Trade in the wheat markets during the past week has shown itself tentative in character. There has been a certain amount of activity at times in the American speculative markets, and then again absolute dullness, as if things had come to the point when an aggressive leader might carry prices up or down. Such leader has not shown himself pronouncedly, although the name of Armour & Co., has begun to appear quite prominently in the market gossip, and that house is credited with having accumulated a large amount of May wheat, and to some extent they seem to have the market practically under control. Outside of this the leading feature of the week's trading in the American markets is the advance of the May delivery over the December. The general situation is still one of strength in the American domestic market, and easiness and indifference in the European trade, consequent on plentiful supplies from other countries to Europe and the prospect of the supply being continued from the crops now harvesting in the southern hemisphere. The American markets had a moderately sharp upturn at the close of business yesterday, and the change in prices in these markets on the week shows December delivery to be practically unchanged and May delivery about unchanged to ¼c higher. The movement of wheat in the United States has been decidedly less in quantity than for the same week a year ago, and export is also less but the activity of inland movement and milling trade is larger. The growing winter wheat crop in the States is in excellent condition and has fully maintained its standing during the week. The harvest in the Argentine is progressing rapidly. There have been reports of rains impeding harvests in that country during the week, but competent authorities do not consider this much detriment at the present stage, and the rain is very beneficial to their corn. All crops promise very abundantly this year in the Argentine. The Australian harvest is also in progress and there the outlook is for the largest yield on record. The previous largious yield was in 1900, from which was exported 21,000,000 bushels. The crop prospect in India also continues very favorable, the new crops having had an excellent start. From Europe there is nothing special during the week as to crops.

Manitoba wheat has been quiet all week and the demand quite moderate. The approaching close of navigation affects the trade. Vessel owners are asking higher rates and there is uncertainty about getting more vessels than are already chartered. Shippers are well supplied with wheat for all engagements entered into, and unless more vessels are obtained the demand for wheat at current prices will not revive and trade will come right down to December delivery basis. On Friday prices were nominal at 78⅞c 1 northern, 77⅞c 2 northern, 72⅞c 3 northern, spot; and for December delivery 1 northern 77⅞c, 2 northern 74⅞c, 3 northern 70⅞c No. 4 wheat, 61⅞c, feed wheat 50c, feed No. 2, 40c, all in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

Prodigality of Life In Ancient Egypt.

The reckless prodigality with which in ancient Egypt the upper classes squandered away the labor and lives of the people is perfectly startling. In this respect, as the monuments yet remaining abundantly prove, they stand alone and without a rival. We may form some idea of the almost incredible waste when we hear that 2,000 men were occupied for three years in carrying a single stone from Elephantine to Sais, that the canal of the Red sea alone cost the lives of 120,000 Egyptians and that to build one of the pyramids required the labor of 360,000 men for twenty years.

"Well," she replied as she attempted to repair a torn flounce, "you're not too old to learn."

SIX PEOPLE INJURED.

Terrible Dynamite Explosion at Michel in Foreigner's House.

A terrible explosion, resembling that of last spring, occurred at Michel on Tuesday evening in the last row of houses across the creek.

A Slav named Polincik was warming several sticks of dynamite on the oven-door. An awful explosion resulted totally wrecking the house and burying the inmates in the debris. Six people were injured, one probably fatally, and the great wonder is that several were not killed instantly. Polincik escaped with slight scratches but his hearing is destroyed. The lady of the house who was sitting in a rocking chair in the same room sewing was severely injured by bricks falling on her feet. Her baby was found in the corner of the room under a pile of debris. It may not recover. The husband who was also in theroom is hurt in one shoulder and is deaf.

Two men in the room above the wrecked kitchen had a thrilling experience. The ceiling burst open allowing them to fall to the floor beneath. One who was in bed went down with the bed and was not hurt at all.

The house is a double one, and three people in the adjoining kitchen consisting of the man, wife and child were injured. The wall was entirely demolished and the child was blown under the table.

The Coal Company have taken steps to prevent a repetition of this accident, by notifying all the house holders that any one found with dynamite in his house will be dismissed from their employ.

WEDDING BELLS.

On Wednesday afternoon in Knox church in the presence of many friends two of our popular young people, Mr. E. L. Wriglesworth and Miss Bertha Farquharson, were united in marriage by the Rev. D. L. Gordon.

The bride looked charming, gowned in ivory white crepe di-chene, trimmed with Venetian point insertion. The tiolet was completed by a beautiful embroidered veil and orange blossoms. The bride carried a shower boquet of carnations and maiden hair ferns.

The bridesmaid, sister of the bride, was dressed in a beautiful gown of bisque voile, with lace applique and blue pipings. She also carried a handsome boquet of carnations.

The groom was supported throughout the trying ordeal by Mr. M. Kastner.

After the ceremony the happy party, attended by their more immediate friends drove to the residence of the bride's father Mr. A. K. Farquharson, where feasting and rejoicings, were indulged in until the arrival of the evening express, when the happy couple departed for a trip to the coast. We are pleased to know that they expect to return in the course of a couple of months when they will make Fernie their home.

The beautiful display of presents bears ample testimony to the esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Wriglesworth is held by their wide circle of friends. The FREE PRESS extends to them its best wishes for a happy and prosperous life.

PRESENTATION AT MICHEL.

The carpenters in the employ of the Coal Company at Michel presented their foreman, Mr. Peter Hansen, with a beautiful gold watch on Thursday evening as a token of their respect and regard for him.

About forty of the boys gathered at the residence of Mr. Hansen on the evening in question. R. L. Henderson made the presentation, accompanying it with a suitable address. A very pleasant evening was spent by all present.

Mr. Hansen has made himself very popular with his men during the two years he has occupied that position and the latter were not slow in showing it. The watch is a beauty and the best that could be got. It is suitably engraved and is in every sense a most appropriate Christmas gift.

NOW READY.

The Christmas Number of the Fernie Free Press is now completed. The local matter has been limited to the history of the town for the year 1903, it being felt that the history of the town previous to that date had already been sufficiently published. This explanation accounts for the reduction in local matters and for the substitution of interesting reading of a general nature. All subscribers and advertisers receive a free copy. All new subscribers are also entitled to a free copy, together with the Montreal Weekly Herald. To all other the price af the Holiday Number is 25 cents. Place your orders now.

Boys and Girls Attention.—The Trites-Wood Company invite every boy and girl in town to line up in front of their store on New Years' day and receive a treat.

HONOR IN JOURNALISM.

The Cranbrook Herald is now patting itself on the back because it published certain news relative to J. H. Toakin that did not appear in this paper. The Free Press was in a position to publish the same news a week earlier than did the Cranbrook weekly, but having been given that news in the same manner that the editor of the Cranbrook Herald was—under a distinct understanding that the information was not to be used for publication—we refrained from publishing it at the sacrifice of our honor. The triumphant note that rings through the Cranbrook Herald's long article in question makes one doubt whether its editor's zeal for giving the news was alone responsible for its publication.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE work of finishing the Christmas number this week has been heavy. For this reason we crave the indulgence of our readers in reducing the news space of this issue.

This office is in receipt of the year book of B. C. for 1903, prepared by R. E. Gosnell, secy. Bureau of Provincial Information. It contains 400 pages of useful information. The work from an artistic standpoint is excellent, its many beautiful half tone engravings adding greatly to its appearance.

COAL CREEK MINES.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Miss Bessie McClement has been assisting in the store during the busy season.

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist church here are having a room built to the back of the church to serve as a kitchen and store room.

The mines of late have been running at a disadvantage on account of the frost. The last few days the tonnage is again back to the 1200 mark.

The attendance at our school this last while has been quite good, numbering fifty children. The school is sadly in need of seating capacity as at present it is only adequate for thirty-five.

No preparations are being spared to make the Christmas supper and concert one of the very best. The Fernie Glee club lately organized, chiefly of Welsh singers, will assist with choruses, quartetts and solos. Instrumental music will also be furnished from local talent augmented by speeches, dialogues and recitations.

The new tipple from mine No. 3 is being pushed to completion. This when finished will join the old tipple at the scales. The task is a ponderous one and requires the skill of our best carpenters. The force here has been augmented by carpenters from Michel and other places. The tipple will be used for the new wire haulage system. A new bridge has been in use for some time just below this tipple for the horses working in No's 2 and 3.

DARING ESCAPE OF ERNEST CASHEL

Locks up Guards and Walks out of Prison.

PRODUCES 2 REVOLVERS

Condemned Murderer of Rancher Isaac Belt Locks up His Guards, Taunts Them and Walks out of Mounted Police Barracks Guard Room at Calgary.

Calgary, Dec. 10.—All Calgary is ringing with the sensational escape of a murderer from the condemned cell to-night, after locking up his guards—a veritable Dick Turpin exploit.

Ernest Cashel, the escaped man, was sentenced to be hanged on Tuesday next for the murder of Rufus Isaac Belt, a rancher. At a little after six o'clock this evening Constable Piper, the night guard, visited his cell. Cashel had in some mysterious way become possessed of two revolvers. Presenting these at the constable, he went out in search of the guard who was being relieved. Taken by surprise this man also threw up his hands, and surrendered his revolver.

Cashel then coolly locked up the guards in his cell and using their keys made off for open air and liberty. Outside a confederate appears to have had a saddle horse in waiting. On this the condemned man jumped and rode for dear life.

It was nearly half an hour before the imprisoned guards succeeded in attracting attention and effecting their release, and Cashel had at least that start.

The Northwest Mounted Police then set off in hot pursuit on his trail, and all trains have been notified to look out for the escaped man.

There is great mystery about the whole affair. The prisoner was stripped and searched last night and again this morning, and how and where he managed to obtain and conceal his shooting irons has yet to be explained. The fact of the horse also being in waiting, points to an organized escape, with active confederates.

The friends of the condemned man had been making strenuous efforts to get a new trial, and by a strange irony his counsel in Ottawa wired to-night, after his escape, that the cabinet would consider the new trial question on Saturday.

LIKE A DRAMA.

Interesting Story of How a Tragedy Was Averted in Italy.

A dispatch from Rome, dated Dec. 10, says: One of the strangest of crimes had a most dramatic solution this morning. A young man named Beretta, a millionaire of Milan and a famous sportsman, was invited by the Chevalier Angelo Vecchio, an organizer of sporting shows, to his villa outside of Milan on the pretext that Beretta examine some old pictures. Once there Beretta was seized and bound, and obliged with a revolver pointing at his head to make a will leaving his fortune to Vecchio, besides writing a letter saying he had committed suicide. Vecchio then left the villa, after instructing an accomplice to drown Beretta the next day in a bath and carry the body far away from the villa, so as to give Vecchio a chance to prove an alibi. But the heart of Vecchio's accomplice softened and he set Beretta at liberty, and Vecchio, who read in the newspapers that his plot had been discovered, disappeared. This morning it was learned that Vecchio had committed suicide by shooting.

A Line Regiment for Winnipeg.

A dispatch from Halifax, N. S., says: The British war office is evidently preparing to strengthen its military position in Canada. There are at present over 1,800 troops in Halifax garrison, and next year another regiment, a thousand strong, will be stationed here.

In addition, it is proposed to station a line regiment of 1,000 men in Western Canada, one half at Esquimalt, and the other half at Winnipeg. At present there are more imperial troops in Halifax than there have been since 1886.

A few days ago, some 200 men from the Royal Garrison regiment, came to Halifax, and some of these were accompanied by their wives and children. The remaining wives and children will come in a month or two. There are now two companies of Royal Engineers here, whereas formerly one company was stationed at Halifax at one time.

There are also about 360 Royal Artillery here, but on the 23rd one company will leave for Esquimalt. The imperial troops on this station consist of the Royal Garrison regiment, 1,200 men; Royal Engineers, 25 men; Royal Artillery, 360 men.

Farmers located within the limits of the town of Portage la Prairie are desirous of having the town's limits narrowed.

Robert McKibbon, porter at the Reviere Hotel, Deloraine, was killed on December 10 by the explosion of a gas machine.

The Western Manitoba Hotel, and the premises of Tipling and Belden, general merchants, Griswold, Man., were destroyed by fire on Dec. 10.

A winter horse race programme has been arranged for Brandon.

RUINED BY BEER.

Shocking Condition of a Family Discovered By Charity Inspector.

A dispatch from Toronto, dated Dec. 5, says: In response to a request the charity inspector went to investigate the Quinton House, Adelaide street. In an upstair room the officer found Mrs. Quinton lying on a bed, the coverings of which were in a filthy state. The woman was apparently dying from the effects of drink and abuse. She had several bruises on her face, which, she gathered strength sufficient to assure the officers, had not been inflicted by her husband, who lay dead drunk beside her on the bed. The woman has no attendance but her little daughter Jennie, who said she was 11 years old, but did not look even that age.

The poor child was in a shocking condition, owing to neglect. The ragged clothes she wore were filthy beyond description. Her hair was matted, as if it had not been touched by a comb or brush for months. When questioned, the little thing said her father was drunk most of the time. He was in the habit of sending her out for beer, and there were days when she carried to the house as much as four or five quartz of the liquor. This her father and mother drank. Her father would compel the child to write orders to hotelkeepers to give her liquor and sign his name. The family was taken in charge by charity workers.

TERRIBLE SCENES.

British Consul in Congo State Makes an Investigation.

A London cable says: Roger Casement, British consul in the Congo Free State, has just completed a tour of investigation undertaken under the orders of the British government, and he fully confirms the worst reports of outrages perpetrated on natives of that part of Africa. Mr Casement's tour was to have lasted six months, but after the scenes he witnessed and the information he obtained, in the first two months' time, the consul decided that further evidence was unnecessary. The report which Mr. Casement is now preparing for the foreign office will show that the most horrible outrages are still being perpetrated under the "rubber regime" and that slavery and barbarism in the most revolting forms still exist. The Casement party travelled over a thousand miles from the coast along the Congo and its tributaries, visiting the Abir and Lulonga rubber zones. Pending the delivery of the report to the foreign office, the investigators refuse to furnish any details, but a member of the mission summed up the situation by saying: "The most terrible slavery exists, the administration is atrocious and if there is not speedy intervention it will be too late."

The Merry Fiscal Fight.

The London Daily News says:—"Mr. Geo. E. Foster, before returning to Canada, remarked that it was hard to infuse into the forty millions of people on the British Isles an adequate idea of the empire's future. We would rather suggest that it is hard to permeate adequate ideas of the motherland into 12,000,000 colonists. Who is Foster?"

Barber Opens Fire on His Men.

Frank Johnston, a colored barber, of Hamilton, during a spree, went into his shop and accused Nathaniel Moore, a colored employee, of robbing him. He fired a couple of shots at Moore, one passing through his neck into his shoulder. Johnston shot at Wm. Howard, another employee, but only grazed his hand. Johnston then went into a back room and shot himself twice in the head. The police rushed in and captured him. Moore is most seriously wounded but will probably recover.

Boy Killed By Cruelty.

A dispatch from Vancouver says:—A boy, 10 years old, from Kamloops, was found roaming about the streets and taken to the children's home, where he died a few days later. The cruelty of his guardians is said to have caused his death. He was covered with filth and bruises. Before his death he said the people with whom he lived had made him stand in ice-cold water for punishment. An effort will be made to bring the cruel guardians of the child to justice.

A dispatch from Belleville, Ont., says: Stanley Archer, aged 7 years, whose parents reside at Frankford, near this city, was accidentally shot by an elder brother. The latter was shooting sparrows when the latter ran out from behind a tree as the gun was discharged, the ball entering the lower part of the throat. The unfortunate boy only lived a few minutes.

PENNILESS, HE SUICIDED

Englishman Calmly Puts an End to His Life.

LEFT NO REASON FOR DEED

W. J. Salter, an Emigrant, Severed an Artery in His Leg and Bled to Death in a Winnipeg Hotel—A Man of Refinement.

Despondent with what he considered hard luck, W. J. Salter, of London, England, committed suicide in the Tecumseh House, Winnipeg, on Dec. 9th in the most deliberate manner possible. With an artery severed in the calf of his left leg he was found shortly before 9 o'clock in the evening lying on his bed which was saturated with his life's blood.

Salter, it is supposed, came to Western Canada with the Barr Colonists, or at about the same time. Little about him was known at the hotel, and he did not appear to have any friends. He registered at the Tecumseh about a month ago, signing as W. J. Salter, London, Eng. He said that he had been cooking for a contractor's gang and was again seeking employment. He was a fine looking man, six feet tall, good physique, apparently in good health, and about 35 years of age. He was dark complexioned and clean shaven.

His room was a large one, containing three beds, and it was one of the occupants of the other beds who found him lying unconscious, while his life blood ebbed through the self-inflicted gash. He was then alive and an attempt was made to stop the flow. Dr. Moorehead was summoned, but arrived too late, as the unfortunate man died with a gasp as the doctor was working on him.

His death was painless, and from the evidence found, startling in its deliberacy. He evidently went to his room from the outside and retaining his overcoat and cap he removed the boot from the left foot. He then rolled up his trousers and drawers and with his own pocket-knife severed the artery. The knife was found in his trousers pocket covered with blood. He then lay down on his bed without removing his overcoat and bled surely and slowly to death. People moved about the hotel; but heard no sound. His door was passed dozens of times, but there was no groan or outcry heard. When found he was motionless, unconscious and very near the portals of the hereafter. The thin red stream was pouring from the incision onto the bed and the floor, yet there was no evidence of a struggle or convulsive movement.

He was plainly dressed and his clothes were light for a severe winter. He was penniless and his effects were of no commercial value. He had not had employment since arriving at the hotel and was known to be in bad circumstances, although he told no one of his condition, nor did he ask for assistance. He was of a reticent nature and apparently well educated.

The real cause of his rash act is not known, but it was thought that he had been used to better circumstances in the old country, and that, finding himself in such a straightened condition and unable to get suitable employment he became despondent, arriving at the conclusion that life was not worth the living.

A Village Disappears.

North Yorkshiremen in our Northwest Canada will be horrified to learn that if they should want to revisit the scenes of their upbringing, they will miss some beloved spots. The Marquis of Zetland's seat, Upleatham hall, is no more. This mansion has been pulled down and carted away; as also more than forty cottages and houses in Upleatham village. This comes of iron mining. For the past eight years the village has been disappearing. The iron mining in the district has caused the subsidence of the surface because of its collapse into deep hollows. Scooped out below by the miners, roads even have fallen in, and no trace of them left. The people have left, or are leaving, in such numbers that there are not now more than two hundred living in the locality. On the surrounding farms huge cavities have appeared of such depth and danger to human life, herds and flocks, that fences had to be placed around them to save destruction. This village, so much loved by the Tykes, possesses the smallest church in England. Perched upon a hill, with the vicarage near by, so far it has escaped destruction. This is the treasure of all the neighborhood round—this tiny church. But without a congregation to get to it, what can a village clergyman do for his services?

Dipped the School Marm.

A dispatch from Sullivan, Ind., says: Miss Ariene Sinclair, the 19-year-old school teacher of the Parks school house in this county, was overpowered by her unruly pupils, tied to a hog trough and placed for two hours in a pond of icy water, until only her head was above the surface. She has sworn out warrants for assault and battery against six children.

"He's a driver, your honor, and was intoxicated. When I arrested him he was on the wrong side of the street." "Did you drive on the wrong side of the street, prisoner?" "To the best of my knowledge, your honor, I drove on both sides of the street."

CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

REV. DR. TALMAGE ON THE TEACHINGS OF THE SACRED SEASON.

THE HOME IS ITS FIT SETTING.

All Family Differences Should Be Healed and All Dissensions Should Be Forever Put Aside—Everyone Should Try to Realize the Truth of the Words: "On Earth Peace, Good Will Toward Men."

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—In this sermon the preacher urges as a fitting commemoration of the Christmas time the healing of family differences and the putting aside forever of all dissensions, in accordance with the spirit and teachings of the sacred season. The text is Luke ii, 14, "On earth peace, good will toward men."

Christmas Day has the manger for its gem, with the home for a setting. From time immemorial the commemoration of the birth of Christ has had its true and real celebration not so much in public festivity and church ceremonial as in the family gathering around the domestic fireside. Other customs may change, new movements may transform our social life, but the Christmas family gathering maintains its hold on society. But though many customs may change within a quarter of a century the customs of Christmas Day neither change in a generation or a century. Christmas Day always has been and we hope always will be a family day. It is well that at least once a year the children and the grandchildren, the brothers and the sisters and the nephews and the nieces, as well as the fathers and mothers and grandparents, should be gathered within the four walls of the old homestead, and it is appropriate that the season for such reunions should be that at which we celebrate the advent of our Lord.

But though God "setteth the solitary in families," though on Christmas Day, above all other days, he would have us worship him in communion with our kith and kin, though we should delight to prove that blood is thicker than water, yet the startling fact remains uncontroverted that the grinning skeleton, which rattles its bones and clatters its teeth almost every Christmas eve in almost every family closet, is the hideous skeleton of domestic strife. By this statement we do not mean that the father and mother and the little children living within the four walls of a house are necessarily unhappy or that most homes are not peaceful and loving. We do mean, however, that the family name, taken in its larger relation, is not always a loving and harmonious name. We do mean by this statement that after the father and mother have been carried out to their last resting place, to sleep the sleep of death under a coverlid of snow, estrangements often arise between the married children. We do mean by this statement that many a home has been split from top to bottom on account of the second marriage of a father or a mother. We do mean that to-day all over the world brothers can be found at variance with brothers, sisters with sisters and cousins with cousins.

Christmas Day is essentially a family day. Would it not be possible in the weeks before its dawn for you to arrange your family differences so that on that day the old quarrel may be settled and all the hard thoughts and hard words it has engendered may be forgiven and forgotten? I would suggest to you to-day some reasons why such reconciliation may be and should be effected. I would try, in the name of Jesus Christ, to have over the manger brother clasp hands with brother, sister with sister, parent with child and child with parent. I would try to do this because when the Christmas bells are ringing their carol no man, no woman, can so truly honor the newborn child called the Christ as by doing his or her part to fulfill the angel message of "Peace on earth and good will toward men."

Family dissensions should cease, and immediately cease. Why? They have nearly all—aye, practically all—been caused by faults committed on both sides. They have been caused by the pot calling the kettle black, the kettle retaliating by calling the pot black, and at the same time both are so blinded by the hot fires of domestic dissensions that they cannot see that each is black. It may not be clear who started the family trouble. It is enough to show that if both parties had not erred there would not have been continued domestic disturbance.

Take, for illustration, the trouble between a father and his son. Every little while we hear of the son of some prominent man being at variance with his father. An inkling of the trouble may get into the newspaper or be gossiped about the neighborhood. Some of us side with the parent. We say: "No matter what the father may have done, the son has no right to turn his back upon his sire. He has no right to despise the parent who cared for him when he was a little child and who educated him and started him out as a young man into the world." On the other hand, some of us side with the son instead of the father. We say that some fathers are mean and selfish and grasping. They never want to give their sons their rights. It is told of old Emperor William I. of Germany, that when the court artist painted a picture of the German court, with Crown Prince Frederick's foot upon the lowest step of the throne, King William called the artist to him and said: "Take that boy's foot off that throne step. As long as I am King I want to have the throne for myself." But in all probability if you can get to the inside facts of that quarrel between the father and the son they can all be traced to a disposition in the father which has been inherited by the son. The father may have been a high strung, nervous, quick tempered, overwrought, overworked, impetuous man. The son may have inherited the same fiery disposition. It is a scientific fact that opposites conjoin, not similarities. The positive and the negative poles work together in harmony, not the electric wires carrying the same current. The reason the wife is able to live harmoniously with the husband is that her nature is entirely different from his and is its natural complement. The father and the son were continually irritating each other. One night there was a domestic explosion. The father ordered the son from the house. The boy never came back. He went to live in another city. He plunged into a life of dissipation. The father blamed the son. The son blamed the father. But are there not grievous faults on both sides?

Take, for illustration, that difficulty which exists between the daughter and her parents. There are faults there just the same. Faults are on both sides. The daughter may have grown up to be the pride of the parental heart. She was the idol of her father and mother. They sent her to school and gave her every educational advantage that money could procure, but while they were giving money and, seemingly, every advantage those parents were not careful about the acquaintances their daughter was forming. They were not careful about looking up the records of the young men who were calling during the evening hour. The result of this parental negligence was that the daughter formed an affection for a young man who was not regarded favorably by the parents. They did everything in their power to prevent the marriage, but the trouble was that the parents awoke to the danger too late. The young girl was obstinate; she married against their will. After the daughter left home she felt that her husband and children were not wanted back in the place where the wife and mother was born, therefore she does not visit where they are not welcomed. The parents, in an unguarded moment, may have said that all their children wanted of them was their money. The daughter is poor, but very proud. At times she has not had food enough even for her babies. How much happiness it would give on all hands if a reconciliation could be effected and if the parents, remembering that their negligence contributed to the trouble, and the daughter, remembering that hard words, spoken in a moment of irritation, should not weigh against long years of love and parental kindness, should come together again and agree to forget the faults on both sides!

What is true of the difficulties between parents and children is also true of the difficulties between brothers and brothers, sisters and sisters. Inevitably faults are to be found on both sides. Therefore what is the practical conclusion of all this trend of thought? You, O man, and you, O woman, have no right to complain about the injustices which others have done against you unless you at the same time have done all in your power to atone for the sins which you have, intentionally or unintentionally, done against your brother! If you will go and honestly ask your brother to forgive you the wrong you have done him, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred that brother will ask you to forgive the injustices he has done you. Then, as you are both ready to atone for the evils you have done each other, there will be no further cause for domestic strife. Try to smother the flames of family trouble by asking your brother to forgive you the wrongs you have done him. Try it, my friend. Try it. Try it before the coming Christmas festivities.

Family dissensions should cease, and immediately cease. Why? Because nearly all family troubles are caused by one member of a family misjudging the motives and position of other members of the family. Because it is almost impossible for people in one sphere of life to properly appreciate the difficulties and the trials and the worries and the disappointments and the heartaches which are continually nagging and sapping the lives of people in other spheres of life. Because it is not easy for one to read "the signs of the times" through another's spectacles. Because every pair of family glasses, as a rule, has a different lens and different focus.

Study the misunderstandings between the professional man and his sister, who is living a quiet domestic life. Such a lady says: "My brother never answers my letters now as he used to do. He never shows me those little courtesies of love I have a right to expect. The last time I wrote him he sent me back a very sharp reply." Yes, my sister, perhaps that is all true. But the reason you are angry with your brother is, you, as a domestic woman, cannot understand the nervous exhaustion under which your professional brother is struggling. Perhaps the reason he does not answer his sister's letters as he used to do is because he is a clergyman, a lawyer or a newspaper man. Day after day he sits and writes and writes and writes. The pen is always in his hand until the very sight of ink and paper has for him a repulsion. Perhaps the reason the brother does not visit the sister is because he has been unable to take a vacation for the last ten years. Your difficulties with your brother are chiefly, my sister, because you cannot put yourself in his place.

Oh, that this coming Christmas we would one and all try to focus our eyes to our brother's spectacles! Then a great many of the family troubles would forever vanish from our darkened horizon. The man who travels about this planet with such a Christian spirit and goes from house to house—from the palace of the rich to the hovel of the poor, from the sumptuous private office of the merchant prince to the counters of the small salaried clerk—soon discovers that this world is not altogether a mean world, a selfish world, a heartless world, but it is a tired world, a discouraged world, a misunderstood world. If every member of a family who has bitter troubles and trials could realize that his brothers and sisters along the great highways of life are struggling under burdens quite as heavy as his own—although their burdens may be made up in different kinds of packs and have silken cords around them instead of hempen rope—he would be more patient in his criticism of others, as he may hope that others will judge him more charitably. Most of the seeming insults by relatives to relatives are entirely unintentional. As every man hopes for mercy and pardon in the day of judgment so there should be forgiveness for one who offends another through inadvertence and not through intention. The fancied injustices between relatives exist for the most part in the distorted imaginations of those who have no right to indulge in unChristian and merciless judgments of relatives who really want to be friends.

Oh, my friends, if we are ever going to have Christmas reconciliations we had better have them now. Human life at the longest is short. When children have grown and scattered how soon they die. A family may exist intact for ten, twenty, thirty years, but after the death angel calls one child he is very apt to come back soon for another and another until all are gone. When the family plot is once selected and a couple of graves dug therein the hearse gets into the habit of traveling in the same direction and the black horses to stopping at the same gate. Then the sad truth is that when death does come regrets may be piled in flowers mountains high upon the casket, brothers may weep over the dead brother, the hands may be pressed and the lips pressed and the forehead stroked, but the dead will hear not one word. He will not lift one eyelid. He will not smile one look of forgiveness back to those who want to be forgiven. O regrets, regrets! How often have we wept our regrets over the coffin lids! How often that word might have been chiseled as epitaph upon the tombstone of the dead! Regrets, bitter, heartrending, but useless regrets! Regrets, burning regrets in reference to our kith and kin who are gone.

Family dissensions should cease. Dare any one, old or young, gainsay this immanent truth? But if this warning comes with mighty force to brothers and sisters how much more should it come to the father and mothers who are angry or indifferent with their children? Many people are apt to judge the children harshly when domestic troubles arise between parents and their offspring. But as men and women grow older and have children of their own they are more willing to blame the parent for the estrangement than they are to blame the child. Have you, parents, ever tried to win back the affections of your children? Did you ever try to recall that cruel remark you once made to your obstinate boy? That remark cut into his heart as a surgeon's knife buries itself in the flesh quivering upon the operating table. Have you, O parent, since that second marriage, which so trampled upon the love of your children, gone regularly to visit your children, as you used to do before their mother's death? Do you send to them the warm, cordial invitations to come home and insist that they come with their families? Do you, the parents, try to instill into your children the thought that their father and their mother are absolutely dependent for happiness upon their boys' and girls' affections?

Cannot the parents who are estranged from their children realize that the years are very few in which it is possible for them to have Christmas reconciliations? When a child despises a parent, living or dead, that child must suffer the most awful agonies that can ever come to a human being this side of the grave. Bear, forbear, forgive and be forgiven are the teachings, "on earth peace, good will toward men." Before the next Christmas comes around it will be impossible for some to forgive or be forgiven. The casket-maker is even now manufacturing a coffin. The gravedigger is even now sharpening his pick and spade. The quarryman is even now cutting a tombstone. The bellringer is even now ready to toll a knell. Brothers and sisters, fathers and mothers, kith and kin, stop and attune your family reconciliations to the notes of the Christmas song.

Christmas days have not always heard the angels sing the song, "On earth peace, good will to men." In 1069 William the Conqueror, to complete his triumph over England, decreed that all the country should be devastated between York and Durham. In all that region every city, town or village was razed to the ground, and so literally was the order executed that a famine ensued in which 100,000 men, women and children perished. So many Christmases since 1069 have witnessed their slaughters of thousands upon thousands. Not the slaughter of life alone, but the slaughter of heart loves and heart affections between brothers and sisters and parents and children. May the Christmas of 1903 not be a Christmas of domestic tragedy, but of family reunions. May it be the time when the very angels in heaven shall again be compelled to sing for joy that all relatives at the manger have become reconciled.

He climbed in again and drove the train to Nantes.

Effect of Her Singing.

The doting husband was discoursing on the beauty of his wife's voice. "She has a note of pathos in her voice," said he, "that will draw tears from the most hardened. I assure you I have heard her sing before a large audience, and when she has finished there has not been a dry eye in the room."

"Quite true," assented the cynic. "She always affects me that way. Even if she only says she's going to sing I weep bitterly."—Moonshine.

IGNORAECE IS A CURSE.—"Know thyself" is a good admonition, whether referring to one's physical condition or moral haitudes. The man who is acquainted with himself, will know how to act when any derangement in his condition manifests itself. It may be only a trifling cold, but neglect it and it will fasten its fangs in your lungs, and you will soon be carried to an untimely grave. In this country we have sudden changes and must expect to have coughs and colds. We cannot avoid them, but we can effect a cure by using Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that has never been known to fail in curing coughs, colds, bronchitis and all affections of the throat, lungs and chest.

Pessimists are people who go round looking for thorns to sit on.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and different seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

Police Captain A. J. Thomas, of the New York force, just retired, saved $250,000 in seven years on a salary of $2,750 a year. How did he do it?

A SMALL PILL BUT POWERFUL.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. It is a little wonder among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The full strength of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work thoroughly.

A sprinter would never wear hose that are warranted not to run.

Stop the Pain but Destroy Stomach.—This is sadly too often the case. So many nauseous nostrums purporting to cure, in the end do the patient immensely more harm than good. Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets are a purely vegetable pepsin preparation, as harmless as milk. One after eating prevents any disorder of the digestive organs, 60 in a box, 35 cents.—40

Of course, those Frenchmen who ride in airships look down on people in automobiles.

Catarrh and Colds Relieved in 10 to 60 Minutes.—One short puf of the breath through the blower supplied with each bottle of Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder diffuses this powder over the surface of the nasal passages. Painless and delightful to use. It relieves instantly, and permanently cures catarrh, hay fever, colds, headache, sore throat, tonsilitis and deafness. 50 cents.—41

The first medal granted to the navy was after the defeat of the Spanish Armada, and was oval in shape. No medal was issued by the British government for the battle of Trafalgar.

The Governor's Wife a Prisoner.—Mrs. Z. A. Van Luven is the wife of the governor of the county jail, Napanee, Ont., and was a great sufferer from rheumatism. When the best doctors in the community and "specialists" failed to help her, she buried her sceptism of proprietary remedies and purchased South American Rheumatic Cure. 4 bottles cured her.—42

DANGER IN SODA SIPHONS.

They May Explode and Cause Injury to Those Who May Be Near.

Do you know that the siphon bottle ordinarily used for vichy, soda water and other effervescent drinks is usually charged with a pressure of from 120 to 160 pounds to the square inch? The danger likely to result from an explosion of one of these little household articles is by no means inconsiderable, and yet the average person handles a siphon as though it were the most harmless thing in the world.

There are two or three things to remember in handling siphons: Never keep your siphons near the range, for the unusual heat is more likely than anything else to cause an explosion. Don't subject the bottle to any sudden change of temperature whatever. For instance, if you keep your siphons in the ice box—and that is the best and safest place for them—don't grasp the glass part of the bottle with your warm hand, for the sudden change of temperature is apt to cause an explosion. The best way to carry a siphon at all times is by the metal top at the head of the bottle. It is needless to say the greatest care should be taken not to drop a siphon, for an explosion is the inevitable result. When empty, the siphon is, of course, quite harmless.

That these bottles are considered a great source of danger is evidenced by the fact that the courts inevitably hold the bottlers strictly liable for all damages resulting from the explosion of one of them if even the slightest defect in the manufacture of the bottle can be shown.

This Horse Knew.

A doctor was returning home from visiting a patient late one night in company with a clergyman, when the horse stopped short at one of the most dangerous grade crossings within the city's limits. Absorbed in lively conversation with his clerical friend and seeing no gate down, he mechanically touched the horse with the whip and urged it by his voice to go forward. But the spirited animal for once would not respond and instead of obeying stepped briskly aside and turned his head as far as possible from the train which just then whizzed by at the rate of forty miles an hour.

It was a close call for the occupants of the carriage, who sat breathless through the moments of terrible suspense, but the horse maintained its attitude of a half circle until the danger had passed. It seems the gatekeeper was asleep at his post and had neglected his duty, but the delicate ears of the horse had detected the sound of the coming train.

When the Poor Ride In Coaches.

In the east side tenement house region coaches are associated with only two things—weddings and funerals. The coach is an indispensable feature of the wedding, and only the very poorest are buried without the attendance of a mourning coach.

The whole block knows when a wedding is to take place, and everybody is on the watch when the coach and pair come dashing around the corner to receive the bride. The vehicle draws up before the narrow entrance to a tenement and presently is entered by the bride, half hidden in her white veil and all nodding with orange wreaths, while a gaping crowd looks on. The horses are lashed, the coach turns another corner, and in three minutes the bride is at the place of ceremony. The ceremony over, the coach this time swallows up both bride and bridegroom. Everybody is charmed at the sight. The gossips are busy for a day.

Canine Intelligence.

A striking instance of canine intelligence is reported from Paris. A male schoolteacher named Dillaz was waylaid one evening near Charenton bridge by two roughs, who set upon him and, after rifling his pockets, flung him into the Seine. A collie dog that happened to be near, without being encouraged to do so by any person—indeed there were none who saw the circumstance—at once plunged into the water and, catching the man by the coat, aided him to keep afloat until the river police, attracted by his cries, arrived to his assistance. M. Dillaz was subsequently able to furnish the police with a description which led to the arrest of his assailants.

Rank Heresy.

He—So the engagement is broken off?

She—Yes. He told her he thought she should stop reading novels and read something more substantial—something that would improve her.

He—Well?

She—Well, the idea of a man intimating to his fiancee that she could be improved in any way!

Her Lost Opportunities.

Mrs. Noolywed—And if I had really thrown you down then would you have given me up?

Noolywed—I should say not. I would have kept right on trying to win you even if you had thrown me over half a dozen times.

Mrs. Noolywed—My, what a lot of fun I missed!

... By ...

RICHARD BARKER SHELTON

...Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure...

Crompton stood for a time at the head of the aisle waiting for an usher. It was a few minutes after 8, and the drums and brasses of the orchestra were announcing the finale of the overture. People crowded past him and streamed far down the sloping aisle, and all about was the clatter of seats turned down, the swish of silken skirts and the subdued hum that precedes the rise of the curtain. Then half the lights in the house went out, and the orchestra began a curtain cue in a creepy minor.

Crompton fished in his pocket for his check. "H 21, Left, Orchestra Stall," he read in the dim light. He was blissfully ignorant that his check was a week old and from another theater uptown, while the check he should have presented reposed undisturbed in the pocket of his overcoat. He strode down the aisle, where worried looking ushers were hustling people into their seats. When he reached "H, Left," he found 21 was the end seat, and he sank into it, thankful for its proximity to the aisle.

Scarcely had he seated himself when he felt a hand on his arm, and a voice beside him said:

"I was afraid you wouldn't get my note, Jack. It was late when I sent it to the club."

Crompton turned and found beside him a refined, elderly lady with a kindly face. He was about to inform her of her mistake when she turned to a young woman on her left.

"Constance, dear," he heard her say, "Jack has come."

The young woman leaned forward, and Crompton caught sight of a very charming face. Her great, dark eyes looked at him for a moment and then opened wide with surprise; an angry flush colored her cheeks, and her mouth curved scornfully. For a moment she simply stared at him, while his heart went through some strange gymnastics.

"IT IS VERY GOOD OF YOU, JACK," SHE SAID.

Then an amused twinkle came to her eyes, and her lips took on a grim smile.

"It is very good of you, Jack," she said, with significant emphasis, and settled back in her seat.

Crompton felt dazed and helpless. What was the meaning of this? The elderly lady was speaking again.

"I'm so glad you came," she said. "You can make me see it all so beautifully. I can't borrow another pair of eyes in the city worth a cent to me."

She turned to him with a pathetic smile which gave him sudden enlightenment. She was blind.

The young woman leaned forward again. She looked him over deliberately, as if taking his measure, and then said:

"Jack, Aunt Agatha wouldn't go to the theater all the time you were away. She says my descriptions of scenery and situations are either flippant or dreary. Oh, there's nothing like being a favorite nephew, Jack Armstrong."

Crompton felt a great sense of relief. This lady beside him was his Aunt Agatha; he was Jack Armstrong. The young woman had tactfully made these points clear to him. He flashed her a look of gratitude, which she recognized with another grim smile.

The curtain had gone up and the play commenced.

"Tell me about it," he heard Aunt Agatha whisper.

Crompton whispered a vivid description of the stage setting and the costumes. The woman beside him listened attentively, and as he finished she sighed contentedly.

"Thank you, dear," she said. "I can see it myself now."

Crompton wiped his brow. The test had come, and he had passed it creditably. He felt a sense of elation. Whatever this strange situation meant he would see it to the end. The absurdity of the whole affair appealed to him. He would play the game out.

It was evident that the note had not reached Armstrong at his club, for, despite Crompton's qualms in that direction, the original "favorite nephew" failed to appear.

Crompton found himself enjoying the unique adventure wonderfully. Between the acts he chatted with Aunt Agatha. He found good need for a ready wit, for that lady had a way of asking personal questions about himself and his trip abroad, which, as he was totally unacquainted with Mr. Armstrong, he found quite impossible to answer. Therefore he parried them. And once, when he found himself in a conversational tangle, Constance came to the rescue and, deftly extricating him, turned the talk to safer subjects.

Why she had not shown him up for an impostor, why she had given him the cue to his identity and why she allowed—nay, even helped—him to pose as Armstrong was quite beyond his comprehension.

At 11 he found himself in the carriage driving uptown with them, Aunt Agatha still chatting with him and Constance sitting silently opposite, her face giving no hint of what was taking place in her mind.

The carriage drew up finally before a comfortable house well uptown, and they entered a quiet drawing room.

"I'm quite tired out," Aunt Agatha said, "so if you'll pardon me, Jack, I'll leave you to Constance. Dine with us Wednesday if you can."

When Aunt Agatha had left on the arm of a maid Crompton rose and picked up his hat.

"I realize it was detestable of me," he said, turning to Constance. He paused. She stood watching him silently. "I—I'm very much alone here. My home is in the west. It savored of adventure, and—well, I succumbed. I confess I found it a diversion—a very charming diversion—and more," he added, looking quickly at her. "Perhaps I'd better not intrude further," he said quietly, taking a step toward the door. "I wish I might ask your forgiveness, but I don't deserve it."

"I was quite sure of you from the first," she said. "I knew you would neither take advantage of the situation nor ask questions. I—I don't know what you will think of me, but I shall make a confession. Aunt Agatha is a dear, persistent old matchmaker. Jack Armstrong is a nephew on her husband's side of the house. I've been thrown at his head all my days. I wanted to be free from him this evening at any cost."

She flushed as too late she realized the full import of her words.

"I trust the cost hasn't been too dear," Crompton said.

"Oh, I beg your pardon"— she began.

"Believe me," Crompton said quickly, "I am glad to serve you in any way—even in this humble capacity."

His hand was on the door.

"Perhaps," she said lightly, "you might like to meet your original. Mr. Armstrong will be here Wednesday evening."

"Will he be here Thursday?" Crompton asked.

"No," she said.

"Might I dare intrude again, then?" he ventured.

She looked at him, and her eyes fell before his eager glance.

"It won't be an intrusion," she said gently.

When Crompton reached the sidewalk he drew a small bit of cardboard from his pocket and pressed it to his lips. It read, "H 21, Left."

Song of the Ancient Spinning Reel.

The first reel that was invented was the hand reel, the yarn being wound into skeins by turning the wheel and fastening the skeins after counting a sufficient number of strands. The flax was first woven into thread, or yarn, on the spinning wheel; then the bobbins, full of yarn, were placed on the hand reel and yarn wound off them on to the wheel into skeins. The strands were carefully counted and the lieben fastened on them to keep them together. The lieben was a thread running across the skeins to keep them in place.

A later invention was the clock reel, with a face on which numbers were printed, and it had two hands, like a clock. When the wheel was turned, reeling off the strands from the bobbin, the clock would tick when a certain number of strands were wound on the reel, and the housewife instead of tediously counting the threads, as on the earlier invented reel, would fasten on the lieben.

In a quaint old ballad entitled "Mistress Polly at the Reel" occurs this refrain:

He kissed Mistress Polly as the clock reel ticked, the kissing being done at the propitious moment when Mistress Polly was busy fastening on the lieben.

Why He Wouldn't Sell.

He was the gray haired proprietor of a country store, "the village emporium," he called it, though it was weatherboarded and whitewashed and "hiproofed." Summer sojourners said they could never find anything there that they wanted, but the proprietor's chief pride was that he was quite "out" of anything. His method of keeping up his reputation in this line as discovered by an importunate sojourner was, to say the least, original. It chanced that this sojourner wanted a pair of hobnails for some impromptu theatricals and wanted them at once. Yes, the proprietor of the "village emporium" had a pair of No. 8's; but, after rummaging among various shelves and boxes: "It's the only pair o' that size I've got, young man, and I don't like to get out o' anything that way. Couldn't ye put off the show tel next week? I'll be goin' tu town then and can lay in another pair or two." Upon being assured that delay was impossible and he could have double the price of the boots if he would only part with them, "It's a temptation," he said, shaking his bushy head, "but a man must stand by his principles, young feller, if he means to make his mark in the world." And the boots were returned to their box.

SELECTIONS

SUGAR FROM SAWDUST.

It Can Be Made, but It Is Hardly Fit For Table Use.

During the middle ages the alchemists, who were the predecessors of the modern men of science, spent much time in making a so called "philosopher's stone" which should transform the baser metals into gold, and even nowadays science still has some problems that are almost as tempting to the imagination and probably quite as unlikely to be realized. To turn ordinary sawdust into table sugar is one of them. The table sugar part of it is generally considered an interesting chimera, but the question of economically reducing sawdust to the different variety known as grape sugar contains possibilities that greatly interest the modern chemist either in the laboratories of commercial plants or in such student workshops as the sugar laboratory of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Grape sugar, which the chemists call dextrose, is an important item in the manufacture of health foods and can be used economically because it develops naturally in a comparatively inexpensive chemical process to which certain grains, chiefly corn, are subjected to produce eventually starch or glucose. As long ago as 1819 a French chemist surprised the French academy by exhibiting a few grains of grape sugar which he had made from old linen, commonly believed to have been his own shirt. Other scientists have shown also that grape sugar could be made from wood, although no one has yet found a way to transform this grape sugar into the more familiar, everyday produce of the cane or sugar beet. Theoretically, therefore, either an old house or an old suit of linen can be turned into this grape sugar provided one would take a great deal of trouble for a very small result.

The reason why sugar can be made from wood or linen is due to the action—which it would require a sugar chemist to explain in detail—of sulphuric acid on the cellulose, or woody fiber, that is found in both wood and linen. Few persons, however, believe that the process will ever be anything more than a scientific curiosity.

Trick Automobilists.

Although trick automobilists can be found in France and England, this country claims the lead. The accomplishment is peculiarly well adapted to American genius. Another reason for the supremacy of Americans is the greater lightness of the American machines, taken as a class, and their extreme sensitiveness and delicacy of control. It is of course possible to do more with a light car than with a heavy French racer. Another condition leading to the development of trick chauffeurs in America is the encouragement given them by the manufacturers, who favor trials of skill because they serve to exhibit machines and demonstrate to possible purchasers the lightness and facility with which automobiles may be controlled.

There are several tricks which may be classed as favorites among chauffeurs. They are all extremely difficult, but the one which more nearly borders on the marvelous is the watch trick. Only the most expert chauffeurs attempt it, as the cost of failure is the cost of a watch. To drive an automobile against an open watch, to back it and expect to stop the heavy machine just in time to spare the watch, seems impossible, but the feat has often been performed.

Cordite Eaters.

Quite an original species of narcomania is noted by the British Medical Journal as having been discovered by Major Jennings, D. S. O., during the recent operations in South Africa. It consists in the eating of cordite, with which the Lee-Metford cartridges are charged. The existence of the vice first became known to Major Jennings from the suggestion of a regimental noncommissioned officer that a certain man had possibly been taking cordite in order to escape service, but in concluding his notes Major Jennings suggests that the effects are so exceedingly unpleasant that none but the most depraved would ordinarily resort to it as a stimulant and that no man could escape service through its means except by the exchange of service for incarceration as a hopeless lunatic or for death by suicide.

Slot Machines In Spain.

Shortly after the Spanish-American war, says the World's Work, among the first American novelties sent to Spain were the nickel in the slot machines, the musical kind. Unluckily the first machines played American airs. They were quickly demolished. When the next lot of machines were imported it was carefully advertised in advance that these contrivances would play Spanish airs only. This was taken as a sort of national compliment, and the American slot machines jumped into sudden favor, especially the gambling varieties, as the Spaniards are very fond of all games of chance. In a place like Malaga there are now more than forty such machines, each earning $3.50 daily on the average.

A Claim Against the Shah.

The French architect Philippe Merlat was commissioned by the shah of Persia to build a pavilion for his majesty on the exposition grounds in 1900, but he has, it is said, never been able to collect a franc in payment. The French courts being unable to aid him, he has appealed to The Hague peace tribunal to help him in obtaining a settlement of his claim.

The Tale of a Cake.

An east end car was loaded down with shoppers, mostly women, for it was in the middle of the afternoon. Conversation was proceeding at a great rate. It was like a pink tea or a session of the sewing circle. But all at once a hush fell over the fair chatterers. A negro had entered, bearing in his arms an immense cake three or four decks high and frosted over from pit to dome, as they say of a theater. There was a profusion of flowers by way of decoration, and delicate traceries of gauzy lace completed the embellishments. The cake was so large that the negro could scarcely carry it.

The cake told the whole story of the wedding, the bridesmaids, the orange flowers, the flower girls and the banquet afterward. Every feminine heart in that street car was a-flutter as its owner gazed speechlessly upon the evidence of a wedding to be.

Finally, when the car stopped to let on another passenger and everything was very still, one lady took courage to ask the negro where the wedding was going to be.

"Whut weddin?" asked the negro, his eyes protruding.

"The wedding that cake is for."

"Dis ain't no weddin cake."

"No?"

"No'm. Dis yere's er cake walk cake."

There was a smile that reached from one end of the car to the other, and very soon conversation was resumed as before.

Smoking Competition.

At a "smoking club" in Thailfingen, southern Germany, a competition was held, the object of which was to smoke a cigar as long as possible without letting it go out. The prize winner smoked his cigar seventy-four and one-half minutes, while none of the other competitors' records was over one hour.

ARE YOU BILIOUS? BLAME THE LIVER.

Scores of the Common Ills of Life Due to Disorders of the Liver are Curable by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

If you are bilious, blame the liver. If your digestion is impaired and you suffer from headache and dizzy spells, blame the liver. If your bowels are irregular, constipation and looseness alternating, blame the liver. If you have pain under the shoulder blades, feelings of fullness after meals, aching limbs, a yellow, muddy complexion, blame the liver.

Torpid, sluggish action of the liver is responsible for all these symptoms and while you have a right to blame the liver, it may be well for you to set about to help the liver out of difficulty.

Though bile, which the healthy liver filters from the blood, is nature's cathartic and is necessary to healthful and regular action of the bowels, it is poison when left in the blood and gives rise to many distressing symptoms. The use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills promptly cures torpid liver and biliousness, and because of their combined action, ensure a thorough cleansing of the system.

There is probably no one organ responsible for so many ills as the liver. Overeating, excessive drinking or irregular meals are very likely to upset the action of the liver, overload the system with bile and bring on biliousness or sick headache. Keep the liver in health by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and you will avoid many of the common ills of life. There will then be no constipation, no stomach troubles, no danger of kidney and urinary derangements.

The position which Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills hold to-day as the leading family medicine is undoubtedly due to the wonderfully prompt action on the liver and their combined effort on the kidneys and bowels. There is no medicine obtainable which is more useful in cases of emergency when the digestive, urinary or excretory systems are deranged than this great prescription of Dr. A. W. Chase. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

We Offer $1,000

For a Disease Germ that Liquozone Can't Kill.

On every bottle of Liquozone we publish an offer of $1,000 for a germ that it cannot kill. We do that to convince you that liquid oxygen does kill germs.

Any drug that kills germs is a poison to you and it cannot be taken internally. Liquozone alone can kill germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. It is the only way known—the only way one can conceive of—to destroy the cause of any germ disease.

Kills With Oxygen.

Liquozone is simply liquid oxygen—no drugs, no alcohol in it. It is the discovery of Pauli, the great German chemist, who spent 20 years on it. His object was to get such an excess of oxygen in staple form into the blood that no germ could live in any membrane or tissue.

Oxygen is life to an animal—the very source of vitality. It is the essential part of air. Its effects are exhilarating, purifying. It is Natures's greatest tonic. But germs are vegetables, and this excess of oxygen—the very life of an animal—is deadly to vegetable matter. Liquozone charges the blood with such an excess of oxygen that no germ can live where that blood goes. We spend 14 days in making each bottle.

for the American rights to Liquozone—the highest price ever paid for similar rights on any scientific discovery. Before making the purchase we tested the product for years through physicians in the most difficult germ diseases. We proved that Liquozone does what nothing else in the world can accomplish, and that the results are unvarying.

A discovery that could command such a price is something you should know, if you need it. We are doing our part by supplying the first bottle free. Will you do your part by requesting it?

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone kills the germs, wherever they are, and the results are inevitable. By destroying the cause of the trouble, it invariably ends the disease, and forever.

WILL SHED LAST DROP OF BLOOD

Manifesto Issued by Colombian Government.

WARNING TO THE U. S

South American Republic Will Not Tolerate the Loss of Panama—Mothers Wives and Daughters Are Ready to Take up Arms.

The New York Tribune publishes this '—The following is a translation in part of a general order issued in Colombia and received here from Barranquilla :

"Chiefs, officials and soldiers of the army in operation on the Atlantic, the Pacific and in the department of Panama : With the luxury of brute force, such as has not been seen until to-day in the annals of history, and using the most cunning means known, the United States government has attempted to take into its hands the dismemberment of our country, disgracing the tri-color flag, which until now we have known how to bear with dignity. In the epoch of the emancipation of America, Colombia gave a proof of an entirety of soul that filled the world with admiration. Venezuela and Ecuador followed, and we were able to help in the formation of Peru and Bolivia. If the forces of the Colombian youth be not sufficient to dominate the colossus of the north before we have disappeared entirely, those who live will have the satisfaction of seeing our mothers, wives and daughters taking up arms and follow the path of duty which we trod. It is preferable to see the Colombian race completely exterminated than to submit ourselves to the political infamy of President Roosevelt. Will is this chief of the American Union proving that he does not know how to interpret the Monroe doctrine, and does not comply with the spirit or the letter of the international treaties, such as that of 1847, in which the United States guaranteed to us that Panama should belong always to Colombia. This whole country has been drenched with the blood of the heroes of our independence. We shall drench it with ours, and show the other peoples of the world an example worthy of imitation. Chiefs, officials and soldiers of the army, we will swear to God and promise the country to defend our rights until we have shed the last drop of our blood. Given in the headquarters in Barranquilla, November 23, 1903, by the general in charge of this great state. (Signed) DANIEL ORTIZ.

OPPOSED TO WASHING.

Prof. Robertson Thinks the Human Body Should Not Be Bathed.

A dispatch from Chicago says :—"When people leave off bathing there will be little or nothing for the doctors to do. Pneumonia, colds, and a hundred other ills result from the foolish habit of washing the body. To bathe is to be dirty, for you thereby make a sewer for the skin. Blood, attracted by the skin, gives up products that should be left to seek a natural outlet, and soils the skin." The foregoing declarations, made by Prof. John Dill Robertson at the annual meeting of the Chicago Eclectric and Surgical Society at the Auditorium, has aroused the interest of members.

Prof. Robertson asserts that the authority that the closing of the pores of the skin would result in death is false. He said that all physiologies that made such an assertion were wrong. The habit of taking "dry" baths was also denounced. The rubbing of a rough towel over the skin, according to Dr. Robertson, removed the natural scales of the skin or the "false skin." This, he said, conduced to the growth of bacteria on the skin.

The doctor concluded with a touching incident of a poor Eskimo brought from Greenland to Boston, who had never been ill in his life. He was given a bath, contracted pneumonia and died in two days.

Fire at Sandringham.

A fire occurred at Sandringham on Dec. 10, and Queen Alexandria and her secretary, Miss Knollys, had narrow escapes. It broke out at 5 o'clock in the morning in Miss Knolly's bedroom, in the chimney flue, where a beam is supposed to have been smouldering for days and spread to the bedroom of the Queen, who was asleep at the time.

She was awakened by Miss Knollys, who raised an alarm, but the fire obtained a good hold of both rooms and considerable damage was done before it was extinguished.

The outbreak caused a great deal of excitement at Sandringham, where a number of guests are staying at present.

"Is the Empire in Danger ?"

The Manchester Courier, referring to the question : "Is the Empire in danger ?" says : "Why disguise from ourselves the fact that in every colony there is not only a free trade party, but a party of disruption, a party of independence in favor of cutting the painter, a party that thinks England and the colonies would be better apart. There is a party for annexation dormant in Canada owing to the awakening of the imperial spirit. But let the tariff question wait much longer and Canada will conclude special commercial treaties with the States.

MORE COMING.

Emigration Prospects for Canada for Coming Season Are Good.

A London cable says : The emigration movement at the present moment is particularly noticeable in the Midland counties. In Yorkshire a number of farmers will come out in April to Manitoba, and arrangements are being made by which another party will leave shortly afterwards. From Wiltshire, Lancashire and various centres in Scotland there will be a big move of people to various parts of Canada. In addition to farmers with means, agricultural and other laborers, mechanics and artisans will seek homes in the far west.

These are impelled to leave their native country either because they cannot procure work in England or because they are tempted by the better wages offered in Canada.

A meeting of the British Women's Emigration association was held on Dec. 8 to consider the best means of drafting suitable factory hands to Canada in response to definite offers received from Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton.

The Late Lord Stair.

Lord Stair, the venerable Scottish nobleman, who died last week, was known to a number of people in Canada. Besides being governor of the Bank of Scotland, he had been on several occasions the high commissioner to the Church of Scotland, and chancellor of Glasgow university. He possessed more land than any other Scottish land owner, having 100,000 acres, with 600 tenants. His ancestor, the first earl, attained unenviable notoriety in connection with the Glencoe massacre. The fifth earl was British ambassador to France in the reign of Louis XV., and executed a diplomatic mission with great success. The death of Earl Stair, at Lochnich Castle, near Strathraer, at the age of 84, recalls the grim legend to which was attached the curse which is said to have ever since shadowed the Earl of Stair, till the succession of the one now passed away. The first earl was the leader most responsible for the massacre of Glencoe. He had three stalwart sons. The curse, according to the legend, was that no future earl should have three sons till the sins of the first had been fully expiated, but the old earl in derision tied up certain property so that it could only be inherited by the third son of Earl Stair. There have been nine earls since then and of these one had two sons, one had one son, and the rest, with the exception of the late earl, had no son at all, but he had a fourth. Thus his third son, Col. Dalrymple, came in for the whole of the long tied up fortune, which, of course, had been accumulating in value all these years.

Hot Bath for Typhoid.

A dispatch from London says : At the London hospital there is a little girl with typhoid fever, who is undergoing an unusual method of treatment. For five days past the patient, who is only five years old, has been kept in a bath of hot water. She lies on water pillows and her body is entirely under the water, which is kept at a constant temperature of 101 degrees by an arrangement of hot and cold water entering the mixing cistern, from which it flows into the bath and thence out by a pipe. In the five days the child's temperature has fallen from 105 to 103 degrees, but the crisis has yet to come. At least three weeks must be spent in the bath before the disease can be shaken off. Some years ago at the London hospital, a man was kept immersed for six weeks and recovered.

Horribly Injured.

An extraordinary and horrible accident is reported from St. Francois De Salle, in Terrebonne county, Quebec. An artisan named Ulric Paquet, living at St. Francois De Salle, was working a circular saw when he slipped and the swiftly revolving saw cut his face shear from the forehead to the chin. Dr. J. T. Gauthier, who was called, arranged for the man's removal to Montreal.

When he reached the Notre Dame hospital cerebral matter was beginning to emerge from the skull. The injuries were dressed and in spite of his terrible injuries he is doing well and the doctors hope to save him.

MORE ABOUT CASHEL ESCAPE

Mounted Police on a Hunt Without Scent.

MANY RUMORS AFLOAT

Young Murderer Appears to Have Dropped Entirely out of Sight After Leaving the Barracks All Mounted Police Stations Notified.

Calgary, Dec. 11.—The Mounted police are still without the faintest, slightest clue regarding the whereabouts of Cashel. No one has seen him since he left the guard room at the police barracks. The livery stables have been carefully searched and no horses are missing. No person has reported any lost horses to the Mounted Police or to the local police.

It is now believed that there were two men mixed up in the affair yesterday afternoon. Dr. Sanson was visited by a couple of young men, one claiming that he was afraid of blood-poisoning developing in his arm as the result of a couple of superficial cuts on the fingers of his hand. The young man was very anxious that he should be given bandages for the wounds. While Dr. Sanson thought there was no fear of blood poisoning he gave him the bandages. When through the young man said he was John Cashel. Upon entering the office at first he took off his overcoat, and when the consultation was through, the doctor went to assist the young man on with his overcoat, but Cashel's companion immediately said, "Oh, no, I'll help him on with his coat." It was noticeable too that Cashel did not put his arms through his coat sleeves, but threw it across his shoulders, as if there might have been something in them.

Cashel was known to belong to a gang of young desperadoes in Iowa before he came to Canada, and his career, and the aliases he adopted indicate that his literary favorites were the dime novels. It is supposed that the rescue has been planned and carried out by the members of the gang. In the meantime there is very serious criticism of the police who were on guard. It is believed to be almost incredible that revolvers could be smuggled into the cell or to Cashel unless there was very great carelessness. It is no credit to the police that one man should have been able to hold up three armed men.

W. F. Hersh, who has been held on a charge of bigamy and who occupied the next cell to Cashel, saw the whole thing. He says that the revolvers were absolutely new, and that from one hung the price ticket. Cashel, he declared, was as cool and deliberate as any man could be from the time he pulled out the revolvers until he left the guard room. He had the look of a desperate man and it was believed that he would have had no hesitancy in shooting any of the guards who stood between him and liberty.

When Cashel passed out of the guard room it seemed as if the earth opened up and swallowed him. The night was a bad one with lots of snow, but that did not prevent an active search being made. The police started in search on every side and information was sent at once to the different stations of mounted police, to the railway men on every side and to every one who might assist in the pursuit.

The way that Cashel secured the guns is a mystery which cannot be explained. He was searched at six o'clock on Wednesday night, and so the guns must have been sent in during Thursday. During that time the only man to enter the cell was Rev. Geo. Kirby, Methodist minister here. Cashel's brother was never allowed in the cell, and during the day he came and talked to his brother through the bars. John Cashel assured his brother that a new trial was a certainty. He was sure that it would come out all right, and so assured the prisoner.

There are all manner of rumors in the city. It is said that there were tracks up to the window in the guard room, that there was a horse outside of the guard room already saddled and ready; that Cashel was seen on the street, and that John Cashel drew $12,000 out of the bank yesterday, most of which stories are untrue. All that can be said at present is that the man is away and that the pursuit is an aimless one and entirely without a clue.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"Probably you will stand your future wife in the corner, or make her kneel on pease. I will warn all the girls," said Frau Elsa, with a pout.

He did not hear what she said; he was thinking of Lucie, of the man who had stretched out his hand for her, in order to have a mother for his children, only because she happened to be the sister of his dead wife. Why had he not been able to forgive her, even if he could not forget her?

It was all right as it was — yes, of course. He took up his glass and drank. By that time the others were all laughing and talking again. At the opposite end of the table sat Fraulein Selma, and not far from her his mother. She looked over at him angrily. Fraulein Selma was blushing violently behind her gigantic bouquet, her little partner was talking eagerly to her.

Adler felt a light touch on his shoulder, and a waiter whispered a few words to him. He slowly laid his napkin on the table.

"I must ask you to excuse me," he said.

"Sent for again? Do not take it amiss, but I must say yours is an unenviable profession," cried one of the gentlemen. "Come back soon, doctor?"

He was already out of the door and down the stairs. Old Peter stood there, a lantern in his hand, and his eyes half shut with sleep.

"Mademoiselle begs you will excuse her disturbing you," he began, as Adler let him help him on with his coat. He put on his hat and signed to him to follow. An icy-cold wind was blowing, the numerous little puddles in the badly paved streets were frozen over, the clouds had dispersed, and the stars were now shining brightly.

Mademoiselle came to meet Adler at the door, looking very much disturbed.

"My dear doctor," she cried, "we are in such trouble. Forgive me for disturbing you, and to-night too."

He looked at her questioningly, his face very pale.

"What do you suppose has happened?" she said, in an agitated voice. "At midnight we heard—or rather Minna did—a child crying bitterly, and when she ran in she found a child very ill. I assure you, such a swollen, feverish face"—mademoiselle illustrated this by holding her hands out at each side of her own head—"and, worst of all, Lucie in a dead faint at the side of the stove. She has regained her consciousness, but she sits there by the child's bed as if she were an idiot, and does not move."

He turned and mounted the stairs rapidly, taking two stairs at once. A shaded lamp was burning in Lucie's room, and by the bed, the curtains of which were thrown wide open, sat Lucie as motionless as a wax figure, the half light on her face giving it an unnatural yellowish tint. She stood up as he crossed the threshold, and pointed silently to the bed, then she moved to the head and folded her hands over the carved cherub's head that formed the ornament there. He did not look at the child, only at her. But she did not look up.

They stood so for a time, then he bent down to the feverish child.

"What does she complain of most?" he asked.

"Her throat," was the answer in a very low tone.

She brought a light at his request. He was shocked as he saw the girl in the full light, so changed, so unnatural was the expression of the face that was formerly so soft and full.

"It is a simple sore throat with fever," he said, as he put out the light. "I will send something from the druggist's."

She stood again at the head of the bed in her former place. "Is she very ill?" she asked.

"The child is not, but you are, I fear."

"No," she said, turning away.

"Yes," said he in a decided voice.

She did not answer. She bent her head, and her hands grasped firmly the ornament at the head of the bed, and two large tears ran slowly down her cheeks.

"I have been talking to Kemmert," sounded softly in her ear.

She bowed assent, and bent her head still lower.

"You have undertaken a difficult task, Lucie, too difficult almost for your youth,"

He spoke very slowly, as if hardly able to frame the words. Still she did not move, and it seemed to him it could hardly be she any longer before him, so great was the struggle that seemed by her expression to be going on within her.

"God give you every happiness," he whispered, then turned away quickly. He felt his strength was suddenly giving out. The next moment he was at the door.

A cry sounded through the room—the cry of a soul in agony — the girl had fallen on her knees, her hands clutching wildly at her hair.

"Must I? Must I? I can not do it!"

He was by her in a second, holding her in his arms.

"Go," she said, turning from him. "Oh, go away!"

"Must I go? Must I go now? Speak—why is it impossible for you to do it? Speak, Lucie—it is the least you can do for me; tell me you have not quite forgotten me."

She did not answer, but looked at him in a bewildered manner.

"For all the pain you have caused me, not one kind word, Lucie?"

"Why do you torture me?" she cried, as if just returning to her senses. "I know how wrong I have been. I entreat your pardon for all and if it is any comfort to you know that I am the most wretched and unhappy creature in the world And now go and tell it to your fiancee, and—may you be happy!"

She felt her hands firmly grasped.

"Look at me, Lucie," he said, in a firm voice. "What has put it in your head to speak to me of a fiancee? Do you think it is so easy, then, to forget you—after you, to love another? No, Lucie, I belong to you at this moment as entirely as when you gave me your first kiss; do you remember, in the wood under the beeches? Oh, Lucie, you have much to make up for; will you do it?"

She did not speak a word; but bursting into tears put her arms about his neck and sobbed more violently than ever. It seemed as if she were weeping away all the sorrow from her soul with those tears.

"Neither do it in anger,"

"The fault was partly mine, too," he whispered, at last raising her head and kissing the tears on her lashes and her fair hair. "Mine too, Lucie!"

CHAPTER XXXV.

As he d ended the stairs a few minutes er he found mademoiselle looking ry pale, and waiting anxiously for him at the open door of her room.

"Is it so bad? You were upstairs such an eternity!"

"The child is asleep," he answered. "It is a slight sore throat. You can go up without any anxiety, mademoiselle; indeed, I beg you will. It will do my future wife good to see you. She is very much worn out."

"Comment?" asked the little French woman, and looked at him as if unable to understand him.

He held out his hand to her.

"Lucie is mine again," said he.

"Mais non—I mean—I think—are you engaged?"

"Certainly we are! Good-night, mademoiselle."

He kissed her little plump hand and went out.

The old lady stood a moment quite bewildered, then she mounted the stairs, and went to Lucie's room. The girl was sitting again in the arm-chair by the bed and gazing at the sleeping child; her hands were folded, but on her face was a happy, peaceful expression.

"Lucie! quelle surprise!" cried mademoiselle. "I must be dreaming; how can it be true?"

"Mademoiselle," she whispered, taking the hands of the astonished old lady, "if you want to see a happy, thankful being, look at me—"

"Really, Lucie? Mais je ne comprends pas. Why only now? You could have been as happy as this long ago? What odd creatures you German women are!"

"Oh, mademoiselle, my heart was so weak and sick; have you never heard that sick people see everything differently from well ones?"

"And now the crisis is over?"

Instead of answering, the girl threw her arms round her neck and kissed the good kind face.

"Wonderful," murmured the old lady. "But lie down—he wishes it; you must be fresh for to-morrow morning. If it is not infectious—really not infectious—I will watch the little one."

"Oh, no," Lucie declared. "The sofa is very comfortable; let me, mademoiselle; I have so much to make up for—here too."

Chinese Cities.

What strikes one most in Chinese cities is the density of population on the smallest possible area. The Chinese crowd each other like ants in an ant hill and bees in their hive. Stores and workshops are also eating and sleeping quarters, except in that part of the city inhabited by Caucasians. The dirt and stench are frightful.

Studios That Are Workrooms.

All of the artists' studios in New York have not the magnificent interiors that romance suggests. On the contrary, a great many of the most effective pictures are turned out from rooms that are absolutely destitute of furniture, except for the working tools of the artist himself. Costly draperies, beautiful objects of art, often take the attention of the painter from his work, and there are quite a number of the most successful artists in the city whose studios are bare and comfortless as far as decorations are concerned. They are regarded by the painter as workrooms pure and simple, and aestheticism is confined to the imagination of the painter himself.

Notice

Notice is hereby given that on the 7th day of December, 1903, the British Columbia Southern Railway company deposited with the District Registrar of the Kootenay Land Registration District at the city of Nelson, British columbia, a Map or Plan and Book of Reference of a proposed branch of the British columbia Southern Railway from a point on the company's main line near mile 238, to a point on Elk River.

The British Columbia Southern Ry. Co Dated this 7th day of December 1903.

IMPERIAL COAL COMPANY.

Will operate Coal Areas on Fording River. Railway to be Built.

Montreal capitalists have organized and incorporated the Imperial Coal and Coke Co., Ltd., with a capital of $4,500,000, to operate large coal areas on Fording river, north of the areas owned and controlled by the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co.

The coal areas controlled by the Imperial Coal Co., Ltd., are situated on Fording river, east and north of the town of Michel. The northern limits of the areas is exactly 40 miles from Michel, and they extend south for over 30 miles to a point seven or eight miles north of Michel. The western bounddaries of the areas are the eastern boundary of lot No. 4588 (theproperty of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Co., Canadian Pacific coal lands and 50,000 acres owned by the Dominion government) and east of the 42 coal locations on Elk River lately acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

Two other adjourning coal areas are held by Fernie companies. One directly north of the Imperial Co's property consists of some 17 claims and the other consisting of 52 claims and fronting for 20 miles on the Elk in a northwesterly direction from the same property, is held by the Elk Coal and Oil Company. There is no doubt that the formation of this company is but the forerunner of other similar movements and that the upper Elk valley is destined to be the scene of immense coal mining operations within a short space of time. The geological formation throughout the entire region is the same and it all is practically a continuation of the seams now so successfully operated by the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company.

The coal seams as shown from outcroppings and from the little development work that has been done number from 13 to 18, with an aggregate thickness varying from 110 to 170 feet. One seam measures 53 feet, which allowing for the 60 degree dip leaves a perpendicular thickness of about 36 feet.

The Fort Steele Prospector published last week the following conclusion of the expert who examined the Fording River locations.

"1st—That the coal embraced in these areas is bituminous and excellent quality for coking purposes.

2nd—That there is not less than 110 feet of coal.

3rd—That there are at least ten seams of workable size, and numerous smaller seams. It is also likely that there are other large seams that will be discovered by thorough prospecting.

4th—That the seams are continuous and extend from north to south for over 25 miles.

5th—That thev are identical with those of the Crow's Nest Coal Co. still further to the south.

6th—That the coal can be cheaply mined by tunnels on the seams running north and south into the different mountains; and that an average of from 1,000 to 1,200 feet of stoping ground can be had above the level of the valleys.

7th.—That there are several hundred million tons of fine coking coal in these areas above the valley or tunnel levels.

8th.—That it is the largest and finest coal property, everything considered, that I have examined or seen and which ought to be very attractive to capital. With railway facilities you will undoubtedly be able to commence shipments on a very extensive scale and market your products with great profit.

We have been informed that it is the intention of the Imperial Coal and Coking Company to commence immediate work towards the development of this property, also the construction of a branch railway, and the building of a larae number of coke ovens."

DEATH OF WM. MERCER

Wm. Mercer died at his residence Coal Creek, on Thursday evening after an illness of ten days due to a combination of pneumonia and pleurisy. His wife left his bed side for a few moments at about five o'clock and returned later to find a corpse. Death had come suddenly from the result of heart failure.

The deceased had been in the district for a couple of years. He worked in the mines as fire boss and his wife keeps a boarding house. He leaves a large family of children.

Mr. Mercer and his family came from Buckhaven, Fife county, Scotland. The funeral will be held tomorrow, a special train leaving town at 1 o'clock. The deceased was a Mason and he will be buried with Masonic honors.

LEAVES FOR TORONTO.

T. R. Stockett Called to Toronto. R. J. Drinnan Acting Manager.

T. R. Stockett leaves to-night for Toronto having been summoned thither by the Board of Directors of the coal company. As no word has yet been received here as to the appointment of a manager it is presumed that this visit may have some bearing upon the subject. Mr. Stockett upon being asked the purpose of his visit stated that this had not been disclosed in the message and that its object was unknown to him. R. G. Drinnan, superintendent at coal creek, will be acting manager during Mr. Stockett's absence.

CAVE-IN AT MICHEL.

Mike Zagary, Timberman, Killed By a Fal Of Rock In Upper No. 8.

A cave-in occurred in the upper level of No. 3 mine, Michel, on Thursday morning at 9;30 by which Mike Zagary, a timberman, was instantly killed.

The investigating committee had reported a defect in the timbering at this part of the entry and Zagary was about to repair the defect when the cave-in occurred burying him under several tons of rock and killing him instantly. It appears that four stringers were to be replaced and instead of starting on the outside stringer he commenced on one of the centre pieces. His body was recovered about two hours later. It was not marked or broken to any great extent.

Mike Zagary was an experienced timberman, and one of the oldest employees of the company. He was an Hungarian and leaves a wife and family in the old country.

Coroner Trites went up to Michel and took the pulminiary steps towards holding an inquest. An adjournment was declared to allow the Inspector of Mines to be present.

KILLED AT WARDNER.

A lamentable accident occurred on the Canadian Pacific railway one and a half miles east of Wardner on Tuesday. The victim was a deaf mute named George Hewlin, a young man of 28, who was well known both in Cranbrook and Wardner. He had lately been employed by the Crows Nest Pass Lumber company.

The hour of the accident was 10:30 a m. Hewlin, at the time, was walking along the track towards Wardner from the east. He was about one half mile distant from the town, when passenger train No. 3 appeared behind him. Engineer Drummond, who was at the throttle, sent out a piercing warning, which Hewlin, being, of course, stone deaf, unheeded. The distance between the train and him was very short and there was no time to shut off steam. The next moment the engine had run Hewlin down, hurling him a distance of twenty yards clear of the track.

The train was brought to a standstill, and Conductor K. McLennan at once ran Hewlin's aid. A cursory examination showed that he had suffered terrible injuries,—two legs broken and his leftarm smashed and his face and head severely cut. He was tenderly placed in the express car. and brought into Cranbrook, where under the personal supervision of Dr. King, (to whom information of the accident had been telegraphed,) he was conveyed in the ambulance to the St. Eugene hospital.

Here a careful examination revealed that a more serious injury to the skull which finally proved fatal, and the unfortunate victim succumbed to his injuries at 11 o'clock Tuesday night. The funeral services were held Thursday from the Maconnell undertaking rooms.—Cranbrook Herald.

DIED OF INFLUENZA.

A. McLellan, of Michel, died at Michel on Christmas day from a severe attack of influenza. The deceased came from Nanaimo last August and has since been working in the Michel mines. He was a married man and his wife arrived only a few days ago to take up house keeping at Michel.

CHRISTMAS AT FERNIE.

Excellent Weather—Splendid Store Displays and a very Merry Christmas all Around.

Exceptionally fine weather favored the Christmas festivities yesterday. The sleighing was good and the livery stables had all their rigs from morning till night the continuous gingle of the joyful bell adding to the associations of the day.

From all appearances the time worn custom of Christmas feastings was well maintained. In nearly every home it was the occasion of a gathering of friends around a well laden table. The different hotels made special efforts to entertain their guests with genuine Christmas cheer. Three special Menus printed at this office will give ample proof of this statement.

THE STORES.

Victoria avenue never looked better than it did on Christmas eve, owing to the best efforts of the merchants to make special displays in keeping with the Christmas season. The Trites-Wood Co. with its beautiful star and crescent window blazing with light was but an index to the decorations all through the large store. The windows of the Crows Nest Trading Co. and C. Richards & Co. on one side contained artistic displays of all the most appetising dainties of the Christmas trade while on the opposite side were beautiful decorations in drapery and dainty dry goods. A. J. Purdy & Co. labelled his large establishment "Santa Claus' headquarters" and the immense stock of Christmas goods inside justified the title. T. [illegible] drug stores also entered into the [illegible] of the season and displayed many fi[illegible]s of fancy goods for children a[illegible]own people. Liphardt's jewelry sto[illegible] a blaze of silverware and cut-glas[illegible] unique locomotive made entirel[illegible] articles in the store attracted muc[illegible] tention at Quail's window. Sheppa[illegible] Elliott had a Christmas tree on the s[illegible] walk, laden with all kinds of tinware reflecting colored lights from many lanterns. P. Burns & co.'s butcher shop showed a magnificent array of meats with appropriate decorations. In fact every store made some preparation for the occasion and all did a big trade.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENTS.

The Methodist Sunday School held its entertainment last night. The church was filled to overflowing and everybody was pleased with the excellent program rendered by the children. Mrs. Robson and Mr. Wilkes deserve special mention for the careful manner in which the children were trained. Rev. Mr. Robson was presented with a gold plated inkstand and Mrs. Robson with a pair of beautiful candle sticks of similar plating. The tree was well laden with gifts for all the children.

That the coming of Santa Claus has lost none of its delight for the children was evidence on Xmas eve at the christ church Sunday School entertainment in Princess hall. The fun commenced at the beginning of the excellent program and there was not a dull minute afterwards. All the children were well cared for and at the close went away feeling that they had had a good time with Santa and the others who had entertained them so well.

Knox church Sunday School holds its annual Xmas entertainment in the church this evening.

MUST STAND HIS TRIAL.

Edward Aho will answer to the Charge of Murdering his companion at the Spring Assizes.

The preliminary trial of Edward Merilla alias Aho for the murder of Andrew Johnson was concluded last Friday evening. The defense did not call Hakola, the interpreter, as was expected by the prosecution but rested its case upon the weakness of the latter.

S. Herchmer in his presentation of the prisoner's case had his argument well in hand and he made the most of his opportunities In going over the evidence of the prosecution witnesses he picked out many apparent flaws and to clinch his argument he quoted precedents to show that where the interpreter is not called to testify to the correctness of the dying declaration the latter cannot be considered as evidence.

Mr. Harvie for the prosecution contended that the simple facts as related by the different witnesses were sufficient to send the accused up for trial even if the dying declaration was thrown out.

Magistrate Armstrong gave his decision on Monday evening. He formed sufficient evidence outside of the dying declaration to send the accused for trial. The witnesses were bound over to give evidence on the case at the spring assizes.

TWO ACCIDENTS.

Andrew Roeser, an employee of the Hayes Lumber Co., Elkmouth, was the victim of a serious accident last week. He kicked at the belt and his foot and leg became tangled up in the pulley when he was extricated it was found that the limb had received frightful injuries. Dr. Corsan who was called to attend the case brought the unfortunate man back with him and he is now in the Fernie hospital. His leg will be saved.

Wm. Beadle, of Wardner, came to town this week with a badly lacerated arm for medical treatment. It appears that in drawing to him a 44-40 rifle the contents were accidently discharged. The bullet entered his arm from the palm and tore its way through the fleshy part of the arm to the elbow where it made its exit. Fortunately the bone was not injured. The wounded arm was dressed by Dr. Corsan and it is doing nicely.

An impressive Christmas eve mass was celebrated at the Roman catholic church on Thursday at midnight.

FATALITY AT COAL CREEK.

A cave-in with fatal results occurred in No. 1 mine, Coal Creek, Tuesday evening at 9 o'clock. The victim of the accident was Stephen Hunter. an Englishman of 30 years of age.

Hunter and his companion Thomas Porter occupied a room in what is known as the first north level. At the time of the cave-in Mr. Porter was working in the cross cut and Mr. Hunter was shaping a piece of timber for another boom stick several paces from the face. The driver was sitting on the other end of the stick to steady it.

Suddenly the roof caved in without giving a moment's warning and buried Hunter under a huge heap of rock, coal and dust. The other two men were also pinioned by the edge of the falling avalanche of rock but they succeeded in extricating themselves without more serious injury than a sprained ankle for Porter.

For several moments the buried man was heard to call for assistance but his cries became less and less distinct. Miners from neighboring working places were soon hard at the work of rescue, the faint hope that the body might be recovered before the last spark of life was extinguished, buoying them up to superhuman effort. After two hours work, with frequent relays, the body was found. It was quite lifeless, Dr. Keith who was present made an examination which revealed no marks or broken bones. He stated that the deceased had died from suffocation. Over 30 carloads of coal and rock were removed as a result of the cave-in.

An inquest into the death of Mr. Hunter was ordered by coroner Forbes. A jury was impanelled and after viewing the body an adjournment was declared until Monday. The funeral took place on Thursday, the Miners' Union attending in a body. They placed a very pretty wreath on his grave.

Stephen Hunter came from Sacrasten, Durham county, England, in April, 1902. He was single and leaves two sisters and two brothers in the Old Country, A cablegram announcing his death has been sent to his friends. The deceased lived at Morrissey most of the time and he is better known at that camp than here.

RECORD BROKEN LAST WEEK.

21,000 Tons of Coal Mined in Six Days.

Last week all previous records were smashed in the output of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company. Not only was the aggregate output of the three collieries larger last week but the record for each colliery was likewise broken. The total output for the week of six days was 21,000 tons.

SOUTH EAST KOOTENAY LICENSES.

(Crowded out Last Week.)

The Board of License commissioners met at Cranbrook on the 15th. W. H. Whimster and J. D. McBride constituted the Board, Mr. Burn not being present All the applications were granted with the following exceptions.

Union Hotel, Fernie; Loop Hotel, Baynes Lake Hotel, and Royal Hotel, Marysville. In these cases the chief license Inspector reported against the granting of these licenses.

Two new new applications were turned down. Matheson, of Cranbrook presented a petition with insufficient names. The Calgary Brewing co. asked for a wholesale license but as it did not possess a B. C. charter legal objection was made. The matter was allowed to stand over till the next meeting.

EXPLOSION SUITS.

Some time ago the judge granted the attorneys for the plaintiffs an order for an examination for discovery of certain witnesses for the defense. This examination came off on Tuesday at the court house before J. F. Armstrong, S, M. : S. S, Taylor and W. R. Ross conducted the examination.

Two witnesses, T. R. Stockett and R G. Drinuan were examined. The examination followed close along the lines of that made at the inquest and before the government commission, and the evidence was merely a repetition of former cross-examinations. It is expected that the suits will be heard in February.

BURROWS WINS FROM MULLIN

Jim Burrows and Barney Mullin fought a ten-round bout last evening. Burrows got the decision in points. The fight was a fast one. Both men slugged hard and Mullin was knocked down several times and Burrows was down to the ninth count in the last round. Mr. Tuttle referred the contest.

MUSTERED OUT

By JAMES NORFLEET

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"Poor old Jim!"

Man after man in the ranks of the three cavalry companies at Fort Concho used the words as he glanced toward a trooper sitting alone on the sunny side of the mess house, gazing away over the undulating country toward the Pecos hills. Private James Bligh—always called Jim except on the muster rolls—had served Uncle Sam for forty long years. No other man could show such a record. He had enlisted at the age of twenty-two, and his service had continued without a break. He was without education, inclined to seriousness and solitude, but a man always to be depended upon by his officers. They had the will to advance him, and his record after the first year or two deserved it, but he preferred to remain Private James Bligh.

Forty years in the service, most of that time spent in the frontier forts, had brought stirring adventures and honorable scars to the cavalryman. He had little to say of himself, but the written records of his regiment had done him full justice. Of the thousand men who had come and gone since his enlistment none had a greater number of credit marks for bravery and integrity.

But the day had come at last when it was "poor old Jim!" Private Bligh had become an old man. His hair was turning white, his back bent and rheumatic pains had stiffened his legs. He had not noticed it, his comrades had not seen the signs, his officers had not whispered it to each other. It was only when a new colonel came to the post and set about sprucing up the regiment that the word went round. Jim was to be retired as too old for active service. In such cases the government provides a monthly stipend—about enough to pay for one's bread and butter—but it was felt by all the men that it was like turning a faithful old horse out to become the victim of wolves. There was an examining board, with a report from the regimental surgeon, and it was settled that Jim should be mustered out of service. They tried to let him down easy by referring to his honorable record and issuing an order to be read on parade, but they simply broke the old man's heart.

"It may be that I have become an old man," he said to Sergeant Dalton as the latter tried to cheer him up, "but I hadn't realized it. No one has seen me shirk my duties on account of my years. I haven't attended sick call in two years. When we were out after the Utes last fall didn't I take the hardships with the best of them?"

"Aye, comrade, you did. If you did not know your age to a day I'd deny that you was over forty."

"It's no use, sergeant. I'm sixty-two right enough, and it's time I was turned adrift. I did think to die in the service, but they won't let me."

The papers had gone to Washington for final action, and while Private Bligh waited for his discharge he was excused from duty. It thus came about that he rode over toward the Pecos hills one day by himself in search of mineral specimens for the regimental museum. There was peace in the land—peace to be broken by the Indians at a moment's notice—and he went armed. An hour after his departure the colonel's daughter, escorted by Lieutenant Graham, took the same route for a morning gallop. They rode straight away for ten miles, and they passed the soldier without seeing him, although he saw them as he prospected among the rocks. He had secured half a dozen specimens when he gave up the work and sat down in the sunshine with his chin in his hands to ponder. The bitterness could not pass from his heart. Old men were useless in the army, especially on the frontier, but to be forced out after forty years of service seemed rank injustice. Why hadn't they waited a bit longer? The restless, treacherous Utes would revolt again in a little while, and his command would be called out as a dozen times before. That would give him a chance to die a soldier's death—a last chance. In view of his record they shouldn't have begrudged him that. To be mustered out after forty years of continuous service seemed to him an inglorious thing—to smack almost of disgrace.

An hour passed away as Private Bligh sat thinking, and of a sudden he was aroused from his reverie by the reports of rifles and whoops of exultation from the north. No need for him to stand and listen. The shots and yells came from the Utes, and they would not be shooting and yelling unless on the war path. The lieutenant and the colonel's daughter had ridden to the north and perhaps into an ambush. Fifteen seconds after the first sounds reached his ears Private Jim was in the saddle, and as he rode he unslung his carbine and loosened his revolver in its holster. There came into his eyes the gleam of battle, into his soul a thirst to do or die. His colonel had not given him a chance, but was it to come to him some other way?

There was a hot gallop for a mile, and then Private Jim found the officer and the girl crouched behind a mass of rock and a war party of fifty Utes preparing to rush them. Both horses had been shot down and the officer wounded in the first volley, and the trooper had only come up when the lieutenant was hit again and fell in a heap.

"Up with you, girl!" shouted Private Jim as he bent toward the white faced girl who huddled against the rocks. "The lieutenant is dead, and it's one chance in a thousand that we get out of this. Give me your hand."

He lifted her up and swung her on to the saddle in front of him, and the bullets were cutting the air all about them as they dashed away. In two minutes they were out of range, but another peril confronted them. A dozen Utes had mounted and taken a short cut, and Private Jim looked ahead to find them drawn up across the stage road running between high banks.

"Missy, listen to me," he said to the girl he held in his arms. "I'm an old man. I'm to be mustered out because I'm no good any more. I'm going to charge those redskins full tilt. We may die together. If they kill you and I am spared, I shall carry your dead body home. If they kill me and you are spared, hang to the saddle, and the horse will take you safe in. Just shut your eyes and hang on. We are right upon them now. Whoop, hurrah!"

The Indian ponies were massed, and the Indians were firing at the horse thundering down, but their bullets missed, and he struck the lighter horses to whirl them around or send them rolling. It was a smash, crash, yell, whoop, and horse and rider were through. A volley followed them as they continued their flight, and Private Jim reeled in the saddle and groaned. A minute later he said:

"Missy, listen again. I've got my death wound. I'm mustered out of service, and it's the way I hoped and prayed for. I've lived like a soldier, and I wanted to die like one. I'll be out of the saddle in a minute more, but you hang tight, and you'll be taken safe in. Remember—remember to hang tight, and I had got too old for the service, and I'm mustered out—mustered out"—

And the men who rode out and found the body with the two bullet holes in the back and a grim smile on the face with its wrinkles of age removed their hats and whispered to each other:

"Poor Jim! Poor old Jim!"

Bidding In a Bride.

While some furniture was being sold at auction at Orkellyunga, in Sweden, a curious incident occurred. A young girl pushed her way through the crowd until she was quite close to the auctioneer—so close, indeed, that she somewhat impeded him when he desired to make effective gestures. Being a man of humor, he resolved to get rid of her in a novel manner, and therefore, taking her by the arm, he shouted: "Here now is an excellent bargain! A young girl, aged nineteen, very pretty and well educated! What am I offered? Come, we'll start it at 3,000 crowns!" At once there was brisk bidding, which continued until an elderly bachelor farmer offered 10,000 crowns. The auctioneer tried to get a higher bidder than this, but failed, and so he declared the farmer to be the purchaser of the girl. All those present thought that it was a good joke, but it was more than that, for a few days later the farmer and the girl were married in the presence of the mayor, and before the ceremony the farmer presented the young woman, an orphan, with 10,000 crowns, the exact amount which he was willing to pay for her at auction.

Why We Laugh.

Laughter seems to be a specialized form of either the scream of a startled or injured animal or the cry of triumph common to many beasts of prey. In children the cry of terror and the shout of laughter often shade into each other, and the young child escaping from pursuit will scream with laughter or fear, according to his chances of escape.

Some unexpected event that causes slight alarm short of actual terror is the commonest cause of children's laughter, but in adults some sudden event that gives a sensation of triumph over others has much more influence. Really clever jokes seldom cause laughter, and it has been pointed out that a man chasing his hat will produce laughter far more hearty in character than the best efforts of the cleverest wit. The sight of ill fortune in another causes by contrast a feeling of triumph in ourselves.

The ticklish parts of the body are for the most part the sites of important blood vessels, and the laughter produced in children by "tickling" is even more closely allied to the cry of pain.

TABITHA'S FALL FROM THE HEIGHTS

By ELLIOT WALKER

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"It seems to me, Tabitha, that sometimes you think I don't know anything," observed Peter in a tone of rueful impatience as he stood just inside the kitchen door. His hand held it sufficiently ajar to admit a draft of icy air which circulated freezingly about Miss Groot's well developed shoulders as she kneaded her dough in the bread pan with sounding thumps.

"Observin' man!" responded the lady. "At certain periods, Pete, I have discerned faint glimmerin's of intelligence under that shock of tow coverin' what in most folks is considered a brain cavity, but not often—not often. Boo! What's open?"

She wheeled her plump figure with an emphatic movement and transfixed the thoughtless Peter with a glare of disapproval.

Tabitha was a student, not in the ordinary sense, but of the rare variety which assiduously seeks for an enlargement of knowledge, her special ambition being the acquisition of language. Unhappily, or perhaps otherwise, her opportunities were limited. The Bunfield Gazette was her principal source of material and, coming regularly once a week, supplied an effective course of general information.

In this sheet of wisdom Tabitha delved for words of ambitious length. These nuggets after proper mental assimilation were applied to Peter as a test. If he endured them without wincing and with some degree of comprehension Miss Groot felt secure in broader paths. Peter had served time at the district school in the heyday of early youth and was therefore a fit subject. Being consumed with admiration for Tabitha's qualities, physical as well as mental, he was also a willing one.

Now he stood with a ready finger on the door latch, for Miss Groot could propel dough balls unerringly when aroused, and eyed her with an expression of sheepish pacification.

"Come in or go out!" cried Tabitha in high wrath, forgetting her scholarship. "Here'm I, all het up workin', an' you tryin' to fix consumption on to me. Shet that door one way or t'other."

"It's worth while gettin' you mad to have you talk like a human bein'," grinned the culprit, with a horrible absence of tact. "My head aches yet from the dose you gin me last night. Folks will be laffin' at you first, you know. Fact is, pa an' ma does now behind your back, an', while I believes in eddication, havin' had some myself, you're slingin' too many long words for a hired gal, if you are the purtiest woman in Pa'tridge Corners. L'arn all you want, Tabitha, but don't shoot 'em around free. You'll hear from it, an'"—

This speech of mingled common sense and unintentional insult and compliment was cut off by a lump of dough striking him squarely in the mouth. He darted out, sputtering.

Tabitha raged across the room and shot the bolt, her round countenance flaming. Then she bit hard on her rosy under lip and sat down to recover, a precept of learning being an attempt at philosophic calm under trying circumstances.

"Let's see," she ruminated. "Go slow, now, Tab. Think. Pete's edgin' up to—to matrimonial overtoors—that's right—correct, I mean. You're assistin' his ma in household duties an' just as good as he is—hired gal!—that was mean. The flesh is willin', but the spirit is weakenin'. I swan—that is, I utterly swear—that I won't give such a fool another thought. 'Twill be a mistake. My ideas is more elevated, an' I'll rise with 'em. Oh, ginger, my bread!"

Miss Groot sighed as culinary operations were resumed. "The farm will come to Peter in the ordinary course of events," she reflected sorrowfully. "It's a good one, an' his pa's failin'; but no; an edified mind has higher aspirations than cows an' pigs, an' I'll be at the head of a woman's college if I keep on. I ain't only nineteen 'an' impressive of bearin', if I do say it. Wonder how I'll look in one of them gowns with a four cornered hat atop of my auburn locks. Imposin' as any of 'em, I guess."

This modest view of the future exalted Tabitha's spirit as she shoved her loaves into the oven.

"Pshaw!" she exclaimed, striking an attitude. "Laugh at me, will they? I'll start the laugh t'other way an' do it today. 'Hitch your wagon to a star,' as Emerson says. He oughter have said 'unite' or 'attach,' but the idea ain't discouragin,' an' I'll pitch right in an' get attention attracted. Then Mis' Shields can look round for other help. Maybe they'll want me in their office right away."

Poor Peter! During the ensuing ten days he was frozen with a succession of refrigerating snubs and acid repulses which cast him into the depths of despondency. Tabitha appeared absorbed in rapt contemplation of affairs beyond the mundane. She was silent, yet expectant, as one waiting for a message of unbounded import. Still he lingered mournfully about the region of Miss Groot's performances, with an eye to lending an assisting hand. It was not desired. Neither was conversation. Peter visibly drooped.

Then came Thursday evening and the Bunneld Gazette. Peter welcomed it and at once repaired to the kitchen and held it out as a peace offering. Perhaps this beloved messenger would produce a beneficent thaw.

The girl's eyes shone, and her cheeks were like peonies. "Look it over," she remarked in a lofty voice. "If you find anything about me read it aloud."

Peter glanced through the pages and started. "Lordy!" he exclaimed. "You have got in the paper!"

"Read it," commanded Miss Groot, sitting up excitedly, "then laugh if you want to."

The young man commenced:

A GENEROUS OFFER.

We are greatly indebted to Miss Tabitha Groot of Partridge Corners [a satisfied smile from that lady] for the extremely kind communication herewith printed at her request. Our readers, we are positive, will appreciate it as a contribution to be valued:

"To the Editor of The Gazette:

"Admired Sir—Eighteen months of perusal of your esteemed publication has endowed me with undoubted qualifications for achievements along educational lines, and I hereby proffer to you the advantages of my services for $10 a week—being now attained to the age of nineteen years, strong, healthy and of commendable appearances—for the furtherance of the interests of your interesting periodical and to enable myself to be elevated to be an inmate of some desirable institution in future where my talents will receive due appreciation.

"Address me in care of Mrs. Timothy Shields, Partridge Corners. I am working for her. Print this, please. With my best respects,

"TABITHA KITTREDGE GROOT."

We deeply deplore our inability to avail ourselves of Miss Groot's courteous proposition and trust our correspondent will pardon us for trifling changes in her letter, made necessary for the enlightenment of our readers. Our sincere advice to this young lady is a decided opinion that she keep right on working for Mrs. Shields of Partridge Corners until time shall bring her a modicum of common sense and some knowledge of English composition, else her "desirable institution" will surely be the poorhouse—

A cry of anguish from Tabitha stopped Peter's labored enunciation. He did not laugh, but sprang from his chair and held the bowed head in his great hands, with his face against her bright hair.

"Never mind, dear," he whispered. "If they don't want you, I do. Look up, Tabitha. Say you will."

The girl, still sobbing, lifted a tear stained face and nodded. Her lover kissed her in rapturous relief. Then Tabitha spoke, and her speech was emphatic. "I'll never look inside that old paper again," she said.

Whistler Was Particular.

I saw that marvelous set of etchings printed. In fact, the bulk of them were printed in my own printing room, a room which I had especially arranged for the master, and it was in this little printing room of mine that Whistler taught me the art of printing from the copper plate. This was my first insight into Whistler as a great master, and one of his characteristics as a great master was that he would have perfection. No matter how small the detail it must be perfect. To begin with, he always insisted upon having old paper upon which to print his etchings and preferably Dutch because of a certain golden tone, unobtainable with new paper, which this particular kind gave to a proof. Many a time Whistler and I have spent weeks in Holland poking about dirty little shops in search of old paper, and sometimes, after having discovered a fine collection of 3,000 or 4,000 sheets, I have seen Whistler literally tremble with excitement and scarcely know how to ask the price for joy. Then again he was very particular as to the choice of oil for mixing with the ink; also with regard to the temperature of the plate, the pressure of the press, the condition of the blankets, and, in fact, everything had to be absolutely right.—Mortimer Menpes in Studio.

The Top Hat.

Tall hats, "pearking up like the spire of a steeple a quarter of a yard above the crowne," as a sixteenth century writer describes them, were known in the time of Elizabeth, and the Puritans affected them until they merged into the old fashioned beaver of our great-grandfathers' days. Top hats of silk appeared first in Florence about 1800, and twenty years later silk hats with felt bodies were introduced into England.

About 1840 the French silk hat was placed on the market and at once adopted in the familiar "chimney pot" shape. There were several varieties of it, such as the Wellington hat, with the yeoman crown; the Anglesea hat, bell shaped at the top, and the D'Orsay hat, with ribbed silk binding and a big bow.

The color also varied. Thus the Earl of Harrington started a craze for green top hats by wearing one in his garden with the idea of not frightening the birds. He also tested his silk hats by standing upon them. The top hat, however, was never so favored by any great personage as to account for its general adoption.—London Answers.

Got His Money's Worth.

A lady palmist was recently prosecuted, and an amusing incident was noted in connection with the case. One of the witnesses called by the police was an individual who did not appear to be overburdened with intelligence. During a smart cross examination defendant's counsel asked him:

"On first going into the room did you pay a shilling fee to the defendant?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"What did she tell you in return for the money?"

"Oh," said the witness, "she towld me lots o' things, some on 'em true, some on 'em half true an' some on 'em lees."

"Now," continued the counsel after the laughter had died away, "this is the point I wish to get at: Was there any attempt at imposition? Did the lady impose upon you at all?"

"Oh, dear, no!" was the response. "I knowed it wor all gammon, so there couldn't be no imposition. Besides, it wor a bad shillin' as I guv her, to start wi'!"—Tit-Bits.

She Didn't Pay.

Not all car conductors are merely hardened ringers in of fares. A poor woman got on a Twenty-third street crosstown car at Fourth avenue, and as it was well under way and she was about to hand her fare to the conductor she asked him if he transferred to Sixth avenue. On being told no, she drew back her 5 cents and asked to be let off.

"I've a long ways to go on Sixth avenue," she said, "and I'd better walk to there and then ride."

The car then had reached Madison avenue.

"Wait till we get across the street," answered the conductor. She waited, and instead of stopping there he let the car go on, past the transfer station and across Broadway to Sixth avenue. There he pulled the bell and looked at her.

"Thank you," she said gratefully.

He had carried her within a block of where she wanted to go and had taken no fare.—New York Telegram.

The Skill of a Mouse.

One day a naturalist lay motionless on a fallen log in the forest and silently watched an animal at play in the grass near by. This was a large, brown backed mouse, a meadow mouse, that had come out from his home under the log and when tired of play had sat up to make his toilet. Using his forepaws as hands, the mouse combed the white fur on his breast and licked himself smooth and sleek. Satisfied at length with his appearance he began to search for food.

He did not have far to go, for a few stalks of wheat grew among the thick weeds near at hand. The mouse was so large that he could probably have bent the stalk down and brought the grain within reach. If not, he could certainly have climbed the stalk. He did not try either of these plans, however, for these were not his ways. Sitting up very straight, he bit through the stalk as high up as he could reach. The weeds were so thick that the straw could not fall its full length, and the freshly cut end settled down upon the ground, with the straw still erect and the grain out of reach. The mouse again bit the straw in two, and again the upper portion settled down. In this way he bit off five lengths of straw before he could bring the grain within reach of his paws. These forepaws were very skillful little hands, and he deftly husked a grain and ate it, sitting erect and holding it to his mouth as naturally as a boy would hold an apple.—Our Animal Friends.

Before long a motor car will be running on the so-called roads in Uganda. Mr. George Wilson, the deputy commissioner of that protectorate, who is on his way back from England to Africa, is taking with him a 25-horse-power motor, which he intends to make use of on his tours of inspection throughout Uganda. There are now nearly 600 miles of roads in that country good enough to run a motor on.

MORE ABOUT CASHEL ESCAPE

Mounted Police on a Hunt Without Scent.

MANY RUMORS AFLOAT

Young Murderer Appears to Have Dropped Entirely out of Sight After Leaving the Barracks—All Mounted Police Stations Notified.

Calgary, Dec. 11.—The Mounted police are still without the faintest, slightest clue regarding the whereabouts of Cashel. No one has seen him since he left the guard room at the police barracks. The livery stables have been carefully searched and no horses are missing. No person has reported any lost horses to the Mounted Police or to the local police.

It is now believed that there were two men mixed up in the affair yesterday afternoon. Dr. Sanson was visited by a couple of young men, one claiming that he was afraid of blood-poisoning developing in his arm as the result of a couple of superficial cuts on the fingers of his hand. The young man was very anxious that he should be given bandages for the wounds. While Dr. Sanson thought there was no fear of blood poisoning he gave him the bandages. When through the young man said he was John Cashel. Upon entering the office at first he took off his overcoat, and when the consultation was through, the doctor went to assist the young man on with his overcoat, but Cashel's companion immediately said, "Oh, no, I'll help him on with his coat." It was noticeable too that Cashel did not put his arms through his coat sleeves, but threw it across his shoulders, as if there might have been something in them.

Cashel was known to belong to a gang of young desperadoes in Iowa before he came to Canada, and his career, and the aliases he adopted indicate that his literary favorites were the dime novels. It is supposed that the rescue has been planned and carried out by the members of the gang. In the meantime there is very serious criticism of the police who were on guard. It is believed to be almost incredible that revolvers could be smuggled into the cell or to Cashel unless there was very great carelessness. It is no credit to the police that one man should have been able to hold up three armed men.

W. F. Hersh, who has been held on a charge of bigamy and who occupied the next cell to Cashel, saw the whole thing. He says that the revolvers were absolutely new, and that from one hung the price ticket. Cashel, he declared, was as cool and deliberate as any man could be from the time he pulled out the revolvers until he left the guard room. He had the look of a desperate man and it was believed that he would have had no hesitancy in shooting any of the guards who stood between him and liberty.

When Cashel passed out of the guard room it seemed as if the earth opened up and swallowed him. The night was a bad one with lots of snow, but that did not prevent an active search being made. The police started in search on every side and information was sent at once to the different stations of mounted police, to the railway men on every side and to every one who might assist in the pursuit.

The way that Cashel secured the guns is a mystery which cannot be explained. He was searched at six o'clock on Wednesday night, and so the guns must have been sent in during Thursday. During that time the only man to enter the cell was Rev. Geo. Kirby, Methodist minister here. Cashel's brother was never allowed in the cell, and during the day he came and talked to his brother through the bars. John Cashel assured his brother that a new trial was a certainty. He was sure that it would come out all right, and so assured the prisoner.

There are all manner of rumors in the city. It is said that there were tracks up to the window in the guard room, that there was a horse outside of the guard room already saddled and ready; that Cashel was seen on the street, and that John Cashel drew $12,000 out of the bank yesterday, most of which stories are untrue. All that can be said at present is that the man is away and that the pursuit is an aimless one and entirely without a clue.

TRIP TO THE NORTH.

A Description of the Country From Athabasca Landing.

The government has received from Supt. Constantine, of the Northwest Mounted police, a report of the journey made by him to the mouth of the Mackenzie river, where he established a post for the preservation of law and order and the collection of customs duties from American whalers or local traders who bring in supplies.

Accompanied by Sergt. Fitzgerald and four constables, the superintendent left Athabasca Landing on June 1 and arrived at Fort McPherson on July 14; the journey of 1,856 miles was accomplished partly by canoe and partly by steamer. Fort MacPherson is on the right bank of the Peel river, 30 miles from its junction with the Mackenzie and 70 miles from the Arctic. The village is made up of Hudson's Bay company's buildings, the residence of Archdeacon MacDonald, the Roman Catholic mission buildings and a few native log huts. A couple of houses were rented for the use of the post. The superintendent does not consider Ft. MacPherson a suitable place for a post, as the whalers have left Herschell island, at the mouth of the Mackenzie and gone to Baillie island, northwest of Cape Bathurst, which is 300 miles east of Herschell. All the police can do is to gather what information they can this winter and make occasional trips to Herschell by boat.

The general character of the country from Athabasca Landing to MacPherson is swampy, with alternate rocky ridges, with muskegs between. The timber is spruce, poplar, black and white birch, willow and alder. The country is full of small lakes, and in a few places there is arable land. North of Athabaska river there is no agricultural land. The fisheries in Great Slave Lake are valuable, the most abundant being white fish, lake trout and pike. The trout grow to a large size, and often reach a weight of 50 pounds. At Vermillion, on the Peace river, the Hudson's Bay company have a flour and saw mill. Mr. Constantine was informed that about 10,000 bushels of wheat would be raised along the Peace river that season, and the company hoped to be able to supply the northern posts with flour grown from wheat raised in that district.

The wood buffalo are not increasing, owing to the depredations of the timber wolf. The concensus of opinion among the whites in the north is that the beaver should be protected, and the superintendent suggests that this be done for five years.

According to the information obtained the liquor obtained by the Esquimaux was the cause of many murders among them, not a season passing without two or three during their drunken bouts. The only way in which the revenue can be protected in those waters is by an armed revenue cutter, with a strong crew. The numbers of the Esquimaux are decreasing very fast.

If the present conditions at Fort MacPherson continue, Supt. Constantine recommends that the detachment now there be placed as follows: One commissioned officer and two constables on the Mackenzie, and two constables at Fort Resolution; also that an additional constable be sent to Fort Chippewyan with an officer, who should be appointed a commissioner of police, thus having the power of a justice of the peace.

THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

Some of the Governors Ask for Expulsion of the Race.

The London Times' Russian correspondents say the St. Petersburg government sent a circular to the governors of the provinces asking for their opinions on the laws relating to the Jews and as to what alterations should be made.

The greater number of the replies are unfavorable to the Jews, some governors even asking that the Jews be expelled from their provinces. A minority of the governors would abrogate all special laws aimed at the Jews. This is the opinion of Prince Urusoff, now governor of Bessarabia, in which the province of Kischeneff is situated. The prince insists that there is no real antagonism in his province between the Jews and Christians. He attributes much of the prevailing prosperity in industry to the Jews. Only, he says, because oppressive laws weigh on them too harshly do some Jews dabble in politics.

A commission has been appointed to deal with the replies and codify the laws relating to the Jews.

An imperial grant in aid of cotton growing in British West Africa will be proposed during the coming session of parliament. HOT ELECTIONS IN ENGLAND

Chamberlain's Fiscal Policy The Main Issue.

TWO SEATS CONTESTED

The Ex-Colonial Secretary Takes a Prominent Part in Two of the Hottest Bye-elections Ever Held in the Old Country—King's Name is Used.

London, Dec. 15.—Few bye-elections of recent years have evoked a tithe of the interest shown in to-day's contents in the Dulwich division of Camberwell and at Lewisham, both represented by Conservatives for many years. F. Rutherford Harris, Conservative, and C. F. G. Masterman, Liberal, are contesting Dulwich, while Major Coates and J. W. Cleland represent the Conservatives and Liberals respectively in the Lewisham contest. The fiscal question has been prominent throughout the campaigns and Joseph Chamberlain intervened with letters in support of the Conservative candidates. The question of the importation of Chinese labor in South Africa has been used by the Liberals at Dulwich as an anti-Harris slogan, while the Conservatives even dragged in the King's name, attaching the words "Edwardus Rex" to posters in such a way as to create the impression that his majesty was a supporter of Mr. Chamberlain's fiscal proposals. The Liberals telegraphed to the king on the subject, and promptly came a reply authorizing the statement that no permission had been given to use the King's name in any way.

Both elections went Chamberlain, a Conservative being elected in each constituency over his Liberal opponent.

In the Dulwich division of Camberwell, F. Rutherford Harris, Conservative, received a majority of 1,437 over C. F. G. Masterman, Liberal. There are 13,188 votes on the list. In the Borough of Lewisham, Major Coates, Conservative, defeated J. W. Cleland, Liberal, by 2,012. There are 11,730 votes on the list. At the general elections of 1900 the former members, John Penn, in Lewisham, and Sir J. Blundell Maple, both Conservatives, were returned unopposed.

CANADA'S NAVY.

Dominion Government Calls for Tenders for Two New Craft.

The Dominion government has decided to call for tenders for two new cruisers, which will be the nucleus of the Canadian navy. One of the cruisers will be for service on the Atlantic coast and the other for the great lakes.

Both cruisers will be modern types and very much swifter than any of the Canadian protection fleet. The cruiser for the Atlantic coast will be 200 feet long and 25 feet deep. It will have armored decks and pom-poms; there will be a search light of 4,000 candle power, and 60 blue jackets on board. The speed will be 17 knots; it will be of 700 tons, and lighted throughout by electricity. She will be capable of 17 knots an hour; Vickers and Maxim, of England, will build the cruiser.

The lake cruiser will be built by the Polsons, of Toronto. She will be 167 feet long, 22 feet deep and 540 tons. There will be a crew of 45 on board, and she will have searchlights, guns, and be lighted throughout by electricity. In fact, both boats will be equal to those of the British navy. They will be ready in about six months.

The minister of marine has made up his mind that he will put down illegal fishing on the lakes as well as on the Atlantic coast. The cruisers of the protection fleet at present are too slow.

A dispatch from St. John's, Nfld., says it is understood that the Canadian government is likely to purchase for a permanent cruiser the New Zealand sealing steamer Neptune, and that another ship is being sought for. Both vessels will be used in enforcing the Canadian laws against American whalers.

Wages to Be Reduced in U. S.

A dispatch from New York says:—The statement is made by a leading official of the United States Steel corporation that beginning Jan. 1, 1904, about ninety per cent. of the employees of the corporation will suffer wage reductions, ranging from 5 to 20 per cent. This reduction will affect about 150,000 men. The remaining 10 per cent. of the employees are working under a wage agreement. The finance committee of the Steel Corporation has, it is understood, under consideration, the dismissal of many high salaried employees, in addition to those already discharged. It was asserted that, barring some unforeseen technicalities, employees of the corporation who participated in the profit plan, will in the coming month receive a $5 dividend on the preferred stock to which they subscribed at $2.50.

The United States senate has endorsed the Cuban Reciprocity bill.

The new Manitoba Agricultural college will be built at Winnipeg.

A. D. Drolles, an Ottawa librarian, has been made a Knight of the Legion of Honor.

A new financial corporation, capitized at $8,000,000, to handle Mackenzie and Mann securities, has been formed.

THE PERSIAN PLAN.

The Shah in the Habit of Sending Poisoned Coffee to His Subjects.

A dispatch from Tokio, Japan, says: Mirza Asghar Khan, the former grand vizier of Persia, has arrived here on his way to the United States. On October 19 a letter was received from some of the Belgian officials employed in the Persian customs finance department, telling an amazing story concerning the removal from office of the grand vizier. It appears that some weeks previously the governor of the Province of Ratch received a golden cup containing coffee, which was poisoned, and which the Shah sends to officials whom he wishes to banish from the world. The governor drank the coffee, and, of course, died. It was discovered later that the golden cup whereupon he was dismissed. Ex-grand vizier was accused of the act, was not sent by the Shah, and the pecting soon to receive the fatal cup in his turn, he asked for and obtained leave to go on a pilgrimage from Teheran, whence he fled to the coast and then sailed for Europe.

A PHENOMENON.

The Sea of Azov Disappearing Vessels Stranded High and Dry.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: The Sea of Azov is disappearing, and remarkable scenes are in course of enaction. At Taganog the waters have receded to such an extent during the past five days that the bed of the sea is visible for a distance of several versts (a verst is 3,500 feet). High winds hurled clouds of sand shoreward, covering the town. Vessels are lying high and dry, and the greatest confusion prevails in the harbor. Work in the factories has been reduced to a minimum on account of the lack of water.

Causes Alarm in the States.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says: "No country is more intensely concerned in the British fiscal controversy than the United States; it is quite plainly revealed now that Mr. Chamberlain has created a powerful impression upon the British electorate and the agitation which he is leading is destined to become more formidable as time advances.

"Anyone who followed the trend of opinion in Canada cannot have escaped the conviction that while there is some division of sentiment and much indecision, there is still an underlying and very powerful current running in favor of Chamberlain's plan. Its most powerful incentive is the belief that under a preferential tariff a great era of prosperity would be opened to Canada through the development of its vast unproductive territory and the increase in its export trade with England. A more serious menace than this to the export trade of the United States it would be difficult to conceive."

A Strange Ruling.

Portland, Ore., Dec. 16.—United States District Judge Bellinger has decided that the killing of a man by a reflex and wholly involuntary action is not a crime, although the accused may at the time have been engaged in an unlawful pursuit. The decision is said to be without parallel. The ruling was made in the case of Frank Winnishut, a "Warm Springs Indian," charged with the murder of an Indian policeman. While being dragged off his horse, Winishut fell, and a knife, which he held in his hand, struck the policeman, inflicting a mortal wound. Judge Bellinger ordered the prisoner discharged.

An Interesting Experiment.

A dispatch from Halifax, says:—The imperial military authorities are to test the utility of box cars fitted with hammocks for the use of transporting troops across the Canadian continent in the case of a declaration of war, and passenger coaches not being available in sufficient numbers. The car will be attached to a military special, which leaves here Tuesday for the west. The train will consist of two tourist sleepers, one dining car, one baggage, one first class sleeper for the officers, one box car and one first class car fitted with hammocks instead of the regular sleeper apartments. The train will run over the I. C. R. to Montreal and be there handed over to the C. P. R.

CHAMBERLAIN NAMES THE MEN

Distinguished Britishers on The Trade Commission.

WILL MEET IN JANUARY

List of Prominent Commercial Men Have Already Accepted Seats on Board of Experts, to Enquire into Condition of British Trade.

It was announced in London on Dec. 17 that the following have already accepted positions on Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's commission of experts, which is to inquire into the condition of British trade and report thereon with the object of drawing up a tariff reform measure:

Chas. Booth, of Liverpool, former president of the Vital Statistics society.

Sir Vincent Caillard, former finance representative of Great Britain in Holland, Belgium, and Constantinople.

Sir Arthur Keen, vice-president of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers.

Alfred Mosely, who has sent two commissions to the United States to inquire into trade and educational conditions in that country.

Sir Andrew Noble, an ordnance expert.

Hon. Chas. A. Parsons, proprietor of large electrical and engineering works.

Sir Walter Pearce, agent-general of Natal.

C. A. Pearson, the well known newspaper proprietor.

Sir Charles Tennant, chairman of the Union Bank of Scotland.

Sir Alfred Jones, president of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce and president of the Liverpool Ship Owners' Association.

A number of members of parliament have also accepted positions on the commission. They include the Right Honorable Henry Chaplin, former president of the Board of Agriculture; Wm. H. Grengell, member of the Thames Conservancy Board; Sir Alexander Henderson, member of the Stock Exchange; Sir Alfred Hickman, member of the council of the Iron and Steel Institute. Other members of the commission are: Chas. Allen, nephew of Sir Henry Bessemer; Richard Burbridge, director of department stores; J. J. Candish, glass manufacturer; W. Mitchell, and others.

The secretary will be Wm. A. Shewins, director of the London School of Economics and Political Science and teacher of modern economic history in the University of London. He will be assisted by a large staff of experts and statisticians. It is intended that the commission shall meet twice a day, commencing about the middle of January.

The Standard (Conservative Free Trade) referring to the list of members of the commission of enquiry, says they could afford to laugh at the personnel, if the whole subject were not so grave. The scheme involves a complete change in constitutional methods and is something like a defiance of the Crown, the Cabinet and the Legislature. It is a bastard referendum, and it is plainly the duty of Mr. Balfour, concludes the Standard, to discountenance such irresponsible dictatorship.

Detection of Crime.

A disptach from Paris says: M. Bertillon, the expert criminologist, has organized a new system for the detection of criminals. Heretofore photos have been employed solely in the search for malefactors; detectives will now be taught to search the physiognomy for three or four striking features, each of which has a mathematical value. Photographs, accompanied by measurements under this new system will, it is claimed, make it practically impossible for well instructed detectives to make any mistake in the classification or detection of criminals. Heretofore the errors made were as high as 70 per cent., while a trial of M. Bertillon's new system has reduced the errors to one per cent.

AUSTRALIAN ELECTIONS

Women Cast Their Ballots for the First Time, and Favor Labor Party.

Advices from Melbourne say: The first of the Commonwealth general elections at which women exercised the right of suffrage was held on Dec. 16, with the result that all political calculations were upset. The struggle was chiefly over the fiscal question. The government party favored protection, and the opposition supported free trade, and the third in importance, the labor party, agreed to sink the question of fiscal differences, with a view to securing the balance of power, which they virtually held in the last parliament. The women voters were excellently organized, and cast a heavy ballot, almost exclusively in support of the labor ticket, regardless of other considerations, the result being that the labor party won many seats, mainly from the protectionists, in districts where the three parties contested.

The new party is constituted as follows: In the senate there are six supporters of the ministry, while the opposition has thirteen members and the labor party seventeen. In the House the ministry has twenty-seven supporters, the opposition twenty-six and the labor party twenty-nine.

Pleased With Canada.

The secretary of the Ottawa board of trade has received a letter from Mr. Kenrie B. Murray, secretary of the London Chamber of Commerce, in which he reviews the recent visit of the delegation to Canada and extends thanks for the entertainment which was accorded them in the capital. The letter goes on to say:—"Besides being extremely impressed by the many illustrations which were constantly before them of the vast resources of the Dominion, the millions of acres of fertile soil calling for cultivation, its mineral wealth and other indications of future increased prosperity, the delegates were agreeably surprised at the magnificence of the public buildings and the thoroughness and enterprise displayed in the laying out and construction of towns. The delegates have frequently remarked on the general stability and breadth apparent everywhere."

Sir Henry Fears Assassination.

A dispatch from Ottawa says Sir Henry Strong, ex-chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, has fears of an attack on his person and has obtained a permit from Magistrate O'Keefe to carry a revolver. Sir Henry went to the police magistrate and stated he had fears of personal attack upon his person. The law provides that anyone showing sufficient cause upon oath to the satisfaction of any justice may be granted permission to carry firearms, provided the justice in question has confidence in the discretion and good character of the applicant for exemption from the law. The certificate of the declaration made by Sir Henry Strong has been returned to the clerk of the peace and shows that it was given on October 13 by George O'Keefe, police magistrate, and is certified to by A. P. Lett, police clerk.

No Dissension in Irish Party.

The organizers of the Irish party are impressed with the necessity of removing the suspicion created in the United States and Canada by the resignation of William O'Brien, and John Redmond accordingly wrote President Finerty, of the United Irish League of America, that there was no dissension in the Irish party. Mr. Redmond says the Land Act probably settle the question for the greater part of Ireland, but the result depends upon the maintenance of a strong organization in Ireland and a united party in parliament to criticize the administration of the act. Home Rule, says Redmond, is the most urgent of the Irish demands. "I honestly believe," he said, "from now on it will be comparatively easy to achieve home rule by taking advantage of the dissensions in the English parties."

A Brutal Officer.

A dispatch from Berlin says. Owing to his mistreatment of soldiers on 1,520 counts, and abuse of authority on 100 counts, a non-commissioned infantry officer, named Franski, of the 83tn infantry has been sentenced to five years' imprisonment and dishonorable discharge from the army by a court-martial at Rendsberg.

The court declared that Franski had displayed the "brutality of an ox-driver," and pronounced his superior officers guilty of negligence in oversight. Franski borrowed sums of money from soldiers habitually and never repaid them, and beat his suborderlies with his fists and with clubs and whips, and spat in the faces of men. Several of the men were very badly maltreated, and one of the members dismissed from the service is disabled.

A PROMISING OUTLOOK

Next year promises to be a lively one for this town and district. Important development work is almost certain to be started in the newly staked coal areas of the Upper Elk Valley. These areas are subdivided into groups and each group is backed by men thoroughly imbued with the richness of their property, considerable effort is being made to bring the properties before the eyes of capital, and there is no doubt that it is only a question of a short time until active operations will be commenced on each group.

Geologists recognize that the area is but a continuation of that owned and worked so successfully by the C. N. P. coal co. at Michel. Not only is the coal found in unlimited quantities, but even the crudest tests have proved that it is of the highest coking quality. This known quality eliminates all doubt as to the successful operation of the properties. Other coal properties of the West have been exploited largely on false representation on this score, but it only requires a camp fire and an old tomato tin filled with slack to convince the most doubtful sceptic of the pure coking qualities of these newly discovered coal seams.

The spur railway spoken of by the Imperial company will doubtless run up the Elk to Swift current before branching off to the East. Advantage can thus be taken of the construction that far to reach the other groups of claims.

Rumors are rife that the Great Northern will extend its branch from Morrissey to Michel during the coming summer. While there is probably nothing authoritative in these reports the wide-spread nature of the rumor together with the reasonableness of such a move augurs fair for its construction in 1904.

These two vital projects together with the progressive program laid out by the C.N.P. coal company and the proposed building of the Kootenay central to the west of us, gives a bright hue to the dawning year.

L. O. L. OFFICERS

The Orangemen, Terrace L. O. L. No. 1713, elected their officers for the ensuing term at their last regular meeting as follows: W. M., Geo. Clapp; D. M., Jas. Kerr; Chap., J. D. McDonald; R. S. & T., Thos. Letcher; F. S., J. Gott; D. S., R. Ferguson; Lec., Jas. Reed; I. G., J. Linch; O. G., Mr. Nash.

Bro. T. Addison, P.M., of Lethbridge L. O. L., was present to install the officers in their respective chairs. Refreshments were then served by Messrs. McEwing & Slinn, after which the Royal Arch degree was conferred on two brothers.

British workmen gave their lives freely to uphold the cause of the empire in South Africa. Undoubtedly the greatest burdens of the Boer war fell upon the wage earners of the British isles, both in respect to the sacrifice of life and taxation necessitated by the enormous cost of the prolonged campaign. Now the South African mine owners declare that it is impossible to work their mines with white labor. They must have a cheap Asiatic labor. This must strike the British laborer as a mighty poor return for his splendid patriotism. It looks as if the mine owners will have trouble in securing all the Chinese labor they want, as the Chinese government declines to allow its subjects to be recuited for work in the South African mines. The South African mine owners are more insatiable in their greed then even such cormorants as Rockefeller and Carneigie. They kicked against contributing a fair share of the cost of a war waged largely in their interests, and now they do not want to premit British laborers to earn a living ways working in their mines. If the British government were to confiscate the mines and operate them as public works it would be no more than just.—Nelson News.

SOCIALISTS IN LINE.

Vancouver, Dec. 21—The socialist party, encouraged by their success as a provincial "balance of power" are preparing to contest all British Columbia constituencies for the commons. James Pritchard, secretary of the miner's union at the time of the Ladysmith strike, has been nominated in Nanaimo, John T. Mortimer will be the candidate here. Other nominations will be made before the holidays.

An interesting case involving some nice legal points was fought out in the police court on Tuesday before L. R. Forbes S. M. Mrs. Lacy, of Gateway, accused her husband of assault, he having forceably ejected her from the Gateway hotel. Herchmer & Herchmer appeared for the defense and Ross & Alexander for the plaintiff. The defense attempted to prove that Mrs. Lacy was a trespasser and that her husband was acting within his rights in ejecting her. The evidence went to show that the couple had not lived together for some time. A few months ago Mrs. Lacy who then had undisputed ownership of the hotel, signed over her right to the property to one of her servants. She did not however hand over the papers. Mr. Lacy claimed a share on account of work done by himself and the new owner appointed him her representative to look after the hotel. The defense claimed that the transfer was legally made, that Mrs. Lacy was a trespasser and the charge of assault was not sustained. The magistrate did not accept this view as no papers were produced to prove the transfer and the license was in the woman's name. The evidence on the assault was itself somewhat weak. The magistrate fined Mr. Lacy $5 and bound him over to keep the peace for one year in the sum of $200.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"I must thank you very much, my dear Frau Adler," said Selma's mamma, who had suddenly become very very wide awake, and was taking off her wraps in the Frau Counselor's room at four that morning—they had just returned from the ball—"very much, for the excellent care you have taken of Selma."

Frau Adler looked at her friend in surprise; she had already been much annoyed at her son's disappearance from the ball. What was this now?

Fraulein Selma was sitting in her tumbled green dress in the corner by the stove, sobbing.

"You may well cry," scolded her mother. "Your father will see to drying your tears, you ungrateful child!"

"I can not help it," sobbed the girl.

"She has engaged herself, Clara," said the angry mother, turning to the speechless Frau Counselor, "engaged herself to that Herr Proviso there. Did you not notice anything? You are generally so observant in those things. And they have actually arranged everything. Oh, and we were thinking she was in such good hands here!"

"Selma," cried Frau Adler, "are you not ashamed of yourself?"

"You ought to have looked after her better," interrupted the mother. "I shall have a fine time of it with my husband. Dress yourself, my child, and pack your things; as soon as it is light we will go home."

"Father might buy him a drug-store," said a tearful voice from behind a lace-trimmed handkerchief.

"Buy him a drug store, as if it were some ginger cakes! What do you know about money? I will tell you how matters are. You have engaged yourself, but as for marrying, you need not think of that, my child."

The little maid-servant brought in coffee; but had to ask her mistress three times for the key of the sugar-box, she stood there so bewildered.

All in vain; all—this thankless girl!

"How did you come to know each other?" demanded her mother. "Speak out!"

"At the Schutzenfest, in the summer."

"Where else?"

"At the circus. I happened to sit near him, and then—I was there with the postmaster's family — and then we — that is, Siesel and her cousin, and he and I rode in the merry-go-round together, and then he escorted me home."

"Very fine; and you allowed that, Clara? Where else did you see each other?"

"In the street and at the drug store."

"Aha! Now I understand why you wanted so much chalk, and cold cream, and soda powders. And when did he offer himself?"

"Long ago—about two months—"

"Disgusting!" said the Frau Counselor, pushing her coffee-cup away. "Selma, you are a deceitful girl. Is that the way you return all my kindness?"

"I am not deceitful!" retorted the girl, half crying. "I never pretended to care for the doctor. If he thought so—"

The Frau Counselor drew herself up to her full height.

"My son?" she asked. "My son? What has my son to do with the matter? You have not imagined that he—? Ridiculous!" And she rustled out of the room majestically in her gray silk, and went into her bedroom. When she came back she had on a dressing-gown, and a smile about her lips, and requested some tea.

As the day began to dawn the little maid brought a letter from the Herr Doctor to the Frau Counselor. The old lady had not retired, as her visitors were about to depart. She was sitting down gazing out into the gray morning light, her heart full of anger and disappointment.

Then came the note. Oh, heavens, what does he want? And what a long note! She found her spectacles, and went to the light and read.

What? Had he done that to her? She stared motionless. Had the world suddenly came to a standstill?

"I hope my mother will endeavor to be as kind as possible to the girl who holds in her hands all the earthly happiness of her son; and she may rest assured that two thankful heart rest assured that two thankful hearts will strive in every way to make the evening of her life bright and happy."

Is it so? "Both—or neither," she read between the lines. Oh, and there were so many rich, pretty girls! She crushed the letter angrily in her hands. Just then her look fell upon a little daguerreotype that hung on the window-frame over her work-table—a curly headed boy in a plaid blouse, with honest loving eyes. That was he as he used to sit in her lap and throw his arms round her neck, and she would think with pleasure of his future. She had had but one thought all these years, and that was to spend the evening of her days in his family, honored and beloved, her advice sought in kitchen, cellar amd nursery.

"My dear mother," she could hear the sound of his voice in those days. He was no longer a child; he had become a man, an upright, honest man, with a strong will of his own; he was her pride, her only child. What words of praise she had heard about him only a few hours before in the ball-room. One thankful mother, whose comfort he had been by a sick bed, had pressed her hand; another, whose husband he had saved, had said to her, "How happy you must be to possess such a son!" And the wife of a nervous invalid had been loud in her praises; not only had he helped the sick body, he had also cheered and quieted the troubled brain. And now she begrudged this son the happiness he longed for.

If it were only some one else! But every right-minded man must choose his wife himself. No, he must have one above reproach.

And then Selma, this— Just then she came in with her mother. How she looked; how thick her complexion, how awkward her figure in the thick cloak, and so discontented! Lucie's graceful, slight figure, her lovely childish face came up before her eyes.

"She is pretty, and refined. Yes—yes—h'm."

"Good-bye, my dear Frau Adler," said the mother. "I can not promise to come back soon. I am too much annoyed with you."

"I want to say something to you," began the Frau Counselor. "Persuade your husband to give in if she really loves the man. A drug store would not be a bad thing; my husband used to say that it was better than a farm. One must give in to their children; when they get an idea in their heads they will carry it through. My Alfred has been for some time secretly engaged to—"

Fraulein Selma stared at the speaker with open mouth.

"To his old love, Lucie. Yes, yes, my child, you did not notice it. If I had not had my head so full of other things I should not have been so blind to what you were doing."

"To Lucie Walter?" stammered the girl.

"Yes; and listen, Frau Mahnert. Lucie has nothing—nothing at all—but Alfred loves her with all his heart, and the two that are to spend their lives together, they ought to have the right to choose. Now be sensible and let the young people have their way, and let us be friends, as we always have been. And come and drink coffee with me when you come to town. Think of how much we have gone through together. When my husband died you sat by me on the sofa and wept with me, and when your eldest son was drowned it was I who performed the sad duty of breaking the news to you. Such—"

Frau Mahnert broke into tears and gave the Frau Counselor her hand. "As God wills," she said, and went out, followed by Selma. The Frau Counselor looked out of the window after them and called out, as they were getting into the carriage:

"Good luck; send me good news soon."

Then she stood before the picture of her son.

"I have never wished to tell an untruth," she said, aloud, "but today—I hope God will forgive me—my son must have an answer good and well; but let me sleep first."

As the clock struck twelve the hall door at the Frau Counselor's opened and she stepped out arrayed in her furs, her Sunday bonnet, and her best black silk, and went along the walk to the Meerfeldt gate. Peter opened it, and showed her in.

Mademoiselle came to meet the old lady in the hall.

"Lucie is upstairs; she is taking care of the child. Will you take the trouble to go upstairs? You will find your son there."

They went upstairs together. Mademoiselle opened a door and let the Frau Counselor enter. Dettchen's voice could be heard.

"I assure you, my children, I will do it with all my heart. I am so happy to be able to help you."

"You jewel of an aunt!" said the doctor.

The Frau Counselor rustled her dress once or twice before the blonde head that was resting on her son's shoulder moved, then an astonished pair of eyes met hers.

"Your mother!"

Lucie retreated hastily, pale from surprise; her lover followed her smiling.

"You—here?" said the girl again. "We were just going to you. I had to wait till Tante Dettchen could take my place by the little one."

She bent over the hand of the grave woman who stood stiff as a statue, and seemed to wonder herself why she was here.

"Be good to me again," begged Lucie. "Ach! if you only knew how I have tormented myself about him."

The Frau Counselor looked at the thin face and pale cheeks; they proved the truth of what the lips said. She was so moved and softened that she could scarcely preserve her composure; but she would not show her feelings. She bravely swallowed down her inclination to sob, and kissed Lucie on the forehead.

"Let us forget it all," she said, and gave her hand to her son. "It is good to see one's faults if it is in time to make them good. What is the matter with the child?"

"She has taken cold, and must stay in bed.

"And is her father here too? What recklessness to travel with such a young child at this time of year! Where is he? The men evidently have no idea of how children should be cared for."

Bird Migration.

After years of study devoted to the topic Professor Alfred Newton of Cambridge stated that without doubt bird migration is the greatest mystery in the entire animal kingdom, "a mystery," he added, "that can be no more explained by the modern man of science than by the simple minded savage of antiquity."

Not Just What She Meant.

A little community of colored people in Alabama had raised the money to build a new church, and the dedication was to take place the next day. "Where are you going tomorrow?" the schoolteacher asked one young girl. Smiling radiantly, she answered, "I'ze going to the degradation of our church!"

American Shipbuilding.

At present the total value of contracts under construction at the leading shipyards on the seacoasts of the United States is $111,304,566, representing fourteen yards. Of this total $88,507,566 represents naval work and $22,797,000 merchant marine work.

I WONDER WHY.

I wonder why the world's so bright,
No matter what the weather,
So full of beauty and delight
For us to share together;
I wonder why the sky should be
So deeply blue above you—
Perhaps it's just because, you see,
I love you!

I wonder why my heart should sing
All day a song of gladness,
Why every season should be spring,
No thought of care or sadness;
Why every night the stars should glow
With meanings just above me—
Perhaps it's just because I know
You love me!

STORY OF SIR OLIVER MOWAT.

Curious Question Asked of Him by Talkless Supporter.

A party of newspapermen, who have almost arrived at the veteran stage as political reporters, were yarn-spinning the other evening, when one of them told a story of Sir Oliver Mowat that was new to his hearers.

"It was about ten years ago," said the narrator, "when I was assigned by my news editor to accompany Sir Oliver, who was, of course, Premier, on a short campaigning trip in Eastern Ontario. Sir Oliver made a couple of speeches, after which he and his party took the steamer up the Rideau Lakes. At a village on the route the boat was boarded by a dozen or so of the prominent Liberals of the county, and Sir Oliver greeted them all cordially. They intended to accompany the party fifteen miles to the next stopping place, and then to return on the boat making the down journey. Sir Oliver held a sort of informal reception on the deck. On the outskirts of the little group was a tall, whiskered man, who was introduced as Mr. So-and-So, the vice-president of the local Liberal Association, and, according to report, a free contributor of the sinews of war. But the gentleman, although he had plenty of money, was absolutely incapable of taking part in a conversation. He watched with some envy his friends talking to the Little Premier, and he made the desperate resolve that he would show them that he, too, had some idea of carrying a colloquy. He waited until there was a lull in the talk, and then the travelers heard this amazing enquiry, pitched in a high treble:

"Sir Oliver Mowat, do you know how to make dried-up chewing tobacco fresh again?"

The members of the group looked enquiringly at the Vice-President. The newspapermen grinned cheerfully, but Sir Oliver, although his eyes twinkled, never moved a muscle. Indeed, he replied, as if the question had been an ordinary one:

"I'm afraid that I don't know the process."

The Vice-President had struck oil, he believed. "Why," said he triumphantly, "all you do is to take a news paper, spread it on a table, sprinkle your tobacco with alcohol and water, and in two days your tobacco will be as good as new."

"Indeed! You surprise me," said Sir Oliver suavely. "But why not save the trouble by purchasing fresh tobacco?"

"Oh, but remember the money you save!" returned the Vice-President.

Which closed the conversation. Altogether it was probably the most absurd that Sir Oliver ever took part in. But it happened, all right.

Story of Late Sir Melville Parker

A story told of the late Sir Melville affords good illustration of that bluffness of character which won the hearts of all with whom he came into contact. He held the office of magistrate at the time, and to him came a man who wished to have another arrested for having assaulted him, as he claimed. While in the midst of his tale the other man came in. He came likewise to complain of having been attacked and charged the firstcomer with being the aggressor. Sir Melville listened to both versions of the affair, and this was his judicial pronouncement: "Come out with me, both of you, into the back yard. You can fight it out there. I'll be the umpire." The fight took place. It was a spirited contest, with the victory inclining decisively to one combatant.

This ended the affair, at least so far as the men were concerned. But it cropped up later at a municipal contest, in which Sir Melville was a candidate for election. The story was freely circulated by his opponents and used as an argument that he was unfit for holding office. Sir Melville made no denial in whole or in part. He admitted the truth of the whole matter, but—here he turned the tables—by announcing that the two gladiators were his warmest supporters.

It was a case of the biter being bit, and the engineer hoist with his own petard. The baronet was elected by an overwhelming majority.

Carving 1,000 Years Old Found.

A remarkable piece of antique Indian carving, which must be nearly a thousand years old, was dug up early in November in making an excavation in the centre of Vancouver. The carving is of brown sandstone, and the work must have been done with a sharp piece of flint or slate. It is in two sections, one being a bowl and the other a bear's head. It was found under the decaying stump of an immense cedar tree, and may have been placed there before the tree began to grow and long before Columbus had any thought of discovering America.

She Got a Good Training.

Miss Lena Ashwell, the leading London actress, was the principal guest at the new Vagabond Club, and responding to a toast, said she was surprised to find herself the principal guest of the club, for most of her childhood had been passed in a little wooden house in Canada, where her duties were washing, mending, baking and cooking. Englishmen laughed at the colonial accent, but a colonial would occasionally smile at the accent heard in London.

LOVER'S STRANGE LAWSUIT.

Rejected, He Sued the Father of His Fickle Sweetheart.

In the backwoods of New Brunswick, where hard work is plentiful and money very scarce, the course of true love is often as rough as a corduroy road, and Cupid is inclined to be businesslike. This has recently been well illustrated at Sheffield, where Charles McBeath adopted a most ungallant course toward Sadie Jordan, because, after he had courted her for ever so long and showered her with gifts, she changed her mind and told him that she "had no notion" of marrying him.

Charles was willing to charge up his time to profit and loss, but the memory of the presents was bitter to him, and so he brought suit against Sadie's father, she being under age, to recover the value of said presents. The case was tried before Squire William Harrison, and was heard by the entire population of Sheffield village.

Charles sued to recover on the ground that Sadie had broken her promise to marry him, on the strength of which alleged promise and for no other consideration the presents had been given.

The mercenary lover put in the following bill for things wasted upon Sadie Jordan, who had fooled him:

Sheffield, Sunbury County, N.B.

John Jordan to Charles McBeath, Dr.

To:

One red dress	$ 1.99
One blue dress	2.40
One cape	.60
One pair overshoes	1.35
Another pair overshoes	1.10
Two pairs rubbers at 60c	1.20
One night dress	1.00
One pair kid gloves	1.00
One set pins	.25
One engagement ring	3.00
Three photos	.75
Two handkerchiefs	1.00
One handkerchief	.75
One handkerchief	.10
One collar button	.05
One purse	.25
One second-hand purse	.20
Four cards	.10
Three bottles perfume	.50
Two stickpins	.20
Cash at different times	6.35
Total	$24.14
Cr.
By one pair black gloves	.20
To balance due	$23.94

The jury gave a verdict for plaintiff, allowing the full bill, with costs, and McBeath was for a few minutes jubilent. As he was about to leave the court-room, however, he was arrested by Provincial Constable Warren Day upon a warrant sworn out by Miss Jordan, charging him with assault, and was remanded to await trial.

Abigail Beckner Alive.

A despatch from Petrolia, Nov. 23, says: The school children around this district have suddenly taken an interest in the story of Abigail Becker in their readers. The reason is apparent, for Mrs. Roarer, once Abigail Becker, is visiting in this district, and the teachers have taken the opportunity to teach the children the lesson again.

The story as almost everyone remembers the story told by Commander T. Jones of Abigail Becker, the brave young woman, who, on Nov. 24, 1854, was the means of saving the lives of a crew of seven shipwrecked sailors, from a ship which went ashore off Long Point Island, Lake Erie, on that memorable day. Her husband was away for the day, and while going down to the lake for water Mrs. Becker saw the stranded ship about half a mile from the shore with the seven sailors clinging to the frozen rigging. She knew that they would not last over another night with their limbs and hands in a frozen condition, so she returned to her lonely hut and warmed blankets and made such articles of food which would warm and strengthen the men should she pull them through the thundering surf.

As they began to come ashore one by one dropping off the rigging they found Mrs. Becker up to her neck in the surf waiting to clutch them and drag them to the dry land. After they had all come ashore she took them to the cottage and there nursed them to life again.

Mrs. Becker, of all the gifts that were to be heaped upon her, accepted only a gold medal, which two of the crew sent her. She was offered $5 a day and expenses to go and visit the Queen, but she thought it right to refuse. Shortly after this her husband died and she married Mr. Roarer.

She is seventy-five years of age, and is still strong and in good health. Last Sunday evening she was present at the evening service of the Methodist Church of this city, where she is staying with her sister, Mrs. Deo, the minister seeing her in the audience invited her up to the platform, and she made a few modest remarks, but took no credit for her brave deed of younger days.

Told on Dr. Rainsford.

Dr. Rainsford, who was formerly in Toronto, had a habit at one time of conditioning his actions with the phrase, "Deo volente," or "God willing," or something of the sort. An old woman, the head of an aristocratic family, invited him to dine. "I shall be delighted to accept," he said, "if I can be spared." Perhaps the woman thought she sniffered cant in the terminal phrase, for she said quickly: "Oh, if you're dead, I promise not to expect you."—Christian Register.

Which Was Insulted?

A private of an infantry battalion stationed at Mhow, India, was recently sentenced to 168 hours' hard labor for calling his lance-corporal a "Brodrick." The private, after being sentenced, asked whether he was being punished for insulting the Secretary of State for War or the lance-corporal. The court remained silent. —London Daily Mail.

ALARMING NEWS FROM FAR EAST

War Believed to Be Inevitable in England.

WARSHIPS MOVING EAST

Official England Thinks the Czar Must Accept the Mikado's Demands as the only Means of Averting War—Americans Offer Nurses.

A cable from London, dated Dec. 18, says: Official England to-night is almost a unit convinced there is but one way to avert war between Japan and Russia. This is for the czar to accept the demands of the Mikado, made on the advice of his ministry.

There has been considerable communication during the past twelve hours between the British foreign office and the Japanese legation in London, and the presumption, almost acknowledged in fact in official circles, is that the British government has asked just what the Japanese minister's advices are from his home government as to Japan's position in the present state of negotiations between that nation and Russia.

From reports current to-night it is assumed the Japanese minister has been advised that the relations between his government and Russia have practically reached the breaking point. The result is that the belief has become general that the spark which may strike fire into the inflammable Japanese sentiment is an eventuality to be expected now almost at any time.

The admiralty has agreed with the foreign office in taking a most serious view of the crisis in the far east. It is stated the admiralty has sent secret instructions to the torpedo officers at Portsmouth and Devonport, directing them to hold themselves in readiness for immediate mobilization.

Biserto, Tunis, Dec. 18.—The Russian [illegible] no d here consisiting of a battleship, the armoured cruiser Dmitri Donskoi, of 5,882 tons, the turret ship Oslabya, 12,675 tons, the cruiser Aurora, of 6,630 tons, and five torpedo boats commanded by Admiral Jonas Wirof, will be reinforced in a few days by six torpedo boats and proceed to the far east.

The New York Herald's London correspondent regards war in the far east as practically inevitable. What form Japan's reply to the long delayed Russian note has taken is not known outside the foreign office to which it was communicated, but it is believed that while an opening is left for further negotiations the Russian proposals are rejected as unacceptable.

Our Flour is Best.

Mr. Jardine, the Canadian trade commissioner to South Africa, is now in London and when interviewed said South Africa would soon recover from the effects of the war if the white settlers only worked as hard as the Canadian farmers. Manitoba wheat flour was the best of all in the market, and in spite of all competition Canada was doing a large trade in agricultural implements and carriages. The imperial sentiment was offset by the presence of hundreds of American agents. Cattle disease had prevented Rhodesia from being a splendid agricultural district, but Dr. Koch had been settled there for two years and was trying to eradicate the plague.

A New Flying Machine.

The trial of a flying machine made on Dec. 18, near Kitty Hawk., N.C., by Wilbur and Wright, of Dayton, Ohio, was a complete success. The machine flew twenty-three miles in the face of a wind blowing at the registered velocity of twenty-one miles an hour, and then gracefully to earth at the spot selected by the man in the car as a suitable landing place. The machine has no balloon attachment, but gets its force from propellers worked by a small engine.

GERMAN SCANDAL.

A Story of a Countess Which Recalls the Days of Louis XV.

A dispatch from Berlin says: A certain story has leaked out that would go to prove that the profligacy that was so rampant at the court of Louis the Fifteenth has its counterpart in the present day at the court of Emperor William. For some time past the doings of a certain countess have been creating here a veritable scandal, and that she is under the protection of a number of highly-placed personages has made the scandal all the greater and more talked of. A few years ago a girl of humble origin but beautiful face arrived in Berlin with a view of seeking the stage as a profession.

She took to shadier courses and blossomed forth as a masseuse and soon numbered amongst her clientele leading officers in the army, court officials and prominent men in society. The royal house, it is also reported, were also visitors at her establishment, which rapidly obtained a very evil reputation.

At last the complaints of the more decent-minded people became so incessant that the police were compelled to take action and the woman was arrested. Her highly-placed connections, fearful at the probable exposures, managed to square matters, and the prosecution was dropped. Now comes the most discreditable part of the story.

Having amassed a considerable fortune by her nefarious trade, the masseuse sought to make her position more assured by obtaining a title, which carries great weight in Berlin. She proposed to one of her titled clients that in consideration of her paying him a large sum of money he should marry her, thereby making her a countess, and that after a reasonable time had elapsed a divorce should be obtained. Degrading as the proposition was, it was carried out to the letter; the count took the money, legally gave the woman the coveted title of countess, and the divorce followed in due course. She now carries on her trade as masseuse unmolested by the police, her only clients being noblemen and officers of exalted rank.

Sarcastic Mr. Hays.

London, Dec. 16.—During the visit of General Manager Hayes a year ago the directors of one of the leading railways hastened to Paris to offer Mr. Hayes the general managership of the railway. What is the salary? asked Mr. Hayes. We have been paying £3,000 a year, but we might raise it to £4,000 or £5,000, was the reply. Oh, I see, said Mr. Hayes; you are looking for a good office boy.

Decorating the Teeth.

"It's a curious thing," said the dentist as he caught the end of a nerve on a crochet needle and knotted up a few inches of it in chain stitch, "that, while some people consider gold fillings very disfiguring, more people look upon them as desirable decorations. I have had a great many people come in here and ask me to put gold fillings in perfectly sound front teeth. Of course I wouldn't do it; it wouldn't be professional. A great many colored people want solid gold teeth where there isn't the slightest necessity of having them.

"But the oddest request I've had yet was from a variety actress—vaudeville, I believe you say nowadays—who played here a short time ago. She came in to have a front tooth filled. When I told her that the gold would show a great deal, what on earth do you suppose she asked me? Why, she wanted to know if I couldn't drill the cavity larger and make the filling look not like a mere gold edge, but like the letter 'J.' She told me she was going to marry a man named John, and she thought it would be lovely to have a gold 'J' in her tooth.

"Of course I couldn't do that either. It would not be according to professional ethics. It would be malpractice. But that woman offered me the price of a dozen gold fillings if I'd only make the filling in her tooth look like a 'J.'" —Washington Post.

A Floral Miracle.

"The most magnificent floral effect I ever saw in my life," said Robert N. Wilson of the Morgan line, "was in Texas. They have a flower there called the rainflower, the botanical name of which is the cooperia. It usually blooms three or four days after a rain. I was through the country to look after some land for a friend, and the thing that struck me in that particular locality was the utter barrenness of the whole landscape. There was a low piece of land of ten acres or more that was covered with low, black vines that were decidedly uninviting. Four hours later, after a heavy thunder shower, I passed this piece of land, and it was absolutely covered with what seemed to be the prettiest flowers I had ever seen. It was one enormous bouquet, and the fragrance from it was almost intoxicating.

"I could scarcely believe the evidence of my own eyes, but there it was, what seemed to be an unsightly waste transformed as if by magic into a bower of bloom.

"I made inquiry of the natives and learned that once in a long time the rainflower bloomed in a few hours after a rain, though ordinarily the blossoms did not appear for three or four days and then usually came in the night."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

HOW TO CLEANSE THE SYSTEM—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of scientific study of the effects of extracts of certain roots and herbs upon the digestive organs. MARKET REVIEW

(Compiled from The Commercial).

During the past week interest in the wheat trade has become more keenly centred in the American speculative markets, and the doings in these markets are centred around what the traders see or imagine they see the Armour Company doing. If it is thought that Armour is buying, prices go up. If he leaves it alone, or seems to be selling, prices decline. In these markets there has been an active week's trade, but nervous and uncertain every day. The relative positions of December and May wheat in the Chicago market have undergone quite a change during the week, December being 3c lower and May 1c lower. In other markets both May and December are ½c to ⅝c lower on the week. On the 10th inst., the American government agricultural report for December was issued. It is important as giving the condition and acreage of the growing winter wheat crop in the States on December 1. The condition this year is 86.6 with an acreage of 32,000,000 acres, against a condition of 99.7 at the same date last year and an acreage of 34,000,000 acres. These figures denote a prospective yield of 485,000,000 bushels from next year's winter wheat crop, against a prospective yield of 560,000,000 bushels on December 1st last year. As compared with last year the showing this year is considered to be very bullish, but a great deal depends on the weather in spring and at harvest time. In the meantime, while the crop is nothing like as forward as it was a year ago it is in good condition to stand the winter, the only complaints being that in some parts there is not as much moisture in the ground as is considered requisite for best conditions. The crop has now a fair covering of snow in nearly all districts. The movement of wheat in the States shows a fair increase on the week. The exports also show considerable increase, and for the first time in many months they show this week larger shipments than for corresponding week a year ago. The European situation shows no change. Consumptive requirements over there are liberal, and other countries than America continue to ship liberal supplies to Europe. European markets are dull and steady, and prices without any particular change. There is nothing new to report as to European crops. Harvesting is proceeding in the Argentine and judging by the reports there the weather is inclined to be unsettled and not altogether favorable for harvest work. The crop is grown, however, and unless the weather becomes disastrously unfavorable, very little diminution in quantity may be expected. We have no recent word as to the Australian crop which must be getting well through harvest.

Manitoba wheat has been very dull all the week. While lake navigation did not close altogether till the beginning of this week, there has been no demand for wheat for boats since early last week, and prices have been strictly on winter freight basis. At the close of business Friday prices were ½c under a week ago, but about Wednesday and Thursday the feeling was quite weak and prices were down 1c from a week ago. Most of the trade doing is for immediate delivery but something is also done for May delivery. Prices for December delivery are: No. 1 northern, 77½c; No 2 northern, 74½c; 3 northern, 79½c; No. 4 wheat, 63½c; feed, 51c; feed No 2, 41c; and for May delivery, 1 northern, 82c; 2 northern, 79c; 3 northern, 75c; No. 4 wheat, 67c, all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

More Than He Could Stand.

"What's this?" demanded the police, hurrying to the scene. "A hold up?"

A pale, scholarly looking man in spectacles was standing over a burly ruffian and shaking his slender fist at the prostrate form

"I presume that is what you would term it," he replied. "This fellow stopped me just now and ordered me to hold up my hands. I complied, and he began to search my pockets. 'I will put a bullet through you,' he said, 'if you take them down all during the time I am'— And then I knocked him down. 'All during' is an abominable perversion of correct English that no man can utter in my presence unrebuked."

The Best Remedy for Croup.

(From the Atchison, Kan., Daily Globe.)

This is the season when the woman who knows the best remedies for croup is in demand in every neighborhood. One of the most terrible things in the world is to be awakened in the middle of the night by a whoop from one of the children. The croup remedies are almost as sure to be lost, in case of croup, as a revolver is sure to be lost in case of burglars. There used to be an old fashioned remedy for croup, known as hive syrup, but some modern mothers say that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better and does not cost so much. It causes the patient to "throw up the phlegm" quicker, and gives relief in a shorter time. Give this remedy as soon as the croupy cough appears and it will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

The next meeting of the association takef place on Tuesday when delegates to the Nelson convention will be selected.

THE IMPERIAL COAL CO.

The Montreal Daily Star published some further information in regard to the Imperial Coal Co.

"A Canadian coal mining company of no small importance is new in the process of formation in this city.

The corporation for which a charter has been granted by the Dominion government, is called the Imperial Coal & Coke Co., Ltd. The capital is $4,500,000 and the coal areas purchased are in B.C. in the East Kootenay district.

The property, which is close to that owned by the Crows Nest Pass Coal Co. comprises something over ninety square miles, and coal veins are said to be of immense size, running from 10 to 30 feet in thickness, while in one place the coal outcropping on the mountain side shows a width of 60 feet of pure bituminous.

It is understood that some of the Montreal capitalists interested in the enterprise are at present in the coal trade in this city, and with them are associated New York and Boston men of means. The promoters of the enterprise are Messrs. Frank Thompson & Co., brokers of this city.

Railway facilities to the properties in question will be completed almost immediately. The Great Northern railway and the Canadian Pacific railway are already running lines in the direction of these coal fields, so that there will be no lack of transportation for the shipment of the coal in all directions. The property extends north and south, a distance of some forty miles. The veins are continuous and extend almost the entire distance.

The process of mining will be by tunnelling into the side of the hills and mountains, the coal being sent down in chutes from the mouth of the tunnels into the cars in the valley below. This system will do away with all the expensive hoisting machinery and plant.

The properties were secured by O. Labarg, of British Columbia, who has been in the city for some days, in connection with the matter.

PATTULLO COMMITS SUICIDES.

Toronto, Dec. 29.—Cable advices announce the suicide in London to-day of Andrew Pattullo, liberal member of the legislature for North Oxford, and late editor of the Woodstock Sentinel-Review. Pattullo had recently been addressing meetings in the fiscal campaign but had to cease owing to ill-health. He cut his throat with a razor.

The Strathcona Plaindealer contains an account of a shocking accident to a young man named MacAulay. He was employed in running the engine of a feed crushing machine and his leg became caught in the shaft of the flywheel. In a moment his leg was wound about the cruel shaft crushing it to a jelly. Those working about the mill were Germans, who did not understand how to stop the engine. Some little time elapsed therefore before he could be extricated. MacAuley did not lose consciousness. He limped on one foot to a neighboring house. Owing to insufficient information being given in the message for a doctor the later did not arrive until several hours later, he having driven 15 miles in another direction. The leg was amputated but the unfortunate man died shortly after.

THE MASONIC BALL.

"An unqualified success!" is a general term which expresses the opinions of the many guests who attended the second annual ball and reception of the Fernie Lodge in Princess Hall on New Year's Eve.

Sask. Legislative Assembly Act, 1903, 31 Vict. c. 21

Princess Hall was decorated and ornamented as it has never been before. Hundreds of electric lights were arranged with most artistic skill to make the night as clear as day. They were arranged in swinging loops from alternate corners, twined about columns with holly interspersed, and in numerous signs and mottos with colored effects. Flags, buntings and evergreens were everywhere used with most telling effect, and altogether the large hall presented a fairy like appearance.

Elk River lodge never does anything by halves and it certainly did not omit any expense or effort to make the evening a pleasant one for their many guests. The reception committee consisted of the following: Mesdames Bonnell, Bleasdell, Rennie, L. M. Proctor and Bricker. The committee of lodge members were: Messrs. Bonnell, Turney, Rennie, Bricker, A. E. Kummer, S. Graham, Laidley, T. H. White, Jewell, Hammond, W. W. Brown, Falconer, Bleasdell and W H. Whimster. These with the ladies above mentioned looked carefully after the wants of the guests.

The floor was in the best possible condition and the music supplied by the Fernie Orchestra of six pieces was excellent, being specially prepared for the occasion. The program consisted of 28 numbers with a leap year dance as an extra at 12:01. Other extras and encores were also given.

The supper was served on the platform from 11 to 2 a.m. at the convenience of the guests. The menu contained many daintily prepared dishes in meats and salads and several delicacies including ice cream for dessert. The supper was well arranged in every detail.

Upwards of 150 guests were present. Many of the costumes worn by the ladies were beautiful in the extreme, adding greatly to the charming appearance of the whole scene. Taking it altogether we have no hesitation in saying that never was a more successful social function held in Fernie.

PRESBYTERIAN XMAS TREE.

A very pleasant evening was spent last Saturday in the Presbyterian church on the occasion of the Christmas entertainment. The program which was rendered by the children, was appreciated by the audience, especially two musical selections by the Nicol children. The large tree was unloaded by Santa Claus himself and everyone was remembered by that generous Saint of Christmas Tide.

Mrs. Robt Duthie wishes to thank her many friends who remembered her at Xmas time with so many varied and handsome presents.

The Christmas dinner was largely attended and those present enjoyed a good feast and an intellectual treat. Thanks are due to the many Fernie people who assisted in the programme.

The funeral of the late Mr. Mercer took place on Sunday last. Service was held at the home by Rev. Gordon, of Fernie. The Mason Order was largely in attendance and conducted the burial service over his last resting place. A large following of brother miners attended the funeral. Mr. Mercer was a good neighbor and a congenial friend and his presence will be greatly missed. The sympathies of the community are extended to his bereaved wife and family.

The children's Xmas tree last week was a grand success. The superintendent was taken greatly by surprise when Misses Jessie Dunsmuir and Maggie Mitchell presented him with a handsome portfolio and address accompanying the gift. Mr. Lightley made a few appropriate remarks in reply. Other teachers of the S S. were also remembered. Each scholar with the exception of the Bible class received a Bible from the tree.

C. P. R. OFFICIAL RESIGNS.

Office of Assistant General Manager Vacated by J. W. Leonard.

Montreal. Dec. 26.—Mr. J. W. Leonard who has been assistant general manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway for all lines west of Fort William, with headquarters in Winnipeg, has tendered his resignation with that Company.

Mr. Leonard has been in Montreal for a few days. He had a conference with President Shaughnessy, at which the resignation was tendered and accepted.

Mr. William Whyte, in his capacity of second vice-president and assistant to the president with practical management of the western lines, will assume the duties formerly performed by Mr. Leonard.

ALL CANADIAN RAIL TO YUKON.

The following resolutions on the all-Canadian rail route to the Yukon have been adopted by the Victoria Board of Trade, and distributed through the province for endorsement by other representative bodies.

Whereas, by the decision of the Alaskan Boundary Commission, the title of the United States to the western coast of the continent north of Portland canal has been confirmed, whereby a strip of foreign territory has been interposed between the sea and the Yukon territory and the northern portion of British Columbia;

And whereas, the part of Canada above mentioned contains great natural resources which can only be very imperfectly utilized without railways;

And whereas, it is to the disadvantage of Canada that the business now done and hereafter to be developed, in the part of the Dominion above mentioned, should contribute to the building up of foreign cities;

Therefore, resolved, that this board has learned with great satisfaction that Sir Wilfred Laurier, premier of Canada, has declared in his place in parliament, that it has now become the immediate duty of Canada to provide an all Canadian railway to the Yukon, and most heartily endorse the same;

Further resolved, that in the opinion of this Board such a railway should, in the interests of the northern country, as well as in justice to the coast cities of British Columbia, be constructed from a point on the seaboard of this province with such southern connections and extentions as will provide the shortest and speediest connection with those cities;

And further resolved, that a copy of this resolutions be sent to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Richard McBride:

And further resolved, that a committee of five be appointed to correspond with the Boards of Trade of Vancouver, New Westminster, Nanaimo, Atlin and Dawson, the City Council of Cumberland and with such other public bodies and private individuals as they may deem advisable, with the view of securing their co-operation in giving effect to the object of these resolutions; namely, the immediate construction of an all-Canadian line from the British Columbia seaboard to the Yukon.

Mr. and Mrs. Dobson arrived in Fernie on Sunday morning and have taken up house-keeping. The FREE PRESS joins their many friends in wishing them all kinds of happiness and prosperity

Stomach Troubles.

A disordered stomach may cause no end of trouble. When the stomach fails to perform its functions the bowels become deranged, the liver and kidneys congested, causing numerous diseases, the most fatal of which are painless and therefore the more to be dreaded. The important thing is to restore the stomach and liver to a healthy condition, and for this purpose no better preparation can be used than Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

ASSAULTED THE POLICE

Serious Row at Coke Ovens last Saturday. Slavs Interfere with Italian Workmen. Receive Sentences ranging from One to Six Months.

A row of a serious nature occurred at the coke ovens late Sunday afternoon. The whole police force were required to quell the disturbance and at one time it looked as if the excited Slavs would join in such numbers as to overpower them,

The trouble arose through the action of certain Slav leaders who attempted to prevent the Italians from working at the ovens. The work at the ovens had been going behind owing to the Christmas holidays. They were one or two days overdue, and R. W. coulthard, the boss, had induced the Italians to work on Sunday. The Slavs, who are jealous of their prowess as oven men, would not work and did not want the Italian, to work. They went among the latter, intimidating them, and two brothers, John and Stephen Hotapka assaulted Mr. Coulthard. The latter reported the matter to the police and Messrs. Walker, Henderson, Waaring and Sampson accompanied him back.

The party divided to surrounk the ovens and one half of the party came upon the quarrelsome brothers, who, armed with a long iron rod, resisted arrest. It being Sunday, and taken unawares, the police were unarmed and they were forced to a hand to-hand fight. They soon had the hane-cuffs on the men, and, being joined by the other police, proceeded on their way to the lock-up. When at the north end of the ovens they met a large party of Slavs, who showed an unmistakably ugly disposition and a desire to release their comrades. Three of them, named Martin Hosek, Andrew Hamme and Eben Shivada, attacked the police with that intention, and for a few minutes the police had some warm work on their hands.

These hardy ouen drawers possess wonderful powers of endurance, and the police found that blows which would easily knock out an ordinary man had little effect upon these. With commendable courage and ability the police held their captives and overpowered their new assailants, the most powerful of which, Martin Hosek, was captured and marched off. Later the other two were arrested.

The trial of the five offenders took place on Wednesday and Thursday. John and Stephen Hotapka were sentenced to two months each for assaulting Coulthard and six months each for assaulting the police, making eight months in all. Martin Hosek got three months, Andrew Hamme two months and Eben Shivada one month. They were more or less under the influence at the time of the disturbance.

It is understood that charges of intimidation will be laid against some of these men.

MICHEL NEWS.

Mr. Todd is rapidly completing the stone foundation of the new hotel.

Rev. Marshall delivers his first of eight sermons to the young men Sunday evening.

The Trites-Wood Co. treated all the children in town at their store on New Years Day.

Miss M. Evans, of Lubrick, Alta. spent a few days in town visiting Mrs. R. G. Duggan.

A large number of young people from here attended the dance at Crows Nest New Years' Eve.

Some of the citizens celebrated the coming of 1904 by singing, ringing, and shooting off dynamite.

About eight horses were brought in here from the prairie for the company to be used in the mines.

The mines shut down from three o'clock Thursday till Monyad morning. The outside men were not laid off at all.

The cottage formerly occupied by E. P. Miller is being fitted up for a hospital and will be in running order in a short time.

Guess the Michel boys are out of the hockey league this year and by the looks of things at present they will forget how to skate.

The Ladies of the Methodist choir sent out invitations for a social evening at the church New Years Eve. All spent a pleasant evening waiting for the New Year.

The Methodist Sunday School held its annual tree and entertainment Christmas Eve in the church. An excellent program was rendered by the children, and many received presents off the tree.

LUMBER IN THE KOOTENAYS.

J. R. Martin, government timber inspector, has compiled some interesting facts regarding the lumber industry of the Kootenays. He says:

"The increase in the yearly cut has been very large over 1902, and will be still greater next year, as, pending the alterations referred to many of the plants had to close down during the year just closed.

The total lumber production in southern Kootenay and southern Yale for 1903 is estimated by an eminent authority at 109,000,000 feet, valued at $1,635,000, the average value of the lumber being taken at $15 per 1,000 feet.

The bulk of the cut has gone into the territories, the C.P.R. sending east from 10 to 14 cars daily, with an average of about 12 cars per day. Taking the lower number—10 cars—and referring to rough lumber only, it will be noted that with 10,000 feet to the car, worth $100, the daily export has been 100,000 feet or 3,000,000 feet monthly, with a total of 36,000,000 feet for the year over the C.R. R. alone. In values this would mean $1,000 a day, or $360,000 for the year. These figures alone would, however, be quite misleading, as only the smallest capacity cars are referred to and the figures are only given which apply to rough lumber.

As a matter of fact, the export of lumber of all kinds over the C.P.R. will probably be found to figure around 60,000,000 feet, of the value of between $750,000 and $800,000. In addition to the output hauled by the C.P.R., some lumber has gone into the territories over the American lines, coming in by way of Lethbridge, and the difference between the combined figures and those estimated by by the president of the Associated Boards of Trade already referred to, must be accounted for by home consumption and stock in trade.

The list of sawmill companies operating in East and West Kootenay as far west as the Columbia river, including in addition Rossland and China creek, as given by J. R. Martin, assistant lumber inspector, Nelson, is as follows, each mill is mentioned separately:

C. P. R. TO EXTEND YARDS.

We have learned from excellent authority that the C. P. R. contemplate extending their Fernie yards during the coming summer. The extention will be made on the north end of the present yards, a large slice being added by straightening the mainline. It is said that a mile and a half of new track will be added to the yards. The buildings will be re-arranged to suit the new conditions and doubtless a large up-to-date depot will be erected.

Dislocated her Shoulder.

Mrs. Johanna Soderholm, of Fergus Falls, Minn., fell and dislocated her shoulder. She had a surgeon get it back in place as soon as possible, but it was quite sore and pained her very much. Her son mentioned that he had seen Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised for sprains and soreness, and she asked him to buy her a bottle of it, which he did. It quickly relieved her and enabled her to sleep which she had not done for several days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

BUDGET OF SHORT BRITISH CABLES

Relating Mainly to the Fiscal Controversy.

MR. CHURCHILL SPEAKS

The Newspapers Comment on the Results of the Elections in Australia The Germans are Afraid of Colonial Preferential Tariff.

The London Daily Mail, referring to the Australian elections says the result is a menace to Australia. The Labor party will be ready to sell its vote to the highest bidder and has loaded the country with debt. The Leader's Sydney correspondent says that the federal elections is a blow to Chamberlain. The Chronicle's Melbourne correspondent wires that the election has caused widespread consternation to the Conservative portion of the community. The Melbourne Age, the government organ, declares there will be no peace so long as free traders maintain a vestige of the fiscal flag. J. Watson, a prominent labor leader has denounce-nounced the naval subsidy and speaks in favor of a preference to England.

A prominent German state minister declares that Chamberlain's colonial zollverein will remain a chimera through his losing sight of a common enemy in all Europe, the United States.

Leroy Beaulieu, a member of the French Institute, says that England's colonies talk arrogantly about the mother country while English capital and prestige feeds and maintains them. Their talk about abandoning the motherland is idle nonsense.

Arnold White warns Englishmen that if Chamberlain becomes premier no will in the empire can curb him but King Edward.

John Burns says that the tariff reform commission is a packed jury.

A member of a prominent city firm says that a strong syndicate of German business men has been formed to supply the free trade party with unlimited funds to fight Chamberlain.

Lord George Hamilton informs the Ealing Conservatives that the opposition to protection is too strong for him to support Balfour.

Winston Churchill, in supporting the Liberal candidate for Ludlow, says that protection means a policy of brag and grab.

The Berlin Reichsbote decires that if the other English colonies adopt New Zealand's differential tariff Germany will be shut out of the markets of the world.

R. Nash, of Sydney, Australia, replying to Chamberlain's question how to give the colonies a preference with a tax on foreign goods says it can be accomplished by cheapening the cost of ocean carriage.

The News attacks Arthur Pearson, the chairman of the tariff reform league because his, Pearson's Christmas extra, was printed in Holland.

The Standard says the tariff commission is indecorous, irregular, disrespectful to the sovereign.

WINDFALL FOR VATICAN

The Late Pope Leo Had Large Sums Hidden Away.

According to the Tribuna (Rome) the Vatican had sudden wealth poured into its coffers on Dec. 18. For some time sums which were known to be possessed by the late Pope Leo were looked for without result, the search toward the end becoming feverish.

Cardinal Gotti, prefect of the propaganda, accompanied by one of the late pope's secretaries, drove to the Vatican, and getting out hurriedly began tugging at a heavy object in the cart. Assistance was offered, but it was firmly refused, and the two carried the mysterious object to the apartment of Pope Pius. Intense curiosity was aroused by the action, as it was believed to have some relation to the missing wealth. It soon became known, however, that the bag contained $9,000,000 in bank notes.

When Cardinal Gotti entered the presence of the pope he sank to his knees and pointing to his burden, said: "Your holiness, the lamented Leo just before his death confided to me the money which I now lay at your feet, saying that if I succeeded him to use it as I thought best, but that if another took his place, I was to turn the money over to him after a period of four months had elapsed. This I now do in the presence of Mgr. Marzoleni, who has been the only other person to share the secret." The pope was much affected.

The Tribuna goes on to relate that just about the time this scheme was being enacted in the papal apartments, an electrician, while removing the hangings in the late Pope Leo's chamber in order to get at the electric light wires, found in a hole in the wall several bags, carefully hidden. These bags, when opened, were found to contain $1,850,000 in gold.

NEW TERRITORY.

Newfoundland and Greenland May Be Added to the Dominion.

An Ottawa dispatch says: It is understood, although nothing official can be obtained, that the Dominion government has now under consideration the question of getting Newfoundland and Greenland into Canada. The decision of the Alaska boundary commission, which has given the United States permanent title to a large strip of land on the Pacific coast, which should have been in the possession of Canada has not only set the government thinking, but working. What is intended now is to round off the Dominion as far as it is possible to do so. Some time ago an expedition was sent to Hudson Bay to take possession of whatever belonged to Canada in that direction. Anyone who looks at a map of North America will see that a great part of territory on the Atlantic coast is held by Newfoundland. There is a long fringe on the coast of Labrador, which is also owned by Newfoundland. This, as well as the important position which the ancient colony occupies in the Atlantic, makes it highly desirable that Newfoundland should be brought within confederation. In 1895 Newfoundland applied for admission into the Dominion. The Canadian government made an offer in reply, but the matter was not taken up very seriously and therefore nothing came of the negotiations. Newfoundland was then anxious to come in and the Dominion government of which Sir Mackenzie Bowell was premier at the time were at sixes and sevens and gave the matter lukewarm consideration. Now everything has changed and there should be no serious difficulty in the way of adding another maritime province to the Dominion. It may cost more than it would in 1895, but the general opinion will be that the interests of Canada and the empire require that an effort should be made to bring all parties together with a view of union.

As far as Greenland is concerned the Canadian government will have to negotiate with Denmark through the imperial authorities, with a view of purchasing the island.

If the Canadian government succeeds in getting Newfoundland joined to Canada it will be a step towards securing St. Piere and Miquelon from France, thereby removing the French shore difficulty which has been a source of irritation in the past.

DR. F. L. PATTON.

His Intellectual and Spiritual Awakening Took Place in Canada.

A British subject, an old-time Toronto student, at the head of one of the greatest universities in the United States, was the spectacle presented by Princeton University during the presidency of Dr. Francis L. Patton. For fourteen years Dr. Patton held that distinguished position and by his brilliant gifts added to its distinction. A year of two ago he resigned his office as head of the university, and the other day he was installed as President of the theological seminary, to whose more congenial duties he will now devote himself.

Canadians are interested in the career of President Patton, and for good reason, says The Globe. He is one of the keenest thinkers, one of the most acute dialecticians on this continent, and he is not slow to confess the debt he owes to his academic career in Toronto.

He was born in Bermuda, and came to Toronto when a lad to continue his education. Knox College, then domiciled in the old gubernatorial residence, Elmsley Villa, where Central Presbyterian Church now stands, was the scene of his educational activities. He is remembered by the students of that day as a rare and restless youth, for whom the average professor could do next to nothing. But there was one man on the staff to whom hundreds owed their intellectual awakening—George Paxton Young. He it was who kindled the spiritual flame in the soul of the youth from Bermuda, and to him Dr. Patton still pays the homage of a real scholar to a great master.

Dr. Patton is an expert in philosophy and theology, and has never been for any long time far from the storm-centre of controversy. While yet a young man he led the attack upon the late Professor David Swing of Chicago, which resulted in Dr. Swing's withdrawal from the Presbyterian Church and his career as an independent preacher in the Central Music Hall. There may be, even within the Church, difference of opinion as to the value of Dr. Patton's service to religion or to the Church in that controversy. The conflict was that of the poet and the logician. Swing was a poet, whose creed could not be stated in the exact terms of logical formulations; Patton a logician, whose reasoning moved, as along the cold lines of Bessemer steel, from premise to conclusion. Such types of mind never can agree either as to the exact contents or as to the distinctive emphasis of their creeds.

Since 1881 Dr. Patton's chief work has been done at Princeton either in the university or the theological seminary. He was prominent in the celebrated Briggs controversy which separated Union Seminary, New York, from the Presbyterian Church, and, although the noise of controversy has happily been stilled in the Church of which he is an ornament, Dr. Patton has still a great opportunity for the exercise of his unique gifts in safeguarding evangelical Christianity on the one hand from invertebrate pietism, and on the other from bloodless naturalism. He stands for a definite, robust, positive faith, and in him dogmatic evangelicalism finds one of its chiefest defenders.

"NEVER JOIN US."

The Advice of a Prominent United States Divine to Canada.

Rev. J. A. Rankin, President of the Toronto Methodist Conference, recently said that, in view of recent events, Canada should pause for a while and consider her next steps. After full and mature consideration, the country should press forward undaunted towards the goal her God-inspired ambitions point to.

"I believe," said Mr. Rankin, "that North America will be the stage on which the final scenes in the drama of human life will be enacted. No one can estimate what proportions Canada will assume in years to come. Immigrants are pouring in on us. I hope they will not come too quickly. I believe God has kept locked the doors of this country until we can build up a proper national character. I was in New York recently, and I heard Dr. Tyler preach. After the service I went up and shook hands with the venerable divine. 'Oh, yes, I know Canada,' he exclaimed; 'I know commercial Montreal; Ottawa, the centre of legislation, and literary Toronto. And I advise you, never join us, my brother.' I told him we never would. We have no wish to take over the vast problems the people of the United States must solve, their 10,000,000 of negroes, for instance. Canada has problems of her own, which she should face now. If these problems are not solved now they will have to be a hundred years hence."

Robert Barr Tells It on Himself.

Robert Barr, the Canadian novelist, now living in London, tells a good joke at his own expense. Mr. S. R. Crockett is the subject of it. In Mr. Crockett's earlier years, he visited London, and was invited to lunch by a publisher, "of rather peculiar character," who at times imagined he was very poor, and became stringently economical. In Mr. Crockett's presence the publisher was to suggest the Hotel Cecil as the scene of the lunch, whereupon Mr. Barr was to propose they should go to one of the foreign restaurants in Soho, which would be much cheaper. The plot succeeded, but there is one Soho restaurant which is appallingly expensive, and it was there that Mr. Barr engaged a table. When the publisher saw the bill he turned ashen pale, scribbled on a leaf of his notebook, and passed it under the table to Mr. Barr, rquesting him to "Pass £5 to me under the table, and keep on talking to Crockett so he won't see what you are doing." Mr. Barr happened to have £5, and passed it. He thought at the time it was a good joke on the host, but now he has his "doubts," as the £5 has never been refunded.

STEEL COMMISSION.

Experts Will go to Europe to Study New Processes.

The Dominion government, upon Hon. Clifford Sifton's recommendation, has appointed a commission to go to Europe to inspect the various plants that use the thermo-electric process for the smelting of iron ores and the making of steel. The commission consisted of Dr. Hannel, superintendent of mines, and Mr. C. E. Brown, assistant engineer of the Canadian General Electric company, Peterborough. A steel expert and a draughtsman will be added to the commission, but they will be selected in Europe.

There are five establishments in Europe where pig iron and steel are commercially produced, the firms being Keller, Paris; Harmets, St. Ettienne, France; Heroult, La Praz, France; Capt. Stassano, Turin, Italy; and Bennedicks, Gysinge, Sweden. The electric process is especialily suitable for the production of the different ferros which are used in the manufacture of steel, and such as ferro-chrome, ferro-manganese, ferro-sillicons, ferro-titanium, etc. Capt. Stassano, at Turin, operates for the Italian government.

Ordinarily tool steels are worth from $120 to $240 a ton, self-hardening steels from $1,000 to $1,200 a ton, and high speed steel tools $1,500 a ton. This gives some idea of the enormous profits in connection with the manufacture of special tool steels for which the electric process is especially adapted. The Heroult firm at La Praz has been producing steel by this process on a commercial scale since 1901.

The Canadian commission have been given permission to visit the several factories alluded to, and their tour will probably occupy two months.

COMING IN THE SPRING

Thousands of Yorkshire Farmers Booked to Leave in April.

A London cable says: A party of one thousand farmers will leave Yorkshire for Winnipeg in April to settle in Manitoba. Their wives and families will join them later. This is but one of a half dozen big Canadian emigration movements from different parts of the United Kingdom. Another Yorkshire party is making arrangements to leave for Canada in the spring, and other parties, each running high into the hundreds, will leave Wiltshire, Lancashire and various Scotch centres about the same time.

In addition to the large proportion of farmers and agricultural laborers, the parties will comprise mechanics and artisans who are either unable to obtain work in England or hope for better wages in Canada. Many of them will leave England under the auspices of the Canadian government immigration offices, and in many cases land employment will be found for them by the Canadian government.

Slump in Apples.

The Canadian and United States fruit exporters have lost considerably on the recent shipment of apples to the Old Country and continent, where prices have declined several shillings per barrel. Advices received in Toronto report a partial recovery in Liverpool, prices having advanced three shillings in the last three days. Shippers expect the apple trade on the other side to improve after January 1.

Causes of the slump abroad were primarily the enormous arrivals in Liverpool during the past month, shipments having averaged 200,000 to 240,000 barrels per week for six weeks prior to Dec. 15. A large percentage of these consisted of inferior fruit, and as heavy consignments on the Saxonia were injured by frost, they had to be put on the market so cheaply that good apples were rendered almost unsaleable. Heavy deliveries of oranges in England were another factor in the demoralization of the market.

Arrival of New Duchess.

Edinburgh, Dec. 22.—The Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe arrived at Dunbar to-night and were given a magnificent reception. They were met at the station by the provost and members of the Dunbar town council as well as by the tenants of the Roxburghe estate. The tenants were introduced to the Duchess (formerly Miss May Goelet of New York) by the Duke, who delivered a brief speech.

As soon as the duke and duchess entered their carriages the horses were unhitched and the carriage was drawn by the coast-guardsmen, preceded by pipers, to Broxmouth park, the seat of the Roxburghes, which is two miles distant from Dunbar. The carriage was followed by two hundred by two hundred torch bearers.

The streets of Dunbar were gaily decorated and thousands cheered the duke and duchess as they passed.

There was a grand display of fireworks in Dunbar and the vicinity tonight.

The Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe will remain at Broxmouth park for a fortnight.

Excellent Agents.

A dispatch from London, dated December 22, says: The ss. Bavarian has just landed over 200 prosperous western Canada farmers, who have arrived in England for the purpose of spending Christmas with friends. Before separating, when the boat reached Liverpool, they passed a resolution.

In it they expressed their great satisfaction at their several ventures in the North-West. They also further expressed their determination to do all in their power to urge Englishmen to emigrate to Canada. The party was personally conducted by J. Pearson.

TERRIBLE WRECK IN PENNSYLVANIA

Harrowing Scenes of Death and Destruction.

MANY ROASTED TO DEATH

Duquesne Limited on the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Plunged Into a Pile of Lumber and Rolled Down an Embankment.

With a terrible crash and a grinding noise, the Duquesne Limited, the fastest through passenger from Pittsburg to New York on the Baltimore and Ohio, plunged into a pile of lumber at Laurel Run, two miles west of Dawson, Pa., on the evening of Dec. 23, and it is estimated that fully sixty-five lives were lost and thirty persons were injured.

The train left Pittsburg in charge of Engineer William Thornley of Connellsville. When passing Laurel Run, which is a particularly fine piece of roadway, the train was running at a high rate of speed. Suddenly the passengers were thrown from their seats by the lightning-like application of the air brakes, and a moment later there was a tremendous crash. The train was made up of two baggage, two day coaches, one sleeping and one dining car, and was carrying at the time at the lowest estimate one hundred and fifty passengers.

The train ploughed along for a considerable distance, and the cars were torn to pieces, passengers jumping, screaming and failing from the wreck as it tore along. Suddenly the engine swerved to the left and the coaches plunged down over the embankment to the edge of the Youghiogheny river.

The minute the cars stopped rolling there was a wild scene. Many passengers were pinioned beneath the wreckage, and the screams and cries that rent the air were beyond description. Many were injured in their mad excitement and others plunged into the river. Others, pinioned beneath the heavy timbers, pleaded in agonized tones for release. So terrific was the force of the wreck that nearly every passenger suffered a moment's unconsciousness, and many of the able-bodied men were unable to assist the injured from the wreck on account of having fainted.

The most of the dead were foreigners who were in the smoker just back of the baggage car. They were literally roasted to death, the baggage and smoker telescoping the engine and immediately catching fire. Many of the bodies were burned to a crisp.

A peculiar feature of the accident is the fact that not a woman was seriously injured. The wreck was caused by the breaking of the castings on a car load of bridge timbers, on a west-bound freight train which had passed Laurel Run, not more than fifteen minutes before the ill-fated passenger train.

The wreck occurred on a curve and it was impossible for Engineer Thornley to see far enough ahead to detect the obstruction on the track.

Merging of Many Plants.

A dispatch from New York says: The details of the merger of the American Sheet Steel company and the American Tin Plate company show that the new officers include George G. McMurtry, chairman of the board; William L. Graham, president; F.M. Leeds, first vice-president; Eugene W. Pargny, second vice-president, H. B. Wheeler, secretary and treasurer. The merger will be effected prior to Feb. 1, and the offices will be in Pekin.

By the merger 19 plants of the steel company and 26 plants of the tin plate company are brought under one management. A number of officials of both companies will retire, it is said. The new company will be called the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company of New Jersey.

The poll tax on Chinese goes into effect on Dec. 31 at midnight, and there is a great rush of Chinese into the country to evade the poll tax. Trade and commerce revenues showed that there were 480 arrivals for September, 900 for November, and it is estimated that there will be over 1,000 for December. After that time the full tax of $500 will have to be charged.

Rowland Hunt, Liberal Unionist, and a supporter of Mr. Jos. Chamberlain's fiscal policy, has been elected by a majority of 970, to represent the Ludlow division of Shropshire in the House of Commons, to succeed Mr. Robert J. More (Liberal Unionist), deceased.

At the previously contested election his majority was nearly 4,000. The campaign was fought exclusively on the fiscal question.

Mr. William Whyte has been elected second vice-president of the Canadian Pacific railway, with headquarters at Winnipeg, in charge of the maintenance and operation of the company's lines, and the general administration of the company's affairs in the territory between Lake Superior and the Pacific coast.

Bakers and Food workers in Paris are out on strike.

Three Winnipeg druggists have been fined for selling liquor.

Deputy Minister Smart has returned from the Western States and says that the prospects for next season's immigration are very bright.

REMARKABLE TRIAL.

South African Murderer Daily Visited the Body of His Victim.

One of the most sensational murder trials in the history of South Africa has concluded in a verdict of guilty against an Englishman named Hart, who was charged with the murder of his friend, James Armstrong, in remarkable circumstances.

Armstrong, a native of Monteith, West Perthshire, arrived in South africa early this year, and shortly afterwards mysteriously disappeared. In April his headless body was found on the shore of a lonely lake near Cape Town.

Suspicion fell upon his friend Hart, and at the inquest it came out that he had told his brother that he had been informed by spirits that the body of Armstrong would be discovered near water. Later Hart was seen near the spot walking away with something in his hand, which proved to be a skull. This he threw away, but it was eventually discovered, and it was found that the jaw was broken.

The trial proved a memorable one. The judge and counsel likened the case to that of Eugene Aram. Armstrong's body had lain for months by the shore of the lake, and had been visited daily by Hart.

Counsel quoted the following stanza from "The Dream of Eugene Aram" in reference to this peculiar feature of the case:—

"One stern tyrannic thought that made
All other thoughts its slave;
Stronger and stronger every pulse
Did that temptation crave—
Still urging me to go and see
The dead man in his grave."

The prisoner gave evidence, declaring he was gifted with second sight, and had discovered the body owing to revelation vouchsafed him from Heaven.

The sentence was that he should be detained during His Majesty's pleasure. The case has excited enormous interest, owing to its gruesome features.

INLAND REVENUE.

Oanada's Yearly Bill For Wines, Spirits and Tobacco.

The annual report of the minister of inland revenue for the year ending June 30 last has been issued. The revenue of the department for the year was $19,401,333, an increase of nearly $1,000,000 over last year's figures. The quantity of spirits produced during the year was 4,063,603 proof gallons, compared with 3,234,147 proof gallons last year. There were 49,515,912 pounds Indian corn, 4,435,316 pounds malt, 12,035,017 pounds wheat, 475,602 pounds oats and 1,514,687 gallons molasses used in the production of spirits for the year. There were 168,290,426 cigars consumed, ten millions greater than in the previous year, and 26,653,214 pounds of tobacco, over three millions greater than in 1902. The quantity of tobacco, wine and spirits consumed per head was greater than in the previous year. The quantity of beer was less. The figures were:—.870 spirits, 4.721 beer, .096 wine and 2.404 tobacco in 1902.

Holiday Gifts.

The Crane company, manufacturers of elevators, distributed probably the largest Christmas gift ever made by an American concern to the workers in its employ. The aggregate amounted to $250,000, and was distributed among 5,000 toilers. Included among the recipients were about 500 men and women, not now in the employ of the company, but who were at the beginning of the year and had been laid off for one reason or another. The money was distributed on the ratio of time worked during the year, and averaged about five per cent. of the yearly wage. The amount distributed this year was considerably in excess of that of any previous year, partly because the company has about 1,000 more employees than it had a year ago, and partly because of the unusually prosperous conditions that have prevailed during the year.

Burned to Death.

A three-year-old daughter of Jean Brisson, of St. Magloirre, county of Bellechase, Quebec, was burned to death in a fire which destroyed the parents' home a few days ago. The parents were absent, having left the seven-year-old daughter in charge of four younger than herself. The girl succeeded in getting three children out, but the three-year-old girl became so frightened when she saw the flames that she crawled under the bed for safety, and her sister was unable to rescue her.

German papers report that an "alum mountain" exists in China, which is not only noted as a natural phenomenal but is also a source of wealth for the people in its vicinity, as they annually take many tons of alum from it. The mountain is said to have a circumference at the base of not less than ten miles, and is nearly 1,900 feet high. The alum is quarried in immense blocks, is then heated in large in ovens, and afterwards dissolved in boiling water. From this liquid the alum crystalizes in layers of about half a foot in thickness, which are cut up in blocks of ten pounds each. The Chinese use it mainly for purifying water.

FERNIE, B. C.

CARPENTERS IN INDIA.

They Are Careless About Measurements, Tools and Time.

The chief faults of the Indian carpenter are his neglect of accurate measurement, his carelessness with regard to the efficiency of his tools and his lack of perception of the value of time as a factor in the execution of work. He has also to be taught to occupy his mind with the work in hand and as much as possible to exclude other subjects.

For example, the making of a jack plane involves the choice of the wood, considerations as to size, the angle of the blade and its cutting edge, the wedge and its holding power, the handle and finally the operation of planing. All these operations are capable of very simple explanation, and this exercise provokes an emulation among students while exercising their reasoning powers. No Indian workman buys a plane. He buys the blade and makes the rest, but he rarely makes it well. He buys a saw blade and makes the handle, and, generally speaking, he spends the smallest possible sum on his outfit in spite of the extra labor the economy involves. He must therefore be taught to make as many labor saving tools as possible and to make them well. He has to be taught the use and repair of a grindstone and how to mount it in wood without metal fittings. The hard, tough woods so common in India make this an easy matter. The Indian has yet to be taught that grinding and whetting are two distinct operations, the first removing 99.9 per cent of the metal and the second producing the cutting edge in a few strokes. His saw is in such bad order that he cuts tenons, as a rule, with a mallet and chisel, and his ignorance of gauges renders him unable to make even twenty articles exactly alike. He rarely knows what size of nail or screw to use on a given job. His screw is always too small.

APHORISMS.

Nothing ages like laziness.—Bulwer.

The innocent seldom find an uneasy pillow.—Cowper.

We can do nothing well without joy and a good conscience, which is the ground of joy.—Dibbes.

He that is ungrateful has no guilt but one. All other crimes may pass for virtues in him.—Young.

A word or nod from the good has more weight than the eloquent speeches of others.—Plutarch.

Kind words prevent a good deal of that perversedness which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds.—Locke.

An inquisitive man is a creature naturally very vacant of thought itself and therefore forced to apply to foreign assistance.—Steele.

The only way to make the mass of mankind see the beauty of justice is by showing them in pretty plain terms the consequence of injustice.

The Young Writer.

No young writer in whom the literary aspiration is a passion need or really will be cowed by the array of mighty and expert antagonists in the arena whose names sound and resound so gloriously from the herald's trumpet in full volume re-enforced by past triumphs. Though a true and becoming modesty may well temper his ambition, it should in no degree suppress his ardent longing. These veterans, young aspirant, are indeed masters, but as such your exemplars. They also had their beginnings, hidden indeed, as used to be the sources of the Nile, "not permitted to be seen small," because they mastered their art before they exhibited as artists.

Thief Cleverness.

A magistrate's clerk has been known to have his tie pin stolen while in court, and one in Birmingham a few years ago lost his coat in the same way, but a more remarkable example perhaps of a thief's cleverness under the very eyes of the police was that of the burglar at Clerkenwell who managed to conceal two diamond rings while the police were searching him and passed one of them to his wife in the cell while the police were looking on. The rings were under his tongue, and one of them passed from his mouth to his wife's when he was kissing her goodby.—London Answers.

A Lasting Lesson.

"Didn't I tell you not to propose to me again?"

"You said something of the kind, but of course it made no impression on me."

"Oh, it didn't! Well, I'll give you a lesson now that you won't forget. You'll never propose to me again."

"What are you going to do?"

"I'm going to accept you."

Buddhism.

Mrs. Dumm—I see a piece in the paper about some society people bein' interested in Buddhism. What's that?

Mrs. Dumber—Why, I guess that must be the doin's of these young society people that's called "buds."

Doing His Best.

Gayeboye—I understand that Wildeboye's father left him nothing.

Highflyer—Nothing but his debts.

Gayeboye—So? And how is the youngster getting on?

Highflyer—Very nicely indeed. He's managed to increase his legacy by thirty thousand!—Smart Set.

GREAT WORK IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Dodd's Kidney Pills Made F. W. Harris a well Man.

He Suffered from Kidney Disease for Two and a Half Years—Only one of the Many Cured by the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Central Waterville, York Co., N B, Dec. 28.—(Special)—The case of F. W. Harris of this place is one more evidence of the wonderful work Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing in New Brunswick. Mr. Harris makes the following statement for publication:

"I suffered for two years and a half from Kidney Troubles, being unable to attend to my work the greater part of the time. I tried many medicines without getting any benefit, but actually grew worse.

"I took three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and they cured me. I think Dodd's Kidney Pills are a wonderful remedy for Kidney trouble."

Bright's Disease is the most advanced of Kidney Disease. Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that will cure it. But it is wiser and safer to guard against Bright's Disease by using Dodd's Kidney Pills when your Kidneys give the first symptoms of distress—pain in the back or slight urinary disorder.

Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder Cures All Creeds. It Relieves in Ten Minutes

Here are a few names of clergymen of different creeds who are firm believers in Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder to "live up to the preaching" in all it claims: Bishop Sweatman, Rev. The lay of the American hen is worth about three hundred million dollars a year. All the cattle and hogs slaughtered in the country are worth less, and so is the country's total yield of both gold and silver.

THE SENSIBLE MOTHER.

When little ones are ill the sensible mother no longer doses them with nauseous, griping purgatives, nor puts them to sleep with the so-called "soothing" preparations which always contain harmful opiates. Baby's Own Tablets have been used by thousands of mothers who cheerfully testify that they are gentle in their action, absolutely safe, and make little ones sleep soundly and naturally, because they remove the trouble that made baby irritable and wakeful. On this point Mrs. T. Watson, Sarsfield Ont., says:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets and find them a very valuable medicine for young children. When baby is cross or fretful I give her a Tablet, and it soon puts her right."

These Tablets cure all the minor ailments of little ones. They are good for all children from birth onward. Sold by medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MARKETS.

(Compiled from The Commercial).

The wheat markets, as exhibited by the operations in United States speculative markets during the week, have been something of a puzzle to traders. The Armour company evidently have pretty fair control in most of the western markets, and for the time being a great deal of the trade is nothing more than a gambling guess on what Armour has done or is going to do. These markets have been weak and strong on alternate days and business prices show very little alteration from a week ago, the July option in all of them is lower from ¼ to ½c. In the December option New York is 1c higher, but Chicago, Minneapolis and Duluth are practically unchanged, and the May option is practically unchanged in all markets. Almost every day reports are put on the markets that it is raining in the Argentine, and these help to give support. At the same time it is reported that harvest is progressing favorably in that country. During the week the primary movement in the States has been ahead of last year, and the week's exports are about the same as a year ago. In the last few days, however, the new export business reported shows a considerable increase. This, in itself, if continued to any extent, would advance prices on this side. Europe, up to the present, is still receiving large quantities of wheat from other countries. In the States complaint of insufficient moisture still comes from the southern part of the winter wheat belt, but the centre and north are now well covered by snow. Hall's reports on European crops are generally favorable. India has a fine prospect and large acreage, but winter rains will be needed.

Manitoba wheat has been steady to firm most of the week, though sometimes dull. At the close of the week, owing to the strength of the American markets, is quite firm, and prices are ½ to ¾c higher than a week ago. Prices are as follows: No. 1 northern, 78½c; 2 northern, 74⅞c; 3 northern, 71½c; No. 4 wheat, 64⅞c; feed, 51½c; feed No. 2, 41½c; spot or Dec. delivery. For January delivery price is ¾ to ⅞c over December, and for May delivery: 1 northern, 82⅞c 2 northern, 79½c; 3 northern, 75½c; No. 4 wheat, 68c, all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

WINNIPEG JOBBING PRICES.

The following are the Winnipeg jobbing prices:—

Flour—Ogilvie's Hungarian patent, $2.35 per sack of 98 pounds; other grades accordingly.

Oats—No. 2 white, 31½c in car lots; 29 to 30 for feed grades; at country points farmers are receiving 25 cents per bushel.

Barley—Malting grades, 36 to 37c feed, 34 to 35c.

Flaxseed—75 to 76c per bus. for farmers' loads at country points.

Speltz—35c per bushel.

Hay—Baled, $9 to $10 per ton.

Butter—Creamery, 24c per pound; dairy, best in bricks, 20c; tubs, 19c; ordinary grades, 12 to 14c.

Cheese—13½c per pound.

Poultry—Chickens, ducks and geese, 12c per pound; turkeys, 17 to 19c.

Potatoes—55c to 60c per bushel.

LIVE STOCK.

Cattle—Butchers' cattle, 2½ to 3c per pound.

Sheep—3½ to 4c per pound, lambs, 5c per pound.

Hogs—Choice weights, 4¾c per M.

Smelling Out Bank Bills.

If a bill must be sent in a letter the safest plan is to roll it tightly into the shape of a lamp lighter and lay it in the fold of the sheet inclosed. Arranged in that fashion, the fact that it is money cannot well be distinguished by the "feel." A thread with a knot at the end will not be so likely to fetch a telltale fragment of the fiber paper when drawn by means of a needle through the envelope, and the smell of it will be less perceptible. So peculiar is the effluvium belonging to bank or treasury notes that experts at the bureau of engraving say that they can distinguish them when sealed in envelopes by the nose every time. A thief once showed to government detectives who had caught him that he could pick out while blindfolded from a pile of 400 letters every one of seven which contained paper cash merely by scent.

An English Election Experience.

An Englishman relates the following election experience: "I was taking part in canvassing a constituency without a representative. I was announced as a speaker at a mass meeting held in a large field within shadow distance of a famous cathedral. One of the other orators delivered the most impressive speech I have ever heard. He spoke of the struggle of the poor, how they had to bear their burden. He made me almost cry by his eloquence. He talked about his own little home, which he only just managed to keep together by 'the sweat of his brow.' 'Who is he?' I asked. 'Well,' replied my friend, the candidate, 'he is known in his own town as "Popshop Dick" because he is a prosperous pawn broker.'"

A Quaint Teapot.

Queen Alexandra has a favorite teapot which is often in use when the queen is at Sandringham. It is exceedingly curious, very old and is said to be of priceless value. The teapot is in the shape of a stout Dutchman sitting astride a barrel of wine. The old man's cap serves for a lid, and a gold tap lets out the favorite 5 o'clock beverage.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbic despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

Some enthusiastic automobilists in Paris are having their cars built large enough to accommodate ten passengers. In luxurious appointment they remind Americans of Pullman palace cars.

Some people fear to try lest they should succeed.

A CAREFULLY PREPARED PILL.—Much time and attention were expended in the experimenting with the ingredients that enter into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable pills before they were brought to the state in which they were first offered to the public. Whatever other pills may be, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of much expert study and all persons suffering from dyspepsia or disordered liver and kidneys may confidently accept them as being what they are represented to be.

Londoners spend about £6,800 a day on cab hire.

EXTERNALLY OR INTERNALLY, IT IS GOOD.—When applied externally by brisk rubbing, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil opens the pores and penetrates the tissue as few liniments do, touching the seat of the trouble and immediately affording relief. Administered internally it will still the irritation in the throat which induces coughing and will cure affections of the bronchial tubes and respiratory organs. Try it and be convinced.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, JAN. 2, 1904.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The FREE PRESS wishes its readers a Happy New Year.

Today we face the opportunities, the possibilities, the successes, and alas! the failures, of a new year. It is man's nature to forget the past and to look forward in a vain attempt to pierce the veil of futurity. Yet at this anniversary which marks off the regular cycles of time it is appropriate that we cast a retrospective glance over the receding year. The mistakes of the past should be the danger-marks of the future, and the past successes are worthy of emulation.

In British Columbia things are looking brighter. Probably no province is suffering less from existing labor troubles than this. The mining and lumber industries of the Kootenays have made good records for the year and everywhere show signs of better progress, Coming more particularly to our own district we find steady strides being made by the coal mining industry. The C. N. P. Coal Co., during the year mined 652,000 tons, or an increase of 47 per cent. over the preceeding year. 166,000 tons of coke were manufactured, which is an increase of nearly 40 per cent over that of 1902. Better than this, during the year immense sums have been spent in enlarging the coke plants and in improving the mining facilities. In fact during the past year the sum of three million dollars have been expended by this company.

The year 1903 is not marked by any extraordinary event which will distinguish it in the ages of the future. No serious war has disturbed the peace of the world. Famine and pestilence have not marked its course. On the other hand the year has been one of steady progress.

Speaking particularly of Canada, the year has been one of satisfactory growth and development from the British Columbian seaboard to the distant Atlantic. From every part of the great Dominion come reassuring reports of prosperity, and the marvellous rapidity with which the fertile prairie lands of the Canadian Northwest has filled up this year is another indication that Canada's growing time has arrived.

The year of 1903, has been notably one of disaster but the awful horror which marked its close when over 600, and possibly as many as 800 souls, were ushered into the great unknown by one fell stroke, by the burning of the Iroquois theatre at Chicago which commenced during a matinee performance on Wednesday, is a crowning event that fills the civilized world with mourning. The burning of the stage scenery followed closely by the explosion of the gas resevoir killed many by poisonous gas and caused a stampede which resulted in the horrible death of hundreds of others, mostly women and children, who were tramped to death in the mad struggle. The building was new thought to be fire proof and the fire escapes were built but lacked the ladders. Twenty-seven exits were provided and had no panic followed the list of victims would have numbered hundreds-less. The cause of the fire is attributed to a defect in the electric light system.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

School will re open on Monday.

D. Walmsley is now employed on the office staff of the coal company.

A party of local Knights are arranging to go to cranbrook on Tuesday to assist in further organizing the lodge in that town. All Knights who can go will please act accordingly.

A neat little building has been erected at the rear of the Coal company buildings, to be occupied by the Geological department, where Mr. McEvoy will have his headquarters.

The first league hockey match will be played in Fernie on Wednesday, January 6th. The game will be a keen contest and local enthusiasts have already determined that the laurels of victory will fall upon the Fernie seven. None should miss this game.

The Knights of Pythias yesterday presented Mr. Proctor Joiner, their instituting officer with a magnificent fur-lined coat.

Mr. Jas. Johnstone, of Nelson, formerly manager of the C. N. P. coal co., has recently returned from a three months trip to Scotland where he succeeded in interesting a number of wealthy men in the Hunter V mines near Ymir. The property is considered one of the most promising in West Kootenay. An aerial tramway for transporting the ore to the railway is nearing completion, and within two weeks shipments will be resumed on a good scale. The ore contains so much limerock that it is much desired by the smelters as a flux, and is consequently treated at a very low rate.

New Year's passed off very quietly in Fernie many sleighing parties were held and the usual feasting was generally observed. The event was ushered in with deafening noise. Tin cans, drums, dynamite discharges, guns, whistles, etc., rent the air. Watch night services were held in christ church and the Methodist church.

Today is held as a general holiday by the merchants of the town. The clerks have worked hard during the rush of the christmas season and they have earned the extra day off. The long stretch from Thursday evening to Monday morning enables them to make extensive plans for a good holiday. The mines are working as usual today,

IF you wish to lock up your good resolutions for the coming year we will give you the choice of any Padlock in our window for 25c.

Don't forget our LAMP COMPETITION closes this evening at 9 p.m. Jar containing the nails will then be opened and counted.

P.S.—Since writing above we learn the stores will be closed to-day. In the event of this the Judges will be on hand Monday evening, 4th inst.

C. H. Crady, of Calgary, was a visitor to Fernie this week.

T. Martin C. E., of Cranbrook, spent New Year's in Fernie.

A dance was given in Cranbrook last night by the C. P. R. employees. It was a great success in every way. The Fernie Orchestra supplied the music and received much praise on account of its excellence.

Services will be conducted as usual in the Methodist church by the pastor. The morning subject will be, "The Blessed Nation," while in the evening the discussion will be on "A New Years' Resolve." All are cordially invited.

E. C. Smith was in town in the early part of the week. Mr. Smith talks freely on current events at Victoria. He does not look for the fall of the government through any defection on the part of the Socialist members. He believes the government was too hasty in rushing through some of its legislation, particularly the Assessment Bill.

The McRae Lumber Company's new mill at Hosmer is completed and will be set in operation at once. The mill site is situated on the Elk River and a half mile spur to the C. P. R. is being built. This mill is up-to-date in every particular. The lumber for its construction was taken up from their lumber yard at Coal Creek. The new mill is 120 feet long and the machinery from the old mill has been installed. The capacity of the mill is about 40,000 feet per day. The company owns several square miles of excellent timber on the west bank of the river, where the facilities for handling it are the very best. The company commence regular cutting at once.

The hockey game between the local team and a team composed of Frank and Pincher Creek players did not materialize yesterday as expected, the three players from Pincher wiring that they could not come. The four Frank players, however, ware on hand and arrangements were made whereby three Fernie players would play with the Frank boys, against Fernie's regular team. The result, as might be expected, was very one-sided. In thirty minutes play the Fernie regulars rained shot after shot upon the Frank flags and 7 times the puck found the net. In the second half the defence and forwards of the two teams were exchanged and a more even game was witnessed. A large crowd gathered to see the sport.

Commencing Monday 28th Dec., the regular way freight trains running between Cranbrook and Macleod will carry passengers. These trains in connection with No's 3 and 4 will be ample to accommodate all local travel and requests for permits to ride on other fright trains will not be considered.

LOVE OR THE ALPHABET

By RICHARD BARKER SHELTON

Copyright, 1905, by T. C. McClure

A very disgruntled Mephistopheles leaned against a post watching the fantastic assembly whirl and turn to the strains of a Strauss waltz. Couples in all stages of incongruous pairing glided past his stand—William Shakespeare with a portly Martha Washington in tow, Catherine de' Medici in the arms of a cowboy with fringed trousers and clanking spurs, a fat and perspiring Christopher Columbus making desperate attempts to regulate his steps to those of a slim Portia, and a jolly Bacchus tripping it with a vestal virgin.

Mephistopheles watched them in bored and indolent silence. The humor of the ill matched partners utterly escaped him. He felt suddenly a loathing of the dancers, the Strauss waltz and the lights. He longed to be alone to smoke and think.

Some one touched his arm. He turned to find at his elbow a Watteau shepherdess flushed and breathing quickly, evidently but just come from a turn in the waltz. He straightened himself and looked down at her gravely.

"Teddy," she said severely, "you should be dancing. You look bored to death. What's the matter?"

"I feel like—I feel my part," he corrected himself. She laughed softly.

"And I was just going out on the veranda for a smoke, but I've forgotten my cigarette case," he went on ruefully.

"How hollow your world must be and what a lot of sawdust in your doll," she mocked. "Can't you get some at the office?"

"They don't carry Sulinas there," he answered.

"Well," she said, "I'm not a box of Sulinas, but I'll do my best. Will you take me outside? It's stuffy here, and I'm tired of dancing."

"Come," he said simply as he offered his arm.

Outside was a clear sky, and a half moon just hung above the horizon. They stood for a moment by the veranda rail drinking in the glory of the night. The soft plash of water came musically to them. Mephistopheles sighed.

"PATTY," HE SAID, "THERE'S A LOT TO FORGET, ISN'T THERE?"

"Let's go over to the cliff," he hazarded.

"It will be gorgeous over there," she said as they started across the lawn.

"I suppose he was there tonight," Mephistopheles mused.

"Who?" said the shepherdess innocently.

"Oh, Sir Frederick Giles, baronet, F. R. S., and so forth. I can't remember the rest of the alphabetical distinctions," he added.

"Oh, yes," she said. "He knew I was coming as a shepherdess, so he came as Colin. Nice, wasn't it?"

Her tone was inscrutable. For the life of him he could not determine whether it was mocking or serious.

"He'd have made an ideal Falstaff," growled Mephistopheles.

He fancied he heard a giggle from the shepherdess, but being uncertain on this point he remained discreetly silent until they reached the cliff. He spread his cape for her, and they seated themselves on the brink. The outline of the coast lay black and ragged against the paleness of the sky and water. Tiny, twinkling lights shone all along the shore, and far toward the eastern horizon the lighthouse on Monahoc island kindled its great star, now red, now yellow.

Mephistopheles propped himself comfortably on his elbow and gave vent to another ponderous sigh.

"Is it too early for congratulations, Patty?" he asked.

"They'd be more appropriate a trifle later perhaps," she said. Mephistopheles felt a sense of momentary relief.

"It isn't every girl marries the foremost geologist of the day—one with baronet and half the alphabet after his name," he said.

"No," she answered flippantly, "that would be bigamy."

"Patty," Mephistopheles said seriously, "I hope you'll have a big, wide life over there—the kind you're eminently fitted for." She turned impetuously toward him.

"Oh, you great, big, generous boy," she said warmly, "that's just like you!"

Mephistopheles felt his heart dive for his boots.

"I do," he repeated lamely, as if trying to convince himself. "I really do."

What was that from the shepherdess? Did she choke or did she snicker?

"And you'll be fulfilling all your mother's ambition for you?" he went on. She nodded.

He sat up suddenly and for a time looked silently out across the water.

"Patty," he said at length, "there's a lot to forget, isn't there?"

"I suppose so," she said.

"A lot for you, not for me," he continued. "You'll have to forget those drives and walks and that moonlight sail out around Whaleback—great, wasn't it? You said—well, never mind. No one is responsible on moonlight sails. And, say, remember the canoe in the harbor last year? I believe to this day you tipped it over purposely to test me. Pat, I wish I had been swimming from then till now, and I wish I could swim from now till the crack of doom with your hands on my shoulders. Well, a duffer who can only swim and sail a boat and knock a golf ball about the green can't expect to compete with the alphabet after a name. I'm not complaining, Pat, understand, but I've got one advantage, anyway. I can remember those things. I shan't have to forget them."

"I shan't forget those things, Teddy," she said gently.

He took her hand impulsively.

"The only thing I've got to forget is that I love you," he said deliberately.

"This is a good way to begin," she said dryly, looking down at him. He sprang to his feet.

"Oh, hang every royal society chartered!" he burst out. "I wish I'd found my cigarette case. I should have been smoking quietly on the veranda now instead of making an ass of myself here."

"Do you mean," she said slowly, "hang Sir Frederick Giles, baronet, and the rest of it?"

"Yes," he growled, "hang him to the highest limb."

"Oh, you great, big, generous boy!" she mocked. "Can't you be a little sorry for him?"

"I? Sorry?" he said. "Why?"

"Because," she said, rising and coming a step toward him, "because all my chances to rise in the world are going to the—to Mephistopheles."

Lost Himself.

An absent minded professor was much annoyed by the trouble he experienced every morning in hunting for his clothes, for he never could remember where he had put them the night before when he undressed. So he devised the plan of writing down on a sheet of paper where each article of clothing was placed as he took it off, and this is what he wrote:

"Coat on third peg, left hand corner of room; waistcoat and trousers on chair by bed; collar on door handle; tie through key of door; vest on floor by window; cuffs on knobs by bedstead; shirt on portmanteau; socks on gas bracket; boots outside door; professor in bed."

Next morning this plan seemed to answer admirably. He collected his garments rapidly, and when he came to the last item on the list he went over to the bed and, to his great disgust, found it empty.

"Ah!" he cried in bewilderment. "Now the professor is lost! This plan is not good. What shall I do now?"

Applying His Immortality.

Joaquin Miller, "the Poet of the Sierras," visited a friend in Boston. This friend, whose literary tastes run largely to Emerson, Browning and Maeterlinck, found the venerable poet in the library one afternoon absorbed in a book.

"What are you reading?" asked the Bostonian.

"A novel by Bret Harte," replied the poet.

The Hub ite sniffed. "I cannot see," said he, "how an immortal being can waste his time with such stuff."

"Are you quite sure," asked Miller, "that I am an immortal being?"

"Why, of course you are," was the unwary reply.

"In that case," replied the Californian grimly, "I don't see why I should be so very economical of my time."

Baby Twenty-eight Years Old.

A woman aged twenty-eight died in Bavaria in the cradle in which she was laid soon after her birth and in which she had passed the whole of her life. She preserved to the end the size and appearance of a baby a few months old, though her mind developed abnormally, and she was a persistent talker.

Macedonian Peasants.

The average peasant of Macedonia has a net yearly income of only about $50, of which about $17 goes on taxes. It is a common incident for villagers to cut down their fruit trees to avoid the tax on them.

The Blue Gum Tree.

Groves of the eucalyptus tree, known as blue gum or manna gum, may be cut to the ground for fuel when they are five or seven years old and every six to eight years subsequently. The yield from each cutting is commonly fifty to seventy-five cords of four foot wood per acre.

Russian Ascetics.

Miles of subterranean corridors lined with tombs and cells were constructed years ago far below the magnificent cathedral at Kiev, Russia. In these cells over 1,500 ascetics perform their daily devotions and duties—live, eat and sleep in the grim company of their dead predecessors.

BOOK AND HEART.

For many a year he grubbed among
The stalls where antique tomes he piled,
And then alone when, for a song,
He bought some prize, he ever smiled.
Staring at titles, oft his eyes
Slanted aloft with eager looks,
As if he stood in paradise
'Neath trees of knowledge hung with books

So long the reflex dull of calf,
Morocco, vellum, lit his face;
That it is leathern now by half,
And Time's deep tooling we can trace.
Volumes grew human in his care,
While he their form and semblance took,
Till men stood on the shelving there
And in the armchair lolled a book.

But books and men will fray and fade
As Care's rude finger turns the page,
Or in some surless chamber laid
They warp and mildew into age.
The living leaves grow sear and wan,
The back knows many an ache and crook,
Till into limbo's flung the man
And to the grave is borne the book.

Who knows; yon pile of ragged leaves
May, when some critic finds it there,
Be gathered up like golden sheaves
And garbed in beauty past compare.
E'en so, if aught of worth be find
Between its margins broad and white,
Some heavenly Grolier yet may bind
The bookman's soul in covers bright!

—George Seibel in Critic.

ABOUT A MINX.

How She Shocked the People of Lindenthorpe.

Miss Betty Mayne had been back in Lindenthorpe for a week, and for a week Lindenthorpe had been shocked. Miss Mayne felt hurt. When she returned, she had been homesick for the sea and the seaboard folks, left behind when her aunt carried her up to town years before, and friendliness was in her heart toward them. Instead of receiving the same, she had been met with envy and jealousy and all uncharitableness. Partly is was her fault, partly theirs. They only remembered her as the imp and scapegoat of the village, who played on the rocks all day long with bare feet, and they resented her grown up fashionability. She could not help realizing that she was better dressed, knew more of the world and was in many ways a hundred years ahead of Lindenthorpe. Then, again, Mr. Silas Attenborough, who always did the right thing, and whose actions, accordingly, were viewed with an indulgent eye, had seemed in danger of doing the wrong thing. "Moonstruck," Miss Griggs declared him to be. And the minx was not even flattered.

It was on Sunday that the shock of shocks occurred. To begin with, several minutes after service had begun Miss Betty Mayne walked in—almost strolled in—as cool as a cucumber, and clad in the most outrageously fine dress, and stood in the entrance (instead of modestly finding herself a seat), poking away at the stones with a green parasol until Mr. Attenborough, who was churchwarden—the youngest churchwarden Lindenthorpe had ever had—rose in his Sunday best to show her to a place.

People were more disgusted than surprised when Miss Mayne, after fanning herself ostentatiously for some time, rose and stalked out of the church by the front door. Such behavior was to be expected from a minx. It was what followed that left Lindenthorpe resigned to anything short of an earthquake. Miss Mayne wandered down toward the beach in a pensive mood and took a seat on a bit of sandstone. She was a pretty sight in blue and gold, whatever Miss Griggs' opinion might be. A churchwarden is at liberty to differ from a Sunday school mistress on a question like this, and Mr. Silas Attenborough as he walked from church down to the sea and saw the minx on the rock differed in toto from Miss Griggs. He felt a desire to rebuke the minx for her conduct in church that morning, but was it wise to venture to the rocks? He was in his Sunday clothes and not very sure of foot among slippery weeds. Nevertheless, his sense of duty being strong, Mr. Attenborough crossed the Rubicon and at length reached the sandstone rock. The minx nodded to him. "I saw you in church this morning," she said.

"I zee you," said Mr. Attenborough gravely.

"It was very funny," she went on. "The very first thing I noticed was a chalk mark on your coat from leaning against the pillars, and I do believe you've got it on still."

This was hardly the conversation Mr. Attenborough had pictured to himself, and he rubbed the chalk away before replying.

"It seemed you left church avore t' sermon?"

"Dreadfully ventilated, isn't it?" she said, nodding. "I really wonder people don't get suffocated sometimes."

"It were a powerful sermon."

"Short ones always are, I think. Or did you come after me before it was finished?"

"Come after"— Mr. Attenborough was taken aback. He had hurried certainly, but he hardly expected the minx to notice that.

"Coom after avore t' sermon was finished?" He recovered himself indignantly. "I shouldn't think of't. But"—

"You didn't expect to see me here?"

Since the minx sat on a rock in full view of the shore, Mr. Attenborough evaded what seemed a fruitless question.

"It's agreeable by t' sea here avore dinner," he remarked.

"The same as ever," she said—"all Lindenthorpe's the same as ever—the sea, and the village, and the folks. They might have slept and never waked since the day I left, seven years ago. Oh"—she roused herself to sudden animation—"but I'd like to shock them!"

"Shock 'em!" said Mr. Attenborough, aghast.

"Shock you all, because I detest people who can be shocked, and if I knew for certain that I detested Lindenthorpe I'd be content to leave it and never see it again." She sank back against the rock.

"Would yew now?" said Mr. Attenborough, astonished.

She nodded. "It's quite true," she said.

"I don't think I'm easy to shock," he said guardedly.

"You?" She shook with laughter. "You? Why, you were shocked in church this morning. You'd be shocked if I were to push you into that pool. You're shocked now at hearing me suggest such a thing."

"T' church is different," remarked he, hastily edging from the pool. "But out of t' church I'm not easy to shock."

"You think so?"

"Solemn trewth," said Mr. Attenborough decidedly.

"Perhaps you're right," she said. "But"—she pointed a finger toward the shore—"is that Miss Griggs over there?"

He followed the direction of her finger and saw that most of the congregation were assembled in groups about the shore.

"'Tis, indeed," he groaned. "An Miss Griffin an t' whole Sunday school watching us. I think that we shud be getting back."

"Don't let me keep you," she said.

"It is not keeping me. 'Tis only"—He looked about him for an excuse. "Zip me! T' sea"—

"What do you mean?"

"T' sea," said Mr. Attenborough. "It's coom up"—

She sprang to her feet in great indignation:

"This comes of your talking. Why couldn't you keep your eyes open—what is to be done?"

"Could yew wade?" suggested Mr. Attenborough apologetically. He knew nothing of the rocks and what depths cut him off from the shore. Only he remembered that in old days the imp of the village knew every inch—

"Wade? In my best things?" Her scornful tone made him feel more at fault than ever.

"Praps they'll send us a boat," he said.

"After we're drowned?"

"Praps I could—take yew over to t' shore?"

"See how deep it is first," she said imperiously.

He let himself down gingerly and the water closed over the knees of his best trousers.

"Think yew would loike to be carried?" he asked dolefully, stretching out his arms for her to hurry. But she kept him there while she struggled to hide her laughter, and then said threateningly:

"If you drop me, I shall never forgive you"—

"And if I doan't drop yew?" said he.

"Lindenthorpe never will."

"Coom!" he said. And at that she let him take her in into his arms. The folk of Lindenthorpe on the beach were taking much interest in the proceedings. "The minx!" said Miss George. "Did you ever?" The churchwarden was splashing through pools of water, regardless of his appearance, and only careful to protect the affected burden in his arms. Most of Lindenthorpe was assembled on the shingle when he reached the uninvaded sand. Miss Betty Mayne made no motion of descent.

"Shall I set yew doon here?" he asked.

"No," she said: "it's damp; I should wet my shoes. Carry me right up to the shingle."

He breathed hard, not because of her weight, which was nothing, but because of the publicity of the thing.

"Whom be I carrying?" he asked. "Be I carrying me sweetheart?"

"If—you will," she said, stormed by his unexpected boldness. He put her down in the middle of the assembled folk, some of whom feigned to be watching the sea. Miss Griggs happened to be the nearest, and she shook her head archly at the churchwarden.

"I'm shocked," she said. "We're all shocked, Mr. Attenborough."

"Are yew?" said he. "I'm—I'm sweetheart."—King.

The Nurse.

The care of the sick can scarcely reach its highest ideal save where personal attachment supplements knowledge and skill. Therefore, it belongs to the life of every woman. There are few households indeed where any girl can grow up without some opportunities for this experience. Such opportunities may well be supplemented by lectures, courses of reading and well planned demonstrations. If every woman could (as she should) under ordinary circumstances undertake the care of the sick in her own home, this would but accentuate the value and raise the status of the "born nurses," who, never happy save in the special exercise of their gift, would then quite suffice for hospital cases and the grand occasions of major operations. The sight of the cap and veil of the hired trained nurse when imported into a household with women members scarcely raises one's idea of the family morale!—Chambers' Journal.

Terse and Gentle.

Most editors have their own special method of declining contributions, but for a terse and pointed rebuke we have heard of nothing better than the letter lately received by a well known author. As a rule, his stories are wholly unobjectionable, but in this particular case he gave himself a little more license than usual and produced a story which, though quite moral, was not altogether suitable for family reading. He sent it to a magazine editor with whom he was on friendly terms, and the manuscript was promptly returned with the following note:

My Dear Sir—Oh, my dear sirl Yours faithfully, ——.

ARE YOU ONE OF THE WEAK ONES?

Subject to Sinking Spells and Feelings of Languer, Depression and Weakness—You Can be Helped by

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Very many people feel much as you do. They do not like to confess that they are sick, but they are weak and languid, feel drowsy and depressed after meals, are easily tired and discouraged, suffer from indigestion, sleeplessness, irritability and general bodily weakness. At times, it may be, some of the old-time vigor returns, but you no more than get your hopes aroused when the sinking spells come on again and you are as helpless and disheartened as ever.

Such symptoms point to lack of nourishment in the blood and an exhausted nervous system. You can get well if you will but restore the system by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This great food cure forms new blood and instils new force and energy into the wasted and depleted nerve cells. It makes you well in nature's way by supplying to the blood and nerves the very elements in which they are lacking.

These symptoms of which you complain are but a warning of approaching nervous prostration, paralysis, locomotor ataxia or even insanity. The time to act is before these dreadful diseases of the nerves have fastened themselves upon you. They are much easier to prevent than to cure, as many know, on account of long years of helplessness and suffering.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will give you new hope and courage. Not only will you be able to feel the benefit you are deriving from it, but by noting your increase in weight you can prove conclusively that new firm flesh and tissue is being added to your body.

NEW YORK TIME.

It Is the Standard Used In All Our Weather Bureau Stations.

When we read a report from any of the 169 regular weather bureau stations throughout our land bringing the information that a rainstorm, a tornado or some other meteorological phenomenon began at a certain hour we need not suppose that the hour mentioned refers to the time at the place where the observation was made. The hour given is the exact New York time, for every clock at the regular weather bureau stations all over the land is set to the seventy-fifth meridian, or eastern standard time, which is exactly five hours behind Greenwich time.

Only this standard of time is used in the text of the Monthly Weather Review, and all weather bureau observers are required to record observations by it. The reason for this is that the best scientific deductions from the weather reports must be based upon the conditions of the atmosphere existing simultaneously in different parts of the country.

It would be very ludicrous if all the hundreds of reports sent daily had to be changed at the central office in Washington from local to eastern time, and so all the regular observers are required to use the New York, or eastern time, in making their reports.

There are many volunteer observers and newspaper correspondents who in reporting weather phenomena use other standards of time. If the weather bureau has occasion to use their reports the time is often corrected to agree with the eastern standard or the local standard is mentioned.

Origin of the Letter V.

The letter V may be regarded as the mutilated remains of one of the symbols used by the ancient Egyptians in their hieroglyphics or picture writing. A common animal in their country was the two horned sand viper, a representation of which stood for V. The priests ultimately found that for the practical purposes of everyday life it was a waste of time to use elaborate hieroglyphics and invented a kind of shorthand to meet the occasion. In this the snake was reduced to a V with a dash (V——) to represent horns and body.

The Phœnicians adopted this letter, and from them we get our V by loss of the dash, leaving only the two little horns of the original picture. This snake is still common in Egypt and is probably the one mentioned in Genesis xlix. 17. "Dan shall be a serpent by the way, an adder in the path, that biteth the horse heels, so that his rider shall fall backward." Travelers tell us that it is still addicted to this unpleasant habit.

Beauties of Ireland.

Dublin can and does boast of many superlatives. It has the widest street and the largest public park in Europe, the first horse show in the world and the largest brewery, but certainly the chiefest of all its claims is that advanced in behalf of its women. It is really no exaggeration to say that in no city in the world will one see so many beautiful women as one does in the Irish capital.

There is something, too, about the Irish type of beauty that cannot be actually described. There is an expression, an air of something akin to sadness almost, in every real Irish face, something interesting, that holds the attention more than mere skin deep beauty. "I have been in most capitals of Europe," says a traveler in Ireland, "but never did I see so many really beautiful women as I saw in Dublin. And they were not visitors. There was no mistaking the wonderful gray eyes of 'Dark Rosaline.'"

WOMAN'S BURDENS

THE HEALTH OF MANY WOMEN IN A PRECARIOUS CONDITION.

Headaches, Pains Easily Accounted For and Functional Derangements Make Life Miserable.

Throughout the length and breadth of Canada there are thousands and thousands of grateful people who admit that they owe health and strength to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and who speak always—as they should do—in terms of warmest praise of this medicine. Among the many friends Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made there is perhaps none more enthusiastic in speaking of the Pills than Mrs. Edward Atcheson, of Orangeville, Ont., who for two years suffered intensely, but at last found a cure through the use of this remedy. To a reporter of the Orangeville Sun, Mrs. Atcheson said: "Three years ago I became very much run down. My appetite almost vanished, I grew pale, was subject to headaches, dizziness, palpitation of the heart and a ringing noise in the ears. I tried several medicines, but they did not help me, and I was consequently much depressed and feared I was doomed to go through life a chronic invalid. One day I read the cure of a woman whose symptoms were almost identical with my own, through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I sent for a box, and by the time it was finished I was sufficiently encouraged to send for another, and so on, until I had taken six boxes, when I was in every sense of the word a different person. Every symptom of my late illness had vanished, and I was once more enabled to look after my household duties with old-time health and vigor. I feel that I owe all this to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I cheerfully recommend them to other weak and suffering women."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a real blessing to all weak, weary women. They build up the blood and cure all the functional ills from which so many women suffer in silence. These pills may be had from any druggist or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. Remember that substitutes cannot cure, and see that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around each box.

IN THE LAND OF THE MAILED FIST

Lieut. Biese's Sentence Causes Dissension.

MILITARY VS. CIVILIANS

The Book "Garrison Life in a Small Town" Has Caused a Deep-Rooted Resentment Against the Arrogant Action of Army Officers.

A dispatch from Berlin says: Since the sentence of six months' imprisonment of Lieutenant Biese, to be followed by dishonorable dismissal from the army for writing a book entitled "Garrison Life in a Small Town," Berlin society has been sharply cut into two sections—the army and the civilians. The monstrousness of the sentence proved the enormity of the offence in the eyes of the officials, the crime being that the young officer had the temerity to tell the truth. The book showed up in no uncertain language, the vices, brutality and arrogance of the average German officer, and that the outrages were only too true, was proved by the fact that every officer in the regiment to which the culprit belonged were transferred to other garrisons.

The present incident recalls the case of Lieut. Broesewitz, who, imagining himself insulted by a civilian ran him through with his sword and killed him. For this outrage he was sentenced to two years in a fortress. When the Emperor first ascended the throne it is a notorious fact that his attitude towards the civilian world did no little to inflame the natural arrogance of military men, and now he finds the monster he has helped to create and continued to nourish, is getting beyond his control. Berlin at the present time is an unpleasant place to live in, that is to say, for the civilian. Officers jostle them off the sidewalk, making no exception even in the case of women; in restaurants and cafes they will push rudely by them and woe betide the unfortunate wight who dares show any resentment.

The German officer is an unpleasant personality in German life and he is a mixture of the braggadocio, the brave and the bully. To the army belongs the credit of the Socialist party's power at the present day. Ten years ago it held hole and corner meetings, was hunted by the police and was a despised section of the community. Today it is a power in the land, ever increasing its ramifications and enlarging its scope. The outlook in this country is regarded as the reverse of bright. The attitude of thinking people is reflected by the remark of a leading member of the Reichstag, who recently said: "God only knows what would happen if the kaiser's illness should prove fatal." It is felt by all who have the true interests of the Fatherland at heart, that sweeping reformation as regards the army is necessary or evil days are in store for the country.

ARCOLA MAN'S END.

John Wark Jumps Head Foremost from a Train Near Ottawa.

An Ottawa dispatch says: John Wark, of Arcola, Assiniboia, lies at Rogers morgue here with his throat cut and his body considerably bruised. Wark was a passenger on the afternoon train from the Pacific coast, bound for Montreal. He had a ticket from Moose Jaw to St. John, N.B., and was supposed to be on his way to Wellsford, Peterville parish, Queen's county, New Brunswick. When the train was between Bell's Corners and Britannia, about 6 miles from Ottawa, Wark jumped through a car window, head first. There were only three passengers on this car; one was on his way to Montreal and the other to St. Albans, Vt. One of the passengers saw Wark's feet disappear through the window and the other did not see anything. The train was running down grade at the time.

The matter was reported to the conductor, who, upon reaching Ottawa, sent an engine back to find out what happened the missing passenger. Wark was found some 20 yards distant from where he fell from the train. He had managed to cross the fence and was found dead in a pool of blood from his throat, which he had cut with his knife. The body was brought here and placed in the morgue.

The deceased was apparently between 30 and 40 years of age. A letter was found on him from Daniel Wark, who is evidently a brother, and who resides at Wellsford.

Switchman Thompson was struck and killed by a train in the C.P.R. yards at Winnipeg on December 22.

The Sydney correspondent of the London Times says: The government estimates of the wheat yield of New South Wales is 28,570,000 bushels. This beats the record by over 12,000,000 bushels; 18,500,000 will be available for export, which is more than the total crop of any previous year.

FIRE AND WATER.

A Schooner's Crew Has Terrible Experience off Nova Scotia.

A dispatch from Halifax, dated on Dec. 21, says: The American schooner Navahoe, which left Gloucester two weeks ago for a fishing trip on this coast, ran ashore on Panacka Island, 60 miles west of Halifax, at 4 o'clock this morning, and is a total loss. Her owner and captain, Martin Walsh, and his crew of 19 had a narrow escapes of their lives. They lost everything else.

Last night was dark and thick and the wind was high. Captain Walsh was trying to make out the light on Beaver Head, but he struck on the island, and his vessel turned on her side. The stove capsized and set fire to the vessel.

The mainland was four miles away and there was no hope for the vessel and but little for the crew. They got the boats out as quickly as they could. Some of the dorries filled as went through the surf, but the men were able to keep afloat, and in about three hours after the schooner struck the crew found themselves on the mainland, half perished from exposure and exhausted after their fight for life.

The Navahoe had secured 40,000 pounds of cod and haddock, which, with the vessel, is a total loss. She was 133 tons, valued at $12,008 and insured for $10,000.

TRAIN HORROR.

Ten Persons Killed and Twenty Injured Through Negligence.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 21.—In the wreck to-day at Godfrey, Kansas, of the Meteor, a St. Louis and San Francisco fast train from the south, eight persons were killed and 32 injured; among the injured five probably will die, while 14 were severely hurt.

The list of the dead and injured is: James Kirkpatrick, Geo. Hoyt, conductor; B. A. Dewees, engineer; Theo. Bishard, fireman; Jas. H. Wyman, A. H. A. Moreland, Lon Corbin, Joseph Corbin, John Bell and John Bluebacker.

Those probably fatally injured are: Sheridan Kanable, E. Garroway, H. B. Darlington, mail clerk.

The dead were all western men. One man whose body has not been identified was thrown sixty feet into a corn field. Two men, one from Oklahoma and the other from Arkansas, were fatally injured. Sixteen persons, including Henry McDonnell, of Lodi, Ohio, were seriously injured and fifteen others were slightly injured. Most of the injured were badly burned and maimed. The responsibility for the wreck is laid to J. A. Bartley, a brakeman of the freight crew who failed to flag the passenger train. He has disappeared. The engine on the freight had become dead and the crew was ordered to remain on the main track and to turn the switch for the passenger train when about due. The brakeman was ordered to flag the express but neglected to do so. Most of the injured were in the chair car which took fire soon after the wreck occurred.

Sad End to a Useful Life.

A dispatch from Worcester, Mass., dated Dec. 20, says: Mrs. Honoretta Marshall, of Webster, died in Worcester Insane Hospital last night at the age of 105years, four months and 12 days. She was born in Poland. Left a widow nearly 60 years ago, with immense wealth, she devoted herself to distributing her entire fortune, and sold her home to give to the poor. Forty-seven years ago she married John Marshall in Poland. She came to America soon afterwards.

Six years ago she developed a mania for walking night and day and was placed in an asylum.

Bank Manager Absconds.

Sydney, N. S., Dec. 21.—Edgar Richards, manager of the Royal Bank of Canada, at Whitney Pier, C.B., has absconded with many thousands of dollars of the bank's funds. Richards was a heavy poker player and the money is said to have been spent in gambling. The whereabouts of the defaulting manager are unknown, but it is believed that he left for Newfoundfand with the intention of getting over to France by some fishing schooner. The investigation shows that the defalcations cover a period of two years, and were cleverly hidden.

A Chicago dispatch, dated Dec. 21, says: Saloonkeeper James Vliek, who a few days ago choked his wife to death, strangled himself in his cell at the county gaol to-day, a handkerchief being tightly knotted about his throat. Physicians had reported that he was shamming insanity.

It is now believed that insanity was not feigned, but Vliek killed his wife after being driven slowly crazy by the woman's alleged drinking spells.

Toronto, Dec. 21.—The men employed by the Massey-Harris company have been notified that a reduction will be made in their wages, commencing with the present week. The reduction will amount to at least ten per cent., and will affect not less than 1,500 men. President Lyman Jones calls it a readjustment and says that foremen and highly paid skilled men will not be affected.

POPE ISSUES A DOCUMENT

Restraining Laity From Taking Political Action.

QUOTES THE LATE POPE

Document Consists of Nineteen Articles Taken From Pope Leo's Encyclical. Flaws are Found in Irish Land Act Other Cables.

The Observatore Romano, the Vatican organ, publishes an important document by the pope on the action of the Catholic laity, which is said to be rendered necessary by the proceedings of the recent Catholic congress at Bologna, which showed such opposite tendencies of the Catholic Conservatives and Catholic Democrats. The document quotes nineteen articles and the rules taken from the encyclical of the late Pope Leo, the following being the most important: "Christian Democrats must entirely abstain in Italy from participating in any political action which in the present circumstances and for reasons of a very high order are interdicted." Thus the pope destroys all hope entertained by the Liberal element in the Catholic party that they would be allowed to participate in the political life of the country.

Other important rules mentioned are for the direction of Catholic writers who must abstain from anticipating the views of the holy see on leading subjects. They must submit all writing concerning religion, Christian morals and natural ethics to the censorship of their bishops, and they are constrained to do this even in the case of publications in mere technical subjects. In the case of differences of opinion among Catholics, instead of making these differences public in the newspapers they must submit them to the ecclesiastical authorities, who will pass upon them.

These rules have greatly dampened the enthusiasm of those who hoped that the present pontificate would be more liberal than the last one.

FLAWS IN THE LAND ACT.

London, Dec. 22.—Both the Nationalists and the Unionists are discovering serious flaws in Irish Secretary Wyndham's Land Act, which will necessitate further amendment in parliament. In the land judges' court in Dublin, after several days' discussion, Justice Ross has delivered judgment regarding the sale of Lord Ely's estates, which, if it is upheld on appeal, will prevent landlords who are tenants for life, from selling, as they would thereby lose the chief inducement to sell under the act. The judgment will probably have the effect of suspending all sales and negotiations to sell until parliament has taken measures to remove the doubts and difficulties which have arisen in the interpretations of the act.

ORIGINAL "LITTLE DORRIT."

Of much interest to lovers of Dickens was a celebration held at Southport last week in honor of the ninetieth birthday of Mrs. Cooper, who is said to be the original of "Little Dorrit." In her childhood her parents were near neighbors of the Dickens family, and there was something in the nature of a boy and girl courtship between little Charles and his future "Little Dorrit." The old lady is still hale and hearty and not long since took part in a tableau vivant.

NO CONCEALMENT.

St. Petersburg—There is no truth in the report published by a news agency in the United States, that the czarina recently gave birth to a dead son. The story is pronounced to be absurd. It is pointed out that any concealment of such an event as the one referred to would be impossible.

Superstitious Welsh Folk.

While the wife of a quarryman at Penrhyn, Wales, was bathing her 3-months old babe, she was thunderstruck to hear the child say plainly in Welsh:

"Next year will be a terrible year, mother."

The mother rushed in terror to the next door and told what she had heard to a neighbor, who ran immediately back, picked up the infant, and, as she soothed and caressed it, coaxingly asked if it had told its mother that next year would be a terrible year. To her astonishment the child looked at her, said "Yes," and fell back dead. The story has been discussed far and wide, and the two women have been cross-questioned without shaking their story. At Penrhyn, where the people are rather primitive and religious, there is much foreboding.

Nanaimo Police Sensation.

Nanaimo has a police sensation, which was caused by the announcement by Mayor Manson at a commissioners' meeting on Dec. 22, that he had found it necessary to suspend Police Chief Crossan, pending an investigation of his official course. The allegation is that Crossan was aware that Night Watchman Gilligan had "rolled" a man and appropriated his watch, but took no action against Gilligan until forced to do so. Gilligan is now serving three years.

The first meeting of Joseph Chamberlain's commission of tariff experts, which is to enquire into the conditions of British trade and to report with the object of drawing up a tariff reform bill, will be held Jan. 16. Mr. Chamberlain has accepted the honorary presidency of the commission.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"My brother-in-law is sitting with the baron and talking to him about the recent hunts," said Lucie, still holding her lover's hand. "He goes home to-morrow, and when the little girl is better Tante Dettchen will take her to him."

"And stay with him for the present," added the doctor.

"Does he wish it? How is that?"

"I have proposed it to him," said her son.

"So? And you?"

The doctor drew Lucie close to him. "I am to be cared for," said he, with a happy smile. "Before the year ends I hope my wife will be in my house."

As the Frau Counselor was leaving, Lucie begged her to take a letter for her to the post. "Frau Hortense Weber," was the address. The old lady slipped it into the box, and as she noticed the postmistress at the window, she tapped with her umbrella against the pane.

"Did you not say yesterday that you had a price-list of ready-made gentlemen's underclothes from Berlin? Do lend it to me, my dear. Alfred is to be married immediately after Christmas, and the time is so short."

The plump little woman at the window clasped her hands together.

"Oh, heavens! Is it really so? What, last evening? To whom? Sel—"

"Lucie Walter—who else should it be? That was never quite broken off; thay had a little—well, what often happens. Your little boy can bring the catalogue round. Good-morning, my dear. So," she said as she walked along, "they can not send out notices of the engagement again—this will do."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

It was Sylvester-eve. The snow was falling fast but silently. A thick white covering was over the grass plot in the doctor's garden, and on every twig of the high trees, and on the window and door-sills, and was spread like a soft beautiful canopy over the roof of the little house. From beneath it the lighted windows looked out in such a friendly way. Across one of them a shadow seemed flitting every now and then behind the white curtains. It was the dining-room, and Frau Lucie was arranging the table. She evidently expected visitors; there were four places, and in the middle of the table, under the hanging lamp, stood a glass shell on a pedestal in which were arranged little sprigs of evergreen and some Christmas roses. The table-cloth and napkins were of old-fashioned damask—they were part of her mother's dowry—and were beautifully fine, and shone like silk. Ah, in these days they do not have any more like them. The young wife smoothed the shining damask with a caressing hand.

The wine-glasses, the plates, and spoons all dated from the same time. If here and there the gold edge was a little rubbed off, what did it matter? Honorable and distinguished people had eaten from off them in joy and contentment. The large glasses had been used to drink the toast at Lucie's christening.

The sweet young wife looked with a contented smile at her work; she thought she had never seen anything so cozy and attractive looking as this simple round table, in the low but well-proportioned room, and she folded her hands as if full of thankfulness and happiness. Just then a gentle tap sounded on the door, and the next moment Hortense stood in the doorway, her fur cloak and hood covered with the light flakes of snow.

"Good-evening, Lucie! I came before Waldemar; he is still sitting by grandpapa's bedside; but I" — she kissed the Frau Doctor's cheeks—"but I hurried to you. I wanted to have you to myself for a little while. Is your husband still out?"

"He has gone in a sleigh to Butgow," answered Lucie, "and can not be back before eight o'clock," she added, taking the cloak from Hortense's shoulders.

"I see only four places," cried Hortense, a pleased tone in her voice; "are we to be alone?"

"My mother-in-law is celebrating the betrothal at the Mahnerts.' She could not miss that; and mademoiselle has also declined."

"Yes, she said she had to remain with grandpapa—his companion does not come until to-morrow—but in reality I think she has had a fit of indigestion ever since your wedding."

"Hortense, you are as incorrigible as ever," said Lucie; but she could not help laughing, for her husband had said the same thing. Mademoiselle did love dainties, and as the old Herr von Meerfeldt had allowed her to choose the menu for that festive occasion, it had been a genuine French one.

The Frau Counselor remarked afterward it had tasted well; but what the separate courses really had been composed of she had never well understood; there might have been everything in the world in the ragout; and she believed now that in the year '70 the Parisians had prepared giraffes and ostri[illegible] so that they really tasted well [illegible] such a sauce anything would [illegible] well—even shoe leather.

"How is Tante Dettchen?" asked Hortense.

"Very well; the children are devoted to her; and George writes, now she is there, everything is comfortable once more."

"Will he marry again?"

"I can not say. But sit down, Hortense; or shall we go upstairs to my room?"

But Hortense was already seated on the chest by the stove which she had given to Lucie and was looking earnestly at her.

"How blooming you look," she said, smiling; "that is your old face once more."

The young wife blushed deeply. "I am happy," she said.

"Come here, Lucie," begged Hortense; and as they sat side by side the baroness whispered to her: "Are you still angry with me, Lucie? I wanted so much to ask you at your wedding, but you looked so grave, so lost to everything but what you were doing, that I did not dare to."

"Ah, let that rest, Hortense. I was never angry with you, only grieved. I shiver when I think of that time when we both imagined we were free and happy and so superior to other people, and I was really wearing my heart out. God be thanked, it is over now."

Hortense was silent for a time.

"You are right; it seems sometimes to me now that I must have been in a terrible feverish dream. It is beautiful to wake from it. But you, Lucie, you came here in a healthy state of mind. I poisoned it. I want to know whether you can forgive me?"

"Ah, a thousand times, Hortense. I know now how to prize my happiness aright. Rest contented about that." She leaned over and kissed her friend. "Hark!" she cried, springing up, "there are sleigh-bells!"

She hurried out and down the snow-covered path. A sleigh had stopped before the golden gate, and a man in a fur coat sprung out.

"Alfred," she cried, joyously.

"What, my foolish wife!" he answered, in a joyous tone. "I really must scold you, though we are only married three days. You will take cold. Come here, you naughty girl," he continued, and drew the slight figure to him, wrapping his big fur coat around them both, and so they came slowly up the walk in a close embrace—like lovers in May. "What has my little wife been doing in my absence?" he asked, affectionately; "has she been thinking of me?"

"I have had no time to miss you. I have been making a herring salad for our guests."

He laughed loud and happily. They now stood at the house door, over which the evergreen wreaths still hung with the inscription "God bless your entrance." They looked earnestly at each other, and he bent down and kissed her. They could hear the chimes beginning that were to ring out the old year.

"Take me under your coat too! I am cold," said a laughing man's voice beside them. It was Waldemar Weber.

Lucie flew, blushing deeply, into the room to Hortense.

"They are both coming," she cried.

The young baroness turned to her smiling; she had been standing at the window.

They were soon seated at the table—four happy people, talking of everything under the sun, as happy people do.

Then the doctor stood up; he held a glass in one hand, and with the other seized Lucie's right. Just then the clock on the mantel struck twelve.

"A new year!" he said, with emotion. "Let us welcome it. May it fulfill the promise of happiness which the parting one has brought to us in so rich a measure!"

A Personal Bill of Fare.

A squire of Andover once hired a brother of Patrick, who was in his employ. The terms were made with Pat before his brother's arrival, and the following conversation ensued:

Squire—I'll pay your brother one fifty a day, Patrick.

The squire thought that Dennis had better eat himself.

"JIMUEL BRIGGS."

A Kindly But Mirth-Provoking Sketch of the Well-Known Toronto Socialist, Mr. Phillips Thompson.

Although Mr. Phillips Thompson assisted other gentlemen in the work of warning English toilers to "keep away from Canada," as the advertisements have it, he seems to have fallen out with the unions which were engaged in the same endeavor. Phillips Thompson says unionism is effete and he declines to have anything more to do with it, writes Day by Day in Toronto News. This, from the author of "The Politics of Labor!" This from a publicist who has fought upon a hundred platforms side by side with the men whom he now pronounces to be all wrong! Surely Phillips Thompson knows that only a week ago it was announced that the District Labor Council represents well-nigh twelve thousand Torontonians. How can he expect to fight this phalanx? But it is easy to foresee Mr. Thompson's course. He will go on his way undismayed. His withers are unwrung and his courage is sempiternal. He has fought many a battle, all uncaring whether or not victory could be his. The principle of the thing has been what has always actuated the kindly Jimuel Briggs. In public life as denunciatory as a Robespierre; in private as mild as a Vicar of Wakefield, is Phillips Thompson. The things he says about capitalists and the things he says he would have done to capitalists are enough to make one's hair stand on end. Fire flashes from those mild eyes, and seething words come from behind these conciliating whiskers. This, though, is when it is time to discuss the iniquities of the social system. On other and social occasions the ferocity is replaced by a mildness and suavity that would sit well on a physician taking up practice in a new town.

However, Phillips Thompson's virile pen has been dipped in gall once more. His Socialists, he hastens to acquaint the public by way of the press, are the only genuine blown-in-the-bottle, see-registered-trade-mark Socialists. The public is warned to beware of all others, which are base imitations. Mr. Thompson writes a heart-curdling denunciation of the rival article, which leaves the well-meaning but obtuse reader in a state of wonderment as to which kind of Socialists he should join. Given an aspiring though ignorant young man who desires to become a Simon Pure revolutionist. How is he to know whether he is getting the genuine article, no matter which body he may cleave unto? If he be wise, he will not accept any ex parte statement from interested people. He might well demand affidavits in the well-known patent medicine style. Let the two clans get up their testimonials. Let them produce documents setting forth that the deponents have tried, as the case may be, this or that line of Socialism, and have experienced no benefit. And then should come the declaration that, having switched to the other brand, they immediately became cured of satisfaction and bovine acquiescence in the present social order, and were recognized by all thinking men as genuinely inoculated with the Socialistic (no offence meant) virus, Mr. Thompson should not leave the plow in the furrow.

GAME IN CANADA.

Lots of It, Says a Man Who Has Been Here Recently.

Warham Whitney, of Rochester, N. Y., was at the Holland House, New York, for a day recently, at the end of a hunting trip of several weeks in Newfoundland and New Brunswick. He was in the Adirondacks through August, and when September opened he was off for Newfoundland. "Plenty of game and fish—splendid sport," was his comment on his experience in Newfoundland. "Much of the country," said he, "is a marshy plain, but there is plenty of caribou. I saw more than three hundred of them—twenty-eight in one herd, and I brought some trophies of my marksmanship and good fortune home with me. Proof of the plentitude of game was the variety on one occasion in our camp larder. We had black duck, teal duck, caribou meat and trout. The big game in New Brunswick is moose. They come to the water night and morning, and the quiet coves, where they can stand in the water and nip the lily pods, is the place to get them unawares. I have the head of one I shot. Of course, one must endure some hardships on such a trip, but when it is all over the mounted heads upon the wall at home bring back the whole experience as a pleasing reminiscence. Up in Newfoundland quiet water surfaces, lakes and the like, are always 'steadies,' and the running streams are 'rapids,' while in New Brunswick the lakes are 'dead water,' the streams are 'quick water,' and a cove is a 'hogan.'"

Just Beyond Reach.

A band of Canadian Mormons, who recently attended the Salt Lake Conference, had a curious experience at the border line on returning. The Raymond, Alberta, Chronicle thus describes it: "At Coutts, when an inspection of the baggage was being made by the Canadian customs officiels and the train was south of the line, a row was started between some cowboys on the station platform, and guns were drawn and used. The fracas took place within a few feet of the passenger coach, and one of the flying bullets came through a window and out the opposite side, passing within a few inches of Mr. and Mrs. L. King, and Mayor and Mrs. McCarty, showering them with chips of wood and broken glass. Within a few feet of the shooters were some Mounted Police, but the red line on the platform was between them, preventing an arrest. On the American side no peace officers were around. It is a matter of record that all these little incidents at Coutts take place south of the line, the prudence of belligerents never allowing them to get within reach of the Canadian law."

THE EGOIST.

The Story of a Phonograph.

Cecil Arthur Dovely could not understand why he made no progress with Mary Barclay. His position as the chief dispenser of pills and postage stamps in the biggest drug store of a country town had given him an exaggerated idea of his own importance He was not a particularly bad looking young man, but was very conceited in his manner. His broad, high forehead was surmounted by his carrot colored hair brushed a la pompadour; his eyes, a light blue, were lacking in strength and expression, and his dress was just a trifle too flashy for the station in life he had been called upon to fill. To crown all, he owned a horse and buggy—that charmed possession which in rural communities so enhances one's prestige with the eligible young ladies. Cecil, who was not a bad fellow at heart, had kept the girls of Rossville and their anxious mothers guessing for a long time, and the news that he had been offered a partnership in his employers' store did not lessen feminine interest in him. He used to ride around the circle of Rossville femininity and select whom he would to go "buggy riding" with him on a Sunday afternoon. There was one young lady in the town who resisted Dovely's wiles, or, rather, those of his horse and buggy, and the prospect of a partnership in a partnership, and she it was whom Cecil, with no other motive at first than perversity, determined to win.

One day he decided on a grand attack upon the fortress of Mary's heart. He wrote for permission to call on a certain evening, and received it. Thus encouraged, he awaited the event which would mark him victor or vanquished. He scarcely hoped for the former, he dreaded the latter. He sought to embellish his language with quotations from the poets and studied the most effective manner in which to exploit his many captivating qualities.

It is, therefore, needless to say that when he called on her he talked principally about himself. He was, however, quite puzzled at the sudden and energetic interest that Mary seemed to manifest in all that he said; but, encouraged by it, he soared into giddy heights of eloquent self exploitation. He wound up the whole monologue with a passionate avowal of his love for Mary and an almost tearful entreaty for her heart and hand in return. Mary was genuinely interested in Cecil, and, in consequence, he was the very last person in the world she would have suspect it. So she tried to simulate indifference by affecting a sort of platonic feeling for him. Such a regard, however, did not come up to Dovely's requirements, and when he objected to being side tracked from the main line of love to the siding of sisterly affection and demanded a direct response to his appeal Mary showed an inclination to temporize. In brief, she asked him to call upon her a week later, and if, after mature consideration, he were of the same mind, she might think the matter over seriously. Dovely protested that his present frame of mind was not the result of sudden impulse, but the full blown flower which she had planted in his bosom with the first glance of her eyes long ago. He vowed that the end of time would find his love unaltered and unalterable—all of which he had read in "How to Propose, or Every Man His Own Lovemaker." Mary, however, remained firm, and Dovely went back to his pills and plasters. It would be vain to describe the battles fought between hope and fear, exultation and despair, in the young drug clerk's brain during that week. He was sustained somewhat by his inordinate vanity, but beneath all lay the suspicion, ever so faint, perhaps, that Mary had been laughing at him. When poor Dovely pulled the bell handle of the Barclay house on the appointed night, he was so full of nervous uncertainty that his knees trembled and his heart seemed to smite his ribs in the very terror of doubt.

The door was opened by Mary, who received him with such a pleased look and cordial pressure of her soft, warm hand that his conceit, coward that it was, as soon as it believed all danger to be passed, mounted again to the most conspicuous heights and crowed more lustily than before. The magic of her glance transformed him from the suppliant to the prince, and he strutted across the hall to the drawing room and seated himself in the best chair, prepared to receive homage from the girl.

Mary expressed great joy at his kindness in calling and archly confessed that she had suffered not a little fear that something might detain him. These delicate compliments caused Cecil considerable chest expansion, and when Mary humbly begged to be excused for a few minutes while she attended her mother, who was ill, he granted her the brief respite with almost royal graciousness. When she had gone Cecil picked up a magazine and was complacently perusing its prosy and academic pages when he was startled by the sound of voices in the same room with himself. He looked about quickly and, seeing no one, experienced a sensation of fear. As the sounds proceeded Dovely sat in mute amazement. For a moment he suspected that he was going mad. He was superstitious, but ghosts, according to his way of thinking, always manifested themselves to the eyes rather than the ears and with shrouds rather than dialogues. There was something uncanny in the sounds, too, as if issuing from a metal casket. Dovely would have attempted an investigation, but very fear held him rooted to the chair. He could not escape, and he began to feel that he had been selected by some restless spirits as the custodian of their confidences. The sound of the voices at first seemed like an echo of something he had heard before, and this circumstance deepened his perplexity. The conversation seemed to be between a man and a woman. The man's tones were imperious, those of the woman half flattering, half conciliatory.

"You know men are such deceivers," the voice was saying. "You play with a woman's heart as a child does with a toy. Then you look for another that is newer to you, though perhaps not to some others, and another fellow, who perhaps has thrown aside and bruised the heart that you pick up, comes along and picks up the very heart that you have thrown aside."

A soft laugh of tolerant condescension followed this speech.

"Oh, that's the old story with women," replied the man, "you are all wrong; you don't understand man. Your feminine minds can't grasp the depth and breadth of his nature. I have tried often to make some women soar with me to loftier realms of thought, but I have never found one to sympathize with my poetic or artistic moods."

Here a soft little sigh, like a zephyr touching the maple leaves, stole across the room, and then the imperious tones resumed:

"I know women. I've seen a good deal of life. Didn't I live more than a year in New York?"

The perspiration stood out in beads on Dovely's forehead as he stared in the direction of the voices and clutched the arms of the chair in which he sat. It seemed like a nightmare. The echo was getting clearer and clearer. He hated the dreadful sounds, but felt that he must suffer the ordeal to the end. And memory told him that the end was yet a long way off and the path thereto full of thorns of humiliation and shame for him. He began to feel like a disembodied spirit that stands beside its erstwhile prison and contemplates with horror the ravages that debauchery has wrought on its once beautiful form. But through the nightmare he was sustained by the sweet reflection that he was not irreclaimable and that this scourging was at worst only a severe lesson from which he would emerge a better man.

The imperious tones of the man and the conciliatory, even pleading, tones of the woman went on. With deep humiliation he followed the mysterious dialogue to the crowning point of his own shame. He could hear the soft, solicitous tones of the woman leading the man on to make a fool of himself. And he heard the man following with braggadocio and bombast right up to the very pitfall that had been prepared for him. The grandiloquent and preposterous phrases in which a proposal was next couched struck him as being so comically conventional that he would have laughed aloud had not the humiliating reflection of his own conduct covered him instead with shame. Then he heard a sweet voice asking him to think it over and then come back in a week, if he were still of the same mind. Even then he did not realize the truth. He wondered if he were not asleep and this an awful dream. The volume that he had been holding fell from his knee and startled him. He put his hand to his forehead and brushed the beads of perspiration away and said: "Thank God, it was a dream."

At that moment Mary entered the room and smilingly apologized for keeping him waiting. She drew a hassock over to him, and, seating herself, upon it and looking up in his eyes, said: "I'm awfully sorry I kept you waiting, Arthur; I know you must have been so lonely. But there"—she stopped suddenly and knitted her brows—"I really believe you have been asleep and dreaming. You look it, quite."

The poor young man took her hand in both his own and looked fixedly at her. "I don't know whether I've been asleep or not, but I certainly must have been dreaming—such a horrid dream"—and he passed his hand quickly over his eyes as if to wipe away the last traces of a nightmare. Then he took her hand again. "Mary," he said slowly, "you told me to come back tonight if I were still of the same mind as when I was here last. I have come to tell you that I am not of the same mind."

Mary looked surprised and would have spoken, but Dovely broke in quickly: "It is not that I don't love you as much as ever—aye, a great deal more than ever before—but I feel that I have been a fool; that I'm not worthy of you, and that it was a presumption for me to ask you to marry me. I believe that I can be a more modest and sensible man, and that I want you to give me the opportunity to prove it before giving me your answer."

Mary's answer was worthy of her brain and her heart:

"Arthur," she said, "what you have said proves that you are all right, and I'll take you on faith." Next morning the phonograph was sent back to town, it having succeeded in eliminating forever the capital "I" from the personality of Cecil Arthur Dovely, and the fun of it was that Cecil thought he did it himself.—Toronto Times-Herald.

"BLOTCHY" FACES

How many have to say "My pimply face is the bane of my life"—How few would have it to say if they gave Dr. Agnew's Ointment the testing that Mr. Lilly did.

"I have found Dr. Agnew's Ointment the best remedy for pimples and sore faces that I have ever used. I had three trying cases under my care and have cured them with this greatest of skin remedies. All traces of the sores in each case have been cleared off and the skin left as soft as a baby's. I recommend it everywhere." —Chas. H. Lilly, West Pittston. Price 35cts. 87

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Thos. Hewitt treated the ladies and children at the mines to a sleigh ride on Christmas day. In the morning he took out two sleigh loads of children and in the afternoon three of ladies.

Mrs. J. Gorman was the hostess at a very enjoyable dance given at her home at Tonkin on Saturday evening. There were about forty invited guests present and all spent a very pleasent evening.

The Rev. A. Stoney wishes to express his appreciation and gratitude to members of the Miners' Union and other friends who subscribed, unknown to him, the sum of money that was so kindly presented to him on Christmas eve.

A CHINAMAN INJURED.

On Saturday evening last, a chinaman whilst on his way to visit some friends near the hospital had the misfortune to fall over the bank of the Wild House creek. He had a lantern in his hand, and how he came to mistake his way cannot be clearly explained. He fell some 20 feet, and fortunately, was caught in the irrigation flume, which broke his fall and saved him from being killed. His cries attracted Mr. Galbraith, who immediately gave the alarm, and a rescue party started out to find him. After searching for some time they found him in the flume, and it was with some difficulty that he was rescued and carried hence to the house of a Chinese friend, where he was attended to by Dr. Watt. It was found on examination that his leg was broken at the ankle and his body was covered with bruises. He is now on a fair way to recovery.—Fort Steele Prospector.

THE FERNIE ORCHESTRA.

Fernie's new orchestra which made its first public appearance at the Masonic ball on Thursday evening has already earned the highest encomiums of all who have had the pleasure of listening to its excellent music. It is the general opinion that the music supplied on New Year's eve was the best dance music ever given in Fernie.

The personnel of the orchestra is as follows:

H. L. Staebler, leader, piano.
Keith Whimster, violin.
Mr. Coulston, violin.
E. J. Eacrett, clarionet.
Thos. Mazzanobile, cornet.
Mr. Webb, trombone.

CONSERVATIVES TO CONVENE.

Houston and Wilson to be Deposed from their Positions as Leaders.

Vancouver, Dec. 29.—A meeting of the provincial conservative executive was held here yesterday to take into consideration a number of burning questions. One of these was the mutinous disposition of John Houston, who, despite his formal reading out of the party by attorney-general Wilson, manifests a disquieting disposition to exercise the duties of the office reposed in him by the conservatives of the province in convention.

The latest manifestation of Houston's determination to assert himself takes the form of a call to convention of the conservatives of Kootenay, signed by Houston, as president of the Liberal-Conservative Association of British Columbia. The convention is for the purpose of nominating a conservative candidate for the Dominion house.

Hon. R. F. Green denies Houston's authority, and claims that he, as the representative of the cabinet in Kootenay, is the man to summons the party together in that district.

Another equally warm question is that of the leadership. To put an end to the curious position of having its duly elected leader but a lieutenant under McBride, the executive has decided to call a convention for early in February.

Hon. Charles Wilson, the nominal head of the British Columbia tories, will then be quietly deposed, and the youthful premier McBride formally made chieftain.

The leaders of the party endeavored to conceal this intention from the press but it leaked out today, much to their disgust. While no serious trouble has yet arisen, friction between the friends of Wilson and McBride is feared. Hence the decision to take early action to remove any cause for misunderstanding.—

(From an interview with Hon. R. F. Green by a representative of the Nelson News it would appear that there is no truth in the report so far as the Nelson convention is concern.)

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Fernie has enjoyed excellent weather during the christmas holidays. Just enough snow for excellent sleighing, just enough frost for good skating, and days so clear, so beautiful and so mild that the most delicate children could be taken out with impunity.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

This preparation is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and influenza. It has become famous for its cures of these diseases over a large part of the civilized world. The most flattering testimonies have been received, giving account of its good works; of the aggravating and persistent coughs it has cured; of severe colds that have yielded promptly to its soothing effects, and of the dangerous attacks of croup it has cured, often saving the life of a child. The extensive use of it for whooping cough, has shown that it robs that disease of all dangerous results. It is especially prized by mothers because it contains nothing injurious and there is not the least danger in giving it even to babies. It always cures and cures quickly. Sold by all druggists and dealers.

MICHEL DISASTER

Seven Men Killed and Two Injured in No. 3 Mine, Michel.

AN EXPLOSION OF GAS BRINGS SORROW TO MANY HOMES.

THE DEAD

David J Roberts, married, family in South Wales.
John Sale, married, family in Durham Connty, England.
Thos. Evans, from Wales.
Richard S. Thomas, from Wales.
William King, from Durham County, England.
Burdett Dean.
William McAllister, shot-lighter, from Scotland.

So far as is known the last five are all single. Nothing is known of Dean.

THE INJURED

Frank Adonchak, Slavonian, only a few days in camp, burned, will recover.
William Powell, Overman, slightly bruised.

MINE WHERE EXPLOSION TOOK PLACE.

A serious explosion took place in No. 3 Mine, Michel, yesterday afternoon, in which seven miners lost their lives and two others received injuries.

The explosion took place in the west side of the lower level shortly after 2 o'clock. Overman Powell was in the main entry at the time, where the concussion was so great as to force him against a car, causing slight bruises. He at once made his way out and gave the alarm. Others from the east side also felt a slight shock and made their way out.

seven bodies apparently dead were found. All efforts to revive these bodies proved futile.

Word was received at the Company's office here, over the telephone, at 2:30 o'clock, and Coroner Trites, Chief Engineer Wright, Acting Supt. Drinnan, Geologist Leach and Doctor Corsan were hurried to the scene of the disaster. A thorough examination as far as the face was made by the experts and a survey was drawn. No damage was sustained by the mine. They were unable to determine the cause of the explosion. It is

TOWN OF MICHEL WHERE DISASTER OCCURRED.

No time was lost in starting the work of rescue. Willing men, among them Superintendent Wilson, forced their way into the deadly afterdamp with the hope of rescuing their comrades. They reached Frank Adonchak, who was ovarcome, and bore him to the open air, where he soon recovered consciousness. The afterdamp was so dense as to overpower the rescuers and render their work slow. Superintendent Wilson and others had to be carried out. The explosion, however, appeared to be of a local nature, and gradually they were able to advance to the scene of the greatest loss where expected that F Adonchak will be able to throw some light on the subject.

The bodies, by request, were left unwashed until viewed by the coroner. The latter, after giving the necessary orders for burial, adjourned the inquest until Inspector McGregor can be present. The Coal Company ordered caskets to be taken to Michel on last evening's express. The bodies were considerably burned, but not otherwise marked. The funerals will likely take place to-morrow.

Of the unfortunate victims, Messrs. Roberts, Evans, Thomas and McAllister are well known in Fernie, having resided in these camps for periods ranging from one to three years. Messrs. Sale and King were members of the English party that arrived last summer.

Three miners were Providentially saved from the horrible fate of their friends by being called from their work at the face of this mine by a wire from Fernie summoning them to the bed-side of a dying friend named Wm. Brain.

FIRST HOCKEY GAME.

Fernie wins easily from Pincher Creek—Heavy Score of 15 goals to 2.

The first league hockey game of the season was played on Fernie ice on Wednesday evening between the locals and the Pincher Creek seven. The game, though somewhat one-sided, was interesting, and the large crowd which witnessed it evinced a great deal of enthusiasm. The visitors succeeded in making one goal in each half and the locals piled up a score of 7 in the first half and 8 in the second half.

The teams were:

PINCHER		FERNIE
Ohmstead	goal	McKellar
Schwackhammer	point	Miller
Ormond	cover point	Kastner
Boyce	centre	McLaughlin
McTavish	right wing	Brown
Gunn	rover	Stephens
Goodreau	umpires	Rhodes
Bleasdell	time keepers	J. Miller

Referee—W. H. Buchanan, of Frank.

The play started with the puck continually on the enemy's defence. After several shots a swift one from Stephens found the net, time 3 min. Another minute of similar play and the same player worked his way through the defence and did the trick again. The play continued in the same quarter. Stephens got the puck from a face-off and scored the third goal from centre, time 2 min. Pincher began to waken up and forced the play on the Fernie net and Dobbie made a close shot which got past McKellar, time 2 min. Some nice combination work between McLaughlin and Brown resulted in Fernie's fourth score, the former making the lucky shot, time 3 min. One blue and one red shirt adorned the fence for two minutes, Pincher stiffened their play and for ten minutes honors were fairly even. Stephens landed again, time 11 min. McLaughlin scored the 7th game, time 4 min. Pincher made several unsuccessful rushes and after four minutes play Dan Lafortune followed the rubber around the net and landed at close quarters. Half time. Score 7-1.

The second half was a repetation of the first. At the end of one minute's play Lafortune made the net shake. Stephens and McLaughlin took the puck down the ice and the former scored, time 2 min. Stephens was ruled off for two minutes. Kastner negotiated the next two for the locals by long shots from cover point, time 1 and 4 minutes respectviely. Lafortune then got in some pretty work, coming down the ice he fell twice in succession but in spite of two opponents he scored, time 1 min. McLaughlin four minutes later made a brilliant rush but fell, Lafortune got it and landed. Pincher then made a special effort to retrieve their fallen fortunes and finally McTavish struck the net with a side shot, time 5 min. One minute later Brown got in a seemingly impossible drive from a side angle. Stephens and Gunn got into a scrimmage and both were ordered to the fence for five minutes. The last goal was scored by Stephens who received a pass from Brown. Time 8 min.

The checking was fairly heavy, the visitors trying by this means to hold the score down. The Fernie forwards played more individually than they doubtless would have done had they been pushed harder. The locals showed more speed than in previous years and with team practice their chances are excellent for Monday's game at Medicine Hat.

PUCKERINGS

Stephens is easily the best all-round hockeyist ever on Fernie ice.

Brown has earned a permanent place on the team.

Miller is a good lifter and a heavy check.

McLaughlin is a swift player and understands facing off.

The old players need no other mention than that they are better than ever.

Boyes deserves special mention.

Gunn is better than last year and Moore is greatly missed by the Pincher team.

Now for Medicine Hat.

Wm. Brain died at the hospital yesterday from liver complaint contracted while working in the gold coast region of Africa. The funeral took place today.

REPORT OF C. N. P. COAL CO. FOR 1903

A SUCCESSFUL YEAR. TOTAL OUTPUT 661,118 TONS.

Statistics Showing the Steady Progress of the Company.

The year 1903 has been the most successful one in the history of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company, notwithstanding the serious strike which tied up the collieries for a couple of months and which threatened the very life of the metalliferous mining industry of the province. The following statistics, arranged in concise form, will give our readers a comprehensive idea of the present condition of the industry and its rate of progress over the preceding year:

COAL OUTPUT. (Net tons)

YEAR	COAL CREEK	MICHEL	MORRISSEY	TOTAL
1902	267,429	127,525	46,292	441,236
1903	242,673	263,590	154,855	661,118
Increase	*24,756	136,075	108,563	219,882
Increase, per centum	* 9	107	235	50

* Decrease.

The mines are under a state of development with a view to a continually growing output, so that it is reasonable to expect that next year's output will be considerably in advance of that for 1903.

The output was materially affected by the strike, which closed operations in February and March. On the basis of the output for the other months, the year's output would be 773,108 tons of coal, and 196,014 tons of coke.

The coal production for the week ending Jan. 2nd, 1904, amounted to 14,321 tons, contributed by the three collieries as follows: Coal Creek 5,307 tons, Michel 5,504 tons and Morrissey 3,510 tons. This was 3,110 tons more than that of the preceding week and 800 tons more than that of the corresponding week of the preceding month. This output, while considerably short of the weekly record, is very satisfactory when it is considered that the mines were closed on New Year's day, and were worked short handed on Monday following pay-day and Saturday following the holiday.

The coke returns for the same week amounted to 4,389 tons.

The month of December was a record smasher in the matter of coke shipments. During that month the company shipped 25,425 tons of coke, being an increase over the previous monthly record of 35 per cent. The largest previous month was Aug., 1903, when 18,900 tons were shipped. It may be added that this large record is partly due to the clearing out of the overplus caused by the car shortage.

WEEKLY OUTPUT.

The FREE PRESS will henceforth publish the output for the mines for each week ending on Friday evening. The output for the week ending January 8th, is given below, together with that for the corresponding period last year, showing an increase of over 70 per cent.

GOVERNMENT OFFICES, FILLED WITH FERNIE MEN, WANTED.

Board of Trade take Important Action—Road to Flathead from Fernie—Other Business.

An important executive meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade was held last evening in Cree & Hutchison's office.

The question of a government road to the Flathead country was taken up and a committee comprising Messrs. H. W. Herchmer, Quail and A. B. Trites appointed at a previous meeting to investigate into the merits of the different routes, reported in favor of the route from Fernie. They had gathered valuable information on this subject from W. W. Leach of the geological department of the Coal Co. who had made frequent explorations over the territory covered by the different routes and he had stated that the proposed route up Coal Creek to the south fork of Michel creek was the most feasible route, taking into consideration the nature of the country, grades, etc.

Mr. Leach had sketched a map showing the respective routes, from Fernie, Morrissey and Elko which clearly showed the superiority of the route from Fernie, Mr. Leach had agreed to be present but unfortunately had been called to Michel last evening. He would at a future time go more fully into the matter.

The board in the face of this information were unable to endorse the resolution of the Morrissey board favoring the route from that town, but instead unanimously adopted a resolution asking the government to build a road into the Flathead at once and urging the merits of the Fernie route. They also decided to circulate a petition to the same effect.

The secretary of the board was instructed to write the Minister of Customs of Ottawa setting forth, in view of the rapid influx of settlers expected in the Flathead country in the spring, the need of a customs station on the Flathead river at the boundary line.

GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

The board then grappled with the question of government officers for the Fernie district, which it handled without gloves. The following resolution was moved by H. W. Herchmer, seconded by A. H. Cree and unanimously adopted by the meeting.

"Resolved that the government be asked to appoint at once a government agent, assessor, collector, mining recorder and other government offices at Fernie for the Fernie electoral district and that proper government buildings be erected, and further, that the officials appointed be selected from bone fide residents of the district.

Copies of this resolution will be sent to the Fernie member and the premier.

Needed funds for the fire protection again occupied the attention of the executive and a resolution was passed asking the government for a substantial grant. It was shown in the preamble that the government had never assisted in the protection of the town although they were receiving protection to their buildings in town.

A resolution sent up from the Morrissey board to the effect that the rate between Morrissey and Fernie was in excess of 4 cents per mile and should be reduced, was endorsed by the Fernie board.

A general meeting of the Board will be held on Monday evening next to confirm the resolution adopted by the executive.

WHITE ROSES

By ELSIE CARMICHAEL

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

Dick walked down the avenue slowly, so deeply absorbed that he looked straight at Mrs. De Peyster Jones and cut her, to that young woman's surprise.

"Why, what can the matter be with Dickie?" she said to herself, with an almost irresistible impulse to turn around and look after the melancholy figure sauntering down the street.

Mildred Jones had been a friend of Dick Eton's ever since they had played in the park and gone to dancing school together. Two years before she had married De Peyster Jones, and now one of her greatest pleasures was chaperoning Dick and his various ladyloves.

"I believe Dick's in love again," she exclaimed, half aloud, "or perhaps this is the real thing at last. I wish it were and Dickie would settle down."

At the same moment Dick was passing a florist's. A happy thought struck him.

"I'll settle it tonight," he said to himself. "I'll make Doris say whether she cares for me or not. If she won't have me I'll, I'll"— His eyes wandered up and down the crowded avenue, brilliant in the spring sunshine. I'll do something desperate," he threatened.

He went into the shop, heavy with the fragrance of roses and violets, and tried to decide what he would send her. He was going to take her to a musicale at Mrs. Schuyler's that evening, and as he had forgotten to ask her the color of her gown he chose white roses. Going to the desk, he took out a visiting card and stood hesitating, pen in hand. Should he leave it to the flowers or ask her tonight at the musicale? He remembered a particularly cozy and retired corner behind the palms in Mrs. Schuyler's conservatory.

"No, I cannot wait until then," he thought. "I'll let the flowers speak."

"SO YOU COULDN'T CARRY THEM, DORIS!" HE CRIED HOARSELY.

Hastily he wrote on the card, "If you care for me a little bit, Doris, carry this tonight."

Then he sealed it up and gave it to the man. "Send the flowers at once to 37 West —th street," he said as he paid for them. "On no account let there be any delay."

"Arrah, thin, I want some flowers, a rale illigant design, for me cousin, Mrs. O'Flannagan, who's dade," exclaimed a voice. A large, showily dressed, red faced Irish woman pushed past him to the counter.

Dick went out of the shop filled with mingled feelings of doubt, uncertainty and a great love for Doris. As he strolled over to the club he marveled at his own presumption in asking such a peerless creature to come down to earth for his sake.

That evening while he was waiting for Doris he roamed restlessly about the great drawing room. When a little rustle of silken draperies announced her comming he stood like a soldier at attention, awaiting his sentence. The portieres were pushed aside, and Doris, in a trailing white gown, stood outlined against the heavy curtain—Doris with her blue eyes flashing ominously—and with empty hands.

Everything seemed to spin around.

"So you couldn't carry them, Doris!" he cried hoarsely, while his hand clasped the back of the chair.

"I don't see how you could have asked such a thing," she said icily. She was still standing and did not make any movement to come nearer him.

"I know it was presumptuous," he admitted mournfully.

She laughed mirthlessly. "I thought at first that you meant it as a joke," she said. She walked over to the fireplace, her long, fluffy skirt trailing behind her on the polished floor. The firelight played on her hair, on her white, sculptured shoulders and her exquisite arms. Dick thought that she had never looked so beautiful, and his hands tightened on the carved oak chair back.

"I knew you were always playing jokes on people," she went on, "but I never supposed you could joke about such a thing as this."

She looked up at him as he towered above her. He was a very good looking man, she admitted, with his splendid athletic build and his well bred, clear cut features. Then she dropped her eyes to the fire again.

"So you really had the impudence to send it?" she said cruelly.

Dick became a little angry. "I may be presumptuous," he cried, "but I fail to see why you should look on it as impudent. Because a man sends a girl flowers and shows her that he cares for her with all the depths of his being you think he is impudent."

"Well, I don't care for your taste," she exclaimed. "I consider the whole thing an insult, Mr. Eaton, and I do not care to be one of the girls on whom you play such jokes. I have a headache and am not going to Mrs. Schuyler's tonight. Shall I ring?"

Dick gathered himself together. "Good night," he said coldly and met the footman at the door.

After luncheon the next day he found himself in Mildred Jones' cozy little drawing room pouring out the whole story into her sympathetic ears.

"And you sent her white roses?" she inquired when he had finished the tale. "Yes, Doris was here at luncheon, and she told me all about it. I think, my dear boy, that there has been some great mistake. But don't be discouraged. I will try to manage some way to help you out. Doris was very angry, but I am sure she will forgive you."

There was an amused twinkle in her eyes that Dick could not understand, but he felt her sympathy and went back to the club with a lighter heart.

Perhaps an hour later he was called to the telephone and at once recognized Doris' voice.

"Hello! Is that you, Dick?" she said, and there was a joyous ring about it that set Dick's heart to beating. "Did you send me white roses yesterday?"

"Yes," he cried exultantly, "white roses and maidenhair."

Doris laughed. "Well, Dick, can—you—come up this evening?" She hesitated. "If you will come I will—er—carry your flowers." She shut off the telephone instantly, and Dick was left with the receiver at his ear and a beatific expression on his face.

It was with different feelings from those of the night before that he stood by the fire in Doris' drawing room that evening listening for her footstep. But so quietly she came that she stood between the portieres before he knew it. Doris, beautiful as ever, in softest rose color and holding in her hands—Dick, who had started forward with a glad cry, stopped, and his hands dropped to his side.

"Good heavens, Doris! Where did you get that awful thing?" he exclaimed.

Doris, with a merry laugh, held up a hideous form of red and white immortelles with stiff, red roses wired on toothpicks, spelling out the word "Hope." "Your flowers," she explained.

"Good Lord!" he gasped. "Doris, you didn't think I sent you that monstrosity, did you? Where are my roses?" Then his face cleared. "It was that miserable Irish woman!" he cried. "She came in as I went out to order some flowers for a funeral, and that stupid florist got the cards and addresses mixed."

"Never mind, Dick," she said, looking at him coquettishly. "You don't seem to realize that I am carrying your flowers." But the last word was almost lost as Dick crushed her in his arms, the "illigant design" and all.

Compounding a Prescription.

"I noticed," said the druggist to his assistant, "that a gentleman came in with a prescription and that you took it and gave him the stuff in about three minutes. What do you mean by that?"

"It was only a little carbolic acid and water," replied the assistant. "I simply had to pour a few drams of acid into the bottle and fill it up with water."

"Never mind if you had only to do that," the druggist declared. "Don't you know that every prescription must take at least half an hour to dispense, or the customer will think he isn't getting anything for his money?

"When a prescription for salt and water or peppermint and cough sirup is handed to you you must look at it doubtfully, as if it were very hard to make up. Then you must bring it to me, and we will both read it and shake our heads. After that you go back to the customer and ask him if he wants it today. When he says he does you answer that you'll make a special effort.

"Now, a patient appreciates a prescription that there has been so much trouble over, and when he takes it he derives some benefit from it. But don't you do any more of that three minute prescription business, my boy, if you want to become a first class druggist."—Boston Herald.

Not an Ostrich.

"Baby was playing with my thimble this morning, and I can't find it anywhere. Do you know what he did with it, Aunt Ella?"

"No; I have not seen it, Marjorie. Look on the floor."

"I cannot find it," said Marjorie. "I am sure he swallowed it."

"Don't be absurd! How could a baby swallow a thimble?" replied her aunt.

"Ella! I say, Ella! Have you seen my pearl necktie pin? Baby had it yesterday, and now I cannot find it. Do you think he could have swallowed it?"

"No, he couldn't," answered his sister curtly.

"Oh, please, mum, I can't find the egg beater anywhere. Baby had it yesterday, and now it's lost."

"Good heavens! Do you people think my baby is an ostrich?" cried the indignant mother.—New York Press.

SOUNDS A LOUD CALL

FOR REPENTANCE FOR PAST SINS ON LAST SABBATH OF DYING YEAR.

BEGIN A NEW LIFE IN CHRIST

Timely and Practical Theme of the Preacher Who Iterates and Reiterates God's Command "Repent! Repent! Repent Ye of Sin"—Why It Is a Wise Thing to Cease From Wrongdoing Now

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Hanly, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Dec. 27.—In this sermon, on the last Sabbath of the dying year, the preacher sounds a loud call for repentance of past sins and a resolution with divine help to begin a new life in Christ with the coming year. The text is Luke xiii., 5, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

Great accidents generally have their two classes of heroes. The one class is composed of dying heroes, the other of living heroes. When, a few weeks ago, a coal train crashed into the Big Four special which was carrying a thousand college students and their friends to Indianapolis to play for the State football championship the young men who were unhurt pulled and tugged at the derailed cars. They lifted up the mangled bodies of the dying, and they collected the mutilated remains of the dead. Young girls who in ordinary life would have screamed at the sight of a mouse or fainted at a vaccination in that awful crisis tore up their garments for bandages and bathed the white foreheads of their young friends who were about to pass away. On the other hand, those who were being aided were just as self sacrificing as those who were trying to alleviate physical sufferings and minister to spiritual wants. An acquaintance of mine arrived at that scene of horror only a short time after the tragedy occurred. He personally told me of the nobility of some of those maimed and dying heroes. One young man had crawled out of the wreck and was seated upon the ground with his thumb tightly pressed against an artery. His foot had been completely amputated by the wreck. When the doctor found him, he turned with a brave smile and said: "Never mind me, doctor. I am all right for the present. Go and help those poor fellows down there. They need you more than I." Dying athletes thought not of themselves. While tossing about in mortal agony they begged their friends not to let their fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers and sweethearts know how badly they were hurt.

We shudder at the details of these sudden and appalling calamities. It shocks us to think of strong men and delicate women, bright and gay and with apparently many years of happy life before them, being overwhelmed and crushed in one short hour by some terrific disaster. Yes, it is horrible. But, while we deplore and sympathize, let us not forget the lesson that Christ would have us learn from such catastrophes. To those who told him of a great and sudden sacrifice of life he said, "Ye, too, shall likewise perish unless you repent." He did not mean that their earthly lives would necessarily have a similar end, but that without repenting a doom beyond the grave as appalling as that they had described awaited them. The greatest railroad accident that ever took place, as when the Edinburgh express went down through the broken trestles of the Tay bridge; the greatest volcanic horror, as when Vesuvius emptied itself, and the two favorite resorts of Rome's aristocracy in one night were buried in their grave of ashes; the most awful of fires, as when Chicago was burned; are not to be compared to the horror of that day when sinners who have not repented of and turned from their sins shall hear their doom pronounced by a righteous God. Listen to the words of Jesus: "Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all Galileans because they suffered those things? I tell ye nay, but except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Repentance of sin is our subject. Repentance of sin is our imperative command.

Standing between the open grave of the dying year and the new made cradle of the coming year, we hear God thunder the command: "Repent! Repent! Repent ye of sin!" Not sorrow alone, though it includes that; not alone regret that we have sinned against a God so good and so loving, but renunciation. There is no real repentance until there is determination to abandon sin. It means that each sinner must first be willing to pluck the wriggling, hissing serpent of evil out of his heart and hurl it from him as though it had the poisonous fangs of a fatal cobra before Christ's blood will blot out the evil results of a hideous past. It means that the sinner has no ground for expecting heaven at the end of his course unless, through the power of Christ, he has renounced his sin. Either the repentant sinner, with wide open eyes, is walking directly toward the cross or else he is walking directly away from it.

What says Paul in reference to this renunciation of sin? To the church of Corinth he wrote: "Wherefore come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Without repentance of sin there can be no remission of sin. Now, my brother, my sister, come the practical and overpowering questions: Are you and I, on this last Sunday night of the year, ready to turn our backs upon sin? Are we ready to tear out this viper of evil habit which we have been nursing in our bosoms as a Nathan's pet lamb? Repentance of sin means more than to be merely sorry for sin. It means a complete renunciation of, a turning from, a repudiation of sin. Are you and I ready now to promise God that, with the help of the Holy Spirit, we will throttle our secret sins, even as the natives of India in bands go forth to destroy the man-eating prowler of the dark jungle?

And why should we not one and all be ready to turn our backs upon and renounce sin? In all the history of our lives is there one instance of yielding to sin in which sin has not proved itself our enemy? As a loathsome cancer has it not been eating at the vitals of our hearts? It has steadily been devouring our manhood and self respect. Why should we not be ready to renounce our sins and turn to Christ? Has not sin always been a curse and an enemy? Has not sin destroyed the best part of our lives?

Standing between the open grave of the dying year and the cradle of the year about to be born, my text is especially appropriate. Why? Though God offers pardon and peace for repentance of all past sins, he does not offer pardon for one sin that we intend to commit in the future. One drop of Christ's blood is sufficient to undermine and sweep away the mountain ranges of past evil. But to the man who is cherishing his sin, who will not break with it, who will not give it up, there is no promise. Pardon for the past is of no avail to a man who loves his sin and will accumulate a new load next year, next month or next week, though that sin be as small as a grain of sand by the seashore, as small as a microbe which can only be seen under the magnifying glass in the biologist's laboratory.

Many people mistakingly suppose that God's pardon applies to future as well as to past sins. They think it applies to those sins which we intend to commit as well as to those sins of which we are already guilty. In the Far East the Mohammedans suppose that earth and heaven are separated by a great chasm. Over this fathomless chasm are stretched many bridges, each the breadth of a hair in thickness. Over these infinitesimal bridges the immortal souls must pass from earth to heaven while glowing, hissing, bursting flames leaping up from the bottomless pit beneath scorch their feet and try to drag them down. So some people of Christian America foolishly think they can reach heaven, though they are deliberately and intentionally walking, as the Mohammedans imagine themselves doing, over the hot fires of evil. They believe God will pardon those sins which we intend to commit in the future as well as those sins which are already recorded against us upon the black pages of the past.

Abraham Lincoln's war cry against slavery was this: "A house divided against itself cannot stand. This country must become all slave or all free." In the same way, man cannot have two masters. "Either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other." Yet there have been thousands upon thousands of immortals who have been eternally destroyed because they thought they could serve God and Satan at the same time.

Pardon for the past sins. No pardon is promised for the future sins which we deliberately intend to commit. Mr. Moody, I think it was, gave this as his testimony: For many weeks and months he had been laboring with a business friend to give his heart to God. This man at last said: "Moody, I will do as you ask, but upon one condition. It has always been my ambition from a boy to be worth $100,000. I see that my wealth is rapidly nearing that mark. When I have that much in the bank, I shall then become a Christian and be a true, practical Christian as well as a professing one." From that moment the man's eternal destiny was sealed. His heart became hardened. He did reach his $100,000 milestone along the pathway of wealth, but he never reached the foot of the cross. Pardon for sins of 1903. Yes. But God offers no assurance of pardon for those sins which we deliberately mean to commit in 1904.

Standing between the open grave of the dying year and the cradle of the year about to be born, we should all repent of our sins. Why, again? Because the far reaching word "repentance" embraces another far reaching word, "restitution." Therefore, if we are going to try to undo the many wrongs of the past, we must be about our Father's business very quickly. God forgives those who truly repent, but the work of restitution or of atonement to our brother man who has suffered in body or soul by our wrongdoing belongs to us, and we know not how soon the opportunity of doing that work may pass away.

Sometimes it is not possible for us to undo the wrongs of the past. Mr. Beecher in one of his sermons related an incident illustrative of this impossibility. While he was living in Indianapolis a young man was enticed into a gambling den and there drugged and cheated out of all his money, some $1,500. This callow youth begged the robbers to give him back at least enough to pay his car fare home. They not only refused, but kicked him out into the street. Under their brutal treatment the young man was driven to commit suicide. The owner of that gambling den afterward repented of his share of the crime. "But," said Mr. Beecher, "all his repentance could not restore his victim's life and could not undo the wrongs of the past." In our lives there are thousands of wrongs we have done to others which we can never undo. Perhaps by some sinful invitation which we gave or by some evil example which we have paraded in our past life we have been the means of starting some man, some young woman, on a life of crime and have started them on a journey which ended in a drunkard's or a suicide's grave.

But though we may be unable to undo all wrongs we have done our neighbors we can make restitution for many of our past misdeeds, and one of the chief manifestations of true repentance is the expressed desire and willingness to personally atone, as far as lies within our power, for past faults. The widow of the famous artist John Opie once said: "I never saw my husband satisfied with any of his productions. Often, very often, have I seen him enter my room and throw himself in an agony of despondency on the sofa and exclaim, 'I never, never can be a painter as long as I live!'" "It was a noble despair, such as is never felt by the self complacent dauber of signboards," commented Charles H. Spurgeon. "It was a noble despair, which bore the aspirant up to one of the highest niches in the artistic annals of his country." The truly repentant sinner, too, has a noble despair in his restless and unsatisfied desire to make restitution for all the evil he has done. This desire will goad him on and on as long as he lives. Therefore, my brother, if you have a long and evil past, so far as possible you should lose no time in beginning the long and difficult task of trying to undo the wrongs you have done. One of the self evident proofs, patent to all, that Zaccheus was truly converted was the blunt statement he made to the Master when he said, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation I restore to him fourfold." Then Jesus said unto him, "This day is salvation come to this house."

True repentance can never take place without being accompanied by a holy longing to make restitution for an evil past. Then, my brother, you had better make haste to repent. There are many evil words you have spoken which you should try to recall. There are many bad influences you have exerted over your companions. There are many, very many, sins which you have committed in your homes the effects of which you should try to eradicate from the minds and hearts of your children. "Repent! Repent! Repent ye of sin!" Repent, so that you may be able, like Zaccheus, to return fourfold to those whom you have wronged. Restitution must go hand in hand with repentance.

There is still another reason for deep repentance of sin. The greater our self abnegation the more glorious will appear to us the forgiveness of God. The more we stand afar off and beat our breasts and, like the poor publican, say, "God be merciful to me, a sinner," the more joyous will be the Saviour's words which will welcome us into our Father's house when he says, "Son, daughter, thy sins are forgiven thee; go in peace." Then the burden of the cross will not be a burden, as you and I may have anticipated. It will be such a burden as Rutherford, the evangelist, described it when he said: "The burden of the cross is the sweetest burden I ever bore. It is such a burden as wings are to a bird or sails are to a ship, to carry me forward to the harbor of peace."

Deep repentance for sin naturally implies a corresponding gratitude toward Christ, who has redeemed us from the evil results of sin. The greater the danger the greater the love we have for our rescuer. I was never more impressed with this truth than last year, when the Chicago Presbytery banqueted its most honored member, Rev. Herrick Johnson, D.D., on his seventieth birthday. Without doubt Dr. Johnson is one of our most influential living ministers of the Presbyterian Church. He is not only a great ecclesiastical statesman and famous professor, but he has bound to him with golden cords of love all who know him and who have lived close to him. After the different Chicago ministers had spoken and expressed their deep respect for their honored guest Dr. Johnson rose to reply. With a sweet, gentle spirit looking out of his loving eyes, he said: "Brethren, I am overwhelmed with this overpowering manifestation of your love. I have done nothing to merit all this." Then, with a quavering voice, he gratefully laid all the happy results of life's work at the feet of his Saviour when in a simple, childlike way he repeated these trustful words:

I am a poor sinner and nothing at all,
But Jesus Christ is my all in all.

Ah, yes, such loving yearning, such tender turning with joyful and grateful face to a divine Saviour, are the immediate results of true repentance. The darker the clouds that hang over Mount Sinai the more rapturous the emptied sepulcher on Easter morn. The more awful the hurricane which tosses us about upon the sea of sin the more beautiful becomes the Bethlehem star, beckoning us across the still waters and into the harbor where the rescued mariners need never fear again the angry waves.

Still another reason for immediate repentance: The mute appeal of thousands upon thousands of immortals heading toward destruction who may be saved if we will only point them to the Way. The moment a repentant sinner is snatched from eternal death that moment he longs to rescue others threatened with the same danger. And, oh, my friends, how many sinners there are who may be saved if by the grace of God we will go forth to save them! But mark this—the unrepentant cannot rescue the unrepentant. The blind cannot lead the blind or they will both stumble into the ditch and be lost.

But while I have been talking relentless time has been pushing the minute hand around the face of the clock. Like one who waits for dissolution, the year 1903 is ready for the messenger to lead it forth to sleep in the graveyard of the other dead years. If we are to repent in 1903, we must do so soon, we must do it now! The messenger is knocking at the door. Goodby, old year! Goodby! Thou hast been a good friend to most of us. Goodby! When we meet thee before the judgment seat of Christ, may we hear thee testify that thou didst see the tear of penitence upon our cheek and that thou didst hear us say to our Heavenly King, "Father, take me as I am." Goodby, old year 1903!

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

Inspector Briggs tapped him on the shoulder.

We take pleasure in announcing that a new serial story will soon be published in this paper. It is written by one of the foremost writers in America—one who has made a name in the world of fiction.

Many detective stories have been written, but it has remained for Edmund Downey to construct a tale which from the ingenuity displayed in winding and unravelling the mazes of the plot undoubtedly places him in the front rank among writers of modern fiction.

It is a fascinating story—one which holds the interest of the reader from staft to finish—not a dull incident in any chapter, and is charmingly told.

AWFUL CALAMITY

Fire at a Chicago Matinee Performance.

SEVEN HUNDRED PEOPLE PERISH

Victims are Smothered, Trampled and Beaten in a Wild Rush for Safety--Bodies Found in Ghastly Heaps---Frightful Scenes at the Rescue---Most Fearful Theatre Disaster in World's History.

Two thousand persons, mainly women and children, sat in the newly completed Iroquois theatre, Chicago, on the afternoon of Dec. 30 and laughed at the antics of Mr. Bluebeard. Then there was an unexplained wait of five minutes for the curtain to go up on the fourth act. The audience became restless; a feeling of apprehension and dread chilled the playgoers and stopped the laughter and chatting. Then a thin curl of smoke crept up and around the curtain, the cry of fire was raised, a fearful stampede began, and in half an hour 838 of the audience lay dead —smothered, trampled, and beat to death in the mad rush for the open air.

In thirty minutes was enacted the most terrible theatre horror in the history of Chicago. Then the fire was controlled and the ghastly reckoning began. Not a soul escaped from the upper galleries, where the police found the dead piled ten deep. On the stage the victims were huddled in pitiful groups, down in the main floor and in the first balcony the floors were littered with the bodies of maimed and lifeless women and children, while in the basement, where they had grouped and fought through the coal vaults, seeking in vain for life, were hundreds trampled out of semblance to humanity.

DRAMATIC FEATURES.

The most fearful theatre horror that has befallen Chicago was marked by many dramatic features. With death lurking around, above and beneath him, Eddie Foy, the chief comedian of the company stood out from the panic-stricken group on the stage and assured the audience there was no danger. The one heroic member of the orchestra that had not fled, sat manfully at his task, sawing at his violin for dear life in an effort to drown the screams of the women. Even as Foy assured the people there was no danger, the great asbestos curtain was let down, caught on one side and failed to work. In another instant smoke burst from the top arch of the stage and from under the bottom of the curtain. Before a man or woman could rise the whole roof of the auditorium was ablaze.

BLACK CLOUD OF DEATH.

Two gas tanks exploded in the flies on the east side of the theatre, and black, choking fumes beat down in a cloud of death from every wall. That was all, and it was enough. Fear, uncontrollable and terrible, reigned. Men and women fought like beasts, filled only with the instinct of self-protection. Little babies slipped from the hands of their mothers, and in an instant their tender bodies were trampled to pulp. Children flung themselves from balconies and lay crushed and dying until suffocation ended their misery. The classic outlines of the theatre, the beautiful plush hangings, the arched windows, with their stained glass, the stately pillars, made up a hideous morgue 15 minutes after the first little ribbon of flame crept along the stage. Women and children in the gallery never had a chance for life. They met their fate, still seated in the orchestra chairs, their poor impotent hands burned into commingling cinder with the sides of the seats they had grasped when the panic came. Their mouths were open with horror and their glassy eyes were still glistening with the last fearful view they had taken of life. Others who had managed by sheer brute strength to get into the aisles found death awaiting them there in a mingled doom of smoke and fire and tearing limbs. Dozens of mothers, swept, carried or dragged out to the stairways, and even beyond them down to the landings in actual sight of the blessed daylight that streamed through the big front doors, in sight of the helpless throngs outside, the fire engines and smoking horses, died in great masses, seven and eight feet high, limbs mingled fearfully together, clothing burned off and faces caught in their last agonies all turned toward the life that was denied them.

The police, inured to terrible spectacles, were appalled and benumbed by the work before them. Headless, legless, bleeding forms were drawn out of the pit of death. Women with half their faces clawed away, children whose faces had been crushed to pulp by the heels of maddened men. Topmost on the hideous heap were several persons whose fingers had been torn to the bone trying to tear through the glass skylight in the pavements in the vain search for air. Locked in the embrace of death the bodies were pulled out in a steady stream while the onlookers fainted and screamed with horror. At the foot of the fire escapes, the dead were piled where they had fallen like flies. One man fell four stories, alighted on the struggling mass and arose to walk away; just as he did so a woman plunged from the fire escape, struck him on the head and killed him instantly. Frantic mothers threw their children to the pavements below and plunged after them to a certain death. Utter panic took possession of everybody in and about the theatre and there was no attempt to help the unfortunates.

Serious charges are made in connection with the conduct of the ushers and the policemen during the early stages of the fire. When the audience began pouring toward the exists the ushers refused to open the doors. They were finally flung aside, but not until the passageways had become choked and practically useless. Outside two or three burly policemen were clubbing the people pouring out of the doors. "There is no danger," they yelled, "get back in there, we will not allow any one to start a panic here." Meanwhile the terrified human torrent swept on and out, trampling down the policemen and each other. These delays, however, added greatly to the loss of life, for they served to clog the only avenues of safety.

The appalling horror of the affair got upon the nerves of vast crowds, and hundreds became frantic or fainted away; frenzied relatives vainly tried to fight their way near to the theatre but were beaten back.

The fire broke out after the second act of the play "Bluebeard," and started in the flies of the stage, presumably from a defect in the electrical display. In an instant the draperies and flimsy stage settings had burst into flames.

The loss of life was greatest at the foot of the stairways from the upper balconies. At that point the bodies of the persons who sought to flee from the flames were piled fully 12 feet deep. The bodies were taken out as rapidly as the men could enter the smoke-filled corridors and grasp their awful loads.

The scenes were the most frightful ever witnessed on this continent.

Nobody on the first floor was killed, though some were injured. The total number of injured is probably three hundred. The police estimate of the dead is 536 and the newspaper estimate 562. There are 55 people missing.

Life Sentence for Stealing a Stamp

A dispatch from Sioux Falls, Ia., says: Ellsworth P. De France has stepped from the State penitentiary a free man after having served a term of fifteen years, less good time allowance, for the theft of a two-cent. postage stamp. The case is the most remarkable in the history of Western courts.

De France was convicted in the United States District Court for Nebraska for holding up a mail car. Although it was shown at his trial that he secured only a two-cent postage stamp he was sentenced to imprisonment for life.

The matter was brought to the attention of President McKinley during his term of office, and he commuted the sentence to fifteen years' imprisonment.

The New York Journal of Commerce says, "Immigration at this in 1903 has passed all previous records. During the calendar year now ending 619,980 immigrant steerage passengers arrived here, as against 547,197 in 1902, an increase of 72,283.

A CURIOUS WILL.

Sir John Blundell Maple Makes a Strange Stipulation.

A London cable says: A more detailed examination of the will and codicils of the late Sir John Blundell Maple, Bart., M.P., reveals a number of bequests to charities, friends and servants.

To Lady Maple, besides the annuity already mentioned of £20,000, which becomes £10,000 in the event of re-marriage, are devised Sir John's famous horses, Common and Royal Hampton, and such eight of his mares as she may choose. Without imposing any obligations, he asks her to devote £3,000 yearly to charitable purposes in the metropolitan district and the neighborhood of St. Albans and Harpenden. At her death a sum of £20,000 is to be devoted to like purposes.

The trustees are to pay to Baron von Eckhardstein, his son-in-law, £250 quarterly during his life upon certain conditions.

One half of the income of the residue of the estate goes to the Baroness von Eckhardstein for five years, upon condition that during each period of twelve months preceding the anniversary of the day of her marriage she has resided for at least 240 days within the United Kingdom. After the expiration of the five years the whole of the income is to be paid to her upon like conditions.

The executors are authorized to complete the rebuilding of University College Hospital at a cost not exceeding £200,000.

FOR FARMERS.

Samples of Choice Grain for the Improvement of Seed.

By instruction of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture another distribution will be made this season of samples of the most productive sorts of grain to Canadian farmers for the improvement of seed. The stock for distribution is of the very best and has been secured mainly from the excellent crops recently had at the branch experimental farm at Indian Head in the Northwest Territories. The distribution this spring will consist of samples of oats, spring wheat, barley, Indian corn and potatoes. The quantities of oats, wheat and barley to be sent this year will be 4 pounds of oats and 5 pounds of wheat or barley, sufficient to sow one-twentieth of an acre. The samples of Indian corn and potatoes will weigh three pounds as heretofore. Every farmer may apply, but only one sample can be sent to each applicant, hence if an individual receives a sample of oats he cannot also receive one of wheat, barley or potatoes, and applications for more than one sample for one household cannot be entertained. These samples will be sent free of charge through the mails.

Applications should be addressed to the Director of Experimental Farms, Ottawa, and may be sent in any time before the 1st of March, after which the lists will be closed, so that all the samples asked for may be sent out in good time for sowing. Parties writing should mention the sort or variety they would prefer, and should the available stock of the kind asked for be exhausted, some other good sort will be sent in its place.

Churchill Family at Outs.

London, Dec. 28.—The Churchill family is divided over Joseph Chamberlain's policy. Winston Churchill is one of Chamberlain's uncompromising and formidable opponents. His mother, Lady Randolph, supports her son. The Duke of Marlborough was made under secretary of the colonies by Chamberlain to expressly separate him from Winston. But the duke is torn in mind between his belief in Winston and the painful decision to renounce his office if he decides against protection.

All his aunts and their husbands—like Earl Howe,—are protectionists, and they hope to get the duke out definitely on their side during the present week.

Furnace Explodes.

London, Ont., Dec. 28.—Two of the hot water furnaces at Wolseley barracks exploded this morning, causing the instant death of the mess sergeant, fatally injuring of Private Thomas Worswick, and very seriously injuring Private Walter Worswick and Quarter-Master Sergeant Dunlevy.

A plumber had been engaged repairing the furnaces an hour before and the four men were in the furnace room examining the furnace when the explosion occurred. All the men were frightfully scalded.

Santa Claus Carried a Gun.

A dispatch from Bessemer, Ala., says: Information has reached here from Cedar Bluff of the killing of John Parsons by A. J. Lockhart at a Christmas tree given at a church. Lockhart was acting as Santa Claus. It is alleged that Parsons became disorderly and Lockhart ejected him. When the affair was over Parsons attacked Lockhart with a knife, as the latter left the building. Lockhart drew a pistol and shot Parsons to death after having himself been cut in several places.

A DYING MAN'S HEROIC EFFORT

Consumptive Tries to Save His Mothers Life.

FATAL FAMILY QUARREL

Joseph Eardley, of Bridgeport, Conn., Shoots His Mother-in-Law, Because She Induced His Wife to Leave Him—Drink the Cause.

A dispatch from Bridgeport, Conn., says: Filled with rage because he believed that his mother-in-law, Mrs. Lawrence, had induced his wife to leave him. Joseph Eardley, a plush weaver, forced his way into Mrs. Lawrence's home and shot her. Eardley was arrested and became hysterical in the police station. He made a statement in which the police say he admits the shooting.

During the morning Eardley visited the Lawrence home and inquired for his wife, upon finding that she was not in the house he departed. Mrs. Lawrence later saw him approaching with a revolver in his hand. She called to her son Norman, aged 25, who was in bed dying from consumption. The young man attempted to assist his mother, who had braced herself against the door, but his strength failed, and Eardley, forcing the door, threw him on the floor. Mrs. Lawrence started to run, but Eardley fired a single shot, which entered her temple.

Eardley then walked from the house to a nearby saloon, where he was arrested.

Eardley is 32 years of age, while his victim was 52. Eardley was married to Mrs. Lawrence's daughter about five years ago and the couple lived at the Lawrence home. Five weeks ago, it is said, Mrs. Lawrence ordered Eardley from her house because of his intemperate habits and succeeded in keeping her daughter from accompanying him. Since then Eardley frequently while intoxicated threatened to kill his wife. She had gone to the police station to ask for a warrant for his arrest when he shot her mother.

A FAKE MAHDI RISES.

Brilliant Dash of Two Hundred Britishers—A Rope Ends All.

Another Mahdi has arisen and fallen in the Soudan. The deputy governor of the Soudan, better known to the men of South Africa as Col. Mahon, the reliever of Mafeking, was apprised of this new scheme against the Anglo-Egyptian government. Mahon was on his way to England and had reached Khartoum when the news reached him. The new mahdi had proclaimed himself as chief of all the tribes in the Tagalla mountains in southern Kordofan. Numbers had flocked to his standard.

Immediately on receipt of the dispatch. Mahon drew 200 cavalry from Khartoum, loaded them on a steamer, and sent them, under his command, 200 miles up the White Nile, where they disembarked. Two hundred infantry were ordered to go from El Obied to meet Mahon and his men near Tagalla. The Colonel with his 200, had a desert march of 200 miles before they could learn the whereabouts of the false mahdi. Quickly the small army, on the confirmation of the true position of the fanatic, surrounded the village where he was. The mahdi's followers bolted at the sight of the maxims and the men.

The impostor at length surrendered. In his possession were found letters from most of the leading shiekhs in the Soudan, making inquiries about the movement. Quickly was the false prophet taken to El Obied. As quickly was he tried and hanged. On the return march to Khartoum, so terrible was the water, the weather and the heat, that 75 per cent. of the soldiers were down with fever, and five men died of sunstroke. Mahon, having finished his fight, resumed his journey to England.

The news of the importance of this victory only reached England about a fortnight since. The brilliant dash of Mahon's 200 is commented upon with much enthusiasm in Great Britain. Had this scheme not been 'nipped in the bud' there is no telling to what proportions it might have spread.

Choir Troubles.

A Montreal dispatch says: The choir singers of Melville Presbyterian church, Westmount, went on strike Sunday because Pastor Winfield declined to apologize for his criticisms of the members, whom he accused of unbecoming conduct. During the Christmas service some of the lady singers brought confectionery to church and ate it during service. Rev. Mr. Winfield spoke of this from the pulpit. Today while the sinners sat among the congregation the pastor reiterated his criticisms.

A Washington dispatch says Senator Hale, chairman of the Senate committee on naval affairs, says it is the intention to make provision for another addition to the navy during the present session of congress. He says that when the additions already authorized are completed the United States will be more powerful than any other nation except Great Britain.

The C. N. R. has entered Montreal.

A STORMY PASSAGE.

Steamship Menomenee Disabled at Sea—Thrilling Experience.

A number of the passengers who were on the Atlantic transport Menominee bound for New York when she was struck by a hurricane and disabled so that she drifted at the mercy of the storm for five days, have arrived on the Cedric. They told a thrilling story of their experience. The Menominee left London Dec. 2. Four days later she ran into a terrific gale, and a huge wave 60 feet high struck the ship, throwing her on her beam ends. It came with such force as to crush in the heavy dead-lights in the cabin ports of the starboard side, and the staterooms were flooded. Most of the passengers were in bed when the wave hit the ship. They were thrown from their berths to the floor with bedding and everything movable on top of them.

When the ship righted it was found that her rudder post had been snapped off, leaving the steering gear and the ship disabled. One sailor was caught in the backwash of the wave, and dashed against the bulwarks, receiving injuries from which he died an hour later. Three other seamen were seriously injured by waves which broke over the ship while they were trying to make repairs to the shattered steering gear. Because of the excitement it became necessary to lock the passengers in the cabin. Oil was used to still the waves, but with little effect. For five days the ship rolled in the trough of the sea, Captain Lucas and his officers remaining on the bridge night and day without sleep. Finally at noon on the fifth day a temporary steering gear was rigged and the ship limped back to Falmouth, where the passengers were sent back to Liverpool, and such of them as chose were sent to New York on the Cedric.

Called on to Massacre the Jews.

In a special cablegram from Kishineff, Dec. 19, via Iglsn, Dec. 25, the correspondent of the New York World says: "I can state with grim and gloomy certainty that unless the government at St. Petersburg entirely reverses its attitude, unless the expressed indignation of the civilized world prevents another massacre, the horrors of last April will be repeated on the Russian Christmas day, Jan. 7.

"The Jews here are terrified already, and their terror is well founded. Leaflets vehemently calling on Christians and Russians to arise again on Christ's natal day and to annihilate the Jews were found strewn in the 'Moscow,' a tea shop, to-day.

"It was in the 'Moscow' that the pamphlets denouncing the Jews for alleged ritualistic murders, and inciting the massacre in April, were first discovered."

Leaning Tower Sold.

Bologna's most singular structure, the leaning Garisenda tower, which was begun in 1110 by Fillippo and Ottone Garisenda, and which was owned by the Marquis Malvezzi, has been purchased by Baron Raimondo Franchetti, who is well known as a composer. The Garisenda tower is only 162 feet high, but it is ten feet out in the perpendicular. Dante, in his "Inferno," compares the giant Antaeus, who bends towards him, to this tower, "when a cloud passes over it." The obliqueness of the tower was occasioned by the settling of the foundation. The sale of the tower has given rise to much dissatisfaction, and the government has been urged to interfere for the purpose of securing it for the nation, preserving this most important monument.

World's Tallest Structure.

The tallest building on earth is to be erected on Lower Broadway, New York, if present plans are carried out. With five stories below the street level, forty stories higher from the entrance to the top floor and surmounted by a sixty-foot tower, the gigantic new building will have a total of 615 feet, making it over twice as high as the flatiron building and almost as tall again as the Park Row building, which at present holds the record. The building is to extend one full block on Broadway, and its cost, including the site, will reach $10,000,000. The land is said to have been secured and the completion of the building within one year promised.

Cigar Means Betrothal.

In Siam the lighting of a cigar may indicate a betrothal. A man offers the girl of his choice a flower, or takes a light from a cigar or cigarette, if she happens to be indulging at the time. This action is taken to mean willingness on both sides, and steps are at once taken to arrange for the payment of the dowry. The families of both bride and bridegroom must each provide a considerable sum for the newly mated pair. In Calabria, as in many parts of India, a lighted taper or a lighted pipe betokens the acceptance of a suitor. In Siberia it is customary for the girl to present her suitor with a box of cigars as a sign that he is to be master of the house.

FOWLS ATE $327.

Mother Took It From Her Son to Keep Him From Gambling.

Mrs. Sylvester Hughes, of Corona, L.I., complained to Magistrate Smith, of the Flushing (L.I.,) Police Court that her twelve white Wyandotte chickens had eaten $327 in greenbacks. Mrs. Hughes had secured the cash from her son Joseph to keep him from playing the races, and shortly after feeding the chickens she was horrified to find the money gone.

"The prosperous appearance of the rooster first aroused my suspicions," said she. "He walked around the yard, and puffed out his chest and crowed continually. I then detected a corner of a twenty-dollar bill sticking out of his beak. May I kill the hens unless they lay eggs to make up for it, jege?" asked Mrs. Hughes. "Of course, if the price should get a little mite higher—say, a dollar a dozen—and these yere bills should prove a good layer, I kin afford to let the hens live. A dozen hens layin' two eggs a day would pay the loss in a while, and I'd have my chickens at the end of it. But unless they do, jege, I am afraid the hens will get too bloated up to lay or—well, can I chop off the head of the rooster, anyway? He's et at least $80, I know."

"Perhaps the hens will lay golden eggs," suggested the judge.

"Well, eggs is high," continued Mrs. Hughes, solemnly, "and I guess I keep the chickens, but the rooster will have to go."

Australasia Will Follow.

The commercial agent of the Dominion government reports from Melbourne, Australia, Nov. 12, to the minister of trade and commerce as follows: "Preferential trade is in the political air and it may only be a question of a few months after the impending federal elections are over when the government will follow the example of the Dominion. That a preference in customs duties will be extended to Canada upon a reciprocal basis is almost beyond question.

"What the latter means to Canadian exporters can easily be realized by a study of the enormous increase in recent years of Australian importation of goods from the United States. If not before, at least with preference in duties, will come a direct cargo steamer service to Australia which will place our exporters upon a footing which at present is so much desired."

Chicago Epidemic.

With pneumonia establishing a new death record in Chicago and the county hospitals crowded so that patients are sleeping on mattresses on the floor, and less serious cases being turned away, a serious problem confronts the Chicago health authorities. The many varieties of weather from which the city has suffered during the last week is blamed not only for the many pneumonia deaths, but for the crowding of the hospitals in another way. Within the last few days an unusual number of persons, injured by falling on icy sidewalks have been taken to the county institution, and though a new emergency ward has been opened, all cannot be cared for properly. Last week's alarming increase in deaths from pneumonia is made the subject of the latest health bulletin. During the seven days ending Saturday pneumonia claimed 139 victims in Chicago, or 27 per cent of the total mortality.

WATERY GRAVES.

Two Boys Go Through the Ice in a Nova Scotia Village.

Newville, a lumbering village on the line of the Cumberland Lumber and Coal Co. road, near Parrsboro, N.S., was Saturday evening the scene of the drowning of Beverly Robertson, aged 40, his son Clifford, aged 14, and Jas. Lockhart, aged 20.

Clifford Robertson, Lockhart and others were half way on the river to the lake skating when the ice gave way and two fell in. Robertson's brother gave the alarm and a crowd from the shore nearby gathered. Among them was Beverly Robertson. Clifford was holding on to the ice when his father pushed a board out to him, but he was unable to get hold of it. His father then crawled out to the end of the board to assist him when the board broke and he too fell into the water head first and was not again seen. The breaking of the board caused the boy to lose his hold and all three were drowned. All the efforts of the large crowd present unavailing to rescue them. The bodies were recovered Sunday.

Annexationist Defeated.

St. John's, Nfld., Dec. 28.—The contest in St. Pierre and Miquelon for a representative to the French chamber of deputies, resulted today in the re-election of M. Legasse by a small majority over M. Fromont, who, it is understood, is in favor of the annexation of the colony to the United States. There is general dissatisfaction over the existing conditions. Riots took place last week at St. Pierre and Miquelon as a result of the destitution caused by the comparative failure of the French fisheries on the Grand Banks during the present season.

Fifty Per Cent.!

The Victoria Sealing company, which practically controls the pelagic sealing industry, declared a dividend of 50 per cent. a share on Dec. 28 on last season's work, when the company's schooners took 17,423 skins, 11,714 off the British Columbia coast and in Behring Sea, and 5,709 off Cape Horn. The wage bill amounted to $140,000 for the season. The profits were $28,000. It was decided to send out about twenty schooners this spring off the British Columbia coast and two vessels will be sent within ten days to Japan.

One of the strongest arguments in favor of the incorporation of Fernie is the aid that the municipal government could give the police to maintain proper order and discipline. Under the existing conditions the police can do nothing else than follow the provincial criminal code which is not intended to be discriminating in its scope to meet the requirements of a town. It is not difficult to think of scores of evils now existing in Fernie, with which the police are powerless to interfere, that city by-laws could suppress without any trouble, and with considerable advantage to the municipal coffers in fines and licenses.

The action of the Board of Trade in urging the government to institute government offices for the Fernie district will meet with the approval of every resident of the district, as will the clause urging the appointment of local men to to those offices. It is stated that the government is unwilling to incur the additional expense of instituting offices in both districts and that it is contemplating moving the Fort Steele offices to Fernie. We have it on good authority that a sufficient staff is now employed at the Fort Steele office, with the appointment of a second government agent, to do the work of two offices. The subdivision of the South East Kootenay district calls for a division in its government executive and any other policy on the part of the government will meet with the disapproval of the residents of both districts. The filling of local appointments with men from the outside has already caused considerable resentment and any further repetition of this obnoxious habit will raise a storm of disapproval.

Mr. Noel Marshall, one of the visiting manufacturers to western Canada, delivered a speech on B. C. mining in Toronto recently, in which he paid a glowing tribute to the Crow's Nest coal fields:—On their way home it was their privilege to visit what he believed to be the greatest coal country under the canopy of Heaven, the Crow's Nest fields. He had noticed in reading the paper that the output of Crows Nest coal last week was nearly 17,000 tons, or an average of 2,789 tons a day. From his experience in that particular line of trade he thought inside of ten years that company alone would produce 15,000 tons a day, and having produced it they would have a market for it. He said: "We are not far from the time, in my opinion, when anthracite coal will be a luxury I believe the soft coal in our western country, after it has been reduced to coke, will become the fuel of the country. Fancy the untold wealth in that western country! The west is coming to owe fully as much to its mines as it does to its farming lands."

The Nelson spring assizes promises to be a record one in the number and importance of the cases. The four test cases of Silla, Lamb, Leadbeater and Frederico against the C. N. P. No. 48 was put in by John Torkelson, of Coal Creek mines, and he is therefore the possessor of the handsome lamp.

Alpine Entertainers.

This fine company opened up here for a five days' entertainment on Monday last when they were greeted with a good house. A change of programme each evening was a feature of the show, for which they received unstinted applause. We can from personal knowledge and experience recommend this company to the pleasure loving public as a really clever aggregation of artists and a credit to the profession.—Lumsden Times, Assa.

Owing to the fact that the license commissioners have not been appointed for the current year the license meeting advertised for last evening had to be cancelled. Two applications for Baynes Lake and Gateway were to have been considered. The license commissioners had granted the renewal of the latter at the general meeting, but afterwards learning that the application was in the name of Mr. Lacey instead of Mrs. Katie Lacey they instructed the license inspector to withhold the license.

ANOTHER E. KOOTENAY DEAL.

Spokane, Jan. 6.—O. G. Laberee is working an another big coal and oil land deal embodying about 30 miles in southeast Kootenay, B.C. He has secured options on the interests of F. E. Finucane, manager of the Bank of Montreal here, and Paul Couldrey, manager of the Le Roi No. 2 company at Rossland. Both represent other interests as well as their own. Part of the land is on the government reserve, and part is on the disputed block recently claimed by the Canadian Pacific railway as a part of its Canadian & Western land grant. Mr. Laberee expects to float a new company with large capital in Canada.

The delegates were instructed by the association to support the nomination of W. A. Galliher, the present member.

POLICE COURT.

In the police court on Monday C. O. Demaurez accused Theodore Flack with cheating at cards by substituting a marked pack of cards. The cards were produced and shown to be clearly marked for the game of black-jack. It was alleged that at a game in Demaurez's house where three or four participated, the accused had cheated by means of these cards. H. W. Herchmer defended, and W. R. Ross appeared for the plaintiff. The latter failed to produce sufficient evidence and the magistrate threw the case out, without proceeding with the defence.

G. Smith alias Smitherden alias Smitham was given 6 mos. at hard labor this morning. He had assigned his wages to the Trites Wood co. under the name of Smith and afterwards drew his money under the name of Smitherden. This should prove a warning to others.

Edward Trowse was accidently killed last week by the discharge of his rifle while out for a mountain climb on Gold Creek, twenty miles south of Wardner. He was accompanied by D. H. Ross who witnessed the sad accident. They were on a high rocky ledge and Mr. Trowse in rising from a stooping posture, which he had assumed to view the landscape, let the rifle slip and the hammer striking a rock discharged the cartridge—a 30-30. The bullet entered the man's left breast and killed him instantly. With some difficulty the body was taken to Wardner and afterwards to Cranbrook where it was interred. The deceased leaves a wife and child.

Dislocated her Shoulder.

Mrs. Johanna Soderholm, of Fergus Falls, Minn., fell and dislocated her shoulder. She had a surgeon get it back in place as soon as possible, but it was quite sore and pained her very much. Her son mentioned that he had seen Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised for sprains and soreness, and she asked him to buy her a bottle of it, which he did. It quickly relieved her and enabled her to sleep which she had not done for several days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

SAD END OF CANADIAN M. P.

A Mysterious Affair in London, England.

CUT THROAT WITH RAZOR

Taken Suddenly Ill, He Mistook a Bottle of Strychnine for Medicine, and While Suffering Pain Slashed His Throat.

London, Eng., Dec. 29.—Andrew Pattullo, when taking medicine, by mistake took some from a bottle supposed to contain strychnine which caused him such great pain that he was evidently unable to bear it and committed suicide.

Mr. Pattullo for some days past was in a nervous condition and cancelled his speech before the Tariff Reform League at Ipswich; Barlow Cumberland speaking instead. He seemed excited over the British papers criticism of his speech a few days before. He had no financial difficulties, as he had in his possession five hundred dollars which he recently received. His nephew, who is a newspaper man in London, stopping with his uncle at 11 Montague place, says that Mr. Pattullo woke up early gasping for breath with what seemed like heart trouble. He administered a dose of medicine prescribed by Dr. Ross, a son of Premier Ross, and he felt better and went to sleep. In the morning he was very cheerful and arranged to attend a fancy dress ball on Thursday. His nephew said he showed strength and cheerfulness and he went to his newspaper office. After a few hours' work on returning he found the door of the room locked, and Mr. Pattullo dead inside with his throat cut by a razor.

Mr. Pattullo's speeches made great hits. He spoke to the point and his audiences admired his outspoken criticisms, but he was exhausted physically with each effort.

Mr. Pattullo left Woodstock, Ont., a short time ago, after disposing of the Sentinal-Review, and while in England spoke several times in favor of Chamberlain's fiscal policy. The death of his wife in 1895 was a severe blow, and closest friends have since remarked the change in the bright, genial disposition that hao made him universally popular. His life had since been marked by closer devotion to public affairs.

RISKED HIS LIFE.

An Engineer's Bravery in Crossing a Fire-Swept Bridge Saves Many Lives.

A dispatch from St, Paul, Minn., dated Dec. 29, says: What might have been a serious catastrophe, with heavy loss of life, was averted by the bravery and coolness of a Crookston man. The large Great Northern bridge over the Mouse river at Surrey, N.D., was set on fire late at night and the structure in a short while was a mass of charred ruins. No. 4, an eastbound fast coast train, was approaching the burning bridge and the crew had no knowledge of the fire, as owing to the fierce wind and blizzard the blaze could not be seen for more than one hundred yards. Telegraphic communication was cut off shortly after the fire started and the railroad men at Granville were in a quandary about warning the approaching flyer. The bridge which crosses the river is ten miles east of Minot, and Norwich was the nearest point upon the west side at which the train could be stopped.

Engineer Greenhough boarded a light engine and pulled the throttle wide open and headed down the track in the hope that he might reach the bridge before the fire had seriously weakened it. Without a thought of his own life as he approached the bridge he pulled the throttle wide open to go over it and warn the approaching train or go through the structure into eternity.

The bridge stood the trial and the engine rushed on to Norwich, where the "flyer" was flagged and the crew warned of their danger. Fireman Arnold and Engineer Mullally, composed the engine crew on the fast train, and they both believe the bravery of Greenbough saved their lives and their train from rushing into the river. The bridge was forty feet high and 150 feet in length.

British in Bad Odor.

It is stated on high authority that the officials of the Congo Free State are negotiating with the Hamburg-American Steamship company for a service to that country to replace the present British lines. This is the outcome of the general indignation caused by the attitude of the British toward the Congo Free State and a desire to treat with Germans who have observed an attitude of neutrality.

Fifty thousand acres of timber are consumed every year in the manufacture of crates and boxes. The railroads of the country use annually 120,000,000 ties. Seven hundred and fifty thousand telegraph poles must be renewed yearly, not to mention the telephone poles used and the telegraph poles required in the construction of new lines, making the total annual consumption for poles and ties 1,600,000 acres.

Louis Cardinal, an Ottawa man, has made a rich strike of gold in Alaska.

BLAMES CIGARETTES.

British Army Recruits Are of an Inferior Class.

The British army authorities report a marked deterioration in the classes wherefrom the recruits come, and the experts blame it all on cigarettes. General Lyttleton, commanding the forces in South Africa, declares the majority sent out to be physically immature and of a low standard of intelligence.

Dr. Farquarharson, who is an experienced student of the situation, quotes a leading authority on public health—Prof. Casks—in the declaration that juvenile cigarette smoking is the principal cause of deterioration.

The professor gives the following formidable list of symptoms produced by the habit: Chronic hoarseness, lack of appetite, dyspepsia, pallor from impaired blood, formation of rapid and intermittent pulse, pain in the region of the heart, difficulty in breathing, and disinclination to partake of healthy athletic exercise.

To these he adds headache, mental weariness, slowness of thought, causing muddled ideas, defective memory, impatience and irritability. He suggests that England imitate America and Germany in preventing any one under 16 indulging in the habitual use of tobacco.

Delivered Into Satan's Power.

The Rev. Stephen Merritt, one of the trustees of the John Street Methodist church in New York, has been excommunicated by John Alexander Dowie because of an attack on Dowie in the New York Christian Advocate. Dr. James M. Buckley, editor of that Journal, sought to disprove the claims which Dowie made to conversions in New York and quoted a letter from Mr. Merritt, in which the latter disavowed allegiance to the restorer. When Dowie saw the article he called his cabinet to a council in Zion City, and then it was that Merritt was formally excommunicated. The edict as officially published is in part as follows:

"In the name of the Most High God, I deliver James M. Buckley and Stephen Merritt unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh that their spirits may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. May it be that ere their bodies perish they shall truly repent and be saved. If they will not repent all men and angels will say their damnation is just."

South Africans After Cattle.

Lord Strathcona, in a letter to the minister of agriculture at Ottawa says that he learns the American business men have taken hold of the shipping of cattle to South Africa in a most systematic way. They have agents everywhere in South Africa, and in this way have a great advantage over Canadians, of whom very few send representatives to look up business. The Americans make contracts on the spot and are thus enabled to control the trade.

Sir Walter Peace, agent-general for Natal, has informed Lord Strathcona that the director of agriculture for Natal is now in England purchasing cattle for their experimental farms. Lord Strathcona has informed Sir Walter that Natal can procure for farmers suitable cattle for these purposes in Canada, and Sir Walter, in consequence, has promised to bring the matter to the special attention of the Natal government.

Bewildered nuto Death.

A case of attempted suicide occurred in Montreal on Tuesday last, when a woman named Marchand, about 28 years of age, turned on the gas in her room at the St. Lawrence Hall. She had been a guest at the hall for two days, having registered as "Mrs. Marchand, Portland, Me." A boy, in passing through the hall to answer a call, smelled gas, and on making an investigation, traced the odor to Mrs. Marchand's room.

It is alleged that Mrs. Marchand came to Montreal in search for her husband, and having found him, she was told that she was the wife of a bigamist. It is thought that in her bewildered condition she made an attempt to destroy herself. The husband was a conductor, but recently went into the saloon business.

Heir To the Servian Throne.

A writer in the St. James Gazette, discussing the persistent rumor that the Servian king was about to abdicate, says the world contains a lot of pretenders to the throne who do not really pretend because they prefer to keep off that dangerous elevation. The most interesting of the pretenders is said to be a small Minnesota farmer named John Bayne Vouhazer, who is thought to be descended from Milosh Obilich and through him connected with the last Servian czar. Whether he will be willing to succeed King Peter is not known.

Collie Dog Spoilt a Hold-up.

A dispatch from Vancouver says: Steve Madison's collie dog saved him from two hold-up men last night. Madison, who is foreman of the waterworks, was on Dunlevy avenue, when a burly ruffian grabbed him by the throat and another fellow seized him around the body. The dog sprang at the first robber, caught by the middle of the pants and started to worry him. The footpads let go their hold of Madison and took to their heels, and so did Madison.

The Alaskan war canoe, manned by two Canadians, which left Vancouver on May, 1901, has arrived at Durban, South Africa, after a four months' voyage from Auckland.

Britain is taking advantage of Russia's distraction to occupy Thibet.

WINNIPEGGER ESCAPES.

Graham Gordon Tells His Experience in the Chicago.

A Toronto dispatch says: Manley Gordon, of Winnipeg, son of J. C. Gordon, who is in the city visiting his uncle, detailed his experience in the catastrophe at the Iroquois theatre, Chicago. Mr. Gordon had gone to the matinee with his friend, Dr. Haggart, of the Cook County hospital. They secured seats about five rows from the rear on the ground floor.

"In the second act said Mr. Gordon, "I noticed a flame of smoke flash out from the left wing on the stage near the switchboard. Everybody in the audience, however, kept their seats. Several workmen ran across the stage, and I noticed that a number of chorus girls dropped in a faint. Just at this juncture great flames of fire shot out over the stage and enveloped the ground floor. The heat was so intense that even where I was sitting it scorched my eyebrows.

"The fire seemed as if it had been driven forth by terrific force. When this happened a great death moan like a low sob ran through the audience. Men shook hands and bade each other good bye, while women embraced each other. Then a wild stampede began. Fortunately I was near an exit, where I made my escape. There was a fire escape leading up to the second gallery. Maddened people rushed out on this till it was packed to suffocation, but as it was some distance from the ground they could not get down. Firemen tried valiantly to raise ladders, but it was not until one man hit on the expedient of utilizing some trestle work nearby that the people were rescued. One woman with a little girl of twelve years, showed great fortitude and presence of mind. She was last to leave the fire escape, and although the flames were playing all about her, insisted on the little girl being saved first."

Mr. Gordon declares that no curtain was lowered when the fire broke out. The majority of the people he believes, were crushed to death. It also appears that the front doors opened from the inside and that the crowd in its mad rush was jammed against the doors, thus preventing them from being opened.

FIXING THE BLAME.

Archibald Bernard, chief electrician of the Iroquois theatre, was taken into custody by the police on New Year's day, and will be held pending an inquiry into the cause of the disaster.

After being closely questioned for two hours by the police, Bernard was formally charged with manslaughter.

Novel Fishing Scheme.

Mr. Campbell McNab, an old Ottawaian, but now a resident at Bic, in the lower St. Lawrence, has developed an important industry on the north shore at Bersimis, about fifty miles below the mouth of the Saguenay. For many years the white porpoise of the St. Lawrence has been a menace to the cod and salmon fisheries, and many unsuccessful attempts have been made to get rid of these depredators. Little or nothing was accomplished until this fall, when Mr. McNab devised a method of capture which has so far been effective. Taking advantage of the extreme timidity of the porpoise, Mr. McNab, by the use of a vibrating alarm, drives the porpoise into shallow water, where they are kept until until the tide goes down and then they are easily dispatched. A full grown porpoise is worth from $40 to $50. The hide makes the finest of leather while the carcase gives a very superior quality of oil. Mr. McEab shows photographs, taken by one of his men, of a single day's haul at Bersimis, the shores being lined with scores of these white monsters.

A dispatch to the Cape Town Times from Kimberley says that considerable alarm is occasioned by the threatening attitude of the Hottentots throughout German Southwest Africa. Bands are ravaging the country and plundering Europeans. There are indications of a general native uprising. A German outpost at Oapis has been overpowered by Hottentots and the occupants are reported to have been killed. A supposedly friendly chief, who was armed by the Germans, has joined the rebels.

King Alfonso, of Spain is giving his subjects lessons in agriculture. He wants to show them that by the application of modern methods land which for centuries has been held to be barren can be made to yield profitable crops. For this purpose he has selected 700 hectares of his poorest land and has procured machinery of the latest type. Nearly every day he drives out to inspect the work, accompanied by the minister of the Exterior, Count San Bernardo, who is said to be more of an agriculturist than a diplomatist.

INVASION OF THIBET.

Uncertainty as to the Reception of the British Expedition.

A London cable says there is considerable anxiety in military circles as to the character of the reception of the British expedition which is now invading Thibet. Reports have been received from Lhassa that an armed resistance of the Thibetans may be expected, and that a large large number of rifles have been distributed for this purpose. The influence of Russian agents in stirring up the populace, and the probable attitude of Russia, is causing additional uneasiness.

The British disavow any purpose more serious than to compel Thibet to fulfil its treaty obligations and remove commercial conditions that are intolerable. The French press does not accept this explanation, but prefers its own theory, which is that fear of Russian ascendancy in Thibet is the impulse leading to the invasion. Some of the French newspapers have referred to the British campaign as "another Jameson raid," though they fail to add that it probably will not meet the prompt and overwhelming grief that overtook the raiders.

The avowed purpose is to advance to Gyangtse Jong, within 150 miles of Lhassa. This fortified town lies in one of the most fertile and cultivated valleys of Thibet, a valley that is marked by a line of white-washed villages throughout its length of 60 miles. The British believe that in this region of plenty most of their supplies, even for a long sojourn in the country, may locally be obtained, and they think that the presence of a considerable force in a district that yields more treasure for the Dalai Llama's strongbox than almost any other region of Thibet will make a deep impression at Lhassa, and that the Thibetans will lose no time in concluding arrangements and getting rid of the intrudors, if such a thing is possible.

At present the Indian soldiers are pointing toward Gyangtse Jong along two routes; for the road from Khamba Jong, where Younghusband's escort has been for months, is north of that through the Chumbi Valley, and the two do not converge till far on the way. A large part of the two Sikh regiments will, of course, remain in the Chumbi Valley to maintain a line of communication with the frontier.

The invasion of Thibet by a British military force is a most notable event in the history of a country that has consistently excluded the white race, and to whose capital only three Europeans, disguised as Buddhists, have ever penetrated. The events that have led up to the invasion may be briefly recapitulated.

The Chinese resident at Lhassa was informed on June 3 last by the Viceroy of India that it was necesseary to settle the misunderstanding between the Indian government and Thibet relating to the failure of Thibet to carry out the treaty of 1893, under which the Lhassa government agreed to open the town of Yatung in the Chumbi valley to trade between the two countries. A mission would therefore be sent, under Col. Younghusband, to Khamba Jong to meet the representatives of the Lhassa government to adjust the difficulty.

Colonel Younghusband, who is well known both as an explorer and as an expert in the politics of Central Asia accordingly crossed the frontier in July last with an armed escort of 200 men. A few Maxim guns were conspicuous features of the equipment. He established his mission at Khamba Jong and for nearly four months vainly awaited the arrival of representatives of the Grand Llama of Thibet. The head of the Buddhist faith was greatly disturbed by the appearance in the forbidden land of a British armed force, and finally sent word to Col. Younghusband that unless he retraced his steps to India there would be no negotiations.

The leader of the British mission returned to India, but most of his armed escort remained at Khamba Jong, and with the two regiments which have just crossed the frontier there are 2,800 armed men in the British service now in Southern Thibet. Col. Younghusband heads the mission, and Col. Macdonald, well known for his brilliant service in reducing to order the Uganda Protectorate in East Africa, is the military commander.

A Vancouver dispatch says: Norman Woods, the famous young musician, who was pardoned a month ago for raiding a cattle ranch on horseback and stealing several head of cattle, has now stolen his father's watch and left the city. A CHARMING TRIBUTE.

Eulogy of the Late George E. Casey, Ex-M.P., That Is Truly Con Amore—"The Good Fellow."

George Casey died at an Ottawa Hospital on St. Andrew's night, and with his passing goes as generous and mirthful a soul as ever drew breath.

He entered Parliament in 1872, and even among the intellectual giants who might be found in the House in those days the young sprig of twenty-two years, just fresh from University honors, won a large measure of distinction. He was a brilliant linguist, and could address the House in both the authorized languages, a faculty as rare then among the English-speaking members of the House as it is now. Casey had a veritable gift of tongues, and one of his favorite recreations was to keep on adding to his polyglot equipment. It is almost safe to say that Casey was the only man at Ottawa who habitually drew from the Parliamentary library books in English, French, Spanish, Italian, and German. He had picked up somewhere a working knowledge of the Cree tongue and had a scholarly acquaintance with many of the Indian dialects. Wherever he met on his travels a new language, or for that matter a patois, it was his custom to stick to it until he had acquired an adequate vocabulary and a fair comprehension of its syntactical peculiarities. He shared with Nicholas Flood Davin the habit of seasoning his speeches with Latin and Greek quotations, and he could use his Horace like a gentleman of the Elizabethan period. But this was only when he was on parade, and that not from a vanity of learning, but from sheer inability to keep down the ebullient riches of his mind. Casey was not a pedant. He conceived that a subject which was worthy of being publicly debated was worthy of the most glittering treatment that his memory and fancy could give it. In private he never obtruded his superior attainments. Although a man of family, of fine old Irish descent, and of almost seignorial standing in his county, he was a staunch democrat and a practical believer in liberty, equality and fraternity. And just as the Celtic poetry of his nature, enhanced by the assimilated literature of many peoples, may have embarrassed his judgment, so that lively fraternity of his operated to keep his life from fruiting as grandly as it should have done. He had, alas, the faults of his qualities, and the very characteristics that made him lovable kept him from being great. When men less brilliant but more practical pressed forward with single aim to the lonely mountain tops of supremacy, Casey fell quietly back where the company was more cheerful and the talk more entertaining. And being of the name of Casey, he had too keen a sense of humor ever to be a leader. Garfield, who was a great wag, having once formed the ambition to become President of the United States, deliberately forbore from that time on to make anything like a joke. All the bon mots that are now ascribed to Lincoln gained currency after his death. Casey was a delightful raconteur. It was such a passion with him that he could not give it up.

Reading maketh a full man. It develops every side of his nature, and if there goes with it a lively desire for human communion which prevents a man from being a mere book-worm, be sure that this earth harbors a personality that will make it brighter. It is the pleasure of men like Casey to radiate their charm in snug little smoking-room circles and to make comradeship a blessing. When the fortunes of politics turned against the whilom member for West Elgin, his friends got together and said: "What can we do for this good soul?" There were two things open, either of which Casey was eminently fitted to fill—the archives or a post in the library. The archives were not in the Legislative building. The library was, and so Casey got the place in the library, where he would be near his companions of the olden time. Whatever may be said about politicians, they like to keep the sunbeams near them. They refused to make a postmaster of that other bright spot and hold him at a distance of two hundred miles. No. They put Dr. Landerkin in the Senate, where he would never be more than a hundred yards from No. 16, and they just kept him there until he faded sweetly away into the Valley of the Shadow.

And now Casey is dead, too—Casey the story-teller, Casey the good fellow!—Toronto Star.

A Pioneer Pressman Dead.

Thomas Fox Davies, who died in Barrie, recently, was the pressman of The Toronto Globe's first cylinder press. Having learned his trade in Manchester, Eng., and spent a few years in the United States, he came to Toronto in 1845. Peter Brown has just bought his first cylinder Hoe press, but no one knew much about it and he persuaded Mr. Davies to prolong his stay in the city and set up the new machine. This he did and became permanently employed in The Globe office, remaining until 1847, when he went north and established The Barrie Magnet. After the first cylinder press had been set up in The Globe office, the maker, Mr. Hoe came from New York to see it in operation. While here Mr. Davies suggested to him the possibility of making a web press, the calico printing machines of his (Mr. Davies') native district of Manchester, Eng., having furnished the analogy. Mr. Hoe "pocketed" the idea, worked it into practical shape, and the next time he visited The Globe office he handed Mr. Davies a ten dollar bill for the suggestion. For the past 40 years Mr. Davies was connected with The Barrie Examiner.

THE LOVING LEAVES.

Brown is the hill where the maples grow—
So brown, so calm, so cold and still;
But the loving leaves creep snug and close,
And warm the feet of my dear old hill.

And they don't forget the violets small,
Shivering and cold in the damp and wet;
They cover them up in blankets brown,
Whispering, "Darlings, we love you yet."

Down in the hollow amid the ferns,
Their billowy wraps they wreath and roll;
And they spread a carpet rich and warm,
To keep the snow from the mouse's hole.

And the lady-slipper—so shy and weak—
They wrap a muffler about her throat;
And the maiden's-hair—they cover her deep,
And furnish the moss with an overcoat.

AN ELECTION IN 1842.

Graphic Description of That Which Took Place at Belleville.

The members of the Women's Canadian Historical Association are performing a laudable work in presenting in pamphlet form, the transactions of the society. The fourth of these little books has just been issued. It contains among other things very interesting papers, one on "Some Elections and the Battle of Hastings," by Mrs. Agnes Chamberlain. The author gives a graphic description of an election in Belleville in 1842.

"The whole town," says Mrs. Chamberlain, "was in a state of fomentation. People hitherto life-long friends cut each other on the street. Doctors were written to by many of their oldest patients to send in their bills. I know in one case two children questioned the butcher and baker, when they called for orders, as to whom they voted for, and when they answered, 'The Reform candidate,' these youthful partisans told them not to come to that house again, as they did not deal with rebels."

The election commenced on Monday morning, and went on without unusual incident for some hours. It was then noticed that as one party had voted they tried to prevent the other party from getting to the hustings, and that nearly all carried canes or sticks of some kind. The returing officer hearing threats, ordered that every man who came up to vote must first give up his stick. This they seemed to do willingly enough. The sticks were piled at the back of the hustings.

The following day this went on till nearly the close of the poll, when a man who had been obliged to give up his stick saw another with a pistol. Upon accusing him of having it the man ran to one of the booths, and leaning over the counter, dropped it behind a barrel. In one moment the crowd were upon him and down went the booth. The man fell, and his head, in a very short time, was like a red nightcap. Sticks and "handy billies" (a stone or piece of lead in the top of a stocking), were flying about the heads of the crowd. The man would have been killed (he was an Orangeman) if it had not been for the arrival of an unexpected rescuer.

A shout of "Hold there!" and the Catholic priest leaped into the midst of the melee, a good stout shillalah in his hand. Placing a foot on each side of the wounded man, he twisted his stick in a manner that suggested Donnybrook Fair, and called to his own people "to touch the man if they dare." When they became a little calmer he had the man carried into his own kitchen (which adjoined the church), and had his wound dressed. We were told, later on, that he had nine men brought in and cared for. In the meantime, when the row began, every man who had been obliged to give up his stick made a rush to the hustings to regain it, the result being that the hastily-constructed building came down like a house built of cards.

The riot ended only when a company of British regulars arrived, and the Riot Act was read. The officers in command were Captain Crutchley, afterwards a general, and Watkin Wynne, afterwards Sir Watkin Wynne, who was killed in the Crimea while attempting to give a drink of water to a wounded Russian.

Intelligence in Plants.

Mr. Grant Allen, in a book of his charming studies entitled, "Flash-lights on Nature," says: "People who have never had occasion to observe plants closely often fall into the error of regarding them as practically dead—dead, that is to say, in the sense of never doing or contriving anything active. They know, of course, that herbs or trees grow and increase, that they flower and fruit, that they put forth green leaves in the spring, and lose them in the autumn. But they picture this as taking place without the knowledge or co-operation of the plant itself—they think of it as done 'for' the tree or shrub rather than 'by' it. Those, however, who have kept a close watch upon living green things in their native condition have generally learned by slow degrees to take quite a different view of plant morals and plant economy. They begin to find out in the course of their observations that the life of a herb is pretty much as the life of an animal in almost everything save one small particular. The plant, as a rule, is rooted to a single spot; the animal, as a rule, is free and locomotive. . . . Again, everybody who has studied plants in a broad spirit is well aware that each act of the plant's is just as truly purposive, as full of practical import, as any act of an animal's."

Barbers In Europe.

"A sure way to break yourself of the habit of going to a barber shop to get shaved is to travel in Europe," said a man who has traveled. "I remember that when I first went to Europe I thought that I would never be able to learn to shave myself and that I was helpless so far as this was concerned. I didn't finish my trip through Europe before I took up shaving, and now I shave myself all the time. The barber shops in Europe, except in England and a few of the larger cities, are the worst of their kind in the world. There are no modern conveniences and mighty little of a sanitary nature. The chairs are uncomfortable, and the barbers are indifferent about how they shave you or what they do with you. They place a big bowl in your lap, and when they have finished with you the supposition is that you will wash your own face in the bowl. There is none of the little luxuries we have over here in the way of bay rum, witch hazel, hot towels, hot water, etc. The American barber shops are the neatest and cleanest in the world, without exception."—Washington Star.

THE AVERAGE BABY.

The average baby is a good baby—cheerful, smiling and bright. When he is cross and fretful it is because he is unwell and he is taking the only means he has to let everybody know he does not feel right. When baby is cross, restless and sleepless don't dose him with "soothing" stuffs which always contain poisons. Baby's Own Tablets are what is needed to put the little one right. Give a cross baby an occasional Tablet and see how quickly he will be transformed into a bright, smiling, cooing, happy child. He will sleep at night, and the mother will get her rest, too. You have a guarantee that Baby's Own Tablets contain not one particle of opiate or harmful drug. In all the minor ailments from birth up to ten or twelve years there is nothing to equal the Tablets. Mrs. W. B. Anderson, Goulais River, Ont., says:—"My little boy was very cross and fretful and we got no rest with him until we began using Baby's Own Tablets. Since then baby rests well and he is now a fat, healthy boy."

You can get the Tablets from any druggist or they will be sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

DREADED RESULTS OF KIDNEY DISEASE

Ailments of the Most Painful and Fatal Nature Prevented and Cured by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

When you think of the pain and suffering which accompany backache, rheumatism, lumbago, stone in the kidneys and bladder, when you think of the dreadful fatality of Bright's disease, dropsy, diabetes and apoplexy, you may well wonder why people neglect to keep the kidneys in perfect order, for all these ailments are the direct result of deranged kidneys.

Once the kidneys fail to filter from the blood the impure and poisonous waste matter there is trouble of a painful and dangerous nature. Among the first symptoms are backache, weak, lame back, pains in the legs and sides, deposits in the urine, impaired digestion, loss of flesh, energy and ambition, stiffness and soreness in the joints and feelings of weariness and lassitude.

Prevention is always better than cure, and hence the advisability of using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills on the very first indication of such derangement. Whether to prevent or cure, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are the most effective treatment you can obtain, for besides their direct and specific action on the kidneys, they keep the bowels regular, and the liver active, and hence purify the system and remove the cause of disease.

This medicine has long since proven its right to first place as a cure for the complicated and serious derangements of the filtering and excretory organs. It has the largest sale and is endorsed by more people than any similar treatment. You can depend on it absolutely to bring prompt relief and lasting cure. In view of these facts it is a waste of time and money and a risk to life itself to trifle with new and untried remedies when Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are at hand. One pill a dose, 25c. a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. One More Eulogy.

Lieutenant A. W. Thomson says, in The Independent, that when the civil war was practically over he was sent from the camp at Lincolnton to Charlotte, N. C., under a flag of truce. He entered the town and was conducted to General Echols' headquarters in a large upper room, evidently a schoolroom.

Our guide pointed out the general, a fine, portly gentleman, seated at a table. I advanced and laid my papers on the table.

"General Echols, I presume?" I said. "These dispatches are from General Gillam. Shall I wait for an answer?"

"Please be seated," the general said.

Glancing around, I saw 16 or 18 gentlemen, all, with one or two exceptions, in military uniform. Colonel Morgan came up to me, shook hands and said:

"I believe you and I are not entire strangers."

He had been our prisoner a year or so before. While we chatted a gentleman in a civilian gray suit turned to address General Echols. The cold stare of a glass eye caught my attention, and the features were somewhat familiar.

"Ah, Jefferson Davis! Are you here, pressed to the wall?" was my first thought. His face was far more pleasant than our northern papers had pictured it.

A dispatch was handed to General Echols, who read and reread it with an earnest, anxious lok. Half rising, he passed the paper to Mr. Davis, who read it slowly and then handed it back.

"Well," said he, "we have lost a generous enemy."

It was the news of President Lincoln's assassination.

When They Say "Goodby."

Did you ever hear two married women take leave of each other at the gate on a mild evening? This is how they do it:

"Goodby!"

"Goodby! Come down and see us soon."

"I will. Goodby!"

"Goodby! Don't forget to come soon."

"No, I won't. Don't you forget to come up."

"I won't.

"Be sure and bring Sarah Jane with you next time."

"I will. I'd brought her up this time, but she wasn't very well. She wanted to come awfully."

"Did she, now? That was too bad. Be sure and bring her next time."

"I will, and you be sure and bring the baby."

"I will. I forgot to tell you that he's cut another tooth."

"You don't say so! How many has he now?"

"Five. It makes him awfully cross."

"I dare say it does."

"Well, goodby! Don't forget to come down."

"No, I won't. Don't you forget to come up. Goodby!"

And they separate.

The Roar of Battle.

The roar of the navy's four point seven's, their crash, their rush as they passed, the shrill whine of the shrapnel, the barking of the howitzers and the mechanical, regular rattle of the quick firing Maxims, which sounded like the clicking of many mowing machines on a hot summer's day, tore the air with such hideous noises that one's skull ached from the concussion, and one could only be heard by shouting. But more impressive by far than this hot chorus of mighty thunder and petty hammering was the roar of the wind which was driven down into the valley beneath and which swept up again in enormous waves of sound. It roared like a great hurricane at sea. The illusion was so complete that you expected, by looking down, to see the Tugela lashing at her banks, tossing the spray hundreds of feet in air and battling with her sides of rock. It was like the roar of Niagara in a gale, and yet when you did look below not a leaf was stirring, and the Tugela was slipping forward, flat and sluggish and in peace.—From "With Buller's Column," by Richard Harding Davis, in Scribner's.

Ahead on Prayers.

A bishop traveling in the depth of winter came to a house of a presiding elder to spend the night. The weather was bitterly cold, and the bedroom into which the bishop was shown had a thick coating of ice on the windows. The elder waited to see the bishop safely between the feather beds. But when the bishop, half frozen, jumped into bed without stopping to say his prayers the elder remonstrated with him.

"You have forgotten to say your prayers," he said.

"No," answered the bishop. "I always keep 'prayed up' in preparation for nights that are as cold as this."

SAT NIGHT AND DAY IN A CHAIR

Till Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured his Rheumatism.

William Doeg, of Strong Township, Hale and Hearty after Four Years of Torture—The Story of his Sickness and his Cure.

Sunbridge, Jan. 4.—(Special)—After four years of torture, during which he was scarcely an hour free from pain, Wm. Doeg, a farmer, living on Con. 3, Strong Township, and well known here, is a hale and hearty man. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him. Speaking of his cure Dr. Doeg says:

"The trouble started in my back and the pain got so bad I could not lie down to take rest, but had to sit night and day in a chair.

"The pain would sometimes move to other parts of my body, and when in my knees I was unable to walk.

"I was treated for Rheumatism by several doctors, and also tried different medicines without receiving any benefit. I feared I would never again be free from pain.

"My attention was called to cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I started to use them. Before I had finished the second box I was a new man, entirely free from pain. It has not come back since."

Uric acid in the blood is the cause of Rheumatism. If the Kidneys are working right they take all the uric acid out of the blood. Dodd's Kidney Pills make the Kidneys work right.

IN NATURE'S STOREHOUSE THERE ARE CURES.—Medical experiments have shown conclusively that there are medicinal virtues in even ordinary plants growing up around us which give them a value that cannot be estimated. It is held by some that Nature provides a cure for every disease which neglect and ignorance have visited upon men. However this may be, it is well known that Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, distilled from roots and herbs, are a sovereign remedy in curing all disorders of the digestion.

There are nearly 6,000,000 farms in the United States, the average size being 140 acres.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup stands at the head of the list for all diseases of the throat and lungs. It acts like magic in breaking up a cold. A cough is soon subdued, tightness of the chest is relieved, even the worst case of consumption is relieved, while in recent cases it may be said never to fail. It is a medicine prepared from the active principles or virtues of several medicinal herbs, and can be depended upon for all pulmonary complaints.

A CURE FOR COSTIVENESS.—Costiveness comes from the refusal of the excretory organs to perform their duties regularly from contributing causes usually disordered digestion. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, prepared on scientific principles are so compounded that certain ingredients in them pass through the stomach and act upon the bowels so as to remove their torpor and arouse them prepared to bear testimony to their to proper action. Many thousands are prepared to bear testimony to their power in this respect.

MACKINTOSH NOMINATED.

The Conservatives of the Kootenays select their man for the Federal Elections.

The convention of Conservatives for the Kootenay that met on Wednesday at Nelson resulted in the nomination of Hon. C. H Mackintosk, of Rossland, ex-lieutenant governor of the Northwest territories, as the Conservative candidate for Kootenay in the approaching Dominion elections. Hon. R. Green took the chair on motion by W. R. Ross

The following delegates were finally seated after considerable dispute as to the legality of two proxies from Fernie:

Fernie—W R. Ross, Norman Henderson (by W. R. Ross), F. Burn, David Clark (by Fred W. Burn).

Cranbrook—Thomas Caven, J. A. Harvey, G T. Rogers, F. B. Van Decar, G. H. Thompson

Ymir—D. F. Jelly, Wm. G. Lneil (by Harry Wright), Harry Wright, John Hampson, Jas. P. Byers (by D. F. Jelly).

Kaslo—Leander Hanna, Hon. R. F. Green, Edward Roche, Wm. A. Skinner, Chas. W. McAnn.

Slocan—J. G. Foster (by Wm. Hunter) William Hunter, E. Shannon (by J. H. Hoben), J. H. Hoben, Thomas McNeish.

Revelstoke—Thomas Taylor, Wm. M. Brown, T. J. Washburn, C. P. Lindmark.

Rossland—Hon. C. H. Mackintosh, A. S. Goodeve (by J. S. Clute), E. D. Orde, Donald Gunn, A. H. MacNeill.

Nelson—Thomas Bennett, John Houston, Robert Weir, H. H. Avery, J. W. Holmes.

The following nominations were made:

Hon. C. H. Mackintosh, by Thomas Taylor, M.P.P., of Revelstoke.

J. A. Harvey, of Cranbrook, by G. H. Thompson.

Chas. W. McAnn, of Kaslo, by Leander Hanna.

Mr. Harvey withdrew his name and a vote being take on the other two nominees the choice fell on Mackintosh by 24 to 14. The choice was made unanimous upon motion by Mr. McAnn.

The chosen leader made a short speech after which a resolution expressing faith in the McBride administration was adopted.

It was agreed that an executive committee of one for each riding be appointed to conduct the campaign, the delegates for each riding to select the member for their respective ridings. The Fernie delegates could not agree on their man, F. Burn supporting Dr. Bonnell and W. R. Ross favoring A. Joyce, president of the Fernie Conservative Association. The appointment of the Fernie member was therefore left to the local association. The members elected were:

A. H. MacNeill, of Rossland; John Houston, of Nelson; Wm. Hunter, of Slocan; T. Taylor, of Revelstoke; R. F. Green, of Kaslo; Harry Wright, of Ymir; and G T. Rogers, of Cranbrook.

The executive met and selected A. H. MacNeill, of Rossland, president; G. T. Rogers, of Cranbrook, vice-president; and William Hunter of Slocan, sec.-treas.

The Hon. C. H. Mackintosh is a native of London, Ont., his grandfather was an Inverness man, and his father was born in the county of Wicklow. He early took to literary work and at the age of seventeen was city editor of the London Free Press. He afterwards filled important positions on the staff of other Canadian and United States papers. He was mayor of Ottawa in 1881 and 1882, resigning to accept the Conservative nomination for that city in the Federal house. In 1893 he accepted the position of lieutenant-governor of the Northwest territories. In 1898 he became interested in the mining industry of British Columbia, and since that time he has done much towards bringing the great possibilities of this industry to the attention of outside capital.

Jack Curley and Jim Burrows are billed for a 20 round contest here on Jan 20th. They will fight at 158 lbs They are now doing active training. This will doubtless prove one of the best pugilistic encounters ever seen in Fernie. Both are scientific boxers and well matched in weight and each one is confident of winning.

BELL—CRAWFORD.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the handsome home of Mr. J. S. Buckwalter, Minneapolis, uncle of the bride, on Christmas day, at 6 p.m., the contracting parties being Mr. Thos W. Bell and Miss Gertrude Crawford, two popular young people of Fernie. Rev. S. B. Roberts tied the nuptial knot. About 60 guests were present. The ceremony took place under a beautiful cedar arch, with a large bell hanging in the centre. Two pretty little twins sisters dressed in white carried the ring on a silver tray. The bride looked charming in a gown of white silk mull trimmed with all-over lace and applique. She wore white roses in her hair and also carried a large bouquet. The bridesmaid, Miss Lina Longton, was also prettily gowned. Mr. J. S. Buckwalter, cousin of the bride, supported the groom. A handsome array of wedding gifts were presented by friends. Mr. and Mrs. Bell spent their honeymoon in Minneapolis and St. Paul and arrived in Fernie on Tuesday when they received the hearty congratulations of their many friends with which the Free Press wishes to join. They have taken up their residence in their cottage on Victoria avenue.

C. P. R. IMPROVEMENTS.

A rumor is prevalent that work will be commenced at once to enlarge the C.P.R. freight building. In corroboration of this report it is learned that a car of lumber for this purpose has been unloaded at the Fernie yard.

Superintendent Taylor has asked for an appropriation from headquarters for extensive improvements at this point. Among other things he has asked for is an up-to-date depot. The general superintendent will submit the matter at the general annual meeting held in Montreal in February. It is therefore scarcely probable that any work will be commenced here until after that date, as it will not be known until then how much money is available for these improvements.

Another blowout occurred yesterday afternoon in room No. 8, No. 1 mine. Sufficient warning was given to get all the men out before it took place and no one was seriously injured.

ROSS LOSES TO BURROWS.

As Barney Mullin did not show up on Saturday to fulfill his engagement with Billy Burrows, it was arranged that Fred Ross, who had come in from Nelson with Jack Curley should fight in his place. Despite the change in the arrangements a fair house gathered to see the mill. W. W. Tuttle refereed. The fight was a 10 round go for points. Burrows got the decision. Some dissatisfaction was afterwards expressed by Ross who expected a draw. The contest was not particularly fast, and neither men received a great amount of punishment.

MICHEL NEWS.

The Christmas festivities at Michel were marked by a very pleasant event in the form of a silver wedding celebration held at the home of Mrs. E. Dudley. Although the "best man" was not present on the occasion, he being engaged on important business at the coast, the hostess was not to be outdone in this respect, so she chose Mr. R. G. Duggan (oldest brother) to act as groom in order to carry out the evening's enjoyment. About 200 people were present, who did ample justice to the good things provided. When the wants of the inner man had been satisfied several toasts were given in a happy manner, after which preparations were made to spend the rest of the evening in dancing. Fifty beautiful and costly presents showed in a measure the high esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Dudley are held by their many friends. The party broke up in the early morning hours after singing "Auld Lang Syne" together.

CRANBROOK.

From the Herald.

Cranbrook hockey players have organized a club and will try to get into the Crow's Nest League.

F. G. Cameron, yard foreman at Fernie expects his sister to arrive from Wetaskiwin on a visit this week.

It is stated on good authority that J Gillis, of Morrissey, and Miss Dolly Watt formerly of this town, were married at Regina on Wednesday.

Operator H. J. Hicks has been transferred from Crow's Nest to Morrissey. Another new operator is C. Edling, who has been appointed to Frank.

Rev. H. Beacham, of Christ Church, left on Monday for the east. He will be married during his absence, and expects to return to Cranbrook with his bride about the first of March.

H. W. Ross, of Fort Steele, returned last week from an extended trip through the United States. He visited Spokane, Chicago, Omaho, New Orleans and old Mexico while absent, and found mining conditions most favorable.

Stomach Troubles.

A disordered stomach may cause no end of trouble. When the stomach fails to perform its functions the bowels become deranged, the liver and kidneys congested, causing numerous diseases, the most fatal of which are painless and therefore the more to be dreaded. The important thing is to restore the stomach and liver to a healthy condition, and for this purpose no better preparation can be used than Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

NOTICE is hereby given that sixty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Land and Works at Victoria, B.C., to purchase 320 acres of land, more or less, situate as follows: Commencing at a point about one mile north of Wilson Creek, on west bank of Elk River and on south boundary of lot No. 4132, thence running 80 chains south, thence 40 chains more or less, east to bank of Elk River, thence 80 chains north up the west bank of Elk River to lot No. 4132, thence 40 chains, more or less, west, to point of commencement.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

This preparation is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and influenza. It has become famous for its cures of these diseases over a large part of the civilized world. The most flattering testimonies have been received, giving account of its good works; of the aggravating and persistent coughs it has cured; of severe colds that have yielded promptly to its soothing effects, and of the dangerous attacks of croup it has cured, often saving the life of a child. The extensive use of it for whooping cough, has shown that it robs that disease of all dangerous results. It is especially prized by mothers because it contains nothing injurious and there is not the least danger in giving it even to babies. It always cures and cures quickly. Sold by all druggists and dealers.

FERNIE WINS AT HAT

FASTEST GAME OF HOCKEY EVER PLAYED ON THE CROW.

The Second Game of the C. N. League Series goes to Fernie after a Hard Game.

One of the fastest games of hockey ever played in the west took place in the Medicine Hat rink on Monday evening between Fernie and the home team. It was the second game of the Crows Nest League series and the result was awaited with keen interest by all the towns interested in the league. The Fernie boys felt that if they could win from the Hat on their own ice they would have no trouble in coming off victorious in the remaining games of the series and they were therefore determined to play the game of their lives.

At 8 o'clock the teams came on the ice and were loudly cheered by the largest crowd that ever viewed a hockey match at Medicine Hat. Before the game started Referee Pingle called the teams before him and instructed them that he would allow no rough play and that if such was indulged in by any of the men they would be ruled off without further warning. After this address the puck was taken to the centre of the ice and the teams lined up as follows:

MEDICINE HAT		FERNIE
Krauss	Goal	McKellar
Wright	Point	Miller
G. Turnbull	C Point	Kastner
R. Turnbull	Rover	Stephens (C)
C. Turnbull (C)	Centre	McLaughlin
Adsit	L. Wing	Lafortune
Wheeler	R. Wing	Browne

Referee—Fred. S Pingle.
Umpires—Dr. Holt and N. E. Suddaby.
Time Keepers—D. Carmicheal and Geo. Gordon.

In the face-off Turnbull secured the advantage and passed the puck back to the Hat rover, and a nice little piece of combination work occurred between the Hat players in a combined rush on the Fernie goal, but without success. The play was gradually forced back to the centre, but the home team seemed to be the stronger and for the first 15 minutes they kept the Fernie team playing a defence game. The Hat boys, who were much heavier men, seemed to be determined to break down the Fernie defence. They stormed first one side with their rushes and then the other and McKellar was kept busy stopping the shots. Such play could not continue long without someone scoring and after 11 minutes of the hardest work of his life Creighton Turnbull, the big captain on the Medicine Hat team, succeeded in landing the puck in the net amid thunderous applause from the spectators.

Play was again resumed and the Hat rover once more secured the puck and started down the ice but Stephens met him with a rush that carried him off his feet and securing the puck went through the Hat defence like an arrow, but the goalkeeper stopped the shot and the visitors were once more forced to take the defensive. At this stage of the game Miller, who is noted for his swift shooting, put a terrible shot into the Hat defence and the puck striking Raymond Turnbull put him out of business for five minutes. The game was again resumed and the play became general. At this point the home team secured their second goal by a fluke. a long shot by Glen Turnbull striking Stephens on the shoulder and rebounding into the net. For the next fifteen minutes the play was very even neither side gaining any material advantage, the game standing 2-0 at half time

By this time McLaughlin had become acquainted with the tricky Turnbull and in the face off secured the puck, but the Hat defence seemed to be impregnable, the Fernie forwards peigned shot after shot on the enemy's goal, but without success. The Hat men were all forced back on the defence and were kept very busy, but suddenly Creighton Turnbull again broke through the Fernie defence and scored with a long shot from the side of the rink.

At this point the game looked serious for the visitors. With a score of 3-0 against them and only 17 minutes to play it seemed to the spectators that the home team could not possibly be defeated. But they were mistaken. The hard luck which had pursued the Fernie boys all through the game could not last and the turning point had arrived. Kastner was the first to find the Hat net and then the visitors awoke. Shot after shot were rained upon their opponent's goal. McLaughlin scored twice in quick succession and then Stephens succeeded in landing one, which gave them a lead of one. It was apparent to all that the Medicine Hat team were played out. They had started a pace that they could not maintain and now they were being fairly played off their feet. Once more Kastner lands the puck in the net and the game is over. Score 5-3.

NOTES.

The game at some points was inclined to be a little rough, but the referee kept his word and no less than ten of the fourteen players were on the fence at different times during the match.

Every man on the Fernie team played hockey from start to finish. Kastner and Stephens are stars who would do honor to any hockey team. The forwards while not as expert at combination as they might be, stayed on their checks and succeeded in effectually breaking the famous combination work of the Turnbull brothers. Miller as a point man is hard to beat. Lafortune and McLaughlin made a number of brilliant rushes right through the Hat defence during the latter part of the game.

After half time both teams played only six men, Raymond Turnbull, who was hurt early in the game, being unable to finish and Neil McKellar was laid off the Fernie team to even matters.

The visitors were right royally entertained by the local club after the game. A well prepared banquet was spread for them, after doing justice to which a pleasant time was passed in speech and song. The team stayed over at Pincher Creek expecting to play the third game of the league but the weather turned soft and the ice was unfit for hockey. The boys got back on Thursday's delayed train.

GALLIHER NOMINATED.

Enthusiastic Liberal Convention at Nelson Heartily Endorse the Present Member.

The Liberal Convention at Nelson on Tuesday proved a very successful affair. Little opposition was expressed to the nomination of the present member, Mr. W. A. Galliher.

Fred Stork was the only member present from Fernie, and as one man can carry only four proxies six of the Fernie delegates did not have representation. The proxies he carried were: John L. Gates, R. W. Coulthard, Geo. Reynolds and A. J. Mott. The other districts of the riding were well represented.

John Keen, of Kaslo, was elected chairman and he appointed committees on credentials and resolutions, Fred Stork being named on both.

Upon the meeting being thrown open for nominations, F. E. Simpson, in an eloquent address and amid much enthusiasm submitted the name of W. A. Galliher. Dr. Kerr, of Rossland, seconded the nomination. Dr. Sinclair, of Rossland, who represented Waneta at the meeting by proxy was also nominated but that gentleman seeing the preponderance of feeling in favor of Galliher withdrew his name and the convention signified its unity of purpose by instructing the secretary to cast a single vote for Mr. Galliher as the unanimous choice of the meeting.

The nominee on being conducted to the assembly hall delivered a stirring address in which he showed the remarkable strides being made by Canada during recent years, and he eulogized the Liberal government for their share in promoting that development.

An expression of unbounded confidence in Sir Wilfred Laurier was framed in a resolution and adopted after which an organization committee was formed by selecting one member from each of the provincial ridings as follows:

Rossland, Dr. D. E. Kerr; Fernie, F. Stork; Cranbrook, M. McInnes; Columbia, R. S. Gallop, of Athelmar; Kaslo, John L. Retallack; Nelson, Dr G. A. B. Hall; Revelstoke, J. M. Kellie; Slocan, G. McVannel; Ymir, A. B. Buckworth. S. S. Taylor was appointed chairman of this committee and the secretary will be appointed by the chairman and the candidate.

Four will form a quorum, and those now appointed will fill any vacancies that may occur.

On the invitation of the Nelson Liberal Association, the visiting delegates attended the theatre that night, witnessed the operatic performance given by the Olympia Opera Company and later were entertained at an informal supper.

HOCKEY CLUB BENEFIT.

A benefit evening for the Fernie hockey club will be held at the rink on next Friday evening, Jan 22nd. The band will be in attendance. Children will not be allowed on the ice and fast skating will not be allowed. All persons desirious of having a pleasant evening on the ice should not miss this event. Admission 50 cents. The hockey club have been under a heavy expense and they doubtless will appreciate assistance rendered in this manner.

ACTING GENERAL MANAGER.

Mr. Thos. R. Stockett has been Appointed to that Position—Other Appointments.

Thos. R. Stockett arrived from Toronto on Tuesday. He brought with him a severe attack of la grippe contracted in the east and he has since been confined to his home most of the time.

Mr. Stockett now holds the position of acting general manager for the Crows Nest Pass Coal Co., having received the appointment from the Board of Directors while in Toronto. Mr. Stocket as acting general manager will have complete controll of the operative work of the company, Mr. Davies having similar control of the accounting department.

The acting general manager has made the following appointments:

R. G. Drinnan to be assistant to the general manager, with duties similar to those formerly performed by the general superintendent.

Andrew Colville, superintendent and mine manager at Coal Creek mines.

W. A. Letcher, chief clerk to the general manager.

Mr. Stockett discussed plans with the Board relative to improvements and development in the mines that will result in a large increased output for 1904.

A. H. CREE HONORED.

Elected by the local Conservative Association to two Important Positions.

A general meeting of the Fernie Liberal-Conservative Association was held in the Victoria hotel on Wednesday evening. A. H. Cree was elected member of the party's executive for the Dominion electoral district of Kootenay. At the Nelson convention a disagreement between W. R. Ross and F. W. Burn, resulted in the appointment of the Fernie member being left to the Fernie Association.

Each provincial riding sends a delegate to the Victoria convention which meets on Feb. 1st. A. H. Cree was duly nominated, the name of W. R. Ross, M.P.P., was also given but received no seconder and Mr. Cree was declared elected.

TWO COMING GAMES.

Cranbrook to-night and Medicine Hat on Monday evening.

An exhibition game of hockey has been arranged between the Cranbrook hockey team and the locals for tonight at the Fernie rink. The Cranbrook boys are said to be in good shape and an interesting game is looked for. The game is called for 9 o'clock to allow the clerks and others connected with the stores an opportunity of seeing the game.

The hockey game between Medicine Hat and Fernie, scheduled for Monday evening promises to be the hardest game ever played on Fernie ice. Both teams play good hockey and the championship of the league and the holding of the two trophies depends upon this contest. Numbers from other places are expected in to witness the game. Play will commence sharp at 8 o,clock to allow for attendance at the Minto club dance afterwards. The dance will not commence until the close of the game. It is expected that owing to the arrangements, the stores will close early to give everybody a chance to see the big game of hockey. Admission 50 cents, children 25 cents. The game for to-night has been called off on account of "no ice."

WRECK AT CROW'S NEST

Two freight trains met in a head-on collision on Thursday morning one mile west of Crows Nest depot. One train was going at 20 miles per hour and the other at 10 miles at the time of the accident. Both trains were light, only a dozen cars on each. A heavy snow storm prevented the crews from seeing the approaching trains until they were almost together. Some of the engine crew jumped and escaped. Ed. Roberts, a fireman, did not jump and he was severely scalded from the escaping steam of his engine which was badly wrecked.

Both engines were derailed and badly smashed up. A wrecking crew from Cranbrook was hurried to the scene and cleared the track by about 5 o'clock, allowing the westbound express to continue its course 12 hours late. The west bound freight in the mix-up was ten minutes in advance of the express with the latter's running orders.

Mine Inspector Dick and a committee of miners are inspecting the scene of the Michel explosion to-day. The inquest will be resumed at Michel on Monday.

ROAD TO FLATHEAD.

BOARD OF TRADE PASSES IMPORTANT MEASURES.

Superior advantages of Fernie route clearly Established. Other business.

The regular meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade on Monday evening was well attended and important business was taken up. J. A. Rennie, president, and J. S. T. Alexander, secretary, were in their places.

FLATHEAD ROAD.

The proposed wagon road to the Flathead country received much discussion. W. W. Leach, of the geological department of the Coal Co. was present and gave valuable information regarding the different courses proposed. He had an excellent map of the geological survey showing the district in minuteness and on which he carefully traced each route. To a common point on the Flathead river where all the routes converge the length of each route from the respective starting places is as follows: Fernie 25½ miles, Morrissey 24 miles, Elko 27 miles. The road will probably be required to extend down the Flathead a distance of 15 miles farther. The line from Fernie runs up to Coal Creek Mines. Four miles farther up the highest altitude of the whole trip is reached, 5,500 feet. The grading of a comparatively level road between Coal Creek summit and Michel Creek summit, a distance of 7 miles, is said to be an easy engineering feat. A few miles from this summit the old North Kootenay trail is struck on the Flathead, after which all is smooth sailing. Of this route trails and roads are now cut for 15 miles while the other two routes extend over territory unknown to any such marks of civilization. The Morrissey and Elko lines reach an altitude of 5,750 feet, or 250 feet higher than the highest point on the Fernie line.

The meeting was thoroughly impressed with the superiority of the Fernie route and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS it is expected that the government of British Columbia will throw open the land in the valley of Flathead river to the public in the coming spring;

AND whereas there will consequently be a large influx of settlers and prospectors who will require supplies:

AND whereas the only means of ingress to this district is at present through American territory;

AND whereas it is advisable that a Canadian route should be opened;

AND whereas the most feasible route from a point on the railway is that from Fernie on the Crows Nest branch of the C. P. R. by way of Coal Creek and the south fork of Michel creek to the headwaters of the Flathead river;

AND whereas part of such road is already in existence, there being a wagon road from Fernie to Coal Creek mines a distance of about 5 miles and a pack trail from said mines to the summit between Coal Creek and Martin creek, about 4 miles;

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED that the government of British Columbia be asked to construct a wagon road from Fernie up Coal Creek, thence to the valley of the south branch of Michel creek and up such valley and down the Flathead river to the most suitable point in the valley of the latter river, and further that the construction of such road be commenced forthwith and prosecuted to completion with as little delay as possible. Be it therefore resolved that copies of this resolution be sent to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works and W. R. Ross, M.L.A.

GOVERNMENT OFFICES.

The resolution framed and passed by the executive of the Board, re government offices for the Fernie district and the appointments given to local men was confirmed by the general meeting.

NEW MEMBERS.

Messrs. R. W. Wood and John Hutchison were elected members of the Board.

BALL ON FEB. 15.

The meeting then took up the matter of the town fire protection. A balance of $500 is yet due on the subscription list. A committee comprising Messrs. Rennie and Bleasdell were appointed to collect the balance of this money. It was also decided that the Board of Trade would give a ball in aid of the Fire Protection fund on February 15th. Considerable money is yet owing on the new fire-hall and special effort will be made to wipe it out.

SERIOUS SHOOTING AFFRAY.

Polander shot in the Head during the Festivities of a Slav Wedding.

On Monday morning Martin Funfer and Rosie Rak, two Slavonians, were married in the Catholic Church. After the ceremony was completed the happy procession headed by the bride and groom wended their way to the groom's home on the east side of the C. P. R. track and opposite the depot, where preparations were made for celebrating the day in the usual way,—dancing and beer drinking.

Everything went along happily until about noon, when John Wollos, one of the three fiddlers, received a bullet wound over the eye from a 32 callibre revolver. The circumstances of the shooting together with the efforts of the witnesses of the affair to mislead the police pointed to foul play, but little by little information has been gathered by the police to show that despite the suspicious actions of those involved the shooting was purely accidental, though attended with a negligence of the dangers of fire-arms truly alarming.

Stephen Baronck, a Slav about 22 years of age, did the shooting and he at once decamped. His friends told the police that he went toward Michel and though the search was continued mostly on the east side of the town the chief took the precaution to wire Constable Tranter at Morrissey Mines to be on the look-out for him. Mr. Tranter got the message at the upper town over the 'phone and hurried down to the Junction, where after some enquiry he learned that a man resembling the description sent him, had passed through. The section boss obligingly aided the constable to give chase by procuring a hand-car, and they overtook their man a few miles out, making with all speed towards the Great Northern track at Elko. He was in a very exhausted condition when found, having run most of the way. He was brought to Fernie on the evening express. On Tuesday in the police court he was remanded for a week.

Wollos was taken to the hospital where he lies in a very precarious condition with little chance for his recovery The bullet penetrated the skull and lies imbedded in the brain, the doctors having failed to locate it. Inflammation is feared, in which case there is no hope for recovery. The patient is in a semi-conscious condition most of the time. Wollos is 32 years of age. He has a wife and 5 children in Poland.

Various stories of how the shooting occurred have been given out. A bullet penetrated the window and no mark can be found to show that it entered the wall, which supports the stories of several Slavs that Wollos was sitting inside and received the wound from without. This is a seeming impossibility judging from the height of the mark on the window. No blood was found inside but considerable was seen outside.

The story of the injured man, told in his clearest moments, is probably the true account. He was outside with Baronck and some others. Baronck had a revolver which he was discharging into the air, with no other purpose than to make a noise and help along the celebration. He had fired five or six shots in this manner, and Wollos asked him for a shot. Baronck refused, saying that he had only a couple left. At this point he must have received the wound as all afterwards was a blank to him. The supposition is that he accidentally pressed the trigger while raising his hand to shoot again. Wollos said he had known Baronck ever since he had come from Poland, five months ago, and that he was always on good terms with him.

If the wound should prove fatal the charge of manslaughter will likely be laid against Baronck.

THE ALPINE ENTERTAINERS.

The Alpine entertainers are closing their week's entertainment this evening. This company of four members puts up a very creditable vaudeville show and those who attended got their full money's worth. The first evening was not well attended but a steady increase in attendance was noticable through the remainder of the week. Each evening's performance was opened and closed with a laughable farce. Musical specialties by Mr. Haliday and clever magic performances by Mr. Maitland are noteworthy features of the show.

POSITIVE SERVICE.

IN THE LORD'S VINEYARD DEMANDED FOR THE YEAR 1904.

CHRISTIANS CALLED TO ARMS.

Gospel Activities, Especially Those That Lie Nearest at Hand, Should Be Increased and Strengthened—Various Fields in Which the Believer May Work For Humanity—"Feed My Lambs," "Feed My Sheep."

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 3.—In this sermon, preached here to-day to an audience representing many states of the Union, Pastor Talmage sounds a vigorous call for increased gospel activities in many fields during the New Year and especially among those that lie nearest at hand. The text is Matt. xx, 7, "Go ye also into the vineyard."

A prospective theme! It is especially appropriate for the first sermon of a new year. This is not a time to sound a requiem over the dead. It is a time when the gospel colors should be unfurled defiantly to the breeze and when an aggressive campaign should be planned for invading the strongholds of evil surrounded by satanic intrenchments. "Forward march!" should be the command all along the lines, not "Mark time!" not "Halt!" not "Fall back!" not detailment for sentinel duty. We should have for the gospel ranks a grand charge and not a tattoo. There should be no willingness to sleep upon our arms in peace.

A negative policy will never capture this old world for Christ. It is well at times to preach the command, "Thou shalt not." The Christian is called to a life of positive, active service. On the first Sunday of a new year, when plans are being made for the next twelve months, I would remind you of that call. I would direct your attention to glorious opportunities for Christian usefulness within your reach, and I assure you that in availing yourselves of them you will not only benefit others, but will receive a blessing in your own soul. It is ever true that "they who water others shall themselves be watered."

There is work, unlimited work, tremendous, overpowering and vital work, to do among the Sunday schools of America. This gospel work is the more important because it must be done quickly or it will never be done at all. The verdant fields of childhood do not stay verdant long. Our own children seem to spring up under our very eye. It is but a short time since they were babies. Now they are boys and girls. Soon they will be grown men and women. We go back to visit the scenes of our childhood which we left only a few years ago, and we find that the companions of our youth are now grown up and married and have babies of their own. When Lord Lawrence, viceroy of India, was about to leave for Calcutta he burst into tears as he bid goodby to his youngest child. Turning aside from his family, he said to his wife: "I will never see my baby Bertie again. When I meet him once more he will have ceased to be a baby." Thus if you would work for Christ among the children you must hasten in your work.

Sunday school work offers an unlimited field for gospel effort. Many, many are the children among whom the earnest disciple can labor. The multitudes of pattering feet fairly fill the earth with music when these infantile throngs every morning start on their daily tramp to the public schools. In order to house them for educational purposes millions upon millions of dollars must be spent annually. No Christian disciple need be afraid of building upon another man's foundation when he goes to work for Christ among the little children.

"But," the church member says, "how am I to get a Sunday school class? How am I to work among the children? When I enter an ordinary Sunday school I find all the classes provided with teachers. Shall I try to steal away the scholars from some other teacher?" Oh, no, my friend. No good is ever accomplished for Christ by theft. What you should do is to go out and get your own Sunday school class. There are scores and perhaps hundreds of little children living near you who may never have heard the name of Jesus uttered in prayer. Go after them whether they are dressed in rags or in silks. Go after them even though you must beg shoes for their feet and clothing for their backs. Go after them whether they may be in palace or in hut. Go after them and beg them to come. Go after them even if you have to bribe your way into their affections with candy and dolls and with social calls.

"But," you say again, "supposing I should do as you say. Supposing I should get my Sunday school class together; then what shall I teach? I am only a humble follower of Christ. I know practically nothing about the Bible." Well, my Christian friend, if you gather your children in Christ's name I have no fears about the spiritual results. The older I grow the more I believe that the most important requisite for effective work as a Sunday school teacher is a loving, consecrated heart. Intellectual ability is valuable in its place, and the better the teacher is equipped the better it is for the children. But the essential quality is love for Christ and for souls. Without that quality the most highly educated teacher is a cold, unimpressive personality. Icebergs may be very beautiful to look at, especially when reflecting the rays of the rising sun, but icebergs are cold shrines before which to bow and forbidding hearthstones near which to build a family altar. Many intellectual brains are merely overawing icebergs. They repel rather than attract; they frighten rather than soothe. The Sunday school teacher needs a warm, loving heart far more than he needs an intellectual brain. If as a consecrated gospel teacher you will week by week come to your classes glowing with Christian enthusiasm; if you will with that Christian enthusiasm study well over your Bible and your "Sunday School Lesson Helps," there will be no need of fearing about what you will say. You will not only lead your scholars to Christ, but in teaching them you will yourself come nearer and nearer to your Saviour.

Sunday school work is of the most vital importance. Among all the fields open for gospel labor I have purposely placed it first, because I believe it to be the most important of all. No one can fully estimate the future influence of the children who are now playing about our doors. We, in Christ's name, can place our hands upon the children. In Sunday school work we can say, "The children will be greater than all, because the children of to-day will be the men and the women of to-morrow." If you can save the cradles and the nurseries for Christ, you can save the world for Christ. I plead and beg of you, Christian disciples, to expend a great part of your gospel energies in working among the children.

Another gate stands wide open for practical gospel usefulness. This gate leads into a field aglow with ripened human grain, ready to be garnered. It is crowded with young people. But, though crowded with the young men and maidens, yet each passenger train coming into our large cities is emptying part of its load into this field as the freight trains daily disgorge their cattle and horses and sheep into the Chicago stock yards, and yet there is always room for more. Young men and maidens, like children, seem to be everywhere. Who will help save them? Church member, is not Christ calling you to go and labor among the stalwart pines of youth as well as to use the gospel ax among the gnarled and worm eaten branches of sinful old age?

How is the Christian to go after the young people? Simply enough. He is to go after them with the same vigor as the agents of evil go after their prey. Here, for instance, is a young man who comes into a large city. He has no friends. Through an old acquaintance of his father he gets a position in your store. He has a small bedroom in a city boarding house. How is the Christian disciple to greet him? Is he to merely pass a "Good morning" or is he to go to that young man and open a conversation something like this: "Good morning! Are you a stranger in the city? Are you from a Christian home? Of course you have no church connections as yet. Will you not come down to our church next Sunday morning? We have our Christian Endeavor social next Thursday night. I wish that I could introduce you to some of our young people. It is very easy to drift among bad associates in a large town like this. I want you to get among the good people. We have some fine young folks up at our church. I know that you will get a warm welcome. Perhaps you do not know the city well enough to find your way. Come with me to supper, and we will go together, or I will call at your room for you." How many young men, strangers in a large city, are there who would refuse an invitation to come among Christian people if thus accosted? The reason the young people do not come into church fellowship is because they are not personally invited to come. This invitation duty rests with the new convert as well as with the old.

"But," some aged church member says, "this invitation duty to the young folks may apply to others, but not to me. I am not fitted for work among the young. My hair is gray. My nerves are not steady. I have postponed coming to Christ until I have passed my two score and ten. It needs a young person to work for Christ among the young." No, my aged, gray haired friend; you are wrong. There is only one person more fitted to work among the young than a Christian young man or a young woman. That person is a Christian gray haired man or woman who is still blessed with a young heart. Aged Christian friend, great opportunities of gospel usefulness are open to you among the young folks if you will only go to them in the spirit of loving consecration. They are open if you will only go to the young folks in a plain, practical way in the name of Jesus Christ.

Another glorious field of Christian usefulness is to be found in missionary work. What do I mean by that? Christian labor among the cannibals of the south seas? Among the fur robed Eskimos, in their igloos, of the icy north? Among the tattooed Maoris of New Zealand and the half civilized natives of the Orient? Oh, yes. They are all included in that term, "missionary work." The divine command, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost," has a world-wide significance. One of the first duties of a Christian is to work for the foreign missionary society of his church.

But in reference to missionary work I had in mind also another interpretation. I mean Christian labor among those who are living in your back alleys, Christian labor among the poor and the social outcasts, Christian labor, as a lady some time ago expressed it to me in a beautiful letter. She wrote asking me if I knew of any crippled child who had no friends. She wanted to adopt that child. She well knew that the able-bodied children might ultimately be able to take care of themselves, but the crippled child never. Therefore she wanted to adopt a crippled child and care for the boy while she lived and leave money enough in her will to care for the child after she was dead. Ah, that is the true missionary spirit! To care for the cripples and the helpless—the moral and physical cripples. You can find them in the slums. You can hear them knocking at your door.

How can the Christian work in the slums? By giving at least one evening of each week if possible to work in one of the city's rescue missions. You have a good voice. Go to those meetings and sing. They need you. You know or should know how to pray. Go there and lead in prayer. If you can do no more you can at least give out a hymn book and smile a welcome. Go there and do that. How can you do missionary work in the back alley? Go and visit the poor homes that are only a stone's throw from your door. You will find there people who are silently yet nobly struggling for life. It was well said by a great Christian leader, "The deserving poor are those whom you have to seek and not those who seek you." Go in Christ's name and hunt the deserving poor—the halt, the lame, the blind.

Another glorious field for Christian activity is found in hospital work. It is found where Christ spent most of his earthly ministry—namely, among the sick. It is found in going through the wards filled with white cots and leaving here a flower and there a word of encouragement and yonder a prayer. It is found in the children's wards, where many little ones are cursed with a futile struggle for physical existence, cursed from the moment they were born. It is found in the old people's homes, where the aged and the physically infirm, sometimes petulantly, sometimes lovingly and longingly, are waiting for the last summons to join the silent majority beyond.

But though the hospitals are filled to overflowing, how few of us ever think of going there to carry a Christ's message of good cheer! When we think of genuine Christian work we are apt to look for that work far beyond the seas. We do not appreciate the opportunities that are at our very doors.

But there is still one more field of Christian activity to which I would direct your attention. That is to the side rooms where the after-meetings should be held in every Christian church immediately following the benediction of the Sunday night services. That is the place where the gospel net is drawn. That is the room in which after a week of prayer the sinners are given a direct invitation to join the church. There they are brought face to face with Jesus Christ and are urged to make a decision in reference to their soul's eternal destiny. That is the one place above all others where the Christian should expect to see the direct results of his spiritual labors. It is the one place toward which all his scholars and young people should converge and concentre and find its gospel climax.

The busiest and most intense Christian worker should be found in the Sunday night after-meeting. No sinner should be there to whom a church member would be unwilling to extend a gospel invitation and with whom he would feel a diffidence in talking about his Saviour, Jesus Christ. But the great stumbling block in the way of most new church members is this—they think as new members that they should take a back seat. They feel that older Christians, and not the new converts, should move up and down among the people. The inevitable result is when a Christian is willing to remain silent in the beginning of his religious life he is very apt to remain dumb all through his earthly Christian career.

Oh, that our new converts in our sacred Sunday night after-meetings would immediately begin to testify for Jesus! Testify as Paul testified on the day after his conversion. No sooner did the good Ananias open his blinded eyes then he immediately began to talk about Jesus, and him crucified. He immediately began to work for the conversion of souls until he was at last driven over the Damascus wall, and he had to flee the town by night. Oh, that our new converts in the sacred after-meetings on Sunday night would testify for Christ as did James Tissot with his brush immediately after his conversion! This noted French artist was once the idol of Parisian society. He made his first fame as a portrait painter of society women. But one day while studying the French society woman in an attitude of prayer in a Parisian cathedral he gave his heart to Christ. Immediately to his old friends Tissot became a changed man. He not only turned his back upon his old life, but that he might the more ably portray the scenes in the life of Christ he lived for many years in the Far East. The famous series of Christ's life in art is the result of Tissot's testimony. Church member, plead at once for Jesus. Plead at once wherever you go. Especially plead for him and work for him in the sacred after-meeting held immediately following the benediction of the Sunday night preaching service.

Thus the call to the Christian life is a bugle blast for work. The church pew is not meant for a bed of roses, where indolence and sloth can lie down for perpetual slumber. Consecrated church membership is a sacred affinity for intense missionary activity as well as for "gospel rest." A famous musician once said, "If I stop practicing upon the piano one day I will feel my deterioration, if two days the musical critics will feel it, if three the world at large in my promiscuous audiences will feel it." If the consecrated church member stops working for Christ one day he himself will feel his own spiritual deterioration, if two days his Christian friends will realize it, if three days the world at large will be the sufferer because of it. Faith's wings are movable. They must be kept working all the time. Now comes the practical determination for the Christian to settle—where are you specially fitted to go to work for Christ? Choose your spiritual occupations. From among the many fields of gospel opportunities choose them now.

NOVA SCOTIA PROSPEROUS

Year 1903 Was a Record One—Output of Coal—Apple Crop.

The year 1903 was one of the most prosperous in Nova Scotia's history. The Chronicle printed a special New Year's number, dealing with the progress of the province. The introduction says:

"Fortune has smiled upon Nova Scotians during the year that is gone. Never before in a single year has the province made such steady, uniform and substantial progress; never have the people of all sections of the country enjoyed so much prosperity as in the twelve months past. The New Year dawns with almost a cloudless sky and with every promise of favoring breezes."

Special articles, statistics and reports prepared by reliable and competent correspondents, tell the story of Nova Scotia's progress and prosperity during the year of 1903. It is a story of bounteous harvests, of many millions wrested from the sea, forest and mine, and of abundant fruitfulness of farm and orchard. It is a story of busy shops and factories in every corner of the province, of well employed and well paid labor, of an energetic, resourceful and contented people, hard at work.

Practically every industry shows substantial growth, and it is doubtful if any part of all this prosperous and go-ahead Canada can make a better showing for the old year or offer brighter prospects for the new year than can this little province by the sea, the products of which last year aggregated ninety million dollars, $180 for every man, woman and child in the land.

The coal output from all mines is estimated by Hon. R. Drummond, editor of the Mining Record, to total 4,672,000 tons, an increase over 1902 of 354,000 tons. It has increased 50 per cent. in three years, and three hundred per cent. in eleven years. The total output of the Dominion Coal Company is 2,833,000 tons, and of the Nova Scotia Steel Co., 270,000 tons.

The apple crop was half a million barrels for export, yielding the growers over a million dollars, the average yield being $300 an acre in old orchards. The gold yield was 28,000 ounces, but this year deep mining will be exploited, and in the opinion of experts rich leads will be struck, giving largely increased returns.

The manufacturers of the province report a prosperous year, all their facilities being taxed to the fullest capacity, and many of them having orders booked ahead for five months. Labor is in demand and the highest wages that ever prevailed in the province were paid during the year.

The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal company reports: "The value of our sales of coal, ore and steel for the year 1903 is in round figures $3,500,000, or $500,000 over that of 1902. The increase in sales of pigiron and steel is over 15 per cent., while the increase in sales of coal is over 80 per cent.

The only industry which failed was the fisheries, but the enhanced prices compensated the fishermen for the short catch. The customs receipts at Halifax amounted to over a million and a half, an increase of seventy thousand over 1902.

A WET YEAR.

Official Record of the Rainfall in Great Britain.

The official record of the rainfall in Great Britain for the year 1903 shows that it was by far the wettest 12 months for more than half a century. Nearly two of every three days were rainy. Rain fell for 205 days in London, against an average of 166 days the previous year.

Nevertheless, the conditions have been unprecedentedly favorable in regard to the public health, and there has never been so low a death-rate both in the urban and rural districts. It seems evident that the heavy rainfall has washed the country clean. The flooding of streams and watercourses removed and destroyed injurious matter which would otherwise have accumulated and the drains and sewers have been flushed.

The close of the year has not been marked with any special form of illness. There has been no epidemic during the twelve months of influenza or other pulmonary affections which are usually associated with the prevalence of wet, cold weather.

Paris Likes Horse Meat.

Eating horseflesh by the poor in Paris is increasing to such an extent that the abattoirs will have to be enlarged. The present consumption is 30,000 horses a year. The horse meat is somewhat darker and stronger than beef, but it is not unpalatable. It has grown in popularity since the siege. The flesh of the horse and the ass is about half the price of beef, but the former is becoming dearer.

Used up horses that have worked for eight or ten years in the city are purchased for $50, put out to graze for a few weeks and are then led to the slaughterhouse. In some departments, such as the Nord, there is a scarcity of horses for farm work.

Fiendish Act of a Woman.

A dispatch from Ithaca, N.Y., says: Margaret Cunningham, a nurse girl in the employ of Professor Chamberlain of Cornell University, has been arrested on a charge of sending a box of poisoned candy to the home of Michael Casey, causing the serious illness of his two children.

The woman has been identified as the one who purchased paris green at a local drug store, who bought the box of candies at a confectionery store, and who approached the janitor of the Western Union Telegraph building and asked for a messenger boy. The messenger has identified her as the one who sent him with the package to the home.

TWENTY KILLED IN A WRECK

Disaster to a Rock Island Express in Kansas.

NO ONE ESCAPED INJURY

Flying Express in the Darkness of Night Collides Head-on With a Cattle Train—Graphic Story of an Eye-Witness.

A dispatch from Kansas City, dated Jan. 6, says: The Rosk Island's California and Mexican express which left Chicago on Monday night for the west, collided head-on to-day at Willard, Kansas, 14 miles west of Topeka, with a cattle train. Two coaches were demolished; twenty persons were killed, and every person on the train was injured.

H. G. Parsons, a reporter who was on the wrecked Rock Island express, tells this story: "The wreck occurred two miles west of Willard, Kan. At least twenty persons were instantly killed, and several others were fatally, and a large number slightly injured. Two cars filled with passengers, were demolished; both locomotives were destroyed, and four carloads of stock torn to pieces and dozens of dead animals strewn over the right of way.

"Both trains were running at a speed of from 15 to 25 miles an hour, and when the engines met they were welded together by the impact. The engineer and fireman on the freight escaped without injury by jumping; the fireman in the passenger train was seriously injured, but the engineer escaped.

"It was in the third car of the passenger train, the first coach having been preceded by a smoker and baggage car, that the greatest loss of life occurred. The smoker, which was occupied by only two or three men, was overturned and pushed through the car behind it, which was crowded with passengers, some standing in the aisle. The first warning given the passengers in this car was when the sudden setting of the air brakes shut off the lights, leaving all in darkness. A moment later a mass of splintered wood and iron was crowded down upon them. No one was thrown out of his seat by the blow.

"Most of those in the forward end of the car were killed instantly. Thirty in the rear end of the coach, however, succeeded in escaping from that end of the car which was still unobstructed. No one in the front half of the car escaped. They were crushed down between the seats by the smoker.

"When rescue was finally possible only three living persons were taken out by the rescuers, who were compelled to chop holes in the side and through the floor and top of the coach to reach them."

Bonnie Martin, a girl, 11 years of age, was pinned down between the two cars, the heavy stove resting on one foot. When she was taken out she addressed a doctor who was beding over her as "Papa." The physician did not have the heart to tell her that her father and mother had been killed. The child was suffering from a broken ankle, where the stove fell on her, and severe scalp contusions. She was put to sleep by a hypodermic injection to relieve the pain.

After daylight the work of removing the bodies began. The engine of the wrecking train coupled on the two cars, a sleeper and chair car, which were uninjured, and started back to Topeka with the victims. At Topeka all the injured were hurried to hospitals. Some of the bodies were so badly crushed as to be unrecognizable. Not a wheel in the entire passenger train seemed to be off the track. The four cars immediately behind the engine of the freight train were crushed into kindling. Dead and dying cattle littered the right of way, while others uninjured ran about, adding to the confusion."

Robbed of Her Fortune.

Robbed of nearly $150,000, as it is alleged, Clara Irene Laing, of Chicago, has been induced to go to Toledo, O., and to sign a document releasing her father from all responsibility for his acts while her guardian.

Former Governor John M. Hamilton has produced evidence to this effect in the probate court, where, as Miss Laing's attorney, he had begun suit to secure an accounting from her father. The guardian is alleged to have kept his daughter in ignorance of the fact that she was heiress to $150,000. She accidentally discovered the facts a few weeks ago, when 27 years old, but the fortune is declared to have disappeared.

FIRE AT A CLUB.

One Man Instantly Killed and Several Others Seriously Injured.

For the second time in eighteen months the Mount Royal Club, Montreal, the most exclusive club in that city, was destroyed by fire on Jan. 5, this time being attended with loss of life.

The fire broke out about six o'clock in the morning, and though the brigade answered promptly, it did not take long to complete the destruction of this magnificent building.

Frank Hutt, a fireman, aged 21, was instantly killed by a falling cornice. Firemen Ruddy, Plouffe and Mullen, and a newspaper carrier, Jas. Wilkinson, are injured. Colonel Liardet, secretary of the club, is dying, and Miss Oman, book-keeper of the club, had her leg broken and received internal injuries; her condition is believed to be serious. Col. Liardet jumped from the fourth story to a one-story building, and was so seriously injured that he was unable to move. While he lay there flames broke through the windows and were burning his head and face, when Fireman Arthur Mahon, of the fire brigade, discovered him. He was then wrapped in blankets and lowered to the ground and conveyed to the hospital.

The origin of the fire was a mystery, and was only discovered by the newspaper carrier on his regular rounds. The building stands in the heart of Montreal's most exclusive residential quarters, and is the former residence of Hon. J. J. C. Abbott.

Colonel Liardet is an old British army officer and at one time commanded the 17th Foot Guards. He is 52 years of age.

Farmers for Canada.

It must be with very mixed feelings that any person interested in the future of English agriculture will read the announcement that a party of nine hundred farmers will leave Yorkshire for Canada in the spring of the year. The yeomen of Yorkshire are the pick of our people. They can boast a purer pedigree than any save a few families among the nobility and gentry. They have stuck to the soil generation after generation, except during those periods when called to twang the bow or fix the bayonet in their country's service. And now they are going from us, to be followed by others of their kith and kin, and more of the agricultural communities from other parts of the United Kingdom. And as these sturdy British yeomen leave our shores there will arrive, in order to keep up the statistics of population, lest it should be said that we are a diminishing race, undersized, underfed foreign undesirables, the scum of continental cities, rats from the sewers of Europe.

These Yorkshire farmers are going to Canada. For that fact, at any rate, let us be thankful. They leave the mother country, but they stay within the Empire. They are not altogether lost to us. On the broad, fertile prairies of the west we wish them golden fortunes. Making due allowance for the bright colors of a sanguine optimism, there is no doubt that their prospects are far brighter across the Atlantic than they have been here for thirty years past.—London Express.

Parkin on Rhodes Scheme.

London, Eng., Jan. 5.—Dr. Parkin recently returned from touring Australia in the interest of the Rhodes university scheme, and in speaking to the Canadian Press last night said that New Zealand and Australia are enthusiastic over the idea but afraid that the graduates would not return home. Dr. Parkin replied that a scattering is best, like Rutherford and the New Zealander, McGill, who made the famous radium discovery. South Africa, Rhodes' own home, curiously, thought the least about the scheme, and Carnegie didn't believe that Americans care about the idea, remarking that our young men want to make money. Dr. Parkin visits Newfoundland, West Indies and Barbadoes next May to complete his tour. The Labor party, he says, is a menace to Australia, whose only safety lies in a coalition between Deakin and Reid. Australians used to say that Canada was slow, but now are eager to follow her.

Died under an Operation.

Guelph, Jan. 4.—Charles Raymond, the well known founder of the Raymond Sewing Machine Works of this city, died this morning under an operation at the hospital here. Mr. Raymond had been ill for several weeks, but it was hoped that he had passed the critical stage.

However, this morning complications arose and it became necessary to resort to an operation, and in his weakened condition he was unable to stand the shock. Mr. Raymond was 79 years of age. He was born in Lowell, Vermont, and established business in Guelph in 1864.

He was the inventor of several contrivances and made a great success of his industry, and after the company's incorporation he was president for two years, retiring six years ago.

London's Fire Chief Killed.

London, Jan. 6.—Fire broke out at one o'clock this morning in Stirling Bros.' boot and shoe warehouse, and spread to Aorman Reckert's spice mills.

The south walls of the building fell, killing Fire Chief Rowe, and seriously injuring Firemen Swanwick, Robinson, Secombe and Robertson. The Sterling building is a total loss.

FERNIE, B. C.

Marie Antoinette's Necklace.

It must have been in 1862 that Meyerbeer paid his last visit to London, and I saw him at one of the Philharmonic concerts, which were then held in the old Hanover square rooms. There was quite a flutter of excitement when the little old man, looking extraordinarily wizened and wrinkled, even for his age of 68, came into the box. I noticed his piercing eyes and hooked nose and perhaps as much as these a magnificent brooch of rubies and diamonds that blazed in the center of his shirt frill, which he wore in the fashion of 1830. The stones flashed and glittered with every one of his quick little bows to right and left, and the rubies connect themselves with a tale of his great predecessor in Paris, the mighty Gluck.

After the first triumphant performance of one of Gluck's operas the queen sent for him to come to her box to receive her congratulations. Half dazed with emotion, excitement and fatigue, the old musician, rising from his obeisance, clapped his hands to his eyes, crying with horror, "Blood, blood round the queen's neck!"

"It is only this, Gluck," said Marie Antoinette, hastily snatching off her necklace of rubies and holding the rippling gems toward him, and Gluck looked again and saw the fair, white throat rising unharmed and stainless. He died in 1787.—Cornhill.

ARE YOU INVITING PNEUMONIA?

You Need only to Neglect Coughs and Colds. The Great Safeguard is

DR. CHASE'S SYRUP OF LINSEED AND TURPENTINE.

Like other people, you dread the thought of pneumonia, consumption, or any form of lung trouble.

Did you ever wait to think that if colds were not neglected there would be no consumption or pneumonia?

These ailments start with colds, and any cough or cold can be cured by the timely use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine.

"Oh, it will wear away," you say, and in the meantime the cold is fastening itself on your system, and gradually creeping down the bronchial tubes towards the lungs.

This word of warning may be of priceless value to you if you heed it.

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has won the good-will of many thousands because of its wonderful promptness in curing serious colds and lung troubles.

Mr. John Clark, coachman, Port Hope, Ont., states:—

"Last winter I was so bad with a cold that I could not speak above a whisper, and had great pains in the chest. At last I feared it would develop into consumption. A friend advised me to use Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and one bottle cured my cold, which I believe would have proved very serious if I had not used this medicine."

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is sold by all dealers at the advertised price, 25 cents a bottle (family size three times as much), 60 cents. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every bottle.

THE DEMON, DYSPEPSIA.—In olden time it was a popular belief that demons moved invisibly through the ambient air, seeking to enter into men and trouble them. At the present day the demon dyspepsia, is at large in the same way seeking habitation in those who by careless or unwise living invite him. And once he enters a man it is difficult to dislodge him. He that finds himself so possessed should know that a valiant friend to do battle for him with the unseen foe is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are ever ready for the trial.

Sources of Color.

An interesting enumeration has been given of the sources of color. From this it appears that the cochineal insects furnish the gorgeous carmine, crimson, scarlet carmine and purple lakes; the octopus gives sepia—that is, the inky fluid which the creature discharges in order to render the water opaque when attacked; the Indian yellow comes from the camel; ivory chips produce the ivory black and bone black; the exquisite Prussian blue comes from fusing horses' hoofs and pigs' blood; blue black comes from the charcoal of the vine stock; Turkey red is made from the madder plant, which grows in Hindoostan; the yellow sap of a Siamese tree produces gamboge; raw sienna is the natural earth from the neighborhood of Siena, Italy; raw umber is an earth found near Umbria; Indian ink is made from burned camphor; mastic is made from the gum of the mastic tree, which grows in the Grecian archipelago; bistre is the soot of wood ashes; very little ultramarine, obtained from the precious lapis lazuli, is found in the market.

Weak, sickly babies are a great trial to mothers. They need constant care both night and day and soon wear the mother out. They are mildly laxative and give prompt relief. Concerning them Mrs. R. J. They produced sound, refreshing sleep, and I regard them as indispensible in any home where there are little ones."

A Human Picture Book.

A remarkable case of tattooing came to light in Professor Hebra's lecture room in a hospital in Vienna some years ago. The man was the subject of a lecture, and one of the spectators at first mistook him for a bronze statue. He was tattooed from head to foot, and not a quarter of a square inch of his entire person was intact. The skin presented an appearance resembling the tracery of an exceedingly rich cashmere shawl. The coloring was done with indigo principally, with enough red inserted here and there to give it effect. His name was George Constantine, a Greek by birth, who with a band of robbers entered Chinese Tartary to commit depredations. The gang was captured, and this man, with others, was ordered by the ruler to be branded in this manner. On the palms of his hands letters were tattooed which explained that he was "the greatest rascal and thief in the world." It took three months to tattoo him, the indigo being pricked into the skin. The designs represented elephants, lions, tigers and birds, with letters worked in between. A couple of dragons ornamented his forehead. He said his body swelled up very much at the time and ever since had been sensitive to changes in the weather.

Gambling the Worst Vice.

Of all the vices to which men are addicted gambling is undoubtedly the worst. Gambling has a worse effect on the mind and conscience even than drink. The inveterate gambler cannot remain honest; he does not remain honest.

We talk earnestly to the young man with the gambling habit because many such young men are strong in ability and character and would render good service to the world if they could use their energies properly.

The gambling instinct is a perverted form of ambition, the most dangerous of human perversions. Every young man who has genuine strength should think about gambling from his own point of view, and his own pride should give him reasons for stopping.

If you want success in life you should want it as a result of your own efforts, not as the result of any accident. The gambling instinct is weak as well as vicious. It is self indulgent and contemptible; it represents the desire to get something for nothing.

His Hobnailed Shoes.

A globe trotter whose shoe soles are always heavily studded with copper brads was asked why he wore them. He replied:

"To those simple brads alone I attribute my present good health. For years I was an invalid, subject to neuralgia, dyspepsia and headache. In traveling among the western Indians I finally concluded that their splendid good health was due to their going barefoot. And now I attain the same result and wear shoes. I believe the aches and pains civilization is heir to are due to the insulation of our bodies from mother earth. Electricity is the vitalizing constituent of our bodies. The globe is a mighty battery, continually generating and discharging electricity. I restored the broken connection with the battery with these brads, and the result was astonishing improvement in health."

He Ate His Own Words.

Not long ago the punishment for libel in Russia was the requirement that the libeler literally eat his own words. A man who published a small volume reflecting on the unlimited power of the sovereign was seized, tried in a summary way and condemned to consume the objectionable words. In one of the public streets the book was severed from its binding, the margins cut off, the leaves rolled up one by one and fed to the unfortunate author. A surgeon was in attendance to pronounce upon the number possible to give without endangering his life, but he is reported to have set the limit at something like 200.

"The Sea! The Sea!"

We all went one day, says W. J. Stillman in The Atlantic, to Coney Island, on the southern shore of Long Island, since a popular bathing place for New York, but then a solitary stretch of seashore, with a few bathing boxes and a temporary structure where bathers might get refreshments.

We drove out in my brother's buggy, and as at a turn in the road I caught a glimpse of the distant sea horizon I rose in the buggy, shouting, "The sea, the sea!" and in an uncontrollable frenzy caught the whip from my brother's hand and slashed the horse in wild delirium, unconscious of what I was doing. The emotion remains ineffaceable after more than threescore years, one of the most vivid of my life.

And how ecstatic was the sensation of the plunge into the breakers, holding fast to my brother's hand, and then the race up the beach before the next comber, trembling lest it should catch me, as if it were a living thing ready to devour me. They never come back, these first emotions of childhood, and though I have loved the sea all my life I have never again felt the sight of it as then.

ESTABLISHED 1898.

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, JAN. 16, 1904.

ELEVENTH VOLUME.

WITH last week's edition THE FREE PRESS commenced its eleventh volume. The time has arrived, both in the matter of age and in condition of development when Fernie can no longer claim to be a new town in the usual acceptation of that word as applied to western mining towns. Many new towns have sprung up along the Crow's Nest during those years, but Fernie has grown apace with her years and to-day she holds her rightful place as the pioneer and the metropolis of them all. The FREE PRESS has ever striven to maintain an independent attitude and to serve the town and district in a conscientious manner. Upon beginning the new volume we pledge ourselves anew to this purpose and ask the continued co-operation of our many patrons towards this end.

REVIEW OF THE YEAR.

THE YEAR 1903 was a fairly good one, viewed from a business standpoint. The volume of the business was about the same as in 1902, but it was on a better basis. The output of the mines was supplemented by the product of sawmills, and the output of the two industries was an increase over that of 1902. The figures below can be accepted as a fair approximate of the value of the output of the mines and forests of the province for the year 1903:—

Rossland mines, gold and copper	$ 4,000,000
Boundary mines, gold and copper	3,000,000
Slocan mines, Silver and lead	1,000,000
Nelson mines, gold, silver, lead and copper	400,000
Lardeau and Trout Lake mines gold, silver and lead	200,000
East Kootenay mines, silver and lead	100,000
Cariboo and Lillooet mines, gold	200,000
Atlin mines, gold	1,000,000
Vancouver Island mines, gold and copper	500,000
Yale district mines, gold	200,000
Total	$10,600,000
East Kootenay mines, coal and coke	$ 2,000,000
Vancouver Island mines, coal and coke	3,000,000
Total	$ 5,000,000
Kootenay and Yale, lumber and shingles	$ 2,000,000
Lower mainland, lumber and shingles	2,500,000
Vancouver Island, lumber	1,000,000
Total	$ 5,500,000
The Province, iron ore, lime, rock, building stone	$ 500,000
Grand Total	$21,600,000

EDITORIAL NOTES

The FREE PRESS will hereafter be published on Friday instead of Saturday.

An experiment pay is being given out today for the first time as follows: Coke oven office, 2.30 to 3.20; Coal Creek office 3.30 to 5.30; town office 7.00 to 8.30.

The Board of Trade has met with many discouragements in its battle for greater fire protection in the town but probably the greatest discouragement is to find, that after incurring expenses on money promised by subscribers, the subscribed amounts are not forthcoming and numerous creditors are demanding settlement. The situation is not a pleasant one and it calls for a ready response from those who for various reasons have not yet come up with the coin.

Persons carrying revolvers or other shooting arms are liable to a month's imprisonment. If this law were rigidly enforced the danger from accidental shooting such as occurred in Fernie this week would be lessened. A still greater decrease would be found in cases where intent to do bodily injury is the motive. Naturally the police find it difficult to make many convictions under this charge as the weapons are kept concealed. The insane desire to carry a concealed weapon seems to be very prevalent with certain classes, especially foreigners, and it is from this cause that many of our criminal cases arise. The common safety of the community demands that drastic measures be taken to supress the habit.

There seems only one course open to the government in the matter of the local government of this district if it takes any notice of the opinions of the representative bodies of the district. The Fernie Board of Trade have demanded in no uncertain tones that the offices be instituted here at once and that they be manned by residents of the district. The Fernie Conservative Association is about to adopt a similar measure. The Liberals have already placed themselves on record in favor of such a policy. The government is blocked on every other possible course. The government has withheld this right from the town for the past four years but it would appear as if the long sufferance of the district was about to win out at last.

"If a fire should break out in this town how would you give the alarm?" was the pertinent question asked us this week by a man not fully acquainted with the fire protection system of the town. We confessed that we knew of no regular fire alarm in the town. The question is one which calls for prompt action. The town with commendable energy has provided a commodious fire-hall and an up-to-date engine but neglected to add some reliable fire-alarm by which the present service could be utilized in as prompt a manner as possible. Promptness is the one important requisite in handling a chemical engine for it is useless after a fire has made any headway. In order to have the greatest speed possible in reaching a fire it is necessary to have the best possible general alarm. Since the removal of the electric light plant to Coal Creek and the discontinuance of the triangle alarm at the Royal hotel corner the town is without any alarm.

LOSS OF CLALLAM.

The ferry steamer Clallam, of the Puget Sound Navigation Co., plying between Seattle and Victoria sank six miles off the Victoria wharf on Friday night and over fifty of the crew and passenger list were drowned.

A terrible gale overtook the vessel when she came in sight of Victoria in the afternoon. Her steering machinery refused to act and she became unmanageable. It was a matter of only a couple of minutes before the disabled vessel was grasped by the furious gale and twisted and turned as if she was but a featherweight. Gradually she wore around till she was broadside to the seas, which had by that time assumed gigantic proportions.

After being tossed helplessly about for several hours she began to fill rapidly and it became apparent that she must soon go down. The captain as a last resort placed the lady and children passengers in three small boats manned by members of the crew. As these boats laden with their precious freight strove to make headway from the vessel they were swamped by the towering waves and all were lost.

Later two ocean-going tugs came to the rescue of the sinking ship. A hawser was attached to her and an attempt made to tow her to Townsend. The Clallam sank rapidly and finally the hawser had to be cut. The rescuing tugs stood in close and saved as many of those on board as possible. The vessel had a passenger list of 53 and a crew of 32. Of these only 31 have been accounted for leaving a total loss of 54.

Several of the lost are prominent Victoria people. One particularly sad case is that of Mrs. Samuel E. Bolton, nee Gurd, who was married three weeks ago at her home in Cranbrook. Mr. and Mrs. Bolton were returning from California, where they had been spending their honeymoon. Mrs. Bolton lost her life with the other ladies and Mr. Bolton had a narrow escape, being picked up in an exhausted condition by a steamer bound for Townsend.

POLICE COURT.

Constable Henderson brought up from Michel on Monday an Italian named Louis Depardo who while crazed with drink had acted in a very ugly manner on the preceding night. He was living with several others in the Italian quarter of the town and he became so unruly that Mr. Henderson was called. The latter tried several times to pacify him by getting him to go to bed. Finally he became so violent as to fire the lighted lamp at his imaginary assailants. The constable pluckily prevented a conflagration by throwing the exploding lamp out of the house and then after a long struggle he succeeded in landing his infuriated prisoner in the lock-up. The case came up on Monday. The accused was given three months on the two charges of assaulting a police officer and wilful destruction of property.

Jos. Gall, of Morrissey, was ordered this week to pay a fine of $300 or in lieu of that spend four months in jail for the illegal sale of spirituous liquors. This is the second offense, he having paid a $100 fine for the same breach of the law last summer. Gall admitted having sold beer by the kegs, and he claimed in defense that he was the authorized agent of the Crow's Nest Brewing Co. In support of this statement he procured a document from the company to that effect. The magistrate would not admit the legality of such a procedure and he imposed the above sentence upon him. Gall did not pay the fine and he will be taken to the Nelson jail.

Mr. Empty who has under gone a number of operations for blood poison in his arm, at the Fernie hospital is on a fair way to recovery.

Mr. Gilmour is at present suffering from a crushed hand caused by an accident in the mine.

At present there are two checkweighmen instead of one. Mr. Jos. Lightly, who has filled the position so efficiently for the last term has returned to his former work. Jos. Smith is filling the position on No. 1 and Mr. Beaumont, of Fernie, on No's 2 and 3. These men will continue in office for six months.

The mines are getting again back to a good output. On Saturday last the splendid total of 1,620 tons was reached. This eclipses any former output of the mines for last year. When the new haulage is in operation the daily tonnage will be greatly increased.

On Sunday last a large crowd of men turned out in a body to attend the large and impressive funeral of the men killed in the late explosion.

R. J. Young formerly of Trites Wood Co., Michel, is filling the place for the present of Mr. Murphy.

A large petition is being circulated and meets with the hearty approval of nearly every citizen, for the establishment of a Post office order office and a banking system. This is something that is greatly needed for Coal Creek.

SEVEN FUNERALS IN ONE.

Impressive Burial of the Victims of the Michel Explosion held last Sunday.

A special train made up at the Fernie yard brought the victims of the Michel explosion to town last Sunday, arriving at 11 a.m. The bodies were incased in caskets ready for burial. Accompanying them were 175 friends and comrades to attend the last sad rites of the departed.

The body of William King was taken in charge by the Roman Catholic church and that of Burdett Dean by Christ Church. The other bodies were taken to the Miners' Union hall where shortly after one o'clock a union service was conducted by Revs. Gordon, Robson and Marshall. The hall was crowded and the men entered feelingly into the spirit of the services.

At about three o'clock the procession formed. The band led the way, playing the Dead March, followed by the corpses in three sleighs. A line of mourners, friends and comrades nearly a mile long stretched out in the rear. The whole procession as it slowly wended its way through the two feet of newly fallen snow to the cemetery on the hill presented a grandly solemn sight in keeping with terrible sadness of the occasion.

The first burial was Wm. King in the upper part of the cemetery, Rev. Father Milleux performing the ceremony. The other bodies were ranged in a row by their respective graves awaiting burial in turn. The choir from the Methodist church, Michel, of which Mr. Roberts was a respected member, gathered round these graves and sang appropriate music. The burial then took place in this order : Burdett Dean by Rev. Houghton ; David J. Roberts, Thomas Evans and Richard S. Thomas by Rev. Robson ; Wm. McAllister and John Sale by Rev. Gordon Officials of the Michel Miners' Union had charge of the funeral arrangements. Extra coaches were provided on the evening express to convey the Michel people back to their homes.

Wm. King was a married man. It is said that he had contemplated going back to England to live within a month, and had written his wife to that effect.

Begin the year well by having your picture taken, Prest & Co's studio will be open Jan. 18th to 23rd, inclusive. x1t

Dislocated her Shoulder.

Mrs. Johanna Soderholm, of Fergus Falls, Minn., fell and dislocated her shoulder. She had a surgeon get it back in place as soon as possible, but it was quite sore and pained her very much. Her son mentioned that he had seen Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised for sprains and soreness, and she asked him to buy her a bottle of it, which he did. It quickly relieved her and enabled her to sleep which she had not done for several days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

CHAPTER I.

LOCKED IN.

"Hi, policeman!"

Constable Metcalf stopped abruptly in his slow march and looked upward.

Right in front of the constable was a dwelling house with a small forecourt, a two-storied house situated in a terrace on the Felspar road, in the London suburb of Clayfields.

It was an odd looking terrace, consisting of seven houses, numbered 1 to 13. The terrace had been erected about forty years previously. The seven houses had originally belonged to one landlord, but during the forty years they had frequently changed hands. Some of the houses had been allowed to fall gradually into a condition bordering on decay, some had been patched up, and presented a fairly wholesome front, and two—11 and 13—had been almost rebuilt, and looked from the outside almost as good as new.

Constable Metcalf was now gazing at the first-floor window of 13.

The head and shoulders of a young man were thrust out of the window of the principal bedroom, a room situated in the front of the house and occupying the space over the front parlour and the narrow hall. The stone ledges of the parlour and bedroom windows were decorated with wooden flower-boxes, and the young man as he endeavoured to attract the attention of the constable had to hold his head high and crane his neck in order to avoid coming into contact with the flowerless stalks of the geraniums which bordered the outer sash of the window.

"Hi, I say, policeman!" repeated the young man, in a somewhat louder tone.

"Well," said Constable Metcalf, stepping back a few paces on the flagway until his shoulder came into contact with a gas lamp. "What's up?"

It was a little before six o'clock in the morning—Thursday morning, the 10th of October. The sun had not yet risen. The gray dawn was struggling for existence, battling with a thin white mist which had not been able during the night to arrive at the dignity of a fog. There were no signs of life or movement in the road other than the policeman standing near the lamppost, the young man at the first-floor window, and some dejected, home-slinking cats. The rattling milk cart—usually the first sound which saluted the ears of early risers in the Felspar road—had not yet turned the corner of the road.

"I'm in a regular fix," said the young man. "That's what is up."

"I'm in a regular fix."

He spoke with an apparently foreign accent, tacked on to a cockney twang. "I am locked into my room, and cannot make any one hear me."

"How's that?" asked the policeman, curtly.

"I do not well know. There is no bell in my room. I have made a noise, but I can hear no one stirring. Would you mind ringing the bell of the hall door loudly? I want to catch a train at 7.40 from Paddington."

"All right," said Constable Metcall, quietly. Then he straightened his square shoulders, moved away from the lamppost, opened the small iron gate leading into the small forefront, walked with clattering steps along the tiled passage which led from the gate to the hall door, and gave the bell a vigorous tug.

"Thanks," said the young man, gazing down at the policeman as the latter stepped back from the doorway and looked up at the first-floor window. "I fancy I hear some one stirring. Awfully strange my being locked into my room. Never had such an experience before. Awkward thing to find yourself a prisoner in your bedroom at six o'clock in the morning with an early train to catch."

"I don't quite understand you. Door locked from the outside, is it?"

"Yes. The lock is some old-fashioned sort of arrangement. It has no keyhole inside. But why it should be fastened now I can't understand. Mrs. Davorn and her niece—I suppose you know the name of the people of the house—like the good policeman that you are?"

"Yes, I know the name," said Constable Metcalf, a little gruffly.

"They knew I was going off early this morning. Perhaps they have detained me for the bill." He laughed as if he had made a good joke, and then for a few moments relapsed into silence.

"Hear anyone moving?" asked the policeman.

"Not a stir. It must have been a false alarm. They sleep soundly surely. Perhaps they were up late. Would you mind giving the bell another tug, Mr. Policeman?"

Constable Metcalf made two steps forward and pulled the bell again.

"Ah, I think we have started some one at last!" cried the young man. "I am sure I heard a noise in the house. It is either Mrs. Davorn or Miss Rodney. But they may be some time dressing, constable. I won't ask you to trouble any further. Yes, I hear the sound of feet. Awfully obliged to you, constable. I was on the lookout for the milkman or some other early Samaritan, when you turned up and saved me from being kept any longer in durance vile."

Constable Metcalf was a trifle uneasy in his mind. He was a zealous officer, just short of thirty years of age very quiet and reserved in manner, but possessed of a quick intelligence, tinctured with that lively spirit of suspicion without which a policeman can never hope to prosper. There was nothing specially wonderful in the conduct of the young man overhead, nor in his story, but the constable was disconcerted by the volubility of his challenger.

Metcalf knew every house in the Felspar road, and he knew a good many of the people who dwelt in it. He knew Mrs. Davorn, a fine-looking woman of middle age, by sight—indeed she had often treated him to a pleasant nod. He also knew her niece, Miss Rodney, by sight—a most attractive young person the constable considered her. He was aware that matters had recently not prospered with Mrs. Davorn, and that the lady had been obliged to let apartments at 13. He knew that two single gentlemen occupied apartments in the house—one a half-foreign young gent the young man now standing at the first-floor window, a prisoner in his bedroom, an exemplary young man in many ways, always off to his business early in the morning, seldom out late at night. The other lodger, a middle-aged man, was, in Metcalf's opinion, rather an odd sort of cove, a pasty-faced man of about five and forty, tall and slender, fond of wearing his hair—dark brown hair—long, an awkward shamble in his walk, and an odd sort of look in his eyes. The constable had indeed a dim professional interest in this elder lodger.

The constable swiftly ran his mind's eye over the dwellers in 13 Felspar road, and then he glanced furtively at the young man overhead.

Certainly there was something odd about this gentleman being locked into his room. It might mean nothing, but it might mean something, and the worthy policeman was determined not to move away from the house until he could turn his back on the premises with a perfectly easy mind. He advanced close to the hall door again, put his ear against the glass panel, and failed to detect any sound in the house. Then he stepped from the hall door and advanced to the center of the front parlour window.

There was a narrow gravelled path leading from the porch of the hall door to the other end of the forecourt. Inside the path, festooning the space under the parlour window, was a strip of clay about 18 inches in depth, in which some ferns were planted.

"Ah!" said Constable Metcalf, suddenly, as he turned his eyes upward and gazed at the parlour window. "There's something wrong here."

He stooped and looked at the place where the two sashes met. Then he stood on tiptoe, endeavouring to raise his eyes to the level of the window hasp. After a few moments he stepped backward, rubbing his chin and staring down at the patch of clay under the window. In a few moments more he raised his eyes and addressed himself to the young man overhead in a quiet tone.

"The hasp of the front window has been forced back," said he.

"Eh?" exclaimed the young man, leaning well out of the window.

Constable Metcalf repeated the information, adding, "Sash seems to have been jobbed at."

"Hasp forced back!" exclaimed the young man. "That's rather strange, isn't it? Rather alarming."

"Looks odd. Do you know anything about the fastenings? Careful folk about their windows here, I should have supposed."

"Careful! I should think so. Mrs. Davorn is about the most particular person I ever knew about locking up at night. Hasp forced back, you say? She'd never have slept a wink if she'd known the hasp was not all square. Looks rummy altogether, doesn't it, Mr. Policeman? I'm locked in. Window has been opened. That wants clearing up, I should fancy. What do you think? Ah! There are footsteps on the stairs at last. Good gracious! What a time they've been! I'll miss my train if I'm kept here much longer."

Constable Metcalf was now busy examining the ground outside the parlour window.

The sill of the window stood about three feet from the ground. Underneath the sill was the narrow patch of clay; then there was the narrow gravelled walk, upon which the policeman was standing. Between the gravelled walk and the iron railings of the forecourt lay a rectangular patch of well-trimmed grass. The passage from the front gate to the hall door was about eight feet in length by three and a half in breadth. This passage was laid down in red tiles. The quick eye of Constable Metcalf could detect no sign of footmarks outside the window. The gravelled path was almost as hard and as unimpressionable as the red tiles.

"Um!" said he at length, gazing up at the bedroom window, from which the young man had now disappeared. "There doesn't seem very much in this job," he muttered, as he surveyed the front of the house. "And yet—"

As the policeman stood staring at the open bedroom window a piercing shriek fell upon his ears.

CHAPTER II.

DEAD.

The head and shoulders of the young man, Albert Steinworth, were thrust hurriedly out of the window as the sound of the piercing cry died away.

"What in thunder is that?" he gasped. "Has the hall door been opened yet?"

Constable Metcalf made no answer, but squared his shoulders and stepped back to the hall door. He pulled the bell vigorously, and then applied himself to the knocker.

In a few moments he heard the sound of feet swiftly descending the stairs. Then he caught sight through the glass panels of the hall door of a dim and ghostlike figure. Then he heard a bolt being shot back, the rustle of a chain and the sound of a key being turned in the lock.

The hall door was then opened with a swift movement and a young girl who wore a white and terrified countenance confronted the policeman.

"My aunt! Mrs. Davorn!" she gasped.

"What's wrong, Miss?"

"She is dying—dead, I fear. I am so terrified I can scarcely realize it. Will you run for the nearest doctor? Perhaps something may be done."

Constable Metcalf stepped into the hall and placed his hand on the arm of the terrified girl.

"Just a moment, miss," said he.

"But we are losing time," cried the young girl, wringing her hands. "Perhaps it is not too late, though she is cold—cold. My dear aunt, who went to bed quite well last night—she is dead, cold. I can scarcely realize it."

She covered her face with her hands and seemed utterly bewildered.

"Perhaps it is only a fit, or something that way," suggested the policeman. "Now you put on your hat, miss, and run round for Dr. Percival, on the Crescent road. He's the nearest doctor, I think. I must stop and see after things here. We may, as you say yourself, miss, be losing precious minutes. Will you direct me at once to Mrs. Davorn's room and then hurry for the doctor?"

"Oh, I can't go near the room!" sobbed the girl. "I daren't go near it. I am so terrified of death—and she is dead—cold!"

She burst into a paroxysm of weeping as she uttered the last words.

"Only just tell me where to find the room. There. Is that a hat of yours, miss? Looks like it, I should say," taking a hat from a small stand which stood in the hall. "Now please start off, miss. I'll find the room for myself."

"It is there," pointing, "on the first landing," said the girl, making a strong effort to control herself, as with trembling fingers she put on her hat.

"Thank you; now be off. And if you do chance to come across one of my mates—I mean a policeman, miss—you might oblige by sending him along here. Come now; the air will set you up."

And almost pushing Miss Rodney out of the house Constable Metcalf closed the hall door, and then mounted the stairs at a bound.

At the top of the first landing, facing the hall door, was a room, the door of which was half open. The policeman entered the room, which was furnished as a kind of sitting-room and sleeping chamber.

In the bed lay a woman, her face half hidden by the pillow. After a brief examination, Constable Metcalf had no doubt whatever that Mrs. Davorn—the lady in the bed—had ceased to live. She had probably been dead some hours.

He glanced anxiously round the room, but saw nothing which would indicate a struggle.

Looking at the face again, it seemed to him as if the woman had been strangled, but he could find no marks on the neck. Then he moved to the door, and grasping the brass handle he noticed that the key was not inside—indeed, that there was no place for it inside. He drew back the door and found the key in the lock outside. There was a small brass bolt at the back of the door, but it did not seem to have been tampered with.

She was dead.

"Anyhow, nothing can be done for the poor lady by doctor or anyone else," reflected the constable, moving out on the landing, and drawing the door after him and locking it. "No wonder the young lady was frightened. And now for my young gentleman in the front bedroom!"

The next landing was approached by five steps. It was a square landing, measuring about four feet each way. Opening out on it were two doors, one facing the staircase and the other situated to the right hand side of the landing. A small winding staircase, consisting of about a dozen steps, leading to two attic rooms overhead, turned off at the left hand side of the square landing.

Constable Metcalf proceeded to the door of the room directly facing him, and trying the brass handle—an old-fashioned handle, similar in appearance to the one on Mrs. Davorn's door—he found the door would not yield. The key was in the keyhole outside, just as the key was in the keyhole of the door which was now closed upon the dead woman.

"Rather an unusual sort of way to have locks fixed," mused the policeman. "But there is no doubt our young friend is right—that he is securely locked in. Now, then," as he grasped the key and turned it slowly in the lock, "we'll see what he's got to say."

After the key had been turned the policeman turned the brass handle and found the door yielded easily. He stepped into Albert Steinworth's bedroom.

The young man was standing at the window. He hurried toward Constable Metcalf as the latter entered the room, and with a grave and anxious face he asked:—

"What on earth is the matter? What was that awful cry I heard some minutes ago?"

"It was the young lady of the house—Miss Rodney, I think, is the name."

"Miss Rodney! Good Heavens—what of her?"

"She got a bad fright at finding Mrs. Davorn dead in her bed."

"Mrs. Davorn dead in her bed! Oh, surely this is some awful mistake! Dead?"

The young man's face was not ordinarily blessed with much colour. It was now ghastly white, and his lips trembled violently.

"Dead's the word, sir," said the policeman. "No mistake about that. Miss Rodney has gone to fetch the doctor, but he will not be of much use on the first landing. Didn't you see her scurrying along the road from your window?"

"No," stammered Mr. Steinworth. "After I heard the hall door opening I stood at my own locked door, with my ear glued to it, trying if I could find out what had gone wrong—what was the matter—but I could only hear your voice and the sobs of a woman. This is terrible news, certainly."

"Yes. It is rather startling, especially to those that belong to the house. And now, young gentleman, will you give me your attention for a bit until the doctor comes?"

"Certainly," said Steinworth, pulling himself together. "I suppose I had better abandon all hope of catching the 7.40 Paddington?"

"I should think so," said Constable Metcalf. "Now, sir, first and foremost, the locks of these bedrooms puzzle me. They are different from other locks. Can you explain about them?"

"Oh, yes," answered Steinworth, briskly. "I remember I used to kick up a shine with Mrs. Davorn"—he gasped as he mentioned the name—"in the beginning, and the unfortunate lady got brass bolts fixed on the inside of the doors. That's mine, as you can see," pointing to a small brass bolt fixed on the door. "She told me that when the house was being renovated—just before she came to it—whoever did it up thought the old locks were too good to throw away." He had now recovered his complacent manner, and he spoke with the volubility which had in the beginning disconcerted the police constable. "Much too good to throw away. Wonderfully good locks, I understand. They are all the same in the bedrooms—at least, so I understand. A brass box is all I have got for my money inside, as you can see. No hole inside for the key. No use in any one putting her eye to the keyhole outside. I used to think it very rummy myself in the start, but I got accustomed to it in time. And it has got its advantages. It is handy enough if you want to leave the room for a bit. Lock the door outside, put the key in your pocket, and there you are. You haven't to go fishing for a key inside, and there's no occasion to lose your temper trying to fit it into the hole outside. Capital lock, I call it. And then when I do want to shut myself up for the night there's the brass bolt that Mrs. Davorn got fixed for me. But this is awful news about her!" The pallor overspread his face again, and his voice grew husky. "She seemed quite in her ordinary health last night. I wonder what did she die of?"

"We must leave that to the doctors," answered Constable Metcalf, gazing fixedly at the lock of Albert Steinworth's door. "I suppose," said he, after a momentary pause, "the other room on the same landing is a bedroom?"

"Yes."

"Occupied, I presume?"

"Yes. A Mr. Vickery occupies it. A rum sort of customer. Always closeted in his room with something or other which he says he is inventing—unless when he is out on the prowl. He's a strange old codger—not that he is so very old either, except about the eyes. They seem to be 100 years of age."

"He sleeps pretty soundly—that is, if he has not been awakened by Miss Rodney's cry."

"Sleep! He's a rare one to sleep. I don't think he's ever out of bed before 11 o'clock in the day."

"Let us see if he is up now."

"You may take my word for it he is now snoring like a pig."

"Well, if the young lady's cry did not wake him no ordinary sound will have much effect upon him. He'll have to be shaken."

"Like a carpet," observed Mr. Steinworth, smiling and disclosing two long, white teeth under his light moustache.

"Perhaps he is locked in, too."

"Like enough. What do you make of it? Window below forced, my room locked from the outside, Mrs. Davorn dead." He shuddered as he used her name. "What on earth does it all mean? I feel quite shaken."

"We must wait."

Constable Metcalf moved out of the room, his gaze still fascinated by the brass lock.

"You'll excuse me, sir," said he suavely, as he stood with Albert Steinworth on the landing, "but I'll just lock your door for the present and keep the key until we have things cleared up a bit."

An uneasy frown contracted Steinworth's brows. "Lock my door? Don't you think I have had enough of that kind of thing?"

Constable Metcalf offered no reply.

"My hat is inside. May I take it?" asked the young man. "Or will you fetch it for me?"

"As you please, sir. But you will clearly understand you don't leave the house until I get my orders from my superiors. This is a serious business."

The constable did not like Mr. Steinworth's occasional lapses into flippancy any more than the young gentleman's voluble manner.

"I suppose you are quite right, though I don't see the force of being detained here. It is very hard on me."

"Now then!" opening Steinworth's door. "Your hat, or whatever you want, and please be quick. The doctor will be here soon, no doubt."

Steinworth's hat lay on a chair near the window. He took it up and placed it on his head, and then slowly came back to the landing, standing moodily alongside the policeman while the door was being locked.

"Our sleepy friend must be aroused," said the policeman, briskly, turning to the door of Mr. Vickery's room and trying the handle. "Hello!" said he, as he turned the handle and pushed the door. "Here is another gent locked into his room. Something very odd about all this. Has he a bolt inside, too?" turning to Steinworth.

"I think so."

"Anyhow the door is locked. See," turning the key, "the door is now open. But I don't particularly care to enter uninvited." He tapped loudly at the door with his finger tips. There was no response. He rapped with his knuckles. No response. Then he gave the panel of the door a sounding smack with the palm of his hand. "I hope we haven't got another dead un here," he observed, turning to Steinworth.

"I sincerely hope not," said the young man. "I feel shaken to pieces at hearing of one dead person in the house."

Constable Metcalf now proceeded to kick at the door.

"If that doesn't rouse him," said he, "I'll take the liberty of entering without an invitation."

A gruff voice from Mr. Vickery's bedroom startled both men.

"Who the devil is there?"

"The police. Open your door."

"The police! Merciful heaven!"

Then the sound of a man tumbling out of bed was heard by the two men on the landing, and in a few moments the door was drawn back, and Bernard Vickery, clothed in a long woollen nightgown, his face white and drawn, his eyes wild and bloodshot, stood in the open doorway.

CHAPTER III.

CHLOROFORM.

"What's the matter?" stammered Mr. Vickery, his eyes blinking and his face twitching. "What do you want with me?"

Constable Metcalf glanced at the agitated man from head to foot. With no sign of emotion in his voice or manner he answered him that the lady of the house had been found dead in her bed.

"Mrs. Davorn dead!" gasped the man in the doorway. "Oh, you cannot surely mean that!" He held up his hands in an appealing attitude.

"I do mean it," said the policeman.

Mr. Vickery seemed overwhelmed with horror. He covered his face with his long, bony hands, his body trembling as if he were shaken by an ague. In a few moments he uncovered his face, and in a subdued voice asked:—

"Does Miss Rodney know?"

"Yes, it was she who discovered the lady dead in her bed this morning."

"It is true then. It is horrible. Shocking! I feel quite dazed."

"You sleep rather soundly," said the policeman. "Is it possible you didn't hear any disturbance in the house awhile ago?"

"You sleep rather soundly."

"Disturbance? No, I heard nothing. At least, nothing that I can remember," stammered Mr. Vickery, raising his eyes and gazing at the constable and at Steinworth, who was standing behind the man of the law busily chewing his yellow moustache. "Yes, I do sleep soundly sometimes. I was up late last night. It must have been far advanced in the small hours when I got to sleep. I scarcely know what I am saying." He shivered again.

"Perhaps you had better get on your clothes, sir," suggested Constable Metcalf. "I expect you find it chilly standing there; your teeth chatter."

"Thank you. Yes, it is cold. I will get on my clothes."

Suddenly the bravery which found its way into his voice disappeared. "Great Heavens!" he cried, throwing up his hands. "This is terrible—what you tell me of Mrs. Davorn!"

"Ah, here comes the doctor at last!" exclaimed the policeman. "Come, get on your clothes, sir," to Mr. Vickery. "I'll take the liberty of locking you in your room while I attend to the doctor," suiting the action to the word.

As the policeman turned round on the landing, the keys of the bedrooms in his pocket, he saw the figure of a portly man, something under the middle height, on the first landing.

"All right, doctor," said the constable, moving quickly down the five steps. "That's the room, and this is the key," opening the door of the dead woman's room, and ushering Dr. Stanley Percival into the bedchamber.

Albert Steinworth still remained on the upper landing gnawing his yellow moustache.

Dr. Stanley Percival was a grave, taciturn man, about 55 years of age. He had a large practice in Clayfields, and fully deserved his popularity and the reputation for ability which he had earned.

As he approached the bedside of Mrs. Davorn he sniffed the air. "Um!" said he, looking toward Constable Metcalf. "Chloroform."

"I got an odd sort of smell, doctor, as I entered the room first, but I didn't know what it was."

Dr. Percival was now busy examining Mrs. Davorn. A quick hope had surged into his breast when he had smelled the chloroform. The lady might be only stupefied with the drug.

A brief examination, however, took all the hope from Dr. Percival's breast. Mrs. Davorn could never be brought back to life.

"She has been dead some hours," he said, sadly.

"So I thought myself, sir. I have had some experience with corpses, doctor, or I should not have been so bold as to venture an opinion. Might I ask what you think it is, sir?"

Dr. Percival vouchsafed no reply. He was standing close to the bed, his arms folded across his chest, his eyes fixed on the face of the dead woman. Suddenly sniffing the air again, he stepped back a couple of paces, and then he stooped, and thrusting his hand under the bed he felt about him for a few seconds, and with an air of satisfaction he drew out from under the bed a sponge.

Smelling the sponge and offering it to the constable, who sniffed at it vigorously, the doctor said, "I thought the chloroform wasn't very far off," and then went back to the bedside.

"Um!" said he, after a pause. "This is strange."

"Very strange, sir," said the policeman. "Queer job altogether. The face looks distorted, doctor, doesn't it?"

"Yes," said Dr. Percival, absently. He again turned to the dead body and peered into the half-closed eyes.

"It's a rum business all round, sir," observed the policeman, finding silence irksome.

"Ah!" exclaimed Dr. Percival, snapping his lips and losing his absent manner. "Well, constable," said he, briskly, "I can do no good here, unfortunately. I'll take that sponge. You saw where I found it."

"Yes, sir."

"It may be of serious importance. As the spirit has not entirely evaporated the sponge cannot have been here long. I think you had better lock the room up and report matters at your station."

"I asked Miss Rodney to give word to one of my mates if she chanced to meet one. I suppose it was the chloroform did it, doctor?"

"We shall see. We shall see," said Dr. Percival. "As I have told you, I can be of no further use here just now. Mrs. Davorn is dead—has probably been dead for some hours. You will find me at my house if your inspector should want me before eleven o'clock or after two. I'll be on my rounds between eleven and two. Good morning, constable."

"Good-morning, sir," said the policeman, ushering the doctor out of the bedroom.

"Don't upset yourself, my dear Miss Rodney," Metcalf heard the doctor say, as the physician reached the hall.

"And it is true then, doctor? She is dead?"

SHE IS A MERRY CHILD AGAIN

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Little Edith Harris' Dropsy.

Hers Was a Terrible Case—It Proves that the great Kidney Remedy is good for Old and Young alike and Cures all forms of Kidney Disease.

Weyburn, Assa., N.W.T., Jan. 11.—(Special)—No more remarkable cure of dropsy has ever been put on record than that of little Edith Harris, the two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Harris of this place.

The little girl had dropsy in its worst form. She was swollen from her feet to her shoulders so badly that the doctor was afraid one of her feet would burst. Her natural waist measure was eighteen inches, but when the disease was at its worst, she measured thirty-four inches. Two doctors attended her, but after three months struggle with the disease the child was gradually growing worse, and the parents had about given up all hope of saving the life of their child.

At this time they determined to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. Imagine their surprise and delight when under this treatment the child began to rapidly improve. By the time she had taken three boxes, half a pill at a dose, the swelling was gone and the helpless little invalid was transformed into a merry laughing healthy child again.

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure old and young alike. They cure kidney disease without regard to where or in what form it is found.

A dredger is about to be launched from a German yard which will be capable of raising 5,000 tons of mud per hour. After it has been at work the bottom is left as level as a road.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir— the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated disease rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid desondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand incresed substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

The Last Straw.

It was Saturday night, and owing to the temporary absence of his wife it fell to Mr. Brown to attend to the usual process of giving his eight-year-old son a bath and putting him to bed. He had left his evening paper with a man's reluctance and had hurried matters along with more speed than the little chap was accustomed to. However, he endured it all without a protest until it came to the prayer. It was his habit after "Now I lay me" to ask the divine blessing upon a long list of relatives and friends, calling each by name.

"Please God," he began, "bless papa and mamma, grandpa and grandma and Aunt Edith and Uncle George and"—A pause. His father, thinking to curtail the list of beneficiaries, softly insinuated an "Amen." Not heeding the interruption, the little supplicant drew a long breath and continued, "And Aunt Alice and Cousin Annie and—and"— Again his father said "Amen."

This was more than flesh and blood could stand, and, lifting his little head, he exclaimed, with tears of indignation, "Papa, who's running this prayer; you or me?"—Harper's Monthly.

Bravery Immortalized.

At an entertainment at which Nelson met Benjamin West just before he went to sea for the last time he remarked to the artist, "I never pass a printshop where your picture of the 'Death of Wolfe' is in the window without being stopped by it." West, of course, acknowledged the compliment, and Nelson went on to ask why he had painted no more like it. "Because, my lord," answered the artist, "there are no more subjects." "Blank it," said Nelson, "I didn't think of that," and asked him to take a glass of champagne. "But, my lord, I fear your intrepidity will yet furnish me with another scene, and if it should I shall certainly avail myself of it," the painter observed. "Will you," said Nelson, pouring out bumpers and touching his glass violently against West's—"will you, Mr. West? Then I hope I shall die in the next battle." He sailed a few days later, and West painted "The Death of Nelson."—London Chronicle.

Little Things.

Little words are the sweetest to hear. Little charities fly farthest and stay longest on the wing. Little lakes are stillest, and little hearts are the fullest, and little farms the best tilled. And when Nature would make anything especially rare and beautiful she makes it little—little pearls, little diamonds, little dewdrops—multum in parvo. Much in little is the great beauty of all that we love best.

KILLED THREE TRAINMEN.

New York, Jan. 7.—A motor train crowded with passengers crashed into a train of empties drawn by a locomotive, and telescoped the rear car of the latter train, on which were the trainmen. One of the dead was hurled from the structure to the street, and nearly every bone in his body broken, while another had his head crushed between the bumper of the engine and the front car. With the collision a fire was started by the coals from the locomotive, and this added to the panic of the passengers, who fought desperately to escape from the wrecked cars. The dead, were all employees of the road, are: Geo. Culig, yardmaster; James O'-Brien, car coupler. None of the passengers were badly hurt.

WILD MAN OF MOUNTAINS

Extraordinary Discovery on Franco Spanish Frontier.

A dispatch from Madrid says:—The discovery of a troglodyte in the Basque provinces, near Fuenterrabia, on the Franco-Spanish frontier, has aroused considerable curiosity. As a customs guard, with his dogs, was searching in a wood yesterday, an extraordinary being in the image of a man was seen to rush before him with a wonderful rapi ity and disappear into a hole in a mountain. The guard followed, and found the wild man had blocked up the entrance to his cave with pieces of timber and stones, which, however, were easily removed, and the man was captured. He was absolutely prehistoric in appearance. His only garment was a skin tied around his hips. His long and matted beard fell over his chest like a cloak, while his hair trailed down his back in a thick mass. In his cave were found numerous bones of sheep, deer and other animals which he had eaten, a sling, a club, and a stone axe. A bed of moss was his only furniture.

The guard brought the troglodyte to Fuenterrabia, where his appearance created a sensation. Before the magistrate he explained that his name was Prudencis; he was 28 years old, and had been when an infant an inmate of a foundling hospital in San Sebastian. He had formerly acted as farm hand, but two years ago, being unable to find work, and being in great distress, he took to the forest. There he lived on acorns, hazelnuts and birds' eggs. Little by little he learned to use a sling and the axe, and was able to kill deer and sheep which had strayed. As he had no fire, he ate the flesh of these animals raw.

THE SCOTCH TARTANS.

Origin of the Tartan Worn by the Famous Black Watch or Royal Highlanders.

A writer in the Dundee People's Journal gives the origin of the tartan of the famous Black Watch: While the companies of the Black Watch (now the Royal Highlanders) acted independently, the commander of each company attired his men in the tartan of his own clan, but when the regiment was embodied a difficulty as to uniform arose. No clan having a superior claim to offer a uniform plaid, and Lord Crawford, the colonel, being a Lowlander, the difficulty was got over by adopting a new pattern, ever since known as the 42nd or Black Watch tartan, being distinct from all others. It was Lord John Murray who gave the Athole tartan for the philabeg, the only difference being a stripe of scarlet to distinguish it from the belted plaid. The pipers wore a very bright tartan, the Stewart, and when a band was added to the regiment plaids of the pipers' pattern were worn by the musicians.

It seems to be a little known fact that many clans have more than one tartan. They have, however, sometimes several, such as a common tartan, a hunting tartan, and a full dress tartan. Early in the day, a Highlander of position dons a kilt of plain tattan, and fn the evening, for dinner, he puts on his full dress tartan, with sporran and richly jeweled dirk. For example, the Macpherson dress tartan is black and white with a narrow red line, and the hunting Macpherson is a small blue and black and red check. The Stewarts have three tartans, and the design of their hunting tartan, a dark blue and green, is a very fine one. Each clan has its own badge. The Duff men wear holly, the Gordons an ivy leaf, the Stewarts an oak leaf, and so on.

STATUES IN ITALY.

When a Monument is Not a Monument in Rome or Florence.

Rome is in the absurd condition of possessing a monument which the municipal authorities declared non-existent. Long, long ago a monument was raised to the philosopher Spedalieri, but never unveiled, as there was a difference of opinion as to the advisability of having the monument at all. So through sun and rain, wind and hail, the poor statue stood, swathed in its dingy drapery, an eyesore and object of derision to all.

Finally, in the dead of night, to put an end to the scandal and disputes, the police stripped off the old and rotten cloth, and in the morning the Eternal City found herself enriched by the ownership of a new work of art. The citizens laughed and crowded to see what had become a curiosity, but the city fathers were furious, said the police had overstepped their powers, and absolutely refused to acknowledge the existence of the monument.

Florence has had a similar experience. A tablet to Gustavo Modena, in his day a celebrated actor and still more celebrated patriot, had been attached to the house in which he lived. But the authorities refused to allow it to be unveiled for fear of provoking an anti-Austrian demonstration, just in these days when public feeling is in a state of effervescence. Day after day passed, until the students made a sudden dash, and, stripping off the cloth, added another interest to the City of Lilies. The municipality here also was highly offended, and informed the citizens that the tablet does not exist.

All this irresistibly raises the question, "When is a monument not a monument?— "When it is in Italy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Dowie's Site for New Eternal City.

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 5.—John A. Dowie, the founder of Zion City, is not going to Australia on this trip. He has arrived here to investigate Matagorda Island on the Texas coast, as a site for a new "Eternal City." Dowie's plan is to enter upon extensive stock farming and factory work. He has an option on the island, which embraces 30,000 acres. Dowie admits that he may bring his entire following to the new settlement.

Confessors on Strike.

All kinds of curious strikes have taken place in Germany during the past year, including a strike of physicians and that of the students at the University of Wurzburg. The oddest, however, has been reported from Munich. All the Father Confessors in the City Hospital and Sanitaria ceased their occupation recently because the municipal authorities discharged one of the number. The authorities declare that they were compelled to do so, because the priest in question used to ply patients in the confessional and on the sick bed with indiscreet questions.

Western Breeders Wait on the Government.

WANT MORE PROTECTION

Too Many Cull Horses are Being Imported From the United States—Also Wish a National Herd Book and Higher Duties.

A dispatch from Ottawa, dated Jan. 8, says: This afternoon a delegation representing the Dominion Horse Breeders' association waited upon the government and asked to be protected against the dumping of scrub horses into Canada from the United States and also for the adoption of a national herd book. The delegation was received in the premier's office by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Clifford Sifton, Hon. W. S. Fielding and Hon. Sydney Fisher.

The first speaker was W. R. Stewart, of Macleod, N.W.T. He spoke as a representative of the Northwest Territories and British Columbia. He said that horse breeders in the west had a serious grievance against the importation of culled horses from the United States. In 1902 there were 21,000 horses imported, and 70 per cent. of these were culls. In 1903 about 28,000 horses were imported and about 70 per cent. were also culls. At Lethbridge 9,000 horses were imported in 1902 and they were sold for about $18 per head. If regulations were adopted to shut out these scrub horses, the trade could be diverted to British Columbia. The industry ought to be kept for the benefit of the Dominion. The importation of these scrubs and the scattering of them all over the country created a low grade of horses. They were of no service for agricultural purposes. New settlers had no difficulty in purchasing good horses, because 75 per cent. of the horses were sold on time. The small horses were sold for cash. These low grade horses were a detriment to the agricultural interests of the country. The new settler purchased them, and when harvest time came around he could not get his crops in. Mr. Stewart also complained that the regulations in regard to the bringing in of settlers' effects were violated. Each man brought in sixteen horses and they were then handed over to the party who owned them and were sold.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier — "This is against the law."

Mr. Stewart said that it was. The Indians, he said, also brought in hundreds of horses free of duty. In regard to the importation of pure bred stock a large number of horses was brought in with bogus pedigrees. These horses were syndicated at high prices, sometimes as high as three or four thousand dollars, and they were actually not worth more than five hundred dollars.

Mr. Fisher—"Only certain pedigrees should be accepted."

Mr. Stewart—"Yes, we would like to get proof of the pedigeee."

Mr. Fielding—"Could you not do that yourselves as buyers?"

Mr. Stewart—"I might do myself, as a breeder, but farmers who are not breeders do not know much about pedigrees. We would like to get the protection of the crown." In conclusion he said that British Columbia was anxious to get whatever market there was for horses in the North-West, instead of its going to the United States as at present.

Mr. William Hendrie, of Hamilton, spoke on the question of national records. He pointed out that Canadian horse records were not recognized by the United States. He advocated a national stud book in Canada, and held that no importation free of duty ought to be made unless entered therein.

Dr. Creamer, Qu'Appelle, supported Messrs. Stewart and Hendrie, and brief speeches were made by Peter Christie, Manchester, Ontario: Mr. Henry Wade, Toronto; Mr. Robinson, and John Bright, of Myrtle. The latter said that the association was unanimous in agreeing that the United States' regulations should be adopted, making the minimum duty $30 on a horse valued at $150.

Mr. Sifton, replying for the government, said that the representations which the delegation made would be carefully considered. All the points that had been advanced would be gone carefully into when the question came up for consideration. Some of them he thought could be met. As to the question of the national stud book, the minister of agriculture would give their views consideration. The difficulty would be with the stock men in their being able to agree upon it. As to the examination of pedigrees there shoul be no serious difficulty in ascertaining whether they were bogus or not. The reason why pure bred stock was admitted free of duty was for the purpose of encouraging the breeding of stock in this country. The minister promised that the whole question would be looked into by the government, and he said that he was very glad that the delegation had made such a full statement to himself and his colleagues. Mr. Fisher spoke in favor of a national herd book, but the initiative would have to be taken by the live stock men. He suggested that this should be done during the fat stock show in Ottawa in March next.

MANITOBA LEGISLATURE.

First Session of the Eleventh Legislature Convened—Speech From the Throne.

Amid the boom of cannon and the circumstance of military and social display, the first session of the eleventh Legislature of Manitoba was formally opened Thursday afternoon at three o'clock by His Honor Lieutenant-Governor McMillan.

NEW SPEAKER.

After His Honor had taken his seat on the throne, the provincial secretary, Hon. D. H. McFadden, announced that he saw no cause or reason for His Honor appearing before the House until a speaker had been elected. The members then retired and elected Mr. James Johnson, member for Turtle Mountain, as their speaker, and then re-entered the chamber. The other constitutional formalities were then proceeded with, after which the Governor delivered the following

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. Speaker nad Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Manitoba:

I am pleased to welcome you to the first session of the eleventh legislature of this province.

It is a matter for thankfulness that the prosperity of the province has continued during another year, and every sign points to further expansion and development.

The continued success of the railway policy of my government is apparent, and it is occasion for congratulation that they have been able to reduce the rates on lines of railway in Manitoba to such an extent that a saving of at least one million dollars has been effected.

My government views with approbation the movement for fiscal changes within the Empire, now being urged by the Right Honorable Joseph Chamberlain, and it is their belief that this policy, if inaugurated, would be of great benefit to the people of Manitoba and the west, and you will be asked to show your approval thereof by resolution.

The public accounts for the year 1903 will be laid before you at an early date, and the estimates for the current year will shortly be submitted to you for consideration. It will be found that they have been framed with the regard to the strictest economy possible, with a view to the efficiency of the public service.

You will be asked to consider Acts to amend "The Manitoba Trustee Act," "The Manitoba Joint Stock Companies Act," "The Surrogate Courts Act," and "The King's Bench Act." These, and other measures which may come before you, I leave to your consideration, in the fullest confidence that they will be dealt with in such a manner as to promote the best interests of the people of Manitoba.

Having fulfilled his duties his honor retired and returned to Government House, and the House proceeded to business by the premier moving the consideration of the speech for Monday evening next.

The next item was the appointing of committees to strike standing committees, followed by other formal procedure, after which the House adjourned until the following Monday evening.

BLACKLIST A FAILURE.

London Police Cannot Enforce It Against Drunkards.

A year ago bibulous London was in a condition of panic over the Licensing Act which had provided a blacklist for habitual topers. Anyone convicted twice of drunkenness could not be served with a drink in any saloon in his district for three years.

Under the provisions of the Act bartenders were furnished with photographs of such persons and warned that they would lose their license if they served them. The anxious time for the public house people has passed, for the blacklist was abandoned on New Year's Day as impracticable.

One of the provisions of the Licensing Act was that a delinquent might be ordered into an inebriate home, but Lord Chief Justice Alverstone declared that nobody could be detained in such a home against his will, and that made the whole affair a dead letter. The police also found it impossible to cope with the inebriates whose photographs were in number far beyond the memory of any barkeeper. One saloon-keeper on the Strand said that during the year 1903 the police furnished him with photographs of 573 persons who were to be placed on the blacklist.

Moreover, as showing the poor working of the law, an inebriate who was blacklisted in one district hae only to step into the next borough, where he becomes a free man. Those who are too lazy to do this can put on a false moustache or beard.

The magistrates have failed to see the value of the act, and since August last only seventeen people have been blacklisted in London. Of the year's total of those placed on the blacklist 61 per cent. were women.

Mosaic Law Not Recognized.

An interesting bigamy case was settled in the police court at Toronto recently. Thomas Worsley had given a writ of divorcement under the Mosaic law ta his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Eliza Hill. The woman married another man, who died, and then she married John Prentice. Prentice and Mrs. Worsley were summoned on a charge of bigamy. The woman was allowed to go, but Prentice, who knew all the circumstances of the writ of divorcement from Worsley, received ten days in jail.

Canada now leads in receiving British emigration.

The government will erect a fine new post office at Ottawa to take the place of the one burned down.

CASHEL ESCAPE—MYSTERY SOLVED

Dressed in Woman's Garb He Walks Calgary Streets.

JOHN CASHEL ON TRIAL

Young and Prepossessing Matron Gives Sensational Evidence at the Trial of the Murderer's Brother as to the Escape.

Calgary—Flora Brazeau, at one time matron at the Mounted Police guardroom, young and prepossessing, was a sensational witness in the hearing of the charge against John Cashel. She said that she had met Ernest Cashel in the guardroom and had become quite intimate with him. She also met John Cashel who had called on her frequently at her house. Some weeks before the escape, John Cashel told her that if Ernest did not secure a new trial he would get him out. He would get a couple of revolvers, smuggle them into his brother, who would hold up the guards and would then find a horse waiting for him and get away from the immediate neighborhood of the barracks. Then he would dress himself in woman's clothes, get to Wyoming and there the police would never get him.

He (John) would not be near the barracks at the time of the escape and would therefore not be suspected. He asked her if she would accompany him at the time of the escape and be a witness for him in proving an alibi. He said, however, he would get Ernest out, even if he went down himself. He asked her to buy one revolver for him. She refused, and the prisoner then said he would get them both himself. She went to Medicine Hat and John wrote a couple of letters, outlining the plans, but ordering her to burn the letters, which she did. The Mounted Police arrested her after the escape and said they would keep her arrested until she told what she knew. She said nothing for five hours and then "coughed." She said she was not threatened and had told the truth. A second-hand clothes dealer, partially identified Cashel as the man who had bought a revolver on Dec. 5, before the escape.

A STORY OF THE ESCAPE.

The "Albertan" says:—

Disguised as a woman, Ernest Cashel, the escaped murderer, is now believed to have passed boldly thru the streets of Calgary, casting goo-goo eyes at red-coated policemen as he went, and to have taken his departure from the town in a first-class sleeping car on a west-bound C.P.R. train.

WOMAN IN THE CASE.

There is another person now being watched by the police on suspicion of having aided Cashel to escape. This is a young woman who has been seen with Cashel's mother and who is said to be either his wife or sweetheart. With Mrs. Cashel she purchased some new dresses a short time ago, but at the time no notice was taken of the transaction. Now the police have found out that she has never worn the new clothes, and they are also pretty certain that her wardrobe does not contain them.

The suspicion that Cashel was in hiding in the town of Calgary for several days after his escape is now confirmed. It is also believed that the plans for the escape were laid by an organized body of relatives and friends of the condemned man, and that the false clues which led the police on many fruitless chases were cleverly set decoys.

Not long since a halfbreed from a ranch, not far out of Calgary, turned up in town and said that he had captured Cashel, that he tied nim up in his shack and would let the police have him as soon as he made sure that the reward would be his. The police coralled the halfbreed and, after a lot of trouble and excitement for themselves, found that there was nothing more to the story than the talk of a drunken man.

HEAVY SENTENCES.

Commissioner Perry, of the N. W. M. P., has sentenced three constables who were on duty when the murderer Ernest Cashel escaped. Piper, who had control of the guard room, was given a year, and Phillips and Leslie, were each sentenced to six months. All sentences were at hard labor. The trio were also dismissed from the force.

C. P. R. Land Sale.

The Canadian Pacific land sales for the past year are quite in keeping with the general healthy tone of advance that has marked the past few years. For the past two years sales were:

1902—2,319,118 acres	$8,135,693.77
1903—1,723,923 acres	$6,950,547.14

Despite the apparent decrease in acreage sold there was an increase of over 300,000 acres during the past year, the large figures of 1902 being fattened by the unusual bulk sale of 1,000,000 acres to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

The prices during 1903 also averaged higher than for the preceding year in 1902, the average price per acre being $3.35 per acre, and last year about $4 or 65 cents per acre higher, an increase of 19 per cent.

Flour has been advanced ten cents a sack in price.

SUICIDES IN RUSSIA.

Epidemic is Rampant in Southern Portion of Czar's Domain.

An illustration of the rotten state of society in South Russia is afforded by the constant occurrence of cases of suicide among even young children.

A schoolgirl of 17, witnessing a quarrel between her father and mother, went into a bathroom and deliberately opened a vein with her father's razor, dying in the water.

A young married student poisoned himself without cause a day or two later, and a few hours after his death his child-wife enquired what was the poison he had taken, and herself used it to end her life.

Again, a few days ago the daughter of well-to-do parents in good society entered a restaurant with her lover, and the two, having taken a private room, ended their lives with a revolver. The reason the girl gave was that she was not pretty enough to live any longer.

All Kieff was stirred a short time ago by the suicide of a young officer and his fiancee in a room of the Metropole Hotel. Both belonged to good families, and both had excellent prospects.

A gentleman, discussing this epidemic of suicide, said that he felt sure the universal feeling o impending catastrophe had something to do with it, and he also believed that the church no longer had any influence among the educated classes.

Quite lately the craze for "discovering" imperishable saints' bodies became so serious, owing to the constant pilgrimages to the last place of discovery, that orders were issued forbidding the "discovery" of any more such marvels without the permission of the Czar.

The government makes use of the church simply to retain a hold on the people, and it is the realization of this which is destroying in the educated children of Russia any lasting moral support on which to fall back.

Meeting of Racing Committee.

A meeting of the racing committee of the Winnipeg Industrial Exhibition Association was held recently in the offices of the Association, the following directors being present:—J. A. Mitchell, chairman, R. I. M. Power, D. E. Sprague and I. M. Ross. The manager was instructed to communicate with Frank E. Stone of Burlington, Wisconsin, asking him on what conditions he would be willing to act again this year as a starting judge. The following matters were recommended to the board for consideration:—That Mr. Frank Nelson, of Toronto, be asked to again act as presiding judge. That the racing programmme this year be extended so as to cover two weeks and that the events be so arranged that as far as possible each day's programme be equally interesting; and it is suggested that there be two trotting or pacing races, two running events, and one jumping race or hurdle competition, and one heat of team running each day. If this suggestion be adhered to the visitors attending from outside points will have an equal chance of seeing all things of interest, whether the excursions from their particular part of the district be called upon at the first or last of the fair.

It is also recommended that the jumping track be placed inside the present race track and that the old bicycle track be done away with. That the whole field be levelled off that lacrosse, polo and baseball, as well as other gymkhana and broncho busting performances may be carried on to advantage.

That Mr. L. Dingman be recommended for reinstatement in the American Trotting association.

German Royalty Quarrel.

The Berlin Neueste Nachrichten published biting comments on the strained relations between the kaiser and the Grand Duke Frederick of Baden. The duke, it says, asked the emperor to appoint his son, Prince Frederick, commander of the Karlsruhe garrison. The kaiser refused on the ground that the prince's military qualifications were not sufficient and such an appointment must always go by merit and not by royal blood.

The late kaiser only sent an aide to the funeral of the Princess Leopoldine, aunt of the grand duke, and when the statue of Emperor William was unveiled his majesty failed to invite the grand duchess to attend. The grand duchess was [illegible] over the slight that [illegible] the same day. The king of Wurtemburg is reported as siding with the Grand Duke of Baden in the quarrel.

Protect Lives of Passengers.

The Canadian Pacific railway is taking stringent steps to put a stop to drunkenness on the part of their employes when on duty. John Dandridge, an engineer of Three Rivers, Que., for being under the influence of liquor when in charge of a passenger train, has been sentenced to six months' hard labor without the option of a fine, and Harry Hillman, of Indian Head, to four months' imprisonment for the same offence. These are the severest sentences ever recorded in Canada for drunkenness, and the Canadian Pacific Railway are endeavoring to show their employes that the lives of the passengers must not be endangered.

Returning voyagers from England bring back this story, told by H. Clay Evans, consul-general at London:—An American from Buffalo went abroad. He visited Paris, and afterward fell on London, where he boasted of his knowledge of Parisian customs, meals, wines, pictures, and everything else the traveler sees and gets. "Of course," said Evans, "you enjoyed some pommes de terre in Paris?" "Not at all—not at all," replied the man from Buffalo, "my wife is traveling with me."

There is no truth in the report that Mrs. Maybrick is to be released in April.

The Michel Hospital was opened up last Friday when the two men injured in the explosion were taken there by Dr. McSorley. Dr. McSorley has fitted up the cottage with all modern appliances and has done everything possible to make it comfortable for the patients. A nurse from Winnipeg has been secured.

It is surely time the government did something about the Michel school. Increased accommodation is needed badly. If the government is not disposed to erect a new school at once they should secure another teacher and temporary quarters in another building ;so that the over-crowded state of the present school would be relieved. No teacher can do justice to the work under existing conditions.

The large new fan at No. 8 mine was started up for the first time Sunday, and gives the best of satisfaction. The small fan at No. 8 was taken out and loaded for Coal Creek mines.

OIL DEVELOPMENTS.

R.A. Welsh, of Vancouver, one of the directors of The Western Oil and Coal Company was in town on Tuesday having stopped off a day on his way home from the Company's property in Alberta 40 miles south of Pincher. Mr. Welsh stated that his company had just completed a deal with the Vancouver Petroleum Syndicate by which they gained possession of the latter's oil properties adjoining their's in Alberta.

The company have two oil boring machines steadily at work, and these are now down about 1,300 feet. Although oil has not yet been struck they have abundant evidence of oil prospects. The Rocky Mountain company which struck a 350 barrel flow on an adjoining claim are at work on other claims. The transportation question is a serious one with these companies as the 40 mile road is in a deplorable condition and freighting costs 90 cents per hundred. Each have spent a couple of thousand on improving the road and about $50,000 on developing their claims. An oil boring machine is manned by nine men, whose monthly pay-roll amounts to $1,000. The oil claims across a valley from the Flathead country and it is possible that the company will use Fernie for its outfitting point when the Government builds a road into the Flathead.

The Western Co. holds 8 miles of good looking oil claims on the Elk at Morrissey and vicinity. Not only has the company paid their license fees on this property, but they have done the required assessment work, but the licenses have been withheld. The company are anxious to begin active operations by boring for oil, but until they have their licenses they will not expend a cent on further development. If the government redeems its pledge by granting the licenses in May rapid development work will be pushed on these claims.

The B. C. Gazette of Jan 7th announces that G. G. Moffatt, of Morrissey Mines has been appointed a justice of the peace.

COLEMAN NEWS.

John Campbell, a carpenter, died suddenly at Coleman on Thursday. The cause of death was heart failure. Deceased was a Scotchman and he worked at his trade in Grand Forks for some time.

Rev. R. A. Robinson, of Olds, has taken charge of the Anglican church work at Coleman, Blairmore and Frank. He formerly was stationed at Olds, Alta.

Mutz and Scott are proceeding with the erection of their brewery between Blairmore and Coleman. The excavation is now completed.

The Mines at Coleman are turning out well up to the present state of development. A 14 foot seam has been followed into the mountain a distance of 600 feet and at the face it shows a solid wall of pure coal. This seam is admitted to beof a non-coking quality, but a narrower seam that is said to be good coking coal is now in 200 feet. The daily output now is 130 tons.

The Frank mines have resumed work on the return of Manager Gebo. It is reported that the mines are now turning out 800 tons per day.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

This preparation is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and influenza. It has become famous for its cures of these diseases over a large part of the civilized world. The most flattering testimonies have been received, giving account of its good works; of the aggravating and persistent coughs it has cured; of severe colds that have yielded promptly to its soothing effects, and of the dangerous attacks of croup it has cured, often saving the life of a child. The extensive use of it for whooping cough, has shown that it robs that disease of all dangerous results. It is especially prized by mothers because it contains nothing injurious and there is not the least danger in giving it even to babies. It always cures and cures quickly. Sold by all druggists and dealers.

MURDER AT JAFFRAY.

JOHN McGEE INSTANTLY KILLED BY DISCHARGE OF SHOT GUN.

Louis Gillier, the Murderer, Lodged in Fernie Jail. Inquest and Preliminary Trial. Shocking Details.

A cold blooded murder was committed at Jaffray on Saturday night when John McGee, a young lumberman, was instantly killed by a shot gun. The scene of the crime was the Jaffray House, and the murderer is Louis Gillier, the proprietor of the hotel.

The gun is a 16 bore, double barrel. The contents of both barrels were fired into the body in quick succession. McGee did not speak again, death being instantaneous. Constable Dow at Wardner who was wired for arrived in Jaffray next day and arrested Gillier who made no effort to escape. A revolver loaded and cocked was found on his person. The prisoner was brought to Fernie on Sunday evening and lodged in the jail On Monday Constable Walker went to Jaffray and brought back the body of the murdered man, which after being examined by the jury and Dr. Higgins was interred in the afternoon, Rev. Father Coccola officiating.

Jonn McGee is a young man of about 23 years old. Wm. McDonald who has known him intimately for several months states that he came from Pictou County near New Glascow, Nova Scotia, three or four years ago. He worked in several metalliferous mines in West Kootenay for some time, then drifted into the occupation of lumberman. He worked at Wilmer some time previous to coming to Cranbrook six weeks ago, where he secured a job from the East Kootenay Lumber Co. A few days afterwards he was sent to this company's bush camp near Jaffray. He has a mother, some brothers and a sister living at the old home.

Gillier is an Old-Country Frenchman of about 45 years of age. He styles himself "Doctor' though he is not qualified to practice medicine. Mrs. Gillier in whose name the hotel license is made out, and who is an important witness of the shooting made a statement to the constable in which she admitted that her husband had committed the offense, but she stated very emphatically that she would not appear at the trial, and if forced to, that she would not give evidence. She gave as her reason that she was too nervous.

THE INQUEST.

Coroner Forbes took the case in hand and summoned the following jury,—J. D. Quail, foreman: J. F. Jarvis, J. H. Bricker, Wm. Handley, J. Hutchison and W. O. Robbins. The jury met on Tuesday morning and after viewing the body it was adjourned until Thursday.

The first witness was William McDonald. He testified that he had known deceased when he was a little boy. He first met him in B. C. at Wilmer and had been with him since. They had been working in the bush camp at Jaffray about 6 weeks. McGee was paid off on Saturday and he had also quit working for the company. They with some other companions went to Jaffray about 4 p.m. This was the first time he had ever been at this hotel and he believed it was McGee's first time. They had done some drinking before supper. After supper he kept away from the bar-room but McGee and some of the others kept on drinking. Later on McGee got full and made considerable noise. Once when he was outside he heard deceased and Mrs. Gillier talking loudly. He did not know what about. He and his companions had intended going to Cranbrook on a freight but missed the train so they decided to remain at the hotel all night. The shooting occurred between 11 and 12 o'clock. Just previous to that time witness and deceased were outside and the other two McDonalds had gone upstairs. McGee went into the house first. He followed shortly after and upon entering the hall or office he found deceased and Mrs. Gillier sparring near the stairway. They stopped and witness reached over to take hold of deceased's shoulder when two shots were fired. He saw the gun in Dr. Gillier's hands. The doctor fired the last shot He must have fired both shots. The doctor was standing at the dining room door about 6 or 7 feet away from deceased. He could not recognize the gun. This was the first time he had ever seen McGee drunk. He did not see Mrs. Gillier acting in an improper manner, She was in the bar in the afternoon and shook the dice with the boys.

Alex. McDonald, another chum of McGee's, told of the evening's spree. He got pretty full and went to bed before the murder was committed. Constable Dow and Dr. Higgins also gave evidence. G. A. Thomson of Cranbrook for the defence closely examined the witnesses. Mrs. Gillier was present but was not called. Chief McMullin conducted the case for the crown.

The jury brought in the following verdict: That the deceased, John McGee, came to his death from the effects of two gun shots, and according to the evidence, we believe the shots were fired by Louis Gillier.

THE PRELIMINARY TRIAL.

The preliminary examination is taking place today. In addition to the evidence given at the inquest Angus McDonald, another chum of McGee, was examined he stated that McGee was acting in a violent manner during the evening, kicking and breaking the furniture and using strong language.

It is understood that the defence will attempt to prove that the deceased used threatening language towards the accused and otherwise acted in such a manner as to justify the shooting.

GALLIHER MEETING

Gives an Account of his Stewardship—Brief Review of the Liberal Policy during past Three Years.

Despite the freezing atmosphere of Princess hall on Tuesday evening a fair sized audience gathered to hear W. A. Galliher deliver his address on federal politics. That he was given an attentive hearing to the end may be taken as very complimentary to that gentleman, when the uncomfortable temperature is taken into consideration. F. Stork occupied the chair and in a few wellchosen words introduced the speaker of the evening.

Mr. Galliher in opening said he was glad that he had an opportunity of addressing his constituents without asking for their votes. He explained that another session was called for March and that the election would likely take place before June.

The speaker then dealt with the lumber question. He appreciated the grevance of the B C. lumbermen against American rough lumber being allowed into Canada free. He had taken the part of the two delegations which had gone to Ottawa on this question and he would continue to agitate for a reciprocal duty on this lumber. The products of the Canadian northwest, from which came the chief objection to the duty, were fully protected. These products found a ready market in British Columbia and it was unfair that the great lumber industry of the latter province did not have similar protection. The people of the Prairie were following a selfish and narrow policy in this matter. He did not believe, however that anything would be done in the approaching session as the adjustment of any specific duty often meant the re-adjustment of other parts of the tariff which would require more time than could be afforded to it in this session. He advised the lumbermen to continue the agitation and good would result.

Mr. Galliher then proceeded to give a brief account of his stewardship for the three years he had represented the constituency. The appropriations he had secured for the three years amounted to over three hundred thousand dollars; various postoffices had been opened in the district. He had worked hard for the daily mail service on the Crows Nest. He had devoted the whole of last year to his duties neglecting his Nelson office. Much of this time was taken up in fighting the lead miners' battle for government aid. The lead bounty, which was just being enforced now, was the result.

Mr. Galliher then rapidly ran over legislation passed by the House and supported by himself, which affected the west in a more or less direct manner. The Chinese Exclusion Act, The Civil Service reform, the removal of duty from placer mining machinery, the discriminating tax on German goods which has resulted in an appeal from Germany for a new treaty, the Railway Act with its many clauses, particularly the appointment of a railway commission to see that the terms of the act were complied with, these were all explained in turn.

The Redistribution Act, he claimed was a great benefit to the west. B. C. received another member and the membership of the west was increased from 18 to 28 The west was now in a better position to make its strength felt.

The Grand Trunk Pacific railway was explained at some length. He believed the government had driven a hard bargain with the company. So hard, indeed that he understood the March session was for the purpose of making important changes in some of the terms of the contract. Mr. Galliher closed with a glowing tribute to the growing importance of the west and to the great future ahead of it. The chairman called for three cheers for the King followed by lusty cheers for the candidate.

INQUEST AT MICHEL.

Full Investigation Failed to Bring to Light The Cause of Explosion. Blame Attached to no one.

Coroner Trites and a jury comprising the following gentlemen. Messrs. E. K. Stewart, foreman; Charles Greer, George Mitchell, Arthur Sampson, Earle Anderson and Albert Gammage proceeded with the inquest into the death of the seven Michel miners killed last week in the explosion. Inspector Dick was present to represent the government, Mr. Sherman the Miners, and General Manager Stockett the Coal Company. After a lengthy sitting on Monday evening and all day Tuesday the following verdict was brought in by jury. "That the said David J. Roberts, John Sale, Thos. Evans, Wm. King, Burdett Dean and Wm. McAllister came to their death on the 8th day of Jan. 1904 between the hours of 1;30 and 2 p.m. in the lower No. 3 mine at Michel colliery owned and operated by the C. N. P. Coal Company, Ltd., by a gas explosion caused by some unknown circumstance. We as a jury do not attach any blame to any person or persons concerned."

A synopsis of the voluminous evidence is as follows.

Thos. Smith, lampman, sworn, said "I gave McAllister a Wolfe lamp. He did not have a Davy lamp from the lamp house. I know the lamp I gave McAllister by the number. The lamp is in the lamp house now. It came back locked."

Wm. Austin, shotlighter in lower No. 3, was on duty on the day of the explosion until 10:30 a.m. when a slight accident necessitated his quitting. He said. "In the west level there was no gas whatever when I went off. It was in good condition when I fired shots. To Mr. Dick,—There was no gas whatever in the main level. There was gas in the cross-cut and before firing a shot I fanned it out. I did not fire any shots in the cross-cut that morning. The air comes in by the face of the level, follows on to the cross-cut and goes out behind brattice. To Mr. Sherman.—I light the shots with a wire heated by a Davy lamp. We are not supposed to fire when there is gas within a radius of 75 feet from face of cross-cut.

Thos. Doyle, miner, said. "I was working in blind cross-cut previous to explosion. When I went in I found gas 15 feet from the face. I went to the surface and reported it to fireboss who ordered me to get a box to fix on the hand fan. I made a box about 14 feet long and fixed it on to the other one. John Ryan shotlighter, two hours later examined cross-cut with me and found gas 8 feet from the face. I added about 6 feet of brattice cloth and then it cleared the gas. Shot lighter fired four shots for me about 2:30 a.m. and one at 6. My opinion is that the explosion started from lower level in the face, the gas coming down from the cross-cut into the lower level. I believe it was a gas explosion.

Robert Middleton, fireboss of Nos. 3 4 and 5 mines, said. "I was on duty in No. 5 at the time of explosion. I was knocked-down by the force at the distance of 1600 feet from face of No. 3. When I went on shift I was told by night fire-boss that he had stopped the cross-cut. I told one of the miners to work the fan that day and King said he would. I found gas in cross-cut 14 feet from the bottom. Shotlighter then came along and asked if they wanted any shots. They said 'no' but they would get ready right away. I went away after inspection. I have no theory to offer as to the cause of explosion. (To Mr. Dick.) I put McAllister in Austin's place. I found McAllister a careful man, slow but steady. I found a little gas in the counter level that morning, about a foot from top and three feet from face. (To Juryman Stewart.) I considered the mines safe to work in that morning. McAllister had fireboss's papers. (To Mr. Sherman.) It was slightly dangerous that morning. As a general rule I would warn the men between the gas and the return. I told these men what was going on. I told them the gas hpd to be got out before shots could be fired.

Chas. Simister, fire-boss, said. "I was on duty on morning of 8th in No. 3. When I went off duty I left the mine in good condition. When I left duty the brattice was in good shape. (To Mr. Sherman) I had a man at the hand fan all night. At 5:30 a.m. all places were clear except a trace of gas on the east side. If the hand fan stopped the blind cross cut would fill with gas in about 1½ or 2 hours. I have no idea whatever as to what caused the explosion.

Wm. Lane, miner, was working in the lower No. 3 cross cut. He was knocked down. On his way out about two minutes after explosion he heard a sound which he thought was a shot in Lower No. 3 west.

Wm. Powell, overman, said. "I was on duty in No. 3 at time of explosion. I was going in the tunnel about 1:30 p.m. and I met the force of the explosion which put me out of business for that day. I was through the district where explosion occurred about 16 hours prior to explosion. I found everything satisfactory. I never had any complaints made to me about improper ventilation or accumulation of gas. I consider No. 3 mine a safe mine. (To Mr. Dick.) The brattice was in good shape. The late Wm. McAllister was a good man and that is why I appointed him shot-lighter He was an advanced Scranton school student and had 30 years experience. I never heard of any trouble in No. 3 with gas."

A. Dick, inspector, said. "I have made an examination of No. 3 since explosion. I never had any complaint regarding this part of mine, I heard Mr. Middleton's evidence as to quantity of gas in this mine on morning of explosion I would consider that a large quantity for a working place. If there was any quantity of gas there I would have prevented shot-firing so long as there was the smallest showing. I would consider from evidence given that cross-cut was giving off gas. According to the law there could be no shots fired where there was gas 75 feet from face. I do not know of any better method of firing shots. From my observation I consider the greatest heat was shown at face because coal there was coked about the thickness of a pencil. From the the evidence given I believe it was an explosion of gas. The cross-cut would hold sufficient gas to do the damage."

A. R. Wilson, superintendent and mine manager was examined at great length. He presented a plan of the mine which showed clearly where each body was found and where the damage was done.

Bernard Farmer, shotlighter, Noah Farmer, miner, and Thos. Millan boss driver were examined but little evidence of vital importance was elicited from them.

BACHELORS' BALL

The dance given by the Bachelors of Fernie in Princess hall last night was one of the most successful and enjoyable social events of the season. A large number of guests were present and everybody thoroughly enjoyed themselves. The music, provided by the Fernie orchestra, was even superior to that given on former occasions. Refreshments were served on the stage and the attentive hosts did everything possible to add to the enjoyment of their guests.

Mr. Stockett stated in reply to an enquiry as to the truthfulness of the report that he was appointed General Manager for a term of only three months, that there was absolutely no truth in it.

HOCKEY.

The soft weather necessitated the postponement of the hockey game set for Monday. The Medicine Hat boys have agreed to play a week later, and as the weather has since dropped to zero temperature the ice promises to be keen. The game promises to be the finest exhibition ever seen in Fernie. The Fernie boys are by no means expecting an easy victory, but they are working hard in anticipation of any surprise in store for them.

The Cranbrook and Fernie teams play an exhibition game to-morrow night. The locals expect a strong aggregation against them. The game will put the champions in good form for Monday.

F. Rutherford of the C. P. R. office who was one of the star Rat Portage men is getting in shape this week and will participate in these games.

TRAIN DERAILED AT MICHEL.

At 7;10 p.m. Sunday a west bound freight in charge of engineer T. Wardman and Conductor McLennan, was derailed at the switch in the upper end of the yard.

The trouble is supposed to have been caused by a switch half open. At any rate the engine and five cars started to follow the side track and as a result ran off the main line breaking guide rails, tearing up track for a few yards, completely blocking traffic for 14 hours. The box cars were unloaded before being pulled on again. The wrecking crew came in from Frank about 10.05 p.m. and did not clear the line until 8 a.m.

The east bound passenger did not leave here till 9:10 a.m. and the west bound train laid over at Crows Nest for three hours. One of the switchmen has been laid off till after the investigation as he is supposed to have been last at the switch and it was not locked. No one was hurt.

DEATH AT MICHEL.

Mrs. David James died at Michel on Saturday evening at 9;30 o'clock after a short, but very severe, attack of inflammation. She had taken ill only the day preceding and in spite of Dr. McSorley's skillful treatment she succumbed the following night. She died in the hospital. Her husband who owns a ranch near Pincher Creek has been in Michel since winter set in. He has been laid up for some time, first with a broken leg and afterwards with an attack of quinsey. The deceased lady leaves two little girls aged about 4 and 6. She was a sister of the late David Roberts who died in the explosion and a daughter of Mrs. T. J. Smith who also lives at Michel. The body was brought to Fernie on Monday and interred in the Fernie cemetery at 2 p m., Rev. Marshall, of Michel, officiating. Mrs. James resided in Fernie for some time and her many friends will sincerely regret her early demise. She, like her brother, was a member of the Methodist choir at Michel. Miss Maggie Smith, sister of the deceased, and the only remaining member of the family is seriously ill with influenza.

HANDS FROZEN.

A man by the name of Dick Cane had his hands frozen stiff while riding on the brake-beam of a freight car from Michel to Fernie late on Monday night. The brakeman noticing Cane's pitiable plight as the train stopped in the Fernie yard at 2.30 a.m. conducted him to the Queen's Hotel and Dr. Higgins was hastily summoned. Everything possible was done to relieve the man's sufferings and to save the frozen parts, but it is feared that both hands will have to be amputated. Mr. Chenette took the sufferer to the Cranbrook hospital for treatment on Tuesday's express.

ODDFELLOW'S OFFICERS.

The Oddfellows installed their officers for the ensuing term last week as follows: Thos. Beck, Noble Grand; Thos. Bell, Vice Grand; John Williams, recording secretary; O. N. Ross, Financial Secretary; Geo. Reynolds, Treasurer; J. C. Hutchison, Conductor; Geo. Clapp, Warden; S. Slinn, I. G.

BEHIND THE DOOR

BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

AUTHOR OF "A HOUSE OF TEARS" "RED POST PARK" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1894, BY TILLOTSON & SON.

"It is unfortunately too true. But there, don't upset yourself, like a dear young lady. I'll call around about eleven o'clock, if I can manage to snatch the time then. If not, I'll come later. Don't trouble. I'll open it for myself."

Constable Metcalf had succeeded in closing the door of Mrs. Davorn's room—the lock seemed to be unusually obstinate on this occasion—by the time the noise of the closing of the hall door upon Dr. Percival reached his listening ears. Then he heard sounds of violent sobbing proceeding from the front parlour. "The poor young lady's grief is nothing to me, of course," reflected the constable, who had a softer corner in his heart than he gave himself credit for. "We must see what happened here during the night. I wonder has she given the word to any of my mates?" He was not, however, eager to be disturbed just then by the advent of a fellow constable or by an inspector. He was losing no time, and the more information he could acquire the better for everybody. He turned round and again mounted to the second landing.

Albert Steinworth was leaning against the jamb of his own bedroom door, biting his thumb nail.

"I suppose it really is all over then?" said the young man, straightening his back and pointing toward the room where the body lay.

"Dead as a door-nail," said the policemar. "I thought so myself when I entered the room this morning—exactly on the stroke of 6 it was then—but it don't do to be offering professional opinions in matters of life and death. Has the gentleman in here," pointing with the thumb of his right hand, "made any move since?"

"No—at least I have heard nothing."

"He ought to be dressed now. Perhaps he is waiting to be released."

Constable Metcalf knocked at Mr. Vickery's door, and in response to the summons heard a gruff "Come in!" The policeman opened the lock, turned the handle, and threw back the door.

Mr. Vickery, fully dressed, came forward as the door opened.

"Were you aware, sir," asked the constable, "that you were locked into your room last night—or, at all events, early this morning?"

A puzzled look stole into the bloodshot eyes of Bernard Vickery.

"Locked into my room? I don't quite understand you. What do you mean?"

"Why, that I found your door, as well as the other one on the landing, locked from the outside."

There was a perplexed look in Bernard Vickery's eyes as the policeman explained about the doors. "That is odd, surely," said he. "I seldom trouble about my lock at night or about the inside bolt. I am generally a late bird. But who could have locked me in, or why?"

"Don't ask me. Now, gentlemen, I want to have a word with Miss Rodney. What will you do with yourselves meanwhile? Recollect I am acting for myself, but I think I am right in saying that you must not leave the house until I have further instructions about you."

"I suppose, then," said Steinworth, who had been strangely silent, "that I may put Paddington finally out of my head?"

"I should say so."

"All right, policeman. There is no use in crying over spilled milk." He took off his hat and rubbed the sleeve of his coat round it.

"You see, we shall want the assistance of every one in the house to clear up the mystery—for it looks a bit mysterious—of Mrs. Davorn's death. Ah! I think I hear the voice of one of my mates in the hall. I'll send him up here to you while I go down to the young lady. You'll keep my mate in chat, I hope, gentlemen. It's very awkward, I know. He's a gruff sort of customer, but he means well."

Steinworth nodded in a careless way, and, abandoning his hat, he again addressed himself to his mustache.

"Now, sir," said Constable Metcalf, glancing at Mr. Vickery, "I'll take the liberty of locking your room."

"This is very arbitrary, surely," observed Mr. Vickery.

"Not at all, sir," locking the door as Vickery stepped tremblingly out on the landing. "Now I'll run down stairs, gentlemen."

"Can I have just one word with you," asked Albert Steinworth, "say on the lower landing?"

"Certainly, only remember I am a policeman."

"The caution, if it is meant for such, is, I think, unnecessary," following the constable down the five steps.

"What I want to ask you," said Steinworth, lowering his voice almost to a whisper, "is, what does the doctor say?"

"About Mrs. Davorn?" inquired Metcalf, placing his open hand on the door which now separated him from the dead woman.

"Yes; what does he think of it?"

"I don't know what he thinks—he's not very free with his thoughts, but I should say he thinks with me, that it is chloroform."

"What? Chloroform!"

"Yes; looks rather like it."

"Looks like what?"

"That the lady was sent off into her last sleep with an overdose of chloroform."

"You surely don't mean that? You can't mean that it was anything more than an ordinary sudden death?" Steinworth's face was pinched and pallid as he put the question.

"I am afraid it looks very like murder."

"Heavens! No!" cried the young man, trembling violently, and losing control of his voice. "Who would murder such a kind lady, and for what?"

"I don't know. I think I have said a great deal too much as it is, sir," observed the suave policeman.

"This is most shocking," whimpered Steinworth. "It will drive Miss Rodney crazy. Does she know anything of this—this suspicion of chloroform, or whatever you say it is?"

"I can't say; you must not ask me too many questions. We are losing a lot of time. I am, at any rate."

"What a mercy I was locked into my room last night!" exclaimed Steinworth, throwing up his hands. "There is no knowing where this will end."

"Hello, Young!" cried Constable Metcalf, affecting to ignore Steinworths hysterics, and addressing himself to his fellow constable who stood in the hall.

"Hello!" answered Constable Young, in a gruff voice.

"I say, Young, will you step this way, and keep two gentlemen company up here for a bit? I want to see the young lady below."

"All right," answered Young. "Been rather long, but from the information received from the young lady I thought it best to go back to the station. Inspector Briggs will be here presently. He met Dr. Percival on the Crescent road. I left them having a chat together about this 'ere job."

CHAPTER IV

MRS. DAVORN'S NIECE.

It was now about half-past seven o'clock.

The morning mist had disappeared and there was a promise in the sky of a fine clear day.

In the front sitting-room of 13 Felspar road a young girl sat, her arms on a small table in the centre of the room, her head pillowed in her arms.

Ethel Rodney, niece and only living relative of the woman lying dead, was five and twenty years of age. She was an only child, and her mother had died before Ethel had reached her fifteenth birthday. John Rodney, her father, held an honourable and lucrative post in the Civil Service. He was an improvident man, content always to regard the good and evil of the day sufficient. He owned to living up to every penny of his income, and was always threatening himself with retrenchment. At 45, when Ethel was in her nineteenth year, John Rodney suddenly died. When his affairs were wound up, it was ascertained that not only had he saved nothing, but that he was considerably in debt. An appeal had been made to his department, and a sum of money was privately subscribed by his colleagues.

After the payment of John Rodney's debts, for which purpose the money had principally been raised, it was found there was a small sum left, and it was decided to apprentice Ethel to her aunt—a widowed sister of John Rodney, who at that time conducted a fairly flourishing millinery business in the West-end of London. When Ethel had been two years with her aunt, Mrs. Davorn, being anxious about her own health and eager to give up the cares of her shop, decided to sell the business, and proposed to her niece they should live together in some quiet London suburb, Ethel to perform the light duties of a companion to her aunt. Mrs. Davorn, on settling her affairs, found she was possessed of a sum of over £6,000, and she felt she could safely leave business and its cares behind her and be able to make comfortable provision for herself and for her niece, whom she dearly loved.

Mrs. Davorn had taken the advice of a friend, and had invested her savings in one lump in a prosperous colonial bank. Then she took and furnished 13 Felspar road, and felt that at 41 years of age all her business cares and worries had been buried forever. In the third year after she had settled down in Clayfields the prosperous colonial bank went into liquidation, and the widowed lady found her capital reduced from over £6,000 to something under £1,500. She knew she was unfitted to begin over again a business career, and she knew that £1,500 securely invested could not keep the house going. She was very much attached to the house, which she had furnished tastefully and comfortably; there was a pretty garden at the rear, and the neighbourhood was supposed to be eminently healthy. Therefore she decided to try the experiment of keeping the house and letting apartments. Steinworth and Vickery had been her first and only lodgers. Both men found their quarters specially comfortable, but Mrs. Davorn was just beginning to discover that the letting of apartments was not, in her case, a very profitable arrangement.

When things had come to this pass, she received another shock at hearing that the bank in which she had invested £1,300 was in a perilous condition. Without waiting to learn if the rumour was worth her serious attention, she had on Tuesday, the 8th of October, gone into town and drawn her £1,300 (which had been lodged on deposit at call) out of the bank.

About twelve months previously Ethel Rodney had met at a dance in the house of a friend in Clayfields a young doctor, who was at the time an assistant to Dr. Stanley Percival. Maurice Leclerc was a tall, slender, young man, about six and twenty years of age, with a pale face, a beautiful square forehead, piercing dark eyes, and crisp brown hair. Though his father was a Frenchman, His mother was of Irish parentage, and young Leclerc inherited the volatile nature of his French father and the impulsive and somewhat gloomy temperament of his Irish mother. Maurice Leclerc fell violently in love at first sight with Ethel Rodney, and three months after their first meeting he proposed.

The young girl was not prepared for such swift and passionate courtship, and she declined to say "yea" or "nay" to Leclerc for at least another six months. The young doctor took his rebuff badly, but it did not lessen the ardour of his passion. He appealed to Mrs. Davorn, but from her he got no help or promise of help. Mrs. Davorn had for some reason taken an instinctive dislike to the handsome young doctor. His impulsive manner jarred on her nerves.

"When did you see her alive last?"

Shortly before Mrs. Davorn closed her eyes forever on the world, Dr. Leclerc got into trouble. He had left Dr. Percival for some time, and his own practice in Clayfields did not flourish. There were sinister rumours about his financial condition, rumours which reached the ears both of aunt and niece.

Mrs. Davorn felt a certain amount of triumph at discovering that she had been instrumental in preventing her niece from entering into an engagement with a worse than penniless young man, but the news of the young doctor's difficulties had caused the wavering girl to make up her mind suddenly and decisively. She would marry her lover at any cost. Dr. Leclerc informed Ethel candidly of his troubles, and declared he saw no way out of them except to flee from the country. He had a brother in the United States who would help him. He offered to release Ethel from an engagement which she had hurriedly entered into without her aunt's knowledge the moment the first sinister rumours of her lover reached her ears. Ethel was uncertain what to do. She loved the man wholly and earnestly, and while she was hesitating he threw himself at her feet and passionately implored her to marry him at once and to fly with him as his wife to a new country across the seas. Half in love, half in pity, she had given a reluctant consent to his wild proposal, but on calm reflection she had seen the unwisdom of taking so rash a step, and had suggested to Leclerc at the last moment that the matter should be laid before her aunt.

Mrs. Davorn absolutely declined to countenance Leclerc's wild scheme for rehabilitating himself, and she was so indignant at learning that Ethel had made the clandestine arrangement for flight with the young doctor (who had already armed himself with a marriage license) that she declared neither one nor the other should ever have a penny of her money. Losing her temper completely, she taunted Leclerc with having no object but that of escaping from the meshes in which he was entangled by marrying Ethel and possessing himself through her of sufficient money to enable him to escape from his difficulties. This taunt, which was wholly unworthy of Mrs. Davorn and undeserved by Leclerc, had angered Ethel beyond measure, and on the night of the 9th of October she had given her lover at parting a promise to marry him on the following day.

Ethel had pondered over all this in the solitude of her own room on the night of the 9th of October. She was sorely grieved at having upset her aunt, but she had not yet been able to forgive the unworthy taunt which Mrs. Davorn had levelled at her lover. It was long after midnight when she fell asleep, and the first sounds which had disturbed her in the morning were the sounds made by Constable Metcalf in his attempts to rouse the house.

Ethel Rodney was now in an utterly bewildered state of mind. She was frantic with grief and could not yet wholly realize that she was never again to see her aunt, whose last hours she had made miserable.

Her dazed reveries were interrupted by Constable Metcalf, who knocked quietly at the half open door of the parlour. A faint "Come in" greeted him.

"I am very sorry, miss," said the suave policeman, as he entered the room and gazed at the distracted girl, "but," closing the door, "I must ask you for some information."

Metcalf was determined to have a full notebook before the matter was taken out of his hands by his inspector.

The sight of the policeman seemed to have a steadying effect on the young girl.

"Of course," she said, "I will give you any information I can. I was almost stupefied when I opened the door for you this morning, but I think I feel quieter now."

"I'm glad to hear it, miss," fumbling with his notebook.

"The deceased lady, Mrs. Davorn, was your aunt?"

"Yes."

"When did you see her alive last?"

"About 11 o'clock last night."

"Where?"

"In her bedroom."

"Was she complaining of any illness?"

"I do not remember that she complained, but she had not been well for some days, from over-excitement, I think."

"By the way, miss," said the constable, after he had committed this information to his notebook, "are you aware that the window of this room here was opened during the night?"

Ethel Rodney rose quickly from her chair at the question, her face distorted with terror.

"What do you mean?" she asked, panting. "The window opened during the night? You surely don't mean to convey that any one broke into the house last night. Oh, do not tell me this," she moaned. "It is almost more terrible than what I discovered this morning."

She fell back into her chair and buried her face in her hand.

Constable Metcalf stood silently by, still busy with his notebook.

"Yes, miss," he added, after a pause. "It does look to me as if some one had broken into the house last night."

The girl took her hands from her face and gazed at the officer of the law.

"You surely don't mean to suggest," she asked, with a calmness which disconcerted Constable Metcalf almost as much as Mr. Steinworth's early volubility, "that my aunt has been—has—" she hesitated, the words almost choking her—"that my dear aunt did not die a natural death?"

"I am afraid it looks as if she didn't, miss."

"Oh, this is terrible—terrible!" cried Ethel Rodney, rising from her chair, and walking up and down the room, beating her hands against her skirts. "Terrible!"

Constable Metcalf stood, notebook in hand, watching her furtively. He did not attempt to speak until he saw that she had again become calmer.

"Could there be any reason in your mind, miss," he asked, "why any one should break into the house?"

"There might be. There might be a reason," answered Ethel, standing still and clasping her hands. "And it is almost too awful to think of. Oh, what shall I do? And we quarrelled bitterly last night. My dear aunt! My dear aunt!"

Again she made a violent effort to restrain her emotion.

"You must think me very strange, very wild," she said. "But Heaven knows I have reason now to be strange and wild. There, I am better now."

"That's right, miss. It won't do to give way too much, you know. There is always some trouble around us. If it is not past and gone it's in front of us," he added, with a wise shake of his head. "But tell me, miss—that is, if you wish to give me the information—what in your opinion might be a good reason for a person to break into the house last night. People usually do that sort of thing for plate or for money."

"There was money here."

"Do you mean any considerable sum?"

"Thirteen hundred pounds."

"Phew! Have you any idea where the sum of money was? Of course it may still be in the same place, and you're not bound to give me any answer if you don't like."

"Why should I not?" asked Ethel, with flashing eyes. "The money was in my aunt's bedroom. She had drawn it out of her bank on Tuesday."

"Where was it placed; do you know, miss?"

"In a desk in the cupboard in her bedroom."

"Might I ask did you search for it this morning?"

"I did not search for it, but I saw on the floor in the room the desk broken open. The money, no doubt, is gone—but do not think it is the loss of it that distracts me."

"And who knew of the money, do you think, miss?"

"I knew it was there."

"Only yourself knew of it? Are you sure?"

Ethel Rodney paused for some moments before answering. Then in a choking voice she said slowly:

"Only myself and one other."

CHAPTER V.

MAURICE LECLERC.

There was a knock at the hall door as Miss Rodney, having made the statement that she was not the only person who was aware of the money being in the house, flung herself into a chair and again burst into a passionate fit of weeping.

"Excuse me, miss," said the constable. "I must leave you for the present to yourself. No doubt this is my inspector."

He folded his notebook and put it into the breast of his tunic. Then he left the room, closing the door quietly after him.

In the hall he saw four men—Constable Young, who, hearing the knock and learning there was no servant in the house, had decided to make himself useful as well as ornamental. Albert Steinworth and Bernard Vickery, who did not like his fellow lodger and preferred not to be left alone with him on the landing, were well known to Constable Metcalf—but the fourth man, for whom the hall door had just been opened, was a stranger to the constable, though he fancied he had a memory of his face. The first impression was that this was a gentleman from Scotland Yard, but a swift glance at his carriage and bearing, as he passed into the hall, convinced Metcalf that he was not a man who had passed through the force.

"Your business, sir?" demanded Young, as the newcomer stood in the hall.

Constable Metcalf stepped forward.

"Would you kindly walk this way with me, sir?" stepping toward the door of the room which lay behind the front parlour—a room used chiefly as a dining-room. "Our inspector is taking his time of it," addressing himself to Young.

"May be sure he has good reasons for being slow," said Young. "Seems rather awkward to have these gentlemen standing about," pointing to Steinworth and Vickery.

"Very sorry, but we can't help that just now. Our inspector won't be long, I'm sure, and he'll settle everything. Now, sir," to the stranger, "will you follow me?"

The two men walked into the dining-room.

"You wish to see Miss Rodney. Your name, sir, please. I suppose you heard what happened here this morning?"

"Yes; I heard that Mrs. Davorn was found dead in her bed, and already there is a rumour abroad that there has been foul play."

"Reports will travel, sir. You did not give your name!"

"Maurice Leclerc."

"Ah, I thought I remembered you, Dr. Leclerc, of course. You used to be with Dr. Percival—pardon my familiarity."

"This is awful!" exclaimed Dr. Leclerc, tearing off his glove and apparently forgetting the existence of the police constable. "It will drive Ethel crazy. Where is Miss Rodney?" he asked, in a quieter tone, glancing at the policeman. "Is she in the house, and can I see her? I suppose you are in charge here?"

A lot of questions to answer all at once.

"Yes, sir; she is in the house, but she is greatly upset. To tell you the candid truth I did not think it would be fair on her to let strangers intrude; but, of course, it is different with you, sir."

"What do you mean?" enquired Leclerc, angrily. He knew the constable was alluding to the relations that existed between Ethel and himself—a liberty he could not tolerate in this meddlesome policeman. "Where is Miss Rodney?" he enquired again, abruptly. "I must see her at once."

"She is in the next room—the front room."

"That will do. Thank you. Perhaps I have not been overpolite, but I feel as if I were about to go mad."

He snatched up his hat, which he had laid on the table on entering the room, tore off his other glove, and strode out into the hall.

"Excitable person!" reflected the constable, following Dr. Leclerc into the hall, and watching him as he opened the door of the front parlour.

"Now, gentlemen," said Metcalf addressing himself to Steinworth and Vickery, "I think the back parlour will be the handiest place for you until our inspector arrives. It is at your service."

The two lodgers entered the room at this invitation, followed by the policemen.

"Evidently the young medico thinks he is a person of some importance here," sneered Steinworth. "Impudent snob! We were introduced here and met several times under this very roof, and he had the insolence to cut me dead in the hall outside."

Bernard Vickery was silent. He acted more like an automaton than a human being. He did just as he was directed, and seemed as if he were walking about in a dream.

After some moments of awkward silence in the back parlour Steinworth spoke again.

"It is a horrible affair altogether. Seems to get worse the more you think of it. Poor inoffensive lady, murdered in cold blood!"

"What's that you say?" exclaimed Vickery, suddenly waking into life and glaring round the room.

"At least so I am told by the constable there," pointing to Metcalf.

"It is impossible to say yet how the lady came by her death," said Metcalf.

"It might have been suicide?" suggested Steinworth.

"I can't tell, sir."

"Then there is that odd business of my being locked in my room and the front parlour window being forced."

"Yes," said Constable Metcalf. "That locking your door is very puzzling but I suppose there was an object in it."

"No doubt to secure the person who broke in from interruption or discovery."

"I was locked in, too, you say?" enquired Mr. Vivkery, in an eager tone.

"Yes. Just the same as the other gentleman, Mr.—"

"Steinworth," said the young man.

"You are quite sure I was locked in from the outside?" asked Vickery.

"Quite sure, sir."

"That is very strange certainly. Have you any idea, constable—I suppose you do not mind me asking the question; I know you will not answer it if you don't like—have you any idea what time of the night was the horrible deed done? Heavens! it makes my blood run cold to think of it."

"I haven't the least idea, sir. That will be for the coroner's jury to settle."

"I never thought of an inquest. Of course, of course." Mr. Vickery again relapsed into his dreamlike condition.

"I was quite upset this morning," said Steinworth, in a jaunty tone, "at finding myself a prisoner in my room, but as matters go it would seem as if it was the one thing I ought to be truly thankful for. Perhaps the burglars—if burglary of a bit of a house like this was their object—meant only to stupefy poor Mrs. Davorn."

"Stupefy Mrs. Davorn!" exclaimed Vickery, starting into life again and trembling violently. "Why! How is she supposed to have been killed? The thought of such a thing," shrugging his shoulders, "is perfectly horrifying."

"She is supposed to have been chloroformed," said Steinworth, addressing his fellow lodger directly for the first time.

"Chloroformed!" exclaimed Vickery, with a despairing upward movement of his hands.

A loud rattat at the hall door was now heard.

"Ah, here comes Inspector Briggs at last. I'm not sorry to have the prospect of relief," said Constable Metcalf, eying Mr. Vickery fixedly.

"Nor I either," echoed Constable Young. "It's past my breakfast time, and I'm hungry as a hunter."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Dr. Leclerc caught her hand and pressed it to his lips.

A Needed Admonition.

On one of my trips through the south I sauntered into an old dilapidated cemetery of Virginia and read many very peculiar epitaphs upon tombstones. One in particular attracted my attention, which happened to be that of a slave who had been inclined to be stout. The grave had long since been neglected, and the inscription could only be read after brushing away the vines which grew upon it. But my labor was rewarded, for there on that tombstone I read, "Aliza Wite weighed 300 pounds; 'open wide the golden gates.'"

Army Firing Positions.

Standing, kneeling, sitting and lying down are the four positions prescribed for firing by the army regulations. The lying position alone is prescribed for the 800 and the 1,000 yard ranges, while at all the other ranges up to 2,000 yards the lying and sitting positions are used. At 100 and 200 yards the sitting and standing positions are prescribed. Wherever the sitting position is prescribed the kneeling may be substituted, but for the majority of persons the sitting is by far the better position of the two.

Silenced Mamma.

"Now," said the anxious mother, "you do not want to marry that reporter. Think of having a husband who never gets home until 2 or 3 in the morning."

"But," said the shrinking maiden, "aren't all husbands like that? Papa is not a reporter, and—and yet"—

But the anxious mother declined to listen.

A TRAGIC FIND NEAR FT. FRANCES

One Man With Throat Cut. Another Frozen Stiff.

CORONERS JURY VERDICT

One Suicided and the Other Died From Exposure—One of them has a Family living in the East but cannot be Located.

A terrible tragedy occurred at Fort Frances on the morning of January 13th, which caused quite an excitement there. Two men named John Scottt and William Watson, who had been engaged to cut wood on Mr. Dowker's limit, three miles from the town, were found dead in the snow. These men were hired by Mr. Dowker to cut wood on his limit and had secured the use of a small shanty on an adjoining limit. Mr. Dowker visited the men on Sunday, taking some provisions, and found them in a stupor as if affected by liquor, but no liquor was seen or found. On Monday two men, Cole and Smith, who passed there twice every day, saw no smoke nor any signs of life around the shanty until they had passed, when they heard the door slam.

KNIFE AND WHETSTONE.

On Tuesday morning so passing there they saw no tracks in the snow or smoke from the chimney, but the window was broken. On the morning of the 13th, when going to work, Cole and Smith noticed tracks across the road near the shanty, and on examining them found they were the tracks of some one in stockinged feet. This aroused their curiosity, so they made for the shanty, finding no one within, but on the bed was a small pool of frozen blood and on the table was a common table knife and a whetstone covered with blood. The men immediately began to search for someone outside, and a few rods from the shanty came across Scott frozen to death, sitting on a stump and leaning against a log. Looking further they soon came across the body of Watson, whose face was all blood, and a large cut across the throat and his head badly bruised.

VERDICT OF JURY.

The bodies were not touched until Coroner Moore was called, who held an inquest the same night. The only witnesses that could be found were Mr. Dowker and the two men that passed the place and found the dead bodies. The verdict was as follows: "Scott lost his life through exposure, and Watson committed suicide while temporarily insane." The evidence brings out the fact that Watson worked last spring under the name of Thomas Brown, and has a family somewhere down east.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Importance of Colonial Men Referred to by the Press.

A London dispatch, dated Jan. 14, says: The Daily Graphic calls attention to the great practical value of colonial representatives holding watching briefs on the tariff commission which is opening to-day.

At the tariff commission banquet held last night, Mr. Chamberlain described the event as a business commission for business men. He described Cyril Arthur Pearson, the chairman of the commission, as the greatest hustler he had ever seen.

The Times says that the commission is the most representative and authoritative body of business experts who have been brought together in that country, and would afford the time and materials for mature consideration. The commission would not, in the slightest degree, attempt to dictate to the colonies what the nature of the colonial preference should be.

The Journal adds that Canada finds an able representative in Joseph G. Colmer, C.M.G., late secretary to the high commissioner for the Dominion. The commission is not in the way of an inquiry, but its object is to work out the details of the proposals made by Mr. Chamberlain.

The Radical organ, the Daily Chronicle, publishes an alternative free trade court of inquiry, in place of what it is pleased to call the "Spoils Commission." The names are Lord Welby, chairman, with Goldwin Smith, and Sir Richard Cartwright to represent Canada.

IS NOT GALLANT.

Premier McBride Throws down Woma's Suffrage.

A Victoria dispatch dated Jan. 14, says: The British Columbia legislature to-day defeated a motion in favor af introducing women's suffrage in the province. Premier McBride contended that if there was a demand made for it by women, he would require a two-thirds vote of them before he could entertain such a proposal.

SHIP IS LIBELLED.

Captain Commits a Breach of the Contract Law.

Vancouver, Jan 14.—The British Eskasoni was libelled here to-day. The captain had a contract with some Port Townsend boarding-house people to supply him with a crew before sailing for Australia.

This was done and the Port Townsend authorities heard of it and libelled the ship for breach of contract. E. P. Siddell, Deputy Marshall of Admiralty, came over from Victoria and nailed his orders to the mainmast.

TWO-DOLLAR WHEAT

F. W. Thompson Thinks it Might Reach That Figure if War is Declared.

A dispatch from Montreal says:—The probabilities of war between Russia and Japan are causing speculation here as to the future price of wheat. Mr. F. W. Thompson, vice-president and managing director of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Ltd., a gentleman who is known for conservatism when expressing an opinion on such matters, places more reliance on the increasing demand for breadstuffs the world over to cause an increase in the price of wheat than he does in the war outlook. He points out that countries where until recently, wheat was practically unknown, are beginning to use bread as a daily food, with the result that they will soon take a considerable part in the world's consumption. Four years ago not more than one per cent. of the population of Japan ate bread. Mr. Thompson places the percentage now at three-fold more, and expects to see a rapid increase within the next few years. He applies the same to such other countries as China.

Mr. Thompson was asked: "Do you think that wheat will sell higher than present prices, independent of war between Russia and Japan?"

"While no man can say definitely as to future prices, still the present basis of supply and demand is such as to indicate a higher level of prices for the next few years than has existed during the past five years, meaning that wheat at $1 a bushel in Chicago, under the conditions now prevailing, will be as common as 70 or 75 cents during the past few years."

"Then you expect more prosperous conditions throughout the Canadian Northwest?"

"Decidedly I do; in fact, I believe that no agricultural country in the world to-day has a brighter future than our Canadian Northwest."

"Where would wheat go should war be declared?"

"Oh, that is a hard one. It might go to $2.00 a bushel in Chicago."

Darkness Enveloped Chicago.

A dispatch from Chicago, dated January 12 says:—Hundreds of passengers on incoming trains here today were startled by a sudden plunge into midnight darkness. The transit from broad daylight seemed immediate and complete as if the rush was into a tunnel under a mountain. The blackness extended in a circle from the centre of the city, the radius being a distance of several miles. The duration was over an hour. Unusual atmospheric conditions aggravated by smoke were generally accepted as the causes.

The phenomenon was accompanied by a fall af snow, while a pall of an impenetrable appearing sable cloud enveloped all thoroughfares and buildings. Street car and wagon traffic was considerably hampered and even greater difficulties were encountered by the throngs of pedestrians who struggled as best they could along the slippery walks in the absence of street lamps.

Would Attract U. S. Immigrants.

The Yorkshire Daily Observer says: "One of the most likely effects of a really effective preference to Canadian products would be to stimulate the already extensive movement of Cosmopolitan Americans across the Canadian border. No single feature of British trade has been able to justify Chamberlain's assertion that our external trade, apart from colonial, is declining, and but for colonial trade the country would now be suffering the greatest depression in trade known for a century."

She was fatally burned before help came. She leaves four sons, one of whom, Alex, lives at Indian Head.

Sir Wilfrid's Reply.

Ottawa, Jan. 14.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier received a cable from Premier Seddon, of New Zealand, asking the Canadian government to join with the New Zealand and Australian governments in a protest to the British government against the employment of Chinese in the mines in the Rand. Sir Wilfrid replied saying that the matter was one which concerned South Africa and with which Canada had nothing to do, therefore he could not see his way to interfere.

A London cable says: Mr. Ulyett, a photographer, has succeeded in obtaining a photograph by means of radium. He says he placed a group of articles in a dark cupboard and over them a box with a glass lid containing a very small quantity of radium bromide. An exposure of 12 hours was given, after which the plate was developed in the usual way, though very slowly.

CANADA'S ESQUIMAUX.

They Are Dying Off, Measles and Whiskey Being Too Much for Them—The Fisheries of Value.

"The liquor obtained by the Esquimaux was the cause of many murders among them, not a season passing without two or three during their drunken bouts. The numbers of the Esquimaux are decreasing very fast. Last spring at McPherson out of a band of eighty whose settlement was at Herschel Island, some seventy died from measles, thus practically clearing out the entire band. At Richard's Island there were about three hundred, but many also died there."

So writes Superintendent Constantine of the Edmonton Mounted Police district in his report of the conditions which he found to exist at the mouth of the Mackenzie River, where he went last summer and established a police post. Accompanied by Sergant Fitzgerald and four constables the superintendent left Athabaska Landing, on June 1st, and arrived at Fort McPherson on July 14th. The journey of 1,854 miles was accomplished partly by canoe and partly by steamer. Fort McPherson is on the right bank of the Peel River, thirty miles from its junction with the Mackenzie and seventy miles from the Arctic Ocean. The general character of the country from Athabaska Landing to McPherson is swampy, with alternate rocky ridges with muskegs between. The timber is spruce, poplar, black and white birch, willow and alder. The country is full of small lakes, and in a few places there is arable land. North of the Athabaska River there is no agricultural land.

The fisheries in Great Slave Lake are valuable, the most abundant being whitefish, lake trout and pike. The trout grow to a large size and often reach a weight of fifty pounds. At Vermillion, on the Peace River, the Hudson's Bay Company have a flour and saw mill. Superintendent Constantine was informed that about 10,000 bushels of wheat would be raised along the Peace River that season, and the company hoped to be able to supply the northern posts with flour ground from wheat raised in that district. He thinks that if the present conditions continue the post at Fort McPherson could be withdrawn at the end of another year, and two other posts established at Fort Simpson and Fort Resolution respectively, farther up the Mackenzie.

Nickel Indications in New Ontario.

The mineral discoveries in the belt along the new Temiskaming Railway, which have led the Government to remove the land from sale or lease, are nickeliferous. Some of the ores are unlike any that have hitherto been found in quantity in this Province. For instance, the mineral niccolite, otherwise known as kupfernickel, which contains about 44 per cent. of nicael, and which up to the present has furnished cabinet specimens only, has been discovered in what, judging from surface indications, seems to be commercial quantities. A cobalt-nickel arenide has also been found resembling smaltite and carrying, according to one assay 6 per cent. of nickel and 18 per cent of cobalt. Both the niccolite and smaltite are rich in arsenic, the former carrying 56 per cent., and the latter up to 72 per cent.

In addition to these, native silver occurs, some exceedingly handsome specimens of which have been found.

The value of these discoveries, if they turn out to be extensive, can be realized by a comparison with the famous Sudbury deposits. In Sudbury 3 per cent. of nickel in the ore is the average, and 5 per cent. is exceedingly rich. In the new discoveries the ore carries 44 per cent. of nickel. A much smaller body of nickel, therefore, in Temiskaming will constitute a mine than in the nickeliferous pyrrhotite region of Sudbury.

Some Grotesque Rocks.

We find in the West many grotesque rocks standing out alone. Alaska is full of them. They are called "hermits" up there. Every river has them—great, black, forbidding giants often 200 feet high, with a base not more than three or four feet in diameter.

In nearly every river in Alaska there are eddies. These eddies are unlike those anywhere else. Some of them may be due to rounding points in the river, or to rocks, but far the greater number are due to subterranean rivers. Nearly everyone who has gone through White Horse Canyon knows the "Black Eddy." It is an immense whirling maelstrom of a place. A log 40 feet long and four feet thick will whirl several times in it, its speed so increasing that finally it stands upright, and—dives. There is no timber anywhere along the Behring Sea coast, yet the waters everywhere are full of "float," and the beaches are piled high with drift. People say that all this drift comes out of the Yukon, or is brought across from the Japan coast. Why may it not come from these subterranean rivers?—John A. Hornsby, in Toronto Sunday World.

An Unexpected Objection.

An incident occurred at one of Ontario's country schools the other day that shows the average youth knows no such word as impossible. The teacher was explaining that the thing substracted must be of the same kind as the thing substracted from. She said: "You cannot take five peaches from five apples, five lemons from five oranges." Said Johnny: "Please, can't you take five quarts of milk from five cows."

A Compliment to Canada.

A very hearty welcome was given to Mr. J. Mackenzie Rogan and his men of the Coldstream Guards Band when they appeared after their successes in Canada at the Alhambra Sunday evening concert. Much of the music performed was Canadian, and out of compliment to the Dominion "The Maple Leaf Forever" was bracketed with the National Anthem.—London Chronicle.

THE JOINED OF GOD

MUST NOT BE PUT ASSUNDER BY ANY MAN-MADE LAWS.

THE PERILS OF EASY DIVORCE.

Rev. Dr. Talmage Arraigns the United States' Flagrant, Beseiting Sin, Easy Divorce, and Unsparingly Denounces the Incongruous Conflict of State Laws Upon the Subject—Only Way Out of the Immoral Tangle.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Hally, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 10.—In this sermon the nation's flagrant, besetting sin, easy divorce, and the incongruous conflict of state laws on the subject are unsparingly characterized. The preacher indicates the only way out of this immoral tangle which is wrecking the home and desecrating the marriage altar. The text is Mark x, 9, "What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

As the civil war was the mortal clash between two conflicting ideas, so to-day we find conflicting ideas in mortal combat over the marriage altar. The one is the Christ idea, which declares that marriage is not a confederation that can be broken at will, but an indissoluble union. This idea asserts that after marriage the twain in every sense becomes one. The second idea declares that easy divorce is not a crime, but often, for the social good, a necessity. It says that when a man and a woman are unequally yoked together it is better that they be separated by law, even if the cause for separation be not so serious as that recognized in the Bible, and, more, that they may, if they wish, contract new marriages.

But, though James Bryce in his "American Commonwealth" affirms that the family as a unit is "the one fundamental and permanent problem of human life and society," yet everywhere, by reading the signs of the times, we can see that by easy divorce the sanctity of the home is imperiled. Everywhere the danger signals are being lifted, to prove that marriage is becoming more and more a mere temporary convenience. Carroll D. Wright in his labor statistics declares that in the year 1889 there were 36,072 divorces in the state of Illinois alone and that there was one divorce to every fifteen marriages. He went on to show that from 1867 to 1886 there were 328,716 divorces in the United States and that each year the proportion of divorces to the number of inhabitants in the United States was on the increase, just as the individual wealth of the Americans per capita increases year by year. So awful is the spread of this divorce evil and so blunted are becoming the once keen edges of public sentiment upon this question that Morgan Dix, who in no sense can be called a sensationalist, uttered last Thanksgiving Day this scathing invective against wholesale licensed libertinism, now being practiced through the wide open doors of the legal courts of our land: "The divorce evil is terrible. It is an evil we must try to uproot. Once upon a time if we ever mentioned the fact that a person had been divorced we spoke of it under our breath, as a subject not proper for conversation. We then regarded divorce as something closely related to disgrace, and that not long ago either."

Against the further spread and for the extermination of this divorce evil the Catholic Church is already up in arms. Against it only a few weeks ago all the Rhode Island ministers banded themselves together to give religious combat. Thus, as the public leaders of many denominations are fighting this undermining and would be destroyer of the home, it is not inappropriate for me to speak a few words in reference to those legal and domestic causes which might hereafter make "easy divorce" an impossibility.

First, nothing can be accomplished in a material way unless there is national legislation or at least concerted action among the different state legislatures upon this subject. There must be all over the land harmonious and united legal action against the divorce evil. It should be made impossible for a man to get a divorce in one state which he could not obtain on the same ground in any one of the 3,000 divorce courts of the United States. All those courts ought to be in agreement as to what causes justify and what do not justify the dissolution of a marriage.

We recognize the necessity of the criminal courts of the Unites States working in harmony. Why should we not recognize the necessity of concerted action by divorce courts? Some years ago in Chicago a man killed his wife and burned her body in the vat of a sausage factory. Supposing after that crime he could have stepped across the state line and in Indiana defied the legal authorities of Illinois. What would have been the result? Supposing that a notable murderer could have walked a free man in Philadelphia after he had poisoned his child wife in New York City. Why, murder and outlawry would be everywhere in the United States running rampant. The only safety of life depends upon this fact: If you commit a murder in one state and then run away another state governor will recognize your extradition papers and allow you to be forcibly returned to the place where you committed the crime.

We recognize the necessity of concerted action between states on the murder question. We recognize also the necessity of concerted action between different nations and widely separated authorities in cases of theft as well as murder. A few years ago all that a cashier had to do after wrecking a bank was to cross the Canadian line and he was safe. But now men guilty of financial crimes legally have no escape. A criminal in the United States is a criminal in England, a criminal in Canada is a criminal in France. To suppress forgery and theft there must be concerted action between nations as well as states. Why, in the same way, should there not be concerted action between states in reference to the divorce law? But though concerted and harmonious action by the different state courts should be regarded as a necessity yet we find the actual conditions just the reverse. To illustrate how a man can defy the divorce courts of one state by living in another state, a prominent member of the Presbyterian General Assembly Committee told me that a short time ago a man died in the United States and left three legal widows. He left three widows, and he was not a believer in Brigham Young either! How was that? A few years ago this man went to a western state and there settled and married. After awhile he became tired of his wife and decided he would marry another woman. So this man left the state where he was then living and went into another state, got a divorce and there remarried. Of course the state of his former residence did not recognize the second marriage.

Time passed on, and this husband tired of his second wife. He moved to another state, got a divorce and married a third wife. The marital disease with him by this time was becoming chronic. But now neither the first nor the second state where he used to live recognized his third marriage as legal. Time passed, and this husband of many wives died. What was the result? Each of his former marital companions inherited the property of the dead man which then existed in her own state! By law that man in three different states left three different wives, each a legal wife in her own state, but illegal in the other two states. Such is an instance of the ridiculous and infinite absurdities existing between the conflicting divorce courts of our land.

A second breakwater to dam back this submerging flood of national infamy: It is for the gospel ministers to protest against it by practice as well as by preaching. The pulpit cannot speak loudly and with the voice of a true leader unless at the same time it refuses to become a party to the national crime of easy divorce. What do I mean by this statement? That the minister himself shall not be a blatant and a brutal divorce? Oh, no. No self respecting Christian church would allow her minister to continur preaching in her pulpit after a divorce escapade. Paul writes, "A bishop must be blameless, the husband of one wife." No minister's life can be blameless when he turns his back upon his first wife for an unjust cause. But I do mean this: A minister should not officiate at the second marriage of a divorce unless he himself knows positively that the divorced man was not culpable in the snapping of the marital bonds. By such a ministerial course public sentiment would be aroused against this national evil, and aroused quickly and permanently.

I have taken only lately this stand in reference to the clergyman's responsibility. Like hundreds and thousands of other ministers I have heretofore said to myself: "I am not in any way compelled to look into the personal characters of those whom I unite in marriage. When I used to live in New York state I had to ask the contracting parties a long list of questions and make a report to the county officials in reference to the same. But in the state of Illinois the clerk of the county court does that. He asks the questions. He gives the license. He is responsible for the marriage, and not I." But a short time ago, when talking to a brother minister upon the subject, he said: "You are wrong. You cannot shirk your responsibility in that way." Then I commenced to look at this responsibility in another way. I said to myself: "Yes, I am wrong. That county clerk cannot tell me what I ought to do. The paper he sends to me is only a license, a Governmental privilege, permitting me to marry the parties if I wish. I am not compelled so to do. For instance: The saloon keeper gets a city license and has the privilege of selling me a glass of whisky. But because it is lawful for me to buy whisky from him that is no reason why I should drink it. Because the county clerk tells me that I can remarry a libertine, who has been sinfully divorced, that is no reason why I should tarnish the good name of my church by placing such a black record upon the session books. No, no, my brother ministers, we cannot thus skirk our responsibilities. You and I are responsible before God when we become officiating parties in the marriages of divorced persons. A religious marriage means infinitely more than a mere civil contract. If not, why do nearly all people desire to be married by a clergyman instead of by a police justice or a county judge?

We are responsible as ministers. A legal divorce, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, is not sufficient ground for a church divorce. We must remember that the minister before the world stands as the representative of the church. Why, legal divorces are often obtained on the flimsiest excuses. Bishop Fallows, in a scathing attack upon this marital evil, quotes some of the most absurd and trivial causes on account of which men and women have been divorced. One woman got a legal divorce because her husband enlisted in the United States navy; another because her husband smoked and gave her headaches; another because her husband called her sister a thief; another because her husband did not like her front hair and cut part of it off. One husband secured a divorce because his wife refused to sew on his buttons; another because he told his wife he had found another woman whom he could love better. Think of any minister being guilty of such a heinous sin as to marry such divorcees to other marital partners. It is high time for us ministers to band together and rouse public sentiment upon this question.

I once heard of a young lady who used to boast that she was engaged to three different young men at the same time. She had in her possession three different engagement rings. After awile she dismissed all three suitors and married a fourth. Do you wonder that after such perfidies her married life was unhappy? Untrue to her finance, of course she was untrue to her husband. A divorce scandal a few years later was the result. Her father, a noble Christian man of the west, as a result felt himself disgraced and resigned his pulpit for he was a minister. His life was to some extent wrecked, as well as hers. You say such a course as that is an extreme case? Of course. But all evils should not be despised because they are not monstrous evils. The little, seemingly harmless flirtations during summer vacations or at a church picnic or in the street car or concert hall are all divorce seed plantings. You cannot trifle with human affections in youth without being in danger, as an iconoclast, of smashing the marriage shrine when you are middle-aged. Let parents be careful with whom their children associate. Let them beware of what they are allowed to say to others and what others are allowed to say to them. It is all well enough to talk about the vaunted freedom of the American boy and girl; but, for my own part, especially in reference to the promiscuous association of young people and the careless promises they are allowed to make, I think they have altogether too much freedom.

Another divorce preventive: Financial expenses in the great majority of homes should be curtailed and greatly diminished. The income should not be made to meet the outgo. The outgo should be contracted until there is a sufficient margin left for unexpected expenses, such as sickness or loss of work or financial reverses. The proverb says, "When poverty comes in at the door love flies out of the window." That is not true when all members are systematically trying to do their best. But when husband and wife go upon the supposition that marriages are made in heaven and then, with blinded eyes, run needlessly into debt there is nearly always marital friction. The wife blames the husband, the husband the wife. Perpetual friction, then, on account of the money question ignites the divorce fires. Then the family altar goes up in a Satanic blaze.

Another divorce preventive: The purification of the American press, both in book form and in periodical and in the morning newspaper. The pestiferous trash which every day and every week and every month, like a winter blizzard, is flung into our faces by the snowstorm of the printing press is enough to destroy the healthy heart throbs of any young person who is allowed to read it. I am, of course, not speaking against good publications, but bad publications. Go to almost any bookstand that you see and open some of the books at random and read. There we find the authors make their heroes out of bad men and their heroines out of bad women, with here and there a redeeming white spot to offset these black characters. Broken marriage vows. "Childe Harold" indecencies, deceitful wives, deceiving men—these move as an ever changing kaleidoscope before the fascinated eyes of the young readers. There the boy and the girl learn to call crime respectable and a man's dishonor a "free lance of gold." A bad book worms its way into the moral vitals and finally poisons the heart. The way for good people to keep pure and to prepare themselves for a Christian marriage, which will never be broken this side or on the other side of the grave, is for them to live with good people. They must work to make men good

But some one asks me, in closing: "Are divorces aiways wrong? Should a husband and wife be compelled to live together under all conditions?" Oh, no. The violation of the marriage vow justifies divorce. Christ's own words imply that. There are other conditions which justify separation, even when there has been no violation of that vow. It would be a grievous injustice to enforce constant companionship when one of the parties to a marriage has contracted habits which render the continued relation an intolerable misery to the other. I have known such cases and have rejoiced that the law permits the innocent party to be relieved of the burden and affords protection from molestation. But I protest against the diversity of the divorce laws of the different states, which tends to confusion and uncertainty in the relation so vital as this to the morality and stability of society.

My belief in reference to divorce can be summed up in the words of Sir Walter Scott in the case of Ecand versus Evans, "Though in particular cases the repugnance of the law to dissolve the obligations of matrimonial cohabitation may operate with great severity upon individuals, yet it must be carefully remembered that the general happiness of the married life is secured by its indissolubility." My belief is summed up in the thought that the more people realize when they marry that they must marry for life the more future generations will be careful how they marry and the more the sanctity of the home will be preserved. Therefore, my friends, suffer almost every injustice for your children's sake, for the community's sake, for God's sake, rather than break the nuptial bonds.

In this discussion I have presented, for the most part, only the temporal side of the divorce question. If I had spoken from the spiritual side the result would have been self evident. Gospel love never gave birth to legal hate. May the Christ who uttered the protest of the text against promiscuous divorce bless the earnest words of one whom God has greatly blessed with a happy home.

THE first number of the British Columbia Lumberman, printed at Vancouver, is to hand. It is a monthly magazine devoted to the lumber industry of the province and is the first of its kind. The first number contains a strong article denouncing the handicap placed on the lumber industry by the recent assessment bill and the placing of American rough lumber on the duty-free list.

The "experiment" inaugurated by the Coal Company last Saturday of paying their employees at the coke ovens and Coal Creek in the afternoon and at the town office in the evening; has raised considerable adverse criticism. A representative of the FREE PRESS has since learned fsom the Company's officials the circumstances leading up to the change.

The Company received a request from the Miners' union asking that the pay be given out at Coal Creek mines. The management were not willing to make such a sweeping change and proposed a modified plan, that of paying at the three places, which satisfied the men.

THE estimates of expenditure which were introduced in the legislature this week give the Fernie district $12,000 for public works. Of this amount $7000 is to go towards building the bridge over the Elk at Morrissey. Cranbrook gets $5000, making a total for the two very similar to the grant made last year. When it is considered that the total grant for public works this year is $363,250 as against $668,250 for last year it is seen that Fernie is getting better attention at the hands of the government. The total expenditure is estimatated at $2,442,354.31 or $50,000 less than last year. The next thing is to see that those $12,000 are actually spent on our public works. Last year $2,000 was granted for road improvements in the Fernie district but only a fraction of that amount was expended.

WE have received an enquiry from an out-of-town resident, who evidently takes a deep interest in the town, as to why there is no telephone system in the town. For the benefit of our correspondent we may state that the Coal Company holds a charter for the town but its management feels that such an institution would not pay and it therefore is not anxious to put it in. Mr. Hodge of the Western Telegraph and Telephone Co. was here some months ago with the purpose of considering the putting in of a system under a charter held by that company, but as yet nothing has resulted. Mr. Hodge expected the cooperatiou of the Coal Company which the latter would not promise as it preferred to continue using the private line now doing service from Michel to Morrissey. We quite agree with our correspondent that the need of a telephone system is felt keenly in any town of the size of Fernie. There is not a business house or office in Fernie where a telephone would not save much time and waste energy.

CURLEY TOO HEAVY

The twenty round fight between Jim Burrows and Jack Curley did not materialize on Wednesday night as advertised. A good house gathered to see the mill, many being present from neighboring towns. The agreement called for the men to enter the ring at or under 158 pounds. Curley weighed 166 pounds and Burrows 151. The latter therefore refused to go on with the fight and Curley lost his $100 forfeit. An impromptu match was arranged between Ross and Burrows to meet the expenses. The first two rounds were easy enough but in the third Jim got down to work and soon put the Rossland man out of business.

The managers of the fight regret the disappointment caused to their patrons. Mr. Burrows offered to allow his opponent 6 pounds advantage to go on with the fight.

CONTRIBUTED COLUMN

During the last two years Fernie and the surrounding district has gained an unenviable notoriety by reason of strikes, run-outs, hold-ups, stabbing affrays, and cold blooded murders. One can scarcely take up an eastern paper without seeing exaggerated reports of lawlessness in Fernie. That there is some grounds for these reports it is useless to deny. We must admit, however unpleasant be the admission, that crime and lawlessness is on the increase in our midst. All the 'old timers' will remember how exempt we were from these things in the 'good old days' of '98 and '99. Before Fernie had a banking institution, large sums of money were packed by trail to Macleod, without any thought of danger. Not even a 'gun' was regarded as necessary for protection Now a large number of our citizens habitually though unlawfully carry such a weapon. Many make no secret of this breah of the law. They declare such a weapon is necessary for their own protection.

That we are deteriorating rather than advancing in civilization, is surely a startling confession, But if it is true it is well for us to know it before we sink into hopless lawlessness. Such a knowledge may enable us before it is too late to devise means of resisting the evil tendencies at work in our midst.

Of the many causes which have contributed to the present increase of crime and violence in our district permit me in the space at my disposal to mention but a few. The first and perhaps the most important is the low material aim that animates the great majority of those seeking homes in the district. Their sole ambition is to make money, and a man's success in life is measured by the amount of money he makes. The spirit of the age is not that of the honest trader but that of the gambler. That spirit is seen in our common maxims and proverbs. "Cheat rather than be cheated." Make money honestly if you can, and if you can't make it honestly, nevertheless make it. "Fight the devil with his own weapons." "We are all after the almighty dollar." Now the law is that the longer men strive after low ideals, the more reckless they become as to the means used to attain them. The working out of this law is seen in the widespread gambling of to-day and in the many thefts and hold-ups of the past two years. The fact is the western mercenary spirit has seriously lowered our standard of morality. It has created in its stead a sort of humanitarianism which is closely related to what is best and what is worst in man. Many seemingly good men, conscious of their own weakness in the same direction, are too ready to say of the lawbreaker, "give the poor devil another chance." Thus punishment is not always meted out to evil-doers. The laws are broken with impunity. Too many of our laws are enacted by our legislators simply to please one half of the people and then allowed to remain a dead letter to please the other half. Such a condition of things should not be tolerated. True our laws are far from perfect, and hampered as we are without incorporation we can do little to strengthen the hands of our guardians of the peace. Still as citizens we should see to it that the laws which are on our statute books be enforced, and that reverence for law and order be maintained. A thorough enforcement of the laws against gambling, against carrying concealed weapons, against disorderly houses and also the laws governing the sale of intoxicating liquors, would do much to maintain order and remove the stain that darkens the pages of our local history.

Another fact which we should not overlook is, that in the 'good old days' down to 1902, we had comparatively few licensed hotels in this district. There were, I believe six in Fernie, but east of us in B. C. there was only one; at the Loop, while west of us there was only one, at Elko, nearer than Cranbrook. Now we have twelve in Fernie, and one or more in every hamlet along the line. The writer well remembers when application was made for the license in Jaffray. There was absolutely no need for such a building in the camp. Moreover almost every householder opposed the granting of a license. Nevertheless the then existing Board of Commissioners regardless of the law governing them in the discharge of their duty, granted the license. It was well known at the time that the government were greedy for revenue and would doubtless overlook such an irregularity, even if it were brought to their notice. The government got its revenue and the people of Jaffray had an hotel forced upon them. To-day as a direct result of the presence of that hotel, the people have a stain on the good name of their town, and the government has a murder case on its hands which before it is finally disposed of will doubtless cost it many times the revenue received. Fewer hotels with a stricter enforcement of the laws governing them would do much to mitigate the evils of the liqour traffic. These things should engage the attention of our present Board of Commissioners.

Let all good citizens unite in the effort to stamp out this deplorable condition of things which is bringing the fair name of Fernie into bad odour all over Ganada.

The importation of Old Country French miners at Lille has proved anything but a success, as they have been a source of greater trouble to the management than any other class of miners employed. This has always proved true of imported men, who unaccustomed to the customs of the country, foreign in speech and unused to the mining methods employed, soon become homesick and discontented. This has not only proved true at Lille, but at the Crow's Nest collieries and everywhere else that the companies have resorted to the importation of labor. —Blairmore Times.

Dislocated her Shoulder.

Mrs. Johanna Soderholm of Fergus Falls, Minn., fell and dislocated her shoulder. She had a surgeon get it back in place as soon as possible, but it was quite sore and pained her very much. Her son mentioned that he had seen Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised for sprains and soreness, and she asked him to buy her a bottle of it, which he did. It quickly relieved her and enabled her to sleep which she had not done for several days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

STEAMER LOST FIFTY DROWNED

Packet Boat Between Victoria and Seattle Founders.

MANY CANADIAN VICTIMS

Steamer Clallam, Hopelessly Adrift in a Gale in Puget Sound, Goes on the Rocks of Hazardous Island—Twenty are Saved.

Fifty-two lives were lost on Jan. 9 by the sinking of the fine new steamer Clallam in a storm that swept over the straits of Juan de Fuca with relentless fury. The vessel was a regular daily packet boat. She made moderately good progress across the straits bound for Victoria, until Trial Island, off the entrance to Port Townsend harbor was abeam. Then a terrific cross sea was pelting the vessel, retarding her progress and making life uncomfortable for those on board. Little fear was manifested until word came up from below that the vessel was leaking. Investigation showed that the waves on the windward side had stove in a dead light, through which the water rushed in volume, resisting all efforts to stop it. Seeing the efforts futile, the safety of the passengers, particularly the women and children, were looked after, and who desired were put off from the steamer in the ship's boats.

BOATS SWAMPED.

The heavily laden boats were thrown about wildly in the choppy sea, and one after another, after succeeding in getting away from the vessel were either capsized ar swamped. The terrible fury of the storm is attested by the fact that not a woman or child of those on board the small boats which left the ship when she was first in danger, lived to tell the tale. Word had come from Victoria of the vessel's predicament, and a fleet of powerful tugs were dispatched from Port Townsend to render assistance. The Richard Holyoke, in command of Captain Robert Hall, was first to reach the Clallam, which had by this time careened partly over from the inrush of water, which had put the engines out of commission. The Holyoke succeeded in getting a hawser aboard, and started to tow the Clallam to safety. The Clallam took a heavy lurch and those remaining aboard were compelled to climb to the roof of the pilot house for safety.

WORK OF RESCUE.

Without a moment's hesitation the tug's boats were lowered and the work of rescue began. At this time the tug Sea Lion, Captain Hunter, arrived, and her men rendered valuable assistance. Before all the struggling people had been taken off the Clallam commenced to break up and soon afterwards went down. All possible assistance to the rescued people was given by the two shipmasters and their crews, and the tugs hurried to Port Townsend.

W. H. Grimes, of Redmond, Wash., aboard the Clallam, bound for Victoria, gives a concise statement of the disaster. "The weather was pretty rough," he said, "but we had no suspicion of danger until someone forward said something about life-preservers. I went forward to investgate and there learned that the Clallam was making water rapidly. The boats were promptly manned and launched and the women and children and such passengers as desired to leave were placed in them, competent crews being in charge. The boats made off from the steamer safely, but one after another they capsized and we were helpless to render them assistance. They simply drowned before our eyes. In the meantime crew and passengers were busy baling and trying to stop the leak, but without success. The baling was kept up, however, and soon we were overjoyed to learn that a big tug had hold of us. The tow-boat started and made good headway until it became apparent that the Clallam was careening under us. Then all hands went on deck, and as the ill-fated steamer listed we gradually crawled up on her exposed side, from where the brave fellows from the Holyoke rescued most of us."

BRAVERY OF THE CREW.

Bravely the Officers and crew of the helpless hulk worked to save the boat and the souls aboard her, but in vain. Staunch as she was, the Clallam could not stand the terrific onsluaghts of the seas and just before darkness began it was decided to make an attempt to save the passengers at least by the boats.

PERISHED CLOSE TO SHORE.

Every woman and child aboard the Clallam perished within three miles of the shore; and at a time when it appeared certain the Clallam had been lost, a desperate effort was made to save the women and children in the life boats. They were placed in the first boat to leave the ship, which Captain Lawrence, a Yukon pilot, volunteered to command, and which was manned by deck hands. The frail craft went down within sight of the Clallam, and a second boat filled with male passengers and in command of Second Officer Currin, was also lost a few minutes later. Aboard the Clallam watchers saw waves sweep passengers from their hold on the seats and hurl them into the waters. Though the life boat was righted later, diligent search search has failed to find a trace of her. Passengers and members of the crew were lost when a third life boat was swa ped in an attempt to launch.

CANADIAN VICTIMS.

Of the victims, a dozen at least were former Eastern Canadians, a number of them well known. Miss Murray, a sister-in-law of E. M. Burns, general agent of the Great Northern at Victoria, was from the neighborhood of Toronto. Mrs. A. J. C. Galitely and her daughter, the wife and daughter of the manager of the Bank of Montreal at the capital, were, like Mrs. Gelitely, former Montrealers. Mrs. S. E. Bolton, of Alberta, was returning from a honeymoon visit to California; her husband saw her placed in the second boat, and then stood back to take his lesser chances with the other men. He saw the boat away into the darkness and he himself was picked up out of the sea by the Holyoke's crew an hour later. Miss Ethel Diprose, who claimed Toronto as her home, had been for eighteen months a nurse at the Fannie Paddock hospital at Tacoma; she was a daughter of R. Diprose, of Strathroy, Ont., and was on her way to visit her sister, Mrs. W. L. Challoner, of Victoria. Mrs. Charles Cox was a Haligonian; and R. Turner and his wife were former residents of Woodstock. Mrs. H. W. Laplant, of Friday Harbor, who was drowned clasping her little boy, in earlier life resided at Lachdte, Que., Captain Thomas Lawrence, skipper of the steamer Scotia, was from the Maritime provinces, and R. G. Campbell, a Seattle lumberman, a boy of Lunenburg. Nathaniel P. Shaw was from St. John, N.B.

Much harsh and thoughtless comment is heard as to the action of Captain Roberts in entrusting the women and children to the boats in such a sea, they being swept away to death while the remaining male passengers and crew, remaining with the ship, were for the most part rescued. In this connection shipmasters are unanimously agreed that Roberts did the only thing a true commander would sanction. The chances for life were infinitely higher for the boats than for those left behind at the time the women and children were embarked. To have delayed sending the boats from the filling vessel would have necessitated their being dashed to pieces on known reefs.

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS.

Dr. Fletcher Tells of Their Benefits to Canadian Farmers.

An interseting address was given at Ottawa by Dr. Fletcher, Dominion botanist and entomologist, on "What experimental farms have done for Canada." In beginning the doctor briefly described the work of the five farms established by the government at Nappan, Indian Head, Brandon, British Columbia, and at Ottawa. Each, he said, had different conditions to cope with and different problems for solution, dealing altogether with every problem which faces the Canadian farmer. Although at first the experimental farms were looked askance at by many who now regard them as bad investments, the farms, Dr. Fletcher said, had played an exceedingly important role in the development of Manitoba and the North-West. Much attention had been given to the improvement of wheat, and where the ordinary farmer grows 50 bushels to the acre the experimental farms demonstrated that as high as 70 bushels to the acre could be grown almost as easily. This alone means an increase of 20,000,000 to the people of Canada which is the result of experimenting.

Listened to a Murder over 'Phone.

A dispatch from Minneapolis says: James Garfield locked the door of his flat on the third floor of the building opposite the West hotel in Fifth St., and told his wife that he meant to kill her. Then he telephoned a friend to "hold the line and listen." The friend heard the woman's screams and three revolver shots. He notified the police, who broke open the door and found Garfield dying, with a bullet in his brain. The woman was dead. She was a vaudeville artist, known as Pearl Guyotte.

Six Killed at Michel.

At ten o'clock on Friday evening an explosion of gas occurred in tunnel three of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal company's mine at Michel, B.C., killing six men and severely injuring three. It would seem that the gas ignited by the fusing of a blast. One of the injured men is not expected to recover. Gas has given trouble before in the Michel mine, and safety lamps are in use in all parts of it.

SOMALILAND NATIVES BEATEN

One Thousand Dervishes are Destroyed.

TWO OFFICERS KILLED

British Expedition Meets the Enemy, and an Awful Slaughter Follows—Casualties of British are Light—Captain Lister Missing.

A London cable says: The war office has given out the following dispatch which has been received from Major General Egerton, commanding the Somaliland expeditionary force, and which is dated from Jiballi, Somaliland, January 11:—

"Advanced this morning, twelve miles to Jiballi, first brigade commanded by Manning, second brigade under Fashin, and mounted troops, under Kenna; total strength of the regulars, 2,200, irregulars 1,000. Jiballi held by 5,000 Dervishes. Mounted troops enveloped enemy's right and infantry advanced within 700 yards of his position. Dervishes advanced, but unable to face frontal fire, coupled with flank attack. Enemy broke and fled, and were pursued ten miles. Dervishes killed estimated at 1,000, mostly in the pursuit. Many prisoners and 400 rifles taken. I regret to report that two officers of the regulars were killed and nine officers wounded. Five of the rank and file wounded; of native troops seven killed and sixteen wounded; of irregulars two dead and two wounded. Am inclined to think this is the Mullah's main force. The Mullah himself was not present, but was expected at Jiballi to-day."

Major-General Egerton's force is camped two miles beyond Jiballi.

A later dispatch from Gen. Egerton says that one officer, Captain Lister, is missing. Captain Lister, is Lord Ribblesdale's son and heir.

Remarkable Escape From Jail.

A dispatch from Springfield, Mass., says: William J. Reid, alias L. O. Hoffman, who is charged with swindling 32 hotels in various parts of the country out of $10,000, and who was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment broke jail here on Jan. 11 under remarkable circumstances. In his escape he unlocked nine doors and sawed through three chains, visited six different rooms of the county jail, passed in front of the watchers and finally climbed an eighteen-foot wall. He had been practically bedridden for three months, and was supposed to be too weak to move without a crutch. In order to get through the many doors he must have used a first class hacksaw and keys that perfectly fitted the locks, yet there is not the slightest clue to the manner in which he obtained these articles. While he was working his way out he broke into various rooms and shops to obtain a suit of clothes, some tools and a ladder to scale the prison walls. He was seen immediately outside the jail but not afterwards. Reid was arrested in San Francisco under sensational circumstances in June, 1902, and after a legal battle was brought to Springfield, where he was sentenced for hotel swindling.

Modest Joe.

Birmingham, Eng., Jan. 11.—At the banquet of the Birmingham Jewelers' association to-night Hon. Joseph Chamberlain devoted a considerable portion of his speech to a vindication of the South African war and repeated his former arguments concerning the attitude of the mother country to the colonies. He said they had an empire which contained all the elements of strength and permanency, but he would not care to prophesy the results if these elements were left uncrystalized. Mr. Chamberlain admitted that he was a political visionary who had dreamed of a great empire rising and then sinking to the position of a fifth-rate power, but again he saw it break forth with new youth, carrying traditions into the great future.

INDIANS FEAR TORTURE

Portage Braves Refuse to Sign Away Their Heirships Rights in Nebraska.

Superstitiously and foolishly imagining that they are the victims of some conspiracy, the object of which is to transport them to the United States and there torture or execute them, several Sioux Indians of the Portage la Prairie Indian village refuse to sign documents which would entitle them to a substantial legacy. The money coming to them is derived from the proceeds of what is known as "heirship" lands, which have been sold in Nebraska, and there are members of the Sioux tribe in Portage la Prairie and Griswold and probably in Manitoba entitled to money from these lands, while some of the duskies on the Prince Albert reseve, and it is believed in the other Territorial colonies of red men, should benefit.

To explain fully the details of the matter would take large space, but it is in brief as follows: In 1862, after the terrible massacre in Minnesota, which is yet remembered by many pioneers, the tribes were apportioned lands in Nebraska. At that time these reservations were believed to be of little value, but with the advance of civilization this state developed, and of late years these tracts of land are worth from $15 to $20 per acre. The land is known as "heirship" land, and as the Indian owners die the land is sold by sealed tender under government auspices, and the proceeds go to the nearest relatives of deceased owners.

INDIANS OBDURATE.

Recently W. H. Tackatt, of Bloomfield, Nebraska, arrivedin Portage to locate and secure the signatures of several residents of the Indian village, who are beyond the least iota of doubt entitled to share in the proceeds of a land sale which Mr. Tackatt and a company of fellow-investors purchased near Santee, Nebraska, where they conduct a trading post. Accompanied by Mr. W. A. Hendry, principal of the Indian school, and others, he went out to the village, and soon located the direct heirs. The deeds for their signatures were presented, but to the surprise of the Nebraskan and all concerned the heirs refused point-blank to sign, and notwithstanding all kinds of persuasion on the part of the visitor, the local officers and some of the educated of the tribesmen, they would not put their hand to the pen.

On being interviewed Mr. Tackatt made a statement regarding the matter. He intimated that altogether some 33,000 acres of Indian lands in Nebraska were affected in this way, and roughly speaking there would be $20,000 or $25,000 of the proceeds coming to Sioux residing in Canada. Scores and scores of the tribesmen in various parts of the great Canadian west would benefit without doubt, and the purchasers of the land were most anxious to secure all possible information and pay over through proper Canadian government agencies the sums to which the duskies in this country are entitled. Under the U. S. regulations a clear title or patent to the land cannot be secured by the pale-faced purchasers until the heirs sign off, and it stands to reason that they are anxious to locate and get the sigantures of the heirs.

The particular object of Mr. Tackatt's mission was to secure the names on deeds of Inkanseda, generally known as "Big Tom;" Wikoska (young woman), and Wicinyanna (young girl), to whom a share of $3,211, the amount paid by Mr. Tackatt's company for 160 acres, is due. The relatives of these parties, who reside in Nebraska, also wish their kin here to get their fair share. The utter silliness of these in refusing to sign of course knocked Mr. Tackatt's plans into a cocked hat, and he returned south much chagrined. He will probably come back shortly, and the efforts to get the reds to sign will be continued. The visitor was much pleased with the assistance accorded by the local officials and those interested in the Indians. There was some talk of compelling the reds to affix their names, but as the Sioux are not under government control, and as it is also understood that the U. S. government regulates that signatures must be freely given, this course would be awkward. The onus of the refusal rests upon the older ones of the tribe, who are exceedingly superstitious and suspicious, and on whom all arguments fail. Altogether about 20 of the Portage la Prairie Sioux would ultimately benefit from these deals. Among the number is the aged "Old Faithful," who is said to be 107 years of age, and who came from Minnesota many years ago. It is hoped that the endeavor of the educated Indians will yet prevail and the legacies be forwarded, as the money would come as a boon to the Indians of Western Canada.

Man Killed by Swordfish.

A fatal injury by a swordfish is reported from Sierra Leone. Some fishers were returning to Narborn, and one sat in the gunwale of the boat. Suddenly there was a disturbance of the water, and the man fell into the bottom of the boat, crying that he was wounded. They found that he had been sttuck in the back by the serrated snout of a swordfish, for the point of the sword was left in the wound. The body of the man, in fact, was pierced through and through. A doctor removed the broken saw, which was about fourteen centimeters long, but the patient expired afterwards. The fishermen cannot recall a similar case in that country.

MONKS AND THEIR PROFITS

French Government's Allegations Regarding Grand Chartreusse.

Some interesting statements were elicited at Grenoble during the hearing of the proceedings brought by the government liquidator of the property which belonged to the monks of La Grande Chartreuse against a priest named Rey. Thus, in 1897 it was established that the annual net profit which the monks made from the manufacture of their famous liqueur was no less than £160,000. In that year, according to the government attorney, the reverend superior of the order, feeling that trouble was in store for the monks, made a fictitious sale of the manufacturing rights to the defendant for £160,000, which was paid over in cash through a notary public to the order. The defendant, said counsel for the government, was a man of straw, the sixth child of poor parents, to whom, only twenty days before purchasing the good-will, the Credit Lyonnais had advanced the £160,000. Under the circumstances counsel for the government claimed that since the expulsion of the order from France, the trade-mark and right of manufacture belonged to the government. It was also stated that in order to decrease the amount put down as profit, so as to deceive the revenue authorities, Rey represented that he had paid three Chartreuse brothers, who distilled the liqueur, salaries of £1,600 a year, and two others £400 a year. It was, however, a well known fact that the monks were not allowed to receive any remuneration for their services.

HERBERT SPENCER'S WILL

Last Testament of Late Sociologist is a Curious Document.

Herbert Spencer's will is a curious document. It directs that his body shall be placed in a coffin with a loose lid and easily opened from below, and that the body shall then be cremated and the ashes buried, all without religious ceremony.

All rights and property in his books and investments are given to the trustees with instructions to employ the yearly revenue: "In resuming and continuing during such period as may be needed for fulfilling my express wishes, but not exceeding the lifetime of all descendants of Queen Victoria who shall be living at my death, and of the survivors and survivor of them all for twenty-one years after the death of such survivor, the publication of the existing parts of my descriptive sociology and compilation and publication of the fresh parts thereof upon the plan followed in the parts already printed."

Afterwards all copyrights and stereotypes, plates, etc., are to be auctioned off and the proceeds divided between a number of scientific societies.

The will orders that Herbert Spencer's autobiography is to be published simultaneously in Great Britain and the United States, and requests that David Duncan write a biography in one volume of moderate size.

Another interesting clause provides that Charles Holme, son of George Holme, be given Spencer's watch in remembrance of his father having saved his (Spencer's) life when a boy

SEES HAND OF DEATH.

Fears That He is the Victim of a Remorseless Malady.

The Birmingham Post announces that letters have reached official quarters there from Berlin which state that the Kaiser is not in as good condition as reports would indicate. "These letters," says the Post, "state that though the emperor has recovered something of his usual health and spirits he is still troubled a great deal about his throat. Towards the end of the day his voice becomes weak, and in the morning remedies have often to be administered to remove this hoarseness."

More sensational rumors received at London are of a nature which indicate the fact that the German emperor has recognized the fact that he is now the victim of a malady that resulted in the death of his father and mother, and has now numbered the days of his elder sister. It is also said that having abandoned the hope of restoring his health the Kaiser is already engaged in the task of formulating and defining the policy which he hopes to be pursued by the crown prince after his accession to the throne.

Meantime the Kaiser is using every effort to keep the German people from recognizing the gravity of his true condition.

Inquiry in official quarters fails to elicit a denial of the alarming reports circulated in London regarding the Kaiser's health.

A natural market basket is carried by every bee. A microscope will enable an observer to discover that on the hind legs of the creature there is a fringe of stiff hairs on the surface, the hairs approaching each other at the tip, so as to form a sort of cake. This is the bee's basket, and into it, after a successful journey, it will cram enough pollen to last it for two or three days.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

In the midst of the present Eastern crisis the speculative markets will remain very uncertain and subject to sharp changes in price as the bulk of trading is no better than gambling on the chances of war or no war. Should a peaceful solution of the situation be brought about without much delay so as to allow the position of the actual supply and demand for wheat to in some measure govern values, we think a decline of some cents per bushel would quickly follow. There is no doubt that the consumption of wheat is larger than ever before but so likewise are crops, although owing to some variation in the distribution and holding of the products, compared to previous years the quantity available may not be so readily visible. Taking war out of the question the large crops raised this season in Australia and Argentina are a menace to higher prices. These crops are now practically saved, abundant in quantity and good in quality, and, estimating from the most recent reports, we think it reasonable to expect the two crops to allow at least 120,000,000 bushels for export to Europe. The primary receipts of wheat in the States are now running very large compared to this time last year and exports are moderate, the result being seen in the large increase in the visible supply, although that is still 11,000,000 bushels less than last year. On the other hand Broomhall advises this week that the European visible is 20,000,000 bushels larger than last year. The new crops in Europe and America are progressing in a fair way in general. There are very few places where it is said that the crop is highly satisfactory, but there seems no district where the stand is very poor, and on the whole the present condition is favorable to quite satisfactory, but not in such high condition as at this time last year.

Manitoba wheat is around 2c higher on the week and in the forepart of of the week was very buoyant and firm. By the end of the week it has, however, lost somewhat of its firmness and is dull, buyers being scarce. Shipping and export trade has been on a small scale and a good deal of the business has been comprised under speculative trading. At the close of business Friday trade was dull at 81⅜c; 1 northern, 78⅜c; 2 northern, 75¼c; 3 northern 68c; No. 4 wheat, 52⅜c, spot or January delivery, and for May delivery 86⅜c 1 northern, 83⅜c 2 northern, 78⅜c 3 northern, and 72½ No. 4 wheat, all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

Live Longer Than Their Parents.

The Chicago health department has discovered that an average Chicagoan of today lives twice as long as his grandfather, and that the ratio is increasing. In its weekly bulletin the department says: Statistics show an increase in the average duration of human life in Chicago in less than a single generation of 31 years of 111 per cent., or of more than double in 1872. In 1903 the average deaths was 42 per cent. greater than in 1892, 60 per cent. greater than in 1882, and as already said, 111 per cent. greater than in 1872."

The cause of this increase of vitality, according to the bulletin, is due to the introduction of vaccine and the anti-toxines, the discovery of antiseptics and methods of anaesthesia, and most important of all, "the recognition of the importance of cleanliness, personal and circumferential."

A Long Wire Fence.

Representative Dixon, of Montana, has introduced a resolution directing the secretary of commerce and labor to enquire into the cost and feasibility of the construction of a wire fence along the Canadian border from the Lake of the Woods to Point Roberts, says a dispatch from Washington. The purpose of the resolution is to keep out the Chinese, who steal across the Canadian border, and to prevent violation of the law against smuggling. The representative suggested that the fence be equipped with telegraph, telephone and other electrical appliances to warn officers charged with the execution of these laws.

Making Barrels.

"Cooperage is one of the trades that no one thought of improving until within recent years," said a manufacturer, "but then the inventors and expert machinists started in with such a rush that it takes a good deal of our time keeping abreast of the improvements that are coming into the market every day.

"The work used to be done entirely by hand, and the coopers often had to buy their hoops from a firm that made nothing else. The coopers were not well enough equipped to make all the different parts of a barrel themselves, and often they bought everything outside and merely put the barrels together. It used to take five or six men to do the work properly, and an hour's time would perhaps turn out ten barrels.

"As the system is now, all the different parts are made by one machine, and only one man is needed to attend it. After the wood is fashioned into staves and hoops and braces by it the pieces are run through another section of it and come out almost immediately a finished barrel, ready to be loaded and shipped to our customers.

"On a regular average about 30 barrels can be turned out in an hour. You can see what the saving is over the old way. Employing six men for one hour, as they used to do, we can get 100 barrels, where by the old system they were only able to get ten."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Nod and Drop Asleep.

Dr. Pardini of Turin claims that he has discovered that the best method of treating obstinate insomnia is to make his patients imitate the drowsy noddings of a tired man while sitting in a chair.

Every one who has ever watched a sleepy man in a train has probably been amused by the neck distorting nods which herald the approach of sleep. If the observer has given any thought to the subject at all, he has probably decided that the contortions are due to the sleeper's unconscious efforts to preserve his balance. Dr. Pardini says that the balance has nothing to do with it. He declares that nodding is pathologic; that it is nature's own method of inducing sleep.

This, if properly carried out, brings the head of the patient almost upon his right shoulder. The body is then to be inclined to the left and the head allowed to roll in that direction, still uncontrolled by the muscles. As soon as the head has reached the left shoulder muscular control is to be resumed and the head raised slowly until it is in the same position as at the beginning of the exercise. Then the whole method is to be repeated as long as needful.

Chinese Arithmetic.

The Chinese rejoice in a wonderful talent for inaccuracy in every detail. For instance, a pound or a pint varies as it suits the merchant's fancy. In some part you get half or a quarter as much as you do in others for the same price and measure.

Then, again, their way of calculating distance does not at all tally with Euclid. For instance, you are told from A to B is four miles, but from B to A is eight miles. If you ask how this is possible, you are told it depends from which end you start; if you start from A, it is down hill, so much easier to walk; whereas, starting from B, you have to walk up hill, which is much more exerting and fatiguing—in fact, it is the same as walking a longer distance on even ground.

This form of argument always amused me nearly as much as the way the Chinese have of counting a person's age by tens. "My mother," they will tell you, "is 30" (or 40). When she leaves 30, she is getting near 40; Should we all like to be told that, I wonder?—Leslie's Weekly.

Literary Consuls.

It is one of the curiosities of literature, says George F. Parker in The Atlantic, that, although the consular service has not produced reports of either economic or informing value, many writers have done conspicuous work before and during service and after retirement. W. D. Howells wrote some delightful books on Italy. Besides his "Life of Peter the Great," Eugene Schuyler wrote an acceptable short history of American diplomacy and translated some of Turgeneff's novels. Hawthorne, Elihu Burritt, Underwood, Bret Harte, Penfield, Richman—to mention only a few—have done notable work in literature, but not an official report of value. In the one case there was something to say, united with freedom of view and opinion; in the other there was nothing to say, and red tape was too strong for them. The fault is in the system, not in the men.

New York's "Diamond Rooms."

Only men and women who want to purchase an expensive set of jewels, say $10,000 worth or upward, get a glimpse of the "diamond rooms," as they are called, in the big New York jewelers' shops. Gems worth less than that usually are kept in show cases and examined in trays at the counters. But if a customer wants to make a larger purchase—a diamond necklace with pearl pendant worth from $40,000 to $50,000, for instance—he is shown into a parlor where he can examine the jewels more at his leisure and see the salesman weigh them on the most carefully balanced scales. These parlors as a rule are luxuriously but simply furnished and are convenient to the safes.

It is not an unusual thing during the holiday season for a salesman in a well established store to make three or four sales a day ranging from $12,000 to $30,000.

SCOURGE OF THE AGE IS KIDNEY DISEASE

Terrible Increase in the Number of Deaths from This Ailment.

It is Common to All Classes and Conditions of People.

It Creeps Stealthily Into the System and Develops Into Many Diseases.

Bright's Disease, Heart Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy and Rheumatism, are Among the Forms it Takes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills the One Remedy That Never Fails to Cure it, No Matter How or Where It is Found.

Of all the diseases the human body has to combat in its struggle for health, the one that is steadily growing in strength and terrors is Kidney Disease. Quietly, stealthily as a serpent, it creeps on its victim till the latter is enveloped in its folds, and the greatest physicians the world has ever known stand helpless before it. As the last fold goes around the struggling victim and the doctor shakes his head and whispers "Bright's Disease," hope fades to nothing, and the sorrowing friends feel that death has marked their loved one for its own.

The alarming increase this terrible disease is making is evidenced by the columns of almost every newspaper. For not among the lowly of the earth alone does it look for its victims. Statesmen, judges, eminent lawyers, and honored divines are numbered among those who in recent months have gone down to their graves with the fell marks of this dread disease upon their bodies. In fact, so prevalent has the disease become that a celebrated New York specialist stated recently that not one person in a hundred was free from some taint of Kidney Disease.

WORKS IN SECRET.

It is the secrecy of Kidney Disease that makes it the more dreaded. You can fight an enemy in the open with some chance of success, but if he is lying in wait to take you at an unwary moment your chances of successfully fighting him are terribly diminished. So it is with Kidney Disease. Its first warnings are so faint as to be hardly noticeable, a slight pain in the back that is charged up to over exertion, a slight discoloration of the urine or a burning sensation while urinating that hardly attracts attention. That is all. But that means that Kidney Disease is at work gradually eating its way into your system. The pain in the back grows more severe, the urinary trouble more complicated, swellings under the eyes and of the limbs denote the coming of Dropsy, sharp shooting pains in the joints and muscles tell that Rheumatism has you in its grasp, or perhaps a day or two's illness leads to the calling of the doctor, and suddenly the terrible truth is forced upon you—Bright's Disease has you in its grasp.

WAY OF ESCAPE.

With this silent, relentless enemy slowly but surely eating its way into prominence and marking that prominence by a yearly increase in the length of its death list, the demand of the day, of the hour, is "Show us the way of escape." Nature never put mankind in a critical condition without providing a way of escape—providing mankind were wise enough to take the way provided. In this case the way of escape is a simple vegetable remedy. It has been before the people of Canada for thirteen years, and, like all the great relievers of nature, has been first received and first appreciated by the lowly in life, those known as the common people of Canada.

Is it the common people of Canada who die of Bright's Disease? No, it is the bright and shining marks, those who are stationed above the heads of the masses. Ask the reason of this? Go to the people who are practically exempt from Kidney Disease in its worst form, and ask them. With almost a single voice they will reply: "We cure our Kidney ailments with Dodd's Kidney Pills, and they never get a chance to develop into that terrible disease that carries so many prominent men into the grave."

ON WITH HIS WORK.

And so it is; the man who does manual labor must heal his slightest aches or they hinder him in his work. When he has backache he cures it with Dodd's Kidney Pills, and goes on with his work; when he feels a twinge of Rheumatism he drives it out of his body with Dodd's Kidney Pills—and goes on with his work. Necessity has taught him that he must cure his Kidneys to get rid of his pains; for he must work to live. He has not been educated to that standpoint where a prescription to cure must be written by a specialist at a cost of dollars to every letter. He may not even know that there never was a disease that took in all classes of the community but what nature provided a cure within the means of all classes of the community. What he does know is more to the point than this. He knows that Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure all aches which experience has taught him come from the Kidneys. He takes Dodd's Kidney Pills, and goes on with his work.

SOME EXCEPTIONS.

Of course, there are exceptions to every rule. Even among common people there are those who neglect the early warnings of Kidney Disease. It takes exceptions to prove the rule—but many of these exceptions prove more—they prove that no case of Kidney Disease is too far gone for Dodd's Kidney Pills to cure. Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy, Heart Disease—all the varied forms of Kidney Disease in its advanced stages—have been met by Dodd's Kidney Pills, and never once has Canada's great Kidney Remedy had to admit defeat. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Great Lakes to Hudson Bay, Dodd's Kidney Pills are used, and wherever used they have trium and wherever used they have triumphed over Kidney Disease in its every form. Thousands of Canadians are shouting their praises of the conquerer.

Just a few of those who have neglected the early symptoms, reached the more advanced stages of Kidney Diseases, and found a cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills are given below. There are thousands of others. Ask in your immediate neighborhood. You will not have to go far to meet men, women and children who have either warded off or cured the terror of the present age by using the old Canadian stand-by—Dodd's Kidney Pills.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE CURED.

Bright's Disease has invariably yielded to a treatment of Dodd's Kidney Pills, no matter how firm a hold it had secured on its victim. Possibly the most talked of case of recent date is that of Alice Maud Parker, of Shubenacadie, Hants Co., N.S. The full story of this case will be found in the current number of Dodd's Magazine. Herewith a short statement from the young lady's mother is appended:

Two doctors pronounced my daughter's disease Bright's Disease, and gave her up to die. Her eyelids swelled till she could hardly see; her legs from her ankles to her knees swelled. Her belt in health was twenty inches, when she was at her worst it was 48 inches. Then she gave up all other treatment and started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. By the time she had taken the first box I saw a change. It took a long time to bring her balk to perfect health, but Dodd's Kidney Pills did it. To-day my daughter is in perfect health.

DIABETES CURED.

Diabetes is another of the most fearful and fatal forms of Kidney Disease that has been cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills, and by no other medicine. Among those cured of this terrible ailment is Mr. Charles Gilchrist, for fifteen years Chief of Police of Port Hope and afterwards for twenty-two years Fishery Overseer under the Dominion Government. He makes the following statement:

I was a sufferer for ten years with Diabetes and Kidney Disorder. At times my urine was of a dark bricky color, and I would suffer something awful while passing. I tried doctors and medicines, but could get no help till I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. They have made me a new man. The citizens of Port Hope all know me, and can vouch for the above.

Chas. Gilchrist,
Ex-Chief Coast and Fishery Overseer,

HEART DISEASE CURED.

Heart Disease is a result of Kidney Disorder. Bad Kidneys mean impure blood, the action of impure blood on the heart causes Heart Disease. Dodd's Kidney Pills cure it:

I suffered for years with Heart Disease, Bright's Disease, and Rheumatism. I was so feeble I was unable to do anything. There were three months I abandoned all medicines, and resolved to let myself die. Then I was led to try Dodd's Kidney Pills, and the good the first box did me surprised me. I have taken twenty boxes in all, am well of my Heart Disease, my Bright's Disease, and my Rheumatism.

Dame Louis Provosts,

DROPSY CURED.

Dropsy, another disease caused by diseased Kidneys failing to do their work and remove the surplus water from the blood, is another ailment Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure. Here is an example:

I was a total wreck before I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. In the mornings before I got out of bed I could could hardly put my feet to the floor they were so much swollen from Dropsy. My arms used to swell at times so that I could not put on my coat. I had to be tapped to be relieved from my terrible pains. On the advice of a friend I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. Before I had finished the second box I felt much better. Seven boxes cured me completely. I don't know what it is to be sick since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

Rheumatism and kindred Kidney Diseases, such as Lumbago, Sciatica, and Gout, are caused by uric acid in the blood. If the Kidneys are put in working order they strain all the uric acid out of the blood, and the Rheumatism goes with it. Take the case of W. G. Cragg, of Dresden, Ont. Here is his statement:

For eight years I was troubled with Inflammatory Rheumatism. I could scarcely get around to do my duties in my store. I had some of the best doctors I could get, but nothing I tried would ever give me relief. I was also troubled with Gout. I started using Dodd's Kidney Pills and had only taken six boxes when I was completely cured.

W. G. Cragg,
Ex-Reeve of Dresden, Ont.

ALL KIDNEY DISEASES CURED.

These are only a few cases taken from thousands to show the efficacy of Dodd's Kidney Pills in advanced stages of Kidney Disease. In other forms of Kidney trouble, such as Urinary troubles, Gravel, Female Weaknesses, etc, Dodd's Kidney Pills have the same record. They always cure. As for Pain in the Back—the first symptom of Kidney trouble—ask your neighbors. You'll find the majority of them look on Pain in the Back as a danger signal, and on its first appearance safeguard themselves against this terribly fatal Kidney Disease by driving it away with the old Canadian stand by—Dodd's Kidney Pills.

It isn't always the best actress that gets the most followers.

Slips of Novelists.

Andrew Lang in Longman's recalled certain slips of the novelists. They, too, have their loose ends:

"A skilled person might make a pleasant essay on what we may call the dropped threads of novelists. Thus Pip's vision of Miss Havisham hanging to a beam in the deserted brewery has always puzzled me. It seems to have been meant to lead to something other than what occurs. In Mr. Marion Crawford's 'Taquisara' much turns on an entranced medium who could give two strokes in the hole and a beating to Mrs. Piper. We expect her successes to be normally explained, because stress is laid on her one eyed servant, whose one eye (blue) marks her as the sister of her mistress. Boslo observes this; the poisoner, Matilda, does not. Apparently something was to hang on that fact. If so, the thread was dropped. Again, why had Charles Wogan clay on his clothes at the end of 'Clementina?' Like the priest in the 'Lays of Ancient Rome,'

"I know, but may not tell."

Edith's horror at meeting Florence in the darkling house of Mr. Dombey is a dropped thread which Dickens tried to take up, but failed. Research would probably discover many such instances."

Queer Doings of a Rifle Ball.

I myself made the most extraordinary shot at an antelope that I ever heard of, which, however, has nothing to do with good shooting, but rather with the erratic course that a rifle ball may take. With several scouts, white men and Indians, I rode over a hill to see three or four buck antelope spring to their feet, run a short distance and then stop to look. I made a quick shot at one, which dropped, and on going to him I found him not dead, though desperately wounded. The animal had been standing broadside on, his face toward my left. The ball had struck the left elbow, splintering the olecranon; passed through the brisket, broken the right humerus, turned at right angles and gone back, cutting several ribs; broken the right femur, then turned again at right angles and come out through the inside of the leg and struck the left hock joint, which it dislocated and twisted off so that it hung by a very narrow string of hide. I never again expect to see so extraordinary a course for a rifle ball.—Outing.

Which Was His Wife?

A certain Turk, according to rumor, was once married to a veiled lady in white in the presence of the sultan. As soon as the ceremony was concluded the bride mysteriously disappeared. The groom was led into an adjoining room, where stood twelve ladies all dressed in white, but without veils. "Choose from the twelve," exclaimed the sovereign, "her that is your bride." As the man had never seen her face the command bewildered him. "If you make a mistake," added his majesty, "your life shall pay the forfeit." The poor man walked up and down the row of beauties, but saw nothing whatever to aid his choice. "You have only a minute left," yelled the sultan in anger; "choose at once." Ten of the ladies, he noticed, gave him nothing else than a stony stare. One of them frowned, the other smiled. "The frowning one," he thought, "is my bride, for she expresses her displeasure and impatience at my ignorance. "No," he said to himself, "it must be the smiling one, for she desires to invite me to her." After debating the subject in his mind until his time was up he boldly made a selection from the two. He was successful. He had regained his bride. Which was she, the one who frowned or the one who smiled?

The Vault of St. Michan's.

The most interesting place of pilgrimage in Dublin is St. Michah's church, where the organ is still to be seen upon which Handel is said to have composed his "Messiah." In the graveyard is the last resting place of Robert Emmet, and the vault of St. Michan's provides a more grewsome thrill than the morgue. The sexton lifts an iron door and descends a few rude steps, carrying a light, without which the place would be pitch dark. You follow and find yourself in a narrow passage, from which cell-like recesses belonging to different families branch off. Whether it is owing to the extreme dryness of the surroundings or to some mysterious property of the place, the process of decay has been arrested, and the features of persons dead for two centuries may be recognized from authentic portraits. Perhaps the strangest thing about the vault is the fact that, apart from the weird sensation, there is nothing offensive in the surroundings.

Soldiers and Weight.

These facts are given by two officers who conducted experiments to determine the effect of weight on soldiers in full marching order. The five men who volunteered as subjects marched a distance of fifteen miles and eighty-two yards. The different weights carried were forty-eight, fifty-nine and sixty-five pounds. With the first weight it was found that a man at a moderate temperature could cover the distance with ease; in hot or close weather slight inconvenience was experienced, which disappeared when the march was over, so that the men could begin the next day as well as ever.

The weight of fifty-nine pounds did no harm in moderate weather, but proved fatiguing when it was hot, and effects were felt the next day. When the men carried the third weight the ill effects were very marked.

Jas. Cronson, of Liverpool, Eng., passed through this town yesterday on his way to inspect Kootenay lands and mines. He represents the Liverpool Investment Co. and will return to Fernie to see what we have here. It is in his power to invest probably $30,000,000. He has had 12 years confidence of this company, which has already invested several millions in Egyptian irrigation schemes.

On Wednesday morning a distressing accident occurred at the coke ovens by which George Vincent had his leg cut off by a car passing over it. Mr. Vincent was in charge of the ovens in the place of R. W. Coulthard, who was writing on his examination. At the time of the accident he was passing the railway track. His foot slipped causing him to fall in the way of a moving car. The leg was taken off just below the knee. The lacerated limb was dressed in the hospital by Drs. Bonnell and Corsan. Mr. Vincent is well known and general regret is expressed at his unfortunate accident.

Mr. C. P. Walker of Winnipeg, is rapidly extending his theatrical operations. He now controls the theatres in all the principal towns between St. Paul and Winnipeg, and directs the tours of Mr. Harold Nelson, the eminent Canadian actor, and a company of metropolitan players preventing Broadhurst's famous comedy, "What Happened to Jones." Both of these organizations are now playing the larger cities of Western Canada. Manager Walker has equipped both companies with elaborate scenery and stage settings and paraphernalia, so that the productions are most complete. This company will present this famous comedy in Fernie on Feb. 5th.

E. Jacobs, mining expert, who has been in Fernie and vicinity several days left for Nelson on Wednesday. Mr. Jacobs is preparing an exhaustive report of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company's properties and operations for the Nelson News, which will appear in that publication in due time. Mr. Jacobs was particularly struck with the efforts that the Company are making towards increasing their operations. The mining camps are equipped with machinery much more powerful than is required for the present output and the permanency and extensiveness of the development work being done also promise the fulfilment of the expectations for a largely increased tonnage from these mines.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

This preparation is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and influenza. It has become famous for its cures of these diseases over a large part of the civilized world. The most flattering testimonies have been received, giving account of its good works; of the aggravating and persistent coughs it has cured; of severe colds that have yielded promptly to its soothing effects, and of the dangerous attacks of croup it has cured, often saving the life of a child. The extensive use of it for whooping cough, has shown that it robs that disease of all dangerous results. It is especially prized by mothers because it contains nothing injurious and there is not the least danger in giving it even to babies. It always cures and cures quickly. Sold by all druggists and dealers.

THE CUPS COME BACK.

FERNIE WINS FROM THE HAT IN A CLOSE GAME, SCORE 5--4.

The Locals are Champions in the Crows Nest League. They Were Not Defeated This Season.—Hockey Notes.

On Monday evening the Fernie rink was crowded as it never was before, with spectators anxious to witness the contest for supremacy between the crack Medicine Hat hockey team and the local heroes of the puck. The winning of the game by the locals meant their final supremacy in the league for the season, and its loss, would, in all probability, result in a tie for the trophies between the Hat and Fernie.

As the boys practised at their respective ends prior to the start they passed under a critical comparison by the on-lookers and many comments favorable to the boys in dark sweaters were heard on all sides. It was observed that they had considerable advantage in weight, they were splendid skaters and their manner of handling their sticks was perfect. So favorable was the comparison that many wondered if it were possible for the locals to defeat them. That suspense was never fully quelled until the last ring of the referee's bell announced the close of the hardest game of hockey ever played in Fernie.

Referee R. Smellie called the boys together promptly on time and after a few instructions placed the puck. The line up was;—

MEDICINE HAT		FERNIE
Krauss	goal	Rutherford
Wright	point	Miller
G. Turnbull	cover p.	Kastner
R. Turnbull	rover	Stephens
C. Turnbull	centre forward	McLaughlin
Wheeler	right wing	Browne
Porter	left wing	Lafortune

Umpires—Dr. Halt, Rhodes and Schram.
Time-keepers—Carmichael and J. Miller.

The game started pretty brisk and the teams seemed to take alternate turns at rushing the opposing goals. Creighton Turnbull scored from an off-side at the end of 4 minutes play. The defence had practically stopped playing but as the referee did not notice the off-side the goal was counted. Score 1-0. The swift forwards from the prairie town again and again tried their combination work but the close rigorous checking of the locals broke it up every time. The Fernie forwards made many shots on the Hat net, but generally from a distance and they either were stopped or went wide. At the middle of the half Stephens performed an individual play that aroused a deafening tumult of enthusiasm. He rushed from centre past point and cover and landed the puck, time 11 minutes. Score 1-1. Ten seconds after face-off Creighton Turnbull with a couple of beautiful passes took the rubber down the ice with lightning rapidity and landed it in the net. Score 2-1. Twelve minutes later, as Porter and Kastner were chasing the puck near the Fernie goal Kastner broke his stick and a second later the net shook. Score 3-1. Things began to look a little serious and the suspense was so great that "rooters" forgot to root. The Fernie forwards made heroic attempts to score again in the three remaining minutes, and half a minute before half time McLaughlin did the trick with a pass from Brown. Score 3-2.

The game warmed up considerably in the second half, both teams playing their best. The prairie boys time after time attempted the combination work they know so well but the heavy checking of their opponents effectually prevented any damage. The locals played more on the aggressive and shot after shot was rained on the Hat net and finally a clean lift from Stephens landed, time 13 minutes. Score 3-3. Two minutes later R. Turnbull with a magnificent rush again put the visitors in the lead. Score 4-2. Miller evened the score again 7 minutes later with one of his marvellous end-to-end lifts, the puck striking the cross-bar and falling inside. The visitors disputed the decision of the umpire and Mr. Schram was put in that position. With 8 minutes to play and the score even it was anybody's game The Fernie team maintained their aggressive play and worked like Trojans. Rutherford was called upon to stop a couple of hot shots. Miller and Kastner fed the forwards who made repeated attacks on the Hat net. Stephens, one minute before time was called, with one of his swift shots sent the puck clean through the net. Score 5-4, and the game was won. The thunderous applause accompanying this feat gave vent to the pent-up feelings of the Fernie sympathizers.

The game was not particularly rough, though heavy body checking was persistently indulged in. The referee was strict any impartial and at various times the fence was ornamented with players.

Kastner and Miller deserve special mention for their splendid defense work, and Lafortune on the wing played the game of his life.

This game gives Fernie the hockey championship for the season, and it is possible that the other league games will not be played. Fernie has won four victories, three of them league games, and has suffered no defeat. The following is a summary.

Jan. 6.—Defeated Pincher Creek	15-2
Jan. 11—Defeated Medicine Hat	5-3
Jan. 23.—Defeated Cranbrook	11-2
Jan. 25.—Defeated Medicine Hat	5-4
Total, 36 goals won, 11 lost.

THE CRANBROOK GAME.

The Cranbrook Hockey Club has an excellent reason for regretting that it is not in the Crows Nest League. The Cranbrook team strengthened by some energetic training, would certainly have made a bid for the first place. The game last Saturday night was a good exhibition and though the locals won by the rather heavy score of 11 to 2 the play was fast and the visitors showed that they knew the game.

At nine o'clock, precisely, referee Smellie started the contest, before a very good-sized gathering of spectators. Only 6 men played on each side, one of Cranbrook's best forwards and D. Lafortune being off. The line up was:

CRANBOOK		FERNIE
Johnson	goal	Rutherford
Duck	point	Miller
Mason	cover point	Kastner
Prest	centre	McLaughlin
Motherwell	right	Browne

The game started off very fast Cranbrook rushing hard on Fernie goal. Locals evidently played back and held themselves in reserve. Miller was called upon during the first ten minutes to do a lot of stopping and invariably he sent the puck to the other end. Motherwell made some very fine rushes, more than one of which would have landed but for Rutherford. Finally after 19 minutes of close play Stephens landed from a pass from Kastner. Fernie played out more and the Cranbrook defense especially their cover point man did excellent work in defending their net. Six minutes later McLaughlin scored with a swift shot at close range. One minute later Stephens with a long drive again raised the umpire's hand. The hard pace was beginning to tell on the Cranbrook players and they bunched more on their defense. Finally just as the half time bell sounded McLaughlin scored the fourth goal in a scrimmage.

In the second half the visitors came up fresh and fast and after four minutes Stewart scored the first goal for the railroad town. Browne next found the net with an angling shot, time 5 minutes, score 5-1. Play was fairly even for the next few minutes, alternate rushes being made on the goals. McLaughlin got in a long drive which went by the goal keeper, time 4 minutes. Score 6-1. Cranbrook made several fine rushes, in one of which Motherwell the star forward with a clever individual play scored, time 3 minutes. Score 6-2. The better training of the home team now began to manifest itself. Their rushes were as strong as ever while the visitors weakened perceptibly. Five goals were scored in rapid succession. Browne landed the first, Stephens the second in a pretty individual play. Stephens also the third. Browne the next in 30 seconds after face-off and McLaughlin the last. Final score 11-2.

BENEDICTS VS. BACHELORS.

The game between the married men and single men on Wednesday evening was the funniest if not the most scientific game of the season. The teams lined up as follows. Benedicts, Messrs. White, Lawrence, Clode, Schram, Tuttle, Stork, and Ganong. Bachelors, Messrs. Gates, Wilmot, McMillan, G. F. Johnson, Jas. Johnson, Joiner, McMaster, and Hansen. It is not necessary to give the positions except to state that they all played on the ice. R. Smellie as referee had an easy task. The game went merrily on until at the third quarter a philanthropic onlooker informed the captain of the benedicts that they were playing against 8 men. A hurried counting of noses corroborated the statement. The funniest part of the joke was that the bachelors had been unaware of the slight advantage they possessed. The game at this stage stood 3-2 in favor of the single men. All bets were declared off and the remaining quarter was played with seven men each, with no further scores being made.

The two teams had another go at it last night with seven men each, when the married men clearly demonstrated their superior skill and staying powers by defeating the Bachelors four goals to one.

HOCKEY NOTES.

The Medicine Hat Hockey team went to Cranbrook on Wednesday at the request of the Cranbrook club to play an exhibition game there that evening. The game resulted in a close victory for the Hat by a score of 4-3.

The Fernie Hockey Club are in communication with the Nelson Hockey club to arrange for a game here next week.

The locals are talking of going over to the Rossland carnival two weeks hence. They will there have a chance to meet the best teams of West Kootenay.

An attempt is being made to arrange a a game between the Fernie Juniors and Pincher Creek Juniors.

Pincher Creek Echo—The funeral of hockey, deceased, will be celebrated on Saturday next. The oration will be delivered by Mr. Schofield, chief mourner, and the puck bearers will be Messrs. Gunn, Ormond, Dobbie, Olmstead, Boyes and MacKenzie. Messrs. Moore and Ross have been invited to fill in the grave.

THE BANQUET.

On Monday evening a banquet was given in honor of the Medicine Hat hockey team. Eighty guests sat down to partake of the sumptuous repast in the artistically arranged dining room of The Royal.

Afterwards an excellent program of toasts entertained the gathering into the wee sma' hours of the morning.

A. C. Liphardt, Hon. President of the C. N. Hockey League ably filled the position of toastmaster and introduced the program by a few appropriate remarks. The toast to "the King" followed. R. W. Coultbard told a good story and sang a song. The toast to the "C. N. Hockey League" was responded to in neat speeches by Dr. Halt and J. H. Bricker. Mr. Payne sang a song after which Fred. Stork, J. "Hutch" and Sherwood Herchmer responded to the toast "Canada, the Home of Hockey." R. Lawrence followed with a song. C. Turnbull in responding to the toast "Our Visitors, the boys from the Prairie" proposed that of the "Fernie Hockey Club" which called for a response from J. Stephens. S. Herchmer noticing that it was "Robbie Burns" anniversary made a few appropriate remarks and proposed a toast to that name Other appropriate allusions were made to the Scottish bard during the evening in speech and song. "The Referee" called for a modest acknowledgement from R. Smellie. The toast of "the Ladies" was ably handled by R. A. McMordie and N. Broley. The list closed with "Our Host and Hostess" after which the meeting broke up with Auld Lang Syne and God Save the King.

Hockey! hockey! hockey! why we all play hockey here, and no sticks in town.

Mr. Ed. Kummer from Trites-Wood store at Fernie, has been transferred to their store here.

The weather is quite severe here at present. Sleighing is fine and the young folks have some very pleasant sleigh-rides.

One of the horses on the outside run at No. 3 mine took a notion to have a roll Wednesday evening and in so doing rolled over the bank, cutting it badly and breaking the steam line to the fan which necessitated the closing of No. 3 from about 9 p.m., to 11 p.m.

About twenty-five of the Michel boys gathered in the school-house Tuesday evening for the purpose of organizing a hockey club. Mr B. Stitt was elected chairman for the evening, and Ed. Campbell secretary, after which the following officers were elected:

Hon. Pres., Thos. Crahan,
President, E. Doberer,
Vice-Pres., H. Foster,
Treas.-Sec., E. Campbell,
Manager, R. L. Henderson,
Capt. B. Stitt.

After this, some arrangements as to ice were made and it was decided to flood a piece on the creek, as no other place can be put in condition this year. A communication was sent to Frank asking them to try to make some arrangment for a game in the near future, as it is understood in town that the Frank boys are very anxious to get on a game with Michel. This team will be purely amateur, no professionalism in it at all.

ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING.

Verdict of Coroner's Jury as to Death of John Wollos Which Occurred on Saturday.

John Wollos who was shot in the head on Jan. 11th at a Slav wedding died at the hospital on Saturday, Jan. 23rd., from the effects of the wound. Wollos six months ago came from Poland, where his wife and five children now reside. He was 32 years of age and worked in the mines at Coal Creek.

A post-mortem examination located the flattened bullet imbedded in the back part of the skull, it having taken a straight horizontal course through the brain. The deceased was only semi-conscious during his illness. He was buried on Wednesday afternoon, Rev. Father Lardon officiating.

A coroner's inquest was held on Monday for which the following jury was selected. Messrs. A. B. Trites, J. C. Hutchison, Thos. Beck, J. A. Maclean, G. Cody and W. Wilmot. Various witnesses of the affair, including the accused Baronck, told pretty much the same story. The shooting took place while the dancing was going on, and Wollos who was playing the violin, was seen to fall backwards. This was the first intimation to the merry-makers of the tragic shooting. Baronck stated that he had been doing a lot of shooting before the wedding and had started in again after the dancing had been in progress for some time. He had discharged several shots into the air in rapid succession when the revolver refused to work and he lowered it for examination, at the same time neglecting to release the pressure on the trigger. The defect suddenly righted itself and the gun went off, the bullet penetrating the window and entering Wollos' brain just above the eye.

The jury were not long in determining that the affair was due to accidental shooting, and a verdict in accordance was brought in.

Steve Baronck was tried yesterday on the charge of manslaughter S. Herchmer appeared for the defence and Chief McMullin handled the prosecution, The accused told a very connected and reasonable story of the whole affair, which explained how the accident happened and also cleared away the suspicions surrounding his attempt to escape. After the shooting when they were standing helpless around the wounded man he heard one say "a life for a life" which filled him with a frenzied fear that he would be held responsible for the deed. The magistrate dismissed the case under that charge and gave him 30 days for carrying a concealed weapon. Baronck has promised to support the deceased's widow and family

COMMITTED FOR MURDER.

"Dr." Gillier Must Stand His Trial on This Charge At the Spring Assizes.

The preliminary hearing of Louis Gillier charged with murdering Jack McGee at Jaffray took place before L. R. Forbes, S. M., on Friday last, G. A. Thompson, of Cranbrook, appearing for the accused.

The evidence taken was but a repetition of that given at the inquest with the additional testimony of Alexander McDonald, another of McGee's friends who was present with the party up to a few moments prior to the shooting. This McDonald is a bright, intelligent young man who no doubt could have thrown much important light upon the actions of the deceased and the accused's wife prior to the murder but for the fact that he had been under the influence of liquor at the time. In consequence nothing of importance was brought out by the rigid cross-examination, the witness being unable to state whether McGee and the woman were quarreling in earnest. Witness corroborated his namesake's testimony, as to the general good moral character that the deceased bore.

The counsel for the defense did not attempt to submit any evidence and the magistrate sent the accused up for trial at the spring assizes. The defense will then attempt to prove that the assault upon the wife of the accused was more aggravated than has yet been brought out.

Mrs. Gillier was present at the trial but was not called to give evidence. The "Doctor" exhibited considerable nervousness during his trial and as the magistrate was about to order him to stand his trial he attempted to speak but his counsel quieted him. He was taken to Nelson on Saturday morning by Constable Warring.

The three McDonald's, Alex., Wm., and Angus who gave evidence in this case and who were bosom friends o. late are, curiously enough, not related in any way with each other.

DEATH OF MRS. R. G. DUGGAN.

The grim hand of death has again been laid on another home in Michel. This time it has taken the beloved wife of Mr. R. G. Duggan, one of the earliest residents of the town.

The deceased lady contracted a heavy cold while attending the funeral of Mrs. James in Fernie last week, and she died very suddenly on Tuesday night. She leaves a family of three children, the youngest being an infant in arms.

The funeral service was held at the house of Mr. Lee on Wednesday afternoon, being conducted by Rev. Marshall. Deceased was an active worker in the Methodist church and was a member of the choir. This is the third vacancy caused by death in this choir in three weeks. The remains were taken to the coast for interment on Thursday, the sorrowing husband and children accompanying them,

Mr. Duggan is the president of the Michel Miners' Union and one of the most popular men in the camp. The deceased was an estimable lady and was respected and esteemed by all who knew her. The sympathy of the community goes out to the bereaved family in their great loss.

The estimates of expenditure brought down by the provincial government last week include a total expenditure of $26,550 for the Fernie riding The appropriation is made up as follows.

CALGARY BUSINESS CENTRE SCORCHED

Senator Lougheed a Severe Sufferer.

CAPTAIN SMART INJURED

New Normandie Theatre Ready for Opening, and Five Stores With Contents Destroyed. Loss Sustained over $200,000.

The most disastrous fire that ever did damage in Calgary broke out on the morning of Jan. 15th. Damage to the extent of $200,000 was done. The sufferers are as follows:

Norman block, valued at $50,000, owned by Senator Lougheed.

J. A. Glanville, dry goods store, completely destroyed; valued at about $30,000.

William Robertson, clothing store, completely destroyed; damage $25,000.

Sales' clothing store, valued at $12,000; completely destroyed.

Kerr & Terrill, grocery store, valued at $8,000.

D. J. Young & Co., book and music store, valued at $15,000.

The new Normandie theatre, owned by Senator Lougheed, which was to have been opened the next week, was completely destroyed. It was very richly furnished.

Above the stores were office buildings.

STARTED IN FURNACE.

The fire started in the furnace room of Robertson's store. It spread very rapidly, and was very soon beyond control. At the very first it was known that it was impossible to save the stores of Glanville and Robertson but a very great effort was made to keep it confined between the two walls. There was not a breath of wind. The fire started first towards the east side and towards the very heart of the city. It was got under control and all was going well, when an engine gave out for a few minutes, and the fire crept over the west wall and all was soon again in a blaze.

Captain Smart, of the fire brigade, was very severely injured by inhaling gas. He is now in the hospital.

Senator Lougheed has announced that he will begin rebuilding at once.

The Normandie theatre, which was totally destroyed, was insured. The long of $40,000 will be distributed among the Royal; Liverpool, London & Globe; Phoenix, of Hartford, and Commercial Union insurance companies. The Anglo-American carries $8,500 in risks.

Among the other companies carrying policies are: Canadian Fire, $2,500; London Assurance, $3,500; Guardian, $2,500; London Mutual, $1,500, and Hartford, $2,500, and $200 on the Great West Life office. There was $18,000 insurance on the Norman block and $10,000 on rents.

ASK CAPTAIN'S ARREST.

Commander of the S. S. Callam to Be Charged With Manslaughter.

Application has been made at the coroner's enquiry into the Clallam disaster for warrants for the arrest of Captain Roberts and others held responsible for the wreck on a charge of manslaughter. C. H. Lugrin, representing the Dominion government, said that sufficient evidence had been secured to show criminal negligence, and he would apply to the provincial government on behalf of the Dominion government, asking the arrest o. the captain and any others held to be responsible.

Evidence was given by Richard Griffiths, one of the crew of the Clallam, that one of the seamen took the ensign and was ensign from its box and was hauling it to half-mast upside down, when Captain Roberts ordered him to take it down and put it up right side up as if nothing was the matter.

SAW HIS MISTAKE.

About that time a steamer, which witness took to be a collier, passed about three miles away. Captain Roberts saw that he was wrong, and about ten minutes later allowed the sailor to put up the flag in a reversed position. Griffiths gave a clear statement of the happenings in connection with the disaster. He said Captain Roberts was much excited, and told of a conversation when the boats were being lowered, when Captain Roberts had told witness that he (witness) would be drowned. Witness replied that if he was, he would he would not be the only one. Griffiths said he had no hope that the boats would live, and advised people not to go in them. He said no steps were taken to rescue those in the water after the first boat capsized, although they were alongside the steamer.

NO SIGNALS ABOARD.

There were no rockets or blue fires or other signals on board as far as he knew. The rudder was known not to be in good condition, and the steamer would not steer well. Griffiths said he had thought of cutting the line when the tug Holyoke was towing, as the steamer was foundering, but not being ordered to do so (he had been told that the captain could shoot anyone not obeying orders in such a time) he did not. He told of clambering over to the steamer's side when she turned over at the last minute. Griffiths was the last living man on the boat. When the water came up to him as he clung to the steamer's side, he climbed up the stairs to the steamer's masthead and from there watched all the men on the side washed off.

The passengers and crew had all asked the captain and mate to put them on the Holyoke when the tug first came up.

"Is it true that your wife is of a rather skeptical turn of mind?" "She used to be, but I got her a fur-trimmed cloak, and she goes to church every Sunday now."

A RACE FOR LIFE.

Ex-Mounted Policeman Dies of Lockjaw in the Yukon.

A special correspondent writes from Dawson, Yukon:

R. P. Hamilton, a former member of the North-West Mounted Police, died of lockjaw at Hunker as a result of the effects of a gunshot wound in the leg. He was shot accidentally while hunting 170 miles up the Klondike river two weeks ago. The companions of Hamilton attended the wounded man as best they could in the remote wilderness, but their efforts were finally proved futile. After stanching the blood and rudely dressing the wound, the companions dispatched Speedwood, one of their number, to the Hunker police detachment, a run of 150 miles. Day and night, with all the fortitude and endurance he could summon, Speedwood pushed over the frozen ice of the Klondike river, and through trails in the forest skirting the river. Reaching Hunker, he got the police headquarters at Dawson by phone, and had Major Cuthbert authorize one of his men to return with Speedwood. Constable Carter, stationed at Hunker, was detailed. The two men hurried back through the biting cold, behind a dog team laden with six days' supplies. It was a race for life, and the trained frontiersmen raced nobly. Hamilton was reached when weak, but promising to hold out well. He was taken back to Hunker in as rapid time as possible, but the wound had the awful effect of closing the jaws with a vice-like grip, and Hamilton succumbed.

Hamilton was 30 years old, and a native of Eastern Canada.

FROZEN EGGS.

Novel Proposal Made for Sending Hen-fruit to the Old Country.

An Ottawa man proposes to send to England a shipment of eggs, packed like coal in a barrel and frozen solid. The eggs, he claims, must be fresh at purchase and all candled. They must then be frozen and shipped in that condition with a hole in the flat end of the egg.

Before using they would require to be thawed out, but they would then be as fresh as when they were laid, and if used in a short time would be in first-class order.

DEATH FROM LIVE WIRE.

Vancouver Man Meets His Fate in View of Many Pedestrians.

A dispatch from Vancouver says: William Lovelace was instantly killed by coming into contact with a live wire.

The telephone wire at the corner of Cordova Street and Westminster Avenue was noticed to be hanging over an electric light wire and swaying in the wind. A passer-by called to a boy to watch the wire while he got a policeman. The boy stayed for a moment and then walked away. Immediately afterwards William Lovelace walked right into the wire. It struck him in the face and he seized it. He cried out, "Take it off of me," but before anyone could reach him he was dead, death being almost instantaneous. Every place at which the wire touched the unfortunate man it had burned into the bone. Lovelace was a well known citizen, being a retail tobacconist.

The C.P.R. irrigation scheme is assured.

WINNIPEG-GULF RAILWAY

Work Starts Next Week on the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railway.

A dispatch from Memphis says: Work is to begin next week, in Nebraska, on the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railway, which is to run from a point near Lake Winnipeg down through the Mississippi valley. Surveys from Yankton north will be made, to be followed by a survey to the Gulf. This is designed to be one of the largest systems in North America. The northern terminus will be at Winnipeg. It will pass through the eastern parts of South Dakota and Nebraska, and Galveston will be the southern terminus.

The War Feeling.

A cable from St. Petersburg says: A prominent diplomat says: "Let all those who are adding fuel to the fire, which means war, remember that no possible power can limit that war to Japan and Russia. It means extension to other countries sure, with results too terrible to consider."

"Japan's reply has been received. That is all I can say," was the reply of a high official sent out by the chief of the foreign office, he himself being invisible to any one, for cipher telegrams are coming in constantly and need immediate attention. "It is being considered carefully," he added.

"Will your reply take long?"

"It all depends; there is sure to be a great number of points requiring most careful study, so it is impossible to say how long it will be," he replied, casually.

PAUL KRUGER SINKING SLOWLY

Despairs of Seeing Former Republic Restored.

BLACKEST MELANCHOLY

Former President of the Transvaal Cannot Live Much Longer—Tired of Life and Plunged in Grief He Awaits His End.

Oom Paul is dying. His memory gone, his eighty years pressing heavily on his whitened head, his steps feeble, his passion for outdoor life gone, the man who staggered mankind in South Africa cannot live much longer. His friends are prepared for the worst and would not be surprised at any moment to hear that the man who was four times president of the South African republic had gone to join his old companions and his wife.

The change in his condition began about a week ago. His friends and physician, however, fearing the effect the news might have on certain enterprises, kept quiet about it. Finally he became worse, and so the news rapidly leaked out. Oom Paul has now somebody with him every hour of the day and night. He is tired of life and does not apparently care for anything which would help him to combat the effects of age and disease. There are many matters of importance, however, which he wished and still wishes to see done before his death. He cannot talk of the outcome in the South African war with anything but bitterness. The impossibility of the Transvaal ever again assuming anything like its old place in the world has plunged him into the blackest melancholy.

THE PRINCE REPROVED.

Says Prince of Wales Should Provide Handrails on Stairs.

A London dispatch, dated Jan. 19, says:—At Lambeth to-day the coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death in the case of a woman who fell downstairs. The jury then remarked that the landlord should be compelled to provide handrails, the lack of which caused the woman's death.

The landlord in question is the Prince of Wales, and the house belongs to the duchy of Cornwall and the rent is 15s. 6d. per week.

Mourning in Bloemfontein.

Bloemfontein, Jan. 19.—It is now estimated that sixty persons were drowned as a result of the bursting of a reservoir here last Sunday, which also destroyed 176 houses and three hotels. There was a public funeral and interment this morning of twenty-three of the bodies already recovered. The shops are closed, and the town is in mourning.

Great Satisfaction.

Randolph, Ont., Sept. 9, 1903.
Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vt.

Gentlemen,—Will you kindly send me a copy of your "Treatise on the Horse and His Disaeses." I must say that your KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE IS BEING USED HERE, AND WE GET GREAT SATISFACTION. It is very good as a household remedy. Trusting that you will send me your book soon, I beg to remain. Yours respectfully, W. Draper.

JAPAN'S DEMANDS.

Hayashi is Very Emphatic in His government's Request.

The czar has not called the council to consider the Japanese reply, but it is said at the foreign office that the summons may be issued any day. The delay, coupled with despatches from Tokio saying that Japan is armed and grimly waiting, has caused a slight renewal of public nervousness, which was reflected by the weakness of the bourse. This alarm is seemingly not shared in the higher government circles, where it is insisted that the czar's pacific declarations were not idle words. The worst that is now anticipated is a break-down of the negotiations in the event of Russia's response being unacceptable to Japan.

Baron Hayashi, the Japanese minister at London, in an interview was very emphatic regarding the rumors that Japan would modify her demands. He said: "I think it is very well understood that my government from the first has asked an irreducible minimum."

The Associated Press is officially informed that the Japanese government will not accept the mediation of any of the foreign powers.

COREAN PRINCE EXPECTED.

Prince Eui Wha, who, according to advices from Seoul, is to be placed on the throne of Corea if the present emperor is dethroned, is supposed to be on his way to Washington. Officials at the Corean legation there admit that the prince is coming but will not say when he is expected. It is reported the legation officials fear an effort to kidnap him by some of the Corean government agents in the United States.

The New York World's London cable says: No importance is attached in official or diplomatic circles here to the statements cabled from the far east on the alleged authority of a Russian official that Russia would not recognize the terms of the treaty between the United States and China with reference to appointment of American consuls in Manchuria.

The only excited people in Port Arthur are the newspaper correspondents. The town is quiet except for a few murders of Russians by Chinese bands and several suspicious fires. At Harbin there are ten murders weekly and the streets are unsafe at night. The local chief says quantities of dynamite have been discovered in the masonry of several large bridges of the Manchurian line. He anticipates that on the outbreak of war the railway will be cut in scores of places. News of the occupation of Masampho was received at Port Arthur calmly, but the Russians are unanimous in declaring that a "Yellow Bosphorus" will not be tolerated.

COREA MAY LIGHT FIRE.

A Washington dispatch says:—The situation in Corea is arousing fresh apprehension of renewed trouble in the far east. It has been the opinion of the military experts here that in the event of war between Russia and Japan, Corea would be made the battle ground, at least in the beginning. Mr. Allen, the American minister at Seoul, cabled the State department from Seoul as follows:

"Considerable disturbances throughout Corea. The Japanese have been attacked in many places."

It is learned that in view of the possibility of Corea being unable to afford proper protection to Japanese subjects the Tokio authorities have dispatched a Japanese military officer of the highest rank, namely, a major-general, to Seoul, where he will be in a position to direct any military operations that Japanese troops may undertake. The Corean government has 3,500 men under arms but they have not been trained in the modern school of war, and resemble constabulary rather than soldiers. It is anticipated that Japan in Corea will repeat the performance of Russia in Manchuria, and make the disturbance on the Japanese railway the ground for a military occupation of the line in great force, corresponding Manchurian railway.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

Markets have held firm during the past week, resulting in a little higher prices at the end of the week. The American speculative markets have been irregular and active, being influenced from day to day by the color of the news on the Russo-Japanese situation. They are also very much under the influence of the Armour operations, and between the two the trading is made nervous and erratic, sometimes strong and excited, at other times dull and easy, but so long as war is apprehended there will be little risk of the price going down much. On the week prices in the American markets show an advance of around 1¼c. per bushel. Outside of the situation in the American speculative markets caused by the apprehension of war and the Armour operations, the world's wheat situation is the reverse of bullish. In the United States the primary receipts of wheat continue to show a large increase over the corresponding date of last year, and the exports of wheat and flour are running very much smaller. This is allowing the American visible supply to increase largely at a time of year when it usually begins to decrease, albeit it is still about ten million bushels less than the same date a year ago. On January 1st the world's visible supply, according to computation made by three eminent grain trade papers, was 178,274,000 bushels, against 175,482,000 bushels on January 1st, 1903. While America has been a moderate shipper to Europe ever since the beginning of the crop year on July 1st last, other countries have more than supplied the requirements of Europe during that time, heavy although these have been and continue to be. And now Australia and Argentina have begun to make the first shipments from their largest crops on record, and these with India will perhaps more than supplement the probably dwindling supplies from Russia and the Danube. The immediate future of prices doubtless hangs on the news from the east. With an outbreak of actual hostilities there would probably be a quick temporary flurry, but it is an undetermined question whether war would cause prices to stay up or not, while with an early, peaceful ending of the difficulty prices might slump several cents. Later on in the season prices will be governed by the prospects for this year's crops. At present the winter wheat crops in Europe and America are in fairly good shape, in most cases not so far forward as they were last year at this time, but with ordinary favorable weather during spring and summer they may give abundant results. The visible supply increased last week 1,995,000 bushels, against an increase of 1,819,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of only 378,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 8,232,000 bushels against 8,778,000 bushels last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 1,234,000 bushels against an increase of 91,000 bushels the previous week and a decrease of 3,598,000 bushels last year.

Manitoba wheat has been firm or dull according as the American markets advanced or declined. Shipping trade is unusually quiet, prices being too high to allow of export to any extent. On the week prices are unchanged on the higher grades but sharply lower for feed wheat, of which there is an over-supply. 3 northern is also ½c. lower on the week. At the close of business prices were as follows, viz.: 1 northern, 81¾c; 2 northern, 78⅞c; 3 northern, 74⅞c; No. 4 wheat, 68c; feed, 51c, and feed No. 2 41c, spot or January delivery. For May delivery prices are: 1 northern, 86½c; 2 northern, 83½c; 3 northern, 79½c; No. 4 wheat, 72c, all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN DEAD

A Remarkable and National American Character at Rest.

On January 18th George Francis Train died at the Mills hotel in New York, of heart failure resulting from nephritis.

Citizen George Francis Train was one of the national characters of the United States. Ever and always he was ceaselessly in motion, flitting from east to west, from north to south. He was a merchant in Boston and in Australia; a smuggler in China; a street railway builder in England, Switzerland and Denmark; a traveler in Russia and Japan; a lecturer in the United States; a citizen of the world.

Train claimed that he invented the rubber-tipped lead pencil; that he invented the carriage step; that he built the first tram road in London; that he might have been president of an Australian republic; that in all of his fifteen trips to jail he had never gone there for a real crime. He laid claim to being the originator of nearly everything with which the world is now acquainted, and undertook to prove his claims. From his aerie in the Mills hote in New York—he called it the Mills Palace, though his room rent was but three dollars a week—he looked back on his enormously active life and showed how his work, his play, his schemes and his trips to jail have benefited mankind.

In the preface of the book he published what he called his "autobiography boiled down—400 pages in 200 words." Here it is:

Born 3-24-'29. Orphaned New Orleans '33. (Father, mother and three sisters—yellow fever.) Came north alone, four years old, to grandmother, Waltham, Mass. Supported self since babyhood. IROQUOIS FIRE ACTIONS

Steps Taken to Secure Entry of Suits Aggregating $6,000,000.

A dispatch from Chicago, dated the 19th of January, says:—The Tribune to-day says: In anticipation of a flood of death claims and personal injury suits that may reach $6,000,000, the financial interests behind the Iroquois theatre company have commenced a fight to prevent the coroner's jury from disclosing their identity. Harry J. Powers and Will Davis, resident managers of the company, will probably be heard to-day, and their appearance on the witness stand will bring a final determination of the rights of the coroner. Under instructions from Attorney Pyne, the manager will refuse to answer questions touching on the financial backing of the play-house. "All witnesses will be required to answer such questions as may tend to help the jury in fixing the criminal responsibility for these deaths," said Coroner Traeger. "If such questions also tend to lay foundations for civil actions that cannot be helped."

MACLEOD RANCHER DEAD

W. R. Stewart Expired in Telegraph Office at St. Thomas.

A St. Thomas dispatch, dated Jan. 18, says:—Wm. R. Stewart, of Macleod, Alberta, an extensive rancher, who has been visiting at Ridgetown, came to the city this afternoon with his wife and son, en route to Galt and Guelph to visit relatives. Mr. Stewart entered the C.P.R. telegraph office to send a telegram to Galt and had started to write the message, when he fell over and was dead in a few minutes.

Disaster at Bloemfontein.

A waterspout at Bloemfontein, Orange River Colony, on January 17th, destroyed three hotels and many houses, and it is believed resulted in loss of life. The number of dead, however, was not ascertained. Hundreds of persons have been rendered homeless and destitute by the disaster.

The great demand for a pleasant, safe and reliable antidote for all affections of the throat and lungs is fully met with in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It is a purely vegetable compound, and acts promptly and magically in subduing all coughs, colds, bronchitis, inflammation of the lungs, etc. It is so palatable that a child will not refuse it, and is put at a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

Little Johnny—Mrs. Talkemdown paid a high compliment to me today. Mother—Did she, really? Well, there's no denying that woman has sense. What did she say? Little Johnny—She said she didn't see how you came to have such a nice little boy as I am.

A PURELY VEGETABLE PILL.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are compounded from roots, herbs and solid extracts of known virtue in the treatment of liver and kidney complaints and in giving tone to the system whether enfeebled by overwork or deranged through excesses in living. They require no testimonial. Their excellent qualities are well known to all those who have used them and and they commend themselves to dyspeptics and those subject to biliousness who are in quest of a beneficial medicine.

THE DESIRE FOR STORIES.

From the "Once Upon a Time" Stage to "That Reminds Me."

Our earliest instinct is to ask for a story, our latest to tell one unasked. Human life is bounded at either end by a phrase: "once upon a time" at one end, "that reminds me" at the other. Above the first instinct we rise gradually, gradually declining to the second. Not that the narrative sense ever dies in us; only that in the plenitude of our powers we are not satisfied with a story that is nothing more than a story, a narrative for narration's sake.

The mind of a child is all agape for facts, for it is empty, and nothing is so quickly filling, so easily assimilable, as a dish of facts. Facts of fiction are preferred by the child to actual facts because they satisfy also its strong imaginative sense. Its moral and intellectual senses are still in abeyance. Deduce from any story "a moral" or an idea, and the child runs away rudely. There lies the difference between us and it. Our moral and intellectual senses are flourishing, and by their strength our imagination is proportionately weakened. Grimm is not enough for us. Our moral sense cries aloud for Hans Andersen. Dumas leaves us cold. Our mind needs Balzac. It is not enough for us that once upon a time there were three princesses or three musketeers who suffered or did some queer things. We want those triads to illustrate, to symbolize, to mean something, to corroborate or upset some theory that we have formed, to quicken our mind and affect our conduct.

Such are the prime needs of our maturity. Comes Time, mowing away with his scythe our intellectual and moral curiosity; nor does he restore to us our old imagination. He crops us bare of all but experience. Things that have happened—especially, old egoists that we are, the things that have happened to ourselves—are the only things that rouse us from our lethargy. "Anecdotage" is an ugly phrase. "Second childhood," less harsh, is not less exactly descriptive. For our last state, the state where narrative is absolute despot, was our first state too.—Max Beerbohm in Saturday Review.

WHY HE WASN'T PROMOTED

He watched the clock.
He was always grumbling.
He was always behindhand.
He asked too many questions.
His stock excuse was "I forgot."
He wasn't ready for the next step.
He did not put his heart in his work.
He learned nothing from his blunders.
He chose his friends among his inferiors.
He was content to be a second rate man.
He ruined his ability by half doing things.
He never dared to act on his own judgment.
He did not think it worth while to learn how.
He thought it was clever to use coarse and profane language.
He imitated the habits of men who could stand more than he could.
He did not learn that the best part of his salary was not in his pay envelope.—Success.

Speed of Birds.

Frequently arguments arise as to the speed with which wild birds fly, and many men of science have sought to determine something about it. Naturally it is impossible to fix the record made by such birds as grouse, quail and snipe when they first arise, but it is safe to say that they are not going one-half as fast as the luckless gunner who misses them imagines. With the migratory fowls of known fast flight, such as ducks and geese, something more nearly accurate is known. The green winged teal is about the speediest of them all. It does something like ninety miles an hour as readily as a sparrow dives into an inviting rain-spout. The canvasback is only a trifle slower, probably eighty-five miles being its limit, while the black duck, mallard and redhead fall below this, being timed at about eighty miles. Still this is plenty fast enough to insure lots of misses unless the fellow with the gun looks down the rib straight and pulls the trigger at the right time.

Elephants and Mice.

An elephant is usually afraid of any small animal to which it is unaccustomed. A dog or cat, and sometimes even a mouse, will cause him annoyance, especially if it runs between the animal's legs. The noise of a mouse running through the hay will often cause an elephant to become excited, but I have never known or heard of a mouse getting on an elephant's trunk. The terrors of the mouse to a larger animal is an old story, and many foolish superstitions have arisen from it.—St. Nicholas.

STARTLING STORY OF MRS. ADAMS

Stricken With Bright's Disease, all Hope of Life Was Abandoned.

Her Restoration to Health Causes a Sensation in the Medical World.

Doctors Gave Her up, but Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Her Completely.

Collingwood, Ont., Jan. 25.—(Special.)—While Canada stands aghast at the terrible inroads Bright's Disease is making on the ranks of the brightest and best of her citizens; while the medical profession stand helpless before the dread destroyer of life, Collingwood has among her citizens one who knows all its terrors, who has been carried down by it until the portals of death were open to receive her, and who to-day is a strong, healthy, happy woman—a woman who knows Bright's Disease in all its hideousness, but who fears it not, because she knows its cure.

Mrs. Adams' Story.

Mrs. Thomas Adams is this lady's name, and she has now been a resident of Collingwood for a year and a half. Before that she lived in Burk's Falls, where she is widely known and highly respected. Mrs. Adams feels it her duty to spread the good news all over Canada, all over the world, that she has found a cure for Bright's Disease, and that that cure is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Yes," she said, when interviewed regarding her case, "my friends can tell you how terribly ill I was. My doctor pronounced it Bright's Disease and Sciatica, but I got no relief from anything he gave me. It was Dodd's Kidney Pills that drove away the terrible disease, raised me from my bed of suffering, and made me a well and happy woman.

"I was for years troubled with a pain in my back, at times I would have to keep my bed. In March, 1900, I got so bad with pains in my back and hip that I was more helpless than an infant, and at times gave up all hope of getting well. I had no power of my back or limbs.

"I was for eight months an invalid, something too terrible for words to describe. My doctor said I had Bright's Disease, but he could do nothing to give me relief.

How the Cure Came.

"It was then a friend of my husband induced me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I had no faith in them, for I never expected to get better. But I tried them, and I thank God that I did. They brought me relief almost from the first, and after taking three boxes I was able to do my own work and look after my children.

"It is three years since I started using Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I have not had a return of my trouble since. When I feel a little out of sorts I just get a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and they drive all the pains away."

It is needless to say that Mrs. Adams' friends all use Dodd's Kidney Pills. They find that a remedy that cures Bright's Disease easily disposes of all the earlier stages of Kidney complaint.

Keep right on performing kind acts regardless of the ingratitude with which they may be received.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

"I cannot praise Baby's Own Tablets too highly," writes Mrs. James S. Beach, Campbell's Bay, Quebec. "From the time my baby was born he was troubled with pains in the stomach and bowels and a rash on his skin which made him restless day and night. I got nothing to help him until I gave him Baby's Own Tablets, and under their use the trouble soon disappeared, and all my friends are now praising my baby, he looks so healthy and well. I give him an occasional Tablet, and they keep him well. I can heartily recommend the Tablets to any mother who has a young baby."

Thousands of other mothers praise this medicine just as warmly, and keep it on hand in case of emergency. The Tablets cure all the minor ills of little ones: they act gently and speedily, and are absolutely safe. OUR FIRST REPUBLIC.

It Was Not the United States, but the Louisiana Republic.

The first republic in this hemisphere to succeed in compelling recognition of its independence was, of course, the republic whose proud capital is Washington. But there was an earlier one which died soon after its birth, of which little or nothing is said in our American histories.

When France, in 1764, ceded Louisiana to Spain, the subjects of King Louis XV. objected to the transfer without their consent. The local government submitted the question to the council, which, under the lead of Nicholas Chauvin de Lafreniere, rose in revolt. Lafreniere called a convention of the people at New Orleans, while the new Spanish governor was on his way to the colony, and the convention selected a delegate to go to Paris to dissuade the French king from his course. Louis XV., however, rebuffed the delegate and sent back word that the people must recognize the authority of Spain.

It was then that the people of Louisiana resolved on a radical course. On the night of Oct. 28, 1768, the rebels took possession of the French forts and the gates of the town in the name of the republic of Louisiana. The old French governor offered no resistance, while the new Spanish governor took refuge on a ship and sailed for Havana. On Oct. 2, 1768, the council at New Orleans adopted a formal declaration of independence, officially named itself the republic of Louisiana, elected Lefreniere "protector" and prepared a written constitution. This interesting government lasted from October, 1768, to July, 1769, when a Spanish squadron of twenty-four vessels, with an army of 2,600 men, arrived at New Orleans. The new republican state was destroyed and five republican leaders, including Lafreniere, were put to death. Then all the republic's official papers, including its declaration of independence and constitution, were burned in the public square.

A BOWERY INCIDENT.

The Invited Guest Who Was Called Before the Feast.

The missionary had finished his talk to the crowd of derelicts in a Bowery mission and went around the room to shake them by the hand. There was one man sitting on a bench whose face was so utterly loathsome that the missionary's gorge rose in his throat, and he was compelled to pass him by. The man's dulled eye marked the look of disgust, and in a tone of mingled dejection and resentment he cried out:

"Say, mister, why don't you shake hands wid me?"

The young missionary turned, conscience stricken, looked into the sin scarred features and grasped the man's hand.

"Really, brother, you must forgive me," he stammered. "I—I couldn't help it when I saw you—your face. But I'll make amends. You must take dinner with me tomorrow night."

The broken man glanced at his rags in confusion, blushed like a girl and gasped:

"Wot! Me take dinner wid you! Me go to your house! Me!"

"Yes, I mean it. I'll come tomorrow night and get you."

True to his word, the missionary presented himself at the lodging house the next evening and inquired for the man. A corpse was lying on the table, a handkerchief spread over its face. The clerk jerked his thumb in the direction of the body.

"That's Wilson," he said. "He had fixed himself up and was waitin' for you; dropped dead half an hour ago."

Embarrassing.

The Squire's Pretty Daughter (examining the village school)—Now, children, can you tell me what a miracle is?

The children looked at one another, but remained silent.

"Can no one answer this question?" the new curate asked, who was standing behind the squire's daughter.

A little girl was suddenly struck with a brilliant idea. She held up her hand excitedly.

"Well, Nellie?" the squire's daughter asked, smiling approvingly.

"Please, miss," the small child replied breathlessly, "mother says 'twill be a miracle if you don't marry the new curate."—London Globe.

Recognized It.

"This," smiled the fond young wife as she passed a plate of dessert to her husband, "is cottage pudding. I made it myself."

The man tasted of it.

"I'd have known it was cottage pudding," he asserted.

"You would?" she asked, delighted.

"Yes. I can taste the plaster and the wall paper. What did you do with the shingles and the bricks of the chimney?"

Topsy's Full Name.

"Mamma, what is Topsy's other name?"

"Topsy in the play? I don't know, dear. I guess she hasn't any other name. It's just Topsy, that's all."

"Oh, she has another name! I heard papa speak it yesterday, but I can't think of it now. Oh, yes, I remember! It's Topsy Turvy."

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE need of greater police protection at Michel and Morrissey is becoming more and more apparent. The single arm of the law at these points is in each case greatly overworked. Constable Henderson of Michel is supposed to keep a vigilant eye over the wrong doer at the Loop and Crow's Nest. There are no justices of the peace and no police court in Michel and all his cases are brought to Fernie, which necessitates his absence from that town very frequently. Constable Tranter at Morrisey has the supervision of three separate towns, Morrissey, Morrissey Mines, and Tonkin, and although there are resident justices his presence is often required in Fernie. These men are on duty all day long and not infrequently they are required to do duty all night as well. At any event they are required to attend to every call at any hour of the night, and it is no exaggeration to state that they are "worked off their feet." The remedy is simple, but it involves further expense, the addition of an assistant constable at these points. The government is worthy of commendation for its efforts in keeping down unnecessary expenses in this department but the time has arrived when such an economy is no longer compatible with common justice to its servants or with adequate protection to society at large.

THE appropriation secured for this district by its representative, W. R. Ross, as appears in another column, will doubtless meet with the approval of all who have followed with concern the evident lack of attention given to this corner of the Province by former governments. When it is considered that the total estimates for this year are only slightly over 50 per cent. of last year's, the local situation appears in a yet more favorable light. Not only is the total amount large but it is so divided as to meet the exigencies of the district in as full a manner as possible. The $1,800 set aside for the Fernie lock-up, if spent in the manner recommended by Supt. Hussey, will put the government buildings in shape for temporary use until funds can be had for a first-class new structure. The school addition is urgently required as the present accommodation is overcrowded. The roads will certainly be put in much better condition by the judicious expenditure of $5,000 upon them. The Morrissey bridge is a necessity not only through local conditions but for the completion of the road from Elko to Fernie. The school houses and lock-ups at Morrissey and Michel are necessities that could not wait longer without working serious injustice upon the people of those towns. Taken altogether this district has every reason to be satisfied with the government aid that Mr. Ross has secured for it.

CONTRIBUTED COLUMN

It may be customary to wait till the proverbial horse is stolen before we lock the stable, but the better plan assuredly is to get it locked as soon as the news arrives that the horse thieves are around. A few weeks ago the people of this continent were thrown into grief by the fearful holocaust at the Iroquois theatre in Chicago when 560 persons perished as a result of the fire which consumed it. It was but natural that the authorities of Chicago should begin a tour of inspection of all public buildings, closing up all such as did not comply with the full requirements of the by-laws, so that through the days of mourning Chicago was a dark city.

The councils of many other cities have taken warning and have made closer examination of their public buildings, including schools. This is a step in the right direction. But another step would be in the line of preparation, teaching people how to act when a like danger menaces them. It would however, be very unpleasant and disconcerting to have a false alarm of "fire" raised in the middle of a theatrical performance, a church service or a large public gathering of adults merely for the purpose of teaching them how to escape safely and systematically. But such training can be given and should be given in all our public schools. On Jan. 5th of this year a large public school in Toronto was discovered to be on fire, the lower floors and partitions were already burning rapidly when the gong sounded as for ordinary "fire drill" and 600 children trooped into the corridors, marched rapidly and rhythmically into the open air, and in two minutes every child and teacher was safe. In a short time after the building was a ruin. They were saved by knowing exactly what to do from previous habit. Who would regard the value of the time spent in this drill, the sudden breaking in of lessons or inconvenience to teachers and scholars, when we think that not a single life was lost? Here is a hint it might be well for the citizens of Fernie to act on, and also the trustees of our schools. No public building in our town should be allowed to keep open where a fire starting near the entrance would cut off the only practical means of escape. If we have a death trap, shut it up until it is made safe. Our school here is also of goodly proportion, with each room well filled with scholars, with no fire drill to prepare the children for an emergency or equip them for such in later life. To inaugerate such practice, which is compulsory in most of our cities, might mean a small outlay now, but would not only decrease the danger to our children but make them more valuable citizens ever after.

Permit me to call attention to a habit which has become altogether too prevalent, which reflects no credit or honor on the user, and certainly gives great offense to many who are compelled to listen. It is the habit of using profane and vulgar language. On the street, in the train, at the camps or mills at work or recreation a great number of men insist on mixing their general conversation with words and epithets at once ignoble rude and denoting lack of manliness. Some use profanity only when drunk, others only when angry, while others make it a common medium of their conversation. A Vancouver judge recently severely sentenced a man for a crime committed while drunk, stating that drunkenness itself was a crime and therefore no excuse. Nor should this disgusting habit be forgiven on the excuse of drink. Profanity is a crime, and as such should be discountenanced by every fair means.

Of all our evil habits this is certainly the most insane and foolish. The liar may gain by his falsity, the thief get rich by his theft, etc., but this habit satisfies no craving or passion and brings no advantage to the user. It marks that stage of depravity which is obnoxious to God and all pure minded persons. Self respect soon goes, closely followed by loss of respect for all others. In his determination to assert his freedom the profane man hesitates not to rob others of theirs, and sets himself up as a teacher of filth to every susceptible child within hearing of him. In vain may parents endeavor to raise their children for good and pure citizens, this walking menace is an ever present force to destroy. Surely these people never loved their mothers nor have they a sister whose purity they honor. In some cities of England anti profane societies have recently been started which are said to be accomplishing great good. Our district may not be any worse than many others through the country in this regard, but that is no reason why this evil should longer be tolerated, and it would certainly be a great pleasure to many if several hundred persons were to join an anti-profane society here and keep their vow.

STEALING COAL

Cars of Coal Stolen at Morrissey—Case Against Houser Dismissed.

A. Houser, a Morrissey miner, was brought in by Constable Tranter charged with stealing cars of coal from other miners. He was let out on bail and the case came up on Wednesday before Magistrate Forbes, J. H. Harvey appeared for the defence and S. Herchmer for the prosecution. Checkweighman Evans was the chief witness for the prosecution. He stated that the accused had admitted the theft to him. He had got the cars credited to him by substituting his own check in place of the owner.

The defence produced a number of witnesses to prove that the accused was not in the mines on the day in question, he being refused admittance on account of intoxication. The prosecution could not prove that the checks had been changed on the cars outside of the mine and the case was dismissed.

DELEGATES TO CONVENTION

The Fernie Conservative Association held a meeting last night to elect delegates to the provincial convention at Victoria on Feb. 1st. A. H. The following was elected:—Dr. Bonnell, F. W. Burn, A. M. Grimes and W. H. Herchmer. Dr. Bonnell left this morning to attend the convention taking with him the proxies of Messrs. Burn and Herchmer. Mr. Grimes proxy will be held by Mr. Cree.

More than a hundred people partook of the splendid repast spread in the capacious dining room of the Miner's Hotel. Dislocated her Shoulder.

Mrs. Johanna Soderholm of Fergus Falls, Minn., fell and dislocated her shoulder. She had a surgeon get it back in place as soon as possible, but it was quite sore and pained her very much. Her son mentioned that he had seen Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised for sprains and soreness, and she asked him to buy her a bottle of it, which he did. It quickly relieved her and enabled her to sleep which she had not done for several days. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

CHAPTER VI.

UNDER A CLOUD.

While the two lodgers at 13 Felspar road and the two policemen from the station at Clayfields were discussing in the back parlour the murder—for murder it was deemed to have been—of Mrs. Davorn, the young doctor was in the front parlour endeavouring to comfort the weeping girl. At first he almost dreaded to refer in any way to the terrible tragedy. Maurice Leclerc was himself in a wildly excited condition. When he had felt that Ethel had grown calm he could contain himself no longer, and commenced to pace the room, his hands folded behind his back. In a few moments he felt that he must speak directly of the tragedy.

"It is a horrible business altogether, dearest," he said. "The more I look at it the worse it seems."

"I should not feel the awfulness of it so much only for the hot words I had last night with her—with my dear aunt, who has been my only friend and protector since my father died. It cuts me to the heart to think I can nevermore see her or hear her voice, never be able to seek her forgiveness."

"I know, I know, Ethel, dearest," said Leclerc, standing still a moment, and then seizing the girl's hand. "I must seem horribly selfish to you, I am horribly selfish, but try not to blame me, dearest. I love you better than all the world; I cannot think of anything or anybody calmly when my thoughts are of you. Do not think too badly of me if I cannot share the sorrow you naturally feel at your terrible loss. We were never friends—she and I. It is your trouble and my own selfish troubles that are now distracting me. Let me be candid, dearest, as I have always, I hope, been with you, whatever may have been my faults. I awoke this morning the happiest man in England. My hope of calling you this day my wife dashed all my dark clouds away. I am now the most wretched man in the world."

Dr. Leclerc spoke with almost breathless rapidity.

"Don't say that, Maurice. Try and control yourself. Why should you be the most wretched man in the world?"

"Why? Am I not already suspected—I can feel it, know it—of the crime that has been committed under this roof?"

"Oh, you must not say such wicked, such foolishly wicked things!" cried the young girl, rising and staring at him with wild horror-laden eyes.

"Listen to me, dearest; listen to me. I am trying to control myself. On my way here I met Percival and a police inspector in the Crescent road. They told me what had happened—so far as they knew. I guessed the rest. The money is gone—this cursed money that is always at the bottom of all mischief. Is it not so?"

"I think the money is gone," answered the girl in a trembling voice. "The desk is lying on the floor broken up. It caught my eyes before I knew anything of the terrible discovery I was about to make."

"My poor darling. It is selfish of me to be able to think of little else but my miserable self. But don't you see how much reason I have to be almost mad. Don't you see that with that other charge hanging over me, with the knowledge that I was in sore trouble for money, that money would save me from disgrace, from ruin—don't you see that suspicion will be fastened upon me, such suspicion as I can never hope to outlive? Suspicion—God help me!—not only of theft, but of murder."

He flung up his arms as he spoke and was again about to continue his wild walk up and down the room, when the young girl caught him firmly by the wrists and drawing him toward her kissed his lips.

"Dearest!" he murmured, rapturously. "You almost make me forget that I am so utterly unworthy of you."

"Come, Maurice, you must not give way to foolish fears. The guilty person, whoever he is, will be discovered."

"My darling, my darling! But," with a weary sigh, "you must think of the situation as it stands. Here am I—a man in desperate need, a man about to fly from the country—the last person who visited this house last night—who visited it—but who will believe me?—only to be near her who was to have been my wife to-day."

"Yes, dearest Maurice—who will be your wife to-day if you wish it."

"No, no, no," he exclaimed. "Not with this new cloud hanging over me. It would be a cowardly act, a dastardly act, to give you my doubly-smirched name."

"What concern is it of any one on earth if I choose to accept that name? I have no fear. I am alone in the world. I have only you."

"You tempt me sadly, dearest," he murmured, "but I will not be mean enough, selfish enough, to take advantage of your great generosity. No, it cannot be, Ethel. Just think of it calmly. Look at matters as if I were nothing to you." His voice was now quieter and his manner well under control. "I alone—apart from you, my angel, upon whom no suspicion can rest—I alone knew this money was in the house. It would have saved me from exposure and ruin if I could but possess it. I was in the house last night, unknown to every one except the dead woman and yourself. We had hot words."

"Alas! we had," sighed the young girl.

"This will all come out. I do not intend to deny anything. I am already a man with a stain on my character which I cannot wipe out without money—curse it—without money! Do you not see what a strong case there will be against me?"

"But, Maurice, you must not talk so very wildly. You forget that no one has accused you of any connection with the theft here. Whoever was wicked enough to steal the money was probably wicked enough to commit the blacker deed—the deed I shudder to think of."

Dr. Leclerc caught her hand and pressed it to his lips.

"The culprit will be discovered, Maurice. Why rack yourself with suspicion which exists only in your own mind? Some one broke in here last night—at least the police think so."

"Of course. What would be more natural than that I should break in? I, who knew the house; I, who knew what no one else was aware of—that the money was in the room upstairs."

"It is very wicked of you, Maurice, to torture me."

"I am a brute. But, Ethel, my darling, you must not think too badly of me now. I am not in my normal frame of mind. This awful news has made me nearly frantic. I cannot think of anything reasonably now. I admit that. I can only regard my miserable self as one to whom the fates have been unkind."

"My poor Maurice!"

"Most unkind, dearest, except in one way—that they have willed that you should have the patience, my angel, to bear with me, that you should not fling me from you as I deserve to be flung."

"Maurice!"

"For days and weeks I have been foolishly weak, engrossed in one thought, lost in one dream—that you loved me and that this was to be our wedding day."

A vivid flush mounted to Ethel Rodney's tear-stained cheeks. Then she lifted her white hands and drew his head toward her. "Dearest," she said, "one part of your dream is no dream. I love you with all my heart."

CHAPTER VII.

A DISCUSSION.

"I am so glad it is you who have undertaken this job, Mr. Goringe," said Inspector Briggs, as the two men sat in the dining-room of 13 Felspar road.

Joseph Goringe, a clean-shaven, closely-cropped, sharp-featured man, with strange introspective blue eyes, was an officer despatched to Clayfields by the authorities at Scotland Yard. Ebenezer Briggs was one of the local inspectors at Clayfields. He was a tall man, fully 6 feet high, with a sharp nose protruding unduly, a short, thin upper lip, a dimpled, shaven chin, and a pair of florid whiskers, which caused his face to seem a great deal broader than it really was.

"Thank you, inspector," said Goringe, gazing at Briggs with his strange blue eyes. "I can honestly return the compliment. I am very glad to find you are my comrade here. I have not forgotten the last transaction we had together."

Inspector Briggs flushed with pleasure.

It was about six o'clock on the evening of the 10th of October, a lighted lamp stood on the dining-room table, a bright fire burned in the grate.

"Now then," said Detective Goringe, "let us go through the case carefully together, and see what we shall see. 204Y is evidently qualifying for Scotland Yard," turning over a notebook.

"He is a very zealous officer, is Metcalf."

"Yes. I shall want my information to be a little less condensed. Here is the case as I have taken it in," laying Constable Metcalf's notebook on the table and folding his arms. "But, first and foremost, are we sure of privacy here?"

"She is in the next room."

"Quite," answered Inspector Briggs confidently. "Miss Rodney is in her room—attic floor—packing up. Says she couldn't spend a night in the house with the knowledge that the dead body was here. Steinworth—No 1 lodger, as I may call him—is out searching for fresh diggings with the protecting eye of a plain-clothes man upon him. Vickery—lodger No 2—is in bed in his room."

"Overhead?"

"Yes. He is in a kind of a torpor. Dr. Percival saw him an hour ago and is going to call round again between 8 and 9. He doesn't think we need be uneasy about him. At any rate he is locked in securely, and I have ascertained that if we don't lift our voices unduly not a whisper can reach to his room. I had a pretty thorough search of the house early to-day, from garret to basement."

"That's the lot—the whole human family here?"

"Yes; with the exception of the lady of the house, who is lying stone dead in her room on the first landing. Her body will be removed to-morrow for the post mortem at Clayfields hospital."

"Next the Vestry hall?"

"The same."

"No servant in the house?"

"No; there hasn't been one sleeping in the house for some time. The young lady and the dead woman managed the house with the assistance of a girl who went home every night. Then I have an officer outside—young 260Y—to keep any stray visitors—curiosity mongers the like—off the premises."

"Very well, then, let us proceed. I will give you my statement of the case, and if I get astray you will pick me up. Mrs. Davorn, widow, aged 45 or thereabouts, is discovered dead in her bed this morning at 6 o'clock. Person who discovers her dead is Miss Ethel Rodney, niece of Mrs. Davorn. Person to whom she imparts this discovery is Police Officer Metcalf, 204Y division, who has been for some minutes previously conversing with Albert Steinworth, a lodger in the house in front bedroom. Steinworth has challenged 204Y and has declared he is locked into his room, and asks police constable to rouse the house, as he wants to get away in order to catch an early train at Paddington. 204Y, as soon as the hall door is opened for him by Miss Rodney and when he learns from her that the lady of the house is dead or dying, despatches Miss Rodney for the nearest doctor. 204Y then goes to room on first landing. Finds Mrs. Davorn dead in her bed. No signs of violence or of a struggle. The only thing exceptional that catches his eye is a broken desk on the floor, a discovery which he gave no attention to at the time. 204Y next proceeds to first-floor landing. Finds door of front bedroom locked, as stated previously by Albert Steinworth. Key is in lock outside. 204Y liberates Steinworth and then finds that Bernard James Vickery, whose room is on the same floor, is also locked into his room. Key in lock outside. Great difficulty in arousing Vickery. Dr. Percival arrives. Pronounces Mrs. Davorn to be dead. Considers she has been dead for some hours. Doctor discovers under Mrs. Davorn's bed a sponge, which he declares to contain distinct traces of chloroform."

"Loose conduct on the part of chloroformist to leave such a witness in the room."

"Apparently. But remember there may have been a motive. To resume: 204Y learns subsequently from Miss Rodney that there was a sum of money in the room of deceased woman the previous night. Thirteen hundred pounds in notes, according to Miss Rodney. And I must say," observed Detective Goringe, "that the young lady was remarkably free in her admissions, and that 204Y certainly did not err on the side of bashfulness."

"He is a very zealous officer."

"So you have already informed me. But, to pick up the thread of my statement again, this money has, it is ascertained, disappeared. The desk in which the notes were stowed away has been broken open. Miss Rodney states that only she and one other person—that other person being as yet unnamed by her—knew the money was in the house. Later on Dr. Maurice Leclerc calls here, and insists upon seeing Miss Rodney. After his interview with her he asks to see the inspector, who has just arrived. You, the inspector, receive from him a statement—a very reckless statement, I must admit—that he is engaged to Miss Rodney, and was to have married her to-day against the consent of her aunt, now deceased. He also states that he was in the house late last night, after Steinworth and Vickery had retired to their rooms for the night; that he had a stormy interview with Mrs. Davorn, in the course of which interview frequent references were made to the £1,300 then lying in Mrs. Davorn's room. In the bedroom of Bernard James Vickery is found a large bottle of chloroform with some of the drug in the bottle. Also found several empty vials, labeled chloroform and ether. Vickery declares he uses these things, these drugs, in the course of some experiments he is pursuing, but as to how or upon whom he used them he has so far offered no explanation. He admits that he did not go to bed last night until very late—in fact, that he did not retire to rest until the small hours of the morning. He was strangely agitated when he learned that chloroform had been administered to the deceased, and was probably the cause of her death. This statement or suggestion is made by Albert Steinworth in the presence of Vickery and of Constables 204 and 260. This, so far," said Detective Goringe, "is what I learn of the case and its surroundings."

"A very admirable statement of the facts," observed Inspector Briggs. "But you have forgotten one thing of very serious importance."

"What is that?"

"Metcalf, while he was waiting outside the house this morning for the door to be opened, found the hasp of the front-parlour window forced back."

"I don't call that discovery a matter of very serious importance."

"But with all due deference to you, Mr. Goringe, I am of the other opinion. I don't think anything should be overlooked or made light of in a case of this kind."

"Nor do I. You have not examined that window carefully for yourself?"

"No, I was too busy otherwise all day."

"Very well. Let us examine the window together now."

The two men rose together and stepped into the hall, which was in darkness.

"There is no gas in the house," said Goringe, "but there is a candle and a box of matches on the hall table. Ah! here is the candlestick; this will do," striking a light and proceeding into the front parlour, followed by Inspector Briggs.

The window of the room was a large window, the upper and lower portions being of about equal size, and working on a pully. The blind, now drawn down, was a flowered holland blind, folding on a roller.

"Did 204Y notice this morning whether the blind was up or down?" asked the detective.

"It must have been down, for he stated that he noticed nothing unusual about the house, and if the blind had been drawn up I think he would consider that unusual."

"It doesn't do to think—but I do not consider the matter of serious importance. I examined the window carefully to-day," said Goringe, seizing a chair and placing it alongside the window. "Now, inspector, you mount and examine the sashes and tell me what you think. I'll draw up the blind for you. Take the candlestick."

Inspector Briggs stepped on the chair and was soon busy examining the hasp and its surroundings.

"The two sashes have been jobbed at evidently with a penknife. They fit very closely together," said the inspector after a few minutes.

"Yes. Now stand where you are and keep your eyes on the sashes when they meet. No ordinary penknife blade sufficiently strong to force the hasp back would go between the sashes without making a mark?"

"That is so."

"In this case the person who put the hasp back was careful to do the trick a little too deliberately. He—we'll suppose it was a man for convenience sake—stood on a chair, just as you are standing now, put back the hasp and then jobbed at the sash from the top, inside. Just watch how the marks or cuts are made. They are wider at the top than at the bottom. I am afraid you cannot see very plainly with that poor light. Just slip down and we'll open the window."

"I think I follow you," said the inspector, as he got off the chair.

"Now draw the top sash down and shove the bottom one up. That's it. Get the candle close now and examine the cuts. They are unmistakably made downward, aren't they? If they had been made upward from the outside the marks or cuts would be wide at the bottom. If you go outside and close the window you will see that there is not sufficient space at the lower part—where the sashes join—to get a strong-bladed knife up."

"I'll take your word for it."

"Very well; I think you may. It was a very clumsy piece of work, no doubt done by an amateur in a hurry, and at a time when the hasp-opener was in a highly excitable condition of mind. Don't take my word for it, [illegible]

"Just watch how the marks or cuts are made."

the least glimmer of doubt."

"I am satisfied you are right."

"So am I. Blow out the candle or we'll be collecting a crowd of sightseers in the road."

Inspector Briggs blew out the light.

"You have made up your mind, I see, already, Mr. Goringe, who the murderer is."

"I have not. I have made up my mind on one point only, and that is that the money was stolen by some person who knew the ways of the house, and who did not let himself—or herself—in by the parlour window. But come, inspector, perhaps I am a little previous, as they say. Whatever my views may be I know you have a theory about the whole business. Let us get back to the other room and we'll have it out there."

CHAPTER VIII.

INSPECTOR BRIGGS' THEORY.

The two men returned to the back parlour and resumed their seats.

"I smell tobacco here," observed Detective Goringe. "I will light a pipe while I listen to your version of the business. You don't smoke?"

"No," answered Inspector Briggs curtly.

"You seem a trifle out of sorts," said Goringe, filling his briar-root pipe.

"If that window wasn't opened from outside, it disturbs my calculations, and that is quite enough to put me out of sorts. Anyhow, I feel a bit puzzled for the moment."

"Now, look here," said the detective, lighting his pipe, "I want to make a compact with you this evening. You are a general practitioner. I am a specialist. I have no taste for murder or murderers. To me murderers are uninteresting people. They are either, as a general rule, lunatics or savages. I am a civilized being, with fixed ideas about portable property, and what I like is a good thief, a clever forger—in fact, anything really good in the prigging or swindling line. There I feel I am dealing with sane men. I am on sound ground. The murder business is too full of pitfalls for my taste. Now, Briggs, you haven't started any special fad just yet. I'll give you the murderer, and you'll give me the thief. That's a fair bargain, isn't it?"

"A very fair bargain, but doesn't it mean the same thing? Whoever killed Mrs. Davorn stole the notes."

"Do you think that is quite certain?"

"Is there any reasonable doubt about it?"

"A considerable amount. For instance—to give you a tip to start with—Dr. Percival is not confident that Mrs. Davorn died from inhaling chloroform."

"The deuce! Isn't he? He left no such impression on my mind this morning. Did he tell you this?"

"Not likely. He is too cautious to run the risk of giving himself away, but I formed my own conclusion after a very short interview with him. But do I understand it is a bargain about the dividing of the spoil?"

"Certainly."

"Then make a clean breast of all your suspicions, opinions, and conclusions. You were first in the field after your zealous, and, I must say, very intelligent officer, 204Y. You know the neighbourhood. You have, I take it, a fair general knowledge of the people. You are all there, or rather all here. If you aren't, you ought to be. Help me in every way you can to find the thief, and I'll help you in every way I can to find the murderer. I haven't been idle all day, but I will admit I haven't struck ile yet. All I can offer you at present is the benefit of my criticism."

"Which is worth a great deal more than anything I can offer you in return."

"All right. We shall probably both get at the same result in the end, but I want to start with my mind fixed entirely on the coin—in short, as city folk say, to make it a strictly 'cash transaction.'"

"It must seem a small cash transaction to you."

"I never quarrel with the amounts. I take as much interest—nearly—in tracking a fiver as I do in tracking five and any amount of naughts. Come, begin."

"Of course I am only too glad to do anything you suggest. I am bound to disclose everything to you. So far I have done so."

"I don't think you would be bound to disclose your private opinions to me. We are in a kind of way partners in this job, but you have a private estate in your inner thoughts. We are both, to put it another way, on the outer edge of a circle, each of us bent on arriving at the centre."

"And you want to travel alone?"

"Well, pretty much so. I want to have the honour and glory of finding the coin and leave you the honour and glory of tracking down your bigger criminal."

"Who is the same person?"

"Possibly. Anyhow, as an earnest of our bargain let me have your views. It will help you to piece your case together for the coroner's court—Saturday, isn't it?"

BRAIN CONTROLS EVERY MUSCLE

Injury to Brain or Nerves, Deficiency of Nerve Force Mean Paralysis and Helplessness.

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD.

Every muscle of the body controlled by the will is connected with the brain, and every muscular action is originated by nervous force, generated in the brain and transmitted along the nerves to the muscles.

When the nerves are injured or diseased, when there is a deficiency in the supply of nervous energy, paralysis, locomotor ataxia or some form of helplessness results because the brain no longer has control of the muscles.

It may be weak heart action, inability to digest food, failure of the lungs to purify the blood or impaired action of any of the vital organs, but the cause of trouble is with the nerves.

The restorative action of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is soon felt throughout the entire system, because it restores the vigor and vitality of the nerves—fills them with new nerve force, the vital power of the body; weakness, nervousness, irritability, sleeplessness and low spirits disappear and new energy and strength take their place.

Mrs. D. Ardies, Brandon, Man., writes:—"My son, aged fourteen, and little girl of three years, were both stricken with St. Vitus' Dance. The doctor told us what the ailment was, but could not keep them from getting worse and worse, so when I received a book about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I decided to buy it. The boy had lost eighteen pounds in two months, and could scarcely take hold of anything. The little girl lost the power of her tongue, and could scarcely speak.

"I now take pleasure in stating that they are both quite well, and you would never know there had been anything the matter. The boy has gained twenty-five pounds in weight. I am very thankful there is such a medicine on the market, and that I happened to get the little book just when I did. It just came in time as though it had been sent on purpose."

HELP ONE ANOTHER

AN INTERESTING CHAT WITH REV. R. HATCHETT.

He Asserts People Should Speak Plainly When Their Words Will Benefit Others.

From the Recorder, Brockville, Ont.

Rev. R. Hackett, general agent of the African Methodist Church in Canada, spent several days in Brockville recently in the interests of the church work. Talking with a reporter he said he always liked to visit Brockville, because he found so many of its citizens in hearty sympathy with the church work he represents. "And besides, said Mr. Hatchett, I have what may be called a sentimental reason for liking Brockville. It is the home of a medicine that has done me much good and has done much good to other members of my family. I refer to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." "Would you mind," asked the reporter, "giving your experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills?" "Not at all," said Mr. Hatchett, "I always say a good word for this medicine whenever the opportunity offers. I know some people object to speaking in public about medicines they use, but I think this is a narrow view to take. When one finds something really good and really helpful in relieving human ills, it seems to me it is a duty we owe other sufferers to put them in way of obtaining new health. You can say from me therefore that I think Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a very superior medicine—I know of no other so good. My work, as you may judge, is by no means light. I have to travel a great deal in the interest of our church work, and it is no wonder that often I find myself much run down, and afflicted almost with a general prostration. It is on occasions of this kind that I resort to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I can say in all sincerity that they have never failed me. The pills have also been used in my family, and among my friends, and the results have always been satisfactory. You may just say from me that I think those who are afflicted with any of the ills for which this medicine is recommended will make no mistake in giving Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial."

The Rev. Mr. Hatchett's home is in Hamilton, Ont., where he is known to most of the citizens and greatly esteemed by those who know him.

Born to Lead.

"You remember young Carpley, who used to have an ambition to be an actor, don't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, he's playing a leading role now."

"You don't say so! By George, I never thought he had it in him!"

Historic spot! With reverential awe—nay, with a feeling of deep thankfulness—the wealthy merchant tailor on his first trip to the orient drew near and cast a flower on the tomb.

How Wells Clock Strikes.

The great clock of Wells cathedral in England was built in 1322 for Glastonbury abbey and ran 250 years before it was removed to Wells.

The striking mechanism of the clock is very curious and elaborate. Above the dial is a little battlemented turret, with four knights on horseback, armed with lances, standing guard round it. At some distance from the clock itself, near the end of the transept, is a life size painted figure, quaintly ugly, with a battleax in its hand, while outside the cathedral is a second large dial, guarded by two tall figures of knights in armor.

When the gilt stars point to the hour, the painted figure (Jack Blandivir, as he is called by the country people about Wells, no one knows why) strikes the quarters by striking his heels against two bells behind him and then tolls the great bell of the clock by striking it with his battleax. The two standing knights in armor strike the outside bell with their halberds, and at the first stroke of the great bell the four knights on horseback over the luside dial start at a gallop and rush round and round the turret in a mimic tournament, in which one knight is thrown from his horse and regains his seat in every revolution.

A Master of Silence.

Among the few who have a perfect genius for silence is a certain well known artist whose reticence is the amusement and wonder of all who know him.

A friend who had dropped into his studio one day was vainly endeavoring to draw Mr. H. into conversation, when the artist's brother appeared in the doorway.

"Hello, Tom!" said the brother.

"Hello, John!" returned Tom, looking up from his easel with a smile.

John wandered about the room for 15 minutes, turned over his brother's latest work and then, going toward the door, stopped long enough to say, "Well, goodby, Tom."

"Goodby, John," was the hearty rejoinder.

Tom painted on for some minutes, and then in an unwonted burst of confidence he said warmly to his amused friend:

"I tell you, I was glad to see John! Haven't seen him before for a month!"—London Answers.

A Synonym.

"Being a printer, Mr. Dash," said the hotel proprietor, "maybe you can advise me. I want to get a sign painted, 'Writing Room Free to Our Patrons,' or something like that."

"I don't like 'patrons,'" said Mr. Dash.

"No? Maybe that doesn't sound just right. What would you suggest?"

"'Victims.'"

DARKNESS ON CHICAGO STAGE

Will Take Half-a-Million Dollars for Repairs.

MANY, WILL BE CLOSFD

Theatres Having a Hard Time—Two to be Razed—New Requirements Before Opening—The New Ordinance.

The Chicago city council has taken action that will in all probability result in the closing of nearly all the theatres in Chicago for the remainder of the present theatrical season.

The council met to consider the passage of an act that would allow the theatres to open without being compelled to fulfill all the requirements of the ordinance passed recently. The theatres must meet the following requirements before opening:

A steel curtain; an automatic sprinkling system; a bond of $25,000 guaranteeing the performance by August 1st, 1904, of all the requirements of the new ordinance; the widening of doors and exits. All but two of the theatres will be able to meet the demands of the ordinance. These two will probably have to be torn down. The others will close to make the necessary improvements.

MONTHS OF REPAIRS.

Nearly two months of work and $500,000 expenditure for repairs will be required under the new theatre building ordinance for the opening of the Chicago play-houses. This is the estimate of theatre managers, and it does not include the amount which will be expended for the entire rebuilding of at least one theatre.

Three theatres are closed certainly, and five others have admitted that they would be forced to suspend. There are few theatres which will be able to use more than two floors for many months, and many even of the best may abandon the gallery permanently.

JOHN CASHEL'S TRIAL.

Little Evidence of Importance Elicited Before the Calgary Jury.

A Calgary dispatch, dated Jan. 20, says:—John Cashel's trial started yesterday, the court-house being crowded with spectators. 6The interest is much greater even than at Ernest Cashel's trial. No evidence of importance has been given so far, and what was elicited related to John Cashel's conduct before his brother's escape. None of the witnesses identified the prisoner as having purchased revolvers previous to the time the condemned murderer secured his freedom. Those examined were: H. R. Kitto, gunsmith; William Twizell, George Ovis, Henry Haskins, Mrs. Haskins, Hurzell Haskins, Mrs. Greer, E. H. Crick, Louisa Logan and Constable Browning.

Hotel Till Tapped by Chore-man—Recovered $270 at St. Vincent.

Burke Jewell, of the Lorne hotel, Rosenfeld, discovered on rising one morning last week that his chore man, named Mike O'Donnell, and all the money in his till, about $300, were missing. He at once telephoned and wired the different points and found that O'Donnell had walked to Altona at 5.30 a.m., hired a rig, drove to Gretna, walked to Neche, 8.30 a.m., hired a rig and drove to Pembina by 9.40 a.m. The marshal of Noche started on his track and caught him at St. Vincent and got $270 of the money, the rest of which was spent. A storekeeper at Rosenfeld is also minus a suit of clothes.

Frightful Speed for Trains.

Plans to equal and possibly to beat the speed record of 120 miles an hour made at Prossen, Germany, some time ago, were made at a conference of officials and experts representing the New York Central railway and the General Electric Company. The tests are to be made on the tracks between New York and Schenectady, and it is planned to attain a high rate of speed. If present plans hold the Central will be able to run trains through New York City and on its suburban lines at an unparallelled rate of speed.

His Father Got Damages.

J. F. Casey, formerly Great Northern yardmaster in Moorhead, secured a verdict against the road for $3,000 damages for the death of his son, J. Casey. The deceased was a fireman on the Great Northern, and was killed at Neche while off duty. It was the custom of the Great Northern to cut the trains on the tracks in two so people could pass from one side of town to the other. Young Casey and two companions were crossing the track at the time some cars were shunted onto this track, hitting the train that was cut in two. This closed the cars at the place Casey was crossing, and his body was terribly crushed between the bumpers, causing instant death. His father brought action for $5,000 damages and the jury decided in his favor.

AGENT VICTIMIZED.

Cashed a Check For a Smooth American Traveller.

A Winnipeg ticket agent is the possessor of a cheque for $75 and minus that sum as the result of the disappearance of a certain gentleman who gave his name as Gillies. The cheque was signed with the name of "A. T. Gilles, and was given in payment of a railway ticket to Chicago from Winnipeg, the balance after the amount of the ticket was deducted being handed over to the ticket purchaser. The cheque was on a St. Paul bank which never, to the sorrow of the unfortunate ticket agent, had such a name on its ledgers. Mr. Gilles, or whatever his name should be, evidently traveled safely to Chicago and is now beyond recall. To work the dodge and get the free trip with enough small change to pay for his meals and berth, he sought out an American railroad agent and intimated that he would like to travel south over the line represented by him. He looked "good" to the railway man, and together the two repaired to a certain ticket office, where the American representative asked that everything possible should be done for his friend. Everything possible was done.

Territorial Town had a Narrow Escape From Fire—Man Burned to Death.

A dispatch from Portal, N.W.T., says:—Alfred Offald, a laborer, while asleep in a hayloft of a barn located in the business portion of the town, was burned to death Saturday morning. Two horses in the barn were also cremated, and for a time the entire town was in danger of destruction. Prompt work on the part of the citizens saved the village. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

FEARS COAL FAMINE.

The United Mine Workers Will Consider Recent Wage Reductions.

A dispatch form Indianapolis, Ind., dated Jan. 17, says—What promises to be a most interesting convention of the United Mine Workers of America will open here to-morrow. The apparently preconcerted move on the part of several of the coal operators to cut wages at the rate of 10 cents a ton may result in a conflict with the miners' organization. About one thousand delegates from all parts of the country will be in attendance, and the convention will last ten days. It will be followed by a conference with three hundred operators of the central competitive field, at which a wage scale will be arranged. Mayor Heitzman will welcome the delegates and President John Mitchell will respond. It is understood that there has been no opposition to the re-election of the present officers. There are in the United States 450,000 miners, of which 325,000 belong to the organization. Of these there are now 14,000 on strike.

TWO CROPS IN A SEASON

Remarkable Productiveness of a Manitoba Farm.

A very interesting exhibit is to be seen in the offices of the Manitoba & Western Colonization company, Main Street, Winnipeg. The exhibit consists of potatoes, wheat, oats and barley. The potatoes are unique in that two crops were raised on the same piece of land during 1903 by Mr. Robert Squires, af Carman. The first crop was planted on the 25th of April, the variety being the "Early Fortune," and these potatoes were dug on the 9th of July. On the same day another lot of "Money Makers" was planted in the same soil. This crop was dug on the 28th of September. The yield for both crops was very large and the potatoes were large in size, smooth and bright, and weigh from 12 to 24 ounces each. The samples of grain are from the district round Starbuck, and the wheat weighs 64 pounds to the bushel, the oats 40 and the barley over 58. All the grain is of excellent quality and an A1 advertisement for the productiveness of Manitoba.

NOT WORTH THE CANDLE

The Russo-Japanese Dispute is Trivial.

NEGOTIATIONS GOING ON

Two Main Questions Still Remain at Issue—Japanese Minister Says War Would be Disastrous and not Worth While on Points in Dispute.

The Associated Press correspondent at St. Petersburg, on high authority, gives the following as the status of negotiations between Russia and Japan: Russia recognizes Japan's predominance in Corea and Japan recognizes Russia's special position in Manchuria. There are two main questions still at issue, the Russian demand for a neutral zone on the Corean side of the Yalu river, which Jauan met with a proposal for a similar neutral strip on the Manchurian side. Japan also asks for certain guarantees covering Manchuria which Russia thus far has declined to grant. It is pointed out, however, that the assurances given a few days ago by Russia regarding open ports in Manchuria and respect for treaty rights are a concession on this point.

That the two countries are not so far apart may be fairly inferred from the following statement made by Mr. Kurino, the Japanese minister, to the Associated Press: "War would now be disastrous to both countries. Owing to the geographical situation an armed conflict would result in a great drain of the men and treasure of both Japan and Russia, without being decisive. Besides, I believe it would not be worth while to go to war on the question still in dispute."

There is a strong indication that, through the czar's personal acts, the peace party is completely in the ascendant. M. Bozobrazoff, the head of the war party, has gone abroad. Foreign Minister Lamsdorff, who from the beginning has favored peace, is now completely rehabilitated, and Viceroy Alexieff has been made sudservient to the foreign office in Russo-Japanese negotiations. His extensive powers are curtailed and he can make no move without the Czar's personal approval.

Another strong influence on the side of peace has been the attitude of M. Witte, who has been bending his energies to avoid a conflict. It is prewill again become a great power to dicted that if peace prevails M. Witte the government.

A BIG BRIDGE.

Cantilever 1800 Feet in Length, Across Straits of Canso.

The announcement is made that a well known engineering firm of Kansas City has been commissioned to prepare plans for a mammoth bridge across the Straits of Canso. The bridge wil: be cantilever and the main chain will be the longest in the world, a distance of 1,800 feet, 100 feet more than that of the Firth of Forth bridge, which holds the present record.

The bridge will be 150 feet above high water, so that the largest ship can go underneath with perfect safety, and will cross the straits between Hastings and Cape Porcupine. This will necessitate a change in the Intercolonial terminals, and effect an hour's saving in time from Truro to Sydney now consumed in ferrying a train across the straits on the steamer Scotia, and a saving of four or five hours in severe winter weather, which prevents the prompt docking of the ferry.

COLLECTOR DEAD.

Alexander Roland Milne, C. M. G., for many years collector of customs, died at Victoria, B.C., on January 18th. He was a recognized authority on matters pertaining to sealing and was honored with the order of Commander of St. Michael and St. George by Queen Victoria for his work in connection with the preparation of the Canadian case for the Paris tribunal regarding pelagic sealing. He had just corroborated the statement of the claim of the four Victoria sealing schooners seized by Russia in 1896 at the same time the four American schooners were seized by Russian vessels, for which seizure Russia recently paid damages to the United States vessels.

Knepp Castle, Surrey, the residence of Sir Merrik Burrell, was burned on January 18th. The baronet and his wife had a narrow escape from death, as the flames had gained considerable headway. Valuable paintings, including Van Dycks and Holbeins, as well as other art treasures, were destroyed. The loss is estimated at £10,000 sterling.

Mr. G. R. Crowe, of Winnipeg, says therewill be no pressure of Manitoba wheat in the spring.

WARNING AGAINST QUENCHING MOTIVE POWER OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

PAUL MIGHTY PHRASE MAKER.

His "Quench" in the Text "Quench Not the Spirit" Has a Superlative Meaning—Question Is a Practical One, and Must Be Answered By Everyone Who Has Ever Felt the Flames of Divine Love.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 17.—How to kindle and keep alive in the heart the divine flame which energizes and spiritualizes the whole life is the preacher's theme in this discourse, which deals with a practical religion for everyday people. The text is I. Thessalonians v, xix., "Quench not the Spirit."

The mighty phrase maker Paul is a coiner of many superlatives. He is no stupid platitudinarian. Everyday commonplace, insipid, tasteless, comparisons have for him no attraction. His forge is always redhot; his arms are cranes, his hammers pile drivers, his doors floodgates; his streams are fathomless, onrushing rivers of molten iron; his sparks are stars, and his seconds millenniums.

We would, for our present lesson, use one of Paul's impressive, significant words. His "quench" has a superlative meaning. "To quench" means to smother, as a mother would extinguish the flames consuming the dress of her burning child by wrapping about the flimsy garments a heavy, wet blanket, jerked from off the clothesline. "To quench" means to deluge, to submerge, as the Johnstown fires were put out when the Conemaugh dam broke and houses and stores and factories were floating about in the flood like chips tossed in an eddy. In that word "quench" Paul startlingly warns all believing Christians against the sin of extinguishing the power of the Holy Spirit, which is now burning within them as a living flame. "Quench not the Spirit" is the command to the Thessalonians. Smother not the divine flames.

Now comes the practical question: How do many believing Christians open the floodgates of sin and drown out their spiritual fires? How do many of our new converts chill their holy enthusiasm and dry their cheeks, wet with penitent tears, and harden again their hearts in sin? First and foremost, by neglecting God's place of public worship. By turning their backs upon the Sunday church services. By claiming that they can pray to God just as well at home as in the week night prayer meetings. By asserting that the "communion of the saints," in a building which has been dedicated to God as a "house of prayer," is not essential for true spiritual life. No true convert should ever be guilty of casting a slur upon the public altar of Jesus Christ. It is hard work for a live coal to keep warm and to remain a live coal outside of the grate. It is hard work for a warm hearted, loving Christian to remain a spiritual "live coal" unless he continually lives in close contact with other loving Christians. It is by the commingling of prayers that the best prayer is produced. It is by the commingling of testimonies that the best testimony springs from our lips. It is by "the foolishness" of preaching that sinners are saved. Yes! And also by the foolishness of preaching that they are brought nearer week by week to the personality of Jesus Christ.

If public worship is not essential for spiritual life, why did God decree that Moses should build a tabernacle as soon as the hosts of Pharaoh had found a watery grave in the depths of the Red Sea? At that tabernacle the Hebrews were compelled to worship. If not essential, why did Christ during his earthly ministry again and again go up to Jerusalem to attend the feasts and again and again go into the synagogues to worship and to pray? If not essential, why did Christ command his disciples to assemble in one place in Jerusalem and await the coming of the Holy Ghost?

Public worship is absolutely essential for the spiritual life of the average man. Some years ago a country boy was riding in the cars toward Philadelphia. In the seat sitting next to him was an old man. After a long conversation, in which the young man told his seat mate that he was going to Philadelphia to find work, the aged man asked him for his letters. "Oh, yes," said the young fellow, "here is one from my old employer. Here is one from my schoolteacher. Here is one from my physician." "Is that all? Have you not one from your minister?" asked his seat mate. "Yes, I have that also." "Well, my young friend," said the old man, "I would advise you to present that letter to some church at once. I am an old sea captain, and I have found out by bitter experience that it is safer when in harbor to tie my ship to a wharf than to anchor it out in midstream, to be floated around in the tides. By bitter experience I have also found out that no young Christian is safe unless he is bound up in Christian fellowship with other Christians in Sunday service and in the week night prayer meetings." The old sea captain's experience has been mine. I never saw in my life a church member go astray unless you could first trace his spiritual degeneracy in growing absence from the prayer meeting and Sunday services. If you want to keep close to God you must keep close to his praying disciples. Never neglect, unless compelled, a church service. For your spiritual welfare especially, never neglect your week night prayer meeting.

How may the new convert in another way smother the divine flames burning within him? By throwing away the golden key which unlocks the closet door of secret prayer? By neglecting to have a trysting place, where, as a lover, he can meet with God and talk over his plans and hopes.

A Christian convert should never get out of prayer touch with the heavenly city. It is a fatal manoeuvre. It will ultimately mean the Christian falling a victim to spiritual ambuscade, entrapment and overthrow. You have no more reason to expect the flames of a candle to burn in a chemical retort emptied of all oxygen than you have a right to expect your spiritual fires to burn in your bedroom which is not charged and surcharged with the holy atmosphere of secret prayer.

It is necessary for true spiritual life to pray in public. Oh, yes! But it is just as necessary to pray in private. "The Lord thy God is a jealous God." That means in one sense that there are times when God wants us to be alone with him, alone as Christ was alone with the Heavenly Father when Jesus again and again went off alone to pray. He wants us to be alone with him in holy fellowship, as some of us have often been alone with our mothers. Blessed and tender were those hours of sweet communion with our mothers, who have now gone beyond. After the rest of the family were all in bed we used to sit up toward midnight, telling her what we wanted to do and asking her if she thought it was best for us to do it. So God, the Heavenly Father, wants us at times to come to him when we are alone. He wants us to tell him all our plans. He wants us to come to him with the abiding faith of a little child. And the Heavenly Father, "who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly."

Prayer in public necessary for spiritual development? Oh, yes! Prayer behind the locked door, prayer in secret, prayer where only God's ear can hear and God's eye can see, just as important for the spiritual life and hope. During the Revolutionary war a Highland soldier was caught creeping into camp during the darkness of the night. He was charged with being a spy and taken before the commanding general. Being asked why he had left the camp, the soldier replied, "I merely left in order to go out into the darkness of the woods and be alone with God and have secret prayer." "Then down on your knees!" thundered the officer. "Within twenty hours you shall be shot as a spy. You never needed to pray as much as you need to pray now." The soldier dropped on his knees and offered such a simple, earnest prayer of faith and love that the tears sprang from the commander's eyes. He turned to the guard and said: "Let that soldier go. He is telling the truth. He must have often been on his knees in prayer drill or else he could not have prayed so well in public review." The great Heavenly Commander judges the sincerity of our professions by the earnestness and consecration of our private devotions.

The closed lids of God's Bible are often used to extinguish the divine flame burning within the Christian's heart. They can become the barred and bolted doors of superstition, barred and bolted by gross ignorance, endangering the most monstrous of heresies in the darkest of cells. They may become redhot irons putting out the calm, deep blue eyes of faith and love. By an ancient eastern law no blind prince is allowed to sit upon the throne of Persia. By a divine law no Christian can reach that stage of enlightenment fitting him to occupy one of God's spiritual thrones without earnest and prayerful study of the Bible.

My friends, how are you going to find out what is the law of Goh and the will of God unless you read his holy word? In Isaiah he distinctly says, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways." Are you and I trying to find out by studying the Scriptures what are God's thoughts and to harmonize our lives with his life? Are we trying to find out what is the deeper, richer meaning of the Saviour's name? Are we seeking to understand what is the mission of the Holy Spirit and how God with the weak things of this world is going to confound the mighty? Or are we going around day after day singing a senseless, silly, siren song: "Jesus will save! Jesus will save! Oh, I am so happy, Jesus will save!" when some of us merely look upon the name of Jesus as an amulet, because we do not know or care who Jesus is or take the trouble to read the words which he has spoken for us? Are we going to look upon the closed lids of the Bible in a superstitious way, as did the peasants of Europe during the dark ages, as though they were something they had no right to touch? Or are you going to look upon the Holy Scriptures as a divine letter written by the Heavenly Father to his children, which letter ought to be carefully studied and its commands to be strictly followed out?

Supposing that your mother died of consumption when you were a child of four years. Supposing that when the hectic roses of that fatal disease were blooming in the garden of her pale, sunken cheek she one day had you, her sleeping baby, placed by her side. Then while you slept she wrote you a long letter. In this letter she gave her maternal advice and parting benediction. Then she folded that letter and gave it to your father, saying: "Husband, give this to my baby boy on the day he graduates from the public school. Before he decides upon life's work I want to give him my advice and tell him what I want him to do." Supposing twelve years had now passed and you, at sixteen, were now given that letter. What would you do? First you would kiss it. You would say: "Mother wrote it with her dying hand! Mother wrote it with love!" Then you would reverently open the yellow leaves and carefully read that letter, line by line. If you were a true son, if possible you would follow out the desires of that maternal letter word by word. New convert in the gospel life and Christian of older standing, the Holy Scriptures are God's letter to us. If we are the Heavenly Father's true children we will take the letter and study it. We will translate the desires of that letter into our own lives. We will make God's thoughts our thoughts and his ways our ways.

"But," some new convert says, "if the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures is essential to a truly developed spiritual character then I am not a true Christian. I practically know nothing about the word of God except that 'God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' That is all I know. Cannot I now accept Christ as my Saviour?" Oh, yes, my brother, you can. You are now a Christian, if you want to be. If you accept and truly believe that one verse just quoted, you are as much a Christian as a little fledgeling just hatched out of an egg is a bird. If you accept truly with your whole heart that profound truth and should die to-night, he who promised salvation to every soul who believes and trusts him would take your soul into his safe keeping. But if you live you should grow and develop. You are saved that you may serve him as an example and as a soul winner, and this you can never do unless you learn to know him and his teaching through the study of his word. Remember you are now a Christian only as the bird just hatched out of the egg is a bird. You are a spiritual fledgeling; you must eat spiritual food. That spiritual food is to be found in the Word of God, as the breath for your spiritual lungs is to be found in the atmosphere of prayer.

Paul said to young Timothy, "Preach the word!" I say to you, "Study the word." Study it in the church and in the home. Study it on your knees and at your desk and in your bed. Yes, new convert, read the Bible and continue to read it, because God commands you to read it. Read it, because your deeper spiritual life depends upon your reading it or in having it read to you. Study it, and continue to study it, because when you read the Bible God is talking to you, as when you pray you are talking to God.

But there is still another way for the Christian to quench the spiritual flame which is now burning within him. That way is to neglect the family altar, which should be raised in every home. That way is for the husband and father to hurriedly arise in the morning and quickly dress, and then off to business without gathering his children about him for family worship and without having any blessing asked at the breakfast table. That way is for every father to think that all that he has to do is to say his own prayers and do his own Christian work, and then his children will say their own prayers and fulfill their own Christian tasks.

Every man's home to a certain extent is his own castle. He can lift what standards he pleases over his own fireside. He can emphatically say, as did God's servant of old, "Let others do as they will, but as for me and my house we shall serve the Lord." Or he can open his own home to shelter and entertain evil temptations of all sorts. But let no man think if he surrenders his house to evil practices and yields himself and his home to the seductions of the world that he can at the same time live a spiritual life, nor can he expect that those around him, who are bound to him by ties of blood and love, will lead spiritual lives. He must, if he would live right, not only consecrate his own life every morning to God, but in the presence of his children he must offer a petition to God for them to consecrate their lives to Christ also.

So completely do I believe the true spiritual life to be dependent in many ways upon the family altar that I would have the fathers and mothers, as soon as possible, teach their little children to publicly pray at family worship and to publicly ask the blessing at the daily meals. I remember, many years ago when traveling in Scotland, noticing how general was the custom for the youngest child of the household who could utter the words being called upon to ask the blessing at the family meal. I thought then, as I think now, that it was an excellent practice, tending to accustom the child from its earliest years to acknowledge the goodness of God and to address him in prayer.

Thus, no matter which way we may look at the Pauline word "quench," the whole trend of the matter is this: As Christians we cannot live a true spiritual life unless every moment of every day we are in touch with Christ. We cannot preach to others unless by searching God's word we hear Christ preaching to us. We cannot pray for others in public review unless we have had much knee drill in secret prayer. We cannot give ourselves wholly to God's service unless at the same time at the family altar we give our loved ones also to him.

In welcoming the church members to Christ's altar I have but one more question to ask and to answer. In what, O struggling friend, does the chief definition of being a Christian consist? Ought you to say, "I want to be a Christian to escape the evil effects of sin?" I want to be a Christian to be happy?" "I want to be a Christian in order that I may reach heaven?" Oh, no. You should want to be a Christian, not for your own beatification, but in order that God may be glorified. In order to glorify God we should work for him. In order to glorify God we should give to him of our temporal substance. In order to glorify God we should pray to him. We should read the Bible that we can further find out how Christ may continue to be glorified. May our lives be filled with holy zeal for the glorification of the blessed Saviour on earth and in heaven. I congratulate you in this, the supreme moment of your life, when you start in the service of Jesus Christ. Christian brother, give me thy hand.

EXPLOSION SUITS

Important Decisions Given by the Supreme Court at Victoria

Of the judgments rendered at Victoria on Monday by the full court, three are of local interest. In Frederico vs. The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., and Silla vs. The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., S. S. Taylor appealed from the order made by Irving, J. directing the plaintiffs in the two actions to each furnish $500 for security for costs, they residing in Italy and Hungary respectively, out of the jurisdiction of the court. The two actions in question were two out of four suits selected by the court at the instance of the defendant company to be tried, together with the suit of Leadbeater vs. The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., selected by the plaintiffs as test actions by which the 92 damage suits brought against the company for the explosion which took place in Nos. 2 and 3 collieries at Coal Creek on the 22nd of May, 1902. E. P. Davis, K.C., and E. V. Bodwell, K.C., on behalf of the company, supported the order of Irving, J., but by the decision of the full court Monday the appeal was allowed with costs, and Mr. Justice Irving's order directing security to be given was set aside. It is said that the full court was of the opinion that the company having selected the actions in question as test cases they could not insist on security for costs, which would otherwise have been allowed under the general rule which applies when plaintiffs reside outside of the court's jurisdiction.

In Leadbeater vs. The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., another appeal from an order of Irving J., was set aside with costs. The learned judge of first instance on the application of W. R. Ross, counsel for the defendants, made an order for the examination of Taylor & O'Shea, the plaintiff's solicitors, touching their interest in the suit, the defendants seeking to make the solicitors parties to the action, claiming that they were beneficially interested in the litigation. Messrs. Taylor & O'Shea submitted to examination under protest, and appealed to the full court from Mr. Justice Irving's order. S. S. Taylor, K. C., supported the appeal, which was opposed by E. P. Davis, K.C., and E. V. Bodwell, K.C. The full court yesterday allowed the appeal of the solicitors with costs of the court below and reversing the order of Irving J. The decision will also govern a similar application in Lamb vs. Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co.

Mr. Justice Martin, at Vancouver, Tuesday handed down his decision in an application made by the defendants in the five test cases against the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., selected to decide the 92 actions brought over the explosion at the Nos. 2 and 3 mines at Coal Creek in May, 1902. The application was argued by S. S. Taylor, K. C., for the plaintiffs, and E. V. Bodwell for the defendant applicants, to postpone the trial of the five actions on the ground of the absence of a material expert witness who is being brought out from England, and because a certain section of the mines is now filled with water and the company say that if given further time they can and will unwater the section, which will allow of inspection. The court postponed the trial of the actions until the next sittings of the court here, which will be some time in May next, and gave the plaintiffs the costs of preparing for the trial here next month, and the costs of the application are made costs in the cause to the plaintiffs.—Nelson News.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Mrs. A. McBean was taken seriously ill on Monday.

A daughter was born to Mrs. W. F Tranter on the 22nd inst., at Morrissey Mines.

Assistant General Superintendent Kennedy, Superintendent Long and other officials of the Great Northern came in on Friday's train. They visited the mines, and returned south Saturday morning.

Rumor was current here during the week that three men were frozen to death in the Flathead country, and some apprehension was felt that they were of W. H. Ross' party that left here some time ago, but Ross and his party returned here Wednesday.

John Rogers, an old man who has been destitute here for nearly a year, was sent to the Provincial Home at Kamloops by the government on Tuesday. The old gent was nearly blind and would no doubt have suffered much had it not been for kind friends around town. Rev. Smith, Methodist minister, was instrumental in securing the old man a home.

J. A. Gillis, the pioneer merchant at the Junction, left Tuesday evening for Regina, where he will be united in marriage to Miss Dolly Watt, the last of the month. Miss Watt, was formerly a resident of Cranbrook, and is most favorably known over the entire district. After an extended visit with relatives in Manitoba, the happy couple will return and make the Junction their home.

The name of the town at the mines is to be changed from Tonkin to Hillside. The post-office department will shortly recognize the new name in all probability, as we understand they are being communicated with in regard to the change.

BLAIRMORE NEWS.

From The Times.

A large boiler was received yesterday and taken up to be installed at the Mutz brewery above town.

A strong company has been organized for the purpose of establishing a mammoth brewing and distillery plant at this plant at this place. Some of the best brewers and distillers procurable in France are interested in this project and as ample funds have been secured one of the largest distilleries in Western Canada is assured for Blairmore.

Yesterday a force of engineers started the work of surveying a line from near the limekiln to a point near the saw-mill crossing the river at a point below town and from there keeping entirely on the north side of the river. If this route is found feasible, which no doubt it will be, it will be of great advantage not only to the town but to the C. P. R. as it will both improve their grade and shorten their line besides straightening it.

On Wednesday the first gas to be encountered in the Coleman mine was struck. Two Slav miners managed to touch it off and were slightly burned.

The new haulage has been given a trial this week but is not quite perfect in operation hence there will be a few days delay before it will be in use.

Coal Creek will be represented at the St. Louis exhibition by two large pieces of coal each containing about 9 cubic feet entire. These were packed by Mr. Jackson, in the car shop. They will be forwarded to Ottawa and from there to St. Louis.

On Monday evening a number of the friends of Mr. William Quinn, who died last week from the result of an accident in the mine, went to the station to see his body placed on board the train for his home. Mr. Rudge, a near friend of the deceased, went in charge of the body.

JUNIORS ALSO WIN.

An Interesting Game of Hockey Between Juniors of Fernie and Pincher Creek.

The game of hockey between the Fernie Juniors and a team from Pincher Creek on the Fernie rink on Monday evening was very exciting and those who witnessed it were well pleased with the style of hockey put up by the younger enthusiasts of the King of winter sports.

Three of the visiting team played here before in the senior game but the two teams were well matched in weight and also in skill and speed as the contest proved. The line up was,

PINCHER CREEK		FERNIE
Swackhammer	goal	Todhunter
Lynch	point	Kirkpatrick
Main	c. point	Sunberg
Boyce	rover	Kanouse
McKenzie	centre	Rhodes
Cooper	r. forward	Ross
Dobbie	l. forward	Lawrence

H. A. Gunn refereed the game and his decisions were fair and impartial.

Pincher started the score after 8 minutes even play by a side shot from Boyce. Play was resumed for 13 minutes, when Rhodes with a fine rush passed to Lawrence who scored. Score 1-1. Fernie took the lead 7 minutes later, another shot from Lawrence finding the net. Score 1-2. Rhodes made the next goal with a lift shot, time 3 minutes. Score 1-3. Just before half time a difficult shot from Dobbie made the score 2-3.

In the second half the defence of both teams prevented more scoring for 21 minutes. The locals were the more aggressive however and rained many shots on the visitors' net. Finally Rhodes broke through and landed. Score 2-4. Fernie added its last game in 90 seconds a fine rush by Kanouse and Rhodes enabling the former to land the rubber. Score 2-5. In the latter part of the game the Pincher Creek seven made repeated and heroic assaults upon the Fernie goal, with the vain determination of turning defeat into victory. They managed to land once, McKenzie doing the trick, time 7 minutes. Score 3-5. For an interesting minute or more after this the locals had some hard work in breaking a combined attack on their goal. The goal keeper made several good stops. The play had resumed its normal condition when the gong sounded.

Rhodes and Kanouse played a fast, fearless game and the point and goal men were always in their places cool and effective. Boyce, McKenzie and Dobbie make a strong forward line.

WILL GO TO ROSSLAND.

The Fernie Hockey team leaves on Tuesday for Rossland to take part in the hockey tournament during the carnival there. The boys are in good shape and they may be depended upon to give a good account of themselves in the struggle for the hockey supremacy of the province. The players who go are M. A. Kastner, J. Stephens, F. Rutherford, D. Lafortune, J. McLaughlan, C. Turnbull, Miller and Brown.

WRECK AT HOSMER.

Several Cars go up in Smoke. One man Burned to a Cinder.

A wreck occurred at Hosmer eight miles east of Fernie early on Saturday morning by which seven cars were burned and a man named Okerlind, a native of Sweden was consumed in the flames.

The train was a mixed one, containing a boarding car. It was coming towards Fernie making the heavy grade out of Hosmer with set brakes. The train broke and the rear section ran back. The engineer in backing for it could not distinguish the conductor's signals and the two sections came together with considerable force ditching several cars.

The boarding car contained four men asleep, three of whom escaped. A lighted lamp and stove that capsized in the accident set fire to the car, which resulted in 7 cars being consumed. Two cars were loaded with coal.

The body was terribly burned. His arms and legs were entirely consumed and only the charred remains of the trunk were left. These were interred on Tuesday.

The inquest took place last evening. Deceased was in a bunk on the lower side and it is supposed that trunks and heavy articles tumbled on him pinioning him and rendering him unconscious. His fellows heard low groans but the intense heat made his rescue impossible. A verdict of accidental death was given.

MINES ARE PROGRESSIVE.

January a Record Month in Coal and Coke Production.

In the month of January 76000 tons of coal were mined at the three collieries of the C. N. P. Coal Co. This is the largest monthly output in the history of the company, exceeding the previous record by 3000 tons and the December output by 5000 tons. Coal Creek gained 4000 tons over December. The largest day's output at each colliery was, Coal Creek 1513, Michel 1489, and Morrissey 889 tons. The operations at Michel were seriously hampered by the explosion in No 3 mine.

The coke production for the month was 23000 tons, the previous monthly record being made in August when 18000 tons were manufactured. In December 25000 tons were shipped but this large shipment was caused by the congested state of the transportation facilities. Little coke has thus far been produced at Morrissey but the amount this month at that place will be larger. The Canadian Smelters are unable to handle all the coke produced and the Company are obliged to look for markets in the United States.

The mines at all the points are now in first class condition and everything is running smoothly. At Coal Creek the rope haulage for the main level or deeps, as it is commonly known, of No. 2, where the explosion occurred, is installed and the mine is producing coal for the first time since the mine was wrecked. Nos. 4 and 5 are now producing coal and No. 9 is also getting in shape.

MINE MANAGER'S EXAM.

Five Fernie Gentlemen Successful.—The Crow's Nest Maintains its Lead.

The result of the mine manager's examination held in Fernie and Nanaimo last month resulted in five out of the eight candidates at Fernie passing, and two out of four at Nanaimo. The successful Fernie candidates who now are qualified to act as mine managers are:

John Johns
Robert W. Coulthard
H. B. Wright
H. L. Manly
J. R. Roaf

Messrs. Maclean and Wilkinson were the successful candidates at Nanaimo.

Ever since these examinations have been held in Fernie the Crows Nest have maintained the lead in the percentage of successful candidates, and this year is no exception, the percentage being 62½ against 50 secured by the Nanaimo candidates.

TUPPER IS PRESIDENT.

Victoria, Feb. 1—The Conservative convention opened this morning, about 125 delegates being in attendance. After the appointment of the committees nothing of any importance was taken up until the evening session.

The proceedings this evening were very harmonious. Colonel Prior returned to the fold and promised, amid enthusiastic cheers, to support the McBride government. John Houston presided, and handled the convention in fine style.

Sir Hibbert Tupper was elected to succeed Houston as president of the provincial organization, Houston not being eligible for a second term.

The other officers elected were: Hon. president, R. L. Borden; vice-presidents, Victoria, George Jay; Nanaimo, D. M. Eberts; Comox-Atlin, Stewart Maxwell of Atlin; Vancouver, J. B. Seymour; New Westminster, D. S. Curtis; Yale-Cariboo, Price Ellison; Kootenay, Jas. Keith of Vancouver; and treasurer, Colonel Prior, of Victoria.

Resolutions of confidence in R. L. Borden, leader of the dominion party, and in the McBride government, were adopted.

The remainder of the evening was spent in drafting bylaws for the regulation of the provincial associations.

WHELAN—LAVEQUE.

On Monday, January 25th, a quiet wedding took place at St. Patrick's R. C. church, Napanee, Ontario, when Mr. Thomas Hugh Whelan, manager of the Muskoka Hotel, Fernie, and Miss Jennie Marie Laveque, of Deseronto, were married by the Rev. J. T. Hogan. The bride looked very pretty dressed in her travelling gown of blue cloth with white satin waist and velvet hat to match. Miss Aggie McLaughlin, of Deseronto, assisted the bride and Mr. Fred Meagher, of Napanee, performed like duties for the groom. The happy couple left on the evening train for the west and arrived in Fernie yesterday morning, when a hearty reception was given them at the depot and in the evening at the Muskoka Hotel. The FREE PRESS joins their many friends in extending best wishes for a happy and prosperous married life.

Krys Stole many Cars of Coal at Morrissey and got Six Months at Nelson

Luc Krys, a Polander, was tried before L. R. Forbes yesterday morning on the charge of stealing cars of coal from his fellow miners at Morrissey. The police received valuable assistance from the miner's union in prosecuting the case.

Krys and his backhand, John Zylanko had 15 cars to their credit on Jan. 14th though the mines were open only 1½ hours on that shift and on the 15th, they had 20 cars. The suspicions of the checkweighman were aroused and a warrant was issued for Krys' arrest. He learned of it and skipped to Frank where he was followed by Constable Wilson and brough to Fernie on Monday. Krys has a bad reputation in Fernie and Michel where he has also worked.

Robt. Evans, checkweighman, showed by his books that it was impossible for any two miners under the most favorable conditions to mine the coal credited to Krys and his backhand. Ten cars in 8 hours he considered a high average. D. G. Wilson, mine foreman, corroborated his evidence. J. Evans, miner, swore that three of his cars had been stolen on the 11th. D. Mann, miner, testified that he lost 7 cars on the same day. F. Sherman president of the district union was present and assisted in the cross-examination of the accused who in a ramblingstatement threw the blame on his backhand. He said Zylonko had access to the checks and that he afterwards confessed that he changed 15 checks on the 14th and the same number the next day. Knowing this he (the accused) had asked for his statement on the 16th, without disclosing the theft.

The magistrate in sentencing Krys to 6 months hard labor at Nelson stated that the offence was a most contemptible one which deserved a heavy penalty.

The miners at Morrissey believe that the theft of cars has been carried on in a wholesale manner, and they are making every effort to stamp it out. The theft is committed in an easy manner. Each miner carries his own checks; as he fills a car he hangs his check on the outside of it and as it goes by the check weighman's office the check is removed and the car is credited to the miner represented by the number on the check. The miner at Morrissey who wants to be dishonest has opportunities both inside and outside the mine to remove another man's check and substitute his own before the car reaches the checkweighman's office.

The police are now after Zylanko and if he is caught and proved guilty of the charge laid by Krys he will in all probability get the same sentence.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS.

Dr. King, M. L. A. of Cranbrook, in the house this week took up the matter of moving the Fort Steele government office to Cranbrook.

W. R. Ross, the Fernie representative, introduced a measure in the House on Tuesday favoring the early consideration by the government of a scheme to found a university in British Columbia. Mr. Ross warmly advocated that some provision be made whereby the young people of the province would not be obliged to leave it in order to secure higher education. The government was non-committal and the opposition considered it premature, but the debate led to the adoption of a resolution making the high school curriculum more practical.

McDonald, of Lillooet, who held his seat illegally by drawing pay as a government servant after he was elected a member of the legislature is to be seated for the remainder of the present term and relieved of penalties, the seat becoming vacant at prorogation. The opposition conceded this in view of the fact that the member for Lillooet had acted innocently and also because of the near approach of the end of the session.

TOOK TOO MUCH POTASSIUM

Wright Prolonged Agony by an Over Dose.

AT THE POST-MORTUM

Portions of Cyanide Tabloids Were Found in His Stomach and a Revolver of Heavy Calibre and Loaded Was in His Pocket.

At the post-mortem examination of the body of Whitaker Wright, his features showed no trace of the suffering he must have endured prior to death. His brain was found to have been abnormally large, and as the examination proceeded the doctors found evidences of cyanide of potassium, which confirmed their previous impression of the cause of death. Portions of the deadly tabloids, still undissolved, were found in the stomach, Wright evidently having swallowed several of them. The report that a revolver had been found on his person has been confirmed. The weapon is of American make, silver plated and of heavy calibre, and was fully loaded. It was concealed in his hip pocket and is an evidence of his strong determination to end his life. It is now supposed that Wright's ostentatious consumption of tabloids for indigestion and insomnia during the last days of the trial was designed to disguise, in case of necessity, the taking of the fatal dose.

According to the doctors the dead man prolonged his agony by taking too many of the cyanide of potassium tabloids, as a smaller dose would have brought death sooner.

The investigation made indicates that Wright must have swallowed the tabloid poison while standing before Justice Bingham, after receiving his sentence. It is recalled that Wright pulled a handkerchief from his pocket and appeared to wipe his face, and it is supposed that under cover of this he took the fatal dose.

With the consent of the home secretary, Wright's body will be handed over to his relatives after the inquest for private burial at Witley, his home in Surrey.

MILLFEED—There is a good demand for bran and shorts at steady prices. We quote: Bran, $16 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts, $18 per ton.

GROUND FEED—The market is steady. We quote: Oat chop, $25 ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop, $20; mixed barley and oats, $22; oil cake, $47 per ton.

OATS—The market is a little firmer, without any specific reason for the feeling. Deliveries in the country are light, owing no doubt to coider weather, which prevents farmers from moving about. No. 2 white oats, ½ to 1c. higher at 31½ to 32c for carlots on track, and feed grades, 30 to 30½c. Farmers' loads at country points bring 24 to 25c, and on the street here 30c per bushel.

BARLEY—Offerings are very light. Malting grades are bringing 36 to 37c and feed grades 34 to 35c. Farmers are getting about 28c at country points.

FLAXSEED—Dealers are offering 75 to 16c for farmers' loads at country points.

COUNTRY WHEAT — Farmers' loads at country points are bringing 50 to 60c per bushel, according to quality and rate of freight.

HAY—There is no change in hay. Fresh baled hay in carlots on track is worth $10 per ton for good average quality. Extra choice might bring 50c more. Loose hay on the street, as usual sells at a wide range, but generally within the quotations of $10 and $12 per ton.

BUTTER—Dairy—The market is steady and firm. Receipts are light. Farmers are getting good prices for anything they bring in. Dealers offer 40c to 21c per pound for fresh, sweet table butter in bricks, and 16c to 17c for tubs, delivered here. Round lots of ordinary stock bring 12c to 14c.

EGGS—The market is firm. Case lots, subject to candling, are worth 21c to 22c per dozen. Strictly fresh gathered will bring 30c to 40c here, from the local trade. Ontario eggs are selling at 23c to 25c for pickled and limed.

HIDES—Outside markets are firmer, but it is believed that this strength is of a temporary nature. Locally conditions are unchanged. Country frozen hides are steady at 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare. Bulls, stags and oxen, 4¾ to 5c. No. 1 city butchers' hides are worth 6c per pound; No. 2's 5c, and 3's, 4c; sheepskins, wool pelts, 40 to 65c; country calfskins, same price as hides.

TALLOW—Go. 1 tallow is worth 3¾c per lb. delivered at Winnipeg and No. 2 2¾c.

HOGS—The market for choicest weights is a little firmer, these being quoted at 5c per pound for hogs of from 160 to 250 pounds weighed off cars. Light and heavy hogs are subject to the usual reductions. It will be noticed from this quotation that the minimum weight of choice grades has been raised 10 pounds. This is for the purpose of discouraging the practice, which is becoming too common, of shipping under-sized, imperfectly developed hogs.

MILCH COWS—Good cows are scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—There is not much doing in the horse market. Prices hold steady at $300 to $400 per team, according to weight and quality.

Severe Loss Near Saltcoats.

A most destructive fire occurred at Saltcoats last week, resulting in a heavy loss to one of the principal farmers in the district. It is believed that the fire was of incendiary origin.

United States Asks Canada to Establish Joint International Hatchery.

An Ottawa dispatch says:—A proposition has been made to the government for the establishment on the Fraser river of an international hatchery at the joint expense of the governments of Canada and the United States. It is not likely that the proposal will be entertained by the Dominion authorities.

A prominent official speaking on the subject said: "Canada is able to do all that is necessary for the propagation af fish and the care of her fisheries, without taking the United States into partnership. If American canners have suffered during the past season, it is due to the destructive methods adopted by companies owning canning establisments on Puget Sound, particularly with regard to the substitution of trap nets for the customary boat fishing.

"Fish last season seemed almost intuitively to avoid the traps and keep more in Canadian waters, so that while it is true that British Columbia canning returns were not so favorable last year as in previous years, they were relatively much better than the results obtained by United States canneries."

The guests at the two dinners will exchange messages of good will and sentiments of the kind which promoted the formation of the Pilgrim Society three years ago. The dinner in this city will be given to Sir Henry Mortimer Durand, the British ambassador. All of the members of the cabinet and many prominent Americans have been invited.

ENDS HIS LIFE WITH POISON

Whitaker Wright, the Eminent Financier is Dead.

EVIDENCE OF POISON

He Died Suddenly in London Law Court after Being Sentenced to Seven Years Penal Servitude—Scenes Previous to His Death.

A dispatch from London, dated January 26, says: At three o'clock this afternoon Whitaker Wright was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude. At four o'clock he lay dead on the floor of a small room in the law courts. Whether he took his own life by poison, or whether death in its natural course robbed the law, will not be known until a post-mortem examination is held Wednesday; the indications, however, point to poisoning.

The career of this man, who was known on three continents for his stupendous financial operations, closed in a startling tragedy. Even in his life, which with his rise from poverty to enormous wealth, was full of dramatic incidents, there was nothing that could compare with the manner of his death. All London to-night is thrilled with the news of it. No such human tragedy has been enacted in England in years.

Until nearly eight o'clock to-night the body of the man who formerly had control of many of the world's markets and had been courted by royalty, remained upon the floor of the room where he fell. As a convicted felon, Wright's person had become crown property. Later the body was given over to the jurisdiction of the coroner, and was taken to Westminster mortuary, where almost all the corpses taken from the Thames are laid out. The inquest probably will be held Thursday.

Mrs. Wright is an American. She now lies ill at the magnificent country home which Wright had in Surrey. Dispatches from there say, with a certain ingenuous pathos: "The news of Whitaker Wright's death has caused much sorrow. He was well known here for his acts of generosity and it was generally believed that he would be acquitted and return home again."

The feeling that Justice Bigham's conduct of the case was not very judicial appears to grow in the legal circles of London, and the sentence imposed upon Wright would in itself have furnished England with an unexpected sensation. Until counsel commenced pleading the actual trial of Whitaker Wright scarcely aroused that keen public interest which was aroused when Wright was in the United States or when parliament decided he did not come within the pale of a law breaker.

When Messrs. Isacks and Walton started to make their appeal to the jury, the people woke up to the gravity of the issues concerned. It was an open secret that many great and even royal names were indirectly involved, and friends of Wright said that if driven into a corner he would tell who had profited by his transactions. But when the appeal for the defence was finished those involved breathed easier and public curiosity remained unsatisfied.

Wright adhered to his conviction that he could not possibly be found guilty, and in fact this led him to return from the United States to stand trial. To-day, as Justice Bigham emphasized the points against Wright, expatiated to the jury upon the immorality of issuing misleading balance sheets and the doubtfulness of the transactions of theLondon and Globe Financial Corporation, the prisoner showed intense interest, but retained his confidencel He reiterated that he had done nothing which was not done every day in the city. The jury was out an hour, filing in at 3 o'clock, and then Wright showed his first signs of nervousness.

As the word "guilty" came from the foreman, Wright did not even flinch, but sticking his hands deep down into his pockets and gazing rather grimly at his judge, he stood up to receive sentence.

To the realization that his career as a man of business and honor was ended, Wright seemed utterly oblivious. He sat down mechanically while Mr. Walton made a plea for mercy.

As Judge Bigham in sharp and remorseless tones answered Walton, Wright was peremptorily ordered to stand up.

THE SENTENCE.

"Whitaker Wright," said Justice Bigham, "in my opinion the jury could not on the evidence arrive at any other conclusion. I confess that I see nothing that in any way excuses the crime of which you have been found guilty, and I cannot conceive of a worse case than yours. Under the sections of the act of parliament upon which you have been indicted and which define the offences in these circumstances, I do not think that I have any option save to visit you with the most severe penalty which the act permits, and that is that you go into penal servitude for seven years."

The crowd in court gasped in surprise. Wright was almost the only person who appeared unmoved. Then turning to the reporters in the room, rather than to the judge, he cried out in a firm voice: "All I can say is that I am as innocent of any intention to deceive as any one in this room.": It was apparent that he would have said more, but two tipstaffs took him by the arms and led him out of the court. Friends pressed forward to offer him condolences "Oh, never mind," said Wright, "I don't mind a bit."

For over twenty minutes Wright discussed his family affairs and the disposition of his remaining money with his counsel, in the consultation expressing amazement at the verdict and sentence, but George Lewis, jr., his solicitor, tells the Associated Press that he spoke rather as a man prepared to grin and bear it, than as a person who contemplated suicide.

EVIDENTLY DIED BY POISON.

Suddenly Wright fell backward as if he had fainted. The officer who was waiting to take him to Brixton prison ran to King's College hospital nearby for a doctor. In the meantime the unconscious man was propped up on two chairs. A doctor came quickly. His first thought was that Wright had fallen into an ordinary apoplectic fit, but it was noticed that his heart began gradually to give out, and before another doctor could arrive, Whitaker Wright, within one hour of the time he had been sentenced, was dead.

An examination of the body made at a late hour to-night points strongly to the fact that death was due to poisoning.

It is known that Wright suffered greatly from insomnia for the last two weeks, owing to the mental strain of the trial, and that he used drugs to procure sleep during the last few days.

Rumor says that a bottle of tabloids was found in the dead man's pocket, and the suggestion that he had a capsule of prussic acid concealed in the end of the cigar he was smoking when he collapsed, has also been made.

ANOTHER CHICAGO FIRE

Masonic Temple Destroyed, Big Scramble For Life.

A fire in the Chicago Masonic Temple last week caused a panic among the 4,000 occupants of the building and did $20,000 damage. All the occupants of the building escaped without serious injury through the bravery of the elevator men, who remained at their posts, operating their cars while dense columns of smoke filled the building. The fire broke out on the fifth floor in the rooms of Robert Fridlander & Co., manufacturersof X-ray apparatus. A lighted match carelessly thrown into a pile of excelsior is believed to have started the blaze. A number of X-ray vacuum tubes exploded the moment the heat reached them. Robert Fridlander, the senior member of the firm, realized the danger from these tubes and worked till overcome by smoke, throwing them out of the window.

The fire spread rapidly through the company's rooms to a light shaft, through which the smoke rose to the upper story. Thousands of occupants of the building, with the memory of the Iroquois theatre holocaust fresh in their minds, rushed into the elevators, many women fainted in the scramble, but none were seriously injured and the large building was emptied within half an hour after the fire was discovered.

The injured were: Robert Fridlander, age 45, overcome by smoke and slightly burned; Julius Ernest, hands and face burned; Jack Stack, stock boy, slightly burned about the hands; Henry Buehl, slightly burned about the head; B. Smith, 60 years old, trampled upon by the crowd in the rotunda of the Masonic Temple, and made unconscious; Walter Daveny, hands cut by flying glass; Walter S. Parker, burned about the face; Estelle McLeod, slightly burned about the face and overcome by smoke; William Schultz, fireman, both hands cut by flying glass; Carl Tillenbach, fell down stairs while leaving the building, badly bruised.

That the damage to the property and injury to the individuals were not greater was probably due largely to the efficiency of the fire drill of the employees. When the great bell at the top of the rotunda sounded the alarm of fire every janitor, engineer and fireman in the building responded, and long before the fire department had reached the scene the temple fire brigade had attached hose to stand pipes which extended from the basement to the roof of the structure, and eight streams of water were turned upon the conflagration by the volunteer firemen. The fire department used but little of its hose, the building equipment being called into use. Since the Iroquois fire Thomas McLennan, special officer stationed at the building, organized a volunteer fire drill among the employees, and they have been drilling twice each week.

GOOD-NIGHT.

I am not brave enough to sing
The requiem of a hope just dead;
That word "good-bye" would surely bring
The shadow upon swifter wing—
Come, let us say good-night instead.

See where upon the water's crest
The sky comes down, a sable pall—
To our poor vision, dim at best,
That curtain of rare amethyst
Marks the sure ending of it all.

Ah, heart, the lesson you forget,
The wind which goes with hurrying sweep
Sees farther on, and farther yet,
The white ships go, the waters fret,
The brave, true stars their vigil keep.

So not good-bye, good-night, that's all,
The loneliness, the loss is mine;
To-morrow, when the glad winds call
The purple folds will backward fall,
And leave me with my wand in thine.

MUSKRAT ARCHITECTURE.

Seemingly Careless It Is a Wonderfully Constructed and Comfortable House.

The muskrat builds a most comfortable house. In an article entitled "The Keeper of the Water Gate," published in Leslie Popular Monthly, Mr. Charles G. D. Roberts describes this strictly utilitarian structure. The entrance, dug with great and persistent toil from the very bottom of the bank, for the better discouragement of the muskrat's deadliest enemy, the mink, runs inward for nearly two feet, and then upward on a long slant some five or six feet through the natural soil, to a point where the shore is dry land at the average level of the water. Over this exit, which is dry at the time of the building, the muskrat raises his house.

The house is a seemingly careless, roughly rounded heap of grass roots, long water-weeds, lily roots and stems and mud, with a few sticks woven into the foundation. The site is cunningly chosen, so that the roots and stems of alders or other tress give it secure anchorage; and the whole structure, for all its apparent looseness, is so well compacted as to be secure against the sweep of the spring freshets. About six feet in diameter at the base, it rises about the same distance from the foundation, a rude, sedge-thatched dam, of which something more than three feet may show itself above the ice.

To the unobservant eye the muskrat house in the alders might look like a mass of dirt in which the rank water-grass had taken root. But within the clumsy pit is a shapely, small, warm chamber, lined with the softest grasses. From one side of the chamber the burrow slants down to another and much larger chamber, the floor of which at high water may be partly flooded. From this chamber lead down two burrows, one, the main passage, opening frankly in the channel of the creek, and the other, longer and more devious, terminating in a narrow and cunningly concealed exit, behind a submerged root. This passage is little used, and is intended chiefly as a way of escape in case of an extreme emergency, such as, for example, the invasion of a particularly enterprising mink by way of the main water-gate.

The muskrat is no match for the snake-swift, bloodthirsty mink, except in the one accomplishment of holding his breath under water; and a mink must be very ravenous, or quite mad with the blood-lust, to dare the deep water-gate and the long subaqueous passage to the muskrat's citadel at seasons of average high water. In times of drought, however, when the entrance is nearly uncovered and the water goes but a little way up the dark tunnels, the mink will often glide in, slaughter the garrison and occupy the well-built citadel.

Curious Western Romance.

For some time past two young ranchers have been seeking the hand of a fair maid in the neighborhood of The Buttes, says The Calgary Herald. There came a crisis a few evenings ago when a dance was held in that section. The dance was at the home of the young lady in question, and the two suitors were invited.

During the evening the rivals got talking over the affair, and one wagered a saddle horse against two steers as to who should have the first dance. Two judges and a referee were chosen by the parties concerned. The lovers then approached the young lady, and she showed a preference for the chap who bet his saddle horse. Everybody at the dance seemed to know about the bet, and there were many side bets made.

The winner of the bet, with a bill of sale, took two cattle belonging to his rival and at once butchered one. The father of the young fellow who lost his bet tried to prevent the winner from taking the cattle, claiming the cattle did not carry the brand of his son. So enraged was the old gentleman that he made a journey to Calgary to invoke the law, but not one of the city's many lawyers cared to take the case, and he returned home disheartened.

According to the story the young lady's father knew all about the bet, and when the girl chose the man who wagered his horse, the parent was so angry that he took his daughter upstairs and lectured her on her choice, as he favored the beaten rival.

The whole affair has caused much talk in the neighborhood.

Shortest Day of Year.

On Dec. 21 the position of the sun is immediately over the tropic of Capricorn, which is situated 23½ degrees south of the Equator. In all places situate in northern hemispheres that is the shortest day of the year. At Toronto the sun rose at 7.47 in the morning, and set at 4.48. This means that the sun is above the horizon for three minutes under nine hours. At Quebec, which is a little more than three degrees of latitude north of Toronto, the day is eight hours and thirty-one minutes, whilst at Winnipeg, which is three degrees further north still, daylight lasts only eight hours and four minutes. The district around Toronto being as far south as any in Canada, enjoys a longer period of daylight.

TAMING A HORSE.

Three Articles That Will Subdue the Most Savage Animal.

There were trouble and excitement one day on a ranch in Colorado. A high spirited, half broken stallion was prancing about the yard attached to the rancher's house. He had just thrown a cowboy who boasted there was nothing on four legs he could not ride, and he was rearing and bucking so that not even the pluckiest man on the ranch dared to approach.

While the men were standing around wondering what to do the rancher's sixteen-year-old daughter came out of the house and calmly walked up to the excited animal.

When he saw her he ceased rearing, whinnied and stood still. She just put her hand on his mane, stroked his nose and then vaulted lightly on his back and rode around the yard, to the amazement of the men.

"How do you manage it?" one of them asked her. "Before you tackled him he was as savage as a tiger."

"It is simple enough," the girl replied. "Any woman can handle a horse better than a man can. See this"—showing the man a small round object she had in her hand—"this is horse castor. Horses love the smell of it and will go up to any one who has it.

"Any horse has sense enough to know the people who love it. That stallion began to quiet down as soon as he saw me. When I got near him he smelled the musty horse castor in my clothes, for I always carry a little piece in my pocket.

"That pleased him so much that I was able to stroke his head. While doing so I rubbed his nose with a few drops of oil of cumin, which I had poured into the palm of my hand. Horses positively love that scent. Then, did you notice that I put my hand into his mouth? The object of that was to pour a few drops of oil of rhodium on to his tongue from a tiny vial which I always carry.

"With these three articles any horse can be tamed. Where do you get them? Well, the cumin and rhodium can be bought at any drug store; the horse castor must be cut from a horse's forefoot. It is a warty growth there."

It is a fact that horses are very fond of these scents. They are often used by women in the tropics and west in the training and breaking of horses.

Training a Beagle.

With regard to the training of a beagle, he has to be treated on quite a different plan from the setter and pointer. In their cases a great deal of work of training is to conquer natural propensities, whereas with the beagle you encourage him to go on and do all he can in seeking and chasing when found. Young dogs are usually put down with an older one, and a very few lessons suffice. It comes as natural to a beagle to run scent as for a terrier to kill rats, and if there is no apparent inclination one lesson usually provokes it. The less one interferes with a beagle running a line the better for the dog, so long as he is not pottering in one well tested place, but casting all about when he has lost the trail.—Field and Stream.

The Charge Sustained.

The householder was duly sworn.

"You charge this man with being insane," said the court. "On what do you base the charge?"

"Well, your honor," said the witness, vainly trying to choke down his emotion, "this man is a plumber. My pipes were out of fix. I sent for him. He fixed 'em in fifteen minutes. When I asked for his bill he said that was all right, because it didn't take him long, and he had another job in my neighborhood anyhow."

"A hopeless case!" exclaimed his honor as he signed the commitment.

The Catastrophe.

"Did you hear about the catastrophe down at the Browns' last night?"

"No. What happened?"

"Why, Mrs. Brown gave the baby a bottle to play with, and while she was in the kitchen it fell out of the cradle and broke its neck."

"What, the baby?"

"No; the bottle."

IS WELL KNOWN IN BURK'S FALLS

There are Numerous Witnesses of Mrs. Adams' Sickness and Cure.

She Surely Had Bright's Disease in its Very Worst Stages.

And Just as Surely was Completely Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Burk's Falls, Ont., Feb. 1.—(Special.)—Mrs. Thomas Adams, of Collingwood, whose almost miraculous recovery from Bright's Disease in its worst stages has caused a sensation in the medical world, is well known in Burk's Falls. She resided here for years before removing to Collingwood, and it was while living here that she was stricken with the terrible disease that sweeps so many into the grave.

Mrs. Adams has many friends still living in Burk's Falls, and they well remember the helpless, suffering invalid, who, in March, 1900, looked as if her only relief lay in death itself. They can recall how when the dread words "Bright's Disease" fell from the doctor's lips, the report went around that Mrs. Adams' doom was sealed, that she would never rise from the bed of suffering on which she lay. They can recall how their sympathy went out to the little children who would soon be motherless.

What Caused the Cure.

Then while they waited and watched for the end, a gradual improvement came over the sufferer. It was hardly noticeable at first, but as she grew stronger and was at length able to leave her bed and give to her children a mother's care, they wonderingly asked the cause. And then the truth came out. Mrs. Adams had on the advice of a friend placed her trust in the old reliable Kidney remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Slowly but surely Mrs. Adams' strength came back till she was going about as if Bright's Disease had never held her in its clutches. Still the skeptics refused to believe. "It is only one of the vagaries of the disease," they said. "It will come back with the winter." But winter came and went. Another summer and another winter passed, and today Mrs. Adams is able to say, "I have had no return of the trouble since Dodd's Kidney Pills brought me back from the brink of the grave."

And now all Burk's Falls, all those who knew Mrs. Adams in sickness and health, are forced to admit Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her Bright's Disease, and cured it to stay cured.

Neither has the lesson taught by Mrs. Adams' case been lost. People recognize the fact that if she had cured her pain in the back with Dodd's Kidney Pills, she would never have had Bright's Disease.

WAKEFUL BABIES.

No baby cries for the mere fun of the thing. It cries because it is not well—generally its little stomach is sour, its bowels congested, its skin hot and feverish. This is often why babies are wakeful and make nights miserable for the parents. Relieve the little one and it will sleep all night, and let the mother get her needed rest as well. Just what mothers need for this purpose is Baby's Own Tablets—a medicine that speedily relieves and promptly cures all the minor ailments of young children. The experience of thousands of mothers has proved the truth of this, and among these mothers is Mrs. James Farrell, Banberry, Ont., who says: "I think Baby's Own Tablets the best medicine in the world for little ones. My baby was cross and gave me a good deal of trouble, but since using the tablets I could not wish for a healthier or better natured child."

Stronger praise could not be given, and the mother has a guarantee that the Tablets contain no opiate or harmful drug. Sold by medicine dealers or sent postpaid at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

DUELING IN AMERICA.

The First Fatal Meeting Was Upon Historic Boston Common.

The first fatal duel fought in what is now the United States was upon Boston Common, between Benjamin Woodbridge and Henry Phillips, on the evening of July 3, 1728. These young men had quarreled over cards at the Royal Exchange tavern in King street, now State street, and under the influence of drink had agreed to settle their differences with swords in the public grounds above named. They met at a little after 8 o'clock in the evening, and Woodbridge was mortally wounded and was found dead the following morning.

Both were gentlemen of good social position. Phillips was a brother of Gillam Phillips, who married Marie, the sister of Peter Faneuil, the builder of Boston's famous hall. Woodbridge had not completed his twentieth year. He was a young merchant who had recently been admitted to business as a partner with Jonathan Sewall, one of the most active merchants of the place. Henry Phillips, a young graduate of the college of Cambridge, was about four years older than Woodbridge, having at the time of this melancholy affair completed his twenty-third year. Woodbridge was the son of a gentleman of some distinction in Barbados, one of the magistrates there, who had formerly been settled in the ministry as pastor in Groton, Conn.

The place of meeting was on the rising grounds of the Common, not far from the great elm, near where in the olden time a powder house stood. Small swords were used. No one but themselves participated. Woodbridge fell mortally wounded and died on the spot before the next morning. Phillips was slightly wounded and at midnight, by the aid of his brother Gillam and Peter Faneuil, of famous memory, made his escape to the Sheerness, a British man-of-war then lying in the harbor, and before the sun of the next morning had fully discovered to interested friends the miserable result of the unfortunate meeting he was on his way to France, where he died in less than a year of grief and a broken heart.

A SHORT ANSWER.

The Reply That Bismarck Made to an Admirable Speech.

I like to think of old Bismarck as he sat by the window that opens on the windy park of Friedrichsruh in an old gray shooting jacket, a rug over his knees, a pipe in his hand, simple as a north German farmer, this man who had almost held Europe in fee.

A little while before this February day he had been deposed from power. All the world knew that the old lion was sulking in his den in no amiable mood toward the young emperor who had turned him out of doors. It was known that his memoirs were written and that his correspondence was set in order. A New York publisher thought he might secure the papers in which Bismarck had told the real story of the birth of the German empire—that strange story of craft and heroism, littleness and grandeur. It was on this mission that I sailed for Hamburg. I had two letters for Bismarck. One was from a negligible ambassador. The other had been given me by a German statesman of some note with whom in other days I had been a student in the University of Jena. My friend had been a familiar of Bismarck's household and bespoke me a kindly hearing. I sent the letters on from Hamburg and followed the next day.

On the table at his elbow as he sat by the window I noticed my letters. The valet who had placed a chair for me took his stand by the door. I said what I had to say. It was (permit me to affirm it) an admirable speech. For ten days and nights I had rehearsed it as I paced the deck of the stormy liner, so in tolerable German I declaimed it. It was dignified; it was diplomatic.

When I had finished Bismarck took the pipe from his lips, said "Nein" and put the pipe back again.

'Twas the shortest answer I ever had in my life. I waited for a moment. The old man smoked and stared out into the park. I got up and bowed. I had rehearsed that bow and did not intend to waste it. I bowed to his old hairless head, the flabby yellow jowls and big mustache, to the old gray jacket and the pipe. It was like salaaming to a stone wall. Then the valet led me out. In the park I regained my senses.—Vance Thompson in Success.

Mark Twain Missed the Boat.

The success achieved by Mark Twain during his boating days on the Mississippi river was due not only to the fact that he was a skillful pilot, but that he was an earnest one as well. A man who knew Mr. Clemens in those days told how the genial humorist once missed his boat. Instead of inventing an excuse, as many of his companions did, he reported to his superior officer as follows:

"My boat left at 6:10. I arrived at the landing at 6:20 and could not catch it."

As It Is Said.

Hoax—Do you know that thin fellow over there?

Joax—Oh, yes; we are very thick.

Hoax—And do you know the big fat one?

Joax—Slightly.

Cutting.

Clara—Oh, hum! I wish the Lord had made me a man!

Mother—Perhaps he has, dear; only you haven't found him yet.

A fool may live with cultivated people all his life and never learn anything.

THE RESERVE QUESTION

Much interest is centred upon the promised action of the provincial government in opening up the government reserve in blocks 4593 and 4594. The problem is a knotty one and it is safe to predict that many people will have their objections ready when the government's policy is fully known and put in force. The problem must be forced and no government exists that could settle it in a manner satisfactory to all concerned.

Certainly the early prospectors, those who drove their stakes prior to the time that the reservation was put on the blocks, have rights that in all justice cannot be denied. These we believe are comparatively few in number. The great rush of applicants for licenses came after the reserve had been placed on the land. It has been argued with some show of logic that as the latter staked after they knew a reservation had been placed on the lots and that as they were in no manner the original discoverers of the mineral and timber wealth of the district they did not possess the same rights as the original prospectors of the districts.

Another feature, galling to Canadians, is that of the applications made after the reservation was placed on the blocks the majority are by American capitalists and cliques who rushed in to enrich themselves at the expense of Canadians who were holding back until the reserve should be opened again.

In the rush many claims were restaked, others overlap, and some, it is stated, were never staked except on paper. This muddled condition of affairs may account for a rider added to a statement attributed to Premier McBride, that in recognizing the rights of the bona fide locator his government would not be responsible for any litigation that might result.

The problem is not an easy one to solve. It has been suggested by some that only the rights of the original discoverers should be respected and that the remainder of the lands should be put up at public auction, giving all an equal chance to purchase the same in blocks of suitable size. This method has the merit at least of rendering valuable aid to the present financial distress at present afflicting the provincial government, for the lands are rich, they are well advertised and they would sell at a good figure.

It would also shut out much of the speculative American element who, owing to the leniency of the Canadian alien law, have under normal conditions far superior staking rights than are accorded the Canadian under their laws.

The question is a momentous one, requiring careful consideration. These columns are open to any who would like to express their opinions pro or con on the matter.

SEVENTY-ONE ENLIST.

It is with very great pleasure that we note the awakening of the military spirit in Fernie. The formation of a company of active militia has been discussed in the past but until now nothing definite has been accomplished. Within the last few days, however, the matter has been taken up vigorously and everything looks promising for the establishment of at least one company.

The district officer commanding military district No. 11 will be asked to grant permission for a company to be organized in regular form. As an evidence of the ability of the town to get a sufficient number of men qualified to serve, a preliminary service roll containing 71 names will be forwarded to the D. O. C. This roll is the result of a few hours personal canvas of the citizens and cannot be considered to represent all the men who may be desirous of joining. Judging by the number of men available it may be necessary to form two companies.

The companies might be considered as units of the Rocky Mountains Rangers or possibly might form the nucleous of an entirely new corps. The Rocky Mountain Rangers have already five or six companies scattered throughout the towns of the interior of the province at Rossland, Revelstoke, Kamloops, etc. These companies owing to their geographical situation are not in touch with the Fernie district. The towns of Fernie, Morrissey, Michel, Coal Creek and Cranbrook are in themselves quite capable of maintaining a regiment of their own at least six companies strong.

One of the principal objects in such an organization is to become skilled in the use of the rifle and every effort will be made to secure as quickly as possible, a good rifle range. It is here that we have to look to the Dominion government for assistance, and considering the energy displayed in military matters throughout the Dominion during recent years we feel assured that in addition to the usual equipment of uniforms, arms and ammunition, the government will not only provide a suitable rifle range, but will also erect a drill hall which will be a creditable addition to our town. The parades will afford pleasant recreation for the long winter evenings, and the summer marches and scouting work in the hills will be very beneficial to the physique of those who take part in them.

The natural features of the country are such as to afford the best advantage for obtaining a knowledge of the latest tactics in modern warfare. There is so much latitude in modern tactics that there is sufficient scope for the training of each unit of a force in the particular kind of work for which it is best suited. The men who are taking this matter up will not be content with anything short of the best, and we confidently expect that, both in shooting and general efficiency, the corps will make a very creditable showing.

Amongst those available for service are men who are familiar with both mountain and plain, men who have served in various ranks in the active militia of Canada, men who have served in South Africa and men who wear medals on their breasts denoting service at various points in the broad field of the British Empire. With such material as this, and with the enthusiasm already in evidence it is needless to say the success of the movement is already assured.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The conviction of Luc Krys for deliberately stealing the product of other miners' labor by substituting his checks in the place of the rightful owners' will give general satisfaction among miners, and none will say that the sentence of 6 months at hard labor is not merited by such mean, despicable action. This case should have a wholesame effect upon others so minded as to rob their fellows of their daily bread.

* * *

No appropriation has been made by the government for the building of a road into the Flathead as suggested by the Fernie Board of Trade, and if the promise to open the reserves in May is sincere the legislators at Victoria are guilty of negligence in not providing a means of ingress where outfitting may be done on Canadian territory. At the present time a trail runs into the Flathead from across the international line and unless the government takes the matter up prospecting parties will go in from that side and no benefit will acrue to Canadian outfitters. If the government finds itself financially unable to undertake the construction of a wagon road it ought at least to put in a first-class pack trail. As has already been shown in these columns several sections of a pack trail and road from Fernie already exist and only a few miles of entirely new trail would have to be constructed. The altitude is not great, the grades are very slight, and the completion of a servicable pack trail between Fernie and the reserve would mean the expenditure of only a very modest sum. The advantage of Fernie over other rival places as an outfitting point is also quite apparent. We hope the supplementary expenditures will include a grant for the construction of a trail, at least, from Fernie to the Flathead.

INFORMATION gathered from reliable sources leads us to believe that the Great Northern branch to Morrissey will be extended to Fernie and Michel during the present year. That such information is not given out by the officials of that road does not indicate anything to the contrary, as Mr. Hill's plans are usually kept to himself and he does not make a confidante of the newspaper reporter. Several good reasons why the line should be extended must present themselves before the directors of that company. The famine for cars which existed over the C. P. R. service last Fall exists every year with ever-increasing disaster to the industries of the valley. The coal mining industry is making rapid strides. Already the coke manufacture shows indications of outstripping the B. C. markets. The great bulk of the coke will in all probability continue to be manufactured at Fernie and Michel and in order that the surplus may reach American markets it must be transported by this branch line. North of Michel are immense coal deposits of the finest quality awaiting capital to turn them into untold wealth. The extention of the Northern to Michel is therefore sooner or later a necessity, as these coal fields must look across the international line for their principal market and its construction will be an important factor in that development. There is little doubt in the minds of many railway men that Hill's ultimate object is to secure a second mountain pass for his transcontinental line, and that he never intended to make Morrissey a terminus for a great length of time. Incidentally another transcontinental line would pick up a lot of business in Fernie. The construction of this line during the coming season will mean good times for Fernie in a temporary sense as well as the permanent advancement of the town as the metropolis of the Pass.

He carried as a lantern a switch light stolen from its position at one of the C. P. R. switches. The police from his silly remarks and his wild appearance concluded that his mind was unbalanced. He was arraigned before Magistrate Forbes on Tuesday and sent up to Nelson. He comes from Nova Scotia and admits having been treated in asylums four times for insanity.

Mr. and Mrs. James McEvoy returned on Saturday from Ontario where they have spent the past couple of months. They were glad to get back to the beautiful Fernie climate after experiencing some of the severest winter weather in the history of Ontario. Mr. McEvoy spent a couple of weeks at Ottawa. He reports that the general feeling in the east is in favor of the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific along the lines outlined in the recent bill, though he believes that some slight changes may be made in the contract in the coming session. Mr. McEvoy is more than ever impressed with the future of this town. He believes that it will be only a question of a short time until the growth of Fernie will render necessary the addition of more ground to the present townsite. He has taken up his geological work in the new office built for his use.

BEHIND THE DOOR

BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

AUTHOR OF "A HOUSE OF TEARS" "RED POST PARK" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1894, BY TILLOTSON & SON.

"Yes; Faturday, at 11 a.m., in the vestry hall. Well, here are my views. They are a bit raw yet, and that window sash is in my way."

"Never mind about that until we get to it."

"After the two lodgers, Steinworth and Vickery, went to bed last night," began Inspector Briggs, setting himself well back in his chair, and pressing the palms of his extended hands together, "Dr. Maurice Leclerc called here. He and Miss Rodney had arranged to get married to-day, with or without the consent of Mrs. Davorn, but if possible with it. Mrs. Davorn disliked Leclerc. At any rate, she wouldn't let him handle her money, and she believed it was after her money, or a share of it, that he was. She knew he was in an ugly scrape. There were high words. One of the lodgers overheard the row. Very likely he crept down and put his ear to the door—I was going to say keyhole, but that wouldn't help him much. He had probably some suspicion of this money being in the house. He now knew for certain it was in Mrs. Davorn's room. What could be handier than to wait until the dead of the night, stupefy the lady, and collar the notes?"

"Stop a moment. Do you know that your problematic eavesdropper fanted money badly enough not alone to steal it—which is a large order in itself—but to run the risk of a much graver crime than theft?"

"I know he wanted money badly enough to obtain it in any way that shouldn't fasten on him the guilt of the theft."

"How do you know that?"

"Been to his office to-day and saw his governor."

"Of course you are referring to Steinworth."

"Yes. They call his place of business a mercantile bank. They are really a sort of produce brokers in a big way. Steinworth was going on his holidays to-day—that statement of his is right enough. His books are all in order, but he has been going it pretty heavy in the betting line. There's a bookmaker residing in Clayfields whom I have frequently seen him talking to. I called on Mr. Bookmaker and learned that Steinworth had a week from yesterday to pay up close on £500 under threat of exposure if he didn't."

"A mere debt of honour, which any honourable man may repudiate."

"But the exposure would mean ruin to him in the office, where he is in high favour."

"What is his present salary?"

"A hundred and eighty-two pounds a year."

"Five hundred is a large sum for a clerk on three ten a week to owe. Better for him to bolt than to stump up."

"Bolting wouldn't suit him. He has large expectations from a wealthy and strait-laced relative. Besides, he has started a little bookmaking business of his own on the quiet—under another name. Commission business, they call it, I believe. All he wanted was a short loan."

"At tremendous heavy interest, if you are correct in your surmises."

"He never contemplated anything worse than chloroforming Mrs. D. He calculated that suspicion would fall on Vickery, or on Dr. Leclerc, both being persons who wanted money badly—and were known to want it badly—and who were in the habit of using chloroform in their businesses or professions. He may have had other motives, too, and other reasons for supposing that the guilt could not be fastened on him, but I think I have hampered myself with enough motives as it is."

"Well, let us see. You have got as far as fixing Steinworth outside the door of Mrs. Davorn's room. What next?"

"Then a brilliant thought struck him. He waited until the small hours of the morning—the night was pitch dark—and let himself out of his bedroom window, dropped to the ground with the aid of a rope or some similar kind of help, chloroformed Mrs. D., put the notes into his pocket, went up on the first floor landing, turned the key in his own lock—"

"And Vickery's lock? What of it?"

"I have not forgotten it. Steinworth reflected shrewdly enough that it would look a little too clever if his door, and his door only, was found locked, so, prudently enough, he turned Vickery's key. Then he crept downstairs, passed out through the front parlour window, closed it after him, and got back to his own room through his own window."

"A very good case, indeed—for Steinworth," said Goringe, after a pause. "Unfortunately for you, inspector, it has one serious thing against it."

"What is that?"

"It never happened."

CHAPTER IX.

CONSTABLE YOUNG'S OPINION.

"I know your mind is fixed on that window hasp not being opened from the outside," said Inspector Briggs gloomily.

"My dear sir," said Detective Goringe, "your man need not have put himself to the inconvenience of dropping out of a window in the dead of the night. He could have walked downstairs taken the money, murdered the lady, locked his door, and climbed up into his room in some way or by some means which we haven't yet discovered."

"Of course he could," said the inspector. "My mind was so much occupied with my original theory that I couldn't get the proper lay of the matter. You have hit the nail on the head, I expect. My thanks to you."

"Don't thank me, please. Steinworth neither dropped out of his window nor climbed up to it from below. If he has any of the proper criminal instincts, he would have known that a trick so easy to be found out was no use for his purposes. He must have been aware that the locked door in itself would never have been strong enough. He must have been certain that the window trick could be proved to be impracticable."

"Then you also suspect it was Steinworth?"

"I can't afford to have suspicions. I have none. Suspicions are like accommodation bills—kite-flying, as they call it in the city and elsewhere—mighty dangerous things to put your name to. I try to go for certainties—not the 'morals' of the betting man, but sound cash transactions. Up to the present I have an open mind on the whole case. I know too little of Steinworth and his ways. For aught I can tell he may be a model of all the virtues."

"You know as much as I know, now."

"Very well. But granting he was sufficiently cornered to contemplate the theft, I don't think you have hit the nail on the head. The young man must be a very idiotic sort of a creature, or he would think twice before climbing up the side of the house, as if he were practising for the trapeze business—a house, too, situated in a narrow road with a flaring gas-lamp right in front of his window, and the prospect of the patrol catching him in midair. If he stole the money, he is no fool, and whether he stole the money by design and killed the lady by accident, or whether he did neither, he never left the house last night."

"Then he is a completely innocent man, that's all, and I'd best drop him."

"Don't give way to temper, inspector."

"Steinworth, from the inside, couldn't lock himself into his room. That is, I think, perfectly impossible."

"Granted. I have examined the lock, and so far I am compelled to agree with you."

"Neither could he have been helped by Vickery. At any rate, these two are at daggers drawn, and are not likely to have entered into a conspiracy."

"Then in your own mind you have now practically disposed of the two lodgers. Neither could have locked himself into his room."

"Not without aid from the outside, and if no one came in through the parlour window last night—there are no signs of any other part of the house having been broken into—we are reduced to Miss Rodney."

"And Dr. Leclerc," added Goringe.

"And Dr. Leclerc!"

"Now, let us start with him. What's his record?"

"Very dickey, I must allow. He's a wild young man. He wasn't unknown to me in his student time, when I was stationed at Whitechapel. He was as wild as a young colt, but that's nothing. However, having as one would suppose sown his wild oats down east, he starts a job here which doesn't look very promising for a young medical practitioner."

"I have heard of what you are referring to, though I know nothing of the inside of the case. From the outside it doesn't look really very awful, but that's nothing either."

"He freely admits he was on the point of clearing out of the country, and that he had all arrangements made to fly this very day, leaving his troubles behind him."

"That doesn't look well for him, to say the least of it. He must be a bit bewildered by the state of affairs here to make so foolish an admission."

"Right down crazy he looked to-day."

"Very well. Put all romance out of the question, and out of your head. Don't mind blushing if you're given that way. Miss Rodney is an uncommonly pretty girl. To mix her or her lover up with a foul crime like this would seem to you too awful."

"Nothing would seem too awful," interrupted Inspector Briggs, testily, "if I felt sure I could prove it."

"There, we'll not quarrel. Now wouldn't it be ever so much a simpler story if I were to tell you that a young medical practitioner, facing ruin for the want of a little of the ready, accustomed to handling chloroform (which we'll take it a young cockney bank clerk isn't) thought to forstall matters a bit? He was going to marry the niece, the only surviving relative, it seems, of the dead woman. Wouldn't he have a sort of prescriptive right to this money? And when was he ever again likely to want it so badly?"

"Yes, there would be something in that story—if you told it to me. But do you?"

"I've not done just yet. The chloroform is in my mind. If it were Vickery you had fastened your suspicion upon it would be another thing. His room seems steeped in drugs, and liberally furnished with empty vials."

"You have disposed of him by agreeing he couldn't lock himself into his room without the aid of an accomplice."

"But why shouldn't Mr. Vickery have an accomplice? Besides, I do not say he could not or did not do the window trick. There are no telltale flower boxes on his window-sill. There is only a back yard to drop into, not a patrolled roadway. There is no public gas-lamp blazing in front of his bedroom window."

"Yes. There is something in that, but where does it lead to? Not to the centre of a circle, but right slap into a maze, it seems to me. You say Dr. Percival is not confident Mrs. D. died from the effects of chloroform?"

"Did he tell you this?"

"My dear inspector, you must forgive me. I am thinking only of my own case—the discovery of the thief."

"I can't quite follow you. You are evidently trying to puzzle me.

"Not at all. I want to clear your mind of suspicion, if that is possible, and start you on a straight track. I must go back a bit and finish my interrupted story of the accomplice—an accomplice either of Steinworth or of Vickery. Why shouldn't there have been one whom you have not yet scented? Some one who did not sleep under the roof last night?"

"He wouldn't have been likely to lose his time jobbing at the window sash from the inside."

"How do you know what his motives might have been—maybe to put you on the wrong track?"

"What do you want me to believe exactly?"

"I don't want you to believe anything just yet. I want you to concentrate your thoughts, having first of all viewed the matter from every side. Dismiss that window hasp as a strong factor. It was done from the inside. It may have afforded an outlet to the thief or the murderer. It never let him in. It may have been done for the purpose of putting all of us on the wrong scent—a red herring. Perhaps I think more of your original theory, with modifications, than I admit. Perhaps I don't."

"I confess you have enveloped me in a fog."

"You'll emerge from it soon, never fear. But let me proceed. Don't narrow your view too much, and don't aroused her from sleep—the bell which had summoned her to behold the most awful sight her young eyes had ever witnessed? She possessed a morbid spread it over a lot of useless ground."

"All right, partner. I'll do my best to follow your advice. But will you just give a lame dog a bit of a lift over the stile? What is your opinion, fair and square?"

"Bless you, like the knife-grinder and his grievances, I haven't got any. I have a kind of feeling, though, that, as children say, the money—this £1,300—those 13 crisp Bank of England notes for £100 each—are 'warm.'"

"In the house?"

"In the house. And I mean to find them."

"You surprise me. How does that fit in with your views—so far as I can gather what your views are?"

"I don't expect it to fit in with anything. I simply state it as a feeling of mine. To your skeptical mind that is just the same as a suspicion, but it really isn't a suspicion. It is the working of some kind of sixth sense—not fully developed—which I have been gradually acquiring. You look incredulous, inspector, but surely if a thought-reader can read the number of a hidden bank note a thief-catcher ought to be able to develop ideas and scents concerned with stolen money."

"Perhaps so. But you are after taking a lot of the pluck out of me."

"Don't be faint-hearted so early in the chase. By the way, who's going to take charge here to-night?"

"264Y will be on the outside until 10 o'clock."

"No objection to my sleeping here to-night—in Steinworth's room, as he has left it?"

"Not the slightest objection. Hello, there's a knock. Young, I expect—264Y," taking out his watch.

"Let us ask him his views."

"I don't suppose he would help us much," laughed the inspector. "He'd probably tell you the thing was done to spite the police."

"Oh, I am not ashamed to learn wisdom from the mouths of babes, even of babes in uniform. He is an earnest looking customer. Kind of man who would rush straight at an object and not take any heed of side lights. But there goes the knocker again. Suppose he is growing impatient."

Inspector Briggs went into the hall, relit the candle and opened the door. The visitor was Constable Young, and he was soon standing bareheaded in the presence of Detective Goringe.

"Well, 264Y," said the gentleman from the Yard. "You look hot."

"So I thought, sir," said Constable Young, whose h's began suddenly to fall out of gear when he was addressing his superior officers. "Been 'ustling away a crowd from these 'ere railings outside. Can't understand, sir, what attraction there is in corpses, hespecially them as ain't gone off the 'ooks in the reg'lar way. But it's human natur', I suppose."

"Most like," said Detective Goringe. "Human nature has a good deal to answer for. By the way, 264Y, what's your opinion of this business here?"

Constable Young drew himself up proudly, as the gentleman from the Yard asked him this all-important question. He placed one hand flat on his chest and held the other hand by his side with fingers outstretched. Then he shook his conical head as if he were not quite certain if it was securely balanced.

"I 'ave only one hopinion, sir," said the constable, as decisively and as confidently as if he were discussing the merits of the weather. "It was the gove with the chemicals that did the trick."

CHAPTER X.

AN INVITATION.

In her room on the top floor of the house Ethel Rodney sat in the darkness, distraught with grief and wild with terror.

Early in the afternoon she had fled upstairs, determined to quit the house as soon as she had put a few things together, and to seek for some place in the neighbourhood where she might engage a bedroom. She could not sleep another night in the awful house which contained the dead body of her aunt—the aunt whose last conscious moments she had made miserable.

Her interview with Leclerc and her anxiety about him had disturbed her more than she liked to confess to herself. She had dismissed from her mind all notion of a marriage with her lover—her lover who stood in danger of being accused of the hideous crime that had been committed in the house. That marriage could not now be—not for a long time, if it was ever to be. She had offered to keep her promise to marry Maurice Leclerc that very day, but he had declined. And now that she was able to bring some show of calmness and reason into her dizzy brain she felt he was right. The marriage must not be. Not yet awhile.

And in the meantime what was she—a forlorn, penniless girl—to do? How was she to exist? Her aunt's money—a shudder convulsed her as the thought of this money forced itself upon her—was all gone. She had in her possession only a few pounds, barely enough to carry her at the very outside over a few weeks. What would be her fate then? That she was her aunt's sole heir did not occur to her, nor the fact that the furniture of the house, whatever it might be worth, would eventually be hers. She only knew that she was possessed of three sovereigns, and she was doubtful if she had any right to use them. They had been given to her the previous day by her aunt for housekeeping purposes.

She had a fairly good knowledge of the millinery business, but she was well aware that situations were not to be picked up at a moment's notice; that she might spend many and many a weary week hunting for a place. And in the meantime what was to support her? What was to happen to her?

She had in Clayfields no friends, no intimate, unselfish friends who would help her now in her dire trouble. She was now in a morbidly sensitive condition about everything, and it seemed to her that every one would shun her. The only one she could think of who had ever shown her any real courtesy and kindness was Mrs. Percival, the doctor's wife. But that was before Maurice had quarrelled with Dr. Percival.

She loved and trusted Leclerc, but she could not repress the feeling that much of his troubles—his troubles apart from this which would arise out of the present tragedy—had been caused by her. Indirectly, of course. But he had in his eagerness to make a home and position for her got himself into difficulties from which he now seemed unable to extricate himself.

Ethel possessed no shadow of suspicion of her lover in connection with the crime which had been committed in the room which was now almost at her feet—that awful room, which would haunt her forevermore. It was terrifying to think of what had happened while she had been asleep last night, what had happened while she was so very near it all. How was it she had heard no sound during the night; that nothing had disturbed her until the ringing of the bell in the early morning had horror of death. This morning, for the first time, she had seen a dead body, felt a dead body—the dead body of her aunt.

Mechanically she had commenced to pack a trunk which stood in her room. For hours she had occupied herself arranging and rearranging, packing and upacking, her thoughts scarcely occupied with what she was doing, until at last the waning light of the October afternoon warned her that night was approaching—night which was to cover with its cloak the dark deeds of wicked men—night which now possessed terrors for her which had never before wandered into her troubled brain.

She crouched over the trunk, almost afraid to move. She could not even collect her thoughts sufficiently to think of striking a light. In a half conscious way she remembered she had left her candle on the hall table. She could not go down stairs past that hideous door inside of which her aunt lay dead—murdered—in the darkness. She was a prisoner in her room. Should she have to spend another night in this house? Could she live through such a night?

At last she stood up from her trunk, and exhausted with her emotions, she had stumbled to a chair which stood at the head of her bed. She tottered to the seat and sat staring at the door of the room, which faced the head of her bed.

And now a new train of thought forced itself upon her. There were duties to perform to the dead. How was she performing her duties? Or what was to be done? To-morrow her aunt would be taken from the house. Perhaps to-morrow she would find the courage to do her duty, to forget her own selfish thoughts. To-night she could not.

She had no idea how long she had been seated at her bedside nor when she had fallen asleep, but she was awakened out of a pleasant dream—a dream which was not overshadowed by any suspicion of sorrow or of death—by hearing herself called in a loud voice.

"Miss Rodney! Miss Rodney!"

With a startled cry she sprang to her feet, unconscious where she was. It was some appreciable moments before she could recollect where she was standing, or what had happened.

The visitor was Constable Young.

Then she opened the door, and answering the summons, again repeated, with a "Yes, I am here," she saw a gleam of light on the landing beneath her.

"You sleep soundly. I am glad to know it. Will you follow me down stairs?"

"Oh, Dr. Percival," cried the young girl, recognizing the voice. "I will be with you presently."

She hastily retired to her room and bathed her face in cold water. She knew she could not hope to wash away all traces of her tears in a moment, but what did it matter? There was the kind doctor below waiting to give her the opportunity she sought—the opportunity of escaping from the house of the dead.

Taking a cloak and a hat with her, she descended the stairs and was soon standing alongside Dr. Percival, whose kindly eyes showed no trace of surprise at Miss Rodney's disheveled appearance. He held a lamp in his hand.

"I want to speak to you," he said. "I will light you down stairs," holding the lamp on high.

Ethel sought the front room. As she descended the stairs she saw a light in the dining-room and heard the hum of voices.

She rightly surmised that some of the police force were in the room. She had asked them early in the day if it was possible that they would relieve her of the charge of the house until she had time to recover herself. She had been told an inquest would be held, and she knew that her aunt's body would be removed next day from the house, but during the day she had battled strenuously with her thoughts whenever she felt they were drifting into an enquiry as to what was to happen. Now she felt possessed of a strange new courage. Whatever was to be done, whatever her duty to the dead was, she would face it unflinchingly. The storm of grief had passed away. Bounteous sleep had cleared the terror-laden atmosphere.

"Now, my dear young lady," said Dr. Percival, "I don't think this will be a proper place for you to spend the next few days. You must pardon my intruding upon your affairs, but at a time like the present conventionality is not the most commendable form of treatment."

KIDNEYS AND LIVER AFFECTED BY COLDS

Backache and Pains in the Legs the Common Symptoms—Cure Comes with the Use of

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Exposure to damp, cold weather is a frequent cause of kidney disease. Sitting in a draught so as to chill the feet and legs is frequently enough to bring on congestion of the liver.

Colds settle on the liver and kidneys as well as the lungs. The results are diseases of the most dreadfully painful and fatal sort.

As yet there has never been discovered a preparation equal to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills as a prompt and thorough cure for derangements of these great filtering organs.

Pains in the back, headache, urinary disorders, biliousness, liver complaint, dyspepsia and constipation soon disappear when Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are used.

Mr. G. T. Martin, Fletwode, Assa., N.W.T., writes: "I desire to bear witness to the indisputable efficacy of Dr. Chase's remedies. I have not written sooner because I wished to be convinced that the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills would accomplish the desired results. In each case in which we have had occasion to use them in our family they have not only brought prompt relief, but have also effected a lasting cure. As I desire to always have Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills in the house in case of sickness, I am enclosing one dollar for five boxes.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25c a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Lowell and Bret Harte.

Bret Harte, flushed with first fame, was Mr. Howells' guest for a week in the early seventies. Harte's breezy Bohemianism delighted Cambridge and its environs, which quite as thoroughly amused the young Californian journalist.

It was fine to see him humorously accepting the humorous attribution of scientific sympathies from Agassiz in compliment of his famous epic describing the incidents that "broke up the society upon the Stanislaus." It was a little fearsome to hear him frankly owning to Lowell his dislike for something overliterary in the phrasing of certain verses of "The Cathedral." But Lowell could stand that sort of thing from a man who could say the sort of things that Harte said to him of that delicious line picturing the bobolink as he—

Patti and William I.

The story of Adelina Patti's first encounter with Emperor William I. is worth repeating. It was at Homburg that the meeting took place, and the diva was then quite a young girl. On the evening of the same day an invitation came to her and her father to meet his imperial majesty next morning at the springs at 7 o'clock.

"I get up at that hour," cried the spoiled child, "to please any emperor? No, no! I wouldn't think of it! Tell him so."

William I., ever good natured, laughed heartily over her ultimatum, which greatly amused him. The last time his majesty saw Patti was in Berlin, and he was then a dying man. When she called upon him at his box he welcomed her with his most genial smile.

"Ah," he said, "you remember Homburg? But you don't mind waiting upon me now."

Foiled.

"Anger," he said thoughtfully, "shortens life."

She looked at him sharply.

"It also," he went on, "spoils beauty. It has an exceptionally injurious effect on a pretty face."

"John Henry," she exclaimed, "what is it you want to say to me? What provoking suggestion have you to make now? For what offensive ruling in domestic economy are you paving the way?"

Then he knew that all his precautions were useless and that he might as well have told her in the first place that she would have to wait a month for that new bonnet.—Chicago Post.

ACHES AND PAINS.

Are Merely Symptoms of Disease and Must be Treated Through the Blood.

If you suffer with pain—any kind of pain—keep in mind that pain is but a symptom, not a disease; that what you must fight is not the pain but its cause; that liniments and oils for external application are absolutely useless. To overcome the cause of pain internal treatment is necessary. Pains, no matter where located, will disappear when you purify and enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves. Aches and pains disappear as if by magic when Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are used. Every dose actually makes new, rich, red blood, which drives disease from the system and banishes pain. Thousands and thousands of grateful people have given their testimony to prove this. Mr. George Cary, Tilbury, Ont., says: "For a whole summer I suffered terribly from sciatica. The pain was something awful, and I could scarcely bear to have anything touch my leg. I took medicine from two doctors, and tried a number of recommended remedies, but derived no benefit. Then I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and this medicine helped me almost from the start, and soon released me from the trouble, and I have not since had a twinge of it. I therefore have great reason to praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Sciatica, rheumatism, neuralgia and all other aches and pains are completely driven from the system through a fair use of Dr. William's Pink Pills. Don't take any pink colored substitute; see that the full name "Dr. William's Pink Pills for Pale People" is printed on the wrapper around the box. If in doubt send direct to the Dr. William's Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

"Please, ma'am," said the cook, "I'd like to give you a week's notice." "Why, Mary, this is a great surprise; do you hope to better yourself?" "Well, no, not exactly that," answered Mary with a blush. "I'm going to get married."

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir— the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated disease rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

There are so many cough medicines in the market, that it is sometimes difficult to tell which to buy; but if we had a cough, a cold, or any affliction of the throat or lungs, we would try Hickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Those who have used it think it is far ahead of all other preparations recommended for such complaints. The little folks like it as it is as pleasant as syrup.

CASHEL CAUGHT NEAR CALGARY

He Exchanged Shots With the Police.

FOUND HIDING IN A HUT

Murderer Bluffed at Shooting Himself But Gave up After Torch Was Applied to the House—Now Safe in Barracks—Will Hang February 2.

A Calgary dispatch, dated Jan. 24, says :—Ernest Cashel, the condemned murderer, who made such a daring escape from the police barracks guard-room, was captured this afternoon by the mounted police about six miles northeast of Calgary. He is now in the guard-room at the barracks and will be hanged on Tuesday.

Cashel gave the police a chase for forty-five days, and a hard chase, too. During that time he was not more than six miles away from the city at any one time. During a portion of that time he was in the city. During the last few weeks he was in the eastern portion of the city. The police learned of his whereabouts two weeks ago. They found that he was well informed of all that was going on and that he was here for the purpose of rescuing his brother if possible, if his brother was convicted. Two weeks ago the police informed the Calgary papers of this fact, and as it was learned that Cashel was in some way being kept informed of all that was being done, a request was made that nothing be published, and that is the reason that very many rumors, most of them true, or with some foundation, which have been going the rounds during the last few weeks, have not found their way into print.

On Tuesday last Ernest Cashel stopped at the house of a man named Wigmore, who lives a few miles east of Calgary. He stopped there during the night and in the morning he confessed that he was Cashel, and he ordered the man not to leave the house that day. He said that he could get out of the country if he wanted to, but that he did not want to leave without his brother. Other people say that Cashel held them up for money and got money. All these reports were sent into the police headquarters. The police took no decidedly offensive position, but sent out plain clothes men in the district and scattered them in the houses and prepared to await developments.

After the conviction of John Cashel on Friday the police decided to take energetic action, and on Sunday morning 32 men started out from the barracks to search every house in the entire district. The squads were divided into eight men each. Colonel Sanders went east, Inspector Knight went south, and Inspector Duffis, with his men, went north.

The following were in Inspector Duffis' squad : Mr. Chamberlain, of the secret service department, Toronto, and Constables Biggs, Peters, Stark and Rogers.

The party set out at eight o'clock this morning and searched everything they came to, through barns, through houses, cattle sheds and hay stacks. The party found nothing up till noon. Shortly after the party separated. At that time they were about seven miles from Calgary.

Biggs, Peters, Stark and a civilian who had been picked up on the way, by name Connell, started on and got about half a mile in advance of the party. The party came up to a shack owned by William Pitman, of this city. Biggs, in examining the house, came upon a kind of den in a stack about seventy-five feet from the house. In this den he discovered enough to convince him that Cashel was either in the place or had been there a short time before. In the den there were clothes which Cashel had stolen from the Rigbys and other things which Cashel had worn. Among other things found there was a piece of paper with the single name of "A. G. Woolley-Dodd" written on it. Mr. Woolley-Dodd was the foreman of the Cashel jury. The party went into the house. They searched the garret and the house and then Biggs went into the cellar. He saw in one corner a hole where a man might conceal himself. He went upstairs and got a light and held it to the hole. He saw a man. Hardly had he seen him when flash went a revolver shot on one side of his head and flash went a shot on the other side of the head. Biggs was not armed and he made a retreat upstairs. He got his revolver and had hardly reached it when Cashel was right behind him. Biggs fired at once and Cashel came back with a shot which tore off the inside of the door behind which Biggs had taken to cover. Biggs followed with a shot which tore into Cashel's boot. Cashel fired again, and as Constable Stark was just getting into the game with his gun, Cashel dropped back into the cellar. In the meantime one of the police was sent back to inform Inspector Duffis, who was a mile or more away. He came up with Messrs. Heald and Chamberlain. It was decided that the building should be burned. The contents of the building were carefully removed. Then the torch was applied. When Cashel smelled the smoke he gave signs of a parley. A bullet shot was heard and it was thought that he had shot himself. He then called out that he was going to kill himself, but that he wanted someone to come down to get a letter which he had for his mother. This had no effect upon the police, and the inspector ordered him to come up and hold up his hands and come out. He said that he would kill himself then and that he would leave the letter in one corner of the cellar. There was another shot, but no one moved from above, and again Inspector Duffis ordered him to come out. He saw that the bluff did not work, and a moment later Ernest Cashel, haggard, unkempt, bearded and shaggy, came out, his hands in the air, and gave himself up.

The honor of the arrest was given to Biggs. Cashel was placed under arrest and in a few minutes was in a cell in the barracks.

He was very communicative on the way in, and said that he could have escaped very frequently, but that he would not leave his brother, who had dared so much for him. Cashel was up-to-date in all his information. He knew that he was to be hanged on January 26th. He also knew of the conviction of his brother.

CASHEL CONVICTED.

Found Guilty of Assisting His Brother to Escape.

John Cashel was convicted on the charge of assisting his brother to escape from the barracks.

The evidence on the last day of the trial was more in fixing up the little details of the case, and had but little to do with the main part of the prosecution. A number of mounted policemen were called to prove that they had not handed in firearms. Mr. Short, in a strong arraignment, addressed the jury for forty-five minutes. Mr. Nolan followed for the defence in a strong speech of half an hour. Chief Justice Sifton charged strongly against the prisoner. That revolvers had been given to the accused was proved. The opportunity was clearly shown. "The evidence," said he, "proves to my mind that he had an opportunity to hand not only two revolvers to Ernest Cashel, but a gatling gun, had he desired. Regarding the intention, he referred to the letter to Elmer Ward, which letter, he believed, the crown was quite justified in believing, referred to a proposed escape. He referred to the cartridges, and said that he believed that those which had been found in the coal box at the barracks had been dropped there by John Cashel. There was evidence to show that no person else who had contact with Cashel had given the guns to him. This narrowed the case down. If they had reasons to believe that the revolvers had been secured any other way they should give the prisoner the benefit of the doubt.

The jury retired and was out for twenty-five minutes, and returned to be instructed regarding the verdict, but two verdicts, "guilty," or "not His lordship replied that there were guilty." If "not proven" it would mean not guilty. The jury then became in with a verdict of "guilty." tired and was out for an hour, and Death on the Culm Bank.

No matter what form death assumes, it is never welcome. The grim messenger makes his appearance in many forms in the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania, but only one form is painless and pleasant, and to only one the victims go unconsciously. It is the death of the burning culm bank.

Many times during the year is such a death recorded when one of these great culm banks is burning. The fire is not seen in the daytime, and at night it shines only with a faint glow through the layers of ashes which separate the live coals from the outer air.

To these burning banks tramps and other unfortunates forced to spend a night in the open air go when the nights grow chilly. The warm breath of the culm lures them on with a promise of a warm bed for the night, and they lie down to sleep in the comfortable atmosphere of the bank and never open their eyes again.

The noxious gases emanating from the bank waft over them so softly that they are soon asleep, and in many cases they never awaken, being suffocated during their slumbers.

HE WAS PREPARED.

Whitaker Wright Took no Chances and Was Ready.

"Suicide" was the verdict passed by the coroner's jury in the closing chapter of the tragedy of Whitaker Wright. His death was caused by suffocation in consequence of poisoning by cyanide of potassium. The jury found that Wright was perfectly sane and that his death was due to most deliberate suicide. From the inquest it was shown that Wright had determined to take his own life in the event of an adverse verdict, and that he went to court with a cyanide tabloid in his possession, while in his hip pocket was a new revolver, fully loaded and even cocked. After the sentence Wright went to the lavatory while the tipstaff in attendance on him remained outside. There he swallowed the tabloid, returned to the consulting room, washed down the poison with whisky and water, and died.

The small coroner's court at Westminster was so crowded that Whitaker Wright, jr., son of the dead man, had to stand up throughout the proceedings. He and other witnesses in the main bore out the facts already stated. Neither the son nor the deceased's closest friends, so they testified, never heard Wright even intimate that he contemplated suicide. His solicitor, George Lewis, jr., said the deceased all along implicitly believed that he would be acquitted, or that, at the worst, he only contemplated a disagreement of the jury. Even after his sentence Wright showed only indignation.

In talking with Mr. Lewis, Mr. Eyrie, one of his sureties, and Mr. Waters, the accountant of the London & Globe corporation, Wright said : "I really think I am the most composed of you all."

As regarding an appeal Wright said he would do exactly as he was advised. Asked if some one had not better telephone the verdict to Mrs. Wright, Wright said : "No, there is plenty of time for that."

LAST GIFTS.

Taking out his watch and chain, Wright handed them to Mr. Eyrie, saying : "I shall not have any use for this in that place," meaning the prison. "I give it to you, Eyrie, keep it for me." This was all that occurred.

After Wright had taken the poison, holding a glass in his hand and still sipping its contents, he said : "Waters, give me another cigar."

Mr. Waters took up Wright's cigar case, which was lying on a table, and Wright deliberately cut the end off a cigar and struck a match. Just as he was going to light the cigar he flung the match from him, sank back unconscious and died without uttering another word.

The official analyst, Dr. Freytherger, who conducted the post-mortem examination, testified that there was not the slightest doubt that Wright's death was due to prussic acid in its cyanide of potassium form.

Mrs. Reed's Commission.

The Ottawa Citizen has this paragraph, of interest to many Westerners :

Mrs. Hayter Reed, of Quebec, has been commissioned by the C. P. R. company to select the decorations and furnishings for the interior of the company's palatial hotel now in course of erection at Victoria, B. C. Mrs. Reed is noted for her artistic perception and most excellent judgment in selecting only that, which, according to Morris, is both useful and beautiful; and since her brother has been controller of the hotel Frontenac in Quebec the artistic taste and touch of home comfort everywhere observable in that hotel is acknowledged due to her efforts. Mrs. Reed will be given about two years in which to complete her commission, and in addition to her expenses will be paid the handsome sum of $10,000 for her services.

Toronto Golfer Suicides.

Thos. Lawler, aged 23, committed suicide at Toronto by shooting himself after an unsuccessful attempt to kill his wife and her sister. He was formerly a caddy at the Toronto Golf Club, and became so expert a player that he travelled through the country giving lessons in the game. In domestic affairs he was unhappy, and his wife refused to live with him. He went to the house of her sister, Mrs. Mary Kelly, with whom his wife lived, and going to the kitchen where both women were working, he commenced to fire at them with a revolver. The first shot went through Mrs. Kelly's right hand, the second grazed Mrs. Lawler's forehead. Both women escaped by jumping through the window, and Lawler turned the weapon on himself, the first shot killing him.

Children Saved.

The high and public school buildings at Omemee, Ont., were burned on January 28th. The alarm was given at 11.30, and all the school children were got out safely. The fire started at the furnace, and the building, being of wood, burned rapidly. The loss is about $4,000, which is insured.

ACTION'S LANGUAGE.

OFTENTIMES GESTURE IS AS EXPRESSIVE AS THE SPOKEN WORD.

HOW COMPANIONSHIP TALKS.

Expressive Action of the Leader of a Band—What the Expressions on His Face, the Bending of His Shoulders, the Nervous Movement of His Feet, the Quick Lifting of Both Arms, Means.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Bain, of Toronto, at the Dept of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 21.—In this exposition of an "unwritten sermon," now given to the world as a sacred filial duty, the preacher shows the importance of action as the criterion of a true and practical Christian life. The text is Proverbs vi, 13, "He winketh with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers."

All language is not spoken by the lip. A few months ago I had this truth emphasized in a striking way. I was visiting in the east. The first night while there my friend came to me and said, "I want you to go and hear what I consider the finest orchestral playing in the United States." "Oh, no," I answered, "I cannot go. I am fagged out from travel and work. Besides, I am going to have a hard day of preaching to-morrow, and I must stay home and rest up for it." "But you must go," said my friend. "I not only want you to hear the sweetest of music, but I want you to sit in front of Mr. So-and-So, the leader, and watch the expressiveness of his actions while leading his orchestra. If you ear was as deaf as that of a Ludwig Beethoven, who could not hear the loudest note sounded in his 'Kreutzer Sonata' or in his 'Battle Symphony,' yet you could tell what the musicians were playing by watching their leader's gestures.

What my friend said was true. I went to the concert that night and enjoyed it as much in what I saw as in what I heard. The movements of that leader's hands and wrists, the gentle undulations of his baton, the quick shake of his head and tossing hair, the flitting expressions upon his face, the bending of his shoulders, the nervous movement of his feet, the quick lifting of both arms, told me whether the orchestra was softly sighing a lullaby or whispering a love song or sounding forth a battle call or playing a waltz or a wedding march or moaning a requiem or sounding forth the defiance of the warring elements or singing the song of a harvest home or making all the voices of the woods blend in one sweet chorus. In those swift, sharp or slow movements of that impresario I could see the ever changing spirit of that musical night.

This orchestral leader's movements interpreted, in a musical sense, what every man's "language of action" accomplishes in a moral and spiritual way. A bad man's tongue may be palsied, but he can still speak as do the deaf mutes in the sign language. All the evil spirits that are within him can find their outward expression before an observant world in what he does as well as in what he says. His lifting arms speak. His moving head speaks. His sneering smile speaks. His scornful eyebrows speak. I would supplement my text with the warning words which King Solomon wrote along the same line: "Let thine eyes look right on and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established. Turn not to the right nor to the left. Remove thy foot from evil."

A wicked man's evil actions are manifested, in the first place, by the conspicuous absence from all pure and noble associates. He does not count among his daily companions the good, the pure, the true. He would never feel so proud of his Christian friends as to order, by way of tribute to one of them, such an epitaph chiseled for his own tombstone as Lord Brooks had cut upon his—"Here lies Sir Philip Sidney's friend." He would not do as did Sir Thomas Abney, who was delighted to welcome to his home such a guest as the gentle, consecrated, Christlike brother, Isaac Watts. That English nobleman asked the great hymnologist to visit him for a week at his ancestral manor, and then on account of Isaac Watts' Christian gentleness he persuaded him to prolong his visit for over a quarter of a century. But as birds of a feather flock together and buzzards nest with buzzards and doves with doves, the wicked man eschews the company of the good. He feels just as uncomfortable associating with the pure, the true, the noble, as the good man feels uncomfortable when in the companionship of the bad. The morning cloud is either gilded by the rising sun or blackened by the scowl of the storm. A man's good or bad companionships interpret the character of the inner man in the golden letters of light or in the black letters of death.

A man's true life can nearly always be judged by his surroundings. If I enter your home and find upon your parlor table a well used Bible, if I see upon the walls pure and elevating pictures and especially in conspicuous places such religious pictures as Raphael's "Sistine Madonna" and Rubens' "Descent From the Cross' and Murillo's "Abraham and the Angels" or Correggio's "Repentant Magdalen;" if I see upon your library shelves among the well thumbed books such works as Thomas a Kempis' "Imitation" and Farrar's "Life of Christ" and the biographies of Livingstone and Brainerd and Gordon and a set of Parker's "People's Bible;" if I see your music rack filled with the masterpieces of the great religious compositions, such as Handel's "Messiah" and Wagner's "Parsifal" and Flotow's "Martha" and Mendelssohn's "Elijah" or "Paul;" if I see standing in the corners of the library the plaster casts of such pieces of sculpture as that of Michael Angelo's "David" or "Moses," I am compelled to believe that some pure, noble spirit has been living in and dominating that home. So, by the "language of action," when I find a man longing to be in the house of God on the Sabbath Day, when I see that man, week after week, sitting in a conspicuous place at the midweek prayer meeting, when I find him continually seeking the great religious gatherings which every little while take place in a large city; when I find him, daily and weekly and yearly, associating with men and women noted for their Christian integrity, I am compelled to believe that that man wants to be good and to live a pure life. On the other hand, when I see a man conspicuous for his absence from all good affiliations his actions inform me as plainly as his words could do that his character is just the opposite of what it ought to be.

The father of a great English preacher taught this lesson to his son. Some time after his son, then a very young man, was married his father visited him. After he had passed through and examined the different rooms of the house he said: "My son, there is one mistake about your home. I see nothing in the furniture, in pictures upon the walls or books upon the table to lead me, if I was a stranger to this home, to judge whether you belonged to God or to the devil. In every room and upon every wall you should always have something to prove to your guests that you are a child of God. A man's Christian life should be manifested in the furniture of his house as well as by his outside surroundings." What that Christian parent said in reference to a man's domestic life is essentially true in reference to his outside human affiliations. A wicked man's inner character can nearly always be judged by his conspicuous avoidance of noble associates. By your intimate friends your Christian life is to be judged as well as by the words that you speak.

But a wicked man's actions have a positive as well as a negative significance. If by the absence from all good associates a man's character rests under a dark cloud, then by his bold and reckless defiance of all the great moral influences of the day his wicked life is to be judged also. It is one act to sin in secret and to be ashamed of your sins. It is a far more heinous act to publicly parade your sins and come to a depraved condition, in which you do not seem to care what people may say in reference to your life or how by your bold example they may be led astray through your evil conduct.

This indictment against the actions of an evil man's life is the more positive because, even in the lowest forms of outward vice, by the "language of action" the wicked man nearly always wants to appear a little better than he really is. Theodore Roosevelt, who has been a student of beasts and birds and flowers, says that this characteristic to appear better than they are is not always true of all the inhabitants of the natural world as it is of men. Once, when visiting Nashville, Tenn., he heard a mocking bird, whose reputation for the most part rests purely upon his ability for mimicry, fill a whole night with sweetest music. Upon the tree just outside his opened window the president saw and heard him. "Sometimes," wrote Mr. Roosevelt, "he would perch motionless for many minutes, his body quivering and thrilling with the outpour of music. Then he would drop softly from twig to twig until the lowest limb was reached, when he would rise fluttering and leaping through the branches, his song never ceasing for an instant, until he reached the summit of the tree and launched into the warm, scent laden air, floating in spirals with outstretched wings, until, as if spent, he sank gently back into the tree and down through the branches, while his song rose into an ecstasy of ardor and passion." That midnight song seems to have given the president a higher appreciation of the powers of the mocking bird. The songster, warbling in the darkness and silence of the night, showed that it had more harmony and melody in its being than its hearer had previously supposed. But, unhappily, the converse is generally true of human beings. It is their better nature that they show under observation. It is when they think that their friends do not see or hear them that their worst characteristics are displayed. Many a man whose life when under observation is irreproachable shows, when the restraints of public opinion are removed, a capacity for heinous and bestial sin.

As a wicked person is nearly always worse than he seems, I put this blunt question to you: "Oh, sinner, with froward lips, how dare you desecrate God's holy Sabbath? How dare you, without a blush upon your cheek, be seen entering the saloon or be known to pass your evenings in a disreputable haunt, where the name of Christ is sneered at and ridiculed? How dare you gleefully boast of those sins about which I dare not speak in public? Do you not know that by your "language of action" you are not only destroying yourself, but others also?

Men sometimes have not the courage to commit the crimes they desire, but by their actions incite others to commit them; but God and man hold them accountable for the acts of their agents. As Henry II. of England, goaded by the arrogance of Thomas Becket, connived at his murder and was punished and humiliated as severely as if he had committed it with his own hands, so those who use other men and profit by their crimes are responsible for them. Like the usurper of Naboth's vineyard, he does not slay with his own hands the Jezreelite; but, like Ahab, he shuts his eyes, and allows another to commit the crime he himself is too cowardly to do. "He winketh with his eyes" may mean "the wicked man shuts his eyes to a crime which is being committed in his name."

"Oh," says the merchant, "I am an honest man. No customer ever heard me break my word." Are you honest, my brother? Do you forbid your clerks to make wrong statements in reference to your goods? Do you see that your advertising agents print within the right limit short of exaggeration? If you do you are honest. You are dishonest if you allow other lips to falsify in your name. That conspiracy makes you a falsifier too. "Oh," says the capitalist, "I am an honest man. I am not responsible for what my agent does. If he rents my house for illegitimate purposes his good name is tarnished, not mine." Yes, my capitalistic friend, you are responsible for what your agent does. The same dogs that licked Jezebel's blood licked Ahab's blood. Sin of allowing others to do a crime in our name may be just as condemnable as though we committed the crime with our own hands. Your "language of action" proves it.

Every man is responsible to more or less extent for what others may do in his name, as was that father in reference to his boy who was a very important witness in a New England trial. After the cross-examining lawyer had in vain tried to break down the lad's testimony he at last turned and said, "Your father has been telling you how to testify, has he not?" "Yes," answered Walter, "he has." "Then, my boy, tell us how your father told you to testify." "Well," said Walter, "father said that the lawyers would try to tangle me, but if I would just take my time and be careful and tell the truth I could tell the same thing every time." Though that father was not at the time on the witness stand, by his "language of action" the father spoke when the boy spoke. Thus, my brother, by the same law we are responsible for what our dependants and representatives do in our name.

A wicked man's evil actions are again manifested in his unwillingness to publicly protest against evil whenever he may see it. Silence itself can sometimes make a man party to a crime, although personally he may in no way be benefited by that crime. My brother, if in public you hear the name of Christ blasphemed, if you see young manhood young womanhood, about to be degraded and utter no protest; if you see an injustice about to be done another and lift no warning voice, then, by your "language of action," you become a party to Satan's infamies.

A wicked man's evil actions are again manifested in his willingness to take advantage of a helpless brother or sister through a technicality of the law. By that I mean that through a technicality he is willing to become a moral criminal, a usurer, a swindler, a destroyer, a vampire, if he can only do it and escape the "fine tooth comb" of the law.

There goes an old proverb, "At times nothing is falser than figures and nothing more unjust than exact legal justice." So at times we have seen men become thieves though they could not be arraigned in the criminal court. We have seen men become liars though by the "language of action" they could not be proved perjurers before any legal tribunal. One day, about a year before Abraham Lincoln was nominated at Chicago, a Mr. Lord entered the law office of Lincoln & Herndon and heard a conversation between "Honest Abe" and one of his clients. This conversation closed in the following way: "Yes, we can doubtless gain your case for you. We can set the whole neighborhood at loggerheads. We can distress a widowed mother and her six fatherless children and thereby get for you six hundred dollars, to which you seem to have a legal claim, but which rightfully belongs, it appears to me, as much to the woman and her children as it does to you. You must remember that some things legally right are not morally right. We shall not take you case, but will give you a little advice, for which we shall charge you nothing. You seem to be a sprightly, energetic man. We would advise you to try your hand in making six hundred dollars in some other way." I cannot express my thought that "some things are legally right and not morally right" better than by resting it with the blunt words of one whose "language of action" never intentionally gave utterance to a lie.

When some one asked the great Athenian orator what were the three most effective essentials for successful public speech, Demosthenes answered, "First, action; second, action; third, action." So let the lesson of the text be translated into your lives. Let your actions, public and private, be of such a character that your influence will be one that stimulates, ennobles and spiritualizes the lives of others. In secret and in the eyes of men so act and so live that your associates, your neighbors, the community and the world will be the better for your having lived. By your Christian example you may lead others to become Christians. By your gospel handshake you can win souls for Christ. By your welcoming and encouraging eye you can cheer up the oppressed and the downtrodden. By your gesturing finger you can point out the right path wherein the sinner can forsake his sin and walk hand in hand with God.

After Cardinal Manning was dead these words, which he had spoken into the records of a phonograph, were repeated at a mass meeting gathered in London for a memorial of his life: "I hope that no word of mine, written or spoken in my life, will be found to have done harm to my fellow men when I am dead."

My brother, my sister, always let your influence be cast upon the safe side of every debatable moral question. Let your "language of action" always in Christ's name be a message for hope and never a guide leading toward eternal death.

CASHEL HANGED.

Calgary, Feb. 2.—Ernest Cashel met his death bravely on the scaffold at 8:05 this morning. Prior to the time of the execution he showed much nervousness and he broke down before his pastor Rev. Mr. Kerby who was with him all last night. Just before the final prayer was commenced at the scaffold Cashel admitted that he had killed Rufus Bell in three words "I am guilty," spoken in low tones to his pastor.

The body was buried in the cemetery. The boy murderer left loving messages for his brother and his mother. He met his end not in a spirit of bravado, as some expected, nor yet as a coward, but in a simple, earnest manner sincerely repenting of whatever evil he may have done.

Tendency of the Times.

The tendency of medical science is toward preventive measures. The best thought of the world is being given to the subject. It is easier and better to prevent than to cure. It has been fully demonstrated that pneumonia, one of the most dangerous diseases that men have to contend with, can be prevented by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Pneumonia always results from a cold or an attack of influenza (grip), and it has been observed that this remedy counteracts any tendency of these diseases toward pneumonia. This has been fully proven in many thousands of cases in which this remedy has been used during the great prevalence of colds and grip in recent years, and can be relied upon with implicit confidence. Pneumonia often results from a slight cold when no danger is apprehended until it is suddenly discovered that there is fever and difficulty in breathing and pains in the chest, then it is announced that the patient has pneumonia. Be on the safe side and take Chamberlains Cough Remedy as soon as the cold is contracted. It always cures. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

HILL VISITS FERNIE.

ACCOMPANIED BY MANY OTHER GREAT NORTHERN OFFICIALS.

Interview Officials of the C. N. P. Coal Co. with reference to Coal and Coke rates to American Markets.

A trainload of officials of the Great Northern railway company pulled into Fernie on Sunday morning at eight o'clock and remained until 1 p. m. The train consisted of 5 cars and was pulled by the handsome and powerful new locomotive No. 1,000. Thirty officials in all were on board. The following are a few: Louis W. Hill, son of the big railway magnate, who fills the position of Assistant to the President; General Manager Ward; 4th Vice President Blabon, who has charge of the traffic department; General Superintendent Slade; Assistant General Superintendent Kennedy; Divisional Supt. Lang; Assistant General Freight Agent Grey; Purchasing Agent James; Mr. Emmerson, superintendent of motive power; and other minor officials.

These officials left St. Paul on Feb. 2, on a tour of inspection over their entire system and will visit the Coast before returning. At Fernie they were particularly desirous of meeting General Manager Stockett and Comptroller Davies, that the heads of the different departments might become acquainted with the heads of the Coal Company, and also for the discussion of business relative to the coal and coke industry.

The officials were non-committal on the subject of the extention of the Morrissey branch to Fernie and Michel, their manner indicating that if they knew the President's intentions in the matter they were not in a position to disclose them. They were particularly impressed with the favorable outlook for Fernie, notwithstanding the inclement condition of the weather that morning. Mr. Blabon whose tariff department was most concerned, asked many questions as to the commercial status of the town, and Mr. Stockett made it clear to him that Fernie led all the interior towns of the Province in this respect, population considered.

An important discussion took place between the officials of the railway and the Coal company re the opening up of American markets for the surplus coal and coke which the Canadian market is unable to handle. The rapidly increasing output of the coal mines and coke ovens of this company has already outgrown the Canadian demand and larger markets must be secured to maintain this growth. The outcome of the discussion will probably result in the adoption of suitable freight rates to land the surplus of these products in Montana markets.

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING

Petition the Premier for Fire fund money—Eschwig's Water Application.

The regular meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade was held in Cree & Hutchison office on Monday evening. The promise of Premier McBride to try to secure a government grant of $250 for the fire protection fund was again taken up and information was given to the effect that a large petition might result in the amount being granted. A petition was therefore put in circulation.

A letter was read from J.F. Armstrong assistant Commissioner of Lands and Works, stating that he would be in Fernie on Friday the 12th, when he would appoint a date for the hearing of the objection to the granting of Wm. Eschwig's application for water rights on the west side of the Elk. The meeting appointed H. W. Herchmer to represent the Board when the hearing should come up.

The Board took objection to the application early in January and wrote Mr. Armstrong accordingly. Mr. Eschwig made application for 100 inches of water from a stream flowing down Mount Fernie about half a mile north of John Turner's home. Fifty inches of this, the applicant stated, was to be used for brewery purposes and the other for irrigation. The Board learned that this amount of water would about exhaust the stream. They passed a strong resolution opposing the granting of the water right of this stream to any private person or corporation, as it would in all probability be needed for domestic purposes in West Fernie at some future time.

BOARD OF TRADE BALL.

The ball to be given on Monday evening under the auspices of the Fernie Board of Trade is for the purpose of raising money for the fire protection fund of the town. This fund is exhausted and several pressing debts have to be met. In fact a lien has been placed on the fire hall and payments are overdue on the lot and engine. The committee who have the ball in hand, Messrs. S. Herchmer, Tuttle and Cree, are conducting it in a thoroughly business-like manner, with the object of rendering the greatest possible financial assistance to the fire department. The tickets sell for $2.00. Already over 100 have been sold and the committee hope to double that number. The ladies of the town are very generously taking up the refreshment part of the evening's entertainment, thus relieving the general funds of a heavy expense. The merchants and others most directly interested in fire protection have already contributed largely towards getting the fire department into its present shape and the present scheme of raising more money is considered an equitable way to reach others less interested in the matter. There are few who cannot afford to assist with two dollars, and the aggregate from many will put the brigade on its feet, with a breathing spell to prepare for its next payment. The ball promises to be the social event of the season, as a very large attendance is expected, the full orchestra has been engaged and all other details have been fully arranged.

MATCHES IN MINES.

Habit of Carrying Matches into Mines is Decreasing.

The mine management conducted a simultaneous examination at all the mines on Feb. 1st in search of men carrying matches into the mines. The result was very satisfactory as it showed a marked decrease in the number of cases from the last examination. At Michel not a single case was discovered, at Fernie two miners, Joseph Wells and Walter Herdman were found with matches and at Morrissey Geo. Robinson and Samuel Herd were offenders against the law.

In the past the foreign speaking element have borne the blame for the greater number of infringements against this law, but this examination reveals the fact that not a single foreigner could be found with matches while the four detected were all English-speaking miners. The management is putting forward every effort to stamp out this breach of the mining act and the local authorities is giving valuable assistance. Every miner who values his own safety will appreciate these stringent attempts to lessen the danger from explosions.

Wells and Herdman were tried at the police court on Wednesday. Both told hard luck stories and they were let off with fines. The former one of the earliest miners in the camp had been found with two matches in his pocket and these in believed were placed there by his little son while playing. He was fined $20.00. In Herdman's possession was found the head of a match among a lot of shingle nails. He was fined $10.

CARD OF THANKS.

I wish to tender my sincere thanks to the U. M. W. of A. at Fernie and to all others who assisted my son Wm. Quinn in his sickness and death, also in sending his body home to me.

John Quinn,
Plymouth, U. S. A.

DOUGHERTY A DEFAULTER.

Phoenix, Feb. 8.—A week ago last Wednesday George F. Dougherty, secretary of the Greenwood Miners' Union, W. F. M. No. 22, walked out of Greenwood down to Midway and on into American territory, being a fugitive from justice, having appropriated funds of the union as well as funds of District No. 6, W. F. M. of which he was also secretary.

It required several days to ascertain the amount of his embezzlement, but a member of the Greenwood Miners' union stated to-day it would be nearly $1,400 of which $630 belonged to the Greenwood union and $744 to District Union No. 6.

Dougherty has left his wife and child practically without means of support, and his whereabouts are not known or have not been given out.

Dougherty was formerly president of the Greenwood Miners' Union, but at the last election of officers was chosen secretary. He had been secretary of the District Association No. 6, W. F. M., comprising unions under that jurisdiction in British Columbia, for two or three years, and took a specially prominent part in the settlement of the strike of coal miners at Fernie, about a year ago.

Dougherty is known to have gambled but it is said he did not pay his gambling debts when he left, as well as many others.

The defalcation is partially covered by a bond.

If steps have been taken to apprehend Dougherty, nothing has yet been given out in the matter.

BRICK MANUFACTURE.

A meeting was held on Tuesday night last the 9th inst at the office of Cree & Hutchison for the purpose of making preliminary arrangements for the floating of a company for the manufacture of fire and building brick at Fernie. Mr. John Todhunter, who is at the bottom of the movement, exhibited samples of the fire and building brick and there is no doubt but that within the next few days a company will be floated with a capital of twenty thousand dollars. The silica or fire brick will no doubt be used by the Crows Nest Pass and other coal companies in the district as they are as good or better than the American article and the building brick are A. 1.

The capital stock of the company will be offered for public subscription at the par value of $1 per share. It is probable that Messrs. Cree & Hutchison will be the official brokers. A prospectus will be published in a few days and there is no doubt in the minds of the promoters that the matter will be brought to a successful issue in a very short time. As far as the building brick end of the proposition is concerned the object of the company will be to make the best of building brick at a reasonable price so that Fernie may be able to have brick buildings. This may be an important factor in the future building operations of the town. The introduction of brick buildings will materially lessen the fire danger.

A RARE TREAT.

That very funny comedy "What Happened to Jones" was presented in Princess Hall on Friday evening last by C. P. Walker's talented company. The hall was only moderately filled but the play was so appreciated by the audience that the company can count on a packed house when they return this way early in March to present the sister attraction, "Why Smith Left Home."

"What Happened to Jones" is a light comedy with a logical plot in which one comical situation follows another with regular sequence from beginning to end, leaving not a dull moment for reaction. Wilfrid Reid, as the bogus bishop, is a star. Cissy as the wide-awake, practical, beauty of the household, won the audience completely. The other artists of the company all gave good support, each part fitting in perfectly even where the situations were most complicated and changed most frequently. The audience were kept in convulsed laughter from beginning to end, and any who went with a fit of the blues has scarcely had time for a relapse since.

BURROWS WON ON POINTS.

The 20 round ring contest between Jack Curley and Jim Burrows took place last night in Princess Hall, before a gathering which filled three quarters of the seating capacity of the hall. The men entered the ring shortly before 10 o'clock. Both were in the pink of perfection. Curley weighed in at 166 lbs. and Burrows 10 lbs less but the advantage was scarcely apparent in a close scrutiny of the two men. W. W. Tuttle refereed the contest. He fully appreciated the delicacy of his position and his decisions were perfectly impartial and had the support of the great majority of those present.

The fight in the first few rounds was very even and neither men had any apparent advantage. They led cautiously and though at times heavy slugging was indulged in frequent clinches prevented any serious damage being done. As the contest progressed Burrows began to force the fight and frequently Curley was up against the ropes. In the tenth the latter went down but he was up in a second. After this there were rounds in which the heavier man had distinctly the best of it, but on the whole the coal-miner put up the best fight. Both men watched for knock-out opportunities and many blows were dodged and warded which would otherwise have accomplished this purpose. The referee at the conclusion of the 20th round gave his decision in favor of Burrows on points. Both men were little hurt and appeared fresh at the end of the bout, though the victor showed the greater power of endurance. Curley resorted oftener to the protection afforded by clinching. Great interest was centred on the event and considerable money changed hands.

MANAGERS TO BE CANADIANS.

Amendment to Coal Mines Act.—Other News From The Legislature.

Mr. McInnes' amendment to the Coal Mines Regulation Bill, requiring mine managers to be Canadians was adopted in committee on Tuesday and the bill was read a third time. Premier McBride opposed the amendment. The bill will not affect those aliens who now hold mine managers' certificates but it will operate against granting new certificates to any who are not Canadians.

The government has announced that on account of the financial condition of the province it did not deem it advisable to grant bonuses for the present. The Premier hinted that another session would be summoned later in the year.

Hawthornthwaite's bill making it compulsory for transportation companies to carry members free of charge was lost.

The legislature was prorogued on Wednesday evening by the Lieutenant-Governor.

WAR BREAKS OUT.

Japan Wins in First Naval Encounter.—Deadly Work of Torpedo Boats.

Diplomatic relations between Japan and Russia were broken off on Saturday. The initiative was taken by Japan who evidently grew weary of Russia's dilly dallying policy of delaying negotiations. A Japanese fleet of 17 vessels set sail shortly after for Port Arthur where a midnight naval attack was made upon the Russians, with results disastrous to the latter as the following dispatches disclose.

Port Arthur, Feb. 8.—Japanese torpedo boats attacked the Russian fleet here during the night and three Russian warships were damaged. The Japanese who thus scored the first victory, escaped without loss of any kind. In consequence of the attack martial law has been proclaimed here.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 9.—An official dispatch received here says that Japanese torpedo boats have attacked the Russian squadron in the outer roads at Port Arthur and that three Russian ships were damaged.

Admiral Alexieff's official report of the attack by the Japanese is as follows.

"I must respectfully inform your majesty that at or about midnight Feb. 8-9 Japanese torpedo boats made sudden attack by means of mines upon the Russian squadron in the outer roads of the fortress of Port Arthur in which the battleships Retvizan and Czarevitch and the cruiser Pallada were damaged. An inspection is being made to ascertain the nature of the damage. Details are following for your majesty."

Yesterday's despatches state that a formal declaration of war is expected and that the declaration has been prepared and approved by the Japanese cabinet.

Takio, Feb. 10.—Japan has seized Masampo, Corea, and dispatched a heavy force. Japan will fortify the place and establish a naval and military base.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 11.—The better class of public opinion here regards war with Japan as a mistake, believing that it will not advance Russian interests but will serve only those of western European powers.

London Feb. 11.—The daily telegraph correspondent at Nagasaki under date of Feb. 10th cables that there has been a renewed attack on Port Arthur and the Japanese have captured seven Russian ships and chased others.

London, Feb. 11.—According to cable advices Japan is shipping large quantities of ammunition to China.

FIRE AT BALTIMORE.

Fire broke out in the business centre of Baltimore Md., on Sunday morning and raged for 48 hours before it could be got under control. More than 140 acres of business buildings were destroyed, representing property to the value of $200,000 000 of which about 90,000,000 was covered by insurance. Fortunately no lives were lost in the great conflagration though many firemen were overcome in their heroic struggle against the raging flames. The fire started in the cellar of John Hurst & Co's dry goods building, but its cause is unknown. A heavy gale blowing at the time fanned the flames into a tremendous conflagration which baffled the combined resistance of hundreds of fire companies. Hundreds of millions of dollars in security papers, bonds, etc., stored in vaults, came through the fire in safety. The Baltimore fire will go into history as one of the most destructive fires on record, it rivalling the great Chicago fire of 1871.

ROSSLAND WON FIRST GAME.

Fernie Plays Vernon To-day.—Locals Stand Good Chance For The Cup.

Rossland, Feb. 11, 11 p m.—The first game of the hockey tournament at the Carnival was played to-night between Nelson and Rossland team No. 1.

Rossland won in a close game by a score of 2 to 1. Fernie was to have played Vernon this afternoon but the latter refused to allow Turnbull to play and the Fernie boys walked off the ice. Matters have been adjusted and the game will take place to-morrow afternoon.

Judging from the game played here to-night Fernie stands a good chance of winning the cup.

The hockey team which left here on Monday is composed of the following players:—Goal F. Rutherford; Point, W. Miller; Cover Point, M. A. Kastner; Rover, J. H. Stephens; Centre, Jack McLaughlin; Right Wing, C. Turnbull; Left Wing, D. Lafortune; Spare man, C. Browne. Seven teams are competing for the hockey championship. Rossland has two teams, the other five are: Nelson, Vernon, Revelstoke, Boundary and Fernie.

Five prisoners at the jail refused to work yesterday and they were brought up before magistrate Forbes. It developed that the "strike" was organized by an Italian. He was ordered into the dark cell for two days on half rations. The others were locked up in the cells until they were ready to submit to prison rules. Half an hour later they were out shovelling snow.

The almost continuous snow-fall during the past week has seriously interfered with the operations at the mines. The uncovered tracks to the tipples have been kept clear at the expense of much work and ice forming on the rails in the tunnels interfered with the running of the cars. The snowfall and cold likewise affected the industry at Morrissey and Michel and it is estimated that the output at the three collieries has not been more than 50 per cent of the regular figures. The coke industry has also been hampered as the loading tracks filled up with snow, necessitating much work to clear them. The railway line to Coal Creek has been kept open with difficulty and the train has been stuck in the snow more than once.

"It is very kind of you to interest yourself in me," said Ethel, "particularly at a time like this." She felt the tears rising to her eyes as she spoke, but not the tears of grief which had choked and blinded her earlier in the day.

"Now," said Dr. Percival, "I have a commission for you from my wife. She asks that you will come round to our place for a few days until you can settle your plans for the future. I am glad to see you have got your hat and cloak with you. We can send for anything else you may require. Come with me."

A quick flush of pleasure mounted to the young girl's cheeks.

"Then I am not altogether friendless," was the first grateful thought that surged through her.

CHAPTER XI.

A SLEEPING DRAFT.

"You are a very foolish young man," said Stanley Percival to Maurice Leclerc, as the pair sat in Dr. Percival's study the same evening, about 9 o'clock.

"I own it readily," assented Leclerc, lifting his head. "Worse than foolish, I am ashamed to say."

"You were doing very well, in my humble opinion, with me, and by and by a partnership might have come within the limits of the possible. I warned you not to set up for yourself on borrowed money, but you poohpoohed my well meant advice."

"I did not poohpooh it, sir," said Leclerc humbly. "But I thought I could see a fair prospect of success, and I was eager to marry."

"On less than nothing."

"Clayfields is growing. A practice would, I thought, come quickly. I am too hot headed, I admit."

"I don't want to make you more distressed than you are, but you really must try and put a curb on your impetuosity. Why on earth didn't you come to me when you got into this money trouble? Which, by the way, I heard of only to-day."

"I thought the whole neighbourhood knew of it."

"Of course you did. You are, if you will pardon me, Leclerc, sensitive to the verge of selfishness. But I ask why you avoided me?"

"I did not dare to approach you. I felt I had treated you with scant courtesy."

"But you know I am not revengeful. What is the exact story of the mess you had got your affairs into?"

"Briefly, I borrowed £300 from a money-lender on various kinds of securities."

"How much of the 300 did you get?"

"A little short of 200."

"Ah! Well?"

"It was in six bills of 50, running over 18 months, the whole 300 to become due on the failure to meet any of the bills. I paid the first 50 easily enough."

"Out of the loan. Well?"

"The second was a tough job. The third I managed to pay a portion of, and got a little time for the remainder. The fourth I couldn't find a penny toward, so I pleaded for time, and the answer I got was a bailiff, whom I promptly kicked into the roadway."

"A remarkably wise proceeding."

"The fellow is now blackmailing me. An assault on an officer of the law is, I am aware, a serious offence. I am tired of staving off prosecution. In any case I shall be sold up immediately, and a £10 note would be an excessive valuation of my purse. I paid my passage, and the passage of my intended wife to New York out of the last money I could raise."

"I know you, Leclerc, or I'd be obliged to say you were a very wicked young man. Did you think at all of your intended wife?"

"Think of her? God knows I did. I wasn't going to the States on a wild goose chase. My eldest brother there has a good practice, and promised to try and pull me through."

"A very slender staff for a newly married man to lean upon. I must say I consider your treatment of Miss Rodney most selfish and inconsiderate. Your wild antics this morning have completely upset her. It is a mercy I went round to 13 Felspar road this evening, and that I induced her to come here with me, or Heaven knows what might have happened."

"Don't be too hard on me, doctor. I felt there was a new life for me in the States."

"That's a terribly rough and tumble way of treating one's career, Leclerc. I pity you. But I pity Miss Rodney more."

"I cannot bear to think of how reckless I have been. I feel on the verge of lunacy when I think of everything. And now to have this horrible suspicion of murder fixed upon me."

"Is it so?"

"Unfortunately, yes. I am watched all day by a plain clothes man. He is outside the house now, waiting for me. I don't know why I haven't been arrested. I suppose they are waiting for the coroner's enquiry on Saturday."

"Which, of course, you will attend?"

"Of course. I can't help myself. I am subpoenaed for my evidence."

"You must try and keep yourself cool in the meantime, Leclerc. Don't be so confiding with police officers and every one you meet. Your own wild talk and manner would fasten suspicion on you if nothing else would."

"I will do my best. You have been awfully kind to me. Infinitely more kind and generous than any man could expect under the circumstances."

"Don't let us drift into compliments, if you please, Leclerc. I always took a serious interest in you—a much more serious interest perhaps than you suspected. I know you are a clever fellow, and I believe you are good at bottom."

"If you say things of this kind to me you will have me weeping like a hysterical woman."

"Very well, then. Let us get to more important matters. I want to know your story from your own lips. When did you go to 13 Felspar road—I mean the night when Mrs. Davorn died?"

"About half past 10. I knew the two men who lodged in the house usually retired to their rooms shortly after 10. Mrs. Davorn knew I was coming, and received me in her own room. She had always shown a marked dislike for me. She had some notion that I wanted to get hold of her money. She was morbidly uneasy and suspicious about her money."

"I don't wonder at that. She had a cruel experience. Well?"

"She had heard of this breakup of mine, and wanted to get my version of it. I was quite candid with her. Miss Rodney was in the room. Mrs. Davorn got absurdly excited, and accused me of trying to steal her child—she always spoke of Ethel as if she was her own daughter—and her money. Of course I lost my temper. I left the house about a quarter past 11 in a wildly excited state. Miss Rodney let me out. She trusted me and was prepared—though I know it was a terrible struggle for her—to marry me to-day, and to fly with me."

"Poor child! You say you left the house at a quarter past 11. You did not re-enter the house that night?"

"How can you ask me such a horrible question?"

"You are such a wild fellow you compel me to ask you horrible questions. I only want to know the exact truth. You might have returned to make some final arrangements with your sweetheart."

"My sweetheart! Thank you for the word. My sweetheart! Your kindness and your thoughtfulness about her I can never forget. Never."

"You are wandering from the point. You did not re-enter the house until the next morning?"

"No; you had been there then. The whole terrible news was all over Clayfields."

"Had you ever attended Mrs. Davorn professionally?"

"Only once. Her regular attendant was Carson."

"I know, but you say you did attend her once."

"Oh, yes! On Monday night, when I called, she had a sudden attack, and I was summoned to her room. She complained of a violent headache and sickness. She was quite sensible, and I did not attach very much importance to the symptoms. She was, I know, subject to sick headaches, and Carson was in the habit of prescribing for them."

"Would it have been possible that on Monday night her symptoms indicated the beginnings of an apoplectic seizure?"

"It would have been quite possible, but as I understood she was subject to these attacks of headache and vomiting I did not regard them as indicating anything so deadly."

"I am afraid your mind was too much occupied with your own affairs to pay proper attention to your work. That will never do, Leclerc."

"I admit it won't, but I am terribly upset and quite unfit for my work. But why ask me about the possibility of apoplexy? There is the evidence of that chloroform which will be so dead against me."

"Why against you?"

"Naturally because, with everything else pointing to me, it will seem only reasonable that being a medical man I would be the most likely person to administer chloroform—at all events, more likely than an ordinary thief."

"I do not agree with you there. An innocent man should not be so much disturbed."

"Perhaps not. But that deadly detective has got his stony eyes fixed upon me. I can feel them following me wherever I go. The mere arresting of me on a charge of murder in the present shattered condition of my nerves will probably land me at the wrong side of the narrow chasm which separates the sane from insane."

The young man rose from his chair and waved his hands up and down in an agitated manner.

"Don't be an ass, Leclerc. Go home like a good fellow. I'll prescribe a nice quiet sleeping draft for you. Keep your head cool to-morrow, and try and be like a man on Saturday at the Vestry hall."

"I shudder to think of Saturday and what may happen then."

"Don't go brooding over the affair."

"I can't help myself. But," folding

"You need only drink it in by the ears."

his arms, "I will do my best. What about the promised sleeping draft? I want it badly, and I'm afraid to prescribe for myself."

"You need only drink it in by the ears," said Dr. Percival, rising and placing his hands on the young man's shoulders. "You know I am not in the habit of speaking lightly, Leclerc. My sleeping draft is a promise. You will not be arrested on Saturday—or on any other day—for the murder of Mrs. Davorn!"

CHAPTER XII.

THE CORONER'S COURT.

Fifteen good men and true were duly sworn at the Vestry hall in Clayfields on Saturday, the 12th of October, to enquire into the manner in which Martha Davorn came by her death.

The coroner's court was crowded, owing to the unusual interest taken in the case by the dwellers in Clayfields—a local murder and robbery being a circumstance which brought terror home to every nervous householder in the suburbs. Besides there were the usual flying rumours that the coroner's enquiry would elicit some strange and exciting evidence.

The list of those subpoenaed to give evidence in the case included Miss Rodney, Dr. Leclerc, Dr. Percival, the two lodgers at 13 Felspar road (Steinworth and Vickery), Inspector Briggs and Constables Metcalf and Young.

When the jury had been sworn, and after they had viewed the body of Mrs. Davorn, the coroner (a handsome man on the sunny side of 40, with a pallid face and dark hair plastered to his head with pomatum) informed the jury in the intervals between a quick succession of yawns—he seemed to suffer from ennui almost unsupportable—that Dr. Percival, who had, with the assistance of the house surgeon at the Clayfields hospital, made the post-mortem examination of the deceased lady, had just written to say he was unavoidably detained, but would be present in the course of an hour or two to give his evidence.

"As the evidence," continued the coroner, with a tremendous yawn which swallowed up a portion of the sentence, "promises to be of a somewhat lengthy character, no doubt, Dr. Percival"—here he dug his knuckles of his forefingers into his tired eyes—"will be ready to give his evidence long before we exhaust the other witnesses. But witnesses," he added, "even professional gentlemen, should endeavour not to have business which detains them unavoidably in a case of this kind."

Yawning again vigorously the coroner turned to his notes and Constable Metcalf was called and sworn.

The zealous policeman detailed his experiences with lucidity and with commendable brevity.

As he was about to retire a white-headed old gentleman arose and declared he represented one of the witnesses in the enquiry, and wished to ask Constable Metcalf some questions.

The coroner nodded, and yawned at the white-haired solicitor.

The questions related chiefly to the bedroom doors. Would it be feasible for a person in either of the two apartments on the first floor to lock himself into his room? The constable was emphatically of opinion—he had already offered that opinion to the court—that it would be impossible for Steinworth or Vickery to have locked himself in.

The foreman of the jury expressed a desire to examine a door and a lock which could not possibly be locked from the inside, and the coroner, with a mighty yawn, informed the foreman that he had taken a note of the point and would decide later on if it would be well that the jury should examine the door in question for themselves.

Constable Young was then called. As he took the oath the handsome coroner seemed fascinated by the head of the witness. He even forgot to yawn or to rub his eyes as he gazed at the witness.

Young's evidence was principally a corroboration of certain portions of Metcalf's evidence. He also gave it as his opinion that the doors on the first floor could not be unlocked from the inside. He was about to offer some other opinions concerning the manner in which Vickery, with the aid of an accomplice, might effect his fell purpose, when he was promptly roared at by the white-headed solicitor, and the coroner ordered Young to stand aside.

Inspector Briggs was then called.

The audience in the court were on the tiptoe of expectation as the inspector took the oath, but they were doomed to experience a woeful disappointment, for Briggs could throw no new light upon the matter, and to some of the knowing on the jury it was evident the police meant to ask for an adjournment of the enquiry. One facetious juryman whispered to his neighbour that he expected the police had got hold of some very important clue.

As Inspector Briggs retired, Detective Goringe quietly slipped into the court and took a seat at the back, in a place where he was sheltered from observation, behind one of the narrow pillars which supported the roof of the Vestry hall.

Albert Steinworth was then called.

He stood and faced the coroner with an air of perfect self-possession. After stating who and what he was, Steinworth was asked to state what he knew of the interior arrangements of the house 13 Felspar road, and to give whatever other evidence he could give the court and the jury as to what occurred in the house within his view on the night of the 9th of October and the morning of the 10th.

Steinworth rapidly threw his evidence into narrative form. He had retired to his room shortly after 10 o'clock had struck, having previously arranged with Miss Rodney, a niece of the deceased, he axplianed, who dwelt in the house, that he would let himself out the next mornin shortly after 6 o'clock. He was going to Devonshire for a holiday, and intended to catch a train at 7.40 from Paddington. He did not wish to give the people at No. 13 any trouble, and intended to have his breakfast at some hotel or restaurant near Paddington. He had fallen asleep quickly on the night of the 9th—he was a sound sleeper, and had no memory of hearing any noises during the night. He awoke about half past 5, perhaps 20 minutes to 6, dressed himself quickly, and then, to his utter astonishment, he found he was locked into his bedroom. There was no bell in his room. He had tapped loudly at his door, hoping to wake Mrs. Davorn or Miss Rodney, but had met with no response. Then he had raised his window in order to attract the attention of the first passer-by. He had not been many minutes at his window when the policeman, Metcalf, appeared outside the house. That was all he had to tell.

The jury was favourably impressed by the simplicity and directness of the young man's narrative.

"Just one question, Mr. Steinworth," said the coroner, placing his hand to his mouth to cover up a yawn. "The police, and yourself declare the door of your bedroom could not possibly be opened from the inside if it was locked from the outside. Would it be impossible to force back the bolt of the lock from the inside? The jury evidently wishes to have clear testimony upon that point."

"I really do not know," answered Steinworth, "but I should say not. I never tried it. Besides if the bolt was froced back I don't see how the door could be locked again from the inside. I am aware that each one of us who was in the house that night stands in a somewhat awkward position. It would be idle for me to appear to ignore this, and I consider it quite providential that, under the circumstances, I should have been a close prisoner that night."

There was some slight applause in the court as Steinworth answered the coroner.

A solicitor representing the Treasury—a mighty browbeater—now rose, and addressing the coroner and jury, said:

"We grant it would be impossible that the witness who now stands before you could lock himself into his bedroom. I am not instructed, I may say, to insinuate any charge against the witness, who seems to have given his evidence in a very fair and proper manner, but we are all of us naturally eager to clear up every point—I say it with all due deference, sir," addressing himself directly to the coroner, who bowed and then buried himself in a short, snappy series of yawns—"concerned with this terrible tragedy. Now, I would wish to direct the jury's attention to the fact that, though it would be impossible for either of the lodgers in the house—the two gentlemen, Messrs. Steinworth and Vickery—to lock themselves into their own rooms, it would not be impossible for either or both of them to be locked in by some third person."

"I beg your pardon, sir," interrupted the coroner, "but your remarks are quite irregular. Have you any questions to ask the witness?"

"Excuse me, sir," said the solicitor, bowing, and turning his eyes upon Steinworth.

"You say that during the night you heard nothing—no sounds or footsteps or voices or anything unusual?"

"No. Nothing."

"Would it have been possible for you to have let yourself out of your bedroom window and to have let yourself back again?"

"I do not know. I should think it would be impossible."

"Why do you think it would be impossible?"

"Well, I must confess I have not given much thought, if indeed any, to the matter. But I should say that it would be impossible even if I were an athlete, which I am sorry to say I am not, to lower myself down or to lift myself up without coming to grief. There is a flower box made of very slender material—I think the police have referred to it in their evidence—covering the whole sill of my window. I could not do as you suggest without breaking the box—at least I should fancy so—or leaving some marks upon it."

"Then there are no marks upon the flower box?"

"I do not know of my own knowledge."

"Inspector Briggs has sworn there are no marks upon it," interrupted the coroner.

"It seems to most of us, sir," said the foreman of the jury, "that we shall be obliged to inspect the house before the enquiry goes much farther."

"I think it will be necessary," said the coroner, "but I may observe—" throwing his well-shaped hands behind his head—"that the evidence of the police, which you have already heard, corroborates the evidence given by witness now before you, as to the impracticability of a man letting himself down from the window of the front bedroom on the first floor, and getting up again, without leaving some very conspicuous traces of such an action. There is no evidence before you of any such conspicuous traces, and I think you may dismiss the possibility of it from your minds. But perhaps it will be better for you to satisfy yourselves on the point by a personal examination."

The coroner then took his hands from behind his head, and proceeded to busy himself with his notes.

"Now, sir," said the solicitor for the Treasury, again addressing Steinworth, "you have sworn you did not leave your room between the hours of 10 o'clock or thereabouts on Wednesday, the 9th inst., and 6 o'clock next morning, when Constable Metcalf released you."

"That is so."

"Had you any knowledge that a large sum of money was in the house that night or the previous night?"

"I had no such knowledge."

"You are a clerk in a mercantile bank in the city—Messrs. Dubbs and Kleiner?"

"Yes."

"On the morning of the 8th of October, did you visit the manager of the Funded Bank, takin to him from your employers a cheque for a considerable amount?"

"Yes."

"Did you, while you were at the bank, see Mrs. Davorn at the counter?"

"No."

"Or in the neighbourhood of the bank?"

"No."

"Or hear that she had been in the bank that morning, and had drawn out her balance?"

"No."

"You passed through the bank—passed the cashier's counter—during the forenoon of the 8th inst.?"

"Yes."

"At what hour?"

"About 11 o'clock."

"Would you swear it was not exactly at 10 minutes past 11 you entered the Funded Bank?"

"It was probably about that hour."

"That is all I have to ask the witness," said the solicitor, sitting down, and mopping his rectangular forehead with a coloured silk handkerchief.

CHAPTER XIII.

ETHEL'S EVIDENCE.

As soon as Steinworth had retired Ethel Rodney was put forward. She had come into the court shortly after Detective Goringe, and as the gaze of all the spectators was centred on Steinworth, her entrance had not been noticed.

Ethel felt that the court was all eyes, and that every eye was turned upon her. The doctor's wife had driven her to the Vestry hall and had arranged that Ethel should wait in the court until after Dr. Percival had given his evidence, and then the doctor's brougham would call for her. She had not seen Leclerc since the previous morning. Dr. Percival had considered it wiser that they should not meet until the inquest was over and the strain upon the minds of herself and her lover had been loosened.

Ethel's statement to the coroner's court was mainly an account of what had happened in the house from ten o'clock on Wednesday night to six o'clock the following morning. The young girl was surprised to find that notwithstanding all the prying eyes which were fixed upon her she was able to give her evidence in a perfectly collected manner. She testified to the security of the fastenings. She had seen to every window and door on the ground floor after the lodgers had retired to their rooms. She had let Dr. Leclerc into the house about half-past ten o'clock. They had gone together to her aunt's room, which was situated at the top of the first flight of stairs.

She described the interview briefly and declared she had let Leclerc out of the house shortly after eleven o'clock. She had then locked and bolted the door, and gone upstairs to her room, passing on the way the door of her aunt's room, which was slightly ajar, and the doors of the two bedrooms on the first floor. She had not touched the keys of the doors of the two bedrooms on the first floor—this in reply to a question from the foreman. She had heard no sounds during the night, but had passed an anxious day and had got through a good deal of work and felt very tired, and no doubt it would be a loud noise that could awake her. She had been aroused in the morning by the sound of the hall door-bell and the knocking at the door. She remembered, while hurriedly dressing, that Mr. Steinworth was going away early, and fancied he had forgotten something, and was returning for it. On her way downstairs she noticed his door was closed, and looking at her watch she saw it was about six o'clock, and that most likely Mr. Steinworth was still in his room. She had not, on this occasion, either touched the key in his door or in that of Mr. Vickery. She felt anxious about her aunt on account of the quarrel of the previous night, and noticing the door of Mrs. Davorn's room was slightly ajar she fancied her aunt might possibly be awake. She went into the room and found her in bed cold and rigid. It was a horrible shock to her. She was, she believed, her aunt's only living relative. She was not aware that the deceased had made a will.

"Had you any knowledge that a large sum of money was in the house?"

The solicitor representing the Treasury now took Miss Rodney in hand.

"The deceased went to town on the morning of the 8th inst.?"

"Yes."

"Were you aware of her intentions in going to town?"

"Yes; she had been for some days uneasy about money of hers lodged in the Funded Bank."

"And she went to town to draw this money out?"

"Yes."

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Lumley," interrupted the coroner. "We are hearing a good deal about the deceased's money, and very little about herself. Is all this necessary?"

"I think you will find it is, sir."

"Oh, very well; proceed," said the coroner languidly. He had refrained from yawning since Ethel had appeared before him, but he now made up for lost time by giving vent to a yawn, and following it up by a strange sound, as of one making a final effort to prevent himself from being choked. Most of the onlookers in the Vestry hall were startled. Then the coroner, stooping over his notes, gave utterance to a sigh, which was partly a sigh of utter weariness, and partly a moan. He seemed rather startled himself, after this elaborate display of his emotions, and drawing his chair close to the table, he buried himself in his notes. By this time the yawning had infected many of those who sat in the vicinity of the coroner's chair. The jury to a man were struggling against the fell influence of the coroner. The foreman, who took a lively interest in the case, had determined to hold fast his jaws at any cost, and this determination probably prevented him from squandering the time of the court with frivolous questions, for he was, notwithstanding his bump of curiosity, a dull man.

The solicitor for the Treasury quickly resumed his cross examination of Miss Rodney.

"She told you she was going to draw this money from the bank?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Did she tell anyone else?"

"No. At least I am not aware that she did."

"Did your aunt return with the money?"

"Yes. Later in the day she came back and showed me £1,300 in notes, and some gold, which was in a paper packet. She told me this was all the money she had in the world."

"What did she do with the money? Do you know?"

"She put it into a desk, and placed the desk in a cupboard in her room."

"You saw her do this?"

"Yes."

"And you alone saw her?"

"I alone."

"She was very anxious about the money?"

"Most anxious. She had been very unfortunate in her investments latterly, and she was always in fear of losing everything."

"To your knowledge did any one else but the deceased and yourself know this money was in the house on Wednesday night?"

Ethel paused before answering, feeling the intention of the question was to fasten suspicion on Maurice Leclerc. Almost unconsciously her eyes tried to seek him out in the court, but the young doctor was hidden by one of the pillars at the back of the court, just as Detective Goringe was hidden, and

"Thank you," said the solicitor politely.

Ethel felt a quick throb of anxiety as the thought crossed her mind that her lover had at the last moment shirked the ordeal of the enquiry and perhaps had carried out his intention of quitting the country.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Water on Battleships.

As nearly as possible 8,000 gallons of fresh water are used in a large battleship daily. About two-thirds of this is taken up by the boilers, and the remainder is used for drinking, washing, cooking, etc. When the store which she has taken out with her from port has been used up a vessel has to depend upon her evaporators for further supplies. Every modern warship is fitted with evaporating machinery to distill the salt sea water.

THE GRIP AGAIN.

THIS DANGEROUS EPIDEMIC HAS MADE ANOTHER APPEARANCE.

A Suggestion as to How to Guard Against the Trouble and its Pernicious After Effects.

Every winter influenza, or as it is more generally known, the grip, makes its appearance in Canada. Every few years it spreads and assumes alarming proportions. From all appearances this is one of the years in which it will seize upon a great number of victims, for every day new cases are reported. As in scarlet and typhoid fever, the after effects of grip are often worse than the disease itself. The sufferer is left with a debilitated system, short of breath upon the slightest exertion, subject to headache and heart palpitation, affected by every change in the weather, and in a physical condition to invite the attack of more serious diseases, such as pneumonia and consumption.

A timely suggestion as to how to enable the system to resist the inroads and its after effects, is given by Mrs. Emma Doucett, St. Eulalie, Que., who says:—"I had an attack of the grip which left me a sufferer from headache, pains in the stomach and general weakness. I used several medicines but found nothing to help me until I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. When I began to take these pills I was very much run down and very weak, but they soon began to help me, and after using them a few weeks I was not only as well as ever but had gained in flesh as well. I can hardly tell you how pleased I am with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for I was feeling very hopeless when I began their use."

These pills cure by making new, rich, red blood, thus strengthening every part of the body and enabling it to throw off disease. You can always avoid imitations by seeing that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent postpaid at 50 cents a box or six for 32.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

I was troubled with this disease for years, but the first time I used this remedy it gave most delightful relief. I now regard myself entirely cured." Sold by all druggists. 22

ONE DAYS WARS—
—RUMORS OF WAR

The Fighting Spirit Abroad in the Earth.

WILL IT EVER CEASE?

Somewhere, Every Day Throughout the World, Man's Hand is Raised in Battle Against His Fellowmen—Are we Never to Have Peace!

IN THE FAR EAST.

Dispatches from Vladivostock announce that 50,000 men are expected there this month to strengthen the garrison, while orders for the mobilization of the reserves in all the territories of the far east are shortly expected. Preparations are being made for the mobilization of all the horses liable to government requisition.

The Japanese, in alarm, are leaving the territory traversed by the Eastern Chinese railroad. According to the Port Arthur Novykrai, the Japanese are intriguing to create disturbances in Corea, so as to have an excuse for intervention. The Japanese reports of the intention of the Seoul garrison to mutiny were, it is added, circulated with the object of inducing the emperor of Corea to seek refuge in the Russian legation. The only result, however, was to determine the emperor to place himself under the protection of the United States legation in case of necessity.

The Japanese in Pekin discredit the reports intimating that a peaceful settlement will be arrived at, especially in view of Russia's immense warlike preparations.

AT MONTE CRISTO.

Advices received at St. Thomas, D.W.I., were to the effect that the revolutionary general Jiminez was at Monte Cristo on January 29th, and preparing to resume the contest, having received a large supply of ammunition on January 22nd by the steamer Cherokee from New York. A gunboat appeared in the offing off Monte Cristo on January 18th, and was supposed to be waiting to intercept the Cherokee.

He sent a boat in towards the shore, but the revolutionists prevented it from landing by artillery fire. To this the gunboat responded by bombarding Monte Cristo; she did little damage, however, and finally steamed away before the Cherokee arrived, she having been delayed.

An armed schooner appeared off Monte Cristo on January 27th, and exchanged shots with the shore, the revolutionists firing first.

There has been hard fighting about Monte Cristo and Santiago los Caballeros. Hundreds of men have been killed, and business is paralyzed.

SOUTH WEST AFRICA.

Nothing has been heard for weeks from Colonel Leutwein, the governor of German Southwest Africa, who was making a long march from the Warmbad region towards the beleaguered forts. The natives who have besieged all the outlying stations, are supposed to be in force between Windhoek and Col. Leutwein's column of less than 300 men, which was returning from the campaign against the Bondelzwarts in the territory 450 miles south of Windhoek. No runner has passed through the lines. It is feared that Col. Leutwein may have been unable to force his way through the hostile tribesmen and that he has been obliged to entrench himself and wait for the arrival of a rescuing expedition. The idea that he has been overwhelmed is rejected officially, but this apprehension is expressed in the newspapers.

IN SOMALILAND.

The situation in Somaliland is growing more serious. It has been learned that the Abyssinian army sent out to fight the Mullah did not proceed beyond the point where the water wells ended, and it is known that the Mullah sent emissaries to the Abyssinians who seem to have succeeded in inducing them not to fight against their own race.

It is not true, however, as the Mullah boastfully declares, that this Abyssinian force entered into an alliance with him. Still, their attitude has been changed from the active assistance expected from them into one of passiveness.

IN ABYSSINIA.

According to news received at Rome King Menelik is not likely to leave Abyssinia because of the political situation there. There is already a candidate for succession to the throne and he fears that his departure would be a signal for civil warfare among the different chiefs. It is therefore considered impossible for the king to visit the St. Louis exposition.

FIGHTING IN HAYTI.

News received at Cape Haytien, Hayti, says that General Jiminez, the revolutionary leader, recently sent General Espailit with two hundred men to attack Santiago.

De Las Caballeros, the governor of Santiago, has notified General Morales that he has sufficient troops to defend the town. Further fighting is regarded as imminent.

A THRILLING ESCAPE.

Man Hung to Cow-catcher for Four Miles to Save His Life.

"Block the Limited. There is a man on the cowcatcher." This message, flashed along the Pennsylvania line, told the story of a railroad accident just outside of Chicago, which nearly cost a man's life, and which the trainmen say was almost unprecedented in their experience.

John Hancrow, while crossing the track in Park Manor, was caught from his feet, hurled into the air, recaught by the cowcatcher, and while the train sped on nearly a mile a minute, he saved himself by wrapping his arms around the iron beams in front of the engine. Two of his ribs and one of his legs were broken, and yet in spite of the freezing temperature he clung for four miles, unable to get a signal to the engineer and fireman, who were only a few feet behind him.

Not until telephone messages were sent ahead and the train was stopped by signal at River Line station, was the man rescued. Hancrow will probably recover.

New Grade of Wheat.

The following motion was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the council of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, to be submitted to the adjourned annual meeting of the exchange, on February 1st:

That in the interest of the grain trade, it is advisable that a trade term to be known as "standard spread' should be adopted; therefore such term is hereby adopted and recognized; and (as applying to Manitoba wheat of the crop of 1903, with No. 1 northern as the contract grade) such term shall mean, that when, under the rules of the exchange, No. 1 hard wheat is delivered on a contract for future delivery, it shall carry a premium of 1c. per bushel over No. 1 northern wheat, and when No. 2 northern is delivered on such a contract it shall carry a discount of 3c. per bushel under the price of No. 1 northern; such arbitrary value spread to apply only on sales for future delivery made under the condition of "standard spread."

Luck of a Small Boy.

To be knocked down and passed over by a freight train and come out alive was what happened to 10-year-old George Cornwall, son of James Cornwall, of the Grand Trunk railway, at St. Lambert. The boy, while crossing the tracks, was knocked down by the rear end of a freight train being shunted. He fell in the centre of the rails and was rolled over and over until all the cars had passed. After he was picked up and carried into the station, Dr. Mitchell found the boy had a compound fracture of the left thigh, arteries cut, a couple of toes off, and scalp wounds. The doctor says he will recover.

An Elevator Accident.

Armand Decarie, a painter, who lived in Drolet Street, was killed by the weights of an elevator in the Queen's hotel, at Montreal. Death was instantaneous. Decarie was standing on a scaffold erected on the third floor of the hotel and near the elevator shaft. He was engaged in painting at the time, and for some reason or other, presumably to see if the elevator were moving, he leaned and put his head through an opening in the shaft. In an instant the weights descended and pinned his head between them and the iron boxing.

Toronto's Costly Memorial.

The Toronto South African Memorial Association met in the city hall and decided that the memorial to be erected should cost not less than $30,000. The mayor presided, and Col. Otter, Lieut.-Col. Grassett, Lieut.-Col. Mason, Mrs. Nordheimer, Mrs. John Bruce, Lieut.-Col. Bruce, Lieut.-Col. Delamere, Col. Ryerson, R. Y. Ellis, Major F. F. Manley and John F. Ellis were present.

TROUBLE IS NEARING A FINISH

Will The Sword Cut The Gordian Knot?

SPARRING FOR WIND

Russia and Japan both Making Warlike Preparations While Negotiations Progress—Japan May Choose for War—Slight Hopes of Peace.

A cable to the New York Herald from Port Arthur says:—The Ninth, Tenth and Eleventh Siberian Rifles are leaving Port Arthur for the Yalu river. Great preparations are being made at the forts night and day. The Herald's St. Petersburg correspondent cables, that in spite of the impatience of Japan for a reply Russia cannot give any answer for some time. Russia will certainly not admit being dictated to concerning the time and period during which a reply is to be given. While she gives assurances that the reply will be couched in the most friendly terms possible, she cannot be coerced into giving a hurried answer to a serious matter requiring examination in an infinite amount of delicate details.

The London Daily Telegraph says: Upon the deliberations of the czar's advisers will depend whether the gordian knot can be cut otherwise than by the edge of the sword.

The News says: As far as the antagonists are concerned, we don't take the view that the trouble is incapable of cure without a surgical operation.

The morning Leader says: Whether there will be war or not is still uncertain, but it is quite certain that the reckless, provocative attitude of some of the British press has played a criminal part, making peace more difficult.

The Daily Graphic claims to be able to affirm that Russia's draft of her reply has not yet been officially presented to Japan, but that it has been communicated to M. Kurino, the Japanese minister at St. Petersburg, who has transmitted the contents to Tokio, whence it will be conveyed to the friendly powers. The reply is courteous, the Graphic continues, but it refuses in uncompromising terms to permit the re-insertion in the draft of the treaty of two words guaranteeing the integrity and independence of China, upon which Japan insisted in her last note. The clause proposed by Japan was that Russia and Japan should mutually agree to respect the "integrity and independence of China and Corea." Russia has now stricken out twice the words "China and," and it is understood this will close the negotiations. It is probable, the Graphic goes on to say, that when this note has been presented Japan will notify Baron de Rosen, the Russian minister at Tokio, that she has no alternative but to take up arms in defence of her interests, and that M. Kurino will be instructed to demand his passports. In the meantime instructions have been sent to the two Japanese cruisers now at Colombo to proceed to Singapore, where in the event of war being declared their crews will be paid and the vessels laid up.

A dispatch to the Standard from Tokio says that according to information from a sure source, large bodies of Russian troops are being moved to the Corean frontier from Feng Huan Cheng and other points in the interior of Manchuria.

A dispatch from Nagasaki to the Daily Telegraph affirms that the Corean government has refused the renewed demands of Italy for a mining concession in Corea.

The Pekin correspondent of the Times cables that Tseng Chi, the Tartar general of Mukden, has telegraphed the foreign board of Pekin that the Russians have demanded that he supply 500 carts for immediate military use. The board replied that owing to China's decision of neutrality, Tseng Chi must decline to supply the carts in question.

A telegram reported to have been sent by the Russian military attache at Tokio was received at Port Arthur. It gave information of the mobilization of the Japanese army, and had the effect of renewed preparations for the despatch of the troops already ordered to the north, but who had been detained on account of the peaceful aspect of affairs. The authorities have invited the Russian women of Port Arthur to join the Red Cross. The organization of the city's resources continues as though war was certain. The authorities are receiving many sensational reports from Corea and China.

UNITED THEY STAND.

REV. DR. TALMAGE'S UNITY SERMON FROM CURIOUS TEXT.

SERMON INSPIRING LESSON.

Message to Churches and Religious Communities That Have Been Torn By Dissension or Weakened By Discord—Spiritual Victories For Christians Acting As a Harmonious Unit—Gideon's Unique Victory.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Bain, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angles, Cal., Jan. 31.—To the churches and religious communities that have been torn by dissension or weakened by discord and defection this sermon conveys a powerful and inspiring lesson, showing how even a small company of Christians, acting as a harmonious unit, may win great spiritual victories. The text is Judges vii, 6, "And the number of them that lapped, putting their hand to their mouth, was three hundred men."

No sinecurist is the army's recruiting officer. In most cases, whether in peace or war, the problem which must be solved by the war department is not "How can we reject our volunteers?" but "How can we persuade or even compel men to enlist in the ranks?" During America's great civil war all healthy men in the south between the ages of eighteen and sixty were forced to shoulder a musket if unwilling to go as volunteers, while in the north, after the volunteers had ceased to respond to Lincoln's repeated calls for troops the "draft" officers went everywhere.

The story of Gideon's campaign is unique in history. Here was a general about to march against a powerful invader, well armed and equipped, whom he must meet with a raw and undisciplined force, actually reducing by a capricious test the number of his followers. Under God's command he dispensed with nine-tenths of his men. When General Gideon raised his standard to repel the invasion of the Midianites and Amalekites 32,000 volunteers answered the call to arms. But God said to Gideon, better quality than quantity. Better a few loyal and devoted men to repel the invasion than a great host made up of disgruntled and fault finding, indifferent recruits. Gideon, as directed by God, cut down the numbers of that Israelitish army. He cut them down and down and down and down until there were left only three hundred men—only three small companies to follow their intrepid leader. But they won the victory. So it may be in the great conflict between good and evil in this world. Consecrated, loyal, earnest men are needed in the struggle for righteousness.

The church should be a harmoniously organized army. The loyalty with which one soldier holds to another in the national army decides to a great extent the aggregate strength of that army. When going into battle it is just as important for a soldier to know that he is standing shoulder to shoulder with friends as to realize that he is standing face to face with attacking foes. Civil war veterans have told me that the affection which bound the men of each company together was like bands of unbreakable steel. If a soldier out foraging found food hidden away in a barn or if he found a deserted pile of blankets or an extra pile of dry wood to be cut into kindling, the first persons he thought of were those of his company. There the members shared each other's joys. They sympathized with each other in their sorrows. So, my friends, the members of each separate Christian church ought to be linked together by gospel love. They should try to shield each other and pray for each other and care for each other and help each other. They should never before the world expose each other's weaknesses any more than a wife should be willing to publish before a cynical neighborhood the weaknesses and shortcomings of her husband. Church members, in other words, should "be kindly affectioned to one another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another."

"The church a harmonious gospel company? Oh, no," says one. "That ideal is not always a possibility. I know it is not possible for me to live in sympathy and love with all the members of my church. Some of them have been too mean and have done me too many injustices. I can truly say I do not want to harm them, but I certainly desire that they should leave me entirely alone. I certainly intend to leave them entirely alone. I do not wish to keep them out of heaven, but I do not wish some of them to sit beside me in a celestial mansion or by any common earthly fireside made of brick and stone." My friend, by such an answer you are proving the Holy Spirit's power inefficacious. You are demonstrating that you are unwilling to become one of Gideon's band and live in faithful harmony with the chosen three hundred. God is willing to give you grace enough to love all your fellow church members if you will only ask for that grace. Has not the sure testimony been given, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me?"

You are now about to decide your whole eternal destiny. You are to decide it not by how you profess to love God, but by how you are willing to love your fellow church members. Are you ready, here and now, as Christian soldiers to "be kindly affectioned to one another, with brotherly love in honor preferring one another?" Do not tell me that it is impossible for you to live in Christian sympathy with those who belong to your same church family. By the grace of God it is possible. And if you are not willing to let that divine love have full control of your life, then instead of staying in a church and disputing and finding fault continually with the other members it is far better for you to leave that church and go back to the world and thereby play the gospel coward, as did the 22,000 men who deserted Gideon's standard at the first opportunity the Hebrew commander gave them to skulk home.

The church should be a harmoniously organized army. It is not only possible thereby to hurl a solid front against the Satanic foe, but also by preponderance of numbers, concentrated in one move, to make, as the Bible says, a little one "become a thousand and a small one a strong nation." Concentration in military parlance means not only conquest, but generally the complete mystification and disorganization of an opposing foe.

It was by the successful concentration of forces against his enemies and by the lightning rapidity of his movements that Napoleon Bonaparte won his great victories. During all the military career of the "Little Corsican" his armies were outnumbered by those of his opponents. But one day we find the brilliant military genius attacking one wing of the Austrian army. The next day we find him attacking another wing of the Austrian army. One day he is falling upon the defenseless Italian fields by boldly scaling the Alps. Another day we see him concentrating his artillery fires upon a separated part of the German army. Napoleon with his forces would have been wiped off the face of the earth ten years before he met his fate at Waterloo had he attempted to battle his enemies in bulk. He beat Austria and Italy and Germany and Spain by defeating his foes by detail—piecemeal. He did it by the power of military concentration. This was the way Frederick the Great carried on his wars of many years. This was the way Washington and Nathanael Greene won their victories. So, my friends, as Gideon marshaled his three hundred, the church soldiers should be a united band. They must be able to hurl all their spiritual strength against the Satanic foe in one place and at one time.

How can this great forward movement of a single church against sin be concentrated and conserved? First, by all the church members every seven days answering church roll at the mid-week prayer meeting. Wednesday night prayer meetings is even more important than the Lord's day worship. It is by the commingling of prayers that the spiritual forces of a church become inflamed with the holy zeal and all conquering gospel enthusiasm. It is to that roll call that the members of the church must give diligent heed. Concentrated church membership at the mid-week prayer meeting is of overwhelming importance. I know of what I speak. During my life I have observed the ways of two kinds of churches. In the one I have seen a mighty gospel conquest going on month in and month out. Why? The people attended the mid-week prayer meeting. In the other kind of church spiritual results were never assured. Why? The people, no matter how the pastor begged and pleaded, failed to attend the mid-week prayer meeting. A church with a full prayer meeting means a spiritually conquering church. A church with an empty prayer meeting means a spiritually dead church.

The concerted forward movement of a church, in the next place, must be manifested in the united voices of its members lifted in songs of praise and in its gospel energy. Oh, yes, the very best voices trained by our musical colleges are never too good to be allowed to sing in the church choir. But the church members have no more right, in this gospel movement, to let the choir do all the singing than the pew has to expect the pulpit to do all the praying. Methodist pews have sung as many immortal souls into glory as Methodist pulpits have won by preaching. "Let everything that breathes praise the Lord!" In every service let the old fashioned hymns be given out and let all the people sing. Yea, shout forth your gospel battle songs like the sound of many waters! Concentration of the church forces in prayer meeting means spiritual conquest for Christ. Concentration of the songs of praise in one great congregational chorus means also spiritual conquest for Christ.

The concerted strength of the church, in the next place, should make that church a unit in its belief in the authority of God's revealed word and also in its protest against sin, wherever found. When the three hundred Gideonites went forth to battle, their most effective weapons were a lighted lamp concealed within a pitcher and a trumpet in the right hand. The lamp lighted, can be used as the symbol of gospel faith, as revealed in God's word. The trumpet can be used as the symbol of the voice of a Christian church protesting against a world steeped in sin. Plenty of room in every Christian church for all repentant sinners saved by Christ's blood, but no room for any man who will not accept the sacrificial blood of Jesus Christ and who will not protest against sin, wherever found. The Christian church must be a unit in its Calvary belief, and it must be a unit in its protest against sin.

As in every other army, the Christian army must have a countersign. When I belonged to the United States army, during the Spanish-American war, there were certain times I could not pass in or out of the camp without giving the countersign. So we find that all the Christian churches have a countersign. That countersign is one word of five letters, and that one word is Jesus. Jesus, Jesus, Jesus! Jesus, who is our Saviour; Jesus, who lived and died and rose again to redeem the world and to save his people from their sins.

The church army must be a harmonious army and show a brave front. There is sure to be to a more or less extent cowardice lurking in the hearts of us all. If one Christian soldier is allowed, using a common phrase, to show the "white feather," he will be very apt to demoralize all the ranks. "What!" you say, "Every man to a more or less extent a coward?" Yes, my friend. We all have a cowardly streak within us. We must therefore be very careful how we let a faint hearted Christian soldier influence us to turn and run.

If you do not believe that all men may become outward cowards, read the memoirs of one of our greatest generals, than whom no braver man ever lived. Yet he tells us that when he went into battle the first time he trembled like an aspen leaf shaken in the wind. He was so scared that he would have turned and fled but for the fact that he was afraid his regiment would run away with him. Then, much to his surprise, when he came to where the enemy had been encamped he found that they had been even more frightened than himself. During the previous night, without striking a blow, the enemy had turned and fled. Yes, there is a cowardly streak in all of us. Therefore, Christian soldiers, do not go publishing around your fears. Do not criticise your minister in public, because you may start others criticising him. Do not talk about your anxieties lest the church audiences should not keep us. Do not exaggerate the results of your foolish imaginations. Do not, in other words, give free rein to your gospel cowardice. If you do you may unkennel and unleash the cowardly disposition in us all. If you ever wish to be a blessing as a church member, only sound forth the inspiring words of hope. God knows there are enough and too many who are always ready to sit around in the dark church corners and croak the miserable, whining, grating words of despair.

Lastly, I remark that a church membership should be a united and harmonious and compact army. One traitor in the camp can do infinitely more damage than five hundred enemies without.

It is of vast importance that the preservation of the sacred honor of the Christian church be intrusted to those who are truly her friends. Therefore, my fellow church members, never try to placate a church enemy by electing any man to a position of trust unless he be a prayerful man and unless deep down in his Christlike heart he fully realizes the solemnity of his trust. Never elect any man to a position in a church unless that man is first ready to put all bitterness out of his heart and to get down on his knees and earnestly and tenderly say: "O Lord, my God, teach me to love my fellow church members. Teach me to be an under shepherd to them, as thou art ready to guide me. Teach me, O Master, to say, 'I forgive,' as I would have thee say unto me, 'I forgive thee also, my child.'" No man in church life is fitted to be a leader of men until he himself is first ready to be cleansed of sin. Better a smaller church; better three hundred loyal Gideonites than thirty-two thousand men who are not ready to let Christ lead them as he would.

But I cannot close my study of this mighty theme of the church as a conquering army without telling you, my people, the object I have in view. First, I want to kindle to holy zeal the scores and hundreds and thousands of churches all over the land which have for years been torn and rent asunder with internal strife. Pastors are discouraged, people are discouraged. Christian communities are discouraged about them. "Oh," these people say, "we are only a little handful. We have dwindled down and down until there is hardly any membership left. What are we to do?" Why, ye discouraged churches, by the grace of God ye can do everything. God has been sifting your membership until the best are left. You are now a Gideon's band. United and welded together by trouble you can accomplish wonders. It was not by great numbers that Gideon won, but by the loyalty of a few.

My second purpose in this sermon is to show you that these conquerors over the Midianitish hosts were ordinary men. Who were they? We don't know. They were selected at random. Some came perhaps from wealthy homes; some came from the homes of poverty. They were all selected simply by the way they lapped up the water when they drank of the famous brook. So God is going to judge our availability to be among his chosen followers by the way we are ready to do, in his name, the little things of life. He will judge whether we are fitted for membership in the Gideonite band by the way we smile a good-morning; by the way we help upon the car a poor woman with her basket; by our willingness to sit by an humble sick-bed; by the way we lead in prayer in the house of trouble and by the way we forgive.

The third purpose: I would show that these three hundred immortal Gideonite conquerors were all volunteers. Christ's disciples must be volunteers, not conscripts. The Christian soldier of the church must be a volunteer. Will you enlist under Christ's banner? Will you go forth in the name of this church, a united band, to march against the Satanic hosts? Will you go forth a harmonious company of Christians, ready to battle in Christ's name? Will you not realize that all your past trials, whether in church or out of it, have been only a means used to fit you for ultimate gospel triumph?

The Human Voice.

Every person hears his own voice differently from other voices, including his own, in the phonograph, because when he speaks the sound is carried to the ear not only by the air, but also directly through the bones of the head, which changes its tone color.

Football.

Football is almost as popular in Burma as it is in the United States. The natives play the game unshod and kick and shoot goals with bare feet.

ESTABLISHED 1898.

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

LARGER MARKETS.

No stronger proof of the steady development of the great coal industry of this district is needed than the prompt manner in which the ever expanding Canadian markets have been supplied with coal and coke. Only a few months ago the smelters of the Boundary country, voiced by indignant local press, told of the serious manner in which the metalliferous mines of the province were being hampered by the lack of coke. In vain did the manager of the C. N. P. Coal company explain the local conditions responsible for the temporary shoatage of the needed fuel. In spite of assurances that the then oven plant was fully capable of providing adequate coke to satisfy the B. C. smelters and that additional plants were under construction which would place the output far beyond that amount, these smelters agitated for government relief by opening up reserves.

The tables are turned in a remarkably short space of time. Now the B. C. smelters cannot handle all the coke produced at these collieries though two of the plants are incomplete and none are being run at their fullest capacity. The 982 coke ovens now completed at the three collieries, if run at their full capacity would turn out more than 1300 tons per working day and this will be supplemented by the output from 146 more ovens in the spring. The B. C. demand averages considerably below 500 tons per day and never exceeds 600 tons.

Allowing therefore for a fair progress in the smelting industry there is still left nearly half the coke product for which there is no market but across the international line. Butte, the smelter city of west, is the natural market for this surplus. Although situated only 525 miles from Fernie the fuel for its smelters is brought all the way from Pennsylvania or from Colorado, the latter point, even, being twice as distant as Fernie.

The price of American coke varies widely as the price of pig-iron flucuates, at times it being double what it is at other times. Our American neighbors will find the standard rates charged for the Crows Nest fuel a factor in favor of the Canadian article, while as to quality, there is no doubt in the opinion of experts that the Crows Nest coke has no peer in America.

The future of Fernie and the prosperity of its citizens depends in a large measure upon the success of the coal and coke industry, and if the visit of the Great Northern officials to Fernie this week results, as we surmise it will, in the adoption of such freight rates as will enable the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company to assist in supplying the smelting industry of the western states with fuel, this success will have been assured so far as markets are concerned.

EDITORIAL NOTES

A practical manner in which everyone can assist in preventing a miniature repetition of the Baltimore disaster in Fernie is to buy a ticket for the Firemen's ball given on Monday evening under the auspices of the Fernie Board of Trade. Two dollars spent in this manner will provide you with a delightful evening as well as fill you with a comfortable feeling of having done your duty.

THE rain which broke up the long drought in Australia last year failed to restore confidence among many of the ranch-owners. We learn on good authority that several men formerly exceedingly wealthy have formed a project of investigating conditions in the Kootenay district and the Fall of this year will see a party of Australians amongst us who would be in the highest degree acceptable to the province if they can be induced to invest.

THE Board of License Commissioners and the License Inspector have not as yet been appointed for this district for the present year; nor, as a matter of fact, have they beeu appointed for the other districts of the Province. No reason is given by the government for the delay. Already important matters have accumulated which require the attention of a board of Commissioners, and the duties of the license inspector in this district are such that matters of more or less importance are continually cropping up which he alone can settle. It is reasonably certain that last year's inspector will be reappointed, but this certainty rather aggravates than relieves the situation for it does not authorize him to transact the business of the office.

THE lumbermen of B. C. are thoroughly alive to the discriminating effect of the customs tariff and the C. P. R. rates upon the lumber industry. Numerous conferences have been held for the purpose of deciding how best to combat the existing drawbacks and delegations have visited Ottawa to personally lay the matter before the Government. At the present time a delegation is at Ottawa for the purpose for again making clear the necessity of a duty on American rough lumber coming into Canada. This delegation consists of two representatives from the Interior and two from the coast. The fact that W. A. Galliher, M. P., for the Kootenays and a supporter of the Laurier administration is in favor of protecting the lumber industry with a duty similar to that which protects other kindred industries, should lend weight to the arguments put forward by the delegation. There is no gainsaying the fact that the lumber industry of the Kootenays is suffering keenly from the wholesale importation of American lumber, which is hauled to the consumer at rates per mile little more than half as great as charged B. C. lumbermen. The so called bluff of the C. P. R. to operate mills of its own and to supply lumber at smaller prices may not be a bluff at all, for this great transportation company holds the key to the situation in its own hands. Granting that B. C. lumber is sold at a high price on the prairie, a reduction of 50 per cent in the transportation charges would put the same lumber on the same market at a much reduced price, and who will say that the C. P. R. cannot haul its own lumber at half its present rates.

Reports to hand from Michel indicate that the weather there this week has been much more severe than at Fernie. Many of the water pipes were frozen and carpenter work was suspended.

The first severe winter weather of the season struck Fernie a week ago. Considerable wind accompanied the snow fall and the thermometer registered at zero. Lumbermen have no kick coming now at the lack of snow for hauling purposes.

The Great Northern Railway quote 1st class return tickets from Morrissey to St. Louis and return in connection with the Louisianna Purchase Exposition at $62.50, going limit 10 days, returning limit 90 days from date of sale. Tickets will be on sale 3 days each month during May, June, July, August and September. Tickets routing home through California $15.00 higher. Stop overs will be allowed.

A disgusting rape case came up at the police court on Tuesday in which a Bohemian woman, her Slav husband, and a Poland boarder, all from Morrissey, figured. The woman told an apparently straight story but close cross-examination weakened it and led to the belief that she was resorting to this means to save her own reputation. The accused was therefore dismissed. F. C. Lawe, of Morrissey, defended the accused.

The following clipping re the funeral of the late Wm. Quinn who received fatal injuries in an accident in Coal Creek mines recently, is from a Plymouth, Pa., paper. "The remains of the late William Quinn who died in British Columbia from injuries received in the mines, arrived here Saturday evening and were removed to the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Quinn, of West Main street. John Rudge, a former resident of this place, accompanied the remains home. The funeral was held this afternoon from his late residence and was one of the largest held here in years. Father Matthew and Co. E., a drill company of the former, and the A. O. H. Society, of which the deceased was a member, attended the obsequies in a body. The remains were conveyed to St. Vincent's church where the last sad services were conducted by Rev. D. W. McCarthy. Interment was in St. Vincent's cemetery.

Tendency of the Times.

The tendency of medical science is toward preventive measures. The best thought of the world is being given to the subject. It is easier and better to prevent than to cure. It has been fully demonstrated that pneumonia, one of the most dangerous diseases that men have to contend with, can be prevented by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Pneumonia always results from a cold or an attack of influenza (grip), and it has been observed that this remedy counteracts any tendency of these diseases toward pneumonia. This has been fully proven in many thousands of cases in which this remedy has been used during the great prevalence of colds and grip in recent years, and can be relied upon with implicit confidence. Pneumonia often results from a slight cold when no danger is apprehended until it is suddenly discovered that there is fever and difficulty in breathing and pains in the chest, then it is announced that the patient has pneumonia. Be on the safe side and take Chamberlains Cough Remedy as soon as the cold is contracted. It always cures. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

The Michel hockey team met defeat at Frank by a score of 8-3. The following players represented Michel, Messrs Bruels, Henderson, Cook, Turner, Evans, Lee and Stitt. The defeated team put up a good game considering the little practice they have had. They claim that Frank had players from Blairmore and Coleman.

The second carnival of the season was held on Monday evening. Owing to the short notice given it was not attended as well as its promotors hoped for and little money was realized for the hockey club for whose benefit it was arragned, but those who were there had a very pleasant evening. The band was present and rendered excellent music. The costumes were in many cases, mere disguises but several were pretty and effective. One unique feature was the representation of the Junior Hockey team by eight young ladies, who wore the blue sweaters of the youthful champions. After the prizes were awarded a boy's race was called, in which R. Dunlop was the winner. The ice was in excellent condition and the benumbed on-lookers gladly welcomed the arrival of the time when they were allowed to go on the ice.

CASHEL CONFESSES BEFORE EXECUTION

Murderer of the Alberta Rancher, Isaac Rufus Belt, Paid the Penalty on the Scaffold at Calgary—Story of His Short, Dramatic Career and Thrilling Escape.

At 8.06 o'clock on the morning of February 2, Ernest Cashel, murderer of Rufus Belt, paid the extreme penalty of the law by hanging. Only a small group of about a dozen persons witnessed the execution.

The morning dawned cold and dull, nature seemed to harmonize in sadness with the career of the young man, scarcely more than a boy, passing into eternity from the floor of a scaffold. A very light snow filled the air, and the spectators shivered with cold.

Cashel came to the scaffold attended by Mr. Kerby, the Methodist pastor, who feels that Cashel had sincerely repented of his crime. Cashel wore a tweed suit, and at the last a white cap was placed upon his head. While the Lord's Prayer was recited the drop fell and the soul of Cashel passed into eternity. Radcliffe, the official hangman, made all arrangements, and everything passed off satisfactorily from his standpoint.

Before leaving his cell Cashel broke down and confessed to Mr. Kerby that he had murdered Belt, but afterward walked firmly to the scaffold, asking the pastor to pray for him.

Through the medium of Mr. Nolan, the condemned boy's lawyer, permission was obtained to lay the body in the Calgary cemetery. At 6.20 Cashel partook of a light breakfast. Afterwards Mr. Kerby sang two hymns and prayed earnestly. The condemned man broke down and sobbed like a child.

Mr. Kerby told him that he wished him, before the end came, to tell him whether he did or did not kill the man of whose death he was accused, and that he owed it to himself and others not to die with the secret unspoken.

Cashel gave Mr. Kerby a letter for his brother, who is imprisoned in Regina for assisting him to escape. In the letter he speaks in heartbreaking terms of the mother whom he loved, he said, as of old, and also begged Mr. Kerby to send her his last loving message. He then threw his arms around Mr. Kerby's neck weeping bitterly. Officers then entered and manacled Cashel's hands, and the sad procession made its way to the scaffold, Mr. Kerby leading slightly in advance and at one side of Cashel, who walked firmly to his doom.

At the scaffold he turned to Mr. Kerby, and said in a low voice, "I am guilty." Mr. Kerby moved with him to the scaffold and repeated the exquisite lines, "Other refuge have I none, hangs my helpless soul on Thee." The hangman adjusted the knot and pulled over Cashel's face a white cap. Mr. Kerby commenced to repeat the Lord's prayer, and as he breathed the words, "deliver us from evil," the drop fell, and Ernest Cashel's soul took its flight. He met his end, not in a spirit of bravado, as some expected, nor yet as a coward, but in a simple, earnest manner, sincerely repenting of whatever evil he may have done.

Mr. Kerby states that Cashel was not a bad boy at heart; his mother's early teachings were still a strong influence with him. He left a message for the young men of Calgary. Mr. Kerby is to give it at the opera house on Sunday evening. It is a strong argument against the influences which warped Cashel's own life.

STORY OF THE CRIME.

The story of the escape and capture of Ernest Cashel reads like a romance from the pages of the James boys. He was condemned to be hanged on Tuesday, December 15th, for the murder of Isaac Rufus Belt, a rancher at Tail Creek, under peculiarly atrocious circumstances, he having concealed the body. He was traced by some of the effects of Belt and brought from Stony Mountain penetentiary, where he was serving a term, to stand trial. Sentence of death was pronounced, and when he discovered that the sentence would be carried out, Cashel, on December 10th, made his successful fight for liberty. The affair occurred in the police barracks at Calgary at 6.30 p.m. Constable Piper, who was on guard, ordered the prisoner out of the cell until he made a search. On the outside were Constables Leslie and Phillips. Cashel walked out and sat on a bench in front of a window facing the street. Piper, after the search, ordered Cashel back to the cell, whereupon the prisoner suddenly flashed two shining revolvers in the face of his guards and ordered all three into the cell he had just vacated. He took their revolvers and locked them in, and then walked in his shackled feet to the place where the keys were kept, unlocked the shackles, and after taunting the guards, kissed his hand to them by way of adieu and left the barracks. Fifteen minutes later the night guard came in to find the three mounted policemen in Cashel's cell. The revolvers were supplied by his brother, John Cashel.

A CAREER OF CRIME.

In September, 1904, Ernest Cashel, a young man living with his parents near Ponoka, a town about 120 miles north of Calgary, came to that city for a day's outing. He spent the day in Calgary, and before he returned found that his money had run short, and that he had not had half the good time expected. He therefore forged a cheque and presented it to a merchant, who cashed it. The young man took the money, spent it, and went back to Ponoka.

When the crime had been discovered the guilt was soon placed at his door and Chief English, of Calgary, went north and arrested Cashel at his own home. When the journey to Calgary had been half completed, and the train was at full speed, Cashel, without coat or vest, ran across the train and jumped out head first and escaped.

For the next five months Cashel was a fugitive from justice. In that time, according to his own statement, he was a highwayman, a desperado, a bandit. When he escaped from Chief English he immediately struck north. At one o'clock of the following morning he knocked at the door of a rancher named Amasa Driggs. During that day he must have made over forty miles. He told Driggs that he was lost, and just about perished, as the night was bitterly cold, and he was without coat and vest. On the following morning he borrowed a horse, saddle, bridle, a coat and vest and departed. He never came back with any of the things.

DISAPPEARANCE OF BELT.

He was next seen on October 21st, which would be the following day, heading for the lonely home of Rufus Belt. He asked the way to this man's abode. Belt lived alone in a shack away from his neighbors. He came originally from Kansas, and was working out a homestead. His wife and family of six children were waiting for him in Kansas. Harry Thomas, a nephew of Belt's, living a few miles away, visited his uncle on the following Sunday. Cashel was there. He called himself Elsworth, and was living with Belt. During his visit Belt showed his nephew a $50 bill, which he had in his possession. Cashel told Thomas that the gun which he carried was a 44 calibre revolver. Belt was never seen alive again by any person except Cashel. On October 23rd Fred Thomas, another nephew, tried to get to his uncle's residence, but the river was in flood. He called, but no sound came from the shack, though it was not 150 feet away. The boat looked as though it had been hurriedly disturbed and hurriedly left. Belt's horse was nowhere to be seen. There was no sign of life in the place. At the trial the crown maintained that at that moment Belt's dead body was at the bottom of the Red Deer river; that he had been the victim of a bullet directed by Ernest Cashel.

On the Sunday following young Thomas came again to visit his uncle. This time the river was frozen, and he crossed on the ice. He noticed as he was about to enter the shack that there were no footprints in the snow that had fallen a couple of days previously. On entering the shack no person was to be seen. There was a bed in which two persons had been sleeping, which was not made. The unfinished meal was on the table. Belt's tools were scattered about the shack. There was no sign of life. Some of the clothing which Belt wore was gone and the chest in which he kept his money was disturbed. The alarm was then given that Belt was missing.

FLIGHT OF CASHEL.

In the meantime Cashel was in flight. He had previously sold the horse which he had stolen from Driggs. He rode south on a buckskin pony, which men now swear belonged to Rufus Belt. He rode on a saddle which belonged to Belt, and had his name written on the back of it. He was dressed in a corduroy suit, which the friends and relatives of Belt swore belonged to him. On October 29th he stopped at a house near Innisfail. While there he showed a $50 bill. On October 30th he was within a few miles of Olds, and while there he traded off, at a sacrifice, the pony that is now said to be the Belt pony. He travelled about with a gun and a revolver, and he showed to two men there a $50 bill.

A couple of days later he appeared at a half-breed camp within a mile of the city of Calgary. At this time he was wanted for forgery, for escaping from the police and for horse stealing, yet he was daring and cool enough to go within a mile of the place where one of the offences was committed, and of the headquarters of the Mounted Police, who were at that time scouring the country in their attempt to locate him. At that time he was suspected of the murder of Belt, but the body of the missing man had not been discovered. During his stay in Calgary he came to town two or three nights every week, and at times within a few feet of the chief of police. He remained in the half-breed camp for about ten weeks. Here, too, he was very free with the $50 bill.

He finally left for the west. At Kananaskis, a point on the C. P. R. about 70 miles west of Calgary, he stole a diamond ring from a C. P. R. section foreman, and hurriedly passed on west. At Anthracite, a point about twenty miles further, he went into a hotel and attempted to sell the diamond ring. He was arrested and brought back to Calgary, where he was tried on two charges of stealing—a horse and a ring. He pleaded guilty to both charges and was sentenced to two years in the Stony tain penetentiary.

BELT'S BODY DISCOVERED.

In the meantime no trace was to be found of Belt. The police offered rewards for the discovery of the man, dead or alive, and searched the district from end to end. But late last June a rancher named Watson, while herding cattle, saw a dead body in a river. He gave the alarm, and after the ordinary preliminaries a coroner's inquest was held. The body was in a very bad state of decomposition, and the features quite past recognition. On a more careful examination a bullet dropped out of the body. The only clothing on the body was a pair of boots, and decomposition had been very far advanced. However, his brother-in-law, brother and two nephews are positive about recognition. Belt had a deformed toe, as when a young man he had cut his great toe severely, which left a very bad scar. In dressing the wound his mother had bound it too tight, and the result was that when the wound was healed the great toe lay under the second toe, and touched the third toe. This was and is practically all the evidence there is of identification, but all four witnesses were positive about this.

ESCAPES FROM BARRACKS.

The escape from Calgary barracks was most thrilling. It took place at 6.15 on the evening of December 10th. Cashel had secured two revolvers from his brother, who, through the kindness of the guard, had been permitted to approach too near the condemned man's cell. Just before six o'clock that evening Constable Piper, who was on guard, ordered the prisoner out of the cell until he could make a search of it. On the outside were Constables Leslie and Phillips. Cashel walked out as of old, sat on a bench in front of a window facing thestreet. Piper searched the cell and then ordered Cashel back. Cashel took one pace, then flashed two shining revolvers in his face. Phillips was not quick enough to shoot, and in a flash was also covered. Cashel then ordered the men into the cell. He took their revolvers, then locked them in, and walked with shackled feet to the place where the keys were, unlocked the shackles and let himself out. After taunting the men and kissing his hand to them by way of adieu, he threw away his own cheap revolvers. Fifteen minutes later the night guard came in to find the three mounted policemen in Casnel's cell. Before going he coolly said, "Good-bye, boys, I'm going."

THE RECAPTURE.

The story of his capture is a most dramatic one. After being at large from the 10th of December to the 24th o, January, with all kinds of opportunities to get out of the country, he was finally landed through his own foolhardiness. During the last two weeks the police have had several traces of him, but it was found that he was reading the paper regularly. A week before his capture, Cashel went to the ranch of Mr. Cossar, to the south of Sheppard, and held up the family with his revolver, taking what cash there was in the house and examining Mr. Cossar's cheque book. On the Thursday previous he held up James Wigmore, at whose place he slept. He followed Mr. Wigmore with his gun every time he went out. Two weeks later he was in Calgary, and during his visit he wrote a letter to Rev. Mr. Litch. The letter was written on a sheet of paper bearing the imprint of a city hotel. In it he asked Mr. Litch to advise Radcliffe to go home, as he (Cashel) expected to live a while longer. He said he was very comfortable and had plenty of friends. This was his undoing, as the paper furnished the right clues, and the police and civilians started out to take him

LIVED IN A HAY STACK.

Cashel had been living for several days in a large hole which he dug out in a haystack. In the hole were found a military cloak and several other articles, including some clothing which he had stolen from Mr. Rigby. On the approach of the police and civilians Cashel took refuge in the cellar of the house. After searching the house Constable Biggs went down the cellar with a lamp, making the remark that that was where the fellow must be. He heard a voice saying, "Who are you calling _____" and immediately Biggs heard a shot, and a bullet whizzed past his ear.

Naturally Biggs lost no time in scrambling out of the cellar, shouting for the other men as he went out. Before leaving the house he fired a shot through the trapdoor into the cellar. The house was then completely surrounded. The men, most of whom were armed with rifles, were standing sixty and seventy yards away, the horses being tied together in a bunch and left in charge of one of Mr. Pitman's men. Inspector Duffus and Mr. Heald carried hay to the lean-to of the house and set fire to it, but the wind being in the wrong direction they started a fire on the other side.

CASHEL FEIGNS SUICIDE.

Meanwhile the posse gradually closed in, although they knew they were taking desperate chances, there being windows on two sides of the house. On reaching the house Mr. Chamberlain smashed in one of the windows with the butt of his rifle, and Inspector Duffus broke in another. They immediately covered the cellar door with their rifles and called to Cashel to drop his revolver and come out quietly or he would be a dead man. Shortly before this they heard a shot in the cellar, which was evidently a bluff on Cashel's part, he wishing to give the impression that he had committed suicide. A long parley then took place between the desperado and Inspector Duffus.

Cashel said: "Boys, I'm going to kill myself. You'll find a letter on the floor to my mother. Come and get it before it is burned, and for God's sake put out the fire; I don't want to be roasted.

The inspector then said: "There is oo use your trying to shoot or you are a dead man. Come out with your hands up."

After some further talk, during which the inspector advised Cashel not to kill himself, the desperate convict came up out of the cellar with his hands above his his head, saying: "God, boys, I don't want to be hanged, and I don't want to kill any of you, but I guess I'll have to give myself up." He said further that he had dropped his gun, and he peeled off his coat to show that he had no arms about him. Cashel then came out of the house and shook hands with the whole party, commencing with Constable Biggs.

He said: "I'm sick of the whole business."

He was then placed in the buggy, and brought quietly into Calgary, sitting on Mr. Chamberlain's knee.

Sculptured by Nature.

Nature through the active agency of the rains, winds and even the dust sometimes performs wonderful things in the strange fashioning of the obdurate stone into forms resembling the human face. On the very summit of Mount Tamalpais, a lofty peak that stands about twelve miles from the city of San Francisco, is a most remarkable profile wrought in the solid stone.

Just a few minutes' walk from the end of the railroad that leads up to the mountain's summit, on the trail that circles the crest of the peak, brings one to the Old Lady herself. This huge natural sphinx seems to guard the path where it narrows on a rocky ledge.

The profile is perfect. The seams and creases made by the centuries of weather are like lines of care and age worn in the human face. No one, however aged in our worldly years, can remember when the Old Lady was young. However, when one passes farther along the path and looks backward the outline of the wrinkled visage is lost, and instead the eye can dimly trace the features of a woman young and as beautiful as an Egyptian princess.

He Had Money Before.

Colonel Carr was traveling in New Mexico once, when he ran into a party consisting of Senator Tabor and his friends. It was only a few months after Tabor had "struck it rich." Prior to that event he had possessed scarcely enough to buy a postage stamp, but he was making up for lost time.

Carr had lost his watch key and began inquiring for one. Mr. Tabor thought this a great joke. "The idea of a man wanting a watch key in the nineteenth century!" he said. After chuckling over it for some time he turned to Carr and asked an explanation. "I want to understand it—a watch key! And a man as up to date as you?"

"Well, the fact is," responded the colonel, "I had enough money to buy a watch before stem winders came into fashion."

It was a center shot and was greeted by a roar from the entire car. Tabor got off by buying champagne for the crowd.

An Intelligent Bird.

A species of woodpecker inhabits the driest parts of Mexico, where during the droughts it must die of starvation unless it made a store. To prevent this it selects the hollow stem of a species of aloe, the bore of which is just large enough to hold a nut. The woodpecker drills holes at intervals in the stem and fills it from bottom to top with the nuts, the separate holes being apparently made for convenience of access to the column of nuts within.

The intelligence which not only constructs a special storehouse, but teaches the woodpecker to lay by only the nuts, which will keep, and not the insects, which would decay, is perhaps the highest form of bird reasoning which has yet been observed.

Light on Finance.

"Say, mister," began the rural citizen as he meandered into the village editor's presence, "I'd like tew git a leetle light on that air financial question."

"You didn't make any mistake in coming to me," replied the molder of public opinion, "for if there is any one on earth light on finance it is yours truly."

SUSPENSE MUST VERY SOON END

Negotiations Expected to End Within Five Days.

AT A CRITICAL STAGE

Russian Reply Expected to be Conciliatory. Japanese Incendiaries May Force a Conflict. War May Possibly Be Averted.

A dispatch to the New York Times from Washington says:—The members of the diplomatic corps, in private conversation, almost unanimously predict war between Russia and Japan. One of the most prominent diplomatists said: "Before five days elapse the world must know positively whether there is to be war. I can't see how war can be averted."

The Associated Press has the authority of the British ambassador at St. Petersburg for the announcement that the Russian reply is satisfactory. Although no further details are obtainable, it is assumed, if the information of the ambassador is correct, that Russia has made certain concessions and that Great Britain will prevail on Japan to accept them as satisfactory. The statement of the British ambassador went from St. Petersburg to the British legation in Tokio, where Mr. Griscom, the American minister, heard of it and cabled the news to the American State department.

It is said that the delay in the Russian reply was necessary in consequence of the extreme care taken in drafting the document. Viceroy Alexieff's views are also awaited before its transmission to the czar. It is fully realized at St. Petersburg that the forwarding of the answer will mark another critical stage in the negotiations, everything depending on Japan's attitude. It is feared that despite pacific influences the hands of the authorities may be forced on account of the excitement of the press and people.

A high official said: "Of course, we cannot prevent war. Russia will do her utmost to offer Japan a basis for a durable peace, but there are limits beyond which we cannot go. In Corea we grant practically everything, and in Manchuria we already recognize all the treaty rights of Japan and all the other powers. Should Japan reject our conciliatory propositions the world must place the responsibility upon Japan."

An admiral who is influential in councils of the empire, interviewed by the Associated Press, said: "The enormous loss which the commerce of Japan is sustaining as a result of the mobilization of steamships for transport service probably accounts for the impatience the Japanese are displaying over the delay in the Russian reply, but this reply will go to Tokio next week. It will be so conciliatory that I do not foresee other than a peaceful settlement, although it is difficult to feel certain in this respect, because of the erratic course of the Japanese government during the later stages of the negotiations. Japan has increased her demands while the negotiations were still in progress by insisting upon treaty recognition of Chinese sovereignty in Manchuria. Russia has declared her intention not to annex Manchuria, therefore why comply with a demand that is tantamount to a humiliating reiteration of a former voluntary declaration? It is undeniable that the attitude of Japan is causing irritation in St. Petersburg, and that a feeling of impatience is growing throughout Russia. It is hard to account for Japan's persistent aggressiveness, but this must be attributable to the incendiary influence of the Japanese press, which is acting under foreign inspiration. The Japanese government must know it stands no chance of defeating Russia, while Japan has much to lose if Russia is forced back against the wall. Should Japan proceed to hostilities her first object would be the cutting of the Siberian railroad for which purpose she would land troops in Corea. She could not, however, land more than 100,000 men, and Russia has an equal number of men in Manchuria to meet this attack, which, I think, would be quickly repulsed. I do not believe in a naval war; the Russian warships would make it impossible for the Japanese to endanger Port Arthur. But let me repeat, war is improbable."

SCOTLAND YARD PUZZLE

Solicitor for Duke of Newcastle Robbed of $60,000.

Scotland Yard appears to have at last come to the conclusion that in seeking an explanation of the mysterious and sensational disappearance of £12,000 in Bank of England notes from the Hotel Metropole, the London detective bureau is confronted by a problem worthy of the best efforts of Sherlock Holmes.

The notes were missed on Friday morning last, and for two whole days the idea was encouraged that their owner, Mr. George Marshall, solicitor for the Duke of Newcastle, had stored them away for safety and then forgotten where he had hidden them.

The lost money was to have been used in the purchase of property for the duke. Mr. Marshall came to London with notes to the value of £18,000 in his wallet. He stayed at the Hotel Metropole, and left his wallet with the hotel cashier, remarking that it contained a large sum of money. Next morning he received the wallet from the cashier and carried it to his room. He removed some papers from it, saw that the notes were all right, locked the wallet up, and put it in his portmanteau. Mr. Marshall closed the portmanteau without locking it and went downstairs. On going out he closed the door, which fastened itself with a spring lock.

During his absence a chambermaid found the door to the room ajar. When Mr. Marshall returned to his room an hour later he went to the portmanteau and took out his wallet, which, to his amazement, fell open as he lifted it. The wallet had been cut open, and examination revealed the fact that £12,000 of the £18,000 was gone. The £6,000 in a separate envelope in the wallet had apparently been overlooked. Experts who have since examined the wallet say that it was cut open by an exceedingly sharp knife, and probably by a left-handed person. The robbery is believed to be the work of an expert and daring gang, who may have been preparing their plans for months.

Mr. Marshall suspects he was shadowed to the hotel. He has more than one reason for his suspicion. In the corridor of the hotel on the night of his arrival a well-dressed man brushed against him, saying, "Good evening," and in the morning on coming out of his room he met the same man on the stairs. Had the man gone straight on he would have come to Mr. Marshall's room, but he turned aside and went into an empty room. Before Mr. Marshall left his room in the morning the door was opened by someone and quickly shut again.

CHICAGO THEATRE OPENS

McVicar's Playhouse Complete With Safeguards, Was Crowded.

McVicar's theatre, Chicago, complete with safeguards against fire and loss of life, re-opened on February 1, being the first of the popular playhouses to open since all of them were closed, following the Iroquois theatre fire on December 30th. The opening was assured late in the afternoon, after an inspection by an aldermanic committee and the fire and building authorities. When the spectators assembled to see the twentieth annual production of "In Old Kentucky," the sight which first met their eyes was the corrugated surface of a 7,500 pound fireproofed steel curtain. The curtain was lowered between acts. Seventeen exits had been provided, and each exit was marked by lights. Every seat for the performance was sold.

Mr. Lecky's Torrent of Speech.

A very brilliant Irish lady some years ago arranged that Mr. Lecky should meet an able and famous Irishman of very advanced opinions in politics. It was intended that they should exchange views, and the Irishman had a good deal to say about Mr. Lecky's later work and was well able to put what he had to say in the most effective language. The door opened and Mr. Lecky was announced. He was introduced to the Irishman, and before the latter had time to say anything the historian began a political harangue which he kept going without cessation the whole time he was there. The Irishman at first tried to break in with a word, but he was swept away, as it were, in the unceasing flow of Mr. Lecky's language; so after a time he sat in amused bewilderment, waiting until nature gave out. But when Mr. Lecky felt he was getting exhausted he rose from his chair, shook hands with the hostess and her guest, keeping on talking all the time. They came out with him to the top of the staircase, but could not get a word edgeways even then, as he talked all the way down to the door and was even in an unfinished sentence when the door was shut behind him. They looked at each other and roared.—Freeman's Journal.

The Soldier Ant.

The lion is the king of beasts, but all of his magnificent strength and ferocity would avail him nothing when he faced a mere ant. But this ant is not the usual kind which peacefully goes about its domestic duties day by day. It is the terrible driver or soldier ant, said to be the most invincible creature in the world.

Against these tiny enemies no man or band of men, no lion or tiger nor even a herd of elephants, can do anything but hurriedly get out of the way. Among the Barotse natives a favorite form of capital punishment is to coat the victim with grease and throw him before the advancing army of soldier ants. The quickness with which the poor wretch is dispatched is marvelous when it is considered that each ant can do nothing more than merely tear out a small particle of flesh and carry it off. Yet in a surprisingly short time the writhing victim will have been changed into a skeleton.

Waiting For the Note.

An English churchman tells the following: "At one of our cathedrals the minor canon was ill and could not sing. A suffragan bishop had a good voice and volunteered to sing the litany. 'Go,' he said to the verger, 'and tell the organist that I will sing the litany and ask him to give me the reciting note.' 'Please, sir,' said the verger to the organist, 'the bishop has sent me to you to say he will sing the litany.' 'All right,' said the organist. Seeing the verger remain, he said, 'You need not stay.' 'Please, sir, the bishop asked me to ask you if you would give him a something—I didn't quite catch—note.' 'You mean the reciting note.' 'That's it, sir; that's it.' Seeing the verger still remaining, he said, 'You need not stay.' To which the verger said, 'Please, sir, shall I take it to his lordship?'"

A Japanese Wedding.

A Japanese wedding is a quaintly pretty ceremony. The bride, dressed in a white silk kimono and white veil, sits on the floor facing her affianced husband. Near them are two tables, upon one of which are two cups, a bottle of sake and a kettle with two spouts. On the other are a miniature plum tree, typifying the beauty of the bride; a miniature fir tree, representing the strength of the bridegroom, and a stork stands on a tortoise, signifying long life and felicity. The bride and bridegroom drink alternately from the two-spouted kettle in token that they will henceforth share each other's joys and sorrows. After the wedding the bride's veil is laid away to be used as her shroud when she dies.

NEW SENSATIONS IN MEDICAL WORLD

Collingwood Bright's Disease Cure Brings to Light Others Equally Wonderful.

Mrs. Fred. Philip of Eglington Tells of Her Remarkable Experience.

Discharged from two Toronto Hospitals --- Dodd's Kidney Pills Brought Back Her Health.

Toronto, Feb. 8—(Special.)—The report from Collingwood of the wonderful cure of Mrs. Thomas Adams of Bright's Disease by Dodd's Kidney Pills has aroused great interest here and the discussion of it has brought out the fact that Mrs. Adams' case is not an isolated one, that right in Toronto there are people who, suffering from the most dreaded and fatal of Kidney Diseases, have found a positive and permanent cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

One of the most striking cases that has been brought to light is that of Mrs. Fred Philip, now residing on Broadway ave., Eglinton, one of the northern suburbs of the city. That Mrs. Philip was suffering from Bright's Disease and was in a most dangerous state, there is not the shadow of a doubt. She was in two city hospitals, Grace and the General, and left both places without a hope for the future.

In the Hospitals.

In Grace Hospital the doctors wished to operate on her but she objected, and leaving the hospital called in another doctor. He told her at once that she had Bright's Disease and had her removed to the General Hospital. The doctors here demurred to an operation on account of the danger.

On being discharged a second time without benefit Mrs. Philip stopped the doctors and started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. The result is that to-day all the terrible swelling is gone, she is able to do all her own work as well as look after her bright little four-year-old child.

In an interview Mrs. Philip spoke freely of her terrible trouble and gave unstinted praise to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Philip's Story.

"I was sick for six months," she said, "before taking Dodd's Kidney Pills. During that time I was six weeks in Grace Hospital and two months in the General Hospital. I was told in both places that nothing more could be done for me. I started taking Dodd's Kidney Pills in April and am still using them. They have done me a world of good. The Dropsy has all left me and I am now doing all my own work just the same as I was before I was sick."

The talk these cases has caused has also served to show how general the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills has become and how numerous are the cures effected of Pain in the Back, Rheumatism, Dropsy, and all the other results of diseased Kidneys. In fact, cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills can be found by the hundred, but a case in which they have failed to cure has yet to be reported.

The Brahman Funeral Pyre.

After the body of a Brahman has been anointed with sesamum oil the two toes are bound together and the two thumbs. It is then lashed to a litter made of two long parallel poles, to which are fastened seven transverse pieces of wood. The shroud is very simple, a large piece of cloth wrapped round the body and bound with ropes of straw. If the dead Brahman leaves a will his face is not covered; otherwise the shroud is brought up over the head. The burning ground, or ghat, is usually near a river, that those who have taken part in the ceremonies may purify themselves as quickly and as easily as possible. Before erecting the funeral pyre a shallow pit is dug and partially filled with dry wood, the body is covered with splinters of dry wood and sprinkled with panchagaria, an inflammable liquid, and placed on the pyre and covered with branches and roots, like a hut. The nearest relative or heir then takes a lighted taper and sets fire to the four corners of the pile and leaves at once to perform the ceremony of purification. The carriers, being of the lowest caste, remain until the body is entirely consumed.

A Ruse of War.

This happened in 1797, when Colonel Tate, with the Legion Noire, landed near Fishguard, intending to march on and burn Bristol. When the expedition appeared off the coast there was only a handful of volunteers available to oppose them, and Lord Cawdor, who was in command, mustered all the Welsh women he could gather together.

Each of these wore a long red cloak descending, petticoat fashion, almost to her heels, and thus attired they were made to march and countermarch among the hills, presenting themselves at different points to the view of the enemy in such a way as to give the impression of red uniformed troops taking up position. The French were so puzzled by their appearance that, although they landed, they could not make up their minds to advance until sufficient time had elapsed to raise the country and bring forward a real force strong enough to beat them back.

A Great Old Castle.

Raby castle, the seat of Lord Barnard, is a famous old structure. On the ground floor is a mighty hall into which one might drive a coach. Above it runs a dining chamber ninety feet in length and thirty-six in breadth. It remains today as it stood in the days when the barons for whose entertainment it was fashioned were almost the paramount power in the land. Seven hundred of the mightiest and noblest in the kingdom dined simultaneously in this hall when the warlike Nevilles were established at Raby castle. The ancient chamber is good for as many today, and there is accommodation enough for the cooking. The kitchen is a square of thirty feet, with an oven so huge that at one time it was converted into a wine cellar, the sides being divided into ten parts, each side holding a hogshead of wine in bottles.

Sisterly Devotion.

The beautiful Margaret of Navarre was devoted to her brother, Francis I. When he was apparently dying at Madrid, she found her way to him through privation and danger and succeeded in effecting his deliverance. When he was ill at a distance from her, she went every day and sat down on a stone in the middle of the road to catch the first glimpse of a messenger afar off. And she said:

"Ah, whoever shall come to announce the recovery of the king, my brother, though he be tired, jaded, soiled, disheveled, I will kiss him and embrace him as though he were the finest gentleman in the kingdom."

When he died she seemed literally heartbroken, and she did not long survive him.

The Sturdy Camel.

A camel has twice the carrying power of an ox. With an ordinary load of 400 pounds he can travel twelve or fourteen days without water, going forty miles a day. Camels are fit to work at five years old, but their strength begins to decline at twenty-five, although they usually live to forty. The Tartars have herds of these animals, often 1,000, belonging to one family. They were numerous in antiquity, for the patriarch Job had 3,000. The Timbuktu or Meharri breed is remarkable for speed and used only for couriers, going 800 miles in eight days with a meal of dates or grain at nightfall.

A Queer African Tribe.

The Suk tribe in Africa work their hair into a kind of bag shaped matted chignon stiffened with clay. This reaches almost to the waist. The Suks also wear a curious cape made of monkey skin rubbed soft. This cape is not worn for warmth or protection from the sun, but when it rains they put the cape over their heads to prevent the clay being washed out of their hair.

The Usual Way.

"I suppose Jinks is proud of his boy, but he hasn't taken the usual way of showing his friends that he is."

"What do you mean?"

"He hasn't told them that his son is so big for his age that he has to get a suit made for a fourteen-year-old when he is only eleven."

A Little Outside Help.

"I understand that politician is a self made man."

"He is, entirely—except for a couple of coats of whitewash which he has received from investigating committees."

As riches and favor forsake a man we discover him to be a fool, but nobody could find it out in his prosperity.—Answers.

YOU CANNOT RELY ON IMITATIONS.

When Threatened With Bronchitis, Asthma, Pneumonia or Serious Lung Troubles Be Sure to Get the Genuine

DR. CHASE'S SYRUP OF LINSEED AND TURPENTINE.

For generations the value of turpentine as a remedial agent in all affections of the bronchial tubes and lungs has been well known.

It remained for Dr. Chase to so combine turpentine, linseed and half a dozen other ingredients as to not only make a wonderfully successful medicine, but also one that is so pleasant to the taste as to be sought for by children.

The sale of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is more than three times that of many similar remedies. The result of this success is a host of imitations.

When attacked by coughs and colds which threaten to reach the lungs and prove serious; when awakened by children with croupy coughs, gasping for breath, you cannot afford to trust to imitations.

Mr. John Pollard, Echo Bay, Ont., writes:—"I was troubled last winter with a very bad cold, which was beginning to settle on my lungs. I was so hoarse that I could scarcely speak and had a nasty hacking cough, which I could not get rid of. One bottle of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine cured me, and I can heartily recommend it."

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is sold by all dealers at the advertised price, 25 cents a bottle, family size (three times as large) 60 cents. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every bottle.

UNDEVELOPED COAL LANDS.

The Elk River Coal and Oil Company which holds 19 coal claims on the east side of the Elk river 40 miles north of Michel and 22 licenses across the river besides another bunch applied for have already opened up very favorable correspondence with parties representing capital and the probabilities are that during the present year these claims will be taken over by a Company with a view to the early development of the same. At the present time Spokane capitalists are interested in the property and they will send in experts in the spring to go over the areas.

The following measurements are gleaned from the report made by Mr. Wilson an expert who was employed by the license holders to go carefully over the property before the snow arrived. Sixteen seams were found in the property on each side of the river. Thickness of each seam is put concisely as follows.

NO. SEAM.	EAST SIDE	WEST SIDE
1	4 feet	25 feet
2	7 "	30 "
3	3½ feet	22 feet
4	15 feet	15 "
5	6 feet	2 "
6	5¼ feet	4 "
7	14 feet	2 "
8	7 "	6½ "
9	17 "	6 "
10	9½ feet	5 "
11	10 feet	8 "
12	7 "	7 "
13	28 "	2½ "
14	17 "	14 "
15	12 "	6 "
16	8½ "	7 "
Totals	170¾ feet	162 feet

The minute description of the 22 claims on the east side are as follows.

No. 1 seam.—4 feet clean coal, then 20 inches of slate, then 14 inches of coal, then 5 feet of slate, then

No. 2 seam.—7 feet clean coal, then 32 feet of slate, then

No. 3 seam—3 feet coal, looks like coking coal, some places it is four feet wide, then 125 feet of slate with two small coal seams in it.

No. 4 seam—15 feet. This is a fine seam, looks as if it would coke. Then 80 feet slate.

No. 5 seam.—6 feet wide. It is the hardest coal on the claims and it will not coke. There are two small seams east of it which do not amount to much Then comes 14 feet of slate.

No. 6 is hard and will not coke. Then 4 feet slate,

No, 7 seam—14 feet wide, very fine, coal. Then 60 feet slate.

No. 8 seam—fine seam 7 feet wide, may coke. 135 feet slate.

No. 9 seam—17 feet wide, apparently it will coke. There are some small seams of slate through it which may run out in depth. 60 feet slate.

No. 10 seam—8½ feet wide, some slate in it. Looks like very fair coal. 45 feet of slate.

No. 11 seam—7½ feet of good coal with some slate in it. Then 95 feet slate.

No. 12 seam—7 feet wide of very clean coal, then 85 feet of slate

No. 13 seam—28 feet wide and free from slate, then 70 feet of slate

No. 14 seam—18 feet of very fair coal, then comes 75 feet of slate

No. 15 seam—11 feet wide and contains the best coking coal in the claims, quite clean of slate, then 10 feet of slate

No. 16 seam—8½ feet of good coal.

A similar report was made on the claims west of the river

An analysis of surface samples from these claims, made by the B. C. Copper Co. at Greenwood shows,

Volatile matter	27 per cent
Fixed carbon	67.7 per cent
Ash	5.3 per cent

This coal area is claimed by the locators to belong to the same formation as that now being operated by the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company upon which the geological department at Ottawa reports 22 seams aggregating 216 feet of coal, 100 feet of which is workable.

These coal areas are easily accessible by railway. The construction of a line up the Elk river valley to the heart of the coal fields would be a simple matter. The valley is well timbered and level, the average grade being under 1 per cent. A railway through that section would open up a fine ranching country as well as timber milling possibilities.

A SUCCESSFUL TRIP.

JUNIOR HOCKEY TEAM TO THE FRONT.

Play Games at Pincher Creek, Macleod and Blairmore This Week.

The Junior Hockey club left on Monday evening to play a series of games at Pincher Creek, Macleod and Blairmore. The first game was played at Pincher Creek, which resulted in a victory for Fernie by 2-1.

The following was the line up.

PINCHER CREEK		FERNIE
Swackhammer	goal	Todhunter
Main	point	Kirkpatrick
Lynch	cover point	Sunberg
Boyce	forwards	Kanouse
Dobbie		Lawrence
Pink		Ross
McKenzie		Rhodes

Referee, N. McKellar.

The ice was poor on the creek and the game was played in a temporary rink where the ice was not first class. The game therefore was not fast though both teams worked hard. The soft ice rendered it difficult to lift the puck much and the game was played on the shinty plan most of the time. The game was clean and no players were off for roughness. The home team won the only goal scored in the first half the puck being landed just before the whistle blew. The Fernie team played together better in the second half and scored twice making the final count 2-1 in favor of Fernie. Sunberg played particularly strong in this game. The referee's work satisfied both teams. The boys were treated well by the prairie team.

AT MACLEOD.

The ice was splendid for the game at Macleod on Wednesday night and both teams played very fast hockey from start to finish. In fact the game is reported to be one of the fastest ever seen in Macleod Sunberg was hurt at Pincher Creek and the teams played with six men each. The line up was.

MACLEOD		FERNIE
McGowan	goal	Todhunter
Nash	point	Kirkpatrick
Scougall	cover point	Kanouse
Sheer	forwards	Ross
Kain		Rhodes
Murphy		Lawrence

Referee, N. McKellar.

Scougall the star player on the prairie team scored the first game after 7 minutes hard play, after which the score card rapidly filled up, each team taking turns in rushing their opponent's goal. Murphy was hurt in the second half and Ross went off to even it up, the rest of the game being played with five men on each side.

The story of the game is best told in the following tally of the goals scored.

1. Macleod, Scougall, 7 minutes.
2. Macleod, Sheer, 8 minutes.
3. Fernie, Rhodes. 1 "
4. Macleod, Kain, 12 "

AT BLAIRMORE.

Yesterday afternoon the victorious Fernie team lined up against the Blairmore team on the open rink in that town. The home team was not a match for the fast Junior team from Fernie and the latter won easily by a score of 7 goals to 3. The game was not fast by any means as the visitors did not exert themselves more than to maintain a safe lead. Rhodes scored 4 times, Kanouse twice and Lawrence once.

The team arrived home this morning much pleased with their trip.

BOARD OF TRADE BALL.

A Very Successful Event and a Handsome Sum of Money Raised.

The Board of Trade ball on Monday evening was a success from every point of view. The large hall was taxed to its limit in affording comfortable space for the dancers but it was not crowded. There were about 140 people present but many purchased tickets who did not use them. The committee report that after paying all expenses there will be a surplus of $150 to go towards the fire fund. The music was supplied by the full Fernie orchestra and was excellent. Half a hundred beautiful cakes were generously contributed by the ladies of the town and the hotels sent boxes of sandwiches sufficient to feed a small army. The success of the event is due to the committee who personally looked after it and to the ladies of the town who took a deep interest in it. Among the latter may be mentioned Mrs. Tuttle who had charge of the refreshments, and Mrs. Trites, who by her untiring efforts, sold 40 tickets.

PLAYED POOR HOCKEY

LOSE AT THE CARNIVAL

Senior Hockey Club has Hard Luck at the Carnival.—Vernon is now Champion Of B. C.

The hockey game between the Vernon and Fernie teams at the Rossland carnival last Friday resulted in a victory for the Okanagan boys by a score of 7-4. Our despatches last week stating that the disagreement re the eligibility of Turnbull had been "adjusted" was generally believed to mean that Fernie would be allowed to play the whole team but such was not the case, and the game was played without Turnbull.

The boys are somewhat sore at the treatment accorded them by the hockey committee of the carnival, and not without some reason. Briefly the story is as follows. The local club, a week before the team left for Rossland, wrote the committee explaining that Turnbull could not qualify under the thirty day residence clause, that the club could not go otherwise and asking permission to play him. This wire was received from the secretary of the committee, "Bring Turnbull along. Hockey committee runs carnival." When the Vernon-Fernie game was called the former refused to allow Turnbull to play and the East Kootenay boys very naturally walked off the ice. The telegram was produced but the carnival committee repudiated it. A long jangle followed but Vernon was inexorable and the committee seemed helpless to settle it. Fernie offered to play with six men if Turnbull was allowed to play but Vernon still refused and finally, rather than mar the proceedings, Fernie agreed to play without Turnbull. The alleged promise of Rossland to allow Fernie's full team to play in any subsequent game was meaningless as the committee repeatedly refused to sign a written statement to that effect.

The game with Vernon was a very poor exhibition of hockey and the visitors from Fernie were dissappointed with their champions. Little attempt was made at combination by either side. Vernon won the first three goals and Fernie made the score 4-3 in its favor at half time. In the second half the Fernie team went to pieces and the Okanagan puck drivers scored four times. The work of Stephens, captain, was particularly disappointing.

Rossland defeated Revelstoke 10 goals to 4. Billy Barber played on the latter team and put up one of the finest games seen at the carnival. The final game for supremacy was played between Rossland and Vernon on Saturday evening resulting in a victory for the latter by a score of 2-1 and making it the champion hockey town of the province. The play was not particularly brilliant and the best team lost the game.

The Fernie team stopped off at Nelson on its way home to play an exhibition game. Again Fernie was in hard luck. Stephens was obliged to come on to Fernie and though Turnbull was allowed to play the team was practically in the same weakened condition as in the Vernon game. The contest was a very even one. Joe Thompson scored the first in 16 minutes. McLaughlin scored two minutes later. Just at half time Guay scored again for Nelson. In the second half neither side was able to score. The boys arrived home on Tuesday evening.

MORE COAL STEALING

NASTY TROUBLE AT MORRISSEY MINES.

Peter Stench Sent up for Four Months.—Vicent Muttor, Though Guilty, Gets Off.

Two more coal stealing cases came off at the Fernie police court this week. On Friday Constable Tranter brought Peter Stenck up from Morrissey and on Sunday he brought Vincent Muttor, both charged with tampering with their fellow miners' cars of coal.

Peter Stenck was charged with stealing coal on January 19th. On this day he and his back hand had 21 car credited to them by the checkweighman. E. Heathcote, pitboss, stated under oath that 7 cars would be a big day's work considering the nature of the working place. R. Evans, checkweighman, produced his book and showed that on the two days previous to the 19th of January accused had 11 and 7 cars respectively credited to him. There was no other record of more than 11 cars for one day. The highest day's work credited to him since the last conviction for coal thieving was 5 cars. J. Patterson, driver, stated that he did not take in 21 cars to accused on the day in question. The accused made a statement in which he admitted that he had not filled 21 cars on that day and he accused the checkweighman of keeping an incorrect tally. The magistrate found the accused guilty and sentenced him to four months at Nelson.

The case of Vincent Muttor occupied more time. J. S. T. Alexander represented the accused. John White and his back hand, Dennis Murray, were the two chief witnesses for the prosecution. On the 8th day of Feb. according to their story, they occupied a room in a level where two other sets of men were working, one of which was the accused and his partner. This was White's first day as a contract miner and he was not given checks, the mine manager telling him to write his name on his car. They had filled 5 cars. Four empties came in, of which witnesses filled two, their last one occupying the last place on the switch.

White and Murray had to wait 15 minutes for more cars, when three were brought in, one of which they filled. They brought it out to the track before the others had their cars filled and were on their way out of the mine when one of them noticed that the car last filled by them had a No. 7 check on it. Murray watched the car while White went out to explain to the fire-bess. Accused came out and Murray saw that his check number was 7. Murray accused him of stealing it but accused claimed he had filled the car and when shown the name in chalk he commenced to rub it out with his hand. Murray also identified the car by the heaping manner in which they had filled it. The name was written plainly in four places on each car. The rope rider F. Reynes, bore out this testimony so far as his evidence went.

The defence produced two witnesses who swore that of the four empties spoken of by the prosecution none were filled by White and Murray who they claimed, were timbering in their room, and the counsel for the defence accounted for the name being on the car by claiming that it might have been one of those filled earlier in the day by White and Murray and returned empty. The defence witnesses also identified the coal in the car as belonging to the accused, they claiming that the coal in the level was different from that in the room where White and Murray worked.

Messrs. White and Murray were positive on the point of the two empties in question and they said that all their timber work had been done in the morning.

The magistrate reserved his decision until Wednesday. He found the accused guilty. Enquiry at the General Manager's office had sustained the evidence of the prosecution as to the similarity of the coal in the two workings. The conflicting evidence as to the disposition of the four empties complicated the case but he believed the story as told by the complainants. Owing to the doubts surrounding the case he allowed the accused to go on suspended sentence.

TUNNEL AT MORRISSEY.

It is understood that the management of the Coal Co. intend driving a huge tunnel into the coal bed at Morrissey Mines. At present the coal veins are tapped at a great elevation, entailing much expense in getting the coal out. The new tunnel, if driven, will commence between the tipple and the Co.'s boarding house—this is right at the base of the mountains.

This will be a huge contract, and a great many men will be employed. When completed it will be of great advantage to the Coal Company in the saving of hauling power. The principal purpose of the tunnel, however, is to secure a better quality of coal, and as it is a foregone conclusion that the purpose will be accomplished an impetus will be given to the work here in every way and the production of coke will be greatly increased.—Morrissey Despatch.

IT CHANGES HANDS.

AN IMPORTANT LUMBER DEAL.

Messrs. R. W. Wood and A. B. Trites Buy Out the Hayes Lumber Co. at Elkmouth.

An important lumber deal was put through yesterday whereby Messrs. R. W. Wood and A. B. Trites bought the timber and mill property of the Hayes Lumber Company at Elkmouth. The price of the property is in the neighborhood of $26,000. The business will be conducted under the name of The Elkmouth Lumber Co. and it will have no connection with the Trites-Wood Co., the charter for the latter not permitting any other than a mercantile business being conducted under that name. Mr. Wardrop, of Sparwood, has been engaged as manager and no time will be lost in putting the business on as sound a basis as money and ability can put it.

The late company found themselves handicapped for lack of capital. The property became heavily mortgaged, and in order to prevent a foreclosure they disposed of the property at the most advantageous figure possible and did everything within their power to protect their creditors.

WILL THE NORTHERN BUILD?

Persistent Rumors Afloat That the Extention to Michel Will be Built This Year.

The air is full of rumors to the effect that the Great Northern will extend their branch line from Morrissey Junction to Michel this year. One report has it that Messrs. Foss and Macdonell already have the contrast for a portion of the road. Another, that the work will commence next month and that it is to be completed by September.

General Manager Stockett, of the Coal Company, was asked if the rumors were true, stated that so far as he knew they were not. He had no knowledge that the road would be built this year.

REV. GORDON IS MODERATOR.

Regular Meeting of the Kootenay Presbytery At Nelson.

The Kootenay Presbytery met in Nelson on Tuesday. Rev. D. L. Gordon, of Fernie, was appointed moderator. The call on the Rev. H. R. Grant, of Pincher Creek, to Rossland was sanctioned by the meeting. The several reports of the different branches of the church work were received. Rev. W. G. Fortune, of Cranbrook, convenor of the home missions committee, reported that there were four fields for missions in the Kootenays that were not occupied. These were, Morrissey, Michel, Trail and Kaslo. A public meeting was held in St. Paul's church on Wednesday evening at which the moderator presided. The next Presbytery meeting will be held at Fernie.

RELIEVED OF $600.

John Ryan, hotel keeper at Wardner, was relieved of $600 one evening of last week in one of the hotels of Fernie. On his way to Fernie he got a lot of time checks cashed at Cranbrook and had the above sum in his inside pocket. He indulged in more or less drinking in town though he was not entirely under its influence. He believes that the money was taken from his pocket by a sneak thief while he was dozing in a chair. Mr. Ryan at once took what steps he could to have the thief located. The police are working on the case. The loss is a heavy one and it is hoped that the cowardly thief may be brought to justice.

E. Todd went to Michel last night to complete the foundation for the new hotel.

TWO MORE BODIES.

THE MINE GIVES UP ITS DEAD.

Bodies of W. J. Davis and Clare Ellyn recovered. List of explosion victims now complete at 128.

Two bodies, victims of the explosion of May 22nd, 1902, were found near the face in main west level parallel of No. 2 mine last evening. A large cave in had occurred in this level and a cut had been driven around this to get at the face.

The bodies were in a fair state of preservation. One was identified as that of W. J. Davis by the number of the lamp found beside him. The other is believed to be Clare Ellyn, the clothing being identified as resembling the description given by the widow. It is reasonably certain that this is that of Mr. Ellyn.

This level was not being worked at the time of the explosion and it was not supposed that any men were near that place. Mr. Davis was a brattice man and his work took him all through the mine. Mr. Ellyn was boss driver.

The medical authorities ordered the bodies to be buried without bringing them to the town. For although they are in a fair state now owing to the climatic conditions in the mines they would decompose very rapidly in the outside air. They were coffined in the mines and brought down on the 4 p.m. train today opposite the cemetery where the funeral took place. Rev. Gordon officiated at the grave of Mr. Ellyn and Rev. Robson buried Mr. Davis. Many friends were present including the widow of Mr. Davis. Mrs. Ellyn who is now residing in Alberta has been wired the news of the recovery of her husband's body. The company management bore the cost of the burials, and did everything possible to have it done respectably.

These bodies complete the list of the victims, so far as is known, of the explosion that occurred 21 months ago. The list now numbers 128. The management made a close estimate on the day following the disaster when they placed it at 130.

General Superintendent Jamieson has evidently returned from Winnipeg empty-handed so far as an appropriation for a new depot at Fernie is concerned. Medicine Hat gets a $10,000 depot and Calgary gets $50,000 for the same purpose. Truly it is time that the C. P. R. authorities are thinking seriously of erecting a modern depot and removing those eye-sores from such a prominent place. Transcient visitors and through travellers must receive a very unfavorable impression of Fernie from a glance at the buildings occupied by the C. P. R. in the town. Not infrequently inferior surroundings mar the beauty of first class modern railway buildings, but in this case the miserable depot buildings cast shadows of decrepitude and stagnation upon the surroundings though the latter are not made up of any better class of buildings than is usually found in the railway quarter of a town. That the railway management intend to erect a large and handsome depot here we do not doubt but it would appear that the time has not yet arrived. We venture the statement that no other point on the system doing the business that Fernie does has such a miserable building for a passenger depot as this town.

P. L. Reymer, a member of a survey party, lost his life in a snow slide at the Estella mine near Wasa on Monday. The party consisting of four men were working on the side of a mountain. Deceased was next to the leading man. Suddenly a huge slide came down and carried Reymer off in the middle of it. The leading man, Williams, by name, was in the edge of it and narrowly escaped. Reymer's body was buried under tons of snow. It will not be recovered till Spring.

BEHIND THE DOOR

BY EDMUND DONNEY.

AUTHOR OF "A HOUSE OF TEARS" "RED POST PARK" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1904, BY TILLOTSON & SONS.

"I am waiting for your answer," persisted the solicitor, drumming with his fingers on the table in front of him.

"To my knowledge," answered Ethel, in a tremulous voice, "no one knew of this money—these bank notes—being in the house, except my aunt, myself, and one other person, to whom the fact was mentioned by me."

"Who was that other person?"

"Dr. Leclerc."

"Dr. Maurice Leclerc?"

"Yes."

"Thank you," said the solicitor, politely. "That is all I have got to ask you."

"Pardon me, young lady," said the foreman of the jury, gulping down something which he felt must be a yawn, as Ethel was about to retire. "Will you kindly tell us again if you are quite sure that you did not turn the key in the locks of either of those doors on the first floor—those doors where the two gentlemen slept?"

A languid smile passed over the face of the coroner as the foreman put this somewhat ambiguous question.

"I am quite certain," said Ethel, "that I did not touch the keys. I do not think I have ever locked those doors since Mr. Steinworth and Mr. Vickery came to live with us."

"Thank you," said the foreman. And then to his horror—for he was a man who prided himself on his untiring alertness—a yawn escaped from him, which caused several of the jurymen to assume a look of highly virtuous indignation.

As Ethel stepped backward, Inspector Briggs tapped her on the shoulder and whispered to her that she could have a seat in an adjoining room. She felt quite giddy now and would probably have fainted only that she heard in a loud voice the words, "Maurice Leclerc." At the same moment she saw her lover step from behind the pillar which had been sheltering him, and as he passed Ethel on his way to the coroner's table he glanced at her with a fearless, reassuring look, which afforded intense joy to the anxious and affrighted girl.

CHAPTER XIV.

FURTHER EVIDENCE.

Leclerc made neither a very good nor a very bad witness. He had been buoyed up by the promise given to him by his good friend Percival, but he experienced a sudden collapse when he heard the coroner read Dr. Percival's letter.

"No doubt," reflected the highly strung young man, "Percival had good grounds for promising to get me out of the trouble in some mysterious way of his own. The post mortem had probably disclosed to him something unknown and unsuspected by the public, but his failing to turn up is a bad omen. He may have thought he was on the track of something when he spoke so reassuringly to me and have afterward found at the last moment that he was astray."

There was little or no doubt in Leclerc's mind as to the views which the police held concerning him. They regarded him as the guilty man. Every footstep of his was dogged. Even in the coroner's court could he not see the eye of that detective who stood behind one of the pillars fixed on him? He had planned out no line of defence, nor had he any idea what sort of examination he would be put through. The one dream of comfort was the tender, trustful glance which Ethel had given him as she passed out of the court.

"Your name?" said the coroner, looking at the young man.

"Maurice Leclerc."

"You are, I see, described as a doctor."

"Yes; I am a fully qualified physician," answered Leclerc, nervously. He was disconcerted by the coroner's manner.

"Will you tell the jury, Dr. Leclerc, about your movements on the night of the 9th of October, so far as they concern the present enquiry?"

"Certainly, sir," said Leclerc, in an alert manner. "About half past 10 on Monday night I called at 13 Felspar road. I had some important matters to discuss with the deceased and Miss Rodney, and the interview took place in Mrs. Davorn's bedroom, which she also used as a kind of sitting-room. We had a somewhat stormy scene, and I left the house about a quarter past 11, being let out by Miss Rodney. I did not go straight home. I was in a violently agitated condition—feverishly excited. I have had a good deal to trouble me recently, and the interview with Mrs. Davorn upset me completely. I wandered about the streets for several hours, scarcely knowing where I was going, but I have a recollection of going through Felspar road about 1 o'clock in the morning. Shortly before 2 o'clock I let myself into my own house with my latchkey, and went straight to bed. The next time I visited 13 Felspar road was about 8 o'clock on the morning of the 10th, when I heard that Mrs. Davorn was dead. That is all I have to say, sir."

There was a short pause after Leclerc finished his statement, and then the coroner lifted his head, knuckled his eyes, and asked if any one desired to question the witness.

The foreman of the jury felt it was his bounden duty to assert himself. He had conquered the yawning attack, and felt equal now to any emergency. "Might I ask the witness," said he, "if he for any reason—let us say even for a joke—locked these two lodgers into their rooms?"

"No, I did not," answered Leclerc, with an indignant shake of his head.

"Now, Dr. Leclerc," said the solicitor for the Treasury, rising, "we understand you are engaged to Miss Rodney, the niece of the deceased."

"Is this necessary?" asked the coroner.

"Yes, sir. I think you will see it is."

"I have no objection to answer the question. I am engaged to Miss Rodney."

"You had arranged to marry her on Thursday last and to leave the country with her immediately?"

"Such was my intention."

"You knew this sum of £1,300 was in the bedroom of Mrs. Davorn?"

"The witness is not bound to answer these questions unless he likes," said the coroner, checking a yawn with his taper fingers.

"I have no objection, sir," said Leclerc. "I was aware the money was in the room."

"You say your interview with the deceased was a stormy one. Did she refuse to give her consent to her niece's marriage with you?"

"Yes."

"Where you in pressing need of money on the night of the 9th of October?"

"I have been in pressing need of money for some time."

"I wish the gentleman who is examining the witnesses on behalf of the Treasury," said the coroner, "would confine himself more closely to the object of the present enquiry, which is to ascertain how Matha Davorn came to her death."

"I am doing my best, sir, I assure you," said the solicitor. Then addressing himself again to Leclerc:—"You left 13 Felspar road on the night of the 9th inst. about a quarter past 11 o'clock. Did any one see you leave the house except Miss Rodney?"

"No one else that I am aware of."

"Mrs. Davorn was in good health when you saw her last?"

"She was greatly excited and was very flushed."

"But as a medical man you would say she was in fairly good health?"

"I should not like to answer as a medical man. I was myself in too excited a condition at the time to pay much attention to Mrs. Davorn's physical condition."

"You say you wandered about the streets for some time. Did you meet any one you recognized during your wanderings? A policeman? Any one?"

"I have no memory of meeting any one whom I recognized. I was too much wrapped up in my own thoughts to trouble about the few people I did chance to meet."

"You were in Felspar road about one o'clock. How do you fix the time?"

"I remember looking at my watch under the gas lamp which stands outside 12."

"Did you remain standing under the gas lamp long?"

"Only a few moments."

"Could you say if the windows were all closed in front at the time you stood there?"

"I should say they were. I glanced at the house. It would have struck me with surprise and alarm if I had noticed an open window. The light from the lamp throws a strong glare on the house."

"You saw nobody in the neighbourhood of Mrs. Davorn's house at one o'clock in the morning?"

"No. My memory is that the road was then perfectly quiet and deserted."

"What, in your opinion, Dr. Leclerc, would be the effects of chloroform administered to a sleeping person?"

The question startled every one in the court who had been following the enquiry attentively. It brought them back quickly to the most interesting point—the discovery as to what had happened to cause Mrs. Davorn's death.

"The effects would vary considerably. Much would depend on the condition of the person to whom the chloroform was administered, and much to his or her general temperament."

"At all events a sponge saturated with chloroform administer to a sleeping person would produce complete insensibility?"

"If the treatment was persisted in for a sufficiently lengthy period—yes."

"And might cause death?"

"Possibly. Either cardiac syncope or apnoea might be produced. The first symptoms, however, would be complete insensibility."

"And, I repeat, death might be the result?"

"Yes."

"Will you tell the jury what, in your opinion, would be, generally speaking, the symptoms and effects of chloroform inhalation by a sleeping person?"

"The first symptom, as I have said, would be complete insensibility. The person to whom the drug was being administered might struggle in his sleep, or might wake and struggle. In the beginning, inhalation of chloroform produces a sense of mental intoxication, consciousness in the case of a person awake and in his ordinary senses remaining."

"But the probability is that if a sponge saturated with chloroform was employed, a sleeping person would never wake?"

"The probability is quite the other way. I have frequently chloroformed patients—though perhaps not in such a rough and ready way as by means of a saturated sponge—and I have never but once had an accident. The exception was an elderly man, who was chloroformed at his own request for an operation. He died of apnoea."

"Would you consider Mrs. Davorn an elderly woman?"

"No."

"You did not examine the deceased after death?"

"No. I understood Dr. Percival had pronounced life to be extinct some time before I had reached the house."

"That is all I have to ask you."

"I beg your pardon," said one of the jurymen as Dr. Leclerc, feeling faint, and sick at heart, was about to retire. "How long would a person—the deceased lady for instance—left to herself after she was chloroformed thoroughly—how long would she take to regain sensibility?"

"It would depend largely on the condition of the person, on her general health, on her temperament. It would be impossible to give any fixed rule."

"Ten minutes or a quarter of an hour might elapse?" said the juryman, feeling secretly proud of his medical knowledge.

"It might."

"Thank you, doctor."

As Leclerc retired, with the intention of seeking out his sweetheart, Inspector Briggs tapped him on the shoulder, and indicated to him that he would be expected to remain in the court until the enquiry was concluded or adjourned.

The jury was unable to see in Leclerc's evidence anything which tended to incriminate him. There had been a certain amount of hesitancy in many of his replies, but that meant little or nothing. During the time that Leclerc was giving his evidence, Inspector Briggs had discovered Goringe, and had been in earnest conversation with him toward the close of Leclerc's examination.

Bernard James Vickery was now standing in front of the coroner. His face was drawn and haggard, his eyes were bloodshot, and his hands trembled violently. He made a strong effort to pull himself together as he was asked his name, and when he had answered the question he folded his arms across his chest, and threw his head back.

"What is your occupation?" asked the coroner.

"An inventor. I have invented several minor mechanical appliances, and am at present engaged in endeavouring to perfect a very important motive power. I think, sir, with your permission, I can shorten the present enquiry considerably by making a statement." He had again lost control of his voice to some extent, and his body trembled as if with ague.

The coroner lifted his head, tapped the side of his pen against his ink-bottle, and stared for a few minutes, without yawning, at the witness.

"If your statement concerns the present enquiry—an enquiry into the manner in which the deceased came by her death—make it by all means."

"Very well, sir," said Vickery, with a quick and violent effort to steady himself. "My statement does concern itself with the manner in which Mrs. Davorn came by her death."

CHAPTER XV.

STATEMENT OF BERNARD VICKERY.

The whole court was electrified by Vickery's words. The man could only mean either that he was a witness of the actual murder or that he was about to confess that he himself was the murderer.

Inspector Briggs wore a puzzled look on his face. Constable Metcalf, who was still in the court, looked as puzzled as his chief. Constable Young's fat face beamed with delight. He, and he only, and from the beginning—to use his own expression—"spotted" the murderer. It was then "the cove with the chemicals"—Bernard James Vickery—who had "done the trick."

All eyes were turned upon the witness, who, now that he had succeeded in screwing his courage to the sticking point, seemed the most unconcerned man in the court.

Inspector Briggs tapped him on the shoulder.

"I have stated that my occupation is that of an inventor. I have for some years past been concerned mainly with an invention which has caused me an immense amount of anxiety."

"I hope," said the coroner, lifting his eyes from his notes, "that we are not going to have a long rambling statement concerning yourself. Recollect, my business here"—he was obliged to punctuate his sentence with a yawn—"my business here is to preside over an enquiry into the manner in which the deceased—Martha Davorn—came by her death."

"I will only occupy your time, sir, and the jury's with what I think does concern the object of the present enquiry. My position is too terrible for me to contemplate any other course."

"Very well," said the coroner, rubbing his yes with his knuckles, and then stretching his elbows out, "I will not interrupt you again unless I find you wandering altogether from the point."

"I feel," said Vickery, "that I must explain my own conduct and my own condition before I get to the worst part of my statement, but I will be as brief as I possibly can. I was, as I have said, engrossed in my discovery, and I knew if I could carry out my experiments I could at once be a rich man—a very rich man. The only difficulty in my way was the want of money. I calculated it would take at least £1,000 to pull me through. I racked my brain for some means of discovering how the necessary money was to be obtained, but I could find no one to help me.

"At the time—I mean during the past month—I learend from Mrs. Davorn that she had a considerable sum of money in the Funded Bank. She did not state what the amount was. She had some idea that I could advise her as to the investing of her money. My first impulse was to put my plans before her, to tell her about my incompleted invention, and to ask her for help, but I felt, on consideration, that it would be hopeless to suggest to the lady anything that would strike her as being so hazardous a way of investing her money. She had a morbid dread of losing everything she possessed, and she was also eager that it should not escape from me that she had consulted me about her savings, or referred in any way to them. My own position at this period was becoming desperate. Everything, or nearly everything, I possessed was sunk in my invention, and without money to complete my experiments I saw ruin staring me in the face.

"I must now inform you," he continued, after a brief pause, "that I have been for many years in the habit of inhaling chloroform. I began the practice for the purpose of relieving an asthmatic attack, and by degrees I have grown somewhat reckless in the use of the drug. It always produces intense and pleasurable excitement at the beginning, and has often, I fancy, provided me with ideas. I mention this only to show that as I was in the habit of using chloroform freely myself it was not unreasonable of me to think I might employ it with a stranger, and not anticipate fatal results.

"On the night of the 9th of October, I went to my room about 10 o'clock. I had no intention of going to bed. I was greatly agitated, and greatly distressed as I reviewed the condition of my finances, and the prospect of almost imminent ruin. As I walked up and down my bedroom I heard the sound of angry voices, and opening my door I was able to hear a good deal of what went on in Mrs. Davorn's room, as her door was slightly open. I quickly learned that she had at that moment in her room a sum of £1,300 in bank notes.

"All at once my brain was fired with a horrible desire to possess myself of this money. I could with its powerful aid quickly complete my invention, and be quickly in a position to restore the money with ample interest."

Bernard Vickery now came to a dead stop. Taking his handkerchief from his pocket, he wiped from his brow great drops of sweat which stood out upon his forehead. There was a dead silence in the court, a silence broken by the witness as he resumed his narrative.

"I returned to my room and sat down to think the matter out. There would, I knew, be the chance, indeed the strong probability, of discovery. Still the horrible prompting to possess myself of this money, which would endow me with great wealth, was dinning itself into my ears. In despair and still uncertain what I would do, I turned to my chloroform, and saturating a sponge I inhaled the fumes freely.

"After a time—I don't know how long, for the chloroform took from me all count of time—I decided upon a plan. I would borrow this money at all hazards. I could easily replace it in a month or two—perhaps in a shorter time. And I would replace it with double or treble the amount and put Mrs. Davorn at ease about her future. I would wait until the house was sound in sleep, and then I could creep down to Mrs. Davorn's room and ascertain if she was asleep. I could then render her completely insensible while I hunted for the money in her room. There would be no danger or risk or danger to the lady. She would never even know anything unusual had happened. When I possessed the money, it would be time enough to think of some plan for diverting suspicion from me.

"That is my whole story."

"I own this was a fearfully weak and reckless scheme, but I have no doubt I was acting partly under the seductive influence of the chloroform. At any rate, I waited until I guessed the house was soundly asleep, and then I crept downstairs to Mrs. Davorn's room and drugged her into insensibility with the sponge I carried with me.

"That is my whole story," he added, in a weak and faltering voice. "I am terribly punished, but I have told the truth."

He tottered as he spoke, and would have fallen but for the protecting arms of Constable Young, who had been keeping his eyes fixed intently on Vickery while he was making the statement to the court.

CHAPTER XVI.

DR. PERCIVAL'S OPINION.

There was a buzz of excitement in the hall after Vickery had made his startling confession. The coroner did not show any striking symptoms of ennui as he busied himself with his notes, and the jury felt their task was about to prove a much more simple one than they at first anticipated.

It was with difficulty Constable Young could restrain his feelings. He was, indeed, in his own humble opinion, the man of the hour. His conical head seemed to widen at the base, and to stretch itself higher, up at the apex as he succeeded in propping up the tottering witness

Bernard Vickery recovered slowly. Looking as pale and nerveless as a ghost, he sipped some water from a glass which Constable Metcalf had obtained for him; then he stood up in his former place, facing the coroner.

Inspector Briggs, who had just returned from a brief interview behind the pillar with Detective Goringe, now addressed the coroner.

"With your permission, sir," said he, "I should like to ask the witness some questions."

"Certainly, inspector," said the coroner, throwing himself back in his chair, stretching his legs, and giving way to a yawn, which was only a feeble echo of his earlier gaping.

"You say you drugged the deceased," said Inspector Briggs. "Did you also take the money in the room—£1,300?"

"The witness is not bound to answer that question," said the coroner.

"I have no desire to hide anything, sir," said Vickery, in a weary tone. "I meant to convey that I did take the money. At least, I believe I took it."

"You believe you did," said the inspector. "What do you mean by that?"

"I say I believe that I took the money, but after I got back to my bedroom I must have fallen into a fit or a trance. That is the only suggestion I can offer. I was fearfully excited, and whatever happened I cannot tell what has become of the money. I could find no traces of it next morning. When I was aroused by the police knocking at my bedroom door I fancied at first that everything which had occurred after I had inhaled the chloroform the previous night—"

"You mean after you had learned that the money was in the deceased's room?" asked the coroner, interrupting the witness.

"Yes, sir. I fancied, as I say, that everything which followed must have been only a fevered dream. But I soon learned how real it was. And what a terrible reality!"

"You mean to assert, I take it," said the coroner, "that up to the present moment you do not know what has become of the money belonging to the deceased, Mrs. Davorn?"

"I do not, sir. I was more like a man in a trance that night than one in his waking senses."

"Are you aware that you were locked into your room some time during the night?" asked Inspector Briggs, returning to the attack.

"I have heard so. I was not aware of it until I was informed of the fact by the policeman who roused me."

"How do you account for your getting out of your room if the door was locked? Do you mean to suggest that you were locked in after you had returned with the money to your room?"

"I suppose that must be so," answered Vickery, in a bewildered way. "How can I tell?"

"You cannot account for anything which happened after you got back to your room that night?"

"I cannot."

"Are you aware that a sponge which had been recently saturated with chloroform was found by the bedside of the deceased?"

"I have heard so."

"Are you in the habit of using a sponge when inhaling chloroform?"

"Yes."

"And you put chloroform on a sponge on the night of the 9th of October, and inhaled the vapour shortly after you heard voices in dispute in Mrs. Davorn's room?"

"Yes."

"Would you recognize that sponge, do you think?"

"I fancy I should."

"Is this it?" asked the inspector, producing the sponge which Dr. Percival had picked up.

"Yes. I should say that is my sponge," stammered Vickery.

"I think, sir," said the foreman of the jury, addressing the coroner, "that we must visit the house and carefully examine those doors and the rooms in which the two gentlemen and the deceased slept."

"I think it will be necessary," said the coroner. "And it might be a good time for you to visit 13 Felspar road during luncheon hour. Inspector Briggs can take you into safe custody. Probably Dr. Percival will be here after luncheon. His evidence will, of course, be of importance. I will now adjourn the court until 3 o'clock," said the coroner, standing up and stretching his arms, as if he were suffering from some form of cramp. "That will give you ample time, gentlemen, to examine the premises at 13 Felspar road."

Every one in the court was astounded at the unexpected turn events had taken—every one but Constable Young, whose head seemed to swell with conscious pride. What had promised to be a mystery was a mystery no longer. Vickery had robbed and murdered Mrs. Davorn. The murder may have been unintentional, but it was murder all the same.

The only element of mystery now remaining was: What had become of the money—the 13 hundred-pound notes? The coroner's enquiry could scarcely be expected to concern itself with this problem, but no doubt the police would soon be able to make all things clear.

Maurice Leclerc was apparently the most astonished man in the court. He had listened with rapt attention to Vickery's confession—a confession, he felt, which relieved him from all further suspicion. When Vickery had finished his statement, Leclerc, an intolerable burden lifted from his shoulders, turned to Inspector Briggs, who was standing hard by, and enquired if Miss Rodney was still in the building. The inspector in a whisper directed the young doctor to the room where he would find her.

Ethel had no suspicion whatever that Vickery was the guilty person. She had always regarded him as a quiet, gentle man. That he should have become a thief was hard enough to believe, but it was incredible that he should have run the risk of murdering her aunt.

Detective Goringe was one of the first to leave the court after the coroner stood up. His countenance afforded no index as to the impression made upon him by the unexpected confession of Bernard James Vickery.

The jury, in charge of Inspector Briggs and the coroner's officer, proceeded to Felspar road. The foreman, who was much perplexed, walked alongside the inspector and endeavoured to elicit from him his views on the whole case, but Briggs was wisely silent, and offered no assistance to the inquisitive foreman.

When 13 was reached, the jurymen first inspected it from the outside, to the intense delight of a throng of noisy urchins. Some of them—those who did not believe Vickery's story was quite a correct statement of facts—examined the forecourt for footmarks or other evidences of a midnight incursion. A few of them who could not relieve themselves of a suspicion concerning Steinworth carefully examined the window of the front parlour, and had a good look from the outside at the window of Steinworth's room, but they derived little benefit from their inspection, and at length felt obliged to ask themselves the obvious question: What motive, other than the pricking of his conscience, could any sane man have in fixing a halter round his neck?

When the jury got inside the house, Inspector Briggs gave them a short lecture on the parlour window, explaining briefly Detective Goringe's views as to the marks on the sashes of the window. Then the room where Mrs. Davorn had met her death was explored, and then the landing on which Steinworth's and Vickery's doors opened.

Cairo Street Warnings.

In oriental countries the recklessness of drivers of vehicles and their disregard for foot passengers are very marked, but in Cairo they have a series of curious cries with which they warn a footman. They specify the particular part of his anatomy which is in danger, as thus: "Look out for thy left shin, O uncle." "Boy, have a care for the little toe on thy right foot." "O blind beggar, look out for thy staff." And the blind beggar, feeling his way with the staff in his right hand, at once obediently turns to the left. "O Frankish woman, look out for thy left foot." "O burden bearer, thy load is in danger." "O water carrier, look out for the tail end of thy pigskin water bottle."

The Old Jewish Wedding Ring.

The old time Jewish wedding ring was quite a ponderous affair of filigree gold, enameled in colors. A dome or temple in miniature, which rose from the middle of the hoop, was a favorite device. Sometimes the hoop was about three-quarters of an inch wide and had raised edges.

One ring of this kind is described by an authority as having five elevations on the upper part, the center a hexagonal tower, with penthouse roof sloping down to the hoop, the gables and sides pierced with fourteen holes, or windows, and the roof scored to imitate tiles. On either side of this was a smaller tower without windows. No other ring could find room on a woman's finger besides this.

HER REASONING.

Oh, very sweet my lady looked
In her new winter hat.
Yet as I gazed, surprised, she said,
"What are you staring at?"
"Two pheasants' breasts, a head, four wings,
A waving, long aigret.
Oh, lady dear, your fall from grace
I notice with regret.
I thought you'd joined the Audubon
And now no birds would wear.
Alas, that I should see this day
And all those feathers there!"

She smiled. "A secret I'll confess.
No fall from grace is here,
But praiseworthy economy,
Since stylish hats are dear,
I've hunted all my boxes through
And brought these things to light
Which I had bought long years ago
When it was thought all right,
And since they're just the style, why should
These plumes not grace my head?
For now, in any case, these birds
Of old age would be dead!"

Walpole on Balloons.

Some of Horace Walpole's ironic speculations on the future of the balloon have been recently reprinted. Said the satirist:

"I supposed our seaports to become deserted villages and Salisbury plain, Newmarket heath and all downs (but the Downs) arising into dockyards for aerial vessels. The ship news then would run thus: The good balloon Daedalus, Captain Wingate, will fly in a few days for China. He will stop at the Monument to take in passengers. Foundered in a hurricane, the Bird of Paradise, from Mount Ararat. The Bubble, Sheldon, took fire and was burned to her gallery, and the Phenix is to be cut down to a second rate. There will be fights in the air with wind guns and bows and arrows.'"

JACK LONDON'S ARREST.

The Well Known Writer Guilty of a Grave Offence in Japan.

Jack London, a well known writer, who went recently to Japan for the purpose of reporting events in connection with the threatened hostilities between that country and Russia in the interests of the New York Journal, has been arrested and imprisoned at Shimonoseki, according to a dispatch from Tokio. He is charged with photographing Japanese fortifications shortly after his arrival at Shimonoseki, an important strategical point commanding the entrance to the Korean strait. London committed the gravest offence he could have been guilty of, as the Japanese have been particularly careful to safeguard the secrets of their coast fortifications.

THE EARTH SHOCK.

Severe Earthquakes in Gulf of Paria and Orinocco District.

A strong earthquake was felt in Venezuela last week. It was especially severe in the Gulf of Paria and in the Orinoco district, and it was accompanied by a loud noise resembling thunder. It was felt at Maturin, Carupoan, Rio Caribea, Cuidad Bolivar and San Felix. It is reported that at the mouth of the Orinoco river the water suddenly rose three feet.

An Atlantic Storm.

After battling fourteen days with terrific gales and stormy seas, the Allan liner Ptetorian, with the Canadian mails, arrived at Halifax five days overdue.

Captain Johnson reports the passage as the worst in his experience of 35 years on the Atlantic. When 1,100 miles out from the Irish coast the Pretorian ran into a hurricane, during which the steamer was tossed about so badly that her machinery broke down. It took the engineers ten hours to make the repairs, and all that time the steamer was driven violently by furious gales and tossed in rough, mountainous seas. The waves came smashing down the decks in tons, carrying away skylights and doing minor damages.

The passengers were greatly alarmed, and only the coolness of the officers prevented a panic. On the 27th the steamer was able to make only 82 miles, owing to the terrific gales, which continued almost unabated until the Nova Scotia coast was reached. On February 2nd another hurricane was encountered off Sable Island during which the steamer was time and again lifted almost out of the seething waters, only to be thrown in an opposite position. The passengers had a most thrilling experience, but were loud in praise of the seamanship displayed under such trying conditions. The Pretorian brought 250 passengers, who presented a congratulatory address to the captain on arrival in port.

Dismissals From War Office.

In pursuance of the Imperial army reforms all the heads of departments of the war office have received letters of dismissal and been notified they would be employed elsewhere. Lord Roberts, commander-in-chief of the forces; Lieut.-General Lord Grenfell, commanding the fourth army corps; Lieut.-General Sir John French, commanding the first army corps; and Sir William Butler, commanding the Western district, have been invited to join the new army council.

A terrible conflagration has been raging in Baltimore. It is estimated that damage to the extent of $50,000 has been done. The city is still on fire.

BALTIMORE BURNING.

Over $50,000,000 Worth of Property Destroyed—6,000 Families Burned out.

A dispatch from Baltimore, Maryland, dated Februaty 8th, says:—Fanned by a high wind that was near a gale, a fierce fire that raged all of yesterday and last night and is still burning, devastated this city. Starting with a series of explosions at 11 o'clock this forenoon, when thousands were attending church, the flames spread rapidly and within three hours sweot the entire wholesale district. At 8 p.m. eight firemen have been killed. The property loss is estimated to be at least $50,000. Twenty square blocks of buildings in the heart of the city have been destroyed. Scores have been injured. Several hospitals in the heart of Baltimore have been so seriously affected—two being burned—that the supply of ambulance wagons has not not only been used to transport the fire victims to outlying sanitariums, but were employed in transferring the sick from hospital to hospital. All the telegraph wires in the city are now down. Every newspaper plant in the city, with the possible exception of the Sun, has been destroyed. Several of the largest banks containing funds which have been estimated at $1,000,000, are in ruins. No one knows if the cash still in the red-hot vaults is still redeemable or not. The people are in the streets. Woe, distress, a feeling of dreadful uncertainty, prevails throughout the whole city. Detachments of the Fourth and Fifth regiments, Maryland National Guard, have been called out by the governor. They are now patrolling the streets bounding the fire-stricken section. This was rendered necessary by the enormity of the disaster, the suddenness and unexpectedness of the blow. The police and firemen worked like heroes for twelve hours. Scores had to report back to superior officers out of sheer weariness, and popular clamor for military protection ensued.

While no lives were lost in the terrible conflagration, the monetary loss will probably reach $200,000,000. Acres of the most valuable property in the wholesale dry goods, produce, lumber, shipping, railroad and financial districts have been destroyed.

FOR THE NERVES.

Research Workers in a Chicago Laboratory Make a Discovery.

The capillary electrometre, a new instrument delicate enough to register the minute discharges of electricity in nerves and muscles, has been invented by research workers in the physiological laboratory at the university of Chicago. The invention will greatly aid the cure af lockjaw, they hope, and be of great use in nervous diseases. A fine glass tube with a hole in it no larger than a capillary gland on the back of a human hand is the mechanism of the instrument. The tube at one end contains mercury, which penetrates the small extremities of the tube. The tube rests in a cup of acid, and the two are joined by platinum wire. All life action is chemical and electrical, the inventors believe, and by the action of the electricity discharged from a moving muscle on the mercury in the tube, the amount of energy expended may be gauged.

Poisoned Candy by Mail.

A package of poisoned candy was received through the mail by a girl named Annie McDonald, who lives in Erie township, N.D. The candy was put up in a neat and attractive package, and the address was printed in a good hand, with pen and ink. The package was gathered up on rural free delivery route No. 1 at Wheatland, and for this reason there was no post-mark on the package, so that it will be hard to trace to the sender. Several persons who partook of the stuff are quite ill, but are said to be out of danger.

A Logging Accident.

A dispatch from Crookston, Minn., says: One of the most distressing accidents which has happened in the logging camps occurred at Noonan's camp near Solway, when a bank of logs at the siding gave way and one man was crushed to death beneath tons of heavy timbers and another escaped serious injury only by one of those miracles that seems unaccountable. The name of the dead man can not be learned. He had been employed at the camp for about three weeks and was a stranger in that vicinity. He was about forty years of age.

A Valuable Discovery.

The management of the Udizi gallery at Florence, Italy, has discovered eight cartoons which are studies and sketches by Michael Angelo. The studies are of two nude figures supposed to have been intended for two of the twelve apostles he wished to paint in the Sistine chapel, and two groups of figures used in his "Deluge," in the same chapel. There are also architectural sketches.

TRIBUNE BLOCK FIRE.

About $30,000 Worth of Property Destroyed.

Fire broke out in the Tribune building, Winnipeg, in a mysterious manner on the night of February 7th, and during its progress, together with the water used to extinguish it, did damage to the extent of about $30,000. The fire was first noticed by H. Ferguson, news editor, and H. H. Hueston, sporting editor, who with several others were at work in the Tribune editorial rooms. Hueston telephoned an alarm, and when the brigade arrived large volumes of smoke were pouring from the upper portions of the building, while at the rear of Richardson & Bishop's wholesale store there were two windows full of flames.

It is not known how or where the fire actually started, but from the look of the place it evidently originated over the heating apparatus of the Tribube or of Richardson & Bishop's store. The blaze worked its way up to the third story and at one place came through the roof.

The Tribune Publishing Co. owned the building, and by damage to it as well as to their plant by fire and water, they will lose about $10,000, most of which is covered by insurance.

Richardson & Bishop had a $20,000 stock of stationery and will lose about $10,000, which is covered by insurance.

Dr. JF R. Davidson occupied rooms in the building, but saved all his surgical instruments, office furnishings and other property.

The C. H. Hubbard Co.'s dental depot, managed by W. S. Rattray, carried a very heavy stock of dentists' supqlies, valued at about $30,000. Water got on a portion of it, while the ceiling fell in, doing other damage. The total loss to the firm will be about $3,000, which is covered by insurance.

Alsip Bros., contractors; Davidson Bros., contractors; and J. M. Chisholm, lumber merchant, all occupied one large office, which escaped damage entirely.

Frank Morrison & Son's printing establishment was badly flooded with water, and a loss of about $1,000 was estimated.

The office of Waghorn's Guide and Connery & Richardson, real estate, also escaped injury.

J. Stovel, manufacturers' agent, will lose about $1,000 through damage to cloths and samples.

R. M. Pierce, fur buyer, was located at the front of the building, and he lost nothing.

The business office and press room of the Tribune were both badly flooded with water, and the paper will be put to great inconvenience if not actual loss through this.

The firemen were handicapped by the bitter cold, but worked bravely in the dense smoke, while covered with ice from head to foot.

BATTLESHIP EXPLOSION.

Smokeless Powder Too Much For Uncle Sam's Old Guns.

The U. S. battleship Iowa, while testing her batteries on her way down the coast, blew off the muzzles of both 8-inch guns in her forward starboard turret. A flying fragment smashed one of the ship's whaleboats and both guns are fractured and the barrels are badly swollen. None of the crew was injured, and no damage outside that given was sustained by the vessel. This second explosion on the Iowa within less than a year has cast a gloom over the officials of the United States navy department. The cause of the explosion off Panama last year, in which there was a considerable loss of life and damage done to the ship, remains a mystery. The alarming feature of these accidents is the apprehension growing in naval circles that the older guns of the navy are not strong enough to permit the use of smokeless powder in them. It is declared that none of the guns on the Iowa had been fired much over 100 times.

JAPS WANT STEAMERS.

Rumor That Two C. P. R. Steamers Have Been Sold.

It is rumored at Vancouver, on apparently good authority, that the C.P.R. has sold or chartered the two steamers Tartar and Athenian to the Japanese government. The steamers have been engaged in the Oriental service for the past two years, forming an auxiliary service to that of the Empress line. For two years prior to being put in commission between Vancouver and Hong Kong, the two steamers were under charter to the U.S. government in the service to the Philippines, being released when the islands were declared pacified.

MUST FURNISH GRUB.

Ontario Hotels Must Keep Dining Rooms Open all Day.

Chief Officer Saunders, of the Ontario license department, has written the Commercial Travellers' Association, enclosing a statement of Inspector Choppin, of Mitchell, who investigated the charge laid by the London travellers who alleged that after being stranded in the snow for twenty-six hours and walking five or six miles, their party of ten, including a woman, was denied breakfast at St. Mary's. The letters from Whelihan Bros., proprietors of the Windsor, and G. MacLean, of the Grand Central hotel, St. Mary's, say that the travellers came in and asked for breakfast after the usual hour, 10.30 a.m., and were told they could get their breakfast at dinner time. The proprietor of the Windsor alleges that R. Lind, one of the party, used improper language, and did not relate the privation of the party.

The Travellers' Association has been informed that if the case is to be pushed the parties interested must go before the magistrate at St. Mary's or the case must drop. The hotelkeepers throughout the province will be instructed that dining rooms must be kept open all day, and food served whenever called for.

CHINESE CASE.

Sing Tuck and Thirty Companions to be Tried Separately.

The United States circuit court of appeals has rendered a decision in case of Sing Tuck and his thirty companions, detained by immigration authorities at Malone, N.Y., and ordered deported by the circuit court of the northern district of New York. The decision reverses the finding of the lower court, and directs that as the thirty-one cases were tried together, the issues in each individual case be tried separately.

The question raised on appeal was whether or not Chinese seeking to enter the United States on the ground of having been born in that country, were entitled to a hearing in a court upon the question of their citizenship. The contention of the government was that the executive officers operating under the Chinese exclusion laws had final jurisdiction in such cases.

Sing Tuck and his companions landed at Vancouver, B.C., from Hong Kong, and were transported to Malone, N.Y., where they were turned over to the immigration authorities. The members of the party claimed to have been born in the United States, but all were ordered deported.

A ROYAL WEDDING.

Great Preparations at Windsor Castle for Marriage of Princess Alice.

The great preparations which are being made at Windsor for celebrating in truly royal style the wedding of Princess Alice of Albany and Prince Alexander of Teck are sufficient to show how strong is King Edward's attachment to the young people. The king is a consummate master of ceremonies, and nothing suits him better than to have a hand in supervising the arrangements for such affairs.

Each day brings additions to the list of royal personages who will attend the wedding. Among them are the queen dowager of the Netherlands, the king and queen of Wurtemberg, the prince and princess of Wied, Prince and Princess Frederick Charles of Hesse-Cassel, Prince and Princess Charles of Sweden, and the hereditary grand duke and duchess of Luxemburg. The bridesmaids are to be the daughters of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Duke and Duchess of Fife, and Princess Victoria of Wales.

TOUCHED HIS HEART.

An Assiniboia Farmer Offers to Marry a Hard-up New York Girl.

Touched by the devotion of Miss Florence Pilgram, who while incarcerated in the Tombs prison in New York for obtaining goods in a department and using the name of a credit customer when she failed to eke out a living, and who passed some of her prison fare through the bars to her mother, John Carss, a farmer residing in the district of Assiniboia, N.W.T., has written Justice McMahon an offer to marry the girl. When the justice heard the nitiful story of Miss Pilgram he suspended the sentence in her case, and she has since secured a position and is doing well. The young farmer says he has a good home and is willing to provide for both girl and mother, adding that in his part of the country one is not driven to crime to get food. Justice McMahon handed the letter to the girl to let her decide. The girl's devotion to her mother was made known through Mabel Parker, who was convicted of forgery and was a fellow prisoner in the Tombs.

A Paris dispatch says: M. Bertillon has devised a new method for the better identification of unknown bodies taken to the morgue. The fact that photograbhs of dead persons do not always portray those persons as they appeared when alive created difficulties. This M. Bertillon overcomes by the injection of glycerine into the eyes of the body, whereupon the lids open and the eyes become lifelike, the lips redden and the whole face seems to revive, making it possible to take a portrait resembling the person before death.

WAR AT LAST.

Nothing Now to do but Fight—Both Sides Ready.

The Seoul-Fusan railroad has been occupied by Japanese troops, according to a dispatch from Vladivostock, which adds that the Japanese have taken field guns to Seoul for the protection of their legation, and that they are building barracks for the accommodation of cavalry.

Important military and naval movements have been effected at Port Arthur in response to the Japanese war measures. The Russian squadron, heretofore inside the harbor, have joined the outside fleet.

Simultaneously the third brigade of Siberian Rifles and two batteries of artillery started for an unannounced destination, from Liao-Yang, south of Mukden. Altogether about 9,000 troops have departed, leaving 10,000 men at Port Arthur, exclusive of the troops manning the fortifications. The arrivals of Japanese coal have been stopped. In consequence of the military authorities monopolizing the use of the railroad, the latter has declined to transport any more commercial freight. The telegraph company also declines to accept any more press or private messages, so they will have to be routed via Che-Foo. Forty-eight hours' quarantine has been declared against Che-Foo on account of small-pox. The authorities declare the military and naval dispositions should be regarded as precautionary, not as offensive. Port Arthur is quiet.

The State department at Washington announces the receipt of information that Japan has called its subjects from the Yalu districts in Corea into Seoul.

A dispatch from Tokio says that the newspapers there publish telegrams saying that 200,000 Russian troops have been concentrated in the Yalu valley, with the probable intention of seizing North Corea. It is added that hope of maintaining peace has been abandoned.

A Russian correspondent of the Associated Press at Port Arthur telegraphs to St. Petersburg as follows: All the ships of the Russian Pacific squadron, which have been held in reserve, are now in full commission. The regiments of the Third East Siberian Rifle Brigade, which recently left Port Arthur, are taking temporary stations along the Chinese railroad. The Port Arthur garrison has been strengthened by the arrival there of the Seventh Brigade of conscripts, who have recently been going through a short course of training. Stores of provisions and coal are being accumulated, and all the necessary military works are being actively pushed forward. Both the army and navy are in excellent condition. Everything is ready for an emergency, but all are patiently awaiting the outcome of the negotiations. The Russian population is tranquil. Very few Russians are leaving, but many Japanese merchants are selling out and going home. Those remaining here feel an entire confidence in the authorities. The announcement from Vladivostock says that over a thousand Japanese girls have embarked for Japan, and that three steamers are on the point of sailing for Japan with Japanese families.

NATIONAL MUSEUM.

Length of New Structure to be Built at Ottawa is 380 Feet.

The plans for the new National Museum at Ottawa have been prepared and approved by the government. It will be built of Canadian stone. The total length of the building is to be 380 feet; the height from the ground to the top will be 96 feet, and to the top of the tower 200 feet. The main entrance is in the front elevation, entering a hall 50 feet square and open from the ground floor level to the roof with galleries around at the various floor levels. There are museum rooms 105 feet by 50. In the rear of the main hall there is an auditorium 70 by 5 feet. There is a basement, ground, first, second and third story, on the first floor the rooms are the same size as on the ground floor. The second and third floors have been arranged for the staffs of the superintendent of mines and the director of the geological branch. The ground and first floors are set apart solely for museum purposes; one of the wings of the building is set apart for the department of marine and fisheries and a national art gallery. The building is so arranged that it can be built without any internal partitions. It is of Gothic style, and the tower takes the shape of a crown.

THE MILITIA COMPANY.

Morrissey Despatch.—"Fernie has taken its cue from Morrissey Mines. Last week a meeting was held in that town for the purpose of considering the formation of a rifle corps. Seventy-one names have been enrolled, and the matter has been taken up vigorously."

While the independent action of the Morrissey people in taking the initiative in the formation of a rifle association is commendable and worthy of all emulation it must be denied that the cue for the subsequent action at Fernie wa due to the cause above ascribed. The idea of forming an active militia company at Fernie is not of such recent birth. It is many months since Col. Cartwright, of Ottawa, first suggested the formation of a rifle association at Fernie to Mr. McEvoy. The suggestion was taken up by other officers of the militia, and since then it has developed until the higher ambitions of a company, or even two companies, of active militia have taken definite form. The present outcome is the result of months of careful consideration by those who have the movement in hand.

The advantages possessed by a company of militia over a rifle association, as is mooted for Morrissey, are many. Beyond the supply of rifles and ammunition, such as is also given to a militia company, a rifle association receives only nominal assistance from the government in the shape of a maintenance fund which amounts to between forty and one hundred dollars per year. On the other hand a company of say 60 men, receives in pay alone a sum amounting to between seven and eight hundred dollars per year. The government builds a rifle range and drill hall for the use of a company and provides suitable uniforms. These necessities must be provided by a rifle association out of its maintenance fund, which is entirely inadequate. So that where the size of a town warrants the formation of a company it would seem impolitic to favor a rifle association.

The matter of the Fernie company has been placed before the proper authorities at Ottawa and a favorable reply promising their co-operation, is expected shortly. Since last reported in these columns two weeks ago little canvassing for new members has been done. The list now contains 83 names and there is no doubt that 125 members, sufficient for two companies, can be secured.

THE WAR.

The severe censorship placed on the press dispatches by both Russian and Japanese authorities prevents anything but meagre guesses to get abroad as to intended moves of their respective forces.

Conflicting reports are yet coming in as to the extent of the damage done by the Japanese in the first naval encounters but all agree that the Russian naval force in eastern waters has been badly crippled. Except for the loss of some unimportant merchant vessels Japan has apparently come through so far unhurt.

Both countries are now hurrying the mobilization of their land forces. Korea and Southern Manchuria will evidently be the scene of deadly conflict. Already Japan is said to have a quarter of a million of soldiers landed in Korea prepared to meet the Russian forces which are now massing at Port Arthur with astonishing promptness. The Russian government is not looking for temporary victory to wipe out the sting of their naval defeat but they are laying far-reaching plans for a long and bitter contest.

In the meantime Great Britian and other interested countries, and what country is not interested where the integrity of the Chinese Empire is concerned?—are openly showing their sympathies in a manner which may lead to a general mix-up. So long as the war is confined to the two countries now engaged Canada will benefit in a commercial way. The food supplies of Canada, and particularly the wheat from Manitoba will be more and more in demand as the supply and the productive forces decrease in those countries now engaged in the stern realities of war.

A letter in the Cranbrook Herald of last week contains some pertinent enquiries re the Flathead reserve. After producing a copy of Premier McBride's letter to G. Fraser, M. P. P. of Greenwood, on the government's policy it goes on to say. "It will be seen from this that any number of persons may receive licenses to prospect the same piece of ground, and that any conflict arising between them will be subject to suit at law. There are thousands of claims for license already made upon the reserve, and it is known that they are several deep upon the same ground. The law provides that a claim shall be legal and valid before a license is issued. Some of these claims were staked 12 and 15 years ago, and others from time to time since then. As will be seen by the premier's letter all these will receive licenses provided they can show legal and valid locations, according to their priority. To illustrate: "A" will receive the first license, "B" the second, "C" the third, and so on, providing each can show that he has a valid and legal location. One hundred dollars is the license fee each year from each license holder. Each holder of a license would have the same legal right upon the ground and to its possession, there being nothing in the "Coal Act" that provides for second or third licenses or their relative rights. A license is the preliminary to a title, each license being issued upon proof that the claim was legal and valid, each would be of equal force and right. The government having provided this system of disposing of of the coal lands, would be responsible for all licenses issued to prospectors acting in good faith and without knowledge of others having received licenses to prospect the same ground. It would appear from this view of the case, and a knowledge of conditions there, and people's intentions, that very serious complications are likely to arise, both between the various claimants and the government. If the government continues issuing licenses indefinitely, and receiving $100 per year from any number of people for the same ground, and conveying to each equal rights, it, as well as the people, will have something to do to extricate itself from the consequences."

Tendency of the Times.

The tendency of medical science is toward preventive measures. The best thought of the world is being given to the subject. It is easier and better to prevent than to cure. It has been fully demonstrated that pneumonia, one of the most dangerous diseases that men have to contend with, can be prevented by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Pneumonia always results from a cold or an attack of influenza (grip), and it has been observed that this remedy counteracts any tendency of these diseases toward pneumonia. This has been fully proven in many thousands of cases in which this remedy has been used during the great prevalence of colds and grip in recent years, and can be relied upon with implicit confidence. Pneumonia often results from a slight cold when no danger is apprehended until it is suddenly discovered that there is fever and difficulty in breathing and pains in the chest, then it is announced that the patient has pneumonia. Be on the safe side and take Chamberlains Cough Remedy as soon as the cold is contracted. It always cures. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Wm. Eschwig bought a lot and a small fraction of another recently in West Fernie from L. M. Proctor. The property is on the river bank just north of J. Turner's and the price was in the neighborhood of $400. Mr. Eschwig intends to use this as a site for a new brewery.

A. Joyce is taking around two petitions for the Board of Trade. Both are to be sent to the Government. One is to urge the immediate construction of a wagon road from Fernie into the Flathead and the other is to secure a grant of $250.00 for the Fire Protection fund. It is needless to state that both are receiving every eligible signature.

Notwithstanding the heavy drawbacks from snow and ice the output so far for this month is slightly above that for the same time last month and with fair conditions for the remaining 10 days it should prove a record month.

C. P. Walker's theatrical company are on their return trip and they expect to be in Fernie on March 5th when they will present their other first class comedy "Why Smith Left Home." Judging by press remarks this laughable play is fully as good as "What Happened to Jones."

A. H. Cree who attended the Conservative Convention at Victoria returned on Monday evening. Mr. Cree spent some time before and after the convention visiting friends in the coast cities and he thoroughly enjoyed himself. The convention was a marked success. It passed off without the slightest hitch and the best of feeling prevailed throughout. Mr. Cree visited the legislature frequently. He states that Mr. Ross is one of the best speakers in the house and that he has created a favorable impression among his fellow-legislators.

Constable Hoskins has received word from Victoria that he has been transferred to Cranbrook where he will assist Constable Morris in maintaining the peace. The Government shows very little consideration for personal convenience in these matters, and shifts its officers at will without reckoning the cost to the latter, who are not so liberally paid that they can well afford needless expenditure in moving their homes from one place to another. Mr. Hoskins has recently purchased a house and lot in Fernie and he has already had two moves within the past three months. He contemplates leaving for Cranbrook with Mrs. Hoskins in about two weeks time.

JAPS ARE VICTORS

Three Naval Engagements Won by the Japanese, Have Shown Their Superiority Over Russians.

The First 24 Hours of the War, Russia's Losses, Eleven Warships Placed out of Action, while the Japanese Losses were Comparatively Small.

FIGHT AT PORT ARTHUR.

In a dispatch from Chefoo dated February 9, the correspondent of the Daily Express says: The Japanese have dealt the Russians a crushing blow at Port Arthur. An advance squadron of the Japanese fleet, under command of Vice-Admiral Togo, and comprising 16 battleships and cruisers, with a numerous torpedo fleet, left the main fleet off Shan Tung Penninsula on Sunday immediately that the news of diplomatic rupture became known. This information was conveyed to the Japanese admiral by a destroyer dispatched from Tsushima Saturday morning.

The Japanese scouting cruisers had given accurate information of the precarious situation of the Russian fleet outside Port Arthur. The squadron steamed slowly in battle formation on Sunday midday towards its goal, and came within sight of Port Arthur under cover of darkness. It cruised slowly outside without showing lights. The Russians were lying in the roadstead, apparently feeling secure from attack.

Nearly all the Japanese torpedo boats were dispatched on their dangerous and daring task. They rushed full steam on the enemy, who were completely surprised. A great rattle of small arms greeted the invaders, who, however, escaped unharmed, and the Retvizan, the Cesarevitch and the Pallada were almost immediately torpedoed. The Japanese dashed along the line of the Russians, exposed by this time to a terrible fire from machine guns and small arms, from both the ships and the shore.

There was the utmost consternation among the Russians, which probably accounted for the Japanese torpedo boats escaping practically unscathed and rejoining the admiral outside. The admiral's fleet during the attack kept out of range of the Russian searchlights.

Line of battle was then formed and the Japanese fleet moved in within a range of two and one half miles and opened fire on the Russians. The battle is understood to be still raging, and the wildest reports are current. The Chinese population of Coefoo is in a frenzy of excitemetn at the reports that the Japanese, whom they now regard as their friends, scored the first victory.

THE FIGHT AT CHEMULPO.

London, Feb. 10.—Official dispatches from Tokio received by Baron Hayashi say the Japanese admiral on arriving at Chemulpo, Corea, sent in word to the two Russian cruisers giving them a time limit in which to leave. Shortly afterwards the Russians came out and attacked a Japanese torpedo boat, which replied with a torpedo ineffectively. A general exchange of shots then followed. After a hot fire the Russian cruisers returned to Chemulpo and sank at the entrance of the harbor. It is not yet known whether their sinking was due to the Japanese fire or to the Russians' own action, but it is believed to be due to the former. The crews of both the Russian vessels sought refuge on a French warship at Chemulpo. There were no casualties among the Japanese and their vessels sustained no damage.

Tokio, Feb. 10.—A terrible battle lasting four hours took place at Chemulpo, when Japanese transports, under cover of the Japanese fleet, attempted to land troops. Russian cruiser Variag was set on fire and disabled. Russian torpedo gunboat Korietz was sunk. Some of the Variag's crew reached shore but were captured. Japanese ships were but slightly injured.

New York, Feb. 10.—The Chefoo cable of the Times says: It is learned this morning (Wednesday) that two of Japan's cruisers were badly damaged in a second engggement off Port Arthur in which the Russian squadron was defeated.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 10.—Some of the newspapers here print extras claiming a Russian victory at Port Arthur. Three Japanese warships and four torpedo boats are reported to have been serious,y crippled. One report says the battleship Shikishima was sunk. The people are demonstrating, but there is no official confirmation of the report and the announcement is discredited.

FRENCH GARRISON FORTS.

London, Feb. 9.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram company from Tien Tsin says: A French transport with a battalion of troops from Tonquin is hourly expected at Shan Hai Kwan, on the Gulf of Liao Tung, to garrison the forts which are being vacated by the Russians. It is reported that the tricolor of France was hoisted there this morning and that the British officer in charge at Shan Hai Kwan protested against the French occupation. At present there is only a single sentry guarding the flag. The British commander here, Brigadier-General Ventris, and his chief of staff, proceeded to Shan Hai Kwan this morning.

MORE TROOPS FOR COREA.

Tokio, Feb. 10.—Japan is making tremendous preparations to land more troops in Corea. She has already succeeded in landing several thousand soldiers at Chemulpo. Four battalions have been landed at Gensan, one of the treaty ports of Corea, 15 miles north of Seoul. Japan is concentrating her forces at Tsushima island, which is Japan's most advanced base. Russian troops have crossed the Yalu river and are pouring into Corea. Their objective is Seoul. Officials declare this action compelled Japan to initiate hostile measures and make war a terrible actuality.

Official circles in Tokio are convinced that a great battle between Russian and Japanese land forces will occur at an early date in Corean territory.

THE RUSSIAN LOSSES.

A London dispatch says: A summary of the losses sustained by Russia in the first 24 hours of the war with Japan show that eleven Russian warships were placed out of action in one way or another, and that the Japanese did not lose a ship. The losses were as follows:

Battleship Retvizan, torpedoed and beached at Port Arthur.

Battleship Cesarevitch, torpedoed and beached at Port Arthur.

Battleship Poltava, hole below water line, at Port Arthur.

Armored cruiser Boyarin, disabled by Japanese fire at Port Arthur.

Cruiser Pallada, torpedoed at Port Arthur and beached.

Cruiser Novik, hole below water line at Port Arthur.

Cruiser Askold, hole below water line at Port Arthur.

Cruiser Diana, hole below water line at Port Arthur.

First class armored cruiser Variag, destroyed at Chemulpo, Corea.

Torpedo gun vessel Korietz, destroyed at Chemulpo, Corea.

Gunboat Manjois, said to have been seized by the Japanese at Nagasaki, Japan. Another report, however, says the Manjois is at Shanghai.

The Japanese fleet engaged seems to have consisted of two divisions under Admiral Kamimura, on the flagship Idzumo (armored cruiser,) and Vice-Admiral Togi, of the flagship Asahi (battleship.) The Japanese vessels engaged were, apparently, in addition to the Idzumo and Asahi the battleship Fuji, the cruiser Ishima, the battleship Shikishima, the battleship Hatsuse, the armored cruiser Yakumo, the armored cruiser Asama, the armored cruiser Iwate, the cruiser Chitose, the cruiser Kasagi, the cruiser Takasago, and the torpedo gunboat Yoshino.

RUSSIA AROUSED.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 9.—The news that Japan had duplicated her tactics at the opening of the Chino-Japanese war, by a torpedo attack on the Russian ships off Port Arthur, created intense excitement. The bare announcement arrived from Viceroy Alexieff at 8 o'clock this morning and dispelled lingering hopes that war could be averted.

The Czar and his ministers, who were informed immediately, accepted the gage and prepared to face the reality of war. His majesty's manifesto declaring a state of war to exist is expected to be issued to-morrow morning. Feverish activity reigned at all the ministries, and war preparations were pushed in all directions.

The Russian Red Cross Society already has sent 2,000 boxes to the far east, and Sisters of Mercy are leaving. Crowds of volunteers besieged the general staff offices, and the naval reserves have been called out

Ant Robbed by Lizard.

While walking along the road on the outskirts of Bordighera I noticed a strange looking insect moving across it in a peculiar way. On getting nearer I saw that what had attracted my notice was a black ant about an inch long with brown wings dragging a cricket bigger than itself. It held the cricket by the head, and as the ant moved backward it drew the cricket toward it. While doing so it entered the shadow cast by my umbrella and instantly released its hold and got out of the shadow; but, finding there was no danger, it returned and seized its prey again by the head and recommenced its backward movement. A low wall ran alongside the road, and when the ant got within six feet of it a common brown lizard appeared on the top of the wall and evidently soon caught sight of the ant, for it ran quickly down the wall and to within two feet of it, where it crouched for a second or two like a cat ready to spring and then charged the ant, apparently butting the cricket free with its head. Before the ant could regain its hold the lizard seized the cricket in its mouth and darted up the wall in the direction from which it originally appeared on the scene, leaving the ant running round and round, moving its wings in an agitated manner, vainly searching for its lost prey.—Nature.

The Judgment of Hall Caine.

Before the hand of fame dropped her laurels lightly on his brow, to speak poetically, Hall Caine was a publisher's reader and in that capacity held in his hands the fate of many a book. That his good judgment was not altogether infallible is shown by the fact that he read and, so it is said, rejected "The Romance of Two Worlds," which soon afterward was published and became the success of the year.

On one occasion a budding author managed to gain access to his office for the purpose of submitting a book to him.

Hall Caine took the manuscript from the man's hands and glanced over it for perhaps twenty minutes. Then he gave it back, with a few words of suggestion and criticism.

"I do not think, Mr. Caine," said the ambitious writer, "that you should dispose of my ideas in this summary fashion. That book cost me a year's labor."

"Indeed!" said Mr. Caine. "My dear fellow, an impartial judge would give you at least ten!"

The Sensation of Hunger.

The sensation of hunger has not been easy to explain. The new theory of a German physician is that it is due to emptiness of the blood vessels of the stomach, and it is pointed out that hunger is appeased with the rush of blood to the stomach following the taking of food and beginning of digestion. In many anæmic persons who have no appetite when the stomach is empty the blood vessels are really congested instead of being empty. Lack of blood in the stomach in health acts on a special nerve, which is a branch of the same nerve trunk as the nerves of the mouth and tongue. A stimulus applied to the tongue, as by a spice, thus increases appetite, while disease affecting the nerves of the tongue may produce loss of appetite even when the stomach is empty.

Whippers.

In the Press of New Zealand may be read this startling advertisement: "A father desires the services of a trustworthy lady to administer corporal punishment to his three girls. State salary, references and experience."

A year or two ago this Spartan parent's needs were anticipated by the following advertisement in the London Standard: "A clergyman's widow, strict disciplinarian, gives lessons to unruly boys and girls. Advice letter, 5s.; home consultation, 6s. 6d.; corporal punishment, from 8s. 6d. Visits all parts. Terms according to distance. Rods supplied, 1s. 6d. each."

Inviting a Repetition.

One Sunday a teacher was trying to illustrate to her small scholars the lesson, "Return good for evil." To make it practical she said, "Suppose, children, one of your schoolmates should strike you and the next day you should bring him an apple—that would be one way of returning good for evil." To her dismay, one little girl spoke up quickly, "Then he would strike you again to get another apple!"

A Wager Lost.

"She's a treacherous thing," asserted the girl in blue.

"How is that?" asked the girl in gray.

"Why, we fixed it up between us that she was to refuse him if he proposed, and then I made a bet with him that she would."

"Well?"

"Well, she didn't."—Chicago Post.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

REV. DR. TALMAGE PREACHES AN ANNIVERSARY SERMON.

LIGHT UPON HIS CHARACTER

The First Typical American—Growth of a Century—Man Who Comprehended Within Himself Strength and Gentleness, Majesty and Grace—A Lesson in Patience That Is Very Timely.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 7.—At the time when the whole nation is honoring the memory of Lincoln this anniversary sermon sheds a new and interesting light upon the character of the statesman-President. The text is James v., 8, "Be ye also patient."

"What was the most powerful address you ever heard?" I once asked my father in one of our conversations when journeying around the world. "Well," he replied, "I have listened to nearly all the great American orators of my time. I have been personally acquainted with most of them and have spoken from the same platform with many of them. But without any doubt the greatest address I ever heard—if it is to be judged by its electric and overwhelming instantaneous effect—was that delivered by Henry W. Grady of Georgia in 1886 at the annual banquet of the New England Society. I had just finished a speech on 'The Coming American' when Mr. Grady arose. After a few introductory remarks he said: 'My friends, Dr. Talmage has told you that the typical American has got to come. Let me tell you that he has already come. Great types, like valuable plants, are slow to flower and fruit. But from the union of these colonists, Puritans and Cavaliers, from the strengthening of their purposes and the crossing of their blood, slow perfecting, through a century, came the man who stands as the first typical American, the first who comprehended within himself all the strength and gentleness, all the majesty and grace of this republic—Abraham Lincoln.'" These words were quoted almost verbatim from memory.

The tremendous impression produced by Henry Grady's speech was not due to the fact that he was saying something that no other man had said before, but to the fact that, for the first time since the Civil war, the great leaders of the north realized that Lincoln was appreciated and honored as much south of Mason and Dixon's line as he was among the Michigan pines and upon the Illinois prairie.

Since that time I have read almost every biography written about the personality of that man who stands second to only one, if he does not stand side by side with George Washington, in the affections of the American people. I find that Henry Watterson of Kentucky has as deep a reverence for Lincoln as had Charles W. Dana or Nicolay or Joseph Medill or William Herndon or David Davis or Swett or Speed, who knew him by personal contact. Therefore I am sure that on this Sunday preceding the celebration of Lincoln's birthday I shall leave with me the cordial approbation of the south as well as of the north as I draw from his character lessons of inspiration and pay tribute to his memory. At heart he was a true friend of the south, and I believe that his untimely death retarded the consummation of reconstruction at least a quarter of a century.

Most Lincoln eulogists start, as Henry Watterson beautifully expressed it, by looking into a "crystal globe that, slowly turning, tells the story of his life, and they see therein a little heartbroken boy weeping by the outstretched form of a dead mother." But this I do not intend to do. You are already familiar with the facts of that eventful life. In speaking of him to-day I would try to get the keynote of his character and show the predominant quality which made him so great and so useful to the nation. That quality I conceive to be his patience, and I shall recall to your minds the times and the circumstances in which, by the exercise of that quality, he proved the grandeur of his nature. Standing by the grave of this great man, we see the figure of sanctified Patience. We find this figure not cut from stone or cast in iron, but made out of dust which was once living, breathing, throbbing, moving flesh and blood. As the paramount desire of Lincoln's last four years on earth and those tumultuous years which led up to them was to save the Union, I shall try in this brief eulogy to show how, by glorious patience, that great purpose of his life was accomplished.

In the first place, we must start with the well accepted and universally acknowledged fact that Abraham Lincoln was a man of positive characteristics. William Herndon just after Lincoln's nomination wrote to Senator Wilson of Massachusetts that when Lincoln made up his mind to do anything he had "a will of iron." After the assassination in Ford's theatre Senator Wilson wrote a letter to Lincoln's old law partner that he had truly analyzed Lincoln's character in reference to this one characteristic. But, though Lincoln was a positive man and had well settled convictions, he never believed that "two wrongs make one right." In order to accomplish his patriotic purposes he was unwilling to defile the majesty of the law. He was always ready to try to change the law, but never to break it. In his methods and principles he was neither violent nor revolutionary. He was not, as many people supposed in 1860, a wild eyed visionary or a crazed enthusiast who would, to reach a beneficent end, trample on vested rights and interests regardless of justice and equity. He himself was obedient to the laws as well as a faithful executive of the law. He was a respecter of the law in private life as well as a conservative lawmaker in public life.

What was Lincoln's stand when a great abolitionist meeting was held in Springfield some years before the war? There the opponents of slavery proposed by force of arms to defy the public authorities and drive out the slave-holders from the then territory of Kansas. When called upon for a speech Lincoln shocked some of his best friends and, as some thought, then and there signed his own political death warrant. "Let there be peace!" he emphatically said. "Revolutionize through the ballot box. Your attempt, if there be such, to resist the laws of Kansas by force is criminal and wicked, and all your feeble attempts will be follies and end by bringing sorrow on your own heads and ruin on the cause you would freely die to preserve." What said he in his famous speech delivered on July 17, 1858, in answer to one of the charges made against him by Douglas? "Now, as to the Dred Scott decision, for upon that Senator Douglas makes his last point against me. I am opposed to that decision in a certain sense, but not in the sense in which he puts it. I say that in so far as it decided in favor of Dred Scott's master and against Dred Scott and his family I do not propose to disturb or resist the decision. I never have proposed to do any such thing. I think that in respect for judicial authority my humble history would not suffer in comparison with that of Judge Douglas." When some enthusiastic admirers asked him this question: "Has the territory of Kansas a right to come into the Union a slave State if the people wish?" Lincoln said: "Yes. By the national law it has a right which you cannot take away unless by national legislation you change that law."

On the approaching anniversary of this great American's birth let us learn one of the greatest lessons of his life. Even amid the injustices and the weaknesses of the law let us bow before and recognize the majesty of the law. Because in some municipalities the citizens may be terrorized every winter by "hold-up" men who walk around at night shooting down innocent pedestrians in cold blood, that is no reason why, in order to extirpate them, we ourselves should become criminals. Always obey the law. If it be wrong, then make the law right, but never defile the majesty of the law.

Though Abraham Lincoln was a man of positive characteristics, yet he was patient in the fact that he was ready to keep step with the march of the common people. He never for one moment left the path of rectitude and honor. He was not a foolish color bearer, leaving the ranks of his fellow soldiers and plunging far ahead of the lines, thereby courting death and annihilation. As the national standard bearer he was ready, if necessary, to "mark time," so that the common people could catch up with him, that all might advance in line.

All things may be lawful, but all things are not expedient. What did he do after he had delivered his first inaugural address? Did he do anything to antagonize the southern leaders and people, as some rash statesmen would have had him do? No; that was not his way. He had "malice toward none and charity for all." He bided his time, though in every town, village and city he was called a coward. If possible he wanted to win the southern leaders back by love and kindness. He knew that hate and billingsgate and club never won a willing subject. He was patient, very patient. His patience was expressed powerfully in the words he once spoke to Alexander H. Stephens at the memorable conference held at Hampton Roads with the southern commissioners. "Stephens," he said, "let me write 'Union' at the top of that page, and you may write below it whatever else you please."

To placate the southern leaders was one reason for delay. But there was still another reason why he was patient. There were scores and hundreds and thousands of men at the north as well as the south who believed that as the original southern states came into the Union of their own accord they had therefore the right to leave of their own accord. As Lincoln in his quaint language put the "popular sovereignty idea," "They believed that the big kettle of the United States Government could be squeezed into the little kettle of state rights." Horace Greeley believed this; Wendell Phillips believed this; other mighty northern leaders believed this. Had Abraham Lincoln, on the night of March 4, 1861, started the invasion of the south he might have had two wars on his hands. War would have been in the front of him, war in the rear of him. When he entered the White House he had two purposes: First, to do anything and everything that was honorable to save the Union. Secondly, if there was to be a war then let others take the responsibility of striking the first blow.

But if Lincoln was willing to be patient with his northern enemies and with the south how much more was he willing to be patient with his so called friends, upon whose arm he had a right to lean and from whose influence he had a right to expect succor and help? If the armies of Lee were attacking him in the front, the rancorous tongues of some who were his closest advisers were broadcasting their evil murmurs everywhere.

"Well," says some hearer, "why did he allow those men who were nearest to him to criticise him? Why did he not do as one of the Springfield friends suggested, 'kick them out of office?'" That question cannot be answered in a better way than by quoting the words Lincoln spoke when he said, quietly, that it was easy enough to kick a man out but not always so easy to get another man to fill his place and do as well as he did. In those few words we realize the results of Lincoln's patience with those so called friends who kept publicly criticising their chief. He once said to Leonard Swett, "I may not have made as great a president as some other men, but I believe I have kept the discordant elements together as well as any one could." Like Abraham Lincoln, are we as Christians ready to let men criticise us and find fault with us if only we can use them for the cause of Christ, as Lincoln was able to use Stanton and Seward and Simon Cameron and Hooker and McClellan and Thaddeus Stevens and Greeley and Bennett to help save the Union?

As the twilight is the most beautiful part of the day, so we find that the mellowing sunset of Lincoln's life was even more glorious in its golden reflections than when he was accomplishing the great purpose of his life—the preservation of the Union. Like Moses of old, he was able to lead his people through the dark wanderings in the wilderness; but, also, like Moses, he was not to be allowed to plant his foot in the promised land. The Jordan which separated him from his southern people in the reconstructive period was to be a great river whose waters came from the falling tears that millions of eyes shed over his bier and by his coffin lid. In those few days that led up to Appomattox and thereafter we may know what fruit the patience of Lincoln would have borne. His purpose was to bind up the nation's bleeding wounds and make the "boy in gray" and the "boy in blue" clasp hands as brothers.

How, then, did he want to reach out the hand of reconciliation? On Feb. 5, 1865, after the outcome of the war was practically decided, he drafted a bill by which, if Congress consented, $400,000,000 was to be paid on account of the liberation of the slaves. He presented this proposed bill to his Cabinet, and when they unanimously rejected it the president, as Norman Hapgood tells us, "sadly folded it up and laid it away." As soon as Richmond had been evacuated he got on the cars and started south. He went not as a conqueror, but as a messenger of peace. In his plain, simple way he practically said to the old Virginians: "I am your brother. I am your friend. Come, be my brother, and my friend." When that other messenger of peace, Ulysses S. Grant, practically said to the officers and men of the disbanding southern armies alike: "Go home. Take your horses and plow your fields. Go home and be our friends and comrades instead of our foes," what was Lincoln's comment? "Good! Good! All right! Exactly the thing!" Admiral Porter gives these as Lincoln's words, which he heard him repeat a dozen times.

To-day, if I had it in my power, I would start a pilgrimage to the Springfield tomb. I would have the southerner as well as the northerner, easterner and the westerner go there and learn the lesson of gentle and glorious love. "What," some cynic cries, "would you have the southerner go there as to a shrine?" Yes, my brother, I would have the southerner go to Lincoln's tomb and kneel, the same as I would have the northerner go to the sacred tomb of Lexington, Va., and bow reverently before the dust of honored, gentle Robert E. Lee. Both of these men were conquerors. Both have subdued and by their example will yet subdue great hosts whose numbers, in the dim future, will be counted by the millions. Both have won and will win their greatest victories not by the sword, but by love. When the civil war was closing these two great leaders were able to say to each other, "Thou art my brother." Both are enshrined in their nation's love and admiration.

Therefore, fellow countrymen, with the universal affections of the American people, cannot the north come with her sacred dust of Springfield, Ill., and the south come with her sacred dust of Lexington, Va.; then after the north and south with their precious burdens have both met at the national capitol at Washington cannot the two different sections which once stood face to face in battle now stand side by side and bury their two sacred dead in one grave? Then over this one grave, entombing the commingling dust of the two sacred dead, cannot and will not the reconciled north and south chisel one single God given epitaph, such as old Kentucky placed upon her memorial shaft, erected upon the once blood soaked field of Chickamauga to her "boys in gray" and to her "boys in blue:" "As we are united in life and they united in death, let one monument perpetuate their deeds and one people, forgetful of all asperities, forever hold in grateful remembrances all the glories of that terrible conflict which made all men free and retained every star upon the nation's flag."

Abraham Lincoln's parting words to his fellow townsmen when for the last time he left Springfield depot for the national capital were these: "To-day I leave you. I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon Washington. Unless the great God who assisted him shall be with and aid me I must fail, but if the same omniscient mind and Almighty arm that directed and protected him shall guide and support me I shall not fail. I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To him I commend you all. Permit me to ask that with equal sincerity and faith you will invoke his wisdom and guidance for me." This was the keynote of his whole gentle, loving, patient, forgiving life: Trust in God and patient dependence upon the divine will. To Abraham Lincoln's God I commend you. May that God forever guide us all!

Why Buggins Didn't Go Home

"YOU'RE looking bad," said Snuggins.

Buggins certainly did look bad. His eyes had large dark rings under them, his face was pale, and his left cheek was horribly swollen.

"Bad!" he snorted. "So would you look bad if you'd been through what I have."

"What's the trouble?"

"Well, I've had jumping neuralgia since 2 o'clock this morning, if that's what you want to know. But that's not the trouble. The trouble is that I've been walking about the streets with it since daylight."

"But the streets are no place for you," protested Snuggins, "if you have neuralgia. You ought to stay home."

"That's all you know about it," snarled Buggins. "Home's no place for me when I'm sick."

"Why, your wife used to be a trained nurse."

"Exactly. She can give me the best attention—from a medical standpoint. She knows just what ought to be done and does it. But there the matter ends. Sympathy's what I want, and that she won't give to any sick man. She says she wouldn't have been a good nurse if she hadn't got rid of her sympathy in the first year of her training. She is always well herself and can't appreciate what pain is. Go home? Not much!"—Philadelphia Press.

A Secret.

"Won't you tell me whose portrait you wear in that locket?"

"No, indeed. I'm afraid it would make you vain."—New York American.

What One Boy Knew.

Mr. Coward, the amiable British giant of the Mosely education commission, had this to tell of his experiences to a party of friends he was entertaining at the Park Avenue hotel, New York city:

"I was addressing about 2,000 children in assembly down on the east side, and, touching on history, I said: 'Landmarks are a very good guide to history. We have many such in England. For instance, the cathedrals and castles, nearly all of which remind us of some epoch in history. Then we have Nelson's old flagship, the Victory, which recalls the battle of Trafalgar. Now, what ship have you to remind you of some past event in history?'

"After a few seconds' delay a small voice piped out, 'Please, sir, the Reliance!'"—New York Times.

An Anachronism.

An American lady visited Stratford-on-Avon lately and "gushed" even above the usual high water mark of American fervor. She had not recovered from the attack when she reached the railway station, for she remarked to a friend as they walked on to the platform, "And to think that it was from this very platform the immortal bard would depart whenever he journeyed to London!"

Dances Sold by Auction.

A custom that has existed for several centuries is still maintained in some towns on the lower Rhine. Early in the year, on auction day, the town crier or clerk calls all the young people together and to the highest bidder sells the privilege of dancing with the chosen girl, and her only, during the entire year that follows. The fees flow into the public poor box.

The Point of View.

The Bird in the Hand assumed his most winning aspect and addressed the Bird in the Bush.

"It is conceded," said he, "that my position renders me worth twice as much as you are, but I will trade places with you, even up, asking nothing to boot!"

But the Bird in the Bush thought he could detect something of disingenuousness in this seemingly magnanimous offer and flew away.—Detroit Journal.

Musicians and Hair.

Musicians, as a rule, have excellent heads of hair. In the prime of life the musician's hair flourishes most, and in every 100 music devotees only one hairless head it met with, while in other professions about eleven in every 100 are bald.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE BEATEN AGAIN

Mary Malcolm's Life Was Measured by Days and Hours.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Had Her Able to be out in a Week.

Another Remarkable Cure Brought Out by the Collingwood and Eglinton Cases.

Toronto, Feb. 15—(Special.)—The interest in medical circles here over the cures of Mrs. Adams, of Collingwood, and Mrs. Philip, of Eglinton, of Bright's Disease, has been given fresh fuel by another and yet more startling cure of that same terrible ailment. This latest case is that of a young girl, Mary Malcolm, who lives with her parents at 199 Marlboro Avenue, this city.

Death Seemed Sure.

This cure is little short of miraculous. Miss Malcolm was in the clutches of Bright's Disease from May until September, and had sunk so low that her life was measured by days if not by hours. Hope had given place to a certainty of death, and her friends had turned to the sad task of preparing her grave clothes. These last ghastly garments are now in the house, but Mary Malcolm is a strong hearty maiden who can look on them without even a shudder of fear. Dodd's Kidney Pills effected the change. Here is the story as told by the girl's mother, Mrs. W. Malcolm:

"My daughter Mary, who is now fourteen years old, was taken suddenly ill with Bright's Disease in May, 1902. We had the doctor and continued with him till September, 1902, when he said he could do nothing more for her. She was so swollen with Dropsy as to be almost unrecognizable.

Cure Was Quick.

"From a book dropped in at the door, we learned of Dodd's Kidney Pills and as a last resort determined to try them. They gave her relief from the very beginning, so much so that in one week we were able to take her out to Munro Park for an afternoon.

"After taking four boxes, she was entirely cured and she has never had the slightest relapse. We can never say too much for Dodd's Kidney Pills, as they certainly saved my daughter's life."

And Mary, the daughter on whom Bright's Disease had pronounced the sentence of death, now a picture of healthy girlhood, smiled a cheerful assent to her mother's statement and chimed in, "If I am ever sick again I will take nothing but Dodd's Kidney Pills."

It is hardly necessary to add that proof piled on proof has convinced the public that Bright's Disease is curable and that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the cure; that if the disease is of the kidneys or from the kidneys the one unfailing remedy is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

What is said to be the most costly book in the world has just been given by the Ameer of Afghanistan to the Shah. It is a copy of the Koran bound in solid gold and set with pearls, rubies and diamonds. It is said to have cost $400,000.

Ever Felt That Death Would Be Welcome?

Mrs. Margaret Smith often did until Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart gave her new hope and cured her heart and nerves.

"I was for two years a great sufferer from heart trouble and nervousness. At times I was confined to bed, when my pain was so intense that I would have welcomed death with joy. I was attracted to Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart by reading of some wonderful cures wrought by it. One dose gave me relief in 30 minutes. After using four bottles I can truly say I never felt better in my life."—Margaret Smith, Brussels, Ont. Sold by all druggists. 23

60 Specialists on the Case.—In the ordinary run of medical practice a greater number than this have treated cases of chronic dyspepsia and have failed to cure—but Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets (60 in a box at 35 cents cost) have made the cure, giving relief in one day. These little "specialists" have proven their real merit.—72

Have you Eczema?—Have you any skin disease or eruptions? Are you subject to chafing or scalding? Dr. Agnew's Ointment prevents and cures any and all of these, and cures Itching, Bleeding and Blind Piles besides. One application brings relief in ten minutes, and cases cured in three to six nights. 35 cents.—71

A Deliberate Proposal And Its Acceptance

"I HAVE called—I have called this evening, Miss Annabel."

"I see you have, Mr. Gosling."

"I have called to say to you, Miss Annabel, to say to you"—

"Yes, Mr. Gosling."

"To say to you that my uncle—did you know I had an uncle?"

"I have heard you speak of your uncle, Mr. Gosling. His name is More, isn't it?"

"It was. He is now no more."

"You distress me, Mr. Gosling."

"He passed away in Australia four weeks ago and left me all his money.'"

"How much you must miss him."

"Not as much as I expected, Miss Annabel. It doesn't quite reach six figures. Have I ever mentioned my maiden aunt, Miss Annabel?"

"I think not, Mr. Gosling."

"She is failing fast."

"How sad!"

"Isn't it? She's worth $90,000, and I'm her favorite nephew. And Cousin George—you've heard me mention Cousin George?"

"No, Mr. Gosling."

"I'm named for him, you know. He's in a very precarious condition and has promised me $50,000. He won't forget it. Neither will I. And so, Miss Annabel, I—that is to say—I—in fact, I want to ask you—don't laugh—I want to ask you to be—to be my wife."

"Oh, Mr. Gosling! How could you be so sudden? Here we were quietly talking about your estimable relatives, when"—

"But they are a part of the proposal, Miss Annabel. They're introductory, you see. Add 'em up in your mind, Miss Annabel, and say you'll be mine."

"I—I don't believe I can refuse you, Mr. Gosling."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Four Extremes.

The coldest place on earth inhabited by man is Verkhoyansk, above the arctic circle, in northeastern Siberia. The thermometer there drops to 90 degrees below zero in January, but sometimes rises to 86 degrees above zero in the shade in July, dropping, however, to the freezing point on the warmest summer nights. The hottest place in the world is the interior of the great Sahara desert, in Africa, where the thermometer rises to 122 degrees. The wettest place is Greytown, Nicaragua, where the mean annual rainfall is 260 inches. The place of least rain is Port Nolloth, in South Africa, where less than an inch sometimes falls in a year.

KICKS.

HEAR the kicks!
Hear the people making kicks,
Heavy kicks,
Sorry kicks;
One would think the poor old world was in a most unhappy fix.
Men are kicking at the weather; they are kicking at the price
That they have to pay for fuel, that they have to pay for ice;
They are kicking at the way
This and that is done today;
They are kicking at conditions as they loom up everywhere;
They have kicks to make because
Rascals disobey the laws.
One would think that crime was rampant and that woe was in the air!
Hear them kicking, kicking, kicking! Oh,
the wild and woeful kicks,
And the kicks concern religion, science,
art and politics;
There are kicks from those who work;
There are kicks from those who shirk;
All the world, it seems, is keeping busy registering kicks,
Making kicks, kicks, kicks,
Keeping up the daily average of kicks,
kicks, kicks, kicks, kicks, kicks,
kicks.

Do the everlasting kicks
Indicate a smashup? Nix!
The world would quit revolving if we didn't have the kicks
From the men who wield the picks
And the ones who lay the bricks,
And the ones who wear the jewels and the ones who sing and write.
Never since the world began
Has a point been won by man
Unless he kicked to get it, and did so with all his might!
'Tis a pleasing thing to mix
Gladness in among our kicks
When we may;
But, with gladness or without,
We may never hope to rout
The legions filled with kickers; they'll be here till judgment day;
They'll be here to make their kicks
Till there's ice upon the Styx,
Till the last grave undertaker the last
coffin cover clicks,
But a lot of us are kicking with no cause
for making kicks,
Without the slightest reason for our kicks, kicks, kicks,
And never helping any with our kicks,
kicks, kicks, kicks, kicks, kicks,
kicks.

The sharp-tongued heiress eyed the lordling long and earnestly. "Why is it," she asked, "that titles in your country have such distressing encumbrances?" "Perhaps," he retorted, "it's to even up for the load that wealth has to carry in your country." And the possibility of one international match ended forthwith.—Chicago Post.

DREADED RESULTS OF KIDNEY DISEASE

Ailments of the Most Painful and Fatal Nature Prevented and Cured by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

When you think of the pain and suffering which accompany backache, rheumatism, lumbago, stone in the kidneys and bladder; when you think of the dreadful fatality of Bright's disease, dropsy, diabetes and apoplexy, you may well wonder why people neglect to keep the kidneys in perfect order, for all these ailments are the direct result of deranged kidneys.

Once the kidneys fail to filter from the blood the impure and poisonous waste matter there is trouble of a painful and dangerous nature. Among the first symptoms are backache, weak, lame back, pains in the legs and sides, deposits in the urine, impaited digestion, loss of flesh, energy and ambition, stiffness and soreness in the joints and feelings of weariness and lassitude.

Prevention is always better than cure, and hence the advisability of using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills on the very first indication of such derangement. Whether to prevent or cure, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are the most effective treatment you can obtain, for besides their direct and specific action on the kidneys, they keep the bowels regular and the liver active, and hence purify the system and remove the cause of disease.

This medicine has long since proven its right to first place as a cure for the complicated and serious derangements of the filtering and excretory organs. It has the largest sale and is endorsed by more people than any similar treatment. You can depend on it absolutely to bring prompt relief and a lasting cure. In view of these facts it is a waste of time and money and a risk to life itself to trifle with new and untried remedies when Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are at hand. One pill a dose, 25c. a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

A Haitian Glass Eye.

Some years ago a Haitian general wrote to a Paris optician to supply him with a glass eye. The optician, flattering himself that a successful eye would secure for him a Haitian decoration, devoted his utmost intelligence to the production of a splendid glass optic. Six months elapsed. A small box reached him from Haiti. A cross glittered in his imagination; but, to his horror, within folds of cotton, was his original eye, accompanied by the following note: "Sir—The eye you forwarded to me is of a tint that resembles that of the Spanish flag, and I am too patriotic to wear any but the color of my country." The optician proceeded at once to the admiralty, there ascertained the colors of the Haitian flag and then manufactured a scarlet and green eye, which he forwarded.

REPORT OF C. N. P. COAL CO.

Profits Amount to $310,492.28, Paying a Dividend of 10 per cent. to Shareholders. The Policy of the Company a Progressive One.

The seventh annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company, Limited, was held in Toroto on Feb. 12th. The President, Hon. Geo. A. Cox was in the chair and Mr G. G. S. Lindsey, K.C. acted as secretary.

The secretary read the annual report and the accompanying financial statement as follows.

The Directors beg to submit to the Shareholders of the Company their Seventh Annual Report, including Statement of Assets and Liabilities as of the 31st December, 1903.

The balance at the credit of Profit and Loss Account brought forward from 1902 amounted to $950,511.96. To this has been added the sum of $310,492 28, being the Company's net profits from the operations of the year, also the sum of $913,526.25, representing the premium received on calls paid on new stock, the whole making an aggregate to the credit of the Profit and Loss Account of $2,174,530.49. From this amount the Directors have paid four dividends of 2½ per cent. each, making 10 per cent. for the year, and amounting in all to $303,717.36. This amount deducted from the above balance at the credit of Profit and Loss Account leaves at the credit of that account, carried forward to 1904, the sum of $1,870,813.13.

The balance of the new issue of stock referred to in the last Annual Statement as to be paid during the year 1903 amounted to, including the premium, $1,646,318.75. On the 31st of December last this had all been paid with the exception of $123,775.00 (of which $74,265.00 is premuim.)

Substantial progress was made during the year in the permanent development of the Company's properties at Coal Creek, Michel and Morrissey. It was not until the 1st of February, 1904, that the mines at Coal Creek, which had been damaged by the explosion of 22nd May, 1902, were fully restored.

During the year nearly a million dollars have been spent on plant, development and machinery, adding largely to the efficiency and capacity of the mines and of the operating and coking plants.

The steady increase of the production of coal is best illustrated by pointing out that the output for the year just closed exceeded that of 1902 by 49.83 per cent. while the output for December, 1903, is larger than that of January of the same year by 59.72 per cent. This satisfactory progress has been made notwithstanding that production was materially retarded by a strike of all the company's miners, lasting from the 11th of February to April 1st, and to a less degree by the strikes of the coke oven men in May and of the miners at Morrrissey in September. A contract has been executed with the men providing for wages, hours of labor and other usual matters, effective for three years, but determinable by either party at the end of the second year, and it is expected that there will be no more labor troubles during the life of this agreement.

The mountain slide at Frank, which covered up the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's main line in the Crow's Nest Pass, gave rise to a car shortage of considerable duration, as did the handling of the western harvest in the months of October and November, both of which shortages interfered to a considerable extent with the transportation and therefore with the production of coal and coke.

The accounting work has been sepereted from that of the operating, and a new department created to take care of this and the purchasing, and Mr. Daniel Davies has been appointed comptroller in charge of this department.

Mr. T. R. Stockett, jr., is now acting general manager, and it is hoped that the confidence his record as general superintendent for several years has earned for him will be confirmed by his work as acting general manager.

The duties formerly performed by the managing director have been assigned to the office of the third vic-president, and are now being satisfactorily performed by Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey, who has been elected to that position.

The directors regret that Mr. R. W. Macpherson, the general auditor of the company will after the annnal meeting sever his connection with the company, a loss which will be much felt.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

G. G. S. LINDSEY, Third Vide-President. GEO. A. COX, President.

A running Audit has been maintained, and I certify that the books are well and truly kept.

R. W. MACPHERSON.
Toronto, February 12th, 1904. General Auditor.

Senator Cox in moving the adoption of the Report, referred amongst others to the following items of interest:—

The coal produced during the year 1903 amounted to 661,118 tons, as compared with 442,049 tons in 1902. Of this tonnage 279,334 were sent to the coke ovens and produced 167,089 tons of coke, as against 121,000 tons made in 1902, while the balance 381,784 tons (with the exception of 22,823 tons consumed under the boilers) were disposed of as merchantable coal.

The new mines opened during the year were at Coal Creek, 3, at Michel 2, and at Morrissey 2.

The construction of 492 ovens was commenced during 1903—252 at Michel and 240 at Morrissey. Of these, 198 at Michel and 148 at Morrissey were completed, adding a total of 346 ovens to the Company's coking plant, and bringing the total number of ovens now constructed up to 982. The remainder of the ovens will be completed early this spring.

The net profits as a result of the year's operations amount to $310,492.28, of which $303,717.36 was paid out in dividends and there was received for premiums on calls paid on new stock during the year $913,526.25. This enables a carrying forward to the credit of Profit and Loss of $1,870,813.13, of which $145,078.13 is undisturbed profits, and $1,725,735.00 premium received on stock.

On the 1st of May the new town site of Morrissey Mines was put on the market and sales made amounting to $30,000, which have been increased to $35,712.

It has been found desirable to acquire the branch railroad between the main line of the Crow's Nest Southern at Morrissey Junction and the Company's mines, a length of about five miles, for which a charter was obtained from the British Columbia Legislature last year.

Mr. Rogers having been obliged to resign the position of Managing Director the Board have transferred the duties of that office to the office of Third Vice-President, and Mr. Lindsey has fulfilled the duties; and I desire to express the high appreciation of the Directors for the excellent work he has accomplished.

The report was unanimously adopted.

The following gentlemen were elected Directors for the ensuing year:—Hon. George A. Cox, Robert Jaffray, Lieut.-Col. H. M. Pellatt, William Fernie, J. A. Gemmill, J. D Chipman, David Morrice, E. R. Wood, Thomas Walmsley, Lieut.-Col. James Mason, Frederick Nicholls, G. G. S. Lindsey, K.C., and C. C. Dalton.

The meeting then adjourned.

At a subsequent meeting of the directors held immediately after the meeting of the shareholders, Hon., Geo. A. Cox was elected President for the ensuing year, and Mr. Robert Jaffray, First Vice-President; Col. H. M. Pellatt, Second Vice-President; G. G. S. Lindsey, K.C., Third Vice-President. and E. R. Wood, Treasurer.

FUNDS FOR FLATHEAD.

Will be Taken From Contingency Fund of Forty-Five Thousand.

The Government is prepared to build a road into the Flathead country as soon as the necessity for the road arises. There is a grant of $45,000 for contingencies for public works and buildings, roads, streets bridges, wharves, and surveys, and the cost of the road to the Flathead will be taken out of this grant. This matter has been effectually settled by our member, W. R. Ross, who has received a direct promise from the Government that the road will be constructed as soon as it is needed.

POLICE COURT

Herman Prass, charged with being a frequenter of a disorderly house, was given a month at hard labor on Monday.

E. Bertouse, drunk and disorderly was fined $2.00 and costs.

A Jap named Tannuci was fined $5.00 and costs for assaulting a man named Robinson.

Three "Steves" were mixed up in a pay-day fight at Morrissey and the case was aired in the Fernie police court on Tuesday. The three parties, all Slavonians, were drinking beer at the house of Steve Morritze. The row started when Steve Krkoska accused Steve Peters of undue familiarity with Morritze's wife. The three soon got into a rough and tumble scrape and before it was ended Krkoska and Peters each had deep and dangerous wounds on the head, evidently inflicted by a knife or axe. Their bandaged appearance in the court afforded excellent proof of the seriousness of the row. The magistrate held both men equally responsible for the scrape, though the original charge was against Krkoska only, and a fine of $15 and costs was imposed upon each.

Chas. Bailey, a colored man, was brought up on Tuesday charged with living with his wife in a house of prostitution. The accused stated that he had come over from Spokane under false inducements, and the magistrate let him off with a $10 fine and a promise to get out.

Henry Porterfield, colored, was arrested on Tuesday charged with vagrancy. He pleaded for a few days to get out of town which was granted him.

AN EXPERT'S REPORT.

Interesting Article on the Coal Creek Colliery.

E. Jacobs, mining expert, has been contributing an excellent series of articles to the Nelson News on the coal fields of the Crows Nest Pass, the data for which was gathered recently by a personal visit through the valley. The write up of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company is particularly full and reliable. The following clipping from his report of the Coal Creek colliery will doubtless be of interest to our readers.

"The mines at Coal Creek are between four and five miles up the creek from Fernie, with which town they are connected by a standard gauge railway, a branch of the C. P. R. There are six mines on four seams, all of which have a north and south strike, and a dip to the east of about 15 degrees. Nos. 1, 9 4 and 5 are on the north side of the creek, which runs east and west, and Nos. 2 and 3 on the south side. The valley here is about 900 feet from bank to bank, and a high trestle affords convenient connection between the mines on one side and those on the other.

No. 1 mine is on a 30-foot seam of coal of which only the lowest 10-foot section is being worked. The main level is in about 4,000 feet on the strike of the seam. At 2,000 feet in from the entrance an incline has been driven, the face now being up about 1,500 feet. A slope, down about 800 feet on the dip of the seam. leaves the level at about the same place as the incline. A Lidgerwood hoist run by a 75 horse power electric motor, placed at the top of the incline, raises and lowers cars from and to the landing on the main level while, a 12x15 double cylinder air hoist does similar work in the slope. Haulage from these landings to the main entry and thence to the tipples is by an electric locomotive operated from an overhead trolley wire.

No. 9 mine is close to No. 1, there being about 60 feet of strata between the two. The seam is about six feet in thickness and is believed to be the same as mines Nos. 2 and 3, across the valley, are on. The main level of No. 9 is a drift, in about 1,000 feet. A rock tunnel about 500 feet in from the entry, connects with No. 1 mine. Both these mines are ventilated by a Chandler fan, 4 foot face and 14 foot diameter, capacity 200,000 cubic feet and discharging 125,000 at water guage 1-6 inch, and driven by a 16x18 Erie City side-crank engine: speed of engine, 60 r. p. m. and of fan, 104 r. p. m.

A surface electric tramway with overhead trolley wire connects Nos. 4 and 5 mines with the tipples, The entrance to the former is 4,800 feet from No. 1 main entry, and that to the latter about 3,000 feet. These mines are just being opened up. In No. 4 a main level with an upper and a lower parallel, now in between 500 and 600 feet, is being driven in a 22-ft. seam of rather soft coal. A similar level in No. 5 mine has been advanced 600 feet, the headlong being in eight feet six inches of hard coal. Haulage from Nos. 9, 4 and 5 is by electric locomotive. Temporary 10.ft. fans, each capable of circulating 40,000 cubic feet of air per minute, provide for the ventilation of Nos. 4 and 6. Larger fans will be installed as soon as required.

In No. 2 mine on the south side of the valley, the coal is from six to eight feet in thickness. One level, after passing through about 300 feet of gravel has been driven on the strike of the seam some 3,000 feet. At 1,500 feet along this drive an incline goes up on the pitch of the seam about 1,200 feet. An air hoist similar to that in No. 1 mine, does the hauling in this incline. Starting from a point nearer the main entry a heading has been driven at an angle of about 30 degrees from strike of seam. This entry is in nearly 4,000 feet. This part of No. 2 mine is known as "the deeps," and it was here that the disastrous explosion took place on May 22nd, 1902. Last year these workings were re-opened, thoroughly repaired, and put in first class condition, so that production from here is being resumed. Coal is to be hauled from the deeps by the tail-rope haulage system, the requisite motive power being already installed. This consists of a Danville Foundry & Machine Co.'s 20x36 in. compound geared, quadruple-drum, tail-rope haulage engine, having 7ft. drums and plow steel ropes, main rope 1 1-8 in. and tail rope 1 in. This engine is placin a 30x40ft. house under No. 2 tipple trestle. Ventilation for this mine and for No. 3 is provided by a Wilson fan 12ft. face and 16ft. diameter, capacity 250,000 cubic feet of air per minute, and discharging about 150,000 feet at water guage 0.9in. and driven by an Erie City engine.

The slope in No. 3 mine is on the pitch of the same seam as No. 2, but the coal is only four feet in thickness in this mine. From the entrance to the face the distance is about 3,000 feet. There is at present only one level working off this slope. Haulage to the main entry of No. 2 is by a 12x15 double cylinder air hoist, and thence to the tipple by electric motor.

All the mines at Coal Creek are working by the pillar and stall system, pillars 80 feet square and stalls 14 feet wide. The opening of Nos. 6, 7 and 8 seams has been deferred for a time.

JUNIORS WIN AGAIN.

Defeat Blairmore at Hockey on Tuesday by 11 Goals to 1.

The Blairmore hockey team came up on Tuesday to again try conclusions with the Fernie Juniors, and the result was another signal victory for the locals winning easily by a score of 11-1.

The game was called at 8 o'clock by referee McKellar. The line up was.

BLAIRMORE		FERNIE
Counce	goal	Todhunter
Bonard	point	Kirkpatrick
Lyons	c. point	Sunberg
Crayford	rover	Kanouse
R. Lewis	forwards	Rhodes
G. Lewis		Lawrence
Shaw		Ross

The visitors, being senior players, were much heavier than the local Juniors, but the latter more than made up for this advantage in agility and practical knowledge of the game. The game at times was fairly even and interesting to the on-lookers, but at other times it was too one sided and the visitors appeared to be altogether outclassed.

Fernie scored the first four goals, and shortly before the half time whistle blew Blairmore scored its only winning shot. In the second half Fernie won seven scores in monotonous succession.

The goals were scored as follows.

1.	Fernie,	Kanouse,	7 minutes.

3.	"	Rhodes,	3 "

SEVENTEEN CLAIMS DISMISSED.

The relatives of 17 of the deceased miners killed in the explosion of the 22nd of May 1902 procured representation to the estate of the deceased by appointing the Italian Consul at Toronto, Administrator. This officer brought 17 suits for damages against the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company in the Courts of Ontario, and all of these actions on the 12th day of February were dismissed. These are the first suits arising out of the explosion that have been finally determined, and have been disposed of in favor of the company.

They Have a Most Exiting Experience in a Dense Wood.

An Ottawa dispatch says: John McFadden and W. H. Cook, the former head log-maker and the latter cook in Gilmour and Kennedy's shanty, three miles from North Wakefield, left the shanty to go to Mr. Kennedy's farm, about a mile distant. They had just entered a dark, jungle-like portion of the woods when they were attacked by hungry timber wolves and were closely pursued to the edge of a lake known as Jamieson's lake. The men shouted as they ran, and were fortunately heard by some of the teamsters, who happened to be going to feed their horses at the time, and who at once went to their assistance. As good luck would have it, there were two Winchester rifles at the camp, which were taken along. As soon as McFadden saw the rifles he took one and at once brought down one of the brutes, which is of a very large size. This is the second time this season that attacks have been made by wolves in this neighborhood.

War of Rates.

A New York dispatch says: The harmony of rates in trunk line territory is in danger of being interrupted, the Buffalo-New York lines opposed to the Buffalo-philadelphia-New York lines having served notice that the freight rate on lake grain for export will be reduced to three cents for 100 pounds between Buffalo and New York. This reduction means an abolition of the differential tariff initiated by the Pennsylvania and the Lehigh Valley in favor of Philadelphia last summer, and is designed to give the port of New York the same privilege heretofore enjoyed by Philadelphia.

BERLIN FACTORY BURNED.

Conflagration in Berlin Felt Boot Company's Building—Loss $175,000.

One of the most disastraus conflagrations in Berlin's history occurred Tuesday evening, when the large four-story building of the Berlin Felt Boot Company, the largest of its kind in the Dominion, was burned to the ground. The fire was discovered in the spinning and carding room on the first floor about 6.45, and no time was lost in getting out the brigade, but owing to the severity of the weather, low water pressure and high winds, very little could be done to save the structure. The fire raged for over two hours and a half. The Waterloo fire brigade arrived about 8 o'clock to render assistance. The pieces of burning embers were carried for a mile. The fire was quite visible at a distance six miles north. The origin of the fire is not yet known. The loss is estimated by Geo. Rumpel, one of the proprietors, at $175,000. The insurance is $45,000 or $50,000. The industry, which was established about thirty years ago, employed about two hundred hands and was known from Vancouver to Halifax.

The Progress of The War.

The most significant item from the seat of war on Wednesday was the announcement that Japan had secured control of all telegraphic lines in Corea, and had captured an envoy sent by the Corean government to Viceroy Alexieff. The embarkation of Japanese troops for Corea continues with even increased activity. Japanese troops are also being thrown into the Liao Tung peninsula, and the intention of the Japs to isolate Port Arthur and hold the Yalu valley is becoming plainer daily. Sixty thousand Japanese troops are already concentrated at Wonson, in Northeastern Corea. Two Japanese destroyers made another attempt to destroy the Russian fleet at Port Arthur. A fierce gale and snow storm prevented the reaminder of the torpedo fleet from participating in the attacks.

Highly Colored Tale.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the London Express wires: "I learn from official sources that there was a dramatic sequel to the Russian disaster at Port Arthur. After the attack by the Japanese, Viceroy Alexieff summoned before him the Russian officers whose negligence was the main cause of defeat. After cross-examining them as to their conduct, Alexieff was convinced that one lieutenant among them was most culpably guilty. Alexieff drew a revolver and shot the young officer dead before his comrades."

The princess, it is said, was suffering from a form of insanity which manifested itself in fits of jealousy. When suffering thus she sought to kill those whom she suspected of causing her despair. Her jealous fury alternated with periods of acute melancholy, during which she is reported to have attempted her life several times. Denials inspired by the Austrian court were issued immediately following the announcement of the shooting of Louise Ziegler.

He was dissuaded from that course by his friends, and a charge was laid by another party whose money was in his hands. It will be some days before the full extent of the defalcation is known. His partner, Fisher, was entirely ignorant of Hutcheson's financial difficulties. Hutcheson was placed under arrest and is now in jail.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

FLOUR—The market had made two advances of 5c each within the week and there is a prospect of another 5c being added to the price. The war between Russia and Japan is the immediate cause. We quote: Hungarian Patent, $2.55 per sack of 98 lbs, delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent, $2.40; Strong Bakers, $2.05; and XXN, $1.75. These prices are subject to usual trade discounts.

MILLFEED—Market is irregular, having gone both up and down within the week. At the moment figures are the same as a week ago. We quote: Bran, $16 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts, $18 per ton.

GROUND FEED—Oat chop and mixed barley and oats are $1 higher. We quote: Oat chop, $$6 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop, $22; mixed barley and oats, $23; oil cake, $27 per ton.

OATS—Growing scarcity of supplies and firmer outside markets have put up the price of oats here 1c per bushel. It is undoubtedly true that oats are good value even at the higher prices of this week, as stocks in the west are not heavy and the prospects are for an active demand throughout the remainder of this crop year. We quote: No. 2 white oats, 32½ to 33c for carlots on track, and feed grades 31 to 31½c. Farmers' loads at country points bring 25 to 26c, and on the street here 30 to 31c per bushel.

BARLEY—Malting grades are bringing 36 to 37c per bushel in carlots on track here, and feed grades 34 to 35c. Farmers are getting about 28c at country points.

FLAXSEED—Market nominal.

HAY—Receipts are light, and as there is considerably more hay required in this market this season than heretofore, prices are firm, with an advancing tendency. Fresh baled has advanced $2 per ton, making the price $12 for good quality in cars. Loose hay on the street is worth $12 to $14 per ton.

BUTTER—Creamery—There is very little to say about this commodity. Trading is light and stocks on hand are not heavy. Choice creamery in boxes is worth 23 to 24c per pound delivered to the trade.

BUTTRE—Dairy—Stocks of dairy butter on hand here are becoming lighter, and all choice qualities are in good demand. A considerable percentage of the stock is off grade, and for this there is no great sale. Fresh table butter in bricks will bring 22c per pound and tubs 16 to 17c delivered here. Round lots of ordinary stock 12 to 14c.

EAGS—There are scarcely any eggs coming in and the market is almost a nominal one. There are, of course, the usual stocks of pickled eggs, but fresh stock is not to be had in a wholesale way at all. Case lots of fresh eggs would bring 30c per dozen at commission houses, subject to candling, and strictly fresh gathered are worth 40c per dozen retail. Ontario pickled or limed bring 23 to 25c wholesale.

POULTRY—Receipts are small, and there is so much demand that all offerings are quickly absorbed. Commission houses will pay 12c per pound for dressechickens, 13c for ducks and 17c for turkeys delivered here.

HIDES—The market is steady with a somewhat firmer feeling, due to the upward tendency at Chicago and other large centres. There is no change to note in prices. We quote: Country frozen hides, 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare. Bulls, stags and oxen, 4½ to 5c. No. 1 city butchers' hides are worth 6c per pound; No. 2's, 5c, and 3's, 4c; sheepskins, wool pelts, 40 to 65c; country calfskins, same price as hides.

Health Rules.

One of Queen Victoria's health rules is said to have been, "Do whatever you like, but do it in moderation," or words to that effect, and a similar rule might be adopted with still greater profit by the men and women of the present day. The people of Queen Victoria's generation had not made a fad of health, and every newspaper they picked up did not worry them with conflicting hygienic rules. The no breakfast fiend, if he existed, was less prominent than at present, and those who thought that the first ought to be the best meal of the day did not publish their views from every roof top, figuratively speaking. Vegetarians and meat eaters wrangled only in inconspicuous corners, and the devotees of the cold bath were content with fewer victims. Today, when all these and a million other so called health rules are being dinned into the ears of a long suffering public on all sides, it is more than ever important to bear in mind that inclinations and disinclinations were not arbitrarily implanted by nature in animal organisms; that they exist for our guidance and not solely to mislead us.

Stagnation Is Death.

The sun would be consumed by its own ardor if it did not shine. Nature knows nothing of hoarding. The sun gives away its gold without ostentation. The ocean gives its vapors to the clouds, the clouds return them to the earth, the rivers to the sea. There is a constant exchange between lungs and leaves. Stagnation is death. Give to get; get to give.

Squelched.

Mr. Elder—There is something I want to say to you, Bessie—er—that is, Miss Kuteley.

Miss Kuteley—Call me Bessie if you wish.

Mr. Elder—Oh, may I?

Miss Kuteley—Of course; all old gentlemen call me Bessie.

New York, Feb. 19.—General Pflug's official report says that Russian scouts have penetrated into Corea as far as the Ping Yang. Complete plans are for 400 miles of irrigation canal along the Bow river. The principal part is twenty miles long, to be constructed within four miles of the railway and parallel to it. The canal is to be forty feet wide and thirty-two feet deep. Two years' time is the limit for completion.

Six warships heavily stocked with medicines and hospital stores have been ordered ready to leave for Saigon in ten days.

Women and Euchre Parties.

Bishop Mills, in an address at Kingston Friday afternoon scored euchre parties, where women in hot, darkened rooms played for prizes, and said that the conduct of these women, in his view, in the breaking down of home life and influences, and the bringing in of the club idea, was responsible for much of the lack of rectitude in men.

FIRE AND FOUNDERING.

Thrilling Experience of Crew of Immigrants on St. Pallanza.

The Hamburg-American liner Pallanza, which left Hamburg January 19th with a large geberal cargo for 19th with a large general cargo for New York and 150 immigrants for Halifax, arrived at Halifax on February 18th after thrilling escapes from foundering and destruction by fire at sea. When six days out from Hamburg the Pallanza ran into a furious hurricane, which continued for seventy hours, during which the smokestack was smashed and everything movable ripped off the decks by boarding seas. The large accommodation ladder was torn from its fastenings and carried the whole length of the ship, striking the bridge and severely injuring the captain, mate and quartermaster, and was then carried overboard. The smokestack, which was toppled over, was lashed up with great difficulty, and the Pallanza was unable to return to Hamburg owing to the fury of the gale, and put into St. Michael's, Azores, for repairs. She left for Halifax on February 8th, and on Monday morning, during a severe storm, fire broke out in the forehold, between decks. The smoke poured out in voldmes and the immigrants were panic-stricken. The officers and crew battled heroically with the flames for eight hours, finally extinguishing the fire with steam and water. Part of the cargo was considerably damaged. The immigrants were for Western Canada.

OFF FOR ENGLAND.

Mr. James Dale of Argyle District May Repeat His Success.

Mt. James Dale, of Grund, reeve of Argyle, left this week for England, where he will spend three months in the interests of Canadian immigration. Mr. Dale was one of the farm delegates sent out last year, and his success was very gratifying to the department. He delivered 40 addresses in 17 days, traveling 2,000 miles, principally in Suffolk. He visited many of the technical schools, and addressed the pupils, his greatest success in attracting the attention of desirable British settlers being traced to these institutions. The practical side of these schools is one of the most interesting features of a trip to the larger cities of England, and any graduates who may be induced to take up Canadian farm work will prove settlers of the most advanced type.

MINNEDOSA MAN SHOT.

Capt. Gore Attacked by Neighbor's Hired Man--Used Axe and Revolver.

Word has been received that Capt. F. St. G. Gore, who resides a few miles north of Minnedosa, was attacked by a neighbor's hired man, named Sidney Wagstaff, on Thursday evening, and shot by a revolver in the hands of his assailant. Wagstaff first attacked the captain with an axe, and, being disarmed, drew a revolver with the above result. The extent of Captain Gore's injuries cannot be ascertained at present. Two local constables have left town to arrest the perpetrator of the outrage.

Captain Gore and Mrs. Gore arrived from England last spring, the former being a gentleman of such quiet demeanor that it is difficult to imagine any reason for the attempted murder.

Drowned in Lake Baikal.

Two regiments of Russian pioneers and one regiment of railway troops have been drowned in Lake Baikal, according to a dispatch from the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Vienna Narodine Listy. The dispatch gives no particulars, but it is believed that the soldiers perished crossing the lake on the railway that Russia had been building across the ice. This railway was tested a few days ago, and it is thought that the Russians were taking a troop train over the lake when the ice broke and the train sank.

FULL DRESS GOWNS.

Velvet the Rage—Dinner, Reception and Ball Toilets.

In velvets the new light weight quality called chiffon takes the lead in everything except for costly cloaks and coats. Its sheen and exquisite pliability have entirely changed the old treatment of velvets into this modern one, where everything is possible in the way of handwork. Smartness has declared for small checks in dress velvets intended for street costumes. The middle tone of any one of the colors in vogue is often crossed by line squares of black or gray or by a lighter shade of the same foundation color.

Single colored velvet costumes are for more ceremonious purposes and admit of fur trimmings of the costliest character. Violet, blue, French and stone grays, fawn, green, fuschia purple and cardinal red, together with black and gun metal shades, form the gamut of best choice. These costumes are, according to preference, made up with the dressiness of lace and passementerie trimmings or with a charming simplicity of line and fur trimmed expensively.

The princess dinner gown here shown is of black chiffon velvet over white taffeta. The foundation is finished with a plaiting and a deep ruche edged ruffle of white chiffon. The velvet princess has panels of handmade black silk lace inserted at the sides, rising in high points almost to the hips, and the chiffon is beneath these full length. The inset girdle and the cape effect at the back and over the shoulders are also of the course silk lace. A large jet butterfly trims the left of the corsage, and the elbow sleeves are of black tulle over white chiffon.

White brussels net spotted with chenille over white taffeta composes the ball gown, together with repousse lace in deep vandyke points and opalescent paillettes.

Among the full dress gowns for dinner and reception wear a skirt combination of crape and chiffon velvet or of satin cloth is entirely new. The half of a long train skirt in its shaped flare, whether of velvet or cloth, is joined to an upper half of transparent crape or of double mousseline of the same color and shade. A charming example in chalk white has its lower skirt of cloth, the upper one of crape to match. Seven straps of cloth one and a half inches wide connect this cloth over the crape to the belt, and these straps are ornamented with small buttons covered with crape. The waist belt is of old rose silk.

A gray velvet dinner gown is in the latest all gray movement. There are two shaped flounces upon the bottom, the lower one much the wider of the two, both trimmed with waved lines of piping in gray satin. The low bodice fits the figure, with a slight blouse in front, the lower part of velvet, but the rest of gray silk lace, with gray and silver paillette embroidery. Gray chiffon forms the sleeve drapery.—Vogue.

STORY OF GRAND OLD MUSICIAN.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured His Kidney Disease of Years Standing.

Samuel J. Crow, Well-Known as the Leader of the North Pelham and Rosedene String Band, is Again Enjoying Perfect Vigor.

Rosedene, Ont., Feb. 22—(Special)—There are few better known musicians in this part of Canada than Samuel D. Crow, for many years leader of the old Pelham and Rosedene String Band, and only his retiring nature has kept him from gaining a national reputation. Consequently his complete recovery from an aggravated case of Kidney Disease of years has aroused much comment here. Interviewed regarding his case Mr. Crow said:—

"To-day I enjoy as good health as I did in boyhood, and I give the entire credit to Dodd's Kidney Pills. I suffered for years from Kidney Trouble, which became aggravated upon every attack of cold and caused me agony. In the winter of 1898 it developed into gravel, when I was totally unfit for anything. I tried different medicines without the desired results.

"I was in constant misery when I commenced to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. To my astonishment and delight I immediately began to recover, and after using five boxes the disease had entirely disappeared. I have known others who were great sufferers to be entirely cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills."

TOO MANY BENEFACTORS.

A Story Which Cost Money Every Time It Was Told.

A certain good old gentleman addicted to the habit common to so many other story tellers of repeating the tale a great number of times realized on one occasion at least that he had told one of his favorites once too often.

Surrounded by a group of chance acquaintances in the waiting room of a railway station, the friendly story teller told how he had twenty years previously found himself in an embarrassing predicament in a similar building in Chicago.

"I was 400 miles from home," said he, "and my train was due to leave in ten minutes. My railroad ticket came to more than I had expected, and I lacked just 25 cents of having enough to pay for it. I turned to the man standing next in line at the window and said: 'Stranger, lend me a quarter, will you? I'm just that much short.'

"The man, without a moment's hesitation, handed me the necessary sum. I asked for his address, intending to return the money by mail, but he declined to give it, so for twenty years I have remained in that man's debt."

At these words a shabbily dressed man who had listened with great interest to the traveler's tale stepped forward with extended hand.

"Stranger," said he, "I was the man that lent you that quarter twenty years ago in Chicago. If you'd offer to return it now, I shouldn't refuse it."

Not long afterward, in another public place, the old gentleman was again recounting his favorite tale, intending to add as a climax an account of the miraculous finding of his former benefactor, but just as he said the words, "for twenty years I remained in that man's debt," the unexpected happened.

A second long lost benefactor, totally unlike the first in appearance, stepped forth from the crowd and exclaimed: "Stranger, shake! I was the man that lent you that quarter."

A Distinction.

Aunt Emma was upstairs putting her five-year-old niece to bed. It had been a hard day for Bessie. Everything had seemed to go wrong in her little world, but to the rest of the family it appeared that the tot had simply tried to do all she could to make herself generally disagreeable. So it was with a decided feeling of relief that Aunt Emma, who had been one of the principal sufferers from Bessie's caprices, gave a final tuck to the sheet.

"Good night, Bessie," she said. "I hope you will get out of the right side of the bed tomorrow and that you won't be so cross as you have been today."

Bessie had settled herself for the night, but at this speech she flounced to the other side of the crib and said indignantly, with the weary sigh of the misunderstood:

"I wonder why grown up people treat little girls so. I notice when it's me every one says 'cross,' but when it's you they say 'nervous.'"

And Aunt Emma went downstairs pondering.

It Sometimes Happens.

"Of course," says the shoe dealer, "there are times when it is necessary to stretch the truth a trifle."

"Yes, sir," answered the head salesman, "and often a fellow has to stretch a lie."

"I don't see how."

"Well, when a woman with a No. 6 foot declares that a No. 3 shoe is just her size and asks you to put it on the shoe stretcher overnight 'just to make the instep a little higher.' That's one of the times."

A Cynicism.

"One of man's best friends is the horse."

"Yes," responded the man with the race track habit. "But did you ever notice what a terrible faculty your best friends have of disappointing you in an emergency?"

The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company.

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the shareholders and policyholders of the Manufacturers Life Insurance Company was held in the Company's offices, Toronto, on Thursday, February 4th, at 2.30 p.m. The report submitted was eminently satisfactory to all interested.

A detailed report of the proceedings will be mailed to all policyholders, but we believe that the average busy reader will get a clearer conception of the progress the Company is making by having, as it were, a bird's-eye view of its affairs.

Below will be found the figures pertaining to the main features of the business for 1902 and 1903 and the increases; also a comparative statement of the Company's growth since its organization.

The growth made in 1903 is well shown by the following table:—

	1902.	1903.	Increase.
Net Premium Income	$ 1,054,815.72	$ 1,219,435.91	$ 164,620.19

Policy Reserves	3,753,892.00	4,461,800.00	707,908.00
Total Assets	4,406,329.19	5,136,668.52	730,339.33
Applications for New Insurance	6,542,336.00	7,764,542.00	1,222,206.00

Insurance in Force	30,152,883.00	34,392,303.00	4,239,420.00

The Manufacturers Life began business in 1887, and the following figures for four year periods taken from its returns to the Dominion Government will illustrate its remarkable growth and steady progress:—

Year.	Income From Interest Rents, etc.	Net Premium Income.	Total Premium and Interest Income.	Assets.	New Policies Issued.	Assurance in Force December 31st.
1887	$ 778	$ 27,184	$ 27,963	$ 165,732	$2,564,500	$ 2,342,000

OF INTEREST TO TOTAL ABSTAINERS.

The death ratio in the Manufacturers Life has always been favorable in both sections, but exceedingly so in the Abstainers' Section. The past year shows a continuance of this favorable experience. The death losses in the General Section were 75.7% of the expectancy, and in the Abstainers' Section only 41.3% of the expectancy. The saving this year from low mortality in this section is therefore 58.7% as against a saving of 24.3% in the General Section, which means much larger dividends for Abstainers. Correspondence is invited.

B. C. LUMBER QUESTION.

The Commercial, of Winnipeg, has the following editorial under the caption, "A Wall Around Lumber."

"The most advanced ideas of protec tection yet evolved have come lately from our lumber manufacturers, particularly the British Columbia section of them. They want nothing less than a lumber tariff wall around their industry which will effectually shut out competition from imports from the United States, and sweeping and unreasonable as their demand is, they seem determined to get it or its equivalent from some source. As a matter of course appeals in this direction made to the present Ottawa administration met with no encouragement, but were promptly refused. Then these timber butchers turned their attention to the managers of the great Canadian railways for relief. These railway managers during the last twenty years have been bothered with many a demand for reduced freight rates, some reasonable and many unreasonable. This appeal made a couple of weeks ago to Second Vice-President Whyte of the C. P. R., for an increase of freight rates on lumber from the United States sufficient to shut off its import altogether, is the first appeal we have heard of for heavier railroad tariff, and it must have been refreshing as well as surprising to that able railway manager. Of course the appellants were ready to show how without competition they could manufacture cheaper, and even the consumer would be benefitted. But even this absurd and ludicrous argument failed to catch the veteran railway man. He had listened to bushels of rubbish like that in his day, and knew what value to place upon it. That the freight rate hoisters will influence him favorably to their requests is not at all likely. His own covert threat of his company embarking in the lumber business in opposition to those now therein, unless better prices for lumber could be had for the pioneer settler, which is of very recent date, would proclaim him a blatant hypocrite if he yielded in one point to the unreasonable requests of these lumbermen: and men of Mr. Whyte's stamp, ability and experience do not jump all fours into such a visible trap."

The motive prompting the above sentiments is identical with that of the tariff-seeking lumbermen,—self-interest. The Commercial looks at the question only from the consumers' point of view, but the article appears to be lacking in logic. The Commercial is willing that the industries of its own province should be "walled around" without raising any outcry and expecting no outcry from the lumber-producing districts of the west for the greater prices paid for food stuffs or supplies in consequence of that protection, but yet when the lumber men seek like protection the Commercial decries their action as an outrage. The lumbermen ask only the protection that is accorded other important industries, and it is not for the purpose of shutting out American lumber but with the object of regulating the prices, now reduced by the American lumbermen by the aid of favorable discrimination in transportation rates and by other local circumstances, so that the Canadian producers can compete on an equal footing.

In the other remedial course,—the adjustment of transportation rates,—the B. C. lumbermen ask for nothing that is not reasonable and just. They naturally object to a transportation tariff which charges them nearly double the rate paid by American shippers. This factor enters largely into the grievances of the B. C. lumbermen and they can be readily excused for asking that the one be increased if the other cannot be reduced.

OF the six games the Fernie Junior hockey team have played this season they have won 5 and drawn 1. This is a record to be proud of. The seniors have likewise a fine record having defeated all the teams of the Crows Nest Pass without suffering one defeat. The town has every reason to be proud of its hockey exponents, both Seniors and Juniors.

THE ROSSLAND MINER in a pointless article draws attention to the heavy percentage of crime in the Fernie district and the apparent laxity of the "authorities" in quelling it. If the writer states the truth, and in a general way it is the truth, when he says that the jails are full of criminals of all sorts, his argument loses its force, for any police force who are so vigilant as to tax the accommodation of the government jails with criminals cannot be said to be negligent of their duties. The police cannot be held responsible if the jail accommodation is not sufficient, nor are they accountable for the spirit of lawlessness that is charged to the district. Their duty is to arrest the offenders and the Miner's own words admit that they are performing that duty.

WHAT about the fire alarm? The town possesses an up-to-date chemical engine, the usefulness of which depends largely upon promptness at reaching the fire in its early stage. Yet the town practically possesses no general alarm by which the brigade and citizens generally can be summoned hastily. It is true that the funds for fire protection purposes are barely sufficient to pay the expenses already incurred. For this reason we do not advocate the purchasing of an expensive bell or other costly alarm without seeing where the funds are to come from but in the present condition of affairs some simple cheap contrivance should be arranged until such time as the funds will warrant a more permanent arrangement. A large triangle or circular saw hung in the air can be made to cause a big din and at any rate will answer the purpose of a fire-alarm better than nothing at all. At the same time they cannot be objected to on the ground of expense. Two or even three such alarms placed in different parts of the town would be more effective, than one centrally located. In fact such an arrangement might answer very satisfactorily in place of an expensive fire alarm.

Tendency of the Times.

The tendency of medical science is toward preventive measures. The best thought of the world is being given to the subject. It is easier and better to prevent than to cure. It has been fully demonstrated that pneumonia, one of the most dangerous diseases that men have to contend with, can be prevented by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Pneumonia always results from a cold or an attack of influenza (grip), and it has been observed that this remedy counteracts any tendency of these diseases toward pneumonia. This has been fully proven in many thousands of cases in which this remedy has been used during the great prevalence of colds and grip in recent years, and can be relied upon with implicit confidence. Pneumonia often results from a slight cold when no danger is apprehended until it is suddenly discovered that there is fever and difficulty in breathing and pains in the chest, then it is announced that the patient has pneumonia. Be on the safe side and take Chamberlains Cough Remedy as soon as the cold is contracted. It always cures. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Mike Tuco, an Italian, 24 years of age died in the Old Town on Tuesday of kidney complaint. The funeral on Thursday was largely attended by countrymen of the deceased. The horse attached to the sleigh that conveyed the corpse had difficulty in breaking a new track in the deep snow and the procession of pedestrians went ahead and beat a track.

F. C. Gamble, of Victoria, engineer of works, was in town this week to take steps towards preparing plans for the new Fernie jail for which $1800 has been appropriated. Mr. Gamble will prepare two plans, one for a new jail entirely separate from the present building and the other an addition to the present building with certain modifications. The department will decide which is the preferable course and the work of construction will be commenced very shortly.

The Aaron Johnson Company presented the well-known and popular drama, Jack O'Diamonds on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. It was the original intention of the management to put on their other drama, Hazel Kirke, on the second evening but the audience was so slim on the 24th that it was thought best to repeat the performance. A larger audience turned out to witness the play on the second evening but the Company did not receive the patronage they deserved. Jack O'Diamonds is a thrilling drama with a moral. It was put on in a very creditable manner as a whole, and two or three parts are deserving of special mention. Mr. Johnson, is a strong actor, who takes the part of the hero in a masterly manner. Baby Johnson, his little four year old daughter is a cute little actress and the lariat performance of a Mexican cow-boy is phenomenal. The lack of scenery, however was a decided drawback.

Henry Kershaw, of Fort Steele, was in town this week.

The concert to be given at the Methodist church next Thursday, March 3rd, promises to be a great musical treat. The choir will be assisted by 25 male voices. Numerous solos, quartettes, etc., from the best singers in town are on the program. Tickets 50 cents.

The carnival to-night promises to be a very successful event. Many are preparing costumes and the racing feature is a drawing card. The senior mile championship of the town will be contested by Mr. McKellar, O'Hearn and two others. Two races for boys will also take place. The string band will be in attendance. Names of characters represented should be handed in at the door on slips of paper.

E. Walter, of Marino & Walter, Coleman, was in town this week. He states that his firm commence the construction of 104 ovens for the International Company this week. The work during the remainder of the winter will be confined rock-quarrying for the foundation of the ovens. The camp is in a prosperous condition. The coal company are taking on more men steadily and three shifts are being worked.

The report current in the town that the company intended putting block 15 of the townsite on the market has been denied by Mr. Davies, land commissioner for the Coal Co. Mr. Davies states that he has received no intimation of any change in the policy of the Company to erect a handsome office building on this square. The plans are being completed in Toronto. "No." concluded Mr. Davies, "we cannot sell you a lot in block 15."

The brick-building proposition has reached a promising stage. An agreement re the lease of certain clay property adjoining the town has been submitted to the directors of the Coal Company for their approval after which, if satisfactory, no time will be lost in forming a company and getting down to business. Mr. Todhunter intimates that the company may be turning out bricks by June 1st. The plant will not far exceed $10,000 and building bricks will be put on the market at about $12 per thousand.

BEHIND THE DOOR

BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

AUTHOR OF "A HOUSE OF TEARS" "RED POST PARK" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1894, BY TALLOTSON & SON.

The principal question agitating the minds of the jurymen was the question of the locked doors. It was easy to see, as the inspector pointed out, that it would be impossible for any one inside either of the two rooms to lock his door. There was no keyhole inside the door—nothing but the rectangular brass box, which projected about half an inch from the door itself, into which it was set.

One of the jurymen suggested that it was possible the whole lock could be taken to pieces from the inside, and put together again.

"A very good suggestion," said the inspector, "and one I mentioned to Detective Goringe, but with the assistance of a locksmith we had the locks examined, and found that they are both screwed into the door, and that the screws are all on the outside. Therefore it would be just as impossible to screw the locks on as to turn the keys in them—from the inside. I think, gentlemen, you may safely make up your minds on one point—that the doors were locked from the outside. The locksmith who examined them with us is quite positive that the locks have not been disturbed for years."

The foreman seemed more perplexed than ever, as with his hand to his chin he gazed at the shining brass box on the inside of Steinworth's door. He suggested to the inspector that there might possibly be some means of tampering with the lock from the inside, and that he would be glad to be locked in the bedroom for a few moments. Inspector Briggs smilingly complied with the foreman's request, explaining to the rest of the jury, some of whom stood on the landing, while others were peering into Vickery's bedroom, that this was how the door was found by Constable Metcalf on the morning of the murder.

With his hand to his chin he gazed on the shining brass box.

In a few minutes the inquisitive foreman begged to have the door opened, and confessed with much chagrin that he could discover nothing—that it was perfectly evident to him now that Inspector Briggs was right, and that the door could only have been locked from the outside. "Which points to an accomplice," sapiently observed the foreman, smacking his lips.

The jury next examined, one after the other, the window of Steinworth's bedroom, and saw that the flower box outside the window, as well as the plants in it, was undisturbed, and that it would be perfectly impossible for any one to have gone in or out of the window without leaving behind him traces which could not possibly be obliterated in the course of a few hours.

Vickery's room was next examined, and then the jury mounted to the second floor and surveyed Miss Rodney's room, and a small boxroom which adjoined it.

In the end the fifteen men were obliged to admit that there was nothing for it but to accept Vickery's confession, and be satisfied with a solution of the mystery of the locked doors which Inspector Briggs offered them, namely, that it was quite possible—though he insisted he did not urge it as a theory, or a belief of his own—some one had entered the house after the murder, or was concealed in the house all night, and had secured the doors in order to give himself ample time to carry out some plan, the nature of which was not yet known.

"Of course," added the inspector, "your business, gentlemen, is concerned with nothing but the murder of Mrs. Davorn. I have no desire to confuse you with secondary matters."

The fifteen jurymen left the house thoroughly discomfited. Their visit had taught them little or nothing. There was no mystery in the case which had not been cleared up by Vickery's confession. The mystery of the stolen money did not concern them. It was a matter for the police.

Having made up their minds so far the jury and its guardians sought out a decent restaurant and there discussed a liberal meal.

When the court was reopened at three o'clock the coroner, who seemed to have got rid of a good deal of his weariness, informed the jury that Dr. Percival was now in attendance, and would at once proceed to give his evidence.

Dr. Stanley Percival was then called, and approached the table, where the oath was administered to him. He gave his evidence rapidly and with ease, his kindly face lighted up with a look of intelligence which made the jury to a man feel they were listening to the evidence of one in whom they could place implicit confidence.

Dr. Percival testified to his having been summoned to 13 Felspar road shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning by Miss Rodney; to his finding Mrs. Davorn dead in bed—quite cold and rigid, explained the doctor—and to his subsequent discovery of the sponge under the bed.

He was here interrupted by the foreman.

"Can you tell us, sir, at what time—about what time—in your opinion, the sponge had been used to chloroform the deceased?"

The doctor smiled at the question, the coroner looked up from his notes, directing a curious glance at the foreman, and the foreman himself instantly collapsed.

"I can give [illegible] that point," said Dr. Percival. "All I can say is that the sponge contained unmistakable traces of chloroform—traces that would be apparent to any one who had ever used the drug. There was in the room, as I entered it, the sweet, fruity, seductive odour, and to the best of my belief, judging from this and from the condition of the sponge when I picked it up, the sponge had contained chloroform in a highly volatile condition an hour or two previous to my discovery of it."

"I am afraid, doctor, you have very nearly allowed yourself to be drawn into a dissertation on the nature and properties of chloroform," said the handsome coroner, smiling blandly. "You mean to suggest, I think, that the chloroform had been introduced into the deceased's bedroom between the hours of 4 and 6 o'clock on the morning of the 10th of October?"

"Exactly, sir."

"Well, doctor, proceed, if you please."

"I formulated an opinion at the time I was in the deceased's bedroom on Thursday morning," continued the witness promptly, "that Mrs. Davorn had not succumbed to the effects of chloroform in any shape."

A quick thrill of excitement ran through the court at this statement. Even the ennuied coroner looked up from his desk and gazed in astonishment at Dr. Percival.

Behind his sheltering pillar Detective Goringe smiled.

CHAPTER XVII.

STEINWORTH IS ANXIOUS.

Albert Steinworth was visibly affected by Dr. Percival's evidence. His former nonchalance had disappeared, and he listened with breathless attention to the doctor's evidence concerning the chloroform.

Vickery, who had been seated at the back of the court after it had reassembled, had pushed his way forward when he heard Dr. Percivl make his opening statement. When the witness gave it as his emphatic opinion that Mrs. Davorn had not succumbed to the effects of chloroform, a low cry escaped from him, a cry which might have been produced by overwhelming amazement, or might have been a cry of intense relief.

Maurice Leclerc seemed hopelessly puzzled, as he stood in the court listening to the evidence of his friend. Just as the court adjourned for luncheon Dr. Percival had appeared in the small room where Inspector Briggs had directed Ethel Rodney to sit. Leclerc was with her when Percival—profuse in his apologies to every one for being late—arrived. The worthy doctor somewhat flurriedly dispatched Ethel home in his brougham, and then turned to Leclerc.

"I think it will be all right," said he, pinching the young doctor's arm. "And now I'm hungry, and I am sure you are. Let us forget the unfortunate business we are here to give evidence about, and join our common friend, the house surgeon in the hospital. He has promised me a luncheon, and I'll take the liberty of inviting you to join us. But not a word about the other affair, if you please. Norton is going to give evidence too. He conducted the post mortem with me."

Leclerc was fortunately not aware that among other documents which Inspector Briggs carried with him was a warrant for his arrest, a warrant which the inspector had decided to put into operation as soon as the court was over for the day. When Inspector Brigs heard the confession of Bernard Vickery, he was puzzled to decide whether or no he had better abandon two of the three warrants he held. As he listened to Dr. Percival's evidence he had an uneasy feeling that the third warrant was in jeopardy. It was a bewildering case. He would give a good deal to know what was Goringe's opinion of the whole matter. But anyhow the self-condemned man had better be put under lock and key.

Dr. Percival did not take long to resume the thread of his narrative. He knew he had electrified the court, but his face showed no signs of triumph.

"My impression," he continued, in a calm and measured tone, "that Mrs. Davorn had not died from the effects of chloroform was based upon more than one assumption. But I felt that an impression so hastily formed wanted very strong corroboration, under the circumstances. I have obtained that corroboration. With the valuable assistance of Surgeon Norton I have made a post mortem examination of the deceased, and I have arrived at the conclusion that she met her death through natural causes. The exact cause of death, in fact, was apoplexy. I think I may venture upon the opinion that it was a sudden and unexpected seizure, which probably occurred between the hours of midnight on the 9th of October and 2 o'clock on the morning of the 10th."

There was a profound stillness in the court as Dr. Percival delivered himself of his opinion as to the exact cause of Mrs. Davorn's death.

The coroner was the first to speak.

"Then, your opinion, doctor," he said, "is that this chloroform had nothing to do with the death of the deceased, Martha Davorn?"

"That is certainly my opinion."

"And your inference is that if chloroform was administered it must have been administered after death?"

"That is my opinion, if I may venture on an opinion in such matters."

"We shall now let you have the evidence of Dr. Norton, who assisted Dr. Percival in the post mortem," said the coroner, with a briskness which almost alarmed the 15 jurymen.

The coroner had scarcely concluded his sentence when a strange hoarse cry startled the court.

Every eye was turned in the direction from which the cry came.

Albert Steinworth was seen to throw up his arms, and before Constable Metcalf, who stood near, could grasp the young man, Steinworth had fallen down in a fit.

Detective Goringe smiled again.

CHAPTER XVIII.

INSPECTOR BRIGGS' JOKE.

"Here's a pretty kettle of fish!" said Inspector Briggs to Detective Goringe, as the pair sat in a room in the police station at Clayfields.

It was the evening of the 12th of October, and the coroner's enquiry had been adjourned to the following Monday.

"Vickery confesses to murder," growled the inspector; "doctor swears the woman died a natural death. Steinworth, whom I had fixed upon, clears himself completely, yet he falls down in a fit when he hears that the chloroform was administered a little too late. Leclerc seems to be out of it altogether, and yet all through he has been as nervous as a cat. Come, now, Mr. Goringe, it is only fair to ask you for your views at this stage. Whatever we do, we mustn't get hold of the wrong sow by the ear."

"I don't think it is so very difficult," said the detective, "to reconcile Vickery's confession with the doctor's statements as to the absolute cause of death. But as I have frequently told you I don't deal in opinions. I still possess an open mind on the case, so far as it is concerned with the lady's death. Don't you see now how rash it would have been to fix upon any one so early in the day—before we had the medical evidence?"

"I admire your gift of being able to keep yourself and your views so well in hand," said Inspector Briggs, with a somewhat sour smile. "I have no doubt I see how you mean to reconcile the man Vickery's statement with the doctor's as to the cause of death. In fact, old Percival himself ventures on an opinion in the matter. Vickery could have attempted to chloroform Mrs. D. at the time he stated, only he was in ignorance of a rather important fact—namely, that he was operating on a dead body."

"Exactly."

"But then we get back to those locked doors, and that's what fixes me and confuses the whole business, for I am wholly of your opinion—"

"Please don't tie me down to opinions," interrupted Goringe.

"Well, of your conviction, if you like the word better, that no outside aid was brought into requisition."

"Dear me, dear me!" said the detective, with a sigh. "Is it not a dreadful thing to contemplate how a man's words may get distorted? I have never declared I possessed any such conviction. What I did say was that the front-parlour wondow was not opened from the outside."

"I stand corrected," said Inspector Briggs. "But I must confess you don't help me much."

"I give you all the help I possibly can. In the first place, remember our bargain. I was to have the thief—you the murderer. Now haven't I done my very best to keep you from jumping to conclusions? I consider I have done really good and useful work in that direction. I have made you cautious, and prevented you from arresting an innocent man. At the same time—don't loook so glum, inspector—I am ready now to listen to any new views of yours, with the new light that has been thrown upon the whole case, and to discuss them with you openly."

"Thanks. Well, then, here are three men in desperate need of money—"

"No uncommon want," interrupted the detective. "But you will pardon me for saying that you are not quite correct. Steinworth probably wanted money. Vickery, with some insane project in his head, thought he did. Leclerc dosen't know what he wants. He belongs to that order of young man who, if you fetched the moon for him at his own request, would tell you the planet was worn out, and of no use, and that the farthest fixed star was really the thing which he thought would suit his requirements. But I interrupted you."

"A useful interruption, perhaps, but, as usual, a sort of damper. Well, whatever you may think, or say, or advise, I will confess that I have not been able to shift my first impression out of my head."

"Your first suspicion was Steinworth."

"Yes. And his behaviour in court to-day, notwithstanding Vickery's candid confession, and the doctor's evidence, has confirmed me in my impression that he knows something."

"Possibly he may. But it is also possible that he is subject to fainting fits, and that the fit he had in court this afternoon may have been absolutely unconnected with anything that ever happpened at 13 Felspar road."

"The damper again."

"No—the brake, or the caution signal, if you like. People of our cloth must learn to work on the block system, with a continuous brake."

"I think you puzzle me quite as much as the case itself. But let me resume. Steinworth was certainly locked into his room at 6 o'clock in the morning, and did not get in or out of his bedroom window. Vickery was also locked into his room at 6 o'clock in the morning. Yet his statement—which was a most clear and straightforward and convincing statement—is that he attempted to chloroform Mrs. D., and that he stole the £1,300. He did not get in or out of his bedroom that night."

"On that point I admit I now have a conviction. Vickery did not get in or out of his window."

"Then you think it possible that Vickery, for some reason which we can't fathom, has falsely accused himself. There is conclusive evidence that his sponge—he identifies it—was discovered in the dead woman's room. I am forced to admit that fact is very strong corroboration of his confession, and yet I am still of opinion that if Steinworth didn't do the job he knows who did."

"I was about to give you my views definitely on that point when we started, but I now think I shall wait. It will be better for both of us."

"I am afraid we are waiting rather long as it is. Losing valuable time."

"I am not losing any time. I have concentrated my whole attention on the discovery of the thief and the recovery of the money, and though I cannot at this stage report any progress which would satisfy so exacting a person as you, inspector, I know I am neither losing time nor making any steps backward."

"Then you have some definite theory about the theft?"

"I have. But it is not in a form yet which will bear discussion. If I put you in possession of my theory—"

"I thought you didn't deal in such things," interrupted Inspector Briggs, smiling.

"I don't put my theories into shape until I am certain they are capable of demonstration. As I was saying, if I laid my mind open to you now it might possibly hamper you in your search for the murderer."

"Anyhow you will pardon me for correcting you. There has been no murder, and therefore there is no murderer to unearth."

"You need not be so precise about your terms with a pal," said Goringe, a little nettled at Briggs' interruption. "I should, of course, have said your search for the man who attempted to murder Mrs. Davorn."

"But there is neither a murder nor an attempt to murder. It is a relief to find you tripping," observed Briggs, with a laugh.

"You mustn't let the absence of a murder discourage you," said Goringe. "I know it is an unpleasant thing to find out that a murderer has been rudely snatched from your grasp just as you felt you had the barnacles on him, but you must bear in mind that if a thief in the act of committing a theft seeks to chloroform a person who is afterward proved to have died a natural death, he aggravates his offence very considerably and rises to a somewhat high rank in our criminal brigade. Didn't I warn you in the beginning that this murder business was full of pitfalls?"

"The warning hasn't helped me much," said Inspector Briggs, gloomily.

"Base ingratitude, sir," said Detective Goringe, with a sigh. "I sympathize with you, I am sure. I know the state of your feelings now. Something like the French ideal of an Englishman—one who wants to go out and kill something. You are eager now to go out and arrest somebody for murder. All this disappointment comes of taking a violent interest in people who commit capital offences—a class of people upon whom it is difficult to place the least dependence. My lesser delights in tracking thieves—who are usually as sane as company promoters—have, after all, their corresponding advantages. Whatever you do, inspector, please don't lose your temper with me."

"I'll try not to—but this isn't any time for chaff. We shall get into a regular stew here if we don't look sharp. Here is Vickery arrested on his own confession, which he sticks to. And here are Steinworth and the young medical, both at large, with no protecting eye upon them. Now if none of these is really connected with the job we're in a thundering mess, and if the two men at large, or either of them, prove to be mixed up with the affair, and if either or both of them hook it right away, we'll fall in for severe censure."

"Are they aware your lynx eye is not directed upon them?"

"I suppose they are."

"Have you no lingering suspicion now of Leclerc? He was a prime favourite with you for a short time."

"Just a trifle," said the inspector. "If Steinworth and Vickery are out of it he would still, to my suspicious mind—that is, if the robbery business hadn't been handed over to you—stand a good chance of being run in."

"Miss Rodney, of course, being in your suspicious mind the accomplice—the locker of the doors, and so forth?" observed Goringe, glancing fixedly at the finger nails of his left hand.

"Well, yes," said the inspector, after a pause. "The young man seemed to be all eyes and ears for Dr. Percival's evidence. But tell me one thing—did you know from the beginning that Mrs. D. wasn't killed by the chloroform?"

"I inferred from a conversation I had with Dr. Percival that he had other views."

"And with that knowledge—for, of course, you won't allow me to call it anything else—do you think you were quite candid with me?"

"Quite. I acted as I thought best. I told you not to be quite sure it was chloroform. If you had known positively from the start that Mrs. Davorn died a natural death you would have lost all interest in the case. If you confined yourself to the tracking of the thief you would have perplexed me. I own I am the essence of selfishness. But come, don't lose heart. The coroner's enquiry is not yet over. The coroner—that hopelessly fatigued poor fellow—is as much perplexed as yourself, and he's a pretty sharp customer, believe me. There is work to be done yet, and work for both of us. I am going to do a little of my share of it to-night."

Detective Goringe rose and lit his pipe.

"In what way?"

"The house—No. 13, I mean, of course—is now deserted, is it not?"

"Yes. Miss Rodney has left all the keys with me, and we have shut the place up until further orders. You will find every door locked and every window securely hasped."

"I suppose I may have the keys?"

"Certainly. For what purpose, may I ask?"

"I am going to sleep there to-night. The coroner's court reassembles on Monday, and I am going to see if I can't do a good deal toward clearing up my share of the mystery before that highly intelligent foreman declares what the verdict of the jury is."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

To Get Rid of Rats.

After all other remedies fail, there still remains a way of getting rid of rats, and that is by depriving them of water. They can live for a very long time without food and when hard pressed will not hesitate to eat each other, but no rat can go twenty-four hours without drink. Therefore if every possible means of obtaining water is taken from the rats they will desert the vicinity.

CROUP, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH

Are Ailments Which Cause Great Anxiety to Mothers Who Are Not Familiar with the Curative Powers of

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine.

It is a serious question to every mother as to how she can best combat croup, whooping cough, bronchitis, and similar ailments which are sure to attack the little ones at times least expected.

The hollow, croupy cough comes with terrible foreboding as it arouses the hopelessness of battling against a disease which frequently defies the most skilful physicians.

In croup above all other diseases prompt action is of the greatest importance imaginable. With Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine at hand any mother can effect almost instant relief when the children are struggling frantically for breath. By sheer force of merit it has won its way to popularity, and is known all over this continent as the mose effective treatment for throat and lung troubles that science has ever devised.

Mr. W. McGee, 49 Wright avenue, Toronto, Ont., states:—"There is no remedy in my opinion that can act more promptly than Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. It cured my son of croup, absolutely, in ome night. We gave him a dose when he was black in the face with choking. It gave him instant relief. During the night he took several doses and in the morning woke up bright, perfectly well, and cheerful. I must say it is a wonderful medicine."

Mrs. J. W. Lloyd, Albion street, Belleville, Ont., states:—

"In the beginning of last winter I took a very severe cold, accompanied with a bad cough, and was almost laid up for a time. I tried several remedies, but with indifferent results. On the advice of a friend I got a bottle of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and found that it relieved the cough at once. By the time I had taken the one bottle my cold was gone, and I can truthfully recommend it as a splendid remedy for coughs and colds.

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, 25 cents a bottle, family size (three times as much) 60 cents, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every bottle.

HE BEATS THE DRUM.

Ever since my early boyhood
I have thought I'd like to land
With a big stick and a beaver,
Marching on before the band;
But since I've become an adult
I have changed my hanker some,
And I've grown to the opinion
That I'd rather beat the drum.

"Tap-a-tap-tap!" we hear the snare go
When we're marching down the street;
Then the big man with the bass drum
Sounds an energetic beat.
"Root-te-toot-toot!" the brass sings shrilly,
And the trombone "zoom-de-zum!"
But the man the fellows march by
Is the man that beats the drum.

Let the old drum major swing his
Stick as grandly as he may;
Let the snare drum go "rat-tat-tat!"
And let all the brasses play;
Though the feet in line are lifting,
Yet the marchers wait to hear
From the "boom-te-boom-te" fellow
Who is bringing up the rear.

He gets mighty little credit,
But he's right there with the stuff,
While the major reaps the laurels
By the virtue of his bluff;
But he's got the satisfaction,
Though his honors never come,
That they couldn't get along without
The man that beats the drum.

So it is in life. The major
Makes a pretty thing for show
With his uniform all gaudy
And his cap arranged just so
But the fellow in the rear ranks,
Working tooth, toe nail and thumb,
Is the man that keeps us going;
He's the man that beats the drum.

Nothing Else Would Satisfy Him.

He—What shall we buy our little Willie for Christmas?

She—I'm afraid nothing will keep him quiet but a new drum.

Nobody to stop you if you eat and eat and eat.
Rule for second helpin's doesn't count today, you see;
Grandpa's got dyspepsy; land, I'm glad 'tain't me!

Company's a-comin' from most everywheres around;
Think there was a hundred in the parlor by the sound;
Won't the tongues be goin' when the old folks sit and talk!
Won't we fellers holler runnin' races down the walk!
Won't we all be hungry when we're waitin' to begin!
Won't there be a racket when they bring the turkey in!
Grandpa won't eat nothin' but some mush and bread and tea,
'Cause he's got dyspepsy; say, I'm glad 'tain't me!

Grandma says the pilgrims felt so sort of glad and gay
'Cause the wolves and Injuns hadn't eat 'em all that they Made the first Thanksgivin', and she says we all are bound
To be truly thankful when the blessed day comes around.
And you bet I'm thankful when I see poor grandpa there
Eatin' bread and porridge, with the goodies everywhere,
Sick on old Thanksgivin'; that's enough to try a saint;
Grandpa's got dyspepsy; whew, I'm glad I ain't!

Enjoyed the Joke Himself.

Bennet Musson, who is an actor as well as an author, tells the following at his own expense:

Last winter he was playing in an eastern city, and a friend of his, who was watching the performance, sat behind two strangers who were studying their programmes between the acts.

"I've seen this name, Bennet Musson, before," said one of the men.

"Yes; he's an author," said the other.

"Oh."

"What do you think of his acting?"

"Well," the first speaker replied slowly, "he may be a good writer."—Boston Globe.

A Healthful Costume.

When the Fraser highlanders landed in North America in 1757, it was proposed to change the dress on account of the cold winters and hot summers. The officers successfully opposed this and were ultimately justified by the highlanders being the healthiest soldiers in the army. In the campaign in Holland in 1794 some regiments lost as many as 300 from disease, but the Black Watch, which had 300 recruits in its ranks, had only twenty-five casualties, including the killed in battle.

Durable Whitewash.

A very durable whitewash that will stand nearly as well as paint is made as follows: Slake a bushel of lime with boiling water and thin sufficiently with cold water to make a good whitewash; dissolve a pint of white vitriol (sulphate of zinc) in boiling water, only enough to thoroughly dissolve it; also a quart of fine salt. The bushel of lime will weigh about seventy pounds, and by keeping the above proportions a greater or less amount can be made.

HELD UP BY CUBAN BANDITS

Sir William Van Horn Was the Victim.

ON THE CUBAN RAILWAY

Windows of The Sleepers Were Smashed, But no Other Damage Was Done—On a Hunt For The Bandits —The Gang Located.

Sir William Van Horne, chairman of the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and chief of the syndicate which is exploiting the railway system of Cuba, was the victim of a hold-up in Santiago Province, according to a rumor which has reached Havana. Details of the affair are lacking, but it is said that the train which bore Sir William and a party of friends and officials of the Cuban railway, was stopped by bandits near Santiago.

The train crew and passengers stood off the bandits and the train moved off without the robbers gaining any booty. The sleeper in which were Sir William and his friends was, it is said, pretty badly smashed as to windows, but otherwise no damage was done. Rurales have been sent out to hunt down the bandits, and are reported to have located the gang a short distance from the scene of the hold-up.

New Freight Tariff.

The C.P.R. and Grand Trunk new freight tariff, from Montreal and Toronto to Vancouver, New Westminster and Victoria is now in force. It is not only higher than the old tariff but also higher than the rates from the eastern United States shipping points, Boston, New York and Pittsburg, to the same points in the west. The Canadian service is generally speaking from 8 to 20 cents per 100 pounds higher than the service from points in the States, and about one hundred articles are affected, the principal ones among them being agricultural implements, glass bottles, drugs, dynamos, rubber goods, bar iron, machinery, lawn mowers, paper, leather, sewing machines, stamped ware, stoves, furnaces, wagons, windmills, and all kinds of woodenware. The Manufacturers' Association organ makes a big kick.

Autos For Farmers.

"Automobiles will soon be taking the place of wagons on many farms in the United States and Canada," declared Isaac B. Potter, president of the American Motor League, in Chicago recently. He said that soon thousands of the vehicles will be running to town with the farmers' produce. The speaker said that already a large number of tillers of the soil had invested in automobiles.

MONTREAL FIRE.

Nine Persons Killed and Seven Injured in Notre Dame St. Building.

As the result of a fire in the five-story stone building at the corner of Notre Dame and St. Gabriel streets, Montreal, three people are dead and seven others are in the hospitals badly injured. The dead are: Francis Clow, 48 years of age; Louis Desjardins, 45 years; and an unidentified woman, about 24 years of age.

The injured are: Mrs. Z. Plante, Miss Bussiere, Adolphe Pelletier, Mrs. Gagne, Arthur Valiquette.

The ground floor of the building was occupied by Bloomfield Bros.' jewelry establishment, while the top stories were occupied as offices and lodging rooms. The escape of the occupants was cut off by the fire and smoke, and the people were forced to jump from the windows to save their lives. Had it not been for the quick work of the firemen at least five of the injured would have been suffocated. Two jumped from a fourth-story window into a life net, while three others were taken down a ladder by the firemen. The bodies of Desjardins and the unknown young woman were found lying in the hallway at the top of the stairs. They were evidently trying to escape when they were overcome by the smoke. Clow managed to make his way out of the building, but fell dead on the sidewalk. The damage caused by the fire amounted to about $15,000.

RELIGION'S MYSTERIES

PREACHER DEALS WITH THINGS BEYOND HUMAN UNDERSTANDING.

THEIR ACCEPTANCE BY FAITH.

The Footprints of Truth—Mysteries of the Gospel—A Mystery Essential to Peace—Mystery of the Trinity—Harmonizing Creeds—God Too Big For Finite Mind to Compass.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 14.—In dealing with those mysteries of religion that are beyond human understanding and which many find a stumbling block to belief the preacher in this sermon urges their acceptance by faith as the first essential step toward elucidation. The text is I Timothy iii, 16, "Great is the mystery of godliness."

Ignorance is a stunted scoffer. As a dwarf she will ridicule the helping hand of knowledge, which she is too short of stature to reach. As an iconoclastic waif of the street she will hurl derisive missiles at the big square windows of the temple of wisdom, whose walls she is too puny to topple down. "Come," said an aristocratic but very ignorant woman of London to her guest—"come into the front room. I want to show you a poor, crazy, deluded and yet harmless old man. He seems to have an intelligent face, but there he sits in the house just across the street hour after hour, day after day and week after week as a little child, with a clay pipe, blowing soap bubbles." Who was the frivolous hostess who was patronizingly asking her guest to laugh at the old man who seemed to find employment in blowing a few soap bubbles in Leicester Square, London? Not one person of this generation ever heard of her name. Who was the poor, silly old man of intelligent face, with a penny clay pipe, blowing soap bubbles? He was Isaac Newton, whose skull incased the greatest brain of his time. He was Isaac Newton, laboriously, intensely, unremittingly studying the laws of the refraction of light, for which investigations and discoveries he was to be honored by scientific societies all around the world. It is never safe to take public opinion as a guide in estimating men or things. Shallow critics often assume a sapient mien and in supercilious tone deride the wisdom they cannot comprehend. A stuffed owl with spectacles on nose may pose in a museum as an emblem of wisdom, but the winged denizen of the forest hooting in the darkness is no feathered oracle.

How often have the pure white garments of wisdom been bespattered and befouled by blatant, bombastic ignorance! How often has the philosopher and the truth seeker been taunted with his failure to solve the problems of the universe! He does not know everything; no man more conscious of that fact then he. But should he on that account desert the fountain of wisdom and refrain altogether from drinking at the Pierian spring? Should the scientific student be so discouraged at his limitations as to destroy the telescope because it does not reach the limits of space? Should he throw away his microscope because it does not magnify enough? Is he to burn out with senseless passion eyes that are not omniscient and wreck his eardrums because they fail to detect remote harmonics? Isaac Newton, himself the greatest philosopher of his time, was one of the humblest of men. At the end of his life he said: "I know not how I may appear to others. As for myself, I seem to be like a schoolboy playing at the foot of the sand dunes, gathering here a white shell and a smoother stone than ordinary, while the great sea of knowledge lies all unexplored before me." Because a man does not know everything, that is no reason why he should despise the "temple of wisdom." Because here and there a veil or a mist cannot be penetrated, that is no reason why he should become a ground mole and not try to follow in the self revealed footprints of truth.

There are two purposes for this sermon. The first is to talk about some of the great mysteries of the gospel. I would show you that about every church altar there are great Appalachian ranges, great towering mountain peaks of mysteries. So high they are that the mind of man cannot attain to them, yet each bears the mark of divine certitude, the mark of the cross is stamped upon them as the Mount of the Holy Cross in Colorado bears the sign of the cross. To this sign we bow and believe, even though we cannot understand. Peter could not understand; John of the Apocalypse could not understand, and Paul, beholding them, exclaimed, "Great is the mystery of godliness!" What those mighty intellects could not grasp must be a mystery to us until it is fully explained beyond the grave.

The second purpose of the sermon is the practical side. It is to remind you that, though we now "know only in part," that part is sufficient for all the great purposes of salvation and redemption. It is to prove, as E. H. Chapin puts it, that "although we see through a glass darkly, we do see something," and that that "something" is sufficient if we welcome it as a gospel handmaid to lead us into perfect peace and to lead us to that throne of God, where each can say, "I shall know even as also I am known."

The mystery of the Trinity: How can there be three persons and one Godhead? "Three in One and One in Three?" That is an inexplainable mystery. "You must be very careful," wrote a dear ministerial friend to me when I was preaching a series of sermons upon the Holy Spirit. "You must be very careful not to convey the false idea to your people that there are three distinct and separate thrones in heaven." It is a mystery to be reverently accepted beyond the power of the human mind to understand, and that it should be so is not strange, for God himself has declared, "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts." We cannot explain the personality of God any more than you can tell why the grass grows or the sun shines. But we do feel and know that, like the grass and the light, the Trinity of the Godhead is a great divine fact. And, furthermore, we do feel and know that as God the Father lives, so Christ was born into this world not only to save us from sin, but also to prove that God the Creator is a God of love. Mystery, mystery, mystery! A high, deep, impenetrable and overpowering mystery! Yet the mystery of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit is a fact revealed to us, to be accepted by faith and bringing to all who so receive it a message of joy and peace.

Consider how near this conception of Christ, the Divine Son manifested in human flesh, brings the Deity to us. If we did not have the manifestation of God's love in Jesus Christ, how would we worship? Even the lowest forms of religious truths cannot exist in the heart of man without some kind of an incarnation. I said some years ago in India to a Buddhist priest: "You do not believe that these hideous idols of wood and clay and stone have any divine power? You do not believe that those bleared eyes and that horrible grin and that twisted body is a god? You know you do not. Why, I could knock him down with my hand. I could crush him with the heel of my foot." "Oh, yes," answered the priest. "What you say is true. We intelligent leaders of the east do not believe those idols are gods. But the common people cannot conceive of a spirit God, as our prophet has revealed him to us. So we give the common people a god of clay and wood, which they can see and touch." Brother, our God has sent us Jesus Christ in the flesh. He came as a revelation of God. He came so that our finite minds might grasp the infinite. He came to show us that God could suffer as we suffer and be tempted as we are tempted, yet be without sin. He came as a God of never ending love. Mystery! Mystery! The Trinity is an inexplainable mystery. Yet it is a mystery we all need, a mystery we should all accept. It is a mystery essential to our peace.

Thus the mystery of the Trinity means simply this: God the Father comes to us and says: "To explain to you all things, my child, would be to set before you what you could not comprehend. Your mind is too weak to grasp it, any more than a little child in his father's laboratory can understand or grasp the chemical principle of the adhesion of the basic elements. But if you see the Godhead veiled by a human form, if you see the Spirit of God animating a being like yourself, if you come in contact with the divine perfections, active in human environment, you will then have a glimpse of the glory of the Godhead and realize something of the supernal mystery of Father, Son and Holy Spirit. All this I will show to prove that I am God, the Loving Father, and ye are my children." To-day we find the Trinity a mystery. But, though a mystery, deep and high and overpowering, it is a mystery so simple that a little child can reverence the majesty of the Father, can realize the love of the Son and can yield to the influence of the Holy Spirit. Great and yet beautiful and simple is the mystery of godliness in Jesus Christ.

The conflicting doctrines of God's omnipotence and man's free agency are an inexplainable mystery. Yes, we know that God is infinitely greater than man. We know that the Creator, who holds the seas in the palm of his hand and at whose touch the volcanoes smoke and the earth trembles and whose voice is the voice of the storm, has supreme control over the creatures he has made. He can say to man, "Go, and he goeth; come, and he cometh; do this, and he doeth it." But, though God the Omnipotent is truly all powerful, I know I can resist his will. I know, as a free agent, I can raise my hand or lower it. I know that I can clinch my fist with hate or have the open palm of love. I know I can walk across this pulpit to the right or to the left. I know I can choose between right and wrong. Free, free! Free am I, gloriously free! A mystery—a great unfathomable mystery! With God the Omnipotent I am still man, the free agent.

These two conflicting facts are true, but who can reconcile them? Therefore, after we have once accepted this nystery we can harmonize all Christian creeds at the foot of the cross. With it we can take down the bars of sectarianism and call all members of the different Protestant churches our brothers and our sisters. "How can you do that?" says some one to me. Simply enough. After this mystery—this great fundamental mystery—is once granted the question of the manner of your service and the church in which you will worship is determined by the aspect from which you view your relation to God. If I begin to argue from God down to man, I become a Calvinist. If I say to myself: "I know God is omnipotent. I know he can foresee all things. He can save me if he will, I know," then I naturally go into the Presbyterian Church. But if I say to myself: "I know I am a free agent. I know I can accept or reject my Heavenly Father," I go into the Methodist Church. Then, instead of arguing from God down to man, I argue from man up to God? It is simply the difference of putting the emphasis of my creed upon God's omnipotence or man's free agency. Yet, though I was born a Calvinist and have been baptized in a Calvinistic church and have received my theological education in a Calvinistic seminary, yet to-day I feel just as much at home in the Methodist Church as I do in the Presbyterian. I could just as logically be a member of a Methodist conference as I am now a member of a Calvinistic presbytery.

The harmonizing of the two doctrines—God's omnipotence and man's free agency—is a task that many have attempted in vain. But it is a glorious mystery that should make of believers of the different Protestant churches brothers and sisters at the foot of the cross. Therefore, my Christian brother, if you are living in a small country town do not make the mistake of trying to run in that village five or six different churches when there are only enough inhabitants to support one. Do not try to run a Congregational church and a Methodist church and a Lutheran church and a Baptist church and an Episcopalian church and a United Presbyterian church. Do not keep on continually talking about "my church." All Christian churches ought to belong to you and you to them. The difference of Protestant creeds is merely that of extra emphasis upon some one of God's great attributes. Remember hereafter that you ought to be able to worship God just as devoutly and earnestly before a Methodist altar as at an Episcopalian chancel or as in a Presbyterian pew. God has many gospel sheepfolds. These sheep are all fed by the same Divine Shepherd, although at times they are separated from each other by the sectarian fences built by man's creed and by infinite ignorance. "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold" applies as much to the Protestant church across the street as to your own chapel.

The mystery of why God ever let sin come into the world: It is an inexplicable mystery. It is a mystery the more inexplicable because, from a human standpoint, if there had been no sin then there would have been no need of a place of future punishment. But, after we have once accepted the belief that a loving God has allowed sin to come into this world for a purpose which we cannot fathom or analyze, then we find that some of the most beautiful sacrifices of Christian heroes and heroines have been inspired from this source to overcome the awful and eternal effects of evil. If there had been no sin there would have been no Moffatts and Whipples and Judsons, no Careys and Taylors, no Wilsons and Brainerds, no Patons and Elliotts in the missionary fields trying to save the ignorant brutal and cannibalistic savages from the awful degradation of their lives. If there had been no sin there would have been no Catherine Booths as "angels of light" laboring among the London slums, no Howards among the prisons, no Williamses to reach out rescuing hands from the Young Men's Christian Associations. If there were no sin there would be no such saving work for us to do for Christ as we can one and all now perform in his name.

Mystery of the resurrection: How is the transformation between earth and heaven to take place? We know not. We cannot explain. The more we study it the deeper becomes the mystery. But though the resurrection is a mystery, though we cannot by human reason understand how these poor bodies of ours can be so transformed that they will live forever, we can when reason halts proceed under the higher guidance of faith and accept the assurance of the Scriptures, that "this mortal shall put on immortality," and that "if our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." How can this body which we lay in the grave, giving it over to corruption, ever be revived? We do not know how, but we believe God and exclaim in triumph with the Patriarch, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and at last he shall stand upon the earth, and after my skin, even this body, is destroyed, then without my flesh shall I see God." Nor are we left exclusively to faith, for nature herself gives us a hint of a transformation so significant as to be encouraging. The other day my little girl brought to me a paper box, in which she had confined a caterpillar. This caterpillar had wrapped himself up in a cocoon. The cocoon looked exactly like a shroud. After awhile the caterpillar will emerge from that cocoon transformed into a beautiful butterfly. You cannot explain that transformation. Neither can I. Shall we witness the wonderful process of the caterpillar's metamorphosis from worm to butterfly and yet refuse to believe that God can, if he will, transform the physical body into a heavenly body?

I have preached this sermon on mysteries because I want young people, and especially young men, to fully realize that there are some statements found in the Bible that they should accept in faith, though they may never fully understand them in this life. Oh, man, if you are not ready to accept some facts about Christ and salvation you cannot understand then you are like a foolish man trying to encompass the Atlantic Ocean with a sewing girl's thimble or like a child peevishly sulking because you cannot understand the laws of gravity. God is too big for your finite mind to compass. Heaven is too large a place for you in your study to take apart and put together again as a little girl might play with her doll house.

Brother, sister, for many years troubled with mysteries, wash your eyes to-day in the "water of life" and look and live. Accept Christ as your Saviour and then leave all the inexplicable mysteries to be explained to you in a better world. "We now see as through a glass darkly;" yes, but, thank God, we can see enough to perceive the pardoning love of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

The police have given notice to owners of buildings where danger from overhanging iciles exist, but many have paid little attention to it This source of danger is constant and at any minute some passer-by is liable to receive a crushing blow on the head from a falling piece of ice. When it is too late the matter will receive the consideration it now deserves. A lady passing along the mainstreet with an infant in a cutter had a narrow escape last week from this danger.

The Pincher Creek Echo offers the following wholesome advice at the close of its write-up of the hockey game between the Fernie and Pincher Juniors in that town: "It might be pointed out to young fellows who wish to go in for sport and athletics that it does not look well for players in a match to be seen smoking cigarettes in the half time intermission. No one who takes up a game should smoke cigarettes at all, let alone pipes or cigars, the cigarettes being especially hard on the wind. To play hockey the wind must be in perfect condition and tobacco does not keep it so. Neither by the way does Joe Seagram."

The hearing of the objection to the granting of the water right to Wm. Eschwig in West Fernie took place at the court house on Wednesday before J. F. Armstrong, land commissioner. H. W. Herchmer appeared for the Board of Trade and W. R. Ross for the petitioner. The Commissioner decided the matter by reserving the first 25 inches of water in the stream for the use of any future incorporated town that may be located there. The petitioner was given the right to use the next four inches. Four inches of water, running constantly will supply the astonishing amount of over 22,000,000 gallons per year, quite sufficient to supply a large brewery.

FEBRUARY'S OUTPUT.

A GOOD MONTH CONSIDERING CONDITIONS. 71,000 TONS MINED.

Heavy Snow Fall Seriously Handicapped The Industry.—Car Shortage a Drawback Coke Production Maintains Fair Average.

The total output of the mines of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Co's collieries at Coal Creek, Morrissey and Michel for the month of February amounted to 71,000 tons. This is 6000 tons below the highest monthly record which was made in January when 77000 tons were mined. Coal Creek and Morrissey fell off a little and Michel's output was slightly increased.

The operations have been seriously retarded at all the mines by the heavy and almost continuous snowfall of the latter part of the month. This trouble acted in two ways, it directly interfered with the industry by blocking tracks and delaying outside work and it blocked up transportation and caused a series of car shortages which in turn affected the mining operations.

At Morrissey this latter trouble was particularly noticeable, in that the Company were compelled to stop operations in two mines owing to blockades on the Great Northern which kept the supply of cars short. Then the month was two working days shorter than January which makes a big difference when the aggregates are reckoned. On the 20th of February the output was 7,000 tons ahead of that for the same date in January, so that a loss of 13,000 tons was sustained in the last nine days

The coke production for February almost equalled that for January but the shipments were very much less owing to the lack of cars. As a result a large stock of coke is now awaiting movement and the shipments for the month of March will be very heavy.

The Morrissey operations are being steadily pushed, despite the pessimistic reports to the contrary. No.'s 0. 2 and 3 mines are being worked regularly and the 140 ovens now completed are producing first class coke. These mines produce excellent coking coal. No.'s 1, and 4 have been closed down a good deal of late owing to the lack of cars but the development work has been pushed steadily at these times.

Several "faults" have been encountered at some of the mines. This difficulty must always be expected in operating new coal fields. Faults have occasionally been met at Coal Creek and Michel but at Morrissey they came at one time. H. F. Martin, the late manager, has ably overcome the faults and at the present time only one remains to be remedied, in No. 4 mine.

The comparatively low average attendance during the past month was due no less to the inadequate heating facilities of the school building than to severity of the weather, the former being painfully apparent during the second week of February.

The second storey of the Todd block has been fitted up for this purpose with a seating capacity of about 40 pupils. Miss Carrie Hall formerly of the Fernie staff and since teacher of the North Star mine school has been engaged to take charge of this room, which will open on Monday, March 7th. The pupils will be intermediate in grade, taken from the two lower rooms in the school.

Eight new seats have been added to the capacity of the No. 1 division.

FORESTERS RE-ORGANIZE.

List of New Officers.—H. Kershaw, Official Organizer, Present.

Mr. H. Kershaw, of Fort Steele, who has been appointed official organizer of the Canadian Order of Foresters in B. C. and the N. W. T., spent a week in town looking up old and new members of the order. The result was that their reorganization meeting on Wednesday evening was a success and Court Lookout, No. 835 is again an active lodge.

The officiers elected are :—

" F. J. Watson, Auditor
" Dr. Bonnell, Court Physician.

During the last few days the organizer and the members of the Court have been able to imfuse new life and enthusiasm in this worthy order, and a large increase in membership is looked for in the immediate future.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Kershaw for the able manner in which he brought about the re-organization of the court here, which was very cordially and suitably responded to. The evening was very much enjoyed by all present.

Meetings in future will be held the 1st and 3rd Tuesdays in each month at 9 p.m. The next meeting will therefore be held on March 15th. Anyone wishing to join should make application to any of above named officers.

BIBLE SOCIETY ORGANIZED.

A meeting was held in the Presbyterian church on Tuesday evening for the purpose of organizing a branch of the Upper Canada Bible Society. The meeting was the result of concerted action on the part of all the Protestant churches, and a fair sized audience consisting of members and adherents of these churches were present.

The society was successfully organized with the following officers.—President, J. A. Rennie; Secretary, Rev. J. Robson; Treasurer, Mr. Easton; Collectors, Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Williams and Miss Wilson Despository, A. W. Bleasdell.

Rev. S. J. Thompson, of Cranbrook, delivered an interesting and instructive address in which he treated of the history of the parent Bible Society since its birth one hundred years ago. This society has published 180,000,000 copies of the Bible in 370 different languages and distributed them in nearly every country on the globe.

A centenary service in honor of the hundredth anniversary of the society is to be held in a week or two, from the aggregated collections of which the society hopes to realize a million and a quarter dollars.

The Fernie branch will put Bibles on sale at cost at Mr. Bleasdell's drug store. A well printed cloth bound edition can be purchased for 25 cents.

POLICE COURT

Charles Welsh, delivery man for the Calgary Cattle Company pleaded guilty to the charge of theft on Monday and was sentenced to 6 months in the Nelson jail. Welsh had pocketed certain money collected by him for the company. Wm. Forrest took him to Nelson on Tuesday.

TWO MONTHS FOR THEFT.

J. McGuire was caught on Monday night by Constable Sampson stealing coal from a loaded car in the C. P. R. yard. He had two sacks filled which he was carrying to his house near by. P. Martin who was with McGuire got away, but he was afterwards arrested. McGuire was sentenced to two months at hard labor and Martin got two weeks. McGuire bears a hard name and the police have been trying to catch him for some time, but until now they have been unsuccessful.

SOME CHANGES MADE.

SHIFTING OF COAL COMPANY OFFICIALS.

Mine Supt. Martin at Morrissey, Resigns.—Major Langton, the new Auditor, Arrives.—Other Changes.

Several changes have recently been made in the staff of officials of the Coal Company, most of which took effect on March 1st. The following is a list.

H. F. Martin has resigned the position of mine superintendent at Morrissey. This resignation was handed in last October with a request that he be relieved as soon as possible, and not later than March 1st. J. R. Roaf of the engineers staff at Michel, was appointed to succeed Mr. Martin as outside superintendent with charge over the railway and coke ovens. Mr. Roaf stood high on the recent mine managers' examination. The powers of Charles Simister, mine manager, are enlarged, and he will have full charge of the inside operations.

Major Joseph Langton, of Toronto, has been appointed auditor for the shareholders of the Company, to succeed Mr. Macpherson, resigned. Mr. Langton is an experienced auditor, and he held a responsible position as secretary of a banking institution prior to this appointment. All the accounting work will henceforth been done in Fernie instead of having part of it done in Toronto as formerly. Mr. Langton who arrived this week, will make his headquarters in Fernie. He is a married man and he purposes bringing his family to this town in the early summer.

Robert W. Coulthard, late coke-oven overseer has been promoted to the geological department and James McLean, late shipping clerk, has been promoted to the post vacated by Mr. Coulthard. The position of shipping clerk is now filled by A. R. Macleod, late of Michel.

The post on the engineering staff at Michel vacated by Mr. Roaf is filled by David L. Llewellyn who arrived this week from the east.

FERNIE BAND RE-ORGANIZED.

Will Give a Band Concert at the Rink to Raise Needed Funds.

The Fernie Brass Band recently held a meeting for the purpose of re-organization. The following officers were elected. President, Harry Wilkes; Secretary, Oscar Kirkpatrick; Treasurer, Joseph Goupelle; leader, Thomas Massanobile. The band meets regularly every Tuesday evening at the new fire-hall. At the present time there are about 15 members. The management is in the hands of zealous members who are imbued with the the determination to make the Fernie Brass Band a credit to the town and their efforts in this direction will no doubt receive the hearty co-operation of all the townspeople.

The band is in need of financial assistance and the management set to work to replenish their treasury without appealing to the charity of the public. To-night (Friday) they give a concert at the Fernie rink. An excellent program of choice skating music will be rendered and all lovers of music and skating will be charmed with the pleasures of the evening. The small admission fee of 25 cents will be charged. The concert will no doubt receive a large patronage.

A MUSICAL TREAT.

The concert given in the Methodist Church last evening was one of the finest of its kind ever held in Fernie and the large audience which filled the church was delighted with every number of the program as was evidenced by the numerous encores demanded. The contributions by the Glee Club were particularly well received. The Glee Club consisted of about 20 male voices, most of the members of which reside at Coal Creek. Their voices blended perfectly and the music was of a popular nature. The zither music by Mr. Klauer called for several encores and the solos and duets were all so well rendered that it would be difficult to mention one more worthy of notice than another.

The program was as follows :

FOUND DEAD IN BED

Thomas Llewellyn, an old-timer in the Crow's Nest, was found dead in his bed at the Mercer boarding house Coal Creek yesterday morning. Deceased had complained of a pain in his side for a few days previous and was under the doctor's care. His room-mate got up at 6 a.m., and Llewellyn was all right then. At 8 he gave no response when called for breakfast and he was found to be dead. No inquest was deemed necessary when the authorities learned these particulars.

Deceased was a Welshman of about 50 years of age. He followed railroading, but for some time past he has worked in the mines. He has no relatives in this country. The funeral takes place to-day.

KILLED AT MORRISSEY.

Jos. Patterson, Car-Driver Struck by Run-Away Car.

An accident occurred on Saturday in No. 3 mine, Morrissey, by which a car driver named Jos. Patterson received fatal injuries. R. Patterson, brother of deceased, and W. Thomas were carrying a heavy timber up a steep incline, Joseph volunteered to relieve the former and shortly after the change was made a runaway empty car came down the incline. The men jumped but Joseph was unfortunate enough to jump in front of the car. His head was badly crushed and he was brought to the Fernie hospital on Sunday in a dying condition. He died on Monday morning and the funeral took place late on Tuesday. Deceased was a young Scotchman with no other relatives in the country.

The inquest took place on Wednesday. The evidence showed that the drum at the hoist did not wind correctly and the rope slipped off giving a slack of about 8 foot. The car went back with a jerk which pulled the cable out of the socket and the car was free to go back. The men had orders not to walk behind cars going up the incline.

The jury in their verdict found that the hoist machinery was not in proper working order, and they added a rider suggesting the use of a drag on such steep inclines as a further protection to the men working in the mines. The jury was composed of, Messrs. W. H. Whimster, foreman; S. F. Wallace, F. R. O'Hearn, F. H. Sherman, Geo. Robinson and J. A. Broley.

SMELTER FOR FERNIE

BELGIAN CAPITALISTS MAY ERECT ZINC SMELTER HERE.

To Treat Slocan Zinc Ores.—Fernie the most advantageous point.—Favorable Transportation rates, etc.

Oscar Lefebvre, the representative of Henri Samuel, banker, of Brussels, accompanied by C. Fernau, consulting mining engineer, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, were in the Crow's Nest this week for the purpose of looking up a site for a zinc reduction smelter to treat Slocan ores, and as a result of their careful inspection it is more than probable that the coming summer may see another live industry added to Fernie.

H. E. Macdonell, of Nelson, general freight agent of the C.P.R., who was with the party wired ahead for an interview with General Manager Stockett of the C. N. P. Coal Co., and for two days they together went fully into the pros and cons of establishing a zinc reduction plant at Fernie. Mr. Stockett surprised the visitors with his practical knowledge of zinc reduction, gained from many years' experience in supplying fuel to similar plants, and he was able to give them much valuable information along the lines desired

Mr. Lefebvre, who is a Belgian with little knowledge of the English language, represents considerable capital which, if properly invested would probably lead other Belgian capitalists to invest their idle money in B. C. Mr. Fernau, who acts as his interpreter, is a well versed mining engineer with a thoroughly practical knowledge of the smelting business.

Briefly, the visitors are interested in several zinc ore properties in the Slocan country and they are desirous of locating a zinc reduction plant at the most advantageous point. They propose erecting a zidc enriching plant near where the ore is mined, probably at Rosebery, and the concentrates will be shipped to the reduction plant for further treatment. The claims of Fernie for this latter plant appealled particularly to them because of its ready access to the needed fuel, and after looking more fully into the matter they have learned of other advantages which makes Fernie the best place for its location.

The C.P.R. have promised very favorable rates, as they realize that the empties coming from the western smelters to be loaded with fuel may just as well be carrying ore back to Fernie. Moreover a through rate has been fixed from the zinc enriching plant to Antwerp, the Belgian market, with stop-over privileges for treatment at Fernie, a proportionate rate only being charged on concentrates. The visitors were so thoroughly impressed with the advantages possessed by Fernie for their enterprise that they asked for terms by which they might acquire a site from the Coal company above the coke ovens on the mine road. Very reasonable terms were submitted by Messrs. Stockett and Davies for the Coal company and Mr. Lefebvre at once employed G. O. Foss, C. E. to make some survey lines that a complete description of the site might be submitted to his principal.

They require between 30 and 50 acres for their enterprise. The inital cost of their plant will amount to $150,000 and it will employ from 60 to 75 employees, with bright prospects of that number being increased to 4 or 5 times as many by the end of three years.

Vancouver, Trail, Nelson and Frank are also making bids for this smelter, but none excepting the last are being seriously considered. Certain parties interested in the French mines at Frank are said to have a "pull", but the natural advantages possessed by Fernie are so apparent that there is little doubt but that the smelter will be erected here.

The Slocan lead ore runs high in zinc, in fact much good zinc ore has been thrown on the dump as useless owing to the lack of proper facilities for treating the same. The smelter proposed for this town will treat the ore for lead as well. The zinc matte will be sent to Antwerp where the extraction of gold and silver will be accomplished by further refining.

By-product ovens will be built in connection with the smelter, for, as in the case of large pork factories nothing of the pig is wasted but the squeal, so in zinc manufacture nothing is wasted but the smoke, and even by-products such as white and blue lead, are manufactured from the smoke. These ovens are heated with coal, which is burned to coke, the latter being used later in the furnaces.

CARMICHAEL.—At Fernie on March 1st, the wife of Mr. J. Carmichael of twins, a boy and girl, (boy stillborn.)

KERR—At Fernie on March 1st, the wife of Mr. R. A. Kerr of a son.

JAPANESE SHELLS DID DAMAGE

Reported the Channel at Port Arthur Partly Blocked,

RUSSIA THREATENING

During Wednesday's Engagement at Port Arthur the Japanese Ships Silenced Five Guns, Struck Newsky Works Damaging the Arsonel.

Arrivals at Chefoo from Port Arthur report the naval engagement at the entrance of the Port Arthur harbor on Tuesday after midnight. The Russians received timely warning from three torpedo boat destroyers, which met the Japanese fleet twenty miles off Port Arthur. The Japanese fleet approached to within eight miles of the entrance and commenced the attack. The first to retaliate were the forts, followed by the Petropavloysk, the Novik, the Pallada and Askold.

The enaggement lasted until nearly midnight, when the Japanese retired. Details of the losses on both sides have not been ascertained, but it is said that the Japanese had two ships sunk and three disabled. The Port Arthur forts had five gans disabled The damage to the town was serious. One shell struck amid the anchorage of junks, blowing many to atoms. The Newsky works and the engine works were struck three times. Several shells fell just short of the arsenal, but striking the mud wall surrounding it, and doing no damage. Judging from this the Japanese evidently attempted to destroy the arsenal. Several guards were killed by bursting shells. Civilians took refuge in the new part of Port Arthur.

REPORTS SUCCESSFUL ATTACK.

New York, Feb. 25.—The American s Chefoo correspondent cables: Yesterday morning's attack by the Japanese was completely successful. Four vessels were sunk, the harbor entrance was partly blocked and the Japanese intended to complete the job to-day.

JAPS CLOSE TO VLADIVOSTOCK.

40,000 Japanese troops are said to be within ninety miles of Vladivostock. The roads have been bad, and consequently the Russians have not been keeping close watch, and this forward movement of the Japanese has taken them completely by surprise. An important battle is imminent.

RUSSIANS FALLING BACK TO YALU.

A Tokio cable says: The strength of the Russian troops now in Corea does not exceed one thousand. They are gradually falling back in the direction of the Yalu river before the Japanese advance. The Russians in Manchuria are seriously hampered by the scarcity of coolies and by the activity of the mounted bandits.

THREATS AIMED AT BRITAIN.

A St. Petersburg cable says: The active preparations of Denmark and Saxony, combined with the recent prescience here of a special message from the kaiser, may be taken as representing what the Herald foretold weeks ago. In case England should become involved in war the Baltic will be closed by the smaller powers under the agreement and protection Britain was aimed at directly in the late Russian note concerning the independence of Corea.

The Novoe Vremya takes up the matter, saying: "England keeps silent now when Russia demands the recognition of the independence of Corea, but will howl loudly when the time arrives, which will surely come, that Russia begins to drive the Japanese back. If England does not declare herself, Russia will have full right to consider the Anglo-Japanese treaty as directly against herself"

ALEXIEFF LOSES HIS BEEF.

The Pacific liner arrived at Nagasaki with 12,240 barrels of beef for Port Arthur. The cargo was detained by the military commander, but the vessel was allowed to proceed.

JAPAN INSTITUTES COREAN VICEROYALTY.

A Seoal cable says: Japan has instituted a viceroyalty in Corea. This logically follows the assumption of a protectorate. Mr. Tokugawa has been appointed resident in Seoul and Mr. Kato has been named as viceresident.

FELL FROM A TRESTLE

W. P. Tierney Drops Forty Feet Into a Rocky Canyon.

W. P. Tierney, a well known railway contractor, fell off a railway trestle near Granite Siding Monday forenoon and landed with great force on the rocky bottom of the cayon, 40 feet below, and, strange to say, no bones were broken.

Dr. Hall, Mr. Tierney's physician, says he thinks no serious internal injuries were inflicted and that his patient will be able unless complications ensue, to be up and about in a week or ten days. W. P. Tierney & Co. have the contract for straightening out and raising above the bank af the river about two miles of track in that vicinity. It is Mr. Tierney's custom to inspect the work as it progresses. On Monday forenoon he was on a trestle which spans a canyon at a point about two miles from Granite. This trestle is being filled in with earth, and Mr. Tierney was inspecting the work to see how it was progressing. Suddenly the Slocan 9.15 train came round a curve, and Mr. Tierney did not have time to get off the trestle, and sought safety by getting off the track to one of the projecting stringers. Unfortunately he slipped and fell. In his descent he struck a jutting rock about fifteen feet from the top of the trestle. Other projections also aided in breaking the force of his fall, but still he struck the rock bottom of the canyon with considerable force. Those who watched the terrible fall were certain that he had sustained mortal injuries. When they reached him he was found to be insensible. There were two large cuts over the eye and his lip was split open. I was seen that he still breathed, and after a time he became conscious. He was put aboard the Rossland train, and brought to Nelson and conveyed to his residence. Dr. Hall was summoned and attended to his injuries. The examination disclosed, in addition to the cuts on the face already mentioned, severe contusions and bruises of the knees and numerous other bruises and abrasions, but fortunately no bones were fractured. As far as could be ascertained the internal injuries are not of a severe character. It was thought that in a week or ten days Mr. Tierney would be in good shape again, unless complications should develop. When the distance which Mr. Tierney fell is taken into consideration, his escape from death seems wonderful.

An Accommodating Railroad.

General Superintendent Bury, of the C.P.R., in his private car "Champlain," went west on the Glenboro train of Tuesday. At Holland young couple boarded the train. In a short time the lady began to feel unwell and soon became very ill indeed. When this was brought to Mr. Bury's notice he at once gave up his car for use as a hospital. A doctor was wired for and boarded the train at Nesbitt. The patient being too ill to move, the doctor remained in attendance and the train moved on. Somewhere beyond Carrol a little girl was added to the list of passengers on the Glenboro train, and the car Champlain may possibly be known as "Maternity Hospital" henceforth.

The Bell Telephone Co. will increase its capital stock from $2,000,000 to $8,000,000.

GENTLE HINT TO CHINA.

The Japanese are representing to the Chinese in Manchuria that they will be guilty of a breach of neutrality if they in any way help the Russians to preserve order in Manchuria during the war. The Japanese warned the Chinese not to interfere with the Chuchans bandits who have organized for guerrilla warfare against the Russians.

Later reports state that the Japanese ships did heavy damage during the action at Port Arthur. Five guns of the forts were silenced; the Newsky works were hit several times; the arsenal was nearly destroyed and several guards were killed. Japan has landed troops at Possiet Bay, and threatens Vladivostock. An important land battle there is imminent. Japan has instituted a viceroyalty in Corea.

General Kuropatkin's departure from St. Petersburg has been delayed, it is said, because of a possible outbreak of war between Russia and England over the Thibetan question. Orders have been issued by the Corean government to its army to join the Japanese in the field. The Russians are evacuating Dalny, fearing a Japanese attack. Japan is embarking enormous numbers of soldiers for Corean ports.

RUSSIAN REPORT EXAGGERATED

Torpedo Craft Alone Suffer in Perilous Move.

TRIED SAMPSON'S PLAN.

Japanese Admiral Made a Gallant Effort to Bottle up Port Arthur Harbor—But Stranded Russian Battleship Sunk the Vessels.

The correspondent of the London Standard at St. Petersburg says: I am in a position to state that the Emperor has received a telegram from Viceroy Alexieff, stating that the Japanese sent four torpedo boats and some old steamers to Port Artnur, with the intention of sinking the latter in the midway of the harbor, thus blocking the entrance.

The Retvizan, the repairs to which have been nearly completed, opened fire on the flotilla. The forts followed suit, with the result that one Japanese torpedo boat was sunk, one run aground and two others damaged. Next morning two injured vessels were visible at sea. They were steaming away evidently in difficulty. Several torpedoes were found floating intact in the harbor and were picked up by the Russians.

Admiral Togo has evidently tried, as Rear-Admiral Sampson did at Santiago, to bottle up the opposing fleet in a narrow necked harbor. While reports are conflicting, it is clear that an attempt was made to send in steamers, old transports, probably, and sink them in the channel, which in some places is not more than one hundred yards wide.

Details are lacking, but it is not likely that the daring attempt was successful. It may safely be assumed that the Russians had the regular vedette of destroyers and cruisers well out from the entrance, and that an inner line of torpedo boats and launch pickets was maintained. W these to give the alarm, the chances are strong that the Japanese ships cruisers long before reaching the narrow channel, and at a point where there is plenty of room for the ships there is plenty of room for the ships to pass. Earlier reports that the Japanese had lost four battleships or cruisers are explained by the later news. "Fireships" are not used in modern naval warfare.

London was depressed and Paris elated by the earlier dispatches announcing a Japanese disaster.

St. Petersburg was greatly excited over semi-official news of a great Russian victory, but no official details were vouchsafed, and the puzzled crowds dispersed. Admiral Alexieff's official report states that the channel is still open.

The navigable channel at the point where the admiral reports that the Japanese ships were sunk is not more than 350 yards wide. Two large transports swung across the channel would nearly block such a passage, but, as the attempt with the Merrimac at Santiago showed, it is not easy to handle ships under such circumstances, and the vessels were partly beached broadside on.

Japan's treaty with Corea is a surprise to diplomats. It is considered that it might make effective France's agreement to come to Russia's aid if the latter power becomes involved a war with two nations.

BRITISH ORDERED TO LEAVE.

A London dispatch, dated February 24th, says: The fleet which passed Wei-Hai-Wei to-day is supposed to have been Admiral Togo's fleet leaving Port Atthur.

A special dispatch from Kobe says the British commercial agent has arrived at Nagasaki and reported that the commander of the Russian garrison at Vladivostock had ordered all British subjects to leave that port.

About 25,000 tons of British coal are now being loaded on Japanese steamers for Japan. The Bingo-Maru is loading 8,000 tons and the Sado-Maru 5,000 tons at Cardiff, while at Barrow the Kawchi-Maru and another vessel are taking on board the remainder.

ALEXIEFF READY TO JUMP.

Viceroy Alexieff, with a complete staff, has now his headquarters on a special train which at present is about four miles from Mukden, fully equipped and ready to move from place to place as the necessities of the situation may require.

MANDJUR MAY REMAIN.

It is reported that the Chinese foreign office has agreed to allow the Russian gunboat Mandjur to remain at Shanghai on condition that she dismantles her rudder and draws her fires. The Japanese cruiser Akitsushima, which has been lying in wait or the Mandjur, has proceeded north.

KING EDWARD WARNS RUSSIA.

The London Daily News has a sensational story explaining the Russian ambassador, Count Von Benckendorff's, sudden departure to St. Petersburg. It declares that Pobedonosteff, the procurator of the Holy Synod, has kept two agents in London to spy on the ambassador. The agents reported that Britain would not keep her pledge to Japan in the event of war. Pobedonosteff reborted this to the Czar, who did not believe Count Von Benckendorff's reports to the contrary. Pobedonostoff's agents in Paris intrigued to induce France to abandon her pledge of strict neutrality. The intrigues were brought to the knowledge of King Edward. The King asked Count Von Benckendorff to make it thoroughly understood at St. Petersburg that such action would bring Britain into the field as the ally of Japan.

JAPAN STILL AHEAD

The Oriental Bull-dog More Than a Match For the Russian Bear.

RAIDING THE RAILWAY.

A special to the London Post from Chefoo reports that numerous raiding parties of Japanese and natives in Siberia have attacked the Siberian railway and broken the line in several places.

READY FOR BALKAN TROUBLE.

A dispatch from Constantinople says: The Porte is advised that the greatest activity prevails among the vessels of the Russian Black Sea fleet and at the docks of Sebastopol and Odessa. It is also stated that British warships are concentrating along the Greek archipelago. This activity, it is believed, is not due to Russia's desire to take her fleet east, but rather to the preparations by both powers to be in a position to handle the Balkan crisis.

REFUSES TO LEAVE.

A Shanghai dispatch of Feb. 23rd says: Every hour the dispute as to whether the Russian gunboat Mandjur shall leave this port grows uglier and more threatening to international peace. M. Lessar, Russian minister at Pekin, has threatened direct consequences to Lienfung, vice-president of the Wiwupa, (Chinese foreign office), should China insist that the Mandjur leave. It is believed China will ultimately bring cruisers from her Pei Yang or northern squadron from Kiangyonlo to enforce her neutrality, and will, if necessary, use coercive measures to drive out the Mandjur.

RUSSIA IN DEEP WATER.

Financiers in Denmark take a very gloomy view of Russian finances. The Russian budget shows on paper a surplus of 20,000,000 roubles. In reality there exists a deficiency of 200,000,000 roubles. Preparations are being made to draw to the Russian treasury gold supplies in Finland.

RUSSIAN SCOUTS ADVANCING.

Russian scouts are reported as steadily advancing from the Yalu river. It is staten that 600 have reached Sunchin, and that others are marching towards Wonson. The Empress of Japan has aroused popular enthusiasm by insisting that her body guard be reduced, and ordering the officers to join their divisions, which are about to start for the front.

ANOTHER ENGAGEMENT.

The Lokal Anzeger, Berlin, in a dispatch from Tokio says: A fresh engagement took place at Port Arthur Saturday last. Details have not been announced by the government.

STABBING AT TYNDALL

William Dennitt, Stabbed by His Nephew, Twelve Times.

On Monday afternoon a man named George Sears arrived at Tyndall on No. 2, from Winnipeg, and proceeded to the house of William Dennitt, his uncle, who lives about two miles from the station. Sears, it is said, brought a quantity of whisky along with him in order that he might make merry with his relative, and both started in to carouse. Instead of a jollification the spree ended disastrously for both, as Dennitt now lies at the point of death from the effect of wounds inflicted by Sears in a murderous assault, and the latter is in durance at Selkirk, awaiting examination by the police magistrate.

It seems that both men drank heavily, and Monday night, while under the influence of liquor, they commenced to quarrel. About 3 o'clock Tuesday morning their passions broke loose, and it is said that Dennitt pulled a gun on his nephew. This enraged Sears, who drew a knife and stabbed his uncle twelve times, inflicting dangerous wounds.

The injured man's neighbor, Wm. Gray, was aroused and found Dennitt on the floor, and unconscious from loss of blood. The flow was stopped and Dr. Emmitt, from Beausejour, was called, but has no hopes of saving his life.

Constable Pruden, with J. Malvihill, N. Little, W. Little and A. B. Cathcart, found the assailant late on Tuesday afternoon, and he is now under arrest, and was sent in for safe keeping on the train to Selkirk. He is lately from the States, and little is known about him.

Jumped 73 Feet.

Torgal Noren is certainly a wonderful ski jumper. On Sunday afternoon he gave an exhibition on Monte Cristo mountain, Rossland, before about 100 spectators who climbed the hill to see the young Norwegian champion demonstrate his prowess. The snow was somewhat heavy, but despite this drawback Noren cleared seventy-three feet eight inches, the biggest leap ever made in Canada.

The Boy and the Firecracker.

A boy named Fred Milligan, who lives at Anthracite, has a terribly lacerated hand. The lad put a firecracker into a dynamite cap and lighted the cracker. He held it in his hand. The cap went off, and as a result Milligan is minus a couple of fingers and a portion of the thumb of the right hand.

Skull Crushed.

The breaking of tackle allowed a 40-pound block to drop on the head of George Robertson, of Chatham, at the Essex oil fields. Robertson's skull was crushed, and he cannot live.

Neepawa Probable Fatality.

John McIntyre, residing about ten miles north of Neepawa, received what will be probably fatal injuries by a kick from a horse this week. One of the shoe calks struck him on the temple and penetrated to the brain.

MAY WAGE WAR OVER THIBET

Russia Inclined to Open Hostilities with England

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE

Kuropatkin's Departure Said to be Delayed on this Account. The Corean Government has Ordered Its Troops to Join Japan in the Field.

The surprising and almost astounding latest news is that General Kuropatkin will not go to the front, as was previously announced, in three days' time, but not for several weeks. The reason for this, he states, is that it is not worth while for him to go there until four hundred thousand Russian soldiers are gathered at the seat of war. In fact, he cannot take the offensive until that number is forthcoming. It is stated that the present force available, outside of the heavy contingent guarding the railroad, does not exceed one hundred and thirty thousand men.

General Kuropatkin, it is remembered, was recently in Japan, where he formed a very high opinion of the efficiency of the Japanese troops. It may also be remembered that he belonged to the anti-war party. At a recent audience with the emperor, General Kuropatkin spoke very openly about the necessity of his having a large number of troops, and he is further credited with having said:

Your majesty will need me back soon to look after European developments," and possibly the key to this is given in the statement of a widely known Russian international jurist, who says it is quite possible that Russia will wage war concerning the Thibetan question; but with Thibet the only ostensible cause to be used, in case Britain should make any move of too friendly a nature toward Japan.

COREA TO FIGHT WITH JAPAN.

A dispatch from Seoul on February 26th says: The Corean government has decided to order the Corean forces to join the Japanese in the field. The port of Wiju was opened to foreign trade last night. The limitations to be placed on trade and other incidental matters will be placed later. This action necessitates a harbor. Yongampho has been decided upon.

The Statesmen's Year Book for 1903 gives the following details of the Corean army: The standing army now consists of about 17,000 men, with European methods. In 1896 it was taken in hand by a Russian colonel with three commissioned and ten non-commissioned officers, who retired, however, in 1898. A royal bodyguard of 1,000 men was formed, and has been well drilled, and especially a draft of well trained men is transferred from it to the other regiments of the standing army. A police force of 2,000 men has also been formed, and is under the police department.

RUSSIANS EVACUATING DALNY.

Russia has only five months' supplies in Port Arthur. The Russians say she means to defend Port Arthur and that she will fall back with the rest of her troops from Dalny to the Yalu, and, if pressed, upon Harbin where she will fight for two years. Daloy is being evacuated. The Russians boast that they have mined the breakwater, the wharves, the docks and the railway sidings to prevent the Japanese from using them.

FRANCE WILL NOT INTERFERE.

In view of the attitude assumed by the French government immediately after the agreement between Japan and Corea was entered into, diplomats do not consider the latest developments of an alarming nature. It is now regarded as certain in Washington official and diplomatic circles that the French government wants to keep out of the war.

POSITION SECURE IN COREA.

The preliminaries of Japan's campaign on land have developed so far as to render it practically impossible for a formidable invasion of Corea by the Russians. Japan's present position in Corea has been gained by strategy and skill of the highest order. This position can be changed only by most disastrous reverses to the Japanese arms in Manchuria, when the operations begin there.

ENORMOUS JAPANESE EMBARKATIONS.

A large number of transports have returned to Nagasaki, where they are busily engaged in embarking more troops for the vicinity of Dalny. More than forty transports will be the total that have sailed since February 10th, and still large embarkation is proceeding from Ujina, near Hiroshima. The latter, and not Kioto, will be again made the army and navy headquarters during the war. More than thirty big transports are now at Ujina, which is the principal troops embarking station, and an enormous mass of soldiers has been returned there.

REASSURING TO COREA.

The following message was sent by mail from Seoul on February 11th: It is reported that the Japanese minister has informed the Emperor of Corea that a director-general or viceroy, who will be a prince of the Japanese imperial house, would soon be appointed to represent Japan in Corea, but that the arrangement would be temporary only and the Emperor need not be alarmed.

IMPROVED HOTELS.

Bonifaces Notified that Their Premises Must Comply With Law.

Winnipeg hotelkeepers whose premises do not comply with the law are receiving notices from the license inspector informing them that he cannot recommend a renewal of their license. This timely notice is given in order that delinquents will have an opportunity of having their hostelries up to the standard before the end of the license year, as the department does not intend to extend any further leniency. Holders of restaurant licenses are also being notified that their licenses will not be renewed, as the principle hitherto pursued by the Winnipeg board of commissioners in regard to this class of restaurants has been made law by legislative enactment. Quite a number of Winnipeg hotelkeepers are affected by the first order, and doubtless they will immediately get busy enlarging, extending and renovating their premises, if they desire to remain in the business. The weeding out of a lot of the old buildings now used for hotel purposes will result in the erection of more modern and more suitable houses.

ATTEMPTED MURDER.

W. J. Yates Arrested for Shooting a Bartender in Broanview.

Charged with attempting murder, W. J. Yates, of Broadview, occupies one of the steel cages at the Winnipeg police station. Yates was arrested on Tuesday by Patrol Sergeant Robertson, on a telegram received from the North-West Mounted Police authorities at Broadview.

It is learned that Yates created a disturbance in the bar of the Victoria hotel at Broadview, and because William Wilde, the bartender, insisted upon him keeping quiet, he pulled a revolver and fired at the latter. Fortunately the bullet did not take effect. He promptly cleared out, but justice followed him, resulting in the arrest.

Lithographers May Strike.

The Lithographers' Union of New York has rejected by a large majority an arbitration proposal by the employers' association, which takes in the employers throughout the United States and Canada. The other unions are expected to take similar action, which probably means a general lockout on March 26th of 10,000 union lithographers employed by the association, unless there should be a strike before then.

Absorbed by The Trust.

Orr Bros.' oatmeal mill, in Windsor, Ont., has been absorbed by the trust, the Canadian Oatmeal Manufacturing Co., completing the list of 25 mills in Ontario alone. It is likely the price of oatmeal will be advanced, as the trust controls 90 per cent. of the oatmeal manufactories in the Dominion.

Jesse Joseph Dead.

ESCAPED WITHOUT INJURY.

The British foreign office has received an official dispatch saying that not one of the Japanese torpedo boats was injured in the attack on Port Arthur of Wednesday, February 24th.

JAPS AGAIN REPULSED.

St. Petersburg, February 25th, 6.32 p.m.—Major-General Pflug, the chief of staff of Viceray Alexieff, telegraphs as follows under to-day's date:

The enemy again attacked Port Arthur from 1 to 3 o'clock this morning, and was everywhere repused. Details follow.

The Russians are reported to have lost another gunboat, which ran on a rock and sank. A number of Japanese were hanged at Harbin. Port Arthur is said to be short of provisions.

Japan has informed China that if she cannot enforce her neutrality law against the Russian gunboat Mandjur, she will do it for her. A Japanese cruiser is waiting for the Mandjur. Cossacks have crossed the Valu, and are near Ping Yang. 40,000 Japanese troops are at Chemulpo. It is rumored that France has bought the Chilian navy for Russia.

Good For Man And Beast.

Upper Middle River, Cape Breton, N.S., Oct. 20, 1903.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburg Falls, Vt.:

Gentlemen,—I see your advertisement in several of the papers that I get. I have used your Kendall's Spavin Cure on horses, and find it equally as good on human flesh for sprains and such other accidents as are common. I am very seldom without it, as I think it is the best liniment one can get for horses. Will you please send me a copy of your "Treatise on the Horse and His Diseases." Very truly yours John G. McCharles.

RESTLESS AND CROSS.

When infants or young children are restless and cross or peevish it is a very certain sign that they are not well. The mother may not know just what the trouble is, but she can depend upon it the trouble exists. Give the little one Baby's Own Tablets; see how promptly it will be changed into a happy, smiling, good natured child. The little one will sleep soundly and naturally and the mother will also obtain her much needed rest. Here is the proof given by Mrs. John E. Ramsay, Port Hill, P.E.I., who says:—"My baby was cross, restless and did not sleep well, but after giving him Baby's Own Tablets he became better natured, sleeps well and is growing finely. The Tablets have been a great blessing to both baby and myself."

The Tablets are a prompt and certain cure for such troubles as indigestion, sour stomach, colic, constipation, diarrhoea, simple fevers and other minor ailments. They always do good and cannot possibly harm the most delicate child. You can get the Tablets from any medicine dealer, or they will be sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing to The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BAKED APPLES.

The Way to Make a Convenient and Delicious Dessert.

The difference between apple sauce stewed quickly over the fire and that baked slowly for several hours in a moderate oven is so great that one could easily believe that different fruits had been used. Each method, if carefully followed, produces a delicious result, and, while some persons have a strong preference for one or the other, to my mind it is difficult to decide which is the better way. Therefore it is well to use both methods, cooking the first apples that come in midsummer by stewing, and later, when the cool days of early autumn make a fire less objectionable, trying the baking.

The dish for baking is as important as that for beans baked properly and also for Indian puddings, and should be the same in style and material. Cut the fruit (and you may use in this way any kind of apples or pears which are too green or hard to use uncooked) into quarters; then remove the cores and skins. Allow one cup of sugar and one-half cup of water to two quarts of fruit. The amount will vary with different apples, and it is important not to use too much sugar, for the long cooking seems to develop the natural sweetness of the fruit. Cover them closely and cook in a slow oven four or five hours or until they have a deep rich red color. If they cook too fast, the steam will cause them to burst and run over the edge and result in a mushy sauce, but a moderate heat, long continued, will leave each quarter distinct in the clear sirup. Let it cool in the pan and turn it out without any stirring of the fruit. This may be poured at once into sterilized jars and sealed the same as canned fruit, if you are not likely to use it all soon. As a sauce for a breakfast or dinner it is acceptable; with cream and hot biscuit for supper it is delicious, and as a filling for pastry shells it is convenient.—Home Science Magazine.

THE CAVE OF GHOSTS.

This Is One of the Wonder Places of New South Wales.

One of the curiosities of Oakley creek, N. S. W., is a cave which very few people care to enter. It is of the usual order of stalactite and stalagmite shapes and figures, but in order to get inside it the visitor must crouch down and squeeze himself through a narrow opening and grope his way in the inky darkness for a few yards till he can stand erect and light a torch.

As soon as he has done this he sees faintly the weird shapes assumed by the water dripping from the limestone and he hears a whirring noise. He feels inclined to make his exit at once, but he hears something moving all round him, and presently something touches him.

He concludes that there are uncanny spirits about, and this sensation is multiplied many times in intensity when on turning to retrace his steps he finds himself confronted by a tall, ghostly figure.

If the visitor has a strong nerve or has been forewarned, which is not always the case, he recognizes that the ghostly figure is a senseless block formed by the dripping from the limestone, and that the moving creatures are bats.

There is one part of the cave which no man has dared to explore. It is called the blowhole. One adventurous visitor was about to squeeze himself through this narrow aperture when it occurred to him to throw a stone through. He did so, listening for the stone to touch bottom, and the dull sound that finally reached him convinced him that there was a sheer drop of 200 feet on the other side of the blowhole.

Condensed For Four Days.

"There was a good old lawyer of the good old southern type," said a judge, "who had a most eloquent way of pleading. His brief for three days had been a marvel of classical allusion and legal erudition.

"The judge, however, became a trifle impatient and, as gently as he could, intimated that the docket was somewhat crowded, and it might be to the client's interest if the lawyer could contrive to end his plea. And, do you know, the old barrister declared that the last four days of his argument were a marvel of condensation."

Dodd's Kidney Pills Keep Up Their Good Work in Newfoundland.

Christopher Bishop Tells How His Wife and Brother Were Brought Back to Health and Vigor.

Clark's Beach, Nfld., February 29.—(Special)—Among the splendid cures made by Dodd's Kidney Pills in Newfoundland is that of Mrs. Christopher Bishop, of this place. The story of her suffering and cure is told by her husband as follows:

"My wife suffered for three years with a weakness in the lower part of her back, followed by a shivering, causing weakness. Her legs were swollen from her knees to the feet, and she had a pain in the left side just under the ribs.

"Two doctors attended her, but failed to cure her, when she decided to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. The results were wonderful, and now, after using five boxes, the swelling and weakness are gone, and the pain is gone with them.

"My brother suffered too from a heavy pain in the back, and four doctors failed to give him relief. Eight boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills made him a new man."

If you don't cure the pain in your back by using Dodd's Kidney Pills it will grow into something worse—Dropsy or Rheumatism or Bright's Disease.

RUSSIAN TURF METHODS.

American Horses Could Not Win In Land of Czar.

Everything in Russia is done in the name of the czar, and racing is no exception. There is an imperial commission, of which the Grand Duke Constanovitch is the "whole thing," so to speak, and under this commission the affairs of the various jockey clubs are conducted—that is to say, they are supposed to be conducted, for in reality the jockey clubs do just about as they like, and their rulings are seldom interfered with or changed in any particular.

There are three jockey clubs in Russia, one being at Moscow, one at Warsaw and one at St. Petersburg. They occupy somewhat the same relative position toward one another as do the Eastern, Western and California clubs in this country. They have only a few interests in common, and it is the exception rather than the rule for the findings of the clubs to be respected by either of the others. Racing begins in Moscow on the 6th of May. Following this meeting comes the one at Warsaw, which in turn gives way to St. Petersburg.

The tracks are all turf and are patterned strictly after the English courses. They have only three days' racing a week in Russia, and Sunday is the "big day," as it is in France. That is the day when all the derbies and other rich prizes are contested. Among Russian trainers such a thing as special preparation for a race is practically unknown. It matters not how great the prize or how much is at stake on the result, the horse entered is never given a workout or put to any test to determine his ability to go the distance and carry the weight. In fact, Russian training is wholly confined to walking and slow gallops.

Any American horse taken to Russia to be raced would be so handicapped and hampered as to make it an impossibility for him to win. Likewise horses trained by Americans and ridden by American jockeys are made such prohibitive favorites that it is out of the question to think of backing them. There are no bookmakers in Russia, all betting on races being by the French system, and this, too, is controlled by the government.—Illustrated Sporting News.

Alaskans Prefer Dried Vegetables.

After two years in Alaska, living in a mining camp boarding house, H. C. Conroy, who has come down here to spend the winter, was hunting through grocery and provision stores in search of Oregon desiccated soup vegetables. He was unable to find any, but insisted that he had been using soup made from them in Alaska all the time he had been there. When told that even if this was so there was no use for such here now, as the markets were full of all kinds of vegetables, he said he had become accustomed to the dried vegetables and liked them better than the fresh ones because they afforded a fine variety of seven different kinds and were ready to put in the pot at once. He finally found a man who had heard of the disintegrated, desiccated vegetables he was searching for and said they were put up for shipment to Alaska by a man at Dayton, but they had never been introduced in the market here partly because there had been no demand for them, but mostly because there had never been any more made than the Alaskan market demanded.—Portland Oregonian.

Heavy Steam Artillery.

Very successful trials have recently taken place at Aldershot, and without doubt, according to the London Chronicle, the teams of eight horses that have been hitherto necessary for moving hugh 4.7 guns will be replaced by the powerful and speedy motor.

The water supply of these motors is carried in three tanks, and coal is used for fuel. They vary in draft power from four to five tons and have negotiated without difficulty the steepest hills, stopping and restarting while on the incline. On deep inclines the engines have been under perfect control. Each motor carries a cable drum on the left side, to be used in case of emergency. Should a gun stick an amount of cable is paid out, the brakes are put on, the wheels blocked, and the drum winds up the cable.

Vesuvius.

The most recent excavations show that Vesuvius began its work as a conservator of antiquity earlier than the memorable year A. D. 79. During the excavations in the valley of the Sarno near Marzano some most interesting antiquities have come to light. These had been covered up by a volcanic deposit about six feet thick, which points to an eruption of Vesuvius which must have taken place in the seventh century before Christ. The relics include a Greek burying place, archaic Italian tombs and various bronzes and terra-cottas.

Sensible Giving.

Newly married couples in England are now honored with co-operative gifts. When a couple are about to marry their friends club together, combine the cash which they intend to invest in presents and give them a choice selection of useful or handsome presents. There are no duplicates, no trash, and there is no worry about the right articles to choose.

What a Lord Mayor's Banquet Costs.

Fourteen tons of coal were consumed in cooking the banquet given at the London Guildhall in honor of lord mayor's day. Forty turtles were slaughtered to provide 250 tureens of soup, each tureen holding a pint and a half, while the serving of the banquet required 250 waiters and 8,000 plate changes, the total cost being about £7,000.

NEW ARGUMENTS.

The subject of incorporation has from time to time been discussed in these columns. In addition to the many arguments for and against the scheme already submitted there are other facts cropping up which should command the attention of the citizens and cause a revival in the consideration of the subject.

We have learned upon good authority that the Coal Company will not likely erect the new office building until some definite action is taken on the matter of incorporation, or until at least they know where they stand on the taxation question. It will be remembered that Vice-President Jaffray clearly defined the attitude of the Company towards incorporation and the company management is evidently desirous of learning how these views are received before proceeding with their proposed improvements.

It will be remembered that Mr. Jaffray favored incorporation under these conditions. 1. Eastern boundary to be C. P. R. track. 2. Park not to be included but a suitable lease of the same to be given the municipality. 3. Limitation of taxation on new offices at a moderate amount. The section east of the track the company are reserving for increased railway sidings and the extention of the coke plant, and Mr. Jaffray contended that it will be only a short time until all that land will be taken up with active industries, leaving no room for residential property. Again, the company object to the inclusion of that section and the park on the ground that according to their agreement with the C. P. R. the latter could claim a quarter interest. The exemption of taxation above a certain limit on the office building is asked on the ground that the building as planned will cost three times as much as would a cheaper building that would answer the purpose as well. The present plans, now complete, call for a two storey stone building costing $30,000 together with considerable beautifying of the grounds. A building costing no more than $10,000 could be built to answer the purposes of the company and the management takes the view that the extra amount spent in making the building an ornament to the town should be exempt from taxation. If the building is to be put up this year it is necessary that no time be lost in taking steps towards getting the public feeling on this question so that the company may secure the information they require. It may be stated in this connection that the building is not only desirable as an asset to the realty of the town but its location focalizes business, centralizes the town and makes it the metropolis of the Pass for time to come.

The problem of incorporation is not an easy one to solve and we believe that before any irretrievable action is taken the matter shonld be thoroughly looked into and well weighed. The real and imaginary difficulties in the way are however overshadowed by bright possibilities beyond, sufficient to lend courage and zeal to the shrinking and doubting heart. Too many are so convinced in their own mind of the enormity of those difficulties that they are not open to conviction, or in other words they discourage any measures that may lead to a better understanding of the existing conditions.

A committee of live men, not men who openly talk for corporation and secretly oppose it though they need not necessarily be men who favor the project, should be appointed to go into the whole subject in a thorough manner, to produce hard cold facts in the shape of figures getting approximately at an estimated revenue and an estimated expenditure for the supposed municipality also to ascertain more particularly the conditions under which the present water and light systems could be leased and to learn what the company means by "reasonable terms" in this connection. Estimates on a sewer system could be obtained without difficulty. The revenue from fines, fees, licenses and taxation could all be worked out upon an approximate basis.

Space at our disposal does not permit of the completion of this article in this issue. Next week we will attempt to show up some of the imaginary difficulties that have retarded the scheme of incorporation.

THE cancellation of the old name of Fort Steele license district will give general satisfaction. The name is a misnomer, entirely misleading to the public who do not know the district well, just as the Fort Steele Mining division is still a living example of the misuse of names. Of the large government revenue from Fort Steele mining division only a very small, inconsiderable portion of the product taxed is mined in the district in which the village of Fort Steele is located. Yet to the uninitiated Fort Steele would appear to be in the centre of the coal mining operations of the Crows Nest. As to the practical advantages acruing from the creation of the two licence districts, it may be pointed out that much annoyance and expense will be saved. Hitherto the sittings have been held either at Cranbrook or Fernie and in every case one or more of the commissioners were obliged to waste a day or two in attending each meeting.

'Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Melfa Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my nieghbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily thank the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I cannot recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all Druggists and Dealers.

WELL AGAIN.

The many friends of John Blount will be pleased to learn that he has entirely recovered from his attack of rheumatism. Chamberlain's Pain Balm cured him after the best doctors in the town (Monon, Ind.) had failed to give relief. The prompt relief from pain which this liniment affords is alone worth many times its cost. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers.

The favorable impression caused by their last visit to Fernie will likely give them a packed house to-morrow evening.

The foreman of the snow plow met with an accident last Saturday which came near ending fatally. As it was leaving Coal Creek the wheels of the snowplow left the track and the long lever used to reverse the wings was suddenly swung to the opposite side with great force striking the operator on the head and making a nasty scalp wound. The injuries were found to be only superficial and under Dr. Keith's care the patient will soon be around again.

H. F. Martin in severing his connection with the Coal company at Morrissey, was banquetted by the employees at that point last Saturday at the Miner's hotel He was presented with a handsome gold watch and chain suitably engraved. The banquet was a most pleasant affair, numerous toasts were drunk and everything passed off most successfully. Mr. Martin has taken over the management of the Fernie Manufacturing Co. of which he is president, in place of N. E. Broley, who goes out on the road for the company.

The Nelson team tried hard to arrange matters so that they could make a trip through East Kootenay It was desired to play at both Fernie and Cranbrook. Fernie was willing to guarantee $100 for expenses for the team for one game. Cranbrook, however, absolutely refused to put up anything in the way of a guarantee. If Cranbrook had offered $75 the trip would have been made. A communication was sent to Fernie to learn if the guarantee could not be raised so that the Nelson team could play two games in Fernie. The Fernie men tried to raise the desired amount but could not do so. As it was impossible for the team to make a week's trip in East Kootenay on a $100 guarantee the idea of making the tour had to be abandoned.—Nelson News.
