Fernie.

Mr. Edmund R. O'Hearn, one of Rossland's young business men, was a visitor to town this week and was stopping at the Royal. He purposes opening up a gents' furnishing store in the Lundy block in about ten days.

Dan Patch broke two world records on a Georgia track on Monday. To a high sulky he lowered the direct record of 2:06 to 2:04 3-4. Twenty-five minutes later to the usual track sulky he went two miles in 4:17 lowering Nervola's record of 4:19 by two seconds flat.

Constable Farquharson received a painful injury while attempting to arrest a man on Thursday night. The culprit, Jack Moran, lay on his back, and the constable in an unguarded moment received a severe kick on the leg below the knee. The latter had no weapons or handcuffs and the offender got away.

Sore and swollen joints, sharp, shooting pains, torturing muscles, no rest, no sleep—that means rheumatism. It is a stubborn disease to fight, but Chamberlain's Pain Balm has conquered it thousands of times. One application gives relief. Try it. All druggists and dealers sells it.

The Roman Catholic church is preparing a unique concert for Tuesday evennext in Princess Hall. Father Cocola's band of trained Indian boys from St. Eugene mission will be the special attraction. Local talent will make up the remainder of the program. The plan of the hall at Liphardt's. Seats 75 cents and 50 cents. At 11 a.m. the boys will parade.

W. F. Holden, the advance agent for the Harold Nelson Co., informs us that the reason his company passed by Fernie last time was on account of the high cartage rates in this town. This, he says, is an important matter when it is considered that they carry 52 trunks, making up a car-load of effects. He also says that other good shows on the road take the same view of the matter

All graduates of Toronto University o affilliated colleges, and all who passed one or more examinations in the University or affilliated colleges, now residing in East Kootenay, are requested to send their names and address to Rev. W G. Fortune as soon as possible. A branch of the Aiumni association is being formed in Nelson in January and the name of each alumnus in East Kootenay should be known by the association.

A prairie fire got started in the neighborhood of Claresholm on Friday. All day long the settlers fought the flames but their efforts were of but little avail, a heavy wind from the north sending the fire along at a tremendous rate. Several narrow escapes are reported. The government fire guard in that locality, which runs east and west, was of great service in checking the spread of the flames.—Macleod Advance.

The Coal Company has instituted a new system of distributing coal for loca orders. The coal is now loaded on the wagons direct from the cars instead of from the coal bins. The change insures a satisfactory solution to the slack question. Now the slack and lump coal is all mixed together, making good fuel for domestic purposes, and each purchaser gets the same kind of coal. Formerly the lump coal and the slack was separated by the action of dumping it into the bins, which caused unfair distribution.

Bright furnished room to let. Apply at this office.

A watch free. See Sheppard & Elliott's advertisement.

See that the union label is on your clothes. F. J. Mitchell puts it on.

F. E. Simpson, of the Cranbrook Herald, was in town over Thursday night.

Brakeman R. Dingman, of Cranbrook, has been promoted to the position of yard master at Michel.

Ebony sets, engraved and filled in with white enamel, make good Christmas presents. At Liphardt's. x

Dr. E. C. Arthur, of Nelson, Grand Master I. O. O. F., paid the Fernie lodge an official visit this week.

Advertisers are requested to have their changes of advertisements in at this office by Friday noon of each week.

Mrs. H. Bentley and daughter left on Tuesday for Ontario where they will spend the winter visiting friends.

Messrs. P. F. Murray and John coughlin, of Morrissey, left this week on a vacation to their homes in Pennsylvania.

The bazaar of the Ladies' Guilds of Christ church passed off very successfully on Wednesday. Over $300 was realized.

Cut that conpon out and jot down your guess. It costs you not a cent and you may get the watch. Some one has to get it.

The case against the Italians who were mixed up in the big scrap a few weeks ago was well ventilated in the police court this week. Charges and counter charges were laid and so much contradictory evidence was given as to increase the complications. The up-shot of the whole matter is that Jim Jemma and G. Petrocco got 6 weeks each and the two Cocciolona brothers, Joe and Nick, got two weeks each. The other two were allowed to go on suspended sentence.

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works of Fort Steele, B.C., for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Beginning at a post marked J. D. Viets' south west corner post which is situated along Fording river and three miles north of the Northern boundary of 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district. B.C., and which corner post is near the south east corner post of J. L. Doupe's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 813, thence from the said south west corner post of J. D. Viets, east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

255-4 J. D VIETS
October 26th 1903. W. Boivin Locater.

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 160 acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 1966, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 273 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 40 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 40 chains to place of commencement.

249-8 JOSEPH BAUER
Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Among Xmas Books just received we have some very attractive

Art Works

by

Margaret E. Sangster
Ernest Thompson-Seton
W. J. Long
J. Whitcomb Riley
John Burroughs

and other popular and standard authors.

Also

a well assorted stock of

CHILDREN'S ILLUSTRATED BOOKS

Prices Right Call and Inspect

Fernie Drug Store.

N. E. SUDDABY.

Notice is hereby given that the half yearly meeting of the Board of License Commissioners, Fort Steele License District, will be held at Cranbrook on Tuesday the fifteenth day of December, 1903, at the hour of ten in the forenoon, when the following applications for liquor licenses will come before the Board;

Andrew Good	Summit Hotel	Crows Nest
John Nesbitt	Loop Hotel	Loop
S. Herchmer	Michel Hotel	Michel
W. W. Tuttle	Royal Hotel	Fernie
J. L. Gates	Alberta Hotel	Fernie
A. Mutz	Fernie Hotel	Fernie
J. F. Jarvis	Victorta Hotel	Fernie
Wm. Eschwig	Northern Hotel	Fernie
Sarah Jennings	Central Hotel	Fernie
James Joyce	Muskoka Hotel	Fernie
T. H. Whelan, transfer from James Joyce	Muskoka Hotel.	Fernie
A. Mutz	Union Hotel	Fernie
P. Carosella	Roma Hotel	Fernie
N. Gareau	Queen's Hotel	Fernie
A. P. Chenette transfer from N. Gareau	Queen's Hotel	Fernie
Joseph Jean	Waldorf Hotel	Fernie
Pollock Wine Co.	Wholesale	Fernie
L. Carosella	Wholesale	Fernie

J. H. McMULLIN.
Chief License Inspector.

Fernie, Nov. 21, 1903.

J. F. Armstrong, Government Agent, was in town this week.

We Suggest

A Bissell Carpet Sweeper

as a useful

Christmas Gift

Stock is Large
Price is Small

An Error

We are just in receipt of six watches shipped us in error, and to get rid of them at once will close out at low prices, you can see them in our window tonight. All priced in plain figures.

Now to ascertain how many people read our ads in the Free Press, we print a coupon in this issue: in connection with it, at noon to-day we wound up and started the watch hanging in the window, the person who guesses what time it stops, or is nearest to that time, will be given the watch free.

There are no restrictions; you are not asked to buy anything to compete, the only stipulation we make is that your guess must be on the coupon below and handed in before 10:30 to-night.

Coupon | I estimate that the watch will stop at ..... Name.....

Sheppard & Elliott

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbing

The Fernie Free Press
and
Montreal Weekly Herald
for
$2.00 per Year
In Advance.
Subscribe Now

Fernie Free Press	-	$2.00	per year
Montreal Weekly Herald		1.00	" "
The Two papers	bought separately	3.00	" "
" " "	under our offer	2.00	" "
	Saving -	1.00	" "

Notice is hereby given that on the 18th day of December, 1903, at the Cedar Valley Improvement Coy's. mill site, I shall hold a sale of the saw mill plant and lumber belonging to the Cedar Valley Improvement Coy. Ltd.

J. R. MARTIN,
Asst. Timber Inspector.

Fernie, B.C., Nov. 18th, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands. Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "M. E. Brown's north east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains to place of commencement.

M. E. BROWN
J. G. Cummings, locator.
Dated the 9th of November, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and pretroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Fairfield's south east corner"; thence west 80 chains; thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

H. B. FAIRFIELD
J. G. Cummings, locator.
Dated November 9th, 1903. 255-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 dys after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Selwyn Gwillym Blaylock's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. G. Cumming's south-east corner"; thence north 80 chains' thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains to place of commencement.

J. G. CUMMINGS
Dated November 11th, 1903. 255-4

Notice is hereby given that under and by virtue Section 59, 60 & 62, Chap. 113 of the revised statutes of British Columbia, I shall, on Nov. 30, '03 offer for sale by public competition at Carbon Creek, the saw mill plant formerly operated by the Carbon Creek Lumber Company at Carbon Creek, three miles east of Michel in the district East Kootenay.

J. R. MARTIN,
Asst. Timber Inspector.
Nelson, B.C., October 30th, 1903. 253-3

For cheap and reliable winter goods see Crows Nest Trading Co's. advt.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Hugh McLean's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

HUGH MCLEAN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described land: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Gus Erickson's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "A. Mutz's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

A. MUTZ.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked 'John Kubala's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOHN KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Annie McIntyre's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ANNIE MCINTYRE.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "C. J. Tuttle's south- east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

C. J. TUTTLE,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "P. Kubala's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

P. KUBALA,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of P. Kubala's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Joe Masura's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

JOE MASURA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Eva Fairfield's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

EVA FAIRFIELD,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked, "Annie Dobbin's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of begginning.

ANNIE DOBBIN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Maude May Barber's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

MAUDE MAY BARBER.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Peter Podbielancik's south-east corner;" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.

PETER PODBIELANCIK.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of Octocer, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Augustus Fairfield's south-west corner;" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

AUGUSTUS FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Robert Gilmore's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ROBERT GILMOUR,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Gus Erickson's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

GUS ERICKSON,
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903.

Lib. Legislative Assy. Dec 31 1901

197

The Fernie Free Press

CROW'S NEST MOUNTAIN

VOL. X. No. 23. FERNIE, B.C., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1903. WHOLE NUMBER, 257

METHODIST CHURCH.
FERNIE, B.C.
SERVICES:
Sunday.....11 a.m. and 7:30 p.m.
Sabbath School and Bible Class, 3 p.m.
Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m.
Epworth League.....Monday at 8 p.m.
Strangers are cordially invited.
REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

W. R. ROSS. J. S. T. ALEXANDER
Ross & Alexander,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
FERNIE - - - - - - B.C.
Office:—Room 3, Cuthbert Block, Victoria Ave

H. W. HERCHMER SHERWOOD HERCHMER
Herchmer & Herchmer
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, ETC.
Offices over P. Burns & Co's block, Victoria Ave.

H. Leslie Staebler
TEACHER ON PIANO
Classes in Burrowes' Musical Kindergarten System.
Studio,---Two Doors North of Christ Church, Fernie.

MT. FERNIE LODGE NO. 47
I.O. O.F.
Meets every Thursday evening at 8 p.m. in Joyces's Hall.
JOHN WILLIAMS, R.S.

ELK RIVER LODGE NO. 35
A.F A.M.
Regular meetings held first Friday in each month. Visiting brethren cordially invited.
W. J. TIMLICK, Secretary.

A fine assorrment of
CHINA GOODS
AT LOW PRICES
HOW FOON'S STORE BAKER ...STREET

J. Barber, L.D.S., D.D.S.,
DENTIST
Opposite ROYAL HOTEL
Office hours 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Among Xmas Books just received we have some very attractive
Art Works
by
Margaret E. Sangster
Ernest Thompson-Seton
W. J. Long
J. Whitcomb Riley
John Burroughs
and other popular and standard authors.
Also
a well assorted stock of
CHILDREN'S ILLUSTRATED BOOKS
Prices Right Call and Inspect
Fernie Drug Store.

A. H. REEDER RESIGNS.

ACCEPTED A BETTER POSITION IN VIRGINIA.

The Coal Company Again Without a General Manager.—Mr. Stockett Acting In That Capacity—Mr. Reeder Left Yesterday.

Mr. A. H, Reeder the recently appointed general manager for the C. N. P. Coal Company has resigned his position and left on last evening's express for the east to accept a similar but more remunerative one in West Virginia.

The town was electrified on Thursday by a street rumor to the effect that the new general manager had resigned. A FREE PRESS reporter who approached Mr. Reeder on Friday for the purpose of learning the facts was cheerfully supplied with the same.

"Yes" he said "the report is true. I received an unsolicited offer of the general management of the Virginia Coal and Iron Company by wire. I wired my resignation to the board of directors at Toronto and received an acceptance yesterday. I leave with my family this evening."

Continuing, Mr. Reeder stated the change caused him some reget as he was favorably impressed with the outlook for this district. He was much pleased with all the features of his present position and he had nothing but praise to say of all connected with his staff. The question with him had resolved itself into one of dollars and cents. He had received a more remunerative position and for that reason alone he had decided to make the change. The offer had come unsolicited and as a surprise to him. He had known nothing of it at the time of accepting the position here. It would entail considerable personal expense as his car of furniture was somewhere west of Winnipeg and it would have to be sent straight to Virginia. Mr. Reeder did not know who his successor would be.

Mr. Stockett has been instructed to take charge of the general manager's department temporarily. This is the fourth time that he has been called upon to fill this office. His practical knowledge of coal mining, coupled with his long personal superintendence of these mines eminently fits him for that position.

ON TRIAL FOR MURDER.

Interesting Case Has no Precedent—Defense Attacks Dying Man's Alleged Declaration

The preliminary trial of Edward Merrilla alias Edward Aho on the charge of murdering Andrew Johnson at Michel on Oct. 20th was conducted in the courthouse on Wednesday evening and all day Thursday before J. F. Armstrong, S. M. The case is a peculiar one, no precedents being known to exist. J. A. Harvie is prosecuting and Herchmer & Herchmer represent the defense. The case for the prosecution is about complete and it will not be resumed until next Friday when the defense will be submitted.

The prosecution rests its case chiefly upon dying declaration under oath of Johnson as interpreted by J. Nakola and written by L. R. Forbes, with R. L. Henderson and E. Kummer as witnesses. The document reads as follows:

"I am dying. I got full the day after pay day and Ed. Merilla threw the rock at my head and no one saw him throw it, but after he threw it he said to the other boys, 'he is alright now.' John Prosi heard him, also Elias Park. He threw the stone outside No. 70 about 15 yards away. I don't know the time, it was about dusk. Two men were fighting. I went to separate them and the whole gang started to fighting. That was when I was hit on the head by the rock. The mark on my head was caused by it."

L. R. Forbes under cross-examination swore that this was the exact wording of the declaration as interpreted by Nakola.

R. L. Henderson swore that the above statement was correct in substance. He was not prepared to swear whether the wording was exact or not. E. Kummer also swore to the correctness of the statement as a whole but he could not swear to each clause.

Prosi and Park also testified to having seen Johnson and Aho go out together and to the latter's remark upon entering the house again. This evidence however did not agree with what they swore at the inquest

The defense we understand will attack the above alleged declaration of the dying man, and will attempt to prove its illegality.

Sore and swollen joints, sharp, shooting pains, torturing muscles, no rest, no sleep—that means rheumatism. It is a stubborn disease to fight, but Chamberlain's Pain Balm has conquered it thousands of times. One application gives relief. Try it. All druggists and dealers

DRANK CARBOLIC ACID.

A Miner Named Cauley Suicided at the Central Hotel Last Saturday.

James Cauley committed suicide at the Central Hotel last Saturday p.m. by drinking carbolic acid. The deceased applied late the preceding night for a bed. He signed the register, paid in advance and went to bed without attracting any particular notice. The next morning at 11 o'clock the bed was still occupied and at four p.m. the chambermaid found upon opening the door a strong smell of carbolic acid and in the middle of the room the body of the man was lying on the floor. Hastily reporting the discovery to Mr. Mills, the manager, the latter found the man apparently dead and he summoned Coroner Trites and Dr. Corsan.

The coroner impanelled a jury and after viewing the body an adjournment was declared until Wednesday when Dr. Higgins gave the result of the post mortem examination. His evidence clearly went to prove that the deceased had died from the effects of carbolic acid poisoning. A 3 oz. bottle containing a little dilute acid was found in the closet off the room, and a cup smelling of the acid was also found.

Leslie Mills related all that he knew of the matter. The deceased was apparently in a sober condition when he retired on the preceding evening. The jury brought in a verdict of suicide by carbolic acid poisoning.

Mr. Cauley was a coal-miner and and worked at Coal Creek. He was a young man of about 30 years old and of good physique. His friends are said to reside at Scranton, Pa.

The funeral took on Monday under the auspices of the Miners' Union of which the deceased was a member.

COAL CREEK MINES.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

A large, new boiler is being installed by the engineers at the power house.

Mr. Trotman of the Michel store is filling the place of Mr. Thomson, Jr., who has been removed to Michel. R. Monan, of Fernie, is keeping the books at the store.

The motor line has been fully laid to he new tunnels and now the motor instead of the horses is used for hauling the coal.

The Ladies Aid of Coal Creek are making elaborate preparations for an entertainment on Christmas night.

A male choir of about 15 voices, chiefly Welsh, is being organized.

A Christmas Eve entertainment will be given by the children of the Sunday School.

An Epworth League was formed here on Monday evening.

John Thompson is recovering from his late injury.

YAWCOB AND HIS DOG.

And Yawcob, observing his dog Schnitzel, spake unto him as follows:

"You vas only a tog, but I vish I vas you. Ven you go mit your bed in you shust durn round dree dimes und lay down. Ven I go mit my bed, I haf to lock up der place, and vind der clock und pud der cat out, und undress myselluf und my vrow wakes up und scolds, den der baby vakes up and cries und I haf to valk mit der house around; den maybe ven I gets myselluf to bed it is time to get up vonce more again. Ven you get up mit your bed and shust stretch yourselluf, dig your neck a leedle und you vas up. I haf to light der fire und put on der kittle, scrap some mit my vife alretty und git myselluf breakfast. You play mit der day all round und haf plentys of fun. I haf to go to vork all day round und haf plenties of drubble. Ven you die you vas dead. Ven I die I haf to go to hell yet."—Boompernickel Blatter.

COAL MINES' BILL.

Victoria, Dec. 10th.—On the second reading of the Coal Mines Regulation bill Mr. Hawthornthwaite explained that it provided for an eight-hour day in coal mines from pit mouth to pit mouth He continued that socialists did not intend to reform the present social system. The Liberals professed to do so, but the Conservatives although making few professions, had carried out some great reforms, and, therefore, he looked to them for help.

Mr. Ross, of Fernie, gave his support to the bill. He reminded the House that this rule applied at the present time to metalliferous miners, and its provisions should be extended to the coal miners as well.

The leader of the opposition expressed his thorough sympathy with the bill, which was actually in practice, he believed, in the Vancouver island coal mines.

The Premier praised the measure, and said it would be necessary to safeguard the agreement in force at Fernie between the owners and the employees, by the insertion of one additional clause.

Richard Hall described the bill as one not intended to help the miner, but one levelled at vested interests. Under the bill some men would actually work only five or six hours and consume the rest of the time in passing from pit head to pit head. The government he described as one existing merely at the beck and call of the socialists.

Mr. Paterson claimed that the bill was aimed at a single corporation, viz., the Crow's Nest Coal company. It was well known that that corporation was under contract with the Dominion Government to sell coal at a certain price at the pit head. He did not know how the present bill would effect their position. Unless it could be shown that it was the intention to protect the company in that particular, he would oppose the bill.

The bill passed its second reading.

MORE JAIL ACCOMMODATION

F. S. Hussey, Superintendent of Police visits Fernie.

F. S. Hussey, of Victoria, superintendent of Provincial Police, arrived in Fernie last Saturday and remained until Thursday. He came up especially to report on the need of more jail accommodation. He was surprised with the condition of affairs and he advised the department strongly to take immediate action along certain lines suggested by him.

He was of the opinion that it would be impossible to build a large jail in Fernie for some time yet and he was in favor of making certain improvements and additions to the present building to answer temporarily. He has advised the department to tear the inside out of the lock-up, to convert that space into offices and to add a lock-up building in the corner of the lot next the lane with a high fence around the two sides. This lock-up will have six cells, each three times as large as the present cells. These would be large enough to accommodate four men each.

While here the superintendent inquired into the need of lock ups at Morrissey and Michel and he will also ask appropriations for the erection of suitable structures for this purpose at these places.

FORGERY AND FALSE PRETENSE.

J. Nakola and Elias Parki were arrested on Thursday because of an attempt made by them to secure the pay of the late Andrew Johnson from the Coal Company. Parki applied at the Company's office for Johnson's statement and afterwards returned and demanded the money amounting to forty seven dollars, presenting the statement duly signed by Johnson. The pair came up for trial yesterday before H. H. Trites, J.P., and were remanded. This morning the police learned enough to lead them to believe that the whole trouble was the result of ignorance and that no premeditated wrong was intended. Johnson's brother, who works below Elko, came to town and told the police that he had instructed Parki to get the money and that Parki got Hakola to sign for Johnson not knowing that it was unlawful. In the light of these facts the accused will likely get off easy. Johnson also threw some important light on his brother's affairs. The deceased leaves a widow and four children in Finland. He had a homestead near Edmonton, which his brother is now anxious to secure.

NEW ROAD.

At the last session of the Dominion Parliament a charter was granted to build a railway from Macleod to the boundary line by way of Cardston with power to build a branch line to the Kootenay oil fields.

It is now stated on good authority that the famous J. J. Hill is negotiating for the purchase of the said charter and that there is every reason to believe that construction will be commenced on this road in the early spring.

The C.P.R. officials have always looked upon this westerly portion of Southern Alberta as a part of the west entirely under their control, where no other railroad was likely to build, and where they could act quite independently of the best interests of the community. Macleod and Pincher Creek are shameful examples of the way in which this corporation has outraged the rights of the people, and it is not to be wondered at now that the community should rejoice at the prospect of being relieved of its clutches.—Macleod Gazette.

BUSINESS CHANGE.

N. E. Suddaby who has had charge of the Fernie Drug Store for the past sixteen months has resigned his position to accept a more lucrative one with Frederick Stearns & Co., the world renowned drug firm. Mr. Suddaby will represent this firm throughout British Columbia and the territories. He leaves to-morrow or on Monday. His many friends will be pleased to see him on his regular trips to Fernie. J. W. Mitchell, of Mount Forest, arrived this week to take over the business at the Fernie Drug Store.

HAROLD NELSON'S "QUO VADIS."

The Harold Nelson Company played "Quo Vadis" to a full house on Thursday evening. The excellent reputation that this star Canadian actor and his company have earned was fully maintained in representing this strong and realistic story of the dawn of Christianity upon the pagan Roman world.

Vinicius the sincere and brave young Roman soldier whose love was reciprocated but not rewarded by Lygia the Christian hostage on account of his paganism was taken by Nelson. He very cleverly depicted the varying emotions of this earnest but misguided lover as the great truths of the new religion gradually dawned upon him, until he renounced his past life and underwent persecution. The star actor was admirably supported by every member of his company. Mr. Bruce as Petronius, the cynical courtier, was a strong feature of the play. The story was played in 6 acts, which required 3 hours to run off.

The scenic effects were surprisingly good, rivalling indeed that seen at many a city theatre. This company deserves the best support of the towns favored with a visit from it. A bumper house is sure to greet it upon its return to Fernie.

An Attack of Pneumonia Warded off.

"Some time ago my daughter caught a severe cold. She complained of pains in her chest and had a bad cough. I gave her Chamberlain's Cough Remedy according to directions and in two days she was well and able to go to school. I have used this remedy in my family for the past seven years and have never known it to fail," says James Prendergast, merchant, Annota Bay, Jamaica, West India Islands. The pain in the chest indicated an approaching attack of pneumonia, which in this instance was undoubtedly warded off by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It counteracts any tendency of a cold toward pneumonia. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

The Free Pree Christmas Number is now under way and will be in the hands of our patrons in time for Christmas presentations to absent friends. As in former years, we are sparing no efforts to make our Christmas number attractive and interesting. It will contain a comprehensive history of the year in matters pertaining to the town and district. It will deal fully with the industries and commercial interests of the valley in which careful regard to facts and figures will be observed. The number will be profusely illustrated. In addition to local matter there will be some excellent reading of a family magazine nature making up a book of considerable size. The merchants and other business men of the town are liberally assisting in the work by contributing to the advertising columns for which we wish to express our due appreciation. The book will sell for 25 per copy.

MICHEL

F. B. Sample spent several days here this week.

A. Dick, mine inspector, was in town this week on an official trip.

Engine 424 arrived here on Tuesday to take the place of 428 which has been in the yard here for some time.

The ruins of the hotel have been clear-away and the excavation work for the foundation is almost complete.

All the new coke ovens that are finished about 200 in all have been kindled and will put out coke in a few days.

Messrs. Laidley and Delzell, of Fernie, left here Thursday night on their way up the Elk for a few days shooting.

The new fan house for No. 8 mine is nearing completion and the machinery will be put in place in a short time.

The mines have been running better of late and the miners have not lost much time on account of breakages or shortage of cars.

The old company store has been fitted as an hotel till such time as the new one is completed. The hotel was opened Saturday last.

All the houses in town that are complete are occupied and it is stated that about as many more would be filled were they built at once.

On Thursday a freight train coming in from the west had to slacken up just at the stone quarry to allow a band of six deer to pass across the track.

A number in town are wondering if the new regulation at Morrissey in regard to the men who go out on the monthly sprees, will be put in force here.

The stone for the foundation of the new hotel is being taken out of the old bed of the creek just below the tipple. About a half dozen men are employed there.

The ladies of the Methodist Sunday School are very busy these evenings training the children for the Christmas entertainment which will be held in the church Xmas Eve.

Within the last two weeks there has been advance agents for several companies here looking for a suitable place to give an entertainment but no such place could be found.

The season for deer is nearly out and as yet none have been brought into Michel, but Messrs. Smith and Bullock at the Elk bridge were successful in getting about a half a dozen near Sparwood.

The electric lights have been installed in the machine shops and on the tipple. The men are also working on the line every day and it is expected that all the houses that are wired will have lights in a short time now.

A special song service entitled "The Battle of Life" was given in the Methodist church here Sunday evening last. All there appreciated it and the choir certainly deserves credit for the able manner in which they handled the singing.

The mountains on either side of the valley here have presented one of the most beautiful scenes imaginable for the last two or their days. The heavy green timber has been covered with white frost all along the hillside thus making a beautiful scene.

The school here at present is overcrowded and the trustees hope to get another room or building and have two teachers here in the near future. The inspector's attention was given to this when here a week ago, so it is expected that it will not be long before another building is secured.

UNEXPECTED IMPRESSION

By Bennet Musson

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

If one were looking for a cure for bashfulness carbon paper would seem an unlikely thing to select. But it was a piece of this paper which, if it did not exactly cure John Kendall, at least overcame the effects of his shyness.

John's bashfulness was most pernicious, and, while it had not retarded his career as a successful manufacturer in the flourishing town of Schuylerville, it proved a very embarrassing possession when he was smitten with the tender passion.

In the first place, Margaret Little was an "authoress," and that alone was an awe inspiring circumstance. To be able to write stories which met with occasional acceptance, to have the postman sometimes bring her thin letters containing checks and not to be the grinning bearer of bulky packages of rejected manuscripts, placed her on a plane above other women—in John's eyes; not that she needed such placing, for it would be futile to chronicle the angelic qualities with which he endowed her.

The trouble with this endowment process was that it was not disclosed to Margaret. John could write and did write letters teeming with sentiment. Of course it was unfortunate that these letters never were sent. It was more unfortunate that he found himself unable to express in her presence the feelings which agitated his six feet of manhood.

He had made three attempts at a proposal, each of which had ended in stammering confusion and dire failure, and it is probable that the number would have been extended indefinitely had not a rival appeared on the field.

Any one who showed Margaret the slightest attention was a rival in John's view, and it seemed impossible that the editor of a New York magazine would come fifty miles to Schuylerville for the sole purpose of consulting Margaret about a series of stories for his periodical. If this innocent purpose brought the editor, something emotionally attractive in Margaret's pretty face must have induced his reappearance within a month, and it was during this second visit that John spurred himself to action.

On a June afternoon he deserted his desk and determinedly strode toward the Little homestead. His courage usually lasted until he passed the front gate, but on this occasion he was surprised to find it upholding him even after he had reached the veranda. It evaporated when he rang the bell. A maid told him that Miss Little had gone for a walk with the gentleman from New York. This information, coming as a respite, at first relieved John. Then jealousy renewed his courage, and he boldly said that he wished to leave a note for Margaret.

ACROSS THE ORCHARD CAME MARGARET AND THE EDITOR.

In the matter of impassioned missives John Kendall was no coward, and he sat at Margaret's little desk and dashed off a few glowing periods on a sheet of her manuscript paper. When the effusion was finished it proved satisfactory, being, in fact, a condensation of the others which he had left unsent. He folded it neatly and was reaching into a pigeonhole in the desk for an envelope when he happened to glance out of the window.

Across the orchard came Margaret and the editor. The latter, a small, blond, handsome man, was walking close beside his contributor and looking smilingly into her beautiful eyes.

After viewing this scene John was seized with panic at the thought of Margaret's reading his note immediately. The next instant he was striding away from the house, scattering bits of white paper to the June breezes.

He did not see Margaret for a week, and during that time deep despair held him for its own. Then an urgent business affair led him to call on her father, who was suffering from a slight illness and was unable to leave his house.

When the interview with Mr. Little was at an end and John reached the front door, he found Margaret sitting on the veranda. He thought to pass her with a formal greeting, but his intentions usually went astray where she was concerned, and he was soon seated near her in a wide armed veranda chair.

"I am sorry I missed you when you called last week," said Margaret after her father's illness had been discussed.

"I'm sorry, too," John replied, mentally condemning the memory of the maid, who he hoped had forgotten the incident.

"The girl said something about you leaving a note," continued Margaret.

"Yes—er—an invitation to a picnic," John said weakly, "but the affair was postponed."

"Before you could write the note?"

"No. I thought it would be postponed, so I changed my mind."

Margaret was looking demurely at a rosebush. "It has been postponed before," she murmured softly, but her companion did not hear the remark. "John," she said in a louder tone, "I suppose it is only in an invitation to a picnic that you would address me as your dearest Margaret."

John Kendall turned slowly and regarded the object of his affections with bewilderment. He wondered if any of the torn bits of paper had been picked up and pieced together by Margaret, but he had scattered them so widely that that seemed impossible.

Miss Little, who had transferred her gaze from the rosebush to her lover's face, seemed to enjoy his expression. Then John rocked violently in the veranda chair in the hope that the action would induce mental stimulation, but it did not.

"Will you come with me for a moment?" Margaret asked, rising and entering the house.

John followed her to her study. There, on the little desk, was the pile of manuscript paper. Margaret took a note from the bosom of her dress, unfolded it slowly and handed it to John.

"There was a piece of carbon paper among the top sheets," she said, "and this was under it." And John read an exact copy of the effusion he had addressed to Margaret the week before.

For a moment he looked helplessly at the note, then he glanced shyly down at Margaret, and the expression he saw in her eyes was entirely unlike that with which she had regarded the editor.

It seemed to say, "Speak for yourself, John," and had the stolid typewriter which stood on the desk risen to the occasion it would have added another love scene to its long list.

In the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Kendall, in Schuylerville, is a den, and on one of its walls hangs a bit of black paper in a gilt frame. When the curious question John about this paper he tells them its story, if they are worthy, and if they are unworthy he merely says that it is an impressionistic picture of the darkest hour before dawn.

Whims of a Great Singer.

Brignoli, the great tenor, was so careful of his voice when he had to sing that he would not speak at all and was in the habit of writing his wishes on a piece of paper. During the last thirty years of his life he lived at the Everett House when not on the road. It took him at least three-quarters of an hour to go from his room to the sidewalk. He must get used to the changes very gradually. Leaving the room, he would pace up and down the hall for ten or fifteen minutes until thoroughly "acclimatized," as he himself would say, and from there would go to the lobby to experience for twenty minutes a slightly lower degree of temperature.

At the end of half an hour he usually reached the vestibule, where he would pass another quarter, opening the outer door occasionally to get a taste of the fresh air. When thoroughly acclimatized here he buttoned his greatcoat close about him and stepped out on the pavement.

Brignoli never was known to be ready to go on the stage to sing his part. He had to wait one minute or several minutes before appearing. In this he was a great trouble to managers. "Just give me one minute more," he would beg, and when that was up he would plead for another and another till all patience was exhausted.

How Loco Acts.

Loco is often called "crazy weed" from its dire effect on cattle and horses when they eat it in any quantity. In the beginning the poison is slow in showing itself. The first symptom is usually a dull, glassy look in the eyes, which gradually dilate and become wild and staring.

If after this the animal is left to graze on the herb the symptoms will become more pronounced, the vision becomes impaired, and the victim develops an aptitude for grotesque antics, sometimes rushing madly about. A "locoed" horse will balk, back, rear and often hurl itself backward and has the greatest objection to having its head touched.

The last and fatal stage of the disease is a gradual wasting away of the animal. Cattle born on the prairies seem instinctively to avoid the loco. High grade beasts most easily fall victims to their partiality for the weed.

Ending Her Stories.

A very small girl of very large literary ambitions found it easy enough to begin her "stories" and work up the plots to the right consistency for thrill producing, but then for the life of her she could not "get them stopped." One day, however, she hit upon a happy expedient, and thereafter the "ending" of her narratives was a matter of the utmost ease. The closing sentence, which came with an inspiration and served to draw the curtain on innumerable adventures, was, "One morning when they were walking up the front path they all died." Occasionally "back road" or "dark turnpike" or "sunny lane" or something of the sort was substituted for "front path;" but, with the exception of such minor variations, the one cheerful expedient served the small authoress' purpose for months, and the only question in her mind was why she had never thought of it before!—New York Tribune.

OXFORD ECONOMY STEEL RANGES.

The bodies of these Ranges are made of the best quality range steel, all outside exposed parts are lined with heavy sheet asbestos. They have cast iron extensions with white Enamelled Reservoirs, nickel plated drop Tea Pot Stands, Nickeled Towel Rods. They are made to burn any kind of coal, can be changed in two minutes to burn 26 inch wood. Highly nickeled throughout.

For full particulars send for illustrated booklet.

NOTE:—The following prices for these high grade ranges as illustrated, fully guaranteed.

No 9-18 oven 18x21x14 in. $50.00
No 9-20 oven 20x21x14 in. $52.50
(F. O. B., Winnipeg.)

Ask your dealer for them or write to us.

The GURNEY FOUNDRY Co.,
153 - 155 Lombard St., Winnipeg.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

It Has Perhaps the Finest Site For a City in the World.

Constantinople looks much better from the water than it does when viewed ashore. The tourist who touches at the port, remains on board and sees the city only from the sea retains an entirely different impression from that of him who goes ashore. Seen from the water, Constantinople is very beautiful. Seen from the shore, it is the apotheosis of everything that is filthy and foul. I do not say that it is unworthy of a visit, but I do say that he who stays on board will take away a much more picturesque impression.

The site of Constantinople is ideal. There is probably no finer site for a city in the world. It is situate on the Bosporus, between the Mediterranean and the Black seas. It lies between Europe and Asia, for Scutari is part of Constantinople, and Scutari is on the Asiatic shore. It is cut off by natural boundaries into municipal divisions, for the Golden Horn divides Stamboul, the Mohammedan, from Galata, the Christian, city. So the Bosporus divides Scutari, the Asiatic, from Constantinople, the European, city; yet all of these places make one great city under the general name of Constantinople. And this great city is guarded also by nature. It has the sea of Marmora close at hand, with fortifications at either end of this great water highway, rendering the city unassailable by sea. It has a peninsular conformation which also renders it, properly fortified, impregnable by land as well as by sea. It is as if San Francisco were to have batteries of heavy artillery all around her water front, from India basin to the presidio, from the presidio to Lake Merced and then across the neck of the peninsula from Lake Merced to India basin. With all these factors in its favor no wonder that Constantinople has always been looked upon as an ideal site for a city. That so many races should have battled over Byzantium for so many hundreds of years is not surprising.

WISDOM OF NOVELISTS.

Adam invented all the different ways in which a young man can make a fool of himself.—G. H. Lorimer.

The man who overestimates the foolishness of others is himself the biggest fool concerned.—Seton Merriman.

Tell the truth, live openly and stick to your friends—that's the whole of the best morality in the world.—Sarah Grand.

Every wrong brings with it its own punishment. It may be added that it frequently leaves it at the wrong house.—Barry Pain.

With good luck one can accomplish anything, but good luck is just one of the things that cannot be arranged for, even by the cleverest people.—Frankfort Moore.

Really beautiful things can't go out. They may disappear for a little while, but they must come back. It's only the ugly things that stay out after they've had their day.—W. D. Howells.

Slow in forming, swift in acting; slow in making, swift in working; slow to the summit, swift down the other slope; it is the way of nature and the way of the human mind.—Anthony Hope.

Why do people with immortal souls spend their lives in leaving tiny oblongs of pasteboard on other people with immortal souls whom they scarcely know and don't care a straw about?

Cute Boy.

Widow Eames—How would my little Johnny like a new papa?

Johnny (aged five)—Oh, you needn't shove the 'sponsibility on me, ma. It isn't a new papa for me, but a new husband for yourself, that you are thinking about.

Queer Uses of English.

No man living perhaps can pronounce the English language aright at all times and in all places, for correctness depends largely on time and place, and sometimes to be right you must be wrong. As soon as you step on shipboard and sail, the horizon, being clear and definite, sheds the need for a long "i," and at sea it rhymes with "orizon." In the army a route is always called a "rowte." Moreover, the cavalry, by long standing tradition, calls a horse an "orse," and the order is "stand to 'orses."—London Globe.

A Dance Without a Smile.

They have a singular kind of dance conducted on the greens of country villages in Russia. The dancers stand apart, a knot of young men here, a knot of maidens there, each sex by itself, and silent as a crowd of mutes. A piper breaks into a tune, a youth pulls off his cap and challenges his girl with a wave and a bow. If the girl is willing, she waves her handkerchief in token of assent. The youth advances, takes a corner of the handkerchief in his hand and leads his lassie round and round.

No word is spoken, and no laugh is heard. Stiff with cords and rich with braids the girl moves heavily by herself, going round and round, and never allowing her partner to touch her hand. The pipe goes droning on for hours in the same sad key and measure and the prize of merit in this "circling," as the dance is called, is given by spectators to the lassie who in all that summer revelry has never spoken and never smiled.

Studios That Are Workrooms.

All of the artists' studios in New York have not the magnificent interiors that romance suggests. On the contrary, a great many of the most effective pictures are turned out from rooms that are absolutely destitute of furniture, except for the working tools of the artist himself. Costly draperies, beautiful objects of art, often take the attention of the painter from his work, and there are quite a number of the most successful artists in the city whose studios are bare and comfortless as far as decorations are concerned. They are regarded by the painter as workrooms pure and simple, and æstheticism is confined to the imagination of the painter himself.

When the little folks take colds and coughs, don't neglect them and let them strain the tender membranes of their lungs. Give them

Shiloh's Consumption Cure The Lung Tonic

It will cure them quickly and strengthen their lungs. It is pleasant to take.

Prices 25c., 50c. and $1.00

S. C. WELLS & CO.
Toronto, Can. LeRoy, N.Y. 6

More than one-fourth of the inhabitants of Newfoundland are engaged in catching and curing fish for a living.

THE PRESIDENT

A SLAVE TO CATARRH

DR. AGNEW'S CATARRHAL POWDER RELIEVES IN 10 MINUTES.

D. T. Sample, President of Sample's Installment Company, Washington, Pa., writes: "For years I was afflicted with Chronic Catarrh. Remedies and treatment by specialists only gave me temporary relief until I was induced to use Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. It gave almost instant relief. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Agnew's Heart Cure is for the Nerves, Heart and Blood. 13

Philadelphia has 1,540 miles of streets and 480 of street railways.

Help your children to grow strong and robust by counteracting anything that causes ill-health. One great cause of disease in children is worms. Remove them with Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It never fails.

It isn't always the best cook who prepares the most fancy dishes.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

Better a small pice of pumpkin pie than a whole humble pie.

Summer brings leaves of absence and autumn brings absence of leaves

Now is the time for the man to get busy who resolved last year that he would not put off purchasing Christmas presents.

Thermometers, like baseball players, are now left out in the cold.

When a woman waits two years to sue a man for kissing her the inference might be drawn that she had been waiting to see if he would not kiss her again.

There are 2,000,000 sheep on the Oregon ranges. The worth of this year's output of wool is placed at $2,550,000.

HEALTH AND VIGOR FOR SICKLY WOMEN

By Supplying an Abundance of Rich, Red, Life-Sustaining and System-Building Blood.

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Thoroughly Cures the Ills Peculiar to Women.

The feminine organism is an intricate mass of delicate and sensitive nerves which require an enormous amount of pure, rich blood to nourish them and supply them with the vital force necessary to properly perform their functions.

When the blood is lacking in quantity or quality the nerve cells waste and shrivel up and by means of pain and irregularities make known their starved and depleted condition.

Unless the nervous system is put in proper condition all the medicine in the world will never cure the weakness and irregularities peculiar to women. Because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food contains the elements of nature which go to form new, rich blood and create new nerve force it is the most certain cure obtainable for such ailments.

When the nervous system becomes exhausted the whole body is more or less affected and the various organs fail to perform the duties devolving upon them. Digestion is impaired; there are feelings of discomfort in the stomach after meals, nervous sick headaches, irritability, sleeplessness; spells of weakness and dizziness come over you; you feel disheartened, discouraged and despondent and fear prostration, paralysis or insanity.

But there is new hope for you in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Not the false hope which is aroused by medicines composed of alcohol and other stimulants, but the hope which finds foundation in added flesh and tissue, in better appetite, more buoyant feelings and gradual disappearance of annoying symptoms.

As a blood builder and nerve restorative Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is bound to benefit your whole system. By noting your increase in weight while using it you can prove this beyond a doubt.

Fifty cents a box, 6 boxes for $2,50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

CHAMBERLAIN

IS THE PREFERENTIAL 10¢ CIGAR You'll Enjoy Every Bit Of It.

MADE BY J. M. FORTIER LTD., MONTREAL

RELIABLE JEWELRY BY MAIL

We make all our Jewelry in our own factory, hence the reason for our extraordinary values. We mention a few items:

4181	Amethyst Ring	$2 50
4276	Ladies' Signet Ring, 14 k. Gold	3 00
4247	Opal and 6 Fine Pearls	5 00
4222	14 k. Ring, 3 whole Pearls	10 00
4062	14 k. Ring, 3 Turquoise and Pearls	10 00
3959	Diamond Ring, 3 Fine Diamonds	25 00

Send For our new Illustrated Catalogue and price list.

156 YONGE ST AMBROSE KENT & SONS LIMITED MANUFACTURING JEWELERS. TORONTO.

(Liquozone was formerly known in Canada as Powley's Liquified Ozone.)

We Will Buy

A 50c. Bottle of Liquozone and Give it to You to Try.

Liquozone—liquid oxygen—is the only product that can kill germs in the body without killing you. No man knows any other way to destroy the cause of any germ disease.

It is new to America, and millions who need it don't know of it. For that reason we make this remarkable offer. We will buy the first bottle and give it to you if you need it. We will do it willingly, gladly, to convince you at once and forever that Liquozone does kill germs.

We Paid $100,000

for the rights to Liquozone for America. We tested this product for years in the most difficult germ diseases; then we bought these rights for the highest price ever paid for a scientific discovery.

We paid that price because Liquozone does what all the skill in the world cannot do without it. Any drug that kills germs is a poison to you and it cannot be taken internally. The best physicians, the world over, employ Liquozone alone for germ troubles; and any physician who doesn't is almost helpless in any germ disease

Just Oxygen.

Liquozone is simply liquid oxygen—no drugs, no alcohol in it. It is the discovery of Paul, the great German chemist, who spent 20 years on it. His object was to get such an excess of oxygen in staple form into the blood that no germ could live in any membrane or tissue.

Liquozone does that. The results are so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a germ that it cannot kill. Yet oxygen is Nature's greatest tonic—the very source of your vitality. Its effects are exhilarating, purifying, vitalizing. But germs are vegetables; and this excess of oxygen—the very life of an animal—is deadly to vegetable matter.

We spend 14 days in making each bottle of Liquozone, and the result is liquid oxygen—the best thing in the world for you, yet certain destruction to disease germs, wherever the Liquozone-laden blood goes.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone kills the germs, wherever they are, and the results are inevitable. By destroying the cause of the trouble, it invariably ends the disease, and forever.

Asthma	Hay Fever—Influenza
Abscess—Anemia	Kidney Diseases
Bronchitis	La Grippe
Blood Poison	Leucorrhea
Bright's Disease	Liver Troubles
Bowel Troubles	Malaria—Neuralgia
Coughs—Colds	Many Heart Troubles
Consumption	Piles—Pneumonia
Colic—Croup	Pleurisy—Quinsy
Constipation	Rheumatism
Catarrh—Cancer	Skin Diseases
Dysentery—Diarrhea	Scrofula—Syphilis
Dandruff—Dropsy	Stomach Troubles
Dyspepsia	Throat Troubles
Eczema—Erysipelas	Tuberculosis
Fevers—Gall Stones	Tumors—Ulcers
Goitre—Gout	Varicocele
Gonorrhea—Gleet	Women's Diseases

All diseases that begin with fever—all inflammation—all catarrh—all contagious diseases—all the results of impure or poisoned blood.

In nervous debility Liquozone acts as a vitaliser, accomplishing what no drugs can do.

50c. Bottle Free.

If you need Liquozone, and have never tried it, please send us this coupon. We will then mail you an order on your local druggist for a full-size bottle, and we will pay your druggist ourselves for it. This is our free gift, made to convince you; to show you what Liquozone is, and what it can do. In justice to yourself, please accept it to-day, for it places you under no obligation whatever.

Liquozone costs 50c. and $1.

CUT OUT THIS COUPON

for this offer may not appear again. Fill out the blanks and mail it to the Liquid Ozone Co., 221-229 Kinzie St., Chicago.

My disease is .....

I have never tried Liquozone or Powley's Liquified Ozone, but if you will supply me a 50c. bottle free I will take it.

.....

567 .....
DC A .....
Give full address—write plainly.

Liquozone—our trademark name—now appears on every bottle of genuine liquified ozone.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

The burgomaster gave him an angry glance; then they began to play, and the hospital was forgotten. A general move broke up the game after an hour; the dancers crowded in from the ball-room, waiters brought in tables, and every one prepared for supper.

Adler was accosted by a little lady in a white silk dress, apparently her wedding dress, and perfectly new.

"Have you seen my husband, Herr Doctor? I should be so much obliged to you if you would send him to me. I am really afraid," she whispered behind her spangled fan. "that he is down stairs in the bar-room taking beer."

His grave features lighted up at the sight of this fresh little face with the anxious eyes.

"I will hunt him up and send him to you, dead or alive," he said, and wound his way through the dense crowd.

Just then he felt his arm seized.

"Alfred, have you engaged Selma?" whispered his mother.

This recalled his duty to his mother's guest, and he pressed through a circle of gauzy toilets to where Fraulein Selma towered a full head above the others.

"May I have the honor of taking you to supper?"

Fraulein Selma blushed, put her large bouquet to her lips, and whispered:

"Ah, pardon me, but I did not know—I did not think—I have already promised Herr Lippert."

He bowed silently, found his way through the crowd, and reached the corridor, breathing freely again in the cool air. The public room was on the ground floor. Laughing and talking met his ear as he opened the door; a number of the gentlemen had deserted their families and were fortifying themselves in here with good Kulmbacher beer. Adler stepped up to the Circuit Judge Bohm and laid his hand on his shoulder.

"Your wife demands you," he said, jestingly.

The young man sprung up.

"Oh, heavens! has she noticed my absence already? What in the world does she want? She was in deep conversation just now with her mother and aunt." He emptied his beer mug hastily and went out.

Adler was about to follow him when his glance fell on a man who was sitting some distance from the crowded centre table in a dim corner; he had a paper in his hand, and a half empty beer mug stood before him, and he was smoking a short pipe.

"Kemmert," he asked, as he stood close to him, "is it really you? What in the world—"

The Oberforster sprung up, and the two men shook hands. The doctor drew up a chair and they sat opposite each other.

"Well, I call this a surprise," said he.

"I meant to come to see you this morning early, Adler—about the little one—Anne Marie."

"Have you the child with you?"

"Yes."

"Here?"

"No. She is with Lucie. She is so puny I do not know what is the matter with the little thing."

"I would so gladly have gone to you, Kemmert. Are the others well?"

"Yes, thank you. I wanted to come here any way, you know. I had something to talk to my sister-in-law about."

"Ah, so!"

The public room was now almost empty; only one or two commercial travelers sat in the opposite corner of the large, vaulted room talking earnestly in low tones. A half-grown waiter boy was leaning against the bar asleep—one of those unfortunate little creatures whose eyes will shut from fatigue by nine o'clock, because they are only children.

"Do you not want to go upstairs?" asked the Oberforster. "They must be having supper now. I had no idea there was to be such a time here to-night or I would have gone to the Anker."

"If you will let me, I will stay with you; we see each other so seldom, and I have no duties to perform upstairs. My lady declined my services. Tell me, how does everything go on out there in the forests and meadows?"

"I miss my wife, doctor, I miss my wife." The big man, with a sad expression on his face, took up his mug and drank hastily. "There is something wrong at every turn, and then the children—they are as helpless as a nest of young birds when the old one has flown away; it can not go on so any longer!" He had his handkerchief again in his hand, and it was moist when he took it from his eyes. "People will of course exclaim when they hear that I want to marry again—my wife is not dead a year. But if you knew, Adler, how it is at home—cold and unhome-like enough to make me run away. Everything is done because it must be, not a cheerful word to greet one at table, and one has to swallow his soup with suppressed tears when one sees only gloomy looks on the children. In a word, it is no life at all, Adler."

"You are right, Kemmert," said Dr. Adler, sympathetically. "I wish from my heart you will make a good choice, if only for the children's sake."

"I had not thought of a stranger," returned the Oberforster. "I have no time to go about and choose." A look of slight embarrassment came over his face, and wiping his beard with his handkerchief, he added: "I do not know whether you understand me, doctor, I thought of—"

"Lucie!" said Mr. Adler—it sounded breathless. "She wanted to stay——" he murmured.

The Oberforster nodded.

"Yes; the poor thing, I was hard upon her. But as I said before, when one is in grief one does not weigh one's words. I felt so bitter and unhappy, and then the world is so bad, Adler. God knows what I said to her, and so——"

He received no answer. Dr. Adler stared with tightly compressed lips at the cover of the beer mug that the little waiter had placed before him on the table. Just then he heard a cheer upstairs, and voices and music found their way downstairs, "And she?" he asked, at length, almost inaudibly.

"It is not an easy thing to be a step-mother."

"And she?" he asked again in a different tone.

"But still they are her sister's children, Adler."

"She is so young still," he said, in a hollow voice.

"But she has a heart for the children, doctor, and that is the main thing."

"Does she know about it?"

"That is what I have been to see her about."

They did not talk any more.

The two gentlemen that had been sitting there had gone; the little waiter was fast asleep on the counter; the soft ticking of the clock could be heard distinctly in the stillness. Then it struck twelve o'clock.

"Am I detaining you?" asked the Oberforster at last. "I will go to bed. I think I shall sleep in spite of the music. When can I bring Anne Marie to you to-morrow, doctor?"

Adler rose. "Either between nine and ten, or between one and two," he said; but he did not look at Kemmert as he spoke.

"Good-night then, Adler."

"Sleep well, Kemmert."

He had seated himself again, hardly knowing what he was doing, and did not move till the host came in and looked at him in a surprised way. Then he got up and went upstairs.

They were still at supper, and apparently in a most cheerful mood. All were talking, each one louder than the other. The band was playing a potpourri; it just changed from a soft love song into a merry air from the "Beggar Student."

"Come here," cried Circuit Judge Bohm from one end of the large horseshoe table, holding up his champagne glass. "Adler, come here! we will move closer together!"

The little lady in the white bridal dress waved to him with her napkin.

"Herr Doctor, come! Where have you been so long?"

The waiter brought a chair for him, and he was soon seated in the most enviable place of all—as they assured him — between two charming ladies, who teased him about his absence, and drank champagne and talked and answered themselves.

"Doctor," said Bohm, "you must settle a dispute between my wife and myself. You know you are half a minister; you ought to see what a long face you have, as if you had been sitting by a corpse."

"Oh, yes, the doctor shall decide," cried the ladies.

"Well, then, doctor, the ladies declare that a woman should never ask her husband's forgiveness, whatever she may have done. Where is the logic in that?"

"Where is the gallantry?" cried little Frau Elsa Bohm, laughing. "And if you wait till the judgment day I will never say 'Pater peccavi!'"

"But allow me," began the doctor; "surely he who has been in the wrong must—"

"Certainly he, but never she. You know we never are in the wrong," she declared, with an air of heartfelt satisfaction.

Adler had to smile, but became grave in a moment.

"You will not make much impression upon her," remarked the husband, coolly. "Why, when the pastor had scarcely said his 'Amen' over us she insisted as obstinately as they all do that I was to go down upon my knees because of some trifle, or I should be in disgrace. And she was really in earnest. What could I do? Sulking and disdain have no effect upon that sex for the good reason that they understand it better than we. Elsa, just see the doctor's expression; he would never give in to you. Thank God on your knees that you have such a lamb' as I am for a husband."

"Yes, of course," said Adler, "I would—I would be—" he stopped confused.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Higher Temperature With Electricity

Previous to the development of the electric furnace 3,600 degrees F. was the highest possible limit of heat. Now electric furnaces produce artificial temperatures far above this limit, which enable us to fuse and otherwise treat commercially such hitherto refractory substances as chromium, platinum, carbon, and it is even possible to fuse the once indestructible crystalline form of that element, the diamond.

The Difference In Slang.

"She uses slang!" said the cultured young woman in a tone of deep disapproval.

"That isn't the worst of it," answered Miss Cayenne. "She uses slang that hasn't yet received the sanction of smart society."

A Model Cook.

"Have you a good cook?"

"Splendid!" exclaimed the bride. "Why, when I want to experiment with a new cookbook she takes the blame for all the failures and lets me have the credit for all the successes."

Not Complaining of That.

"Some people say you have more money than brains," said the blunt person.

"I hope so," answered Senator Sorghum. "Most everybody I run across is trying to trade off brains for money."

The first steamer on the Thames was the Marjory in 1814. The Richmond followed her a year later.

RUINED BY BEER.

Shocking Condition of a Family Discovered By Charity Inspector.

A dispatch from Toronto, dated Dec. 5, says: In response to a request the charity inspector went to investigate the Quinton House, Adelaide street. In an upstair room the officer found Mrs. Quinton lying on a bed, the coverings of which were in a filthy state. The woman was apparently dying from the effects of drink and abuse. She had several bruises on her face, which, she gathered strength sufficient to assure the officers, had not been inflicted by her husband, who lay dead drunk beside her on the bed. The woman has no attendance but her little daughter Jennie, who said she was 11 years old, but did not look even that age. The poor child was in a shocking condition, owing to neglect. The ragged clothes she wore were filthy beyond description. Her hair was matted, as if it had not been touched by a comb or brush for months. When questioned, the little thing said her father was drunk most of the time. He was in the habit of sending her out for beer, and there were days when she carried to the house as much as four or five quartz of the liquor. This her father and mother drank. Her father would compel the child to write orders to hotelkeepers to give her liquor and sign his name. The family was taken in charge by charity workers.

TERRIBLE SCENES.

British Consul in Congo State Makes an Investigation.

A London cable says: Roger Casement, British consul in the Congo Free State, has just completed a tour of investigation undertaken under the orders of the British government, and he fully confirms the worst reports of outrages perpetrated on natives of that part of Africa. Mr. Casement's tour was to have lasted six months, but after the scenes he witnessed and the information he obtained, in the first two months' time the consul decided that further evidence was unnecessary. The report which Mr. Casement is now preparing for the foreign office will show that the most horrible outrages are still being perpetrated under the "rubber regime" and that slavery and barbarism in the most revolting forms still exist. The Casement party travelled over a thousand miles from the coast along the Congo and its tributaries, visiting the Abir and Lulonga rubber zones. Pending the delivery of the report to the foreign office, the investigators refuse to furnish any details, but a member of the mission summed up the situation by saying: "The most terrible slavery exists, the administration is atrocious and if there is not speedy intervention it will be too late."

The Merry Fiscal Fight.

The London Daily News says:—"Mr. Geo. E. Foster, before returning to Canada, remarked that it was hard to infuse into the forty millions of people on the British Isles an adequate idea of the empire's future. We would rather suggest that it is hard to permeate adequate ideas of the motherland into 12,000,000 colonists. Who is Foster?"

W. M. McConnell, chairman of the Monmouthshire Steel company, says the trade is suffering from "dumping." The only help is to adopt Canada's surtax on German steel.

Mr. Davis, labor candidate in the West division of Birmingham, has withdrawn in opposition to Chamberlain.

Secretary Stevens, of the Birmingham Operative Tinplate Workers society, says the unemployed in that industry number 1 per cent. Wages are better than ever before.

Joseph Naismith, ex-president of the Manchester Association of Engineers ridicules the idea of retaliation. He says Britons are holding their own and more.

Barber Opens Fire on His Men.

Frank Johnston, a colored barber, of Hamilton, during a spree, went into his shop and accused Nathaniel Moore, a colored employee, of robbing him. He fired a couple of shots at Moore, one passing through his neck into his shoulder. Johnston shot at Wm. Howard, another employee, but only grazed his hand. Johnston then went into a back room and shot himself twice in the head. The police rushed in and captured him. Moore is most seriously wounded but will probably recover.

Boy Killed By Cruelty.

A dispatch from Vancouver says:—A boy, 10 years old, from Kamloops, was found roaming about the streets and taken to the children's home, where he died a few days later. The cruelty of his guardians is said to have caused his death. He was covered with filth and bruises. Before his death he said the people with whom he lived had made him stand in ice-cold water for punishment. An effort will be made to bring the cruel guardians of the child to justice.

A dispatch from Belleville, Ont., says: Stanley Archer, aged 7 years, whose parents reside at Frankford, near this city, was accidentally shot by an elder brother. The latter was shooting sparrows when the latter ran out from behind a tree as the gun was discharged, the ball entering the lower part of the throat. The unfortunate boy only lived a few minutes.

The man who sold an ear to a millionaire for $5,000, is anxious to buy another for $1,000.

GERMAN CRITICISM.

A Berlin Newspaper Says Some Sharp Things About America.

The National Zeitung (Berlin) anticipates that the Central American States will all be absorbed by their great northern neighbor, the United States, or fall under her influence. It wonders if Mexico and South America in general will be able to escape their fate. The opinion is expressed that "Yankeedom" would reach the limits of its possibilities when it had usurped the sovereignty of the American continent, just as the real Rome ceased to exist when the Romans became "the lords of the world." "Possibly," it suggests, "the United States may reach the limits of her possible achievements before she can attain an object so remote." The article continues: "The imperialist idea necessarily involves a reconstruction of the Union. A federation of States is not capable of unlimited extension, not can it exercise dominion over territories the extent of which exceeds its own. The United States henceforth will need legions and ships of war on both oceans. With militarism a new element will be introduced in a republic hitherto exclusively civilian. The imperialists now see only the obverse of the medal, and it is to be hoped that the reverse may not be shown them after it is too late. All human things have their limitations.

THE WIDE WORLD.

Telegraphic News of Two Hemispheres Briefly Chronicled.

Winnipeg bank clearings increased 24 per cent. during the week ending Dec. 4.

At Chicago live stock show, Canadians secured 15 of 21 awards in Shropshires.

An infirmary for horses, cats and dogs, has been established in Winnipeg.

Eleven miners were killed by the dropping of a cage in a mine in Belgium on Dec. 4.

The sum of $10,000 has disappeared on the train between Winnipeg and Calgary.

The Manitoba Board of Health has issued a circular favoring the building of a provincial sanitorium to cost $75,000.

Four of eleven Chonamen who were being smuggled into the United States were drowned on Dec. 4 by the wagon in which they were riding being overturned into the Erie canal.

The Robinson bank, at Randfontein, South Africa, was attacked on Dec. 4 by a gang of masked men, who, after gaging the manager and his assistants, secured $15,000. The robbers escaped.

A preparation has been discovered which, if applied to show windows, will prevent the troublesome accumulation of frost. It consists of a mixture of 55 drams of glycerine dissolved in a little over a quart of 62 per cent. alcohol—containing, to improve the odor, some oil of amber. As soon as the mixture clarifies it is rubbed over the inner surface of the glass. This prevents sweating and frost, the bugbear of storekeepers during the winter months.

They Want to See Fighting.

A dispatch from Ottawa says:—That the spirit of adventure is strong in young Canadians is evidenced by the number of applications to the Hon. I. Nosse, consul general for Japan in Canada.

On the strength of the reports of impending trouble in the far east, several applications have been received by Mr. Mosse from young men anxious to serve in the army or navy of Britain's ally.

Two of these were from Ontario and two from the Northwest, all of whom had been in scouting service in South Africa.

Chief's Daughter Suicides.

A dispatch from Warroad, Minn., of Dec. 4, says: Ma Puk, the daughter of Na Ma Puk, head chief of the Warroad tribe of Chippewas, was missed from her home at an early hour this morning, and after a brief search was found dead in a small building near by, hanging by the neck, with her knees nearly touching the floor. One of two young bucks who were drowned a short time ago in the Lake of the Woods, was her lover, and his death no doubt prompted the suicidal act.

Showman Stabbed.

A dispatch from Gervais, Ore. says: Robert Matteson, of Minneapolis, a travelling showman, was stabbed in the breast at the Opera house last night and is in a precarious condition. During the entertainment a farce is played in which a woman in the play stabs a leading character. To make it realistic the actor wears a board under his clothing. In the instance the heroine struck too high and the knife pierced the victim's left lung, barely missing his heart. The wound may result fatally.

Electric Smelting.

A telegram has been received at Ottawa from Mr. L. Ruthenberg, who has for some time been carrying on at Lockport, N.Y., the process of electric smelting, by which steel is produced from iron without coal, to the effect that the experiments have proved successful beyond all doubt. This pronouncement was made by Dr. Goldschmidt, who, with a party of German experts, have recently inspected the plant and its productions.

ARE AFRAID OF NEW POLICY

Germany Will Continue its Favored Nation Plan.

VON BUELOW'S STATEMENT

The Fiscal Campaign in England is Causing France and Germany Some Uneasiness—Results of "Dumping" Iron in England—Want Colonial Trade.

Berlin, Dec. 3.—Chancellor Von Buelow, as the emperor's representative, opened the reichstag, in the White Hall of the palace to-day. The chancellor announced that the government intended prolonging the present "most favored" nation relations with Great Britain and her colonies, but the chancellor supplied no information regarding the progress of the commercial negotiations with other countries.

London, Dec. 4.—Referring to the "most favored" announcement by the German chancellor in the reichstag, the Daily Telegraph says:—"Count Von Buelow knows if he begins penalizing Canada he simply an exceedingly effective canvasser for Mr. Chamberlain."

The Daily Express says: "Germany is evidently afraid of the tariff campaign in progress in Britain."

Speaking at a banquet to the British Chamber of Commerce in Paris, on Dec. 2, President Bodington declared there was no ground for believing that Britain's adoption of a preferential tariff would disturb the friendly feelings existing now between France and Great Britain. Canadians, especially French Canadians, were determined to lead themselves to no plan to raise difficulties between Great Britain and France. He believed such a policy would ultimately lead to a general reduction of tariffs all over the world.

From the Gold fields of Yukon to the steel mills of Cape Breton, Canada is the most prosperous colony of the empire. What Canada thinks commercially to-day the empire will think to-morrow. Imperial economists cannot afford to be indifferent to Canadian sentiment. Lord Alverstone and others in England on the Alaska tribunal did not realize that when the United States wants one pound of flesh it begins by asking two.

Mr. Ritchie, speaking at the Croydon Conservative Workingmen's club on Dec. 3, declared he was strongly opposed to Mr. Chamberlain's policy, but there was nothing in Premier Balfour's policy opposed to the principle of Free Trade. Although Mr. Balfour had announced a certain policy, members of the government were going about the country announcing a totally different policy. If protection is adopted living will become higher.

Mr. J. Brailsford, chairman of the Ebb Vale Iron company, said that one of the company's mills, working 100 cars a day was now closed by "dumping." Mr. Balfour's program only went half way. To be complete they wanted the trade of the colonies. If by a preference British manufacturers can sell goods at a reasonable profit, grand times will yet come to England.

Going Home For Christmas.

On board the White Star liner Cedric, which left New York on Dec. 3 for Queenstown and Liverpool, there were 1,500 steerage passengers. This is the largest number of steerage passengers ever carried from a United States port on any one steamer.

The steamer La Tourraine, which sailed from the same port on the same day, took out one thousand steerage passengers, and it was estimated that over two hundred steerage passengers with tickets were left on the dock owing to the overselling of accommodations. The line has agents all over the country selling tickets, and as advices regarding the number of tickets sold for a vessel are not received until the day before she sails it is impossible to control the number of tickets sold. Those who came first were sent on board, after their tickets had been examined. The steerage was soon filled and about a quarter of an hour before the sailing hour the officials were forced to refuse tickets for the steerage.

A scene of great excitement ensued. The greater number of those left behind were apparently day laborers. General Manager Treyvoux, of the French line said that those holding tickets unable to sail will be kept at the company's expense until the sailing next week.

The poor box of a Catholic church in Winnipeg has been robbed.

Mr. J. H. Howden was elected M. P. P. for Beautiful Plains by acclamation.

Projects for extensive stock yards in Winnipeg are now being worked out.

A contract has been signed at Duluth, between G. A. Tomlinson and the American Shipbuilding company for the construction of one of the biggest freight carriers on the lakes. The new Tomlinson boat will be 494 feet over all, and 474 feet keel. She will be 52 feet beam and 29 feet deep. The vessel will have twenty-eight hatches, and will cost $350,000.

TO CONTROL GRAIN TRADE

Eight Million Farmers to Be Formed Into a Union.

A dispatch from Chicago says:—Eight million farmers of the United States are to be joined in a gigantic union to control the price of grain by placing it on the market only as needed, according to plans formulated by delegates now assembled here from different parts of the west.

It is the desire of C. E. Jackson, Minnesota delegate, that a thorough organization of the western grain growers should be first secured and then the invitation extended to the farmers of all America to enter into the union and protect themselves against the juggling of prices by middlemen, at present the only ones to realize great profits.

Mr. Jackson's plan seems to meet the approval of all in attenadance and will doubtless be adopted. "All the farmers of Minnesota," said Mr. Jackson, "are heartily in favor of a movement that will protect them from the existing condition of being forced to sell their product for what they can get for it. Minnesota's tillers of the soil think they ought to have some say as to what their products are worth. The solution of the trouble lies in a national organization that will enable the farmers not to force supplies on the market faster than it can absorb them and not to sell any faster than the consumer needs them."

The meeting is of the advisory board appointed in October at the farmers' convention. Robert Lindblom, president of the Farmers' National Co-operative exchange company, outlined the plan of the new organization. "Fifty million dollars a year," said he, "are paid to middlemen for storage and commission. Farmers should consolidate, do away with the middlemen and secure equitable prices for their products. Organizations should be formed in every township, county and state. No one could resist such a powerful organization."

The states represented are Minnesota, Indiana, Nebraska, Iowa, Michigan, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory.

Shipwrecked Sailors' Experience.

A dispatch from Victoria, B. C., says: Captain Holstead and his wife, of the ill-fated American ship Benjamin Sewall, arrived on the Iyo Maru on Dec. 3. He brings a detailed account of the wrecking of the ship by a typhoon on October 4. The storm was so severe that the waves washed over, filling the ship, until she sank. The crew launched their life boats and got away on October 5. After several days the captain's boat reached Formosa and was picked up. Search was made for the crew of the other boats, and finally two of them were found on Botel Tabago Island. They had been stripped of clothing and were working as slaves under Japanese natives. They were naked and blistered with the sun. No identifying trace, other than particles of clothing was found on them.

Radium is Plentiful.

A London cable says: People who want to purchase radium and who are debarred by its present price may find comfort in a Berlin dispatch to The Daily Telegraph, which says that an interesting discovery respecting radium has been made which seems to show that its existence is far more widespread than has been hitherto supposed.

Experiments prove that all products of water and petroleum sources yield a heavy specific gas closely resembling and probably identical with the emanation of radium, whence it is concluded that a very large number of the bodies are imbued with the quality of emitting a kind of becquerel rays. In this respect radium differs from other bodies as in respect of magnetism steel differs from iron in degree only.

FROM BOTH HEMISPHERES

Important News Condensed Into Brief Paragraphs.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier will receive a Fenian raid medal.

The Carman Telephone Company has sold out to the Bell Telephone company.

C. P. R. locomotive engineers and firemen have reached a settlement with the company.

Chili has sold two new battleships, at present on the Clyde, for $9,000,000, to Great Britain.

All prizes in Breeding Leicesters class at Chicago Live Stock show, were captured by Canadians.

The C. P. R. has placed some millions of pounds worth of debentures on the London market.

Word again comes with authority that Great Britain and the United States have averted war in the far east.

H. M. S. Flora, a cruiser of the Pacific squadron, is ashore opposite Comox, B.C., and will be a total loss.

The Nova Scotia legislature was opened on Dec. 3; the principal legislation will deal with the coal and steel industries of the province.

Miss Helen Gould will give prizes for the best essays on the Protestant and the Roman Catholic versions of the Bible.

The British Commercial Agent in the United States has warned manufacturers in the United Kingdom to prepare for "dumping."

To commemorate the memorial of the 127 Jews who fell in the South African war, the Jews of England will present a memorial trophy to the National Rifle association, to be an open competition for all comers.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS. FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, DEC 12, 1903.

TO LIGHT VICTORIA AVENUE

The question of lighting Victoria Ave. is one that should be taken up by the business men or the Board of Trade. Hitherto the lighting plant was overworked, but since the new plant has been inaugerated this objection has been removed.

About a dozen or fifteen 32 candle power lights with reflector hoods would light the street from the foundry corner to the park in a very satisfactory manner. This, we have ascertained, would cost in the neighborhood of $20. We do not doubt that arrangements could be made with the Coal Company by which the necessary fixtures would be put up at a nominal cost, or even less, provided that a guarantee would be given that the service would be required for a reasonable length of time.

The lack of municipal government again places the town in a disadvantageous position, inasmuch as there is no authoritative body to make such a guarantee. However it will be a matter for general regret if this difficulty is allowed to weigh so heavily as to keep our main street in darkness when the insignificant sum of $20 per month would provide light throughout the long hours of the night. Besides adding immensely to the convenience of pedestrians and the beauty of the town the commercial advantage to the merchants and hotel-keepers of such an improvement would be such as to pay them to club together and put up the necessary coin, if no other fairer system of raising the money could be found.

OPENING REMARKS.

The following appears in the first issue of the Poplar Nugget which was published on Dec. 4th, by R.T. Lowery:

As A RULE we like to get into a camp before the pianos and canary birds, but on our arrival last week we found these things had preceded us, in addition to a large number of birds that are not canaries. The camp is over one hundred days old and has six hotels five of which are producing every day, four stores, a livery stable, a laundry, etc., and more gold in the hills around the burg than we have ever got close to since we first planted a set of stakes in the shadow of the grand old mountains of the Great West. No church as yet parts the air with its tall spire, and the only tiger we have seen in Poplar is so tame that even a tenderfoot could camp near his claws and never wink an optic.

The Lardeau is wonderfully rich in gold, especially around Poplar creek. Gold in some quanity can be found upon every claim. The marvellous showing on the Lucky Jack and other claims would have set the world on fire if discovered anywhere outside of Kootenay. No sooner is the camp discovered than we find knockers trying to tie the hands of those who are making an effort to build up the country. The claim jumper comes along with his augur. The Provincial Mineralogist gets wise on the district from a car window and blows cold air through the coast press, while the C.P.R. treats Poplar all through the summer with the coldest kind of courtesy, and now that winter faces the sturdy trail-blazer, it threatens to tighten the cinch and stop operations during a portion of the snowy season. Such a proceeding should not be allowed for a single day. The people of Canada built the C.P.R. and it should be operated for their benefit. If the C.P.R. has become too penurious to run a train to Poplar because its officials are too short sighted to make provision against ice on Trout lake, then the government should step in and run the road. The rights of the few must not be sacrificed under the jauggernaut of grasping monopoly.

So, seeing that Poplar was in need of a paper to make known its wonderful resources and fight for its rights, we have hoisted our flag on the banks of Poplar creek, and painted upon it the immortal words of Macbeth. The Nugget is small but like the camp from which it hails it will soon grow so large that all the world can see it without straining their eyesight.

MORRISSEY MINES

Ed. Cursick, a well known loafer of the district was arrested by Con. Tranter for vagrancy on Monday. He had been let out on suspended sentence by H. H. Trites J. P., and coming before him this time received a sentence of $50. fine or 6 months hard labor.

Work at the mines is at a standstill owing to the big mud slide on the spur line. When we went to press last week everything looked in good shape for traffic being resumed within a few hours but another bad slide occurred Friday night which destroyed all the work that had previously been accomplished and made it necessary to build a trestle across the slide. The Great Northern pile driver was secured and a large crew of the men have been kept busy on the work ever since. It is expected that trestle will be completed in a few days and work resumed at the mines immediately upon its completion.

The Board of Trade met in the Alexandra on Thursday evening. Present: Messrs. McBean, Patmore, Lawe, Rogers, Liphardt, Hazzard, Aiello, Mancuso, Bernie, Stephens, Lawson, and Clark. After some discussion the following resolution was pessed:—"That the C. P.R. be requested to lower the passenger rate between Fernie and Morrissey Junction to the regular rate as passengers are now paying fare from Fernie to Morrissey creek siding and that this resolution be forwarded to the Fernie Board for endorsation. A committee composed of Messrs. Clark, Stephens, Lawe, Rogers, Liphardt, and Patmore, was appointed to draw up a statement of the business relations of the town with the Coal Co. and to present petitions in connection therewith to the new management at Fernie. The following new members were then electee:— Messrs. Bernie, Hazzard, Willson and Moncuso. The meeting then adjourned.

Would you like to be a good speller and correspondent? Come to night school. All instruction is individual. A. M. Grimes, teacher. 250-6

A meeting is to be held to-night to arrange some plan for getting a rink or at least an open sheet of ice. The rink that all have been looking forward to for some time has not been started as yet, so now the young men have decided to form a club of some kind and make arrangements with the company to get a suitable ground and the use of the water works.

The concert givrn on Tuesday evening in Princess Hall under the auspices of the Roman Catholic church was a great success. Over $150 was realized and all who attended were much pleased with the entertainment. The brass band from the St. Eugene mission composed of Indian boys, performed very creditably, their clever work speaking volumes for the patience and thoroughness of their devoted teacher, Father Cocolo. Some very interesting local talent assisted. One pretty event was the cake-walk by the Cody children.

Fresh Fruit

AND

Vegetables

arriving daily

W. F. Cuthbert

Confectioner

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Maude May Barber's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

MAUDE MAY BARBER.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Peter Podbielancik's south-east corner;" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to place of commencement.

PETER PODBIELANCIK.
James Miller.
Dated the 9th of Octocer, 1903. 252-4

J. C. Hutchison

Merchant Tailor

Full Stock of Gents' Furnishings.

We Guarantee Our Work.

FRANK D'ALEXANDER

Stonemason, Bricklayer, Contractor.

First-class work. Prices moderate.

Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Cement Work a Specialty.

BOX 6, Fernie, B.C.

The Best Remedy for Croup.

(From the Atchison, Kan., Daily Globe.)

This is the season when the woman who knows the best remedies for croup is in demand in every neighborhood. One of the most terrible things in the world is to be awakened in the middle of the night by a whoop from one of the children. The croup remedies are almost as sure to be lost, in case of croup, as a revolver is sure to be lost in case of burglars. There used to be an old fashioned remedy for croup, known as hive syrup, but some modern mothers say that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better and does not cost so much. It causes the patient to "throw up the phlegm" quicker, and gives relief in a shorter time. Give this remedy as soon as the croupy cough appears and it will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Notice is hereby given that 30 dys after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of Selwyn Gwillym Blaylock's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "J. G. Cumming's south-east corner": thence north 80 chains' thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains to place of commencement.

J. G. CUMMINGS
Dated November 11th, 1903. 255-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Maude May Barber's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Augustus Fairfield's south-west corner;" thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

AUGUSTUS FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Robert Gilmore's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ROBERT GILMOUR.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to appy to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Augustus Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Gus Erickson's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement,

GUS ERICKSON.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 10th of October, 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of W. A. Bleasdell's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Eva Fairfield's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains; thence west 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

EVA FAIRFIELD.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Eva Fairfield's coal and petroleum claim, and marked, "Annie Dobbin's south-east corner," thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of begginning,

ANNIE DOBBIN.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 9th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands; Commencing at a post planted at the south-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "C. J. Tuttle's south- east corner;" thence west 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

C. J. TUTTLE.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of Annie McIntyre's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "P. Kubala's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains ro the place of commencement.

P. KUBALA.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-

Acquiring Homes

or paying off Mortgage Debts on easy monthly

Instalments

just as you now pay

Rents

CREE & HUTCHISON

If you prefer we can get you a straight loan.

Louis Carosella & Co.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

Fernie, B. C.

BOARD.

By the Day, Week, or Month. Everything first-class.

WM. R. McDOUGALL.

We have just unloaded

A Car of Stoves and Lamp Goods

and can supply all requirements. The price is always right.

J. D. QUAIL

Hardware

Furniture

If You are ....Undecided

as to what would be much appreciated as a

Christmas Gift

by your

Wife, Mother or Daughter

Give us a call and let us show you our

Special Silks and Fancy Blouse Lengths

We have a range unequalled in Fernie and our Prices are Right.

Special Prices from now till Christmas on all Fancy Dry Goods.

Chas. Richards & Co.

Boilers and Engines.

ALSO

SAW AND PLANING MILL MACHINERY

We sell the BEST at LOWEST PRICES.

Write us.

J. L. Neilson & Co.

602 MAIN ST., - - WINNIPEG

FERNIE DAIRY

Fresh milk delivered to all parts of the town. . . . . .

Dobson & Willingham

Fort Steele Brewing Co.

Manufacturers and Brewers of Extra Fine

Beer and Porter

Sold by the barrel, keg or bottled. Bottled beer for family use a specialty. Outside orders given strict and prompt attention. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Mutz & Scott, Proprietors

The Best Is None Too Good For the People of Fernie

WE aim to supply the very best in every line of meats

Fish, Game and Poultry always on hand.

We receive WEEKLY SHIPMENTS of Choice Dairy Butter and Eggs - - - -

Calgary Cattle Co.

LIMITED

MEATS

BEEF, PORK —AND— MUTTON

at reasonable prices.

For Quotations apply to

THE UNION MEAT COMPANY

MacLeod, Alta.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

Sewing machines for rent at the B. C. Furniture Co's.

The Masons are making preparations for their annual ball on New Years' Eve.

Mr. B. W. Huckell, of Fort Steele, was married at Victoria last week to Miss Elizabeth Draisey, of Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. James McEvoy left recently for Ontario where they will spend the winter.

Don't forget the grand bazaar and concert on Tuesday evening in aid of the Presbyterian church.

The bazaar on Tuesday will be a good place to secure suitable Christmas presents.

Influenza in an epidemic form is prevalent in Fernie and many are on the sick list.

A McDougall of the Fernie Lumber Company left this week on a trip through the North-West Territories. He expects to be away about 10 days.

Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Wood have taken up their temporary residence in Mr. Jas. McEvoy's house during the latter's absence in the east.

Liphardt, the jeweler, does the best of engraving from script letter to the finest of monogram work. x

The Fernie Dairy Company received on Thursday a car-load of splendid dairy cattle from Leduc and vicinity. Mr. J. F. Elliott, who is visiting in that place purchased the animals.

The postoffice block has been improved this week by putting in new door steps. This will add materially to the comfort and safety of the many who have occasion to frequently go in and out of this place.

Constable Farquharson and his guests at the King's boarding house constructed a first-class side-walk this week connecting the Roma Hotel with the corner of Hansen St. The lumber as usual was paid for by interested parties.

Ed. Cusak came up before H. H. Trites J. P., on Monday to receive sentence on a former conviction of vagrancy, he not having complied with the conditions laid down by his Worship to go to work. He was fined $50 with the option of 6 months in jail. He will be sent to Nelson to serve his time.

We buy, sell and exchange new and second had furniture, stoves, etc. The B. C. Furniture Co.

Deputy Organizer Flemming, of the fraternal order of The Eagles came in from Phoenix on Thursday to organize a lodge of that order in Fernie. The organization meeting will take place in Princess Hall on Monday 14th. All candidates wishing to join are asked to accept this intimation and to present themselves for initiation.

Owen Ross indignantly denies the truth of Mr. Holden's statement in our last issue regarding the excessive rates charged for draying in this town. His firm had offered to handle 22 trunks and three loads of scenery for $10.00. This rate he believed was quite reasonable and did not give Mr. Holden or any other person any grounds for objection.

The December number of the Presbyterian Record devotes much of its space to eleven interesting articles on the Kootenays. Rev. D. L. Gordon contributes one on the coal mining industry of the Crows Nest. Mr. Malcolm McInnes, of Cranbrook, is the author of another entitled "Reminiscences of the Kootenays."

Maxwell Smith, of Vancouver, Dominion fruit inspector, was in town last Saturday and as a result of his visit several shippers are liable to be prosecuted for violation of the "Fruit Marks Act" in grading their fruit higher than the quality justified. Mr. Smith spoke very favorably of the work this year of B. C. packers in general, he having found very few cases of the infringement of the act.

The Young Ladies Sewing Circle of the Presbyterian Church will hold their bazaar and concert in Princess Hall on Tuesday next. The sale of goods will begin at 2 p.m. and will be continued until 8 p.m. when the concert will begin sharp at that hour. Refreshments will be sold during the bazaar and after the concert. An excellent musical program by local talent has been provided. The admission is only 15 cents.

Get your pictures framed at the B. C Furniture Co.

The Ladies Hospital Aid Society met at the home of Mrs. Mott on Saturday Dec. 5th. Mrs. Trites was elected president and Mrs. Stork, secretary-treasurer. The ladies present decided to widen the scope of their work. They will in future not only assist poor patients at the hospital but any other deserving subjects of charity that come under their notice. The treasurer reported a balance of $221 to the credit of the society in the bank. All the ladies of the town are urgently requested to join this worthy institution. The fees are light and the object of the society is meritorious in the extreme. A recent act of kindness, that of providing the means to assist a destitute lady to rejoin her friends in the east will commend itself to the public and at once stamp the philanthropic usefulness of the society.

Fresh Oysters at Cuthbert's.

Mrs. Hoskins arrived in Fernie on Thursday.

All kind of repairing and upholstering done at the B. C. Furniture Co. x

A party of young people were entertained at the Manse last evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Reeder and children left on last evening's express for Virginia.

162 coupons were handed in at Sheppard & Elliott's last Saturday. Mr. Wilmott got the watch.

A. W. Church is visiting friends in town while en route from Nelson to his home at Almonte, Ont.

The Trites-Wood Co. have received an extensive furniture order from the large new hotel at Coleman.

The large advertisement of the Trites-Wood Co. in this issue should be read by everybody as it contains useful information.

The Minto Club held a very successful dance on Monday evening. The club will hold its next dance on Tuesday evening, Dec. 22nd.

The marriage of Mr. E. Wriglesworth to Miss Farquharson is announced to take place in the Presbyterian church on Wednesday 16th at 3 p.m.

A special meeting of the Knights of Pythias is called for Tuesday evening for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year. A large attendance is requested.

The Fernie Liberal Association will meet in Joyce's hall, Tuesday evening, Dec. 15, for the transaction of important business. All members should make an effort to attend.

A meeting of the hockey club will be held in the Cuthbert block on Monday for the purpose of electing a delegate to represent the club at the district meeting to be held at Pincher Creek on Wednesday.

Barney Mullin and Kid Lee were billed to fight a 15 round bout last evening. As the house was slim they decided to make 8 rounds the limit. Both men were in good form and well matched in weight. The go was a fast one and ended in a draw. W. W. Tuttle was the referee.

Board of Trade Meeting.

A regular meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade will take place on Monday evening. Many important measures will be discussed, including the duty on American lumber, and fire engine questions.

"Griffin Brand" meats have no equal, either in flavor or appearance. Have you tried them?

THE FREE PRESS file for this year is lacking in four numbers. We will pay 50 cents per copy to secure the missing papers. The dates are Feb. 14th, May 2nd, May 16th and May 31st.

WANTED—Faithful person to travel for well established house in a few counties, calling on retail merchants and agents, Local territory. Salary $20.00 per week with expenses additional, all payable in cash each week. Money for expenses advanced. Position permanent. Business successful and rushing. Standard House, 330 Dearborn St., Chicago. M5

Notice

There will be a general meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Association on next Wednesday evening, the 16th, at the Victoria Hotel at 8 p.m. to elect 5 delegates to attend a convention at Nelson on January 6th to select a candidate to represent the Conservative interests at the next Dominion election.

A. JOYCE, Pres. J. HUTCHISON, Sec'y

Moffatt's Cigar Store

Tobacco, Pipes and Cigars.

A full line of Stationery.

Next Door to the Free Press.

ACCURACY

We pride ourselves on our Prescription Department. There is a great deal in knowing that your Prescription will be filled just as your physician wishes it to be filled.

PURITY

This is where we aim to excel, we buy only the best drugs and chemicals, and supply only the best, just what your doctor orders, always

"COMPETENCY"

Our Prescription Department is under the management of the proprietor, whose Thirty-five Years Experience should be sufficient guarantee.

Our prescription clerks are qualified and competent, the drugs and chemicals may be relied upon and our system of checking is a positive safe guard against errors.

Bleasdell's Drug Hall

FERNIE, B. C.

We do not want to tell you all about our

Neckwear

which has just arrived this week.

See them they will speak for themselves.

75 Doz. to select from.

Crow's Nest Trading Co.

Important Announcement

To the People of Fernie

Having beep requested by a large number of Fernie citizens and filling what we consider a long felt want, we beg to inform the inhabiianrs that we, the undersigned propose starting a Tripe Dressing, etc., business and by placing good clean and wholesome food before you at a reasonable price, both wholesale and retail, hope to command your favors. We ask for one trial only as we feel confident of the result.

Special terms to hotels and restaurants.

Yours respectfully,

Hackett & Wilde

P. S.—For particulars when opening see handbills later.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Head Office, Toronto.

Paid Up Capital, $8,700,000. Reserve Fund, $3,000,000.

HON. GEO. A COX, President. B. E. WALKER, General Manager

SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT: Deposits of $1 and upwards received and interest allowed at current rates. Depositors are subject to no delay when depositing or withdrawing funds.

FERNIE BRANCH: E. H. BIRD, Manager

The Lucky Guess

out of 162 received was 7:45; handed in by Mr. W. A. Wilmot. This was the nearest; the watch given away last week stopping at 7:10.

Some of our customers have suggested that we have another competition, as the notice was rather short on the last one. We are averse to propositions of this kind, but have consented to give one more; particulars of which will be announced next week.

Now we wish to call your attention to a few lines which are suitable presents for boys and girls, and at the same time useful.

SKATES, both Hockey and Club,
RIFLES, to shoot 22 cartridges.
AIR-GUNS the good kind from $1.50 up.
JACK KNIVES in endless variety.
Child's Knife, Fork and Spoon from 35c up.
Granite Child's Setts at low prices.

Several of the above articles will be in our windows to night, and all priced in plain figures.

We don't know of anything that will please the lady of the house better than a BISSELL

Sheppard & Elliott

Hardware Tinsmithing Plumbing

P. Burns & Co.

Wholesale and Retail

Meat Merchants

Fresh and Cured Meats, Fresh Fish, Game and Poultry, We Supply only the Best. Your trade Solicited.

Markets in all the principal towns and citeis in British Columbia.

The Muskoka Hotel,

....Fernie, B.C.

Well furnished rooms, lighted by electricity. First class board. In the bar you will find the best domestic and imported liquors and cigars. Cordial treatment to all.

T. H. Whelan, Manager.

Take notice that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works of Fort Steele, B.C., for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Beginning at a post marked J. D. Viets' south west corner post which is situated along Fording river and three miles north of the Northern boundary of 4588 in group one, East Kootenay district. B.C., and which corner post is near the south east corner post of J. L. Doupe's coal and petroleum claim which was staked in 1902, and whose license number is 813, thence from the said south west corner post of J. D. Viets. east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the point of commencement and containing 640 acres.

255-4 J. D VIETS
October 26th 1903. W. Boivin Locater.

Ebony sets, engraved and filled in with white enamel, make good Christmas presents. At Liphardt's. x

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted on a bench on the east side of the Kootenay River, thence forty chains north to the south east corner of lot 4141, thence west to the south west corner of lot 4141, thence south following slew down stream 40 chains, thence east to place of commencement containing 160 acres more or less.

DAN HAYES
Dated this 8th day of October, 1903. 25-4

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and pretroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "H. B. Fairfield's south east corner"; thence west 80 chains; thence north 80 chains, thence east 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

H. B. FAIRFIELD
J. G. Cummings, locator.
Dated November 9th, 1903. 255-4

Xmas Presents

Now is the time to select your Xmas presents with a small deposit and have us put them away for you.

New Stock

arriving daily, we will have the finest stock in the Kootenay to choose from.

A. C. Liphardt

Watchmaker and Jeweller

Our Motto:

"Often the Cheapest, Always the Best."

POLLOCK WINE CO.

LIMITED.

Wholesale Dealers in

Liquors and Cigars,

Take notice that sixty days after date I will apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase 160 acres of land situate in the district of East Kootenay near Lot No. 1060, described as follows: commencing at a post planted near mile post No. 273 on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, thence west 40 chains, thence south 40 chains, thence east 40 chains, thence north 40 chains to place of commencement.

249-8 JOSEPH BAUER
Dated at Fernie September 28 1903.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands. Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of John Forsyth Miller's coal and petroleum claim and marked "M. E. Brown's north east corner" thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains, thence east 80 chains; thence north 80 chains to place of commencement.

M. E. BROWN
J. G. Cummings, locator.
Dated the 9th of November, 1903.

Thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works at Fort Steele, B. C., for special timber license to cut and carry away timber from the following lands: Beginning at the N. E. corner post situate about two miles north of lot 45 S, group 1, east side Elk river and about five chains west of the S. W. corner of T. W. Bingay's coal and petroleum claim which was staked Sept. 22nd, 1902, thence from said N. E. corner south eighty chains, thence west eighty chains more or less to the east bank Elk river thence northward along east bank said river about eighty three chains to a point due west of N. E. corner thence east eighty chains more or less to point of beginning and containing 640 acres more or less.

Dated this 29th day of July 1903.

T. W. BINGAY.

Staked by H. C. Tuttle.

FERNIE Real Estate

IF you wish to buy Business or Residential Properties or if you wish to Sell any town property see . . . .

F. J. WATSON
Real Estate AND Insurance Agent

INGRAM & McINTYRE

THE CITY BARBERS.

Shop in the Royal Hotel.

Notice is hereby given that 30 days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a license to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands: Commencing at a post planted at the north-west corner of A. Mutz's coal and petroleum claim, and marked "Annie McIntyre's south-west corner," thence east 80 chains, thence north 80 chains, thence west 80 chains, thence south 80 chains to the place of commencement.

ANNIE McINTYRE.
James Miller, Agent.
Dated the 12th of October, 1903. 252-4

UNIVERSITY BURNED DOWN

Fierce Fire at an Educational Institution.

SEVERAL INMATES INJURED

Students Jumped From Fourth and Fifth Story Windows in their Night Robes—Building Was a Magnificent Stone Structure—Loss is Over $250,000.

A dispatch from Ottawa, dated Dec. 2 says: All that remains of that magnificent stone building, the Ottawa university, which was one of the sights of the eastern parts of the city, are pieces of the walls. It was completely destroyed by fire this morning. The fire started about 7 o'clock, and by 9 it had burned itself out. The loss is estimated at $250,000, partly covered by insurance. It will be two years before it can be rebuilt, and in the meantime it will be impossible to get any place suitable to carry on the work of the institution.

There were 450 students at the university. It is a Roman Catholic institution and is carried on under the charge of the clergy. Of the students about 350 are boarders and the remainder are day students. Nearly all the boarders are from the United States, principally from the New England district. The usual hour that the students rise in the morning is 6 o'clock. This morning the greater number got up at that hour, but a number, who took part in a French play in the Academy hall of the institution, were not due to rise till 7 o'clock. When the students were at breakfast in the refectory about 7 o'clock some of them saw smoke escaping from around the pipes. About 7.30 the fire made its appearance, and soon afterwards the whole institution was ablaze. The students and others who had risen at 6 o.clock, escaped from the burning building easily. Those who were due to rise at 7 o'clock had to take to the fire escapes in their night shirts or jump from the building into nets and blankets held out by the firemen below. The escapes were on one side of the building, and those who slept on the other side could not reach them. In some cases the escapes were burned down and the inmates had to jump, some of them from the fourth and fifth story. The building was five stories.

It was while jumping from the building that all the accidents occurred. All the students, however, escaped with very little injuries, and none were seriously hurt; two of the priests were seriously hurt, and one Father, Boyier, is in the general hospital and is not expected to live. Father Boyier was in the fifth story, he could not reach the fire escapes and had to jump. He fell on a verandah below, landing on his shoulder, and afterwards landing on the ground, his head striking it first. He was fearfully cut about the head and shoulders and is not expected to live.

Father Fallon was on the fourth story when caught by the fire. He leaped into a net held out for him by those on the ground. He sustained serious injuries to his side and spine, but may recover. Father McGurty, who comes from Webster, near Worcester, Mass., is badly burned on the head and arms, but not seriously.

An old woman engaged as a servant, jumped from the fifth story, and may not recover.

S. Harvey, a student from Brunswick, Maine, hung on to a window on the fifth story by his arms for nearly fifteen minutes until the firemen had got a ladder to him. When he awoke, the sheets were burning below him in the bed, and he jumped to the window in his nightshirt, throwing his body outside and hanging on to the sill until such time as he was taken down by the firemen.

A student named Collin jumped from the fourth window with his glasses on and had his face cut. He is from St. Boniface, Man. A domestic, Miss Dupuis, is badly injured. The insurance is placed at $200,000 and the loss at from $250,000 to $300,000.

Sugar Factory Closed.

Referring to the closing of the big sugar factory at Raymond, Alta., the Chronicle, of that place, says:

The run at the sugar factory is over, having lasted only two weeks, supply of beets having been exhausted much sooner than had been anticipated. A large amount of the beet crop was not harvested, the cold weather interfering in the digging.

The output of the factory this season has been close to one million pounds of sugar, which will all be handled by E. Nicholson, of Winnipeg.

While this season's campaign was by no means what had been expected the members of the company are not discouraged. Enough is proven to justify them in looking forward to a most profitable career for their new industry, while the beet growers, although their profits were whittled down in many instances to the vanishing point, feel that they have gained the needed experience to make their future beet crops one of the best paying ones of their farms.

Canadian cotton prices will be advanced.

The world's supply of pears has been cornered in Chicago.

Manitoba government has declined to give a grant to the pure bred stock school.

STEAD'S LATEST.

"The Daily Paper" to Be Delivered By Girls in London.

A dispatch to the New York Herald from London says: W. T. Stead will start a newspaper here, probably under the title of "The Daily Paper." He proposes to get 200,000 subscribers in London and deliver the papers at each door between 10 o'clock and 12 in the morning, after men have gone to business and when women and children will have an opportunity to read it. It will cost a penny.

Of his plan he says: "Messengers who will be bright young girls, will be instructed to collect from each subscriber letters of complaints or advertisements in envelopes addressed to the editor, and in this way I hope to get in person touch with all my readers. Depots will be established at various points in the city, at each of which I expect to have a "post restante," which sort of thing does not exist in London now, a free telephone, circulating library, reading room or place of call, and, I hope, an automatic restaurant. If a wife who has to stay at home wishes to send a message, all she will have to do will be to put it into an envelope in the morning, and in two hours it will be at the depot, the message will be sent on to the trades man, articles desired being delivered c.o.d. in the afternoon. It is a great social experiment as to whether one can use a newspaper for social service. I shall be a sort of preaching friar, who will be willing to act as maid of all work. As to its contents, there will be a serial on the basis of an endless story, which will be based on events in the day's news. One page will be set aside for children. As to editorials, there will be a column leader, and perhaps a column of occasional notes. About foreign news I shall not worry much at first. I want to localize the paper. There will be four editions, all published at the same hour, and one for each of the four divisions of London.

ATTEMPT AT MURDER.

Shooting Assault Made on a Tailor at Fort Frances.

A dispatch from Fort Frances says: A dastardly attempt at murder and robbery was made here on the morning of Dec. 2 on James Short, merchant tailor, by one Frank Bates, a tramp lumber-jack who had applied for work. Bates was given a job cutting wood on Saturday, and, claiming to be a tailor, was set to work in the shop on Monday. This morning early, as soon as Mr. Short came to his shop, he was approached from behind by Bates and knocked down with a small axe. He was then dragged to the rear, behind a portion of the shop, with the blood gushing from his head and robbed of his pocket-book and some other articles. Leaving his victim, as he supposed, dead, he took a fur overcoat belonging to a customer and at once made for the ferry, where he crossed over to Koochiching, Minn.

A passer-by, hearing moans in Mr. Short's shop, at once entered and finding the old gentleman nearly dead promptly gave the alarm and notified the police. Constable Knauff, at once instituted a search. Suspecting that the fugitive might be across the river, the constable learned from the ferryman that a person answering the description of Bates had gone over about 7 o'clock. The constable then crossed over, and with the assistance of the United States constable, located his man full of whisky in a saloon and at once brought him back without assistance. He is now in the Fort Frances jail awaiting trial.

LIFE SAVING GLOBES.

A Successful Trial of Captain Doenvigs' Invention.

Advices from Copenhagen say that a successful trial of the Doenvig life saving globes has been made at Skaw, on the dangerous north Jutland coast during a storm. After a trial had been made with a ballasted buoy, Captain Doenvig, with four other persons entered a buoy which was launched from the cruiser Heimdal. It successfully cleared the breakers and shoals and drifted safely ashore. The invention of Captain Doenvig was given a successful trial in the English channel between Dover and the South Foreland in November of 1902. In the heavy sea the globe rode over the waves like a cork and was remarkably steady. After tossing about for some time Captain Doenvig and one sailor with him in the globe, emerged from the manhole, and, lashing themselves to the outside of it, set a small sail and steered in a fairly direct course for several miles and into Dover harbor.

The apparatus is made of light steel plates and is surrounded by a cork fender. It has a flat double bottom, containing tanks which can be filled with fresh water and used as ballast. There are also compartments for stores. The sphere can comfortably hold sixteen persons.

Women Cannot Become Lawyers.

The British House of Lords has finally decided that women are debarred by their sex from becoming lawyers in that country. The question arose on the appeal of a Londoner, Miss Bertha Cavo, against the decision of the benchers of Grays Inn not to admit her as a student for the purpose of being called to the bar. The court decided that there was no precedent for a woman's admission to the Inns of Court and no reason to create a precedent. The benchers assert that the statutes of Grays Inn ignore women so absolutely as to leave them no power to admit women.

Canada's fine sheep continued to take prizes at Chicago.

From the fragrant meadows of Prince Edward Island—to your table.

Victor Brand Evaporated Cream

Good Pasture, Pure Spring Water, Healthy Cattle, Perfect climatic conditions, make the milk of P.E.I. cattle, the purest, richest and best. VICTOR CREAM is this milk, minus the water. Equal to fluid cream for all purposes and more convenient. Its flavor is something delicious.

Mfd. by Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., - Charlottetown, P. E. I.

A Concert by Your Own Fire-Side if you own a

The Berliner Gram-o-phone

And such a concert as you could never hear in any theatre or concert hall. Imagine the glorious voices of the great operatic stars—the geniuses of the Violin—the wizards of the Piano—Sousa's or the Coldstream Guards' Band—Comic Songs—clever Monologists. All are at your command on one programme for one evening's entertainment, or, if you will, a sacred concert.

Think what it would cost in time and money to enjoy all these, yet you can have them in your own home—every tone, every note, reproduced with clearness and life-like purity on the Berliner Gram-o-phone at a merely nominal cost.

Prices of Gram-o-phones complete with 5 Records $15 to $45

Guaranteed for five years. "It is made in Canada."

Sold on easy monthly payments if desired. Write for particulars, Catalogue and list of Records.

Manufactured by

E. BERLINER, 2315 St. Catherine Street, Montreal.

FOR SALE BY

A. J. PURDY & CO., AGENTS, FERNIE, B. C.

BRITISH EMPIRE CABLE NEWS

Lord Curzon's Speech at a Durbar Causes Astonishment.

INTENDED FOR RUSSIANS

Great Display of Sea Power by Britain in Persian Gulf is looked on as a Warning to Russia—A Bold Statement by E. Farrer.

London, Nov. 30.—The state trip of the viceroy of India to the Persian Gulf is attracting the attention of Europe. Russia is especially interested and is inclined to resent Lord Curzon's emphatic speech at the extraordinary durbar held a few days ago at Sharkah, in Oan.

The display of sea power, remarkable in time of peace, is considered unwarranted, while the menacing tenor of Lord Curzon's remarks leaves the impression that they were inspired by some covert purpose. It is considered exasperating that the head of the Indian government should declare in that alien land that England is supreme on the Persian Gulf, and intends to maintain that supremacy at all costs. No one doubts that that shaft was aimed at Russia, and the public has jumped to the conclusion that the czar's government must have planned some secret government inimical to British interests to call forth a speech at once so forcible and significant. One thing is made exceedingly clear by recent events in Asiatic regions—namely, that with Lord Curzon's squadron in Persian waters and Colonel Younghusband's expedition to Thibet, Russia has been given something to ponder on besides her complications with China and Japan.

MR. FARRER'S VIEWS.

E. Farrer, writing in the Contemporary Review, says French Canadians are dead against the new imperialism, and 75 per cent. of English-speaking Canadians refuse to carry the burden of imperial armaments. The writer quotes Sir Chas. Tupper and Mr. R. L. Borden in support of the view that both political parties in Canada are in the hands of the Manufacturers' association. Canada will not be satisfied with a preference on wheat. The Dominion does a bigger trade with the city of Buffalo than with South Africa and Australia combined. The theory of the new imperialism depends on an unsafe doctrine—once a colony, always a colony. Canada is American, and after the coming elections in the United States the New England States, with Minnesota, will force the republic to give better commercial terms to the Dominion. Canada's destiny is independence. We are satisfied with the present existing British connection, but we are not going to allow the new imperialism to degrade us nor will we break faith and the traditions of the new world to serve as mercenaries in the old.

THE "ONLY REMEDY."

The Times publishes a letter at the request of Mr. Chamberlain from Chairman Ebb, of the Vale Iron and Steel Co., regarding the "dumping" of German steel. He says the English industry is right up to date, but the fault lies in a one-sided free trade. The only remedy for this perilous condition is retaliation and preferential trade.

The Express says the strong feeling throughout the Dominion in favor of Mr. Chamberlain's policy reflected in a striking manner in the principal organs of the Canadian press, and quotes the Mail, The Toronto News, The Globe, The Montreal Star, The Witness and the Ottawa Citizen.

The African Review says: "Ripponite, a new explosive, called after the Canadian inventor, is eight times more powerful than dynamite.

Hon. H. Foster, M.P., junior lord of the treasury, says the government is determined not to be rushed out of office and no vote on the fiscal question will be taken in parliament until after the elections.

A prominent German manufacturer says that German manufacturers so strongly believe in the success of Chamberlain that negotiations are already on foot to purchase land in this country so as to be ready to lay down plants in the event of hostile duties being imposed against German goods.

On one of the leading morning papers two editors have been compelled to leave because they refused to write in support of the Chamberlain policy.

Devoured By Wolves.

F. R. Guertin, of Ottawa, the woodsman who disappeared from a camp about Mattawa some weeks ago, has met a terrible death. A letter has been received from William Burns, who was employed in the same camp as Guertin. Burns says that the Indians, who are well acquainted with the country, express the belief that Guertin has been run down and devoured by the wolves that infest the district.

An alderman of Windsor, Ont., has been arrested charged with interfering with a police officer.

Toronto exhibition surplus this year was $52,000, and the directors contemplate extensive additions and improvements.

A Gretna man is suing his fiancee in the county court for presents sent to her during the courtship.

Canada's anti-Chinese legislation may prevent the utilization of that class of labor in South African mines

It is announced that the Canadian Pacific Railway company intends to establish a steamship service between Antwerp and St. John, calling at London.

Customs receipts of the Dominion are still growing. The present month shows an increase of nearly $500,000 over November of last year. The figures are $3,195,315, as against $2,747,127 for November, 1902. For the five months ending Nov. 30, the receipts are $17,553,000 compared with $15,058,746 for the five months last year, an increase of $2,494,254. These

Many a candidate for office is not as immaculate as he is whitewashed.

"ELIJAH III." IS IN DIFFICULTIES

Financial Troubles of the Founder of Zion City.

BANKRUPT PROCEEDINGS

The Crusade to New York Was a Money Failure—Dowie Hard Pressed for Cash—Court Orders Two Receivers to Take Charge of Property.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—Financial difficulties which began during the crusade of John Alexander Dowie, the self-styled "Elijah III." and his restoration host to New York, a month ago, and which have been rapidly increasing since Dowie's return, culminated to-night in the federal court taking possession of all the property controlled by Dowie, in Zion City, Illinois. This town, which was founded two years ago by Dowie and has a population of over 10,000, is the general headquarters for Dowie's church and is said to represent an expenditure of $20,000,000.

Fred. M. Blount, cashier of the Chicago National Bank, and Albert D. Currier, a law partner of Congressman Boutelle, were appointed receivers for the property. Their bonds were fixed at $100,000 by Judge Kohlsaat, of the United States district court, who made the appointment on the petition of several creditors. The receivers left for Zion City to-night to take possession of the property.

The bankruptcy proceedings against Dowie were based on the allegation that he is insolvent and that while in this financial condition he committed an act of bankruptcy by making a preferential payment on Nov. 2 to the E. Streeter Lumber company for $3,770.

Dowie has been hard pressed by his creditors and especially since it was announced that his recent mission to New York had proved unsuccessful financially.

Dowie is known to have accumulated a large sum as the head of the Christian Catholic church, the assets of the organization being estimated at between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000. There was a large outlay of money, however, when Zion City was started.

The lace and candy industries were started, and as both of these ventures have never been paying investments a great deal of more money was tied up. Dowie's differences with his brother-in-law, Stevenson, over the management of the lace factory cost more than $100,000 and other suits recently begun in Lake county by creditors are said to aggregate a large sum.

Attorney Ettelson, representing the petitioning creditors, in his arguments before Judge Kohlsaat said: "Judgments have been accumulating against Mr. Dowie for several weeks past and there was every indication that the overseer of Zion congregation could not pay his debts. It is impossible to estimate the assets or liabilities of Dowie. Zion affairs are complicated and it will take several weeks, I believe, before any idea of Dowie's finances can be had."

Judge Kohlsaat at first refused to appoint a receiver for the property on the ground that Dowie should have notice of so important a proceeding. After listening to a further account of Dowie's affairs from Mr. Ettelson, Judge Kohlsaat decided it would be well to have the receivers appointed before the property at Zion City could be disputed.

Last Wednesday Dowie made what has been regarded as a confession of weakness at a rally in the tabernacle at Zion City.

"A lot of you people have cash in your pockets," Dowie said to his followers. "Dig down and get it out. It is God's and we need it in his work. You're cowards if you don't put it up. Deposit it."

Instead of frightening many into depositing, this appeal sent a lot of people to the bank on Friday to draw out their money.

Less than $3,000 was deposited in the bank on Friday, while the amount withdrawn was twice as much. Late in the afternoon A. W. Graham of Waukegan tried to withdraw his account of $300 and was told he would have to give the thirty days' notice before he could get his money. Yesterday another appeal was made by Dowie for funds, but the depositors who appeared were few and deposits were chiefly in trivial amounts. To-day Dowie asked the members of Zion more urgently than ever for money. He declared that he must have $500,000 without delay. This sum, he said, he was willing to take in short loans but that they must be forthcoming immediately. In the efforts to remedy the condition of affairs at Zion City, hundreds of letters were sent out daily to Dowie's followers in other parts of the country. In these all Dowieites were urged, almost commanded to sell their farms, stores and everything else and come at once to Zion City to take up the work of the church. All of those who have money in banks near where they now live were asked to draw that money out and send it for deposit in Zion City.

It is declared to be a fact that the employees of the manufacturing industries have not been paid in from four to six weeks. Early in the week before last Dowie made a personal trip through the various shops, and told his followers and others that they must either wait for their salaries or must endure a substantial cut in wages. This was agreed to.

High Chinese officials at Tien-Tsin attach great importance to the British expedition to Thibet, and even express the opinion that the ultimate outcome will be the handing over of the whole of Thibet to Great Britain.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Telegrams and Cablegrams Condensed for Busy Readers.

A gold mine at Webbwood, Ont., has been sold for $676,000.

During November there were 78 deaths and 152 births in Winnipeg.

Montreal bank clearings for November show an increase of $5,000,000 over last year.

Queen Alexandra's birthday was observed with great fervor on the Royal estate at Sandringham on December 1.

Railways increased the rates on grain on Dec. 1 from Ontario to the seaboard 1½ to 2 cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. T. B. Southgate, late of Croydon, Surrey, England, and now residing at Rosser, Man., has just come into $250,000 by the death of Mr. A. L. Webbe, whose life Mr. Southgate gallantly saved in 1895.

The Old World device of floating a loaf of bread containing quicksilver was successfully resorted to in order to find the body of a child who was drowned in a brook at Kingscliffe, England. Strangely enough the mercury-laden loaf stopped twice at a spot called the "deep pit," where the little lad was seen by his companions to disappear, and the diver who was sent down discovered the body there.

According to advices from Yokohama, Shakespeare's tragedy "Hamlet" has just been "done" into Japanese, and is now being acted at the Hongoza and Kawakami and Sada Yakko. It is daily drawing big houses and the enthusiastic Japanese audiences follow the play with intense interest. In the Japanized Hamlet the scene is laid in Japan, and Hamlet's father's grave is in Aoyama cemetery, the names have been Japanized; Hamlet is transferred into Lamura, Horatio becomes Hara Shiji and Ophelia becomes Okiye.

Peat Fuel.

An interesting section of the latest report of the Ontario Bureau of Mines is devoted to peat and its use as a fuel. In the country districts of Ireland and Scotland peat has always been largely used for domestic purposes. In Holland it is a principal domestic fuel, and is also used in the brick yards. In Germany, Austria, Denmark, Sweden and Russia, it is used both for domestic purposes and in manufacturing operations. It is abundant in Canada, in its natural state, and as long ago as the seventies attempts were made to utilize some of the deposits. The market conditions were against the enterprises, which also had to contend against certain difficulties of a mechanical character, which made it impracticable to sufficiently reduce the moisture contained in the natural material.

There are now in operation in Ontario seven peat fuel industries—at Welland, Beaverton, Perth, Brunner, Brockville, Rondeau and Newington. It is believed that by a combination of semi-drying and compression the problem of reducing the moisture has been solved. The fuel is turned out in the shape of briquettes, at a cost of about $1 a ton, for collecting, drying and pressing. It is said to make a good fire for heating and domestic purposes. The further progress of the experiments will be watched with much interest. If peat can be so treated as to be generally adaptable for use, an important industry will be made possible, and many presently waste places will become valuable.

Dismissal of Bismark.

The Sun of New York publishes the following cable: Berlin, Dec. 1.—A new and sensational version of the reason for the emperor's dismissal of the late Prince Bismarck from the chancellorship of the Empire in March, 1890, is printed here. The story is that when the emperor asked Prince Bismarck to explain why he was negotiating with Dr. Windthorst, the Catholic leader, without consulting his majesty, the conversation became heated. Prince Bismarck was so angry that he raised an inkstand against his imperial master.

The story receives attention only because it is alleged to have come indirectly from the King of Saxony.

A Valuable Bird.

The prize offered by the London Express for the first parrot that could distinctly repeat the phrase: "Your food will cost you more," has been won by Mr. F. H. Thomas, of Highgate road. The winning bird is a West African parrot, five years old, which was brought home from Cape Lopez last July by a friend to Mr. Thomas. When it arrived in England it could say nothing beyond a few words in the Mpongwe native dialect of the French Congo, but acquired the new free trade shibboleth in two weeks.

The Express has offered another prize of $25 for the parrot, which can repeat the same phrase most distinctly in a public competition.

"Separated Twin" Dies.

A dispatch from Paris says:—Radica, the little Indian twin girl who was surgically separated from her sister Doodica some months ago, shortly before the latter died of consumption, has succumbed in her turn to the same disease.

The operation of separating the girls, who were joined together by a growth at their sides, was perfectly successful, but consumption was already too advanced in both cases to allow of them living very long.

It is impossible for a man to help others without helping himself more.

Too Much For Him.

Voltaire could not speak much English. The reason why he refused to study the language is this: It was drilled into him that "plague" was pronounced "plaig," which he thought very pretty and acceptable. But right on top of it he was introduced to "ague," which his teacher said must be called "a-gue." Finding it impossible to reconcile the difference, he went off into a philosophical tantrum and dropped the study.

The Real Effort.

"It is very hard," said the girl with the new suit, "for a girl not to appear to be trying to attract attention."

"It is a great deal harder," asserts the girl with the red trimmed hat, "for her to attract attention and give the appearance of not trying to make an effort to have it appear that she is not trying to attract attention."

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Ottawa university will be rebuilt as soon as possible.

State of Ohio, City of Toledo, Lucas County. ss.

FRANK J. CHENEY makes oath that he is senior portner of the firm of F. J. CHENEY Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for each and every case of CATARRH that cannot be cured by the use of HALL'S CATARRH CURE.

FRANK J. CHENEY.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1886.
(Seal) A. W. GLEASON, Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by all druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Eskimo dogs have been driven 45 miles over the ice in five hours. A picked team of these dogs once travelled six miles in 28 minutes.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

Jas. McKee, Linnwood, Ont.
Lachlin McNiel, Mabou, C. B.
John A. McDonald, Arnprior, Ont.
C. B. Billing, Markham, Ont.
John Mader, Mahone Bay, N.S.
Lewis S. Butler, Burin, Nfld.

These well known gentlemen all assert that they were cured by MINARD'S LINIMENT.

A man who is thrown on his own resources is apt to make an occasional raid on the resources of others.

Free and easy expectoration immediately relieves and frees the throat and lungs from viscid phlegm, and a medicine that promotes this is the best medicine to use for coughs, colds, inflammation of the lungs and all affections of the throat and chest. This is precisely what Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a specific for, and whenever used it has given unbounded satisfaction. Childreb like it because it is pleasant, adults like it because it relieves and cures the disease.

Stop cracks in a wall with plaster of paris, but mix the plaster with vinegar, not with water, for vinegar prevents its settling too quickly and makes it easy of manipulation.

IT REACHES THE SPOT.—There are few remedies before the public to-day as efficacious in removing pain and in allaying and preventing pulmonary disorders as Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It has demonstrated its powers in thousands of instances and a large number of testimonials as to its great value as a medicine could be got were there occasion for it. It is for sale everywhere.

The man who goes to the bad never thinks of providing himself with a return ticket.

Conduct is three-fourths of life.—Matthew Arnold.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

ELECTRIC BELTS IN THE REACH OF ALL

We are Selling the Best Electric Belt in the World at a Price Within the Reach of the Poorest Sufferer.

Our Regular No. 7 High Grade $40 BELT for only $5

Our No. 7 Electric Belt (with suspensory for men or ladies attachment) is guaranteed to possess more power, more current, more equal distribution of current, better quality and finish than any other Electric Belt made, regardless of price.

The Prof. Karn Belt is a sure cure for Nervous, Weakness, Kidney, Liver and Stomach Complaint, Rheumatism, Lame Back, Pain or Aches in all parts of the body. Wear the Belt while you sleep, and in the morning you will feel years younger than when you went to bed.

Beware of those who ask you to pay from $10 to $40 for an Electric Belt, not half so good as the Prof. Karn's which we sell for only $5.00. We have only one price. We do not ask you 40 dollars first, and if you do not buy, try and sell you the same belt at any old price.

Our Honest Offer.—If you do not care to send us five dollars we will send you one of our Belts to your nearest express office, C.O.D. $5.00, with privilege of examination, if satisfactory, pay the express agent $5.00 and express charges and take the Belt. If not as represented you need not pay one cent. If you send cash with order we prepay the postage.

We are manufacturers of all kinds of electric appliances. Write us for our book, giving prices and full particulars. It is sent free.

Do not buy until you see our No. 7 High Grade Belt. Write at once. Address

THE F. E. KARN CO. 132 Victoria St. Toronto, Can.

Ayer's

Bald? Scalp shiny and thin? Then it's probably too late. You neglected dandruff. If you had only taken our advice, you would have cured the dandruff, saved your hair, and added much to it. If not entirely bald, now is your opportunity. Improve it.

Hair Vigor

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for over 40 years. I am now 91 years old and have a heavy growth of rich brown hair, due, I think, entirely to Ayer's Hair Vigor."
MRS. M. A. KEITH, Belleville, Ill.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

for Good Hair

When a woman is no longer able to make a man jealous she may as well give it up as a bad job.

The Bluethroat.

There is conclusive evidence to show that in one unbroken nocturnal flight the European bird known as the northern bluethroat passes from central Africa to the German sea, a distance of 1,600 miles, making the journey in nine hours. From its winter home in Africa observations have determined that it starts after sunset, arriving at its far northern summer haunts before dawn on the next morning.

A woman's idea of an annexationist is a man who has been married three times.

Official figures show that during the years 1888 to 1900 the mortality in the French army was more than double that in the German army.

When a young man is really known by the company he keeps she usually prefers to be a sister to him.

You cannot be happy while you have corns. Then do not delay in getting a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It removes all kinds of corns without pain. Failure with it is unknown.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

There are about 350 volcanoes on this earth that have performed in modern times. There are many hundreds more that have long been extinct.

Kidney Cry.—Pain in the back is the cry of the kidneys for help. To neglect the call is to deliver the body over to a disease cruel, ruthless, and finally life destroying. South American Kidney Cure has power akin to miraculous in helping the needy kidneys out of the mire of disease. It relieves in six hours.—38

If a girl throws a man over it's because she isn't hopelessly in love with him.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, etc.

Of the victims of Bright's disease 47 per cent. are over three score years old.

SIGNALS OF DANGER—Have you lost your appetite? Have you a coated tongue? Have you an unpleasant taste in the mouth? Does your head ache and is out of order and you need medicine, have you dizziness? If so, your stomach is out of order and you need medicine. But you do not like medicine. He that prefers sickness to medicine must suffer, but under the circumstances the wise man would procure a box of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills and speedily get himself in health and strive to keep so.

Recently Lord Roberts received congratulations on his seventy-first birthday. It was in 1832 that the present commander-in-chief of the British army was born in Cawnpore.

STAMMERERS

THE ARNOTT INSTITUTE, BERLIN ONTARIO. For the treatment of all forms of SPEECH DEFECTS. We treat the cause, not simply the habit, and therefore produce natural speech. Write for particulars.

Purest Crystal

"Ryrie" Cut Glass is the purest of Crystal.

Our handsomely illustrated new Catalogue shows a very large assortment of choice pieces.

No. 616

This 8-inch finest Cut Glass Berry Bowl we send to any address for $8.00.

We pay express charges and guarantee safe delivery.

Write for our Catalogue. Ready for delivery Nov. 15th.

RYRIE BROS.
JEWELERS
118, 120, 122 and 124 Yonge St., Toronto

Do You Want SOME ONE TO HANDLE YOUR SHIPMENTS TO CONSIGN YOUR GRAIN TO A RELIABLE FIRM PROMPT SERVICE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION ?

If so, the undersigned wants your business and will endeavor to give satisfaction. Cash advanced on consignments. Reference: Union Bank of Canada.

The oldest established Grain Commission Merchant in Winnipeg.
Grain Exchange, Winnipeg.

S. SPINK

Maclennan Bros.,
GRAIN MERCHANTS,
TELEPHONE 1490. P. O. Box 585
McIntyre Block, 304, Winnipeg.

Wheat and grain of all kinds. Car Load Lots a Specialty. Regular advances on Bills of Lading.

Write or wire us for Track Bids, or Consign Your Grain to us, which we will sell for your account, on your approval to highest bidder.

GRAND WORK IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Dodd's Kidney Pills are Clearing out Kidney Disease.

Richard Quirk, One of a Score Cured in One Neighborhood, Tells How Pains of Twenty Years Standing Vanished Before the Great Kidney Remedy.

Fortune Harbour, Nfld., Dec. 6.—(Special)—There are a score of people in this neighborhood who suffered from Lame Back and other symptoms of Kidney Disease and who are now strong and healthy, thanks to Dodd's Kidney Pills. One of the most serious cases cured is that of Mr. Richard Quirk, and in an interview he says:—

"I suffered for more than twenty years from Lumbago and Kidney Disease. I almost always had a severe pain in my back, so severe that during intervals for 3 years I was totally unable to work.

"Doctors and medicines gave me a little relief and after ten or twelve years I had almost made up my mind that my trouble was incurable. Then reading of cures by them led me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I had not taken half a box before I experienced relief and after using seven or eight boxes I was a perfect cure and a new man. The cure was permanent."

Cure your Backache with Dodd's Kidney Pills and you will never have Bright's Disease.

By a new Dutch process it is claimed that a moose hide can be turned into leather ready for the saddler's and shoemaker's use in from one to three days, while, by following the usual method of preparation, it takes about six months.

"One Foot in the Grave"—In the thousands of people who rush to so worthy a remedy as South American Nervine as a last resort would get it as a first resort, how much misery and suffering would be spared. If you have any nerve disorder you needn'y suffer a minute longer. A thousand testimonies to prove it.—36

THE MOST POPULAR PILL.—The pill is the most popular of all forms of medicine, and of pills the most popular are Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, because they do what it is asserted they can do, and are not put forward on any fictitious claims of excellence. They are compact and portable, they are easily taken, they do not nauseate nor gripe, and they give relief in the most stubborn cases.

Nature often lets a genius in on the ground floor, but necessity compels him to dwell in the attic.

Running Sores, the outcome of neglect, or bad blood, have a never-failing balm in Dr. Agnew's Ointment. Will heal the most stubborn cases. Soothes irritation almost instantly after first application. It relieves all itching and burning skin diseases in a day. It cures piles in 3 to 5 nights. 35 cents.—39

Paraguay cotton grows on bushes which produce for from seven to ten years.

USED FOURTEEN YEARS WITH GOOD RESULTS.

121 E, 164 St., New York, Sept. 4, 1902.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO.,

Gentlemen:—I have used your Spavin Cure on my horses for the past fourteen years and it has always given me good results in every particular. I also have one of your books that I have found very useful. If you have any later edition of the "Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases," will you kindly send me one.

Respectfully yours, B. F. FRIESIE.

It is an absolutely reliable remedy for Spavins, Splints, Curbs, Ringbones, etc. Removes the bunch and leaves no scar. Price $1; six for $5. As a liniment for family use it has no equal. Ask your druggist for KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE, also "A Treatise on the Horse," the book free, or address

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURG FALLS, VT.

Count Leo Tolstoi has written a treatise on Shakespeare, whose works he criticifes rather adversely.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

Unless the soap you use has this brand you are not getting the best

Ask for the Octagon Bar.

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

