Constipation

Is a universal and most troublesome disorder. It causes Headache, Mental Depression, impairs the Sight and Hearing, destroys the Appetite, and, when long continued, causes Enlargement of the Liver, Inflammation of the Bowels, and Piles. Constipation is speedily cured by Ayer's Pills.

For a number of months I was troubled with Costiveness, in consequence of which I suffered from Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, and a disordered liver. My eyes also troubled me. I was compelled to wear a shade over them, and, at times, was unable to bear exposure to the light. I was entirely three boxes of Ayer's Pills. I have no hesitation in pronouncing this medicine to be the best cathartic ever made.—James Eccles, Poland, Ohio.

I suffered from Constipation, and, consequently, from Headache, Indigestion, and Piles, for years. Ayer's Pills, which I took at the suggestion of a friend, have given me effectual relief. I commenced taking this remedy two months ago, and am now free from Constipation, the removal of which has caused my other troubles to disappear, and greatly improved my general health.—W. Keeler, Amherst, Mass.

I suffered from Constipation, which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me, completely.—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

Poetry.

Beautiful Hands.

My mother's weary hands!
Their praises let me speak.
They have held love's golden bands
So long—they are thin and weak.

They are tremulous now and slow;
But, to me, they are just as sweet
As when, so long ago,
They have guided my baby feet.

They have old and wrinkled grown;
But, to me, they are just as fair
As when they clasped my own
And folded them first in prayer.

They have toiled thro' patient years,
While no one praised their deeds,
They have wiped most bitter tears,
And supplied unnumbered needs.

They have heavy burdens borne,
When manhood's strength has failed;
They have soothed the hearts that mourn,
And inspired the hearts that quailed.

The naked they have clad;
The hungry they have fed;
With tender touch, and sad,
They have laid away their dead.

Mother's hands are thin and old;
But their every touch I'll love,
Till they clasp the harp of gold
That awaits their touch above.

One Man's Duty.

Robert Grant.

An old diary, with its story, has fallen into my hands. Of the diary, here are two of its recordings. The story will follow, and if your heart aches as mine did over it, I shall not wonder. It has the rare merit of having actually happened and should win your sympathy. I shall simply tell you it.

Record 1st.

'My days are chiefly spent in my official duties and after those are over, I tend the garden which is about the size of my old housekeeper's best broad neckerchief and nearly as unfruitful as a corner of Sahara. It grows weeds uncommonly fast, and not much besides, and to do that, it manages to absorb all Bettine's slops and most astonishing quantities of water from the spring. I know for I bring them. It is very unproductive and also very thirsty. Why I keep humoring the fancies of such a bit of barrenness, I am sure I cannot tell, unless it seems so like some of my people who never do anything themselves, but who exhaust my spiritual forces much as that does Bettine's tubs and patience.'

Record later.

'If seems impossible to reach my ideal of a priest's life among his people, or a man of God under the eye of his master. When I desire good, evil clutches me closest; when I desire most for an opportunity of proving my capacity for help, or noble endeavor, then I am most fallen into meagre common places. I would die for duty's sake only no duty has been given me that I may die for it. As I am now, so I shall live on and die, I suppose. Very much like the gray nest I expected a butterfly from, but which came to nothing. Did I wish most to wean myself from a sore loss, or to win my people to something better? —Bettine is calling. How harsh her voice grows. I am afraid the troublesome garden wears on the poor thing. I believe it would weaken a Samson.'

* * * * * * *

'Father Siebendo! father Siebendo!' came shrilly from the outer passage.

'I am here,' the father replied in a tone so gentle that it seemed like the lull which follows a strong breeze, 'what is it?'

'A man's down from the Pass an' wants ye.'

'You may send him in Bettine,' and the reverend father looked abstractedly out of the narrow window upon the weedy garden in question and sighed. Whether at it, or himself, or the interruption, we do not know, but it was a deep, tired breath.

The man from the Pass shuffled in uneasily, and in an awkward way got possession of a chair before the pastor had changed the direction of his eyes, or spoken to his visitor.

The rough cap he held went twirling round in his uneasy hands, and he kept a furtive watch on the priest while this dumb show lasted. His eyes were sharp, hard and wary, but it was not his eyes, nor in fact any one feature which gave the impression that the man on the surface was fair and open, but at heart, a rascal. It was either the combined expression of his individuality, or a certain tell-tale atmosphere about him which made one feel that, without a question asked or answered.

What the father thought cannot be known, but something affected him oddly. He still kept the strained glance out the window. He shivered, and not looking around, said coldly: 'What do you wish here, Cosmo Hadyn?' The cap whirled yet swifter, but not a word of reply. After a painful silence he stuttered:

'I came, father Sieb—Sieb—Siebendo,' the name apparently choked him, 'I came to get you to—to confess me.'

'You?'

'Aye, father.'

The priest gave him a long stare and again took his old position. Bettine's drone was heard at intervals from the kitchen as she sang to her pots and kettles. No other sound in the room save the heavy breathing of those two men was to be heard.

'You may begin,' was said, at length.

What was there about this penitent that made the usually prompt man so hard and slow at his spiritual duties?

What was there? Hear the story:

Two men—it is like many another romance, only few end so wofully sad as this—two men loved one woman. The undeserving man won, while the very deserving man lost the maiden.

The deserving man, whose nature was constant and tender, yet fiery, passionate, never swerved from his first surrender. To take his heart back was impossible, and since it was rejected, what remained but to crush out its love? What a useless task was undertaken the years and his own heart knew at a bitter cost.

The three had grown up together from their birth. Ober Siebendo was tall, slight and fair, with strong reserve and unknown capacity in him. Not given to show his best side to anyone. Indeed, it was only after long intercourse that you understood and loved the man and then you found a nature so full of surprises that you were silent from admiration and bewilderment.

But Cosmo Hadyn—well what was he? Hard to say, except that he was the exact opposite of Ober, and had a fine taking way with him among the girls. He had a furious will, but so carefully—we would better say artfully—concealed, that only enough was left at the surface to make a pleasant masterful way when he wished to exert it. A way which took mightily, especially with Pauline Vetternich,—the silly child. She who was both silly and lovable too.

In her nature there was a strange combination of both men. She was tall and slender, like Ober, and she was dark and voluble like Cosmo. She was sometimes wilful and sometimes very gentle, but always most fascinating. Whatever she did was not so beautiful in itself, save from the peculiar way in which she lent herself to the action. She could love and suffer deeply, probably, when her nature had once matured. That it was not now is sufficiently shown in her liking for that finely concealed wretch, Cosmo Hadyn. Whenever Ober Siebendo saw him wallowing about like a diminished armadillo, he felt like cursing. That a man whose neck lay in folds of fat, and who was nothing more than a glutton, should win Pauline Vetternich was maddening.

When they were married and the merry wedding wedding procession passed the spot where he lay, white and crouching from sight, he thrust his fingers sharply into his ears and set his teeth like a wounded lion, and when the bells rang out a wild kling! klang! from the little mountain church, he was where their sound could not reach his consciousness.

Only the day before, his rival had met him on the Pass and sneered openly in his face. The peasants who stood by heard Ober's mad oath that if it took years he would be revenged both for rivalry and insult. That was Ober's Nemesis. No idea of accounting for the oath from wounded love or biting taunt, ever entered the stupid peasant heads about him. Instead, it was taken at its face and recalled most disastrously.

After the marriage, the hamlet on the mountain side grew intolerably small and suffocating to Siebendo. His daily occupation of shepherd though it led him into higher atmosphere and still places, gave him no peace. The longing to conquer the fatal passion—no man suffers with complacency—haunted him night and day. He did not wish to covet any man's goods especially those of the adipose Cosmo. He whispered it to his friendly flocks as he guided them broken-heartedly from one green spot to another. 'Twas the only prayer he could find to pray, and pray he did, but without avail. The passion grew upon refusal of exstence.

One serene autumn day, as he was slowly whistling a Tyrolese air, the sound of girlish laughter floated up to him. He sprang as if struck suddenly. No one laughed like that but she—and to meet her—that was more than a man could bear. Everything about him began to reel and he put a trembling hand before his eyes to shut out the sight of a fresh young face below him.

A scream startled him. He rose and stared down helplessly at an old woman who was frantically shaking her hands and calling for help. He then guessed an accident and in one instant he was bounding towards them. The cries were coming clearer now, 'Pauline! Pauline! fell! fell!' and the neighboring peaks took up the clamor and mingled their syllables brokenly and awfully with hers.

He was on the spot, and peering over the side of the cliff before one could count twenty, and he had sprung by bounds, like a goat apparently. He saw there what might have happened if Pauline had fallen in towards instead of away from the face of the mountain. A shelf lay some feet farther down and might save her from being dashed to death below. If not—well that would follow, he said to himself as he swung down by dexterous turns from rock to crag, from bush to rock again. If there what then? Was there not a dizzy path which led far away from this spot where the attendant watched, and straight into a cave which he alone knew? and once there, why not hide until hope was over? The mountain was steep, very steep, no one could get at the base of that point until—well to the fox and the vulture could be assigned the loss of any person they sought there. What wild demons whispered to him as he went down? 'If—if—if,' they said with their red and black tongues while the rest made his heart thump like a tiger's.

While thinking, his feet touched the shelf. He called again and again until a faint cry answered his. He went towards it, and there, bruised and torn, he found what he was hoping and yet dreaded to find.

The dim hazel eyes looked pathetically into his. He lifted the bleeding hands and placed them about his strong neck. The blood of the slender fingers showed red on its brown skin, but that was naught. With one muscular arm about her, with the other he steadied his way along a narrow path which nothing but a goat or a man of iron nerve could pass over in safety. Many times he had to rest, and many times the helpless hands fell back from their grasp and made his burden more heavy and the way more perilous. The flap and shadow of a huge black wing once startled him and he knew they were disturbing the eyrie of an eagle, but fear was lost in love, pain in hazardous effort.

After an hour or more spent in creeping like a fly from point to point, the path gradually began to widen and became more easy until it led into the vicinity of the cave he had remembered and was longing to reach. Human strength could not hold out much longer. How he had done what he had was a miracle to him.

Once in there he gently placed the now unconscious woman on a rude couch and went in search of water. The spring was far enough away for the ugly demon to say, 'If—if,' and all the rest over again and the worst of it was it was so pleasant for Ober Siebendo to hear.

With the water held in his hand above her face, he questioned himself. Her life was cancelled to her husband. He had rescued her from death, found her, and since whatever is lost and found by another, belongs by right to the finder, then she was his. She should be too. Despised love, wounded honor, eager desire—she was his then—when he recalled those. What was it to suffer, if not to win?

What saved them in such an evil hour? A few drops of water trickled down and splashed over the white mouth as if to waken the dumb lips into defence of the threatened soul. He could not lay plans of such nature until she could speak to him, so from a few scattered drops all the water finally fell through his irresolute hands upon her face.

There was a gasp, a long sigh, a fluttering of the eyelids which ended in their opening quiveringly to the light and the set face over hers. Something of vandalism in it startled Pauline, and made her try to rise, but she fell back with a moan. Then they looked steadfastly at each other and read the unspoken thought of either soul.

Again Pauline tried to stand, but Ober caught her to him so sharply that she cried out helplessly. Then his tongue fell into speech. It was rapid and vehement as a mountain torrent and was not to be checked or turned aside by command or entreaty. The trembling woman listened at first coldly, then scornfully, and finally in indifference. No love or agony was able to move her from Cosmo.

'Yes,' she replied to his urging, 'you have saved my life probably but it is not mine to give away. I gave it to the man I married two months ago. It belongs to him only,'

'No!' Siebendo cried, 'no I say! he will treat you like a slave. You will have a bitter black living enough if you stay with him. His heart is like the panther's, Pauline. Oh! you may laugh at my crazy words, but some day you will creep to my feet and show me the scars of his beatings and then I shall not answer.'

She merely lifted a round, white wrist and looked at the discolored spot there, caused by Siebendo's tight grasp when he forced her to sit down and listen.

'I? Did I do that, child? No wonder that you look as if you hated me, but oh, have pity! My trouble is more than I can bear. I will not—it is in my hands now. I will keep you prisoner here. I will tend my flock and leave you with food and silence until we can escape from this to a better land. Your husband,' he smiled in disdain, 'bah! he will mourn you as much as the spider mourns the fly he has gorged for his evening feast. He loves your money, not you, Pauline.'

She closed her ears with her two hands and when he attempted to approach her, she thrust him back angrily and started to leave the cave. He barred her way, and baffled, filled with fear and pain she leaned fainting against the rock to see what next he would do. Would he imprison her there? Oh! where was Cosmo and the old mother? The faint was increasing and her senses swimming. With a last effort her hands went up to her eyes very beseechingly, and she said:

'I cannot bear this any longer. I—you are wrong. Siebendo I am quite sick. Have mercy. I know too much now, but I am his. Be still, and let me honor you only. I am so sick,' here the voice gave way and dropped into huskiness. A certain shadow in her face awed him, and from frenzy he turned to penitence and kindness again. He lifted her in his strong arms and bore her down to where some wood-cutters could make a litter and take her home. He accompanied them until met by the woman who was with her when she fell, then he turned back to his untended sheep.

The sky was growing black. Distant peals of thunder began to make angry echoes through the peaks. He must gather the scattered flock before the storm burst on them and bring all to the shelter of the hut. One weak lamb fell by the way and lifting it to his broad bosom, he carried it while hurrying the rest onwards. He felt more human with the helpless creature nestling to him, and soon he was telling himself how brutal he had been with Pauline. Over his face fell heavy tears, dropping one by one on the white lamb which shrank closer and closer to him as the thunder grew heavier and nearer.

He recalled then the last words which his father had said to him as a lad, 'When your heart is sore hurt by friends or enemies, seek to cure those wounds by healing the hearts of others. There is no other right way.'

Surely his wise old father knew.

From that time the idea never left him. His nature smarting under its loss, needed work which would embrace human sympathy and self-abnegation. And when one wishes for these two things they are never far distant. Like Mother Ceres' footsteps, they are strongly creative. Their touch calls up all manner of opportunities, both trifling and wonderful. The time was coming for Ober Siebendo. He would learn what self-abnegation meant to the last letter and make no dissent either.

Through the influence of a resident priest, who had been his father's friend first, he began to study diligently to this end. That he accomplished it we will show by going back to the father Siebendo whom we left staring blankly out of the window while a dark looking man sat eyeing him very askance.

At the words, 'You may begin,' Hadyn's irresolution and silence deepened upon him. Twice his dry lips opened to speak and twice they closed without a sound. The father seemed determined not to help him, even by a sign.

'I hear,' Cosmo began after a fresh struggle, 'that you and Herr Burgovitch quarrelled yesterday, father.'

'That is not confession,' said the curling lips of the astonished priest, if expression means anything whatever.

Hadyn grinned maliciously; then seeming to recall himself fell into affected humility.

'Did it happen?' he asked quietly again.

'What has that to do with you?'

'Much, I am afraid, with both of us,' Cosmo replied, grimly.

'Well we had a very slight difference. He was drunk and was whipping his child—such cowards as men are!' and he flashed a look at Cosmo which made him cringe. 'I stopped him when he turned upon me. I believe—I am not sure—but I think I struck him. He has been very troublesome to me and everybody else lately. That is enough, sir,' and the priest closed the explanation abruptly. He had stooped even to attempt to justify himself before such a man he thought.

Cosmo's eyes rested on the floor awhile and when he raised them he said in distinct tones:

'Burgovitch was found dead this morning—murdered, they say.'

The father sprang up.

'It is so,' Hadyn replied to his look of unbelief, 'and he had no enemies except drink, and—all understand that,' he added hastily and began clutching at his stock as if it had grown suddenly too tight for his throat. Then he said, 'It is dreadful;' and, as if afraid of himself, he flung the door open for fresh air and fanned his face.

'It is,' answered the priest, laconically. 'Who could have done it?'

'Father,' asked Cosmo abruptly, 'you do never tell the secrets of the confessional?'

'Never.'

'Even for life or death?'

'Never'

'For life or death, mind?'

'For life or death, never!'

'I know who killed Herr Burgovitch, father.'

'You should expose him to justice then.'

'I cannot. I—d—did it,' he said pantingly.

'You?' O, my God!'

The priest had risen to his feet at first, then as his position struck him, he sank down saying hoarsely.

'Go—leave me instantly—instantly!'

Had the mountain toppled over upon him he had been no less stunned. Yet he knew intuitively what his doom would be, dazed as he was. Cosmo was ready to confirm all suspicion by a report of the quarrel he had just admitted to him. There was no way of escape except to violate the laws of the confessional, and that was impossible.

He was not surprised when a month later he heard sentence pronounced against him. Cosmo Hadyn heard it without the twitch of a muscle, but his eyes had a great film of blood over them, startling to see.

Bettine had the honor of upsetting the court for some time. She ran to her master and with most terrible discord shrieked and denounced all in unmistakeable language.

'He to wear a 'ball and chain?' she mocked after them, 'and in one of the heathen islands! He shan't! he won't! Condemn yourselves there if you like for your stupidity, but not him, he is innocent—innocent I say!' she screamed.

The gutteral 'Arrest her!' of the court made no difference.

'If you dare! I'll tear your eyes out, you wretched dumpkoffs! Condemn that good man? I'll save him in spite of you! I'll,—but father Siebendo turned his haggard face upon her and mutely begged for silence. Then she fell sobbing at his feet. The court was awed and doubtful. It was nothing but circumstantial evidence, but so clear according to witnesses, heading whom was Cosmo Hadyn, that all seemed right.

It is needless to describe the parting. In a few hours, so short it seemed, deathly stillness lay over the priest's home. The garden was left to run as fast to weeds and wildness as it would. On the half-opened door some malicious hand had rudely sketched a convict. The winds stole through it and talked in gentle whispers, broken only by the scurry of invading rats, or at night by swiftly circling bats.

Quickly enough the meagre commonplaces had given way to most unflinching duty, but when he prayed how little he thought of duty coming to him in such a form as that. Without stopping to consult, she had donned a criminal's dress and beckoned him to follow her and remembering his prayer he obeyed.

Far off in the Southern Pacific lies an island used by the Austrian government as a place of banishment for its worst offenders. Here in the hot days and sultry tropical nights, a man numbered '92' dragged himself wearily, brokenly, on to the close of his life. He tried to be patient, but as the years grew longer and drearier, he prayed that death might break their chains which an awful fate had flung about him.

The man who had wrought his ruin still lived, but he had grown as hard and cruel as the fetters he had forged about his victim's withered ankles. Pauline often had to recall a speech of Siebendo's, but then he too bore scars as well as she, with the difference that he was guilty.

A night came, however, when the husband's lips were unsealed. Though they had cursed her often and muttered crazy words again and again while he slept at her side, yet this secret was held masterfully until the shadow of death frightened him into speech.

Was it strange that Pauline did not sigh or cry, and that she thought most of all of bringing witnesses that the man who had suffered in her husband's stead should find release? Cosmo died raving, and she sat with stern, white face beside him. Not all the scars he had inflicted upon her weighed an atom as compared to this fiendish injustice. She had learned very sorely what love and justice were in her life with him, or more strictly, she, had realized what they were not.

When the vessel which carried Ober Siebendo's pardon touched at the lonely island, a dim-eyed woman was set ashore who neither paused nor tarried for anything, until she was asking a prison official of a certain man sent there fifteen years before.

'Fifteen years?' repeated he, turning his books.

'Yes,' tremulously.

A long, long pause, broken by rustling leaves.

'He has just died,' and the book is slammed together again.

When the Southern Cross was glittering in the heavens that night, and the light from a waning moon was shining through the leafy crevices of a rude hut of palm branches, a woman lay prostrate beside a cot there. The still figure lying wierd in the ghostly creeping light was unmoved by her grief or wandering hands. The only reply she had was the solemn waving to and fro in the wind of the convicts striped garments. She had brought her scars as he said, and—he was altogether dumb.

Off on a peak of the Boehmerwald mountains in Austria, there stands a plain cottage occupied by two silent women. Both are gray, but one is very old, while the other is still young. The youngest spends many hours alone in a room which is severe in its simplicity. The only thing to note in it is a rusty ball and chain which one sees is numbered '92.' L'envoi.

—At a funeral near Sycamore, Ohio, recently, the team attached to the hearse ran away, and the vehicle was smashed to pieces. The coffin was dashed to the ground, the lid torn off and the corpse rolled into a ditch by the roadside.

Other teams took fright and a general panic ensued. Women fainted and men jumped from the carriages, wagons were overturned, horses became entangled in the general wreck and several persons were injured.

The Rev. Mr. Howells, who was to have conducted the funeral exercises, was perhaps fatally injured.

"A THREE-TIME WINNER."

Has Hanlan Lost His Grip?—Philosophical Training Demanded.

The defeat of "Ned" Hanlan by Teemer at Toronto in August indicates the "end of the glory" of the doughty champion. He has sustained his record with admirable pluck and success, but the tremendous strain of years of training must certainly some day find its limit.

Apropos of this we recall the following interesting reminiscence of aquatic annals:

On a fine, bright day in August, 1871, an excited multitude of 15,000 to 20,000 persons lined the shores of the beautiful Kenebecassis, near St. John, N. B., attracted by a four-oared race between the famous Paris crew of that city and a picked English crew for $5,000 and the championship of the world. Wallace Ross, the present renowned oarsmen, pulled stroke for the Blue Nose crew, and "Jim" Renforth, champion sculler and swimmer of England and of the world, was stroke in the English shell.

Excitement was at fever heat.

But three hundred yards of the course had been covered when the Englishmen noticed that their rivals were creeping away.

"Give us a dozen, Jim," said the veteran Harry Kelly, ex-champion of England, who was pulling No. 3 oar.

"I can't boys, I'm done," said Renforth, and with these words he fell forward, an inanimate heap in the boat.

"He has been poisoned by book-makers," was the cry, and belief.

Everything that science and skill could suggest for his restoration was tried; but after terrible struggles of agony, the strong man, the flower of the athletes and pride of his countrymen, passed away.

The stomach was analyzed but no sign or trace of poison could be found therein, though general examination showed a very strange condition of the blood and the the life-giving and health-preserving organs caused by years of unwise training. While the muscular development was perfect the heart and kidneys were badly congested.

The whole system was, therefore, in just that state when the most simple departure from ordinary living and exertion was of momentous consequence. His wonderful strength only made his dying paroxysms more dreadful and the fatality more certain.

Hanlan is now in Australia. Beach, champion of that country, is a powerful fellow, who probably understands the liability of athletes to death from over-training, the effect thereof being very serious on the heart, blood and kidneys, as shown by poor Renforth's sudden death.

Within the past three years he has taken particular care of himself, and when training, always reinforces the kidneys and prevents blood congestion in them and the consequent ill-effect on the heart by using Warner's safe cure, the sportman's universal favorite, and says he "is astonished at the great benefit."

Harry Wyatt, the celebrated English trainer of athletes, who continues himself to be one of the finest of specimens of manhood and one of the most successful of trainers, writes over his own signature to the English Sporting Life, September 5th, saying: "I consider Warner's safe cure invaluable for all training purposes and outdoor exercise. I have been in the habit of using it for a long time. I am satisfied that it pulled me through when nothing else would, and it is always a three-time winner!"

Beach's and Wyatt's method of training is sound and should be followed by all.

A SIGNIFICANT FACT.

The worn out, waste and poisonous matter in the system should escape through the secretions of the bowels, kidneys and skin, or serious disease results. B. B. B. opens those natural outlets to remove disease.

The Riches of Bolivia.—Bolivia is doubtless the richest in minerals of any land on the globe, and millions upon millions of precious metals have been taken out of her mines by the primitive process which still exists, and must exist till railroads are constructed to carry machinery there. Every ounce of ore that finds its way out of the Andes is carried on the back of a man or a llama, and the quartz is crushed by rolling heavy logs upon it. By this method Bolivia exports from twelve to fifteen millions of gold and silver annually, and the output would be fabulous if modern machinery could be taken into the mines. The distance from Lajuy to the farthest mining district of Bolivia is seven hundred miles, and it is no farther to the diamond fields of Brazil. Bolivia offers a grant of twelve square leagues of land and forty thousand dollars a mile for the extension of the Argentine Northern to Sucre, and English capitalists are ready to continue the work as soon as the Argentine government drops it at the boundary line. When it is built the owners of this road will hold the key to a country which has excited the cupidity of adventurers since the New World was discovered. It has furnished food for four centuries of fable, and armies of men have died in search of its treasures. A territory as large as that which lies between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains remains entirely unexplored. On its borders are the richest of agricultural lands, immense tracts of timber, diamond-strewn seams, and the silver and gold deposits of Cerro de Pasco and Potosi. What lies within is the subject of speculation. The tales of explorers who have attempted to penetrate its mysteries read like the old romances of Golconda and the El Dorado of the Amazons, where the women warriors wore armors of solid gold; but the swamps and the mountains, the rivers that cannot be forded, and the jungles which forbid search, the absence of food, and the difficulty of carrying sufficient supplies on foot, with the other obstacles that have prevented exploration, and will be overcome eventually, and the secret that has tantalized the world for four centuries will be told by ambitious scientists.

The Weekly Monitor.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16th, 1887.

—John L. Sullivan, the champion pugilist, is now visiting England. His reception there has been most flattering to his vanity. People by thousands crowded to see him, and upon one occasion the numbers striving to get a glimpse of him were so great that traffic was almost stopped on one of London's greatest thoroughfares.

It seems singular that a man who possesses no higher claim to public recognition than that he can hit harder and more scientifically than any man who has yet faced him, should be so feted and run after. People, however, pay a respect of some sort to any man who is king in his own line—no matter what it is. When John L. drops to second best, he will then find out how ephemeral is his fame. Look at Hanlan. Who talks much about him now? Physical power in whatever form is admired the world over, and has been ever since there were enough men on the globe to engage in competition to to see which had the best thews and sinews. However much we may decry and honestly abhore prize-fighting, yet there are very few men who could refuse to admire the proportions of such a perfect specimen of the physical man as John L. Sullivan is said to be, nor who could truly express no desire to see a man who might pose in the character of one of the fabled heroes of heathen mythology—Hercules.

—The publishers of a paper in Illinois, so says an exchange, recently brought suit against forty-three delinquent subscribers and obtained judgment in all cases. Twenty-three of them, however, made affidavit that they owned no more than the law allowed, and no attachments were issued; but the cases were taken into the Supreme Court and all were arrested for petty larceny, so the exchange says, and bound over for the sum of three hundred dollars each. This appears to be rather hard lines on the face of it; but, after all, is such treatment too bad for men who will receive and make use of the work of a publisher's hard labor of brain and hands for year after year, and then refuse absolutely to pay for the same. There is no class of men in the country who work so hard for what they receive as the newspaper men, and there are none who suffer so much from unpaid debts. Now we have had numbers of subscribers who after taking the MONITOR for year after year and not paying a cent for the same, suddenly have left the country, without so much as saying they will try and pay us some time. The only notice we have is a returned copy of the paper done up in one of the slips used by postmasters for the purpose, which informs us that the paper is not taken out of the office as the party to whom it is addressed has gone to the States or some other distant place. We make no insider objection to a subscriber leaving his subscription unpaid for some time, even for two or three years, so long as he shows a disposition to pay; but what we do object to, is for a person to receive the paper for years without paying or intending to pay. Is it fair? is it right to treat us in this way?

—Of the seven Chicago anarchists who caused the death of a number of policemen by pitching bombs among them while the latter were in discharge of their duty, four have met their fate on the gallows, two have been sent to prison for life, and the seventh committed self-murder the day before the execution of his four companions. Great pressure was brought to bear upon the United States authorities to secure a commutation of the sentence imposed by the courts—dire threats were indulged in against life and property—but to their honor be it said those who held the scales of justice remained true to their trust. Men must be made to respect the law, and taught that the only right way to seek redress for wrongs, either fancied or real to the body politic, is by the constitutional one—through their representatives in the councils of state.

Anarchism received a severe check in Chicago on Friday last. The puny threats indulged in by the long-haired rattle brains who call themselves anarchists will fall as impotent against the grim front of justice as the waves of the ocean against the rock-bound coast.

Annapolis County Temperance Alliance.

The Annapolis County Temperance Alliance met in Dennison's Hall, Bridgetown, on Tuesday, the 15th inst, W. W. Mills, president, in the chair. The officers of the past year were re-elected: Walter M. Mills, President; C. F. Armstrong, Secretary; W. C. Healey, Treasurer. The attendance, though not large, was quite representative. A resolution was passed unanimously expressing satisfaction that some good and successful work had been done during the past year, largely through the effects of the Inspector, and that we push the enforcement of the law with greater energy, feeling strong confidence in the Scott Act. The lack of sufficient evidence has somewhat hampered the Inspector in his work, and if law-abiding citizens wish this law thoroughly enforced they must promptly inform the inspector. By remaining silent, when we know of a breach of the law, we become an accessory to the crime.

The next meeting of the Alliance will be held in Lawrencetown in December. We ask a large attendance.

—The barque "Bachelors," of Yarmouth, was wrecked at the entrance of Yarmouth harbor during a high wind, on Tuesday night of last week. The anchors fouled and the vessel went ashore on the ledges. Hall, of the Spa Springs Hotel, informs us that he and the gentlemen with whom he is to be associated have entered into a contract with Mr. John Bowlby to build a hotel to accommodate one hundred people, and a large barn suitable to the needs of this growing business. We stated some little time ago that Capt. Hall had sold out to a company. This was not quite correct. He has only sold a partnership interest, therefore visitors to this popular resort will still be greeted with the portly form of the jolly captain. The time is probably not far distant when the popular and valuable waters of this resort will attract crowds of people.

Anarchists Hanged!

SPIES, PARSONS, ENGEL AND FISCHER MEET THEIR FATE.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—Lingg the condemned anarchist, in whose cell, the other day, several bombs were found, shot himself through the head, in prison this morning.

Governor Oglesby, of Chicago, commuted the sentences of Schwab and Fielden to life imprisonment.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—At six o'clock this morning three hundred policemen, armed with rifles, bayonets, revolvers and full cartridge boxes, were on duty at the jail in which the anarchists are confined. A battalion of three companies of police, that have been quartered in the jail and criminal court building since the new orders went into force, will do duty inside the building to-day. In addition to the battalion on the inside there will be a force on the outside armed with rifles, and will surround the entire block in which the jail is situated, which, in addition to cordons of police, will be enclosed by ropes. The men have loaded pieces and fixed bayonets. They will be deployed in open order so that if they are attacked, especially with bombs, the execution will not be so great, while at the same time the police will be able to return the fire with greater effect and less danger to themselves, and in case of attack they will not break but will hold their positions until reinforced or called back. Members of the police department not on duty at the the jail will be held in reserve at various stations in readiness to march to any point at a moment's notice, except a few who will be out on post. Detectives will be stationed outside the police lines and will mingle with the crowd.

It lacked just one minute and a half of the hour of high noon when a single white-shrouded figure, above which was a face of yellowish pallor—the face of August Spies—passed the first post of the gallows. The crowd, ten feet below, half rose involuntarily from their chairs at the first glimpse of the apparition advancing across the scaffold. Spies looked calm and glanced at the reporters with a trace of his old time, cynical smile. He walk firmly over the drop to the furthest edge of the gallows. Following close came Fischer's countenance which had a peculiar glisten, totally unlike the ashiness of Engel's heavy features, and in strange contrast with the dead lack of color in the pinched lineaments of Parsons. The once jaunty, vivacious Texan came last, a withered old man.

All four stepped from the second tier of their cells to the scaffold. The four men were placed upon the trap. Spies' hair seemed to literally stand up on end. Engel's shoulder seemed nearly to touch the top of his head. Parsons set his teeth firmly together and looked down calmly upon the crowd beneath. His face was the face of a man of iron. A murmur of admiration at his unflinching nerve passed through the spectators. Engel said something inaudible to the deputy, evidently of a jocular character, for the condemned men laughed heartily. Fischer, too, put in a remark. Spies and Parsons, at either end of the scaffold, maintained a stolid and dignified demeanor, but there was a look of unutterable woe on the face of the ex-editor. The shrouds had already been adjusted before the men left their cells. Nothing remained but to encircle each neck with a noose and to cover each head with a cap. Jailor Fulz approached Spies: A quick movement, so quick that it can hardly be noticed, and the rope is around his neck and being drawn taut. There was not a movement of a muscle. In a moment the throat of Fischer was encircled by the noose. He moved his head up and down as if it hurt him. Engel did not move as the operation was being performed. Parsons riveted his gaze on the ground, and his features were contracted. All four were evidently determined to die game. A deputy approached Spies with a cap in his hand. The condemned man said something in an undertone. He was evidently remonstrating. There was a moment of deathlike stillness. Then, clear and distinct, came the voice of Spies: "Our silence is more powerful than speech." There was a ring to it that echoed far away down the corridor. There was silence again for a second. Then, in a loud full voice, a shout, "Hurrah for anarchy!" came from Engel. There was another pause, broken this time by the voice of Fischer: "This is the happiest moment of my life." Then the clear well modulated voice of Parsons broke the oppressive stillness. There was not that enthusiasm, that ring in it which marked the utterance of the others. "Shall I be allowed to speak, oh! men and women of dear America?" The sheriff shifted his position a little. He was several feet away from the speaker, but the speaker must have seen the movement through the folds of the cap. He said, "Let me speak Sheriff Matson! Let the voice of the people be heard!" Down went the drop, ere the last words of Parsons had died upon his lips. Four bodies swung in the air, and the Haymarket massacre was avenged.

Antigonish, November 14.—Mr. Scott, publisher of the Echo, was to-day arrested on a charge of criminal libel on Rev. Dr. MacGregor, of Thorburn. He was admitted to bail.

—Ayer's Sarsaparilla acts directly and promptly, purifying and enriching the blood, improving the appetite, strengthening the nerves, and invigorating the system. It is, in the truest sense, an alterative medicine. Every invalid should give it a trial.

—Mrs. John Jacob Astor pays her chief cook $7,000 per annum and then has to content herself with eating the plainest kind of fare. She is troubled with the dyspepsia in its worst form.

—It is really wonderful by accounts continually coming in of the cures that Dr. Norton's Dock Blood Purifier is making in different parts of the Province, and how fast it is taking the lead of all other medicines now selling for diseases of the Liver, Blood, Stomach and Kidneys.

—It appears that in the Boston market the pine of Canada and the Northwestern States is being in a large measure supplanted by poplar and cypress from the South. This is one of the indications that our lumbermen should be active in securing new markets and developing those that may be more fully supplied from the Dominion. There is much trade that can thus be done by us directly, which is now in the hands of foreign middlemen, who reap an unduly large share of the profit.—Canada Lumberman.

—Our lady friends will be interested in knowing that by sending 20c. to pay postage, and 15 top covers of Warner's Safe Cure (showing that they have used at least 15 packages) to H. H. Warner & Co., Rochester, N. Y., they can get a 500 page, finely illustrated Cook Book, free. Such a book, bound in cloth, could not be bought for less than a dollar. It is a wonderfully good chance to get a fine book for the mere postage and the ladies should act promptly.

To Investigate the Food Fishes of the Pacific.—Washington, Nov. 9.—The Albatross, which now lies at the navy yard in this city, will sail to-morrow or the next day for the Pacific, under the direction of the Fish Commission, and fully equipped for taking deep sea soundings and investigating the resources of the Pacific in the way of food fishes. It is expected that important result will be attained by the expedition, which is to be commanded by Lieut.-Commander Tanner, and manned by a picked company of officers, seamen, and scientific men.—N. Y. Sun.

WORTH YOUR ATTENTION.—Cut this out and mail it to Allen & Co., Augusta, Maine, who will send you free, something new, that just coins money for all workers. As wonderful as the electric light, as genuine as pure gold, it will prove of lifelong value and importance to you. Both sexes, all ages. Allen & Co. bear expenses of starting you in business. It will bring you in more cash right away, than anything else in the world. Anyone anywhere can do the work, and live at home also. Better write at once; then, knowing all, should you conclude that you don't care to engage, why no harm is done.

Halifax Markets.—The following quotations are dated Nov. 11th, and are furnished us by Messrs. A Steam Waggon.—At Auburn, Maine, is a novelty in the shape of a common waggon, having all the appearance of a common Concord waggon, with the exception that a part of the boiler and die covering will show above the body of the waggon. All the motive power is concealed under the flooring. The power is furnished by two small engines of about three-horse power; the boiler is made from iron pipe in spiral form; the waggon body contains two seats, easily holding three each. A small tank for holding water is placed in the forward end of the body in a place especially adapted for it, and a small bunker for coal on the side and end.

The Episcopal Synod.—As stated in our second edition yesterday, the Synod, after debating a resolution that the delegates as a body bind themselves to accept the nomination of the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishops of London and York, when made, decided it was better to have the resolution withdrawn, as it was considered the Synod, after having decided unanimously to refer the matter to these prelates, were morally bound to accept their nominee.

The Synod then adjourned to the 1st day of February, the committee in the meantime to remedy any defects in the papers sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury.—Recorder.

—Forty-five years ago a North Carolina farmer married and moved into a log house near Danbury. The house had one room down stairs in which were two holes, eight by ten, for windows, and a big fireplace. When he built a fire in the new home he said that as long as he lived the hearth stone should never grow cold, and up to date it hasn't, the fire in the fireplace has never gone out. Meantime the man has never slept from home for a single night; has never tasted food from any other table than his own; has never used a particle of oil or a single candle to light his dwelling; has been married three times; has begotten fourteen children, all of whom are living, and all but three married; has become a great-grandfather, and now is in vigorous health.

FOR FROST BITES.

There is no better remedy for frost bites, chilblains and similar troubles, than Hagyard's Yellow Oil. It also cures rheumatism, lumbago, sore throat, deafness, and lameness and pain generally. Yellow Oil is used internally and externally.

Fall River, November 7.—Thomas Maguire, a resident of what is known as Dublin, in Somerset, near this city, a hard-working man with a family of four children, has received a letter from a solicitor in Denver, Col., informing him that he had been appointed executor of the will of his bachelor brother, Bartholomew Maguire, who had left an enormous fortune, estimated at $3,500,000. This amount is principally invested in gold and silver mines. Bartholomew left the east about 15 years ago. The fortune is bequeathed to the brothers and sisters of the deceased, six in number. One of the brothers is somewhere in South America, two brothers and a sister are in Ireland, a married sister is in Denver, and the executor of the will, Thomas, is a resident of Somerset.

Salvation Army Romance.—The salvation army meetings in Montreal continue to be an attraction to thousands. A rather peculiar incident happened at a meeting one night last week. When the time for penitents to come forward and testify arrived, a man and woman were noticed advancing to the platform from different portions of the hall. As they knelt in prayer all at once they were noticed to recognize each other. It turned out that they were man and wife who had been separated for nearly two years, and who had by a strange coincidence strayed into the hall, listened to the addresses and been converted. When the fact became known they were urged to be reconciled, and under the salvation army colors were reunited, embraced each other and left the hall a happy couple.

Miss Jessie Milner, of Digby, who resigned her situation as teacher, and joined the salvation army, farewelled on Monday of last week. She has gone to the training home at St. John.—Herald.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION.

The medical profession, the clergy, the press and the public alike acknowledge the virtues of Burdock Blood Bitters, as an unequalled remedy for chronic diseases of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and blood. Its popularity increases with its years of trial.

WILLIAM O'BRIEN,

IRISH NATIONALIST.

William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, the organ of the National leaders, was born in Mallow, County Cork, on Oct. 2nd, 1852. He comes of a family locally prominent in later Irish revolutionary movements, his father having taken part in the exciting events of 1848, and his elder brother being equally prominent in the Fenian uprising of 1867. William O'Brien was educated at Cloyne college, and, following his natural bent towards journalism, he joined the staff of the Dublin Freeman's Journal in 1876. In 1879 he visited the west of Ireland as the special commissioner of that paper, to investigate the famine then ravaging there; and by his graphic descriptions of the destitution which he found he contributed much to the relief of his unfortunate people. United Ireland was established in June, 1881, with O'Brien at its head, as the organ of the National leaders. Chief Secretary Forster ordered its suppression, and imprisoned Editor O'Brien and 14 members of the staff of the paper in Kilmainham jail as suspects. After his release, Mr. O'Brien renewed the war against the administration. He was elected to parliament from Marrow, and his course in the house of commons was distinguished by zeal and ability.

William O'Brien is of medium height, thin, and studious-looking. In disposition he is modest and retiring, although regarded by Parnell as the most scholarly man, and one of the ablest debaters of the Irish party.

Made a Brute by Whiskey.

A FATHER SELLS HIS DAUGHTERS TO INDIANS FOR DRINK — THEY ARE CONDEMNED TO A SLAVERY WORSE THAN DEATH.

Advices from British Columbia of the 30th ult. state that the government of that province has just received information from the west coast of Vancouver Island to the effect that three young white girls have been sold by their inhuman father to a tribe of lawless Indians. Three years ago there lived in Victoria a man, named Wm. Thompson, his wife and four daughters. Although Mrs. Thompson was a highly educated and accomplished woman, and of good family, her husband, whose station in life had been much beneath hers, was a dissolute and drunken character. Through his dissipated habits he was reduced to poverty, and, no longer able to obtain employment at Victoria, he, by threats, induced his family to accompany him to San Juan, on the west coast, where he took up his home near an Indian camp. Since that time, until now, nothing had been heard of them. A few weeks ago, while a Victoria schooner was lying at the wharf at Barclay sound, the captain and crew were surprised to see two white girls running toward their vessel, closely pursued by three or four Indians. Reaching the side of the vessel they jumped on board almost exhausted, begging most piteously of the captain to protect them from their pursuers, and release them from a living death they had been passing through as captives of the savages for the past 18 months. The Indians were close upon them, and, jumping on the deck of the schooner, demanded the girls as their property. The captain, however, refused to give them up. After parleying with the captain for a short time, the Indians took their departure, only to return with their number largely reinforced. It was during the interval between their departure and return that the captain learned the sad history of these unfortunate girls.

After moving to San Juan, their father continued in his dissipation, and all he earned went for the purchase of liquor. When he could no longer obtain money or liquor, he sold his eldest daughter to a wealthy Chinaman, to whom she, at the point of a pistol, was subsequently married. The money that the brute obtained in this way was soon squandered, and he had to look elsewhere for more. Being intimate with the Indians along the coast, who had now become his only companions in his debauchery — his wife having died from ill treatment and a broken heart, — in one of his drunken revelries at the Indian camp, he agreed to barter two of his daughters for a few blankets, some clothing and some whiskey, the Indians having smuggled in a considerable quantity of the latter a few days before. The bargain was made, and, for the purpose of carrying it out, Thompson's rude hut was visited one the following night by a few of the tribe, who easily carried away their helpless victims. Since their capture, the girls have been subjected to the most brutal treatment, and they repeatedly thought of taking their own lives, preferring death, even at their own hands, to the tortures that they had to submit to. A younger sister, only 8 years old, they had heard, their father had sold to another tribe of Indians, which bore out the story the captain subsequently heard from the lighthouse keeper at Rock Rock light, who had within a few days seen a young white girl in a canoe paddled by Indians near the lighthouse. Fearing that any further resistance would result in the massacre of all on board his vessel, the captain was at last forced to tell the helpless girls that they would have to return with their captors quietly, promising them, however, to report their situation to the government, which is taking steps to secure their release.

THE STORY CONTRADICTED.

Victoria, B. C., Nov. 7.—The sensational report published and telegraphed from here in regard to white girls being sold to Indians by their father is wholly untrue. The family, who have been living on the west coast of Vancouver Island, and who are the individuals referred to, are now residing in Seattle. There was no foundation for the story, which was entirely manufactured.

Trade With the West Indies.—Ottawa, November 10.—Mr. Cockburn, M. P., of Toronto, has been in the city for the past few days in the interests of a number of Toronto merchants who desire increased trade with the West Indies. Mr. Cockburn interviewed the post master general and other cabinet ministers, and urged the importance of securing the mail subsidy for any company that will undertake to put on a satisfactory line of steamers between Halifax and the West Indies. The ministers express a strong desire to aid in every possible manner any practicable scheme for facilitating trade in the direction indicated.—Herald.

let that cold of yours run on. You think it is a light thing. But it may run into catarrh. Or into pneumonia. Or consumption.

Catarrh is disgusting. Pneumonia is dangerous. Consumption is death itself.

The breathing apparatus must be kept healthy and clear of all obstructions and offensive matter. Otherwise there is trouble ahead.

All the diseases of these parts, head, nose; throat, bronchial tubes and lungs, can be delightfully and entirely cured by the use of Boschee's German Syrup. Correspondence.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of our correspondents.

Commercial Union.

Mr. Editor.—Your correspondent "R" does not seem to realize that the Commercial Union scheme, proposes to increase our customs revenue, by raising the tariff against all countries, except the United States, equivalent to the loss sustained by the free entry of American goods into the Dominion, or in other words that we must collect our revenue on a forty million dollar import, instead of a seventy million as heretofore, or levy duties on those goods that have been allowed free entry. We claim the results of the Butterworth Bill to Nova Scotia will be:—

1. "An increase in the expense and annoyance of our coast customs service." The more we tax an article the more efficient must be the service in order that our customs laws be not evaded; suppose we were to have a prohibitory liquor law, would it not require an army of tidewaiters, and other officials to enforce said law?

2. "The imperiling of our trade with the mother country, which during the last five years has been 33 per cent of Nova Scotia's total trade." To submit our trade to be legislated upon by a country that has a high protective tariff against all the world, and country practically given the power to raise that tariff until it becomes prohibitory, would certainly imperil our trade with England; and it is never considered good diplomacy to court retaliation.

3. "The burdening and hampering of all our other countries' trade, which for the last five years was worth to Nova Scotia 36 per cent. of her total trade." Under Commercial Union that foreign nation (U. S.) would also have command of this 36 per cent. which added to 33 per cent. of English trade would make the sum of 69 per cent. of Nova Scotia's total trade. Now if the best free trade arguments are of any weight, we will find that if a nation ceases to import, she will also cease to export; under the proposed scheme we would be powerless to make treaties or concessions or adopt a free trade policy in the interest of this most important part of our foreign commerce. Your correspondent says that nothing short of free trade will remedy the evil. If he means our present evil, we fully agree with him; but this proposed scheme we consider averse even to revenue reform.

4. "The total collapse of some of our industries." All industries that have been been forced into unnatural growth, when exposed to the keen air of competition would wither and die, these we would cease to support, but we would support others of a similar nature in a foreign country.

5. "All our producers burdened with indirect taxes far more oppressive than those at present bearing against us." The average duty on our total imports is 19¾ per cent. while that of the United States is 27¾ which is higher by about 50 per cent; if our revenue is to be collected on a smaller import, the rate will certainly be higher than at present, and every increase of this nature must increase the burden to the people in corresponding protection to monopolies (and those foreign monopolies!)

5. "The sacrifice of our loyalty to the principle of trade which has made England famous." England's principle of trade is that she be hampered in no direction, so far as she can make laws to that effect. The amalgamation of two false policies endorsed by those who have heretofore taught that England's policy was the true one, would certainly be a triumph for that policy which was inaugurated in America as a menace in a large degree to British political economy, and British industry.

7. "The sacrifice of our self-reliance and dignity!" These essentials to manliness which our forefathers brought to this country, and which enabled them not only to live, but to thrive. Should not the descendants of such a people blush, when they think of giving the control of their commerce, and moneyed institutions, and thus becoming vassals to foreigners.

"Could but our ancestors retrieve their fate,
And see their offspring thus degenerate;
They'd cancel records, and their tombs deface,
And then disown the vile, degenerate race."

"Mr. Butterworth and some of his supporters in Canada have no hesitation in saying that Commercial Union would be the first step to annexation, that one must follow the other." At a Commercial Union meeting held in Detroit Aug. 27th, the Toronto Globe reports Mr. Butterworth to have said: "It is apparent to all that in the consummation of what is now proposed, the Munroe doctrine becomes an accomplished fact through all this continent." At the same meeting Goldwin Smith is reported by the same paper to have said: "For himself, he believed annexation was best for both countries and sure to come." Is not the Globe a supporter of Mr. Butterworth and his bill?

If your readers require any more information on this point they had better interview some of the bill's supporters nearer home, who are "tired of British connection" and for whom the "bugbear of annexation has no terrors." Are our leading Commercial Unionists considering the true interests of the people, or their liberties, when they boast of having captured at least one-half of the public press, so that an independent voice can scarcely reach the public ear.

November 11th 1887.

Bloodshed in London.

London, Nov. 12.—Sir Charles Warren, chief of police, has issued a proclamation that no procession shall be allowed to approach Trafalgar square to-morrow. The Radical clubs and Socialist federation are actively engaged in arranging a plan of march, by which they hope to force their way through every street leading upon the square. Placards have been posted in various places appealing to the workingmen to come by tens of thousands and resist the carrying out of the ukase of the military despot.

London, Nov. 13.—The scene in Trafalgar square to-day has not been equalled since 1866, when the people, asserting the right of public meeting, destroyed the railings around Hyde Park. Four thousand policeman took possession of the approaches to the square early. They had been on the ground a short time when various societies, socialist, radical, and Irish, approached from every direction, headed by bands, and carrying banners. The police attacked and dispersed each group as it arrived. A fierce fight took place in the Stand, Northumberland avenue, Whitehall, Pall Mall and other adjacent streets. One society succeeded in entering the square, but departed after a bloody fight, in which Commoner Graham was seriously injured. Graham was subsequently arrested for attacking the police. At 4.30 p. m. the people in the vicinity of the square numbered 100,000, and the police were powerless to thoroughly disperse them. Cavalry and infantry were summoned to the assistance of the police, and the people began to disperse at dusk. About 200 citizens and 40 policemen were injured. Fifty persons have been arrested.

Arrested for a Murder Committed in Nova Scotia.—Boston, Nov. 8.—A young man, supposed to be James Bowie, who deliberately shot and killed farmer Ronald McDonald, at Tracadie, Antigonish County, on July 31st 1883, was arrested in East Cambridge, in the suburbs of Boston, this morning, on a warrant taken out by Detective Power, of Halifax. The information that brought on the arrest was given by the East Cambridge police authorities, who have been watching the movements of the accused for two or three weeks, but the Halifax officer is not prepared to say positively that the man secured is the right party. The prisoner, who gives the name of Pitts, takes matters coolly, and says he is not the man wanted for the murderer, and that he can prove his name is not Bowie. He was arraigned in the East Cambridge district court to-day and remanded till next Saturday.

Liver.—It turns out that the arrest was a mistake, as the man was not James Bowie at all, so he was discharged.

Literary Notices.

—The illustrations of The Illustrated London News (American edition) for November 5th, present as usual instruction as well as entertainment, and cover the customary broad range of this long established and widely known publication. Reading matter in abundance is provided, while now it is becoming quite generally known that newsdealers everywhere sell the paper for ten cents. Subscriptions can be sent direct to the New York office, which is in the Potter Building.

—The November Number of the Phrenological Journal and Science of Health will especially interest the ladies as the leading article relates to Pundita Ramabai, the Hindoo Scholar now in this country for the purpose of studying medicine. From the portrait to the signature the article is intensely interesting. "Mesmerism Forty Years Ago" is a strong and thought-awakening article. "A Girl's Problem" is continued in the form of a letter to Margaret MacKenzie from an eminent engineer.

"The Wealth of the Southern Pines," and "Notable Characters of the Day," are fully illustrated. Of the Child-Culture department we must say it is admirably conducted. The editorials relate to the critics on the late O. S. Fowler and Phrenology, New Schools of Medicine; and characters worthy of admiration. The Journal is published at $2.00 per year, 20c a number. Offered the last 3 months of this year "On Trial," for 25c. Address Fowler & Wells Co., Publishers, 775 Broadway, New York.

—With its November issue Babyhood completes its third year and volume. From the first number it has been a pronounced success, winning praises alike from press and subscribers. There is not a home in the land, blessed with small children but would be made happier and better for its monthly visits. With the November number is given an index of the volume just closed, embracing more than 1,000 topics and yet the publishers say that they have scarcely entered upon their field. A running comment on the articles in the November issue will give something of an idea of the scope of this most admirable of magazines. First we have editorial notes, brief and to the point, on such subjects as earboxing early drawings, diphtheria, watered milk, and the evolution of nursery sciences. Then follows an article on the "Contagious Diseases of Children" by Dr. Chapin, and one on "Bumps and Bruises" by Dr. Martin. W. J. Stillman, the widely-known correspondent of the London Times, has a unique and profusely illustrated article on "first Attempts at Art." This is followed by a further discussion of the "Proposed Training School for Nursery maids," the need of which Mr. Adams so ably presented in the October issue. Mary Dealing Bevier writes of "School Lunches" giving many hints which will aid perplexed mothers. The departments, Nursery Observations, Baby's Wardrobe, Nursery Problems, Mothers' Note Book, and Mother's Parliament, are unusually full. The number is equal to any that have preceded it, and this is saying much. We are glad to know that the magazine commences its fourth year under bright auspices. What mother can afford to be without it? 15 cents a copy; $1.50 a year. Babyhood Publishing Company, 5 Beekman Street, New York.

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family weekly newspaper of the first class—such, for instance, as The Independent, of New York. If a person were obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, they could not do better than to choose The Independent. It is a newspaper, magazine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 21 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession, no matter what the age, sex, employment or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

Those who desire to subscribe for The American Agriculturist as well as The Independent cannot make a better bargain than by accepting The Independent's offer to send both papers for one year for the sum of $3,75. Each subscriber will thus save seventy-five cents on the two papers.

Address, The Independent, 251 Broadway New York City.

—The Boston Provincialist has been merged into the British American Citizen. The latter is a fine eight-page paper, well edited and well printed.

—We have to hand a copy of the Canada Lumberman, published at Peterborough, Ont. It has recently put on an entire new dress, and presents a typographical appearance that is a delight to a careful printer's eye. It is a credit to Canadian journalism, in every way. Its pages are chiefly devoted to the lumberman's interest, as the title indicates, but the general reader will find much in its columns that will both profit and interest him. Published monthly at $1 per year.

—John Alden's Literary Magazine for November is to hand. It is not only one of the best, but is one of the cheapest of the Magazines of the day.

Sailing Twice Around the Globe in less than Eleven Months.—The clipper ship William J. Rotch of New Bedford arrived here yesterday from Hiogo Japan, having made the passage in 150 days. She covered 21,137 miles. On her outward passage from Philadelphia to Hiogo she sailed 21,400 miles in 137 days. She therefore made a distance equal to nearly twice around the globe in ten months and 25 days, which includes the time of lying in port at Hiogo and discharging and loading cargo. The passage for a round trip is remarkably fast.—N. Y. Sun.

But There is no Harm in Trying.—The British Government has appointed two or three gentlemen, including Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the enemy of Ireland, to try and settle the fishery dispute between the United States and Canada; and Mr. Cleveland has selected Mr. Bayard, Mr. Angell of Michigan and Mr. W. L. Putnam of Maine to meet these British Commissioners. Perhaps these diplomatists may agree upon a convention of settlement, and perhaps they may not; and perhaps their agreement may suit the views of Congress, and perhaps it may not. The subject is surrounded with considerable uncertainty from every point of view.—N. Y. Sun.

What is our fleeting life?
The day of evil's power.
Its burden? Care and strife.
The past—where is it? It has fled.
The future? It may never come.
Our friends departed? With the dead.
Ourselves? Fast hasten'ing to the tomb.

A Gentle Wife's Victory.

HOW A WOMAN WON HER HUSBAND OVER TO THE SAFE SIDE.

(Revivalist Sam Jones in a sermon.)

Above all qualities in the world for a wife is a spirit of gentleness. Gentleness, A gentle-spirited wife. I heard this incident once, and it impressed me much. Five gamblers sat gambling, and the clock struck 12 and 1, and 2, and directly one of the gamblers spoke up and said; 'Gentlemen, you can play on if you want to but my precious wife is at home right now waiting for me to come home. I have got the best wife in the world.' 'Well,' said the others, 'every man thinks that.' 'Well,' said he, 'my wife knows I am out gambling, and who I am with, I expect, but she's so good that if I was to take you four men to the house right now and ring the door-bell and she came to the door, and I was to tell her to go and cook supper for all you gamblers, she'd do it in a spirit of gentleness and with a smile on her face.' 'We don't believe it,' they all exclaimed. 'Well, you all come and see.'

And he took the gamblers to his house, rang the door-bell and his wife let them in immediately and her husband introduced her to all the gamblers, and said: 'Wife, we've been gambling until late, and we want you to go and prepare supper for us.' And the wife said: 'Husband, the fire is out in the stove, and cook has gone home, but if you'll all be seated and patient I will get it as soon as I can,' and with a smile on her face, she prepared the supper, called them in and she waited on the table with a smile on her face; and when they had finished the meal, one of the old gamblers said: 'Your husband told us before we came what you would do; but we didn't believe him, and now I want to ask you this question: 'how can you be such a wife to such a husband?' And she said: 'Gentlemen, I have prayed for that man for twenty years that God would save his soul, but I have lost all hope that he will be saved. He is going to a world of [illegible] and I'm going to make his life in this world as pleasant to him as I can.' The gambler looked up and over at her husband, and said: 'Sir, how can you be such a man with such a wife as that?' And the husband jumped, up and said: 'Gentlemen, hear me. My wife has won me to her Saviour to-night; and I have settled the question. I give myself to her God and her Christ to-night.' And the incident goes on to relate that her husband afterwards commenced preaching, and that he was the preacher that won these other four gamblers to Christ.

Canadian Hay Shippers.

CLAIMS TO BE PRESENTED TO THE UNITED STATES FOR OVERCHARGES.

OTTAWA, Nov. 1.—For a number of years a large and profitable export trade has been done in the shipment of hay from Canada to the United States, the average yearly shipment reaching in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. Owing to some misinterpretation of the customs laws, the customs officials of the United State imposed a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem, while the Canadian shipper contends that the duty should not be over 10 per cent, according to the United States customs laws, which provide that on any unmanufactured and unenumerated article a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem shall be levied. Despite this fact Canadian shippers were forced to pay a duty of 20 per cent. at the different ports of entry for a long series of years. In 1880, however, Charles Arpin, an extensive exporter of St. John's, Que., sued the United States government, and, with others, obtained judgment for £26,000, and it is asserted that during the period in which the illegal exaction was made $600,000 was in this way taken out of the Canadians. Several of those who have claims of this sort against the United States government for overcharged duties have represented their case to the Dominion government with the request that the matter may be brought before the commission shortly to meet at Washington, hoping that when the general trade question is brought up their wrongs may find redress. The matter has been placed in the hands of Sir Charles Tupper as the Canadian commissioner.

—The Bloomington, Ill., Presbytery has a small-sized elephant on its hands in the shape of a church at Sidney composed entirely of women. They raised the money and built a neat little chapel and dedicated it practically free from debt. There being no male members to hold the offices, the Presbytery is endeavoring to complete the organization by electing elders. If they cannot find some male members they will have to let women take the places, which is what the women want.

—'So you maintain, professor, that children should never be slapped or whipped?' 'I do maintain it. The parent who whips his children is a criminal. Happily my children are all quiet and obedient. If I had a son like Sinderley's boy I'd break his neck.'

—Why is the first chicken of a brood like the mainmast of a vessel? Because it is a little forward of the main hatch.

PREVAILING SICKNESS.

The most prevailing complaints at this season are rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, inflammations and congestions. For all these and other painful troubles Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best internal and external remedy.

An Opportunity for Manure Making.

To preserve a healthful condition, maintain the vital warmth, and keep the skin in proper action, thorough oarding and brushing should not be neglected in a winter dairy, and the utmost cleanliness in every respect should be observed. Abundant supplies of absorbents, of which dried swamp muck is the best, and hard wood sawdust and fresh leaves next, and in place of these cut straw, or any other fine waste material should be procured. The winter dairy is a grand opportunity for making manure, and the improvment of a farm and to this end every possible economy in saving and preserving the manure should be exercised. The feeding must be liberal and of the best food. It must be regular in quality, quantity and time; because out of the food the butter must come, and in quality and quantity will be exactly equivalent to the food given. American Agriculturist.

A PETRIFIED SEAL.—In a field nearly opposite the old brick kiln, on the Milledgeville road, a Telegraph reporter was shown a petrified seal, a few days since. The animal was imbedded in an outcrop of gray granite, and measured three feet in length by 15 inches at its greatest breadth. The finding of such remains in a rock that could not have been carried to its place by any convulsion of nature, indicate that the entire valley behind Fort Howe was once covered with water—an arm extending inland from the harbor—but as to when this was the case, legend and history are silent.—St. John Telegraph.

THE DARK SIDE OF LIFE.—William Shaler shot and killed his wife, and then shot and killed himself, in an upper chamber at the residence of Sylvester Lynch, near Ithica, New York, Sunday afternoon. The couple quarrelled since they were married a year ago, Shaler having often accused his wife of infidelity.—Early Monday morning Mrs. Miller, living at 211 Browne street, Cincinnati, threw her 9-year-old child out a third story window, and then leaped out after it. The mother was instantly killed and the child fatally injured. The cause of the wife's horrible act was the husband and father's drunkeness, neglect and cruelty.—Late Boston Paper.

—Herr Whichmann of the German Reichstag is a very absent-minded man. He gave an illustration of this peculiarity the other day, when, in calling the roll, he came to his own name. He called it out and received no answer. Then he called again in a louder tone. Still no reply. The third time he called his name with a tremendous shout, as though he knew that the owner of the name was in the house and ought to answer, and it was only the roars of laughter that followed that brought him to his senses.

One Hundred Dollars in Gold.

It is not often that farmers and farmer's wives, or people generally who keep hens, have an opportunity to make from ten to fifty dollars in eight week's time, besides increasing the number of eggs from their hens from two to five hundred per cent. But like fourth of July it does come once a year, and now is the time.

For three years I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Custom House Street, Boston, Mass., have offered several premiums payable in gold coin for the best results from the use of Sheridan's Powder to make hens lay. These premiums have become so popular among people who keep hens, that Johnson & Co, offer still larger premiums this year. They hereby authorize us to say that they will pay one hundred dollars in gold coin in four separate premiums, for the best result; Twenty-five dollars for the second; Fifteen dollars for third, and Ten dollars for fourth best result.

Of course every person who competes cannot get a premium, but the following letter from a party who took only a small premium last year, shows that every one can make money by the use of Sheridan's Powder, from increase of eggs alone, even if they do not get a premium.

Evansville, Vt.

I. S. JOHNSON & CO.:—I was happily disappointed at receiving the $6 00 premium. I got well paid for the $1 20 I spent for Sheridan's Powder in increase of eggs from eight hens, more than I should have got if I had not fed the Powder. I am well satisfied. Yours very truly,

L. D. ALEXANDER.

Any person can compete who desires. Johnson & Co., will send full particulars free to any address. The sooner one commences the better, as the more eggs they get during the season of high prices, the more money they will make out of the trial. If you wish to commence at once it would be better to send for some Powder and particulars both at the same time.

For 50 cents in stamps, Johnson & Co, will send to any P. O, address, two 25 cts. packs, five packs for $1.00; or, for $1.20 a 2½ pound can of Powder will be sent postpaid; or six cans to any express office for $5.00, express prepaid. You cannot make a mistake by ordering at once.

A HEALING SUBSTANCE.—A drop of warm mutton suet applied to old sores at night upon retiring, soon causes them to disappear. Mutton suet is also an excellent remedy for parched lips and chapped hands. For cuts and bruises it is equally good. Its healing properties make it useful in those little accidents and ailments so common to children.

—Last year about 700 buildings were erected in Montreal. This season the Building Inspector anticipates that quite 1,000 will have been put up. This is equal to a good sized town, and, if ten persons be counted for every building, to an increase of 10,000 in population.

Dodge to the Front!

BRIDGETOWN, June 20th, 1887.

W. D. KISO, Esq., Truro, N. S.—Dear Sir,—I have been subject to inflammatory rheumatism for several years. I have been in such pain at times I could not raise my left arm to my head in sleep. I have tried almost innumerable Liniments and Pain Alleviators, including Minard's and Simpson's without much relief, but this winter I was induced to try Potter's, and am happy to say it has always given me instant relief. I have used it in my family with the most gratifying results. I have much pleasure in recommending it, and would not be without it if it cost double.

TEN YEARS OF TORTURE.

Mrs. Thomas Acres, of Huntley, Ont., was for ten years a sufferer from liver complaint, which doctor's medicine did not relieve. After using four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters she was entirely cured, she states that she is like a new woman again.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has prevented the usual course of Boils, which have pained and distressed me every season for several years.—Geo. Scales, Plainville, Mich.

I was troubled with Boils, and my health was much impaired. I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in due time, the eruptions all disappeared, and my health was completely restored.—John R. Elkins, Editor Stanley Observer, Albemarle, N. C.

I was troubled, for a long time, with a humor which appeared on my face in ugly Pimples and Blotches. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me. I consider it the best blood purifier in the world.—Charles H. Smith, North Craftsbury, Vt.

MANHOOD
How Lost, How Restored!

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Hints for the Cuisine.

A Method of Preparing a Delicious Chicken Soup for Invalids.—Take all the bones of a chicken, crack them and add the dark meat; cover well with water and stew for three or four hours. Flavor the broth with some thinly cut lemon peel; salt to taste and add a little sage tied in a piece of muslin. All fat must be removed. This soup when cold, will be a delicate jelly, and can be melted down as required. The breast of the chicken may be used for broiling if the invalid relishes it.

Ham Salad.—One pound of boiled ham, chopped fine; one-half dozen small pickles, chopped fine also; add a little celery, and serve with a dressing.

Beef Tripe.—Wash the tripe carefully and soak in salt and water, changing once or twice; then boil until well done remove from the water, dip in melted butter and fry a good brown; season with salt and pepper.

Baked Leg of Mutton.—Take a leg of mutton weighing six or eight pounds; have the bone removed, and fill the cavity with a dressing made of four ounces of suet, two eggs, two ounces of chopped ham, six ounces of stale bread, one onion, a little sweet marjoram nutmeg, salt and pepper; sew up lay in a pan, add a teacup of water, and put in a hot oven, baste frequently, and cook three hours.

Roast Beef.—Remove the bone from the thin part of the roast, then fold it around against the thick part of the meat. Skewer it well, lay some thin slices of bacon in a dripping pan with the beef and place in a hot oven; salt when half done and baste frequently. Minced onion and parsley can be added to the gravy. Allow 12 or 14 minutes to the pound in the roasting.

Stewed Pigeons.—Clean the pigeons, cut them in quarters and put them with their giblets in a sauce pan with a little water—that is, do not cover them entirely; salt them to suit taste, season well with pepper, sage and any spices desired and add a tablespoonful of butter; cover the pan closely and stew until tender. Thicken the gravy with the yolk of an egg beaten with four tablespoonfuls of milk and a little flour, and when the gravy thickens add another spoonful of butter. This rule is for one half-dozen pigeons.

Clams Roasted.—Lay the clams on a gridiron till the shells open, then take them out upon a hot dish and preserve the liquor to serve with them; season with butter and pepper.

Oysters and Crackers.—Open and spread several crackers with butter; place half the buttered crackers in a deep pudding dish, and put several oysters upon them; sprinkle with salt and pepper and lay on several pieces of butter; cover with the remaining crackers and place in the oven; bake until the crackers are brown and the oysters plump; serve immediately.

Ginger Pound Cake.—Six cups of flour, two cups each of butter, brown sugar and molasses, eight eggs, two tablespoonfuls each of cinnamon, ginger and soda and two nutmegs; dissolve the soda in a cup of sour milk. Line the pans with greased paper and put a brown paper over the top to prevent the crust forming too quickly. One-half of this recipe can be used with good results.

Louisiana Fruit Cake.—Three-quarters of a pound of butter, five eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, one pound of chopped citron, two pounds of raisins, two pounds of prepared pecan nuts, one cupful of molasses, one nutmeg, one teaspoonful each of mace, cinnamon and cloves. To prepare the pecan nuts scald the kernels in boiling water, when the skin can be easily rubbed off, then chop them very fine and add a teaspoonful of rose water to them.

Preserved Barberries.—To every four quarts of barberries, four quarts of sweet apples or pears, two quarts of molasses. Measure the barberries after picking them over carefully, and the apples or pears after paring and cutting into quarters. Cook the barberries 15 minutes in the boiling sugar and molasses, skim them out and cook the apples in the syrup until tender, but not broken. The barberries can be added to the apple after cooking. Put while hot into glass jars, and keep in a dry, cool place.

Spiced Barberries.—Pick over the barberries and to every quart of barberries add a cupful of vinegar, one cupful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of cloves and one teaspoonful of cinnamon; put the barberries into the boiling vinegar, sugar and spices, and allow 10 minutes for every quart in cooking. Barberries prepared in this way are delicious with roast meats.

Timely Hints.—Do not make jelly in damp cloudy weather.

Cover jellies with sugar when set away.

Never put away a jar of fruit partly filled, as it will be almost sure to spoil.

In canning tomatoes, those fresh from the vines are better than those picked and ripened in the sun.

Canned tomatoes should be kept where it is dark and dry. Light injures them.

THE WAY A HOTEL-KEEPER WAS CAUGHT.

Pat Heffernan is a well-known 'whiskey detective' in a certain Scott Act, county in Western Ontario. Some time ago a respectable-looking stranger recently stopped at Mr. Green's hotel, in Arkwong, and engaged the proprietor in conversation. He denounced the Scott Act and so did Mr. Green. Mine host grew confidential and showed the stranger all his arrangements for beating the temperance people. The stranger was greatly pleased with the way things were fixed, and said they were the best he had seen in the county. After a pleasant afternoon together, the stranger got into his buggy and was driving away, when Mr. Green asked him his name. 'My name,' said the stranger, 'is Pat Heffernan.' 'O, heavens,' groaned Mr. Green, 'where is my revolver?' 'Never mind,' replied Pat, 'here's mine.' Result, seventy-five dollars fine, etc.

'Now, see here Miss——, I want you to pronounce the 'r' for me,' she put on a look of unutterable weariness.

'Now, please pronounce for me an English word,' he persisted, 'that begins with an 'r,' and be sure that you sound the letter.'

'R-r-r-r-rats!' exclaimed the American girl, with a snap in her eyes.—Philadelphia Press.

Mr. Clarkson said he remembered Stephenson calling all the engineers together at the end of their survey at the Tontine Hotel, Sheffield. At the conclusion of the business Mr. Stephen mounted the coach in a merry mood for London, 'Now,' said George, addressing the mail coach driver and guard, 'what's to be done with you saucy fellows when these gr
