We are, honourable senators, witnesses to ecological disaster, to piracy of a central food supply, to assault on our global commons. Such piracy is being tolerated. We are told that our commitment to international law precludes immediate unilateral action. Such piracy cannot be tolerated. Our commitment to international law is precisely why we must take unilateral action.

The Law of the Sea is not a series of static commandments carved in stone. The Law of the Sea is a process, its norms the result of evolving practices of states. The history of the Law of the Sea shows changing notions and perceptions about the status of ocean resources, in many cases concepts based upon earlier assumptions and antiquated practices. For example, the idea that there is freedom of the high seas with unrestricted rights to fish is illustrative of an earlier time when migratory patterns of fish stocks were little understood, when there was no basic urgency to formulate such understanding.

We need only look at the origins of the present, universally accepted concept of the 200 nautical mile EEZ. The well-known Truman Proclamation of 1945 established the idea of a protective, non-exclusive zone. That was followed by declarations from Central and South American countries relating to zones of conservation-based jurisdiction. The Chileans and the Peruvians were initiators of the limits set on such zones; limits of a minimum of 200 nautical miles from the coast. Clearly, such claims were central to the over-all evolution of our contemporary norms with regard to the EEZ.

There is an important lesson in all of this for Canada. The 200-mile limit was seen by those states as a reasonable limitation of the continental shelf because they were not possessors of shelves of any appreciable breadth. Canada's shelf is actually considered a rarity. For comparative purposes, we must remember that our continental shelf is one and a half times our land mass. That continental shelf was once a golden ecosystem—thriving, complex and abundant. It is now a plundered oceanic civilization. Its inhabitants have been arbitrarily divided by dated zoning conceptions conceived by nations whose interests do not coincide with ours. That they do not coincide with the interests of the northern cod remains a testament to our folly; most importantly, to our refusal to take the first and most necessary step.

This is a great catastrophe, not just for Canadians in the Atlantic region, but for citizens of the global commons. We do not lack for visionary counsel in this regard. The World Commission on Environment and Development, chaired by Norway's Prime Minister Gro Brundtland, signalled the new demands faced by government in its observations that customary international law no longer serves pressing oceanic resource problems. The commission stated:

> "An international ecosystem approach is required for the management of these resources for sustained use".

In noting the array of barriers to a new approach, the report was adamant in its insistence that legal and institutional obstacles must be tackled head on. Law lagged behind the events. Legal regimes were being outdistanced by the universal laws of nature, to the peril of us all.

I would make the case that we as Canadians do have a commitment to international law, but not a sclerotic commitment to a static law. We have a commitment to its continuing life force, to the continuing evolution not only of its spirit but of its practice. Someone has to go first. One country has to take the first step. The evolution of norms is dependent on pathfinders. We cannot afford a role of scornful marginality.

Honourable senators, as sure as I am standing here, we will be condemned or we will be celebrated by future generations for the step that we take now. It will be the future generations of the global commons who will attest to our dynamism or lack of dynamism. They will wonder, if we fail now, why a brave, adventurous people took a first step to curb Arctic pollution, a step which served as a catalyst to global concern over the threat posed by supertankers to the Northwest Passage, to the fragile national balance of the Arctic regions. They will wonder why that nation faltered. They will wonder why that nation failed to envisage that the conservation of fish stocks meant an obligation to manage a vital ecosystem to increase the share for all.

The biblical wisdom inherent in the famous story about the loaves and fishes seems singularly appropriate as we debate our present course of action. We are faced with the uncooperative behaviour of the European Community through a form of international piracy. In my opinion, we have no alternative but to legislate a permanent extension of EEZ jurisdiction for the purposes of custodial management. At the very least, we must legislate a provisional extension until we have exacted an acceptable negotiated arrangement with the European Community.

We cannot fail to do less than tiny Iceland, which extended the fishery limits to 50 miles on September 1st, 1972. Honourable senators will recall that the parallels between our present problem and those faced by Iceland are remarkably similar. That state was presented with scientific proof that her fisheries were collapsing. In spite of submissions to the International Law Commission, in spite of her persistent representations at UNCLOS II talks, talks which failed to resolve the question of fisheries jurisdiction throughout the years of indecisiveness by Maritime countries in the wake of demonstrated overfishing by foreign fleets, honourable senators will recall that only after repeated attempts at diplomatic action did Iceland move to unilateral action.

Iceland took that first step. The cod wars with Britain were highly undesirable. Indeed, they were potentially dangerous as the Icelanders cut the fishing gear of offending nations—all this in the face of the British Navy which was dispatched to protect its fishing vessels. The Icelanders devised a fisheries conservation zone as a matter of self-protection. That first step, that almost unthinkable first move, and the resulting enforcement against a NATO ally, led to the progressive evolution of the international Law of the Sea. Only when we remember that unilateral action has always served as the central catalyst to the existing Law of the Sea, do we fully appreciate the significance of the precedent set by Iceland.

● (1630)

In explaining his country's actions, the then foreign minister of Iceland told a press conference at the time that the extension was essential, reasonable, natural, fair and just. I want to quote from that press conference:

> Essential, because the fish stocks in Icelandic waters are threatened with imminent ruin from overfishing by the world's distant water fleets; > reasonable, because every state should have the right to utilize its own natural resources; > natural, because the Continental Shelf, on which the 50-mile limit was based, is an integral part of the country's territory;
>
>
>
> fair, because the fish stocks were a natural resource in precisely the same way as oil beneath the seabed, and Iceland has no other natural resources to speak of; > just, because only the states most concerned would effectively protect and conserve the fish stocks for the benefit of all in the absence of any agreed international law on fisheries limits.
>

I submit, honourable senators, that the tiny nation of Iceland wrote a new page in international fisheries law through the sheer audacity of its action. The international Law of the Sea is a volume in constant transition. Its authorship rests in the hands of maritime nations. A vital page remains to be written—many more will be demanded in the decades to come. Like the sea itself, the law that magnifies it churns and ebbs; its waters seethe with colour and with light and with darkness and with continuing controversy.

The law, like the sea, remains endlessly unexplored. It is essential, it is reasonable, it is natural, it is fair, and it is just that we author a vital new page in the continuing saga. Honourable senators, that first step is necessary; it is crucial for our future survival.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, on rising to speak on this inquiry, I would first like to congratulate Senator Marshall for raising this matter in this chamber and for the work that he and other members of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries did in preparing and presenting in 1989 its report entitled "The Marketing of Fish in Canada". It is a pity that government had not paid more heed to its representations.

I would also congratulate the previous speakers on this matter. They have clearly articulated the catastrophic problem facing the fisheries resources on the East Coast and for the suggestions they have made for its remedy. This is a problem which is not only of particular significance to the province of Newfoundland and other parts of Canada but also to humanity worldwide. I am particularly grateful to Senator Graham for the articulate way in which he has presented that situation today.

As a senator from Newfoundland, I have a particular interest in this matter. I must emphasize that the depletion of the fishery resources off the East Coast is threatening the very existence of my province, because if it is allowed to continue there is the real probability that all fishery resources in the area will be destroyed for all time.

Not only would this be comparable to, say, the closing of a single industry in one locality, which would be bad enough, but it would result in the extinction of a whole culture—the loss of the distinct Newfoundland society and lifestyle which has developed over the past several centuries.

It must be realized that the fishery was, as Senator Ottenheimer has said, the very raison d'être of Newfoundland. Settlement in Newfoundland was for no other reason than for the prosecution of the fishery. It was the reason that people came from across the Atlantic and settled in small, isolated coves and harbours, often in the most inhospitable surroundings. There, they built their homes, fishing establishments, churches, schools, and carried on their fishing activities. There, generation after generation flourished, sometimes in extreme hardship, and there is where they died and were buried. All this for the purpose of being near the fishing resources on which their very existence depended.

In describing this, Dr. Leslie Harris, in his 1990 report to the Minister of Fisheries, entitled Independent Review of the State of the Northern Cod Stock, said, at page 20:

> This demographic pattern, a nightmare to finance ministers and central planners, constituted the foundation of the Newfoundland socio-cultural experience and created lifestyles that have become the object of passionate adherence and inform a political consciousness that has not grown weak with time but rather, in recent decades, has witnessed a virtual renaissance. The personal and social values of hardihood, of endurance, of survival, of resilience, of neighbourliness, of sharing, of community, of independence, have become the immutable elements of a mystique that might almost be described as the cult of the unique and distinctive Newfoundland.

He went on to say at page 21 of his report:

> In short, if we contemplate over the long term the demise of the northern cod stocks, we contemplate the death of communities along the whole east and northeast coast of Newfoundland as we have known them. For the vast majority of the communities in question, northern cod was their only reason for existence, and northern cod remains the only substantial economic basis for their survival. And this is a simple statement of fact and not an argument pro or con.

Dr. Harris, of course, was primarily concerned with the state of the northern cod stock, but his prediction applies also, and to a wider extent, to the whole fishery resource. I say that because it is becoming apparent that all species of the fishery resource may be threatened. We are facing the destruction of the whole social, cultural and economic system of Newfoundland.

The question arises as to how we have come to this threatening situation. Well, if we look back, we find from studies done that prior to the 1950s there was for over a century a more or less steady annual catch of northern cod.

Dr. Harris in his study used an estimate for the area he was concerned with of an annual production of between 250,000 and 350,000 tonnes. However, in the period between the late 1960s and the early 1970s, this production peaked up to 800,000 tonnes. After that period, it crashed back to the previous levels. This high level appears to have been the result of the introduction of new technology and greater fishing effort, not only by Canadian interests, but also by foreign fleets.

Although total annual catches fell back to more traditional levels, it became apparent to all involved in the industry that the quantity of fish catches per producer were dropping off, and the sizes of fish caught were getting smaller.

In an effort to bring some order to the situation and to restrict the activities of foreign fleets, which were fishing right up to the Canadian coasts, the Canadian government in 1977 declared its 200-mile fishing management zone and started to impose regulation and quota controls on Canadian fishermen. This was followed by general euphoria in fishing circles, which only encouraged enlargement of the fishing effort by Canadian interests. With government encouragement and assistance, more and larger boats were built which could take the fishermen to more distant areas. A proliferation of fish processing plants was established and licensed with provincial government encouragement and financing, all leading to further demands on fishery resources.

It appears as though this era coincided with the greater development of the fishery for species other than cod, such as capelin, shrimp, crab and scallops. All of these species form part of the environmental system of the ocean, upon which all species of ocean life depend, in that some of these species, for sustenance, require the presence of the other. It must be obvious, even for the casual observer, that anything that upsets the ecological regime of the ocean in such a way as to reduce the supply of adequate and accessible food supply for one species can affect the well-being of another species which relies on the former.

In view of the lack of scientific fact, we are left to speculate as to how the ban on the seal fishery is affecting the species upon which the seals exist. Are the enlarged seal herds decimating some form of marine life and thus denying them to other forms? Then again, we can only speculate as to how the actual fishing effort itself affects the ecosystem. Do some methods of fishing churn up the sea bed in such a way that it destroys some form of planktonic life upon which some species feed?

Nature in its bounty provides a balance that maintains itself as long as it is not disturbed in too great a fashion. There is probably a great deal of tolerance in the system which can permit a fair fishing effort. This the statistics of the past century would seem to indicate. But there is a limit. It would appear that the situation that we now find ourselves in indicates that the limit has been passed. We are reaping the result of mindless exploitation. We can only hope that it is not too late and that the ocean can regenerate itself.

There are those who would refute what I have said and suggest that the situation is probably more the result of natural changes and disasters in the marine environment. But these disasters and changes in environment have always been with us and may explain, in part, the slight changes in catch levels for short periods over a century of time. The fact remains, however, that those catch levels did maintain a fairly constant median over that period. Further, there is the evidence that catch levels of fish sizes have been falling off consistently over a period of a number of recent years. The conclusion can only be that this resulted possibly from a combination of the fishing effort and changes in the environment—either from natural causes or induced by the fishing activities themselves.

Under the Constitution the federal government has jurisdiction over fisheries, a jurisdiction it jealously reserves. But with that jurisdiction also comes responsibility. Hence, we must look at how these fisheries are being administered.

As I have said, following implementation of the extended jurisdictional 200-mile zone, the federal government did impose various regulations and controls. These controls, amongst others, took the form of quotas for various species, fishing zones and regulation of fishing methods. Unfortunately, these regulations appear to have been enacted in a vacuum by reason of the lack of meaningful and accurate scientific information and despite, or in rejection of, advice given by people familiar with the local scene. Then again, the controls may not have helped but, rather, may have exacerbated the situation. The government has even, on occasion, permitted foreign vessels to fish in Canadian fishing zones.

In any event, the proof of the lack of effective management of fish stocks off the East Coast by the federal government is well illustrated by the disastrous situation in which we now find ourselves. We are facing the virtual closing down of any meaningful fishery with the resultant loss of employment and the threat to the whole economic and cultural existence of Newfoundland.

As bad as the situation is with respect to the lack of management within our own 200-mile jurisdictional zone, we also have to consider what has been happening outside the zone. There we have fleets of ships from countries fishing in an obvious, uncontrolled manner, taking stocks of fish which usually migrate back and forth inside and outside our zone. Not only do they decimate these stocks but they do untold damage to the whole ecosystem of the ocean.

I will not detail the manner of this fishing or the uncontrolled methods which have been so ably described by previous speakers, except to say that it appears to be more than a question of overfishing their so-called quotas. It is also the damage they are doing to the whole marine life system.

There has been an emphasis placed by using the word "overfishing". What is probably meant by overfishing is ships taking more than their allotted quota of fish. The fact is that they are fishing and taking too many fish altogether.

This has to be dealt with. It is not sufficient for the federal government to control and almost shut down the fishery in our own zone unless effective control is imposed on fishing outside that zone. The government has to take meaningful steps to press for a successful conclusion of this matter before it is too late. Unfortunately, it appears that it is only in recent times that the government has come to realize how serious the problem is and has begun, belatedly, to take steps to deal with it.

In this respect it must be noted that our federal Minister of Fisheries is taking steps on the international scene to induce the foreign interest to reduce and control their fishing activities. Also, Premier Wells has engaged in a campaign to impress this need on the principal countries involved. These efforts must be continued until satisfactory policing can be achieved or, if necessary, imposed by Canada.

Honourable senators, the situation is desperate. Remedial steps must be taken immediately. Senator Petten, in this house on April 1, set forth various steps which he felt should be taken, and with these I agree. I would like to emphasize the need for extended management jurisdiction out beyond the present 200-mile limit, as Senator Graham has just said; the need for more scientific knowledge; and the need for joint management between the federal and provincial governments.

The ocean must be given a chance to regenerate itself and so avoid the impending disaster. In conclusion, let me say that this horrific state is a glaring example of what can happen as a result of uncontrolled and over-exploitation of natural resources. It is a lesson of which we should all take heed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I believe, honourable senators, that Senator Thériault, in whose name this matter stood, had agreed that other senators could speak on the inquiry, but he wishes that it remain standing in his name.

On motion of Senator Molgat, for Senator Thériault, debate adjourned.

● (1650)

PARLIAMENTARY FORUM ON ECONOMIC PARTICIPATION OF CANADIANS WITH DISABILITIES

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino rose, pursuant to notice of March 30, 1992:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Parliamentary Forum on Economic Participation of Canadians with Disabilities, "Profitable Choices for Everyone", held in Ottawa, March 29th and 30th, 1992.

He said: Honourable senators, on March 29 and 30, 1992, under the sponsorship of the Speaker of the House of Commons and the House Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons, a parliamentary forum entitled "Profitable Choices For Everyone" was held here in Ottawa.

The objective of the forum was to encourage further dialogue among various sectors with the aim of encouraging the the economic integration of disabled persons. Participants included members of the disabled community, business, labour and government. Statistics from 1986, which are now being updated, reveal that some 3.3 million Canadians experienced some level of disability. The prevalence of disability increases with age. That is, 5 in 100 children versus 45 in 100 for those 65 years of age, with further percentage increases as persons continue to age. Within the 15 to 64 age group 1.8 million persons, approximately 11 per cent of our population, experience some level of disability, mostly affecting mobility and agility. In excess of 270,000 people have a severe level of disability.

As you can see from the above statistics, when we talk about disabled Canadians we are talking about a lot of people. I will table for honourable senator's information a fact sheet that deals with additional data.

The forum focused on the disabled community as an unused and underused resource pool, a market for goods and services and the partnership which can be created among the various sectors. The results of the frank and open discussions which took place in the four sessions and the plenary session left no doubt in the minds of participants that Canadians generally have grave misconceptions about the abilities of our disabled citizens and their value to our society. Most of us have a very narrow view of their needs and even more so of their skills and talents.

The three U's, "unemployed, underemployed and underutilized", describe some of the frustrations experienced by disabled workers, most of whom are out of the labour force for other than health reasons. Let me quote one of the least disabled persons I have met. Alvin Law is a victim of thalidomide. He is a businessman with a long history of successes who now runs his own communications business. Alvin said:

> Success is being able to look at yourself in the mirror and be satisfied that you are making a contribution to society. People with disabilities are tired of being looked at as the people that need help. They want to be looked at as people who can provide something back to the community. They are a resource. They have knowledge. They have the ability to fit into our society.
>
> This is all about choices. We talk about empowerment. Empowerment is the choice to be what you want to be. We should all be allowed the choice to compete in the race, but we need to be allowed on the same track, or the starting blocks are simply pieces of wood.

Honourable senators, Canadians are committed to social equality and expect equal treatment for all our citizens. What I believe disabled communities need most is an attitudinal change. They, like everyone else, want to be seen and treated for their values and abilities.

Mr. Justin Dart, a legendary successful "disabled" businessman and chair of the U.S. President's committee on Employment of People with Disabilities put it this way during his keynote speech:

> The enemy is not human rights, or free enterprise; it is rigid ideas and systems in both government and the private sector that limit the full, free use of individual ability. Rational society empowers people to be fully productive for self and for all and protects them from artificial limitations.

Honourable senators, our federal government's goal is to make Canada the best country in the world for disabled people. I support the goal. Thank you for allowing me to bring this matter to your attention.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 7, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the two election clocks today show 198 days and 584 days respectively.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

NINETEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 7, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

NINETEENTH REPORT

Your Committee is presently undertaking a review of the budgetary situation pertaining to Senate Committees.

Your Committee therefore recommends that, notwithstanding the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation fo Senate Committees, for any committee budget for the financial year 1992-93 submitted to and approved by the Internal Economy Committee, your Committee be authorized to release no more than 6/12 of those approved funds until the end of September 1992.

Respectfully submitted,

THÉRÈSE LAVOIE-ROUX
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Lavoie-Roux, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

TWENTIETH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, May 7, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTIETH REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical, and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject-matters of bills, and estimates as may be referred to it, as authorized by the Senate on Thursday, November 28, 1991. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 10,700.00
Transportation and Communications	5,500.00
Other Expenditures	2,000.00
TOTAL	$ 18,200.00

Respectfully submitted,

THÉRÈSE LAVOIE-ROUX
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Lavoie-Roux, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. This report concerns the budget application of the Subcommittee on Security and National Defence for the fiscal year 1992-93.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 1450)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Stewart, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 7, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIRST REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical, and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject-matters of bills, and estimates as may be referred to it, as authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, March 17, 1992. The said supplementary budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 36,000.00
Transportation and Communications	4,000.00
Other Expenditures	2,000.00
TOTAL	$ 42,000.00

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honorable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Lavoie-Roux, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Before asking leave to move the adjournment motion, I should like to indicate the sitting schedule we would hope to follow over the next few weeks, at least until the end of the month.

As honourable senators know, we have five bills before us at the second reading stage. I understand that two more will be arriving today for first reading and that a number of bills will be coming next week as well. So we have quite a full plate before us for the next little while.

If it is the wish of the Senate to adjourn no later than June 23, which is the day the House of Commons rises for the summer, we propose the following sitting schedule: We would adjourn today until Monday evening at eight o'clock. We would sit Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week. As Friday is the beginning of a long weekend, we would adjourn Thursday and come back the following Tuesday, which would be the 19th of May. We would sit all that week, including Friday morning.

We would then take the following week off, as the House of Commons is off, and come back the week of June 1.

Upon returning on June 1, we would follow the four-day schedule, and perhaps add a fifth day, depending on the progress we make and the amount of business that is left before us.

I should point out that, other than the bills I have already indicated, there is the possibility that a referendum bill will come to us, and perhaps even other major legislation. Therefore, we must look forward to a busy and active time between now and June 23, when, it is to be hoped, we will be leaving for the summer.

That being said, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, May 11, 1992, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to thank the Deputy Leader of the Government for his consideration. He discussed this matter with me before making his statement. I think it is helpful to all honourable senators to have this long range forecasting. I only hope that his forecast is more accurate than the forecasts we usually get on the weather, but only time will tell.

For the time being, for the parts that we can see now, it is helpful for all members to know that we will be sitting Monday night at eight o'clock but will not be sitting next Friday.

However, a problem does arise with respect to our sitting on Tuesday, May 19. Monday, May 18 is part of the Victoria Day long weekend. For honourable senators who live a far distance from Ottawa, sitting at two o'clock in the afternoon of May 19 means that they have to leave the day before. May I suggest, and perhaps this was in the deputy leader's mind in any case, that on May 19 we sit at eight o'clock in the evening. That would mean that honourable senators could travel during the day. Other than that, I find the schedule reasonable.

I am pleased to see that we are making early attempts to ensure that we can adjourn at the same time as the House of Commons instead of having everything come to us at the last minute. That will require some cooperation from the House of Commons—that is, that they do not leave everything until the last minute and then send it to us on Monday, June 22, in the expectation that we will finish on Tuesday, June 23.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I can confirm that on May 19 we will reconvene 8:00 p.m.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES ACT

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore announced that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-53, an Act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading Monday next, May 11, 1992.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-77, to amend the National Defence Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading Monday next, May 11, 1992.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 452 citizens of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Toronto, Windsor, London, Hamilton, Etobicoke, Casselman, Ottawa, Scarborough and Thornhill.

I find it quite admirable that thousands of citizens still believe that this government will lend even a discreet ear to their supplication.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

"BRIGHTER FUTURES" PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR CHILDREN AT RISK

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, yesterday I asked the Leader of the Government about the $5 billion that had been removed from the child benefit programs in the country since 1986, and he quite reasonably asked me for more detail as to how that figure was made up. The headings under which they were made up were the partial de-indexation of the refundable child tax credit, partial de-indexation of the threshold for the refundable child tax credit, partial de-indexation of family allowance payments, partial de-indexation of the threshold for clawback on family allowances and the partial de-indexation of the nonrefundable child tax credit. He, of course, was more interested in the numbers than in the chapter headings.

I want to refer to the Senate committee report called "Children in Poverty: Toward a Better Future." This, as we know, is not a Liberal Party document, or a Conservative Party document for that matter. The Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology—the committee that produced the report—was the Honourable Lorna Marsden and the deputy chairman was the Honourable Brenda Robertson. Just so that we are clear for the record what the source is, the senators who are referred to under membership are Senators Austin, Bosa, David, Gigantès, Hébert, Kirby, Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, MacEachen or Frith, Marsden, Marshall, Murray or Doody, Robertson, Kinsella and Thériault, with participation from Senators Beaudoin, Bonnell, Cochrane, Doyle, Haidasz, Rossiter, Spivak and Tremblay.

● (1420

What is stated at page 101, and which I adopt as my authority for part of the figures, is as follows:

> The savings that are being realized through the partial de-indexation of child benefits are massive albeit hidden from public view. We—

That is the committee, the senators I have mentioned.

> — estimate that more than $3.5 billion will be removed from the child benefits system between 1986 and 1991. These savings are being applied to deficit reduction and are not being redistributed to low-income families.

Honourable senators, I underline that that is up to 1991. We can assume that now, one year later, the figure is higher.

In addition to the $3.5 billion—because I am still $1.5 billion short, leaving aside the effects of the last year—we have the promises about a national day care program made by Mr. Wilson and the Prime Minister during the election which were not fulfilled. The natural growth in the number of day care spaces funded under the Canada Assistance Plan was limited through ceilings placed on CAP payments to the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario, as was debated in this house not too long ago. In 1988 the government promised almost $4 billion over seven years for the construction of 200,000 new day care spaces. By reneging on that commitment and its cap on CAP, we find the additional $1.5 billion.

Those are the figures that I would continue to ask the Leader of the Government to comment and check on: from our own Senate committee report $3.5 billion, and the $1.5 billion I have just referred to, all of it money taken out of the child welfare benefit program, as it is referred to in our report.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend is obviously seeking to launch a debate on this matter. I invite him to do so at the appropriate time. He speaks of the changes that have been made in various programs and the quite notional amount of $5 billion—

Senator Frith: Notional? According to our colleagues it is not notional.

Senator Murray: —that he says has simply disappeared into thin air or been used against the deficit. The honourable senator makes no reference at all to the improvements and the targeting of benefits for children under so many of our programs. I refer, of course, to the child benefit changes announced in the most recent budget. I can tell him that parental benefits paid out under unemployment insurance have increased from about $400 million in 1984 to $1.3 billion in 1992.

My honourable friend also mentioned the cap on the Canada Assistance Plan affecting Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. If one looks at the figures, one will see that the transfers under the Canada Assistance Plan for day care have increased from $100 million in 1984 to $275 million in 1992. The child care deduction which was worth $135 million in 1984 is worth $300 million in 1992. And so it goes.

● (1430)

I could continue. I could present a list of statistics that I think tell a story quite different from that suggested by the honourable senator. However, the proper time and place for that would be during debate, at which time the honourable senator could put forward his views on the policies that we have followed over the past seven years or so in this field. If he does that, we will be glad, for our part, to defend vigorously the improvements that we have made, especially in targeting these benefits to those most in need.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have that answer and I welcome the invitation. Perhaps we can continue this discussion under the heading of an inquiry or any other appropriate heading for debate.

[Senator Frith.]

The government leader has said that he would be glad to provide me with some of the detail. I have given him the specifics underlying my original question and would be glad if he provided additional information.

I am quite prepared to conclude on this matter in anticipation of having those facts that can be the basis for our debate. I thank him for that offer, and we will wait for all of the detail he has just said is readily available to him.

[Translation]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will be glad to table the figures shortly so that they can form the basis for our future debates.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that means we will have them in due course, doesn't it?

[English]

JUSTICE

SOCIAL UNREST—PROPOSED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH BIG CITY MAYORS AND FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, all Canadians are deeply disturbed by the events in Toronto earlier this week.

I note that yesterday in the House of Commons a question was asked of the Prime Minister regarding that unfortunate circumstance and whether or not the Prime Minister would be prepared to meet with the mayors of the big cities across Canada. There is an obvious problem that could arise in other cities as well. The Prime Minister replied that he would be happy to meet with anyone at any time if it would be helpful in solving a given problem. However, on further questioning, he later indicated he had received no such request from the mayors.

I understand that a request has gone now forward to the Prime Minister in the form of a letter from the Mayor of the City of London, speaking on behalf of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and the big city mayors.

Could the minister indicate to us how soon the Prime Minister will be prepared to meet with them?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think it is worth mentioning, en passant, that the Minister of Justice, Ms. Campbell, several weeks ago had an important meeting with the mayors of Toronto, Vancouver, and Montreal, I believe, on some of the justice issues that are involved here.

With respect to the Prime Minister's willingness to meet with big city mayors, he made his statement yesterday. I do not think I can improve upon it. I do not think I will try. I am sure that, if, as the honourable senator says, a proposal has come forward, it will be treated with every urgency and a meeting will be held as soon as mutually convenient to the parties concerned.

Senator Molgat: The copy of the letter that I have is from Mr. Tom Gosnell, the Mayor of the Corporation of the City of London. In the letter, he refers to the statement of the Prime Minister. He says:

> Please accept this letter as a formal request from our Caucus to meet with you at your earliest convenience.

It is a formal request. If the minister can tell us, if not now perhaps next week, I would appreciate knowing when that meeting will take place.

THE CONSTITUTION

SENATE REFORM

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, Is the Leader of the Government aware that, although the constitutional ministers, meeting in St. John yesterday, failed to agree on many things respecting the Senate, they did agree on one thing. They agreed that the Senate should have the power to ratify or reject choices for senior positions such as the Governor of the Bank of Canada—and a party to that agreement was the representative of the federal government, the Right Honourable Joe Clerk.

If the leader is aware that the representatives of 11 governments have now agreed that this is a good and useful function of the Senate, perhaps he would join with me in sponsoring, or sponsor by himself, a resolution to send forward some advice. We do not have the authority yet, but we could make some recommendations in advance.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is nothing new about the proposal to which my friend refers. The proposal that a reformed elected Senate would have the right to review appointments such as the Governor of the Bank of Canada was made by the federal government in the constitutional proposals tabled last September. There is, however, no thought of investing the present Senate with that responsibility.

Senator Olson: There is something new in having all 11 representatives at the constitutional meeting agree that it is a good and useful thing to do. That is new.

THE ECONOMY

RELIABILITY OF GOVERNMENT FORECASTING

Hon. H.A. Olson: The Minister of Finance has again changed his expectation of the growth of the Canadian economy. A number of other people, such as the general manager of Informetrica and even the IMF, have scaled down significantly their previous forecasts of the Canadian economy's performance for the rest of this year.

I think we should seriously the fact that CP had a meeting yesterday at which the chairman of the board unfortunately had to admit that they had lost over $900 million in their last fiscal year. In addition to that, he said, their forecast for the Canadian economy is significantly lower than the government's forecast and we can look forward to several months—in fact, all the rest of this year—of very slow improvement.

Having in mind that all of this is coming together, does the government have a contingency plan to deal with it? It is no longer just someone's speculation. All the forecasts the Minister of Finance and the government generally have been putting forward for quite a while, and particularly since the budget, are now starting to fall apart, just as they have always fallen apart in the last four or five years.

Does the government have under active consideration a contingency plan to deal with the Canadian economy, if the reality proves to be substantially less than their forecasts?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my friend disappoints me, as he often does. When I saw him rise in his place a few moments ago, I was sure he was rising to express his great satisfaction with the fact that the bank rate today was brought down from 6.97 per cent, where it was last week, to 6.78 per cent today.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

● (1440)

Senator Murray: I simply indicate that this is a measure of the progress that we are making toward a virtually inflation-free economy, with low interest rates and all the other necessary elements for sustained renewed economic growth.

The honourable senator mentions, accurately, that the Minister of Finance has had to scale down his earlier forecasts for economic growth in this calendar year, as have many private sector forecasters. In that connection, however, and I relate this to the good news I just gave the honourable senator about the continuing decline in the bank rate and in interest rates, the minister observed what I think we all know. That is to say, business confidence has rebounded dramatically in this country as measured by increased investment intentions and so forth. Consumer confidence still has some way to go in order to fuel the economic growth that we all know is necessary.

It is true that the minister has scaled down his forecast for economic growth for this year, as have private sector forecasters. However, the IMF, the OECD, the Conference Board, the London Economist—wherever we look—are virtually unanimous in maintaining the position that Canada will lead the world in economic growth this year and next.

Senator Olson: I agree with what the minister has said except, as usual, he has left out some of the more pertinent remarks made by the minister. I wish to quote one of those remarks now.

The minister said all of those things. He said he had to lower his expectations from 2.7 per cent growth to 2.3. He also said, "Maybe I'll have to lower it some more."

Senator Murray: If consumer confidence is up.

Senator Olson: No. He said that it could be less.

He went on to say, "But, clearly, the consumer confidence issue which we have been wrestling with is the one that I really think has to show some change before we can experience some more robust economic turnaround." That is what the minister said.

When the minister brags about all this business confidence, even business people understand that if consumers do not gain more confidence and start to spend money —

Senator Barootes: You're sure not helping with speeches like that.

Senator Olson: —then all their confidence will come to nothing.

What is also extremely important in this context is that, as long as they know that the policy of the Governor of the Bank of Canada will be to use the blunt instrument of increasing interest rates every time there is any change in the inflation rate above 2 per cent—and he has already demonstrated that once or twice—consumers will not sink themselves into debt, exposing themselves to the mercy of that kind of policy.

That is why I am suggesting that if we are ever to get turned around at all and get away from this business of the Minister of Finance and everyone else having to lower their expectations because consumers are not ready to go into debt again only to be clobbered by this government and its agent, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, as they were a few months ago, then we need some changes.

Eleven governments have agreed that one of the changes we need—and I say this a little facetiously, but not entirely —is some different policies out of the Bank of Canada. In order to have that it is obvious that what is needed is a different Governor of the Bank of Canada.

I with to ask my question again, seriously. Are you willing to do something for Canadians, or will you simply let all these forecasts be thrown into the ashcan and then have all these people suffer as they have been for the last two years under the policy of this government and its agent, the Governor of the Bank of Canada?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am interested to have it put on the record that the policy of the Liberal Party is to discharge the present Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Senator Olson: He is following the wrong policies.

Senator Murray: I insist that that is not our policy. We support the governor. We support the policies of the governor which have been manifestly successful and which are regarded as such the world over. This country is poised to lead the whole world in economic growth precisely because we have inflation and interest rates under control.

Senator Olson: I am glad to have it on the record so that the people of this country will know and understand better that this government intends to follow the same kind of policies that have led them into the worst recession in the last 50 years. It is fairly important that people know that. Even after all these months of deprivation, record-breaking bankruptcies and all of the other signposts of the economic recession that we know is around, the government says, "But we'll follow those policies from here on in, even though all our forecasts for growth are being thrown in the ashcan."

[Senator Olson.]

I am asking once more if the government has any contingency plans, active plans, to deal with a situation that is obviously headed for more deterioration.

Senator Murray: Now that our friends opposite have taken the position that the Governor of the Bank of Canada must be discharged, I think it is of some importance that they let the country in on the news as to which card-carrying member of the Liberal Party they propose to appoint to that important position.

Senator Olson: If that is not a cheap shot, I have never heard one. That is the worst I have ever heard, and I have heard some pretty bad ones.

Senator Frith: In the kind of shape they find themselves, cheap shots are all they can afford.

Senator Olson: Cheap shots are all they have left.

Senator Molgat: Is the Leader of the Government suggesting a card-carrying Tory?

Senator Olson: What I am suggesting is that we need some different policies.

Senator Murray: You propose to fire the governor.

Senator Olson: Yes, because we know the Governor of the Bank of Canada follows government policy, or government officials, and particularly the Minister of Finance, will tell him that they do not like his policies.

Senator Barootes: He is very independent.

Senator Olson: I thought at least the Leader of the Government would not fall into the trap that Senator Barootes has just fallen into. He has been around long enough to know better. We had it out once before with a man by the name of Coyne. As a result, I no longer challenge, as the minister does not, that what the Governor of the Bank of Canada is doing in terms of his philosophy and policies is fully supported by the government. He has said that before, and he said it again today.

Whatever the policies are, you now say you will continue on with those policies, notwithstanding the fact that it has led us into the worst recession since the 1930s.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the policies have been manifestly successful in getting inflation and interest rates under control. We in this country are poised to lead the world in economic growth.

Senator Olson: You might be poised, but you never get started.

Senator Murray: We have great problems with competitiveness vis-à-vis our international trading partners. However, one element that is giving us quite a leg up is that we will have a lower inflation economy than almost all our competitors.

Senator Olson: We just have a low economy, that is all.

Senator Murray: When has such a thing happened before?

If the honourable senator and his party were in power and they would fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada, then they owe it to the country to tell us who they would put in his place and what the alternative policies are that they would instruct the governor of the bank to follow.

Mr. Chrétien indicated some months ago that he would take control of monetary policy. I think this is a matter that needs to be fleshed out so that people can understand both the policy and its implications.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have a list of people in my office, which I would be glad to bring another day, of Canadians who have said categorically that the price that Canadians have paid for this so-called inflation-fighting policy is too high. It has wrought devastation on big and medium-sized businesses. Individuals have had difficulty with debt servicing charges. This is too high a price too pay for the kinds of policies that you say you and the Governor of Bank of Canada will continue to pursue. There is a long list of responsible Canadians who have expressed themselves on this matter, and they believe that the government's policies are wrong and that they have created far too much difficulty, devastation and hardship for Canadians. Canadians are not pleased to know that the government intends to continue promoting the same policies that led us into this mess.

• (1450)

Senator Frith: Those problems were not created by that policy. They were created by the Liberal government back in 1963.

Senator Olson: Yes, that is what the government will say.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we are absolutely determined that this country, so long as we have anything to do with its governance, will not repeat the experience of the 1980s when there were double-digit interest rates, double-digit inflation and double-digit unemployment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: That is simply rhetoric with no foundation. It is only a few weeks since we saw double-digit interest rates. The government and the Governor of the Bank of Canada moved from single-digit interest rates to double-digit interest rates. Why do you stand in this place now and make a public statement that contradicts what the government has just done?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, inflation is below 2 per cent in this country. The bank rate is at its lowest rate since, I think, 1973. What is the honourable senator talking about?

If the honourable senator wants to talk about devastation, talk about the devastation wreaked upon poor people by double-digit interest rates, double-digit inflation and double digit unemployment. That is a combination, without precedent, that we faced in the 1980s under the lax policies of our friends opposite.

Senator Frith: There is no devastation now?

Senator Olson: The manner in which you add things up is ridiculous. There are more Canadians in this country who know what the consequence of this government's monetary policy has been than you realize. Are you not aware that your policies have something to do with why—

Senator Barootes: You better talk about the drought!

Senator Olson: —you went down to 11 per cent in the polls? Has it nothing to do with the pronouncement that you will continue the kind of monetary policy that led us into this mess?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, Canadians generally understand that this government has the fundamentals right, and that our friends in the other political parties are offering no honest alternatives.

Senator Frith: They are not swallowing that! A poll by your own Department of Finance says that Canadians are not swallowing that.

Senator Olson: They are not swallowing that garbage.

Senator Murray: The government has picked up four points in each of the last two months in the Gallup poll. At that rate, we should be at 48 per cent by Christmas.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Double-digits. Then your countdown will be respected.

Senator Frith: Then we will have our election, will we? The clock will stop ticking. Well, your own Department of Finance polls say that Canadians are not swallowing that guff.

Senator Molgat: The Leader of the Government is not always known for his humour.

Senator Frith: Today he is in good form.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, with respect to the Leader of the Government's statement that the government is poised for a great recovery, the only reason is that they have the country down so low that they can hardly go anywhere but up.

THE ENVIRONMENT

RAFFERTY-ALAMEDA DAMS PROJECT—STATUS OF FEDERAL ADVANCE TO SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is on a matter relating to a subject that I had previously raised with the Leader of the Government, and that is the Rafferty-Alameda dam. My honourable friend will recall that I previously asked him a number of questions. Can he bring us up to date on where that matter stands? I do not expect a full statement today. The Federal Court clearly laid out some directions for the government, which I do not believe have been followed. He can tell us about that.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate will recall that the government advanced approximately $10 million to the government of Saskatchewan not to build the Rafferty-Alameda dam. The government of Saskatchewan then proceeded to build the dam. Nevertheless, the government advanced the money to Saskatchewan. Exactly how much they advanced I do not know. The last answer I received was that they had advanced $8 million at one point. My question is this: Have we now recovered that money, and did we recover it prior to the change of government, while the previous government—the good friends of my honourable friends—were still there?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I will have to look into that, honourable senators. I shall obtain an update on the general status of the Rafferty-Alameda project.

THE CONSTITUTION

BEAUDOIN-DOBBIE REPORT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENTS OF MINISTERS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while my honourable friend is having a review made of some of the outstanding matters, would he also check on how his staff is doing on the deep research of finding out when the part-time ministers over in the other place—Mr. Masse, Mr. Loiselle and Mr. Benoît Bouchard—made statements supporting Canada? He assured me he was certain the researchers could ascertain that these ministers had made glowing statements in defence of Canada.

To my knowledge, these gentlemen are part time in that they accept the money and the perks, but when it comes to defending the country, they are marvellously silent. Perhaps the Leader of the Government has some information on this matter.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not accept that accusation at all. It is totally unjust and unwarranted. We had what I thought was a rather light-hearted exchange on the question of who said what, where and when. I indicated to the honourable senator that ministers who go back to their ridings—whether in Quebec, Alberta or British Columbia—on weekends, do not necessarily do so fortified with prepared texts which can be easily reproduced.

That having been said, I indicated that I would have some research done on typical statements that had been made by my Quebec colleagues about their attachment and Quebec's attachment to Canadian confederation. When that information turns up, I will be glad to bring it into the Senate Chamber.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I am disappointed that the Leader of the Government has not yet been able to find something.

[Senator Molgat.]

With respect to his comment that my statements are not warranted, if he shows me statements where the aforementioned gentlemen have defended Canada, perhaps his comment will be accurate. Until then, I shall await the statements that he will produce.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Eric Berntson moved the second reading of Bill C-54, to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, it is my pleasure today to speak on second reading of Bill C-54, amendments to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, amendments aimed at helping the agri-food industry become more competitive and ultimately more prosperous.

Honourable senators, these are challenging times for the women and men who grow and produce food in Canada. Like many other industries in this country, they face adjustment on many levels if they are to meet the quickly changing demands of world markets.

● (1500)

Rather than depending on raw products, as in the past, our producers and processors are trying to develop more profitable value-added products. They are looking for ways to become more efficient and to incorporate the latest technologies into their work. The 1.8 million men and women employed in the agri-food industry face the challenge to adjust at a time when a hurtful subsidy war rages between the EC and the U.S. Few people will deny the effects this has had on the entire industry.

Honourable senators, in challenging times like these, the agri-food industry looks to government for assistance. And in fact, the government has provided unprecedented aid to farmers to help them through the immediate problems. The $800 million in emergency assistance announced last fall indicates that.

But we cannot ignore the need to adjust for the long term. If we want to escape from this cycle of income problems, we must become more competitive. In the long run, we cannot become more competitive by simply throwing money at the industry. Government can create a business environment more sensitive to the competitive needs of the industry, an environment that helps the industry help itself. That is what is being proposed here today.

These amendments to provide for national check-offs on agri-food commodities are a long-sought-after and effective technique to enable the Canadian agri-food industry to become more responsible for its wellbeing. This is not a government-devised system being imposed on the agri-food industry. Instead it is a system which many and various sectors of the industry have, for some time, been calling upon the government to provide.

I note that consultations within those sectors and with the provinces have shown broad support for the check-off system and the legislative means by which that system would operate. The producers, processors and importers of agricultural commodities —those that are not supply-managed, being all commodities except poultry, eggs, and dairy products—have never had the legislative means to impose a mandatory national levy upon themselves.

Such means have existed at the provincial level, but any efforts to fund such competition-enhancing promotion and research at the national level has depended on voluntary participation by members of any agricultural sector. Being voluntary, it has not been not sufficiently widespread, nor has it offered the long-term stability necessary to sustain effective programs. In addition, there has been no federal legislation permitting the collection of national check-offs on imports as well as domestic agricultural products.

In order to enact such a national check-off system that included imports, the government had two choices: Either it could amend the current legislation or it could draft new legislation. It was decided that the amendment option was the best route, for a number of reasons. Amending the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, in essence, means some straightforward changes to extend its levy provisions to cover imports.

Simply put, it already contained most of the legislative provisions needed for national check-offs. Therefore, it provided the basis for putting the check-offs into law that met the tests of simplicity, speed and efficiency. Taking this route meant extending a faster and simpler helping hand to the agri-food industry which is determined to become more competitive and more self-reliant.

The federal government is committed to those goals. Heightened competitiveness, especially in the new international trading environment, translates directly into more and better jobs for Canadians.

As you know, honourable senators, the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act had a somewhat tumultuous birth in the early 1970s. It was the first federal legislation to provide for the establishment of supply management systems for agricultural commodities. As such, it provoked a great deal of debate and discussion within the House of Commons, within the agri-food industry, and among the general population. As a result, in the public mind, this act became synonymous with supply management, but it is important that we all understand that amending this act to provide for national check-offs in no way ties check-offs to supply management.

These amendments will not weaken the existing supply management provisions contained in the act, and, conversely, the amendments do not in any way represent the first step towards supply management for those commodities not currently under supply management.

To keep this absolutely clear, the government has taken great care with the wording of the amendments. The new sections dealing with national check-offs do not simply use the term "marketing plan", which has, in the minds of many people, come to mean "supply management"; instead, the check-off amendments specifically refer to market promotion and research plans. That better describes the mandate of what check-offs would pay for. It allows for no confusion with the provision covering supply-management commodities.

Perhaps the best approach to demonstrating the together-but-apart nature of the two streams of the amended act would be to cite a specific example of how a check-off program might work. The following example, honourable senators, comes from a number of draft preliminary proposals that groups within the agri-food industry provided during the consultation that preceded the drafting of these amendments. Let me say that, by citing this particular example, I am by no means stating that the proponents or the government will follow this plan to the letter.

The Canadian Horticultural Council and the Canadian Produce Marketing Association represent every element of production and marketing of fresh fruit and vegetables in Canada.

These two organizations have undertaken, through the Fresh For Flavour Foundation, to promote the consumption of fresh fruits and vegetables. Funding for the foundation has been on a voluntary basis. Unfortunately, this funding has not been sufficient to pay for adequate promotional programming. The problem has been an inadequate sharing of the costs among industry trade members. As a result, the Horticultural Council and the Produce Marketing Association have joined the industry call for a national check-off system.

Money raised through the check-offs would be used to promote the sale of fresh produce through programs for food, health and safety, educational activities, product and consumer research, and surveys of special group needs. There would be enough funds to pay for continuous promotional activities and other marketing enhancements.

The proposed check-off on fresh fruit and vegetables would be one-fifth of one per cent of the value of the product. Based on 1988 sales of $2.2 billion, this rate would have raised $4.4 million. The check-off would be applied against produce sold in the province in which it was grown and sold in other provinces, and against any produce imported from other countries. It would not be assessed to produce destined for processors or on processed imports.

Let us come back briefly to the $4.4 million that a national check-off would have raised in one year. That is a healthy sum to be used for the promotion and marketing of fresh produce, and to pay for product and consumer research to supplement what is being done by government.

Many voices from coast to coast in the agri-food industry have told us they desire more autonomy. Like all entrepreneurs, they want to be free and to be responsible for their own destiny. Having the dollars to pay for those all-important marketing and research activities is an essential part of that independence. And having the right under federal law to choose to collect money from themselves is just as important. That right, that choice, and that potential for more self-sufficiency are what the check-off amendments provide.

Let me emphasize that this is enabling legislation which will have little or no impact on food prices for Canadians. We all know that consumers are becoming ever more price conscious as they do their grocery shopping. It might be easy for people to look quickly at the idea of national agricultural check-offs and leap to the conclusion that these changes to the law will mean producers will charge more and that the consumer will end up footing the bill. This is simply not the case.

Using the example of fresh fruit and vegetables, the proposed check-off is one-fifth of 1 per cent of the value of the product, which would be an insignificant proportion of retail prices. There need be no worry that check-offs would mean hardship at the grocery store, nor that there would be price hikes that would provoke more cross-border shopping. On the contrary, better efficiency gains through check-off funded research will ultimately benefit Canadian consumers, as will the generation of consumer information that will be one of the prime results of the check-off program.

Honourable senators, let me conclude by saying that the amendments that would create the new Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act represent a win-win combination for both our agri-food industry and for our consumers.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I do not believe in the entire 34 or 35 years that I have been in Parliament, I have heard such a conversion. Talk about Paul's conversion on the road to Damascus. Here we have members of the Conservative Party singing the praises of the Agricultural Products Agencies Marketing Act. It is almost unbelievable. I do not regard the sponsor of the bill, Senator Berntson, as having made this tremendous conversion. He might have been in support of having this kind of legislation on the books in Canada all the time.

I turn my memory back to what he calls the somewhat tumultuous birth of this legislation in the early 1970s.

Senator Berntson: It was tumultuous.

Senator Olson: You are right. I will tell you how tumultuous it was. The bill that was brought in received all the resistance that it was possible to muster by the opposition of the day, the Conservative Party, on the floor of the House of Commons at second reading. Then when the bill reached the Committee on Agriculture, that committee sat up through two nights until eight o'clock in the morning because of the persistent resistance of some of the Conservative members. It was unbelievable.

Senator Berntson: Was that Jack Horner?

Senator Olson: He was one of them. There were some more. There was a fellow whom you might know from Saskatchewan, a fellow by the name of Stan Korchinski who was a member of Parliament at the time. There were a few more, too, who were involved in that incident.

They made the argument that the philosophy behind the bill was so bad that it was absolutely a violation of all the freedoms that any self-respecting farmer could have. Now Senator Berntson is singing the praises of this Act.

I remember that we sat up all one night until 8:30 the next morning. Another time we sat up nearly that late. As a matter of fact, we even had to call Parliament back to sit between Christmas and the New Year to pass the bill. That is how stubborn the resistance was to passing this bill. Now Senator Berntson is saying that the government has decided that, instead of writing a new bill, they would modify this bill because there are already many things in the statute which provide for what they want to do with this check-off system.

To put the debate of this bill in its right context, I thought honourable senators opposite ought to know a little of the history of what went on when this Act was introduced in 1971.

I did not hear the comment of Senator Carney. Was there something else you wanted me to explain about its history?

Senator Carney: No, I am fascinated. I am very interested in this debate.

Senator Olson: I have to say at the outset, too, that I have no objections to this check-off on a voluntary basis. At least they claim it is on a voluntary basis. It is not all that voluntary, though, in practical application, for producers to pay into this fund. By the way, that is also a rather significant change from traditional Tory policy. You intend to force them to pay first, and if they want their money back, they can apply for it.

I suppose you learned that from the GST. That is what the government does there, too. You pay all the taxes first and if you think you have a right to a rebate, you can go to all the accounting problems of applying for it. That is the way this system will work, too, I guess. I am not sure that that sits well with some of the philosophy I have heard Tories express from time to time.

Talking of the GST, I was at an auction sale the other day and bought a tractor. It fit into a certain category and so I was rather surprised when I came to pay for it that I was not asked to pay the GST on it. So they have made some amendments to the administration. They certainly have not come very far, but that was one small, encouraging light in the tunnel indicating that they might be prepared to listen a little and not continue to force everyone to line up and pay.

Senator Barootes: Was it a used or a new tractor?

Senator Olson: It was a used tractor. The non-payment of GST had nothing to do with whether it was new or used. The fact is that you do not have to pay the GST on tractors over a certain level of horsepower. If the tractor is of a lesser horsepower, you still have to go through that system. There are some Tories who seem to know what could be used exclusively in agriculture.

It is ridiculous. We argued here for weeks that they should exempt some items instead of having that zero rating. I do not think many people yet understand how much misery, bookkeeping, late nights and all the rest goes into the administration of that zero rating. It amounts to exactly the same thing as an exemption, only you would not have all that trouble. Anyway, this bill contains somewhat the same methodology of collecting levies.

If the Leader of the Government in the Senate were here, I am sure he would say, as he does in response to every criticism I make, "Well, what would you do about it?" I am sorry, I do not have thousands of people to gather all the statistics and provide all the advice. Believe it or not, I do not have a perfect answer to every criticism I make.

Senator Di Nino: I cannot believe that, with all the wisdom that you have.

Senator Olson: Senator Berntson is absolutely right when he suggests that the Act we are amending today had a somewhat tumultuous birth.

He goes on to say that it is important that we understand that amending this act to provide for national check-offs in no way ties check-offs to supply management. That has two meanings, I expect. One is that you could collect check-offs for the purpose of paying for research and that sort of thing. You could also have a system that was included in the supply-management regime that may be in place. It is only sensible to have the same system apply. It would not be wise or practical to have two organizations involved. If there is a supply-management regime, they should do all the rest of it, including the research and promotion of the products.

● (1520)

It goes on to say that "these amendments will in no way weaken the existing supply management provisions contained in the act". I wondered why that sentence was included there, but I believe now that the Tories are being particularly meticulous to ensure that they do not leave the impression with any of those farmers out there that they will weaken the supply-management system currently in place, the one that they spent weeks and months trying to destroy when we brought it in back in the early 1970s. But now it is all fine.

I asked the minister questions about what they were going to do to defend supply-management systems or marketing plans in Canada for foreign products, in spite of the problems that they are facing in Geneva now under the GATT arrangements. He, too, spends a great deal of time quoting from the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and stating that there is no way that we will give in on Article XI so that we can defend the enabling legislation that put it in place in 1971.

It was not easy then and it is not easy now to move into a supply-management regime. You just cannot decide one day that it will be done and expect that it will be done the next day. It takes years. Even with the experience that we have today with eggs, broilers and some other commodities—although there are not very many—it takes a long time for everyone to accept the terms and conditions under which they will be set up. This occurs for a number of reasons, including the fact that setting prices and production quotas lies exclusively within the jurisdiciton of the provinces.

The federal government does not have competent jurisdiction to set prices and quotas or determine access to the market. When we brought this legislation in we knew that. Maybe you could have tried for an amendment to the constitution; we did not. We just accepted that that was the way it was because the constitutional provisions were there. But what does not seem to be clear to the people challenging the benefits of the marketing systems we have in Canada is the length of time it takes to get them functioning properly, not only for the producers to have a reasonable, steady income, but also for the consumers to have a reasonably steady supply of the various products that are included.

Honourable senators, I hope we can send this bill to committee for more detail with respect to what is involved, because it is extremely important to understand the provisions of this bill and the activities of the agencies to be set up under it, and to know that those agencies are legally competent to do what the bill says. For the reasons I have just given, I am not quite sure that they are. It is necessary to have delegated authority from provincial legislatures to do many of the things envisaged in collecting levies and then forcing producers to pay those levies. It may not be quite as stiff as that, but we have to be careful to ensure that at least the collection of these levies cannot be challenged. Many millions of dollars will be involved before long. We should be certain that there is a proper legal basis for that money.

Bill C-54 states that anyone can apply to get the levy back. In other words, they can apply for a refund of what they had paid by way of levies. But we should have the assurance—and perhaps Senator Berntson, or whomever the senators call to the committee—will come armed with the information that we need respecting the jurisdictional competence of the two levels of government and the assurance that, if it requires provincial delegation of authority, they are willing to give it.

When this bill was intoduced—and this is dealing with a different aspect of the functioning of the Farm Products Marketing Act—certain provinces attending the meetings of the agriculture ministers pleaded with the federal Minister of Agriculture to pass the enabling legislation as quickly as possible because of the disastrous economic conditions egg producers were experiencing when eggs were about 10 cents a dozen. When the act was finally passed, the same people started to argue over whether or not they would join; it would depend on the level of quotas in the various marketing regions of Canada. That annoyed me, but that is the way people are: they are desperate to have it brought in, but the minute it is put on the table they are reluctant to join.

We have a right to know whether or not all the provinces have agreed to delegate legislation or authority to make this act legal and to have it function properly.

I do not have much more to say about this matter. The idea is beubg fairly well received—at least the sponsor has said that organizations all over Canada have been asking for this legislation. I do not deny that. I think there are some, but I do not think a lot have been asking for it. You have to look behind the requests and ask yourself why they are asking for it. It may be because the Department of Agriculture has been reducing significantly the allocation of funds for research in agriculture since this government came to office.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): What? Reducing funds?

Senator Olson: Yes. They are doing it all the time.

Senator Frith: We would rather believe that it is their repentance and conversion, though, would we not?

Senator Olson: Yes, maybe. But as a percentage of the total budget and the costs, and so on, the allocation of funding for agriculture research has gone down every year since 1984 without exception—maybe there is one exception.

It may be that these farmers are making this request, as Senator Berntson has said—and I do not deny it, but they may be doing it in self-defence so that we can keep up this research.

There is one other explanation and that is that it is a different kind of research. The research that they are talking about is market research and development, and most of the agricultural research is production research. It may have something to do with that aspect.

● (1530)

I think the officials should come to the agriculture committee meeting prepared to answer some of those questions. If this is a tricky way for the government to get out of funding programs that have been a tradition in Canada, then I think the people of Canada ought to know. Canada has the highest health standards in agriculture and food production of any country in the world. As a matter of fact, we are the only country in the world that is able to sell livestock on a certificate, as far as I know. Every other country wants the tests of individual animals before they will allow them to move around. We can do it. We sell livestock, particularly cattle, into more countries in the world than any other nation because of the high standards that we have set. Those standards are developed and maintained by the Canadian Department of Agriculture. That is their job.

Therefore I hope that this measure is not a means of avoiding the provision of funds to maintain our standards where they are. Those standards have been of great benefit to farmers in Canada. I look forward to meeting the witnesses that we will call before the committee.

Senator Frith: You hope that it will not be as tumultuous.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Olson: I can guarantee the chairman of the committee that I will not cause as much fuss while the amendments of this bill are going through as his colleagues did when we produced the first bill.

Senator Frith: Well done, Bud.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Berntson, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

COMPETITION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Pat Carney, moved second reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Competition Act (multi-level marketing plans and pyramid selling).

She said: Honourable senators, it is with pleasure that I rise in support of Bill C-68, to amend the Competition Act, specifically with regard to multi-level marketing plans and pyramid selling. This is a badly needed and very timely piece of legislation. According to business analysts, the direct sales and multi-level marketing industry is one of the fastest growing segments of the Canadian economy. Last year an estimated 750,000 Canadians who neither own stores nor advertise sold more than $1 billion worth of new goods—from vitamins to vacuum cleaners to cosmetics—through multi-level marketing plans.

However, until now the Competition Act has not provided adequate safeguards in the field of multi-level marketing. It has been difficult to differentiate between valid multi-level marketing plans and illegal pyramid schemes. The present wording of section 55 of the Competition Act which governs multi-level marketing has caused confusion for the public, for the multi-level marketing industry and for the courts ever since it came into effect in 1976. Current provisions of the Competition Act do not adequately address several practices associated with pyramid selling schemes. These include compensation for recruitment, inventory loading—whereby unreasonable quantities of a product are sold to a new recruit—required purchases of a product as a condition of entry into a plan, the failure to provide participants with the right to return products and the exaggeration of earnings potential by telling recruits about nonrepresentative compensation received by plan participants.

All this is about to change, thanks to Bill C-68 which clearly defines the differences between legitimate multi-level marketing and pyramid sales. The harmful practices which I have just enumerated will now be strictly prohibited. Legislative safeguards relating to inventory loading, required purchases, product return guarantees, and the disclosure of typical compensation received by participants will be put in place.

As well, a restriction of the Competition Act placed on a practice which is not harmful will be lifted. The current prohibition against bonuses paid in respect of products consumed by participants in a plan has been deleted. These proposed changes will take effect on January 1, 1993. This delayed phase-in will give companies time to make the transition to the newly defined playing field, thereby allowing them to revise their marketing strategies and bring them into compliance with the amended provisions of the Competition Act.

Bill C-68 will amend the Competition Act to simplify the section pertaining to multilevel sales and will remove the present ambiguity and uncertainty. Both consumers and the multilevel marketing industry will benefit from these changes. Consumers, as they deserve, will receive the best possible protection in the marketplace.

The approximately 750,000 Canadians involved in multilevel marketing on either a full or part-time basis will also benefit directly from the swift passage of Bill C-68. The multilevel marketing industry will be better off as a result of this simplified legislation, which will remove some of the incertainty caused by the current wording of the Competition Act. Indeed, the legislative package before us today reflects extensive consultations with the multilevel marketing industry and is strongly supported by that sector.

In addition, all provinces affected by the proposed amendment have been consulted and support these reforms. As well, the amendment before us has the support of all major federal parties. This is a measure of how well crafted and how necessary the proposals contained in Bill C-68 are.

Honourable senators, the present situation with regard to multilevel marketing should not be allowed to continue. The measures before us are the fruit of years of consultation with the industry and they are supported by all parties concerned. I fervently hope that they will be given swift passage by the Senate so that Canadian consumers and the industry concerned will benefit.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

● (1540)

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT SUSPENSION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall moved second reading of Bill C-67, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise and support Bill C-67, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. Bill C-67 was introduced in the House of Commons on April 3 of this year and passed through all stages on May 1, barely a week ago.

The bill intends to suspend the operation of the electoral redistribution process for a one year period after Royal Assent unless there is a general election in progress at the time. If there is a general election in progress then the redistribution process will be suspended until 180 days after the return of the writs from that general election. In either case, the suspension is temporary, and I stress "temporary". After the period of suspension, if Parliament has not taken any other action, the act will come back into force and the redistribution process will begin anew.

The redistribution process flowing from the 1991 census has barely begun. In other words, we have not as yet invested an undue amount of effort, time, labour or, more importantly, costs in it. On April 28, 1992 the Chief Statistician filed the 1991 census data with Elections Canada. This act marked the starting point of what has been a two-and-a-half year process to revise electoral boundaries throughout the country.

The Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing made several recommendations concerning the electoral redistribution process which the government, and I am sure all Canadians, would like to consider. There seemed no point in allowing the current process to continue when amendments, far reaching in some cases, are certainly to be contemplated. After the Lortie Commission recommendations have been thoroughly studied, amendments to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act could then be proposed to Parliament so that the next redistribution will take place, not under the current rules but under the new and amended act.

I am sure honourable senators will agree that it is preferable that a bill be passed to suspend the process as soon as possible before the current redistribution progresses further.

I should make it clear at the outset that the bill would have no effect on the boundaries for the next general election, in any event. If Bill C-67 suspending the process is not passed, and the process continues under the current rules, a redistribution would not take effect until August 1994, which will be well after the next general election. That is probably as close as we have come recently to understanding when that blessed event will take place.

Honourable senators, very briefly, I think it is important to have some awareness of what the process is that we are suspending through this amendment. The Constitution Act, 1867 sets out the ground rules for readjustment of federal electoral boundaries and requires this to be done after each decennial census. As you may remember, the last census took place on June 6, 1991. The Chief Statistician of Canada collected that data and recently sent the results of the 1991 census to the Chief Electoral Officer. This is the first step in this process. Using the Constitution Act, 1867 formula contained therein, the Chief Electoral Officer is then obliged to calculate the number of seats to be allocated to each province and publish those numbers in The Canada Gazette.

An electoral boundaries commission is established for each province and the Northwest Territories pursuant to the present Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. The three members of each of the boundaries commissions are selected by the Speaker of the House of Commons and the appropriate provincial Chief Justices.

The commission must set up the boundaries for the specified number of electoral districts so that the population of each corresponds "as closely as is reasonably possible" to the predetermined average. They are mandated by the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to take into account factors such as community of interest, community of identity, historical patterns and geography. Under the current rules they may deviate from the average population up to 25 per cent, and more than that under extraordinary circumstances.

The commissions publish advertisements showing maps of the proposed boundary changes, as well as the time and location for public hearings. Each commission is required to hold at least one public hearing before completing its report. During the hearings, any interested individual, group, or Member of Parliament may appear and submit views on boundary redistribution.

Each commission must complete its report on the new electoral districts no later than one year after receiving the population data, although the Chief Electoral Officer has the authority to grant an extension of up to some six months when necessary.

The commissions' reports are then sent to the Speaker of the House of Commons who must ensure that they are tabled and referred to a parliamentary committee designated to deal with electoral matters. There is a process whereby written objections signed by at least 10 MPs may be filed with the committee within 30 days of the tabling of the report. The committee then, in turn, has some 30 days—and longer if the House is not sitting—to discuss any objections to a report and return it to the Speaker.

In accordance with section 22 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, the committee's minutes of proceedings are then sent back to the commissions which must then decide whether or not to adjust their reports in relation to the views that have been submitted to the commissions.

The Chief Electoral Officer then drafts a "Representation Order" describing and naming each electoral district as established by the commissions and sends it to the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council must publicly announce the new boundaries in a proclamation within five days of receiving the draft representation order, which is then published within another five days in The Canada Gazette.

I would like to emphasize that, under the rules, the new boundaries cannot be used in an election until at least one year has passed between the date the Representation Order was proclaimed and the date that Parliament is dissolved for the purposes of a general election.

As I noted earlier, if the readjustment process under the current rules were to continue, the new boundaries for electoral districts would not be in force before mid August of 1994.

The readjustment process is required by legislation, the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. Any changes to the process can only be implemented through legislation. That is why we need to enact this bill to suspend the present redistribution process.

Let me spend a few moments on the work of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing. This royal commission produced a comprehensive study of electoral issues in February of this year. It runs to four volumes and over 1,000 pages and is remarkable for the depth of its analysis and the clarity of its recommendations. Indeed for "clarity" one could substitute the word "forcefulness".

The royal commission found that the current formula for allocating seats in the provinces is, and I quote: "a recipe for increasing the inequality among provinces. Discriminating against provinces with populations that are growing relative to national population growth can only cause unnecessary friction within our country." Accordingly, they have recommended basic changes to the formula for allocating seats to enhance the equality of the vote. For the same reason, they also recommend that electoral boundaries commissions be permitted to deviate from the provincial electoral district quotients by only 15 per cent rather than by the 25 per cent factor now in place.

• (1550)

There are several other detailed recommendations concerning the redistribution process, all of which are worthy of our closer scrutiny. I cannot see the point in continuing the current process without first taking into account the impressive work done by the royal commission. Passage of C-67 will not have any influence on the boundaries for the next general election since any changes would not come into effect before mid-August of 1994. Bill C-67 simply suspends the current redistribution process to give Parliament an opportunity to consider the weighty recommendations of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing.

Inasmuch as it is quite apparent from what I have said that this process has very little to do with us other than the historical purpose of our existence, perhaps there might be a disposition that, if the Leader of the Government would seek it, leave could be granted to deal with this matter in all three stages today.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Honourable Senator Forrestall. Do I understand him correctly to say that if we did not pass this bill, anything that the redistribution commission did in any case could not take effect until 1994?

Senator Forrestall: Yes, the senator is quite correct. Our failure to pass this bill would cause the investment of an extraordinary amount of time and effort in going ahead with a process that is, by law, in place. What we are doing is suspending that process so that Parliament itself may look more closely at the royal commission recommendations, a number of which will significantly affect the way in which we distribute among the provinces the federal electoral seats.

Senator Molgat: Thank you, Senator Forrestall. I noted your comment about the possibility of passing the bill through three stages right now, and you spoke to me about this matter yesterday. One of my colleagues, who unfortunately is not here, has some concerns about this matter and asked that he be given time to study it further.

My concern is that we not do anything to prejudice the position of electors in constituencies. We know that since the last redistribution there have been tremendous changes in certain constituencies in urban centres and population explosions, so that we now have constituencies with very much larger populations. While we recognize the problem is one for the House of Commons, it is also a question of democracy. We would therefore like to study this bill further. On behalf of Senator Stanbury, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Molgat, for Senator Stanbury, debate adjourned.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY BILL

REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE—BILL S-8 WITHDRAWN FROM TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE AND REFERRED TO LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, pursuant to notice of May 6th, 1992:

> That Bill S-8, An Act to regulate the manufacture and importation of motor vehicles and motor vehicle equipment to reduce the risk of death, injury and damage to property and the environment, which was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, be withdrawn from the said Committee and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

He said: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, as of last Monday, is engaged in a thorough study of Bill C-62, the telecommunications bill. I understand from its chairman that that committee has allotted all of the time at its disposal this month to that study, including a full week while we hope to be away from here, the week of May 25.

Bill S-8 is an important government bill to which we hope to have Royal Assent by the summer break. For that reason, we are proposing that we remove Bill S-8 from the Transport and Communications committee and refer it instead to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I so move.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROPRIETY AND CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF THE SENATE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Thériault:
>
> That the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders be authorized to consider the propriety and the constitutionality of the changes and amendments to the Rules of the Senate, adopted by the Senate on June 18, 1992; and
>
> That the Committee report no later than June 11, 1992.— (Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton).

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, my motion has been on the Order Paper since March 25 of this year. I think it is a very important and urgent motion because I raise the matter of the constitutionality of the rules under which we are now passing legislation. Therefore, perhaps even the legislation we are passing is invalid.

May I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate when he proposes to speak on this motion, since he stood it some time ago.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Any time next week, senator. Perhaps Monday evening or Tuesday, at your pleasure. I am just putting my notes together.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, May 11, 1992, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1436)

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, May 7, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, February 18, 1992, to hear evidence and to examine and report on matters relating to national security and defence and the future roles of Canada's armed forces, respectfully requests that it be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN B. STEWART
Chairman

Appendix (A) to the Report

THE SENATE OF CANADA LE SÉNAT DU CANADA

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SECURITY AND NATIONAL DEFENCE OF THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

APPLICATION FOR BUDGET AUTHORIZATION FOR THE PERIOD FROM APRIL 1st TO MARCH 31, 1993

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, February 18, 1992:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stewart, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax).

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to hear evidence and to examine and report on matters relating to national security and defence and the future roles of Canada's armed forces;

That the membership of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be increased to twenty (20) members and that Rule 87(1)(h) be suspended in relation thereto; and

That the Committee present its report no later than March 31, 1993.

The question being put on the motion, it was – Adopted.

Gordon L. Barnhart
Clerk of the Senate

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, Tuesday, March 31, 1992:

"Pursuant to Rule 97(4) of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Senator Roblin moved -

That a Subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, to be known as the Subcommittee on Security and National Defence, be appointed;

That the Subcommittee be authorized to hear evidence and to examine and report on matters relating to national security and defence and the future roles of Canada's armed forces; and

That the Subcommittee be composed of the Honourable Senators Balfour, Cools, Corbin, Doody, LeBlanc (Beauséjour), Marshall, Meighen, Phillips and the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs ex officio."

The question being put on the motion, it was – Resolved in the affirmative.

Line Gravel
Clerk of the Committee

SUMMARY OF EXPENDITURES

Professional and Other Services	$ 90,744.50
Transportation and Communications	$ 1,100.00
All Other Expenditures	$ 2,500.00
TOTAL	$ 94,344.50

The foregoing budget was approved by the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs on _____, 1992

The undersigned or an alternate will be in attendance on the date that this Budget is being considered.

_____ _____
Date Chairman, Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs

_____ _____
Date Chairman, Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

The Senate administration has reviewed this budget application.

Gary O'Brien — May 5/92
Director of Committees and Private Legislation — Date

P. McCuan — Mai 5/92
Director of Finance — Date

EXPLANATION OF COST ELEMENTS

Professional and Other Services (0401)
1. Counsellor 8 hrs. per month @ $136	$ 1,088.00
Principal Advisor 75 hrs. per month @ $78.50	$ 5,887.50
Assistant Advisor 20 hrs per month @ $50.50	$ 1,010.00
Dept. of National Defence interns 50 hrs per month @ $24.00	$ 1,200.00
Secretarial & Word processing 25 hrs. per month @ $27	$ 675.00
	$ 9,860.50 x 9 months	$ 88,744.50
2. Meals (0415) Working lunches and dinners (10 lunches and dinners @ $200 each)		$ 2,000.00	$ 90,744.50
Transportation and Communications
1. Courier Services (0213)		$ 1,000.00
2. Telephone Charges (0223)		$ 100.00	$ 1,100.00
All Other Expenditures
Utilities, Materials and Supplies
1. Purchase of books and periodicals (0702)		$ 1,500.00
2. Miscellaneous (0799)		$ 1,000.00	$ 2,500.00
TOTAL			$ 94,344.50

APPENDIX (B) TO THE REPORT

THURSDAY, May 7, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its examination on matters relating to national security and defence and the future roles of Canada's armed forces, as authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, February 18, 1992. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$90,744.50
Transportation and Communications	1,100.00
All Other Expenditures	2,500.00
Total	$94,344.50

Respectfully submitted,

Thérèse Lavoie-Roux
Chairman

THE SENATE

Monday, May 11, 1992

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NOVA SCOTIA

PICTOU COUNTY—DISASTER AT WESTRAY COAL MINE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, for more than 60 hours now, the attention of Canadians has been fixed on Pictou County, Nova Scotia, where a methane gas explosion in a coal mine has caused 11 deaths and shattered hundreds of lives. The fate of 15 other miners trapped underground is still unknown.

The immediacy of television and radio coverage brought us all to Plymouth this weekend, there to join the stricken people at the pithead in their vigil. We hoped and prayed with them for a miracle. Yesterday at noon, we grieved with them in their loss. Tonight we persist in our hopes and prayers for those still underground.

The victims were mostly young, and the desolation in their families can only be imagined. In Canada and around the world sudden tragedy is familiar enough. It is the stuff of daily headlines: a fire engulfs a senior citizens' residence; a passenger aircraft crashes; a fishing boat goes down with her crew. But only in a mining town, it seems, do people live constantly with the prospect of sudden death severing their families and devastating their community with the force of an explosion ripping through rock and coal.

The history of these coal mining towns confirms the apprehension of their people, but these people are not morbid; far from it. Their way of life is one of sharing and mutual support. The community truly is an extended family. These days, one hopes the people of Pictou County may have some consolation in knowing they are also members of the Canadian family, who are with them now, sharing their pain and sorrow.

Our admiration and respect also go out to the members of the rescue teams who risk their own lives to go into the depths to try to rescue their fellow miners or to retrieve their bodies. They have been struggling since Saturday against rock and dust and gas to complete their heroic tasks.

Honourable senators, I am sure we will want to convey, through our colleagues from Nova Scotia, to the families and friends of the victims, an expression of our support and of our solidarity with them in the tragedy that has struck Pictou County and which has brought forth the concern and sympathy of all Canadians.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, Senator Murray has expressed very feelingly the sentiments which all of us, and so many others throughout the country, feel today and have felt since the explosion at the Westray mine. Senator Murray, from personal experience and personal observation, knows his subject because, like myself, he was brought up in a coal mining town in Cape Breton. The danger to life to which he referred is one of the characteristics or one of the fears that prevail in the coal mining towns in Cape Breton and elsewhere in the province of Nova Scotia.

The disaster at the Westray Mine is another in a series of tragedies which have befallen miners and their families. The most recent involving a large loss of life occurred in Glace Bay in 1979, in which 12 miners lost their lives. Prior to that, we all remember the Springhill disaster which occurred in 1956 and involved the loss of 39 lives. Westray will now join the others such as Drummond, the Allan Shaft, No. 12 Colliery in New Waterford, No. 26 Colliery in Glace Bay, the MacGregor Mine, and others where similar tragedies have occurred.

I can only join Senator Murray in paying tribute to the courage of the rescue teams, called draegermen. These teams have played a notable role in the history of coal mining in Nova Scotia. Once again they are risking their own lives in terrible conditions to reach the lost or trapped miners.

As Senator Murray has done, I should like to extend to the families and their friends, to the community and to all of Pictou County condolences and sympathy on this sad day.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

ACCIDENT IN COAL MINING DISTRICT

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable colleagues, we have heard from Senator Lowell Murray and Senator MacEachen of the tragedy in Nova Scotia today. I should like to inform the Senate—if you have not already heard—that late today we understand that there was an accident in a coal mine in British Columbia where one person has been reported missing. We do not know the details; we just know that, in the coal mining district in the southeast corner of British Columbia, there has been an accident that has apparently buried at least one miner under tonnes of coal.

During these expressions of condolence that we are hearing tonight, we might give a thought to our miners in southeast B.C. who are suffering the same type of sorrow.

NOVA SCOTIA

PICTOU COUNTY—WESTRAY COAL MINE DISASTER

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I want to associate myself with those who have already expressed shock and sorrow over the tragic events which are still unfolding in Plymouth, Nova Scotia; and, as has been pointed out by Senator Carney, in British Columbia.

All of us who grew up in coal mining communities have an understanding of the fear and the uncertainty which always exists and is a fact of life in coal mining communities and among the families of the people who live there. We have some small appreciation of the agony and the grief of the people most directly affected. While one obviously feels helpless at a time like this, we can share with the families of those still missing a sense of hope—a hope born from, and inspired by, the history of miracles which have occurred at other coal mining disasters in Nova Scotia when men were rescued six and even nine days after the first explosion.

Coal miners, as you all know, are a unique breed of people. They have a special character. On a personal note, I worked for a number of years as the Senior Vice President of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which is responsible for coal mining operations in the Cape Breton area. When I was growing up I never had more helpful, more compassionate, more understanding friends than the coal miners who lived in the community.

The "buddy" system is legendary among coal miners, where one helps another. It is probably best exemplified, as indicated earlier by Senator Murray and Senator MacEachen, by the courageous and famous draegermen who at this moment are still risking their lives to save their buddies. While one does feel helpless at a time like this, we do express our deep sorrow and our profound sympathy and offer our prayers that the 15 missing men will be found safe, that they will be rescued and that the bereaved families—wives, mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters—and indeed the entire community will somehow find the strength to endure.

• (2010)

NATIONAL PUBLIC SERVICE WEEK BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-328, respecting National Public Service Week: Serving Canadians Better.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next, May 13.

[Senator Graham.]

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 375 residents of the province of Ontario who object to the goods and services tax.

These petitions are mostly from Oakville, Mississauga, Etobicoke, Cornwall and Brampton.

I also have the honour to present a petition signed by 120 residents of the province of Ontario who object to the goods and services tax.

These petitions are mainly from Mississauga, Oakville, Brampton. Dundas and Hamilton.

Finally, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 517 residents of the province of British Columbia who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Kamloops and Tsawwessen. We have a grand total of 1,012 citizens of our country who are against the GST, especially where it undermines the very foundation of our culture, and I am referring to books and periodicals.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

CURRENT NEGOTIATIONS ON ARTICLE XI—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, on at least one occasion the Leader of the Government in the Senate has given an undertaking to bring to this chamber an updated résumé of where we are in the GATT negotiations. Is there any reason why we cannot have it soon?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have that information with me this evening, but I will try to present it some time this week.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable Senators, I have delayed answers to oral questions raised on March 24 by Senator Frith regarding the North American Free Trade Agreement and on May 5 by Senator Haidasz regarding the Proposed Race Relations Institute.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps you could read the answer on the North American Free Trade Agreement.

NORTH AMERICAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DRAFT TEXT—VULNERABILITY OF CANADIAN INDUSTRIES TO U.S. AND MEXICAN INTERESTS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): The question of substantive disciplines on subsidies in the NAFTA has been discussed—whether such provisions are agreed remains to be seen.

An important objective in previous trade negotiations has been to place limits on the ability of the United States Government to apply countervailing duties on imports of Canadian products.

One of the most significant achievements of the Free Trade Agreement was the provision for binding review of final countervailing duty determinations by binational panels. These provisions have worked well. For example, a panel overturned an affirmative injury determination by the U.S. International Trade Commission on Pork.

Improved discipline on subsidies and use of countervailing duty remedies has been a key Canadian objective in the Uruguay Round negotiations. We have in prospect a major result in this area providing for the first time a definition of subsidy. This is one of the reasons why the Government sees the early conclusion of the multilateral trade negotiations as its top trade policy priority.

Senator Frith: The definition of subsidy is in GATT, though.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I can only read the answer, Senator Frith. I cannot comment on it.

JUSTICE

PROPOSED RACE RELATIONS INSTITUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Stanley Haidasz on May 5, 1992)

The Government is firmly committed to the goals of improved race relations and social harmony that are the objectives behind the creation of the foundation. When fiscal circumstances permit, the Canadian Race Relations Foundation (CRRF) legislation will be proclaimed and the planned $24 million in statutory funding, including $12 million on behalf of the Japanese-Canadian community, will be allocated to this purpose.

The foundation is not the only element of the Government's strategy to eliminate racism. Our multiculturalism programs, including the race relations program, continue unchanged.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS TABLED

CANADIAN EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 62 appearing on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—MANAGEMENT OF VALUABLE DOCUMENTS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 63 appearing on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY—MEMBERSHIP OF ADVISORY BOARD

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): tabled the answer to Question No. 67 appearing on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

COMPETITION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Carney, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the second reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Competition Act (multi-level marketing plans and pyramid selling).

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, in rising to speak on Bill C-68, I would like to take a few minutes to explain to you what the purpose of the bill is, what opposition there has or has not been to it, and to explain why this bill will be a very useful bill in terms of protecting Canadian consumers.

Bill C-68 is an amendment to section 55 of the Competition Act. The purpose of the amendment is to add increased power to the Competition Act with respect to being able to control and regulate a number of direct marketing practices, specifically those frequently referred to in the news media as pyramid sales.

Pyramid sales companies are distributors that make money by selling products or by recruiting others to sell products. The distributors themselves make money by receiving a commission on sales made by the sales people whom they have recruited.

It is well known that there are a very large number of companies in Canada—some 370,000 as a matter of fact —involved in the so -called direct marketing business. A great many are legitimate companies. Avon Products is one of the most common examples. It has been engaged in direct door-to-door sales for over 50 years in North America.

• (2020)

It is also true that there are a number of companies in the direct marketing or direct selling business which have from time to time been regarded as fairly shady operators, operating on the grey edge of the law, because the law has been vague as to exactly what was legitimate and what was not legitimate business.

The shadiness or grey areas arise because there has not been a clear definition of what is legal. As a result, these companies have frequently exploited their sales staff by luring them into acting as salespersons for the company on the basis of exaggerated claims as to how much money the individual would make. In addition to attracting these individuals into the business by using exaggerated claims, companies have also required them to actually take possession of a significant amount of company inventory. The distributor requires the salesperson to buy a significant number of units of the product being sold, a number of units which frequently is far in excess of what any reasonable person would expect to sell in that salesperson's market. The net result is that it is the salesperson, not the company, who gets stuck with a significant amount of excess inventory which they are unable to sell.

It surprised me, frankly, to discover that the direct marketing business in Canada, where people go door to door and make individual sales, is an $8 billion business. I was surprised at the size of that. The direct marketing business involves 370,000 small businesses in one form or another. About three-quarters of a million Canadians are employed by these 370,000 companies. The average Canadian who buys from people who participate in direct selling buys from a substantial number of these companies. Thus we have a situation in which not only are a large number of companies involved in the business but also a large number of individuals are involved, both as consumers and as salespersons.

Section 55 of the Competition Act historically attempted to protect consumers by prohibiting some of the more pernicious practices of pyramid selling, specifically practices which involve lulling the gullible consumer into buying poor quality product and the direct salesperson into buying too much inventory. The problem with Section 55 has been that it failed to deal with some of the very specific elements of direct selling which have caused problems. For example, Section 55 does not expressly deal with the issue of excessive inventory loading. It does not deal adequately with the issue of the right of a consumer to have a guaranteed buy-back of the product if the consumer is unsatisfied with the product.

Section 55 has been found in a number of court cases to be a very unwieldy and ineffective means of attempting to protect both consumers and salespersons. As a result, the amendments contained in Bill C-68 are aimed at solving these problems by dealing with the excess zeal and selling practices of some direct marketing companies.

[Senator Kirby.]

It is an interesting observation, honourable senators, to note that the vast majority of companies in the direct selling business—and in particular the companies that are members of a trade association called the Direct Sellers Association—are completely in favour of this bill. They indeed have been urging the government to proceed with this kind of legislation for some time.

In order to be a member of the Direct Sellers Association, you must include among your conditions of sale the right of the consumer to a money-back guarantee within a certain period of time; conditions which protect the individual salespersons from having to buy excessive inventory in order to participate in the business, and so on. The Direct Sellers Association has in place a code of conduct which eliminates most of what I called a few minutes ago 'shady practices'.

• (2030)

The bill that is before you tonight, honourable senators, came about not only as a result of consultation between the Direct Sellers Association and the government, but as a result of considerable consultation with the Consumers Association of Canada, the Association of Canadian Franchisees, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and a number of other public interest organizations. They are concerned about the negative consequences on individuals of some of the shady practices associated with the few firms in the direct selling business which have not operated in what most people would regard as a legitimate business fashion. The amendment that is before this chamber is designed to eliminate such practices.

There are two or three key elements to this amendment. The first is that the amendment puts into section 55 of the Competition Act a definition of what constitutes pyramid selling. It defines pyramid selling as a situation in which distributors receive compensation by recruiting others into the plan. Participants in the plan are then put into a position in which they are required to buy an unreasonable amount of inventory and are left in a position where the distributor will not take that inventory back. The salesperson is then stuck with the product. That is what the proposed amendments with respect to pyramid selling do for the salesperson.

With respect to the purchaser or consumer who buys a product from a direct salesperson, the bill expressly provides that there be a money-back guarantee within a fixed time period to such a consumer so that the consumer cannot be stuck with poor quality or unsatisfactory product.

Thus, the bill deals with a series of stages in the direct selling process. It starts with the way in which salespeople are recruited and the illegitimacy of the distributor's suggesting, directly or indirectly, that there is money to be made way beyond what a reasonable person can expect to earn, thereby inflating expected compensation as a means of enticing people into the business. The bill then moves a stage further and prohibits so-called inventory loading, that is, the demand that individual salespersons buy unreasonable amounts of product from the distributor. It then moves a step further to protect the consumer by requiring that anyone selling through this kind of process be required to offer the consumer a money-back guarantee within a fixed period of time.

This bill is aimed at defining in precise legal terms what constitutes pyramid selling so that the Competition Act can now be used effectively to eliminate many of these shady practices without having a negative impact on the hundreds of thousands of legitimate companies that are in the direct selling business.

The bill has a number of positive provisions both for sales persons in the direct selling business and for consumers through the guarantee of the right to return the product and to get their money back. The act clearly distinguishes what has never been in law before. That is to say, it makes a clear distinction between legitimate and illegitimate direct selling practices, thereby making it possible for the Competition Act to be used in eliminating from the marketplace the handful of companies that have brought considerable disrepute onto a number of otherwise legitimate firms.

By way of penalties, honourable senators, I ought to point out that the amendment to section 55 of the Competition Act provides not only fines but also the option of a jail sentence not to exceed five years. It is interesting that the bill does not contain a maximum fine. Historically, a substantial profit has been made by companies in the pyramid selling business. All of the groups who made representations to the government on this bill stated that, if a case went to court the judge should have the right to set a large fine, thereby ensuring that companies did not make a profit out of this business as the result of an insignificant fine.

It is proposed that Bill C-68 come into force on January 1, 1993, because it is necessary for a number of companies to revise their current marketing plans to bring them into compliance with some of the specific provisions of the bill.

Finally, this bill has one other significant feature to it. Not only is it supported by a number of industry associations and by the Consumers Association of Canada, but it was unanimously supported in the other place by all three parties. As a result of an all-party agreement in the other place it was passed in one day at the beginning of May.

Because of the weather in Canada it is difficult to go door to door in many parts of this country in the middle of winter. Direct selling operations are greater in the summertime than they are in the wintertime. Historically, pyramid selling operations have had their largest number of sales in the summer, in part because it is easier to go door to door and in part because they have been able to recruit a number of unsuspecting individuals such as students and others to do the selling. Therefore, the government felt it important that this bill be passed immediately so that it would send a clear signal to the direct selling industry that the practices which a few shady companies have used to bring into disrepute the direct selling business will no longer be tolerated.

This is an important piece of legislation which addresses a problem with which many of us in this place have had experience. For at least the 20 years I have been involved in government, there have been examples of bad pyramid selling practices which have been inadequately dealt with by the law.

Honourable senators, Bill C-68 deals with a pressing issue, and I recommend that the Senate treat it expeditiously by sending it to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee so that we can hear from both the government and industry as well as from the Consumers Association. Once the commitee reports the bill, we can then give it quick dispatch.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Carney, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT SUSPENSION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Forrestall for the second reading of Bill C-67, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I should like to add some comments to the speech of Senator Forrestall on Bill C-67.

I should tell honourable senators that my first look at this bill, even my first glance at the descriptive long title, "an Act to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act", gave me pause to think about some fundamental issues. I wondered whether our colleagues in the other place had given us a bill that was designed to undermine the principle of representation by population entrenched in the Constitution.

As I understand the bill, it seeks to interrupt the normal process of revising electoral boundaries for the House of Commons. Considering the implications for our system and considering its apparent incompatibility with the basis of representation demanded by our constitution, I kept looking for sound reasons for the introduction of this bill.

First, I looked at the approach that the House of Commons took in considering Bill C-67. My study of the Debates in the other place left me curious and a little concerned about the haste with which this bill was passed. In less than half an hour, the other place gave Bill C-67 second reading, considered it in Committee of the Whole—without the benefit of a single witness—reported it back and gave it third reading.

Senators will remember that Senator Forrestall asked our leave to dispose of all three stages for the consideration of Bill C-67 on Thursday, asking us to forgo the benefit of committee study and deliberation. Fortunately, leave was not granted. As a result, I was given time to look into this matter in a little more detail.

I was hoping to answer some of my own questions about this bill and its consequences. It is not so much that I was suspicious of anyone's motives; rather I was and still am curious to understand the rationale for the employment of the "fast track" for this little bill, a bill that has, as I have intimated, at least the potential for constitutional implications.

For your edification, honourable senators, the regular means for the redefinition of electoral constituencies is described in section 51 of the Constitution Act as amended in 1985 and is interpreted through specific terms in sections 13 and 14 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, 1964. Very simply, the procedure as set out provides for the use of national decennial census population figures as soon as possible to guide the Chief Electoral Officer in his determination of how boundaries, used to define the House of Commons seats, are to be redrawn to best represent the most recent demographics.

What Bill C-67 proposes, then, is to suspend the statutory time limits in place for the process of re-drawing these boundaries, essentially leaving ridings as they exist now for as much as two years longer than would otherwise be the case. Of course, the primary problem here is that it already takes a long time to go through this process. The last census, conducted in 1981, tabled in 1982, did not have expression in the democratic chamber of our government until the 1988 election. In other words, the electoral boundaries were already based on information seven years out of date as a result of the lengthy process. Bill C-67 threatens to greatly increase this period of time.

With that in mind, honourable senators, consider some of the divergences between the principle and the reality that already exist. Elections Canada has calculated that, on the basis of the 1986 interim census, at least 25 ridings exceed the permissible population variances of 25 per cent, as defined in the statute's rules. A case in point is the riding of North York near my home in Toronto. North York now has over 250,000 voters, while there are other ridings with one-tenth of that population. Certainly this derogates from the principle intended by the Constitution in the statute. Bill C-67 appears to exacerbate the problem that we already face and boosts it by deferring the principle of representation by population.

Beyond the concerns that I have just raised, my inquiries also led me to the motivation for this bill, the motivation that Senator Forrestall so articulately explained for us last Thursday. Very simply, our colleagues in the other place are showing concern for the spending of taxpayers' dollars, and we cannot complain about that. As Senator Forrestall points out, even without this bill's adoption, the new boundaries could not be in force before August 1994. So it is the expense of the process that is a concern, and always a noble concern.

[Senator Stanbury.]

Let me explain. As I understand it, the leaders of all of the parties in the other place have agreed that a suspension of boundary readjustment is needed to enable the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing to be considered and, if necessary, implemented. As honourable senators will know, the Lortie Commission's report, which was handed down in February, has made a number of recommendations, including proposals to amend the constitution that would, if fulfilled, greatly affect redistribution.

I should add that our colleague Senator Oliver was himself a commissioner until he took his seat in this place and should therefore be a great asset to the Senate in any of our discussions on electoral reform.

Nevertheless, these recommendations are now being studied by a special committee of the House of Commons and could eventually result in changes to Canada's electoral laws, changes that would overhaul the readjustment process and render the current system obsolete. More important for our debate today, these changes would presumably make any redistribution process already begun under the old system pointless and unneeded. Of course, the point is that if changes are to be implemented soon anyway because of the commission's report, why start this process and do double the work and spend double the money, when it is not necessary?

Considering that logic, delaying the process now in place seems reasonable, practical and responsible. However, there are still too many outstanding questions, both practical and fundamental to allow the speedy passage of this bill into law without more study and more answers. For instance, from a practical perspective, how long will Canadians have to wait for readjustment in the event that reform is adopted as a result of the Lortie report? What if the report's recommendations are not accepted but, instead, are referred as a basis for further study? Will there be further delay, based on the reasons given in the introduction of Bill C-67? Certainly there are no assurances that there will even be any substantive amendments in the foreseeable future. It definitely would not be the first time that recommendations of a royal commission went unheeded.

Given that fact, the whole raison d'être for Bill C-67, the assumption of government action on electoral reform, is in question.

From a fundamental perspective, I would like to know what are the constitutional implications of this bill. I understand that the last time Parliament wanted to suspend the normal procedure—and that was during World War II—an amendment to the Constitution was enacted. Why is a similar amendment to the Constitution not necessary in this instance?

Moreover, what effect could intervening elections have on the delay mandated by this bill? How long is a reasonable amount of time for Canadians to wait for this representation? The Constitution does say that the readjustment "shall" take place "on the completion of each decennial census." How long a period of suspension does this wording allow? Could Parliament continue with the current boundaries ad infinitum by passing simple amending legislation?

I pose these questions, honourable senators, not as a challenge to the sovereignty of Parliament or to its authority to legislate, but because I believe that the Senate has a duty to safeguard the Constitution and uphold the integrity of its tenets. If there is even the slightest question on constitutionality, I am sure that all senators would agree that every precaution should be taken to ensure that no error is made in passing Bill C-67.

The bottom line question is: Although it may indeed be preferable to suspend the normal process in anticipation of more comprehensive reform, and especially in favour of a less expensive outcome, are the means sought in this bill appropriate and, indeed, are they completely reconcilable with all constitutional provisions?

In order that all honourable senators may have the assurance that this bill is sound in every way, I propose that Bill C-67 be referred for closer examination to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee; further, that witnesses be asked to provide testimony, and that the witnesses include the Chief Electoral Officer, the Minister of the Crown responsible, Mr. Lortie of the Electoral Reform Commission, and at least one legal scholar with relevant knowledge to comment on the constitutionality of the bill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a couple of questions for Senator Stanbury. First, do I understand that he is proposing a reference to the committee before second reading?

Senator Stanbury: I had not thought in terms of that possibility. I really intended to see it referred on second reading, but it is a problem for us, I think, in terms of the acceptability of the bill in principle. Senator Forrestall has made a case which I think is most important, and one that has to be studied. I think probably the proper procedure for us is to accept the principle of the bill and let it go to committee.

Senator Frith: I ask because, while listening to Senator Stanbury's comments, it occurred to me that there could be a constitutional issue that goes beyond the bounds of this bill. If I understood him correctly, he feels that it is possible that the effect of this bill would be to suspend a provision of the Constitution. Therefore we could have the suspension, paralysis or freezing—whatever the word is—of a provision of the Constitution, possibly indefinitely, by a statute. If that is so, we have what is the equivalent of an amendment suspending the operation of the Constitution, but accomplished without resort to the amending formula. And if that could be accomplished with this act, what about other provisions of the Constitution that are there in principle but are implemented, given vigour or effect by legislation? If you suspend the legislation, you suspend the life of the constitutional provision. What about the Parliament of Canada Act? What if we amended it in a way that suspended some provision of the Constitution?

I have just listened to this debate and I have not had a chance to think this idea through, but perhaps the Senate could be abolished by suspending the operation of the Parliament of Canada Act. It sounds absurd, but it is, it seems to me, a possible corollary to what we are talking about here.

As I recall it, the last time we referred a bill to a committee before giving it second reading, it was in similar circumstances. It was on the motion of Senator Flynn and the legislation dealt with the acquisition by the Caisse de dépôts et de placements in Quebec of CPR stocks. That is my recollection. I have just heard this suggestion so I am speaking without having done the research. That was the problem that was being raised and was the reason Senator Flynn thought we should have a hearing before second reading of the type referred to by Senator Stanbury.

There is no hidden agenda here, honourable senators. I am not interested in holding up this legislation. My first reaction would be exactly the same, I think, as that of all senators when they first looked at this bill, and that would be to say that it deals with elections, and we are not yet involved in elections. They dealt quickly with this bill over in the other place, so why should we not pass it? But, as Senator Stanbury says, we do have a certain responsibility regarding the Constitution.

So, rather than doing anything hasty, either by way of giving the bill second reading and then sending it to committee, or sending it to committee before second reading today, I will move the adjournment so we can have an opportunity to think about what the best method is. But I certainly support the idea of the Senate informing itself about the constitutional dimension as implied by Senator Forrestall and dealt with explicitly by Senator Stanbury.

Therefore I will move the adjournment of the debate—and I have made this little speech in the course of doing so —so that we can all have a chance to think about what we should do at this stage.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. James F. Kelleher: Honourable senators, I move second reading of this bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Kelleher, seconded by the honourable Senator Ross, that this bill be read a second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: No. On division.

Senator Frith: On what motion?

The Hon. The Speaker: Do you intend to speak to this bill, Senator Kelleher?

Senator Kelleher: Honourable senators, I am very pleased to lead off debate this evening on Bill C-53, an act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

Senator Forrestall: Honourable senators, on a question of privilege, I am sorry, I thought that I heard "Bill C-33" rather than Bill C-53. I certainly have no objections at all to Bill C-53. With leave of the house, I withdraw my comment with respect to "on division".

● (2100)

Senator Kelleher: I will certainly sleep more soundly having heard that withdrawal.

Honourable senators, Bill C-53 is an important piece of legislation that will improve Canada's ability to contribute effectively to peaceful multilateral solutions to international crises. Its purpose is to establish a single statutory authority that will enable Canada to apply a broad range of economic sanctions against a state, or a part of a state, when its behaviour constitutes a serious threat to international peace or security or departs from internationally accepted standards. The proposed Special Economic Measures Act will authorize the government to restrict or prohibit the import and export of goods, technology and services, the execution of financial and commercial transactions and the operation of air and sea links between Canada and the target country. The act will also allow the government to freeze assets held in Canada by the target country, its residents or nationals not resident in Canada.

The use of economic sanctions is not new to Canada, but the time has come to establish a coherent legislative framework that will enable Canada to use them more effectively. The end of the Cold War offers the international community new opportunities to use economic sanctions to maintain international peace and security. Canada and other states must seize the occasion. Recent Canadian experience demonstrates, however, that the government's authority for sanction measures is inadequate in the world of today.

When the Security Council adopted mandatory sanctions pursuant to Article 41 of the U.N. Charter, the United Nations Act allowed Canada to implement fully the measures called for by the United Nations. That act was used to implement the comprehensive U.N. sanctions against southern Rhodesia in 1968, Iraq in 1990, and the selective U.N. sanctions against South Africa in 1977 and Libya this year. Historically, however, mandatory Security Council resolutions have been the exception, not the rule. Disagreement among the permanent members of the Security Council regularly prevented the U.N. from making effective use of mandatory economic measures. Notwithstanding the end of the Cold War, the reservations held by some members of the Security Council about the use of economic sanctions promise to limit the ability of the Security Council to use them in the future.

[Senator Forrestall.]

When Canada joined other like-minded states in applying economic sanctions against Iran and the Soviet Union in 1980, Poland and Argentina in 1982, South Africa in 1985, Libya for the first time in 1986, and Haiti in October of last year, the United Nations Act was not available because the Security Council would not or could not act.

The Export and Import Permits Act has been the principal instrument for the application of economic sanctions by Canada. This act, which allows the government to control the exportation and importation of goods, was used as the basis for the sanctions against Argentina, Iran, Libya, South Africa and Haiti. However, even as an instrument for limiting trade in goods, that act has serious limitations. An international arrangement or commitment is required before imports can be controlled. When Canada sought to respond to the Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands in 1982 by banning the importation of Argentine goods, this requirement led to a three-week delay in the application of import controls.

Beyond the authority conferred by the Export and Import Permits Act, the government has relied on moral suasion, or on its control over federal agencies and public expenditures, to take measures such as redirecting foreign aid and limiting commercial credits.

The government has little or no authority to restrict financial transactions and trades in services, to freeze foreign-held assets in Canada, or to interrupt the operation of air and sea links between Canada and other countries in pursuit of foreign policy objectives. It is here that lies the real need for the proposed Special Economic Measures Act.

Today in international economic relations, trade in services, movements of capital, and invisible operations are as important as trade in goods. Sanctions can no longer be effectively applied through control over trade in goods alone. The ability to make effective use of economic sanctions requires the authority to control, whether selectively or comprehensively, the full range of international economic relations. Without comprehensive authority to adopt economic sanction measures, Canada is limited in the contribution that it can make to the multilateral use of sanctions as a means of resolving international problems.

For example, following the coup d'état in Haiti, the Organization of American States urged all OAS members to suspend financial transactions involving Haiti and to freeze Haitian state assets within their jurisdiction. At present, Canada is severely limited in its ability to give effect to this measure. Only when the proposed Special Economic Measures Act is in force will Canada be able to implement fully the OAS sanctions.

The proposed act would have two alternative criteria for the application of economic sanctions. Measures could be taken pursuant to the act either, on the one hand, in implementation of a decision, resolution or recommendation of an international organization of states or association of states of which Canada is a member, calling for the application of sanctions —of course, this is what would happen with respect to the Haitian situation, or, on the other hand, following a determination that, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, a grave breach of international peace and security has occurred that has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis.

The first threshold will allow, but not require, Canada to give effect to the decisions of international organizations and associations of states to which it belongs. It reflects long-standing Canadian policy of applying sanctions only when there is broad international agreement on their necessity and usefulness. There is good reason for that policy. Economic sanctions are more likely to influence the target state when there is broad international commitment to them.

Senator Frith: Sorry. I did not hear the verb, senator. You said, ". . . more likely to . . ."?

Senator Kelleher: I am not the author of this speech.

Senator Frith: I was not quarrelling, but I did not hear the word. They are more likely to do what to the state?

Senator Kelleher: Economic sanctions are more likely to influence the target state. The verb, I believe, was "influence".

Senator Frith: That is what I did not hear.

Senator Kelleher: Moreover, by acting multilaterally, Canada can insist that the burden of sanctions be shared and avoid placing Canadian businesses at a disadvantage in relation to their foreign competitors.

The second threshold will allow Canada to act unilaterally in rare situations of extreme gravity where measures must be taken unilaterally pending action by the international community. The Iraqi invasion of Kuwait is a perfect example of such a situation. Although Iraq invaded Kuwait on August 2nd, 1990, it was not until August 6th, 1990, that the United Nations Security Council, acting with the utmost dispatch, adopted Resolution 661 calling for the application of economic sanctions against Iraq.

In an age of nearly instantaneous international telecommunications and capital movements, there will be situations where the effectiveness of sanctions will be seriously undermined unless states are able to act quickly in imposing sanctions. In situations of extreme gravity and urgency, the proposed Special Economic Measures Act will enable Canada to act both quickly and forcefully pending the establishment of international measures.

Once the government has decided to apply sanctions under the proposed act, measures will be taken through orders and regulations. This flexible approach has been adopted because sanctions have been and will be applied in a wide variety of circumstances, the details of which are impossible to foresee.

While economic sanctions are a valuable foreign policy instrument, they must be used with discernment. Economic sanctions can serve a number of objectives. Their purpose may be to compel the target state to act in a particular way, or it may be to express outrage or to deter future actions.

Sanctions can be used in addition to or in place of other political or diplomatic measures. When used effectively by the international community, economic sanctions can be a real alternative to the use of armed force in some situations. However, measures used for one purpose may be ineffective, or even counterproductive, for another. Measures must be chosen to suit the objectives of the sanctions.

● (2110)

Every time the government considers applying economic sanctions, it will need to address complex policy issues. The kinds of sanction measures to be imposed, their likely effectiveness, their cost to Canada and the precedents created will need to be examined on each and every occasion in light of the particular prevailing circumstances. The scheme of the proposed act will enable the government to weigh a variety of options and choose those measures most appropriate in each particular circumstance. The proposed act's flexibility will also enable the government to exclude from sanctions, where appropriate, activities justified by humanitarian considerations such as shipments of food and medicine, or compelling economic interests.

The government will be accountable to Parliament for its use of the discretion conferred by the proposed act. Every order and regulation imposing sanctions will have to be tabled in each house of Parliament within five days of its making. If a house is not sitting, the tabling must take place within five days of the day on which the house resumes sitting. Once tabled, each order and regulation will be subject to revocation or amendment on the motion of 20 senators or 50 members of the House of Commons. Every such motion will have to be debated and brought to a vote. Moreover, once orders and regulations cease to have effect, the government must report to Parliament on operations under those orders and regulations.

In some situations, economic sanctions applied by Canada might have adverse effects on persons and businesses in Canada. Although the Canadian experience with the application of economic sanctions has, in the past, given rise to little call by Canadians for compensation, the possibility of claims in the future exists. Provision for this eventuality is made in Bill C-53 through the establishment of a procedure that can be used for handling claims, where appropriate.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs would be responsible for the administration and enforcement of the Special Economic Measures Act. Other ministers may be asked to discharge specific responsibilities. Given the variety of sanction measures that could be taken, it is inevitable that a number of government departments and agencies will be involved in the administration of the act.

Honourable senators, I have highlighted the need for the proposed Special Economic Measures Act and some of the major elements of Bill C-53. I hope that my honourable colleagues recognize the value and importance of this timely bill and see fit to give it prompt passage.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the second reading of Bill C-77, to amend the National Defence Act.

He said: Honourable senators, my remarks on Bill C-77 will be brief, as usual. I assure you that they will be as lucid as ever.

The bill contains a small number of amendments, but they are important amendments. There is also a degree of urgency to having the amendments passed. The amendments are designed to bring the military justice system in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as it was interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada in February of this year.

The military justice system exists to ensure that the armed forces maintain a high standard of discipline. Napoleon said that an army marched on its stomach. Modern military historians tell us that the well-disciplined force is the most effective in time of strife and tension.

Many of us would like to think that we are coming to the day when armed forces will no longer be necessary. The recent announcement of Gorbachev in the United States that the cold war is over leads us to hope along those lines. However, honourable senators, we must remember that there is still a danger of conflict, and we must maintain armed forces that are effective and disciplined.

Because our armed forces operate in various areas of the world under differing conditions, they must have their own separate military system of justice. It simply would not be practical for the armed forces to refer their cases to the civilian courts, especially when our armed forces are operating in foreign countries and the offenses are occurring on a Canadian military base.

Senator Frith: Was the word "practical"? Again, I missed the word.

Senator Phillips: Yes. Canada has always had its system of military courts or tribunals. It is interesting to note that the Supreme Court of Canada, in its decision, did not criticize the existence of the military courts but, rather, recognized that there was a need for military courts and, if necessary, that the military courts should continue in their present pattern of participating in the sentencing that followed the conviction in court.

The military court system has different levels, as do civilian courts. The commanding officer of the unit has the power to hand out minor sentences in the case of a summary conviction. For the more serious offenses—and perhaps we could say for the more senior offenders—there is the forum of courts martial.

The courts martial involve judges sitting alone. Then there are two types, a disciplinary court martial and a general court martial involving a judge advocate, who is the president of the court, and officers who constitute, in effect, the civilian jury. It was this aspect of the constitution of the court that the Supreme Court questioned. The convening authority or the senior military officer in the area convenes the court martial and appoints the prosecutor and the members of the court. In effect the convening authority appoints the judge, the prosecutor and the jury.

● (2120)

The Supreme Court felt that any reasonable individual could anticipate that the convening authority, by selecting these people, would be exercising undue influence on the judicial function of the court. In fact, the main amendment in Bill C-77 is a proposal or direction that the appointment of the president, the members of the court and the prosecutor be carried out by an officer designated for that purpose. This particular individual will have no connection with the disciplinary process. This will, in effect, make the military court functionally independent.

There are several other minor amendments. They all have the same purpose; that is, to increase the distance between the convening authority and the military court. For example, previously the convening authority could stipulate the number of members on the court. Now the number is fixed at five and three, depending on whether it is a general court martial or a disciplinary court martial.

The courts martial will now be unable to prohibit the public from attending except in a few limited cases. This is similar to the procedure followed in civilian courts. One other minor amendment now allows both the prosecution and the defense to object to members of the court. Again, this brings the procedure into line with the civilian procedure where both the prosecution and the defense may object to a particular juror. In this case, with good reason either can object to an officer serving as a member of the court. As I stated, all these changes have been made to make sure that the courts martial to the requirements of the Charter and the direction issued by the Supreme Court of Canada in February of this year.

The decision of the Supreme Court halted all court martial procedures in the armed forces. They had to suspend their activities until they could meet the requirements of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as directed by the Supreme Court of Canada. Consequently, we have a backlog of a number of cases, some of them rather serious, that has built up, and the longer we delay passage the greater the backlog will become. Therefore, I urge all honourable senators to follow the example of the House of Commons and give this piece of legislation early passage to allow the military justice system to resume operation.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

SPENDING CONTROL ACT

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau moved the second reading of Bill C-56, respecting the control of government expenditures.

He said: I welcome this opportunity to lead off the debate on second reading of Bill C-56, respecting the control of government expenditures.

This bill is a vital part of the government's commitment to build a stronger Canadian economy by controlling the deficit and the heavy burden of the public debt.

We have no doubt that Canadians across the country support this objective. They know the money government spends is their money, and they want governments to spend less. Canadians also want the federal government to exercise more spending restraint.

They also want the assurance that the federal deficit can and will be reduced and that increasing taxes will not be the sole means of achieving this objective.

The Spending Control Act provides those assurances, in a fairly simple way. For the first time in Canada, a government is legislating spending limits. Perhaps I may point out that these limits provide for considerably tighter control of spending than comparable legislation in the United States, either the 1990 Budget Enforcement Act or its predecessor, the Gramm-Rudman Hollings Act.

Before explaining the substance of the bill, I would like to recall the circumstances in which the government announced its intention to introduce this legislation in the February 1991 Budget.

[English]

● (2140)

Beginning in the mid-1970s, Canada experienced increasing federal fiscal deficits and rapidly rising debt—with all the economic, fiscal and social problems that increasingly flow from such a situation.

The federal deficit increased from $2.2 billion in 1974-75 to a peak of $38.5 billion in 1984-85. Over the span of the same 10 years, the public debt rose from $28 billion to $200 billion. Since then, largely as a result of compounding interest on that $200 billion, the debt has grown to more than $400 billion. The source of the rising deficit and debt from the mid-1970s to the mid-1980s was quite clearly an uncontrolled growth in program spending. Here are some of the key figures:

> During the five-year period 1969-70 to 1973-74, program spending averaged 16.5 per cent of the gross domestic product. By 1984-85, it had risen to 19.6 per cent—a higher level than at any time since the Second World War. For each tax dollar that Ottawa collected in 1984-85 $1.33 went out in "program" spending.
>
> Over the same period, budgetary revenues as a share of GDP declined from an average of 17.3 per cent to 16 per cent in 1984 -85. As a result, the operating balance—the difference between budgetary revenues and program spending—deteriorated by 4.4 percentage points of GDP. Seventy per cent of this deterioration was due to increases in program spending.
>
> Reflecting this imbalance between spending and revenues, public debt charges as a percentage of GDP rose from 2.1 per cent in the 1969-70 to 1973-74 period to 5 per cent by 1984-85. The federal deficit rose from 1.3 per cent of GDP to a peak of 8.7 per cent by 1984-85.

What these figures make clear is that growth in spending in the decade leading up to the mid-1980s was the primary source of Canada's fiscal difficulties. This, in turn, is why from 1984-85 onwards, the government has given first and continuing priority to restraining spending. I would like to document this priority, if I may.

> Between 1984-85 and 1990-91, program spending increased by only 3.6 per cent per year, less than the average rate of inflation of 4.4 per cent and only half the average nominal growth in the economy. In effect, program spending has been cut in real terms.
>
> As a percentage of GDP, program spending is back down to 16 per cent from 19.6 per cent in 1984-85—its lowest level in 20 years.
>
> This restraint in program spending has allowed the government to achieve a turnaround in its operating balance—from an operating deficit of $16 billion to a surplus of $11.9 billion in 1990-91. More than two-thirds of this improvement in the operating balance comes from spending restraint and less than a third from increased revenues.

Despite the considerable progress we have made, we must still do more. As a result of the turnaround in the government's operating balance, every dollar of our current deficit goes to pay interest charges on the public debt. In other words, we are paying now for the spending of the late 1970s and early 1980s. We are paying for that excessive spending with dollars we could otherwise be using to help recover from the recession, to fund desirable programs in a way we can no longer afford, or to reduce the tax burdens we are placing on Canadians.

This, then is the context in which the government has brought forward the Spending Control Act.

The bill imposes a ceiling on all government spending for the five years from 1991-92 to 1995-96. This means that all spending except for specific, limited exemptions to ensure effective management of operation. The ceiling for each of the five years is the spending projections set out in the fiscal plan brought forward in the February 1991 budget.

[Translation]

This bill builds on what went before, in that many of the restrictions are meant to respect the proposed spending ceilings that have already been put in place. It also strengthens the spending control plan found in the 1990 Budget and extended in each of the next two budgets.

The bill also supports the Debt Servicing and Reduction Act in a way that ensures the complementarity of the government's deficit- and debt-reduction objectives. In addition, it forbids increased borrowing and higher taxes to pay for program spending above the set ceilings. At the same time, the Debt Servicing and Reduction Act guarantees that all revenue from the GST and the net proceeds from sales of assets will be used for debt service and then to reduce the debt itself. In other words, these funds cannot be used to finance new programs.

With these measures, the government is consolidating the progress made so far in reducing spending as a percentage of the economy and is giving effect to the other reductions provided in the 1991 Budget.

[English]

I would like to touch briefly on some of the key provisions of the bill that will help to achieve these ends.

> With limited exceptions, overspending in any year will have to be offset by program spending reductions within the following two fiscal years.
>
> If spending limits are exceeded, the Minister of Finance will have to announce before or in the next budget how the excess will be recovered.
>
> With just four exceptions, all self-financing programs are included in the spending limits. The bill does not constrain the most important stabilizer in our economy, the Unemployment Insurance Account. Three farm insurance programs are also exempt to a degree, in that federal advances to cover deficits of these programs will not be subjected to the spending limits. These programs are the Agricultural Commodities Stabilization Accounts, the Gross Revenue Insurance Fund and the Crop Re-insurance Fund. All other self-financing programs will come under the limits.
>
> A budget that is not consistent with the Spending Control Act could not be presented unless, at the same time, legislation is presented to amend the act.

It has been suggested that the government could resort to increased tax revenues to get around the program spending limits. That is not so. The purpose of the Spending Control bill is to prevent increases in program spending which, in turn, would result in a higher tax burden for Canadians. The purpose is not to deny lower taxes if the overall economic and fiscal position is such that tax decreased are warranted.

The Spending Control bill will give Canadians assurances that the government is determined to rein in the growth of program spending. It will make the whole process of spending restraint more visible. It will play an important role in helping to reduce the deficit and ultimately bring the public debt under control. This is the essential foundation for a goal we all seek, which is to see the Canadian economy return to the path of strong, sustainable growth and job creation, and stop mortgaging the future of our children and grandchildren.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Would the honourable senator accept a question or two? Did the honourable senator have an opportunity to listen to the former premier of Alberta, the Honourable Peter Lougheed, who stated this morning that he had supported the free trade agreement, assuming that the government would keep the Canadian dollar at 78 cents, but that he thought the policy of maintaining the 86 cent dollar was disastrous?

● (2140)

Of course, to keep it at 86 cents, interest rates were kept high. For each percentage point in higher interest rates, the deficit increased by $3 billion. We had the highest interest rates available. This government inherited a debt of $200 billion and will probably leave us a $300 billion debt because of its interest rate policy.

Would the honourable senator opposite care to discuss Peter Lougheed's opinions on interest rates and high dollars?

Senator Comeau: Honourable senators, I make it a habit never to comment on newspaper articles which I have not yet had a chance to read, or the quotations that are presented therein. Thank you.

Senator Gigantès: Would the honourable senator kindly read the transcript of Peter Gzowski interviewing Peter Lougheed this morning? Could you listen to that and perhaps enlighten us a little more about the government's views tomorrow?

Senator Comeau: Honourable senators, I will probably read the transcript of the interview with great interest and relish, but I do not think it has any relevance to the program spending limit bill that we are now presenting.

Senator Gigantès: Well, along with program spending limits, if you also lowered interest rates, or if you had lowered interest rates and used other means of combatting inflation, then we would not have this national debt mess. Other means do exist. One has to ask why your government picked that solution. The answer is: because its rich friends are those who have money to lend, and those who have money to lend make more money when interest rates are higher.

Senator Comeau: If the honourable senator had listened to the comments I made earlier, he would have noted that most of the interest payments that we are making now have been caused by the increased spending of the past, over the 1974 to 1984 period. I look forward to the honourable senator's suggestions when this bill is referred to committee.

Senator Gigantès: Would the honourable senator also promise to read the story about Joseph and the pharaoh's dream in the Bible? The pharaoh dreamed of seven thin cows eating seven fat cows. He asked all his bureaucrats, the Paul Telliers and John Crows of the day, to tell him what the dream meant. Nobody could answer. He said, "Do we not have a good Jewish consultant anywhere?" They brought him Joseph. Joseph said, "Divine Majesty, it is quite simple. Seven good years are followed by seven bad years. During the seven good years, you should put money aside to have available to spend during the bad years."

Your government did not put money aside during the boom it inherited in 1984. When this recession hit, your government put on a high dollar with high interest rates, destroyed our export trade, and lost the revenue base.

Senator Comeau: Honourable senators, I do not often refer to the Bible when I plan my speeches, so therefore I have not recently read the parable referred to. However, I do know we are trying to avoid the 1974-84 cash-cow period, because we do not want to carry on the mistakes that were made during that period.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I can virtually repeat the speech I made when Senator Simard produced the debt reduction bill which heralded the expenditure control bill we received tonight.

When I heard Senator Comeau speak tonight, I was reminded of Marvin Fitzwater, the press secretary for the President of the United States. When confronted with a request to explain the riots and fires in Los Angeles, he said, "Well, it is all due to the policies followed by previous governments in the 1960s and 1970s." He totally absolved President Reagan and President Bush of any responsibility for the occurrences in Los Angeles.

Tonight we again have a repetition of the line which has now become the currency of the government and the Department of Finance: The difficulties which face the country today are totally the responsibility of the government in the 1970s and the early 1980s. Indeed, although the present government has been in office for eight years, it has found itself incapable of having any influence upon the fiscal management of Canada. It has thrown up its hands and said, "We are governed by what happened 10 or 15 years ago."

Senator Frith: Except when they can find some good news, which is rare.

Senator MacEachen: I do not know whether the argument will have any impact. Certainly, every poll I read says the Canadian public has concluded that the responsibility for the present situation rests at the feet of the government, that it is responsible for economic and fiscal management and therefore it ought to have done something about it.

No matter how the situation is laundered, no matter how frequently senators say, "We have made great progress, and we have further plans for the future," they cannot erase two important facts. The first fact is that the deficit today is substantially the same as the deficit which existed when this government came into office.

Tonight we again heard reference to 1984-85 and a $38 billion deficit. Maybe 38.6 was the reference. Senator Kelly made this statement a year or so ago, and it was made by Senator Simard just a few days ago. I invite the three senators to go to the first statement made in the fall of 1984 by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Wilson, in which he stated that the deficit he inherited was some $34.5 billion. The year 1984-85 was a split year. The new government was in office for half the year and the former government for half the year. Mr. Wilson, after having become Minister of Finance, after having explored the facts, said that $34.5 billion was the deficit for 1984-85. Subsequently, he reported it as $38 billion. However, he did say in the fall of 1984, "The deficit we inherited is $34.5 billion." Why add four or five billion dollars in order to launder the situation and smooth it over? To my knowledge Mr. Wilson has never corrected that statement.

● (2200)

The deficit has been hovering at around $30 billion to $32 billion. I say it is about the same. Certainly, in the interim, with the growth in the gross national product and with the growth in the economy, I am justified in saying that it is just about the same. Why do senators opposite try to fight on their weakest ground? That is what I wonder. The fact is there.

We have had the other embellishment of fiscal presentations, namely, why very little progress has been made on the deficit, even though the Minister of Finance predicted that the deficit would be about $15 billion. That was not a Liberal projection. He had all the facts and said, "Yes, I looked to the future and by 1990 the deficit will be about $15 billion or $16 billion." It is now over $30 billion.

Why did that happen? It happened principally because of policies followed by the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada. I have gone into all that before. We recognize the reality that the deficit is at about where it was earlier.

There is now a new element called the operating balance. It is argued that we have produced a surplus of revenue over expenditure; but the deficit has remained the same. We segregate all expenditures and create a wall around debt service payments which then becomes the deficit. I dealt with that two years ago, when I quoted the president of the Royal Bank of Canada who poured scorn on the Department of Finance and on the government in attempting to escape the reality of the deficit by referring to an operating balance. "What difference does it make?", he asked. "It is a burden that has to be carried by the country. It is a pay-out which is still there."

He asked, "What difference does it make?" I ask what difference does it make to put forward this operating balance, except that it is an effort to show that the present government has had no responsibility for the deficit?

I do not know why honourable senators opposite fight on that ground either. They talk about the debt which has more than doubled since 1984-85, and the government is still repeating these comments.

I did not intend, when I rose, to make any point other than the point about the size of the deficit was when this government came into office. I intend to give you the correct quotation from the former Minister of Finance when I resume my comments on this bill, in the expectation that you will respect him and the next time you make your speeches you will talk about a deficit, not of $38 billion, but of $34.5 billion when you formed the government.

I am ready to give you credit for the slight change in the size of the deficit in the intervening years. It is just about the same.

I will resume my remarks at the first opportunity after I have had a chance to read the intricate percentages which have come from that unspecified author mentioned by Senator Kelleher.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

COASTING TRADE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eileen Rossiter moved second reading of Bill C-33, respecting the use of foreign ships and non-duty paid ships in the coasting trade.

She said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to begin debate on Bill C-33, respecting the use of foreign ships and non-duty paid ships in the coasting trade of Canada. This bill is intended to bring Canadian coasting trade legislation in line with the deregulated and modern business environment that prevails in Canada today.

The Government of Canada is committed to working in partnership with our industries for the betterment of all Canadians, and modernization of marine legislation goes along with that goal.

The purpose of the bill is to reserve what is commonly called the "coasting trade" to Canadian ships in all waters over which Canada has jurisdiction and including waters above the Canadian continental shelf.

The bill reserves all commercial marine activities to Canadians ships within the 12-mile territorial sea and the internal waters of Canada. In the offshore—that is, in waters beyond the territorial sea above the continental shelf—all commercial marine activities related to the exploration and exploitation of non-living natural resources are reserved to Canadian ships.

At the present time, coasting trade activities in Canada are governed by Part X of the Canada Shipping Act. Certain other activities carried out by ships in Canadian waters are regulated by the Customs Act.

The Canada Shipping Act defines "coasting trade" as "... the carriage by water, or by land and water, of goods or passengers between two places in Canada, either directly or by way of a foreign port." Under that legislation, such carriage is reserved to British ships, which include all Commonwealth ships. Honourable senators, the time has come to modernize this legislation. For one thing, the concept of a British ship has changed since the British Commonwealth Merchant Shipping Agreement was terminated in 1979. In 1982, the Law of the Sea was adopted by an international convention, and the Customs and Excise Offshore Application Act was passed in 1983. All these events, along with others, have impacted upon the Canadian coasting provisions, making it necessary for new coasting trade legislation to be adopted.

[Senator MacEachen.]

The current provisions were established in 1934 and were amended in 1966, 1983 and 1987. Since 1934, a number of things have changed. The most obvious, of course, is the offshore oil and gas developments which were not even thought of in 1934.

An important part of both the present and proposed legislation is the system that provides for the Minister of National Revenue to issue a coasting licence to foreign ships to engage in the coasting trade of Canada if no suitable Canadian ship is available.

I will speak further about the licensing system in a moment, but before proceeding in that direction I should point out that a predecessor to this bill, Bill C-52, was considered during a previous session of Parliament and was passed by the other place. However, concerns raised in the Senate regarding the treatment of cruise ships delayed the bill until that session was prorogued.

These concerns have now been resolved in Bill C-33 by defining coastal trade in such a way that a cruise vessel carrying passengers from Vancouver to Alaska and back to Vancouver would not be engaged in the coasting trade in Canada. In other words, as long as a cruise vessel calls in at a foreign port and comes back to the Canadian port of origin, that vessel is engaged in international shipping. It is important to note that the definition requires the cruise ship to return to the port of departure and to make a call to a foreign port. Otherwise, the vessel would be coasting in Canada.

This provision does not apply to the Great Lakes and to the St. Lawrence River west of St. Lambert Lock, thereby protecting the important tour boat industry operating day cruises in the Thousand Islands region and on the Great Lakes. Consequently, any cruise ship embarking passengers in a Canadian port west of St. Lambert Lock is considered to be coasting in Canada, whether or not that vessel calls at a foreign port.

As stated earlier, Bill C-33 reserves the Canadian coastal trade to Canadian ships. However, honourable senators, we must appreciate that there is not always a suitable Canadian ship available or capable of carrying out all of the required activities. Thus Bill C-33 retains the possibility of allowing the issuance of a coasting license to a foreign ship or to a non-duty-paid ship. This provision is similar to the existing waiver system.

Bill C-33 goes further by establishing a pecking order if there are no suitable Canadian ships available. In such cases, first priority is given to vessels known as non-duty-paid ships and second priority to foreign ships. A non-duty-paid ship is a foreign-built and Canadian-registered ship on which all applicable duties and taxes have not been paid. As a result of certain adjustments to the Canadian customs regulations, a Canadian ship managed from Canada and involved in the international trade is not subject to the payment of duty and taxes. This pecking order gives a priority to such vessels.

There are a number of exceptions in this bill. For one, a specific exemption is granted to foreign ships used as fishing vessels as defined by the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, as well as to ships engaged in any ocean research activity commissioned by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Similarly, exemptions are made for ships operated or sponsored by a foreign government and authorized by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. These exemptions will ensure a minimum of conflict with other legislations.

To be consistent with the Law of the Sea Convention, an exemption is provided to salvage operations in waters that are beyond the territorial sea of Canada and above the continental shelf of Canada. It also exempts salvage by U.S. flag ships in waters contiguous to the United States as permitted by our Canadian legislation known as "The United States Wreckers Act". A reciprocal treatment is granted to Canadian ships to salvage ships in U.S. waters contiguous to the Canadian border.

During the period since Bill C-52 died on the Order Paper, it was determined that there is a need to ensure that no confusion exists during a marine environmental pollution emergency. Thus there is a specific provision in Bill C-33 that permits a foreign ship, with the approval of a pollution prevention officer, to engage in activities related to a marine pollution environmental emergency.

The bill also recognizes the normal maritime practice whereby, in both the offshore and in Canadian waters, ships assisting persons, ships, or aircraft in distress will not be subject to the provisions of this bill. The government does not expect any misunderstanding or conflict over this practice.

Another straightforward aspect deriving from this legislation is that the registration requirements for ships will be compatible with the Canadian customs regime. In fact, this bill will ease the situation for those wishing to operate ships in Canadian waters and waters above the continental shelf of Canada by clarifying the registration requirements which must be observed.

To summarize, honourable senators, the proposed Coasting Trade Act will extend the jurisdiction of current coastal trade laws to include:

1. All commercial marine activities within 12 miles with the exceptions noted.

2. All commercial marine activities related to resource exploration or exploitation out to 200 miles or the outer edge of the continental shelf, whichever is the greater, again with the exceptions noted.

The bill protects the operators of Canadian flag ships wishing to work within Canadian waters and on the continental shelf. In cases where a Canadian shipper cannot find a suitable Canadian vessel to carry out a required activity within Canadian waters, that shipper will have the opportunity to have access to a foreign ship available to respond to the demand.

At the same time, allowance is made for international cruise ships to operate without meeting the requirements of the Coasting Trade bill. As a consequence, cruise activities in Canada will be given the opportunity to grow and develop, and jobs for Canadian ships' crews will be protected. As market conditions improve, more job opportunities will be created for ships' crews and those in related industries.

Honourable senators, these are the goals and objectives of Bill C-33. However, prior to completing my remarks, I would like you to be aware that, despite the long period of negotiation among the interested parties and the massive amount of work put forward in the preparation of this bill, various amendments still had to be made in the other House prior to third reading. These amendments were generally supported by the shipping industry and, more specifically, by the cruise industry with respect to the clarification of the definition of coasting trade.

The minor amendments to the definition were made in order to ensure that cruise ships would be entitled, without any single doubt, to call at Canadian intermediate ports en route to or from the foreign port as long as all passengers reboard the vessel prior to the departure for the next port, or they are transported by land to another location to reboard the same ship.

A consequential amendment revoking the powers in the Customs Act to define "coasting trade" was made in response to requests from industry.

An amendment was made to require the National Transportation Agency, in its search for suitable Canadians ships with respect to an application for the temporary importation of a foreign cruise ship, to ensure that no adequate and similar service exists, regardless of whether the service is regularly scheduled or operating on demand.

I have no doubt that other senators will have comments to make. However, I believe that you will find that Bill C-33 is a great improvement when compared to Bill C-52, and that the time has come to bring our important coasting trade legislation up to date. During third reading in the other place, both government and opposition members supported the bill. I believe that it addresses many of the concerns of our industries and will be of benefit to all those engaged in this vital aspect of our economy, including shipowners and shippers.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Did I understand correctly that, before leasing a foreign ship for coastal trade, a Canadian who wished to lease such a ship would have to establish and prove that he could not find a suitable Canadian vessel?

Senator Rossiter: A suitable vessel in Canadian coastal waters?

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

Senator Rossiter: I do not think I can answer that question now. I would rather see it in writing and then get an answer for the honourable senator, if that is satisfactory.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Will the honourable senator permit a further question? Did I understand her to say that the bill received the support of all parties on third reading in the other place?

Senator Rossiter: That is what I said. During third reading in the other place, both government and opposition members supported the bill.

Senator Molgat: I will have to check my notes then, because my impression was that there was a voice vote and that there was opposition. However, I will check that.

If no other honourable senators wish to speak, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: I wonder if the honourable senator would permit me to speak. I erred earlier with my colleague because I had misheard.

I have serious objections to two or three aspects of this bill. I would ask, if I may, whether or not my distinguished colleague has satisfied herself that this bill indeed, among a lot of others, is worthy of support.

I have four major concerns. Does this bill, in fact, comply with and satisfy the requirements of other legislation that deals with the right to work in Canada? This is not the bill which died on the Order Paper in this learned chamber in 1988. It is quite a different bill. Has my colleague satisfied herself that this bill deals fairly with the rights of Canadians to work in Canada, the requirement of non-Canadians to work in Canada, and the capacity to pick up the phone and say that there appears to be no vessel suitable to the requirements laid out? There is no requirement, in fact and in practice, for the agency to go any further than that. Has my colleague satisfied herself that this bill, in fact, protects the right of Canadians to be employed in Canadian jobs, in Canada, under Canadian laws?

Senator Rossiter: It is my understanding that the National Transportation Agency will be keeping a registry of ships and will know which one has the priority, which one has the capability, and all the rest of it. I am sure that this matter can be addressed more thoroughly when the bill goes to committee.

Senator Forrestall: I am at a loss, honourable senators. I would like to take the adjournment of the debate myself.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Molgat has that motion on the floor.

[Senator Gigantès.]

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

NINETEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Nineteeth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Budgets—Senate Committees), presented on May 7, 1992.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

TWENTIETH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twentieth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Budgets— Legal and Constitutional Affairs), presented on May 7, 1992.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the Twentieth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

TWENTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twenty-First Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Budgets—Banking, Trade and Commerce), presented on May 7, 1992.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the Twenty-First Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

[English]

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

TWELFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Resuming debate on the consideration of the Twelfth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (draft regulations re Financial Institutions—Interim Report), presented in the Senate on 5th May, 1992.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the eleventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill S-7, An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the Royal Society of Canada—with certain amendments), presented in the Senate on 6th May, 1992.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I would like to say a brief word. This report comes back to the Senate with two amendments made to the bill. I will say very little because I think Senator Frith is prepared to speak. The two amendments which were unanimously agreed to by the committee were proposed by Senator Frith. I think we all thought that they improved the bill. With those few comments by me, I would ask Senator Frith to explain what the two amendments are.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I spoke to Senator Nurgitz about this legislation and I can explain very quickly what the two amendments are. Honourable senators might remember that when I spoke to the bill at second reading on March 31st of this yeare, I expressed support for the legislation, but with two reservations.

My first concern was that though the society was required, under its enabling legislation, to report annually to both houses of Parliament, it had not reported to the Senate since October 3rd of 1989. In committee, the Honourary Secretary of the Royal Society, Mr. Pierre Camu, explained that though reports had been presented to the House of Commons, through an oversight they had not been forwarded to the Senate. By the time of the committee meeting on April 7th, the error had been rectified and reports had been forwarded to the Clerk of the Senate. Therefore that concern has been addressed.

My second reservation concerned the way the original legislation was being amended in order to remove the limitation on the amount of real property the society could hold. That was the main purpose of the legislation. The society was limited to real property holdings of $4,000 and the idea was simply to remove that limitation and not replace it with another limitation. So the objection was not to the removal of the limitation, but to the way in which it had been done.

Section 1 of the original act provided that the annual value of real estate held at any one time for the actual use of the society could not exceed $4,000. Bill S-7 proposed to remove the limitation by deleting section 1 of the 1883 act in its entirety and replacing it with a standard clause providing for the continuation of the Royal Society and giving it the power to acquire and hold real and personal property. That seemed in order, but unfortunately that approach, namely the repeal of the whole of section 1, not only removed the property limitation of $4,000, which is at the very end of the section, but also removed the names of the founding member of the Royal Society. In other words, the surgery had undesirable side effects by removing more than the offending tissue. Is Dr. Keon here? I wonder if he would support that metaphor. In any event, that is what was happening. There was surgery to take out the $4,000, but in the course of the operation a lot of non-offending tissue was being removed.

I expressed, and I think received some support for, regret that these names were being removed because they are the names of individuals who loomed very large in the history of our country, individuals such as Napoleon Bourassa, Sir Sanford Flemming, Sir John George Bourinot, Sir William Osler, and the Honourable Pierre-Joseph-Olivier Chauvreau. I could not imagine the Royal Society of England or France's L'Académie treating their founding members in a similar fashion. Of course, it was not intentional, but rather an unfortunate accident.

• (2220)

In committee we learned from Mr. du Plessis, the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, that this particular drafting approach—namely, the removal of the entire section, including all those names—was adopted because of rule 73(1) of the Rules of the Senate. The rule reads:

> In any bill originating in the Senate amending any statute or part thereof, the amendments shall be made by clauses that re-enact the section, subsection or other minor division as it is amended and shall not ordinarily be made by clauses that add or leave out words or substitute words for others.

To put it in context, that rule would seem to prohibit the simple surgery; namely, just lopping off the $4,000 limitation.

However, in following rule 73(1) to the letter and replacing section 1 of the 1883 act, it would not be possible to reinsert the names of the original founding members because those individuals are now deceased. I do not see how Parliament could pass legislation stating—as it did in the original full section—that these individuals were joining together to form the Royal Society of Canada. They could and did do that over 100 years ago; they could not do it today.

Mr. du Plessis agreed that rule 73(1) is not an absolute rule. It provides that amendments in any bill originating in the Senate shall "not ordinarily be made" by altering the words in existing clauses. It is my submission that this is not an ordinary situation. Rule 73(1) provides the general rule, but through its use of the words "not ordinarily", it recognizes that in some instances such an approach might not be the best one.

Senator Nurgitz, in committee, provided the means for having these corrections made. In his report, which we are now debating, an alternative is proposed. Instead of deleting in its entirety section 1 of the 1883 statute, which would remove all those names, the report recommends that only the last few lines of the section, which deal exclusively with the property limitation, be removed. If we adopt this report, the intended result will be the same: we will have achieved the purpose, removal of the $4,000 limitation, and not thrown out all those names. The names of the founding members will remain in the statute which governs the Royal Society of Canada. To continue the earlier metaphor, this is a much more precise and more elegant surgery.

As far as procedure is concerned, I do not believe we need unanimous consent to proceed this way. I do not think we have to suspend the operation of the rule. Rule 73(1) provides a general rule for proceeding with amendments in a bill introduced in the Senate, but it is a general rule, and the section itself recognizes that there may be circumstances where another approach should be adopted. That is what we are doing today.

Senator Nurgitz is moving the adoption of the report. We support that motion, and if it carries and the sponsor of the bill moves third reading tomorrow, we will support that also.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Tremblay, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 12, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

THE LATE MAURICE SAUVÉ

TRIBUTES

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, I rise to pay tribute to the memory of the Hon. Maurice Sauvé.

The older we are, the more we lose friends, colleagues and acquaintances. The number of people we know shrinks. Every time someone dies makes us think:

"It may be my turn soon!"

The English poet John Donne put it in another way:

"Never send to know for whom the bell tolls, It tolls for thee."

On December 5, 1991, at a dinner in his home in Montreal, Maurice Sauvé told his friends gathered around the table that he was undergoing medical tests at the Royal Victoria Hospital and that he would have the results in early January.

On the morning of January 8, he called me to announce the results of the tests: he had been told that he had inoperable cancer. He was to die a little over three months later, on April 13. A man of deep faith and very devout, he wanted to put his affairs in order right away, according to priority. He therefore wanted to receive without delay the last rites of the Catholic Church. He did it with full knowledge and full use of his mental and physical faculties. With Madam Sauvé and Dr. Gaston Sauvé, his brother, I attended this plain and simple but all the more impressive ritual of our church which causes both the one who receives it and the observer to reflect.

Maurice Sauvé had a full life. He was keenly interested in public affairs; it was even his calling in the religious sense of the term, and he devoted himself to it for half a century. He was a witness to or participant in all the major political events in Quebec and in Canada during that period.

He saw the asbestos strike in Asbestos in 1949 and analyzed it in a book published later under the direction of Pierre Trudeau. He led Jean Lesage's organization in 1960 and helped usher in Quebec's Quiet Revolution. He was elected to Parliament in 1962 and joined Mr. Pearson's Cabinet in 1964. He helped bring Trudeau, Marchand and Pelletier to Ottawa in 1965 and chaired the Quebec-Canada Committee that brought together the federalist forces for the Quebec referendum in 1980. Last year, in 1991, he organized the Group of 22, made up in a non-partisan way of citizens of all regions of Canada and every age group, to look into reasonable and acceptable forms of Canadian federalism. He submitted the result of several months of study done by this group to the Beaudoin-Dobbie Committee, accompanied by former premiers Davis of Ontario and Blakeney of Saskatchewan. This report was presented by the Group of 22 to the provincial premiers and sent to all parliamentarians. I was part of the delegation to Mr. Bourassa. Maurice Sauvé, Bill Davis and several others gave a copy to Prime Minister Mulroney.

Until his dying breath, Maurice Sauvé was concerned about the future of Canada. He discussed it on the telephone with Prime Minister Mulroney to the end.

Maurice Sauvé was a Canadian by conviction and thoroughly Québécois. Meeting him was a thrill. He was convincing. A practical man, he knew that one had to approach decision makers personally and talk to them. He had the largest network of personal contacts in Canada of anyone I knew. He knew everybody. He had met and kept in touch with Canadians everywhere, in the most remote places and in the heart of all the cities in the land. You could ask Maurice Sauvé whom to see in British Columbia or in New Brunswick if you had to and he would tell you, "I met so-and-so in 1965 or 1970. He will remember me. Call him." It always worked! He did favours for everyone, even complete strangers. He was like that.

He was full of ideas and also decisive; he did not waffle. Once a project had been thought over, he acted with determination and energy. His social philosophy was just and pragmatic and his opinions never diverged from a sound basis in reality. As they say, he had both feet on the ground. His thinking and his action were meticulously ordered. He did not leave things to chance. For him, order was second nature; his papers were well kept, neat and orderly. He had a flawless memory and in an instant could recall things from twenty years before. His thinking and his papers were orderly.

In reading ancient authors which I do regularly, I often think that Maurice Sauvé would be worthy of admission to Plutarch's gallery of illustrious men, those great ancestors. Politicians or ordinary citizens, who had a balanced mind, true judgment and unlimited devotion to the community. Maurice Sauvé had something of Cato the Elder and Cincinnatus. He made a most important contribution to our country, he founded a home that is an honour to all Canadians and Quebecers; in religion, he was devout and unostentatious. He leaves us a magnificent example to follow.

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I wish to pay tribute to the Honourable Maurice Sauvé who passed away during Easter Week. As a lawyer, politician, economist, labour expert, businessman, and chancellor of the University of Ottawa, he had an extremely varied career. He graduated with a law degree from the University of Montreal, went to the London School of Economics and the University of Paris, and was a minister in the Pearson government from 1964 to 1968.

A federalist by conviction and a persuasive reformer, he played a major role during the "quiet revolution" in Quebec, and on the federal scene, he and others with him helped give Francophones their rightful place in the centres of political decision-making in Ottawa.

He founded the Group of 22 and, as its president, made his last major public contribution in the summer of 1991 before the Committee on a Renewed Canada, together with former Premiers William Davis and Allan Blakeney and other intervenors.

To the very end he showed an abiding interest in solving Canada's constitutional question and a passionate love for his country.

A number of political figures paid him a very moving tribute on April 22 at the Marie-Reine du Monde Cathedral in Montreal, during a memorial service that was impressive in its dignity.

We shall remember Maurice Sauvé as a man of action and a man of courage, and we shall also remember his serene spirit.

We wish to offer his wife, the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, an exceptional woman who has played a unique role in our history and for whom Maurice was a pillar of strength and wisdom throughout his life, and their son, Jean-François, our sincere condolences.

• (1410)

[English]

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, for those supporters of the government who are lovers of democracy, their clock today shows 193 days to election; but, if by chance any of them are cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, then they have another 579 days.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, has the honour to present its

[Senator Beaudoin.]

TWENTY-SECOND REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its special study on the draft regulations pertaining to the new legislation on Canadian financial institutions, as authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, December 17, 1991. The said supplementary budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$32,000.00
Transportation and Communications	1,000.00
All Other Expenditures	1,000.00
Total	$34,000.00

Respectfully submitted,

THÉRÈSE LAVOIE-ROUX
Chairperson

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken in consideration?

On motion of Senator Lavoie-Roux, report placed on Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

THE ECONOMY

MISMANAGEMENT OF MONETARY POLICY—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wish to give notice that on Thursday next, the 14th of May, I will call the attention of the Senate to the government's mismanagement of the economy, particularly monetary policy.

This inquiry has been on the Order Paper before, but it fell off because of the new 15-day rule. I am simply putting it back on.

Senator Murray: And will you be putting forward your monetary policy?

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 527 residents of the province of Ontario who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Cornwall, Guelph, Toronto, Oxford Mills, Waterloo, Rexdale, Etobicoke and Brampton.

Five hundred and twenty-seven more!

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR PROGNOSIS OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate ask his colleague the Minister of Finance if he has any prognosis as to how long the present recession or depression will last?

Senator Sylvain: How high is up?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: How low is down?

Senator Frith: A laughing matter. I thought it would be so on your side. Do you think our Minister of Finance would do a thing like that?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the fact of the matter is that Canada is very well positioned to capitalize on the recovery that is taking place in the world at large. As I have explained to the honourable senator on several occasions, not on my own authority or even on the authority of my colleague the Minister of Finance, the International Monetary Fund, the OECD, the Economist magazine, and other independent forecasters are unanimous in forecasting that Canada will have not only the highest rate of economic growth in 1992 and 1993, but the highest rate of employment growth. And these are forecasts which I am sure all honourable senators, partisanship and partisan advantage aside, will rejoice in.

Senator Olson: All of them changed their forecasts last week.

Senator Frith: Quite right, and I take note that the Leader of the Government has repeated that the government is well positioned. We hear that. Canada is well positioned.

We received a packet from the Business Council on national issues recently. I don't think I was the only one who recieved it. In fact, it was referred to in the press, in which there was a lot of interesting comment, but no comment stating how long this recession was going to last. There were just promises that we were well positioned.

Mr. D'Aquino, when he was referring to the passing of the recession, made this prognosis—and listen to this for detail:

> It will pass, and positive growth, investment, and job creation will resume. Very low rates of inflation, falling interest rates, a more realistically valued dollar, and a United States recovery will ensure that this happens.

No one seems to argue that it is going to happen. It is part of the cyclical nature of our economic system. The question is, do those that have all this information also have the ability to give us some prognosis as to how long it will last? Everyone seems very silent on that issue. What is the prognosis for the jobs, for example, to which the Leader of the Government referred?

The prediction in the February budget was for 128,000 more jobs. Unless there is a big surge, as has been pointed out, the Minister will need to generate almost 100,000 new jobs a month between now and December of this year simply to realize his modest budget projection for employment growth of 1.1 per cent.

I know about all of these indications that we are we are well positioned. The leader might just say no, but I am asking the question: will he ask his colleague the Minister of Finance to give us a little more precision in his estimate of how long this recession will last?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would be glad to do that, but in the meantime I think I can help the Leader of the Opposition by pointing out to him—

Senator Frith: In the meantime? I happen to have my music here and we will try not to laugh when you sit down at the end.

Senator Murray: I hope the honourable senator will not laugh at the fact that employment in manufacturing, which was hard hit, rose by 34,000 in February. I should hope that, if the honourable senator laughed, he would be laughing with satisfaction and joy at finding that manufacturing shipments rose 1.1 per cent. There were 34,000 jobs in manufacturing.

Senator Frith: Since when?

Senator Murray: Last month.

Senator Frith: You need 100,000 jobs a month, but that is a start.

Senator Murray: I am glad the honourable senator agrees with that and rejoices in it.

Senator Frith: I am a little depressed about the 66,000, though.

Senator Murray: Let me try to assist the honourable senator rise from his depression. Manufacturing shipments rose 1.1 per cent in February; new orders were up more than 2 per cent; sales of existing homes increased 9.2 per cent in March and 23.4 per cent overall in the first quarter; the volume of exports in January and February, which an honourable senator last night said had been declining, was 2.3 per cent above its level in the fourth quarter of 1991; new motor vehicle sales rose 2.6 per cent in April; housing starts rose 7.6 per cent in April; and finally—and I think this addresses itself quite directly to the question the honourable senator asked as to how fast the pace of recovery will be—the index of business confidence rose 16.1 per cent in the first quarter.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Isn't that great!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I make nothing but positive comments about the leader's interest in raising Canadians' expectations. He has all of these figures. I am sure all of them can be put together. They fall short of previous estimates, but they at least are a try. He can take all of these figures and he and the Minister of Finance can discuss them and put them together and get back to the question, which is: Taking everything into account, what is the prognosis for how long this recession will last?

Senator Olson: Tell us about the fisheries, agriculture, energy, and things like that.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

PROPOSED WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM EUROPE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I desire to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate pertaining to the government's decision to withdraw Canadian troops from Europe.

I should like to focus on remarks by the honourable member for Scarborough East, who is reported to have said last Sunday:

> "Canada's decision to remove its troops from Europe is a mistake," says the Tory MP who'll head Ottawa's delegation at a NATO conference next week in Banff.

The article goes on to state:

> "I completely disagree with announcing military policy in a budget speech," said Hicks, referring to February's federal budget announcing the closing of NATO bases in Germany in two years.
>
> "I was really shocked and disappointed. I'm disappointed Canada had to be the first country to pull their troops out of Europe."
>
> "If we let NATO erode there won't be that stability."
>
> Hicks, MP for Scarborough East, said he's tired of defending Canada's commitment to NATO, adding the last NAS conference in Canada—in Quebec City in 1987—was held while Ottawa was cutting its forces in Norway.

The article further states:

> "This time we're withdrawing from Europe altogether," he said.

I would point out to the government leader that this is not an ordinary member of the House of Commons who has made this stinging indictment of his government's policy. He is president of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association, vice president of the NATO North Atlantic Assembly, and he is leading the Canadian delegation this week to the North Atlantic Assembly spring session in Banff, Alberta.

In light of Mr. Hick's indictment—and I shall be going to the conference as well—I wonder if we might be able to report to the delegates that the government will reconsider that decision with respect to the withdrawal of military forces in Europe?

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators.

Senator Hastings: Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate would give the four delegates from the Senate who will be attending that conference a list of excuses. Mr. Hicks says, ". . . I'll carry around a paper in my pocket with all the excuses." If Mr. Hicks has all the excuses, perhaps the Leader of the Government would provide a list of those excuses to the senators who will be attending that conference, in order that we can somehow explain this humiliating position Canada is in?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if my friend finds it too embarrassing to go to Banff, then I invite him to stay in Ottawa. There are no excuses.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Hicks says there are.

Senator Murray: Our position is well understood by our friends and allies in Europe. The fact is that we remain committed to the security of Europe. We are presently involved in peacekeeping efforts in various parts of Europe, as the honourable senator knows. We will continue to participate in NATO's integrated command, including maintaining maritime forces in NATO's composite force, the ACE mobile force and the airborne early warning force. The honourable senator is also aware—and this is something he can put in his pocket for his trip to Banff—that a Canadian brigade and two CF-18 squadrons will remain dedicated for contingency purposes. Of course, Canada will also continue to contribute to the NATO infrastructure.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

IMPENDING VISIT OF PRESIDENT BORIS YELTSIN TO UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF VISIT TO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate could tell us whether the Government of Canada has invited President Yeltsin of Russia to visit Canada, either before or after his trip to the United States?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it seems to me that President Yeltsin was here a short time ago in the course of a visit to North America. I am not aware that another visit by the president is planned for the near future, but I shall make inquiries.

Senator Bonnell: The part of the world that we once knew as the Soviet Union, or the U.S.S.R., is now the Republic of Russia. As I understand it, Mr. Yeltsin will be visiting the United states in mid-June. This might be a really good opportunity to have him visit Canada in order that Canadian businessmen can, perhaps, find out what opportunities are available to them in the Ukraine, such as joint ventures and other types of investments. In that way, we might be able to help that country and help the businessmen of this country at the same time. If we could do that for Russia, there might then be an opportunity for Canadian investment.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, President Yeltsin was here as President of Russia, as I say, not too long ago. With regard to exploring trade opportunities, as usual we are some distance ahead of the honourable senator. This matter was the subject of trade opportunities in Ukraine, and has been the subject of high level missions—separate missions as I recall — led by both the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mrs. McDougall, and by the Minister for International Trade, Mr. Wilson.

Senator Bonnell: It is nice to hear that you are way ahead of me for a change. Perhaps you would then tell the rest of the honourable senators about those great trade deals you are arranging for businessmen in Ukraine through the Minister of International Trade. Tell us some of those great things you are doing. Nobody over there seems to know about them.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am sorry if the honourable senator feels he is being kept in the dark. It is not our intention to do so. We like to provide as much enlightenment as we can for the honourable senator. I will undertake to obtain a report on the activities of the—

Senator Bonnell: Tell us some of the great things!

Senator Murray: I will undertake to obtain a report on the activities of the Canadian government and, in particular, the activities of the Ministry of International Trade in promoting economic relations between Canada and Ukraine.

NOVA SCOTIA

PICTOU COUNTY—DISASTER AT WESTRAY COAL MINE—NEED FOR INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate could tell me whether or not the Government of Canada is proposing to hold an investigation into the tragic mine accident in Plymouth, Nova Scotia. I understand that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources originally recommended that that mine not be opened. It was a dangerous mine. I understand that in spite of that recommendation, phone calls came from very high levels in Nova Scotia to top levels in this part of the country, asking for assistance. Apparently for political reasons rather than reasons involving the safety of miners, the powers that be opened that mine. Now we have lost at least 15 miners. Will there be a federal investigation into the dangers of operating this mine, and into what really happened?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret to say that my honourable friend is misinformed as to any recommendation from any federal department or agent of the kind that he has referred to. Insofar as an investigation of the tragedy is concerned, the honourable senator will be aware that the regulation of coal mines is within provincial jurisdiction. He may also be aware that Premier Cameron has already announced that an independent inquiry into the tragedy will be held.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I am misinformed again.

Senator Doody: As usual.

Senator Bonnell: Perhaps it is usual; I cannot seem to get the right answers. According to the press, the minister, Mr. Epp, admits that the federal government knew of the high risk of explosions in this area before providing financial aid to the company in Nova Scotia that was working towards opening this mine. Now 26 men have been buried deep underground. If the minister admits that the federal government had a hand in this scheme, why will the Leader of the Government in the Senate not admit it?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator is referring to a newspaper article, for which I am not responsible, concerning a tragedy that has taken place in a coal mine in Nova Scotia. What I think I can say and what anybody who knows anything about the situation there can say is that it would be elucidating the obvious to point to the long history of misfortunes and fatalities in the coal fields of Pictou County or, for that matter, Cape Breton or the Springhill area, or almost anywhere else coal is mined in this country.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, now I find out that the minister knew of the dangers, and Minister Epp has said he knew of the dangers, yet $88 million in taxpayers' money was spent to open a coal mine that was considered dangerous, in an area with a high gas content and many faults in the earth, with a consequent history of many previous deaths. I also find out that there were many phone calls made from Nova Scotia to the Prime Minister. Because, apparently, an election was coming up in different places, we end up losing 26 Canadian miners. What did we gain?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I invite the honourable senator to read the statements he has made and the questions he has asked.

Senator Bonnell: But you knew, you said.

Senator Murray: His first assertion was that there had been a recommendation from the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that the mine not proceed. That assertion is false.

● (1440)

The second assertion was that there was knowledge on the part of federal ministers or officials of dangers and hazards in the area. I am telling the honourable senator that there is knowledge of those hazards on the part of anybody who knows anything about it and takes an interest in the matter. It is an extremely hazardous occupation. More than 200 people, if I recall the figure correctly, have been killed in the Pictou County coal fields in the last several hundred years.

The honourable senator will be aware that back in the 1950s there were two tragic occurrences in the mines at Springhill. Nevertheless, since that time there has been coal mining activity in the Springhill area. There are various causes for accidents in the coal mines. Some of them relate to gas; some of them relate to falls of stone and coal; some of them take place because of runaway coal cars. There are many reasons why the occupation is as hazardous as it is.

In the present case, the Government of Canada, as a matter of economic and regional development, provided loan guarantees for the development of that particular coal mine. We finance other coal mines. We pay 100 per cent of the cost of the coal mines in Cape Breton because it is a federal crown corporation.

The Pictou County coal mines are regulated by the Province of Nova Scotia under what used to be—perhaps still is —the Coal Mines Regulations Act which was, when I knew something about it, and probably still is, quite a strict statute. It provides for frequent inspection of the mines by government officials and imposes responsibilities on the people who manage and own the mines and on those who work there.

Whenever there is a fatality in the coal mines, there is a public inquiry under Nova Scotia law. Even when there is one fatality there is a public inquiry. In this case the Premier has indicated there will be an independent inquiry into the causes of the tragedy.

I do not think that it is appropriate for me or, for that matter, for the honourable senator, if I may say so, to say more than that. I think we can await the public inquiry into this matter. The involvement of the Government of Canada was, as it is in many other cases and has been in the case of coal mines in the past, one of economic and regional development.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, that was a very nice speech. I realize that my good friend understands the coal mining industry. He comes from that area of the country. I will not ask him what he told the cabinet when the decision was made to invest $88 million. However, I hope that, with his knowledge, he advised the cabinet about the dangers of coal mining and of that area in particular because of the volume of methane gas in the Plymouth mines. I take it for granted that he recommended against it.

Let me quote from another article which states:

> A report from the Cape Breton Development Corp.—a federal crown corporation that owned competing coal mines—also warned that Westray would be developed in a dangerous area with a "complicated geological structure with numerous faults.

A federal government crown agency made that recommendation. In spite of that, the Government of Canada put $88 million in there, and the end result is that 25 lives have likely been lost in the province of Nova Scotia. Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate think that is all right?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have already explained the context in which the Government of Canada is involved in these decisions. Of course I support it as a matter of economic and regional development.

[Senator Murray.]

So far as the statements attributed to the Cape Breton Development Corporation are concerned, I simply repeat what I said: it is elucidating the obvious to say that there are hazards and quite a record of fatalities in the Pictou County coal fields. I could have said, at the time the new mines were opened in Cape Breton, that there was a history of accidents or fatalities.

Senator Thériault: No, no.

Senator Murray: Yes, I could.

Senator Thériault: Not in the same way.

Senator Murray: I think I could, honourable senators.

Senator Thériault: You had better look at it again.

Senator Murray: I do not have to look at it again. I know as much about it as the honourable senator does.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I understand that the Leader of the Government in the Senate knows the coal mining industry. I understand that he knows Cape Breton. I understand that he knows Nova Scotia. I understand that he knows politics. Does he think that that mine in Plymouth was just an ordinary hazard, or does he think there was an extra danger in that particular mine because of the previous falls and the high level of methane gas?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what I do know is that the development of any coal mine in that province is done in conformity with the laws and regulations of the province of Nova Scotia, which, in my recollection and experience, are extremely strict.

There is a good body of scientific and technical knowledge, hard-won over a period of a century or more, about the conditions in the coal fields of Nova Scotia. Those conditions are taken fully into account by the government of Nova Scotia in developing and enforcing its standards and its regulations.

As I say, these are matters for which the government of Nova Scotia is responsible and in respect of which the Premier of Nova Scotia has already announced that his government will conduct an independent inquiry.

Senator Bonnell: I understand that Nova Scotia is responsible for certain regulations, but the Leader of the Government in the Senate is putting the whole blame on Premier Cameron, who is the member of the legislature from Pictou County, because he is the one who made the request to go ahead with the mine in order to get jobs in the area. Apparently this was for political reasons, because it certainly was not for the safety of the people. Even Nova Scotia Light and Power was asked to support the decision.

Senator MacDonald: Wait for the inquiry. Shame, shame!

Senator Bonnell: You know about Cape Breton and were a great supporter of the government, why did you not recommend—

Senator MacDonald: These are shameful questions. There will be an inquiry.

Senator Bonnell: They are not shameful questions. There is no inquiry yet. I am asking these questions now because good Canadian citizens, hard-working men, have lost their lives. There is nothing wrong with finding out whether the federal government is responsible or whether Premier Cameron is responsible for the whole thing.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have explained what the situation is. The responsibility for the coal mines of Nova Scotia is under the jurisdiction of the province of Nova Scotia. My recollection is that the government of Nova Scotia, the legislature of Nova Scotia, has always been extremely careful about safety standards in those mines and in the enforcement of those safety standards.

The Government of Canada was involved, as a matter of economic and regional development, in the development of that mine. That mine could not have been developed, it could never have opened, unless it met the standards of the province of Nova Scotia in those respects.

● (1450)

As I said, as a matter of economic and regional development, we have financed other mines elsewhere. Indeed, we operate mines in Cape Breton through the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Notwithstanding all the precautions that have been taken by ourselves, by the Crown corporation, by the federal Department of Labour whose Inspection Division enforces safety in the coal mines of Cape Breton now because they are under federal jurisdiction, it is sad to say, as Senator MacEachen pointed out last night, there have been fatalities, tragedies—indeed multiple fatalities in the coal mines of Cape Breton.

I would hope that the honourable senator, rather than trying to score a few cheap political points, might wait until the appropriate authorities have conducted their investigation into this matter.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I do not like the attitude taken by the Leader of the Government. Now he is accusing me of having ulterior motives. I do not intend to run for election if we eventually have an elected Senate. Therefore I do not have the ulterior motive of trying to win votes.

Since all of these safety inspections by the federal government were taking place, I want to know when the federal health inspector last inspected that mine.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, federal health inspectors do not inspect coal mines.

Senator Bonnell: I thought you just finished telling me how federal regulations and health and safety and all this type of thing were in place. If there are regulations but nobody ever checks to see if they are being upheld, then what good is that? Do you mean that that mine has not been inspected?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Pictou County coal fields are within the jurisdiction of the province of Nova Scotia. They are regulated by what used to be called—and perhaps still is—the Coal Mines Regulation Act. There is a body of inspectors who are responsible for that.

In respect to the Cape Breton coal fields, these are the property of the government of Canada through the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Being under federal jurisdiction, they are inspected and regulated by the Inspections Division of the federal Department of Labour.

The point I was trying to make is that, notwithstanding all our best efforts and all the strict regulations and the careful inspection that takes place, there have been tragedies and multiple fatalities in our other federal coal mines in Cape Breton within the past few years.

Senator Bonnell: I am not arguing—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must advise that the time for Question Period is now over. There may be time for one supplementary, if we have agreement.

Senator Bonnell: If they have no more feeling for those people who lost their lives and their families than that, let it be over.

[Translation]

DELAYED ANSWERED TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would wish to table the response to a question raised in the Senate on May 5, 1992, by the Honourable Senator Pierre De Bané regarding the breakdown, by province, of National Defence expenditures.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEPARTMENTAL EXPENDITURES—REQUEST FOR BREAKDOWN BY PROVINCE

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pierre De Bané on May 5, 1992)

SUMMARY FACT SHEET
DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE
Estimated Expenditures by Province/Fiscal Year 1990-1991
(Ranked by Total Spending)

	% of Pop.	Personnel $M	O&M $M	Capital $M	Grants & Contributions
Ontario	36.6	1,821	1,534	723	171
Québec	25.4	773	538	737	107
N.S.	3.4	793	237	67	14
B.C.	11.7	545	198	123	52
N.B.	2.7	233	68	461	12
Alta.	9.3	476	185	104	40
Manitoba	4.1	254	223	41	18
Nfld.	2.2	120	39	12	9
Sask.	3.8	79	24	5	16
P.E.I.	0.5	39	7	1	2
Yukon/NWT	0.3	16	4	8	1
Total in Canada	100.0	5,147	3,058	2,280	442
Plus:
Outside Canada	n/a	575	465	482	172
Total DND Spending		5,722	3,523	2,763	614

	Revenue $M	Total Spending $M	% of Total	% Cda only	DND % Prov GDP	per capita TOTAL DND $
Ontario	(151)	4,097	33.4	38.7	1.5	420
Québec	(18)	2,136	17.4	20.2	1.4	316
N.S.	(23)	1,089	8.9	10.3	6.4	1,217
B.C.	(20)	898	7.3	8.5	1.1	287
N.B.	(14)	760	6.2	7.2	5.8	1,050
Alberta	(53)	751	6.1	7.1	1.1	304
Manitoba	(21)	514	4.2	4.9	2.1	471
Nfld.	(31)	149	1.2	1.4	1.7	260
Saskatch.	(3)	121	1.0	1.1	0.6	121
P.E.I.	(2)	4	0.4	0.4	2.3	356
Yukon & NWT	(1)	28	0.2	0.3	0.1	353
Total in Canada	(338)	10,589	86.4	100.0	1.6	398
Plus:
Outside Canada	(23)	1,672	13.6
Total DND Spending	(361)	12,260	100.0

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

[English]

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelleher, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Ross, for the second reading of Bill C-53, An Act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps we might have that order stand? We will be prepared to proceed with it tomorrow.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): We will deal with it this week.

Order Stands.

THE BUDGET

STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the Budget presented by the Honourable Don Mazankowski, Minister of Finance, on Tuesday, February 25, 1992.—(Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I note that Senator Macquarrie wished to speak on this item this afternoon. It may be that we have gone through the other orders so quickly he had not been alerted. Perhaps we could proceed, and come back to this order when he returns.

Order stands.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (Budgets—National Defence study), presented in the Senate on 7th May, 1992.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As far as I know, this matter is ready to go forward. It was brought before the Internal Economy committee and agreed to, and we have no desire to hold it up.

On motion of Senator Balfour, report adopted.

[Translation]

PRIVATE BILLS

ROYAL SOCIETY OF CANADA—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur Tremblay moved the third reading of Bill S-7, to amend an Act to incorporate the Royal Society of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES

FOREIGN OVERFISHING—DEPLETION OF NORTHERN COD STOCKS—DEBAT CONCLUDED

On the Order: Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall, calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries: The Marketing of Fish in Canada "East Coast Fisheries", dated December 1989; and specifically as it relates to the recommendations applicable to the present state of the fish stocks due to foreign overfishing.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I would like to comment very briefly on a matter of great concern to fishermen and plant workers in the Atlantic Provinces.

[English]

I want to say that for a long time I have been looking at the end result of the effort that was made with respect to offshore fishing. Having travelled extensively in the Atlantic provinces during the last few years, especially along the coast of Newfoundland, listening to the fishermen, I have become quite convinced that, in fact, Canadians are largely responsible for the overfishing that has occurred offshore in the last 20 years or so.

● (1500)

When I was a member of the government in the New Brunswick legislature, a decision was taken on the recommendation of scientists and biologists to bring about seine fishing of herring in the Gulf. We were told by the people we had at our disposal in the provincial government in New Brunswick that there was such an abundance of herring in the Gulf that if we did not do something about it they would destroy themselves. The decision was made over my objections, because I was getting information from inshore fishermen in the business, which I had been involved in before, that if this was done the herring fishery in the inshore would disappear.

Nonetheless, the advice of the scientists and the biologists prevailed. The government of which I was a part made a decision to bring from the west coast a number of seiners to seine herring in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It helped some companies to build fishmeal plants. As the fishermen that I had worked with all my life warned me, in five years the herring in the Gulf was cleaned out.

When the decision was made in 1976-77 to extend the control of our fishery to the 200-mile limit, corporations and the Liberal government of the day in Ottawa thought that there was an almost endless supply of fish. To the great consternation of the inshore and mid-shore fisheries, large companies started buying and building boats. There was no stopping them.

It is my belief that, because of the technology at our disposal today, if nothing is done by Canada and other countries, we will fish out what is left of the biomass of fish in the ocean. I believe that the technology to go out to catch the last fish on the bottom of the ocean is now available to us. After having travelled with my good friend Senator Marshall, the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, and my other colleagues, I am convinced that we have reached a stage at which the only thing that will salvage the fisheries will be to place a moratorium on fishing for four or five years. I know that governments do not want to face this issue, but I am concerned, and I am not the only one.

We have all heard, and we will hear more, about the plight of the northern cod fishery, but I want to speak particularly of the Gulf. I am not sure when the decision was made after the extension to the 200-mile limit to let the big boats fish the Gulf, but in the 1973-74 era, when there was an energy crisis and we thought we would run out of gasoline, many fishermen told me that that would be the best thing that could happen. It would be much cheaper and would use far less fuel if the fish were allowed to swim ashore, as opposed to having the fishermen expending the energy to go out to get them in the middle of the ocean. If we continue to allow the larger boats to fish in the entrance to the Gulf, the inshore fishing communities in my province, and some in Nova Scotia and Quebec, will disappear completely.

Because of the current price of fish, there is now a great potential for fishermen's families, who, for hundreds of years, merely survived by fishing and selling their product for next to nothing, as I used to call it. Only 20 years ago fish was considered a cheap food for poor people. The reverse is now true. Good fish commands a good price, and it is good food for people who can afford to buy it. It is a healthy food. For that reason the fishing communities, which suffered for so many years from low prices for quality products, now have a great economic potential they never had before. If the fish stocks were allowed time to rebuild, and those fishermen went out and caught the fish on a daily basis, that would would be better than having big trawlers hauling everything into their boats, freezing and thawing it out a month after to cut it up. If we were getting fresh fish as we used to, we would have a better quality of life in our communities. They would gain a new lease on life.

The people who used to make their living working in fish plants could probably make a decent living, without having to work 12 months a year. However, I do not think that will ever happen. It was tried. The government allowed the big companies to build a few major plants along the shore and to truck in their fish from hundreds of miles away. The philosophy was that with the capital required to build those plants they would have to operate 12 months a year, and thus only a few plants would be needed. This has not been the case.

In the last 15 or 20 years major plants were built in different places. As a matter of fact, because of decisions made after the Kirby report came down, a number of smaller plants closed down and big plants were built. Some of them only survived for two or three years. If you go around those places now you will see that half of them have closed. They cannot operate because they do not have enough fish. The capital investment in those plants was too large. That was not the route we should have taken.

[Senator Thériault.]

When I was a member of the New Brunswick government, we tried to close up some rural areas because we had come to the conclusion that certain outlying areas were not economically feasible and it would be better to move people into urban areas. We tried that in New Brunswick to a degree, but it was a complete failure. It was also tried in Newfoundland. Now we find that 20 years later the people are returning to these communities.

The national government must make up its mind concerning the major decisions that have to be made in the fisheries on the east coast. I cannot speak for the west coast, but there are major decisions that must be made, which will involve spending some money.

Those of us in this house and the other who come from the Atlantic area, regardless of party, have to get together and impress upon the national government that major expenditures have to be made. Those expenditures will be an investment.

This is not a reproach to governments, but they have spent billions of dollars helping out grain farmers in the last few years because their markets disappeared. The government had to do that. Grain may be a bigger national industry than fish, but it is not any more important to the prairie provinces than fishing is on the east coast of Canada.

Major, hard-nosed decisions will have to be made if we are to salvage a way of life which, although it has been tough for fishermen in the past 200 years, has the potential of providing a decent living for a large number of people in the future with no major investment apart from that which governments will have to make when they make a hard-nosed decision. I hope to see the day when political differences will be put aside in the Atlantic provinces and those of us who are concerned can get together and recommend to government the decisions which must be made, and that those decisions will be made.

We cannot, for very much longer, allow more big boats. There are major capital investments made in building and buying boats. This is being pushed by three or four major corporations and a major union. One is as bad as the other, as far as I am concerned. The fishermen and people living in the coastal communities are paying the price.

I commend my colleague Senator Rossiter, who has just been appointed chairman of the Fisheries committee. I urge the Senate to provide that committee with the required funds and resources to work at this again and, regardless of politics, to come up with some suggestions in order that, before too long, decisions involving the east coast fishery can be made.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, perhaps I might pose a question to Senator Thériault. He will recall that in 1987 the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries was warned very intensely and graphically by the president of the Fisheries Council of Canada, Ron Bulmer. He showed us, with pictures, numbers and details, the culprits of overfishing. We pointed out the dangers very graphically in our report. I will never forget his words. He said that this serious problem cannot be left to the Minister of Fisheries alone; that it has to be up to the Prime Minister of Canada and the Minister of External Affairs to deal with it right now. Thirteen months later we had a response from the Minister of Fisheries of the day.

Senator Thériault said that the two sides have to get together, regardless of political stripe. He said that this is a national and co-ordinated issue. Would he like to comment on why, five years after our report, the premiers, the Minister of Fisheries and members of Parliament are screaming about this issue as though it only happened today?

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I intended to mention that but I did not want to take too much of the time of this house. I recall, as I am sure my colleagues will, the dedication of Senator Marshall in fulfilling his duties as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries. While I sometimes conclude in my own mind that perhaps the Senate should be abolished, I believe that over the years Senate committees have done some great work and made some great recommendations, both when the Liberals were in power and since the Conservatives have been in power. I believe that governments have, generally speaking, ignored those recommendations. In my humble opinion there is only one reason for that. It is because we are not elected. When I came to this place, I believed that I may be of some more use to the people of my province and my country. Many times since then, I have wondered.

You are so right, Senator Marshall. In the report to which you referred we said that the time was past when we could leave the diplomatic problem of overfishing to the Minister of Fisheries of the day. It had to be a government responsibility, dealt with by the government, from the Prime Minister on down.

However, I would not feel too bad, Senator Marshall, that those recommendations were ignored. As I say, from my recollection, that has been the history of this place. It is too bad. It is too bad because all the people I have known here have done serious work. More often than not, in spite of some verbal distractions in the Senate, when it comes to work on committees we work together regardless of party, but we are not credible. I hope that soon we will have an elected Senate with the same kind of dedication as is now present. Then governments will take notice.

I repeat, however, that Canada has not shown a good example. We are not listened to very carefully by the offshore countries because we are not managing our offshore fisheries well ourselves. We are overdoing it. We have to start cleaning our own house while keeping the pressure on the others.

This week in Dartmouth there was a meeting of the signatories to the NAFO alliance. I would have loved to have been there. Some of the members of our Fisheries committee should have been there to listen, to make some suggestions, and to lobby. Another fault with this place is that that was not possible because the committee has not yet been set up and there is no budget for it. It is time that when governments decide that there is important work to be done, moneys are provided for members of the Senate and its committees to do their job.

I do not want to talk politics, but we all know that over the years governments have squandered millions of dollars for causes that are not nearly as important as this. I am not being political. That is true of all governments. But when a matter concerns only the senators and involves Internal Economy, they are told by somebody else, "You must be careful."

• (1520)

Honourable senators, I hope that in the few years remaining until the Senate is reformed we can find the resources to do the job that we should be doing on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other Senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

SPENDING CONTROL BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Comeau, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson, for the second reading of Bill C-56, An Act respecting the control of government expenditures.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I wish to conclude my remarks on this bill today so that there will be no delay in getting the bill to committee.

The bill itself, as honourable senators are aware, is intended to impose a spending limit on certain government expenditures—not all government expenditures—over a five-year period. There are important exceptions in the bill. For example, the unemployment insurance account is not subject to spending restraint. Draws upon the treasury to finance certain farm programs, income stabilization, and crop insurance are not subject to any restraint. Of course, what is most significant is that there is no spending limit or restraint placed upon the service charges of the debt. No explanation has been given—certainly not by Senator Comeau or the minister in the House of Commons —as to why this feature has not been subject to any control. There may be a good explanation, but I do not intend to provide it for the minister or for the senator.

What is interesting is that the portion of the annual expenditures which the government argues is the source of all its difficulty and which renders it incapable of controlling the deficit is not subject to the restraints of this bill.

To put it another way, yesterday we heard Senator Comeau tell us how the government now has an operating surplus; that is, a surplus of revenue after all program expenditures have been paid for. He expressed considerable satisfaction with that progress. However, one might argue that, having made such important progress—in their opinion—on program expenditures, why do they now bring forward a bill to confirm legislatively what they are already doing? In taking that action, why have they excluded debt service charges? Those are the questions.

My own view is that the bill is mainly symbolic. The bill is intended to convey to the world, to the business community, to the population and to investors that the government is serious about restraining spending. It is symbolic. It is unnecessary, because the government already has all the power it needs to control expenditures. It does not need to come to Parliament and say, "We need a law."

Having said that, I ask you to bear in mind that all that is required to break through these spending limits is a simple amendment. In fact the minister, in his explanations in the House of Commons, said that, if the minister wanted to break through these spending limits in the budget speech, he would merely have to announce an amendment. He might tuck the amendment away in one of the budget bills or in any particular bill. It is not what one might call a "formidable restraint". If there had been a constitutional amendment, as has been argued in various places, then one might say that is a real restraint on the government.

I was interested in finding out that the House of Commons Finance Committee went to Washington in the course of its study of the government's discussion paper. It reported back the reaction it got in Washington about this proposal to enact spending restraints in a parliamentary democracy. I want to quote from that committee report:

> Many of the Americans contacted by the committee wondered why it is necessary to impose budgetary controls in a parliamentary system of government. After all, if a government is powerful enough to enact such controls, it should be able to control its own fiscal policy and any future government would not be bound by such controls since the enabling legislation could easily be amended. Such commentators noted that under a congressional system it was opposing and immovable congressional interests which led to budgetary controls in the first place; in particular, it was the conflict between the Congress and the administration which caused the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act and its successor, the Budget Enforcement Act, to be passed.

That is pretty telling.

The report goes on to say at paragraph 35:

> Budget control legislation is a distinctly American approach to problems arising in a quite unique legislative environment.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Those are rather interesting comments. That is all I want to say about the bill itself.

The bill, in its introduction in the House of Commons and in the Senate, has been used as the occasion to make comments on the general fiscal situation. I regret that I must return to that subject once more and beg the indulgence of my colleagues and assure them that I will be as brief as possible.

I want to cover a number of points. The first is the deficit. What deficit existed when this present government came into office? If you ask how the government did in reducing the deficit as it said it would do, then you must ask what the deficit was. It has now become standard practice for government spokesmen to use the figure of $38.5 billion. That practice was followed yesterday by Senator Comeau when he said:

> The federal deficit increased from $2.2 billion in 1974-75 to a peak of $38.5 billion in 1984-85.

Everywhere you go, in every document, every speech, the deficit inherited was $38.5 billion, and of course, that is untrue.

I want to go back to the first statement made by the Minister of Finance on November 8, 1984. In fact, I took his economic statement home last night and I read it this morning before I came to the office, and I really enjoyed it. No Minister of Finance himself should ever re-read his economic statements or his budget projections because they can only be a source of amusement to persons other than the Minister of Finance. I think if one were a bit ready to be amused, one would be amused at how sadly out of sync. His comment was with what is being said today.

Let's go to the deficit. You can read this for yourselves, honourable senators, as reported at pages 97 to 98 of House of Commons Debates. On November 8, 1984, Mr. Wilson said:

> With this set of projections and no policy changes, the deficit for this fiscal year —

— which would be 1984-85 —

> — would be $34.5 billion, almost $5 billion higher than projected last February by the previous government. That is bad enough but that is not the worst of it. Current projections show the deficit increasing next year to more than $37 billion and remaining between $34 and $38 billion in every year for the balance of this decade. This is in marked contrast to previous projection that showed the deficit declining over that period.
>
> Next year's deficit, at $37.1 billion, would be more than $9 billion higher than projected last February. And this increase would have been even greater if the previous government had not budgeted for a decline in support for direct job creation and training from $2.2 billion this year to only $1.2 billion next year. The increase in the deficit this year and next and its failure to come down in this decade, even with continuing growth, are major reasons for concern.

So he has made his summation, and he concludes it:

> That is what we inherited. Not only is the situation serious today. If we do not take action it will be even more serious in 1990.

Later in his speech, he returned again to the deficit of $34.5 billion for the year 1984-85. You will find that reported at page 98, of House of Commons Hansard, November 8, 1984.

Senator Frith: The sponsor of the bill seems fascinated by your comments, senator.

Senator MacEachen: These were not observations made by the Minister of Finance because he told us that, in an effort to "reclaim the future", as he put it, for all Canadians, the government has been taking stock in these past two months.

> I want to thank my colleagues for their help in charting our course during this challenging first stage of our mandate. Tonight I will share with Canadians the results of our intensive period of activity so that together we can plan our direction for the next four years.
>
> There has been no holiday from decision-making for this government during this period . . ."

All of which I quote to indicate that these comments were not casually made but were the result of "stock taking" by the government, and "decision-making" and "intensive activity" in an effort to reclaim the future for all Canadians.

In the course of that analysis, what we inherited, he said, with respect to the budget for 1984-85 is $34.5 billion. I would just drop another, as it were, throw-away line to say that in order to reach that number of $34.5 billion, he altered the accounting system in order to increase it, by his own admission, by $400 to $800 million.

So when I say there is not much difference now between the deficit we had in 1991-92 of $31.4 billion, the actual, and what prevailed in 1984-85, maybe citizens would say, why are you quibbling over $4 or $5 billion? It is all politics. But surely it is worthwhile to determine what the standard of judgment is. Is it $38.5 billion, or is it 34 or less? That is what I am arguing on the strength of the minister's assertion in November 1984.

With respect to the operating surplus, honourable senators, there is no mention that the operating surplus or the operating deficit will be a test or an objective for the minister. The test is a reduction in the deficit. However, in recent years, the operating balance has emerged as evidence of the government's successful fiscal management. I have no difficulty in acknowledging that the operating balance has improved. Obviously it has, and whatever can be made of it ought to be made of it. However, it is not a reduction in the deficit. I have dealt with that before.

I referred to a statement which I quoted from Mr. Taylor, the President of the Royal Bank of Canada when he talked about this question. It certainly rings home with me anyway. His quotation is as follows:

> The Government of Canada talks about an operating surplus, but what does that mean? It is like an individual saying he or she would have a positive cash flow if it were not for the mortgage interest. It is true, but it is irrelevant.

And why is it irrelevant? Because there must be added to the total expenditure plan, or the total expenditures for the year, the interest on the mortgage, on the public debt. The interest on the public debt is an expenditure. We could say that if we did not have to pay equalization payments or if we did not have to pay medicare or health insurance payments, then we would have an even more positive operating balance.

But to the extent that the operating balance is used by the government, it is a diversion. In my view at least, it is a diversion to claim credit for what is an improvement but to obscure the fact that virtually no progress has been made in the reduction of the overall fiscal deficit.

One final point: There is no doubt about it that, from the very beginning, the new government was determined to reduce government expenditures. Mr. Wilson gave voice to that aspiration in his economic statement of November 1984. He comes back to it time and time again. He not only comes back to it, but he denounces, he flays the former Liberal government for their profligate ways, and he assures everybody that he will do better. In fact, he says quite directly that he can and will do better. He makes his commitment about expenditures in that economic statement.

He talked about total expenditures—not program expenditures. Total annual expenditures was his target, and he said:

● (1540)

> We believe in a planned approach to expenditure reduction which allows sufficient time for those affected to adjust. The state of the economy will also be an important factor in how fast we move.
>
> But move we must. Our goal is to reduce the projected level of annual expenditure by 1990 by $10 to $15 billion, inclusive of the measures I am announcing tonight.

On November 8, 1984, he targeted as an objective the reduction by $10 to $15 billion in the projected annual expenditures for 1990. That was six years away. He was a brave man to commit himself to that. I noticed that subsequently—that is, as he grew into the job —he rarely gave projections for two or three years ahead, let alone six or seven years. In 1984 he said that "We intend to reduce the projected level of annual expenditures by 1990 by $10 to $15 billion."

When I read this I said, "Well, did he achieve it?" I did not know when I read that this morning, but I went to the document that he released with his economic statement. Sure enough, he projected total expenditures for 1990-91 of $137.9 billion. He had already stated that that would be reduced in 1990-91 by $10 to $15 billion. Well, that was his test.

What was the result? The actual total annual expenditures in that year were $149.971 billion. Therefore, instead of a decrease of $10 or $15 billion, there was an increase of $12 billion. That is applying the test of the minister himself.

All I ask of Senator Comeau and others is that in commenting upon the fiscal situation they take a broader cut or, as they say, a broader swath and do not pick out certain favourable elements and overlook the broad swath. The broad swath is the fiscal deficit on the fiscal management side; and the broad swath on the expenditure side is not program expenditures but annual expenditures. I invite the government to follow the tests which the Minister of Finance provided for himself in those euphoric days of November 4, 1984.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I do not intend to keep you long discussing Bill C-56 because it is a bill that does not ask for any authority that the government does not already have.

You ask yourself: Why is it here? You can imagine all kinds of reasons, mostly those having to do with illusions and that sort of thing, but that is all it is here for. However, there is a more serious aspect to this bill. For one thing, it is an attempt to deceive people into believing that this bill will have any effect on government policy at all. I will not go over the ground that Senator MacEachen has shown clearly with respect to some aspects of it, but one thing is pretty clear: You cannot take an action that commits future Parliaments. If future Parliaments want to set down a budget of a certain amount, they have the right to do so. As has already been pointed out, one sentence in any future budget setting all this aside is possible.

What is Bill C-56 for, then? It is an attempt to deceive the Canadian people into believing that this government will do what they have failed completely to do until now, namely, have the political courage to reduce their expenditures. They have tried all kinds of other deceptions such as breaking the budget into such things as program spending and debt service charges, and all that. It is a flagrant affront to the intelligence of Canadians to ask them to believe the kind of nonsense that is contained in this bill—

Senator Frith: But they do not. The Finance Minister's own polls say that Canadians are not buying it.

Senator Olson: No, they do not believe it. So why do they keep on doing it?

Senator Frith: What else can they do? They would have to admit that they are wrong, which they are congenitally incapable of doing.

Senator Olson: In some ways it is an act of desperation. They do not know what else to do but to keep on doing things like this, as well as what they did with Bill C-21—I did not speak on that one but that is another one of these illusions that the government is trying to create.

Quite frankly, this bill does not deserve anyone's serious attention or the attention of anyone who knows anything or has even a small amount of intelligence as to what the government's responsibility will be if they intend to govern the country. First, there are the exemptions listed on page 2. The "costs associated with the servicing or repayment of . . ." the national debt is exempt. Why did you do that? That is the biggest expense we have. I think it is $42 billion this year. Are you afraid to stand up to the people who have that interest coming? If you want to do something useful in debt reduction, that is where you should be doing it. But you can exempt that. You then exempt expenditures for unemployment insurance—and I understand that— and farm income protection, and all kinds of emergencies. They are all exempted from this.

Senator MacEachen: An election could be an emergency.

Senator Olson: As you explained a few moments ago, it is fairly easy for them to set it all aside by claiming that this is something that falls within that category.

We then go over to the next page.

Senator Comeau: What about our suggestions for changing the bill?

Senator Olson: If I were the Minister of Finance, if I were in government at all, we would have a complete program to deal with managing Canada's economy and what the government is supposed to do. I know that that is the standard answer that this minister and Senator Murray, and indeed Mr. Wilson when he was Minister of Finance, have always used: "Well, what would you do?" The Canadian people will get a chance soon to make that decision. It will not be me, because I will not go back into any government anyway. The fact is that when you are in government you are supposed to know how to manage the economy. To throw up your hands and say, "What would you do?" is almost pleading for some advice.

Prior to 1984 and 1988 you knew all the answers. You had a real program and you fooled a lot of people into voting for that program. I do not really think that governments like this Conservative Government are ever elected on a positive basis. The previous government was defeated; there is no doubt about that. Governments always defeat themselves. But after being in power for seven years, for you to come and give us a farce of a bill to try to limit expenditures, and, in the middle of trying to find out what it means, ask me the question: "What would you do?" is just about hitting the bottom of the barrel. I cannot believe that I heard such an irresponsible statement. It is an admission that the government does not know what to do.

The government thinks that expenditures should be limited and controlled. So you come along with Bill C-56 and try to fool the people into believing that you will really do it, and then you list a number of complete exemptions, even from Bill C-56—all the big expenditures, like debt service charges—and say, "What would you do?" I can tell you one thing I would do. I would start assuming my responsibilities to govern this country.

In my opinion, this is a complete cop-out on the part of this government. They have just about given up. They come along with all kinds of excuses as to why they cannot manage the country and the budget of the federal government of this country. It is disgraceful—and that is what Canadians have come to believe. They do not go around asking each other, "What would you do?"

Here is a government that is supposed to have the responsibility, and exercise the responsibility, and the judgment, intelligence and all of those characteristics that are needed to govern this country. But what is it doing? This is not a situation for copping out. If you want to cop out of governing this country then you should resign, hold an election and let the Canadian people pick someone who will not say, "Well, what would you do?"

Senator Comeau: Give us Mr. Chrétien's program first.

Senator Olson: What does that have to do with it? You always come along with questions like: "What would you do? What would the opposition do?" The opposition is not the government. Is the government completely bereft or absent of ways and means to govern this country? Apparently you are, because that is the standard reply: "What would you do?"

Senator Comeau: You will keep hearing it.

Senator Olson: I know we will keep hearing it. What is sad about all this is that I suspect that you will mount an advertising campaign or public relations photo-ops, which is the byword of this government, and persuade a few Canadians that there is some validity to this nonsense. I hope it is not enough to overcome what they have come to believe. Frankly, I do not believe you will succeed in fooling the people again, but I think you will spend a lot of taxpayers' money trying.

Anyway, on the next page in this definition of spending limits, you have outlined a regime of the limits for five years in advance. After you take out the exemptions in 1991-92 you can have a limit of $97 billion and in 1992-93 you can have a limit of $100.9 billion. It is all a farce. You already have the authority to do that. You do not need a bill. Why do you want to waste taxpayers' money asking for this when you do not need authority for any of the measures called for in this bill?

You might be able to hold this bill up and say, "This is what we have done for you." What a farce. What a sham. The Canadian people should have that drawn to their attention. That is the only reason I am making a few comments today. This kind of attempt to govern Canadians by deception and sham is really a terrible disservice to the integrity of the country, especially when we are going through a recession that has other ramifications.

As I said a few minutes ago, I would not keep you for long, but I wanted to take a few minutes at least to put on the record, along with what Senator MacEachen has said, although in much plainer, but straight, language, what a deception and sham Bill C-56 is.

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I had not intended to intervene in this debate. A day or so ago we had an exchange in connection with the use of statistics. The use of statistics continues to confuse and confound rather than to clarify. I had thought that one approach to testing the government's ability and competence would be its ability, an ability that every businessman would understand, to prepare a business plan. A business plan is normally based on a projection of revenues and deficits. That is the test of a good businessman: How can he project, under his mandate, mission or responsibility, what his enterprise will do? If he makes a mistake he pays the cost of that mistake.

When we look at the governance of the country and at the performance of the Minister of Finance, who is the senior financial officer of the Crown and, in effect, our chief financial officer, as the Prime Minister once referred to him, we should look at the chief financial officer's ability to project in order to test whether or not the chief financial officer or chief executive officer is competent. These are good traditional Tory measurements of public business. I personally do not agree with that comparison. I do not agree with the theory that public business is similar to private business, but I would rather, for the moment at least, use that Tory analysis to see whether or not, based on Tory principles and business principles, the chief financial officer, the Minister of Finance, and the chief executive officer, the Prime Minister of the country, have in fact been competent.

Let us take a look at the public record from the dates that the honourable senator has brought to our attention, from 1984 to the present. I am referring to the Public Accounts of Canada, Volume I, prepared in 1991 by the Receiver General of Canada. In that Public Accounts record for 1990-91 is Table 1.1, entitled "Deficit and Net Debt".

That table sets out the budgetary deficit for each year. I am taking the years from 1984 to 1991. It sets out the percentage of the deficit as a percentage of the gross domestic product. It sets out the net debt in each of those years—and one of the most telling tests is the percentage of gross domestic product.

• (1600)

The reason I say the last one is a telling test is that one looks at debt as a percentage of one's overall growth. Debt is irrelevant in business—

Senator Barootes: Really. Debt is irrelevant in business?

Senator Grafstein:—unless it can be compared to the growth of the business. For instance, if a business has a debt of $1 and the value of the business is $100, the debt is irrelevant. If, however, the debt is $60 and the worth of the business is $100, it becomes much more relevant and significant.

Senator Barootes: Tell that to the Reichmanns.

Senator Grafstein: If you would like to discuss that matter, Senator Barootes, I would be glad to. However, at the moment we are discussing this particular bill.

Let us look at the budgetary deficit as a percentage of the gross domestic product in each year from 1984. In 1984, the signal year, the measuring year, it was 41.1 per cent of the gross domestic product. In 1991, it has gone through the roof and is now at 57.8 per cent of the gross domestic product. As a percentage of the gross domestic product, the debt increased from 41 per cent in 1984 to 57.8 per cent last year, and it is still growing. It appears by that analysis that the question of growth as it relates to debt has taken a back seat.

Let us go into the figures even more appropriately, and that is to detest not the hindsight but the foresight of the government. Was the government able to project year by year in a fair way so that the Canadian public could respond in one way or another to the true nature of the accounts of the country?

In 1985 the Minister of Finance projected that in 1986 the deficit would be $27.5 billion. Instead, it was $34.5 billion. In 1985 he predicted that in 1987 the deficit would be $25.4 billion. Instead, it was $30.7 billion. For each of those years the Minister of Finance, the chief financial officer, was not just wrong; he was disastrously wrong.

Did he improve? Let us take a look at what he did in 1988. In 1987 he projected that the deficit for 1988 would be $21.9 billion. Instead, it was $28.2 billion. In 1988 he projected that in 1989 the deficit would be $21.9 billion. Instead, it was $28 billion. In 1989 he projected that the deficit in 1990 would be $23 billion. Instead, it was $28.9 billion, almost $29 billion.

Honourable senators, there is a question at least about competence. There is a question at least about the ability to use statistics in a way that clarifies for the public the direction of the country, the direction of the public accounts. In each of those years, he was not off by 5 per cent or 10 per cent, which businessmen understand is the normal give and take. I am sure that Senator Bolduc will agree that if a chief financial officer's projections are out by 5 per cent or 10 per cent, he or she would not be fired. However, if the chief financial officer's projections were out every year by 25 per cent or 30 per cent in such a crucial business area, every senator in business would very quickly say, "Let's get rid of the chief financial officer". Perhaps if he or she were a member of the board, as Conservative senators like to think of themselves, they would say to their chief executive officer, "It is time to go."

I say, honourable senators, with respect to this bill, it is time to go.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it was moved by Honourable Senator Comeau that this bill be read a second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

[Senator Grafstein.]

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Comeau, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

THE BUDGET

STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the Budget presented by the Honourable Don Mazankowski, Minister of Finance, on Tuesday, February 25, 1992.—(Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I would like to begin by expressing my gratitude to my house leader, Senator Lynch-Staunton who, with his usual courtesy, sensitivity and class—pardon that last word—reserved this place for me.

I was here shortly after the bell rang but was called away because of the very serious illness of a very dear friend. Those of us who are septuagenarians know that that kind of call comes more frequently than we would like. Sometime very soon there may be a call that we will not hear but will be about the same thing.

I very much appreciate the courtesy of Senator Lynch-Staunton and the other senators for allowing me to say my few words about this important item on the budget today.

I had thought that this item would have been discussed further by senators better informed on economic and business matters than myself. This, honourable senators, would encompass almost every other senator in this place.

I will begin by making a brief general comment, followed by a longer one on one particular budget statement.

Having been on the hill for, lo! these 35 years, I have endured many budgets and I have learned the formulae long ago. The government exalts, the opposition condemns. The tone and, indeed, the phraseology have altered little over all these years. But I was surprised this year. The present minister was not budgeting at a good time. Goodness knows that is an understatement. However, I cannot remember a budget which elicited less sustained and serious criticism, so Minister Mazankowski obviously did very well. I do not know how many Bible readers we have in the Senate, perhaps very few, but I did think at the time of those ancient Israelites who were forced to make bricks without straw. I think he did very well. In short, the minister did the best he could, and did it with considerable finesse.

On one of the budget statements, however, I must be less adulatory. On page 12 I read that ". . . we are actively pursuing the building of the fixed link from the mainland to Prince Edward Island with private sector financing . . .." As a long-time parliamentarian from Canada's smallest province, it is not my custom, honourable senators, to denigrate federal expenditure in P.E.I. However, there are reasons why I must do more than say, "Hear, hear!" I will try to be concise and precise on this important issue.

● (1610)

First, it is inappropriate to interpret P.E.I.'s last plebiscite as indicating Islanders' desire for a bridge. The question asked was not about a bridge. The expression was a "fixed link." We on the national level will soon be giving the most careful consideration to how one words the question in a plebiscite.

Second, I cannot for the life of me understand why the premier of my province demurs on calling for a more precise plebiscite. Plebiscites, by nature, must be precise.

Third, it is now clear that many Islanders who voted for the fixed link regard a tunnel as environmentally much less hazardous than a bridge. I am by no means alone in this category. I am by no means alone, and I have not been afraid to be alone on other occasions. Some recent studies by experts have disturbed me profoundly, as they have underlined the possible environmental dangers in a bridge link. In this so-called green year, we must all be solicitous on that very subject.

Fourth, while I rejoice in the prospects of new jobs for those who might be offered employment in the construction of a bridge, I cannot ignore the obvious disemployment of hundreds of people now working in the ferry services. The comparison of potential new jobs with definite lay-offs of other island workers now employed should and must be carefully pondered.

Fifth, every sensitive Canadian knows that there is no more threatened industry in the land than the fisheries. I cannot believe that anyone would view with equanimity a major threat to our fishermen. I have given the most careful attention to all the research, and I feel anything but confident about the future of one of our major P.E.I. industries. In fact, those of us who went through courses in Ancient History know that the fisheries is one of the oldest industries of all time. Nothing I read, nothing I have heard, nothing, I believe, suggests our precarious fisheries would not be endangered by the construction of a bridge.

Sixth, I am realist enough to know that being anti-bridge will open me to the charge of being "square", "against progress" or "not with it". Perhaps. A lot of things I have not been "with" have not been all that great in the unfolding of history. Modesty forbids, honourable senators, that I list these.

I have lived in, and loved, Prince Edward Island for 72 years. Long before my time, Abegweit, that beautiful gem of an island, attracted people from far and wide. Tourism has long been important to our economy. It is not something that was discovered 20 years ago.

Over the years I have heard visitors exalt the beauty of our beaches and extol the graces of our gently rolling fields. I know people who have been returning to Victoria, the seaside village of my birth, with a total population of 220 in the summer season, every year for half a century. They have come back because they love it.

Tourists who come in the thousands to Prince Edward Island seem not to be upset by a 35 minute ferry ride—I would say sail—which many of them consider a delightful mini-cruise.

Many tourists and people in their retirement years come to live in Prince Edward Island. They are coming in growing numbers, and it shows their wisdom. They move there because of the beauty of the place and its relative tranquillity. We never did try to compete with Coney Island. We never tried to be like one of the "hep" places. If we rush headlong to make our little island just like all the rest, diminishing our own distinctiveness and our own individuality, I am afraid we may be discarding the substance for the shadow. The seer told us long ago that was a foolish thing to do.

I have great respect, honourable senators, for the splendid work being done by ACOA under the leadership of the Honourable Elmer Mackay. The island economy has been helped by a great many ACOA projects. I am intimately acquainted with the improvement that many of them have made. However, as long ago as January, 1991, I conveyed to my long-time colleague Mr. Mackay the views on trans-strait bridge building which I have just enunciated here. On this momentous issue, and in the face of the potential environmental dangers, I have invoked the motto of this Senate, Sapere Aude, Dare to be Prudent: ie, do not build it now; perhaps not even later, but certainly not now!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John B. Stewart: Would the honourable senator answer a few questions? They are relatively easy ones.

I must say that I agree with the thrust of Senator Macquarrie's carefully prepared statement. He opposes the construction of a bridge for environmental reasons. I understand why he says that. I think every fisherman who engages in the fisheries in Northumberland understands why he says that. I am not at all sure that some of our colleagues from other parts of Canada understand why you would prefer the tunnel option to the bridge option. Would you explain that?

Second, do you not think you are unduly alarmed? The notion of a fixed link to Prince Edward Island has replaced the Guysborough railway as a regular election gimmick. I first became aware of it way back 30 years ago when the Diefenbaker government set up a consortium to plan the fixed link to Prince Edward Island. It did not happen. Then the Pearson government was going to build it. Should we not relax and let these politicians, ministers of public works and the like, play their little game? We will, of course, keep a somewhat watchful eye on them, but let them play their little game with the assurance that the fixed link to Prince Edward island is as likely to be realized as was the Guysborough railway.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, since I spoke with such great brevity, well under the limit—which is something not all my colleagues do—I will take a moment or two to answer this so-called easy question from my professorial friend.

I thought I was a fairly good political scientist, and I am sometimes accused of being a pretty good philosopher, but I think I am a damn poor engineer. However, I will try to answer his question about the tunnel.

● (1620)

The studies, which I have read with great care and called upon my scientific friends to help me understand, indicate serious problems with that bridge structure. They mention the wind, the erosion and what they will do to the important breeding and feeding ground of lobsters and other fish. I am totally convinced they know what they are talking about.

Apparently, the old tunnel thing, which was begun under the government of Sir John A. Macdonald after being studied by Sir Douglas Fox, would have provided the linkage, the rapid transportation that people needed. I think that today the only people who might really need it are the truckers, and I am not unaware of their problem.

The tourists can take half an hour and be glad that they are going across the beautiful Northumberland Strait. To use jargon I hate to use, although it helps once in a while, it seems that the tunnel is "environmentally friendly"—a disgusting expression.

How many years did it take for the British and the French to decide that they could build one? Sir Douglas Fox started this study in the 1890s. Are we now ready to go ahead with a bridge? I say no, not until we give careful research to the tunnel option.

We are convinced there would be terrible dangers from the bridge. They talk about rapid transportation. I would not drive across the bridge on a day that the ferry could not run. I trust those ferries to get across rather than getting me up on a bridge in the winds of the Northumberland Strait. I am probably not as good a driver as Senator Stewart, or as good as lots of people, but damned if I would be up there on a day the ferries could not run. I would even stay on the New Brunswick side, which would not be nearly as nice as being on P.E.I!

I do not think it will happen. I was around, as my colleague was, in the 1960s. He is right. The governments of Diefenbaker and Pearson were concerned, and I believe they were sincere in their concern. A former colleague of ours, Senator McIlraith, came down to Charlottetown with a strong team of experts who were planning a structure which would be part tunnel, part bridge and part causeway. As I remember, and as the honourable senator probably knows, they were more sensitive, at least in my judgment, to the fisheries and the environmental problems than the builders are now.

[Senator Stewart.]

I know I am not supposed to introduce a new subject, but I am a little upset when the future of transportation between the rest of Canada and my province is about to be decided in the board room of big business. I want a government responsible to the people to look upon their obligations to Prince Edward Island. I am not sure that this big-business, get-rich-quick scheme is our salvation.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROPRIETY AND CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF THE SENATE — DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Thériault:
>
> That the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders be authorized to consider the propriety and the constitutionality of the changes and amendments to the Rules of the Senate, adopted by the Senate on June 18, 1991; and
>
> That the Committee report no later than June 11, 1992.— (Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton).

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before getting into the actual motion itself it is only proper to correct certain impressions which have been left on the record.

On those occasions when the new rules have been debated, such as at the time of their presentation here, at the time Senator Haidasz made a number of interventions on this matter, and in March when he most recently made certain statements regarding the new rules, an outside reader of our Debates has been left with the impression that the rules are irregular, if not illegal, in the way that they were brought to adoption.

I think nothing could be further from the truth, as any summary of the history of the new rules from their inception to their adoption will show without question. I wish to recapitulate briefly the sequence of events that took place in conformity with the old rules. One part of the procedure which has not been brought up is that everything that was done to bring about new rules was done under the provisions of the old rules.

A Committee of Selection was properly instituted, as provided under the old rules. In turn, it proposed the membership for the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders, which the Senate confirmed on May 30, 1991. Rule 67 of the old rules allowed for the creation of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders to be composed of up to 15 members, four of whom could constitute a quorum and empower, and I quote:

> . . . on its own initiative to propose to the Senate amendments to the rules from time to time.

That is a direct quotation from the old rules, and a provision which appears in the new rules.

The rules either old or new do not provide for party representation on a standing committee. This is a feature which is dictated by tradition and courtesy. The decision of the Official Opposition not to have representation on the standing committee studying the suggested new rules in no way invalidated its deliberations and recommendations in the same way that the absence of one or more senators which would see the government side in a minority position during a committee hearing would invalidate its proceedings.

It is a quorum which establishes the right for a committee to proceed with its business, not the partisan nature of its makeup, in the same way that the Senate as a whole is governed. Our rules simply state, as they stated before, that 15 members make up a quorum. There is no reference to the makeup of the quorum, but simply to 15 members.

I do not think that members on this side are the only ones who regret that the committee at the time did not have the benefit of the experience of those opposite during the drafting of the new rules. It is now nearly one year since their adoption, and it is obvious that a number of clarifications and changes are required in order to improve even more on dispositions which in great part could no longer keep up with the evolving nature of the Senate.

It is certainly hoped by all on this side, and I am sure by quite a few on the other, that all senators, whatever their affiliation, will contribute to the process in order to define a set of rules which is fair in the treatment and application of the requirements of government, opposition and independent members.

It is well known, since the other side has been informed of the intentions of this side, that certain amendments are being studied. I understand that the opposition has formed a committee to look into improvements to the existing rules. I hope that, before we break, the Senate Rules committee will have a chance to study them and come forward with recommendations for us when we reconvene in the fall.

As to the thrust of Senator Haidasz's motion itself, it questions the constitutionality of the rules adopted last June. This is a serious allegation. Constitutionality cannot be left to the decision of any body but the courts, if one is serious in the interpretation of the word "constitutionality".

Certainly, the courts are best equipped to deal with this important matter, particularly as any questioning of the constitutionality of the rules questions the legislation passed since these rules have been in effect. It is not just the rules that are being challenged, but all that flowed from them, if a challenge is successful.

Certainly, the last body in any case which should be empowered to study the constitutionality of the rules is the Rules committee itself, which is the author of the rules being challenged. It is as if an accused were being asked to plead guilty and pass sentence on himself.

Senator Haidasz and his colleagues some time ago—and I am not passing judgment on their decision—decided to challenge the constitutionality of the naming of eight senators to this body. Quite properly, they went to the courts. If the definition of constitutionality in this case is the same, I urge them to use the same procedure.

In any event, I think this alone is reason enough to vote against the senator's motion. It is certainly our intention to do so should a vote be required.

On motion of Senator Hébert, debate adjourned.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MOTION FOR BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 5, 1992, moved:

> That the Senate urge the Government of Canada to prepare and place in the Memorial Chapel of the Peace Tower a Book of Remembrance honouring the Merchant Seamen who lost their lives in Canadian armed conflicts in World War I, World War II and the Korean Conflict; and
>
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that House to united with the Senate in the aforementioned action.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise to address my motion No. 33, which was so aptly presented by the Speaker. The motion is compatible with recommendation No. 3 in the report of the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs which was tabled in the Senate in January, 1991, 18 months ago. Despite numerous appeals to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, his only response was contained in his welcome announcement of March 26, 1992 in Halifax, when he made a commitment of the government's intention to introduce legislation to recognize merchant seaman as veterans. That announcement was hailed with appreciation by not only the merchant seamen of Canada themselves but a majority of veterans and citizens across the country.

As a matter of fact, in a recent poll taken of 1,034 Canadians, 90 per cent supported the extension of all benefits to merchant seamen on an equal basis with, as described by the minister, "military veterans".

During the minister's announcement in Halifax on March 26, 1992, he referred to the book of remembrance in these words:

> There are a number of other matters that do not involve programs and benefits, but which are very important to wartime merchant navy veterans. First, Canada's books of remembrance in the Peace Tower in Ottawa do not include the names of merchant mariners. The government agrees in principle that there should be a book of remembrance dedicated to merchant navy veterans who gave their lives in Canadian wars; however, a final decision awaits consultation on the features, location and cost of the book.

Honourable senators, it is difficult to understand the "features" problem. There are other books in the Peace Tower and all we have to do is copy them. The location is agreed upon. There is absolutely no question that it should be the Peace Tower of the Parliament of Canada. While I have no doubt that a book of remembrance will be provided, I wonder at the complacency which is so evident over the urgency which exists in recognizing those merchant seamen who died during the world wars. The procrastination over who is responsible to carry out this deserving tribute to another group of young Canadians who served in the merchant marines during the wars is unbelievable.

For example, on April 30, 1992, I received a letter from the chief of staff of the Speaker of the House of Commons, John Fraser. He said that he is:

> . . . awaiting a recommendation from the committee of interested parties which was being struck by the Department of Veterans Affairs on the question of the book of remembrance for merchant navy veterans.

It is difficult to understand why we need another committee to decide that we will recognize the merchant navy veterans and to remember those who have fallen.

He went on to say:

> Until that recommendation is made, I regret that I cannot provide you with a decision one way or the other. I will get back to you on this matter as soon as the committee's recommendation is received.

Why is there a need for another committee? In addition, who are these interested parties? Is the Senate subcommittee, which initiated the action for recognition of merchant seamen in 1987, not an interested party? I have not been requested by anyone to sit on any committee, nor do I expect to be asked.

I have no doubt that one of the interested parties is the Royal Canadian Legion. On May 8, I received a copy of a letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons. It is signed by the Dominion President, J.W. Jolleys. It reads:

> Dear Mr. Speaker,
>
> Last March the Minister of Veterans Affairs announced proposed legislative changes leading to the recognition of Merchant Mariners who served during wartime as Merchant Navy veterans and to the extension of full veterans' benefits to those deserving sailors.
>
> In the announcement was information that the Minister is also considering ways and means of establishing a Book of Remembrance for these Merchant Navy veterans.
>
> We write now to ensure that you are aware of The Royal Canadian Legion endorsement of Veterans Affairs Minister Gerry Merrithew's initiatives. In particular, the Legion is fully in favour of the production of a separate Book of Remembrance for Merchant Navy veterans and its placement in the Peace Tower of the House.

Mr. Jolleys represents about 560,000 veterans, so there should be no problem. He represents the National Council of Veteran Organizations, which represents about 19 organizations, and the Army, Navy, Air Force Veterans in Canada, the oldest and most senior group of veterans in the country.

Honourable senators, if the Speaker is in doubt about who is responsible, I can provide information that was given to me by the Library of Parliament which traced a memo dated in 1928, 64 years ago. It reads:

> Prime Minister King decided with the Minister of Public Works that authority concerning the Peace Tower should be vested in the House authorities.

Who are the house authorities? I am only passing along that information because there seems to be some doubt as to who is responsible.

● (1640)

I can also tell the house that the cost of producing a book of remembrance has been investigated and it can be done for a very modest price; certainly only an insignificant fraction, for example, of the cost of producing the NFB production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" at $400,000, or indeed the latest foray by the CBC into degrading Canada's soldiers and its leaders during World War II at a cost of over $2 million.

Let me recount for you, honourable senators, the story of the creation of the Memorial Chamber and the altar where the Books of Remembrance lie in the Peace Tower of Parliament. I place on the record the proceedings at the dedication of the altar by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in Ottawa on August 23rd, 1927, 65 years ago.

Assembled in the Memorial Chamber were some 70 dignitaries, including the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Governor General, Viscountess Willingdon, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the Prime Minister of Canada and members of his cabinet, representatives of foreign nations, church dignitaries, military officers, representatives of the various armed service veterans' associations and public bodies, and others. Here is what the Right Honourable W.L. Mackenzie King said when he introduced His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales:

> The Chamber in the Tower of the Houses of Parliament in which we are assembled has been set apart as a memorial of the service and sacrifice of Canada in the Great War. Enshrined within its walls is the altar on which is to be placed the Book of Remembrance containing the names of the 60,000 members of the Canadian forces who made the supreme sacrifice. The stone of the altar is the gift of His Majesty's government in Great Britain, made on behalf of the people of the British Isles.

On behalf of the government and the people of Canada, I have the honour to renew the expression of our thanks for this symbolic gift, and to invite His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to perform the ceremony of dedication.

The Prince of Wales uttered these emotional words.

In the name of the people of Canada, I set apart the altar of this Chamber to receive and hold forever the Book of Remembrance that the glory of those whose names are written therein may live for all generations.

His Royal Highness then unveiled the altar.

Immediately, honourable senators, there was heard from below the word of command as the guard of honour presented arms; the flag on the Peace Tower was dipped, and bugles from a lofty position in the Tower sounded the Last Post.

The Minister of National Defence then spoke, the Honourable J.R. Ralston. He said this:

On this the eve of the anniversary of the outbreak of the war, it is eminently fitting that in the midst of our recollections of the Fathers of Confederation, who laid the foundations of Canadian nationhood—

We should remember that in this Chamber, because the Fathers of Confederation gave us some duties and responsibilities to perform 125 years ago. Mr. Ralston went on to say:

— we should turn aside to remember the sons and daughters, memorialized in the Chamber, who through the stress and strain of four years of war proved glorious builders of the edifice itself.

Faithfulness such as theirs has brought to the temple of our national life the strength which comes from determination, courage and perseverance, and has adorned it with the virtues of love of freedom and of justice, patriotism, and a willingness to endure even unto death.

Let us remind ourselves in this great presence that to be faithful to the memory of those who lie in Flanders fields, we who continue to build cannot afford to put in shoddy material or dishonest or careless workmanship.

On behalf of all Canadians, I thank His Royal Highness, his royal brother Prince George, and the Prime Minister of the old land, which bore the brunt and was undismayed, for their very intimate and personal association today with this our national memorial. I can say very earnestly that this appreciation will be felt in an especial manner by those whose dearest of earth will be written in the Book of Remembrance which this altar will bear.

The Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Honourable Stanley Baldwin, said this:

There were words spoken on this earth more than two thousand years ago which have often been with me in the days of the war and since. When Socrates was sentenced to death, he said to the judges: "And now we go our ways, I to die and you to live, but which is the better, God alone knows." And God alone does know.

For four years the cream of our generation streamed to France and Flanders and Gallipoli from all the corners of the earth, and when they passed along, they said to us who were left behind: "And so we go our ways, we to die and you to live, but which is the better, God alone knows." That secret will not be revealed until the time comes when we shall all have passed away.

Honourable senators, for the merchant seamen, that time is drawing near.

We ask this question: Has the sacrifice been made in vain? That question has often been asked; we alone, who survived, can give the answer. The happiest moment for us will be when we have so conducted ourselves in this world that we have made that sacrifice worthwhile and an answer to that question is found. Then, when the day comes that we pass on, those we meet whom we best loved on earth will say to us, "Our sacrifice, after all, was not in vain."

Honourable senators, I am sure that all senators will agree that my motion is timely and justifiable and enforces an appeal to both Houses to show Canada's appreciation to a group of gallant merchant seamen too long forgotten, and that both Houses of Parliament unite to prepare a place in the Memorial Chapel of the Peace Tower for a Book of Remembrance honouring Canada's merchant seamen who lost their lives serving Canada with honour and distinction in time of war.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Neiman, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, May 12, 1992

PAGE

The Late Honourable Maurice Sauvé
Tributes. Senator Riel 1473
Senator Beaudoin 1473

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

General Election
Number of Days Left in Current Term. Senator Frith 1474

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration
Twenty-Second Report of Committee Presented. Senator Lavoie-Roux 1474

The Economy
Mismanagement of Monetary Policy—Notice of Motion. Senator Olson 1474

Goods and Services Tax
Presentation of Petitions. Senator Hébert 1474

QUESTION PERIOD

The Economy
Request for Prognosis of Economic Recovery. Senator Frith 1475
Senator Murray 1475
Senator Olson 1475

North Atlantic Treaty Organization
Proposed Withdrawal of Troops from Europe—Government Policy. Senator Hastings 1476
Senator Murray 1476

International Trade
Impending Visit of President Boris Yeltsin to United States—Possibility of Visit to Canada—Government Position. Senator Bonnell 1476
Senator Murray 1476

Nova Scotia
Pictou County—Disaster at Westray Coal Mine—Need for Inquiry—Government Position. Senator Bonnell 1477
Senator Murray 1477

Delayed Answers to Oral Questions
Senator Lynch-Staunton 1479

PAGE

National Defence
Question by Senator De Bané. Senator Lynch-Staunton (Delayed answer) 1480

Special Economic Measures Bill (C-53)
Second Reading—Order Stands. Senator Molgat 1481
Senator Frith 1481

The Budget
Statement of Minister of Finance—Order Stands. Senator Lynch-Staunton 1481

Foreign Affairs
Fifth Report of Committee Adopted. Senator Molgat 1481

Private Bill (S-7)
Royal Society of Canada—Bill to Amend Act of Incorporation—Third Reading. Senator Tremblay 1481

Fisheries
Foreign Overfishing—Depletion of Northern Cod Stocks—Debate Concluded. Senator Thériault 1481
Senator Marshall 1482

Spending Control Bill C-56)
Second Reading—Debate Concluded. Senator MacEachen ... 1483
Senator Olson 1486
Senator Grafstein 1487
Senator Molgat 1488
Referred to Committee 1488

The Budget
Statement of Minister of Finance—Debate Concluded. Senator Macquarrie 1488
Senator Stewart 1489

Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders
Motion to Authorize Committee to Consider Propriety and Constitutionality of Amendments to Rules of the Senate—Debate Continued. Senator Lynch-Staunton 1490

Veterans Affairs
Motion for Book of Remembrance—Debate Adjourned. Senator Marshall 1491

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 13, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, for the election clock watchers, to use Senator Murray's test, those of you government supporters who respect democracy have 192 days. Any of you, and I hope there are none, who are cowardly and contemptuous of democracy have 578 days.

[Translation]

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

THIRTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Wednesday, May 13, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

THIRTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, December 17, 1991, to conduct a special study on the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Compensation Corporation and the Property and Casualty Insurance Compensation Corporation, respectfully requests that it be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the budget submitted to the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Poitras, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO DELAY TABLING OF REPORT

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, May 14, 1992, I will move:

THAT notwithstanding the order of reference adopted by the Senate on December 17, 1991, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to table the final report on its special study of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Compensation Corporation and the Property and Casualty Insurance Compensation Corporation no later than October 29, 1992.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

THIRTY-THIRD MEETING—REPORT OF CANADIAN SECTION TABLED

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Thirty-third meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, Canadian section, which was held on April 9 to 13, 1992.

FISHERIES

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT STUDY

Hon. Eileen Rossiter: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, May 14, 1992, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries be authorized to examine and report upon the current conditions and future prospects of Canada's Atlantic commercial inshore fisheries and any related matters; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than 31st March, 1993.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have some petitions to present on behalf of Canadians in Quebec, New Brunswick and Ontario. In all cases the recital refers to the GST adopted by the Conservative Government, refers as before to the unprecedented assault on the income of Canadians, confronting them with a rise in inflation, et cetera, and refers to the fact that the methods used by the government are unworthy of a democratic country, being rather the work of lawmakers who want to implement a dictatorship by, to use the poetic phrase, "snapping their fingers at the general opposition of the population"—an apt description and accurate, as poetry usually is—and therefore asks for theabolition of the goods and services tax and demands a general election immediately.

In Quebec the petitions come from Barrante, Belcourt, Blainville Boisbriand, Chicoutimi, Dollard-des-Ormeaux, Kirkland, La Croche, Laval, Longueuil, Montreal, Pierrefond, Roxboro, Senneterre, Senneville, Siscoe, Sullivan, Ste-Thérèse, and Val D'Or. In New Brunswick they are from Bas Caraquet, Caraquet, Grande-Anse, Pokesudie, Shippagan, St. Isidore, St. Léolin, St. Simon. In Ontario the petitions are from Belle River, Comber, Dover Center, Grande Pointe, Lighthouse Cove, Paincourt, Sarnia, St. Joachim, Stoney Point, Tilbury and Windsor.

The totals are as follows: From Quebec there are 27 petitions with 564 names; from New Brunswick there are five petitions with 101 names, and from Ontario there are six petitions with 139 names. Total petitions, 38; total names, 804.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 500 citizens of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

It is amusing to note that Quebecers write to Senator Frith and Ontarians write to me! These petitions come mainly from Scarborough, Rexdale, Toronto, Etobicoke, Peterborough, Oshawa, Downsview and Oakville.

These are 500 citizens who do not agree that the GST should apply to books and periodicals and who will remember this government's contempt for culture at election time.

● (1410)

[English]

PRIVATE BILL

NORTHWEST CANADA CONFERENCE EVANGELICAL CHURCH—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Reports from Standing or Special Committees:

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, May 13, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-9, An Act to amend An Act to incorporate the Northwest Canada Conference Evangelical Church, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, May 5, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Olson, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

EXTRADITION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, May 13, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-31, An Act to amend the Extradition Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, May 6, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable Senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Balfour, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE ENVIRONMENT

EARTH SUMMIT IN RIO DE JANEIRO—COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I realize that the Leader of the Government is not present today, so my question is directed to the Deputy Leader, and perhaps it can be followed up and an answer provided.

My question is in relation to the Rio Conference on the Environment. I know that there have been some discussions carried on with the Leader of the Government in the Senate in this regard. I learned this morning that the Canadian group accompanying the Prime Minister will include a number of members of the House of Commons. I understand that there will be six members from the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources and six members from the Standing Committee on Forestry and Fisheries.

My question is: Will the group also include senators? The Senate also has an Energy committee and a Fisheries committee, and senators have as great an interest in environmental matters as do members of the House of Commons.

I realize the Deputy Leader is not in a position to answer the question now. However, perhaps he could put my question on the matter into the system. I think that it is important that the Senate, as an equal body in Parliament, has representation on that delegation.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice and will obtain the answer as soon as possible.

TAXATION

"WHERE YOUR TAX DOLLARS GO"—NUMBER AND DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT PAMPHLET

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, on April 8 as reported at page 1355 of the Debates of the Senate, I asked a question about the number and distribution of a pamphlet entitled, "Where Your Tax Dollars Go" which was distributed by the Oakland, California-based Safeway Company in supermarkets in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia. The pamphlet was distorted, to say the least, with respect to statements made about the alleged prudence of the government in its recent budget and related matters. Subsequently, a reply has been received.

The government admits the Department of Finance printed 150,000 copies of this brochure. They say the cost of the printing amounted to $25,000. They say the pamphlet was distributed through various sources. Included in the answer received is the sentence:

> Targeted mailing lists and InfoNet Media Services (a division of Strategium Media Inc. of Rexdale, Ontario), which operates a supermarket information centre network, were also used to distribute the pamphlet.

It is a curious thing that a commercial organization would contact the government of Canada and say, "We want the Conservative explanation for the budget and the financial situation in Canada. We would like to send it out to eager consumers of supermarket products in various parts of Canada."

Senator Frith: To which the government said, "We thought you'd never ask."

Senator Perrault: Yes. The mystery deepens. This special printing of 150,000 pamphlets entitled "Where Your Tax Dollars Go" was targeted at my province of British Columbia. The government admits 110,000 brochures were distributed through Safeway stores in greater Vancouver. The reply goes on to say:

> Safeway is only one of over 40 regionally, provincially and nationally incorporated supermarket chains—representing a total of 904 stores . . .

My first question is: Why did the government and/or Strategium Media Inc. of Rexdale, Ontario, and/or InfoNet Media Services decide that British Columbians were in special need of edification? Who paid for the distribution of these pamphlets to the Safeway supermarkets in the lower mainland of British Columbia? Surely this is a legitimate question.

I ask if a government which states that it is involved in a painful exercise to save the taxpayers money, that professes to be obsessed with the need for prudence, would have enough money to print a propaganda pamphlet distributed through a commercial organization centred in Ontario, shipped out to British Columbia, and put on the racks of a supermarket chain in my community.

I want some more answers from this government. These questions must be asked. Why was it decided to print 150,000 copies without any apparent plan for "equitable"—I hate to use that word—distribution across Canada? Why were 50 per cent not sent to Ontario and a few more thousand to the Maritimes? British Columbia was singled out. Did it have something to do with the fact that Conservative popularity in the province of British Columbia has now plummeted to 6 per cent? My goodness, we make beer stronger than that out on the west coast. Is our area in special need of this propaganda?

Why should the Canadian taxpayer be asked to pay for this? You collect enough money from various industrial supporters in this country to pay for your own propaganda if you want to distribute pamphlets through the Safeway store chain based in Oakland, California.

In spite of the fact that the brochure is full of inaccuracies, exaggerations and half truths—and that alone is reason enough for no distribution at all—why were almost all of the copies channelled through Safeway of Greater Vancouver to the apparent exclusion of the other supermarkets in the province of British Columbia and all across the country? Has the Department of Finance no control over the distribution of its printed materials?

Who are the top officers of Strategium Media Inc. of Rexdale, Ontario? What association do they have with the Conservative party? What association do they have with the Minister of Finance? Give us their names. Who owns it? Who pays the bills? Did this company distribute the said brochure on its own volition at its own expense? Did they offer to distribute the gross distortions regarding the budget to the people of my province as a public service?

Is Safeway Canada part of the distribution network of the Department of Finance? In this respect, how many other companies and corporations are utilized by the Department of

[Senator Molgat.]

Finance to distribute its printed inaccuracies and misinformation? I want some answers.

● (1420)

There is something going on here. These questions must be answered in the public interest.

Senator Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly make every attempt to find answers to the many questions asked by the honourable senator.

I remind him that, because of their nature, the questions he just posed would have been better delivered in written form rather than in his convoluted oral style.

Senator Perrault: I noted that the Deputy Leader of the Government was listening with rapt attention. I know he has his own personal form of shorthand, and I am sure there are enough witnesses to assist him with his memory should he have difficulty.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS TABLED

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PAYMENTS TO VETERANS IN LONG TERM CARE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 65 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—LIST OF RECIPIENTS OF WAR DISABILITY PENSIONS AND WAR ALLOWANCES

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 66 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT SUSPENSION BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Forrestall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly, for the second reading of Bill C-67, to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to say a word about Bill C-67.

Yesterday, we discussed the possibility of referring this bill to committee before it is given second reading in order to have it examined and to receive an opinion on its constitutional dimension. I thought that it might be better for us simply to stand it, as the Deputy Leader of the Government proposes to do. However, I want to have on the record the fact that we are asking for some opinions on that dimension, and I would suggest that, in addition to any opinions the Deputy Leader receives, he might want an opinion from our legislative counsel.

Rather than, as has been suggested, sending the bill to committee before second reading for examination of the constitutional question, I believe it would be preferable to stand the Order until we have these opinions and put them into the debate. We would then decide on second reading in that context.

In addition to information that I am told the Deputy Leader of the Government will be receiving concerning this question, we might see if we can get an opinion that we can give for consideration to our own legislative counsel.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I hope that tomorrow we will have some reply to the comments of both Senator Stanbury and Senator Frith regarding the status of this legislation. Perhaps after that discussion we can decide on Senator Frith's suggestion.

Senator Frith: Moreover, our counsel may take note of what we have said today and decide to give us the benefit of his opinion.

Order stands.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelleher, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Ross, for the second reading of Bill C-53, An Act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I propose to make an intervention on this item tomorrow.

Order stands.

COASTING TRADE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rossiter, seconded by the Honourable DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-33, respecting the use of foreign ships and non-duty paid ships in the coasting trade.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, to assure honourable senators on the other side that I am not unremittingly critical of their endeavours, I must say that the general thrust of this bill is good.

Many honourable senators will recall Bill C-52, which died on the Order Paper when the 1988 federal election was called.

● (1430)

Bill C-52, as honourable senators will recall, had been passed by the House of Commons, but the concerns registered here in the Senate regarding the treatment of the cruise ship industry delayed the bill until the session had ended and the new Parliament was elected into office.

Bill C-33 is, in fact, a revised and rewritten Bill C-52 which is designed to reserve the Canadian coasting trade to Canadian ships, to extend the jurisdiction of the coasting trade provisions, and to expand the coasting trade of Canada to include all exploitation-marine activities with respect to waters within the continental shelf. That general thrust is deserving of support.

At the present time, coasting trade activities in Canada are governed by Part X of the Canada Shipping Act. With this bill, these activities will come under more specific legislation. Coasting trade is currently defined under the Canada Shipping Act as the carriage, by water or by land and water, of goods or passengers between two places in Canada, either directly or by way of a foreign port.

The definition is made more clear in the bill before us. It specifies that any movement between two Canadian points, even with a stop in American waters, is coasting. This covers trips made with stops in American ports for the purposes of sight-seeing. The definition was designed to assist the Canadian tour boat industry.

Certainly, none of us should underestimate the importance of the cruise ship and tour boat industry in this country. The cruise business annually is worth over $100 million directly to the economy of British Columbia. Last year almost 424,000 people, mostly U.S. citizens, embarked and disembarked in the port of Vancouver en route to Alaska holidays.

There are some other important figures regarding the importance of this industry, honourable senators. I talked about the $100 million-plus direct impact. It is derived from the cruise tour season to Alaska which extends from about mid-May to late September each year. During the season, international cruise ships make stops at ports in British Columbia, chiefly Vancouver.

Cruising activity directed to Alaskan destinations has grown steadily over the last 32 years. With a total of 423,928 passengers embarking and disembarking in Vancouver during the season just completed, the seasonal cruise theatre continues as the fourth most popular cruise tour area after the Caribbean, the Bahamas, and Mexico. In the 1991 Alaska cruise season, 21 ships were engaged, one of which sailed on round-trip voyages to San Francisco, and 20 which made Vancouver their southern port of call.

The choice of Vancouver as the southern port of call is largely due to the United States Passenger Service Act of 1886 which prohibits carriage of passengers in a foreign-flagged ship from one United States port to another. The act does permit disembarkation of passengers at the port of original embarkation, and an exception exists for the carriage of passengers between United States ports and Puerto Rico.

[Senator Perrault.]

It may not be generally known that the Alaska cruise industry provides substantial financial spin-off benefits to Alberta and the Yukon Territory. For many years, subsidiaries of the principal companies involved have promoted cruise-related motorcoach and rail tours in Alberta and B.C., and motorcoach tours in the Yukon.

I have just obtained a summary based upon a study prepared for the North West Cruise Ship Association by Jonathan Seymour & Associates of Vancouver of the direct economic benefits reasonably estimated to have been received in western Canada during the past three seasons covering many categories. There is too much detail to impose upon the time of senators to read it all.

For marine services, provisioning, transfer, tourism, the total direct economic benefit in 1991 alone was $139.8 million. When the accepted industry multiplier of 2.5 is applied to such direct benefits in order to calculate the indirect financial benefits realized as a consequence of the direct expenditures, a total of approximately $350 million in direct and indirect benefits is indicated for the 1991 season.

Those are incredible figures. The benefits are not just held in the greater Vancouver area of the province of British Columbia. They are spread in many other directions. That is why I think the government should be commended for realizing the importance of the industry. The need to assure the viability of that industry is enshrined in this measure before us. It may even enable the establishment of an east coast cruise tour theatre service, New York to Montreal, and the estimated economic benefits to Canada east down the line will be just as large as they are on the west coast.

Such a development will be of very great economic importance. The normal projected cruiseship season for our friends in eastern Canada, involving east coast ports, will extend from May 14 to October 20 for a total of 158 days, permitting 13 seven-day northbound trips from New York to Montreal and 13 seven-day southbound trips from Montreal to New York.

Just some brief figures for my friends and colleagues in the other Atlantic provinces and Ontario and Quebec: Money spent in Canada on pre- and post-cruise hotel accommodations, with one-third of passengers estimated to make overnight stays, will amount to about $1 million in direct benefit in the first year.

Under the category heading "discretionary spending in port calls," a Tourism Canada study of the eastern Canadian cruise industry in 1988 indicated an average expenditure of almost $65 per person based on the total passengers carried. Therefore with three port calls in the course of a seven-day cruise, money spent in Canada would be $3,066,531. That is just for the first year.

Airport transfers do not seem to be an important factor in a sense, but an $85,000 benefit will accrue from persons not staying at a hotel; air transport taxes will realize $500,000; Canadian air carriers, $666,000. It all adds up in the first year to an economic benefit to the eastern provinces of $15 million.

That is encouraging. And this bill makes it possible for those in the cruise ship industry to make decisions based on the fact that there will be a measure in place to allow this industry to expand and grow. Understandably, some of the American cities are quite concerned about this activity.

The City of Seattle, Washington, is lobbying diligently in Washington to get exemption from U.S. legislation that prohibits foreign-flagged ships from carrying passengers between U.S. ports. If is succeeds, the Port of Seattle Authority has said it will build a cruise ship terminal and go after Vancouver's business. We are pretty good competitors, we Canadians, wherever we live. I think we will be able to fight off that challenge. Certainly, we must work to ensure that Canada's position is secure in the face of this potential challenge from U.S. ports.

The cruise industry in North America grew by 10 per cent per year for most of the 1980s, and it represents a great and increasing potential for revenue in the years to come.

Speaking of cruise ships, an advertisement was provided to me from the Montreal Gazette of Saturday, May 2. It talks about a seven-day St. Lawrence-Saguenay cruise sponsored by the OdessAmerica Cruise Company Club 50. I do not want to provide commercial time for any company here, so I will not go into the fare details. However, it is rather intriguing. This company advertises a Montreal-to-Montreal trip with visits to St. Pierre and Miquelon, Gaspé, and Quebec City. The advertisement says that the company is operating under a Quebec permit. I really do not know what the Quebec permit is all about. I hope that the sponsor of this bill will jot it down and provide an answer. The advertisement reads: "Quebec Permit/Port of Registry, Odessa, Ukraine".

There are some people in the tour industry who say that the fact that the tour is stopping at St. Pierre and Miquelon puts it in the category of being an international trip and, as a result, it will be exempt from certain Canadian regulations.

I think we should look at that. It looks like a very attractive trip. They are offering Ukrainian cuisine and Ukrainian dancing. It sounds like a real fun trip, but it does give rise to some questions. Can foreign cruise ships qualify to ply our waters just because they stop at a French port like St. Pierre? I do not know the answer and I would truly like to know.

The bill would require a foreign ship or non-duty-paid ship to apply for a licence to engage in coasting. Some ships, however, would be exempt from licence requirement. Those foreign ships engaged in ocean research activities, marine scientific research, salvage operations, marine pollution operations and Distant Early Warning Line resupply would not be required to apply for a licence. Unlicensed ships would be permitted to assist in emergency situations.

The Minister of National Revenue would issue a licence where he or she was satisfied that no Canadian ship was suitable or available to provide the services as described in the application. That is fair enough if in actual fact there is no Canadian ship available. Some people in the shipping industry are concerned that a company may claim that they cannot find another ship and request and receive a fast application approval for a ship registered in Formosa, Bermuda or some other place. Could this provision be used as a way to avoid the spirit and letter of the law? Perhaps the government spokesman can answer this question for me as well.

The minister will also have to be satisfied that arrangements have been made for the payments of duties and taxes under the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act. The foreign ship would have to meet all safety and pollution prevention requirements imposed by any law of Canada applicable to that foreign ship. Again, that is fair enough.

Any licence the minister might issue would be subject to such terms and conditions as the minister considered appropriate with respect to the services to be performed and the places where the ship is to perform those services.

The licence would be effective until either the expiry of the ship's safety certificate or 12 months from the date of issue of the licence, whichever is sooner. The licence would be suspended or cancelled if the ship owner was convicted of prohibited acts relating to navigating or shipping.

The Governor in Council would be able to determine the number of licences that might be issued, thus enabling the government to control the number of foreign ships involved in the Canadian coasting trade. That is a proper protection of the Canadian industry.

Under the bill the National Transportation Agency would have the authority to rule whether a Canadian ship could provide the services described on the application for a coasting licence. It would also ensure that all certificates and documents relating to the foreign ship were valid and in force as well as ensuring that foreign ships met all safety and pollution prevention requirements.

Some people concerned with this bill think that a register should be established. In that way, if you are in the shipping business and you have some bottoms available to transport goods, you could register your company's name and as soon as an application is made to use a foreign-owned vessel the Canadian company would have the right to be informed immediately, and the opportunity to advise the National Transportation Agency whether it has a Canadian ship available to transport a cargo. The National Transportation Agency would be able to access the information needed to establish the availability of Canadian shipping alternatives and the usage of Canadian and non-duty ships.

Clause 11 of the bill would allow the Minister of Transport and the Secretary of State for External Affairs to attempt, through consultation, to eliminate unfair practices which Canadian ships are subject to in another country. In the event that the consultation failed, the Governor in Council would have the authority to take such action as deemed appropriate.

To enforce the bill the Minister of Transport could designate enforcement officers. Where a ship was found to contravene the act, it would be liable to a fine not exceeding $50,000—an entirely appropriate amount. For an offence that continued for more than one day, the ship would be charged with a separate offence for each day the offence continued and an additional fine could therefore be imposed for each day.

As I said at the outset, honourable senators, the thrust of the bill is constructive. There are, however, some concerns. There is concern about the discrepancies which may exist between laws applicable to Canadian ships and those applicable to foreign ships. Will foreign ships applying for licences be required to meet the same provisions as Canadian vessels?

Foreign ships operating on our coasting trade should be liable to meet every stringent safety standard with which our Canadian vessels must comply, and Canadian standards are some of the best in the world. Our safety standards are tougher than those in many countries, especially those in the United States, and therefore the cost per vessel for establishing these standards is said to be much higher in Canada.

Another concern raised in previous discussions of this measure in the other place and by some senators on this side, is the status of the passengers. Certainly Canadian passengers on ships plying our waters should be assured that regardless of who transports them they will be guaranteed high standards of safety wherever the company is registered. An amendment was proposed in the other place to read, "... the Minister of National Revenue may issue a licence in respect of the foreign ship." This would provide some discretion to the minister, and we think this is a case where the minister should have some discretion. It is difficult to understand why the government refused to accept this amendment in the other place. The wording remains "shall". The present wording, it is feared, makes it mandatory for the minister to issue a permit when he receives a recommendation from the national agency established to evaluate these requests.

Does this present the risk that a shipper may simply proceed to concoct specifications for ships known not to be in Canada, giving the minister no choice but to issue a licence? This concern has been expressed by a number of people, including members of the Seafarers International Union of Canada as well as other interests.

The suggestion has been made, and again I present it to the Senate, that a notice period of 14 to 30 days should be implemented before a licence is issued. Many of us would be quite pleased with the 14-day figure because, in practical reality, 30 days may be entirely too long. The terms of this clause might discourage a frequent issuance of licences where similar Canadian ships might be able to accept the shipment. Concern has been expressed that a licence system that is easily accessed could result in an abuse of the system, losses to Canadian shippers and a loss of jobs to Canadians. A similar provision was included in Bill C-52 but was withdrawn because of pressure from the Atlantic provinces' transportation commissions.

[Senator Perrault.]

The Canadian Maritime Industries Association supports a Canadian-built ship requirement. Many Canadian shipyards are in desperate economic straits, especially in view of the phasing out of the shipbuilding industry assistance program and the productivity improvement grants that had aided Canadian shipbuilders.

I recall the oratory of 1984. It was particularly strident in the province of British Columbia. All of the Progressive Conservative candidates in B.C.'s Lower Mainland said that they intended to revive the shipbuilding industry of British Columbia, that this was an "action" government. They said they would build the world's largest polar ice-breaker, and that this would mean thousands of jobs for British Columbia.

I was almost inspired to review my own party's status when I heard the fiery oratory. I could not believe it. Yet, after the elections of 1984 and 1988, they cancelled the Polar 8 project on the west coast. You might think that after cancelling the Polar 8 project they would have reallotted some of the shipbuilding contracts to west coast yards in order to maintain that pool of highly skilled labour in the west coast shipbuilding industry. Why was it not possible to assign some of the frigate contracts or the coast guard contract to the west coast?

● (1450)

We have not had anything on the West Coast. The promise for a Polar 8 project elected dozens of Conservative candidates in British Columbia in two elections. I remember John Crosbie, on a windswept afternoon in the shipyard in North Vancouver, saying, "It is a solemn commitment from this government; we will build the greatest icebreaker ever launched." Well, that commitment melted. It has become the greatest non-icebreaker ever built, and one of the largest promises ever broken. Please do not revive that promise in the next election, which cannot come too soon. Do not have your local ministers once again saying, "We have gone through an agonizing reappraisal, and we have decided that we will build the old Polar 8 icebreaker after all." It will not work. Think of something else.

Senator Molgat: There is an election coming up; you never know.

Senator Perrault: I cannot convey to you the depth of the anger on the West Coast after the commitments to build that icebreaker were broken. The cancellation of the project was announced, yet no replacement work was forthcoming. It was an abdication of responsibility on the part of the government.

Senator Molgat: A typical, solemn promise.

Senator Perrault: When a Liberal government was in office, we built some of the best ships ever built in Canada on the West Coast and, yes, on the East Coast as well. It is important that on both coasts of this nation we maintain that highly skilled pool of shipbuilding expertise. This business of breaking pledges to West Coasters will not be easily forgotten. We have not received our fair share of shipbuilding from this government.

I mentioned safety a few moments ago. There is another aspect of safety with regard to foreign-licensed ships; that is, the status of foreign crews. This bill does not guarantee that foreign ships would be crewed comparably to Canadian ships. The number of deck hands and the working conditions on board are not mentioned. That is a cause of concern. In fact, another question should be asked: Do we want poorly compensated workers operating within Canadian waters?

We had a terrible incident last month in Vancouver involving a crew from Chile, the members of which had not been paid for weeks and months. Members of our Local Port Authority and union boarded the craft, and conditions on board the vessel were terrible—one would not subject animals to such squalor. We have a responsibility as supporters of human rights to be concerned about the workers who operate within our waters, whether or not they are Canadian.

Questions have also been raised about the clause that will allow the Governor in Council to make regulations prescribing the criteria to be applied by the National Transportation Agency when making determinations in respect to application for license. Would this give the government carte blanche with respect to licensing of foreign ships, which would not be the case with respect to criteria itemized in the legislation? This concern has been expressed by a number of organizations in this country.

The representations that I have received say, "Yes, the bill is moving in the right direction, and there is a lot of good in it." However, these individuals and groups are asking for a more comprehensive bill which would include a requirement that new vessels be built in, and that all present fishing vessels be maintained in, Canadian shipyards. It would also have all ships crewed by Canadians and increased tariffs for all vessels newly constructed, purchased or refitted outside of Canada from 25 per cent to 40 per cent. This is something that our committee should have considered. The committee should have heard representations from the Canadian Maritime Industries Association.

While the bill moves in the right direction, a number of fears remain. Certainly, the government should provide members of this Chamber—and I hope the sponsor of this bill will answer some of these questions—with a firm commitment that the implementation of the measures contained in this bill will be monitored closely, and that immediate remedial action will be taken before anyone attempts to distort or abrogate the conditions called for in the bill. These are times in which the entire transportation sector is under assault, and Canada's transportation gateways are in jeopardy, whether they offer rail transport or marine transport. We must move to improve the competitive position of our transportation gateways, or we will lose jobs and the economies of regions in all parts of Canada will suffer.

I want to give you an example. We are losing ground to U.S. transportation companies in U.S. ports now. In 1991, some bulk exporters began shipping via U.S. ports, where others made it clear they are investigating U.S. options. That is an incredible situation, to have Canadian industries opting to ship through U.S. ports because they think they can save a great deal of money. Based on practical, bottom-line results, one can understand their decisions in some cases. However, we must make our Canadian transportation gateways and ports competitive.

A recent round table report on transportation issued in Vancouver reveals that Seattle and other U.S. ports have also captured 70 per cent of the container market traffic from the Far East to Ontario and Quebec. Whether we are speaking of marine transport, rail transport or any other form of transport, we must help level the Canadian-U.S. playing field for transportation.

Canadian railways feed the port of Vancouver 80 per cent of the port's total traffic. Yet, Canadian railways pay 54 per cent more in taxes than U.S. railroads, 43 per cent higher fuel taxes, and property taxes between 38 and 160 per cent higher than the United States. How can we possibly compete?

Vancouver and Fraser ports in 1990 moved 88 million tonnes of cargo, 70 per cent of which was destined for international markets. Vancouver's total cross-Canada direct and indirect economic impact includes some 20,000 person years of employment, $1 billion of labour income, and $0.5 billion in payments to governments.

One of the purposes of this bill before us—and it represents a good cooperative endeavour involving all the parties on the Hill—is to make our marine sector more competitive and economically viable. This is a commendable objective; but, again, may I urge the government in the strongest possible terms to provide us with assurances that continuing surveillance will be maintained to make certain that the objectives of the legislation are properly served.

Let us move this measure into committee as quickly as possible. Perhaps the government will look sympathetically on certainly amendments that we may wish to propose. I know that those on the other side are basking in a spirit of goodwill these days, and we eagerly anticipate having them support some of the ideas that we intend to propose at that time.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Forrestall, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twenty-Second Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Supplementary Budget—Banking, Trade and Commerce), presented in the Senate on May 12, 1992.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the Twenty-Second Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

ADHERENCE TO TREATIES ADOPTED AT EARTH SUMMIT—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, June 16, 1992, I will call the attention of the Senate to the importance and urgency of federal governments' fulfilling their commitments to treaties protecting the global environment, adopted at the Rio de Janeiro Earth Summit, and the role of parliamentarians in this matter.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 14, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with regard to the election clock for today, for the respecters of democracy—and I know that Senator Marshall is one of those, it reads 191 days. But for any, and I hope there are none in this house, who are cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, the remaining days are 577.

I wish everyone an enjoyable long weekend. However, even though it is a long weekend, the clock will be ticking. By the time we get back here on Tuesday the clock will be down to 186 days. I do not want to spoil anyone's weekend; I just want to remind you that the clock will be ticking this long weekend.

[Translation]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FOURTEENTH REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras: Honourable senators, the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its fourteenth report.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and Minutes of the Proceedings of this day and form part of the permanent records of this House.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 1515.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Poitras, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources concerning the committee's budget application for the fiscal year 1992-93.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent record of this House.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 1518.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Hays, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, had the honour to present the following report:

THURSDAY, May 14, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTY-THIRD REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical, and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject-matter of bills, and estimates as may be referred to it, as authorized by the Senate on Wednesday, April 8, 1992. The said supplementary budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$53,829.00
Transportation and Communications	40,075.00
Other Expenditures	4,500.00
TOTAL	$98,404.00

Respectfully submitted,

THÉRÈSE LAVOIE-ROUX
Chairperson

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Lavoie-Roux, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 19, 1992, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 193 citizens of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Thornhill, Don Mills, Willowdale, Scarborough, Toronto and Cornwall. These 193 people are especially annoyed that this regressive, unfair tax applies to books and periodicals.

They will remember that the Conservative senators voted unanimously against a proposed Liberal amendment that would have exempted books and periodicals from any tax, as most civilized countries in the world do.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

JUSTICE

SOCIAL UNREST—PROPOSED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH BIG CITY MAYORS AND FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week I asked him whether there was a possibility that the Prime Minister would meet with the mayors of key cities in Canada in response to the problem of social unrest, which was manifesting itself in Toronto. I read into the record then a request from the mayors written by the Mayor of the City of London. I have not seen any report of any meeting. Is anything happening?

● (1410)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I am sorry to say, honourable senators, that I do not have a report on that matter. I shall renew the inquiry.

THE SENATE

INVOLVEMENT IN OFFICIAL EVENTS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am concerned about the role of the Senate on Parliament Hill and whether we are indeed being considered as part of Parliament. I have always thought that we were an integral part of Parliament, which is made up of the two houses, but of late it seems the Senate is being overlooked. That may seem like a small detail, and I am not suggesting it is the end of the world, but it keeps on recurring.

For example, last week a press release was sent to all employees on Parliament Hill informing them of the return of the historic noonday gun salute to the Hill. This release was jointly from the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Honourable John A. Fraser, and the Chairman of the National Capital Commission. A day or so ago another activity on Parliament Hill involved the planting of a tree; I believe it was part of the Green Program.

If the Senate is indeed an integral part of Parliament, it seems to me that any event or ceremony affecting Parliament should involve not just one house, or the Speaker of one house, but both houses and the Speakers of both houses. Could the minister tell us why there seems to be this dichotomy, and why this house is not being treated as part of Parliament?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, let me say first of all that I agree fully with the general principle enunciated by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. As far as the particular cases are concerned, I cannot say very much about them, but my impression is that the exercise involving the noonday gun is funded by the National Capital Commission and by the budget of the House of Commons. For that reason Mr. Speaker Fraser and Mrs. Piggot were the two leading personalities involved in that ceremony.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I appreciate the funding aspect, but was there even any suggestion that we might participate or that we should be asked to consider the matter? If we had said that we did not want to participate, then I would say it is our problem. However, if an event takes place on Parliament Hill, there is absolutely no reason why the two houses should not be treated equally. If we choose not to participate that is our problem, but in the first instance we ought to have the opportunity to be involved in whatever goes on on Parliament Hill equally with the other place.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as I said, I do not disagree with that principle at all.

EXTRADITION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. R. James Balfour moved the third reading of Bill C-31, to amend the Extradition Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT SUSPENSION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Forrestall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly, for the second reading of Bill C-67, An Act to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was here on Monday night when our friend Senator Stanbury spoke to this matter, as did the Leader of the Opposition. Since that time, I have taken the time to read the speech that Senator Stanbury made and the brief remarks by the Leader of the Opposition, and also to take counsel with our advisors—particularly our legal and constitutional advisors—concerning this bill.

I intend to place on the record some notes that have been given to me which set out the government position on the matter and which I believe lay out the legal and constitutional basis of the bill. Nevertheless, I am aware from hearing Senator Stanbury on Monday night and from reading his speech, that he has raised important and interesting policy considerations and constitutional considerations which he wants to explore further.

When I have finished my remarks, if the house gives second reading to the bill, I would propose that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. While I cannot undertake to produce all of the witnesses that Senator Stanbury has mentioned, I will undertake that we will provide witnesses who are competent and authorized to deal with and to address the legal and constitutional points, as well as the policy considerations that he has raised.

The first point I wish to make, honourable senators, is that Bill C-67 is not an attempt to undermine representation by population, nor is it an attempt to amend the Constitution of Canada. The purpose of the bill is to suspend the operation of the redistribution process for a very short period while possible amendments to the process are considered.

The bill provides that the usual redistribution will be suspended for only one year. If there happens to be a general election in progress at that time, then the suspension will extend until 180 days after the election writs are returned. If the Parliament of Canada has done nothing to amend the act by then, the act comes back into force. So there is an ultimate deadline for action in this case.

I may say that this is not the first time Parliament has legislated in this sense. Some honourable senators will recall that in 1973 an act virtually identical in its effect was passed by Parliament and given Royal Assent. The act in question at that time was An Act to suspend the operations of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, which is exactly the title of Bill C-67.

Honourable senators will see in clause 3 of Bill C-67 that the chief statistician is obliged to start the process over again after the temporary suspension is over. There is nothing in Bill C-67 which is incompatible with the Constitution, since it is simply a deferral of the beginning of a very lengthy and costly process.

Provisions related to electoral distribution are set out in section 51 of the Constitution. This bill does not affect section 51 in any way. Let me read subsection 51(1) to reinforce my point:

• (1420)

> 51.(1) The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall, on the coming into force of this subsection and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census, be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:
>
> 1. There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and seventy-nine and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, counting any remainder in excess of 0.50 as one after the said process of division.
>
> 2. If the total number of members that would be assigned to a province by the application of rule 1 is less than the total number assigned to that province on the date of coming into force of this subsection, there shall be added to the number of members so assigned such number of members as will result in the province having the same number of members as were assigned on that date.

The Constitution remains unchanged by this bill. A redistribution must take place after each decennial census. Bill C-67 merely delays the start of the next redistribution for a period of time.

If it is decided that the redistribution process should be reformed after the recommendations of the Lortie Commission are analyzed, then new legislation either amending section 51 of the constitution or the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, or both, would be brought before Parliament, including of course the Senate. Honourable senators would have the opportunity to address any issues of concern at that time.

If such an amendment to the Constitution were proposed, it would be done by simple legislation in Parliament in accordance with section 44 of the Constitution Act, the amending formula that provides for amendment of the Constitution in certain respects by the action of Parliament alone. The Senate's approval would then be necessary.

As it happens, section 51 of the Constitution has been amended by legislative action several times in the past to take account of new circumstances. The latest amendment was the Representation Act, 1985. I have looked at the Constitution Act, page 13 of my consolidation, which is dated October 1, 1989. A quick reading of the footnotes at page 14 and 15 indicates that section 51 had also been amended in 1952 and 1974 by legislative action of Parliament.

Bill C-67 does not touch the formula in section 51, and it does not in any way suspend part of the constitution. For quite legitimate reasons, with which Senator Stanbury agrees, we felt it advisable to delay the next redistribution. It would save time and money being expended while we look at the work done and the recommendations made by the Lortie Commission.

Honourable senators, there endeth the notes and advice that I have been given on this matter and which I have been pleased to place on the record. As I indicated, if honourable senators are prepared to give second reading to this bill now, we would do as Senator Stanbury asks and propose its referral to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, there to explore further with competent and authorized witnesses the policy considerations and legal and constitutional points of interest to Senator Stanbury and other colleagues.

● (1430)

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, an argument could be made that leave is required in order for me to speak to this item again, although I could make the counter-argument that when it was before us last I moved its adjournment and that motion was not opposed.

[Senator Murray.]

If some honourable senator wishes to raise such a point of order, I will deal with it accordingly. If not, I will make the following response to the intervention of the Leader of the Government.

First, I want to tell him that all of us are obliged for his prompt, responsible, and quite correct response to the concerns expressed by Senator Stanbury and myself. I think that is exactly the way to proceed in such a case. In other words, the government can put on the record, as the Leader of the Government in the Senate has done, the position of the government on the constitutional question raised by Senator Stanbury. I also agree with him that there is no need to complicate the issue unnecessarily by referring the bill to committee before it receives second reading. In my view, Senator Murray has given the Committee on Legal and Constitutional affairs the right material to consider, and that also gives those of us who continue to be concerned the opportunity to examine that material and to call appropriate witnesses on the subject.

He states that the bill was not meant to undermine the principle of representation by population. We never meant to imply that it did. We certainly do not believe that was the intent. Rather, we are of the opinion that the constitutional dimension to the bill was an unintended result. We do not believe there was an intention to undermine the principle of representation by population, or, in some underhanded way, to amend the Constitution. That was not our allegation.

We now have the opportunity to examine the detailed comments made by Senator Murray about section 51(1). On the surface I find his arguments persuasive. For the same reasons I mentioned yesterday, I have some problems with the use of the words "merely delays". I think what is taking place here is "merely a delay", although we will see when we examine it more closely.

I am still concerned about legislation that "merely delays" a constitutional provision. For example, one would not want to think that by statute we could merely delay the constitutional provisions requiring elections within certain periods of time. It has been done in the past, as Senator Murray pointed out, but of course he is not suggesting that that is any reason for us not to notice now something that we may not have noticed before, namely, the constitutional dimension to such legislation.

Senator Grafstein has a concern that is not directly in this category, but one which will be quite easily looked after. I do not mean that it will be answered, but it will be dealt with by the committee. I refer to the possible disenfranchisement of some electors on a "rep-by-pop" basis. I leave it to him to make that intervention before the committee. If he had been here today, he would probably have wanted to make it at second reading. Therefore, I make it on his behalf simply to give the committee notice that he may be raising it there.

For those reasons, honourable senators, we have no objection to this bill's receiving second reading now. We have the undertaking of the government leader that it will go to the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, where all the debate, including his official position on the question, can be considered and the evidence of other witnesses can also be considered, including, perhaps, some participation from one of our resident constitutional experts, Senator Beaudoin.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Senator Murray, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelleher, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Ross, for the second reading of Bill C-53, to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am sure, will remember the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on August 2, 1990. They will also remember the world's response to that action.

Members of the United Nations Security Council voted unanimously to condemn the invasion and demanded the immediate withdrawal of Iraqi troops. The United States, Britain and France immediately impounded billions of dollars of Iraqi and Kuwaiti assets and banned trade with the offender.

Here in Canada we joined the UN and condemned the invasion. On August 4, 1990, two days after the invasion, the government decided to pursue various measures against Iraq to reinforce its condemnation of the invasion. Those measures included an embargo on imports of Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil, and the suspension of all trade and business promotion activity by the government on behalf of Canadian exports to Iraq.

That, however, was, at the time, as far as the government could go. Unlike the United States, Britain and France, the Canadian government had no power to forbid domestic companies from carrying on commercial activities with Iraq.

By August 7, however, the United Nations Security Council had voted unanimously to impose sweeping economic and weapons sanctions on Iraq. Canada responded to this initiative by prohibiting all Iraqi and Kuwaiti imports to Canada, all exports to both countries, and placed a freeze on any assets and securities of the Iraqi and Kuwaiti governments and their agencies. That action was taken under the authority of the United Nations Act, which allowed the government to take such measures following a resolution of the United Nations.

Mr. Joe Clark, who was then Secretary of State for External Affairs, expressed his support for economic sanctions in a news letter released on August 8, 1990, in which he stated:

> The seriousness of the situation required that we act immediately to ensure that Canada demonstrate its commitment to collective international action to bring an end to the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait . . . It is important that other countries also act expeditiously to enforce the United Nations sanctions.

In January, it was decided that sanctions were not having the desired effect. Iraqis did not heed the final ultimatum to withdraw from Kuwait by January 15, and by January 16 the world was at war with Iraq.

Bill C-53, to provide for the imposition of special economic measures, deals with the issue of economic sanctions. The bill would give the government more flexibility to impose economic sanctions either during or in anticipation of an international crisis.

The concept behind the economic sanctions is a relatively simple one. The idea is, if we cut off trade with an offending state or states, we can smoke them out of that house, so to speak; dissuade them from whatever action we find objectionable. That is, if that state no longer receives any imports and none of its exports are accepted outside their house, its supplies in economic resources will soon run out, forcing the state to leave the offending position. Of course, to be effective, sanctions must be enforced by more than one nation.

We on this side of the Chamber see the underlying principle of this legislation as being a worthy one. That the government should be able to impose economic sanctions in an attempt to influence another state's actions before resorting to war is imperative. This is a principle which I support, my party supports and, I believe, Canadians support.

Although economic sanctions can be a beneficial tool in avoiding a military conflict with a nation, the Canadian government is somewhat limited in its ability to use this tool. It does not have the authority to impose economic sanctions unless the United Nations Security Council passes a resolution imposing mandatory sanctions. The government can then, as it did in August of 1990, invoke the United Nations Act to apply the sanctions called for, but that takes time and prevents immediate action from being taken by the Canadian government. International crises which warrant sanctions quite often develop suddenly, and must be dealt with immediately. Bill C-53 would permit the government to impose sanctions immediately.

We must remember that the situation to which Canada wishes to respond may not actually involve a breach of international law. In these cases, the U.N. Security Council might signal its disapproval but it may not pass a resolution calling for mandatory sanctions. The Canadian government in that case would not be able to invoke the United Nations Act, and thus could not impose any sanctions. Bill C-53 deals with that type of situation by giving the government the authority to impose sanctions without invoking the United Nations Act.

Although we support the underlying principle of the bill and we will be supporting the bill at second reading, there are a number of questions we would like considered in committee.

First, the bill would permit the government to impose a variety of economic sanctions against a foreign state, if the Governor in Council believed that a serious international crisis had or could develop due to a grave breach of peace and security.

Generally speaking, we may all understand what a "grave breach" of international peace and security is. Question: Is a general understanding of the words adequate in a piece of legislation of this kind? The bill provides no definition for a grave breach of international peace and security. That is my first question.

Second, the bill also provides the government with authority to seize, freeze, or sequester any property located in Canada held by or on behalf of a foreign state or a person in that foreign state. Question: Does this mean that all nationals in Canada from the state against which sanctions are being imposed, including refugee claimants fleeing persecution in that country, could have their property confiscated? How will it affect Canadians residing in the foreign state? Will it affect any possessions they may have in Canada?

The third concern is one expressed by Prairie Pools Incorporated, the national policy arm of the Alberta Wheat Pool, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and Manitoba Pool Elevators. They point out that sanctions may be placed on the sale of food products. Question: Is it possible that food will be used as a political weapon, which would be contrary to what Barry Wilson described in the Ottawa Citizen dated August 17, 1990, as Canada's traditional view, namely that:

> . . . food is not an appropriate club to use when trying to beat hungry nations into line.

Bill C-53 does provide for certain exceptions. With the permission of the Governor in Council, a minister could deliver a permit to a person or to a Canadian outside Canada to exempt that person from pursuing an activity to which special economic measures apply. Question: Would this include organizations? Will it include non-profit Canadian groups doing missionary work in the foreign state? How might economic sanctions affect such groups? We should examine how the bill might affect such humanitarian organizations.

Undeniably, the imposition of economic sanctions can badly damage Canadian companies operating in foreign countries. Sanctions can result in lost exports, loss of market share and loss of jobs. Question: Where is there anything in the bill which requires the government to present a report to Parliament on the effect of the imposition of sanctions? We are not necessarily asking for an economic justification of the government's actions, but rather we are wondering whether the bill will require the government to tell Canadians how the sanctions will affect their everyday lives. Should the government be required to provide Parliament and Canadians with progress reports on the sanctions? This would indicate how well and how quickly sanctions were working.

[Senator Frith.]

The sixth question is about Parliament. Notice that economic sanctions could be imposed even when Parliament is not sitting. There is no provision which would require the government to recall Parliament to debate the sanctions. Parliament is now being asked to pass a bill to give the government this power. As we pass the bill, we should understand that, as I read the bill as it now stands, there is no provision that will require the government to recall Parliament to debate the sanctions that we may now be giving them the authority to impose.

By imposing economic sanctions, remember, we are not just gently tapping on the shoulder of an offending state and asking it to please stop the offending action. By imposing sanctions, we are telling the offending state in no uncertain terms that we strongly disapprove of its action and will do everything we can to get it to stop, short of using force or aggression, or at least as a first step thereto.

Is it appropriate that any government—for when we pass this legislation, we will be giving this power to any government—be able to take such action without any debate in Parliament? As parliamentarians, we all recognize that Parliament's authority is minimal, and is becoming more and more minimal to any government that has a majority in the House of Commons. Its present role is impotent enough without adding this, it seems to me, as another example of how governments ask Parliament for authority and then proceed on the basis of that authority without making any provision for having to consult Parliament again. Perhaps this is another example of the dwindling usefulness and authority of Parliament. As in most cases, legislation is of little use unless it is being enforced.

The bill authorizes peace officers to search any building, receptacle or place without a search warrant if there are reasonable grounds to believe that there has been an infringement of the act. Does the term "place" include a private dwelling? If the clause is interpreted to include private dwellings, we would have a situation where peace officers could enter anyone's home—yours, mine or anyone else's—at any time of day or night without a search warrant. Was the legislation intended to include private dwellings? We do not know. We should find out. The definition of "place" should be clarified.

Honourable senators can see that although we support this legislation, our support is not absolute. I have raised seven main questions. There may be others. We hope the committee charged with the study of Bill C-53 will investigate and provide answers to these questions which we believe are important.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Kelleher, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO DELAY TABLING OF REPORT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Senator Poitras, pursuant to notice of May 13, 1992, moved:

> That notwithstanding the order of reference adopted by the Senate on December 17, 1991, the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to table the final report on the special study on the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Compensation Corporation and the Property and Casualty Insurance Compensation Corporation, no later than October 29, 1992.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

THIRTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Thirteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (budget—special study), presented in the Senate on 13th May, 1992.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Poitras, the chairman of the committee, I move the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON A RENEWED CANADA

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the report of the Special Joint Committee on a Renewed Canada, dated 28th February, 1992 (Sessional Paper 343-416A).

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, I would like to take advantage of the tabling of the Beaudoin-Dobbie report to share with you some of my thoughts on Senate reform. The report deals with many other very interesting aspects of constitutional reform, but I will confine myself to the Senate.

I have read somewhere that over a 25-year period more than 35 proposals have been made on various occasions for reforming the Senate. They were the brain children of federal and provincial governments, parliamentary committees in Ottawa, learned university professors, bar associations, journalists, royal commissions, political parties, and even senators.

With the passage of time certain core conclusions have emerged from all these rich and varied proposals. I would like to mention two. The first is that our federation should keep its second legislative house—retain it, that is, as a component of Parliament and not, as some have for perfectly valid reasons suggested, transform it into a kind of economic and social council whose members would be chosen by the government, presumably on the basis of their experience and their ability to advise the government wisely about public policy.

Senator MacEachen, among others, categorically rejected this option a few years ago in this very chamber when he said that the government did not need an upper house to reread its bills because it already had a perfectly competent civil service. Personally, I have reservations about entrusting government bills to government and civil servants solely, but let that pass.

So an initial consensus seems to be that we need a true legislative upper house. The second is that such a house should be elected and not appointed. This has been argued for a long time on a variety of grounds, regardless of how scrupulously appointments are made. The fact of being elected seems to be a requisite for legitimacy in a democratic system.

This is an important conclusion to have reached, because our system is derived from the British system. In opting for an elected upper house we are turning away from the Westminster model, a model that has stood the test of time and proved to be well adapted to the way we human beings play the political game, even in a very different geographical and cultural context.

What are the consequences of opting for an elected Senate? I would like to approach this question from two angles; first, the nature of our system of government and, second, the basic postulates of the federal nature of our political institutions.

Elected Senate and responsible government is my first theme. Our system of government, that is to say party government, makes a majority government a sort of monopoly enterprise conducted along party lines. Normally the leader of the party with the majority in the house forms the government. The opposition opposes, but it is more or less without effective power as long as the majority party's solidarity holds.

Our system thus implies a strong government, unlike, for instance, the congressional system adopted by our neighbours to the south or the system that has become traditional at our municipal level. I will note, however, that in Canada the upper house is more powerful under the Constitution than in Britain, thanks to a variety of historical economic and cultural circumstances.

Under the American system of congressional government there is no monopoly like the one our government enjoys here. Rather, there are two governments, the White House or president on the one side, and Congress on the other. Congress itself is split between the House of Representatives and the Senate. Constant jockeying is the rule, not along party lines in the lower house as is the case in Canada, but between two houses and between Congress and the White House.

Because power is more decentralized in the States than in Canada, the jockeying for advantage results in continual compromises on the substance—often inconsistent—of public policy. In Canada, on the other hand, an elected government implements its party's programs with a certain degree of co-operation from the non-elected Senate. Historically this is indeed what has happened. This does not necessarily guarantee consistency either, but that is another question.

● (1500)

What would be the effect in Canada of an elected upper house? We must look at this question, because it is the non-elected status of the Senate that at the present time virtually illegitimizes any concerted campaign we may wage against certain government bills.

At any rate, this seems to be the lesson in history. We learned from her, for example, that when the House of Lords tried to stand out against the elected House of Commons, it had to give way in the end, partly because it was not an elected body. In Canada, constitutional provisions unused since 1867 recently enabled the government to have the final say, after everything the current opposition Senate could do.

In the United States, senators have been elected for the past 80 years. Once they began to be elected, they gained a democratic legitimacy that has made them important spokesmen for their regions—perhaps at the expense of other elected representatives at the state level, for example, the governors. Many analysts assert that the Senate's elected status has gradually strengthened the central government. I will return to this point later.

Will an elected Senate in Canada lead to the same result? You will tell me that this depends on what powers it holds and I will say in return that, because of the fundamental nature of the party system of government, the powers of our Senate cannot be equal to those of the American Senate.

In this chamber we heard Senator Beaudoin discussing his committee report, Senator MacEachen criticizing an elected Senate's insufficient powers over legislation, and Senator Roblin explaining that controlling the executive in the way the Liberal opposition wanted in a system like ours amounted to control of the House of Commons. The exchange enabled us to grasp what is at stake in the debate if not to find the perfect solution to the dilemma—that is, a solution that would respect the system of a responsible government while encouraging the fresh clash of ideas about all bills except money bills to flourish, without limit.

Like the United States, we have in theory, if not in practice, a procedure for conciliation in cases where the two houses reach an impasse. But apart from that procedure, must the House of Commons have an override so that the will of the electorate and the government can prevail? When the American president and Congress reach an impasse, two procedures can be adopted: the president can veto a congressional bill but Congress can then get around the veto by a qualified majority vote. In practice the executive branch in the United States can block a great many measures it regards as unresolvable, but a qualified majority of members of the legislature of the Congress can sometimes get the last word.

[Senator Bolduc.]

Senator Frith: I am sorry, was the word you used "qualified majority"?

Senator Bolduc: Yes, qualified; I should have said perhaps 67 per cent.

Senator Frith: Yes. I understand what you mean, "qualified" in terms of that constitution.

Senator Bolduc: How can we design a system for Canada in which the Senate is elected, yet the majority view of the House of Commons prevails, not only for money bills but also for any bills?

It is clear that the system we have imported from Westminster is a strong government system, since the government—in other words, the cabinet—is a kind of parliamentary committee made up of the majority party's leading lights. To put it bluntly, the government has to be able to govern. In other words, the will of the majority in the House Commons must prevail or the result is instability.

This having been said, could there be another elected parliamentary body whose mission would be to legislate on government initiatives but without collusion or without the "lockstep" attitude that has been used to strengthen the central government?

As we know, the Constitution of 1867 gave Ottawa almost unlimited powers to tax and spend. Combined with an acquiescent Senate, the result has been government intervention to a much greater degree than in the United States, for example, or in Switzerland. For proof we need to look no further than the elevated percentage of GDP that passes through the hands of government. The difference is about 15 per cent of GDP, or 30 per cent of total government intervention; that is to say, about 30 per cent in the United States and 45 or 42 per cent in Canada. This is extraordinary.

Second, this interventionism has been characterized by federal launching of major programs: Infrastructures, health, vocational training, post-secondary education, research, income security, pensions, allowances, welfare, unemployment insurance, equalization, economic regulation. Inevitably, centralization has been the result. A third characteristic of this trend has been public programs taken over by the civil service—in other words, a certain bureaucratization of public services.

If we had the time, I could list all the multitude of areas in which Ottawa has intervened—the whole range of instruments it has used and the extraordinary socioeconomic and political administrative consequences of its involvement. Some people will argue that excellent reasons justify this growth and the influence of the federal government. Those reasons have successfully included the Great Depression, the Second World War, major cultural transformation, democracy, and technological change. The real cause is the internal logic of collective action.

In a system based on a simple majority of participants, coalitions in favour of privileges are easier to organize than coalitions that oppose them on principle. Of course, it is easier to decide to grant such privileges than to deny them. This is just as true of elected representatives as it is of human beings, generally. That is the real reason for deficits. As Hayek noted, democracy by simple majority lends a gloss of legitimacy to government intervention aimed at redistribution.

To return to my question: Is it possible for the Senate to be something of a counterweight to the three forces that have historically marked the duration of our constitutional revolution—that is, the high degree of government interventionalism, centralization and the bureaucratization of public services?

In the past, senators were often appointed for party reasons so that the views of a majority of senators would be, as it were, bound to those of their party. National parties constitute a unifying force: They inevitably have a centralists view and a preference for locating all the power in one place when their turn comes to make the laws in Ottawa. How realistically can we think that elected senators, most likely elected with the help of a party, could be less loyal to their leaders? This is what drives the political process.

Moreover, central decision-making is by definition unique and applies to the entire territory. It is the equivalent of a monopoly in the marketplace. It inevitably favours uniformity and standardization. All Ottawa's efforts to help the provinces—for example, equalization payments, rules for established programs financing, standardizing regulations, and so on, tend to work against the logic of the competitive market and the mobility of resources that is the raison d'être of the economic union. The economic union is supposed to make the provincial governments compete with one another and thus protect the citizen against disadvantageous laws.

To what extent would an elected Senate be likely to see things differently and to behave in a way that defies the internal logic of centralist collective behavior described earlier as being the deeply rooted motivating force in parliamentary governments? If governments tend to give pressure groups privileges at the expense of the silent majority, how can the Senate counter this tendency and get the upper hand on these interest groups which gain strength with every victory? How can this current be diverted when it is conceded at the start that the Senate should represent regional views while the lower house, by its make-up, is supposed to favour centralism.

To say that the Senate must be made the body that represents the regions in debates on the issues of the day is to say that it will be speaking for special interest groups. In that case, by definition, the winning coalition in Ottawa will reflect the majority, which in the House of Commons is necessarily centralist. Lastly, if the Senate represented the regions, would the consequence be a diminished role for premiers at federal-provincial conferences?

Senator Frith: You bet.

Senator MacEachen: It sure would.

Senator Bolduc: Electing the Senate might resolve the question of its legitimacy in a democratic system, but it would not necessarily solve the problem I have raised here. It follows that the fundamental issue in constitutional reform, once it has been conceded that the will of the people—as embodied in the House of Commons and the theory that the government must prevail—is that of the distribution of powers within Canada. How is sovereignty to be shared? We have seen how the current dynamic driving the federal spending power has in practice brought about a constitutional change in the way jurisdiction is divided between Canada and the provinces even without any formal change in the law. So the rules of the game must be modified if we are to return to sound federalisim—at least what I would call sound federalisim, which is to say shared sovereignty. Shared sovereignty is the guarantee of a rediscovered political responsibility in Canada, where each level of government levies its own taxes to pay for its own spending.

This question can be resolved in three possible ways: the opting-out formula of the Meech Lake agreement; the opting-in formula in the Beaudoin-Dobbie Report, which when used in the 1960s proved costly for Quebecers; and the third option, a ban on the use of federal spending power in exclusively provincial areas of jurisdiction, combined of course with an equalization formula that ensures an approximately equal fiscal capacity in every province. My personal preference is for the third formula. Let me explain why.

Canadian federalisim, which in principle consists of shared sovereignty, has a number characteristics that differentiate it from federalisim in the United States, Switzerland and Germany. By giving the federal government almost unlimited powers to tax and spend, the Constitution of 1867 also gave it a wide range of instruments for intervention which it used enthusiastically in the nineteenth century and especially in the second half of the twentieth century.

The in-depth review carried out by the Beaudoin-Dobbie Committee did not convince its members that the system should be radically altered, except perhaps by placing conditions on Ottawa's spending power in exclusively provincial areas of jurisdiction through agreements with the province or provinces concerned. In other words, an opting-in formula in place of Meech Lake's opting-out formula.

Senator MacEachen, who spoke after Senator Beaudoin, set out for us his vision of the way things are, which included opting in. He listed a series of principles showing the differences between the old, actual, system and the one envisaged. It seems to me that underlying his vision was a certain fear that the central government would crumble if it did not do what it has done for the last 40 years.

Senator Roblin, who was less explicit on the issue, also fears that multiplying or transferring powers to provinces would weaken Ottawa. In my opinion the federal system is close to collapse precisely because Ottawa taxes and the provinces spend. We have to take into account the momentum generated when establishing the rules of the constitutional game.

One of the characteristics of our constitutional evolution is that for 40 years we have been setting aside the 1867 distribution of powers, which was designed to circumscribe the power of legislatures, in order to expand the powers to tax and spend. We have changed the Constitution via the spending power. That is the reason for today's conflicts, in my opinion.

The last question that arises is that of the Senate's possible role as counterweight to the forces I have described. From that perspective too, I believe, the Senate should have a constitutional control over the executive branch, for there are other meanings for the expression "controlling the executive" besides an absolute veto over legislation.

If the Senate's legislative control of the executive as a policy-making body must necessarily be limited, since everything else would frustrate the will of the people as embodied in the House of Commons, there are in my opinion other roles and functions that would be very suitable for the Senate. I am thinking of control of the executive in its role of policy-making by regulation and programming and in its role of the management of public affairs, in particular the organization of the administrative structure, with its departments, commissions, corporations, boards and other agencies, and management of the public finances and of the federal public service itself. Because some members of the Senate participate very actively in the Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations, the Senate can already be said to play a significant part in ensuring that the executive—that is to say, the cabinet, individual ministers and senior officials —does not exceed the regulatory authority delegated to it by the enabling legislation. This type of oversight is a very appropriate role for the Senate because of both its composition and its mandate, and it should be spelled out in the Constitution reform that is coming to birth in Canada today.

Still in the realm of policy-making and going beyond review of how the government exercises its regulatory powers, the Senate has produced many studies that have had a definite impact on the orientation of public policy in Canada. The late Senator Lamontagne, who was my economics professor at Laval, pointed out in one of his reports the extent of the Senate's contribution to the formulation of public policy in Canada. I can easily imagine this house continuing along the same lines. For example, we could, through our public finance committee or some other body, produce annual reports evaluating government programs involving various aspects of public affairs.

[Senator Bolduc.]

The Senate should also have a statutory and even a constitutional mandate for the monitoring of the interests of minorities. The Beaudoin-Dobbie Report incorporates this vision in its discussion of linguistic and cultural issues by proposing a double majority, but oversight could go further: It could include, for example, ratifying the appointments of the heads of certain administrative agencies such as federal cultural organizations or certain administrative commissions.

● (1520)

In the same way, the Senate should exercise a form of special supervision of certain other federal agencies whose mission is to protect the public at large, and individual members of it, from the dangers of bureaucracy. I am thinking here of the activities of bodies like the Human Rights Commission, the Public Service Commission, the Privacy Commission and so forth.

The Senate can also exert considerable—and by no means negligible—influence through the quality of its opinions, rather as the upper echelons of the public service do, but as an alternative to them. Opinions on what? On monetary and fiscal policy, on equalization payment rules, on regional development as it affects particular regions or provinces, on treaties dealing with international trade or affecting areas of provincial jurisdiction, on the exercise of the federal spending power, and many, many more. This having been said, however, and important though it is, we must nonetheless be careful to avoid illusions about the actual power of an elected Senate, especially when it comes to reversing the dominant trends in Canadian federalism. That goal will have to be achieved through the other aspects of constitutional reform to which I have referred.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Riel, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL PUBLIC SERVICE WEEK BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition) moved second reading of Bill C-328, respecting National Public Service Week: Serving Canadians Better.

He said: Honourable senators, every day, virtually every Canadian receives from one of our levels of government a benefit. These benefits range from the dramatic rescue of life by a firefighter to the more mundane, but nevertheless important, provision of a clean and safe supply of drinking water. These services which we provide one another help transform a group of individuals into a community. Though Canadians take great pleasure in complaining about government, they nevertheless turn to it and expect it to assist them in one way or another during virtually every day of their lives.

When a bank collapses, it is to the government that depositors look to for reimbursement. When a factory closes, it is to the government the unemployed workers look for assistance.

Shoppers in our supermarkets take for granted that the produce they buy is safe. When we send our children to school, we expect their teachers will be qualified and interested. Whether we are caught in a natural disaster or enjoying a summer vacation, our safety and well-being is, to a large extent, determined by the level of service which is provided by our governments and the competence with which that service is delivered. We like to think that only some others use government services, and then we proceed to complain about its inefficiency or high cost.

Bill C-328 is designed to recognize the role of those who provide these services—those who implement our collective decisions. Governments take decisions on behalf of the citizens, but without public servants, they would be operating in a vacuum.

As I mentioned, it is fashionable to complain about government and bureaucracy. I believe it would be a good thing if some of these prevailing attitudes were, yes, undermined and we could have some regular reminder of how every citizen depends on government services as delivered by our public servants.

Bill C-328 is short. There are but two sections to the bill. The first reads:

> This Act may be cited as the National Public Service Week: Serving Canadians Better Act. The second section provides:
>
> Throughout Canada, in each and every year, the third week of the month of June shall be known as the "Public Service National Week".
>
> For the purposes of this section, "third week" means the period ending the third Saturday of the month and beginning the previous Sunday.

That is the entire bill.

It is not a political statement—capital "P" or to some extent a small "p", depending on how you understand that statement—but rather a simple recognition by politicians—us—that their endeavours would be pointless were it not for the bureaucracy which carries out their will. It also is a recognition by all Canadians, as expressed through their representatives, of the day-to-day vital role the public service plays in their lives. This perspective is echoed in the preamble of Bill C-328 which reads:

> WHEREAS the people of Canada recognize the value of services rendered by the federal public service employees;
>
> AND WHEREAS the Government of Canada wishes to acknowledge the contribution of the federal public service employees to the federal administration;
>
> NOW, THEREFORE, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

So we are expressing the view of Parliament, of course, as we do with all legislation, and empowering the government to put into effect this referred-to week.

Though the bill speaks of federal public service employees, of which there are 529,000, it is also meant to recognize the 506,000 provincial employees and 343,000 municipal employees in Canada. For those who may take these numbers as evidence of a bloated bureaucracy, I refer them to a recent report by the Economic Council of Canada entitled Canada's Public Sector, A Graphic Overview. At page 38, we find table 42 entitled "Wages and employment in general government as a percentage of national totals", dated 1989. It compares the size of our public service in a graph form to our other OECD partners. I wonder if it would be a good idea—if it would not be too difficult—to put that one page on the record, if I could have your leave. It is a graphic illustration of the point made in the report; namely, that of the seven OECD countries, Canada ranks third in terms of wages paid to government employees. However, and I will read directly from the report:

> Canadian government employment, on the other hand, as a percentage of total national employment, ranks sixth among the leading industrial (G-7) countries.

In Canada, as the graph shows, approximately 14 per cent of the labour force works for government. Only in Japan is the number lower. In the United States, approximately 15 per cent of the population is employed by government. In Germany, the figure is 16 per cent. In the United Kingdom, 20 per cent of the workforce is employed by government, and in France the figure is 26 per cent against 14 per cent for Canada. Again, even in the United States, the proportion of government employees in the work force is greater than in Canada.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, Marlene Catterall should be commended for introducing this legislation in the other place.

I have a document that may interest senators, entitled "National Weeks Semaines Nationale." It lists all the weeks of observance throughout the year. You will find such things as National Transportation Week, National Safe Boating Week, National Farm Safety Week, National School Safety Week, and National Safe Driving Week, among others. Until the introduction of this bill, no recognition had been given to those hundreds of thousands of Canadians who work for the public service, the public servants of Canada.

Although Bill C-328 will not bring any tangible benefits to public servants, perhaps it will help change attitudes, which in itself would be a healthy development for our country.

I ask honourable senators to support this bill at second reading. If it does receive such support, I will recommend that it be referred to the Stamding Senate Committee on National Finance, which deals with public service questions.

On motion of Senator DeWare, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

NORTHWEST CANADA CONFERENCE EVANGELICAL CHURCH—BILL TO AMEND ACT OF INCORPORATION—THIRD READING

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition), for the Honourable H.A. Olson, moved the third reading of Bill S-9, to amend the Act of incorporation of the Northwest Canada Conference Evangelical Church.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 19, 1992, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 1503)

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FOURTEENTH REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, May 14, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

FOURTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the study of the subject-matter of Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof has, in obedience to the Order of reference of Monday, March 30th, 1992, examined the said bill and now reports the same with the following proposed amendments and recommendations.

On Tuesday May 12, 1992, the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce completed its mandated pre-study of Bill C-48, An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. This Bill is currently awaiting third reading in the House of Commons.

The Bill provides the government with another option for dealing with troubled federally-chartered financial institutions that are members of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The Committee is aware that a number of amendments will improve the Bill before it leaves the House. For example, one change will allow for agreements to be established between the federal government and a province to allow provincial regulatory authorities to work with CDIC to use a Financial institution restructuring process (FIRP) with respect to institutions regulated under that particular provincial jurisdiction; another deals with the Canadian Payments Association; others, with the stay proceedings.

The Banking Committee, after hearing a number of witnesses - officials from the Department of Finance and from CDIC, representatives from the industry and selected experts - who were aware of the amendments made at Committee stage in the House, sees the need for a number of technical amendments to improve the bill and, further has a number of serious concerns with specific issues related to Bill C-48 and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The Committee is in agreement with the witnesses who have made it clear that the bill should be passed relatively quickly. The technical amendments suggested will improve the bill. The more serious concerns will be dealt with in a larger study of CDIC and similar entities to be undertaken later this year by this Committee.

The Committee strongly suggest that the technical amendments be considered by the Government before third reading in the House.

CONCERNS OF THE COMMITTEE

Parliament has recently enacted legislation that introduces a major change in the rules governing financial institutions in Canada. The CDIC Act was designed to deal with institutions that operated in the old environment. Does the CDIC have the structure and powers to operate effectively in the new environment?

1. The Committee is concerned that the CDIC has a somewhat antiquated statute and procedures that are behind the times.

The CDIC is an insuring agency. It has a fund based on premiums collected from its members. What is insured are certain deposits of customers up to a specified limit, $60 000. The use of this fund for purposes other than compensation of specified depositors is not appropriate. Money needed to accomplish other goals, such as saving a financial institution in trouble, should come from the consolidated revenue fund.

2. If there were to be outside involvement on the CDIC board, there should first be crisper rules on allocation of expenses. Right now, these are so blurry that there could be a real problem with more outside involvement.

3. Bill C-48 has the potential for exacerbating a problem that is already serious under the CDIC Act, the appropriate allocation of costs between the consolidated revenue fund and the deposit insurance fund. The appropriate allocation needs to be specified in legislation to ensure both the adequate protection of public funds and the fair treatment of firms which contribute to the deposit insurance fund.

When the CDIC uses the FIRP process and allows an institution to go on operating, the CDIC is for all practical purposes committing itself to arrange for the full payment of all creditors (excluding subordinated debt because it is seized and is under the assessment process). In effect the CDIC waives the $60 000 limit when it allows an institution to continue operating after the FIRP process has been employed. If the CDIC did not make such a commitment, uninsured depositors would quickly withdraw their money, exacerbating an already serious liquidity problem.

4. The Committee wishes to draw this observation to the attention of regulators and recommends that all such costs as noted above be considered as part of the real costs of a FIRP and therefore be taken into account when the decision to undertake a FIRP is being considered.

If C-48 is left unchanged only federally-chartered institutions can be restructured (unless a province asks to be covered by the FIRP process). This means that in the case of provincially chartered institutions that are members of the CDIC and that are having serious problems, the CDIC must wait until they fail before it can act.

5. The committee is sensitive to issues of federal-provincial harmonization and jurisdictional overlap. It is on record as calling for real progress on harmonisation. Overlapping, inconsistent and at times contradictory regulations benefit no one. In the case of Bill C-48 the committee is concerned that two classes of federally insured institutions are being created - federally chartered members of CDIC who are subject to the FIRP process and provincially chartered members who are not.

The committee strongly urges the federal government to reach an accomodation with provincial jurisdictions to prevent the creation of yet another regulatory anomaly - one that involves not only questions of fairness but in addition possibly unintended signals to depositors and lenders about relative risks among deposit-taking institutions.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS

The witnesses overwhelmingly indicated that the CDIC should be given the widest possible range of options. In particular, in many cases it makes more sense to seize the business rather than the shares and the subordinated debt.

1. It is the recommendation of the committee that as part of the FIRP process the CDIC be given the power to directly seize part or all of the assets of a troubled financial institution.

It was pointed out that the Act does not set out exactly what criteria must be used in recommending a FIRP. Concern was then raised that a FIRP approach could be adopted even if it were not the least cost route.

2. It is the recommendation of the committee that the criteria for choosing the FIRP option be carefully spelled out.

Clearly, once the FIRP option has been adopted liquidity support to the troubled institution is critical if that institution is to keep operating. Concern was expressed that there is no clear statement of who is to provide the ongoing funding.

3. It is the recommendation of the Committee that the authority responsible for maintaining liquidity support during the FIRP process should be spelled out.

With respect to line 9 of page 10 of the bill (section 39.19(c)) in the part that said "CDIC could sell all or substantially all of the assets to an institution that assumes all or substantially all of the liabilities" the first "substantially all" was changed to "part". The second "all or substantially all" was left unchanged. The practical result is that the CDIC would still have to sell all the assets.

4. It is the recommendation of the committee that this anomaly be straightened out.

Another technical issue has to do with whether "substantially all of its liabilities" excludes subordinated debt. If that subordinated debt has been assumed by the purchaser as part of substantially all of the liabilities of the institution under this section, then maybe that debt would have some sort of claim against the purchaser.

5. The committee recommends that this issue be clarified.

Consider the case in which the CDIC wishes to sell the package of assets and then simply transfer the subordinated debt back to the investors. On page 6 (39.13(2)(d)) the original investor is given the ability to transfer the entitlement to what emerges from the process (i.e., to sell it). However, on page 12 (39.23(1)), even if the original investor sold his entitlement of what comes back from the assessor in terms of those shares or debt to a third party, when the assessment process is complete, the original investor gets the proceeds, not the third party. The third party then has to rely on the original investor to transfer those proceeds to the third party and, at that point, the process gets messy. Further because the CDIC has indicated that it is not prepared to maintain the transfer register, or a record of who is the shareholder and who is not, the only way that shares could be sold would be in bipartite deals, not through a stock exchange.

This should be cleared up to enable:

i) those who wish to establish a tax loss to be able to do so (under our legislation you cannot claim a tax loss without having actually disposed of your shares);

ii) those institutional holders who might not want to show this investment in their year-end balance sheet to get rid of their shares in the FIRPed institution before the year-end passes.

There are many other reasons, such as the occurrence of estates, why an investor in a FIRPed institution , shares or subordinated debt, might want to dispose of that investment.

6. The committee recommends that the transfer issue be cleared up.

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 1503)

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, May 14, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on Friday, February 28, 1992, to undertake a study of the policy options available to the government to achieve the objective of containing emissions associated with energy production and use in Canada with a view to improving the environment and to make recommendations thereon. Among these options are regulation; the use of economic instruments such as emission charges and taxes, subsidies and tradeable emissions permits; measures to enhance energy efficiency and conservation; and the promotion of energy, respectfully requests that it be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study and to adjourn from place to place within and outside Canada for the purpose of such examination.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL HAYS
Chairman

THURSDAY, May 14, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its special study on the emission of gas, as authorized by the Senate on Friday, February 28, 1992. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 77,750.00
Transportation and Communications	500.00
All Other Expenditures	2,000.00
Total	$ 80,250.00

Respectfully submitted,

Thérèse Lavoie-Roux
Chairperson

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES EMISSION OF GAS STUDY APPLICATION FOR BUDGET AUTHORIZATION FOR THE PERIOD FROM APRIL 1ST TO DECEMBER 31, 1992

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of February 28, 1992:

The Honourable Senator Hays moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Olson:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources be authorized to undertake a study of the policy options available to the government to achieve the objective of containing emissions associated with energy production and use in Canada with a view to improving the environment and to make recommendations thereon. Among these options are regulation; the use of econoic instruments such as emission charges and taxes, subsidies and tradeable emissions permits; measures to enhance energy efficiency and conservation; and the promotion of energy alternatives.

That the Committee present its final report no later than 30 November 1992.

The question being put on the motion, it was resolved in the affirmative.

Gordon L. Barnhart
Clerk of the Senate

SUMMARY OF EXPENDITURES

Professional and Other Services	$ 77,750
Transportation and Communications	$ 500
All Other Expenditures	$ 2,000
TOTAL	$ 80,250

The foregoing budget was approved by the Standing Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources on May 8, 1992

The undersigned or an alternate will be in attendance on the date that this Budget is being considered.

Date _____ Chairman, Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources

Date _____ Chairman, Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

The Senate administration has reviewed this budget application.

Director of Committees and Private Legislation	Date
Director of Finance	Date

EXPLANATION OF COST ELEMENTS

Professional and Other Services (0401)

1. Research Services 15 days/month @ $600/day	$ 9,000.00 x 6 months	$54,000.00
2. Legal and Special Expertise 5 days/month @ $600/day	$ 3,000.00 x 6 months	$18,000.00
3. Editing Proofreading and Editing of Report 50hrs @ $75/hour		$ 3,750.00
4. Meals (0415) Working lunches and dinners (10 lunches and dinners @ $200 each)		$ 2,000.00	$ 77,750.00

Transportation and Communications
1. Telecommunications (0225)	$ 250.00
2. Postage, Freight and Courier Services (0213)	$ 250.00	$ 500.00
All Other Expenditures
Utilities, Materials and Supplies
1. Purchase of stationary, books and periodicals	$ 1,500.00
2. Contingencies (0799)	$ 500.00	$ 2,000.00
TOTAL		$ 80,250.00

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 19, 1992

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, I know it will be of great satisfaction to senators on the government side to realize that the clock is still ticking. I am positive they would not want that tradition to go by unnoticed.

If the government of which Senator Murray is a member respects democracy, Canadians will cast their ballot within 186 days; however, in the words of Senator Murray, if the present government is cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, the day of reckoning remains 572 days away.

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONFLICT OF INTERESTS LEGISLATION

EFFECT ON POPULARITY POLLS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, some days ago I promised Senator Lynch-Staunton, who was objecting to my mentioning Greece quite so often, that I liked to come up with tidbits from Greek history, because, as I told him, those who do not read history are condemned to repeat it.

What brings the following anecdote to mind is the government's bill on conflict of interests. I should like to tell Senator Lynch-Staunton about a great Greek statesman of the fifth century BC, known as Aristides "the Just".

Aristides was so honest that, when he died, the people of Athens, to their dismay and shame, found that his daughters had only rags to wear at his funeral. The people decided thereupon to make amends, give them dowries, and marry them off, because their father had been so honest that he had not gathered any money —something which, of course, a Tory cannot possibly appreciate.

At any rate, there was an ostracism vote in Athens on one occasion, and the citizens were asked to vote on whom they wanted to drive out of town, forbidding him to come closer than 50 kilometres to Athens. An illiterate peasant approached Aristides, whom he had not recognized, and said, "I cannot write. Could you help me fill my ballot?" Aristides said, "Of course, my good man. What name would you like me to put down?" The peasant said, "Aristides." Aristides wrote his name on the ballot and gave it back to the peasant. He then said, "Why do you want to exile Aristides?" The peasant said, "I am sick and tired of everybody telling me how honest he is."

If the government members hope this legislation of theirs is going to make them more popular, I ask them to think again.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I would like to remind you of Albert Brie's famous words which apply particularily well to senator Gigantès in light of the statement he just made.

> The politician speaks until he finds something worth saying that he does not say, however, because his time is up.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Could you repeat all that because I could not hear you.

Senator Simard: You can read it in tomorrow's Hansard.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I would like to remind you of Albert Brie's famous words which apply particularily well to senator Gigantès in light of the statement he just made.

> The politician speaks until he finds something worth saying that he does not say, however, because his time is up.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Could you repeat all that because I could not hear you.

Senator Simard: You can read it in tomorrow's Hansard.

[English]

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology concerning the committee's budget application for the study on citizenship.

TUESDAY, May 19, 1992

> The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on December 11, 1991, to examine and report upon the concept, development and promotion of Canadian citizenship, respectfully requests that it be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

LORNA MARSDEN
Deputy Chair

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Marsden, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

CORRECTIONS AND CONDITIONAL RELEASE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-36, respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next, May 21, 1992.

GREEN SHIELD CANADA PREPAID SERVICES ASSOCIATION

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition from Green Shield Prepaid Services Incorporated of the city of Windsor in the Province of Ontario, praying for the passage of an act to incorporate the Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association.

[Senator Marsden.]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NOTICES OF MOTIONS TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I give notice that at the next sitting of the Senate, I shall move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesdays June 2, 9, 16, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

I have a second notice of motion—

Hon. C. William Doody: Does Senator Molgat have anything to say about the first notice?

Senator Molgat: I have great reservations about it.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I give notice that at the next sitting of the Senate, I shall move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit a 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon on Thursday, May 21, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

If honourable senators wish, I could give at this time an explanation for this second notice of motion.

Senator Doody: Yes, please.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, what the committee would have before it at that meeting is Bill C-53, a government bill which deals with special economic measures, sometimes referred to as economic sanctions.

I am told by the minister's office that there is some urgency with respect to that bill. It has been suggested that we should try to have a meeting on the bill later this week. Therefore, I will be asking the permission of the Senate to allow the committee to meet on Thursday afternoon.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon tomorrow, Wednesday, May 20, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Leave is granted, honourable senators, but may we have an explanation?

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, today the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs commenced its consideration of Bill S-8 and heard departmental officials. The only opportunity we have to hear the Minister of State for Transport is tomorrow when the minister will be available at 3:30 p.m. It is the hope of the committee that permission will be granted for the committee to sit at that time in order to hear from the minister.

As Senator Stewart has done, I also wish to give notice of a motion dealing with similar sittings in the future to deal with two bills which will require the hearing of a large number of witnesses.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I have made my comments in this regard several times in the past. I will not repeat them. I wonder, however whether we might not consider a new process whereby the committees would meet, and the Senate would ask leave of the committees as to whether or not it could have permission to sit.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear! The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion? Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, May 20, 1992, I will move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon on Wednesdays, even though the Senate may then be sitting, during the Committee's consideration of Bill S-8, An Act to regulate the manufacture and importation of motor vehicles and motor vehicle equipment to reduce the risk of death, injury and damage to property and the environment; and Bill C-36, An Act respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I give notice that at the next sitting of the Senate I shall move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources have power to sit at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon on Thursday, May 21, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 477 citizens of New Brunswick (the province Senator Simard hails from!) who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from St. Johns, St. Martins, Hampton, Welsford and Seal Cove. These 477 people cannot believe our government is so reactionary as to apply the GST on books and periodicals, making it harder for publishers, booksellers and cultural periodicals to survive, preventing Canadian authors from being published and saving the pleasure of reading for those who can afford it. Many among those people do not know how to read!

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GENERAL ELECTION

EFFECT ON CANADA-US RELATIONS

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I want to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether tomorrow he could confirm a story that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on May 16th, which says:

> The United States will lose out if Prime Minister Brian Mulroney is defeated in the next election, the prime minister told a U.S. magazine.

The magazine referred to is U.S. News and World Report. Apparently the Prime Minister has had an interview with that magazine. Is this summation of the Prime Minister's interview correct? It seems to suggest that the Prime Minister is seeking foreign assistance in winning the next election.

Senator Kenny: Good luck!

Senator Austin: The story goes on:

> "While I'm very confident of victory . . . it would be (unfortunate for the United States) to be confronted with a Canadian government whose first act would be to revoke the free-trade agreement because of unfairness by the United States . . . . ."

Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government to bring the facts to the house.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would be happy to bring the whole article to the Leader of the Government's attention tomorrow morning.

GALLUP POLL TRENDS—REQUEST FOR RECALCULATION

Hon. H.A. Olson: By way of supplementary, I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government could ask Senator Murray if he has recalculated the assertion he made the other day that the trend in the Gallup poll would lead the government to some 48 per cent by Christmas time. Has he done a recalculation, bearing in mind that the party dropped five points on the last Gallup poll?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think the calculation still holds. It all depends on which poll you follow.

Senator Olson: It depends as well on which way the trend looks.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have responses to questions raised in the Senate on March 30 by Senator Molgat regarding the cancellation of the Science Council of Canada, the status of a study on sustainable agriculture, and the winding down of government councils; on May 5 by Senator Kenny regarding the demolition of the Daly Building; on May 6 by Senator Grafstein regarding the reduction of IBM's Canadian workforce, and by Senator Molgat regarding the Port of Churchill.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government could tell me whether the answer to my question on the Science Council is a lengthy one. Could he read it out?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That answer is in a number of parts. It is two pages long. I found it interesting, but I do not know if it would be interesting for everyone if I read it all. However, it is your right to ask.

Senator Molgat: Would it appear in the written record?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes, it will appear in the Debates of the Senate of today's date.

Senator Molgat: Very well.

THE BUDGET

CANCELLATION OF SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA—STATUS OF STUDY ON SUSTAINABLE AGRICULTURE—WINDING DOWN OF GOVERNMENT COUNCILS ANNOUNCED IN THE FEDERAL BUDGET

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gildas L. Molgat on March 30, 1992)

The Science Council's study of sustainable agriculture is currently at the publication stage and will be released at the July 6th, 1992 meeting of the Agricultural Institute of Canada, in Brandon, Manitoba.

Editing, translation and production of the 15 sector reports is continuing at a fast pace in order to accommodate the phase out schedule for elimination of the Science Council. According to the most recent forecasts, reports are to be released on or after the following dates:

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

Telecommunications, petrochemicals, auto parts, auto vehicles, food, forestry—May 11;

Nonferrous metals, machinery, consulting engineering, oil and gas, iron and steel—June 1;

Electronics, electric power, banking, computer software—June 12.

A general winding down schedule for the five remaining Crown Agencies is as follows:

The Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council (CEIAC)

The research and consultation material produced by the Advisory Council will be turned over to the appropriate groups in Employment and Immigration Canada. On Budget day, CEIAC had three projects at the report preparation stage: Employment Equity, Racism in Employment, and Environment and Employment. Should the Minister of Employment and Immigration decide that any or all of the projects be completed, the work will be done by the Department.

The Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security

A transition team has been created and will be meeting in the forthcoming weeks to identify which programs will be continued.

The Economic Council of Canada

Immediately upon the Budget's release, the Council was instructed to prepare a wind down plan. The parameters of the plan are that research projects close to completion are to be completed. Those works in their infancy will be cancelled. Projects not close to completion, but have received substantial public investment, are to be reassigned to another organization for work to continue.

A number of research organizations do exist across the country which would be capable of taking on both the research and the coordinating role which was being performed by the Economic Council. There also exist a number of academic and private sector research organizations which maintain large-scale computer models of the economy similar to that which was maintained by the Council. As such, there would not be large start-up costs involved in continuing any of the projects of the Council. As well, any such study which is deemed necessary by an individual department will need to be funded by that department. The savings from winding up the Council will therefore be assured.

Five major projects are to be transferred to new homes. They are:

- government's impact on competitiveness;
- Canada's economic relations with the Pacific Rim
- firm strategy and adaptation;

- the cost effectiveness of Canada's health care system;

- human resource strategies at the firm level.

The International Centre for Ocean Development (ICOD)

The Government's commitment to the development of the Marine sector remains strong. ICOD's program will be integrated with that of CIDA's in order to maintain a strong presence in international ocean development. CIDA will continue to draw on the wealth of marine skills and expertise available in the maritimes and other regions of Canada. CIDA is also working very closely with ICOD management to identify satisfactory options for affected employees.

The Law Reform Commission (LRC)

The Department of Justice will act closely with others in the field of justice to ensure good consultation and follow-up to the reports of the LRC. 1992-93 will be a transition year, to ensure that major projects such as in the areas of criminal procedure and minorities under the Criminal Code are brought to conclusion so that they can be integrated into the government's work.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

DEMOLITION OF DALY BUILDING—USE OF SITE FOR PARK—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Colin Kenny on May 5, 1992)

The National Capital Commission has approached the issue of use of the site of the former Daly Building from both a short and longer term perspective. In the short term, the site will be graded to an even slope. The steepest portions of the site will be enclosed with safety fencing and as much as possible of the flat areas of the site adjacent to Rideau Street will be landscaped with unit pavers, asphalt pathways, planters, benches, an information kiosk and a plaza containing the flags of all the provinces and territories.

In the longer term, the Commission is preparing a thorough study of the influences and demands on the site and the role it can play in the Capital as well as the site's environmental capacity to support the uses which the site might contain. The result of these studies will be the formation of options for the site, which will also be made available to the public for information and comment. The intent of the Commission is to create a final use for the site which will respect its unique location and its attributes, and highlight its potential national symbolic value as a public space in the heart of Canada's Capital.

THE ECONOMY

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS MACHINES—REDUCTION OF IBM'S CANADIAN WORK FORCE

(Response to question raised by Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein on May 6, 1992)

International Business Machines (IBM) integrated its Canadian and U.S. sales, marketing and service organizations under a single organization called IBM North America. This move was made in recognition of the enormous synergy that the information technologies industry has in both countries and with a view to improving market opportunities in both Canada and the U.S. This move does not imply restructuring, was not designed as a cost-cutting measure and will not materially affect employment in Canada. The change in reporting is consistent with organizational changes of IBM's major customers and other global players who are organizing on the basis of trading blocks.

While this change will inevitably result in a more effective organization, sales, marketing and service functions will continue to be performed by IBM Canada. Indeed, IBM Canada will continue to operate as an IBM country organization within the new North American unit and will maintain its own board of directors and headquarters. Canadian manufacturing and R&D jobs are not affected and will ultimately benefit from improved market opportunities.

Having participated in IBM's worldwide workforce reduction last year, IBM Canada's lean and dedicated workforce remains internationally competitive. IBM Canada has steadily increased its exports over the years and remains poised to take advantage of predicted global growth opportunities with potential employment gains and other economic spinoffs for all sectors of our economy. It should be noted that IBM Canada was able to downsize through early retirement incentives in which employees participated voluntarily.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gildas L. Molgat on May 6, 1992)

The mandate of the Canadian Wheat Board (CWB) is to maximize returns to producers from the sale of wheat and barley produced in the designated region of Western Canada for export and domestic human consumption. It is, therefore, the Board's policy to ship grain through the port area which results in the highest returns to producers.

Ultimately, in today' highly competitive grain market, customer demand drives the amount of grain the CWB sells through the various port areas, including Churchill, each crop year. The CWB successfully negotiated the sale of approximately 234,000 tonnes of grain through the Port of Churchill for the 1991-92 crop year. The Board has shipped grain through the Port in each of the last 60 years, except during World War II. At present, it is not Board policy to provide tonnage guarantees to any port.

The government remains confident that the CWB will continue to pursue every market opportunity for the Port of Churchill as it strives to fulfil its mandate of maximizing return to producers.

• (2020)

COASTING TRADE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rossiter, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-33, An Act respecting the use of foreign ships and non-duty paid ships in the coasting trade.

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I want to indicate as briefly as I can the nature of the objections I currently have with respect to this bill. They are several in number but somewhat general in nature.

First, I have now had the opportunity of comparing the bill that died on the Order Paper in this chamber at the time of the last election to Bill C-33, which has just gone through the process in the House of Commons and is currently before us. There are a number of substantial changes. I had been led to believe, perhaps by my own misunderstanding, perhaps by acts of others, that the bill was substantially the same. The bill is not substantially the same and I am somewhat disturbed.

An Act, which was the determination of the Canadian people, of our law givers, since the inception of our country, being a decision to reserve for the Canadian flag the waters of Canada for the transport of Canadian goods and products, has now been set aside. It may appear on the surface that this bill broadens and strengthens the intent and purpose of furthering that form of protection.

If honourable senators read Bill C-33 closely, they will find that the exclusivity that had been there virtually forever, and certainly since 1965, has now gone. What we see is the thin end of the wedge with respect to coastinwg on the Atlantic side of our nation.

What we call the Anticosti line is now gone. Those who follow marine matters will be aware of the significance of "west of the Anticosti line", just as some will be aware of what "Diamond Head" means with respect to certain marine activities.

Secondly, the bill fails to set out with any clarity or detail the criteria which must be followed, and have always been followed, in the issuance of licences or waivers to ships of non-Canadian registration for the purpose of transporting goods and passengers between one Canadian port and another.

[Senator Molgat.]

My third concern, which I will deal with later in committee a little more fully, is that Bill C-33 tends to treat the territorial sea of Canada differently. In other words, it approaches it legally in a manner different from all other legislation we have with respect to air and land, and therefore it is not the same. Somehow or other we have set maritime or marine matters apart, and, for whatever reason, they are now treated differently from air.

• (2030)

The cabotage that we sought in the air we found not to be possible. We now find all of a sudden that it is not only possible but, indeed, commends itself to us as something that we should reach out for and embrace.

In abandoning the principles of Canadian law with respect to air and surface transportation and with respect to marine matters, we are permitting a regime to come into being that will allow people to operate in Canada outside of the strict applications of laws such as labour law, immigration law and tax law. I am sure there are others also.

My third concern is that in Bill C-33 we have said, in effect, that it does not matter whether you are a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant, there is a circumstance in which you can act as a Canadian. You can draw wages in Canada and you can enjoy the benefits and protection of Canadian law with respect to safety, health, and a lot of other things.

My fourth concern is perhaps the one that bothers me more than anything else, that will be the subject of an amendment I will serve notice on and now indicate that I will move in the committee, namely, to bring back into Bill C-33 that sense of responsibility that we feel for the various elements of our transportation industry in Canada—that is, the surface transportation industry, the air transport industry and the marine side—because they are Canadian industries.

I am not being as brief as I thought I would be, but I want to tell you that a handful of years ago we had 8,000 or 9,000 Canadian merchant seamen who were members of a number of unions and numerous craft guilds. We had another 6,000 or 7,000 who were again members of organized labour unions and craft guilds, and who operated ferries. In other words, we had a large Canadian merchant guild community composed of merchant seamen. It was large, vibrant, and very much alive.

Today, there are not 3,500 Canadians working on Canadian registered vessels. I doubt if there are 70 ships on the Great Lakes working this summer. That is a far cry from just a handful of years ago.

On the other hand, we still have upward of seven million tonnes of significant, Canadian-owned shipping registered in Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, Cyprus, or some other place. For what purpose? To avoid Canadian taxes; to avoid paying Canadian wages; to avoid Canadian laws. Yet they are available to their Canadian owners at the other end of the telephone to resolve a problem. I want to correct that situation. I want something in this bill that will recognize the fact that in the same way as we have a viable surface transport industry in this country and a viable air industry, so do we have a viable and a very real and meaningful marine industry.

Honourable senators, I have a fear that the thin edge of the wedge that we see in Bill C-33, that was not there in Bill C-52, will mean that we will no longer have any capacity to protect the last vestiges of the Canadian merchant marine.

With those few words, honourable senators, I should like simply to indicate that I would like the chairman of our committee to call the interested Canadian witnesses—that is, the unions, the users of ships, the Ramsay Wheelers and their counterparts, so that we can have a look at this situation and make sure that they understand what is involved in this bill.

My son said to me, "Dad, what should I do with my life?" I said, "Son, I was a seaman and I enjoyed it. They were good years. Why not go to sea for the summer?" So he did, and then he went back to school. The merchant navy paid for my son's education. Today he holds a Master's ticket at the ripe old age of thirty-one. He believes it to be a good career. He is a highly technical person, a well-educated person, a young man who wants now to come home and study law. I think he wants that because he wants to become rich, and he will never become rich being a seaman. He is proud of his service, as I am sure the remainder of the people who sail are proud of their chosen role in life.

However, honourable senators, I want this bill to reflect the concerns of the Canadian legislators that, as near as we are able to do it, these men will have an opportunity to continue in that profession.

I thank you for this opportunity to speak on this matter.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fourteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Subject-matter of Bill C-48, An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof), presented in the Senate on 14th May, 1992.

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I rise to make a few remarks on the fourteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. This report was on pre-study of Bill C-48, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. Some of you may recall that six weeks ago, when the issue arose as to whether or not we on this side of the chamber would agree to a pre-study of this bill, I objected to pre-study, although not as a matter of principle. I have been on record in this chamber in the past as supporting pre-study of certain bills. I objected because the bill was in committee in the other place—and I think it would be fair to say "mired" in committee there—and the government had already indicated at that time that it was prepared to introduce significant amendments to the bill. Therefore, it seemed to me rather foolish for the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee to pre-study the bill when its basic content was not known. Indeed, the government indicated the bill was so seriously flawed that significant amendments would be introduced while it was still in committee in the other place.

In any event, this chamber voted for pre-study. We proceeded with pre-study and, sure enough, part way through our committee hearings significant amendments were introduced in the other place. Those amendments significantly altered the original version of the bill which came to our committee.

In commenting on the fourteenth report tonight, I want to comment on the bill; not merely the bill that was sent to us, not merely the bill that originally went to committee, but the bill as it was amended in the other place, since those amendments significantly changed the character of the bill.

The other observation I want to make before commenting specifically on the report is that the bill continues to sit in the other place. It has not yet received third reading. In fact, it has not yet been reported by committee in the other place, in part because the committee was waiting to see what the Senate committee would do as a result of its pre-study.

By way of background, honourable senators, many of you will recall that after the CCB and Northlands Bank collapsed in 1986 the government appointed then Justice Estey of the Supreme Court of Canada to conduct an inquiry into the causes of the collapse. He reported in 1989. His report contained a substantial number of recommendations as to what changes should be made in legislation and public policy with respect to the role of CDIC and the Bank of Canada. His recommendations were designed to give government more and better policy tools for dealing with financial institutions which are in trouble in the future.

Until the collapse of CCB and Northlands, and indeed until the passage of Bill C-48, the range of policy tools available to the government for dealing with financial institutions which are in trouble was severely limited. The fundamental purpose of Bill C-48 is to give the Minister of Finance, the CDIC and the Superintendent of Financial Institutions additional powers and a broader range of policy options for dealing with financially troubled institutions.

Specifically, at its core level, the bill gives CDIC the authority to take over a troubled financial institution when the owners of that institution do not voluntarily take the action which CDIC and the Superintendent of Financial Institutions believe is required in order to restructure, refinance and keep the financial institution solvent. That is the fundamental purpose of the bill.

The process proposed in the bill essentially allows CDIC to seize the shares of the financially troubled institution and to operate it temporarily. The changes that were introduced by way of amendment in the other place, and a number of the amendments in the fourteenth committee report which is before you tonight—specifically amendments 1, 4, 5 and 6—can be regarded as technical amendments, in that they clear up a lot of the very bad drafting mistakes, and in some cases bad policy mistakes, in the original draft of the bill.

Let me give you a couple of illustrations. The original version of the bill required the CDIC to take over all the shares of an institution deemed to be in serious financial trouble. Anyone familiar with bankruptcy or quasi-bankruptcy situations will understand that there are a number of cases in which seizing assets is much more important than merely seizing shares.

A second issue with regard to seizing assets is whether you can seize part of the assets or all of the assets, none of which was contemplated in the original version of the bill. The amendments proposed in the committee report, and which I understand are likely to be adopted by the government, propose that this broader range of policy options be given to CDIC. The CDIC will now be able to seize assets as well as shares, but will be able to seize only a portion of those assets.

Many of the other recommendations are of a technical nature. Specifically, amendments 4, 5 and 6 are strictly technical and it is my understanding that they will be accepted by the government and moved either here or in the other place prior to third reading.

Perhaps the most important thing to come out of our hearings dealt less with the technical aspects of the bill and much more with some of the underlying policy problems which government faces in dealing with financial institutions. I should perhaps touch on some of those because it is the committee's intention, as we have stated in the past, and as we have restated in this report, to hold hearings, starting very soon and continuing in the fall, on a number of these broader policy issues.

One of them deals specifically with the role of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The CDIC's statute is antiquated. It has not been updated since the late 1960s or early 1970s. Yet clearly its role in governing and helping to regulate financial institutions has grown. Historically, the role of CDIC was to provide deposit insurance to people who had money in deposit taking institutions. In this bill the CDIC has been given a significantly bigger role. It has been given a role that would allow it to take over and operate a financially troubled institution. This goes way beyond anything contemplated in the original CDIC Act and, in the view of members of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee from both sides of this chamber, this plus a number of other issues related to deposit insurance means that there are significant policy questions that ought to be addressed in the context of reforming the CDIC Act.

[Senator Kirby.]

The second observation which the committee makes, and which it will be looking at as part of this broader review of CDIC, deals with the dilemma which will arise if, in fact, CDIC ever ends up having to take over a financially troubled institution.

The problem is as follows: The minute the institution is under the control and, in effect, ownership of CDIC, you have a situation where we believe it will be necessary for the new owners, CDIC, to assure depositors that all of their deposits will be protected even if their deposits are greater than $60,000. We feel it will have to do that. Otherwise, if it says we will only insure you up to $60,000 now that we own it, that will create a run on the institution which will substantially complicate an already troubled financial company and likely exacerbate the situation.

In short, one of the difficulties with a takeover of a company by a government-owned institution is that you wind up having to give an added degree of protection that goes way beyond the degree of protection that would exist if you allowed the company to go under and then simply implemented the $60,000 limit on deposit insurance.

One of the negative side effects of a government takeover of a financial institution is that, in the view of the committee, it significantly increases the obligations on government and on CDIC beyond that which would occur if the institution was first allowed to go under and then government stepped in and applied insurance in the traditional way.

That policy issue raises, as a consequence, the following difficult issue: The issue is, if government steps in to save a financially troubled institution, who should pay the cost of that saving? Should the cost be paid merely by CDIC, as is proposed in this bill, or should the cost of saving a financially troubled institution be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund? Honourable senators, the reason that is an important policy question is as follows:

CDIC is, in fact, an insurance fund. It is a fund to which each of the deposit-taking institutions in Canada contributes. There is no question that those funds should be used if what is being paid is insurance up to the $60,000 limit.

However, if those funds are used for circumstances which go way beyond $60,000—as I suggested will inevitably be the case if CDIC has to take over a company, or if they are used for other purposes related to restructuring the financial institution—then actually the depositors in other financial institutions are indirectly subsidizing and taking care of the bail-out of a financially troubled institution, rather than that bail-out cost being absorbed by all Canadians.

The committee feels that, from a policy standpoint, this is a very difficult and awkward situation in which to leave the people at CDIC and the people at deposit-taking institutions. They are essentially being left in a position where other members of an industry—in this case, the deposit-taking financial services industry—are being told that it is their financial responsibility to provide bail-out funds to firms which get into trouble within the same industry. As we all know, there is absolutely no other case in Canadian history where that would happen.

If a fishing company gets into trouble and assistance is given, that assistance does not come from other fishing companies. It comes from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The same is true in any other industry any time there is a problem.

In this particular case, the net effect of the policy structure is to say to companies which are viable that they will have to make additional contributions to CDIC in order to bail out the financially troubled companies. From a policy standpoint, the members of the committee have great difficulty with that as a matter of principle because it does seem somewhat unjust to say to the healthy, viable, ongoing companies in an industry, "You have the responsibility for bailing out and taking care of those that are in trouble".

That is one of the very serious issues which we will look at when we review the CDIC legislation. It really goes to the core of the issue, which is: What is the proper allocation of the cost of saving a deposit-taking institution? What is the proper allocation of the cost between CDIC, on the one hand, and the Consolidated Revenue Fund on the other? The bill is silent on that issue. The bill carefully skirts the issue by simply saying that CDIC will pay the cost, but it does not really get at the issue of whether or not there will be any reimbursement of CDIC from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

All the witnesses who appeared before the committee, including Judge Estey, said this was a glaring weakness in the bill. In Judge Estey's report in 1989, his position was that a bailout of a financial institution beyond the limits required by deposit insurance itself should, in fact, be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, as would be the case with respect to any other company in trouble in any other industry.

Not surprisingly, that is also the view of all the deposit-taking institutions who appeared before us because they, too, believe that the cost of a bail-out ought to be shared by all Canadians, not merely themselves or themselves and their depositors.

That was also the view of leading legal experts in this area, both academic and those who worked for Toronto law firms, who also believe that the principle is wrong. That is really the major policy problem with the bill.

The second big policy problem is one that has plagued the financial services sector for a long time and is one on which I, among others, have spoken at some length in this chamber in the past: That is, the difficulty of having a national deposit insurance program in which some institutions are federally chartered and subject to federal regulations, while others are provincially chartered and subject to provincial regulations.

In this particular case, this bill now de facto sets up two different types of members of CDIC in this sense: Federally chartered institutions will, in fact, be subject to this amendment to the CDIC Act. Federally chartered institutions will be able to be seized, taken over, by CDIC. However, provincially chartered institutions, even though their deposits are insured by CDIC, will not be liable to be taken over by the CDIC unless the province in which they have their charter specifically agrees to that action.

I repeat that this is an observation made from both sides of the committee, from both Liberal senators and Conservative senators. It seems to us that it is wrong to be creating an institution in which you have this dichotomy, this duopoly. Our view was that the government should give very serious consideration to establishing a policy whereby if an institution is to be insured under CDIC, then that institution must be subject to all the rules of CDIC and not merely some of them.

Honourable senators, it is interesting that the Trust Association of Canada, which is the trade association most concerned by matters affecting provincially chartered institutions, came before the committee and urged us to do exactly that. They believe, and their provincially chartered members believe, that they ought to be subject to all of the rules governing CDIC and ought to be subject to all the benefits of CDIC.

The problem therefore, honourable senators, lies not with the owners or the management of provincially chartered institutions. It lies with provincial governments. There are technical reasons why an individual provincially chartered institution cannot opt into this institution. They have to be opted in, as it were, by their provincial government.

It seemed to us that that whole issue of the role of CDIC vis-a-vis provincially chartered institutions is an important subject that will be covered in our review of CDIC, beginning in June and continuing in the fall.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senator, your time was up a while ago.

Senator Kirby: I am sorry. I was only going to be another two minutes, senators.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Unless there is unanimous consent, the honourable senator must adjourn his debate. Is it agreed that he may finish?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Kirby: Honourable senators, some of you may be asking, "Why is it that the committee in its fourteenth report recommended the Senate approve this bill given the fact that it clearly has a number of significant policy problems associated with it?" The reason we made that unanimous recommendation is, frankly, a practical problem. The significant policy issues I have just raised are policy issues that would take a considerable amount of time to work out and resolve. In the meantime, the failure to pass this bill leaves the CDIC and the Superintendent of Financial Institutions—essentially the federal government —in a position where the government is missing one of the tools that it really ought to have in these troubled economic times to deal with financially troubled institutions before they get to the point where the only option is in fact to have them go under.

All of the witnesses before us—Judge Estey, the various financial institutions and the legal experts—all argued that while it is quite true the bill is not perfect, and that it has a number of the policy problems I touched on, nevertheless it should pass. While they all urged the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to continue with the proposed hearings into CDIC in the hope by the end of this year the basic CDIC bill would be completely modernized, every single witness who appeared before us urged the passage of this bill so that, even in an imperfect form, the weapons and the additional tools the bill gives the government to deal with the problems of deposit-taking institutions in trouble would be available.

Honourable senators, in urging the passage of Bill C-48, I point out that I do so with the caveat that the bigger policy problems will need to be dealt with relatively soon. I re-emphasize that it is the intention of the committee to do that between now and the end of the year.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Will the honourable senator take a question?

Senator Kirby: Absolutely.

Senator Di Nino: You brought up some very interesting points, in particular as they relate to future changes to the CDIC. I have a concern. I wonder if you could address it now or possibly during your deliberations. You talked about the cost of the CDIC. I am sure you were speaking of more than just operational costs. Certainly, I understood that you were referring to the total cost of a bail-out, if that were to be the case.

There is one point I would like to make before I ask my question. I think it is generally accepted and recognized that, were a major financial institution in this country to get itself into trouble, there would be little chance or little thought of that major financial institution's being allowed to fail. Therefore, taxpayers' dollars will be used to bail out the major financial institutions. My concern is that the major financial institutions may be leaning on the legislators to change the role of CDIC as it relates to premiums, and in particular the co-insurance idea that has been floated around from time to time. I am sure my honourable friend understands what that would do to the smaller financial institutions of this country.

I apologize for the lengthy introduction, but my question to you is: Do you see that as a possible issue to be dealt with in a future revision of the CDIC?

Senator Kirby: Thank you for your question. In fact you asked two questions; let me deal with them separately.

The first comment that Senator Di Nino made really relates to what has been called risk-related premiums for CDIC. I perhaps ought to point out to honourable senators that the current process with respect to the CDIC is that a financial institution, regardless of size, pays a fixed percentage of deposits essentially as a premium on its insurance deposit. Senator Di Nino is quite correct that the large banks, in particular the Canadian Bankers Association, have argued for a long time that, because the risk of their going under is significantly less than the risk of some other institutions going under—specifically, smaller provincially chartered, deposit-taking institutions, there should be risk-related premiums, as there are, for example, in automobile insurance. If you are a member of a class which has a greater probability of having a default, then you ought to pay a larger percentage premium than the large banks would pay, because they are effectively risk-free. That argument has been made. It was made before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce when we had hearings on some changes to CDIC back in 1986. It was made at the time of the CCB Northlands collapse also, by the way. That will certainly be one of the issues that will clearly have to be looked at down the road.

That issue is not unrelated to the second issue you raised, which is why you put them in one question. That is the issue of so-called co-insurance. Let me explain the concept of co-insurance. At the present moment, everybody is insured up to $60,000 worth of deposits. Under co-insurance, it would be sort of like a deductible. To make the numbers work out, you might be insured at two-thirds of your deposits up to $90,000, which would still mean you would have a maximum $60,000 cap, but nevertheless you would not get all your money back.

That issue has been proposed a number of times and I think will again be looked at by the committee. When it was looked at by the committee in 1986, the unanimous view of the committee at the time, and we said so in a report, was that, while we understood its theoretical and conceptual nicety, we also understand the political impossibility of saying to Canadians that their insurance would now be only $40,000, not $60,000, because of the net effect of the two-thirds rule. We decided that would be a very difficult proposition for Canadians to accept. While the practicality and the conceptual nicety of it was understood, we felt it would be difficult to do.

I might add just by way of one last comment, honourable senators, that while I have been talking tonight about deposit-taking institution insurance and the CDIC, the fact of the matter is there is another very significant problem that has arisen already in Quebec with respect to Les Coopérants, which is an insurance company that went under. The insurance industry does not have a government-regulated version of CDIC. They have essentially a self insurance system called CompCorp, which had never had to deal with a failure until this situation in Quebec. I think it is not unfair to say it has been making up the rules of the game with respect to how policy holders in a defunct insurance company had to be taken care of as they went along, because they had never been in this situation before and they were having to fight their way through it. That in turn has led to a number of ways of dealing with the particular illustration in Quebec that has caused the committee members some difficulty, not by any means because it happens to be the province of Quebec, but simply because a number of us are unhappy with the way in which that situation has been handled.

It is an unfunded fund. It is done after the fact by an assessment on insurance companies. It is done on the basis of how much business you do, in this particular case in Quebec, or in Ontario if it is an Ontario company. It has a lot of things that take you a long way away from a funded, upfront, national fund.

Therefore as part of our review of the whole issue of insurance given to people who either make deposits in deposit-taking institutions or who buy insurance from Canadian insurance companies, we will not only be looking at CDIC but we will also be looking at the way in which those insurance companies have set up their funds, whether it ought be a legislated fund, whether it ought to be allowed to continue in the way in which it is now in what is essentially a self-regulatory system, et cetera.

Senator Di Nino is right. There is a series of important issues that have never come to the fore of the public policy agenda because, up until the early 1980s, we never had any significant financial institutions get in trouble. We have now had the experience with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northlands Bank and with some provincially chartered trust companies in Ontario. We have the experience now with a provincially chartered insurance company in Quebec.

As many of you know from reading the financial pages, there are rumors that there may well be a number of other insurance companies in financial difficulty. It is difficult to tell how serious the situation is, but it does seem to members of the Banking, Trade and Commerce committee that this whole area is clearly in need of rethinking and new policy direction for the 1990s. We will be doing that before the end of the year.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Will the honourable senator permit a question? I assume that the report of the committee is a unanimous report.

Senator Kirby: It is.

Senator Molgat: The report is specific in a number of its statements. It says, for example, that it "sees the need for a number of technical amendments." Further, it "has a number of serious concerns with specific issues." Then the committee strongly suggests that the technical amendments be considered by the government before third reading in the House. Then it lists five concerns and six specific amendments.

Can the honourable senator indicate to us whether the minister has given indications that he is prepared to consider these amendments and introduce them in the other place before the bill reaches us?

Senator Kirby: Honourable senators, I am glad the deputy leader has asked that question. The reason we broke up the report in the way we did was because the serious concerns, which really encompass the area to which I devoted most of my remarks, are policy questions that we will be dealing with in a subsequent forum. It is my understanding—although I do not have confirmation—that in fact the technical amendments almost in their entirety will likely be introduced prior to the bill arriving in the Senate. That is one of the reasons why the bill is sitting in the other place and has not received third reading, awaiting receipt of this report. Government members may know differently, but that is my understanding of the current situation.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twenty-third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Supplementary Budget—Energy, Environment and Natural Resources), presented on May 14, 1992.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move that the twenty-third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

[English]

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

FIRST REPORT ADOPTED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees, Item No. 3:

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the First Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources (budget—Emission of Gas Study), presented in the Senate on May 14, 1992.

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the moption?

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, I think perhaps a few words of explanation may be in order in that I have notice of the possibility of a few questions. This is a report that provides for the necessary budget to carry out a special study on which the committee has received a reference from the Senate. I notice it has acquired the short title of "Emission of Gas" study. I can assure honourable senators that a more elegant title for this report will evolve as the committee works on it.

A fairer description of what the committee proposes to do is in the motion that has resulted from the debate that took us through the reference stage in the Senate. I would emphasize that the study will cover a fairly broad spectrum of interests that come to the fore on environmental issues today, in particular economic instruments that we should consider using to maintain emission levels, whether it be a toxic substance like SO2, which in certain amounts causes acid rain, or nitrous oxide or carbon dioxide—the latter being the special interest of the upcoming UN conference in Rio de Janeiro on global environmental issues.

I would be happy, honourable senators, if there are any questions, to deal with them now.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, we have made our representations to the learned senator separately and privately, and he is aware of them.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

NATIONAL PUBLIC SERVICE WEEK BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., for the second reading of Bill C-328, An Act respecting National Public Service Week: Serving Canadians Better.—(Honourable Senator DeWare)

Hon. Mable M. DeWare: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words about Bill C-328, advocating a national week for public service. I am sure that every honourable senator agrees with the spirit of this bill. We should certainly recognize and appreciate the commitment and dedication that is shown by all members of the Public Service of Canada. Personal recognition is an important component of job satisfaction that promotes top performance and the incentive to go beyond the bare requirements necessary to earn one's paycheck. In order to take risks, to look for creative solutions, to deliver top-notch services benefiting the company, the working environment, the climate and the country, the employee must be internally motivated, and that internal motivation comes from being satisfied with one's job, and from knowing that one's work is important, respected and valued.

Bill C-328 asks only that one week be set aside each year to recognize the value of the work performed by employees to the public, to the government and to Parliament. While this bill is framed in the context of the federal public service, it is not limited to recognizing only the work of the federal public sector. Last week, in speaking to this bill, Senator Frith noted that we have 529,000 federal employees, 506,000 provincial employees, 343,000 municipal employees and countless others who work for local boards and agencies delivering health, education and many other services.

A national week to recognize public service employees would be an opportunity for those who work for the public to inform that public of the services that they provide. A week to focus attention on the value of public services and the people who provide them would build pride among those who work for the public and remind them as well that service to the public is the purpose of their job.

[Senator Hays.]

● (2120)

As the largest employer in the country, I believe the federal government must take a leading role in building an atmosphere of cooperation and partnership with its employees in pursuing national goals, in the same way as it is asking private sector companies to develop partnerships with their employees in increasing productivity and efficiency.

Public servants are often thought of as only serving elected governments. While it is true that much of the business of the public service is to help develop and implement government policies, public servants, as their name implies, are men and women who serve Canadian citizens every day. For example, there is the air traffic controller who guides our plane to a safe landing, the scientist who is developing a preventive vaccine, the immigration officer who welcomes new Canadians to our land, the person at the Canada Employment Centre who helps workers find jobs during tough economic times, the health inspector who ensures that our food is safe to eat, and the letter carrier who brings us our mail.

When Canadians look at the public service, they see themselves. They see husbands and wives raising the next generation of Canadians. They see citizens actively participating in community organizations. They see women and men putting in long hours as federal public servants and then heading for their neighbourhood community centres or to some other such volunteer organization to coach youngsters in hockey, to help a talented figure skater, or to help a skier dreaming of making it to the Olympics.

Our public service is a truly distinctive Canadian entity. Over the years it has evolved to reflect the diversity of our multicultural and multiracial society. Looking at the organization from an international perspective, the public service has kept pace with Canada's emergence as an important member in the world community. I believe that most Canadians recognize that an effective public service is fundamental to our national health and individual well-being.

This highly professional organization performs a wider variety of functions than any another organization in the country. Those of us who work in Ottawa need to remind ourselves that two-thirds of federal public servants work and live in communities outside the National Capital Region.

I believe that Canadians who choose to serve their country are inspired and motivated by something that goes well beyond the necessity of making a living. Honourable senators probably know a number of women and man who have set aside promising careers in the private sector in order to work as a public servant for the betterment of their country.

The women and men of the public service of Canada fully understand and appreciate that our democratic system depends upon individuals living up to their responsibilities. We can be proud that our public servants maintain a high standard of both professional and personal conduct at all times. The values that I spoke of earlier are entrenched values that permeate the public service and sustain its high quality. That understanding was clearly reflected by our Prime Minister in PS 2000. He said:

> The public service of Canada is fundamental to the successful functioning of our democratic institutions and of our country. It serves Canada ably and has contributed immeasurably to our stable economic and social environment, to our achievements as a modern industrial nation and to our values and identity as a people.

Honourable senators, the third week of June is four weeks from now. I recommend that we support this bill. I should like to ask Senator Molgat if he is prepared to move that the bill be sent to committee on behalf of Senator Frith, who was the sponsor of it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Molgat, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MOTION FOR BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE ADOPTED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton):
>
> That the Senate urge the Government of Canada to prepare and place in the Memorial Chapel of the Peace Tower a book of remembrance honouring the Merchant Seamen who lost their lives in Canadian armed conflicts in World War I, World War II and the Korean conflict; and
>
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that House to unite with the Senate in the aforementioned action.—(Honourable Senator Neiman).

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words in support of the motion of Senator Marshall that a book of remembrance be placed in the Memorial Chapel of the Peace Tower honouring the merchant seamen who died during World War I and World War II, as well in as the Korean conflict.

My support is based on my own experience during World War II when I spent nearly all my war career – almost four years—here in Ottawa at Naval Service Headquarters in the Directorate of Officer Personnel. That was hardly being at the front line, although we headquarters types used to say that we were fighting the battle of the Rideau Canal.

However, we were always conscious of where the real war was being fought. What brought me closer to the battle of the Atlantic was the parade of men through our office, since our directorate was responsible for manning the ships, or at least the officer components. We knew immediately of the ships that were sunk or damaged, and of the casualties.

Many of the survivors checked in with us later on, some battle-worn after multiple crossings and needing a shore appointment; others wanting another sea appointment as soon as their leave was completed. I shall not forget the stories they told of their own ships. They told us also of the unarmed merchant ships that had gone down beside them and of the heroic and horrible deaths of the merchant seamen. They felt the loss of those men as keenly as the loss of their own shipmates because it had been their duty to try to protect the merchant ships and get them across the ocean safely. After several terrible years those comrades in arms—and they were unequal only as to the arms they carried—managed to win the battle of the Atlantic together.

Rear Admiral Leonard W. Murray, who happened to be my senior officer for a number of years but who later became Commander in Chief of the Canadian Northwest Atlantic, acknowledged handsomely the special contribution of the merchant seamen. He said,

> "Make no mistake, the real victors of the battle of the Atlantic were not the navies or air forces, but the Allied Merchant Seamen."

During World War II, 67 Canadian merchant ships were lost; 198 merchant seamen were taken prisoner of war; and 1,146 were killed. I do not know the numbers of the losses in World War I and the Korean war.

The merchant seamen suffered and died while helping to defeat Canada's enemy. They earned at the very least a book of remembrance in their honour. I urge honourable senators to give unanimous consent to Senator Marshall's motion.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (2130)

FISHERIES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO CONDUCT STUDY

Hon. Eileen Rossiter moved, pursuant to notice of May 13, 1992:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries be authorized to examine and report upon the current conditions and future prospects of Canada's Atlantic commercial inshore fisheries and any related matters; and
>
> That the Committee present its final report to the Senate no later than 31st March, 1993.

She said: Honourable senators, you are all well aware of the fact that the Atlantic fishery is again facing very difficult times. For generations, the fishery has been one of the major building blocks, if not the major building block, of the economic and social health of the East Coast. Literally hundreds of small rural and coastal communities throughout the five eastern provinces depend for their main economic support on the inshore fishery.

Unlike the crisis of the early 1980s, the major problem today is one of resource shortages, especially in the groundfish. As we all know, the northern cod stock has drastically declined.

Matters which the committee will report on include: the structure of the fishery; federal government policies, regulations and programs; the effectiveness of resource management and conservation; the social and economic context of the inshore sector; and other matters such as the tuna fishery, the crab fishery and northern shrimp.

We hope to identify and recommend measures which will contribute to the overall stability and prosperity of this very important sector of the Atlantic coast fishery.

I trust that members of this Chamber will see fit to adopt this motion as quickly as possible.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Would the honourable senator permit me to ask a question. The question concerns the interpretation of the motion.

I realize that the motion would focus the attention of the committee particularly on the inshore fishery. However, we all realize that there is a direct relationship between the activities in the offshore fishery and those in the inshore fishery. Am I correct in thinking that it is not the thought of the committee that it would be estopped from examining the offshore fishery operations as they influence the success of the inshore fishery? Am I correct in that interpretation?

Senator Rossiter: Yes indeed, Senator Stewart, you are correct.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Recently, in the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, any members who have attended the meetings know that there have been severe restrictions on budgets, particularly for committees. Could the senator give us an idea of the budgetary considerations for this study? Do you have any idea?

Senator Rossiter: No, Senator Molgat, I do not have any idea, other than I am well aware of the fact that most of the committee funds have been earmarked. I am hoping that some committees will not use all of their allotment and that we will be able to complete this study properly.

Senator Molgat: I realize the very serious situation in the Atlantic fishery. However, it has been studied on many occasions in the past. I am wondering if there is a risk that the fishermen will start saying, "All you people do is study us, but you do not do anything to solve our problems"?

Senator Rossiter: Unfortunately, Senator Molgat, we in this chamber do not have anything to do with the implementing of the recommendations, but if we study the subject in depth and make good recommendations that can be implemented, then we will have done a good job.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 20, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m. the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the election clock ticks on.

Senator Doody: Big Ben.

Senator Frith: Yes, Big Ben. Very good. I like that. The election "Big Ben" ticks on as follows: For Senator Murray's democrats, there are 185 days left; for Senator Murray's cowards, 571 days.

[Translation]

COMPETITION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

The Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

WEDNESDAY, May 20, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

FIFTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Competition act (multi-level marketing plans and pyramid selling), has, in obedience of the Order of Reference of Monday, May 11, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Poitras, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

PRIVATE BILL

GREEN SHIELD CANADA PREPAID SERVICES ASSOCIATION—FIRST READING

Hon. Richard J. Doyle presented Bill S-10, to incorporate the Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Doyle: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(f), I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Atkins, that this bill be read the second time tomorrow, Thursday, May 21, 1992.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the motion is put, I wonder if the honourable senator would indicate why leave is required? As a standard principle, as I have stated on many occasions, we should follow the regular practice of giving two days' notice. That is a time-honoured parliamentary practice, permitting all senators to read the legislation and consult anyone they wish to consult before proceeding to second reading. Why the urgency? Why is leave required?

Senator Doyle: Honourable senators, there is a wish on the part of the petitioner that this matter be cleared up here and sent to the other place. They are a little afraid of the clock as it ticks towards the month of June and the likelihood that Parliament will be away on holidays.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Leave is not granted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, as leave is not granted, the bill will be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Friday, May 22. Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed par 531 citizens from the province of British Columbia who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Kamloops and Victoria. My presentation has taken up exactly one minute of the time of the Senate, aside from Senator Simard's interruptions. Yet, it has somehow annoyed some honourables senators on the other side. But this is a serious matter if 531 citizens of this country have taken the trouble of signing a petition, with their names and addresses, to protest against the goods and services tax.

Five hundred and thirty one citizens, that is quite a few! That is not to be disregarded, especially when you are at 20 per cent in the polls.

Let us imagine for a minute that these 531 citizens would have come in person. They would have filled both galleries, on each side of this Chamber, to capacity. Still, another 271 of them would be standing outside.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: That is not part of the petition, is it?

Senator Hébert: No, Senator Simard, that is for your information, because you are always curious to know what it is all about.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

EARTH SUMMIT IN RIO DE JANEIRO—COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In his absence last week, I had put a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government regarding the composition of the parliamentary delegation to the Rio de Janeiro conference. It was my understanding that 12 members from the House of Commons would be attending the conference, and my question was how many senators would be included in the delegation.

● (1410)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I really do not know the answer to that question. I am not aware that there are 12 members of the House of Commons attending as a House of Commons delegation. I had understood that arrangements were being made through one or several of the committees of that place to send members to the conference. Then, of course, there is the delegation that the government will be sending.

Senator Olson: The government is ignoring the Senate in this matter. That is how it seems to me.

Senator Murray: I will look into the matter and bring in a report.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, the minister was absent last week when I asked my question, so I purposely addressed it to the Deputy Leader of the Government in order that the matter would be given consideration in due course. I consider this to be a very important matter. If a Canadian government delegation is attending this conference and members of Parliament are included, there ought to be an equitable number from both houses. I think that is a standard principle that we should always insist upon.

If the minister is not in a position to answer my question now, that is fine; I shall await an answer. I hope that it will come quickly, because the timing is close; this is May 20 and the conference begins on June 2. I would hope that by tomorrow we could know. It is important to know how many members from the House of Commons are attending this conference and, accordingly, how many members from the Senate will also be attending.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall certainly try to obtain that information right away.

JUSTICE

SOCIAL UNREST—PROPOSED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH BIG CITY MAYORS AND FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a second question. It is a follow-up to a question I had asked sometime ago, and repeated last week in the absence of the Leader of the Government. My question is with respect to the meeting of the Prime Minister with the mayors of major Canadian cities. When I asked the question previously, the minister indicated that he did not know if a request had come forward. I then read into the record a specific request from the mayor of the city of London, speaking on behalf of the mayors of the cities. Has that meeting now taken place? I have seen no news report on it. If not, and because of the urgency of the problem, when will it take place?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, here again I shall have to enquire of the Prime Minister's office as to what concrete plans, if any, are in place on that matter.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I want to point out that that is the same answer the honourable senator gave me some eight days ago.

Senator Frith: The Prime Minister's office has been closed. He keeps going there and it says "closed".

Senator Molgat: The honourable senator had indicated at that time—and I can read him his comments—that this was an urgent matter for the Prime Minister. Surely we can get a answer within eight days.

Senator Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall make enquiries. Organizing the Prime Minister's schedule is a very difficult matter. There are all kinds of demands on his time, such as requests for meetings et cetera. He is, as the honourable senator knows, in Washington today. There are other international meetings that he must attend and there are unforeseen events that occur and which require his participation and attendance. Therefore I would probably be safe in saying that no meeting of the kind described by the honourable senator is imminent, but I will enquire to see whether arrangements are being made for a meeting and, if so, when.

Senator Olson: So he does not have time for the mayors.

NORTH ATLANTIC FISHERIES ORGANIZATION

RESULTS OF HALIFAX MEETINGS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government. The people of Atlantic Canada looked forward with great hopes and anticipation to the special meeting of the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization held in Halifax on May 11 to 14. However, I note from the press release after the meeting by the Honourable John Crosbie that we made only modest progress.

From Newfoundland's point of view, from my province's point of view, that may have been progress eight or ten years ago. However today, with foreign fleets still fishing on the Nose and Tail of the Grand Banks outside our 200-mile limit while our people inside are not allowed to fish, it is not a happy situation.

My question to the government leader is this: What does the government intend to do between now and the next meeting of NAFO, to be held in Halifax in September of this year?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I am sure the honourable senator is aware that new measures to improve surveillance and control were considered at the special meeting. If approved, those measures will improve surveillance and control over the fishing fleets outside the 200 mile zone and will reduce overfishing.

I do not disagree with the honourable senators's description of that as "very modest progress". It is modest indeed, and is yet to be respected and honoured by the states engaging in the fishery.

Having said that, I will ask Mr. Crosbie, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, whether he has a further comment in reply to the honourable senator's question.

Senator Petten: I would appreciate receiving a reply.

THE ECONOMY

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS MACHINES—REDUCTION OF IBM'S CANADIAN WORK FORCE—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the government for its prompt response to my question of May 6, 1992. Unfortunately, the response is not an answer to my question. The question was: What were the circumstances that caused IBM to reduce its workforce by approximately 20 per cent? Were there any means at the disposal of the government to restrain IBM from continuing to sell into the marketplace while repatriating jobs to the United States? The underlying assumption of the free trade agreement was that there would be greater opportunities for jobs in Canada. Apparently IBM has had exactly the reverse experience.

The response that the government provided indicated that IBM, while it is reducing its workforce in Canada, "... has steadily increased its exports over the years and remains poised to take advantage of predicted global growth opportunities." Therefore, we have the reverse of what the government promised: more exports from Canada, fewer jobs in Canada.

I repeat my question: Has the government any means at its disposal to see if it can stop this drift?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the points raised by the honourable senator are matters for debate and I invite him to debate them at the appropriate time.

If he has further questions to ask as a result of what I think is a quite comprehensive reply produced by Mr. Wilson, I shall be glad to convey those questions to the Minister for International Trade and endeavour to obtain a further reply.

NOVA SCOTIA

WESTRAY COAL MINE DISASTER—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I wonder if I may ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a couple of questions with respect to the Westray Coal Mine disaster. It may be appropriate at this stage, after we are slightly recovered from those horrendous events, to begin an examination of some of the circumstances that surrounded this disaster.

As the honourable minister knows, the government of Nova Scotia has appointed a judge to conduct an inquiry, and I believe the Parliament of Canada is the place to try to throw some additional light on the circumstances surrounding that decision.

The honourable minister can set me right if I am not correct, but I understand that the Westray Coal Mine was made possible because of $85 million in federal loan guarantees and over $8 million in interest buy-downs, and that the coal mine also received close to $700,000 research and development moneys from the Department of Supply and Services.

I should like to have, if possible, a copy of the agreement concluded with the head of Westray, Mr. Frame, and copies of the Memorandum of Understanding that Curragh Resources signed with the Department of Supply and Services. In fact, it would be helpful if the minister could undertake to provide us with any documentation, including studies, consultants' reports, letters, and other matters which were instrumental in securing the support of the Government of Canada for this particular project.

● (1420)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the short answer to the honourable senator's question is in the affirmative.

Senator MacEachen: I take it the minister is confirming the financial support. I wonder about the documentation which I requested.

Senator Murray: I am confirming the statement that the honourable senator made concerning the financial arrangements, the loan insurance of 85 per cent of a $100-million term loan and an interest buy-down that was not to exceed $8.75 million on the same loan.

I had a note, or saw a reference somewhere to the funds that were provided for research and development. I will be glad to refresh my memory on that and provide details to the Senate.

With regard to the memoranda of agreement, the contracts, the consultants' reports and all the rest of it, there is quite voluminous documentation on these matters in the files of the government, all of it related to our role as a loan guarantor to the lender. In accordance with access to information legislation, all of this material is being reviewed now in the various departments that are concerned, and we look forward to its early release.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I wonder if, at some time either today or later, the Leader of the Government would throw some light on the allegation that, prior to the opening of the Westray mine, the company stated in its project overview that, with regard to the spontaneous combustion risk, it had concluded that that risk was not precisely defined. Therefore at that time, they were unable to define precisely the risk of spontaneous combustion. I am asking for clarification on whether such a project overview existed, and whether that description was contained therein.

On the same subject, it has been stated publicly that in 1988, I believe, the Cape Breton Development Corporation reportedly had warned of the risks of spontaneous combustion at Westray. My question is: Did such a report emanate from Devco, did it reach the reporting minister in Ottawa, and were any of those considerations contained in that report from a government corporation considered in Ottawa at that time?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it was a condition of our financial assistance to the project that the project conform to all of the health and safety standards and regulations of the government of Nova Scotia, which of course is responsible for the regulating of the coal mining industry in that province.

● (1430)

I recall the representations made at the time by the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and indeed they have been alluded to recently in the media and in media interviews with the former chairman of DEVCO, Dr. Teresa MacNeil. My recollection is that the representations were contained in a quite lengthy document that dealt almost exclusively with the financing and economics of the project, which, as you know, DEVCO opposed. There was a very brief reference to the safety history of the mine which, in one or two sentences, referred to information that was well known to all parties concerned.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator MacEachen: I presume the minister will try to make that report available to us.Would he also see if we can track down the project overview which is alleged to have been made by Westray itself and which seemed to give an indefinite answer to that question in its own overview at that time. I do not know whether that is the case or not. I am asking for clarification.

Senator Murray: I do not have any information at all about that, but I will look into it, honourable senators.

WESTRAY COAL MINE DISASTER—BASIS OF FEDERAL FINANCIAL SUPPORT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a couple of related questions. On May 12 of this year, when the Leader of the Government in the Senate was dealing with this tragic matter, as reported at page 1478 of the Debates of the Senate, he said:

> Honourable senators, what I do know is that the development of any coal mine in that province is done in conformity with the laws and regulations of the province of Nova Scotia, which, in my recollection and experience, are extremely strict.

The minister has told us that it was the decision of the Government of Canada to support financially the opening of the Westray mine. Since the success of the venture depended—as we know now to our sorrow—on safety, did the Government of Canada, when deciding to commit federal money, look into the health and safety regime provided by the laws and regulations of the province of Nova Scotia? Alternatively, did the government simply assume that those laws and regulations were adequate to assure a safe mine on the Foord seam? That is my first question.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the laws and safety regulations would be known to the Government of Canada. We believe them to be adequate—indeed more than adequate. As to the cause of the disaster that took place there, it remains to be seen, as a result of the Royal Commission which the Government of Nova Scotia has appointed, whether the cause of the disaster is related to the adequacy or otherwise of the regulations, or to human error, or to some other factors.

Senator Stewart: The parent company, Curragh Resources, has operated other mines in Canada. Could the minister tell us if, in any department of government, in Energy, Mines and Resources, for example, there are records of any kind bearing upon the way that company conducts its operations, particularly with respect to the health and safety of miners? I am asking this question especially, but not exclusively about the mine in the Yukon Territory.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would have to inquire.

Senator Stewart: And you will inquire?

Senator Murray: Yes, honourable senator.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to table the response to a question raised by Senator Frith on May 7, 1992, regarding the "Brighter Futures" program, and another on May 12 by Senator Bonnell regarding the possibility of a visit to Canada by President Yeltsin.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

"BRIGHTER FUTURES" PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR CHILDREN AT RISK

(Response to question raised by Hon. Royce Frith on May 7, 1992)

In the recent budget, the government proposed a new Child Benefit, which will increase by $2.1 billion over the next five years federal support for children and families. This brings the annual total expenditure on the child benefit system to about $4.9 billion. In addition, large families receive an extra $75 for the third and subsequent children. Families with children under seven will still receive the supplement to the Child Tax Credit of up to $213 per child.

The Minister of Health and Welfare has recently announced Brighter Futures, a preventive and multi-faceted program directed primarily at intervention in the early stages of the lives of children that adds another $500 million over five years to the cause of child development. The four program areas of prevention, promotion, protection and partnership include initiatives addressing issues such as low birth weight, injuries, mental health and parenting.

Since 1984, the government has had an enviable record on helping child and families, particularly the ones most in need. For example:

- Our economic and labour market strategies have focused on jobs, which means that parents are better able to support their families;

- the Child Tax Credit was increased by more than 50 per cent between 1984 and 1992, that is from $367 to $601 per child. In addition, a Child Tax Credit supplement for children under seven was introduced ($213 in 1992);

-the refundable Sales Tax Credit which was introduced in 1986 to help support low-income families has now been superseded by the Goods and Services Tax Credit of value up to $193 for an individual, $193 for a spouse and $102 for each eligible child. Under sales tax reform, the Goods and Services Tax credit ensures that families with incomes less than $30,000 will be better off;

-the 1988 personal tax reform removed 850,000 lower income Canadians from the tax rolls;

- the federal government has increased its support for child care to one billion dollars a year—a four-fold increase since 1984. It continues to cost-share day care expenditures with provinces and territories under the Canada Assistance Plan benefiting thousands of low-income parents and their children. For working parents, the Minister of Finance has announced an increase in the maximum Child Care Expense Deduction of $1,000 beginning in 1993 to reflect the child care costs that these parents face;

- the policies addressing marital break-down have helped to better ensure that custodial parents have the financial means with which to support and care for their children;

-amendments to extend the leave provisions under the Unemployment Insurance Program, and approximately $1 billion is spent on maternity and parental benefits;

- the family violence initiative commits the federal government to spending $136 million to help eliminate the problem of family violence; and,

-the National Drug Strategy announced in March 1992 is a five-year $270 million initiative to prevent drug use.

These are some of the important measures that the Government has taken in order to better target our limited resources, and that is the taxpayers money, where help is needed most.

The Government's economic strategies focus on deficit reduction, competitiveness, economic growth and low inflation, to create the jobs and opportunities so that parents can better support their children. The Government helps children by establishing initiatives for sustainable economic growth, prosperity and longterm competitiveness. Thus, fiscal restraint is an essential part of any strategy to help children and their families.

The argument that $5 billion has been removed from the child benefit program in this country since 1986 assumes that the economic and social context remained unchanged since 1984. Only considering de-indexing of benefits and partial de-indexation of thresholds fails to consider the significant increases in personal and family incomes and employment that have occurred since 1984.

The $5 billion figure includes $1.5 billion attributed to reneging on the commitment to child care and the ceiling on Canada Assistance Plan expenditures. In fact, actual expenditures on child care and transfers to the provinces through the Canada Assistance Plan have increased substantially since 1984. Federal expenditures on child care amount to over $1.0 billion in 1992. Through the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal government supports children by cost-sharing eligible provincial expenditures on social assistance and social services, annual federal expenditures under the Plan amount to over $6.5 billion, and over 35% of the beneficiaries are children.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

IMPENDING VISIT OF PRESIDENT BORIS YELTSIN TO UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF VISIT TO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell on May 12, 1992)

The Government is considering the possibility of a visit to Canada by President Yeltsin this summer. Officials are working with their Russian counterparts to find mutually-convenient dates and to develop a program.

COASTING TRADE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rossiter, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-33, respecting the use of foreign ships and non-duty paid ships in the coasting trade.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I adjourned this debate last evening after listening to the interesting comments of Senator Forrestall and I had hoped to be able to proceed today. I did not receive my copy of Debates of the Senate until shortly before coming into the Chamber. I would ask the indulgence of the house to let the matter stand until tomorrow, when I will be prepared to proceed. However, if anyone else wishes to speak at this time, I would not stand in the way of anyone participating.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the consideration of the 14th report of the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof), tabled in the Senate on May 14, 1992.

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras: Honourable Senators, the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has concluded its preliminary study on Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. This bill gives the government more alternatives to help troubled financial institutions. Under the present act, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is empowered to take the necessary measures to liquidate a financial institution that is insured or that is insolvent and about to declare bankruptcy.

The bill proposes that, under certain conditions, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation be given the control of the shares and subordinated debt of a troubled institution while the institution is looking for a way to avoid liquidation. The committee used its knowledge of financial institutions to make constructive suggestions before the bill leaves the other house. This will enable both houses to speed the passing of the bill, therefore avoiding situations such as that of Central Guaranty, that lingered on to the point of affecting people's confidence in the system. The other house has already proposed several amendments to the bill. The protection of the members of the Canadian payment system and allowing the participation of provinces are two examples. The committee proposes a number of amendments in its report, based on technical issues raised during the hearings. For instance, an amendment provides that the deposit insurance corporation should be allowed to seize the assets rather than the shares and the subordinated debt. Several groups raised this issue. Another technical amendment is the taking over of the liabilities of a restructured institution, as well as issues related to the transfer of assets when a financial institution restructuring process is under way.

In its report, the committee also raises fundamental issues concerning the deposit insurance corporation, but those issues go beyond the scope of Bill C-48. These include the adequate splitting of costs between the Consolidated Revenue Fund and the deposit insurance corporation fund, the make-up of the board of directors, as well as federal-provincial harmonization. The committee will deal with those issues later on this year, through special reviews. In its report, the committee recommends that the government deal with the technical issues before the bill reaches the Senate. This will speed up the passing of the bill and provide the deposit insurance corporation with an additional tool to generate public confidence in the Canadian financial system. Honourable Senators, I move the adoption of the report.

[English]

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Kirby made some comments on Bill C-48. I should have liked to respond a little more thoroughly than I did with the question I asked him yesterday. Unfortunately, because I did not receive the Debates of the Senate until just a few moments ago, I am not prepared to make a comment today. If my honourable colleague will allow, I should like to adjourn the debate until either tomorrow or Friday morning.

On motion of Senator Di Nino, debate adjourned.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FIFTH REPORT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology (budget—study on citizenship), presented in the Senate on 19th May, 1992.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE OF THE DISTINCT SOCIETY OF QUEBEC—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Hon. Senator David, calling the attention of the Senate to his historical understanding of the distinct society of Quebec.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, under the circumstances, I do not intend to resume the debate on this question. I therefore withdraw from the debate. If other senators wish to pursue it, they are free to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this item is considered debated.

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John B. Stewart moved, pursuant to notice of May 19, 1992:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesdays, June 2, 9 and 16, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. John B. Stewart moved, pursuant to notice of May 19, 1992:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Thursday, May 21, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at the risk of repeating my plea, if committee chairmen made an attempt to sit at 4.30, that would normally suit the business of the Senate a bit better. However, as I look at the clock today and at the items remaining on the Order Paper, even that defence has been shattered because it appears that the way will be clear for the committee to proceed at 3.30 this afternoon.

The four motions before us today are a prime example of the problem facing the Senate. Possibly we can deal with this matter when we have the impending meeting with committee chairmen, but I think it presents a serious problem for the Senate. In the meantime, if we can at least set committee meetings for 4.30, that would assist the work of the Senate. I know that there are circumstances in which that cannot be done, but we should strive to leave room for Senate work.

Otherwise, I will have to return to my proposal of last night that the Senate meet every Monday night at 8 o'clock, immediately adjourn and ask the committee chairmen to convene and give the Senate leave to sit on whatever day they see fit.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz pursuant to notice of May 19, 1992, moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at three-thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Wednesdays, even though the Senate may then be sitting, during the Committee's consideration of Bill S-8, An Act to regulate the manufacture and importation of motor vehicles and motor vehicle equipment to reduce the risk of death, and injury and damage to property and the environment, and Bill C-36, An Act respecting corrections and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I suppose I fall into the same category, but at least I am in good company. Would it be somewhat more satisfactory if we chose 4 o'clock? In deference to Senator Molgat, we have asked for this concession only with respect to two bills, both of which we suspect will have a long list of witnesses. On Bill S-8 we will probably have in excess of 20 or 25 witnesses. I will undertake on behalf of the committee that it will sit evenings as well.

I am quite prepared to say, humour aside, that if 4 o'clock would better suit the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, I do not think it would be unsuitable to members of the committee. I would accordingly amend the motion to read "4 o'clock".

● (1450)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, from the standpoint of the Senate, that is an improvement. I note that the motion of Senator Nurgitz is with regard to two bills only, although he is asking for a perpetual motion which in itself extends matters beyond what is normal. However, if we can agree to 4 o'clock, then that is an improvement over what it was in the first place.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion as amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Day Hays, pursuant to notice of May 19, 1992, moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources have power to sit at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon on Thursday, May 21, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 21, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

CLOSURE OF RESEARCH STATION—EFFECT ON OYSTER INDUSTRY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should like to make a statement to the Minister of Interprovincial Relations, inviting him to come to the rescue of the oyster fishermen in Prince Edward Island, in Prince County and the Egmont area of my good friend Senator Phillips.

We are in a bad way on Prince Edward Island. First we lost our air base; then we lost the railroad. We are in the process of losing the Post Office, and now we are informed that we are to lose the fisheries research station that was set up in Prince Edward Island for the benefit of our Malpeque oyster industry. If that fisheries research station in Prince Edward Island is closed because of the policies of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, we will then have only a minimal amount of support from that Department. Consequently the quality of our oysters, which are now known worldwide as the best in the world, may be down-graded and we may suffer a significant loss of sales in our oyster fishing industry.

It is bad enough to have this government destroy the cod, capelin, flounder, and all the other fish, but the oyster fisheries that are farmed in Prince Edward Island are the best in the world. I should like the minister to intercede to see if he can have the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans maintain that fisheries research station in Prince Edward Island.

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, for any senators who had a momentary disappointment, thinking that they might not hear about Big Ben today, the election clock for Senator Murray's democrats reveals that, as of Thursday, May 21, 1992, they have 184 days left, while the contemptuous cowards have 570 days remaining.

Senator Molgat: Time marches on. They will be in trouble soon.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Beauséjour), Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, May 21, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject matters of bills and estimates as may be referred to it, as authorized by the Senate on Wednesday, November 20, 1991. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 9,250.00
Transportation and Communications	$ 14,793.00
Other Expenditures	$ 800.00
TOTAL	$ 24,843.00

Respectfully submitted,

ROMÉO LEBLANC
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this report be taken into consideration, honourable senators?

On motion of Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Beauséjour), Deputy Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, had the honour to present the following report:

THURSDAY, May 21, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee recommends that the Standing Committee on Internal Economy be authorized to release 12/12 of the funds for the following committees:

1) Sub-Committee on Security and National Defence (trip to U.N.);

2) Special Joint Committee on Conflicts of Interest;

3) Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Financial Institutions—draft regulations);

4) Standing Committee on National Finance (legislation); and

5) Standing Committee on Transport and Communications (legislation).

Respectfully submitted,

ROMÉO LEBLANC
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

NATIONAL PUBLIC SERVICE WEEK BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Lorna Marsden, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, had the honour to present the following report:

Thursday, May 21, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-328, An Act respecting National Public Service Week: Serving Canadians Better, has in obedience to its Order of Reference of Tuesday, May 19, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

LORNA MARSDEN
Deputy Chair

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): At the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, if I may, the issue is slightly more complicated. If we are sitting tomorrow, I hope it will be given third reading at the next sitting. If we are not to sit tomorrow, then, as this bill provides that National Public Service Week will be the third week in June, any delay would raise complications. Therefore, I would hope, with leave, to have third reading later today.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): In view of the public service, I think we should sit tomorrow.

Senator Frith: The deputy leader says that we will be sitting tomorrow, so it should stand. On motion of Senator Frith, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, by popular request, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 65 residents of the province of New Brunswick, who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Fredericton, Rivière-du-Portage and Maisonnette.

I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 533 residents of the province of British Columbia who object to the goods and services tax. These petitions are mainly from Kamloops.

So we have a grand total of 598 Canadians who object to the goods and services tax, especially its application to books and periodicals.

These people probably still hope Prime Minister Mulroney will finally keep his promise to at least exempt books from the goods and services tax, a promise revealed by Senator Chaput-Rolland, which was her excuse for voting against the Liberal amendment concerning books and periodicals.

I hope that Senator Chaput-Rolland, who is not with us, unfortunately, will remind the Prime Minister of his promise and set the minds at rest of those 598 petitioners whose addresses are now, and shall remain, at her disposal.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

DOWNWARD REVISION OF ECONOMIC FORECASTS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government that has to do with the economic forecasts of organizations such as the Conference Board of Canada, the International Monetary Fund and others, and even of the Minister of Finance himself. In the last few days they have amended their forecasts down significantly from where they were a few weeks ago. I do not want to get into an argument about it, but there is a fairly long list of organizations that have reduced their forecasts of what will happen to the Canadian economy in 1992-93.

Can the minister tell us whether the government has under active consideration a contingency plan to help the economy move forward in the event that these revised predictions turn out to be more accurate than the forecasting done some months ago, as indeed they are, day by day, proving to be? Is there a contingency plan in the event that the level is down around 1 per cent, as the Conference Board now predicts, rather than the 2.7 per cent growth forecast some time ago?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the short answer to the question is that the Minister of Finance revised downward his forecast for economic growth, because the growth in the last quarter of 1991 and at the beginning of 1992 was weaker than anticipated.

With regard to the Conference Board forecasts, we remain convinced that they are unduly pessimistic in that, for one thing, they underestimate the likely rate of economic growth for the balance of the calendar year 1992.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the minister and the government can have whatever opinion they like, but, as the minister knows, I have asked this question repeatedly since the budget was brought down several months ago, and each time the minister has replied by saying that the Canadian economy is poised for growth. He did not make the mistake of saying that it had grown, although there is evidence now that there has been an increase in certain trade factors in the last few months; but the economy, overall, continues to sink.

Therefore this term "poised to move forward" does not fit the situation any more. Based on current forecasts—although not the OECD forecasts, which have been rendered useless by the passage of time—can the Leader of the Government point to positive measures that the government plans to take, rather than indicating that the government is "poised to move forward", which never seems to happen? Jobs are disappearing.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in particular we believe that the Conference Board forecast errs in that it predicts only modest growth for the second half of 1992. We are convinced that they underestimate significantly the impact of lower interest rates on the interest-sensitive components of aggregate demand here and in the United States.

Furthermore, the Conference Board expects investment to be flat or to grow only very moderately. In that respect, we believe they ignore the fact that the industrial restructuring that is now under way in Canada will require substantial increases in investment spending.

These are only two of the areas in which we believe—and time will tell who is right—that the Conference Board forecast is unduly pessimistic.

Senator Frith: Not a bad job with a hopeless case!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there is a severe problem in all of this that I hope the government could begin to understand; that is, that the government and its agent, the Bank of Canada, have demonstrated that every time there is a decrease in the value of the Canadian dollar or an increase in inflationary factors, they move in immediately with the blunt instrument they have available to them and raise the interest rate.

Under those conditions, I would think that it is not very difficult for the government to understand that an investor who has just been through what the government and the Bank of Canada did to investors a few months ago, will not walk into that trap again. In other words, investors will not borrow money when the government's stated monetary policy is that it will move in immediately with higher interest rates and knock the props out from under any gain in the economy. I have talked to many businessmen, and they are not willing to take that chance again.

Is the government giving any consideration to modifying what it will do with its monetary policy so that investors and consumers can have some confidence in the economy?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would have thought that before the honourable senator brought up the question of monetary policy, he would have checked with the Bank of Canada, which today announced a further decrease of 12 basis points in the bank rate from 6.62 per cent last week to 6.50 per cent this week. It is Thursday again.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Shades of other Thursdays. You brought this up every Thursday when you were on this side of the Chamber.

Senator Murray: What this reflects, of course, is the terrific progress we have made in this country in controlling inflation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: That is just one factor—but a very important one—with regard to investment intentions.

The investment picture is not at all as the honourable senator describes it. To take only the question of foreign investment in Canada, since the implementation of the free trade agreement—and I am sorry Senator Perrault is not here, because he is so interested in this subject—Canada has had net investment flows for the first time since the National Energy Program was instituted.

● (1420)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate either did not understand the question or chose to give me something else. I received a reply, but no answer.

Senator Frith: The Artless Dodger.

Senator Olson: One of the main problems Canadians have had has been the result of an exercise by this government and the Bank of Canada in which they raised the prime interest rate until it reached 14.75 per cent. That has driven a lot of people out of business. Bankruptcies are at a record high. I do not need to recite all that, because I think it is well known to the minister.

I am asking whether or not this government is prepared to do anything to restore the confidence of Canadians to invest in their own country. He talked about foreign investment. That is good and useful, but it is nothing compared to what Canadians could do in this country if they had any confidence that they could invest further capital, or borrow money and put themselves in debt, without having this government and the Bank of Canada clobber them with interest rates when the economy gets going a little bit. Now, if the Leader of the Government did not understand that, I will explain it to him another way.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the trend of the bank rate and interest rates in this country has been downward for some considerable time. I have just told honourable senators that the bank rate was struck at 6.50 per cent today. That is the lowest in more than 20 years.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Now tell them about the unemployment figures.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, one does not have to go back too many years to find an example of double-digit interest rates, double-digit inflation, and double-digit unemployment all at the same time.

Let me say that I agree with the honourable senator to this extent: I believe the one missing component at the moment is consumer confidence. While it has been growing, it has been growing very slowly.

Senator Olson: What about investor confidence?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is wrong when he speaks about investor confidence. Investor confidence is coming back quite nicely, thank you. I have just indicated that to the honourable senator.

However, the most important missing component is in fact consumer confidence, and it does have to rebound. Let me give the honourable senator and others some further reasons, in addition to the ever-declining interest rates in this country, for a rebound in consumer confidence. Real GDP increased in both January and February. Our merchandise exports increased by almost 4 per cent in the first quarter of this year. Housing starts rose 7.6 per cent last month.

That must tell the honourable senator something about consumer confidence.

Existing house sales rose 23.4 per cent in the first quarter. Sales of new motor vehicles rose 2.6 per cent in April. These are signs that point to a renewal in consumer confidence.

[Senator Olson.]

I agree with him that we do need a greater rebound in consumer confidence. It is the one and most important missing element in the revival and renewal of the Canadian economy.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Olson, I will come back to you. Senator Barootes has a supplementary question.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, I have a very simple question—

Senator Frith: You are a very simple person.

Senator Barootes: —for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and I am sure he can give an answer simple enough for everybody on the other side to understand.

There are two figures I would ask for on the Bank of Canada rate: What is it today, and what was it in 1982?

Senator Murray: It is 6.50 today and, although I do not have the exact figure, it was about 21 or 22 per cent back in 1982.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Take it easy. We will be pounding those desks in 183 days, so take it easy.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I would hope the Leader of the Government will also provide to Senator Barootes the unemployment figures for the same two dates. However, I am not rising to ask a question in that regard.

● (1430)

THE ENVIRONMENT

EARTH SUMMIT IN RIO DE JANEIRO—COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question today is a follow-up on a question I asked yesterday of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which in turn was a follow-up on a question I asked a week ago. That is with respect to the composition of the delegation to the Earth Summit to be held in Rio de Janeiro.

Timing in this matter is becoming more critical. We are now finding new demands coming at us. This morning, at a meeting of the Internal Economy committee, there was a request from the Agriculture and Forestry committee for approval of the funding to send a delegate to the conference in Rio.

I think it is extremely important, therefore, that we settle the matter quickly with regard to two points: First, there must be an equitable representation from the Senate as compared to the House of Commons. Second, there must be an equitable representation of the parties within the delegation. That is a traditional practice with regard to delegations.

We in the Senate must insist that we not be by-passed, that we are not treated as second-class citizens. This is an equal house to the House of Commons insofar as its authority and insofar as our committees are concerned. There is absolutely no reason for us not to follow the traditional practice.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to point out to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition that the government will be sending a delegation of ministers and official advisors. The details have yet to be finalized by the Prime Minister.

So far as parliamentarians are concerned, I can tell the honourable senator what was done in the House of Commons. In that place, on May 19, motions were passed by unanimous consent allowing five members of the House of Commons Standing Committee on the Environment and five Members of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Forestry and Fisheries to attend this conference. Their expenses will be paid through the budgets of each of those standing committees.

I am informed that it has not yet been determined which Members of Parliament will be attending, although that is not our concern here, nor whether they will have delegate or observer status at the conference.

The honourable senator has indicated that a proposal was made at the Internal Economy committee this morning that one of our committees send a representative to the conference. This is a matter for the committee to decide in light of budgetary considerations, I would think.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, do we have the assurance of the minister that no members of either the House of Commons or the Senate will be going on the government delegation per se? Any who will be going from the House of Commons will be going because they are committee members, and that this is the decision of a committee; is that correct?

Senator Murray: The only information I have on the matter is that the official delegation will consist of ministers and official advisors. Ministers, with one exception, are members of the House of Commons. Whether any other parliamentarians are part of that official delegation, I do not know. What I have in front of me states that the details have yet to be finalized. I will have to wait until that is done before informing the house.

Senator Molgat: In other words, is there the possibility that parliamentarians will be going on the delegation?

Senator Murray: I do not know.

Senator Molgat: I must repeat my question, then. Will the minister assure us that if parliamentarians are to be included, there will be equitable representation from the House of Commons and the Senate, and that there will be an equitable representation of parties?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator has made those representations. I have heard them. At the moment, the representations and, indeed, the question, are hypothetical. I do not know the answer to the question of whether or not there are parliamentarians other than ministers expected to be part of this official delegation.

Senator Molgat: Does the minister agree with the principle I have set forth, namely, that if parliamentarians are to be included, there be representation from both houses on an equitable basis, and that there be an equitable representation of the parties?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I certainly agree that the usual practice should be followed, yes.

NOVA SCOTIA

WESTRAY COAL MINE DISASTER—PRODUCTION OF REPORTS OF INDEPENDENT CONSULTANTS CONCERNING SAFETY

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, yesterday I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether, when the government decided to support financially the opening of the Westray mine in Nova Scotia, it undertook to ascertain whether the health and safety regime under which that mine would operate was sufficient to protect its investment. The minister answered that at that time, the laws and safety regulations of Nova Scotia would have been known to the Government of Canada. He said, "We believe them to be adequate—indeed more than adequate."

Yesterday in the House of Commons, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism was asked a question concerning the Westray mine, and in particular about the health and safety regime there. He replied in part, as reported at page 10929 of the House of Commons Debates:

> In this particular contract, the Bank of Nova Scotia, wanting to protect its investment, made sure this was done on a monthly basis. It was done and we also ensured that it would be done because our guarantee was there.

He mentions that the Government of Canada assured itself as to the health and safety regime by employing independent mining consultants.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to table the reports of the independent mining consultants who were selected to monitor the health and safety regime at the Westray mine?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I indicated yesterday in reply to questions from Senator MacEachen, the material in our possession is quite voluminous. It is being reviewed now in light of access to information with a view to its early release. I will certainly look into the reports mentioned by the honourable senator.

When he or I speak of the health and safety regime, I think it is clear—and it will be clear, certainly, from a reading of Hansard—that I was speaking of the relevant laws and regulations in the Province of Nova Scotia and the conformity of the project with those laws.

What Mr. Hockin indicated yesterday, and I think I may have alluded to it myself, is the fact that before the bank would allow money to flow to the project, it would have required periodic reports, perhaps on a monthly basis, as was suggested. Among other things, it required that the development of the mine was proceeding and that it be verified that it was proceeding in conformity with the health, safety and other standards and laws of the Government of Nova Scotia.

As Mr. Hockin indicated, of course, as a guarantor of the loan we would have received those reports as well.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the implication in the answer, if I heard it correctly, is that the Bank of Nova Scotia sought the surveillance and the Government of Canada received copies of whatever reports were prepared. That does not seem to conform exactly to what the Honourable Tom Hockin said. He makes reference to the Bank of Nova Scotia's concern, and then he says:

• (1440)

> It was done, and we also ensured that it would be done because our guarantee was there.

In other words, the Government of Canada's concern was not simply secondary to the concern of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Is that correct?

Senator Murray: That is fair enough. I just want to underline the fact that we are talking about the same set of documents or the same reports. Of course, we were concerned, and not in any secondary sense, because we were the guarantor of the loan. Further to that, we were providing an interest rate buy-down on the loan. If I am not mistaken, the requirement that those verifications be obtained was part of the contract between the government, the bank, and the sponsors of the project.

Senator Frith: You are saying the same report was sent to two different people.

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Stewart: There is another related question I want to ask at this time. It flows from Senator Murray's initial response. He said there was voluminous material and that it was being examined to ascertain what could be made available to the public under the Access to Information Act.

Will the information that is made available to this house, and possibly to the House of Commons, be limited to that information which would be made available to any member of the public under the Access to Information Act?

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators. I do not know whether the Parliamentary rules and practice are rather more broad than the access to information rules, but both the latter, in the case of inquiries from the public, and the former, that is, Parliamentary practice, in the case of requests from members of Parliament, will be observed.

[Senator Murray.]

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

JAPAN—EFFECT OF TRADE SURPLUS ON TRADING PARTNERS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Murray. There are now economic numbers available that indicate that Japan's projected trade surplus for 1992 will run at an historic $132 billion, approximately, if the performance for the first four months of 1992 is projected throughout the rest of the year. That surplus exceeds by three times Japan's surplus in 1985, when the Plaza Accord was agreed upon.

Numbers are also now available to show that, on the basis of a percentage of GDP taken by consumption, Japan's rate of consumption is 56 per cent, the European Community's is 63 per cent, and the United States' is 68 per cent. So we have the economy of Japan producing structural surpluses and, therefore, structural underconsumption. There is no sign of an abatement of this trend.

Does the Government of Canada have any concerns with respect to these numbers? Can the Leader of the Government say whether the Prime Minister and President Bush have discussed these matters, and whether, in preparation for the forthcoming G-7 meeting, the Minister of Finance may be developing a policy? The obvious policy, I would suggest, is a second Plaza Accord.

I wonder whether the minister could discover any answers to those four questions.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would not like to extemporize on a matter of this importance. I will ask my colleagues, Mr. Mazankowski and Mr. Wilson, whether they would like to prepare some notes for the benefit of the honourable senator and other colleagues on the question.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

KAON PROJECT—FOREIGN FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question regarding a favourite subject of mine, and indeed of Senator Carney's, and that is the KAON project in British Columbia. Both Senator Carney and I, and I hope I am not misquoting her, would like to see that project established in British Columbia on a fair and equitable basis.

Fortunately or unfortunately, depending on your point of view, and at the moment I am neutral, the government, in the person of Mr. Winegard, the Minister for Science, is being accused by the science community in British Columbia of trying to destroy the project by seeking one-third of the operating costs from foreign governments, apparently contrary to some federal-provincial agreement. I do not know the merits of these arguments, but I hear a lot of argument.

Could the minister make a statement to this house tomorrow morning bringing us up to date with respect to the federal government's position? What is the government prepared to do with respect to KAON? What does it expect the other stakeholders to do?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to do that and I will do that. We made a very firm proposal to the government of British Columbia some months ago. It was unambiguous and it was public. I will be glad to bring that to the attention of the Senate, as well as any comments my colleagues may have on the present state of play. What has changed in the interim is the position of the Government of British Columbia, which seems to be revisiting the understanding I thought we had with its predecessor.

Senator Austin: May I just add to that comment? If the Government of British Columbia is changing position, then I think there should be a clear statement on the record as to what it is doing.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have two delayed answers to questions, one raised on May 7 by Senator Molgat regarding a proposed meeting between the Prime Minister and big city mayors, and one raised on May 13 by Senator Molgat regarding the composition of the Canadian delegation to the Earth Summit.

JUSTICE

SOCIAL UNREST—PROPOSED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH BIG CITY MAYORS AND FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gildas L. Molgat on May 7, 1992)

The Prime Minister has received an invitation from Mr. Tom Gosness, Mayor of London, Ontario to meet with the Big City Mayors of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities on a number of urban issues.

The invitation will be given early consideration.

THE ENVIRONMENT

EARTH SUMMIT IN RIO DE JANEIRO—COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gildas L. Molgat on May 13, 1992)

In the House of Commons on May 19, 1992, motions were passed by unanimous consent allowing five members of the House of Commons Standing Committee on the Environment and five members of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Forestry and Fisheries to be sent to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro from June 1 to June 12. Their expenses will be paid for through the budgets of each of the two standing committees. It has not yet been determined which Members of Parliament will be attending nor whether they will have delegate or observer status at the conference.

In addition, the government is sending an official delegation of ministers and official advisors. The details have yet to be finalized by the Prime Minister.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. John B. Stewart, Chairman of the Standing Senate committee on Foreign Affairs, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, May 21, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, February 18, 1992, to hear evidence and to examine and report on matters relating to national security and defence and the future roles of Canada's armed forces, respectfully requests that it be empowered to adjourn from place to place outside Canada for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN B. STEWART
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Stewart, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

COMPETITION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton moved the third reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Competition Act (multi-level marketing plans and pyramid selling).

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion, honourable senators?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have discussed this matter with the vice-chairman of the committee and I know it has been studied in detail in committee. We see no problems with the bill. We are prepared to support it now on third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CORRECTIONS AND CONDITIONAL RELEASE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino moved second reading of Bill C-36, respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise to introduce second reading of Bill C-36, respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator.

Honourable senators, this bill is both important and complex. It is important because it deals at its core with the protection of Canadians. It deals with the rights of, and safeguards for, victims; it deals with the effective treatment and safe custody of offenders; and it deals with the safe release of offenders into the community under certain conditions.

For the first time, the mandate of the correctional system is set out in guiding statements of purpose and principles. Chief among those principles, honourable senators, is that "... the protection of society be the paramount consideration ..." in the corrections process and in making conditional release decisions.

As I have stated, this is a complex bill. It is necessarily complex because it deals with such a broad range of correctional matters in one modern piece of legislation. Bill C-36 will create a new Corrections and Conditional Release Act. Part I of this bill will replace the current Penitentiary Act; Part II will replace the current Parole Act; and Part III will create a legal framework for the office of the Correctional Investigator. Let me deal briefly with each of these areas.

The Penitentiary Act was first created in 1868. Since that time it has been amended from time to time, but it has never been comprehensively reviewed and modernized. Consequently, the current Act is somewhat of a patchwork and is anachronistic in some respects. In fails to fully account for many modern realities of correctional treatment, contemporary social conditions, and recent jurisprudence. The latter point is very important.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has changed, and continues to change, the Canadian legal landscape. It requires that the rights of all Canadians—including offenders—be respected. This does not mean that the rights enumerated in the Charter are unbounded. Indeed, the Charter states clearly that they may be restricted to the extent that those restrictions are, first, reasonable, and second, required by law. This bill sets out in law those reasonable restrictions.

Therefore while some have said that Part I of the proposed Act is concerned about the rights of offenders, it is more accurate to say that it is concerned about the legitimate limitation of those rights or, put another way, about the powers of the correctional system in relation to the care and custody of offenders.

Part I of the proposed Act deals primarily with the institutional part of corrections. It, together with the corresponding regulations, set out regimes for inmate discipline, searches of inmates, and seizure of contraband, urinalysis testing programs and the like. It also deals with escorted temporary absence programs, work release, health care and the exercise of religious expression.

Part I deals as well with the needs of victims and provides that certain information about offenders will be made available to them. Essential information will be provided automatically when it is requested, and other important information will be made available when the interests of the victim are judged to outweigh the offender's right to privacy. Victims have repeatedly and forcefully stated that information about the system and the offender that victimized them is one of the greatest and, too often, unfulfilled needs. This bill goes a long way towards remedying that situation.

I would like to step out of sequence for a moment, honourable senators, and say a few words about Part III of the proposed Act. It will create in law the office of the Correctional Investigator. This is not a new office. It has existed for 19 years, having been created using the Enquiries Act in what was meant to be only a temporary arrangement. Although this arrangement has worked well, there has been ongoing concern expressed by observers who fear that there is at least the appearance of insufficient independence for this important office.

The Correctional Investigator is, in effect, an ombudsman for inmate complaints. Through consultation with the Commissioner of Corrections and Chairman of the National Parole Board, he attempts to correct problems that are brought to his attention. By reporting to the Solicitor General, he can also recommend action when his consultative efforts fail to bring results. Ultimately, by traditionally having his annual report tabled in Parliament, he publicly discloses where problems have been corrected and where they continue to exist.

Bill C-36 will institutionalize the office of the Correctional Investigator. It will give it a permanence and protect its independence far better than present arrangements. Under the proposed Act the Correctional Investigator will be appointed for a fixed term. His reporting relationship to the minister, and through him to Parliament, will be made clear while his independence from control or interference by the minister will be protected in law. The Correctional Investigator will have his investigative powers set out in law. It will be clear that he has sole discretion to make all decisions about what investigations he should undertake and what his findings and recommendations will be.

There was considerable discussion in the other place about bringing the Correctional Investigator under the direct authority of Parliament; and for Parliament and its committees to be able to compel him to disclose information in his possession. Such a proposition would be totally unacceptable to the government. It is absolutely essential that the Correctional Investigator be able to assure confidentiality if he or she is to be able to truly get to the bottom of complaints. In the correctional environment, the inadvertent disclosure of sensitive information can endanger safety. If confidentiality cannot be assured, crucial information often will simply not be provided.

Similarly, if the Correctional Investigator is to be effective, he and he alone must have the full discretion to determine what investigations to pursue—without interference from the minister or, indeed, even from Parliament. This bill will provide him with that independence and protection from interference.

Honourable senators, as I have already said, Part II of the proposed Act will replace the current Parole Act. It will deal with matters pertaining to the National Parole Board and various forms of conditional release: unescorted temporary absences, day parole, accelerated review, full parole and statutory release. It will also deal with the board's detention powers—sometimes termed "gating"—which were established in 1986 by Bill C-67.

In this part, two themes that are found throughout the bill are of particular importance.

Senator Hastings: Shame!

Senator Di Nino: I am sure that even my dear friend, Senator Hastings, will eventually be convinced that this is the correct way to go about things.

First, it must be stressed that all release decisions must be based on an assessment of the risk that such a release would pose to the community. Where the risk would be unacceptable, and could not be sufficiently reduced by the supervision of a parole officer and by placing conditions on the release, no release would be granted. In such a case the release would be denied even if there were strong rehabilitative objectives, because public protection, honourable senators, is the paramount consideration in such decisions.

A second important theme is that of differentiating more effectively between more serious and less serious offenders. While all crime is to be condemned, the Canadian public is particularly appalled by violent crime and especially by sexual crimes that involve violence or that are perpetrated on children. Concern is also growing with regard to those predatory drug offenders who ply their trade without regard for the harm inflicted on other more vulnerable members of the community. Honourable senators, these are some of society's worst scum.

Schedule I to the Parole Act now contains a list of violent offences, conviction for which can make an offender liable to be detained beyond his or her normal statutory release date. This schedule was recently expanded by Order in Council to include certain newly enacted sexual offences against children. At committee stage an amendment was adopted to include other sexual offences against children that could be psychologically damaging to the victim.

In addition, Schedule II to the proposed Act is new. It contains a list of serious drug offences, conviction for which can also make the offender liable to detention. Moreover, conviction for a Schedule I offence will exclude offenders from accelerated review, with which I will deal in a moment, and conviction for an offence on either schedule will require the Parole Board to approve all unescorted temporary absences.

For those offenders convicted of an offence on either schedule, parole eligibility may also be restricted. Upon sentencing, judges will have the option of setting the parole eligibility date either at one-third, as it is now, or at one-half of the sentence. Moreover, accelerated review will also be ruled out for offenders convicted under Schedule II. This feature will allow the judge, who will be in possession of all the facts, to establish the appropriate denunciatory impact of the sentence without lengthening the sentence overall for that purpose.

Eligibility for day parole will also be shortened under Bill C-36. Rather than beginning after only one-sixth of the sentence, as at present, day parole eligibility will begin only six months before full parole eligibility. This will allow adequate time to prepare for a release on full parole, which will be the only purpose for which day parole should be granted. Other forms of release for correctional programming purposes will be accommodated under temporary absence or work release programs.

Work release is a new form of release that will fall under the authority of the warden for periods of up to 60 days. It will allow programs to continue that are advantageous to both offenders and the community. Under supervision, individuals and groups will be able to perform forest fire-fighting, reforestation and similar work projects. For shorter periods of time, escorted or unescorted temporary absences will be available for community services, which might involve park maintenance, assisting at special olympiads, or assisting senior citizens. These forms of conditional release will not necessarily imply that offenders are being readied for full release, but only that their program of rehabilitation is being advanced.

Honourable senators may be aware that a review of the temporary absence program was recently conducted by a panel appointed by the Solicitor General. That review found the program to be valuable and confirms that its rate of success is high. In fact, during last year only 68 temporary absences out of 52,000 met with failure. However, as a result of that review, efforts to improve the program further are being undertaken in areas like better data collection, recordkeeping, and defining the purposes and types of escorts to be utilized.

All of the recommendations made by the panel with regard to Bill C-36 have been accepted; they were incorporated in the bill during committee stage in the other place. It was agreed there that the legitimate purposes of escorted and unescorted temporary absences should be medical, administrative, community service, family contact, personal development for rehabilitative purposes, and compassionate reasons.

Another innovation in Bill C-36 is that of accelerated review for full parole release. It will apply only to non-violent offenders who are in penitentiary for the first time. Offenders convicted of violent offences on Schedule I and serious drug offenders on Schedule II, who have had parole eligibility set at one-half by the court, will not be eligible. For the remainder, a streamlined process will ensure that their cases are considered prior to the date when they are first eligible to be released on full parole. It is estimated that about 40 per cent of this group will not be released because they will be found to pose a risk of committing a new violent offence. The others will be released at their first eligibility date.

Honourable senators, accelerated review does not represent such a major departure from the current situation. Right now this group is released at a fairly high rate, but, on average, it is four or five months after their first eligibility date. This delay reflects delays in the system that prepares these cases for consideration. The major change is that a slightly larger proportion of this group—about 60 per cent as opposed to 55 per cent—will be released a little earlier; they will be released four or five months sooner, on average.

It is important to note that this will not affect risk to the community. There is no reason to believe that releasing an offender four or five months earlier will increase the risk he or she represents. Indeed, research suggests that it will decrease that risk slightly. But by releasing this group earlier, under appropriate supervision and conditions, resources will be freed up to be redirected to the more serious offenders, who will spend longer portions of their sentence in prison under this bill. This strikes an important balance between the resources devoted to more and less serious offenders with the former being treated more stringently, consistent with public safety.

Finally, honourable senators, I would draw your attention to the fact that the needs of the victims are also well represented in Part II of Bill C-36. As in Part I, provisions are made for victims to receive information about the offender on the conditional release status, eligibility dates and decisions. This information will include the planned destination of the offender upon release so that victims may be able to decide if the release would have any direct impact on their lives.

Victims, like others, will also be able to obtain information by attending parole hearings in person. They will play no part in the proceedings and the Parole Board will have the final say in whether or not they are allowed to attend. But no longer, honourable senators, will offenders have the ability to veto such attendance.

In addition, provisions in this part will ensure that victims are able to place on the record, for the board's consideration, their views with regard to the prospective release of an offender. This will provide not only information but some opportunities to influence the outcome of the conditional release process.

● (1510)

I began by saying that this is both an important and complex bill. It covers a lot of ground. Much of it is highly technical. It deserves careful study which will reveal, I would submit, that it has benefited greatly from extensive public consultation and careful scrutiny in the other place. Over 1200 individuals were heard from during the consultations based on a discussion package entitled "Directions for Reform" released in 1990. The bill also benefited from the report of the Canadian Sentencing Commission in 1987 and the report of the Standing Parliamentary Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General which was called "Taking Responsibility".

During committee and report stage in the other place, 24 opposition amendments were agreed to, and I have already mentioned the work of the Temporary Absence Review Panel whose recommendations are also reflected in the bill we have before us.

Honourable senators, this is a balanced bill that incorprates ideas and suggestions from all of the discussions and consultations that have gone before. That is not to imply that there is complete consensus. It would be naive to believe that there could be full consensus given to the many competing and conflicting views that abound in the field of criminal justice. However, I would submit that Bill C-36 takes the best of what has been offered and the result is, therefore, all the more balanced and complete.

There was some suggestion in the other place that this bill should not proceed until the anticipated sentencing bill has been tabled by the Minister of Justice. The policy frameworks that underlie sentencing and correctional reform were developed in close collaboration and are well coordinated. Therefore, there is no reason to anticipate any conflict between the two initiatives. Should any conflict be perceived, there will be ample opportunity to deal with it when the sentencing package is before Parliament.

The anticipation of another legislative initiative is seldom an acceptable reason to delay proceeding with business before this chamber, nor is it now. I would therefore urge honourable senators to give this bill the thorough consideration it deserves and then, without undue delay, to give it their approval. Canadians have been waiting for the reforms contained in this bill for some time, and I believe the reforms should be put in place at the earliest opportunity.

Hon Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I rise to adjourn the debate. Before doing so, I want to commend the Honourable Senator Di Nino for the comprehensive exposé he has given us this afternoon with respect to Bill C-36.

I would point out to him and to all honourable senators, however, that changing the name of an Act really does not institute much reform. Codifying procedures that have been used over the years into an act is not really reform. Changing day parole from one sixth to one third of a half is not really reform. Changing the name of "mandatory supervision", which has become unpopular with the public, to "statutory release" is not really reform. That really is what this bill is all about. It is a myth to suggest to the public that this bill contributes one iota to public protection. However, it is part and parcel of the rhetoric of the government, since Bill C-67 was introduced in 1986, that it wants to protect the public by keeping people in jail longer. That is what this bill will do.

In a subsequent presentation, I simply wish to follow that theme with honourable senators, that there is another method of protecting the public and it does not involve putting people in jail for longer periods of time. That is the road to which I would hope honourable senators would give serious consideration, and not that which has been followed in the United States. If it is part of the free trade agreement that we follow their lead with respect to corrections, and our only answer to increased violence in the streets is increased jails and increased populations in pententiaries, we will not solve the problem. That is the road this government and society seems to want us to follow.

It is popular and easy to follow that road; it is cheap. It is a little harder to explain the difficulties of rehabilitation and the way in which it has to proceed. There are significant failures and successes when you work with human beings. That is a hard road to follow. Putting more people in jail with legislation like this is a simple, cheap way to go and I would hope honourable senators would give serious thought, both in this chamber and in committee, to this bill when we come to consider it. With those remarks, I adjourn the debate.

On motion of Senator Hastings, debate adjourned.

COASTING TRADE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rossiter, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-33, An Act respecting the use of foreign ships and non-duty paid ships in the coasting trade.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I want to thank honourable senators for allowing me to stand this order yesterday so that I could have an opportunity to read what our colleague Senator Forrestall had to say. I am sorry he is not here, but I want to thank him at the outset for his very sincere presentation of the problems that this bill presents.

I have been involved partisan politics for many years and I know how difficult it is for a member to stand up and say things against what his group, in this case the government, is proposing. Senator Forrestall in this case is convinced that the bill needs improvement, and he made his case very clearly. I commend him for it.

There are some serious problems with this bill. All honourable senators, particularly those who have seaports in their regions, ought to consider very carefully the comments of Senator Forrestall. He, as he told us, is a seaman, so he has the experience of someone who has been in the business. He is not speaking as an outsider or someone who does not know what the shipping business is about. He served on the ships. Furthermore, he represents a region where shipping is still a major concern.

We ourselves have several concerns about the bill. I note that Senator Forrestall has stated that the fourth concern he raised will be the subject of an amendment, and he has served notice that he will move that amendment in committee. In any event, he is proposing an amendment, but I do not know exactly what it is at the moment.

We ourselves are preparing amendments now and it may be that some of them will be the same as Senator Forrestall's, but I do not know. We are convinced that this bill requires some improvement.

While I am, in principle, a free trader by nature, and also by virtue of the fact that I am a westerner, I think we have to be practical on many issues. On this issue we find that our American neighbours have very strict controls on shipping in their country. You simply cannot move very much of the American trade through ships other than on those with American bottoms. Here we have different rules and now we are proceeding to loosen those rules again. We have to look at the situation in light of what happens elsewhere and in the interests of Canada. I would not want us to have a protectionist system where others have open systems, but if others have closed systems and protectionism, we must take care of our interests. I do not think that this bill will accomplish that goal.

While I will not oppose the bill going to committee at this point, because I think we can improve it in committee, I certainly reserve our position on third reading pending the outcome of amendments in committee. For the time being, I am prepared to let the bill receive second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable speakers, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Rossiter, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kinsella, for the second reading of Bill C-77, An Act to amend the National Defence Act.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, last week Senator Phillips gave us an excellent explanation of the rationale for the existence of a separate military code of service discipline to deal with infractions in the armed services. As you know, discipline is at the core of a well-trained and efficient military service, wherever its personnel may be serving, and it is, of course, important to deal with infractions immediately. We would not expect someone serving with our peacekeeping forces in Cyprus, for example, to be sent back to Canada for disciplinary proceedings.

I am sure that many senior members of our military, particularly those who have been involved with courts-martial, have realized for some time that some of the procedures did not meet the same standards of equality and fairness as those now practised in our civil and criminal courts. However, it took a judgment in the Supreme Court of Canada last February to point out certain serious deficiencies with respect to compliance with the Charter of Rights.

Bill C-77, which contains only 11 brief amendments, is intended to rectify those deficiencies. It certainly appears to ensure that the presiding or officiating officers in courts-martial will have more independence and that the service person being tried will have more protection.

All parties in the other place agreed that the amendments to the military code of service discipline contained in the National Defence Act were desirable and appeared to meet the objections of the Supreme Court of Canada. Senator Phillips has, of course, supported the government's proposals and I do also. However, the members in the other place heard only from the minister, the honourable Mary Collins, whose explanation, I must say, was very full and clear, before giving the bill second reading, passing it through the Committee of the Whole and giving it third reading.

Under those circumstances, I suggest that we take time in committee to consider the amendments a little more thoroughly. I would like to obtain more information from someone—perhaps from the office of the Judge Advocate General—with respect to some of the proposed amendments.

For example, amendment No. 8 provides that the public may be excluded during the whole or part of a trial, but it is not at all clear under what conditions this can be done or whether, in fact, the court-martial uses the same principles of exclusion as are now practised in our civil and criminal courts.

Also, amendment No. 9 provides that objections may be made before or during the trial in accordance with procedure prescribed in regulations. I would like to obtain a little more information about the regulations.

A member in the other place, a former senior officer in our armed forces, Mr. Fred Mifflin, also raised some important questions which I shall not repeat here but which were not answered at that time. He has supported the bill but he pointed out that there are serious anomalies and deficiencies in the military code which should be addressed at an early date.

For those reasons, I believe that we on this side would all agree to the speedy passage of this bill after it has been considered for a brief time in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to rise very briefly on one point about which I have some concern. On July 26, 1977, Canadians decided that capital punishment was to be abolished. However, I believe that military law still contains provision for capital punishment. We ought to look at that. This bill does not specifically deal with that question, but I presume that there will be people from the Department of National Defence appearing before us. I think that question ought to be asked.

My understanding—although I could be wrong—is that Canadian military law still has capital punishment on the books for such things as cowardice, treachery and desertion. Therefore that is a clear anomaly with the law of the land. If that is the case, I think it ought be looked into at the same time.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Phillips speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Phillips: I wish to thank Senator Neiman for her remarks. If she desires that the bill be referred to committee, I will certainly do that after second reading.

With regard to the remarks of the honourable Senator Molgat, I can recall when I sat on that side, and one of the debates on capital punishment was going on, I mentioned the fact that capital punishment was retained in the armed forces. I was told by the government of the day that it was not important. I have since come to the conclusion that perhaps the government of the day was right, but since I have changed my mind, I would be glad to give him an opportunity to change his.

Senator Molgat: So I will have your support on the motion this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

• (1540)

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PRE-STUDY OF BILL C-48—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Fourteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Subject-matter of Bill C-48, An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof), presented in the Senate on 14th May, 1992.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, on May 19, Senator Kirby enlarged the debate on Bill C-48, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. During his presentation, he touched on certain issues which may be the subject of future revisions to CDIC legislation which is anticipated in the near future.

For some 36 years prior to last summer, I was employed in and latterly had ownership in the financial services industry, specifically deposit-taking institutions. Except for the first eight and a half years when I was employed by a major Schedule A bank, my experience in the industry has all been with medium to small sized trust companies.

During this time, I witnessed the failure of a number of banks and trust companies and the arranged shotgun weddings of other weakened institutions. It is my opinion that all of the problems faced by these institutions can be attributed to bad or incompetent management and/or greed. In some instances, greed developed into fraud. Other factors which contributed to industry problems were inadequate legislation and regulatory incompetence. The problems and subsequent losses suffered by the industry have cost Canadian taxpayers a great deal of money.

As a reaction, some regulators, some legislators, members of the public, and the major larger deposit-taking institutions have embarked on a campaign to change the legislation and regulations which may result in the disappearance of the small financial institution. Suggestions such as risk-related CDIC premiums, co-insurance schemes, excessive regulatory reporting, excessive capital requirements, and regulatory involvement—which I call interference—in the day-to-day management of financial institutions are some of the ideas floating around.

Let me hasten to clearly state that the principal responsibility of a deposit-taking institution is to keep safe customers' deposits. As a matter of fact, I have recorded my opinion on numerous occasions in the past that the primary responsibility of the boards of directors of these institutions is to the depositor, and way before the need to make a profit for the shareholder. I also claim and have proven that both objectives can be accomplished simultaneously.

Honourable senators, the backbone of the free enterprise system is small business, and we as legislators must safeguard their rights. Small business does not have the resources to retain the services of consultants, lobbyists and others to support their views, and the financial services industry is no different. Because of my experience in that industry, I intend at every opportunity to take on the cause of the smaller companies.

Over the past several years we have seen improvements in legislation, much better qualified and competent regulators, and rules that make corporate governance much more responsible. I wish I could say we have discovered ways of curing greed and bad management. Obviously we have not, and I suspect we never will. However, we put into place and will continue to improve tools such as Bill C-48, which are needed by those responsible to better protect public interests.

My concern, honourable senators, is that we are beginning to equate "big" with "safe" and "strong", rewarding brawn instead of brains. I need not remind my honourable colleagues that some very serious problems have come from our biggest institutions which have been supported by taxpayers dollars, and yes, even in the financial services industry. Canada will not allow a major financial institution to fail, regardless of the seriousness of the problem. The fallout could be fatal to the country. This, of course, places smaller institutions at a disadvantage. That is the reality.

In conclusion, I wish to thank my honourable colleagues for allowing me to put on record my opinions and to take the opportunity to remind you to be advocates and supporters of Canada's small business community.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If no other senator wishes to speak, this order is considered debated.

[Translation]

RAILWAYS

PROPOSED SALE OF RAIL LINES—DEBATE CONTINUED

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Graham, calling the attention of the Senate to th eramifications of the sale or proposed sale of certain rail lines in Canada—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, this inquiry has not been debated for 13 sitting days. I rise to say, quite frankly, that I will make a few short comments today because I want to keep this inquiry alive.

Under the new rule adopted by the majority, we are faced with a new procedure that drops an inquiry if it has not been debated for 15 sitting days.

When I sit down, my comments today will have had the effect of reinstating this motion for the next 15 sitting days of the Senate.

I make no bones about it. I am doing this to keep the inquiry alive. Why? Because things are happening and decisions are being made in this country that will have a long-term impact on our national transportation policy. In fact, the National Transportation Agency is reviewing its enabling legislation as well as the general policy.

The main reason why Senator Graham presented this inquiry was the proposed sale to U.S. interests of part of the CN main line, more specifically, the Truro-Sydney line.

I think that Senator Graham, and myself, for that matter, would still have intervened if the proposal had been to restrict the sale to Canadian interests. It seems that Canadian buyers could not be found and that the CN identified three potential buyers from the United States.

It is sad that our national railway system is in such a situation. I find it incredible that we could not get the interest of individuals, businessmen, that is potential buyers, here in Canada. I understand that the policy of the current government is to open the door wide to all American interests that want to operate in Canada. I think we somewhat lose our sense of self-respect when we are willing to give up major components of our national transportation system to foreign interests.

I think that could be enough to bring back to life great Canadians who, in the last century, did everything they could to create this national railway system. It is really sad that we find ourselves in these circumstances today.

Honourable senators know that the Senate Committee on Transport has before it for several months now a question which is precisely related to the sale of this Truro-Sydney branch line to American interests. It has been said, and with good reasons I believe, that this was a first attempt to see how we could proceed in the future to sell other major components of the national railway system.

Should this first attempt succeed, some of us believe that tomorrow we would sell parts of the system in Quebec, in Ontario or elsewhere. A small branch line in Ontario has already been sold to Americans, and so has an other one in Alberta, but to Canadian interests in that case. In the long term, this gradual carve up of our system will undoubtedly lead to its disappearance.

I really think we went too far. I was rather sad to find out that the CN executives who appeared before the committee were of the opinion that it was a good thing. I wonder where is their national spirit, their pride of being Canadian.

When you think that, after all, the CN was built at a high cost by several generations of Canadian taxpayers, to see high-ranking employees of the company itself in favour of that type of transfer of our national interests to the Americans makes me wonder what is happening to our pride as Canadians.

What we are witnessing here today is the dismantlement of an important communications network. Our country has not yet gotten over the shock of the nationalism expressed not only in Eastern Canada and in Quebec but also in the western provinces and there we are opening our doors wide to our neighbours from the south, allowing them to do almost as they please in Canada.

I feel we should start thinking seriously about what is happening in our country as we approach the 125th birthday of Confederation.

This is why I stand today and address this House so that this inquiry remains in the orders of the day because we wish, we hope that soon the Transport Committee will be in a position to table its study report on sale to American interests of the Truro-Sydney trunk and that when the honourable senators see the details of that transaction, the reasons behind it, they will probably want to stand and participate in the debate on inquiry nº 17. I thank you, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Corbin, the debate is adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Friday, May 22, 1992 at 9 a.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, May 22, 1992

The Senate met at 9 a.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we do not usually hear Big Ben chime on Fridays. Though it does chime every day, we just do not get a chance to put it on the record every day. So the days for the democrats between now and election are 183, and for what Senator Murray describes as the "cowardly and contemptuous of democracy" ones, 569 days. There is just no justice that they should get that extra time.

RACISM AMONG YOUTH

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, there is another clock ticking across the land, of perhaps greater importance in the hearts and minds of minority youth. We have witnessed in the past few days the unfortunate incidents in Toronto. Last summer, we had them in Halifax. We have had them in Vancouver and in Montreal. It seems to me that the time is here, and indeed it is urgent, for that ticking clock which is attached to the time bomb of racism to be addressed in creative ways. It seems to me that the time is right for a grand coalition of public and private sector participants, of individuals and groups, of educators and industry, to turn our attention to the eradication of racism in all its forms.

It is important for us to be solid on our principles. Principle No. 1 is indeed the inherent dignity and worth of every Canadian. Principle No. 2 is respect for the rule of law. I shall return to this topic at a later time.

THE ECONOMY

RELATION OF LOW EMPLOYMENT TO SOCIAL UNREST

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, may I pick up where Senator Kinsella has left off? It is as Jean Chrétien has said, "wake-up-call time". The issue that Senator Kinsella has addressed is a most serious one in our country. Critical to it is the state of our economy, the opportunity for people in all places in our society to have employment and careers that give them enhanced wealth, and the opportunity for better quality of life conditions and economic conditions.

Unfortunately, our economic situation today is not conducive to the release of those pressures in a positive growth form. In April our economy lost 57,000 jobs. These are jobs largely in the adult population. It was the sixth straight month of declining employment in Canada. Since October, 1991, 193,000 jobs have been lost in Canada, or 1.6 per cent of total jobs. This is clearly a sign of structural change in our economy.

An excellent commentary on our economic situation appears in the Financial Post of May 9-11. Lloyd Atkinson, the chief economist of the Bank of Montreal, is quoted as follows:

> Whether you call it a recession or not, there's no question the second quarter is starting off as a dog. It's not going to be until the second half of the year that we've got a recovery under way. That's why we're going to get further and further reductions in interest rates and the C$. In the absence of further stimulus, you do run the risk of turning rapid disinflation into deflation.

That is the end of the quotation.

Warren Jestin, the Bank of Nova Scotia's chief economist, said:

> We're not only in a decline, but the pace of decline is accelerating.

Mr. Jestin also stated:

> These numbers are of considerable concern to the Bank of Canada. We need something to kickstart the economy and we can't rely on the U.S. economy and we can't get any fiscal stimulus because the cupboard is bare, so monetary policy is the only game in town . . ..

Of course there is very little room in that game for managing the economy or stimulating the economy.

These remarks are caused by the defence by the government side yesterday of its policy on controlling interest rates. Controlling interest rates is only one part of governance. What we are seeing, as Senator Kinsella has so ably noted, are social strains and pressures in our society caused by the way in which our economy is performing. I have said in this chamber before that the government should pay attention to the need for stimulus in critical parts of our economy. If the government continues to ignore that proposal, the strains in our social fabric will continue.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. John B. Stewart, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, presented the following report:

Friday, May 22, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-53, An Act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 14, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN B. STEWART
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, June 1st, 1992, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government) presented Bill S-11, to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

● (0910)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): On Monday, June 1, honourable senators.

[Senator Austin.]

I may say this bill is another legislative tranche in establishing the regime for the local airport authorities. It affects the tax regime governing these authorities. It also contains provisions relating to official language questions. Essentially, the bill would put into law the commitments that were made by the Minister of Transport regarding the applicability of Parts 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act at certain airports in Canada.

On motion of Senator Murray, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 1, 1992.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 100 citizens of New Brunswick who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Fredericton and Saint John.

Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 56 citizens of New Brunswick who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Saint John and Hampton.

Finally, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 100 citizens of New Brunswick who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Fredericton and Hampton.

That makes a grand total of 256 fellow citizens of Senator Simard (who is not here this morning!), in addition to the tens of thousands of other New Brunswickers who have already submitted petitions expressing their total and utter disagreement with the GST, especially as it applies to books and periodicals.

When he returns to his province, Senator Simard must feel rather lonely!

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

JUSTICE

SOCIAL UNREST—PROPOSED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH BIG CITY MAYORS AND FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government. I was going to let this go for a few days to see if I got a further answer, but Senator Kinsella's comments this morning prompt me to ask the question again. I am referring to the question I asked on May 7, shortly after the advent of the serious problems in Toronto.

A question had been asked in the House of Commons by the Leader of the Opposition asking the Prime Minister if he would meet with the mayors of the big cities. The Prime Minister at that point replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to meet with anyone at any time if it might be helpful in dealing with a given problem.

He repeated:

> Sure, I would be happy to meet with whomever at any point in time if that would be helpful . . .

He then proceeded to say that he had received no request from the mayors. These remarks were made in the House of Commons on May 6.

On the following day, May 7, I asked whether the Prime Minister was prepared to meet with the mayors, and indicated that there was an official request from the mayor of the City of London speaking on behalf of the mayors. The minister told me he would check into the matter and find out. Yesterday, he tabled a written reply to my question, acknowledging that the letter had been received from the mayor of London, which states in part, "The invitation will be given early consideration."

Senators Kinsella and Austin pointed out clearly this morning the problems that we are having in this country. The answer that we received on May 22 concerning an event that occurred in early May is that it will be given early consideration. This is after statements made by the Prime Minister to the effect that he would be prepared to meet with anyone at any time.

Surely that is not satisfactory. Is the minister able to give us a better answer? Can he put some pressure on the Prime Minister to follow up on what he said he would do?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is nothing that I can add today to the replies that I gave on previous occasions to this question, in particular to the reply tabled yesterday by my friend, the Deputy Leader of the Government.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twenty-Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (budget—Agriculture and Forestry), presented in the Senate on 21st May, 1992.

Hon. Romeo LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Honourable senators, on behalf of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as this budget provides some money for senators to travel to the Rio conference, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether they are proceeding with their idea of sending a senator to the conference. Is that on the cards?

Can the Leader of the Government now tell us what the situation is with regard to the whole delegation going to this conference? Will there be senators included in the delegation, or will there be just one senator from the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I indicated yesterday that in the House of Commons various standing committees had decided within their budgets to send committee members—whether as delegates or observers, I am not certain—to the Rio conference. In addition, there is of course an official delegation consisting, as I have been informed, of ministers and others.

As I told the honourable senator yesterday, I do not know whether there will be parliamentarians other than ministers on that delegation. I have caused an inquiry to go forward on that matter and I hope to have the information when it is available.

It was indicated to me yesterday that the final details regarding the official delegation had not yet been settled.

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, for purposes of clarification, because the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has had an interest in this matter, I inquired into the question of participating in the conference. The advice I received was to the effect that the attendees are there as part of government delegations only. So it is the government's decision as to whether or not it wishes to take part in a Parliamentary delegation, or a congressional delegation, as the president of the United States is doing. So it is not possible for committees, such as the House environment committee or the House fisheries committee, to budget and go on their own to the conference. They can only go as part of a government delegation. I wonder if the minister could clarify whether that is the case.

Senator Murray: That is not the information that was given to me as recently as a day or two ago. My clear impression is that several House committees in the other place had decided to go and that, indeed, a motion was passed through the House by unanimous consent to send delegates to the Rio conference—I know not who or how many will be going. My notes indicated that the only matter that remained to be settled with respect to those Parliamentarians was whether they would be going as delegates or whether they would have observer status. That apparently had not been settled.

The second piece of information I received, according to my notes, was that the official delegation would consist of ministers and some others, but that the final decisions on that had not been taken by the Prime Minister.

Hon. Colin Kenny: Just to clarify this a bit, the delegation can attend a separate conference for Parliamentarians to which Parliamentarians from all countries are invited by Mr. Strong. But that is, if you will, a sideshow, not part of the Canadian delegation. Individual Parliamentarians can go simply by presenting themselves there.

Senator Murray: I thank the honourable senator for that information.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: I wonder if the Chairman of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee could indicate to the Senate exactly what category or under what status the delegate from his committee is going? Has the committee received an invitation, or will the delegate go on his own as an observer? Exactly what status does this proposed delegate have?

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Thank you, honourable senators. My information is a little mixed between what we have just heard. I understand there will be an official Canadian delegation which will be limited to 60 people or 70 people—one of those figures, I do not know which.

Senator Frith: A government delegation?

Senator Barootes: It is an official Canadian delegation which will be headed by the Prime Minister. I understood that observers would not be permitted. The reason given for that is that there are 2,500 to 3,000 people gathered and that is the limit they can accommodate. As for what Senator Kenny mentioned, I had not heard that.

As for the agriculture committee, what is our position? The agriculture committee has written to the person who is to head up the delegation. We have asked if a member from our committee could attend that meeting as part of the Canadian delegation and have indicated that we would be prepared to, in part or in whole, defray the expenses of that person, should that senator be chosen. I might add that I had a few little remarks of encouragement as to the importance of our attendance and the great qualifications of the person whom we were recommending.

Senator Frith: Was that you?

Senator Barootes: That senator is very highly qualified to go down there. I was hoping they might select that person. On the other hand, the reason we used "partly defrayed" was, I thought, if there were members from the environment committee going and our member was not chosen, then we would be pleased to participate in defraying, in part or in whole, the expenses. That is where we stand. We have heard no response.

Senator Molgat: Would Senator Spivak be going as a member of the official delegation to which Senator Murray refers, the government delegation headed by the Prime Minister?

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Barootes: I have heard from the Leader of the Government in the Senate that there is an official delegation and that the parliamentarians may be separate from that, which may tie in with what Senator Kenny has just said. So perhaps those 12 nominal, or ethereal, parliamentarians will not be part of the official delegation but will be attending Mr. Strong's "side show".

Senator Frith: I was intrigued by the use of the passive tense "should that senator be chosen". Who makes the choice?

Senator Barootes: I am sorry, I cannot answer that. Perhaps I should have said "might be chosen" or "could be chosen".

Senator Frith: By whom?

Senator Barootes: I cannot answer that.

Senator Frith: That is surely the central question to the whole business.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twenty-fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Budget—Agriculture and Forestry), presented in the Senate on May 21, 1992.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report. I hope that it will be adopted more quickly than the one we just adopted.

On motion of Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour), report adopted.

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the sixth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (Budget—National Defence), presented in the Senate on May 21, 1992.

Hon John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I move that this reported be adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

NATIONAL PUBLIC SERVICE WEEK BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition) moved the third reading of Bill C-328, respecting National Public Service Week: Serving Canadians Better.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

GREEN SHIELD CANADA PREPAID SERVICES ASSOCIATION—SECOND READING

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the second reading of Bill S-10, to incorporate the Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association.

He said: Honourable Senator Norman Atkins is the father of Bill S-10 and it was through his good offices that a petition was received this week that will provide for national development of an enterprise that has, for nearly half a century, been identified with the good health of the great province of Ontario.

The words "good health" are appropriate. Bill S-10 would facilitate incorporation of the Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association to provide prepayment health plans, legal services and social services benefits throughout Canada.

First, a word or two about Green Shield Prepaid Services Inc., a name already familiar well beyond its home province where it established the first prepaid prescription drug plan in North America.

Green Shield was the child of necessity. It was born in Windsor, Ontario, at a time when the high cost of prescription drugs forced the closing, in a five-year period of the fifties, of one in every three of the district's drug stores. There was nothing miraculous, in that time of miracle drugs, about miracle drugs that people could not afford.

How about an organization that would provide group access to costly but necessary medicines in a scheme that would rescue the service provided by pharmacists? The idea grew to reality in the rear of a Windsor pharmacy. Green Shield is now one of the country's largest providers and administrators of health medicine plans. More than half a million Canadians participate in programs operated or administered by the organization launched by William Wilkinson and four other founders who looked to prepaid hospital plans for an example of how their system might work. In Ontario today, 85 per cent of the population is protected by this kind of plan.

In fact, many of Green Shield subscribers live and work beyond the province of Ontario. Green Shield serves much of the Canadian automobile industry. Indeed, it is this national exposure that has prompted requests for the kind of extended service that will permit Green Shield to remain a viable and competitive service in the not-for-profit field of the nineties.

What we are dealing with here today is special legislation to provide for its federal incorporation. If this organization were a business corporation, there are existing rules which would allow it, through relatively simple administrative procedures and the payment of a fee, to transfer its legal jurisdiction from any province, in this case Ontario, to federal jurisdiction. No such provision exists with respect to corporations without share capital.

This oversight is no one's fault. For lack of demand, or perhaps because entities like Green Shield are relatively rare, mechanisms for transfer to jurisdiction of not-for-profit corporations without share capital were never contemplated. Simply put, our statutes have, until this day, not anticipated the need of federal establishment of such organizations.

Green Shield Prepaid Services Inc. is a not-for-profit corporation without share capital, incorporated in Ontario and licensed under the Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act (Ontario) and the Insurance Act of British Columbia. Its mission statement says it "works continually to better its efforts, and in an innovative way, broaden the availability of its service to the public."

As Senator Atkins reminds me, in sending this bill on to committee, we will be again demonstrating one of those special functions that this House performs well, but which it is seldom given the credit for.

Honourable senators, I move that this bill be given second reading, and that, thereafter, it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am pleased to support Senator Doyle's motion for second reading of this bill, and if it does receive second reading, we will support his suggestion that it go to committee.

I should say that this is a non-partisan matter, as most matters in this House are. I want to underline, especially in this case, that I am speaking as an Ontario senator rather than as Leader of the Opposition.

As Senator Doyle explained, the purpose of the legislation is to allow Green Shield Prepaid Services Association to transfer its jurisdiction from Ontario to Canada. Its new name will be Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association.

As Senator Doyle pointed out, Green Shield is a not-for-profit association—that is, profit is not its purpose. With no share capital, it is not a simple matter for such an entity to incorporate federally. That is not to say that it is impossible for any no-share-capital organization to incorporate nationally. I have incorporated such associations.

Under the Canada Business Corporations Act, entities that wish to incorporate must have share capital. Green Shield Prepaid Services Association has no share capital, because it has no shares or shareholders.

The general scheme for corporations without share capital is that you try to structure them generally in the way in which a corporation with share capital would be structured. The members of the association are like the shareholders, but since they have no equity, they receive no dividends. So, unlike a business corporation, its purpose is not the pursuit of profit for its shareholders.

When we turn to the Ontario Business Corporations Act, we see that it also requires share capital in order to incorporate.

In Ontario, Green Shield was incorporated under Part III of the Ontario Corporations Act—not Business Corporations Act—and is registered or licensed under the Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act.

As Senator Doyle pointed out, because of a defect in the Canada Corporations Act—not the Canada Business Corporations Act—Green Shield cannot be continued—which is a word that lawyers use—federally. Furthermore, if it did try to incorporate under Part II of the Canada Corporations Act, the statute which deals with the incorporation of not-for-profit associations without share capital, it could not register or license federally to carry on prepayment plans because there is no federal statute equivalent to the Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act. So here it is in Ontario, operating—as it must operate—with some regulation under the Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act, and incorporated under the Ontario Corporations Ac. It decides that it wants to operate at the federal level, and while it might be incorporated there, it could not be incorporated in a way—as it has in Ontario—that would enable it to be registered and regulated. It could not proceed with its main purpose, which is not, as with the business corporation, simply to make a profit.

The remedy, therefore, is the remedy that is before us; namely, incorporation through a separate act of Parliament, and then licensing—being its other problem—through the Insurance Companies Act. This is what is provided for in Bill S-10. I have been assured that this approach has been taken only after extensive consultations with the Ministry of Finance and the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

Senator Doyle mentioned that Green Shield introduced the first North American prepaid prescription drug program in the 1950s. Since then, it has extended its coverage from pharmaceuticals to dental, legal and other services, and covers workers in most Canadian provinces. That is important.

Though it contracts with employers headquartered in Ontario—remember, it is incorporated and registered to do business in Ontario—employees who may reside and work outside of Ontario are nevertheless covered by their employer's plan with Green Shield. By incorporating federally, Green Shield will be able to contract with companies that are headquartered outside of Ontario, and with individuals who reside outside of Ontario. That is, if I understand it, the underlying purpose of Bill S-10.

Turning to the bill itself, subclause 4(1) reads:

[Senator Frith.]

> The objects of the Association are to provide, operate and administer prepayment plans throughout Canada.

Then the expression "prepayment plan", as defined earlier in the bill, refers to "the prepayment of the costs of specified services." The term "specified services" is itself defined as follows:

> . . .such social, health, dental, legal, pharmaceutical or other services as are specified in a prepayment plan.

So these are the endeavours that Green Shield is interested in pursuing nationally.

Subclause 4(2) of the bill reads:

> The Association shall carry out its objects as a non-profit organization and for socially beneficial purposes, without purpose of gain for its members, and any profits or other accretions to the Association shall, subject to section 10, be used in promoting its objects.

It is important to underline that point, because we do not want anyone to have the impression that this incorporation is in any way changing the basic structure of the association and turning it into a business corporation or a profit-seeking corporation.

We then have a non-profit organization, which will operate prepayment plans for "socially beneficial purposes". If there are any profits, they will be funneled back into the promotion of its objects; namely, the operation and administration of prepayment plans throughout Canada. If they wish to get into other business activities or operate prepayment plans other than those concerning health, dental, legal or pharmaceutical services, subclauses 7(2) and 7(3) require the consent of the Minister of Finance.

Clause 8 provides that if the directors wish to wind down the company by transferring its prepayment plans to another entity or by selling all or substantially all of its assets, again, approval must be obtained from its members and the Minister of Finance. If the association is dissolved or wound up, an obvious question is then: What happens to the assets? After all, there are no shareholders.

Subclause 10(2) provides that following the payment of all obligations, the balance is distributed not to the members of the association, but "to such charitable or non-profit corporations as are designated for that purpose in the bylaws." Where there is no designated recipient, subclause 10(3) provides that the Green Shield Foundation—underline the word "Foundation"—will receive the remaining assets. We are talking here about an association and also about a foundation —that is, we have to remember the distinction between the two.

● (0950)

This non-profit foundation, incorporated under Part III of the Corporations Act of Ontario in the 1970s, is not now an active corporation. It was established in order to prevent a recurrence of the Windsor Medical Services incident whereby, with the introduction of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan in 1969, Windsor Medical Services was wound up and, following lengthy litigation, its surplus was distributed—that is, the part that had not already been distributed to the lawyers—to the doctors who were members of the corporation. Those are both worthy causes—that is, the lawyers and the doctors.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: There would not be much left over after the lawyers got their share. It would be peanuts!

Senator Frith: Apparently there was quite a lot left over, although I understand perhaps Senator Barootes has recently been reading Bleak House by Dickens and the infamous Jarndyce and Jarndyce case which was the centre of that novel. But this was not an example of Jarndyce and Jarndyce. I emphasize that aspect because part of the purpose of this bill is to avoid the problem and the undesirable result that occurred in the Windsor Medical Services case.

Nothing like that would happen here if this bill is passed. If Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association were to wind up, the surplus would go to a non-profit entity and not to individual members. I also note that clauses 16 and 17 of the bill specify that the Winding-Up Act and the Insurance Companies Act apply to the association. In the case of an involuntary dissolution—in other words, being forced into bankruptcy—both statutes apply. Where there is a voluntary dissolution, for example where an offer is made by a corporation to its creditors for a scheme to dissolve, then only the Insurance Company Act applies. In either case, the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will play a leading role.

The Superintendent of Financial Institutions also has a role to play if the association wishes, from time to time, to distribute any surplus it has accumulated. Clause 10(1) of the bill provides:

> When the Association has, in the opinion of its directors, unappropriated surplus in excess of the requirements of the Association, it may, with the approval of the Superintendent, distribute all or part of the excess to such charitable or non-profit corporations as are designated therefor in the by-laws.

I assume that the charitable or non-profit corporation that would be the logical candidate for the surplus from the association is the Green Shield Foundation. As for the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, his role would be limited to ensuring that the distribution of the surplus would not endanger the continued viability of Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association. The superintendent would not be concerned with where that surplus went as long as its distribution was not imprudent.

There are certain advantages in activating the Green Shield Foundation. As I mentioned earlier, it is not now active. That is why I use the verb "activating" when I say, "There are certain advantages in activating the Green Shield Foundation." The association is limited as to the type of activities it may pursue, and we have already outlined them. If it wishes to step outside its authorized activities, the permission of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions must be obtained.

The Green Shield Foundation, however, apparently has a greater range of permitted activities. Green Shield could launch initiatives through its foundation that it could not pursue through its association.

There is one aspect of the relationship between the association and the foundation that intrigues me. If Bill S-10 passes, we will have a federally incorporated association that eventually could be operating in every province and territory of the country. That is part of its objective. In other words, that is the object of Bill S-10.

The association receives payments from individuals and corporations in every region of the country, accumulates a surplus, which it then transfers to its foundation under subclause 10(1) of this bill, with the usual conditions that are referred to in that clause that I have referred to. The foundation then uses this surplus to fund a new scheme. The foundation, however, is incorporated in Ontario and, like the present-day association—that is, the one now in existence before this bill is passed—is limited in its dealings outside of that province. The end result is that the foundation launches a new scheme of benefit primarily to individuals and companies resident in Ontario, funded at least in part from the nation-wide operations of the association.

If the Foundation as well as the association were incorporated federally, I would not be raising the scenario that I have just portrayed. In any event, it is difficult to speculate about this without knowing more about the foundation. Perhaps I am pursuing this needlessly, certainly at the stage of second reading, because this is a question that would eminently be appropriate for consideration by the committee.

I suggest, honourable senators, that we give Bill S-10 second reading and refer it to committee, where this issue of accumulated surplus and any other questions that senators may have can be addressed directly by the representatives of Green Shield.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doyle, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

SENATE REFORM

MOTION TO APPROVE THE PRINCIPLE OF AN ELECTED SENATE—CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert:

> That the Senate of Canada agrees with the principle that the Senate be reformed, by making it an elected body with sufficient membership and power to effectively represent the people of Canada in all regions of our land.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there are a number of orders that we have that are suitable outlets or springboards for considering the constitutional question that occupies the attention of the country at the present time. Our role has to some extent been played, at least temporarily, while we await the proposal of the government —the government having delayed its proposal while it waited for Parliament to study the question through its joint committee. This order reads:

● (10:00)

> The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the motion of Senator Molgat . . .
>
> That the Senate . . . be reformed, by making it an elected body with sufficient membership and power to effectively represent the people of Canada in all regions of our land.

I see that this order has the number 15 next to it, but it is one that we should keep active as an opening to deal with the ongoing constitutional drama in our country. There are other orders. There is Senator Beaudoin's motion concerning the report of his committee. The rules provide that we can keep some of these orders alive, if we so order. Moreover, there is the position that I have made previously, that the rule also says that if it is not dealt with in any way then it shall expire after 15 appearances. I hope that the Senate will keep this motion alive, as well as some of these other motions that give us an opportunity and a certain flexibility to deal with this ongoing development and drama about our Constitution.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have just a small mise au point as far as the government proposals are concerned. We tabled a set of proposals in September of last year which were then studied by the Beaudoin-Dobbie committee, which has now reported. In due course, following the multilateral process which Mr. Clark is leading now, the government would expect to bring forward a set of more detailed and, if I may say so, more definitive final proposals for amending the Constitution. These would probably be the subject of parliamentary debate, possibly in the sense of a house resolution in the other place and in the Senate, and eventually of course the formal amending resolution to amend the Constitution, as provided for in the amending formula.

So far as these opportunities for debate in the Senate are concerned, the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition is correct. Such orders give us an opportunity for debate, when honourable senators wish to take part in various aspects of the constitutional debate. My suggestion is that Senator Molgat or another senator reintroduce his motion at the appropriate time and we will set the clock running again on the Senate reform motion

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Molgat, is it your wish to reinstate your motion today?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, unless I misread the rule, it is when a motion is not spoken to that it drops off. When a motion is spoken to does it not begin again at No. 1? I believe that is the process. The matter having been spoken to again today, I assume that when it appears on the Order Paper again it will automatically appear as No. 1.

Senator Murray: I am not sure we have established what we have agreed on in the interpretation of that rule so far, but I would want to be accommodating. If it drops off the Order Paper, the honourable senator can reintroduce it. If it does not drop off, the problem does not present itself.

Senator Molgat: I think we have an example on the scroll for today with the first inquiry, No. 17. It had reached 15 yesterday and Honourable Senator Corbin spoke on it. It reappears today with no number on it so I presume it is beginning the cycle again.

Senator Corbin: That is correct.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The chair is happy with what took place yesterday. Are you willing to continue with that formula?

Senator Molgat: What happened yesterday suits me on this motion as well.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The important thing is to follow the rules.

(Consideration in Committee of the Whole deemed continued.)

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 1, 1992, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 1, 1992

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we are into a new month—

Senator Doody: Bong, bong.

Senator Frith:—and Senator Doody is playing the role of Big Ben. I hope the record shows that bong. For Senator Murray's respecters of democracy, from now to election day is 173 days; but for those who are cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, 559 days remain.

[Translation]

THE HONOURABLE HARTLAND DE M. MOLSON

FELICITATIONS ON THE OCCASION OF HIS EIGHTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, on May 29th 1992, one of our colleagues, Senator Molson, the dean of Quebec senators, turned 85 years old. On behalf of all Quebec senators, I would like to wish him a long and happy second youth.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

MONDAY, June 1, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, has the honour to present its

FOURTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-77, An Act to amend the National Defence Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 21, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I delayed presenting some of these petitions until Senator Simard was in the chamber, because he has always demonstrated a most attentive ear to the vox populi, and especially because some of these petitions are from various locations in his home province.

I have petitions against the GST in the same general form as previously presented to the Senate, asking for the repeal of this tax, which, as usual, is described in unflattering terms, and in some cases asking for the calling of an election.

The summary is as follows: Cities in New Brunswick are, Bas Caraquet, Evangeline—

Senator Simard: Those are the same petitions you presented two weeks ago. Have you had more meetings over the weekend or what?

Senator Frith: Senator Simard and his colleagues are demonstrating, as I said, an attentive ear to the voices of their own provinces and other parts of Canada. I invite Senator Simard to read the petitions—

Senator Simard: I will be reading them all.

Senator Frith: —as I know he is interested in what his constituents are saying, because he does represent the province of New Brunswick. I suggest he check them to see whether there is any repetition. In the meantime we know there is not, so he might want to hear Bas Caraquet, Evangeline, Lagaceville, Oak Point, Pokemouche, Pokesudie, Sheila—

Senator Simard: You have said those names twice today already.

Senator Frith: Yes, because you interrupted me. I thought your ability to hear might have been drowned out by your own voice, you see.

Shippigan, Tracadie, Village Blanchard. From Ontario: Kapuskasing, Rexdale, Scarborough and Thunder Bay. From Quebec: Acton Vale, Beauport, Charlesbourg, Dollard-Des-Ormeaux, Jonquière, Lac-St-Charles, Laval-Des-Rapide, Lévis, Limoilou, Longueuil, Montreal, Quebec City, Rougemont, Roxton Falls, St. Amable—the exact attitude in which Senator Simard is listening to these, "aimablement"—St. Jules-de-Beauce, St. Lambert, St. Théodore d'Acton, St. Séverin, Ste. Foy, Ste. Thérèse, Tring-Jonction, Vanier.

Did I hear a call for more detail? You have come to the right place. From Quebec there were 57 petitions with 1191 names. That is from Senator Lynch-Staunton's home province. From New Brunswick; four petitions with 84 names and from Ontario seven petitions with 161 names—68 petitions totaling 1436 names of fellow and sister Canadians protesting the GST.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I can assure you that I have not consulted with the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, senator Frith, but I also have a string of petitioners from the province of senator Simard. This is not a concerted move!

Senator Simard: We are so far but we participate nevertheless!

Senator Hébert: There, this is what I admire from the people of New Brunswick!

I therefore have the honour to present petitions signed by 99 citizens of New Brunswick who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Fredericton, St. John and Oromocto.

I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 50 citizens of New Brunswick who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Fredericton.

Again, I have petitions signed by 75 citizens of New Brunswick who oppose (guess what!) the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Fredericton.

In total, 224 citizens of New Brunswick cannot understand that a government has so little respect for culture and its privileged tool, books, that it does not hesitate to obstruct the communication of ideas.

Those 224 petitioners invoke the historical principle which, until Mulroney, prevented all previous Canadian governments from taxing books and magazines.

[Senator Frith.]

• (2010)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

POSSIBLE ACCOMMODATION FOR CURRENT CANADIAN MARKETING SYSTEMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate provide us with any details on the very recent comments of Mr. Dunkel from the GATT? At an interntional farmers meeting held in Quebec City over this past weekend, he is reported to have said that they are at least prepared to study the prospect of finding some accommodation for the Canadian marketing systems which are now in place. Some people in Canada, including the president of the Dairy Farmers Council, seemed to take encouragement from this assertion by Mr. Dunkel.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am afraid I cannot help my honourable friend very much with regard to Mr. Dunkel's comments at the World Farmers' Congress meeting in Quebec and at a news conference that he held while in that city. I have read the same news reports that I am sure Senator Olson has read, but I am not responsible for Mr. Dunkel's comments nor do I think I should attempt to interpret them.

I can only tell the honourable senator that our position is, as it has been, that we want to see Article XI of the GATT strengthened and clarified in the course of the present multilateral negotiations. Mr. Dunkel, of course, is well aware of this position.

Senator Olson: I am satisfied with that reply because I have not seen any further detail. I thought perhaps the government had been informed of some further detail respecting the opening which Mr. Dunkel is now apparently prepared to acknowledge, although in the past he has given very little encouragement that the GATT would even try to accommodate the request made by Canadian officials at the GATT meetings, which request the minister has just outlined. It is an accommodation, a clarification and so on, of Article XI.

I would ask that the Leader of the Government try to find out, through the facilities which are available to him and not to me, what this major change involves. That is what I failed to grasp from the very brief press reports which I saw.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if this represents a change, major or minor, I shall ascertain that. The change that is needed is not on Mr. Dunkel's part, since he is not, as my friend knows, a law unto himself. The problem at the moment is with the impasse between the United States and the European Community.

Prime Minister Mulroney met with Canadian farm leaders on May 14, prior to going to Washington to meet with President Bush. At the meeting with farm leaders, the Prime Minister agreed that he would reinforce Canada's insistence on our balanced negotiating position in the multilateral trade negotiations.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the minister did not quite give a commitment that he would try to find out if there is any significant change in what Mr. Dunkel has said in the past few hours. If he will do that, then I would be happy to wait until tomorrow, the next day or for whatever length of time the minister needs to make the inquiry.

TRANSPORT

AIR SAFETY—FORWARDING OF PERSONAL BAGGAGE ON AIRLINES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding air safety. In light of the Air India crash and the Lockerbie crash, why does the government still permit personal baggage to be forwarded on flights when the passenger is not present on that flight?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will ask for a report on that matter from my colleague, the Minister of Transport.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF ECONOMIC POLICIES ON RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, for the past 90 days Canada has lost jobs at the rate of 1,000 jobs per day. Has the government given any consideration to changing its economic course in light of these continuing job losses?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would appreciate it if my friend could outline for me what change in Canadian fiscal or economic policy he and his party would advocate. In particular, I think it is important to know whether Senator Grafstein supports Mr. Chrétien's position to the effect that the deficit should be allowed to increase, perhaps by several billions of dollars, in the current fiscal year, or whether he supports increased spending to be financed by increased taxes and, if so, by how much, and on whom. Indeed, does he support his leader in suggesting that the monetary policy, including the bank rate, ought to be set every week by the meeting of the Liberal caucus?

SUMMER UNEMPLOYMENT FOR YOUTH—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, the government is obviously bankrupt of ideas in regard to any new course of action.

Having in mind its current state of insolvency with respect to economic ideas, is the government concerned about how to cope with the severe problem that will confront us in the next 20 to 30 days, that is, a further increase in the jobless rate in terms of the young people who will be leaving universities and high schools shortly to look for jobs? As I understand the situation in Toronto, it is expected that unemployment among youths will be the highest in 30 or 40 years, in excess of 20 per cent overall, and in some segments of the community in excess of 30 per cent.

Does the government have any answers to the short-term problem of summer unemployment for young people?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have had a longstanding program to employ young people—and students in particular—during the summer in federal government agencies and institutions, and to encourage the private sector to do likewise. I accept fully the concern expressed by the honourable senator with regard to the probable higher rate of unemployment among young people this summer. I assure him that we share this concern. We are actively considering the matter and searching for ways in which this problem can be alleviated to some extent.

• (2020)

NATIONAL FINANCE

FURTHER REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Has the government given consideration to seeking a further reduction in the interest rates, having in mind that the differential between inflation and the bank rate is at an historic high?

In the past, we have been told by the government that it was not able to reduce interest rates or bring pressure to bear on the Bank of Canada to reduce interest rates because of inflation. Inflation is now at 2 per cent or lower, and still the differential between inflation and interest rates is historically high, curbing any opportunity for a swift turnaround and recovery in the economy.

Has the government given any consideration to putting pressure on the Bank of Canada to reduce interest rates further?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can only express our satisfaction with the course of events in terms of the Bank of Canada's policy.

We were not here last Thursday, and Senator Olson and I missed our opportunity for a weekly review of this situation. The bank rate last Thursday fell by another 17 points, from 6.50 to 6.33. This is surely the lowest bank rate in more than 20 years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: I am sure the honourable senator will agree that the bank rate is going in the right direction, and then some. He might want to reflect further before suggesting that there should be some political interference on the part of the government with the Bank of Canada.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to table an answer to a question asked on May 7 by Senator Molgat regarding the Rafferty-Alameda dams project, and one to a question asked on May 12 by Senator Bonnell regarding commercial relations between Canada and the Ukraine.

THE ENVIRONMENT

RAFFERTY-ALAMEDA DAMS PROJECT—STATUS OF FEDERAL ADVANCE TO SASKATCHEWAN

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gildas L. Molgat on May 7, 1992)

Construction of the Rafferty dam has now been completed and work on the Alameda dam is about 80 per cent complete. The October 1989 challenge by the Canadian Wildlife Federation, resulted in the federal court ordering a panel review on December 28, 1989. The federal Environmental Assessment Review Panel completed its review and, on September 10, 1991, released a report containing 30 recommendations.

A federal response to the Panel's report was released by the federal Minister of the Environment on April 6, 1992, and fulfills the department's obligations under section 33 of the 1984 EARP guidelines order. Environment Canada will continue to work with Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and the United States government to implement the Panel's recommendations.

A total of $8 million was paid to the province as compensation for project delays which occurred as a result of the federal environmental review, and in accordance with the Saskatchewan/Canada agreement to halt construction, signed in January 1990. Work undertaken by the province between January 1990 and October 1990 was work begun before the agreement took effect or was needed to maintain the dam's structural integrity and for public safety reasons, as determined by independent experts.

When the province announced its intention to complete the dam in October 1990, contrary to the agreement, the panel resigned, and the federal government withheld all further payments, and filed for an injunction to halt the work. The right to an injunction was denied November 15, 1990. Since the province was entitled to compensation for delays occurring before that time, a recovery of previous payments ($8 million) was not initiated.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

IMPENDING VISIT OF PRESIDENT BORIS YELTSIN TO UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF VISIT TO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell on May 12, 1992)

[Senator Murray.]

Canada's commercial relations with Ukraine have traditionally been carried on through the central foreign trade organizations of the former Soviet Union. With the demise of the USSR, however, and the emergence of a nascent Ukrainian infrastructure to manage foreign trade, Canadian commercial activity has focused on direct contacts at the regional and municipal level. Besides formally recognizing Ukraine's independence in December, 1991, and the subsequent establishment of diplomatic relations, the Government of Canada has provided Ukraine with General Preferential Tariff (GPT) status and has negotiated a $50 million line of credit with the Ukraine National Bank that is administered in Canada by the Export Development Corporation.

For Canadian firms, Ukraine represents a large industrial and consumer market characterized by a well-educated work force. Primary sectors of interest are agro-food (e.g. livestock genetics), manufacturing, construction, transportation, tourism, mining and metallurgy, aerospace, telecommunications, pipelines, ports, processing and miscellaneous professional services. Ukraine also represents one of Canada's largest export markets for titanium dioxide used in the domestic manufacture of pigments. Defense industry conversion also provides considerable potential for Canadian firms over the long term.

Following up on previous ministerial visits to Ukraine, International Trade Minister Wilson will lead a delegation of approximately sixty business people to Ukraine, Russia and Kazakhstan at the end of June to pursue new and on-going Canadian business initiatives. Other Federal Government trade initiatives in the past year include a marine equipment mission to Ukraine led by Industry, Science and Technology Canada. With the establishment of full diplomatic relations with Ukraine and the provision of steps toward a fully operational embassy in Kiev, commercial relations are normalizing.

The Technical Assistance Fund announced by Prime Minister Mulroney in June, 1991 has provided financial contributions under the Renaissance Eastern Europe Programme (REE) to a number of commercial projects in Ukraine. These include Torchinsky Engineering of Calgary for a feasibility study related to highway construction; Landford International of Toronto for a feasibility study on the construction of a business/hotel centre in Kiev; the Winchester Group of Toronto for a feasibility study to market quality Ukrainian goods in Canada and elsewhere in the West; and Minaker Enterprises of Vancouver for the joint development of existing railroad welding equipment in Ukraine for export to the West.

Moreover, the Task Force on Central and Eastern Europe, beyond providing humanitarian assistance in the form of medical supplies to Ukraine and funding to the Chernobyl Childrens' Fund, is providing Canadian expertise in the development of appropriate agricultural college curriculum, with potential downstream commercial benefits to the Canadian agriculture sector. In addition, the Task Force is involved in the International Livestock Management School's training of the Ukraine dairy extension and veterinary service personnel; it is supporting a consortium (under the direction of the Canada-Ukraine Business Council) which is focusing on food industry pre-feasibility studies, in search of joint venture opportunities.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SPECIAL MEASURES BILL

THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. James F. Kelleher moved third reading of Bill C-53, to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I am happy to have this opportunity to say a few words on this third reading motion. Bill C-53 was introduced on December 12, 1991. It passed the House of Commons on May 6, 1992. After second reading here on May 14, it was considered by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on May 21. I think all members of the Senate who were able to attend that committee meeting would agree that the discussion of the bill was unusually interesting.

This is an important bill. It provides a classic example of delegation of legislative powers.

● (2030)

Mr. Barry Mawhinney, Legal Advisor, the Department of External Affairs told the committee at the meeting on May 21, 1992:

> Canada has participated in the application of international economic sanctions on many occasions. In the past, the application of sanctions has usually involved restriction on trade in goods. Today, however, trade in services and international capital movements are very important elements of international economic relations. In order to be able to apply sanctions effectively, the government must have the option of covering services and capital movements, as well as other activities. At present, only the United Nations Act enables the government to apply comprehensive economic sanctions. However, that act may be invoked only to give effect to a mandatory resolution adopted by the United Nations Security Council pursuant to Article 41 of the United Nations charter.
>
> It has been very rare that permanent members of the security council have agreed to the application of mandatory sanctions.

Later he states:

> Aside from the United Nations Act, the government has only limited authority to restrict imports, financial transactions and trade in services, or to freeze foreign-held assets in Canada or to interrupt the operation of air and sea links between Canada and other states.
>
> The Special Economic Measures bill which is before you today would fill gaps in the existing authority for economic sanctions, and would enable the government to chose from among a broad range of measures in order to apply those measures most appropriate in particular circumstances.

What concerned some members of the committee was the plenitude of the powers that Parliament is being asked to delegate to the Governor in Council. I should like to call the attention of honourable senators to the words of clause 4(1) of the bill:

> The Governor in Council may, for the purpose of implementing a decision, resolution or recommendation of an international organization or association of states, of which Canada is a member, that calls on its members to take economic measures against a foreign state, or where the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a grave breach of international peace and security has occurred that has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis,
>
> (a) make such orders or regulations with respect to the restriction or prohibition of any of the activities referred to in subsection (2) in relation to a foreign state as the Governor in Council considers necessary;

The committee focused chiefly on the second of the alternatives, that is, not where Canada would be acting to implement a decision, resolution or recommendation of an international organization of states, but rather where Canada would be acting alone or independent of an international organization.

Let me reread the clause, leaving out the reference to international associations:

> The Governor in Council may . . . where the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a grave breach of international peace and security has occurred that has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis,
>
> (a) make such orders . . .[restricting certain activities] as the Governor in Council considers necessary;

In other words, the Governor in Council decides that there is a "grave breach" and then the Governor in Council may make such orders as the Governor in Council deems necessary.

One is reminded of the expression used by a distinguished British judge back in the 1930s. He said, "There has been too much of this damned deeming." There is a lot of deeming in that clause.

Mr. Mawhinney, the witness from the Department of External Affairs, agreed with members of the committee that the bill would enable the Governor in Council to act alone. He said that the bill tries to anticipate all possibilities, including the possibility that there was not "a very broad international support" for sanctions.

Perhaps we better look at his own words. At page 19 of the evidence, he was asked a question to which he replied:

> That is correct, senator, that there is this further provision so that the legislation, given its character as enabling legislation, would cover all possible circumstances.

Later he stated:

> I would suggest to you that it would be very unlikely that Canada would be taking action. Even though the Governor in Council would have the authority to do so under that criteria that you cite, it would be very unlikely for that action to be taken in the absence of a very broad international support for that action.

In other words, a great deal of power is to be conferred on the Governor in Council. But we are to be reassured by the statement from the legal advisor to the Department of External Affairs that the Governor in Council is not likely to act without a very broad international support.

The bill provides that the Governor in Council would use these powers only where there was a grave breach of international peace and security. The witness emphasized this point. Economic sanctions would not be imposed in other circumstances.

At page 20 of the evidence Mr. Mawhinney states:

> . . . the wording here, I think, bears careful examination. We are speaking here of a grave breach of international peace and security that has occurred and has resulted, or is likely to result, in serious international crisis.

Later, Mr. Mawhinney was asked what "grave breach" means. He stated:

> It would be impossible to reach an agreement on a legal meaning of "grave breach" because of the very nature of the subject with which we are dealing. It is a highly subjective area.

There again the committee was being told that we would have to rely upon the good judgment of the Governor in Council.

Another aspect of the bill that attracted attention in the committee was the fact that Orders in Council may be made under clause 4 that would have extraterritorial effect.

When the bill was before the legislative committee in the other place, the Canadian Bankers Association wrote to the chairman of that committee. Later, they sent me a copy of that letter. In their letter, the Canadian Bankers Association says:

> There is an inconsistency between the extraterritorial provisions of this Bill and the defensive provisions of the Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act. As it stands, this Bill would send a message that it is satisfactory for Canada to exert its jurisdiction in other countries, but it is inappropriate for them to exert their jurisdiction here.
>
> It is not enough for the Government to announce (as it did when the Bill was tabled in the House) that extraterritorial jurisdiction would only be asserted by Canada in a manner consistent with international law and with due regard for the comity of nations. No government ever purports to do otherwise. Even the actions of foreign states which preceded the introduction of the Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act were said by the foreign governments to be consistent with international law and with due regard for the comity of nations.
>
> Any proposal to extend jurisdiction in an extraterritorial manner at any time is of such momentous importance that it ought to require prior parliamentary scrutiny through special legislation.

Mr. Mawhinney sought to reassure the committee concerning the extraterritorial reach of economic-sanction orders. In response to questions, at page 16 he said:

> Senator, the legislation does allow, if the situation warrants, for these measures to apply to Canadians or branches of Canadian companies which are located outside of Canada. It may require them to adhere to the measures and regulations.

Then a little farther down, he goes on to say:

> It has to be borne in mind, however, that this would not be something that would be applied in a sweeping manner, but would be applied in circumstances where it was evident that the national off-shore was acting in a manner that was clearly intended to thwart the purpose of the sanctions policy.

Once again we are being asked to trust the good faith and judgment of the Governor in Council of the day. Mr. Mawhinney says that extraterritorial power per se is not offensive; rather it is the manner in which extraterritorial power is used that has to be examined to ascertain whether or not the use made is offensive.

So there we have it. Again and again we are told that Parliament is being asked to delegate very broad powers to the Governor in Council. We are being told that it is quite proper, indeed desirable, for Parliament to accede to this request for a broad delegation of powers because clearly the Governor in Council always will act with the highest wisdom and the best of good intentions. Any difficulties we have with the bill are to be set aside by a presumption of good intentions.

I am reminded of what Senator Murray told the Senate on May 17th, 1989. We were dealing with Governor General's special warrants. He said that we should forget what the minister or the deputy minister of the day said when a bill was before Parliament. He said that instead we should look at what the act says. That caveat goes a long way to undermine the assurances that the committee was given; assurances that, notwithstanding that the powers are vast and notwithstanding that the extraterritorial power could be used improperly, we can rely on the good intentions of this government, the next government and the one after that.

There we have the problem that now confronts the Senate. The heavy emphasis on the fact that the powers sought would be used only in cases of "grave breaches;" the recognition that the term "grave breaches" has no precise meaning; and the argument that Parliament would have to rely on the Governor in Council to use extraterritorial powers wisely, led some members of the committee to suggest that the bill is defective in that it does not provide for the houses of Parliament to be brought back, if they happen to be in adjournment when the Orders in Council are made.

The bill provides for the tabling of the orders if the houses of Parliament are sitting. It lays down an elaborate process by which the desirability of the orders could be challenged. But there is a difficulty. It is always wise to imagine an extreme case because it is the extraordinary that proves a rule.

Let us imagine a situation in which there is a minority Liberal government and that there happens to be a Liberal majority in the Senate. Both houses are in adjournment. That minority Liberal government brings in Orders in Council to impose economic sanctions. If it calls the House of Commons back there may be trouble, so a recall is avoided. And even if it does bring the House of Commons back, under the provisions of Bill C-53 the Liberal majority in the Senate could decide that it does not agree with the House of Commons that these orders should be revoked or amended.

An even more serious difficulty is that a majority government, indeed even a minority government, could make orders under this bill and if the houses were not sitting those orders would remain in effect for weeks, perhaps for months, before there would be any chance for members of either house to raise questions concerning them.

To sum up, the general view in the committee was that the principle of the bill is sound, but that there is a very heavy reliance on the good intentions of the present and future governments. But we know from Senator Murray that the present ministers cannot commit even their successors in their portfolios in the present government, let alone their successors in new and different governments. The question is whether that difficulty can be overcome in some way.

No amendment was offered to the bill in the committee; consequently, the bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

• (2050)

When Senator Frith spoke on the second reading motion on May 14, he raised various questions. Some of those questions—not all—were dealt with in the committee. I thought that Mr. Mawhinney, who appeared on behalf of the Department of External Affairs, was an unusually candid and cooperative witness; when those questions were put to him, he gave us what I thought were helpful answers.

I want to commend to honourable senators the record of the committee's meeting on Thursday, May 21. This was one of the most interesting considerations of a bill that I have had the opportunity to observe.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, when I spoke to Bill C-53 at second reading on May 14, I did raise the questions just referred to by Senator Stewart, but I also indicated our support for the legislation with some reservations, as outlined in those questions.

One of my concerns was that the government could impose sanctions even when Parliament was not sitting, and that the bill contained no provisions for the recall of Parliament to debate or pass judgment on the government's decision to resort to sanctions. When considering the principles that were discussed at second reading, and that have just been discussed at third reading, it is important to remember that the basic structure or plan of the legislation, rather than being a motion requiring prior approval of Parliament, is to require the tabling or filing of the Orders in Council made, and then, in certain circumstances, to provide for parliamentary review of the decisions made.

Under subclause 4(1) of the bill, as Senator Stewart has said, the Governor in Council would have the authority to order a wide range of economic sanctions in one of two situations, outlined as well by Senator Stewart. In the first instance, the Governor in Council could order sanctions:

> . . . for the purpose of implementing a decision, resolution or recommendation of an international organization of states or association of states, of which Canada is a member, that calls on its members to take economic measures against a foreign state . . .

There is a certain inherent logic in saying that, if Canada is a member of an international organization that calls on its members to take economic measures against a foreign state, then Canada should have the legislative authority to implement the decisions made by the international club of which it is a member.

So, in this scenario, Canada would be acting in concert with like-minded nations. Bill C-53 will give Canada authority similar to what is already in existence under the United Nations Act, where Canada can impose a wide range of sanctions following a resolution of the United States Security Council. That is what was done, in fact, during the Gulf War.

I have no complaint about empowering the government with authority to impose economic sanctions where it is doing so in concert with other nations. As I have said, when Canada joins an international body, it undertakes certain obligations, and clause 4 can be seen as a means of ensuring that the government will be in a position to fulfil those obligations.

Throughout my remarks, I am talking about "the" government; not "this" government, but "any" government.

In these circumstances, in this scenario of acting in concert with other members of an international body, we on this side have no difficulties and propose no changes to the bill.

Subclause 4(1), however, would also permit any government to impose sanctions on its own initiative, and it is here that the problems arise both for me and for Senator Stewart, as well as for certain members of the committee from both sides of the house.

Subsection 4(1) provides that the Governor in Council may act and impose sanctions where it:

> . . . is of the opinion that a grave breach of international peace and security has occurred that has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis.

Those words are important, as Senator Stewart has said. Remember the words ". . . grave breach of international peace and security . . . that has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis." Obviously, neither this government nor any other government will make these kinds of decisions unless the situation is very serious.

Here, however, we have a very different scenario. Here we have the government—not necessarily this government, but any government—making a finding that the world is on the verge of a serious crisis and, on that basis, imposing sanctions in the absence of any request from any international body. My suggestion is that, where a government intends to act unilaterally, and not under the auspices or umbrella of an international organization, in the atmosphere of "a serious international crisis", the role of Parliament should be greater. When a government does not have to check with international order, it should at least have to check—perhaps differently—with Parliament.

Clause 7 of Bill C-53 provides the procedure to be followed where the government has taken a decision under clause 4 to impose some form of sanction. Where the government is acting multilaterally, we on this side propose that clause 7 remain unchanged. However, where the government is acting unilaterally, in a climate of serious international crisis, the procedure laid out in clause 7 should be modified in order to bring the matter before Parliament more quickly. This would be accomplished by amending clauses 7(1), (3), (4) and (6), so that in the case of an "international crisis", the time periods would be shortened.

The subclauses of clause 7 would be virtually identical to those now in the bill, but with the following changes:

> 7(1) - Instead of up to five days before a government need file with each House of Parliament an order made under clause 4 for sanctions, a government would have but two days, where there was an international crisis;

[Senator Frith.]

> 7(2) - The requirement of at least fifty Members of the House of Commons or twenty Senators filing with the Speaker a motion to force a reconsideration of the government's decision, is not changed.

It is important to stop and emphasize that we are dealing with a government making a decision in one of two different circumstances: first, when it is a member of an international organization which asks for sanctions; and, second, making the decision on their own. It is not a matter of coming to Parliament and asking for Parliament's prior approval. The government makes the decision and then files the order with both houses.

As I say, the first change we would make in the case of the unilateral decision would be that the order be filed within two days instead of five days.

The next step is that even when the order for sanctions is filed, nothing happens unless 50 members of the House of Commons or 20 senators file with the Speaker a motion to force a reconsideration of the government's decision. We suggest that that be not changed, that it continue to apply to both multilateral and unilateral situations.

Then there is clause 7(3): Instead of having six sitting days before debate must start after the requisite number of members file with the Speaker, debate, we suggest, should start within three sitting days.

● (2100)

In clause 7(4), instead of debate being limited—honourable senators will understand what I mean when I say "instead"; I am assuming that the present provisions apply to the multilateral or international organization decision— to a maximum of three hours, we suggest that the debate would run a maximum of six hours.

The next possible stage in the process is that the motion be adopted. If the motion is adopted, it is then conveyed to the other house with the request that it be concurred in. Our suggestion is that that clause stay as it is and apply to both situations.

With regard to subclause 7(6), instead of providing that the debate must start in the receiving house within "the first fifteen days that it is sitting after receiving a request pursuant to subclause (5)", we suggest the motion must be considered within four days after the message has been sent. As the subclause now stands, the 15-day clock does not start to run until after the receiving house receives the request for concurrence. If the receiving chamber is adjourned—for example, if we were getting the request and we had adjourned—it could, of course, not receive the message until its return and, consequently, the clock would not start running until then. The amendment also proposes six hours of debate in the receiving chamber instead of three hours.

Subclauses (7) and (8), which deal with the consequences of adopting or rejecting the motion, we suggest remain unchanged. Subclause (9) which provides that the Governor in Council shall submit a report to Parliament on the operation of any order or regulation pursuant to the act need not be changed.

I now come to a point raised by Senator Stewart, namely, the recall of Parliament. The amendments proposed add to clause 7 a new subclause to provide for the recall of Parliament where there is an international crisis. Where the Governor in Council took action under clause 4 to impose sanctions unilaterally, in a crisis situation, and either house of Parliament was not sitting, the Speaker would recall that house within three calendar days of that order being made.

To reiterate, this amended procedure would only apply, "...where the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a grave breach of international peace and security has occurred that has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis". It is only where there is a potential or actual serious international crisis that the house and/or the Senate would be recalled. Can there be any justification in not recalling Parliament if it is not sitting where the Governor in Council itself has concluded that there is a serious international crisis? If Canada's Parliament is to have no role in such a climate then one wonders where it should have a role.

Let us not forget that this legislation does give Parliament a leading role. The essence of the amendments is to tighten that role and make it clear and more immediate in the case of unilateral action.

We have had occasions where the House of Commons, for example, has been called back because of certain activities in the Senate that the government felt created a national crisis. So it is hard to believe that we would not be able to justify calling it back in the case of an international crisis described in the bill as a "grave breach of international peace and security"—those are very serious words—"that has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis".

As for changes in time limits, under clause 7 it could take up to 26 sitting days before there was a resolution of both houses of Parliament. It could be even longer if the receiving house were not sitting at the time the message was sent. The amendment cuts down this time to a maximum of nine sitting days in the case of a serious international crisis.

Finally, as to the length of debate, it is difficult to argue that three hours is sufficient to debate a matter already defined as threatening the peace and security of the world. One could argue that even six hours would not be enough in such circumstances.

To close my arguments on the amendment, may I remind colleagues on my side and opposite that no party will form the government in perpetuity. I am asking that this amendment be viewed solely on its merits and not as a criticism of this government or anticipated criticism of a future government. It is a measure designed to keep a government, whatever its political stripe, accountable to Parliament. This is something that I believe concerns all of us as parliamentarians and not as partisan parliamentarians.

Therefore, honourable senators, I propose the amendments that I have just described. They have been drafted by parliamentary counsel and I will circulate them. I would not say they are excessively technical, if that is not a redundancy. I might ask for leave to dispense with reading them now because I am not now asking for a vote on these amendments. I would like the government to be given an opportunity to consider the remarks made in support of the amendments, to consider the wording of the amendments themselves and to decide whether or not they would be prepared to support these amendments, considering the fact that there is no partisan content in them. I ask the government to judge them, and I hope they will judge them on the basis of their merits.

Honourable senators, may I file these amendments without reading them? I would be quite happy to read them, if you prefer and if I do not have such leave. Do I have such leave?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Agreed.

Senator Frith: I move the amendments now being filed with the table and also being circulated, and ask that they be given consideration by the government and by the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, that Bill C-53 be not now read the third time but that it be amended in clause 7 —

Senator Frith: Dispense.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have not taken a very active part in the deliberations on this bill, but I have listened with considerable interest and great care to the speeches made this evening by Senator Stewart and by the Leader of the Opposition. Let me say at once that I appreciate the spirit in which their comments are made and in which the amendments are put forward. We will do as the Leader of the Opposition has asked. We shall reflect on the speeches that have been made and consider the amendments that have been proposed.

Let me say at once that, in achieving an objective on which we may all agree in principle, I will always seek a method other than amending a bill, even in a bi-partisan fashion, and sending it back to the House of Commons. The fact that that house has a fairly heavy agenda and that we are now in the month of June and heading for the summer adjournment is one consideration.

• (2110)

Another consideration is that I have been advised by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs that she believes there is some urgency to getting this bill passed and giving it Royal Assent because of certain discussions that have taken place in international fora, such as the Organization of American States and elsewhere, regarding sanctions that are being applied internationally against certain countries.

I repeat, therefore, that even if I find myself, and we find ourselves, in agreement with the spirit and objective of these amendments, I will be searching for some way to achieve those objectives without sending this bill back to the House of Commons now. I would also want to read the speeches of Senator Stewart and the Leader of the Opposition with a view to persuading myself that there is some important difference in principle in terms of the government's relationship with Parliament as between sanctions that are agreed upon in some international body, such as the United Nations or the Organization of American States, and sanctions that the government of Canada, in Canada's national interests, decides to apply unilaterally.

All this I shall undertake to do within the next few days, or as soon as possible. I will report back to honourable senators as soon as I can.

I propose the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard moved the second reading of Bill S-11, An Act to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act.

Honourable senators, if there is one bill which was introduced in this house, which caught my attention, which I am very glad to debate at this stage and which I want all of our colleagues to support, it is Bill S-11, an Act to amend the Airport Transfer Act.

I say so today without any hesitation, in fact, with a lot of enthusiasm. I have discussed the issue with several of my constituents ever since the bill was tabled in this house and with Acadians from my region who were as enthusiastic and as happy as I was to learn about the commitments the minister of Transportation made in this house, after a very long debate which lasted for three or four months and ended in April, I believe.

So, we are happy to see the minister has accepted our recommendation, the suggestion both sides agreed on, that is to go back to the legal, constitutional guarantee, not to say the exact same words found in sections 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act, dealing with the working language in federal airports located in bilingual regions under section 25 of the Official Languages Act, in other words, in all federal airports in New Brunswick, in Gaspé-East, in the bilingual area of metropolitan Montreal, the National Capital Region and northern Ontario.

[Senator Murray.]

According to section 2 of Bill S-11, with the legal guarantee and the scope of the Official Languages Act, the working language in leased airports is guaranteed for every employee. All employees will have the opportunity to work in the official language of their choice. The same legal protection applies to the participation of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians at these airports.

So it is interesting to see oncke more that when bills seem to be flawed or to jeopardize from vested interests, senators can exercise a positive influence on the government, whether on a non-partisan basis or in a bipartisan way, and bring it to backtrack, as is the case today.

I am therefore very happy of the outcome. After discussions and meetings with New Brunswickers, I can tell they are excited about it and welcome the decision with us.

The tabling of this bill demonstrates that the Senate can be effective, as it has been several times. It really can bring the government in place to track.

In conclusion, bill S-11 contains additional elements. One of them is of interest to Transport Canada: no federal tax will be payable by the local airport authorities on the gross revenue derived from an airport business.

Like the Department of Transport, LAA will have power to seize and detain aircrafts if airlines fail to pay landing fees or general terminal fees. I think both sides of this house will realize the rationale and wisdom of such an amendment.

Finally, Bill S-11 recognizes as "authorized or permitted investment" under legislation governing some lending institutions, the evidence of indebtedness of local airport authorities. You need to be familiar with such legislation to understand the meaning of that, but I trust that in committee we will have every opportunity of gauging the scope and rationale of this amendment.

Honourable senators, thank you for supporting this bill and for passing it after it has been discussed and explained in the Transport and Communications Committee. I wish to thank ministers Loiselle and Corbeil for the speed with which they acted. They generously supported our initiative and presentation in this house of Bill S-11. I have no doubts that our colleagues from Quebec and elsewhere will support these changes.

I kept my last remarks for Senator Murray. I thank him sincerely for his kind support, his great understanding and his marvellous lobbying of his Cabinet colleagues. The leader of the government in the Senate thus becomes the great instigator of the return of the protection contained in Sections 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act. Senator Murray thank you for a job well done.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in congratulating Senator Simard for his intervention, I would also like to thank him for some clear and detailed documentation that he gave me a week ago. I am preparing some notes supporting the bill. I then adjourn the debate and will probably be ready to present my intervention to you tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

[English]

TIBET

ANNIVERSARY OF NATIONAL UPRISING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Di Nino, calling the attention of the Senate to the thirty-third anniversary of the Tibetan National Uprising.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to speak to this inquiry. I will be prepared to do so soon, although I do not have all the material I want at the moment.

Do I understand that unless this order is spoken to now it will be dropped from the Order Paper?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Yes.

Senator Olson: Not if you make an intervention.

Senator Frith: That is not clear. The last time I raised that point, the Speaker ruled against me on it. The rule provides that the order shall be dropped, "unless previously ordered". Therefore, I ask the Senate now to order otherwise and to allow the order to stand until I am ready to intervene. If that is not acceptable, I can always put something down on the Order Paper again, although it seems silly to do so when we know that I have built up quite a file on the subject.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I have no objection to the suggestion of the honourable senator. I look forward to his intervention. It is an item in which both he and I have great interest. Will we be setting a precedent, however, if we do as the honourable senator suggests?

Senator Frith: We are really acting under the rule, Senator Di Nino, which uses the words, "unless previously ordered". We are not creating a precedent. In any other case it has to be previously ordered, as I am asking now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the order stand and remain on the Orders of the Day?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONTENTS

Monday, June 1, 1992

PAGE

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

General Election
Number of Days Left in Current Term. Senator Frith 1567

The Honourable Hartland de M. Molson
Felicitations on the Occasion of His Eighty-Fifth Birthday. Senator Riel 1567

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

National Defence Act (C-77)
Bill to Amend—Fourteenth Report of Committee Presented. Senator Nurgitz 1567

Goods and Services Tax
Presentation of Petitions. Senator Frith 1567
Senator Hébert 1568

QUESTION PERIOD

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade
Possible Accommodation for Current Canadian Marketing System—Government Position. Senator Olson 1568
Senator Murray 1568

Transport
Air Safety—Forwarding of Personal Baggage on Airlines—Government Position. Senator Kenny 1569
Senator Murray 1569

Employment
Effect of Economic Policies on Rate of Unemployment—Government Position. Senator Grafstein 1569
Senator Murray 1569
Summer Employment for Youth—Government Response. Senator Grafstein 1569
Senator Murray 1569

National Finance
Further Reduction of Interest Rates—Government Position. Senator Grafstein 1569
Senator Murray 1569

Delayed Answers to Oral Questions
Senator Lynch-Staunton 1570

The Environment
Rafferty-Alameda Dams Project—Status of Federal Advance to Saskatchewan. Question by Senator Molgat. Senator Lynch-Staunton (Delayed answer) 1570

International Trade
Impending Visit of President Boris Yeltsin to United States—Possibility of Visit to Canada—Government Position. Question by Senator Bonnell. Senator Lynch-Staunton (Delayed answer) 1570

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Special Measures Bill (C-53)
Third Reading—Debate Adjourned. Senator Kelleher 1571
Senator Stewart 1571
Senator Frith 1573
Senator Murray 1575

Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act (S-11)
Bill to Amend—Second Reading—Debate Adjourned. Senator Simard 1576
Senator Frith 1576

Tibet
Anniversary of National Uprising—Order Stands. Senator Frith 1577
Senator Di Nino 1577

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 2, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Big Ben's clock, the election clock, tolls as follows: As of Tuesday, June 2, 1992, in Senator Murray's nomenclature, the democrats have 172 days left, and the non-democrats, or those cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, 558 days.

THE LATE HONOURABLE ROBERT ERSKINE CAMPBELL

TRIBUTE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I call the attention of the Senate to the loss of a great Canadian, a great Prince Edward Islander, and a great citizen, Robert Erskine Campbell of Alberton, Prince Edward Island. Mr. Campbell was continuously a member of the Prince Edward Island legislature for the last 30 years, being elected and re-elected nine times and achieving a bigger majority each time he ran.

Robert Campbell was a people's man, an honourable man, an honest man, a hard-working, faithful, loyal member of the Legislature who put his people first. His first love was the love of God; his second love was his country; his third love, his family; and last of all he put himself.

After 30 consecutive years in the Legislature, he passed away Sunday last and will be buried tomorrow afternoon. I believe our good colleague Honourable Senator Phillips and I will be absent from this Chamber tomorrow to attend the funeral of this great Canadian.

Mr. Campbell served under many premiers and many Lieutenant Governors. He served well his province and his district of Prince in the Legislature. He was a farmer. He was a member of the Hospital Board, the Board of Trade, the Retarded Children's Association, the Home and School Association, and many other organizations in his area. He served them all well and gave them of his time, his knowledge, and his experience.

He also served in the Merchant Navy of Canada during the war before coming into the Legislature in 1962. I was there the day he came in, and I served with him for many years in the legislature.

He had eight children. All of them, I know, have a deep sense of loss for their father, as I am quite sure all Prince Edward Islanders feel the loss of this great man. His children are Dianne, David, Donald, Elizabeth, Elda, Gwenda, Robert Jr., and Margaret.

Robert Campbell was born in 1922, the son of Keir Fraser Campbell and Eliza Mae Haywood. He married on November 27, 1943, to Georgia Ona, daughter of Theodore Lewis, in Alberton, Prince Edward Island.

He lived in Prince Edward Island all his life, and he will be sorely missed. I wish to extend my deepest sympathy to his dear wife and family.

● (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

EIGHTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 105, I have the honour to table the eighth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs concerning the expenses incurred by the committee during the Second Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 105 of the Rules of the Senate, I have the honour to table the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence concerning the expenses incurred by the committee during the Second Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 500 citizens from the province of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Thornhill, Concord, Willowdale, Scarborough, Brantford, Mississauga, Toronto and Ottawa.

[English]

These 500 petitioners cannot understand that for the first time since Confederation a government has seen fit to tax books and periodicals, thus limiting the free flow of information, ideas and culture.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have some petitions that were assembled under the auspices of the Association of Iroquois and Allied Indians which confirm that a large number of aboriginal people of Canada are opposed to this tax. A large meeting was held on May 7 at Oshweken, Ontario, in opposition to this tax.

I also have a petition, which contains approximately 125 signatures, from residents of Newcastle, New Brunswick, and various parts of Ontario.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

FISHERIES

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY—MORATORIUM ON FISHING OF ATLANTIC COD STOCKS

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Yesterday, the European Community announced that tomorrow, June 3, it would suspend cod fishing in the Atlantic zone located directly outside Canadian territorial waters until December 31, 1992.

The same press release, mentioned that the moratorium would also apply to other species very shortly. It is clear to all sensible Canadians that we owe this decision to the efforts of the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Hon. John Crosbie and his vigorous campaign to protect seriously threatened Canadian fish stocks.

I have the following questions for Senator Murray. First, since despite its latest decision, the European Community still seems to downplay the impact of its member countries on the fisheries, can Minister Crosbie and the government give Canadians the assurance that they will continue their efforts, in the hope that the European Community will put a permanent stop to overfishing in this particular area?

My second question is as follows: Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate prepared to make a commitment to table in this chamber Mr. Crosbie's analysis of this decision and indicate the government's strategy to ensure that this question is settled in the long term?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, the answer to both questions by Senator Simard is: Yes. I most certainly shall consult my colleague, Mr. Crosbie, and ask for his analysis of the decision made by the European Community.

However, Mr. Crosbie has already reacted quite positively to the European Community's initiative. In fact, this initiative confirms the threat to our fisheries in the Northwest Atlantic.

Mr. Crosbie also said that he was disappointed the decision had not been made well before the present crisis.

OVERFISHINBG BY GIANT TRAWLERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: A supplementary question, honourable senators. Just like my colleague, Senator Simard, I am happy with the decision made by the European Economic Commission although the minister, whose statement I support, is less optimistic in spite of his efforts. He expresses the feeling, somewhere in his statement, that this decision was probably taken because there is no more cod to catch.

It is, in any case, a step in the right direction. As a supplementary question, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if, in view of this moratorium on fishing in the zones described, he might not request the minister once more to revise his position about putting an end to the destruction of cod stocks, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and its seaward approaches, by fishing boats over 100 feet in length.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, I will again ask my Cabinet colleague, Mr. Crosbie, to comment on this.

EXPLOITATION OF RESOURCES—POSSIBILITY OF TALKS BETWEEN CANADIANS AND EUROPEANS

Hon. Eymard J. Corbin: Honourable senators, on that subject, it must be pointed out that, if there are positive aspects to the decision of the European Economic Community (EEC), there is also some negative ones. Accusations were even made by the EEC which claims that there is no foreign overfishing, especially outside the Canadian 200-mile zone, that indeed Canadian fishermen are depleting cod stocks. This is a rather serious accusation made against us in the past little while by the European Economic Community.

Does the Canadian government intend to reply to the Europeans to show them it is useless to just throw accusations left and right without having full knowledge of the facts when in fact, what is needed is for Canadians, Europeans and others who tap these resources to all get together around a table to settle once and for all this environmental problem. Accusations solve nothing. What we need, right now, is for a deal to be struck between men and women of goodwill.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, I am in full agreement with the hon. senator when he says that throwing accusations at one another is not very useful.

I shall enquire to see if my colleague, Mr. Crosbie, could provide us further information on the statement made by the European Economic Community's spokespersons.

[English]

THE ECONOMY

"AN AGENDA FOR PROSPERITY"—CIRCULATION OF GOVERNMENT PAMPHLET

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, before I departed the West Coast for Ottawa on the weekend, a circular was delivered to my home. It is entitled—"Lower taxes." "More training." "Cut the red tape." "Buy Canadian." "We need a Vision." "Less government." "No barriers." It constitutes a Conservative Party mailing. I suggest that it is probably the first shot in the forthcoming election campaign.

Senator Hastings: Who paid for it?

Senator Perrault: Yes, that is the question. A pair of scissors is shown on one page with a caption that reads, "Cut! Cut! Cut!" The pamphlet suggests that the Conservatives will streamline government, eliminate a number of projects, and simplify tax forms. The truth is, honourable senators, that most of the people who have been "Cut! Cut! Cut!" are the disadvantaged in society.

Senator Frith: It is a cruel joke.

Senator Perrault: Some of the people who have been "Cut! Cut! Cut!" are those who have been the victims in my province of the arbitrary 5 per cent ceiling on the increase in federal welfare payments.

The pamphlet indicates that the education credit has been increased. The pamphlet describes what it purports Canada to be today—a land of milk and honey, with everyone enjoying a very high standard of living and no problems at all.

Senator Simard: What is the question?

Senator Perrault: The pamphlet purports to say that Canadians, beginning last November, were asked for their opinions on a range of subjects. Significantly, what they do not publish is the attitude of Canadians toward this government and the leader of this government.

At the bottom of the last page of the pamphlet, the government says that if you would like it to rush you additional copies of this pamphlet, write to Ministers Valcourt and Wilson at the House of Commons in Ottawa.

Senator Barootes: Let me write that down. What is the address?

Senator Perrault: You were probably on the planning committee for this blatant piece of propaganda!

If you want additional copies, you are to send your name and address to Ministers Valcourt or Wilson, House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0A6.

At the bottom of the last page, the pamphlet says, "Please recycle". Well, the people of Canada are in no mood to recycle this discredited government. That is what we are talking about.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Barootes: Thanks for the advertising.

Senator Perrault: "Please recycle"! I have never seen a more blatant waste of taxpayers' money.

My question is this, finally—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: How many copies of this pamphlet have been printed by this government? Is this one of the products of GST revenues? Are our taxes being used to publish and distribute blatant propaganda of this kind?

There is no mention in this pamphlet of the fact that 500,000 manufacturing jobs have disappeared since the free trade deal was signed—not a mention of that! Not a mention of the fact that there is no GST on caviar, but there is on babies' clothing. The injustices perpetrated by this government are scandalous, and I have belaboured the point perhaps long enough.

Senator Hastings: How many unemployed?

Senator Perrault: Are there regional disposal bins where this pamphlet is to be recycled? Have you established in each province an area where we can throw this trash into the type of container it deserves?

Senator Frith: We have the perfect place out in the country.

● (1420)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do believe I received one of those.

Senator Perrault: Did you get a copy as well?

Senator Murray: Yes, at my home, and it was in both languages. I believe it was an insert—

Senator Hastings: An insult.

Senator Perrault: It is an insult.

Senator Murray: —in various daily newspapers paid for by the government.

Senator Perrault: By the taxpayers.

Senator Murray: It is a report on the consultations that have been taking place across Canada for some months now in connection with the Prosperity Initiative. The honourable senator may know that these consultations have touched upon competitiveness and training and the various policies that people want to see followed in order to ensure our competitiveness and increased prosperity in the years ahead. I did not read every word, but I read through it quickly and I found it extremely interesting and even uplifting.

Senator Frith: Considering how depressing the polls have been I can understand that.

Senator Perrault: I would think the Leader of the Government in the Senate would probably be supportive of its content. That is not an unreasonable suggestion by the senator.

Senator LeBlanc: He has not read all of it.

Senator Perrault: The fact is, read as objectively as one can read it, it can only be described as a blatantly partisan Conservative circular, not distributed and paid for by the government, but distributed as a result of money extracted from the already overstressed taxpayers in this country. Public money should not be wasted circularizing partisan literature on the part of any political party. The government should be ashamed of itself. We need some facts and figures on this one.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would be glad to obtain the information, if any, that the honourable senator is seeking. I disagree with him that it can in any sense be considered a partisan document. It is a report to Canadians on what we have learned in the consultations. The quotations cited by the honourable senator a few moments ago seem to me to be suggesting that the government has not gone far enough in cutting taxes and spending, or in encouraging research and training, and a number of other things. That, it seems to me, is not a partisan message at all. Rather it is a critique of the government policies and an admonition, which we welcome and take to heart, that we must do more and do it better.

Senator Perrault: Again, honourable senators, listen to the way this thing is written. How can the Leader of the Government keep a straight face when he answers in that bland fashion trying to explain this outrage? It reads:

> Environmental concerns such as global warming, air and water quality and sustainable forests are being given priority.
>
> The excise tax on the environmentally friendly ethanol and methanol part of gasoline has been eliminated.

The deficit is down. Did the honourable senator see the figures this week as far as the deficit is concerned? Come on, there is not even an attempt here to be accurate or objective. My resentment stems not from the fact that this material was circulated, assuming Conservative party funds had been used to distribute it. Were that the case, that would be fair. It is not fair, however, when a loaded document of this kind is distributed to every homeowner in Canada at the taxpayers' expense. It is not fair, when many questions remain unasked; questions such as, "What do you think of the government's performance in this or that area?" Or "What do you think of the Prime Minister?" None of the answers to these questions appear here. All of the pamphlet's content is slanted to the credit of the Conservative Party of Canada. It is the first shot of the campaign, and I believe it is a disgraceful way to start.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my honourable friend believes it is the first shot in the campaign. That is clearly what rattles him.

All of the statements the honourable senator has just read into the record are totally factual. It is no wonder he is rattled, because the facts do support the government. But that is quite incidental to the purpose of that publication.

Senator Perrault: It is totally factual that over 10 per cent of Canadians are out of work today, with a particularly high percentage in the Maritime and Atlantic provinces. It is a fact of life that 500,000 manufacturing jobs have been lost in Canada since the beginning of this trade deal with the United States. That should rattle the composure of the Leader of the Government.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, Senator Perrault has been on this hobby horse of the impact of the free trade agreement on the Canadian economy for some time. I presume he belongs to the Lloyd Axworthy, Maude Barlow faction of the Liberal Party, which is determined to tear up the agreement and walk away from it. In due course, the people of Canada will have an opportunity to pronounce on that matter as well.

I should simply state for the record that, since the implementation of the free trade agreement, Canada's share of United States' imports is up. Since the implementation of the free trade agreement our trade surplus with the United States is up. Since the implementation of the free trade agreement our high-tech trade surplus with the United States is up.

Senator Frith: Bankruptcies are up.

Senator Murray: Since the implementation of the free trade agreement Canada has had net investment inflows for the first time since the imposition of my friend's National Energy Policy. All of this is good news.

Senator Perrault: The leader of the government suggests that the members of the opposition should rejoice in the "factual" statistics and information contained in this pamphlet. Why is there no reference in this pamphlet to the fact that over 1 million children in Canada today are living in poverty? There is no mention at all of the single mothers trying to exist in this society. There is no mention of the great human problems afflicting this country. Those are also facts which the Conservative Party does not have the courage to face.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, these are the very conditions that the government—and I would have thought honourable senators opposite—seeks to improve by means of a growing Canadian economy. Unemployment, regional disparity and the lack of skills in some sectors are all conditions that have been discussed in considerable detail at scores of townhall meetings across the country.

Senator Perrault: Organized by the Conservative Party.

Senator Murray: That publication seeks to report on some of the prescriptions that have been offered by ordinary Canadians coming out, as they have, in the hundreds to those townhall meetings to address the economic prospects of the country.

Of course, economic growth is not an end in itself. These people have come out to these meetings because they are concerned, as is the honourable senator, with the social problems and the great social and human objectives that a growing economy will enable us to achieve.

Senator Perrault: In his laboured explanation for the issuance of this pamphlet, the Leader of the Government has demonstrated that at least he is a first-rate stand-up comedian.

EMPLOYMENT

ACCELERATION OF JOB CREATION PROCESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, yesterday in an exchange with the Leader of the Government in the Senate he challenged this side to provide some ideas that might be different from the government's with respect to reducing unemployment this year.

Has the government considered accelerating forward its existing plans for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94 in capital infrastructure in order to create jobs this year?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I would invite the attention of my honourable friend to the references in Mr. Mazankowski's budget speech on that very subject of infrastructure. I can assure the honourable senator that we are doing everything possible to expedite the process alluded to by Mr. Mazankowski in his budget speech.

Senator Grafstein: To make it clearer to those of us in the opposition who are concerned about this issue, could the Leader of the Government set out for us, in a response to this question, the quantum of capital expenditures planned by the government for the next fiscal year and the fiscal year following and indicate how much of those two years are being accelerated into the present?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not sure I can provide that information in exactly the form in which the honourable senator would like to see it. These capital projects for 1993-94 or 1994-95 are somewhat speculative, even notional. However, I will obtain from my cabinet colleagues a report on progress with regard to the statements made by Mr. Mazankowski in his budget about infrastructure.

Senator Grafstein: I appreciate that. I take it that the Leader of the Government did not mean that the government's projections were somewhat speculative, because the government has laid down its fiscal plans for revenue and expenditures for the next two or three years. I assume those are not speculative; those are specific plans based on specific assumptions. It might be more useful if he could give us those figures and then we could come to our own conclusions.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again, I do not think I am in a position to place before the Senate the capital construction programs of the government for future fiscal years. We will do that for the present fiscal year.

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, based on my limited experience in government, every department of government has capital plans. The capital plans are not for one-year periods. The capital plans, for most departments, are for five years. It is true that, as you get to the third, fourth and fifth years, they are somewhat uncertain and somewhat speculative. But, clearly, for the next year or two those plans are pretty fixed and firm. At any rate, those are the numbers we are asking for. We would like an opportunity to see whether or not those numbers could be accelerated to the benefit of Canada this year so that they would not have to be spent next year when we hope the economy will start moving again.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Murray: Now that the honourable senator has narrowed the focus somewhat, I will do what I can.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

DEPLETION OF FUNDS FOR CURRENT YEAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we are less than three months into the 1992-93 fiscal year and I understand that training funds available through the Unemployment Insurance Program have already run out for the year. Would the Leader of the Government verify whether that is true?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I saw the comments attributed to my cabinet colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Valcourt, but I have not yet had an opportunity to discuss these matters with him. I would want to get a fuller report before commenting on the honourable senator's question.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT ON RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, there was a headline in the Toronto Star over the weekend indicating that since the signing of the free trade agreement Canada has lost something like 1,400,000 jobs. Some economists attribute the loss of these jobs to the free trade agreement. Others say that the losses are partly due to the recession. Some others contend that some of these jobs were lost because of globalization.

In 1988 the Honourable John Crosbie, who was the Minister of Trade at the time, promised to table a report on the effects of the free trade agreement in January of 1989. Further reports were to follow every year after that. He did not live up to that commitment; nor did his successors.

Will the honourable gentleman see that a report is tabled in the Senate in order that we may find out what part the free trade agreement has played in these staggering job losses since the agreement was signed?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries about that matter. I want to remind the honourable senator that more jobs were lost during the recession of the early 1980s, when there was no free trade agreement at all.

Senator Olson: What has that to do with his question?

Senator Murray: I am saying that the job losses to which the honourable senator refers were largely due to the recession, not to the free trade agreement.

• (1440)

Senator Olson: Do you really believe that?

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, in raising that question it was not my intention to engage in political disputations. I only asked the honourable gentleman to clarify the situation. Since he is so certain that the disappearance of these jobs in the last four years is due to the recession, would he please bring the facts before the house so that we may know if that is the case?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries on the matter that the honourable senator has referred to, namely, a commitment which he says the former Minister of International Trade gave with regard to the production of some documents.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION TABLED

VETERANS AFFAIRS—INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), tabled the answer to Question No. 57 on the Order Paper on February 12—by Senator Marshall.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES BILL

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—VOTE DEFERRED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelleher, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, for the third reading of Bill C-53, An Act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, that Bill C-53 be not now read the third time but that it be amended in clause 7,

(a) on page 5, by striking out lines 41 and 42 and substituting the following:

"(a) five sitting days of that House after the order or regulation is made, if the order or regulation is made to implement a decision, regulation or recommendation of an international organization calling on its members to take economic measures against a foreign state, hereinafter in this section called an "economic-measures order"; or

(b) two sitting days of that House after the order or regulation is made, if the order or regulation is made in circumstances where a grave breach of international peace and security may result or has resulted in a serious international crisis, hereinafter in this section called an "international-crisis order";

(b) on page 6,

(i) by striking out lines 14 and 15 and substituting the following:

"(a) not later than the third sitting day of that House following the filing of the motion, in the case of an international-crisis order, or

"(b) not later than the sixth sitting day of that House following the filing of the motion, in the case of an economic-measures order,";

(ii) by striking out lines 22 to 24, inclusive, and substituting the following:

"section (3) shall be debated without interruption for not more than

"(a) three hours, in the case of an international-crisis order, or

(b) six hours, in the case of an economic-measures order, or such longer period as that House may, with the";

(iii) by striking out line 41 and substituting the following:

"request shall, in the case of an economic-measures order, take up and consider the motion"

(iv) by striking out line 46 and substituting the following:

"that six hours, in the case of an international-crisis order, or three hours, in the case of an economic-measures order, or such longer period as";

(c) on page 7, by adding immediately after line 4 the following:

"(6.1) In the case of an international-crisis order, the House to whom the message has been addressed pursuant to subsection (5) shall, within the first four days after the message has been sent, take up and consider, in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection (6), the motion that is the subject of the message."

On page 5, by adding immediately after line 42 the following:

"(1.1) If a House of Parliament is not sitting when an international-crisis order has been made under section 4, the Speaker of that House shall, within three days after the making of the order, forthwith recall the House."

Hon. James F. Kelleher: Honourable senators, as agreed last evening, we have carefully considered the interventions of colleagues on the perceived deficiencies of this bill as reported, and on the particular amendments proposed thereto.

Before taking up the details of the proposed amendments I should like to comment on certain misunderstandings of the import and intent of this bill.

First, regarding sanctions imposed by the government, "where the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a grave breach of international peace and security has occurred", I should like to recall for my colleagues the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the presentation of this legislation in the House. He stated:

> Bill C-53 is fully consistent with long-established Canadian foreign policy that has always treated the application of international economic sanctions as a very serious and exceptional measure. In applying economic sanctions, Canadian governments have been guided by three principles. Canada has sought a broad international agreement on the necessity and usefulness of sanctions. Canada has insisted that the burden of sanctions be shared among the countries imposing them and Canada has made every effort to avoid placing Canadian business and workers at a disadvantage in relation to its foreign competitors. Nothing in this bill requires departure from these long-standing principles of Canadian foreign policy.

These are indeed the principles which informed the drafting of the particular section 4(1), which has been the source of such speculation by my colleagues opposite.

Under what circumstances would Canada act unilaterally? It should first be pointed out that a prime consideration in imposing sanctions is that they be effective. In order to be effective, they require a broad measure of international consensus or, at a minimum, the consensus of like-minded countries with the international weight to induce the sanctioned country to change course. This is a practical consideration likely to induce any particular government to avoid the "grand gestures" or temptation to "take the lead and impress the world with our high moral standards". Any government, upon imposing frivolously the grave measures permitted by this bill, would face not only the wrath of Canadian citizens and their representatives but also the ridicule or censure—or perhaps worse, the indifference—of the international community.

Colleagues opposite have set great store by the remarks of the legal advisor of the Department of External Affairs before the Foreign Affairs Committee. It is perhaps inevitable that legal advice be quoted selectively, but permit me to simply reiterate what Mr. Mawhinney replied on that occasion. When asked whether the bill did not depart from the important political principle— that of requiring broad consensus before sanctions could be imposed—Mr. Mawhinney said:

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

> I would suggest that when we look carefully at the wording of that provision, we are speaking of a grave breach. It would seem to those who prepared this legislation that it would be only prudent to allow for circumstances where the government of the day determines that, because of that grave breach, certain immediate actions may be required, even if they are only of an interim character.

Such immediate action was required, for example, in the case of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, which took place on August 2, 1991. As is well known, the U.N. Security Council met and imposed mandatory sanctions on Iraq only on August 6. In the interim period, Canada was effectively without means to implement comprehensive sanctions despite the undoubted breach of international peace and the broad consensus that the international community should act.

I would point out that it is quite reasonable, considering past experience, that the U.N. Security Council would not have been able to act at all in this instance. Many other instances spring to mind in the past 40 years to date when the security council was stalemated and grave breaches were not even brought before council. I could cite Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

We have witnessed in the last few days a near perfect illustration of the particular instance in which Canada, without this legislation in place, is constrained from taking effective and timely international action. I refer to the severing of air links with Yugoslavia. Over several weeks there has been a growing international consensus that further sanctions against Yugoslavia were necessary. One such sanction was the suspension of landing rights for the Yugoslav national airline. In this instance, what the U.S. and various EC partners were able to do virtually instantaneously, and in anticipation of an emerging U.N. consensus and U.N. Security Council action, Canada was required to effect with unavoidable delay through the National Transportation Act. In advance of a U.N. Security Council decision on mandatory sanctions, Canada would not have been able, for example, to freeze Yugoslav assets in Canada.

As was mentioned when this legislation was debated for a second time in this chamber, disagreement among the permanent members of the security council has regularly prevented the U.N. from making effective use of mandatory economic sanctions. Notwithstanding the end of the Cold War, reservations held by some members of the security council about the use of economic sanctions promised to limit the ability of the security council to use them in the future, or to do so expeditiously.

The "grave breach" threshold is designed precisely to allow Canada to act in a timely fashion in rare situations of extreme gravity where measures must be taken unilaterally, pending action by the international community.

Questions about the lack of specificity of the expression "grave breach," which were addressed yesterday in this chamber, have already been canvassed at length in committee. In short, the criteria is well known in international law, being modelled on the language of Article 39 of the United Nations Charter. Given the variety of circumstances that could constitute a grave breach of international peace and security, and given the highly political nature of the determination required, it is not feasible to define the expression further, nor does it lend itself easily to judicial review.

Colleagues have also alluded to extensive discussion in committee on the issue of extraterritoriality. I would only repeat that the proposed Special Economic Measures Act would authorize, but not require, the government to adopt orders and regulations governing the activities of Canadians outside Canada.

I would point out that under the terms of the United Nations Act, which gives effect in Canada to UN mandatory sanctions, Canada is already obligated to adopt such orders with extraterritorial effect if the UN so decides. The proposed bill gives the Governor in Council this authority in other circumstances where international organizations so recommend or the international situation so warrants, but does not oblige us to do so.

However, I would note that without this capability, Canada would be in the invidious position of either not being able to comply with the resolution of international organizations to which it belongs or, in the case of Canadians in Libya or Iraq, to use two recent examples, and in the absence of UN action, not being able to take measures to deter Canadians from continuing to support regimes hostile to Canada and Canadian values.

In short, the second threshold for action, "international crisis," has been drafted to be of an exceptionally high nature, to be invoked only in rare instances in situations where the government feels compelled to act pending actions by the international community, as in the case of Iraq or, more recently, Yugoslavia, or in situations where the UN Security Council, despite a broad consensus of like-minded states, is unable to act.

None of the objections raised by my colleagues would merit, in the government's view, the suggested amendments to the bill as proposed. Several may, in fact, be termed merely vexatious in that although they would involve only minor amendments—i.e., increasing the required debate from three to six hours—would have the effect at present of delaying considerably passage of this bill. Others, as has been discussed in the other place and in committee, would seek to effect by statute that which house rules already provide for.

In brief, the proposed amendment on page 5, prescribing tabling before the house two sitting days after the regulation is made, is redundant. The bill already provides tabling within five sitting days. Would colleagues seriously propose delaying this legislation for the sake of three days? In most instances, it is in any case probable that regulations, once drafted and decided upon by the Governor in Council, would be laid before the house within the proposed time limit.

The same remark applies to the following proposed amendment. The bill currently reads "not later than the sixth sitting day," not precluding that the matter could be taken up "not later than the third sitting day."

Likewise, it is proposed that the bill be amended to provide for at least six hours of debate. It is precisely for this reason that the bill was amended to include the provision that the house may, by unanimous consent, extend the hours of debate.

At the risk of being repetitious, it would appear that the next amendment on page 7 is of a like character. The bill already allows consideration by the house within 15 days, not precluding that the debate might be taken up more expeditiously.

With regard to automatic recall of the house—referring now to the proposed amendment on page 5—when the house was not sitting, as was argued when similar proposals were made in the other place, House rules already provide for such eventualities, and we should not seek to effect by statute what Standing Orders already permit.

Furthermore, the proposed amendment would, in certain circumstances, such as the recent action to sever air links with Yugoslavia, have bizarre consequences. Surely colleagues would not wish the Parliament of Canada to be automatically recalled on the occasion of the imposition of a specific and relatively minor measure. This is enabling legislation permitting a wide variety of sanctions or a very restricted set of specific measures as the particular circumstances warrant.

There are many circumstances in which, I submit, it would be inappropriate to recall Parliament. One can well imagine, for example, a situation when the government wished to impose a progressive series of amendments or sanctions should the sanctioned state not respond to initial limited measures, but it would be inappropriate to recall Parliament to debate such a particular measure of that series.

In short, honourable senators, I consider the bill as drafted and as reported to this Chamber by committee to be sound and worthy of support by all senators.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have listened with great interest to Senator Kelleher's comments. He began by attempting to refute arguments that were not made here last night, arguments that were not made in the committee. As I said last night, there was general agreement in the committee on the principle of the bill.

I do not think that Senator Kelleher understands the importance of at least one of the amendments, the one that deals with assuring that the Houses are sitting to receive and examine orders made in times of crisis.

As background I want to say something about enabling legislation or delegation of powers. Some years ago, longer ago than I like to remember, the whole question of the delegation of powers by Parliament was a very hot topic among Parliamentarians. It was said that delegation is an abrogation of the rule of law. By "law", of course, those critics meant law made by Parliament. They said that when you have Orders in Council, what you really have is the executive making law and that those orders ought not to be dignified by being called laws.

This was traditionally the position of conservatives. It was the tradition set forth by F.A. Hayek in Law, Legislation, and Liberty. This was the noninterventionist tradition. Now, all that has been forgotten by our Conservative government.

Let us look at the historic position of the Conservative party of Canada. The Conservative Party of Canada focused much attention on the question of enabling legislation, the question of the delegation of powers, during the Second World War. Again and again, year after year, the Conservative Party denounced government by Order in Council. And they did it after 1945. They did it throughout the 1950s. One has only to mention the names of the Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker and of Gerald Baldwin to be reminded of what I am talking about.

All that has been forgotten today. This bill, Bill C-53, we are told, is only "enabling legislation". We are also told that, while it provides a large bracket of discretion, it will only be used in a case of grave concern and necessity. The implication is, of course, that we would not want to call back Parliament when what was done was only of a minor nature at the other extreme of the bracket.

● (1500)

I am quite surprised that Senator Kelleher, for whom I have great admiration, would put before us the speech that he delivered this afternoon. As he says, the bracket of discretion that is being conferred upon the Governor in Council is very wide. It might indeed be that the orders made were of a minor nature. On the other hand, it might be that they were of a very serious and heavy nature. It is against the second possibility that we ought to provide safeguards.

What are the traditional safeguards? The traditional safeguards, when Parliament has delegated legislative authority, have been of two kinds: First, early tabling of the orders in the houses of Parliament; second, the examination of those orders by a parliamentary committee or a joint committee of both houses.

In this case, the bill does not deal with the situation that would prevail if the government of the day decided there was indeed a grave breach of international peace and security with all the implications that the bill mentions and which Senator Kelleher emphasized. "Very serious and exceptional" were the words that he used. The bill does not say that in such very serious and exceptional circumstances, the houses, if they were in adjournment, would be brought back. He did not deal with the possibility, as I mentioned, that a government might make important orders when both houses were away and might let weeks, perhaps months, elapse before the houses resumed their sittings.

[Senator Stewart.]

I want to remind honourable senators of what happened in December of 1945 under the War Measures Act. The government of that day timed its orders very well. They made the orders under the War Measures Act, deporting natural-born Canadians of Japanese origin just at the beginning of the Christmas recess. Governments have a way of picking their times.

Instead of belittling these amendments, particularly the one to assure that the Houses of Parliament would be brought back in these serious, exceptional and grave circumstances, I should have thought that Senator Kelleher, speaking here this afternoon on behalf of the government, would have responded very differently from the way he has responded.

I believe the government has not put its mind to the important constitutional and parliamentary problem that is raised by this bill. As I said before, I detected in the committee no objection to the principle of the delegation. I detected no objection to that principle in what Senator Frith said yesterday, and I voiced no objection to that principle. All the amendment asks is that adequate arrangements be made for some form of parliamentary consideration.

The government has its majority. This bill will pass. The day may come when some government may bring in orders imposing economic sanctions without the umbrella of an international organization, on its own, in the period when the houses are in adjournment. What will we be told when we say, "Oh, no, that is not what members of the Senate were told in committee. That is not what we were told in the Senate. We were told the intention of the government was that these powers would not be used in that way".

Let us remember what Senator Murray said in his very important statement back in 1989 when he told us, in words I paraphrased here yesterday, that when we look at a bill such as this, we should look not at what the minister says are the intentions, and not at what the deputy minister says are the intentions, but at what the bill itself says.

Senator Murray: Excuse me. We were talking about a bill that was then 30 years old, if I am not mistaken, and I suggested to my friends opposite that they should look at what the Act said and at the way the Act had been implemented over the previous 30 years. That is important.

Senator Stewart: What is important?

Senator Murray: The amendment that I have just made to the honourable senator's statement purporting to quote me.

Senator Frith: Amendment or addition? You are amending what you said then?

Senator Murray: The amendment I made to the honourable senator's quotation.

Senator Frith: But he was quoting you. Are you amending what you said then?

Senator Stewart: I was paraphrasing.

Senator Murray: I was completing a statement which he quoted.

Senator Stewart: I was paraphrasing what Senator Murray said on that occasion. I did not refer to what he had said about the subsequent use of that particular act, because there was profound disagreement between us on how it had been used. His implication was that it had been used in conformity with the words of the act. Consequently what was decisive were the words of the act. That is why I emphasized the words in the act.

I do not think Senator Murray would rise in his place now—I invite him to correct me if I am wrong—and say that it is the intentions of the minister and the stated intentions of the deputy minister to which we ought to pay attention rather than the very words of a bill? Would he say that?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the words of the act are the truly important and decisive factor that the honourable senator should take into consideration, and he is doing that. He will take them into consideration in the light of statements made by the minister and by the spokesman for the government in this place. I hope he will take both into consideration and weigh them carefully.

After the honourable senator quoted me last night, I sent for my 1989 speech because I wanted to see in what connection I had made that statement. I found that the argument we were having was about a particular word that had been used by Mr. Donald Fleming and Mr. W.C. Clark in testimony given to a parliamentary committee in 1958.

• (1510)

The word was "urgent". It turns out that while there had been some suggestion that that word should find its way into the act, it did not so find its way. Therefore, I thought that it was more important in that case to read the act than to read the words of the minister and the deputy minister.

Senator Stewart: I do not think we should get bogged down with that old disagreement.

The point remains that we now have a bill which confers upon the Governor in Council very broad discretionary powers. Assurance was given to us in the committee that a government would never think of misinterpreting the expression "grave breach"; that a Canadian government would never think of using the extraterritorial powers improperly. We are supposed to rely upon the intention of future governments when we confer upon those governments these broad and extensive powers.

Senator Murray: That was not Senator Kelleher's case, to be fair. He was not asking the Senate simply to act on the intentions stated by the minister and his officials before the parliamentary committee.

He told the Senate, for example, that the term "grave breach" has a particular meaning in international law and in the United Nations charter. He was not asking you to rely upon some declaration of pious intention.

Senator Frith: But a very subjective one.

Senator Stewart: That is the line of argument that was put to us in the committee. Notwithstanding that, there was uneasiness. The committee was unanimous in accepting the principle that the delegation should be made, but the amendments now before the Senate would provide stronger safeguards against misuses—contrary to the intentions of the present government—of the authority now being sought from Parliament.

Senator Murray: There are safeguards in the bill.

Senator Stewart: Yes, there are.

Senator Murray: The disagreement between us is about their adequacy or otherwise.

Senator Stewart: Exactly. The principal disagreement concerns the situation where the Houses of Parliament are in adjournment. Such adjournments might go on for weeks, indeed for months, and a government, even a minority government, might use this act to introduce economic sanctions with both very serious international and domestic implications.

It emerges that there is a disagreement between Senator Murray and myself on the desirability of having Parliament present, if a government decides to make Orders in Council to impose sanctions in the case of a "grave breach". He feels that the present and future governments do not require the surveillance of Parliament. He disagrees with the stand that Sir Winston Churchill took in 1939-40 with regard to the reassuring presence of Parliament. I, on the other hand, stand with Sir Winston Churchill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have been speaking today about the amendments. I should like to remind honourable senators what the amendments propose. They propose a larger role for Parliament in circumstances where the government unilaterally imposes sanctions under the act with, as Senator Stewart says, important international consequences. However, remember we are here to represent the interests of the people of Canada and these sanctions can have extremely important consequences for domestic industries and for the people of Canada. That is what we are talking about.

Senator Kelleher, as has been pointed out by Senator Stewart, in effect assured us that the government would not go off on a frolic of its own, or if it did it would be in very rare circumstances, because, as he points out, this is international action that is being taken. Therefore, one would assume, as he says, that the international community would share Canada's concerns and it would be unlikely that Canada would go off on some frolic of its own with these wide international and domestic consequences.

In fact, he made that case so strongly that he convinced me that the amendments are inadequate and that we should properly take out the power entirely, remove it completely, if it is so unlikely that it would ever happen.

Senator Kelleher: Are you proposing another amendment?

Senator Frith: No, I am not, but you did, sir, or at least you led us up to the suggestion that perhaps we should have another amendment. Perhaps you are. I never thought to ask. Perhaps Senator Kelleher was proposing that we remove this provision, because, in my view, he has convinced us that the whole idea of Canada acting unilaterally is so exceptional and so bizarre that probably we do not need it in there at all. He did not give an example of when it would be justified. In that sense, he led an argument in support of an amendment removing the unilateral power entirely. Unfortunately, he did not speak to the amendments proposed here, which do not remove the power the government is seeking under this act.

All that is being suggested is that, in this bizarre, unusual, not-normal-by-any-means situation, Parliament should have a larger role. That is all that is being asked for in the amendments.

The suggestion is that there is some wish to delay this legislation. These amendments ask for a larger role for Parliament. They do not propose denying the government the power it is requesting, but ask for a larger role for Parliament in admittedly exceptional circumstances. Nevertheless, they were described as vexatious; it was vexatious for Parliament to ask for a bigger role.

I find that another sad example of how irrelevant Parliament is becoming. Any government with a majority in the House of Commons can get everything it wants, and what can Parliament do? Nothing. It can talk, but not for very long. It can only talk for a limited period of time—as long as the government wants to let it talk. It used to be that that did not apply in the Senate, but now it also applies in the Senate. What are we here for? Even in a situation of this kind, described as rare and unusual, where Parliament says, "We are Parliament. Admittedly we are not the government. We are not the Prime Minister. We are just Parliament, but we want a role", the government says no. We now understand that Parliament does not mean very much anymore. We go through our motions. It is almost a fraud to imply that we have an important role because in fact there is nothing we can do except go along with what the government wants—a government; not just this government, any government.

We can appreciate a case where the government wants to take international action by way of sanctions when it has to implement a decision made by an international body. Even Parliament understands that is something the government needs the authority to do. It has decided, and Parliament has approved, we assume, membership in this organization. If the government wants to make some sanctions effective, we should ensure that it is able to fulfil our obligations under the agreement.

[Senator Frith.]

● (1520)

However, you are saying that you want a government, any government, to be able to impose sanctions—which are very serious internationally and domestically—without any reference to whether other states are of the same mind. In that case Parliament will say that if you are not relying on the decision of an international organization, you should come to Parliament. Make sure that you recall us, because we would like to talk about it. You yourself are saying that the only circumstances under which you can act alone is when the situation is grave, serious and important. So if it is grave, serious and important—and those are the only circumstances in which it can be done—you should call us back and shorten the time required to consult with Parliament.

What are we told? "That is vexatious." "Who do you think you are, Parliament, asking us, the government, in these rare and unusual circumstances, to consult you?" "This is big time stuff; this is not the kind of stuff for Parliament to be concerned about." "Back into your sandbox!" "Who asked you to get out of your sandbox and actually get involved in something important?" Remember, by the government's own definition, it is only in terribly important cases that they would impose sanctions unilaterally.

Parliament will say, "If it is so all-fired important, then should you not involve Parliament?" "Oh, no; it is too important for you." Vexatious!

I say to my colleagues, do not get too big for your britches. Back into the sandbox! This stuff is too important for Parliament to be involved in.

Honourable senators, we mean to proceed with the amendments, audacious and cocky though that might be.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it. I understand that the vote is to be deferred.

Senator Frith: Have you agreed on a time?

Hon. William M. Kelly: We agreed on tomorrow.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The vote is deferred until tomorrow at 5:30 in the afternoon.

An Hon. Senator: Why 5:30?

Senator Kelly: This is a deferred vote, and I understand it is called for 5:30. However, if leave can be given for it to be called earlier, that would suit this side of the Chamber.

Senator Frith: Leave can be given for anything.

Senator Kelly: Is 3 o'clock agreeable?

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The vote is deferred until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton moved the third reading of Bill C-77, to amend the National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle, for the second reading of Bill S-11, An Act to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I told you yesterday that I was planning on speaking on this bill today, but I am not quite ready yet. Therefore, I propose to adjourn the debate on this order until tomorrow.

Order stands.

[English]

CORRECTIONS AND CONDITIONAL RELEASE BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Di Nino, seconded by the Honourable Senator Oliver, for the second reading of Bill C-36, An Act respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I welcome the opportunity to participate in a discussion of this bill which has been presented to us by Senator Di Nino, an act respecting corrections in Canada.

I welcome the honourable senator now occupying the Chair. I know that in him I will have a very attentive listener today.

Honourable senators, in introducing the bill before us, Senator Di Nino engaged in the spin that has been given these bills by invoking the protection of society as the goal or the purpose of this proposed legislation. It reminded me of another day and another Solicitor General in this Chamber, honourable senators. The Honourable Senator Kelleher stormed in here as Solicitor General on that day, July 2, 1986. The Honourable Senator Murray will have occasion to remember that day. It was the first day that he occupied the position he now holds.

On that occasion we had other bills, Bill C-67 and Bill C-68, which were brought here by a Solicitor General, again—you guessed it —for the protection of society. At the time he introduced those two bills, the Solicitor General said that they were "the best possible effort to provide for the safety of Canadians." He called upon us "to stand with the vast majority of Canadians in saying we will do everything in our power to stem the tide of needless violence." "We bring in this legislation to protect the public. We have deep concerns for the safety of the public."

That was six years ago, and what has been the result of that great crusade to protect the public? Honourable senators, the rate of violent crime in the last decade has increased by 52 per cent; sexual assaults have increased by 144 per cent, while non-sexual assaults have increased by 57 per cent, as a result of the great crusade at that time to protect the public.

There was a parole officer in Saskatoon at that time who said that Parliament was "only tinkering"—the implication being that if it did not work, we could tinker again later.

Honourable senators, after six years and with another Solicitor General, we are back tinkering again. The only comment that this Solicitor General could make with respect to that act, after examining its performance during the past six years, was to say that it had been implemented as planned.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, he said not a word about the protection of society, not a word about any useful purpose those two acts ever served in the six years with respect to the protection of society. He simply said that it had been implemented as planned.

So the minister brings us another bill, and in introducing that legislation he says:

> The whole focus of what we are doing is protection of society and public safety. This bill reflects the government's determination to restore public confidence in the corrections system.

That is what they were doing in 1986. When Senator Di Nino introduced the bill—and he must have the same speech writer—he said:

> "... the protection of society [will] be the paramount consideration ..." in the corrections process and in making conditional release decisions.

So the "protection of society" now is the challenging phrase of the government. Perhaps they took it from the Parole Board. The Parole Board, when it issued its mission statement, indicated that it, too, is dedicated to the protection of society. It asserted that "by facilitating the timely reintegration of offenders as law-abiding citizens we contribute to the protection of society".

Not to be outdone, the Correctional Service of Canada states in its mission statement:

> The Correctional Service of Canada, as part of the criminal justice system, contributes to the protection of society by actively encouraging and assisting offenders to become law-abiding citizens, while exercising reasonable, safe, secure and humane control.

The public could be forgiven for their concern in wondering, with all this protection, why there has been this increase in violence of 57 per cent over the years. The bill we have before us contains not one word, one phrase, one section or one clause that will make any material contribution to public safety in this country. The Canadian Bar Association had it correct in its evidence when it said:

> The introduction of Bill C-36 followed the lengthy process of study described in the introduction. The contents of the bill unaccountably repudiate the serious and time-consuming work which preceded it. The bill ignores the recommendations of the Sentencing Commission, the Daubney report, the Correctional Law Review and the extensive consultations on the green paper. In doing so it mocks the extensive time, energy, creativity and resources which have been devoted to this development process. It is a major step back from the government's own green paper, since it ignores the need for integrated reform of sentencing, corrections and conditional release recognized in Directions for Reform and proceeds [simply] with reform of corrections and conditional release . . .

In evidence at the hearing of the committee of the other place, the witness for the Canadian Bar Association said:

> There's absolutely no question about it. It is totally political, totally designed to look at emotional responses on the part of the public so that you can say "we're getting tough on prisoners parolees", ignoring all the recommendations as we have said that is our view.

The press release accompanying Bill C-36 amounts to little more than a public lie. One is further repulsed by the fact that those who have been lead to believe that the legislation will result in substantial increases in incarceration of "dangerous" or, for that matter, any other offender, have also been lied to. The bill does nothing for public protection. You do not gain public confidence by telling people you will not parole offenders who are not presently being paroled. You do not gain public confidence for corrections by saying that you will keep dangerous offenders in for more than half their sentence, when they are being kept in for more than half their sentence presently. That is why I say it amounts to a fraud on the people of Canada.

Worse than that, one of the basic principles of corrections over the years has been the attempt and the success we have had in removing from the corrections system revenge and retribution. But this bill, under the section on victims, literally enshrines retribution and vengeance by permitting the victim to be present at the parole hearing and, as Senator Di Nino proudly exclaimed, "have an impact on the release of the inmate".

Honourable senators, a victim in our society being grieved by an incident in society is entitled to all the consideration it is possible to render by the community to the victim. The victim has to be listened to. The victim has to have an opportunity to tell his story over and over again. He has to be assisted through a period of grieving. But all the concern of that victim does not license the victim to harass and harangue the offender through his period of incarceration and be present at any future hearing when release may be considered.

Victims must become survivors. Inmates must become ex-inmates. We cannot continue to focus on the event if we hope to have any healing whatsoever with respect to the open sores that exist with respect to the offense. This bill appeals to those who regard justice only as retribution. Any attempt to rehabilitate or concern ourselves with the offenders is regarded as coddling criminals.

With respect to victims, Mr. Justice O'Driscoll of the Ontario Supreme Court recently ruled that a victim's impact statement can only be considered for the purpose of determining the sentence to be imposed. He said:

> Thus, the Victim Impact Statement is something to be presented to the judge while she/he is hearing evidence and submissions prior to the imposition of sentence.

It is too bad the government could not listen to Mr. Justice O'Driscoll. That is when the victim is entitled to be heard. That is when the Court, as our representative, is entitled to consider the impact on the statement in passing sentence. We all have a concern for the victims in getting them through this period of trial and terror, but in our concern we do not grant authority, as I said a moment ago, to harangue and harass offenders after their sentence and until they are released from custody.

This is the constituency to which the minister appeals.

The clause of the bill which grants judges the authority to delay parole eligibility for certain violent offenders until half their sentence is served is being broadcast as a move to be tougher on serious violent offenders, but it is not new. Statistics indicate that violent offenders presently serve an average of 47 per cent of their sentence before being granted parole. The violent offenders are serving 66 per cent of their time, or probably 100 per cent of their time. Therefore to tell the public that we now intend to make violent offenders serve half their time is a fraud. The fact is that they are serving much more than that time now. Chopping parole restrictions for those who do not get parole in any event is a shameful deceit of the public.

[Senator Hastings.]

The minister made a great pronouncement that he intends to add drug offences and sex offences against children to the list of serious offences. The fact is that the Commissioner of Corrections now has authority to detain any inmate at any time until completion of a sentence. He does not need to have recourse to the offences listed on Schedule I. The minister has added these two offences for publicity purposes. He says he is improving the legislation, but the fact is that the Commissioner of Corrections can hold any inmate in custody at any time, regardless of his offence, provided he has reason to believe that the inmate will re-offend and be a danger to society.

We have discussed holding these inmates until the final day of their sentence. The Parole Board, in its own words, says:

> Unconditional release at the end of the inmate's sentence neither protects society nor allows for control, supervision, or guidance.

Therefore holding them to the end of their sentence offers no safety for society. The Parole Board continued:

> Experience has shown that offenders who are part of a program of gradual release from imprisonment do much better than those released into the community at the end of their sentence.

Yet the minister holds out as a great virtue detaining inmates until the end of their sentence, even though the Parole Board itself says that is not the way to do it.

Honourable senators, this legislation dealing with the correctional aspect of institutional life, such as the placement of inmates, transfers, search and seizures, disciplinary procedures, et cetera, is only a codification of what has been going on for years. It also restates much of the Penitentiary Act, the act it is supposed to be replacing due to antiquity. The government has presented this bill to the public as new and modern and as a reformed piece of legislation, despite the existence of much of its substance since prisons were created in Canada.

We are asked to believe that Part I of the legislation is a meaningful and substantive change. It is not a reform. It is not a change of the system, which is desperately needed. It is a game; it is mere tinkering.

The minister says "We intend to get tough on parole." At present, honourable senators, an inmate has to serve one-sixth of his sentence in order to become eligible for parole. The minister says "We are going to get tough on inmates. We will make them serve one-half of one-third before they are eligible for parole." Honourable senators, one-half of one-third is still one-sixth, but we are getting tough.

The minister says that inmates cannot have day parole until six months before their parole eligibility date. The present procedure is to not grant day parole until six months prior to the parole eligibility date. That is no change. It is exactly the same as it has been.

Then they cart forward the temporary absence program. They hired a group of their friends to examine a program that is 97 per cent successful and they bring forward a report saying that it was a successful program in most cases. Granted there was a 3 per cent failure rate, but overall it was a very positive correctional program. However, the minister intends to tighten it up.

At present, a temporary absence may be granted for medical, humanitarian or rehabilitative purposes. Under Bill C-36 we are going to tighten up. It will now be granted for medical, compassionate—including parental responsibility — administrative, community services, personal development, rehabilitative purposes and family contact. We have tightened up on temporary absence.

The government has found a new program and I commend it for that. Under work release, the Commissioner can release an inmate on a work release program for up to 60 days. This is not new, honourable senators. It was part of the correctional process back in the 1970s. It has been dug up and we are about to try it again. It worked then, to a certain extent. However, there were some failures and it was promptly turned over to the Parole Board and cancelled. We have dug it up again. So while we are allegedly toughening up on temporary absence, we are about to institute work release programs of up to 60 days, granted by the Commissioner of Penitentiaries.

Senator Di Nino made a great statement with respect to how the Correctional Investigator would now be legislatively installed. The fact is, honourable senators, that the Correctional Investigator will have not one iota of authority that he does not already have. True, he will have legislative authority which will give him the power to report to the minister, who will, in turn, report to Parliament.

Honourable senators, meaningful reform could have been introduced with respect to the Correctional Investigator. He could have been appointed as an officer of Parliament with authority to report to Parliament, not to a minister, and he could have been given authority to investigate the death or wounding of an inmate in custody. However, the Correctional Service does not wish to surrender that authority. They enjoy too much inspecting themselves. It is much easier for the brotherhood to inspect the brotherhood than it is for a Correctional Investigator to enter a penitentiary and, at arm's length, carry on an investigation.

Honourable senators, the government has again made a sacrifice to expediency in promoting a shallow, deceitful, public relations campaign with respect to violence in society. At the same time, this bill confirms and promotes all of the myths which make serious, constructive and worthwhile reform and progress impossible. I urge honourable senators to reject this bill at second reading.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: I move, honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Di Nino speaks now, his remarks will have the effect of closing debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Di Nino: Honourable senators, I would like to make a couple of comments on Senator Hastings' remarks. Before I do that, I would like to offer my respect and admiration to Senator Hastings for his legendary championship of the rights of inmates. It is very commendable. It is important to state also that Senator Hastings, in his comments, is obviously being very selective in pursuing his points of views as opposed to reading all of the message that not only I but others have given on this issue.

During his remarks Senator Hastings left me with some confused messages. I am not sure whether he was praising the government for not having made some changes or criticizing the government for not having made some changes.

In his comments about the statistics concerning the increase in crime rates and, in particular, concerning sexual assaults since 1986, I am not sure whether he was suggesting that we should have left things alone and let them keep on increasing or come up with some legislation which, hopefully, will address some of those issues and reduce the frequency of those crimes.

He also talked about people who are looking for revenge as opposed to rehabilitation. I do not see that in this bill. What I see in that particular area, honourable senators, is an attempt to distinguish between violent and non-violent criminals. He knows well that Schedule I and Schedule II deal with offences of a nature such as incest, sexual exploitation, bestiality, corrupting children, attempt to commit murder, assault, sexual assault and aggravated assault. It also deals with what I have previously called some of the scum of this earth—that is, the worst kind, namely, the drug offenders; those who traffic and import drugs for trafficking; those who cultivate drugs; and the laundering of proceeds of drug moneys. This bill distinguishes between those kinds of criminals and those who are not violent. This bill treats the non-violent ones a little more humanely.

Senator Hastings talks about the rights of victims as if they should not exist. Senator Hastings must be joking when he talks about that. The victims, after all, are the people who suffer. In my opinion they should have the right to express their views up to the time that an inmate is being considered for parole. The tragedies, the hurt, the destruction of all human dignity that criminals create in the lives not only of victims but also of their families cannot be taken lightly.

Finally, I should like to suggest that Senator Hastings and those members opposite do not have an exclusivity to righteousness. They are sometimes wrong as well.

In this case, honourable senators, Senator Hastings is wrong on a number of points. I invite him, as well as the rest of our honourable senators, to join with us in our deliberations of this legislation in committee, where the questions raised by Senator Hastings, as well as the definitions and meanings of some of the clauses that he questioned, can be fully explored through expert witnesses.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, could Senator Di Nino explain his phrase "scum of the earth"? Which inmates did you put in that category?

Senator Di Nino: I was talking about those who traffic in drugs and those who gain from trafficking in drugs.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Di Nino, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

TIBET

THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF NATIONAL UPRISING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Di Nino, calling the attention of the Senate to the thirty-third anniversary of the Tibetan National Uprising.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we cannot let this item just stand. It should stand under the same conditions as yesterday—that is, as previously ordered to do so, if Senator Frith wants to speak on it.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, Honourable Senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 3, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, according to election Big Ben, the democrats have 171 days left and the cowardly and contemptuous have 557 days, as of Wednesday, June 3, 1992.

Senator Doody: Bong.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PRIVATE BILL

GREEN SHIELD CANADA PREPAID SERVICES ASSOCIATION—SIXTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce had the honour to present the following report:

TUESDAY, June 2, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

SIXTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-10, an Act to incorporate the Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association, has, in obedience of the Order of Reference of Friday, May 22, 1992, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same with four amendments:

1. Page 1, Long Title: Strike out the Long Title and substitute the following:

"An Act to incorporate Green Shield Canada"

2. Page 3, clause 3: Strike out lines 28 and 29 and substitute the following:

"ration entitled Green Shield Canada."

3. Page 5, clause 10: Strike out lines 42 to 44 and substitute the following:

"distribute to The Green Shield Canada Foundation, a body corporate incorporated under Part II of the Canada Corporations Act."

4. Page 13, clause 18:

(a) Strike out lines 15 and 16 and substitute the following:

"(e)Green Shield Canada."

(b)Strike out lines 34 and 35 and substitute the following:

"calendar year by Green Shield Canada from its pre-"

Respectfully submitted,

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Poitras, report placed on the orders of the day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILL C-21 TABLED

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, pursuant to Rule 105 of the Rules of the Senate, I have the honour to table the report of the Special Senate Committee on Bill C-21 regarding the expenses incurred by the Committee during the second session of the 34th Parliament.

(The list of expenses is included in today's Minutes of the Proceedings.)

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 200 residents of the Province of New Brunswick—for the enlightenment of the senator from New Brunswick who seems distracted!—Indeed, 200 residents object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Fredericton, St. John, St. George and Grand Bay.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have petitions of the same kind; these petitions are exclusively from Quebec today. There are 15 petitions and 323 signatures.

[Translation]

THE SENATE

RESEARCH FUNDS—STUDY COMPLETED—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been granted to revert to Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, things went so fast and I was a bit distracted, therefore, I missed the item I wanted to discuss.

In any case, honourable senators, I thank you for allowing me to simply say that next Friday, June 5, 1992, I will draw the attention of the Senate on a study done thanks to the research funds that the Senate makes available for its members.

[English]

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

500TH ANNIVERSARY OF DISCOVERY OF AMERICA—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I give notice that I will call the attention of the Senate to the 500th anniversary of the landing of Cristoforo Colombo—or Christopher Columbus as we know him—in the new world.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE TO IMF CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate based on a statement made by the Minister of Finance to the International Monetary Fund Conference in Toronto yesterday. His comments were similar to what the Leader of the Government has been telling us for several weeks now.

The Minister of Finance stated that there are some "encouraging economic signs in Canada . . . although high unemployment and weak consumer and business confidence are still clouding the outlook." He further stated that our objective must be to get our economy going and keep it going. That is great. I agree with those sentiments. It seems that the Minister of Finance is saying what Senator Murray has been saying for a long time, that we are "already poised", but we never seem to get started.

The government should understand what the problem is. Interest rates have been going down. They are now down at what they were 20 years ago and they will probably go down again tomorrow. What is the problem with business and consumer confidence? Business does not want to borrow money and go into debt and then have the government club it with a monetary policy that will raise interest rates until all the inflation that might be created by increased business activity is knocked out of the economy.

That is what happened the last time business borrowed and invested. Interest rates were 8.5 per cent and 9 per cent, but before businesses could even get started the prime rate went up to 14.75 per cent. People who have been through that will never get caught in that situation again.

● (1410)

Another point to bear in mind is that consumers will not be willing to go into debt using credit cards with interest rates of 18 to 24 per cent until this government gives them some assurance that it will not use a blunt instrument like monetary policy to knock off all the increase in economic activity that may come from it.

You continue to say, "We are poised to go", but you never get started. People are not going to walk into that trap again.

Senator Barootes: What was the question?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my cabinet colleague the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance spoke, as Senator Olson just mentioned, to the International Monetary Fund meeting in Toronto.

It will be instructive and encouraging to the honourable senator to know that the IMF projected in April that Canada's economic growth, measured in real gross domestic product, would be 2.3 per cent in 1992, rising to 4.9 per cent in 1993.

Senator Frith: Does it say anything about unemployment and bankruptcies?

Senator Olson: When is it going to get started? You are just poised to go all the time.

Senator Murray: The Honourable Senator Olson asks when it is going to get started. I am here to tell him that it has started. It has started in a very encouraging and pronounced way.

Yesterday, we heard from various honourable senators about manufacturing and manufacturing employment. Let me tell the honourable senator that manufacturing employment rose by 34,000 in the month of April.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Let me tell the honourable senator that new motor vehicle sales rose by 2.6 per cent in April.

Senator Perrault: Rose from the ashes!

Senator Murray: Housing starts rose by 7.6 per cent in April.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Real exports were 3.7 per cent above their level in the fourth quarter of 1991. Real exports rose by 3.7 per cent in the first quarter of 1992. Wholesale trade rose by 0.8 per cent in March.

My honourable friend speaks about business confidence, quoting from Mr. Mazankowski. Mr. Mazankowski, as usual, understated the case in speaking of the improvement in the Canadian economy. I want to tell the honourable senator that the index of business confidence increased by 16.1 per cent in the first quarter of 1992.

Senator Frith: What part of the index?

Senator Murray: All components of the index increased. Capacity utilization rose. The climate for investment was seen to have improved, and firms expressed more optimism with respect to their financial outlook.

When I tell the honourable senator that the IMF has predicted a 2.3 per cent growth in real GDP this year in Canada, rising to 4.9 per cent growth next year, the honourable senator asks when it will start. I have just told him and showed him how it has started and will not be reversed.

Senator Olson: I can hardly believe what I have just heard. This is the indicator of a healthy economy according to the Tory gospel. Is that what you mean by a healthy economy? Is that what is happening now?

I heard him say something that I think he had better get his researchers to re-research. He said new automobile sales are up. Is there any increase in the automobile manufacturing industry? That is where—

Senator Barootes: They are putting in overtime in manufacturing motor cars.

Senator Olson: Maybe what you did was import a few more with your free trade policy. If that is the Tory description of a healthy, growing economy, I would point out that there are about 75,000 unemployed workers in the oil business in Alberta who are not impressed by that description. I could talk about southwestern Ontario, with respect to which I have the numbers. However, I am talking about the region from which I come.

What is this government doing to alleviate this situation? Is it going to let it—

Senator Barootes: Do you want the NEP back?

Senator Olson: We want back a government that can govern Canada. What this government is doing is opting out of government. It says that everything will be dependent upon something called the market.

Senator Simard: Are you looking for the Social Credit Party?

Senator Olson: All that means is that the people around the Persian Gulf decide what the employment rates in Alberta will be. Is that the government's answer to the way in which it will govern Canada? Even the Minister of Finance had the decency to say that we want to get the economy going. The Leader of the Government in the Senate says it is already going. But the Minister of Finance said, "Our objective must be to get our economy going and keep it going."

What we need from this government is the assurance that I asked for a minute ago, namely that it will not clobber everyone who takes on any debt by using monetary policy to kill their enterprises. When will it announce that type of policy?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am in a position to announce that the policy we have been following for some years has paid off handsomely. The honourable senator is not satisfied when I tell him, as I told him a few moments ago, that exports are up, that real GDP is going up, that new motor vehicle sales are going up, that new housing starts are up and that employment in manufacturing is up—all of this in April. The honourable senator is not satisfied with those as indicators of economic growth.

What can I add? I can tell him, for example, that the 12-month inflation rate in the month of April was 1.7 per cent, the lowest it has been since 1964.

Senator Molgat: And unemployment is going up every week!

Senator Murray: I wonder whether the honourable senator would not agree that a low inflation rate, the lowest since 1964, is not in itself a powerful contributor to economic growth. The bank rate went down by 17 basis points a week ago. It is now at 6.33 per cent—the lowest level since 1973. Is it any wonder that the index of business confidence rose by 16 per cent in the first quarter of this year? These are the conditions precedent to a sustained and prolonged economic growth.

If the honourable senator wants some more, let him look up the productivity figures. He may find those figures in the same newspaper he was reading. If they are not in that edition, he will find them in a recent edition. They show that productivity growth in Canada is stronger now than it has been at any time since the Second World War. That is the result of the policies of this government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, now we are satisfied that we have an explanation of what are the Tory government's policies and objectives. What we see now in the economy is that they have set right their fundamentals, as they call them, so that we have a record number of bankruptcies.

Canada is experiencing the highest unemployment rate in at least a decade. Food banks are flourishing everywhere. There is unemployment amongst lower income people and poverty amongst children. Unemployment and poverty are at the highest levels Canada has known since the Second World War.

What is the objective of this government? Is it to deliver the economy to that state? I think you should change your objective.

The Bureau of Statistics stated yesterday that they expect unemployment to remain at about 11 per cent for the next three or four months. Is that your objective, too?

All your little speech just now amounts to is that you really think you have accomplished something by bringing inflation down to 1.6 per cent. There have been very many important Canadians who have said that the price of forcing inflation down to that level, using the blunt instrument of monetary policy, is too high. Six or seven thousand businesses going bankrupt every month is too high a price to pay for what seems to be your objective.

This is not a complicated question. Do you want consumer confidence to go up so that consumers will start buying things? You always say the problem is that, although business confidence is up, consumers are not buying anything, so the policy does not work. You say we have to stay poised; but we never get going. You could get this economy going if you announced that you will not clobber businesses and consumers with the kinds of interest rates and monetary policy that were in vogue about two and a half years ago.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have already pointed out that the bank rate has been declining steadily for many, many months.

Senator Olson: Nobody has any confidence.

Senator Murray: It is at its lowest rate since 1973. What is the honourable senator talking about? Interest rates are at historically low levels now.

Senator Olson: What are you talking about?

Senator Murray: I am talking about the prime rate of the banks.

Senator Thériault: Who gets the prime rate?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Who got it when it was 20 per cent?

Senator Murray: I am also telling you that the interest rate on a one-year conventional mortgage at most chartered banks is 8.25 per cent, well below the peak of over 14 per cent a couple of years ago. All these trends are encouraging trends. The honourable senator knows that.

As for the dollar which he is constantly complaining about, it is now trading at about 83 cents American. It had peaked at more than 89 cents American back in early November. So far in 1992 it has fallen almost 3.5 cents U.S. That is the Canadian dollar.

The honourable senator asked for some indication of when all this will pay off in recovery. I have told him. I have put on the record—and I suggest he reread it—some of the indicators in housing and retail sales and GDP growth, and all the rest of it, that are incontrovertible evidence of a growing economy.

Senator Austin: It is the wrong objective. It is a Tory objective.

UNEMPLOYMENT, BANKRUPTCIES AND WELFARE—REQUEST FOR ECONOMIC INDICATORS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the leader has just said that he is putting some facts, as he calls them, on the record. We have seen that he has at his disposal—I can see it from here—a large binder full of obviously good news.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Perrault: The Spin Doctor Gazette.

Senator Frith: I think probably, in fairness, it must be difficult for the Leader of the Government and the supporters of the government to reconcile all this terrific news, and the figures that support this terrific news, with figures that indicate that, unfortunately for them, the people do not perceive the situation as being as happy as the government portrays it. In all these figures the leader has at his disposal, there are some, I assume, about which he may not be telling us.

I would ask that he obtain from his large ring binder of good news there the figures relating to other economic indicators that have a more personal impact on the people of Canada than some of these OECD figures on, for example, the business confidence index.

I therefore ask him the following questions: Will the Leader of the Government include in his report for the record some other economic indicators, for example, unemployment and bankruptcies? Will he explain to us how the index of business confidence is arrived at? Will he also tell us whether he has any reports, other than the one he has given us, from other economic study groups that deal with the same economic indicators with which he has dealt—unemployment, bankruptcies, welfare rolls —and other indicators that are more directly and more personally experienced by the people than those indicators?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as the honourable senator knows, the unemployment rate was at approximately 11 per cent in the month of April. That is, as we have said, far too high and we do need continued, prolonged, sustained and non-inflationary economic growth in order to bring it down.

I must contrast this with the "tax, tax, tax, spend, spend, spend, inflate, inflate, inflate", policies of our predecessors which brought—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Molgat: You talk about "tax, tax, tax". Tell us about the GST.

Senator Perrault: There have been 35 tax increases since you became the government in 1984. You are trying to sanitize the facts and to "Segal-ize" this whole country.

Senator Frith: That one broke up even your supporters.

Senator Molgat: What a phoney!

Senator Frith: "No-tax Murray". That is why he was so against the GST, because he does not believe in increased taxes.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has mentioned the unemployment rate. I have told him it is 11 per cent now. The rate of inflation, under our predecessors, was 12.8 per cent in 1982.

Senator Perrault: What about the unemployment in Sir John A. Macdonald's day? Do you go back that far?

Senator Murray: I want to reply to the question that the Leader of the Opposition has asked.

Senator Frith: I did not ask about your predecessors. I asked about you, now.

Senator Murray: I told you what the unemployment rate is. It is 11 per cent. I told you it is still too high and that it will take prolonged and sustained non-inflationary economic growth in order to bring it down permanently.

The honourable senator also asked about bankruptcies.

Senator Perrault: That was Mackenzie King's fault, I suppose.

Senator Murray: It just happens that I have those figures in front of me. They were down 3 per cent in April, year over year.

Senator Perrault: That is still an utter disaster.

Senator Frith: Down 3 per cent, from what to what?

Senator Murray: From the previous April to this month. The honourable senator is asking for some statistical information and I will try to obtain it for him.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUTH—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, the problem of unemployment among young people remains a crisis in the country. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate, rather than addressing the Senate, should talk to the young people who are sitting up in the gallery and tell them how they are to get a job this summer.

We found out this week that the minister responsible for the UI retraining program has advised the country that that program is bankrupt; that there is no more money. We are less than halfway through the year and already there is no more money in that fund which was to provide "training, training, training" for young people and people on unemployment insurance.

We also understand that there are over 300,000 people currently seeking retraining in order to get a job. Yet the government has no answer to that. What does the government intend to do now, this summer, to alleviate youth unemployment?

In Toronto, based on the numbers I have seen, it is expected that at least 20 per cent of young people over all will be unemployed, and in sectors of the visible communities over 30 per cent will be unemployed.

What specific plans has the government to allow the young people of this country to go to work this summer? Don't tell us; tell them.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is rather deplorable to see the honourable senator playing to the galleries so shamelessly.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, Oh!

Senator Murray: However, with regard to the training money, the $3.4 billion available to Canadians for skills training under the Unemployment Insurance Program and the Canadians Jobs Strategy has not all been spent. The government will be able to provide training to Canadians throughout the year under the Developmental Uses Budget of UI for 1992. This, of course, was the program that honourable senators opposed and fought against, tooth and nail.

Senator Frith: Yes, and it turned out to be the very phoney thing we said it was. You are out of funds already and you did not do the training.

Senator Murray: The use of unemployment insurance funds for developmental uses training was fought bitterly by our friends opposite when the bill was before the Senate.

Senator Frith: We opposed it because it was a scam, and it has turned out to be a scam, but you have no money left in the fund.

Senator Murray: What I am about to tell the honourable senator may disappoint him. Under the Developmental Uses Budget of UI for 1992, $1.8 billion has been allocated for training and adjustment. This represents a 260 per cent increase in funding from the $500 million allocated in 1990.

I may also tell the honourable senator, since he is asking, that this Developmental Uses Expenditure Plan—

Senator Perrault: Sanitize and Segal-ize.

Senator Murray: The Developmental Uses Expenditure Plan, which was accepted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, represents the consensus of the Canadian Labour Force Development Board, a private sector body with representatives from business, labour, the education training sector and social action groups.

Senator Grafstein: Since the Leader of the Government in the Senate is able to predict growth next year, can he predict what the rate of unemployment will be for youth this summer? What is the government's prediction on the rate of youth unemployment this summer?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not have that statistical information.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Murray: I answered that question the other day. I told the honourable senator about the programs that the government has in place and has had in place for some time, first, to try to encourage government departments and agencies to provide employment for students and young people during the summer months and, second, to encourage the private sector to do the same thing.

I also told the honourable senator, as he would know if he had been listening or if he would take the trouble to reread our exchange in Hansard, that we were giving very careful attention to ways in which we might responsibly improve on those programs in order to alleviate this problem this summer. I told him that we share his concern in that matter.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: This carnival from the other side that we have witnessed today reminds me of a statement made by a past Conservative Prime Minister. He said that all the rumours about unemployment in Canada were being circulated by a bunch of people out of work. That is the appalling style of the Conservative Party. The Titanic did not run into an iceberg at all, it was just stopping for ice.

You are living in a Never-Never Land of incredible dimensions.

● (1440)

Senator Doody: Remember now, there is a 15-minute limitation.

Senator Perrault: The object seems to be to sanitize and Segal-ize the record with the full knowledge that, unless something happens very quickly, you will be swept out of power.

The pamphlet that you circulated this week to every home in Canada bears one statement that almost invites action on your part. What does the statement say? It says, "This is a government that listens to the opinions of the people." Well, honourable senators, most Canadians say, "Please quit and resign." Will you do that?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as I pointed out some weeks ago, the government has been gaining ground monthly in the Gallup polls. At the present rate, if the increase continues, we will be at over 40 per cent by Christmas.

Senator Olson: Even your arithmetic is faulty!

Senator Thériault: You have gained zero per cent, according to Gallup, in the last three months.

YUGOSLAVIA

POSSIBILITY OF MILITARY INTERVENTION BY UN TROOPS IN BOSNIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, Canada has over 1,000 troops stationed in what was formerly known as Yugoslavia. Numerous cease-fires have been broken in the past several weeks, cease-fires that lasted a couple of hours, only to have hostilities break out again.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that other actions may have to be taken, and some people have interpreted that remark as perhaps including military action. Could the honourable minister please elaborate?

Senator Barootes: A very sensible question from the Opposition for a change!

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): The Secretary General of the United Nations has alluded to the difficulty of distinguishing who has effective control over the Serbian militia in Bosnia. We believe, nevertheless, that the Yugoslav leadership has not yet done enough to exercise control over those elements. That is why sanctions are in place against Yugoslavia.

As the honourable senator knows, Canada, through the Prime Minister, was among the first to advocate this concerted international action against the regime in Belgrade.

While we cannot exclude any option to bring an end to the bloodshed in Bosnia, there are no plans for a military intervention against the regime in place in Belgrade. However, if the strong message sent to Mr. Milosevic and his associates by the world community in imposing sanctions against Yugoslavia is not understood, then other measures will have to be taken. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is currently reviewing these options with her counterparts in NATO.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESPONSIBILITY FOR SOCIAL ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS IN URBAN CENTRES — GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question to the minister relates to the position of the government with respect to its responsibilities to aboriginal people living on reserves. It is my understanding that, over the years, there was a clear-cut responsibility of the federal government for Indian people. I am speaking now of status Indians who live on reserves. However, given the situation that exists in Canada, many of these people are moving off the reserves and into urban centres. The two urban centres in Canada that are most affected by this migration are Regina and Winnipeg.

As of April 1, 1992, the federal government decided it would no longer cover social assistance costs for these people who have moved into other regions. This is causing an enormous problem for a number of municipalities that now find themselves burdened with this extra cost. They are, in turn, attempting to pass on the burden to the provincial governments. However, over the years, this has been a clear-cut federal responsibility.

Can the minister tell us whether this is a permanent change in policy and, if so, why this change has occurred. Why is the federal government not living up to its original treaty obligations to these aboriginal people?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the constitutional obligation of the federal government is, as I recall, to Indians and lands reserved for Indians. The matter of services for Indians living off the reserve has been the subject of much discussion between the federal government and the provinces over the years.

In the particular case alluded to by my honourable friend, this is a long story to which I assure him there are two sides.

The federal government, while insisting that the provinces bear the responsibility for certain services to off-reserve Indians, has also relieved the provinces of certain other costs that they were incurring relating to natives.

That is the statement that I will make for today. I can and will bring in a more detailed report within a couple of days, but I assure the honourable senator that for some time, this situation has been the subject of very intense discussion and negotiation between the federal government and the provinces concerned. There is quite a background to the situation, and I will place it on the record shortly.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for his agreement to bring the full details on this matter into the Chamber, because there is no question that this is a very complex matter. However, it has an impact on two provinces in particular; the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. That is where the bulk of the problem exists. The situation does not seem to create a problem at all in most other provinces. Hence, unless the federal government honours its responsibilities, it is off-loading on two have-not provinces costs that they are least able to bear.

Senator Murray: I want to make it clear to the honourable senator, and I believe the facts will bear me out when I bring in the documentation, that we have relieved those provinces and other provinces of a number of costs that they were incurring with regard to natives. In return for that, we thought it was proper and fair that they do their part.

Honourable senators, I will bring in the documentation that I have referred to within a couple of days. I assure the honourable senator that in no way are we in breach of any of our constitutional obligations to the Indian people.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked on May 6th by Senator Molgat regarding the Refugee Board; one on May 21st by Senator Austin regarding the KAON project; and one on June 2nd by Senator Frith regarding the Unemployment Insurance Program.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if my colleague would mind reading the question regarding the Refugee Board?

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE BOARD—SUSPENSION OF OFFICERS—REQUEST FOR UPDATE

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The appointment of a member of the Immigration and Refugee Board (IRB) is similar to a judicial appointment. To safeguard the independence of these decision makers, they cannot be dismissed at the simple discretion of the Governor-in-Council. Failing resignation, these individuals can only be removed pursuant to a judicial inquiry or court proceeding. Reaching an agreement with such an appointee in return for the person's resignation is a fair and reasonable way of resolving such situations. The terms of the settlement are protected under the Privacy Act.

One of the IRB members alluded to in Senator Molgat's question is no longer receiving regular remuneration.

The government has studied the facts surrounding this situation and will continue to proceed in a manner that best protects the interests of the IRB and Canada's reputation as a world leader in refugee affairs.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

KAON PROJECT—FOREIGN FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Jack Austin on May 21, 1992)

The federal government announced its offer of $236 million (one-third of the total construction cost) to British-Columbia towards the construction of the KAON Factory on September 19, 1991.

In addition, the federal government has offered to fund over one-third of the total operating costs for the first ten years of the project. Therefore, in total, the federal commitment is over $600 million over ten years. We now await B.C. and international governments to come forward with their shares. Specifically, B.C. has yet to indicate how much of the operating costs they are prepared to support. Their initial response, contrary to our agreement with the previous B.C. government, was to refuse to contribute to operating costs. On May 28, 1992, British Columbia indicated that it would contribute a portion of the hydro costs.

On April 14, 1992, Science Minister, William Winegard, met with B.C. Minister responsible for KAON, Glen Clark to reaffirm the federal offer. He also encouraged the provincial government to match the federal offer to pay one-third of ongoing operating costs.

Foreign nations (whose scientists will comprise two-thirds of potential KAON users) are being added to help fund the construction costs of the facility. Additionally the federal government would be pleased to accept any contribution that foreign governments might wish to make to the ongoing experimental program at KAON.

Minister Winegard approached the international science ministers at a meeting held in England on the weekend of May 22-24. He received a commitment from the science ministers present that they, or their delegate, would be willing to meet with B.C. Finance Minister Glen Clark, or his representative, at a mutually convenient time within the next four to five weeks to discuss their involvement in KAON.

Minister Winegard said that he, himself, schedule permitting, and federal government officials would be pleased to accompany Mr. Clark on his visits and that, in any case, Mr. Clark would be accompanied by the Government of Canada's science and technology counsellors from our embassies abroad.

To ensure the success of that meeting, the international science ministers were contacted in advance through the respective Canadian diplomatic missions. On May 11, telexes were sent to the Canadian Government missions abroad. They included a copy of a draft letter to be sent to the foreign ministers by Minister Winegard and Minister Clark. The draft letters were circulated to federal officials and were sent to Minister Clark on May 1st. There was no response from the provincial government until May 12th in the form of a facsimile sent from Mr. Eric Denhoff, the province's negotiator.

Minister Clark criticized the wording of the telexes, but the wording simply states the obvious. The federal government is a supporter of KAON and a partner. It did not propose KAON. The provincial government requested, in the Summer of 1990, that the federal government become a partner. The federal government accepted in September 1991. The letters to the foreign science ministers will be finalized shortly.

With respect to the issue of a negotiator, the federal government has authorized Minister Winegard to pursue discussions with both the British Columbia and foreign governments.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

DEPLETION OF FUNDS FOR CURRENT YEAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Royce Frith on June 2, 1992)

The $3.4 billion available to Canadians for skills 1training under Unemployment Insurance (UI) and Canadian Job Strategy (CJS) has not been all spent. The government will be able to provide training to Canadians throughout the year.

Under the developmental uses budget of UI for 1992, $1.8 billion has been allocated for training and adjustment. This represents a 260 per cent increase in funding from the $500 million allocated in 1990.

The 1992 Developmental Uses Expenditure Plan, which was accepted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, represents the consensus of the Canadian Labour Force Development Board, a private-sector body with representatives from business, labour, the education/training sector and social action groups.

The government places a high priority on job training and adjustment to reintegrate the unemployed into the workplace.

COMMUNICATIONS

ACCESS TO READING MATERIALS—EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, might I ask,—because I did not hear—whether a delayed answer to my question on the Copyright Act is among those that the honourable senator has presented today?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a note on the Copyright Act for the honourable senator. The Honourable Senator Marsden and myself had an exchange on March 25th. She expressed some dissatisfaction with the reply that I gave her on that occasion. Let me try again.

The new book publishing initiative announced by the Minister of Communications will not limit the access Canadians have to books. In fact, the $140 million in support recently announced for the publishing industry will help to ensure that more Canadian titles are available.

With respect to foreign titles, libraries and bookstores will continue to be able to acquire the books they need. However, they will have to abide by any exclusive distribution agreements which may be in place. Where such an agreement exists, they will not be able to buy directly from a foreign wholesaler.

This measure will not force anyone to sign exclusive distribution contracts, nor will it create new distribution rights. Simply where such agreements exist, stronger protection will be given to the contract holder in the Canadian market.

The amendments to the Copyright Act will be subject to the parliamentary process and will not be proclaimed until an agreement is reached between publishers, distributors and their clients as to pricing and service arrangements. If distributors do not live up to their responsibilities under this agreement, then their clients will be free to buy from other sources.

Individuals and public institutions—for example, government departments both federal and provincial, libraries and educational institutions—will be allowed an exception to import a single copy of a book.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have an order of the house to interrupt the proceedings, but, if there is leave, Senator Marsden may continue her supplementary questions.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Marsden: I wish to ask a quick question of the Leader of the Government. I thank him very much for getting me that response, which was the response I had sought the first time around.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us the relationship between such a policy—to which I do not particularly object—and any notions of freer trade? It does not really impede an individual or an institution from buying a book from a source that may be faster and less expensive. I simply find a contradiction in the position that the government has taken on this. Could the leader explain this?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, not surprisingly, Senator Marsden seems to be a free trader in the Wilfrid Laurier tradition. However, she is getting on a slippery slope here.

The suggestion that there is a contradiction between our free trade policy and the policy I just announced about Canadian books would have argued for including Canadian culture generally in the free trade agreement. It would have argued against exclusions such as culture, which we insisted on in our negotiations on the free trade agreement.

Senator Marsden: The leader goes too far afield and fails to answer the question. Perhaps, if I return to this subject and ask the question in more precise terms, I will, once again, receive an answer to what is asked.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 67(3), I must interrupt the proceedings so that the Senate may proceed to the deferred division on the amendments to Bill C-53. The bells will ring for 15 minutes.

The Senate adjourned to the call of the bell.

The Sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Let the doors to the chamber be locked.

SPECIAL ECONOMIC MEASURES BILL

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelleher, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, for the third reading of Bill C-53, An Act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures.

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, that Bill C-53 be not now read a third time but that it be amended in clause 7,

(a) on page 5, by striking out lines 41 and 42 and substituting the following:

"(a) five sitting days of that House after the order or regulation is made, if the order or regulation is made to implement a decision, regulation or recommendation of an international organization calling on its members to take economic measures against a foreign state, hereinafter in this section called an "economic-measures order"; or

(b) two sitting days of that House after the order or regulation is made, if the order or regulation is made in circumstances where a grave breach of international peace and security may result or has resulted in a serious international crisis, hereinafter in this section called an "international-crisis order";

(b) on page 6,

(i) by striking out lines 14 and 15 and substituting the following:

"(a) not later than the third sitting day of that House following the filing of the motion, in the case of an international-crisis order, or

"(b) not later than the sixth sitting day of that House following the filing of the motion, in the case of an economic-measures order,";

(ii) by striking out lines 22 to 24, inclusive, and substituting the following:

"section (3) shall be debated without interruption for not more than

"(a) three hours, in the case of an international-crisis order, or

(b) six hours, in the case of an economic-measures order,

or such longer period as that House may, with the";

(iii) by striking out line 41 and substituting the following:

"request shall, in the case of an economic-measures order, take up and consider the motion"

(iv) by striking out line 46 and substituting the following:

"that six hours, in the case of an international-crisis order, or three hours, in the case of an economic-measures order, or such longer period as";

(c) on page 7, by adding immediately after line 4 the following:

"(6.1) In the case of an international-crisis order, the House to whom the message has been addressed pursuant to subsection (5) shall, within the first four days after the message has been sent, take up and consider, in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection (6), the motion that is the subject of the message."

On page 5, by adding immediately after line 42 the following:

"(1.1) If a House of Parliament is not sitting when an international-crisis order has been made under section 4, the Speaker of that House shall, within three days after the making of the order, forthwith recall the House."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Kelleher, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, that Bill C-53 be read the third time.

In amendment, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, that Bill C-53 be not now read a third time but that it be amended in clause 7,

(a) on page 5,—

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): May we dispense? Honourable senators, in asking for leave to dispense, let me explain that the import of all these amendments is simply a larger role for Parliament in the case of unilateral action for sanctions under this bill. All of them deal with that subject. The last one deals with the question of recall, but it is simply an example of a larger role for Parliament.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that we dispense with the reading of the motion in amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion in amendment of Senator Frith negatived on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONORABLE SENATORS

Adams
Bosa
Cools
Corbin
Frith
Gigantès
Grafstein
Graham
Hastings
Hays
Hébert
Kirby
LeBlanc (Beauséjour)
Leblanc (Saurel)
Lefebvre
Marchand
Marsden
Molgat
Neiman
Olson
Perrault
Petten
Riel
Robichaud
Stanbury
Stewart
Stollery
Thériault
Watt—29.

NAYS

THE HONORABLE SENATORS

Atkins
Balfour
Barootes
Beaudoin
Beaulieu
Bélisle
Berntson
Bolduc
Buchanan
Carney
Chaput-Rolland
Cochrane
Cogger
Comeau
DeWare
Di Nino
Doody
Doyle
Forrestall
Grimard
Kelly
Keon
Kinsella
Lynch-Staunton
Macdonald (Cape Breton)
MacDonald (Halifax)
Macquarrie
Marshall
Meighen
Murray
Nurgitz
Oliver
Poitras
Robertson
Ross
Rossiter
Simard
Spivak
Sylvain
Teed
Tremblay
Twinn—42.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONORABLE SENATORS

Nil

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Kelleher P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, that this bill be read the third time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division, in reverse.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is asking that the same vote as applied in the case of the amendments might apply to the third reading, with the yeas and nays in reverse.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Bill read third time and passed, on division.

[Translation]

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Senator Simard for second reading of Bill S-11, an Act to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to begin by thanking Senator Simard for providing me with an information package on this bill. It was very useful and I appreciated receiving it.

Honourable senators, Bill S-11, introduced in the Senate on May 22, 1992, is a bill to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act, which received Royal Assent on March 19, 1992. That act was known as Bill C-15 when it was before us.

As we all recall, an amendment was moved in the Senate to section 4 of Bill C-15 so that the entire Official Languages Act would apply where an airport had been transferred to a local airport authority. When this amendment was defeated, Senator Corbin on March 17, 1992 moved an amendment that would have added Parts 5, 6 and 7 of the Official Languages Act to section 4 of Bill C-15. In defence of his amendment, he cited the testimony that Mr. Goldbloom gave the Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on November 21, 1991; Mr. Goldbloom recommended that Parts 5, 6 and 7 of the Act be added to clause 4 of the bill.

There was also a letter to Minister Corbeil dated February 27 and signed by Peter L. Rainboth on behalf of Mr. Goldbloom. It said:

> As Dr. Goldbloom indicated to you in your recent meeting, he is obviously in favour of the application of Parts 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act to local airport authority leases in prescribed regions.

Notwithstanding these strong appeals from the Commissioner of Official Languages, Senator Corbin's amendment was unfortunately defeated.

For the record, section 4 of Bill C-15 provided that where an airport had been transferred to a local airport authority, Parts 4, 8, 9 and 10 of the Official Languages Act would apply.

Part 4 deals with communication with and service to the public.

Part 8 deals with the responsibilities and duties of Treasury Board in relation to official languages.

Part 9 concerns the role and responsibilities of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

Part 10 deals with court remedies for breaches of the Act.

We wished to add Part 5, which deals with the language of work, Part 6, which deals with the participation in the workplace of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians, and Part 7, which deals with the advancement of English and French in the workplace.

As I mentioned, Senator Corbin's amendment to add these parts of the Official Languages Act to Bill C-15 was defeated by the Conservative majority in this Chamber. We were, however, asked to take comfort in the undertaking of the Minister of Transport, Jean Corbeil, that all leases concluded with local airport authorities for the transfer of an airport would include a clause providing for the application of Parts 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act. We did in fact take some comfort in this undertaking, but continued to argue that a legislative guarantee was preferable to the personal assurance of a minister of the Crown, no matter how well intentioned.

So that was how matters stood in March of this year, with the passage of Bill C-15. With the introduction of Bill S-11 last week, the government, after some reflection, has now come around to our point of view. It is of course to be commended.

Senator Simard ended his statement yesterday with some compliments for the effort made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which I support, and I must also now add the compliments of our side for Senator Simard, who has always been an effective supporter of the Official Languages Act. If I am not mistaken, he even voted for the amendment. He thus gave a striking demonstration that he is truly a man of principle, especially as regards this principle which he has supported almost all his life, or at least all his political life. He may have been an essential player and it may be due to him that the government presented this bill that achieves the goal sought by Senator Simard.

The main purpose of Bill S-11 is to exempt local airport authorities from federal income tax. The main purpose is not the one that interests Senator Simard and many other senators, including me. This was a recommendation of the Minister of Finance and the agreements entered into between the federal government and local airport authorities were negotiated with the understanding that the authorities would not be subject to federal income tax. Unfortunately, the income tax provisions were not finalized in time for inclusion in Bill C-15 when it was introduced in the House of Commons on May 29, 1991. By the time they were drafted in final form, Bill C-15 was in a committee of the House of Commons and an amendment to add new provisions concerning income tax would clearly have been out of order as going beyond the scope of the bill.

This is a technical problem, certainly, from a parliamentary point of view. The government has therefore known for some time that it would have to bring forward legislation to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act. In light of the debate in the Senate on the application of the Official Languages Act, it must have felt that since legislation would have to be introduced to exempt local airport authorities from income tax, this would be a good time to legislate the undertakings given by Minister Corbeil concerning the application of the Official Languages Act to local airport authorities.

Clause 2 of Bill S-11 repeals subsection 4(1) of the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act. This is the subsection which deals with the application of the Official Languages Act.

Subsection 4(1) now reads as follows:

> Where the Minister has sold, leased or otherwise transferred an airport to a designated airport authority, on and after the transfer date Parts 4, 8, 9 and 10 of the Official Languages Act apply—

This subsection is being repealed and will be replaced by a new subsection 4(1) and byn subsection 4(1.1). It is being replaced by two clauses.

The first clause, 4(1), provides as follows:

> Where the Minister has leased an airport to a designated airport authority, on and after the transfer date Parts 4, 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of the Official Languages Act apply.

The second clause, 4(1.1), provides as follows:

> Where the Minister has sold or otherwise transferred an airport to a designated airport authority, on and after the transfer date Parts 4, 8, 9 and 10 of the Official Languages Act apply—

So we have two clauses that distinguish between leasing an airport and selling an airport. Where the minister has leased an airport to a designated authority, Parts 5 and 6 in addition to Parts 4, 8, 9 and 10 of the Official Languages Act are now to apply. However, when an airport is sold or otherwise transferred, only Parts 4, 8, 9 and 10 apply. Parts 5 and 6 are not being added. What will be the practical effect of this distinction?

[English]

It is my understanding that all transfers to local airport authorities have been and will be, for the time being, in the form of long-term leases. The government apparently has no intention of selling any airports to local authorities for at least five and probably ten years. It would be irresponsible to immediately sell the Toronto or Montreal airports, for example, to a local airport authority without having any idea whether the authority would be able to run the airport effectively over the long term. Furthermore, it is at the present time very difficult for local airport authorities to obtain the financing necessary to buy the airport outright.

In any event, sale to local airport authorities is only something that will arise, as I say, probably five, ten or perhaps fifteen years in the future when there has been an opportunity to evaluate the success of the transfer by lease. If the lease has been successful, if the local airport authority has managed the airport well, and if financing can be arranged, at that time the government would consider selling the airport to the local airport authority. I believe that accurately states the government's policy on this question.

[Senator Frith.]

The result is that though Parts 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act will apply only to leases of airports, in point of fact leases are the only transactions that are envisaged for the next five to fifteen years. One could argue that there is ample time to amend this act again if it is thought necessary to bring airports that are sold, as distinguished from those that are leased, within the ambit of Parts 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act.

Even then, it seems to me there ought to be some concerns about applying Parts 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act to enterprises that have been sold to the private sector.

When I was counsel to the Commissioner of Official Languages, part of my job was to advise him as to how the application of the act could be extended to various federal bodies because the language of the act talks about federal institutions and does not define them in any verbatim way. The extension of the jurisdiction of the commissioner and the application of the act was accomplished by the fact that the act, happily, was not too specific. It just talked about federal institutions and that, of course, leaves some room for interpretation.

Could one argue that an airport sold—not leased but sold—was still a federal institution and still subject to the act? I think it might be stretching it a bit. Then of course there would also be the possibility of arguing that it would be a violation of the constitution to extend jurisdiction to private enterprises. I think the real problem would be simply a problem of the interpretation of the act.

Where an airport is leased, the government retains a legal interest in the facility, and I would have no trouble advising that there was sufficient interest to have the act continue to apply. However, where it is sold, it becomes private property, pure and simple. The application of the Official Languages Act, as I say, becomes more problematical in such circumstances. However, that is conjecture at this point, because if I properly understand the government's policy, although the act deals with sale, the government has no intention of actually selling any airports to private enterprise at this time and the effective application of the act will be to long-term leases.

Senator Murray: Whether an airport was sold or leased, it would still be under our jurisdiction, would it not?

Senator Frith: That is the question. It is still under your jurisdiction, but can you make the Official Languages Act apply? What I would do in such a circumstance is use the very fact raised by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and see that its application formed part of the contract. At the sale, it could be stipulated as one of the conditions of the contract that they would continue to apply the Official Languages Act.

● (1530)

I make this distinction because the act makes the distinction. I think that for our purposes, since we are concentrating on this question of the Official Languages Act, there is no question it can apply where the government retains a legal interest.

The fact remains that since no airport will be sold for 5 to 15 years, Parts 5 and 6 of the Official Languages Act will apply in the near term.

Although we support this legislation and the decision to transform Minister Corbeil's personal undertaking into a legislative guarantee, I have some reservations about process as it relates to the somewhat convoluted route that the government chose to travel. This brings me to what many of my colleagues on both sides of the house here know is a bit of a pet peeve of mine.

I cannot help wondering whether, when the Senate was debating Bill C-15, Minister Corbeil intended all along to bring forward this amendment when the income tax provisions were put into legislative form. I have already explained why he had difficulty with the income tax provisions because of the timing.

However, honourable senators, if the minister was of such a mind he could not, of course, have said so at the time, otherwise he would have been asking the Senate to pass legislation he knew to be flawed. Why not make these changes respecting the application of the Official Languages Act during the six or seven months that we had Bill C-15 before us? The answer, I believe – and I hope I am wrong, but I do not think I am—can be found in Senator Murray's remarks of last Monday when he was speaking to our proposed amendments to Bill C-53.

In responding to the amendments that we proposed to Bill C-53, on which a few moments ago we voted, he said, as reported at page 1575 of the Debates of the Senate:

> Let me say at once that, in achieving an objective on which we may all agree in principle, I will always seek a method other than amending a bill, even in a bi-partisan fashion, and sending it back to the House of Commons.

I emphasize the word "always". For Senator Murray this, apparently, is a guiding principle, an article of faith—never send anything to the House of Commons, other than messages that we have done our duty like good boys and girls; that we have brought down the rubber-stamp and passed their legislation without amendment and now await their presence for Royal Assent.

Senator Murray: I was a great supporter of pre-study in opposition, and I am a great supporter of pre-study in government.

Senator Frith: I will let the readers of Hansard judge the relevancy of that intervention.

This is the only message Senator Murray can conceive of sending to his masters. The merit of the legislation or the proposed amendments will always take a back seat to the rubber-stamp. Bill C-53 was a perfect example.

Senator Simard: You were doing all right up until now.

Senator Frith: I recognized that the following comments would be less genially received than the ones foregoing.

We argued on Bill C-53 that where the government took a decision to impose sanctions on another nation, in a time of "serious international crisis", Parliament should be recalled—Parliament should have a role. The government said no.

I remind honourable senators that on July 3, 1987, the government asked Speaker Fraser to recall the House of Commons "because of the Senate's intent to delay passage of Bills C-22, C-18 and C-19". That is from a press release from the office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Bill C-22 dealt with pharmaceuticals. Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 dealt with national transportation. Though Speaker Fraser turned down this request in a letter dated July 4, 1987, the fact remains that the government believed an emergency existed because, by the end of June, the Senate had not passed three bills it had received earlier that month and in May. It now argues, in effect, that less than immediate passage by the Senate of legislation dealing with patent protection for pharmaceuticals was more of an emergency than "a grave breach of international peace and security" which "has resulted or is likely to result in a serious international crisis".

Where international drug companies have to wait a little longer before being able to charge higher prices for their products, we have an emergency. The House of Commons must be recalled. But where there is a "serious international crisis", where there has been a "grave breach" of the peace and security of the entire world, the government says, "No problem. That is not something that need concern the Parliament of Canada. It does not need to be recalled in such a case." If that is not hypocrisy, it is an excellent imitation thereof.

Honourable senators, we support Bill S-11. We will vote in favour of sending it to committee. However, what we are legislating today could have been legislated months ago, at least in so far as the official languages provisions are concerned. That we are doing so only now speaks volumes of how Senator Murray and his cabinet colleagues think of the Senate and the senators themselves, especially when it comes to sending amendments to the House of Commons.

That is not the end of a quotation but the end of my pet peeve intervention. It is also the end of my intervention on the bill. I repeat, we will support Bill S-11. We welcome it, although its objects might well have been achieved in a more efficient and, I think, dignified way.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to start by thanking Senator Frith for his usual clear and incisive presentation and his brief history of the airport transfer bill.

The purpose of Bill S-11, An Act to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act, is first of all, to deal with a number of serious shortcomings with respect to official languages, the result of poor drafting of a previous bill on airport transfers. I have am referring to Bill C-15.

Bill S-11 before us today would delete paragraph 4(2) in Bill C-15, a provision the former Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. d'Iberville Fortier, qualified as "shocking" but which the government majority adopted, over our objections, on March 19 this year.

The present Commissioner, Dr. Victor Goldbloom, said before the committee that was examining Bill C-15 that all provisions of our official languages legislation should apply to Bill C-15.

Paragraph 4(2) would inevitably have created considerable confusion for those who must comply with the the Official Languages Act, and probably for the courts, which would be asked to rule on any difference of opinion or objections concerning its application. With a government that is prepared to sacrifice the vested rights of language minorities, why should the private sector act any differently? That is what may happen if we allow any erosion of the Official Languages Act.

Under Bill C-15, which has now become law, concession holders in transferred airports are not obliged to offer their services in both languages, which goes against the provisions of the official languages legislation and regulations. They will be under no obligation to do so, unless Parliament adopts Bill S-11.

At long last, the government has started to see the light and realize that our points are valid. However, it was not easy to make them see reason! It took some time: one year—twelve months exactly—and this was just the Senate! Our colleagues opposite stubbornly refused to use their common sense. They would not listen or try to understand, and on top of that, some government critics even tried to wear us down with counter-arguments that made no sense whatsoever.

The second change proposed in Bill S-11 is the addition of parts V and VI of the Official Languages Act which concern, respectively, the language of work and guarantees for equitable participation by members of both language groups in Canada. As Senator Frith mentioned, I moved an amendment to do just that when Bill C-15 was before the Senate, but the amendment was defeated by the government majority. You will understand how surprised I was Monday night to see Senator Simard, after his speech on Bill S-11, being applauded by his own colleagues who had refused to support him during the debate and vote on C-15!

In fact, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Senator Simard. He was one of the few people, in fact there were two, who rose to support my amendment. They knew what they were doing. It was a matter of principle. And then Monday night, I saw an astonishing change of heart in all those who supported Bill C-15 when they applauded an excellent presentation by Senator Simard. I have seen a number of about-faces during my parliamentary career, but this was almost like people tucking in to a meal they wouldn't have touched three months ago.

I would like to point out that the addition concerning parts V and VI of the Official Languages Act applies only to the leases mentioned in section 4(1), since sub-paragraph 4(1.1), which deals with other types of transfers, like a sale, for instance, does not include parts V and VI. As a result, the application of the Official Languages Act will be restricted in the case of transfers other than leases. Personally, I think that is too bad. Why not maintain vested linguistic rights? That is a question for the government to answer. Senator Frith told us earlier that he thought he knew the answer. Of course, he has the advantage of legal training and is perhaps quicker than I am to perceive certain matters.

[Senator Corbin.]

But Part VII of the Official Languages Act is not mentioned in that bill. That is the part that commits government to promote both official languages. Why was Part VII not retained and included in the bill now before us? I do not know.

Nevertheless, I will not praise our friends opposite to the skies for this initiative. I am happy they took it and I am very pleased with it but I have only one thing to say: it was high time they acknowledged their mistakes—thank goodness they did in the end! — and corrected almost all the flaws of Bill C-15 relating to official languages.

The fact remains that it would have been so much easier just to go along with our reasoning and to accept the amendment proposals we have been making since last June! All that time has been spent reviewing the Official Languages Act provisions contained in the bill. Had government shown good will from the start . . . because they were aware of this. We had told them. It was not a matter of partisanship, but a matter of abiding by one of the basic laws of this nation . . . not only would we have saved all that time, but government would not have had to return with Bill S-11 to acknowledge that we were right and that Senator Simard, Senator Bélisle and others were right.

Bill S-11 is overwhelming proof that, were it not for the relentless efforts of the Official Languages Act advocates, most of whom are representatives of the two official language minorities of Canada in Parliament, that is to say French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec on the one hand and English-speaking Canadians in Quebec on the other hand, this Act would be trampled on by this government and undermined little by little.

This is not the first bill introduced during this Parliament that limits, restricts and undermines the scope of the administration of the Official Languages Act.

Our friends from across the floor seem to forget that the Official Languages Act gained almost constitutional status. Therefore, we could go so far as to say, without being too far off, that on a protocol level, it comes in second place after the Constitution, in terms of the elements that could help keep this country together.

So why keep trying to make privative clauses and provisions that have a restrictive interpretation when it comes to the implementation of the Official Languages Act? Let us stop ridiculing this piece of legislation, let us put a stop to the attempts made at diluting it, and let us respect the spirit of its provisions, which is a spirit of generosity in a legal framework.

Thank you honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must inform the Senate that if honourable senator Simard takes the floor now, his speech will end the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Hon. Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I want to thank my colleagues, senators Frith and Corbin, for their comments.

Senator Frith has shown once again that he is a seasoned parliamentarian who always participates in a debate with his usual clearmindedness and clarity. I want to thank him. In my opinion, he made very good observations on the treatment that will be reserved, in the future, to airports that will be leased, as well as to other airports that the federal government might dispose of.

As my colleague mentioned, based on the comments made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate a few months ago, and given the nature of the operation itself, these possible sales of airports could probably not take place before ten or fifteen years, at which time we will have had a chance to assess the ability of these corporations to manage these airports.

Obviously, I would have like to see Bill S-11 subject to Part VII of the Official Languages Act. I do hope however that the Secretary of State will assume the obligation contained in Part VII, through its various programs and eventually in the context of a new Constitution, recognizing this Canadian duality and the duty of the federal government to promote our official institutions and communities. I am still hopeful that this can be done at that time. In the meantime, we will have to keep an eye on what the Secretary of State does.

Therefore, I want to thank those two senators who, on behalf of their party, have indicated to us that they support Bill S-11.

That being said, I somewhat disagree with Senator Frith's attempt to establish a parallel with Bill C-53 and the commitment given to us a few months ago by Senator Murray regarding Bill C-15. I believe that Senator Murray with the comments he made during the debate on Bill C-53, showed us once again that we must be cautious before making firm commitments. I take comfort in the fact that in the 90 days since Bill C-15 was passed, negotiations with the airport authorities have convinced the latter, in all the so-called officially bilingual regions, to assume the costs and the consequences of Parts V and VI, the scope of which will be definitively preserved in the provisions of Bill S-11.

I see in the tabling of Bill S-11 other evidence that any government, either Liberal, Conservative or otherwise, can improve its bills when enough pressure or monitoring is brought to bear on it. A responsible government can go back and, at the eleventh hour, correct a mistake.

Indeed, even with the delay in legislating to protect rights provided in Parts V and VI of the Official Languages Act, there was no harm done. Those grandfather rights were not trampled on or given up during the 90 days that preceded the tabling in the House of Bill S-11.

Honourable senators, for all those good reasons, I hope that, during the committee study, we can get some more explanations concerning the more technical clauses. If there is a lesson to be learned from the debate on Bill C-15 and from the one that we are currently having, it is that French minorities outside Quebec—Senator Corbin mentioned that—and the English community of Quebec will have to continue to be very vigilant and watch out for any legislation that could or actually does jeopardize their grandfather rights, particularly as they apply to the Official Languages Act.

I will conclude by suggesting or by moving that Bill S-11 be referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Simard, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

[English]

GLOBE '92 CONFERENCE

NOTICE OF INQUIRY—ORDER STANDS

On the notice of inquiry of the Honourable Senator Carney:

> That she will call the attention of the Senate to the Globe '92 Conference held in Vancouver, B.C. from 16th to 20th March, 1992.

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak to this matter today. However, I would ask that my inquiry regarding the Globe '92 Conference be permitted to stay on the Order Paper even though today is the fifteenth sitting day since my initial notice of inquiry of March 24.

I had hoped to table the summation of the conference's activities as part of my inquiry, but I have received only the English version, not the French version, which is not expected until some time next week. I ask your permission to allow this matter to remain on the Order Paper.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Notice of inquiry stands.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

500TH ANNIVERSARY OF DISCOVERY OF AMERICA—INQUIRY BROUGHT FORWARD—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Peter Bosa, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 58(2), rose, pursuant to Notice of Inquiry set down earlier this day for Friday, June 5, 1992:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the 500th Anniversary of the landing of Cristoforo Colombo in the New World.

He said: Honourable senators, there is much controversy surrounding the celebration of the 500th anniversary of the discovery of the New World. I have had some research done on the subject and I would like to share that research with honourable senators.

In the course of my remarks I will review briefly the motivations that prevailed at the time for finding a new route to the Orient as well as the wrongs that have been attributed to Cristoforo Colombo, otherwise known as Christopher Columbus.

The year 1992 marks the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' journey to the new world. Plans are being made in both Europe and the Americas to celebrate this event as a great accomplishment. A few detractors, however, contend that the Columbus legacy has been more of a curse than a blessing. For example, Paul Knox, of the Globe and Mail editorial staff, has argued that only after we have spent the next 100 years righting the wrongs that followed upon the Columbus voyage should we consider any kind of celebration.

• (1600)

The essential question amounts to this: Should the ravages of disease, racial exploitation and environmental destruction that followed Columbus result, on balance, in a negative judgment about the man, his character and his endeavour? Such historical revisionism should be questioned.

Columbus was Italian, born in Genoa in 1451, the son of a weaver. The man remains largely a mystery. No portraits of him done from life exist, and the 40 or so paintings of him done over the centuries after his death bear little resemblance to one another. Some aspects of the Columbus myth are blatantly false—such as the story that Columbus was trying to prove the world was round or that Queen Isabella sold her jewels to pay for his first voyage.

Columbus was not looking for a new world; rather, he sought an ancient one. As Renaissance historian William Henry Hudson explains, the rivalry between medieval Europe and the Ottoman Empire eventually led the Turks to interrupt overland trade. It was this impasse that motivated Columbus to search for another route to the Orient. Hudson's Story of the Renaissance suggests that:

> By blocking up the great highways of communication between Europe and the Orient, the Turks threatened with commercial disaster the Italian cities which had grown rich through their eastern trade. The question of the possibility of finding new routes thus became urgent, and the result was that here and there practical men began seriously to consider the chances of reaching India by striking out to the West.
>
> Convinced that this could be done, the Genoese sailor Christopher Columbus, under the commission from the King and Queen of Spain, in 1492 sailed across the Atlantic and, firmly persuaded that he had attained his object, actually discovered the continent of America.

What about the criticisms? Are they justified? Let us review the charges and the evidence.

A concern often raised is the advisability of using the word "discovery" to characterize the voyages of Columbus. After all, the Americas were peopled by thriving groups and civilizations long before his arrival. Some were highly advanced in technology and social, political and economic organization. The Vikings, of course, had already founded a short-lived settlement in Newfoundland around the year 1000. Writing in Time magazine, Robert Hughes settles this controversy by saying the following:

> . . . The essence of discovery is that the voyage is repeatable. It entails documentation—logs and records. The discoverer is the person who gets from known A to unknown B, returns to A, and goes back to B again. Columbus' claim to be a discoverer is, admittedly, a function of European consciousness . . . But this does not make it unreal.

Columbus actually did more than simply locate a new hemisphere. In the words of historian Daniel Boorstin:

> Even on his first voyage . . . Columbus really made three momentous discoveries. Besides finding land that Europeans had not found before, he discovered both the westward sea passage from Europe to North America and the best eastward passage back.

This accomplishment involved two different routes—a southerly route to the west, and a northerly route to the east, as well as lucky navigation and a good practical knowledge of prevailing winds, which in 1492 amounted to a considerable achievement.

What about the charge of racial exploitation? It certainly is true that the native peoples and black Africans—brought as slaves—were exploited and suffered untold miseries in the Americas. But as the eminent historian Arnold Toynbee has pointed out, this oppression was not perpetrated by Columbus, but by later conquistadors. So why is the memory of Columbus being vilified by association with this these later depredations? In an article in Time, Paul Grey provides this answer:

> For all its intensity, the Columbus controversy has very little to do with 1492, and almost everything to do with (the present). The peoples of the New World, the land that Columbus made inevitable, are engaged in another convulsive attempt to reinvent themselves, to conceive a version of the past that will justify the present and, if possible, shape the future.

The attempt by native Americans to correct the historical record and their current demands for recognition and fair treatment are quite understandable. Many wrongs were committed by others following Columbus' arrival. But, as some academics have pointed out, native Americans exploited their own people long before Columbus. Oxford University historian Felipe Fernandez-Armesto recounts the situation:

> Most Spanish "conquests" in America were skilfully manipulated interventions in internecine wars that were already underway . . . When Spanish conquistadors used the tactics of terror, as some did, the Indians had seen it all before. From the victim's point of view, all massacres are equally horrible. A blood-thirsty neighbour has no moral advantage over an invader from afar.

All atrocities are deplorable, be they European or North American in origin. None of this, however, detracts from Columbus' achievement. Interestingly, in some cases, Columbus was actually seen as a source of hope for the downtrodden. Historian Fernandez-Armesto explains:

> When Columbus found the Arawaks of the Bahamas and Greater Antilles, these vulnerable people were already doomed by the fierce imperialism of the neighbouring Caribs—which was one reason why Columbus was welcomed as a deliverer. "Come and see the men from heaven," the Arawaks chanted.

It is true that the European settlement of the Americas after Columbus brought many infectious diseases, but such tragedy has accompanied most mass migrations throughout human history. For example, both Greek and Roman expansion were eventually stalled by plagues, as were the advances of the Mongol hoards in China and of Genghis Khan in Eurasia. And since the dynamics of such epidemiology were not understood either in ancient times or in the days of Columbus, preventive measures were not possible. In any case, the record does not show that Columbus was the agent of such tragedy in the Americas—his landings were too transitory, scattered and few in number.

Charging Columbus with despoiling the environment is also unfounded. He did not stay on this continent long enough to bring about environmental degradation; that followed later. There are, however, two points to keep in mind. First, historian Fernandez-Armesto reminds us that:

> No human society has ever refrained from exploiting its environment.

Second, how can we condemn Columbus in hindsight for sins he never dreamed of at the time?

It has been said that Aztec, Mayan and Inca practices were often no better than those the Europeans brought with them. But, as happens so often in clashes of societies, the values and culture of the invader eventually prevail. It is this last fact, the eventual dominance of European cultures and populations in the Americas, that seems to be the crux of the campaign against Columbus. Territorial invasions, oppression and subjugation are no longer acceptable in the twentieth century. Understandably, those whose ancestors suffered at the hands of the Europeans are trying to right past wrongs. Their grievances are real; but must such a campaign discredit Columbus personally?

The quincentennial coincides with the search in Canada for constitutional reform. Both events, although admittedly quite different, afford us an opportunity for self-reflection and lead to a re-examination of long-standing native grievances and their place in history. The past, however, cannot be undone, and we should draw strength from our history in order to build a future based on social justice, equality of opportunity and brotherhood. The celebration of Columbus has focused attention on the people whom Columbus encountered, and as such it serves a useful purpose.

• (1600)

To put this all into perspective, Columbus is not personally responsible for wrongs committed on America's aboriginal people since 1492, nor is he responsible, as some have argued, for the emergence of liberty and individual rights in the Americas. As David Bercuson, a Professor of history at the University of Calgary, put it:

> "Columbus' voyage should be commemorated only for what it was: a courageous venture that established the first real link—for better or for worse—between Europe and America."

That is reason enough to honour Columbus.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I may wish to make some comments on Senator Bosa's presentation, but I would prefer to do so after I have had an opportunity to read his remarks in the Debates of the Senate in the next day or so. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Frith: You have 15 sitting days.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Bong!

On motion of Senator Di Nino, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONTENTS

Wednesday, June 3, 1992

PAGE

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

General Election
Number of Days Left in Current Term. Senator Frith 1593

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

Private Bill (S-10)
Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association—Sixteenth Report of Committee Presented. Senator Poitras 1593

Unemployment Insurance Act (C-21)
Report of Special Committee on Bill C-21 Tabled. Senator Hébert 1593

Goods and Services Tax
Presentation of Petitions. Senator Hébert 1593
Senator Frith 1593

The Senate
Research Funds—Study Completed—Notice of Inquiry. Senator Tremblay 1594

Christopher Columbus
500th Anniversary of Discovery of America—Notice of Inquiry—Senator Bosa 1594

QUESTION PERIOD

The Economy
Statement of Minister of Finance to IMF Conference—Government Policy. Senator Olson 1594
Senator Murray 1594
Unemployment, Bankruptcies and Welfare—Request for Economic Indicators. Senator Frith 1596
Senator Murray 1596

Employment
Summer Employment for Youth—Government Response. Senator Grafstein 1597
Senator Murray 1597
Senator Perrault 1598

Yugoslavia
Possibility of Military Intervention by UN Troops in Bosnia—Government Position. Senator Bosa 1598
Senator Murray 1598

PAGE

Indian Affairs
Responsibility for Social Assistance to Indians in Urban Centres—Government Position. Senator Molgat 1598
Senator Murray 1599

Delayed Answers to Oral Questions
Senator Lynch-Staunton 1599
Senator Molgat 1599

Immigration
Refugee Board—Suspension of Officers—Request for Update. Senator Lynch-Staunton 1599

Science and Technology
Kaon Project—Foreign Funding—Government Policy. Question by Senator Austin. Senator Lynch-Staunton (Delayed answer) 1599

Unemployment Insurance Program
Depletion of Funds for Current Year—Government Position. Question by Senator Frith. Senator Lynch-Staunton (Delayed answer) 1600

Communcations
Access to Reading Materials—Effect of Government Policy. Senator Marsden 1600
Senator Murray 1600

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Business of the Senate
Special Economic Measures Bill (C-53)
Third Reading—Motion in Amendment Negatived. Senator Frith 1601
Third Reading—Senator Molgat 1602
Senator Murray 1602

Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act (S-11)
Bill to Amend—Second Reading—Debate Concluded. Senator Frith 1603
Senator Corbin 1605
Senator Simard 1607
Referred to Committee 1607

Globe '92 Conference
Notice of Inquiry—Order Stands. Senator Carney 1607

Christopher Columbus
500th Anniversary of Discovery of America—Inquiry Brought Forward—Debate Adjourned. Senator Bosa 1608
Senator Di Nino 1609

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 4, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NOVA SCOTIA

WESTRAY MINE—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE—DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise for the purpose of indicating to honourable senators that I have tabled with the Clerk today a document pertaining to the federal government's assistance to the Westray mine project.

Additional legal and contractual documents are also being made available through the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. A list of those additional documents, which are quite voluminous and would be available to interested parties at the department, will be tabled today as well.

In addition to the actual documents, perhaps I should table with the Clerk a list of the material being tabled and a list of additional legal documents that will be made available to the public.

I have made this brief statement because several honourable senators have indicated their interest and have asked questions on this matter.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I rise on a Question of Privilege. I listened carefully to the Leader of the Government yesterday, when he gave us his economic outlook, or his forecast for the economy, as based on certain papers in his possession. Among other things, he said that new motor vehicle sales were going up.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Thériault, rule 23(1) states:

> During the time provided for the consideration of the daily Routine of Business and the daily Question Period, it shall not be in order to raise any question of privilege or point of order. Any question of privilege or point of order to be raised in relation to any notice given during this time can only be raised at the time the Order is first called for consideration by the Senate.

Your question of privilege can be entertained later, but we have to go through the Order Paper first. It will be taken into account, but not now.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I must tell you that I am not thoroughly familiar with the new rules that we are abiding by here, but my experience in Parliament has always been that Questions of Privilege are to be brought to the attention of the house at the first possible occasion.

If we are departing from that ancient and proper tradition and now have to wait until the Speaker gives us permission to raise a Question of Privilege, then the rules have gone too far.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Thériault, may I draw to your attention rule 44(7), which reads:

> A Senator having given a notice, in accordance with sections (3) or (4) above, shall be recognized during the time provided for the consideration of "Senators' Statements", for the purpose of giving oral notice of the question of privilege. In doing so, the Senator shall indicate that he or she is prepared to move a motion either calling upon the Senate to take action in relation to the matter complained of or referring the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders.

I am not trying to muzzle you, Senator Thériault; I am just trying to apply the rules here. I do not remember the specific rule, but, if I recall correctly, notice concerning a question of privilege must be given to the Clerk's office three hours before the sitting.

Be that as it may, we can still accommodate your question under rule 23(1), which I quoted previously. We will deal with it later this day.

Senator Thériault: That will be under "Senators' Statements", then.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I know that my colleagues across the way were very concerned, upon noting that the Leader of the Opposition was not here, that they would not be brought up to date on the clock, unless, of course, they are keeping a proper record themselves.

I would not want to disappoint them because my colleague is temporarily absent. I would like to remind them that the clock is indeed still ticking, and if the government of which Senator Murray is a member respects democracy, Canadians will cast their ballots within 170 days. If, however, in the words of Senator Murray, the present government is cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, the day of reckoning remains 556 days away.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT ECONOMIC INDICATORS —REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, a few moments ago when I tried to raise a question of privilege, I was told I was out of order because I had to wait for Senators' Statements. However, the first item on the Order Paper is "Senators' Statements"; Tabling of Documents comes under Routine Proceedings. So the order was reversed and Tabling of Documents came before Senators' Statements. I thought I was raising my question of privilege under Senators' Statements.

However, if I may, I want to repeat that I do not believe the Leader of the Government was intentionally misleading the house. Nevertheless, I think my privileges were abused because, in my humble opinion, the statement he made is not correct. He said:

— new motor vehicle sales are going up—

Today's Globe and Mail, the so-called gospel of the Tory government, has an article on page B3 with the subheadline "Canadian car sales weak". It goes on to say, as a matter of fact, that in the month of May automobile sales of all kinds in Canada have gone down by 15 per cent and that they have gone down by 14 point something per cent since January. Every month since January, in fact, car sales in Canada have gone down.

I hope that the Leader of the Government will look at the matter again and rectify his statement of yesterday so that people can start believing a bit of what he is saying in this house.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is the time reserved for senators' statements and I suppose I can make one in reply to what we have just heard from our friend, Senator Thériault. On what page of Hansard is the statement to which he objects?

Senator Thériault: On page 1595 in the second paragraph.

Senator Murray: I have found it on page 1594.

Let me tell the honourable senator that new motor vehicle sales rose by 2.6 per cent in April.

Senator Thériault: I am sorry. I rise on a point of order. It is not page 1594, it is page 1595, and your statement was that motor vehicle sales have been going up.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I gave the actual statistic on page 1594.

Senator Olson: Senator Murray's Selective Bureau of Statistics.

Senator Thériault: Says who?

Senator Murray:

. . . new motor vehicle sales rose by 2.6 per cent in April.

Senator Thériault: Says who?

Senator Murray: Statistics Canada.

Senator Thériault: What I am referring to in the Globe and Mail is a statement by the Automobile Association of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I think this matter should be addressed during Question Period.

Senator Thériault: No, I am sorry. The statement made yesterday by the Leader of the Government in the Senate was that new motor vehicle sales are going up. The Globe and Mail cites figures for all the months of 1992, and I am sure that the Leader of the Government in the Senate would not dispute the figures of the Globe and Mail because, as far as I am concerned, it is the second Bible of the government. The Globe and Mail says that motor vehicle sales have been going down every month. All I ask is that the minister correct his statement.

● (1410)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there is nothing to correct. New motor vehicle sales—

Senator Thériault: Tell the truth!

Senator Murray: — rose by 2.6 per cent in April.

Senator Olson: According to your very selective bureau of statistics.

Senator Murray: The statistic that I put on the record yesterday is one that I stand by. It was given to me by the government. It is from Statistics Canada. Nothing that I have heard quoted from the Globe and Mail contradicts what I said yesterday to the effect that new motor vehicle sales rose by 2.6 per cent in April.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, on page 1595 of yesterday's Debates of the Senate, the Leader of the Government stated: "new motor vehicle sales are going up." The fact of the matter is that they have been going down. Surely he can admit his error.

Senator Perrault: Perhaps he was holding the graph upside down.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

TABLING OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING MERCHANT SEAMEN

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, it is certainly a pleasant change to rise in this chamber and not to be making yet another plea for the government to take action in regard to the injustices suffered by so many of our veterans.

As some may be aware, this morning the government tabled the long-awaited merchant seamen legislation in the other place. As we have had only a few hours to examine the substance of the bill, it would be premature to either wholeheartedly embrace the legislation or to make negative comments.

Reaction to the bill is already pouring in. Over the next few days I fully expect that the many veterans organizations that have been following the progress of this issue will be advancing their views on the quality of the legislation. I hope that, as that legislation passes through Parliament, the comments of representatives of those veterans organizations will be accorded the respect and attention they deserve.

I am confident that the minister is approaching this bill in good faith. In his press release he stated that he will be pursuing the creation of a Book of Remembrance to be placed in the Peace Tower. I thank him for his willingness to take this long overdue step and urge him to follow it through to the best of his abilities.

It is fitting, then, that in this the 125th year of Confederation, we unite together in this important and worthy cause. We must work to ensure that this legislation, which will undoubtedly be the last opportunity to accord our merchant seamen the recognition they deserve, is the most comprehensive and generous package possible. We owe our veterans no less.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

ARTIFICIAL REEF SOCIETY —TRIBUTE TO GOVERNMENT FOR SINKING OF H.M.C.S CHAUDIÈRE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to make a brief statement to the Senate on a matter to which I made reference some months ago. On occasion I may have been critical of the government, but senators will have to dig back rather diligently into their memories to recall those occasions!

Senator Doody: Confession is good for the soul.

Senator Perrault: I stated that, should the government take a certain action with respect to the decommissioned Chaudière, I would rise in my place and congratulate the government. I am meeting that promise and commitment.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: I wish to congratulate the government for acting positively and decisively in meeting the request of the Artificial Reef Society of British Columbia and other interests on the West Coast. Once the Chaudière is sunk late this spring, she will be the largest artificial reef in Pacific North America, and will be a world-class attraction to divers. This will have favourable economic spin-offs for the Canadian economy.

The artificial reef sunk by the Artificial Reef Society of British Columbia, Portland Island, the Motor Vessel G.B. Church has drawn tremendous interest from divers and marine biologists since it was first sunk in August last year. In the roughly 150 days since her sinking, the G.B. Church has become the home to numerous rockfish, octopus, and, in particular, juvenile fish that are using it as a habitat. It is hoped that by studying the rate of colonization of the G.B. Church, we will have a better measurement of how quickly reefs recover from environmental damage.

The Gulf Island site chosen for the Chaudière Project is currently a featureless, muddy bottom which supports very little marine life. It is anticipated that the immense steel hull and aluminum superstructure of the Chaudière will gradually provide a stable home to a much wider variety and greater abundance of marine creatures. It will also provide an ideal study site for biology studies investigating the rate and nature of colonization of man-made reefs. Within three to five years, it is expected that much of the ship's surface will be encrusted with marine growths such as tubeworms, barnacles, tunicates and anemones, while the decks and superstructure will provide shelter to countless schools of perch and rockfish, as well as ling cod, sculpins and other fish species.

The 175-foot G.B. Church, scuttled August 10, 1991 near Sidney, B.C. as the Artificial Reef Society's first major reef project, has graphically demonstrated how rapidly reef colonization can occur within B.C.'s plankton-rich coastal waters. Within 100 days of its sinking, the G.B. Church already hosted more than two dozen species of marine creatures, including small schools of rockfish and schools of up to several hundred tube-snouts hovering near the ship's two masts. On the decks and inside the gutted hull live several species of crustaceans, including a very large number of striped shrimp. Juvenile two-spot prawns, a commercially important species, have also colonized the newly created artificial reef.

I appreciate the indulgence of the house because my statement is longer than, perhaps, it should be.

We should also consider other projects such as this one on the east coast. They are prime tourist attractions. In addition, there are tourist aspects, or "eco-tourism aspects" to an artificial reef. In a previous British Columbia government report it was estimated that a single artificial reef could be worth an additional $1 million per year to a community, not to mention all the spin-off benefits to the nation.

Based on what is currently happening in the Sidney, B.C. area with the G.B. Church, this appears to be quite true. The hotel operators and dive charter operators in the Sidney area report significantly increased off-season tourism and, in particular, American off-season tourism with divers coming up from Oregon and Washington specifically to dive the G.B. Church.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, is it agreed that Senator Perrault be allowed to finish his statement?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Perrault: Once the Chaudière is sunk she will become an instant tourist attraction for divers from all over the world. In particular, divers will be drawn to the central part of the Gulf Islands to study not just the majesty of this ship under water but the marine growth on this vessel over the years. In particular, by drawing more eco-tourism dollars to the Nanaimo-Ladysmith area, she will draw more attention to the natural areas adjacent to her in Gabriola Pass and Porlier Pass. This is why this project is endorsed by ecological groups such as the Marine Life Sanctuary Society of B.C., and historical groups such as the Underwater Archaeological Society of British Columbia.

In short, this has been a win-win situation for all. The government has acted correctly and decisively. I thank them for it.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

COMMITTEE TO REVIEW RULES—REQUEST FOR SUBMISSION OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I am prompted to make a comment as a result of the circumstance in which Senator Thériault found himself when he wanted to raise a question of privilege and found that that violated our new rules.

I have found myself in the same circumstance. The recent review of the rules was quite comprehensive.

Senator Frith: It does not matter, because you cannot raise a point of order about someone raising a point of order. Therefore you can't raise that either. Go ahead.

Senator Kelly: I am not doing that. I am suggesting to honourable senators that the rules, however they finally come out, affect each of us, not only in a caucus sense but individually as well. My information is that too few of us have come back to the Rules Committee with specific problems that we think exist in the rules. I have one and I will be advising the committee with respect to it.

I think we have to do more than simply wait until rules are altered and then complain, rather than, in more specific terms, suggest something better.

● (1420)

At the end of the day, we will have to live with the rules. I have found them quite confusing. I think some alterations or amendments are necessary, and I would urge honourable senators, sooner rather than later, to be more forthcoming about the changes they would like to see implemented.

THE ECONOMY

MONETARY POLICY—CHANGE IN DIRECTION APPLAUDED

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a foreboding that I shall live to regret congratulating the Leader of the Government, but I shall do so anyway.

Senator Frith: You are on a roll, sir. It won't last.

Senator Olson: I should congratulate the Leader, because he has apparently—I say "apparently" rather than "obviously" — conveyed the message that I have tried to deliver to him over the past three or four months about giving some assurance to Canadian investors and consumers that the government will not use monetary policy to clobber an increase in economic activity.

What prompts me to do this is articles in the Globe and Mail and Financial Post today, indicating that the Governor of the Bank of Canada has acknowledged, before the International Monetary Fund Conference in Toronto, that the bank is now going to ease up on the monetary policy for fighting inflation and will let the economy expand a little bit.

For that, I congratulate the Leader of the Government, because he has obviously carried the message I have been trying to give him for the past few months.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

K1A 0A1

Mr. Speaker,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Peter DeC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 4th day of June, 1992, at 5:30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

Yours sincerely,

JUDITH LAROCQUE
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

[Translation]

DEBT SERVICING AND REDUCTION ACCOUNT ACT

TENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, has the honour to present the following report:

Thursday, June 4, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

TENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-21, "An Act relating to the accounting of certain payments for the servicing and reduction of the debt of Canada", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, May 6, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, on division.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E LEBLANC
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

[English]

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, may we have leave for third reading of this bill now so that it can be included in the legislation to be given Royal Assent this afternoon?

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Which bill are you referring to?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am talking about Bill C-21.

Senator Frith: No. I would like to accommodate my friend, but I was just saying to my colleague Senator Molgat that I want to speak to third reading on that.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

SPENDING CONTROL BILL

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present the following report:

Thursday, June 4, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-56, "An Act respecting the control of government expenditures", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, May 12, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, on division.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E LEBLANC
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, for the same reasons, may we have leave for third reading today?

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): And for the same reasons, no, but thanks for asking.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Then at the next sitting.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before proposing the adjournment motion I would like to give honourable senators an indication of our suggested working and sitting schedule up to the summer adjournment. It has been discussed with the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, and I hope it will meet with the approval of all senators.

As you know, we have Royal Assent today at 5:30. It is unlikely that we will be sitting until then, considering the few items of business that are currently before us under Orders of the Day. Therefore I suggest that as soon as we have completed our agenda for today, we suspend the sitting until Royal Assent, and that after Royal Assent we continue our sitting in order to receive Bill C-81, the legislation on referenda, which is to be voted on today in the House of Commons at around 5 o'clock. We could then give the bill first reading and, with agreement, reconvene on Tuesday. In other words, we would not sit either tomorrow or Monday, but reconvene on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The sponsor of Bill C-81, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, will make a statement for this side. I understand that Senator Stanbury will speak for the Opposition. We will then continue the debate and, I hope, have the bill in committee no later than Wednesday. I need not emphasize that this is a bill that the government feels should have as rapid passage as possible, for reasons that have already been made public.

Next week we would sit Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday morning. The following two weeks we would sit 5 days; Monday evening, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday morning with the aim of leaving here no later than June 23. Again, all these plans are subject to change, according to what happens elsewhere, which might upset the suggested schedule.

Senator Frith: The vagaries of June life.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes. I have on my list 19 bills that we can expect to receive from the House of Commons for first reading. I hasten to say that they do not necessarily have to be passed by the June break. I am merely giving an indication of the volume of work ahead of us.

Therefore, honourable senators, if the foregoing schedule of sittings is agreeable to you, then with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h) I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 9, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe that the Deputy Leader of the Government has indicated our conversation correctly. I have checked with our speaker on the referendum bill, Senator Stanbury, and he has indicated that he is prepared to proceed on Tuesday. I have also told the Deputy Leader that I know of no others who wish to speak, but of course honourable senators are masters of their own time. However, I do not anticipate at this moment that there will be any delay and I anticipate that we can proceed with the bill.

Honourable senators, we recognize the importance of this bill. We in the Liberal Party have taken the position that there should be a referendum. Therefore, while we may have differences of opinion on some aspects, in principle it is a bill we support, so I do not anticipate any difficulties.

The schedule indicated for the next period of weeks is in accordance with our discussion.

Motion agreed to.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a bundle of petitions from Canadians against the GST and asking for an election. I do not know whether the Big Ben election clock has caught their attention.

Senator Doody: Little Ben has bonged.

Senator Frith: Yes, perhaps. I will have to leave that with you, Senator Molgat, to straighten out with Senator Doody. In any event, I am told it did chime today.

These petitions are against the GST and ask for an immediate election. They come from the following areas: In New Brunswick; Atholville, Campbelton, Chatham, Dalhousie, Edmunston, Eel River Crossing, Grand Falls, Grand Sault, Moncton, New Castle, Red Bank, St. Leonard, St. Jacques and Tide Head. In Ontario, from Ottawa.

Senator Doody: From my own office?

Senator Frith: No, but thank you for raising it.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That rings a bell.

Senator Frith: I can understand why you would think so. It brings all our memories back to the famous petition presented in fact by Senator Doody in favour of the GST. The names were indeed not from his office but from Senator Murray's office.

Senator Molgat: All three of them.

Senator Frith: All three of them plus a fax, if you will remember, from the President of the Chamber of Commerce. It was a crowd of four. I can understand, as I say, why that triggered the reaction it did from Senator Doody.

Senator Doody: I want to remind you that it was a very successful ploy.

Senator Frith: Was it really? I would not know. Anyone who is interested in further details can read a book on the subject.

The petitions from Quebec are from: Beauport, Gaspé, Grande Rivière, Grande Rivère Ouest, Hopetown, L'Alverne, Lévis, Nouvelle, Nouvelle Ouest, Pointe-à-là-Croix, Pointe-à-là-Garde, Quebec City, St-Alexis, St. Joseph, St. Omer, St. Sauveur, St. Siméon, Ste. Thérèse de Gaspé, Val-Bélair. Totals are as follows: from Quebec 31, petitions with 544 names; from New Brunswick, 13 with 244 names and from Ontario, 1 petition—better than a photo finish but barely nudging ahead of the number of people on Senator Doody's list—with seven names.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 75 citizens of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Hamilton, Thornhill, Toronto, Scarborough, Mississauga, Etobicoke and Ottawa.

Finally, there are petitions signed by 511 citizens of British Columbia who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Kamloops. This is a grand total of 586 petitioners, many of whom are especially outraged that books and periodicals are not exempt from the goods and services tax.

● (1440)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR RECONCILIATION OF ECONOMIC INDICATORS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to accept the invitation of the Chair to pursue in Question Period the issue of economic indicators and statistics that was raised during Senators' Statements. We have the figures that were put on the record yesterday by the Leader of the Government and repeated earlier today.

I imagine that, from personal knowledge, he knows as much about the figures he quoted as I know about the ones I am about to quote. However, for the sake of the record, perhaps it would be a good idea for us attempt to reconcile the figures he mentioned yesterday with regard to car sales with ours, which are apparently from the same source.

Referring to the briefing material in his book, the Leader of the Government stated, I believe, that car sales were up in May.

Senator Murray: In April, new car sales were up.

Senator Olson: Very selective.

Senator Frith: Let us say it is; but maybe someone could accuse me of being selective.

Senator Olson: No, he is selective.

Senator Frith: I understand, but I might be accused of the same thing. I am selecting figures which, to me, certainly seem to contradict those that the Leader of the Government put on the record, and, in any event, they certainly seem to contradict the implication that the economy is recovering.

I will tell you exactly what I am going to quote from. It is an article that appeared in the Toronto Star of June 4, which seems to be based on information from Statistics Canada, as are the Leader of the Government's figures. Admittedly, these quotations are selected, because I do not want to read the whole article; but I offer it to anyone else who wants to read it.

The headline is, "Stall in sales of cars surprise to economist". The first paragraph states:

> Car sales fell sharply in May from levels a year ago, although there was an ever so slight improvement from April.

Now, that might be the measure of reconciliation. Here are the figures. Truck and van sales were down 14 per cent to 39,923. It quotes an economist who expressed surprise that the car market has "failed to show the same improvement creeping into the housing sector". Apparently there is some improvement in the housing sector and I expect we will hear about that from the Leader of the Government at the appropriate time.

The next paragraph states that car sales to the end of May are down 10 per cent from 1991 levels, to 344,511, although truck and van sales are ahead about 2 per cent to 131,748. Then it quotes Ted Goellner, Vice-President of Sales at Ford Motor Company, on low levels of consumer confidence. That is interesting. Did we not have an indication yesterday that consumer confidence was up?

Senator Olson: Oh, yes, and investor confidence.

Senator Frith: Mr. Goellner said:

> . . . low levels of consumer confidence and over-all economic uncertainty still seem to be stalling the sustained recovery that we are looking for throughout 1992.

The particular manufacturer's figures are as follows.

> [Ford's] car sales were down in May just 4 per cent to 15,133, while big General Motors of Canada saw sales plunge 24 per cent . . .

Now, was it not Senator Barootes who said yesterday that the car manufacturers are working overtime to manufacture cars?

Senator Olson: But he says anything.

Senator Barootes: It was reported in the papers.

Senator Frith: No, no, Senator Olson, they may be working overtime. However, if their sales have dropped and they are working overtime to produce more cars, it is certainly reasonable to infer some imprudence on their part.

Chrysler's automobile sales were down 24 per cent and GM truck sales were down 17 per cent. After five months of 1992, GM truck sales are down 9 per cent.

So the information we seem to be getting is that the indicators are much more depressing than —

Senator Simard: This is Question Period. This is no time for speeches.

Senator Frith: I am not making a speech, senator.

Senator Perrault: He is terrified by the facts.

Senator Frith: No, I think he just came in. He has not been following it. He did not hear the first part.

Senator Simard: I think you are out of order.

Senator Frith: No, I am not out of order. I think probably you are only saying that because you did not hear the beginning of my intervention.

Senator Perrault: You are bewildered by the facts.

Senator Frith: I did not think you would like these statistics, sir. They were not quoted to please you. In any event, I am asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he will attempt to reconcile those figures. I do not expect him to do so today. However, the article, the Vice-President of Ford and The Economist all seem to be drawing on the same figures, making what appear to be contradictory statements and certainly drawing inferences that contradict those we were asked to draw yesterday.

I am asking whether the minister will check his book for them, or have his book brushed up to include those apparently contradictory figures.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, let me make a couple of very brief comments. First of all, the Canadian automotive industry, like its counterpart in the United States, has been experiencing a cyclical slowdown. We all know that. I will put that in perspective in a moment. It has been experiencing a cyclical slowdown.

The statistic which I put on the record yesterday, and which I will stand by unless Statistics Canada corrects it, was for the purpose of indicating that, even in the automotive sector, things are beginning to pick up.

Senator Perrault: So there were fewer closures this week?

Senator Murray: I pointed out, and I stand by it, that in April new car sales were up 2.6 per cent. That is what I said. I think that is an indication, a small but significant indication—

Senator Olson: But it is deceptive. What happened in the rest of 1992?

Senator Murray: I will put the overall automotive situation in perspective in a moment. I quoted that statistic, a 2.6 per cent increase in the month of April, as an indicator that, in the automotive sector, things are beginning to pick up.

I also quoted that statistic, that 2.6 per cent increase in new car sales in the month of April, for the purpose of indicating an increase in consumer confidence. If you take that statistic, a 2.6 per cent increase in new car sales, and put it with an increase in new housing starts, for example, in the last month, there again you have some evidence of a pick-up in consumer confidence.

As I acknowledged the other day in an exchange with the honourable Senator Olson, consumer confidence is still not where we want it to be in terms of contributing to a prolonged and sustained period of economic growth, but it is picking up. Those were the indicators which I placed on the record.

Senator Olson: But it dropped again in May.

Senator Murray: Those were the indicators I placed on the record yesterday in order to reinforce the point that I have made.

● (1450)

Let me, very briefly, place the Canadian automotive sector in perspective. Canada's share of total North American production has increased from 14.5 per cent in 1981 to 24.2 per cent in 1990. In other words, Canada's percentage of total North American production, as of 1990, is over 24 per cent. We are now accounting for almost a quarter of total North American production for light vehicle assembly.

Senator Frith: Did you say now or 1990?

Senator Murray: 1990.

Senator Frith: A moment ago you said "now".

Senator Olson: We can find you more recent examples than that.

Senator Murray: Find me more recent examples that will show that Canada's share of total North American production in light vehicle assembly, for example, has not been increasing steadily in the past decade.

I have told you that our share of total North American production was 14.5 per cent in 1981 and that it was 24.2 per cent in 1990. With respect to components, our share of total North American production was 5 per cent in 1981. It was 11 per cent in 1990.

Let us talk about jobs in the automotive sector. The historic high was in 1989 at 167,700. In 1991, yes, it was down; it was down to 137,000, but that is 22 per cent higher than a decade ago. This is real progress in an important sector of the Canadian and North American economy, one which accounts for an important part of our export trade.

Gains have been made as well in productivity in the automotive sector, with each Canadian assembly plant worker producing 27 per cent more vehicles in 1991 than in 1981. All the recent independent studies indicate that the Canadian assembly sector has a significant labour cost advantage in comparison to U.S. plants.

What I am telling the honourable senator is that the fundamentals are right and that this a sector of the Canadian economy of which we can all be very proud and in which we can have considerable confidence.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have sometimes accused the Leader of the Government, in answering these questions, of being an "artless dodger", but he has not dodged in this case. He has come to the very point of my question.

The Leader of the Government began by saying that he put his figures on the record yesterday to indicate that the economy, and particularly this sector, had picked up. That was the point of my question: How can we come to that conclusion when those in the sector are commenting on figures—and there is a graph that accompanies this, which is not hard to read — that demonstrate that car sales to the end of May are down 10 per cent from 1991 levels?

We can say that Mr. Goellner, the Vice-President of Ford, if he happened to read the Senate record, might reasonably wonder what kind of a Never-Never Land we are living in here in Ottawa and in the Senate when he reads that things are better in his industry.

I simply say that we should put on the record, for Mr. Goellner's benefit, that we pay attention to him, and we pay attention to Statistics Canada, and that he should understand that, as an accompaniment to the figures put on the record by the Leader of the Government, we are placing on the record what, to him, are the real figures that affect him. I doubt that Mr. Goellner or Mr. Vasic or anyone at Chrysler or General Motors would use the phrase "picked up" when describing the state of this industry.

Perhaps all we can do is leave the two sets of figures on the record, but it seems to me that in neither his answer yesterday nor today has the Leader of the Government come to grips with the problem, to the satisfaction of the people in the industry, by saying that things indeed are picking up. In fact, it seems that they are sliding alarmingly downhill.

Senator Murray: Let me offer the honourable senator some further encouragement about the state and prospects of the Canadian automotive industry.

Senator Frith: You have your "snow" book out again.

Senator Murray: It is only a matter of weeks since Ford announced an additional $2.1 billion investment at its Oakville and Windsor facilities, which is a strong vote of confidence in Canadian workers and in the Canadian economy!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Why does he not answer the question?

Senator Murray: I know that the honourable senator has great difficulty in accepting that the market sometimes works, in accepting that private investment decisions are a harbinger of future economic growth, and he has great difficulty accepting my word and the word of government ministers for the prospects in the economy, but can he not accept and rejoice in a $2.1 billion investment in Oakville and Windsor?

Senator Olson: Answer Senator Frith's question. Why are we rejoicing about that?

Senator Murray: My honourable friends are hanging crepe about the state of the Canadian automotive industry, and I am telling them that a $2.1 billion investment by one company—Ford—in two plants—one in Oakville and one in Windsor—must tell the honourable senator something. Let him take it to heart; let him reflect on it; let him rejoice in it!

The Oakville car plant will receive a mandate for a new passenger van involving an investment of $550 million. The Oakville truck plant will reduce production to one shift with some models being transferred. The production of the new van will result in the creation of 1,100 new jobs, 650 of which will be taken by workers transferred from the truck plant. The investment includes almost $500 million already invested in a new paint line in Oakville.

Then there is the Windsor No. 2 engine plant, which is being reopened to produce a new generation truck engine requiring an investment of $1.1 billion and the creation of 850 jobs. Honourable senators, that news is all good.

That is just the news from Ford. Would the honourable senator like to hear the word from General Motors? He would? I have a speech here made by Mr. Peapples, the President and General Manager of General Motors of Canada Limited. He says:

> Our Ste-Thérèse car assembly plant in Quebec has recorded dramatic improvements in operational efficiency—progress that was largely responsible for the plant earning the right to build the new generation Cameros and Firebirds that debut later this year.
>
> Working together to solve problems and increase efficiency has become virtually institutionalized in the plant—second nature, if you will.

Then he adds—this is General Motors:

> Our Windsor, Ontario trim facility has a similar approach and has enjoyed some encouraging successes. As a "focused factory", trim is better able to leverage its strengths against some very tough competition.

To whom and to what do we owe much of this progress in the Canadian economy?

Senator Frith: This is not a filibuster of Question Period by any chance, is it? Are we to be cut off?

If the Speaker attempts to cut us off because of all of this—

Senator Murray: The President of General Motors says:

> The economic fundamentals are in place for a recovery.

He says:

> Much of our ability to compete successfully is directly linked to our ability to put in place the right structures and the right processes to increase productivity and improve quality.

[Senator Murray.]

He further says:

> We also need a competitive tax structure as well, and I welcome this occasion to compliment the federal Finance Minister for his initiatives in the recent budget.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: A very stirring address.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I now understand what we are to tell crepe hangers. Mr. Goellner, for example, who is the Vice-President of Sales at Ford Motor Company, is a crepe hanger when he talks about lower levels of consumer confidence and refers to the fact that sales are down. We should tell him that he should consult with Senator Murray before he hangs crepe.

Senator Olson: And he can put some selective statistics out.

Senator Frith: Yes, and if he does ever have to lay anyone off because of lower sales, he can send the union to Senator Murray, who can tell them that things are terrific.

In other words, Mr. Goellner, check with Senator Murray and stop hanging crepe. If you are not satisfied in general, Senator Murray will tell you how good things were between 1981 and 1990. That should help you, Mr. Goellner. The fact that sales are down should not be bothering you, because things were good in 199O.

It is the same for General Motors, whose truck sales are down 17 per cent. They, too, are crepe hangers. I assume they furnished the figures that went to Statistics Canada, but they are hanging crepe. They should be told that the figures that they are filing are actually evidence of good news, and that when they refer to them they are hanging crepe—as was Chrysler, whose sales were down 24 per cent in May.

At least Senator Murray has his figures on the record, and Mr. Goellner, Ford, General Motors and Chrysler can understand that as far as the government is concerned, they are crepe hangers and they should be focusing on how things were in 1990 and the fact that they are making investments in plant.

The record is there. Anyone can decide which is the more reasonable inference.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me just repeat that inflation was at 1.7 per cent in April. We are presently running—and have been running—the lowest inflation rate of any of our competitors.

Senator Frith: Explain that to Mr. Goellner.

Senator Murray: What does that tell you about our competitors?

Senator Olson: It means that we have a sick economy, that is what it means.

Senator Murray: Look at the economy in recent months; it is the strongest it has been since World War II. What does that tell you about our competitive position vis-à-vis other countries?

Senator Frith: I hope Mr. Goellner is listening.

Senator Murray: Inflation is at 1.7 per cent, the lowest in twenty years.

Finally, honourable senators, because this is Thursday and I know that the honourable senator was rising with a view to asking this question, the bank rate fell by another 10 points at noon today from 6.33 per cent to 6.23 per cent—the lowest since 1973. Is it any wonder that business and consumer confidence is picking up?

Senator Frith: It would be a wonder if they were, but they are not.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to give the government all the credit they want for lowering the inflation rate, but there are some people out there who are a little more intelligent than that. What they measure is the difference between the prime interest rates and the rate of inflation. It is just as high today as it was six months ago and two years ago — that is, somewhere around 5 or 6 per cent. That is the real interest rate today. It has not changed very much.

I want to set all that aside and ask the Leader of the Government one simple question, because it is important to people. We know that the governors of the central banks—Mr. Greenspan in the United States, Mr. Crow in Canada, and several others whom I will not name—are meeting in Toronto. All of them, at various times and places, have expressed their satisfaction with the news that they are hearing because the economies in their countries are now beginning to show signs of improving.

The rank and file—that is, ordinary Canadians—listen more to what the government's intentions are than to what the governors of the central banks have to say. They may express all this happiness, but will the government give us a commitment, now that inflation is down and even though the spread is as bad as it ever was, that they will stop using monetary policy to clobber people who may wish to borrow some money? In other words, if the economy starts to pick up again, can we have some assurance from the government that they will not increase interest rates to the point where they are hurting people?

Senator Murray: How can the honourable senator talk about clobbering people with interest rates when interest rates are at their lowest in 20 years?

Also, the honourable senator referred to real interest rates.

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Murray: I am here to tell him that real interest rates in this country are lower than for most of our competitor countries.

Senator Olson: Careful, because the difference between inflation levels and interest rates is what I am talking about.

Senator Murray: I know what it is.

Senator Olson: That is, in case you did not know about the definition.

Senator Murray: I know what it is and I am telling you that real interest rates in this country are lower than the rates in most competitor countries.

Senator Olson: Will you get to the other question, namely this governments's policy to keep interest rates down so that people have at least a chance to pay off on whatever investments they may wish to make?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, why does the honourable senator think that we invested so much time and effort in bringing inflation down to where it is? It was in order to bring interest rates down. That policy has been successful. Because of that policy, the fundamentals are in place for renewed and sustained economic growth.

Senator Perrault: Bafflegab!

Senator Frith: And nothing is happening. The news is: It is all bad.

Senator Murray: I put those indicators on the record yesterday to show that that is exactly what has been happening.

Senator Frith: It is, but it is not working out correctly.

Senator Olson: Both the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Minister of Finance are continually saying, "We are always poised and ready to go, but we never get started." Now people want to have some reassurance that if they do get started, you will not clobber them with interest rates again.

Senator Frith: But the fundamentals are in place. They can go back to the bank and see if they can borrow on that.

Senator Olson: I guess so.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, yesterday the minister, in replying to a question, gave us some glowing figures about business confidence. He said:

> I want to tell the honourable senator that the index of business confidence increased by 16.1 per cent in the first quarter of 1992.

Could the minister tell us what exactly is this index of business confidence? Is that a Statistics Canada figure? He repeated it again later as a great indication of a "sustained and prolonged economic growth" taking place.

Senator Murray: I will obtain for the honourable senator a technical statement of exactly what the components of business confidence are and how it is measured.

Senator Frith: Could he also obtain any other indicators that there are on business confidence, because obviously Mr. Goellner of Ford is reading a different set of indicators.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have just placed two examples on the record. One was the statement by the president and general manager of General Motors of Canada and the second was the decision of the Ford Motor Company to invest another $2.1 billion in its Oakville and Windsor plants.

Senator Frith: That specifically said that consumer confidence was down.

Senator Murray: That speaks to business confidence.

Senator Frith: Business confidence? But consumer confidence is down.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I spoke about the automotive sector a few moments ago. It has been in a cyclical downturn, but it is picking up.

A $2.2 billion investment on the part of Ford and the announcement of General Motors of success and increased productivity are all the evidence you need that there is confidence in an expanding automotive sector, just as there is confidence in an expanding national economy in this country.

Senator Frith: You would have a great future in the automotive industry in convincing them that they are all wrong!

Senator Molgat: My honourable friend has now repeated twice over that consumer confidence is up. Would he be prepared to put in the black book that he carries around with all the details this latest result from the Gallup poll, which says that 91 per cent of Canadian believe that the recession is not over?

Senator Olson: Yes, let him do that.

Senator Molgat: My honourable friend speaks about consumer confidence. A new Gallup poll shows that 91 per cent of Canadians believe the recession is not over. Only 6 per cent maintain Canada's recessionary woes are a thing of the past. Another 3 per cent have no opinion. Would my honourable friend put that into his book and when he is spouting these figures to Canadians would he also give them these facts?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, this argument could go on all day, but the fact of the matter is that there has been a tremendous increase in investment. We have had a net inflow of investment this year, as I told you, for the first time since the National Energy Program which drove investment out of Canada.

Senator Olson: Oh, come on.

Senator Murray: That was the honourable senator's program back in the 1980s. Those investment figures that I have placed on the record are solid evidence of confidence in an expanding Canadian economy. The Gallup poll did not put $2.1 billion into new plants and equipment. Ford of Windsor and Oakville are doing so.

Senator Frith: The people are all fools. We know that this government thinks that.

Senator Molgat: Obviously, my honourable friend operates on the basis that, if you repeat something often enough, some people may believe it.

[Senator Murray.]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CANADIAN STEEL INDUSTRY—U.S. PROTECTIONISM —GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I would like to go to another question. Recently the Prime Minister was in the United States to speak to the President regarding the continual trade harassment by the Americans. They find new problems to bring up in spite of the free trade agreement.

Would my honourable friend tell us whether the Prime Minister is prepared to go back and see the President in the light of what is happening in the steel industry? The Americans are now threatening an attack on the Canadian steel industry and threatening to prevent our so-called free trade with them. Would my honourable friend indicate what the government is going to do?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): The honourable senator should make, and understand, the important distinction here. It is not the United States' administration that is threatening to take a more protectionist route against foreign steel. It is the United States' steel industry that is threatening to do that. As I recall, they are aiming at about 70 countries, of which Canada is one. What we have, that none of the others has, is a dispute settlement mechanism under the free trade agreement to which we will certainly have recourse if the United States' industry obtains any success in its current campaign.

Senator Molgat: But the Prime Minister declared victory after his trip to Washington. The matter was now going to be settled. The President would see to it that this harassment did not continue. Here we are, barely two weeks after the visit, and the Americans are starting again on one of our major industries. My honourable friend says they are not attacking Canada, they are attacking the world; but we are supposed to be protected from that by a free trade agreement. We are supposed to be protected from that by the so-called close friendship between the Prime Minister and Mr. Bush. He told us two weeks ago that Mr. Bush was going to take action.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the United States steel industry, like other United States industries, retained the right, under the free trade agreement, to invoke American law against foreign competition, as the Canadian industry also retained its right to invoke Canadian law against foreign competition where necessary. That is as it is and as it should be. We have the right to a dispute-settlement mechanism under the free trade agreement, if the United States steel industry has any success with its present campaign, which none of our other competitors have vis-à-vis the United States.

I think it is rather obtuse of the honourable senator to suggest that President Bush in the United States, the Prime Minister here, or any other leader in a free society, can compel the private sector in his country to do something. The discussions between the President and the Prime Minister—

Senator Olson: It will happen at the border with the U.S. administration, if it happens.

Senator Murray: Well, if it happens—if! Honourable senators, the purpose of the discussions between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States is precisely to ensure that, before any such decisions are made by the administration, consultations are held at the highest level of the U.S. administration and we are not harassed by bureaucratic decisions or even political decisions at a lower level.

Senator Molgat: Then we are to conclude—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must advise honourable senators that the 30 minutes allotted to Question Period under rule 23 (7) have expired. Is there agreement that Senator Molgat ask a further question?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: One question.

Senator Molgat: We are then to conclude, from what the leader now tells us, that Mr. Bush has no authority over this, that there is nothing he can do, that the trip was pure window dressing. It was to impress Canadians that the Prime Minister was doing something; but in fact he went to see a man who, the minister now tells us, can do nothing about the situation. When the Prime Minister declared victory and said that it was now going to be better, that was purely for Canadian consumption and had nothing to do with the facts.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator should read what I have just explained to him about the meeting between the United States President and the Canadian Prime Minister and the undertakings that were given there by President Bush.

Senator Frith: And you read what Senator Molgat said.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE BILL

GREEN SHIELD CANADA PREPAID SERVICES ASSOCIATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (Bill S-10, to incorporate the Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association—with certain amendments), presented in the Senate on 3rd June 1992.

Hon. Norman K. Atkins: Honourable senators, I move that this report be adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, when a committee reports a bill with amendments, I believe you need one day's notice to move the adoption of the report, although you do not when there are no amendments. It may be that we will be giving leave, but unless I am wrong about, honourable senators, that is the case when there is a report with amendments. It makes sense that it would be so, because we would want to have time to consider the amendments. So I think Senator Atkins has to ask for leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand the report was presented yesterday by Senator Poitras.

Senator Frith: Then that is fine. He would only need leave to move third reading, not to debate the adoption of the report. I am sorry.

• (1520)

Senator Atkins: On May 22, my colleague spoke to this bill at second reading and I believe gave a thorough explanation of its contents. I want to thank him for the opportunity to speak to the bill as it returns to us from the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Once again the process has served us well.

Honourable senators on the committee have approved Bill S-10. However, their consideration and some judicious comments made by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition earlier during second reading have led to four amendments to the bill. There are really only two amendments and two further changes by amendment necessary as a consequence.

Very briefly, the first amendment is to shorten in the bill the official name of Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association to Green Shield Canada or, in French, le Bouclier vert du Canada. In fact, the simple reason for the change is to shorten the title or name, as Green Shield incorporates nationally, so that identification is easy in either official language.

The second purpose of the amendments is to respond to observations offered by Senator Frith, who has graciously co-sponsored the bill. The honourable senator noted that upon wind-up of the not-for-profit corporation—even though with this bill Green Shield will be national—any remaining surplus would be turned over to an Ontario-based foundation.

In response to the senator's observation, Green Shield's management has initiated appropriate legal procedures to establish a national foundation, the Green Shield Canada Foundation. This, along with the amendments before you, will ensure that, should Green Shield one day be wound up, the remaining surplus of this nationally incorporated not-for-profit organization will flow to a national foundation.

I hope my honourable colleagues on both sides will see this bill, which accommodates an oversight in existing legislation and the amendments I have just described, as in order, and will approve the bill with amendments so that it may be sent on to the other place. I thank you go for your consideration.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, just to be sure that it is clear on the record what I was wrong about—

Senator Simard: Don't let that bother you, Senator Frith.

Senator Murray: We will take your word for it.

Senator Frith: Just for the sake of the record, in case anyone who sees that I admit I was wrong thinks that, in fact, one day's notice is not needed, I thank all my colleagues on the other side for their magnanimity. Thank you, Senator Barootes; thank you, Senator Doody; thank you, Senator Simard. However, if you will just be quiet, we will save a lot of time.

The error that I was guilty of was that I did not notice that the report was on yesterday's Order Paper and thought that the report was being brought in for the first time today.

As Senator Atkins pointed out, when I spoke to the bill on second reading on May 22, I indicated my support but raised a question about the relationship of Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association and the Green Shield Foundation. Clause 10 of the bill provides that where Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association has accumulated a surplus, that surplus may be distributed to a charitable or non-profit corporation.

A logical candidate for the surplus, if there ever is one, would be the Green Shield Foundation, which in clause 10(3) is described as "a body corporate incorporated under Part III of the Corporations Act of Ontario". I underline the word "Ontario".

When I examined the bill, I wondered about the object of Green Shield Prepaid Services, which will be operating nation-wide as a result of this bill, funnelling its surplus to the foundation which, because it is incorporated in the province of Ontario, is limited to doing business primarily within the boundaries of that province. As I said on May 22, the end result would be that the foundation could launch a new scheme of benefit primarily to individuals and companies resident in Ontario which was funded, at least in part, from the nation-wide operations of the association in such provinces, for example, as Senator Barootes' Saskatchewan or Senator Simard's New Brunswick. I went on to say that if the foundation were incorporated federally, of course, that scenario would not be relevant.

The amendments we have before us from the committee reflect the fact that Green Shield has taken steps to federally incorporate the foundation, the original bill having already provided for federal incorporation of the Green Shield Association—that is, the original operating company.

Among the materials distributed to the Banking Committee on Tuesday was an application dated May 27, 1992 for incorporation of the foundation under Part II of the Canada Corporations Act. To understand what we are being presented with, I continue to underline the difference between the association and the foundation. Once we pass this bill, the Green Shield Foundation will have a federal charter and will be able to operate in all parts of the country, as will the association. Any surplus of the association that is funnelled to the foundation will now be going to an entity which will be in a position to offer its services to residents in every part of Canada.

[Senator Murray.]

This change in the status of the foundation is reflected in the amendment to clause 10 that is being recommended by the committee. Instead of describing the foundation as:

> The Green Shield Foundation, a body corporate incorporated under Part III of the Corporation Act of Ontario . . .

clause 10 would be changed to read:

> The Green Shield Canada Foundation, a body corporate incorporated under Part II of the Canada Corporations Act . . ..

The other amendments being recommended by the committee concern the official name of the entity which is being incorporated under the legislation; that is, what we have been calling the original corporation, or the association. Instead of being known as the Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association, which is a bit of a mouthful, it will be known as simply Green Shield Canada. It does drop the descriptive word "prepaid" but the resulting Green Shield Canada does appear to me to be a much more elegant designation.

That is the crux of the committee's report. We are already on record as approving the original bill. These are the changes that are recommended by the committee and the reasons for those recommendations. I share in Senator Atkins' recommendation and proposal that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Atkins: Honourable senators, with leave now.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if the honourable senator would explain why leave is required? I think he knows my normal view on the matter of leave.

Senator Atkins: Senator Molgat, originally the idea and the hope was that this bill would receive third reading tomorrow. In view of the Deputy Leader's announcement earlier that the house would not sit until Tuesday, it is hoped that we can pass this bill and send it on to the other place for approval. My understanding is that if we do that, it will receive approval before the summer recess. Therefore, the sooner we get it to the other place, the better.

● (1530)

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, owing to the fact that the House, according to its calendar, has set its adjournment for Monday, June 23, I see the urgency in getting the bill over there. I conclude from my honourable friend's comments that he has some assurance that, if we proceed today, the other place will deal with it forthwith and pass it before the adjournment.

Senator Atkins: I have every indication from the sponsor in the other place that as a result of the work that has been done there is a guarantee that it will get through.

Senator Frith: You have always been quite well-connected with the other place.

Senator Molgat: On that basis, I am prepared to give leave.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 136(4), the sitting is suspended until 5.25 p.m.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.30 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Peter DeC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to amend the Extradition Act (Bill C-31, Chapter 13, 1992)

An Act to amend the Competition Act (multi-level marketing plants and pyramid selling) (Bill C-68, Chapter 14, 1992)

An Act respecting National Public Service Week: Serving Canadians Better (Bill C-328, Chapter 15, 1992)

An Act to amend the National Defence Act (Bill C-77, Chapter 16, 1992)

An Act to provide for the imposition of special economic measures (Bill C-53, Chapter 17, 1992)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

REFERENDUM BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-81, to provide for referendums on the Constitution of Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 9, 1992, at 2 p.m.

CONTENTS

Thursday, June 4, 1992

PAGE

Nova Scotia
Westray Mine—Government Assistance—Document Tabled. Senator Murray 1610

Question of Privilege
Senator Thériault 1610

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

General Election
Number of Days Left in Current Term. Senator Molgat 1610

The Economy
Government Economic Indicators—Request for Clarification—Question of Privilege. Senator Thériault 1611
Senator Murray 1611

Veterans Affairs
Tabling of Legislation Respecting Merchant Seamen. Senator Marshall 1611

British Columbia
Artificial Reef Society—Tribute to Government for Sinking of H.M.C.S. Chaudière. Senator Perrault 1612

Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders
Committee to Review Rules—Request for Submission of Amendents. Senator Kelly 1613

The Economy
Monetary Policy—Change in Direction Applauded. Senator Olson 1613

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

Royal Assent
Notice 1613

Debt Servicing and Reduction Account Bill (C-21)
Tenth Report of Committee Presented. Senator Leblanc (Saurel) 1613
Senator Lynch-Staunton 1614
Senator Frith 1614

Spending Control Bill (C-56)
Eleventh Report of Committee Presented. Senator Leblanc (Saurel) 1614
Senator Lynch-Staunton 1614
Senator Frith 1614

Business of the Senate
Adjournment. Senator Lynch-Staunton 1614
Senator Molgat 1615

Goods and Services Tax
Presentation of Petitions. Senator Frith 1615
Senator Hébert 1615

QUESTION PERIOD

The Economy
Request for Reconciliation of Economic Indicators. Senator Frith 1615
Senator Murray 1616
Senator Olson 1619
Senator Molgat 1619

Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement
Canadian Steel Industry—U.S. Protectionism—Government Position. Senator Molgat 1620
Senator Murray 1620

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Private Bill
Green Shield Canada Prepaid Services Association—Report of Committee Adopted. Senator Atkins 1621
Senator Frith 1621
Third Reading 1622
Senator Molgat 1622

Royal Assent
The Honourable Peter DeC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General 1623

Referendum Bill (C-81)
Message received from Commons and Bill read First Time 1623

Appendix
Officers of the Senate, the Ministry, Senators and Members of Senate and Joint Committees i

Progress of Legislation xix

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 9, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE GEORGE VAN ROGGEN

TRIBUTES

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, our colleague George van Roggen passed away yesterday afternoon at about 3 o'clock Vancouver time. I received a call from his wife Janie about an hour after that. As is our custom, I believe the Leader of the Government proposes to adjourn immediately after tributes as a sign of respect and affection for our colleague.

Often in the past, when we have been informed of the passing away of one of our colleagues while we are sitting, we have simply adjourned. We have agreed to do that in this case, but to express our tributes before we adjourn. The Leader of the Government and I recommend to you that we do so today because we feel that this is an appropriate time. It seems to us that, in circumstances where we adjourn as a sign of respect, it is appropriate to express our tributes at the same time.

Honourable senators, all of you may not know, although a good many of you do, that the tributes to-day will be somewhat difficult for me because George was virtually a lifelong friend, a very close if not my closest friend. Appropriate as it is for us to adjourn for the reasons mentioned, it probably is not appropriate for me to try here to share with you some of my more personal feelings and memories of George from among the thousands of hours we spent together as colleagues in politics and as friends who shared such a variety of other experiences together over the 40 or 45 years of our friendship.

I was recently rereading some literary criticism and some text from Proust's Remembrance of Things Past, in its translation into English. However, the French title is À la recherche du temps perdu, which I think is more appropriately translated as "In search of lost time." At times like this, when you have to face the finality that dominates your loss of a dear friend, the experience is more a search for lost time than it is a remembrance of things past. I do not think I should say anything more about that now. I should rather use this occasion to accept the honour of being able to pay more formal tributes to my friend.

George van Roggen was born on July 22, 1921. He was called to the Bar of British Columbia in 1947. He was about two years my senior and, in fact, was called to the British Columbia Bar exactly two years earlier than I was called to the Ontario Bar. In 1948 he went north to become Crown Prosecutor and Public Administrator of the Yukon Territories, and stayed there until 1957. His law partner for many years was Erik Nielsen. I will resist the temptation to recount for the record some of the many stories George told me about their experiences there in the Yukon, many of which could easily have figured in poems by Robert Service.

In fact, in his modest style, when he was reminded that he was Crown Prosecutor and Public Administrator of the Yukon Territory, George used to say, "That title is more impressive than its reality."

He became involved in politics at an early age. He began in the early 1940s by serving for two years as Secretary of the West Vancouver Liberal Association. In 1948, he was a delegate to the National Liberal Convention which elected Louis St. Laurent party leader. As you can see, George goes a long way back in our party. In 1965, he was Chairman of the Liberal Party's federal election campaign committee; in 1968, he was Chairman of the provincial Liberal campaign committee. He was campaign manager for Senator Ray Perrault, when Ray was provincial Liberal leader, and he was President of the British Columbia Liberal Association—in effect, the party in British Columbia. In 1968, he was British Columbia campaign manager for Paul Hellyer during his bid for national leadership of the Liberal party.

George van Roggen was summoned to the Senate on November 4, 1971. The other members of the class of November 4, 1971, were Lorne Bonnell, Sidney Buckwold and Carl Goldenberg. In 1974, George was elected chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, a position he held for 14 years. It is hard for many of us to remember that committee under any other chairman. His predecessor, as I recall, was another good friend of his, Senator John Aird, who later became Lieutenant Governor of Ontario.

To say that George had strong convictions is what in French is called a litote, or litotes in English—understatement for the sake of effect. Like many of the rest of us, he was occasionally wrong, but he was seldom, if ever, in doubt.

As I have said, George had been engaged in partisan politics from a very early age, but partisanship had its limits for him. We can recall his position, for example, on free trade. He was sometimes called the father of free trade. Under his outstanding chairmanship his committee produced three volumes of reports on Canada's relationship with the United States. Certainly the most famous of those reports was the one strongly supporting the concept of a free trade agreement with the United States. He gave lucid and impassioned evidence before the Macdonald Commission urging a recommendation favouring a free trade agreement. Mr. Macdonald has told me since that that evidence had a very real influence on the commission. If I recall, it was acknowledged in the report that his presentation to the Macdonald Commission in Vancouver had a very persuasive effect.

Permit me one personal reflection. We boated together almost every summer on the West Coast. George's boat was well known there. The name on its transom was "Free Trade".

Senator van Roggen was not always, to put it mildly, in lock-step with Liberal policy. Some of you may not recall this, but in 1976 he was quite scathing in his criticism of his own government because of its policy on cross-border advertising. I have a vivid memory of that, because it was before I was appointed to the Senate and one of my clients at the time was in fact a United States border broadcaster. I must say I did lobby Senator van Roggen quite mercilessly on the subject, apparently with some success as far as he was concerned, but not so far as the government was concerned.

George Van Roggen gave all senators early notice of what he considered his role to be in the Senate. I quote from his maiden speech on December 27, 1971, page 1726 of the Debates of the Senate:

> Neither now, nor I hope at any time while I am a member of this chamber, will I be influenced by editorial writers, by the Government, by the other place, by my own leader in this house, or by what I think the public thinks I should do. I shall not be influenced by even the rights of the Senate, or by threats or concern that this chamber might be abolished.
>
> I have been a lawyer for too long to have difficulty in distinguishing between my duty and winning popularity contests, and I shall vote on this matter, as I hope on all other matters, on the basis of one criterion only, and that is what, in my opinion, is best for all the people of Canada.

There can never be unanimity in politics about what, of course, is "best for all the people of Canada", but certainly I think we can find here, and I believe among all his friends and acquaintances, unanimity in saying that the interests of the people of Canada remained Senator van Roggen's primary motivation throughout his life.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, from the day I entered the Senate in 1979 I had the great good fortune to know and work with, sometimes closely, the honourable George van Roggen. For some ten years I served under his chairmanship on the Senate Foreign Affairs committee. As members of that committee, we travelled together to New York, Washington and elsewhere. We took part in annual meetings between Canadian parliamentarians and U.S. senators and congressmen.

George occupied various official roles from time to time as a member of our delegation. Whatever title he held in the organization, his knowledge of the issues, his long experience in these discussions, and the friendship and respect he had earned on both sides of the border guaranteed him always a recognized leadership role.

Whether he sat with the government or with the opposition in this chamber, he used his influence and knowledge in the most constructive ways. From time to time he provided information and offered advice to the present government on difficult trade disputes, and interceded with U.S. congressmen, senators and business people in support of Canadian interests. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, where the national interest was involved, political partisanship was never a consideration with Senator van Roggen.

His loyalty to the Liberal Party and his pride in his party were well known. When he parted company with his Liberal colleagues on a question such as Canada-U.S. free trade, it was obvious that he never lost their affection and respect, nor did he ever give any of us on this side the slightest reason to hope that his occasional differences with his colleagues in the Liberal Party had shaken his belief in liberalism and in his party. On the contrary, he would argue that he was steadfast in his Liberalism but that his colleagues had momentarily strayed.

George van Roggen was an avid student who never ceased to learn and to grow intellectually. He took great satisfaction in delving into complex issues of public policy: questioning, probing, arguing, sometimes affecting outrageous opinions, and enjoying it all immensely.

He was a stimulating colleague, a congenial companion, a warm and generous person, a man with a great faith in Canada's future and a strong commitment always to do his best for the country.

Prime Minister Mulroney, my cabinet colleagues and all of us on this side of the House sympathize with the many who are bereaved by Senator van Roggen's passing; that, of course, includes his family; his colleagues in the Liberal party and, in particular, the Leader of the Opposition, Senator Frith, who was a very close friend; many in British Columbia with whom he was associated in the practice of law, in business or in politics; and all who know of his fine contribution to Canadian public life.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I wish to add a few words to those excellent tributes by my own leader and by the government leader in the Senate.

My relationship with George van Roggen began after the Diefenbaker sweep of 1958, when the senior leadership of the Liberal party disappeared from at least the urban centres across Canada. A new generation sprang up to assume that leadership, motivated by our concerns for the country and by our admiration for Lester B. Pearson. I was a member of the group that went to work in Ontario, particularly in Toronto, and several people that you know and some of our colleagues now were part of that group. George was one of the principals in the British Columbia group centered in Vancouver.

The reason those groups were so successful in the early sixties was that they had so much fun together, saw things in the same way in politics and were so busy that they had no time for rancour.

George van Roggen was a prince of a man. He was refined, but with a common touch; he was wise, but not pompous; he was thoughtful, articulate and a thorough gentleman; he was highly esteemed and greatly respected among all of our contemporaries.

In 1971, George joined us in the Senate. I have enjoyed 21 years as his colleague, much of it as his seat-mate.

I spoke to George by telephone from time to time during his last illness. He was always concerned that his colleagues understood his condition. He would say: "Tell them I am not hurting; I am just losing strength." Unfortunately, I understand he did hurt toward the end, and that was when he went into hospital.

Honourable senators, I know we will all miss Senator George van Roggen and that the sympathy of all of us who knew him will go out to his wife Jane and to the members of his family.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, to presume to follow the three excellent tributes to Senator van Roggen is an attempt to paint the lily. I refer only to the time when I was the Deputy Chairman of the committee over which he presided with such dedication and distinction.

I admired Senator van Roggen always as a great internationalist. I knew that about him before I became a senatorial colleague of his. I was most impressed by his attitude and his performance in reference to the free trade agreement. He was indeed, I would say correctly, the father and inspirer of that agreement, and, although I matched his enthusiasm for it with my total lack of enthusiasm, I had great respect for the leadership which he gave. No man or woman in this country was more knowledgeable about that important development in our economic history.

I particularly admired Senator van Roggen's independence when he resigned from the committee on a matter of principle. I often think that the Senate, down through the years, may have lost on occasion by the reluctance of its members to display their independence. What legislative body could in fact be more independent than one which is sheltered from the cold blasts and the hot waves of public opinion? Why are there not more independent gestures and independent votes?

Perhaps that is what caused Harold Laski to say that the Canadian Senate does not even have respect for itself. Senator van Roggen spoke so clearly. It is just a coincidence that I left the Foreign Affairs Committee at the same time he did. While I have great respect for my academic and close friend Senator Stewart, I thought I had had enough of the free trade agreement. I find that the committee gets along well without me, and I get along just fine without going.

We salute today a great senator and a great Canadian, a man of independence and dignity, who carried on always with the demeanour of a gentleman. We shall miss him profoundly.

[Senator Stanbury.]

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I should like to add some words as well in tribute to George van Roggen. George van Roggen—what a graceful name for a graceful man.

George personified for me the definition of a Pearson Liberal. He was devoted to his country and devoted to his party—but a party and a country that would only look outward and not look inward. It was in the early 1960s that I first met George. At that time he was a superb political organizer, a very intriguing tactician and a very skilful strategist. Above all he was a good person. As Senator Stanbury said, whenever you were in his company you enjoyed it.

He had a deep and interesting philosophy about the Liberal Party and about the structure of parties in this country. He felt that the party must respect all interests—not one type of interest but all interests: workers, the poor, the middle class, city dwellers, farmers, organized labour, big business and small business. The party, he felt, was a mediator, a consensus-taker and an important buffer between the parliamentary process and the public. If George disagreed with the consensus in the party, he was the first person to stand up against the wave and against the general viewpoint. He was a lawyer and businessman, but he had particular skills and a temperament that can best be defined as the classical skills of a solicitor. He was careful, he was prudent, he was thoughtful, he was sensitive, and he was loyal; but, above all, he had a deep reservoir of common sense.

It was my privilege to serve with him when he was Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee. During those meetings he would weigh every idea; he would listen carefully to every viewpoint; he would parse every word in drafting a committee report, just as if it were "Holy Writ". I asked him once, "Why this particular, meticulous care?", and he told me that what the Senate did was important. The public might not listen now, but they would learn later on. It was his opinion that what the Senate did was significant; what the Senate was doing could make a difference and, therefore, it was very important that a report issued by the Senate be carefully vetted and carefully considered.

George was a respectful man. He had a deep respect for the Commons and all it was meant to represent. He had a deep respect for the Senate and what it could stand for; he had a deep love of his country and what it does stand for.

George's passing is simply unacceptable. It is made tolerable only because his example as a gentleman and a friend burns so brightly. To his wife Jane and his family, the only consolation we can extend is that we share their loss and share their memories.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, we shall observe one minute of silence out of respect for our late colleague.

Honourable senators then stood in silent tribute.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, out of respect for the memory of our late colleague, the Honourable Senator George van Roggen, I move, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, June 9, 1992

PAGE

The Late Honourable George van Roggen
Tributes. Senator Frith 1624
Senator Murray 1625
Senator Stanbury 1625
Senator Macquarrie 1626
Senator Grafstein 1626

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 10, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

MOTION TO PROCEED TO ORDERS OF THE DAY ADOPTED

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): As honourable senators will recall, it was our intention to begin debate on Bill C-81 yesterday but, owing to the sad event which quite properly led to an early adjournment, we could only begin today.

Moreover, today at three o'clock, the Co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Conflict of Interests, which had been studying Bill C-43, will table the committee's report in the other place. It is only appropriate that it be tabled in the Senate at the same time. This, with approval, will be done by the other Co-chairman, Senator Stanbury.

Senator Stanbury has indicated that he will also be speaking on Bill C-81, the referendum bill. In order to have both events take place today, particularly the tabling of the report at three o'clock, I would propose the following order of business to allow this to happen.

After approval of an appropriate motion, the order dealing with Bill C-81 will be called immediately and, once the debate is adjourned, we will return to Routine Proceedings. No matter what stage we have reached, at three o'clock the Speaker will interrupt proceedings and call Presentation of Reports from Standing or Special Committees.

If that is agreeable and there is no suggestion of discussion on that introduction, I would ask leave to put the following motion. I move:

> That the Senate proceed immediately to the Orders of the Day, and that the Order for second reading of Bill C-81 be called;
>
> That following the debate on the said Bill, the Speaker shall call the items under Daily Routine of Business; and
>
> That notwithstanding the above provisions, at three o'clock, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and call Presentation of Reports from Standing or Special Committees, to permit the Co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the subject-matter of Bill C-43 to present the Final Report of the said Special Joint Committee.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

REFERENDUM BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE SUSPENDED

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government) moved second reading of Bill C-81, to provide for referendums on the Constitution of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, since the autumn of 1990, Canadians have been engaged in the process of consultation and discussion which we all hope will lead to agreement on constitutional reforms.

The Canada Round was launched unofficially in November 1990 with the appointment of the Citizens' Forum on Canada's Future headed by Mr. Keith Spicer. That Commission reported in June 1991.

In January of 1991, this Parliament appointed the Special Joint Committee on the Constitutional Amending Process, which later became known as the "Beaudoin-Edwards Committee". That committee, after public hearings, reported in June of 1991.

In September 1991, the government tabled, both here and in the House of Commons, a comprehensive set of constitutional proposals.

We referred these to a Special Joint Committee for a Renewed Canada which had been created in June 1991. That committee, the Beaudoin-Dobbie committee, reported in February 1992, again after extensive public consultations.

[Translation]

A series of conferences on a renewed Canada was held across the country starting in mid-January. The first conference held in Halifax from January 17 to 19 dealt with the distribution of powers. In the following weeks, other conferences on different subjects of the constitutional agenda took place. The second one was on institutional reform and it was held in Calgary from January 23 to 26. The conference on economic union was held in Montreal from January 31 to February 2, the one on identity, rights and values in Toronto from February 7 to 9 and finally the summary conference in Vancouver from February 14 to 16, 1992. These conferences brought together government representatives, experts and interested groups.

[English]

Several provinces have held public hearings either through legislative committees or government-appointed commissions, and these too have reported in the last little while.

Since March, federal, provincial and territorial ministers and aboriginal leaders have held 20 days of meetings in seven cities to try to negotiate the constitutional amendments that would emerge from the 1990-92 Canada Round. The Right Honourable the President of the Privy Council, Mr. Clark, is the Minister responsible for Constitutional Affairs. He has reported progress, but he and his provincial, territorial and aboriginal colleagues are meeting this week to try to resolve the major crucial issues that remain. They, and in particular their chairman Mr. Clark, have our admiration and gratitude, and, even at this late hour, our hopes for success—

Senator Frith: Even our prayers.

Senator Murray: They have even our prayers, as the Leader of the Opposition suggests, in the work that they have undertaken on behalf of the country. Whatever the outcome, the issues have not lacked public debate or discussion, and the one thing that it is safe to predict is that there will be much more public debate and discussion before any agreement is ratified by all the partners to the amending formula and proclaimed as the law of the land.

Bill C-81, which is now before us, would add another element to the Canada Round. It would make it possible for the federal government to hold referenda in one or more provinces, or in all of Canada, on any question relating to the Constitution. Honourable senators may recall that, in the Speech from the Throne delivered in in this chamber in May of 1991, we announced that enabling legislation would be brought forward to provide for greater participation of Canadian men and women in constitutional changes.

Honourable senators, I acknowledge from the start that I am not a great enthusiast—I do not think many of us here are—for referenda on complex issues in a country as diverse as ours.

• (1410)

Nevertheless, in arguing for the adoption of this bill, I would ask honourable senators to take into consideration several factors. First, while passage of this bill does not and could not make referenda a part of the formal amending process, it is worth noting that several democratic countries, including some federations, have referenda as part of their constitutional amendment process and have lived with those provisions quite successfully.

Second, and more to the point in the current context, at least three provinces—British Columbia, Alberta and Quebec—are now committed to holding referenda before any constitutional amendments emerging from the present Canada Round are ratified by their legislatures. Three other provinces—New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island—have statutes which permit the calling of referenda. Manitoba is obliged to hold extensive public hearings before proceeding with ratification of any constitutional amendment.

The possibility, indeed, the likelihood, of provincial referenda and extensive provincial consultations taking place before this Canada Round ends argues strongly in favour of giving the federal government the authority to hold a referendum in all or part of the country.

Third, the 1982 amending formula contains flaws that became all too obvious in the process of trying to ratify the Meech Lake Accord by 11 parliamentary assemblies—flaws that might still stymie the 1992 reform process. These flaws might possibly be alleviated to some extent by recourse to a referendum, even if it is only a consultative, non-binding referendum as provided for in this bill.

Honourable senators will know that, under the 1982 formula, first ministers may agree on one or several constitutional amendments to be presented to their legislatures; but, once the first legislature has ratified the amendment, the slightest change in text by the legislature of another province means that all the provinces that have already ratified must start over again with a new resolution or an amended resolution. To borrow a phrase from a well-known politician, "This is a recipe for chaos." The chances are very great that the country would find itself on a treadmill every time first ministers attempted substantial constitutional reform.

Senator Frith: It must have been tough for you to quote him.

Senator Murray: Not at all, in the proper context and circumstances.

Some people believe that the only solution to the problem is to provide for a referendum as part of the formal amending process. This change itself, as honourable senators know, would require unanimous agreement of the federal Parliament and the 10 provinces. Such agreement is highly unlikely given that there is no consensus on the key question of what would constitute success in a referendum—a simple majority of Canadians voting; a double majority consisting of majorities in Quebec and in the rest of Canada; majorities in seven provinces having 50 per cent of the population; majorities in each of four regions, or, as Senator Carney would have it, five regions.

The idea of four regional majorities in a referendum was put forward by the Beaudoin-Edwards Committee, and has been taken up by Mr. Chrétien and the federal Liberal Party even for purposes of the consultative referendum envisaged in this bill. It is, as honourable senators know, consistent with the 1971 Victoria amending formula which, like so many other constitutional reform proposals in this country, almost, but not quite, made it into law.

Senator Frith: You said that without choking up, too. Well done.

Senator Murray: The regional majority's formula, when proposed by the Beaudoin-Edwards committee, was immediately shot down by at least two provinces and is clearly a non-starter at present. When it came time to sit down and draft the bill, this is just one of the issues that complicated what seemed like a simple decision to ask for authority to call a referendum.

I acknowledge that the government will have to revisit this issue: What would constitute a win in any referendum, should it be decided to hold a referendum? The decision to hold a referendum has not been made. Nor do we know whether we would hold a national referendum or a referendum in one or several provinces, nor do we know what question or questions would be put to the people in such a referendum.

Only when these matters are decided can we realistically address the question of what kind of majority or majorities would constitute success. Such a definition would be a matter of political judgment for the government and other political parties. It must be borne in mind that the results of any referendum held under this act would be nonbinding on governments; it would be a consultative process only.

We did have several advantages when it came to drafting the bill. First, we have the Canada Elections Act, a statute with which Canadians have become familiar, with which they have long experience, and in which they have considerable confidence as an instrument of democracy.

This bill provides that any referendum would take place within the basic framework of the Canada Elections Act. The Chief Electoral Officer would have the same responsibility for the conduct of a referendum as he has for the conduct of a general election. He would be responsible for making the regulations under the Referendum Act, to adapt the Canada Elections Act process to a referendum.

The second advantage was that we had before us the referendum bill that was introduced by the Trudeau government in 1978. Although that bill was never passed, an explanatory document was tabled at the same time by the then Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, the honourable Marc Lalonde. Honourable senators will find many similarities between the 1978 bill and Bill C-81, which is now before us.

The bill provides that the wording of any referendum question would require the approval of Parliament. No referendum could be held unless Parliament agreed. As a further measure, the bill promotes an open and transparent referendum campaign by requiring the registration of anyone or any group intending to spend more than $5,000, and the disclosure of any contribution over $250 and the name of the contributor.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, you are well aware of the political debate on limiting spending in a referendum campaign.

Faced with the concerns expressed in many quarters, the government improved the bill so that the limits to which political parties are subject in a general election campaign would apply to referendum committees.

[Senator Murray.]

Some would have liked to go further and limit the number of committees that could take part in a referendum. The government is aware that this could simplify the process, but it is still impossible, for legal reasons considered from an administrative point of view, to include such a provision in the bill.

According to legal experts inside and outside the government, any restriction on the number of committees in a referendum campaign would contravene the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms concerning freedom of expression and association.

[English]

If ever there is a referendum, the government wishes to have as high a degree of confidence as is possible that the legislation governing such a referendum would withstand any court challenge. As a further measure to ensure fairness, the proponents of both sides of any referendum question will enjoy the right to an equal allocation of free broadcasting time by the Broadcast Arbitrator under the Canada Elections Act, using criteria set out in this legislation.

Any point of view on the referendum may be advanced via normal advertising. This is a matter to be decided between participants and broadcasters, subject to the governing CRTC regulations which require broadcasters to allocate all broadcast time during a referendum campaign on an equitable basis.

We also had the benefit of constructive suggestions from the opposition parties for improvements. This bill was improved during its passage through the House of Commons. I am informed that 20 of 36 amendments proposed by opposition parties were indeed accepted. The spending limits issue mentioned a few minutes ago has perhaps been the issue that was the subject of the most intense media interest, but there have been other changes as well.

[Translation]

Several changes that were made are worth mentioning. For instance, the bill was amended to ensure that leaders of the two recognized opposition parties in the House are provided with the proposed wording of the question and consulted on this wording at least three days before notice of the motion is given in the House.

Furthermore, the bill has been amended to limit contributions to referendum committees to sources of financing within the country. There was a concern about contributions from non-Canadians.

[English]

In another area, the government agreed to an amendment which clarifies the definition of a referendum expense. This change will ensure that the normal conduct of responsibilities of members of the Senate and the House of Commons will be specifically excluded from the definition of referendum expenses. This recognizes that parliamentarians must be able to continue in their normal role during any referendum.

It is important to mention that the bill now contains a provision that the text of the question be made available in aboriginal languages in appropriate locations.

As I have indicated, this legislation has been introduced to Parliament for one reason and one reason alone: To establish the means for the federal government to hold a referendum on constitutional reform should one ever be needed.

[Translation]

The legislation does not say the referendum will be held, nor does it specify what the question will be. There has been no decision yet in this respect.

The bill is therefore a precautionary measure designed to give the federal government the ability to hold a referendum on constitutional reform, if necessary and desirable.

[English]

We do not know under what circumstances it might be appropriate to hold a consultative referendum on the constitution; perhaps to obtain popular confirmation of an agreement between the federal government and some or all of the provinces, perhaps to help us break an intergovernmental deadlock on one or more issues, perhaps to obtain an expression of the popular will on a constitutional proposal put forward by the federal government.

The referendum, as I said, is not part of our formal amending process but, as I told the Senate several months ago in the course of Question Period, it might be used, if necessary, to help expedite that process.

In summary, this is a fair, practical and essential piece of legislation that I commend for your favourable consideration. It provides Canada with another means to consult the people on the complex business of constitutional reform and I urge all honourable senators to support it.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I would first like to express my gratitude to colleagues for accommodating a rather difficult schedule this afternoon. I only hope my voice lasts and you are able to continue to listen to me for as long as you may have to this afternoon.

• (1430)

Honourable senators, I want to thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for his introduction of this important bill. I wish to add some brief comments before this bill is referred to committee for more indepth study and possible amendment.

At the outset, I want to say that I support the principle of the bill. I support the idea of giving Canadians an opportunity to make their opinions known during the process of amending the Constitution.

Before dealing with the principle of the bill further, I would address my remarks to the development of this bill and its recent consideration in the other place.

Senators will remember—and the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate has reminded us of it—sitting in this place, listening intently to the Governor General read the Speech from the Throne approximately a year ago. I must admit to being pleased when I heard him mention that legislation enabling the use of national referenda for constitutional amendment would be introduced. My sense of gratification arose for two reasons: One, I had already been convinced about the merits of referenda and plebiscites; and, two, I had seen my leader, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, put forward the referendum as one of the central tenets of his constitutional position last April in Montreal. The wisdom of the approach had been accepted.

My satisfaction was soon replaced by disappointment as, month after month, the government sat on its commitment to bring forward legislation. During that time, while the Order Paper looked forward to the introduction of a referendum bill, members of the Liberal Party utilized any forum at our disposal to push for the introduction of the legislation.

After a year, many of us thought the government had changed its mind. Indeed, both Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Clark expressed reversals of their opinion: First announcing their support in May 1991; then backing away from that promise in the fall; renewing the promise in November; and backing away yet again before finally introducing the bill in May of 1992.

As we all know, the bill was finally introduced, but so late. From my perspective as a senator who cares about Parliament's right and obligation to consider and debate legislation, I was disappointed the government did not leave more time for the airing of such monumental legislation.

Any bill of this nature requires thorough consideration. It requires public airing. It seems ironic that, when the government sent Senator Beaudoin and others—who I must say did an excellent job—all around the country to gather opinions from the public on constitutional ideas, they omitted the consideration of the method for ultimate public consultation.

Honourable senators know that the provisions in this bill constitute a departure from our present style of government. That being the case, the bill warrants serious study and discussion. It should have been in the public domain for much more time than has been the case. Perhaps it would have been appropriate to have appointed a special joint committee to conduct an initial study. More time for indepth study by experts of all kinds should have been provided. Just ask the witnesses who appeared before the Commons' committee if they consider they had sufficient time to prepare their analyses.

I am disappointed not only because the government held back its proposal for referenda for so long, I am equally displeased that the government chose to cut off debate prematurely in the other place by using timing allocation. I just hope the rush has not left us with a technically flawed bill. At first glance, I must say it appears that it has.

This leads me back to our consideration of this bill in the Senate. As I said, I support the principle of the bill. There should be a place for national referenda in any proposed constitutional reform. It is an important tool for public participation in national decision making.

However, I do have some reservations about some of the specific provisions in this bill. For instance, under the legislation, the federal government would not be required to hold a referendum. This bill leaves the government with the discretion to call a referendum in the entire country, just particular provinces, or not at all.

It seems to me that we are in the process of considering major constitutional reform. This bill is designed to seek public input on major constitutional reform. If the government does not intend to use the referendum established by this bill in such a vital case, then why does the government bring it forward? Why bring it forward now in the middle of the reform process if not to employ it? What is the motivation? I certainly hope we are not wasting our time or that it will be seen as a bluff that some province will be tempted to call.

There are other aspects of this bill that deserve further consideration. I know that financing has been dealt with in the other place, but I still require some convincing about spending limits, contribution limits and the defining of expenses.

In the face of the entire constitutional debate and the referendum bill, the money issue may seem minor; however, I think you will agree that the spending of money goes to the heart of fairness, whether it be an election campaign or a referendum. Fairness must be the central concern in drafting, considering and passing referendum legislation.

Fairness must be absolutely assured from the very beginning of the referendum process. That means this legislation must be anticipatory—it must anticipate problems and include the means of dealing with them before they jeopardize the entire process. If we are to have a national referendum on constitutional proposals, it must be perceived as being absolutely fair in every sense; otherwise, even after the vote has been taken and a result is announced, there will not be a strong sense of legitimacy to carry that decision through to public acceptance of the constitutional package under consideration. The public must have faith in the system before they put any stock in the result.

We have a history of peaceful political action in Canada. This history is as a result of our ancestors' faith in the democratic system of government. Even when activists did not agree with decisions, they respected those decisions because they knew they had been reached by just means. This is part of living in a democratic society. It is a fundamental precept of our civilization.

This lesson should be heeded when we are building the referendum process. We are talking here about the prospect of submitting proposals to the people through a referendum. We would be using this device because we want to gain the consensus or the approval of the Canadian people of a new constitutional proposal; but, the integrity of the process must be assured. If, for one minute, Canadians in general or in one or more of the regions of the country perceive the referendum process as being unfair, or if they perceive it as having been bought off by big financial interests, then we will not have a result upon which we can rely. No matter who wins or who loses the referendum, the other side will claim the result is tainted because it has been maneuvered or manipulated by financial interests. If or when that scenario unfolds, not only will you have a result you cannot rely on, you will have failure and possible chaos of unknown proportions.

[Senator Stanbury.]

I do not mean to sound overly dramatic, but the perception of fairness and equality is central to the acceptance of the referendum question and to the result of a vote on it. In the final analysis, the rules of the game are just as important as the players and the sport.

Beyond the central issue of fairness, I am also interested in the relationship between the mechanics of this legislation and the Elections Canada mechanics. In committee, I will be interested in hearing more about this relationship as it will affect the appointment of deputy returning officers; poll clerks; enumerators; revising officers; scrutineers or their equivalent. All are important in ensuring the integrity of the referendum.

What about the enumeration process and the list that might also be used for a subsequent election? I am interested to know a little more about how this process has been set up and how it will play itself out.

● (1440)

Another question will be with respect to the Lortie recommendations and the delay in the electoral boundaries readjustment currently under consideration. Results of the referendum vote will be reported on the basis of existing constituents. Are there any implications for a referendum or for a subsequent election?

There are other considerations as well. If I am not mistaken, there is much in the management of the referendum that is not included in this bill. There will need to be quite extensive regulations. Have such regulations already been prepared and will we have an opportunity to look at them, or at least know their intent? I would hope that the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee will be given the opportunity to look closely at the bill for any technical flaws that might have been overlooked in the other place because of their rush to deal with the bill and their concentration on larger, more substantive matters. This is a role that I am proud to say both the Senate as a whole and the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee in particular has played successfully from the start.

I do hope we can improve this bill. There are many apparent flaws that will require justification or correction. I am sure that honourable senators will agree that one of our basic duties as senators, representatives and leaders is to bring Canadians more closely into the political process. This bill has the potential of facilitating greatly our fulfilment of that responsibility.

The introduction of the referendum gives a unique opportunity to engage Canadians directly in the affairs of the country. We have to approach the inclusion of referenda as an opportunity to educate when the national issues we face are of particular importance. As in our current constitutional debate, the public is more often willing to learn, to discuss, to make judgments, to take part in the consideration and take responsibilities for the outcome.

The inclusion of referenda, in other words, encourages good citizenship. I have always been an advocate of greater citizen participation in national affairs. Our population is certainly now sophisticated enough to make reasoned and responsible judgments. The referendum is specifically suited to consideration of constitutional change. Canadians no longer want to leave such a momentous decision to the politicians alone. Yes, they agree it is unrealistic to make all decisions directly, and indeed they look for leadership from politicians in many ways, but the public thinks the Constitution is so important and fundamental to them as Canadians that they should have the opportunity and the right to control the outcome in a more direct way.

As politicians we have to understand that there is now a closer relationship between Canadians and the Constitution. This is largely as a result of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which makes the Constitution of more personal concern to all Canadians. Canadians see their stake in the Constitution and understand its fundamental importance as never before. After all, their leaders have given them no rest from the subject for many years. The public wants a direct influence, and I have faith that Canadian citizens will rise to the challenge, take responsibility and vote in favour of what is right for themselves and for their country.

Thank you, honourable senators, for your attention. I will support the motion, which I anticipate Senator Murray will be making, that this bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for further study at this time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Stanbury and the Leader of the Government for their explanation of Bill C-81. Rather than repeat, even in a general way, what they have covered, I would like to turn my attention to one particular aspect of this legislation; namely, spending limits.

Before I do that I would like to parenthetically make a short comment on what I consider a rather silly expression; namely, the "Canada Round". I realize it is meant to imply something; I don't know what—something patriotic, I suppose. It seems to me that any time a country is examining its constitution, that examination must always involve the country as a whole. Any time Canada is engaged in the amendment of its Constitution has to be, it seems to me, a Canada Round. All parts of Canada are involved when the Constitution is amended. That all that I have to say parenthetically.

The reason I want to concentrate on spending limits is simply this: My fear is that the spending regime proposed in Bill C-81 is a cancer which can metastasize and spread to the whole electoral system and eventually kill any meaningful limit on election expenses. Before pursuing that particular line of thought, or as a way of pursuing it, it might be useful to stand back for a moment and examine how the notion of spending limits came to be. We tend to take them for granted but they are, after all, a relatively recent development which was not even given serious consideration, let alone legislative expression, until the 1960s.

Until 1974, there were absolutely no limits on the amount of money a candidate or party could spend in the course of an election campaign. The only limitation was the ability to raise funds. It is true that several private member's bills were introduced in the 1930s and again in the 1940s to limit candidates' expenditures, but it was not until the early 1960s that election expenses became of general concern.

It was the four general elections held between 1957 and 1963, each successively more expensive, which provided the impetus to seriously examine the question for the first time. In 1964, the government appointed the Committee on Election Expenses, chaired by Alphonse Barbeau. The committee recommended: One, media advertising by parties and candidates be limited to four weeks prior to the election. Two, candidates' advertising budgets be held to 10 cents per voter. Three, an outright prohibition on third party paid advertising. Each of the three are characterized by the word "advertising".

In October 1970, a special committee of the House of Commons was struck to examine elections and expenses. Its recommendations went beyond the Barbeau Report, calling for limits not only on advertising expenses but on the total election expenses of candidates and their parties.

In May 1972, legislation to control election expenses was introduced but it died on the Order Paper. The government tried again in 1974 with Bill C-203, the Election Expenses Act, and this time it was successful. That is the legislative beginning of the whole concept of the control on election expenses. The essence of Bill C-203 was laid out on behalf of the government during the second reading by the then President of the Privy Council and now senator, the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen. This is what he said:

> This Bill really exemplifies an integrated approach to electoral reform in four major areas .... the first is the limit on the expenditures by candidates and parties. Second is the limitation on the duration of the campaign. Third is full and complete disclosure of revenues and expenditures of political parties and candidates; and finally, there is government assistance in meeting the cost of election campaigns.

That is a scheme with a great deal of internal integrity and logic, it seems to me. There was an overall scheme to limit expenditures and to involve the state in assisting candidates to meet the expenses of an election campaign. Obviously the two go together. If we are to assist them, there has to be some limit on the amount.

● (1450)

As a part of the scheme, tax deductions were permitted. The objective was to have more people give a little rather than a few people giving a lot. Otherwise, there is the risk of at least an appearance of undue influence being exercised after an election because of the size of the donation made.

It was on July 10, 1973 that Senator MacEachen made that statement. On that same day, another one of our colleagues replied on behalf of the Official Opposition to the minister's statement. Then Member of Parliament Michael Forrestall commended Senator MacEachen "for his open-minded approach", and in supporting the bill said:

> We must remove from the minds of the Canadian public any remnant of doubt about the way in which Members of Parliament conduct themselves in public life and public business.

However, third-party advocacy remained problematic. Special interest groups could promote or oppose a particular candidate if they could establish that they were doing so in order to promote a particular issue. As Senator MacEachen said at the time

> This is a rather delicate aspect of the protection of the rights of individual groups to exercise their ability to influence public opinion.

Unfortunately, this compromise quickly proved unworkable. At page 311, Volume 1 of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing we are told:

> It soon became apparent that enforcing this good faith defence was problematic. Not only was there uncertainty about what kinds of activities were entitled to the defence, but court decisions extending it to explicitly partisan messages that included no articulated policy position. For example, an advertising banner flown from an airplane during a by-election with the message "O.H.C. Employees 767 C.U.P.E. vote but not Liberal" was interpreted by the court as a legitimate attempt to oppose the government's anti-inflation program, even though it did not specify any policy position. (R. v. Roach 1978). Within five years, the chief electoral officer had good reason to warn Parliament that the law on independent spending was inadequate and had the potential to undermine the effectiveness of the spending limits for candidates and parties.

In 1983 the Canada Elections Act was amended. No longer could third parties directly oppose or support a political party or candidate. They could, however, promote a particular issue so long as they did not mention a candidate or party.

Less that one year later, the amendment was successfully challenged in the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, which ruled that the government had not justified this limitation on freedom of expression. The government chose not to appeal the decision and Elections Canada decided not to enforce the prohibition.

[Senator Frith.]

In an interesting twist, the Lortie Commission concluded that in 1988, most of the third party intervention on free trade was solely issue oriented, and thus "would have been within bounds of the legislation as amended in 1983." That is at page 337 of the Lortie Commission report.

Therefore, honourable senators, this is where we now stand. We have an act, the Canada Elections Act, which places limits on third-party advertising during election campaigns. However, Elections Canada is not enforcing that limitation because of the 1984 decision of a lower Alberta court, and the Government of Canada has not appealed that court ruling. Why? Apparently it is satisfied with the outcome.

I say that because what other conclusion can we reach? It is because of the Alberta court decision that Elections Canada is not enforcing the act. The act is there, provisions are there, but they are not being enforced. Elections Canada states that the reason is that Alberta court decision. Elections Canada is treating that decision as a final judicial ruling.

What if the government had appealed and lost? The practical result would have been the same: There would have been no restriction on third-party advertising. If the government had won on appeal, Elections Canada would have once again enforced that section of the act.

There having been no appeal the law of the land is there, but it is not being enforced. If the government had been interested in limiting the role of third parties, what was there to lose in appealing the decision? The worst that could happen would be the situation that we now have with Elections Canada not enforcing that provision.

When appearing before the legislative committee on Bill C-81, the bill before us, the Government House Leader in the other place, the Honourable Harvie Andre stated, "I am told we didn't appeal because we didn't think we would win." In refusing to appeal, however, Mr. Andre has substituted the certainty of Elections Canada not enforcing the provision with the possibility or probability of having it found unconstitutional. He "did not think" they would win. Elections Canada is not saying, "We don't think we can enforce this provision." They are simply not enforcing it.

Turning to Bill C-81, the government is once again showing, in my opinion, that it is not interested in measures that would create a more level playing field in the political process; that is, in the sense that it is money which will talk, or perhaps even more importantly, will be perceived as talking.

Subclause 3(3) of Bill C-81, the bill before us, provides that any referendum question shall be expressed as a "yes" or "no" proposition. Instead of providing for overall spending limits for each side of the question, the bill, in clause 13, provides for the formation of any number of referendum committees, each of which, by virtue of clause 15, is limited to 56.4 cents in expenses per name appearing on the list of electors in the electoral districts in which that elector has registered. There is no limit on the number of committees that may be formed on either side of the question in any district. There is no limit on the number of districts for which a committee may register. As far as I can tell, there is nothing to prevent a committee from registering in every electoral district in Canada, thus obtaining the maximum expense ceiling, and then spending all its contributions in one or a few districts.

Subclause 13(2)(b) provides that a referendum committee must, in its application for registration:

> . . . indicate the electoral districts in which the committee intends—

—and I underline the word "intends"—

> . . .to support or oppose the referendum question.

● (1500

Subsection 16(2) provides only that contributions to the committee > may be used to pay referendum expenses incurred by the committee during the referendum period.

There is no restriction on where those contributions are spent—I was going to say, "so long as they are spent in Canada", but that may not even be the case.

Subsection 16(2) provides that contributions to a referendum committee may be used to pay referendum expenses. There is a long definition of the term "referendum expenses" on pages 2 and 3 of the bill. I will not read it you to, since you have it before you and it is quite lengthy, but in that definition there is nothing that restricts them to expenses incurred in Canada, let alone in a particular electoral district.

I see nothing in the legislation that would prevent a committee from incurring expenses by purchasing advertising time on cross-boarder television stations or by taking out advertisements in foreign periodicals.

In committee, Mr. André argued that it was impossible to provide spending limits under two umbrella groups even though that was exactly what was done in Quebec in 1980. I am quoting Mr. André from the committee records at page 1:27.

> We've repeatedly indicated that it would be contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to oblige all persons who wish to participate in the referendum campaign to participate only through yes and no committees. This is the best legal advice we've been given. We accept that legal advice. It would be extremely disruptive if a successful challenge under the Charter were brought during a referendum campaign.

Now, is that a reason, or is it an excuse? I leave you with that question.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, pursuant to the Order of the Senate made earlier this day, I must interrupt the proceedings to call Presentation of Reports from Standing or Special Committees.

Debate suspended.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CONFLICT OF INTERESTS

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table in both official languages the report of the Special Joint Committee on Conflict of Interests respecting its examination of the subject matter of Bill C-43, an Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of office of Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interests Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I would request leave to address a few words to the honourable senators now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Stanbury: Thank you, honourable senators. You will recall that late last fall you created a special joint committee. The mandate you gave the committee was to undertake a comprehensive review of the subject matter of bill C-43.

The senators whom you named to that committee were Senators Balfour, De Bané, Grimard, Kelleher, Olson, Oliver, and myself. That committee has worked solidly for six months, hearing the most competent witnesses and examining conflict regimes in the provinces, and in the United Kingdom and the United States.

Bill C-43 was prepared by the government for discussion purposes. We immediately found it too complex, too rigid and likely to create a large new bureaucracy; but it did bring together the fruit of a number of earlier efforts, such as Allan J. MacEachen's paper of 1973, the Sharp-Starr Task Force report, Justice Parker's study of the Stevens case, and earlier draft bills. So it was extremely helpful to our work.

In the result, we opted in favour of a regime which I think reflects the political culture of Canada. It is a synthesis of the regimes now in place in Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Alberta and British Columbia. While we have followed their pattern, I believe that we have improved on it significantly.

All of these provinces have an officer of the legislature, called by various names, who advises and gives comfort to the members concerning the arrangement of their financial affairs to avoid situations of conflict.

We have chosen the name "Jurisconsult" for the person who will be appointed by both Houses of Parliament to oversee the regime. The name Jurisconsult, while somewhat strange to me, is an ancient name which calls up the exact mixture of advice and discipline which will be that officer's function.

All members of both Houses—including ministers and parliamentary secretaries—will make full private disclosure of the pecuniary interests of their immediate family, to the extent of their actual knowledge and belief.

They will then individually meet with the Jurisconsult to consider any potential conflicts and have the advantage of the Jurisconsult's advice as to how they might arrange their affairs so as to ensure that their private activities do not conflict with their public duties in such a way as to benefit, or appear to benefit, them or their families.

Of course, the Jurisconsult must be a person of impeccable reputation who has and can maintain the confidence of Parliament. The provinces which have this office have been extremely wise and have chosen such excellent individuals for this post that we were unable to unearth a single complaint against any one of them. Journalists interviewed were also unanimous in their admiration.

After the member has made the disclosure statement, discussed its contents with the Jurisconsult and reacted positively to the Jurisconsult's advice, he or she will be given a certificate of the Jurisconsult to the effect that the disclosure obligations under the act have been fulfilled.

That certificate is binding on the Jurisconsult and is something upon which the member can rely as he goes about both his private and parliamentary business.

The report makes it clear that there should be no restriction on members of either house in carrying on normal business or a profession so long as the activity is handled in such a way as to ensure that no conflict between private interests and public duty will be resolved other than in favour of the public duty.

Honourable senators will be aware of the difficulty that members of both houses have experienced in getting clear-cut, reliable opinions on the business activities presently allowed under the Parliament of Canada Act. We decided to recommend withdrawal of the existing sections of the act which deal with conflicts and add instead a new part of the Parliament of Canada Act dealing more clearly with this area of concern. We were also conscious of the confusion which has existed in the Criminal Code sections dealing with crimes by public officials. We have therefore proposed several amendments to the Criminal Code.

The next step in the relationship between the member and the Jurisconsult is that they collaborate on preparing a public disclosure statement to be released by the Jurisconsult. This statement will not include any figures but simply a description of the class of asset or liability. Excluded will be exempt private assets, such as house, car, and other personal assets and matters so small or of such a nature as to give rise to no conflict. That statement will be made available for public scrutiny by the Jurisconsult.

[Senator Stanbury.]

● (1510)

The report also recommends that there should be some "obligations" which give guidance as to how a member should conduct himself or herself. Naturally, these are somewhat more stringent for ministers and parliamentary secretaries. Again, the member always has access to the Jurisconsult for advice as to whether a particular action will offend those obligations. The Jurisconsult's written opinion will give guidance, and it will be binding on the Jurisconsult.

The final aspect of the Jurisconsult's function is to deal with complaints. If a complaint is made that a member is in breach of some obligation under the Parliament of Canada Act, the Jurisconsult will review his file and decide whether the complaint has merit. Of course, if the complaint is criminal in nature, he will immediately suspend his consideration and leave the matter for the courts to decide.

If he decides that the complaint has merit, then he has the power to set up an inquiry under the Inquiries Act; make a determination, which he must do within 90 days; recommend a sanction if the complaint is justified; and submit his findings to the relevant House of Parliament which must dispose of it within 15 sitting days.

Parliament, and ultimately the people of Canada, are the final judges. Parliament appoints the Jurisconsult. The Parliament of Canada Act is the legislative authority. Parliament implements any sanctions. A committee of Parliament will retain the power to review the operation of the regime at any time.

When we began the committee hearings, I said that I wanted a non-partisan, unanimous report at the conclusion of our deliberations. That, however, was a faint hope. With 14 Members of the House of Commons from three parties and seven members of the Senate from two parties, and with early meetings sounding like issuances from the Tower of Babel, my wishes seemed like foolish optimism. But, honourable senators, that is what we have: A unanimous report supported by members of all parties.

I commend the report to you for your consideration.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, debate adjourned.

REFERENDUM BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

Leave having been given to resume Orders of the Day:

Resuming the debate from earlier this day on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray for the second reading of Bill C-81, to provide for referendums on the Constitution of Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at the end of reel one, or as the curtain descended on Act I, we heard a quote from Mr. Andre, who said:

> . . . it would be contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to oblige all persons who wish to participate in the referendum campaign to participate only through yes and no committees. This is the best legal advice we've been given. We accept that legal advice. It would be extremely disruptive if a successful challenge under the Charter were brought during a referendum campaign.

Honourable senators may remember that my question related to whether the government really wants to have spending limits continued as part of the election law of Canada. I then posed the question: Has Mr. Andre given us a reason or an excuse?

When he was asked by Mr. Gauthier to share with committee members those legal opinions, he, I suppose predictably, declined. When asked by Mr. Ouellet whether the government had considered seeking the advice of the Supreme Court of Canada, he replied, at page 1:56, as follows:

> Every single piece of legislation that comes along has to be looked at to see that it is legal, lawful, within the Constitution and other laws. We don't go running off to the courts every time, saying please tell us whether this is legal.

That is fair enough, but we certainly do not expect Mr. Andre to run down Wellington Street and up the stairs of the Supreme Court every time he receives an unwelcome legal opinion from the Department of Justice.

However, honourable senators, the stakes in this instance are somewhat higher than they would be for "every single piece of legislation", as Mr. Andre described it. Here, we have a process that could determine either the rebirth or the death of our country, one which goes to the very root of our whole democratic system. The right to vote is a shallow right if there are not clearly outlined principles reflected in the process of taking any vote. In this instance, it seems to me that the exercise of consulting the Supreme Court would have been most worthwhile.

The failure of the government to include substantive spending limits in Bill C-81 has two important consequences. The first is that, if the expenses of the winning side are significantly greater than those of the loser, the legitimacy of the process may be called into question. As a matter of fact, when this bill was before the legislative committee in the other place one of the witnesses was Peter Aucoin of the Department of Political Science, Dalhousie University. He was also the Director of Research for the Lortie Commission. He is what, in court, we would call "a qualified expert witness".

In the course of his testimony, as reported at page 2:33 of the Monday, May 25, 1992 edition of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of Legislative Committee on Bill C-81 he said:

> It seems to me that a case can be made that the issue of fairness is of such central importance in the democratic process that a regime that included a yes committee and a no committee could be acceptable to the courts under certain circumstances.

That is important if we feel tempted to say that an important aspect of our whole regime, namely, spending limits, is or might be unconstitutional because of a decision of one provincial court.

Here, an expert in the field, at least raises the point. I think many would agree that these limits are reasonable in a democratic society, and might easily be constitutional under the provisions of section 1.

In the view of Professor Aucoin, the issue was of such central importance because, as he stated at page 2:35:

> . . . if this committee and Parliament cannot resolve the issue of how to ensure a fair process, a process that is also seen to be fair and legitimate up front, then, as I mentioned in conclusion, the utility of the referenda as a mechanism of public consultation is seriously in question. One could imagine, for example, not only people disputing the outcome of a referendum but a mass boycott by one side of that referendum. Clearly, this would not leave this country, in the midst of the constitutional turmoil that it's now in, in a very satisfactory position.

The first consequence of the government's failure to settle whether or not this extremely important principle of spending limits is or is not constitutional. We have the possibility of a result which would not be unacceptable to many Canadians because of the process. That would be an ironic, a frustrating, a depressing possible result, when the whole purpose of the referendum, its raison d'être, is to determine public opinion. And if, because of the process, the result is immediately in question, the whole exercise could be a waste.

The second consequence of the government's approach is that there is an unmistakable drift away from strict spending limits during election campaigns.

Towards the end of his testimony, Professor Aucoin said:

> If spending limits were not included in the plebiscite bill, or were clearly ineffective, then it's possible . . . that there may be a spillover to a new Canada Elections Act in that regard.
>
> . . . if spending limits went not because they were successfully challenged in the courts but because the Parliament of Canada rejected them for so-called third parties or independent expenditures, then it seems to me the legitimacy, the integrity of spending limits for parties quickly disappears.

To appreciate that this is a very serious and real concern, again we need only to turn to the words of Harvie Andre before the legislative committee. On May 22, he said:

> Unless the Canada Elections Act is changed, we are now in a circumstance, because of court decisions, where third parties are not limited in election campaigns. We may well find that after the next election spending limits are not going to be possible in terms of general elections, even though those are quite different.
>
> . . . It may well be, depending on how third parties participate in the next election campaign, barring that we haven't made changes in the meantime, that we may find them not too workable there.

As best I can make out, Mr. Andre himself foresees serious difficulties in controlling the activities of third parties during election campaigns.

For those who are concerned, because of advertising campaigns by third party action groups, that there is something undemocratic about a regime that limits election expenses of candidates and of third parties, I say it is not undemocratic. If we in Canada are to have a regime of spending limits, we cannot say to a candidate and to a political party, "Only your expenses are limited, because we consider that a desirable goal; but third parties can spend what they wish." How can that possibly be perceived as fair or even logical?

It could easily be that spending limits for political parties and candidates as contained in the Canada Elections Act will become absolutely meaningless. If I am a candidate in an election, I am limited. My opponent is limited. But if somebody can come along as a third party and spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on behalf of that other candidate, no matter how it is cloaked, the whole system is a joke.

The purpose of spending limits is the promotion of fairness in the electoral process. There is no fairness where the views of the wealthy overwhelm the opinions of those with fewer financial resources. Expenditure limits that exempt third parties, the very ones with those resources, are no limits at all as far as fairness is concerned.

On that subject, the members of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing also expressed a similar conclusion at page 327:

> If individuals or groups were permitted to run parallel campaigns augmenting the spending of certain candidates or parties, those candidates or parties would have an unfair advantage over others not similarly supported. At the same time, candidates or parties who were the targets of spending by individuals or groups opposed to their election would be put at a disadvantage compared with those who were not targeted.

I interrupt the quote to say we know about the experiences of some candidates in the United States who were "targeted".

> Should such activity become widespread, the purpose of the legislation would be destroyed, the reasonably equal opportunity the legislation seeks to establish would vanish, and the overall goal of restricting the role of money in unfairly influencing election outcomes would be defeated.

[Senator Frith.]

According to the commissioners in the report, the Alberta court decision has created a "gaping hole in our existing framework" which "is patently unfair".

I think "gaping hole" is an understatement. That decision has, for all practical purposes, destroyed the system.

In the United States, where there are no restrictions on third party election expenses, PACs, political action committees, spent over $20 million U.S, in the 1987-88 presidential and congressional elections.

We all remember the infamous Willie Horton ads during the 1988 presidential race, and what damage they did to the campaign of one of the candidates. They were an example of PAC advertising and found a prominent place in the Lortie report, as stated at page 334:

> Michael Dukakis' campaign was hurt by explosive ads highlighting a felon named Willie Horton, who, while on a prison furlough program in Massachusetts, had escaped and brutally raped a Maryland woman. These commercials, designed to question Dukakis' record on crime, were produced and aired not by the Bush campaign, but by two independent expenditure groups [PACs], and were widely shown on television news programs.
>
> . . . most voters did not know that the PAC 'Americans for Bush' had no connection with George Bush's campaign for the presidency in 1988.

This past weekend, I was at a social function with someone who had been quite closely connected with the 1988 Bush campaign. In the course of the conversation, we were talking about Mr. Schwartz's famous book on responsive chords and the ad that was run in the Johnson campaign against Goldwater. Some of you may remember this famous ad.

The allegations had been made that Mr. Goldwater might very well be too quick on the button to start a war. The ad showed a little girl in a field of daisies. She was picking one in the he-loves-me-he-loves-me-not style. Behind her suddenly rose a big mushroom cloud from the explosion of an atomic bomb.

The caption, as I recall it, was to the effect, "Don't let this happen in America—vote Democrat".

You may remember, if you were around then, a metaphorical nuclear explosion from the Republicans about the unfairness of this ad. Of course, the Democrats said: "We did not mention your name; we did not even mention the word 'Republican'. We did not mention the name 'Goldwater'." The point being made in that book was that the responsive chord had been established and there was no necessity to spell it out.

The person I was with, who had been involved in the Bush campaign, said that that was the first attack ad. I said, "Yes, leading to the Willie Horton attack ad in the Bush campaign by President Bush." He said, "No, we knew about his record in Massachusetts. We did refer to it, but it was a PAC, a third party that had plenty of money and entered the fray. It was the PAC, not the political party involved in the election campaign, that spent the money on the Willie Horton campaign." It spent a lot of money, so much so that, as I recall it, Mr. Atwater said that by the time they were through people were believing that Willie Horton was on the Democratic ticket. That was an example of PAC advertising and it was referred to in the Lortie report at page 334, as I have said.

In Canada, third party advertising played a major role in the 1988 election also. The Lortie Commission, appointed by this government, found that for every dollar of the entire advertising budget of the Progressive Conservative Party, groups and individuals promoting free trade spent 77 cents in advertising. Those opposing free trade spent only 13 cents for each dollar of the total advertising budgets of the two opposition parties. That is at page 338 of the Lortie Commission report. That this advertising had an impact on the election has now to be acknowledged. The Lortie Commission recommends that third parties, be they individuals or groups, be limited to $1,000 in election expenses for both direct and indirect messages and that there be no pooling of funds.

That is not an old, out-of-date, obsolete report. That is a royal commission report on a study that was probably the most comprehensive ever carried out on the process of electoral democracy. So, although we have this recommendation, we also have the words of the government, in the person of Mr. Andre, which sees in the future no limitations on the activities of third parties during election campaigns.

Lortie, after years of study, makes the recommendation that third parties be limited to $1,000 in election expenses, but we are told by Mr. Andre, as a prediction—and I understand why he is making the prediction—that we may end up in an election campaign with no such limits.

We are not in an election campaign, but we are debating a bill that we ought to identify as providing for what can be a malignant cluster of cells that can grow in such a way as to destroy our whole present electoral regime in one very important element.

I have been a bit long on this, I know, but that is because I am provoked whenever I hear third party advertising being referred to casually as if it were just another aspect of our electoral system which can be adjusted. I am provoked when I hear that any limitations on third party activity is anti-democratic. I cannot understand how such statements can be allowed to pass so easily. In fact it is breathtaking. We do not have to have a regime of limited spending. We can have a regime with no limits on spending. Many democracies have them. But if we are going to have one with limited spending, to say that to limit third party spending is anti-democratic is so illogical as to be breathtaking, because you cannot have one with the other. You cannot have the regime and have unlimited third party spending.

What we see in Bill C-81 then is an implicit rejection of the Lortie Commission, which clearly sounded the alarm, and of the proposition that fairness is a vital element in the electoral process.

Although, as Senator Stanbury clearly indicated, we are going to vote in favour of this legislation, I have given another reason why we cannot support it enthusiastically. Essentially, all I have tried to do here today is to join with the many people who are sounding the alarm on the possible long-term effects of the provisions of the bill before us on the question of election spending. The reason for our lack of enthusiasm has, I believe, been best expressed by Robert Dahl, a leading political scientist of this century. I am sure his words have been quoted often enough that most of you have either heard them or heard the principle involved.

The quotation can be found in the Lortie Report at page 325:

> If income, wealth, and economic position are . . . political resources, > and if they are distributed unequally, then how can citizens be political equals? And if citizens cannot be political equals, how is democracy to exist?

—and they are—

In other words, where does that leave democracy?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to make a few comments on Bill C-81. I am aware that the house leaders had discussions earlier today. I will respect the commitment made by our house leader with respect to the process of this bill, but I have to intervene at this stage because I think we are being dragged into a process that involves a great deal of danger. Senator Frith has pointed out some of the dangers with regard to what will happen to the electoral process in respect of campaigning and limitations on funding by various people in the electoral process.

I also believe, honourable senators, that we should recognize what we have involved ourselves in in this process. It started as one thing several months ago, but it has degenerated, at least in my view, into the so-called constitutional crisis that some people allege we have now. Quite frankly, I do not believe there are any great problems in this country that can be solved with changes to the Constitution. In my opinion, those problems fade into insignificance vis-a-vis the economic problems which have come from the mismanagement of the government of Canada. It is that simple.

• (1540)

Senator Murray: I am wondering what happened to the rule of relevance.

Senator Frith: I have never been able to find any authority for that.

Senator Olson: The rule of relevance is that we are setting in place a referendum mechanism that will lead to the federal government and the major provinces in this country riding roughshod over the western provinces. That is pretty relevant to the debate respecting Bill C-81.

The constitutional talks taking place in the the building where the Department of External Affairs is located are about to collapse. Several of the leading lights there will say, "We must come to an agreement on a package by 6 o'clock tonight, or we are just wasting our time." That is I heard the Minister of Health and Welfare say earlier today. That is also what Jim Horsman, the Deputy Premier of Alberta, said earlier today. He said that if we did not reach an agreement by 6 o'clock, we might as well call a spade a spade and move on to a process which would be more useful to the Canadian people. That, honourable senators, is why it is relevant to talk about this bill today.

I do not think Canadians in western Canada deserve that kind of short shrift by this government and this Parliament. If those meetings collapse, all of the hopes and aspirations for readjusting and redistributing the power base in Canada that the western provinces have been asking for through a Triple-E Senate will collapse.

What will then happen is the federal government will put a package together. I do not know what will be in it, but I do know that the Triple-E Senate will not! That is certain. If you can believe anything the Minister of Constitutional Affairs, the Honourable Joe Clark, has said now or in the past few weeks, the Triple-E Senate will not be in that package. The government will then put that package to a referendum under the provisions of Bill C-81. They will force it through Parliament. That is what is unfolding.

Senator Murray: How? Force what through?

Senator Olson: Let us not kid ourselves. You will be using the 7-50 formula to put it through. Do you not think so? Well, I think that is what will happen, and I know a lot of people in western Canada who believe that is what is unfolding. So let us not kid ourselves about the importance of Bill C-81.

Senator Frith has just explained what will happen if there is no limit on expenditures in a referendum. We know very well that people can buy large amounts of advertising. Most politicians are honest enough to accept the fact that that has a legitimate consequence on the results. Is that what we want to happen in this country?

The Conservative government in Alberta—and heaven knows I am no apologist for them because they have mishandled many issues, just as the federal Conservatives have mismanaged almost everything they have had their hands on—have talked the people of Alberta in particular, and Western Canada in general, into believing that there is an improper distribution of real power and authority in the federal Parliament today. Consequently, they must accept always the decisions made in the two major provinces, Ontario and Quebec.

I have been around this place a long time. I was elected 35 years ago today.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Murray: I was going to congratulate you. I will do that later.

Senator Olson: I have been around long enough to know from watching this government—which has been the worst possible government—that when Ontario and Quebec make demands on the Parliament of Canada, the other provinces can wait and whistle. I hope that is not what is unfolding in front of us. Unfortunately, I firmly believe that is what is happening in this country today.

Senator Murray: You are talking about the National Energy Program now, are you?

Senator Olson: If we ever get to Question Period today, we will have a discussion about that.

We are coming to the end of these constitutional talks. I want to state one thing up front—I have no respect for the government's attempt to suggest that Canadians are unpatriotic because they do not support what the government is trying to push on the rest of Canada. The Leader of the Government in the Senate has tried it several times. He suggests that you are a non-Canadian or—I do not know what the right word is—

Senator Frith: An alien.

Senator Olson: —an alien or some fool if you do not understand that what the government of Alberta started will cause this country to collapse. Park that kind of garbage! It never has worked, and it will not work now.

I am glad Senator Beaudoin is here today. Many things have been said about the Dobbie-Beaudoin committee that travelled across the country to hold hearings. When I look at the report of that committee—say what you like about how good it was—you would not think the committee had been in western Canada at all. There is absolutely nothing in that report that deals with Western hopes and aspirations.

Senator Beaudoin: Did you read the report?

Senator Olson: Oh, yes, I read it. I attended some of the meetings as well.

I am not an expert on the constitution, and if that report is the result of so-called "expertise", I am glad I am not an expert on constitutional matters. Western Canadians, Albertans in particular, were trying to deliver a message to your committee, but they were completely ignored in the report.

Everyone knows my view on a Triple-E Senate. Alberta has put forward a Triple-E Senate as a way to correct the wrongs I have mentioned. I do not believe a Triple-E Senate is a way to correct those wrongs and, in fact, I have stated that I do not believe there will ever be a Triple-E Senate. I have asked why you would want to stand around spinning your wheels and making noise knowing you will get nowhere. Senator Beaudoin was in the room when I made that speech. The government should be talking about what people consider to be real issues.

Did you not hear western Canadians saying that they were disturbed because, for the last 125 years, they have had to knuckle under to central Canada? If you did not hear it, you were not listening. If you did hear it and completely ignored it in your report, then the report is not a Canadian report; it is a report for some parts of Canada.

● (1550)

The day you made the speech in this chamber, I heard what it is that certain provinces want out of this round. However, I never once heard an indication that you were even listening to what the people in western Canada were trying to tell you. We only have 26 seats in Alberta against whatever it is, 100 or so for Ontario and about 75 or 80 for Quebec. We get the short end of the stick every time as far as the Parliament of Canada is concerned. You can go back and look over the decisions made on whatever subject you want to talk about—

Senator Bolduc: Agriculture.

Senator Olson: We can talk about agriculture.

Senator Bolduc: Let's talk about agriculture.

Senator Olson: I was the Minister of Agriculture for a few years and during those years the greatest amount of federal money expended by far through the Department of Agriculture was for the federal dairy program. Do you know where that money went? If you do not you should investigate, because that expenditure went on year after year. I did not object because I realized that there were Canadians who needed that program.

I can tell you that there were other things that happened. I am not here to do a lot of griping. I am making this speech because I can see where we are heading. We are heading into a constitutional change where Western Canada will again be trodden over with hobnailed boots by the two central provinces.

They are very careful about what it is out of this new round that Quebec wants, as if everything has to be done for that kind of accommodation. I am not saying that nothing should be done, but I want to make one thing clear, and that is that I am not willing to go back into the straitjacket of someone having a veto over the amending formula. I have heard several people say, "If you do not give Quebec a veto over the amending formula, there will be no deal." Is that right? I have heard that said a few times.

I have also heard that Alberta has said that if we do not readjust the real power in the federal Parliament, they will not acquiesce to a change in the amending formula. I understand that. It is about time some people in the rest of the country started to understand that position. We now have Newfoundland and Alberta leading the crusade for a redistribution of real power in the federal Parliament.

Central Canada is about to be clobbered because they are not willing to give the other, smaller provinces some additional power in even one institution. As has been pointed out very eloquently by the spokesmen from those provinces, the two provinces in central Canada already have an overwhelming majority in the House of Commons in total number of seats; they already have six judges out of the nine on the Supreme Court. At least there could be one institution at the federal level wherein some of the outlying provinces could have a reasonable redistribution of real power in Canada. However, that is not happening.

I want to conclude my remarks on the Triple-E proposal. I have indicated that I do not think it will work. However, there should be at least an acknowledgement that there is a serious problem with the redistribution of power in this country at the federal level. The Beaudoin-Dobbie Report did not mention that this matter was raised before that committee.

Senator Beaudoin: Oh, oh.

Senator Olson: What suggestion did you have? There is absolutely nothing in your recommendations in the report that anything should be done about it. We are coming to the reality now.

I understand that the meetings have collapsed, although I have not had a report of the situation since 3 o'clock. However, since 3 o'clock, the skuttlebut from those who are standing around outside the meeting room at the Department of External Affairs Pearson Building is that they believe the talks will collapse in about two hours and nine minutes from now. In some respects it might be a good thing if all we are heading into for the next 20 or 30 years under a revised Constitution is another situation that does not take into account the realities of Canada.

I think that anyone who has at least thought about the matter should understand that in 1981-82, when we patriated the Constitution to Canada, we included a Charter of Rights that had not previously existed. We put in an amending formula, the "7 and 50" formula. Everyone who was at those meetings knew that the rest of the BNA Act was badly in need of an overhaul. Good heavens, 50 per cent of the federal budget today—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I have to advise the honourable senator that his time has expired.

Is it agreed that he continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Thank you very much. What I was saying is that when the Constitution was patriated to Canada in 1982, we knew very well that almost everything in the BNA Act was out of date. The distribution of jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal government was so badly out of date that the federal government, I think, has now reached the point where about 50 per cent of its total budget is being spent in provincial jurisdictions, in such things as post secondary education, hospitalization, medicare and all those things. It all adds up. I am not at all sure that about half of all the money that is spent from the federal budget might go to areas of provincial jurisdiction. Therefore there is absolutely no doubt in anyone's mind that the Constitution has to be amended. It has to be amended very significantly. Will we again find ourselves in a position of giving some provinces a veto?

Senator Murray: They all have a veto on any change in the distribution of powers. You must know that.

Senator Olson: I know that what we are heading into is a situation that will be a repetition of what happened in 1971. There is a way out. You can buy your way out. When the federal government is buying agreement from the provinces—

Senator Murray: You left us broke. We can't do that either.

Senator Olson: — then some provinces such as Newfoundland, Saskatchewan and Alberta might wind up with the short end of the stick. We can demonstrate that over and over again, if you want to talk about all the cases that we know about.

Senator Murray: Are you supporting the principle of the bill or not?

Senator Olson: The principle of the bill, of the price of going down this road, of setting up what Senator Frith has pointed out to you and then taking into account the unfairness of the way this bill will be put into practice, you can buy—

Senator Murray: Do you support the principle?

Senator Olson: Would you let me decide whether or not I support the principle?

Senator Murray: Now is the time to say.

Senator Olson: I will construct my speech the way I want to, the same as the honourable senator did. There are some things about this bill that I do not support.

Senator Murray: You had better get on with it.

Senator Olson: Why do we have to get on with it? We had better get on with it because the federal government has some political interest in getting settling this Constitutional wrangle. The chickens are starting to come home to roost. The honourable senator knows very well why the government started down this road to try and build up to this constitutional crisis. I am glad you were thwarted before you could run roughshod over some parts of this country that believe they should finally get some justice. Do you want me to explain what I explained a few minutes ago?

• (1600)

Senator Murray: You are over your fifteen minutes.

Senator Olson: I know. I received permission to go over.

Senator Murray: Not in an unlimited fashion.

Senator Olson: I understand it is now acceptable to squelch people who protest what this government is doing.

Senator Murray: Don't abuse the courtesies granted to you.

Senator Olson: "Don't abuse"? You do not even want to hear what people in the other parts of the country have to say.

[Senator Olson.]

I can tell you that people who are going to vote for Joe Clark and others know what is going on here; don't think you're kidding them.

The latest Gallup poll indicates that support for your party is down at 6 per cent. That is happening because people have been subject to the type of abuse that you are now trying to heap on me. One should no longer even speak in this place.

Senator Murray: Observe the rules.

Senator Olson: Much more ought to be said. We have been quiet too long. Now we are going to be clobbered by the whole process. The government does not seem to understand that all areas of this country are as important as the central area. If that is not understood by the government, difficulties, as serious as any that have arisen before, can arise again. If you want to cut me off, go ahead. I will be sending out a few thousand copies of this Hansard.

Senator Murray: Talk about fiscal restraint.

Senator Olson: No, no there is no restraint. Is the government going to practice some fiscal restraint as to the number of copies of Hansard that I may send out when, last week, it approved a $24 million publicity program for some scrap that it is going to send out?

Senator Murray: Will my interjections be included?

Senator Olson: Your injections are not very helpful to the people who live in this country.

Senator Molgat: But I hope they are in Hansard.

Senator Olson: I hope so, too.

Honourable senators, one or two items dealing with the constitutional development that has occurred have not been discussed but should have been.

Senator Frith: Thirty five years and still going strong, very strong!

Senator Olson: If senators opposite think that I am only making a high-pitched political speech, they should think again. There are some fundamental and sincere feelings about what is taking place during the course of this constitutional debate.

I will honour our commitment to send this bill to committee today. Quite frankly, unless some significant changes are made to the bill and how it will operate, we should not pass it. This government will use is as another bulldozing method to circumvent the real wishes of the people.

The government should broaden its horizons a little. There are people in Alberta—in fact there are 2.6 million people in Alberta—in Saskatchewan, in Newfoundland and in Nova Scotia who also have a legitimate interest in what is included in a revised Constitution. This is not a "Quebec Round" or an "Ontario Round". It is supposed to be a Canada Round where the views of people from all over the country are given some consideration in the amending formula.

It ought to be clear that even Conservative governments, such as that in Alberta, are sick and tired of the manner in which this government handles federal economic arrangements and other political issues which are important to people all over this country.

As I said, I do not have many notes with me, so my speech will be fairly short. I want to emphasize that there are sincere and legitimate reasons why government members ought to examine what they are attempting to do, because they are not going to get away with it. I hope the government does not hold a referendum and amend the Constitution prior to the next election because 85 per cent of the people in this country would like to have something to say about what goes into the Constitution. The people of this country do not believe the government has any right to change the Constitution. It does not have a mandate from the last election to do so. The people have lost confidence to the point where the government has only 12 per cent, 15 per cent or 20 per cent support, depending on which month one wants to pick.

The government has no right to do such an important job as amending the Constitution,completely forgetting that views in some parts of the country on the redistribution of real political power are, apparently, absolutely unacceptable to this government, as was stated by the minister himself. He is not willing to even acknowledge that there needs to be a significant readjustment. Unless he does, there will be some pretty difficult days ahead. Quite frankly, in conclusion, I hope the government does not get away with it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that, if the Honourable Senator Murray speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, over the past few years, we have had in this place many interesting discussions on the substance of constitutional reform, and I have no doubt that we will have many such discussions in future. It is not the substance of constitutional reform that is before us today. It is the question of whether this Parliament will authorize the government to call a referendum under certain circumstances and to set up the machinery for such a referendum, if it is called. That is the question before the house at second reading of Bill C-81.

I do not intend to respond in any detail to the comments we have heard from our friend Senator Olson, who I would congratulate on this, the 35th anniversary of his entry into Parliament. I will have more to say on that later, if the honourable senator will stick around after we have had the vote on second reading of this bill.

I cannot, however, let pass without some brief mention the remarks he made. First of all, just before he sat down he spoke of the question of the division of powers, how suggestions relating to the division of powers had been rejected by the federal government and perhaps—

Senator Frith: I think he was talking about political powers.

Senator Murray: He was talking about the division of powers. That was the term he used in the last minute of his speech.

Senator Frith: Distribution of political power is what he meant; is that not correct?

Senator Olson: Of course.

Senator Murray: The distribution of legislative power is a pretty important subject and surely one that all provinces take an interest in. I have to remind him that, in the discussions which are now going on, presided over by Mr. Clark, there has been unanimous agreement on matters relating to the distribution of powers. That agreement includes his friend and compatriot from Alberta, Mr. Horsman; and ministers from British Columbia and the other western provinces.

Honourable senators, the honourable senator has made some comments from the perspective, he has said, of a westerner and of the western provinces which I think are quite unfair and a distortion of the truth.

I voted against the 1982 constitutional reform because, as I said at the time, Quebec was excluded.

Senator Olson: They were not. They chose to be; they excluded themselves. We were both at the meeting.

Senator Murray: Let me remind the honourable senator what western Canada achieved in the 1980-82 round.

• (1610)

The amending formula that was agreed on, and which now forms part of our Constitution, was Peter Lougheed's amending formula. It entrenched the principle that he and his colleagues from western Canada promoted: the principle of the equality of the provinces. It did so by giving to every province a veto over any loss of its legislative power.

Senator Frith: Effectively removing the Senate from the amending process.

Senator Murray: An amendment relating to natural resources was made at the time, at the instance of Premier Lougheed, Premier Blakeney and others from western Canada.

Senator Olson: I was talking about the power of the full Parliament—

Senator Murray: The honourable senator spoke for 15 minutes and then some; perhaps he will allow me the opportunity to respond.

Senator Olson: Don't give it too much!

Senator Murray: The notwithstanding clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which was accepted by Mr. Trudeau as the price for getting this package through, was put forward upon the insistence of some of the western premiers. They were, as I recall, Premier Lyon and Premier Lougheed.

It is wrong to suggest that western Canada has been the victim of constitutional reform in the past, or that it is likely to be the victim of this or any future round of constitutional reform. I remind the honourable senator that, when western Canada took part in the deliberations from the late 1960s through to 1982, Senate reform was not on the agenda, except for the Province of British Columbia which had a version of Senate reform on its agenda. However, it was not on the agenda of my honourable friend's province, or of the other western provinces.

Senator Olson: They have had some lessons since.

Senator Murray: This is a relatively recent item on the western agenda. This is no day for indulging in recriminations or reproaches to anyone. The honourable senator is quite certain that the process will collapse this afternoon.

Senator Olson: That is what they say.

Senator Murray: If so, he knows more about it than do I. But when he talks about the Triple-E Senate, and the objections to the Triple-E Senate, the fact of the matter is that while the Triple-E Senate is unacceptable to a number of provinces, and, yes, to the federal government, as Mr. Clark has pointed out, Mr. Clark and others have put four or five different models for Senate reform on the table. The most recent, as I understand it, was this very morning.

Senator Molgat: Being abolition.

Senator Olson: It was at three o'clock this afternoon.

Senator Murray: At three o'clock this afternoon, then.

There is, I think, a willingness to compromise on the part of a great many provinces. There were, as of yesterday, five such provinces—whether there are more of them or fewer today, I do not know, because I have not been there. However, some provinces have taken the position from the beginning: "Triple-E or nothing." I think it is important to understand that, and to place that on the record in view of Senator Olson's claim that somehow the advocates of Senate reform from western Canada are being victimized or treated badly.

Senator Olson: "Ignored" is the right word.

Senator Murray: Ignored?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the record simply proves otherwise. They have spent on this occasion, as they have spent in previous conferences, as much time, if not more time, on Senate reform than they have spent on almost any other subject.

There were the usual veiled references to Quebec in my honourable friend's speech. I will not take them up in any detail, except to say that I have just told honourable senators the important achievements that were realized by western Canada in the 1980-82 process. There was the amending formula, the notwithstanding clause and the amendment on natural resources.

In addition to that, let me remind the honourable senator that in the 1980-82 exercise aboriginal rights were recognized. Multiculturalism was protected. Gender equality was entrenched. The principle of equalization, so dear to our friends in the Maritime provinces, was entrenched in our Constitution. All these things were recognized and entrenched. Tell me which of Quebec's objectives were achieved in the 1980-82 round? None of them. She was excluded from the eventual deal that was made.

[Senator Murray.]

To come to Bill C-81, I want to thank the spokesmen for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, Senator Stanbury and the Leader of the Opposition, for their prompt and thorough response to this bill. In their case, and in Senator Olson's case also, to be fair, I wish to thank them for expressing their support for the principle of the bill. In Senator Olson's case, his support for the principle of the bill was rather nuanced.

Senator Olson: Mine was somewhat qualified.

Senator Murray: Qualified, but there it is. I will take these small gifts as they come and be glad to get them.

Senator Stanbury referred to technical flaws in the bill which he did not quite identify. He will have an opportunity to do so when the bill is given detailed consideration in committee.

On the substantive matters which Senator Stanbury referred to, he disagrees with the latitude that the bill would give to the government, the latitude to decide whether to hold the referendum in part or in all of the country; the latitude to decide whether to hold a referendum at all. Senator Stanbury would have a law that obliges the government to hold a referendum on these constitutional matters. Senator Olson, of course, fears that such a referendum, even a consultative non-binding referendum, would somehow be a steamroller to victimize the west. But Senator Stanbury would have a law that obliges us to hold a referendum.

We differ on that point. What can I say? There is no magic in referenda. While it is all well and good to invoke vox populi, vox dei, the fact is that we live in a system of representative government and that our experience in this country with national referenda has not been a happy one. That was the case with the referendum on prohibition, which I think was late in the nineteenth century. It was our experience with the plebiscite on conscription during the Second World War.

My own position, and I believe the position of my colleagues in the government, is that the referendum should be a last resort. That is our position on the matter. As I said in my opening remarks, I am not a very great enthusiast of referenda.

By the way, speaking of technical flaws, the Deputy Leader of the Government, who turns outs to be a Latin as well as an English scholar, tells me that the word "referenda" is incorrect, that referendum is one of those Latin words that do not take a plural. Indeed, the use of the word "referendums" in the title of the bill is incorrect. Perhaps this is one of the technical flaws to which Senator Stanbury and any classical scholars present may wish to address themselves.

I remind honourable senators that in the 1980-82 process Prime Minister Trudeau tried to introduce "referendum" as part of the amending process, but after reflection it was decided not to proceed in this way. T -

● (1620)

Having said all that, I want to remind them again that, if we decide to hold a referendum in part or all of the country, Parliament will have its say because we will have to come back here to present our plans, the date, and the question we propose to put to the electors. So you will have your say once again.

Senator Stanbury and the Leader of the Opposition both dealt—Senator Frith in considerable detail—with this question of fairness. If you intend to spend more than $5,000 in the referendum, you will have to register as a committee. If you receive more than $250, you will have to disclose the identify of the contributor. These provisions are virtually identical to those contained in the 1978 bill introduced by Mr. Lalonde. In addition, in this bill we have provided for the same spending limits for electors that are provided for in the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Lalonde, when he presented his paper in 1978, said the following about putting limits on total expenses:

> No country or political jurisdiction has ever conducted a referendum in which total expenditures by parties or groups were controlled. The government is convinced that any attempt in this direction must involve unacceptable infringements of freedoms of association and speech.

That was before we had a Charter of Rights and Freedoms which would come into play in any court case relating to further limits that Parliament might want to impose in this process.

There are legal opinions, as I have indicated, on this matter. My friends may have read the testimony of the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, Mr. John Tate, before the Parliamentary committee in the other place. They may also have read the testimony of Professor Jamie Cameron from the University of Toronto. Professor Cameron, for example, if I read her correctly, sees no problem with spending limits but says that forcing people who want to spend to associate with one or other of a yes or no committee is very problematic in terms of the right to freedom of association under the Charter.

Senator Frith: What about section 1? Only the Supreme Court can deal with that.

Senator Murray: The consensus view, if I can paraphrase, is that section 1 would not save that kind of limit.

Senator Frith: In any event, it is there for the Supreme Court to decide.

Senator Murray: I appreciate that. My friend will also recall what happens when you put questions to the court that they do not want to deal with. They simply decline to deal with them, as they did, I believe, in a reference that was made some years ago on a matter related to the Constitution.

We have, as I have indicated, not only the opinions of our own law officers but also at least six outside legal opinions that were referred to by Senator Frith. My recollection is that, of the six, only one was at all qualified on the subject. Five of them were, in my opinion, absolutely without qualification on the subject of forcing people into yes or no committees as being contrary to the freedom of association and/or freedom of expression provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The authors of these opinions are known, certainly to Senator Frith and Senator Stanbury, as highly respected people in the legal community. They were not told that we intended to make their opinions public. Therefore, the arrangement that was made in the other place, and which I would suggest we can make here, is that honourable senators who are interested can have an opportunity to privately review the legal opinions on which the government is basing its view. Of course, you will have an opportunity to examine the Deputy Minister of Justice or other law officers who may appear before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Senator Frith made a lengthy and interesting speech on the Lortie Commission and the background to that commission. I do not want to take exception to what he said on those matters. When Senator Austin, who was a minister of the Crown at the time, introduced a bill limiting third party participation which I supported. I still do, in spite of the court's finding. True, we did not appeal. The reason we did not appeal is that we believe, on the basis of the jurisprudence and the subsequent cases involving freedom of expression, that we would not win an appeal.

In any case, the Lortie Commission has made voluminous recommendations. These matters are under consideration by representatives of the parties in the House of Commons. Senator Frith is suggesting that we should change the Canada Elections Act now respecting some of those aspects in anticipation of the referendum.

Senator Frith: I am saying that we should not have a referendum. The matter should be referred to the Supreme Court for clarification.

Senator Murray: I think we will be told, when the Chief Electoral Officer or his representative appears before the committee, that, while it may be possible to change the Elections Act in some respects prior to the next election, doing so prior to a referendum is an exceedingly chancy undertaking.

Senator Frith: I am not recommending that. I am happy with the act as it is. I want it enforced. What I am asking for is a reference to the Supreme Court to settle the whole question of whether it is effective.

Senator Murray: I appreciate that, but if we hope to have any possibility of a referendum in this country, say in the fall, we cannot keep changing the ground, as represented by the Canada Elections Act, on which the Chief Electoral Officer is trying to work and adapt for the purposes of a referendum. The timelines are extremely fine indeed. He will be working under very tight time constraints to put the machinery in place to make a referendum possible in the fall of this year.

The Honourable Senator Stanbury expressed some concern about the provisions relating to scrutineers, witnesses and so forth. These provisions are all contained in the bill and honourable senators will have an opportunity to question officials from the office of the Chief Electoral Officer when they appear before the committee.

● (1630)

Concern was also expressed about the regulations. Honourable senators will find that there is a provision in the bill providing for the referral of these regulations to the Special Committee on Electoral Reform of the House of Commons and to any committee that the Senate wishes to designate to review these regulations in a certain time frame before they are proclaimed.

I will go no further for the moment. I thank honourable senators for their support for the principle of the bill and for their willingness to give it second reading today and send it to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. I will make that motion if, as hoped and expected, you give second reading to the bill now.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government a question arising from his remarks. He made a comment to the effect that the provinces and the Government of Canada had reached unanimous agreement on the distribution of powers. Can he take us a bit farther into the situation and tell us at least the general outlines of the agreement?

Senator Murray: First, Mr. Clark and all the others participating made it clear from the beginning that nothing was agreed until everything was agreed.

Senator Olson: It is important that you say that.

Senator Murray: Then I am glad I said it.

Secondly, of course, the agreement was at the ministerial level, but one assumes that those people attending the conference were doing so with a mandate from their governments.

Again, I do not have the details in front of me, but as I recall the announcements that were made some days ago, there was an agreement on such matters as training, culture and the six or seven sectors to which the honourable senator referred in his speech on the Beaudoin-Dobbie Report some weeks ago.

There was a communique issued, or certainly there were comments made by Mr. Clark, as chairman, and by most of the participants at the conference some days ago, to indicate that a consensus had been achieved on the matters affecting division of powers which were before this conference.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

[Senator Murray.]

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Murray, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF COMMITTEE—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege pertaining to a meeting of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs which started at 4 o'clock and is still in progress. I had to make a decision whether to go to that meeting or remain in the Senate. I chose to be here because of the importance of the debate that was taking place.

I appeal to the Leader of the Government and to my Deputy Leader to cease these meetings while the Senate is in progress, at least until the end of the session. I certainly hope that my ability to examine the Commissioner of the Correctional Service of Canada will not be compromised by my presence here instead of at the committee, and that the chairman will not excuse the Commissioner from reappearing at a later date.

THE HONOURABLE ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS

THE HONOURABLE HEATH MACQUARRIE

THE HONOURABLE ROBERT MUIR

THE HONOURABLE H.A. OLSON

THE HONOURABLE STANLEY HAIDASZ

TRIBUTES ON 35th ANNIVERSARY OF ENTRY TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as has been noted once or twice earlier today, I want to note with great pleasure and satisfaction the thirty-fifth anniversary of the entry to Parliament of several of our distinguished colleagues; three on this side of the house—Senator Orville Phillips, Senator Heath Macquarrie and Senator Robert Muir—and two on the opposition side—Senator Bud Olson, and Senator Stanley Haidasz. They were elected to Parliament for the first time in the federal general election of June 10, 1957.

In the cases of Senator Olson and Senator Haidasz, their parliamentary careers were interrupted for a time. As I recall, Senator Olson was out of Parliament from 1958 to 1962 and again from 1973 until 1977. Senator Haidasz was also out of Parliament from 1958 to 1962 and I believe from 1972 to 1974.

The service of our friends on this side, Senators Phillips, Macquarrie and Muir, has been continuous. Senator Phillips won two more elections after 1957 in the constituency of Prince, Prince Edward Island, those in 1958 and 1962, but he soon decided that, if one were going to be in Parliament, the Senate was the place to be, and in 1963 he came to this place.

Senator Muir and Senator Macquarrie went on to win seven more elections to the House of Commons; they then came to the Senate a few months apart in 1979.

In the case of Senator Muir, who has been ailing lately, I want to say how much we have regretted his absence in this last little while and to express the hope that his recovery will continue and that he will be back with us again very soon.

That is a message that perhaps can be conveyed to him by our friend Senator John M. Macdonald, who, through eight elections, was Senator Muir's campaign manager, even while holding elective office in the Nova Scotia legislature for a time.

I simply want to acknowledge the excellent contribution that all of these senators have made to Parliament and to the country over the past 35 years, to tell them how delighted we are that they are continuing their service in this place—I trust for many, many years—and to wish them every health, happiness and satisfaction in that public service.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I congratulate the senators and I commend the Leader of the Government for articulately and thoroughly expressing the congratulatory and amicable feelings we share about our colleagues.

I will add nothing further, because that would be, to quote the oft misquoted phrase from Shakespeare's King John, "to paint the lily", which phrase was properly used yesterday by Senator Macquarrie, one of our honoured senators. It is not "gild the lily". There were expressions like: "to gild refined gold", "to throw a perfume on the violet" and "to add another hue unto the rainbow". Another one was "Smooth the ice", and still another was, I think, "with a candle to seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish"—all of them being, according to William Shakespeare, as would be my saying anything more, "wasteful and ridiculous excess".

● (1640)

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, may I rise to join the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition in the tributes they have paid to the senators who celebrate 35 years today?

I would, in particular, like to highlight the career of my colleague from Alberta, the Honourable Senator Bud Olson. Bud was first elected in the general election of June 10th, 1957, 35 years ago today. I must tell you that I did all in my power to make sure he would not come here at that particular time because Senator Olson had not seen the virtues of liberalism. He had to remain in Ottawa a few years before he became a Liberal.

Throughout those years, I have to say how much he has meant to me both personally and politically. He served the people of Alberta admirably through those years, and even today, you can see the result of his commitment to western Canada and Albertans in particular. The time he spends in Alberta is taken up on the phone or visiting the people of southern Alberta. Through those 35 years, he lost none of his commitment, whether he was a member of the government or serving in the Senate.

To me, personally, Senator Olson has always been a source of information and inspiration to continue on and to do the best we can for the cause we serve. I want to seize this occasion to say I am sorry for trying to defeat him in 1957.

Senator Frith: You waited all this time to say that?

Senator Hastings: It took 35 years for me to admit the error.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You can still correct the "blues".

Senator Hastings: I want to say how much we have appreciated working with you and look forward to working with you in the future.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I too wish to join the chorus of praise to our colleagues on both sides of the House who are celebrating this 35th anniversary—Senator Macquarrie, Senator Phillips, and Senator Muir—all of whom have had remarkable and distinguished careers in both chambers of Parliament and who, I believe, are friends to us all.

Senator Haidasz is another contemporary but, unfortunately he is in the hospital at the moment. The whip assures me he will be all right. I know he would be very pleased to be remembered by both sides of the House today.

Perhaps I too can be forgiven for wishing to spend a special moment saluting my friend and colleague from southern Alberta, Senator Olson. This morning, while using the Canadian Parliamentary Guide to note the age and the long list of accomplishments of Senator Olson, I was thinking what a tremendous achievement it is for one to have spent half of his life in this type of public service: through five elections as an MP for the riding of Medicine Hat in southeastern Alberta; as a minister of the Crown, particularly the Minister of Agriculture and Economic Development; as a Senator; and as a leader in both the opposition and government in this Chamber.

As we heard again this afternoon, whether those on the other side of the House agree or not, there is absolutely no question that my colleague, Bud Olson, has been a tremendous spokesperson representing the interests of the province of Alberta; those of his own region of western Canada; and particularly those of the farmers of that region and the agriculture industry across Canada and abroad.

As all of us know, when Bud participates in this Chamber, he speaks, as he did today, not for the powerful, but for working Canadians who want to control their own lives but who sometimes require a hand from the government and the system. He speaks, as he did today, of fairness and common sense.

Public life has been Senator Olson's life, and he has been strongly supported throughout it by his wife Lucille, who is here today in the gallery, and his family of three daughters and one son.

Parliament has been central to that life and, over the years, it is fair to say, Bud has gained great respect from his peers for his skills as a parliamentarian.

If I may be permitted a personal recollection: Many years ago, when I was a young journalist in the Press Gallery, I first met Bud. He, as my colleague Senator Hastings indicated, operated in a different mode at that point. He was the House Leader for the Social Credit Party of Canada in the House of Commons. He ran the show.

As Bud will recall, in those days there was a certain amount of turmoil in that national party from time to time. On any given day and on any given subject, Bud was the spokesman for the interests of the people who supported that party, particularly in our part of the world. Those were the heady and exciting days of minority parliaments. Bud Olson played a major role in keeping the House of Commons on the rails during that year. From time to time, he was also, without revealing specifics, a very good source for this particular young journalist.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You are not supposed to divulge your source.

Senator Frith: A lot of information comes out after 35 years.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The statute of limitations is over.

Senator Fairbairn: Senator Olson was also respected by those who reported the House of Commons from the parliamentary Press Gallery. He was always extremely courteous. He was forthcoming in his conversations with the media, and if he did not want to comment or did not know, he simply said so.

Senator Frith: Just like he is with the Leader of the Government today—forthcoming.

Senator Fairbairn: That is right. That was his method of operation.

With all of that experience, Senator Olson clearly understands our system. He respects and loves our system. He is also very adept at operating within our system, as everyone in this House knows.

Finally, Bud has been a very determined proponent of a useful and a strong Senate. He and I may have the odd disagreement on the future form such a Senate should take, but we have no disagreement at all on the value of this institution as an important and useful part of the national legislative body in this country.

[Senator Fairbairn.]

To Senator Olson, I want to say that Canadians and Albertans, and particularly the people of the Medicine Hat area have had a great deal more than full value from the consistent effort and concern of yourself as their representative. I personally admire his work tremendously. I have learned a great deal from him.

I want to include in my remarks our colleague Senator Hays who is unable to be here today. He, I am sure, would make the same remarks and feel the same sentiments as Senator Hastings and I do. We, all three, sincerely hope that this landmark occasion stretches into many, many more years of public service to our country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. H.A. Olson: I want to say a very sincere thank you to all of the people who have said very nice and perhaps exaggerated things about me.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I had hoped that my senior colleague, Senator Phillips, would have preceded me.

● (1650)

I want to say to Senator Murray, my long-time friend, how much I appreciate his remarks and how grateful I am to all of those who were kind enough to note this passing anniversary of mine. I came up to the House of Commons in 1957 as the junior member from Queens, a new riding. My God, it is a long time since anyone has called me junior anything, either in Ottawa or in Prince Edward Island.

I have a fascinating memory of my early days. Before I was elected in this new riding, Mr. MacLean was an incumbent, a highly popular member who had won twice. On the night of our convention we were both nominated for our party. The Charlottetown Guardian had on page 1, "The Young Macquarrie and still young MacLean . . ." As we were walking the next day to the Conservative headquarters, which was right above the Liquor Control Board of Charlottetown, someone who was already there on the sidewalk—standing up I assure you—when he saw this apparition of two Tories, shouted out, "Angus, you'll be all right but the other bugger will get nowhere." So here I am, and I am very thankful to the people of Queens and Hillsborough who worked and supported me through, God help us, eight different elections.

I was honoured to be sent to the lower house by the people. I was honoured to be summoned to this one, and having spent all this time on Parliament Hill I still have the highest regard for the upper house. I believe so many things here are done better than they are, and were, in the House of Commons. Therefore I shall always cherish the time here, as I did in the lower house, and I appreciate very much the remarks that were made today.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to express my thanks for your congratulations. I was elected in 1957 in a riding that had always been Liberal except for one and a half years when a Conservative won in a by-election. However, he was defeated in the next general election. I think I would sum up my memories of June 10, 1957 by saying that I do not know who was the more surprised, the Liberal candidate or myself, but we were both surprised.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I had better put my Big Ben calculation on the record. I looked over and saw some anxious eyes saying, "Will he never tell us?" For you democrats it is 164 days until election time. For any of you, and I hope there are none, who are cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, 550 days.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Eileen Rossiter, for Hon. Efstathios William Barootes, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, presented the following report:

Wednesday, June 10, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-54, An Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Thursday, May 7, 1992, examined the said bill and now reports the same with the following two amendments and comments:

1. Page 9, clause 12: Strike out lines 33 to 36 and substitute the following:

"farm products, where the Governor in Council is satis-"

2. Page 14, clause 12: Strike out lines 20 and 21 and substitute the following:

"the Council pursuant to paragraph 7(1)(j) or (k) that is applicable to that person, or"

One issue that emerged repeatedly during hearings and debate on Bill C-54, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate, is whether the application of the bill should be extended to permit the establishment of promotion-research agencies for agricultural products marketed in interprovincial and export trade pursuant to the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Your Committee is aware that the Canadian Wheat Board supports such an expanded application. This position is also held by the Alberta Barley Commission, which has stated that Canadian Wheat Board grains must be afforded the same consideration as other farm products. Further, the Commission has suggested that such a change would bring some discipline to the process of establishing a levy on wheat and barley.

It is in supporting those groups and producers that wish the application of the bill to be expanded to agricultural products marketed pursuant to the Canadian Wheat Board Act that your Committee decided to report the bill with the first amendment set out above.

A second key issue that has been discussed extensively is whether Bill C-54, and perhaps other Acts, should be amended to give Canada Customs the authority to collect a levy on imported agricultural products as they enter Canada.

For reasons of cost and efficiency, some groups have advocated that the bill be amended to allow such a collection.

Your Committee believes that it would improve efficiency if Canada Customs were to collect any applicable levies on imported agricultural products, and urges the Parliament of Canada to seek means by which this could be done on a cost-recovery basis, with Canada Customs remitting the levies to the appropriate promotion-research agency.

Respectfully submitted,

E.W. (STAFF) BAROOTES
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Rossiter, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

ACT TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS WITH RESPECT TO PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-78, to amend certain acts with respect to persons with disabilities.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time? On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Friday, June 12, 1992.

JUSTICE

CANCELLATION OF COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, June 16, 1992, I will call the attention of the Senate to the cancellation of the Court Challenges Program. [Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 549 residents of the province of Ontario who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Toronto, Don Mills, Etobicoke, Willowdale and Scarborough.

I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 200 residents of the province of Ontario who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Ottawa.

So we have a grand total of 749 Canadians who took the trouble to express their objections to the GST by making a very democratic gesture, in other words by signing their names and giving their addresses a real act of bravery!

What never ceases to astonish me is the attitude of senators opposite who can't help smiling or sniggering whenever one of us table a petition signed by hundreds and even thousands of Canadians who are against the GST. We'll see who has the last snigger!

• (1700)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

EARTH SUMMIT IN RIO DE JANEIRO—COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On May 13, in the absence of the Leader, I gave notice to the Deputy Leader of a question regarding attendance at the Rio conference. I did not expect an answer that day because the Leader was not present, and I waited for some time. On May 20 I repeated the question. The minister then stated that he would look into the matter and bring in a report.

On May 21 I again raised the matter and pointed out once more that apparently the House of Commons was sending a number of persons. His response was that he did not have the information and "the details have yet to be finalized by the Prime Minister."

In answer to further questioning he stated:

> Whether any other parliamentarians are part of that official delegation, I do not know. What I have in front of me states that the details have to be finalized.

I asked, "Is there the possibility that parliamentarians will be going"? His answer to that was, "I do not know."

Now that the conference is in progress and the delegation is in Rio, can he tell us who is, in fact, part of that delegation? Are there parliamentarians from the House of Commons? Are there parliamentarians from the Senate?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I indicated to my honourable friend on previous occasions, my understanding is that one or more of the standing committees of the other place are sending representatives to Rio, whether to the main conference or to some meeting that is being held on the margins of the main conference, I do not know.

So far as the Canadian delegation is concerned, I can tell the honourable senator that it consists of the Prime Minister and two other ministers: Mr. Charest and Mr. Crosbie; a number of deputy ministers and ambassadors whom I can name if my friend wishes; and the Canadian negotiating team of 12 public servants from various departments of government.

I also have a list of official advisors to the Canadian delegation. I believe this is what the honourable senator is looking for. This list of 15 includes two federal parliamentarians, one of whom is the Honourable David MacDonald, MP, from the House of Commons and the other is our colleague, the Honourable Therese Lavoie-Roux.

Senator Molgat: These are the only two parliamentarians in the group? Any others who are present are there as a result of a decision of a committee of the other place, is that the case?

Senator Murray: Either that, or they are there on their own.

Senator Molgat: When was the decision made to send David MacDonald and Senator Lavoie-Roux on the delegation?

Senator Murray: I have no idea, honourable senators. This list was given to me sometime last week. The official advisors also include a number of provincial government representatives, including Premiers Filmon and Wells; and Ministers Clemens of Prince Edward Island, Ciaccia of Quebec, Miller of British Columbia, and Ningark of the Northwest Territories.

Senator Molgat: Was there no consideration given to continuing what I believe has been the practice in the past of having a balance between parties represented on an official government delegation?

Senator Murray: I am not sure what the precedent for that is, honourable senators. The Canadian delegation is divided into the following parts: First, the Prime Minister with his ministers and ambassadors; second, the UNCED negotiating team; and third, official advisors to the Canadian Delegation which consists of two parliamentarians, one from either house, both of them supporters of the government, a number of provincial ministers or premiers, and a number of representatives of youth, women, labour, business and environmental organizations.

Senator Molgat: I thank the minister for his comments. Perhaps he could pursue the matter further and determine if it has not been the practice in the past, when a group is chosen to represent Parliament, that there is a balance between parties.

Senator Murray: I have been on ministerial delegations in the past which consisted of a small number of parliamentarians from both parties. Senator Frith will recall our visit to China some years ago under the leadership of the Minister of External Affairs. He and I were the two senators present and there were four or five from the other place. This was not an international conference. I think it is fair to say this was a ministerial—

Senator Lefebvre: Junket?

Senator Murray: —tour of the Peoples' Republic.

Senator Frith: Fulfilling an invitation from the government.

ENERGY

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—NOTICE OF INTENT TO ASK QUESTIONS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government almost invited me to ask him some questions on the national energy program, of which there seems to be a complete absence at the present time. As a matter of fact, I brought along some of my notes, so I was prepared to do just that.

In view of the hour, I will forgo that pleasure today. However, I wish to give him notice that I intend to ask a series of questions at the next sitting on petroleum, natural gas and oil because those industries in Western Canada are probably in the most depressed state that they have ever been.

● (1710)

All these accusations about the National Energy Program having done some damage to that industry pale in comparison to the real damage that has been done in the last four or five years.

Senator Murray: Is that what they are saying in the oil patch?

Senator Olson: That is what they are saying, and I want to ask the minister some questions about what the government intends to do about it. However, I will not do that today.

Senator Murray: Are they asking that the Liberals and the NEP be brought back?

Senator Olson: They would like to have some government.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CANADIAN STEEL INDUSTRY—U.S. PROTECTIONISM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question to ask of the minister which is a follow-up to a question I asked on June 4. It was with regard to the impending action by the steel industry in the United States insofar as Canadian exports to the U.S. are concerned. This has been causing us some troubles, even though we are supposed to have a free trade deal with the Americans.

At that time I questioned the minister about the Prime Minister's visit with Mr. Bush, after which the Prime Minister declared victory, saying that, from now on, Mr. Bush would be helping us out. The minister indicated to me that Mr. Bush, apparently, did not have much to do with this. However, in answer to Senator Olson he said the following:

> Honourable senators, the purpose of the discussions between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States is precisely to ensure that, before any such decisions are made by the administration, consultations are held at the highest level of the U.S. administration and we are not harassed by bureaucratic decisions or even political decisions at a lower level.

Today, I have in my hand a clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press, dated today, the headline of which reads: "Canada gets no favours from U.S. in steel-dumping controversy." Its byline is Washington. It states:

> Ottawa's attempt to involve top American officials in avoiding trade disputes appeared unsuccessful yesterday when the chief U.S. trade official said she hadn't asked the U.S. steel industry to exclude Canada from a threatened duty case.
>
> Trade Minister Michael Wilson said he and U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills discussed steel and other trade irritants, including softwood lumber and Honda Civics, at a meeting of a commission to assess the Canada-U.S. free-trade agreement.
>
> Hills was asked if she had contacted U.S. industry officials to suggest Canada should not be among those named.
>
> "No, I have not," said Hills, the chief trade official in the United States and a member of President Bush's cabinet.
>
> After a meeting with Bush two weeks ago, Prime Minister Mulroney said he had received assurances of "structural changes" in the way the U.S. administration handles Canadian trade problems.

Would the minister tell me how on earth this article relates to what he said last week? Last week, he said that the purpose of the visit by the Prime Minister was to ensure that before any such decisions are made consultations are held at the highest level of the U.S. administration. Yet, we have the highest level of the U.S. administration, Carla Hills, who is the official responsible for this matter and a member of Mr. Bush's cabinet, who has taken absolutely no action by her own statements.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the proof of that pudding will come when, and if, any decision is made by the United States government concerning this initiative that is being taken by the U.S. steel industry.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, the assurance that Mr. Mulroney gave when he came back from Washington was that the President would be prepared to ensure that Canada was not harassed in this way. Mrs. Carla Hills now says that she has not even consulted with the steel industry. Absolutely no action has been taken by the federal government of the United States, by the president or his representative, even to attempt to talk to the people involved. What help are they providing?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator is really straining to try to make a point. The fact of the matter is I referred the other day to harassment of Canadian interests by lower-level United States bureaucrats or even political figures. In the present case what you have is an initiative aiming at some 20 countries by the United States steel industry.

When, and if, the U.S. administration is called upon to make any decision on that matter, my honourable friend will see, I am sure to his entire satisfaction, the value of the agreement reached by Prime Minister Mulroney and President Bush in their recent meeting.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, are we to assume there will be no efforts undertaken by the U.S. government to talk to any of its industries which are prepared to cause Canada problems on trade?

Let us change our focus and have a look at the other side of the coin. What happened when the problems with softwood problems arose some years ago? Did the Canadian government at that time not attempt to reach an understanding with the provinces? Is it not as a result of Canadian government action—dealing with the lumber people and the provinces—that we imposed a tax within Canada? The Canadian government did act in response to an action by the United States.

We now have a case of United States action against Canadians and the U.S. government will not act.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we consulted with the provinces and with the Canadian lumber industry and reached an agreement on a strategy to protect Canadian interests against a decision which we were certain would be taken against our interests, and for politically motivated reasons, by the relevant United States department.

[Senator Molgat.]

I remind the honourable senator, we have, within the free trade agreement, a dispute-settlement process which can be invoked, if necessary, when we believe we have been unfairly treated by the United States authorities.

Senator Molgat: Can we expect continued harassment by American industry? Our industry will have to incur all the costs involved in defending a case in spite of the free trade agreement.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, our industry knows that in this government they have a body they can count on to defend their interests and assist them fully in making their case.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Senator Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked on May 13 by Senator Perrault regarding the pamphlet "Where Your Tax Dollars Go". I also have answers to questions asked on May 20 by Senator Petten regarding the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization; on May 21 by Senator Austin regarding Japan and the effect of its trade surplus; and on June 2 by Senator Perrault regarding the pamphlet "An Agenda for Prosperity".

TAXATION

"WHERE YOUR TAX DOLLARS GO"—NUMBER AND DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT PAMPHLET

(Response to question raised by Hon. Raymond Perrault on May 13, 1992)

The Greater Vancouver supermarket network consists of 29 Canada Safeways, 5 SuperValus, 2 Overwaitea Foods and 3 IGAs. Some 2,958 copies of the booklet were picked up by interested Canadians in the Greater Vancouver area, representing 84 per cent of total booklets placed in those stores.

InfoNet Media, a Division of Strategium Media Inc. of Rexdale, Ontario, is a privately held, wholly owned Canadian corporation established in 1976. It is a bona fide supplier of low-end advertising and print distribution services, and is registered as such with Supply and Services Canada. From time to time, the Department of Finance has and continues to secure the services of InfoNet Media, on a contract basis, to provide a broad spectrum of Canadians timely economic, fiscal and tax information.

The company employs some 170 Canadians throughout its coast-to-coast operations and is presently the only firm in the country offering this type of service on a nation-wide basis. The Company's headquarters are located at 2 Vulcan Street, Rexdale, Ontario, Canada M9W 1L2. Further information may be obtained directly from company officers.

NORTH ATLANTIC FISHERIES ORGANIZATION

RESULTS OF HALIFAX MEETINGS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

(Response to question raised by Hon. William J. Petten on May 20, 1992)

Measures discussed at the Special NAFO session held in May in Dartmouth will be considered for adoption at the annual NAFO meeting in September. These include:

(1) the introduction of a pilot project for an observer program which would help provide independent information on practices such as the use of undersize mesh or misreporting of catches;

(2)the introduction of fishing plans to help balance the fishing effort of foreign countries with legitimate fishing opportunities and quotas;

(3) the inclusion of a catch reporting feature in the present hail system to provide more timely catch information to NAFO; and

(4) providing inspectors with access to vessel production logs or stowage plans to more accurately compare catch records with actual fish products on board.

Technical experts nominated by NAFO Contracting Parties will work over the summer months to develop the operational details of these measures aimed at improving international controls on fishing outside 200 miles. Canada will work with representatives of all NAFO Contracting Parties to finalize the details of these reforms to the NAFO system and will seek their support for adoption of these measures. If adopted at the NAFO annual meeting in September, these measures would improve surveillance and control over vessels outside 200 miles. This would be modest progress toward ending overfishing but would not lessen the need for other important measures to be taken by individual contracting parties such as inspection of fish products when unloaded in home ports.

At the same time Canada and 39 like minded states are pursuing adoption at UNCED in Rio de Janeiro of principles and measures to end overfishing on the high seas and a follow-up conference under UN auspices to devise rules to control fisheries on the high seas and to solve high seas fishing problems.

Following the Rio Summit, Canada will seek the support of its G-7 partners at the Economic Summit in July for conservation of fish stocks on the high seas including the strengthening of regional organizations such as NAFO and effective monitoring and enforcement of their conservation decisions.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

JAPAN—EFFECT OF TRADE SURPLUS ON TRADING PARTNERS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Jack Austin on May 21, 1992)

In the May 21, 1992 question concerning Japan's trade surplus, it was observed that, on the basis of data available for the first few months of 1992, Japan's trade surplus for the entire year can be projected to be about $130 billion. This figure would represent a significant increase from the 1991 level, which in itself was much higher than the 1990 trade surplus. It is helpful to put these figures into context:

-In 1991, the Japanese trade surplus was $103 billion or 3.1 per cent of GNP;

- the International Monetary Fund has forecast that Japan's trade surplus will be $120 billion or 3.3 per cent of GNP in 1992;

- in 1985, the year that the Plaza Accord was signed, Japan's trade surplus was $55.2 billion or 4.2 per cent of GNP.

Therefore, the trade surplus is projected to be smaller in 1992 as a per cent of GNP than in 1985. Nevertheless, the recent increases in the nominal value of the trade surplus are still significant.

Japan has publicly recognized the need to make, through the introduction of structural change, its economy more open. In volume terms, Japan's imports have risen by 65 per cent since 1985 compared to 19 per cent for exports. In 1988, Japan signed the Structural Impediments Initiative with the United States, under which formal commitments were made to make the economy more open. They include a commitment to reform several regulatory government bodies, including the Fair Trade Commission. The changes are also expected to contribute to a reduction of the trade surplus over the next three to five years.

The G-7 process provides Canada with an appropriate and effective forum through which to express our views about international economic developments. The increase in the surplus was discussed by ministers at the April 26 G-7 meeting in Washington. The ministerial communiqué took note of the persistence of external imbalances in some of the G-7 countries and made special reference to the value of the yen. To quote the communiqué: "Exchange markets have been generally stable in recent months, though they (the ministers) noted that the decline of the yen since their last meeting was not contributing to the adjustment process."

Since the April 26 Ministerial meeting, the yen has appreciated from a level of about 133-135 per dollar to 127-128 per dollar. The Governor of the Bank of Japan, the Japanese central bank, has made public remarks calling for a stronger yen. This does not represent a "second" Plaza Accord, nor is an accord seen as necessary. Market forces, in conjunction with structural change, tend to equilibrate trade imbalances over time.

To conclude, while the trade surplus in Japan appears to be set to increase in dollar terms in 1992, the anticipated level of the surplus relative to GNP is expected to be lower than that recorded in 1985. The Department of Finance is monitoring developments in the Japanese external accounts. Through the G-7 process and other fora, Canada will communicate any issues or concerns to Japanese authorities as necessary.

THE ECONOMY

"AN AGENDA FOR PROSPERITY"—CIRCULATION OF GOVERNMENT PAMPHLET

(Response to question raised by Hon. Raymond J. Perrault on June 2, 1992)

The government had 10,662,647 of the tabloids printed and distributed to households across Canada. The tabloid is a shared cost program involving existing communications funds from a number of government departments.

The government has a responsibility to not only listen but to inform all Canadians. In developing the Prosperity Action Plan—a plan which addresses the roles of government, business, labour and individuals—the government has been inclusive and not exclusive—encouraging Canadians to have real and meaningful input into the process. The result will be a plan to carry Canada into the future. The tabloid informed Canadians about some of the feedback that the government has received from Community Talks participants and further offered them the opportunity to request a copy of the Community Talks Summary.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS TABLED

CROWN CORPORATIONS AND FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), tabled the answer to Question No. 12 on the Order Paper—by Senator Molgat.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), tabled the answer to Question No. 56 on the Order Paper —Senator Marshall.

DEBT SERVICING AND REDUCTION ACCOUNT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William M. Kelly moved the third reading of Bill C-21, relating to the accounting of certain payments for the servicing and reduction of the debt of Canada.

He said: I yield to Senator Stewart.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, this bill relates to the accounting of certain payments for the servicing and reduction of the debt of Canada. The bill provides for an account to be known as the "Debt Servicing and Reduction Account".

● (1720)

That account is to be credited with every amount paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund from certain revenue sources. The principal source of money going into this account is to be the goods and services tax.

Honourable senators, this is a humbug bill.

Senator Frith: That is the word; not humble, humbug.

Senator Stewart: That is not to say that the bill is without a purpose. The purpose of the bill was made clear at the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on May 13, and I refer specifically to page 21. Our colleague Senator Eyton referred to the fact that there was to be an account.

> It was really a subaccount, as I understand it. It does not affect consolidated revenue, and it does not change the way money is disbursed. It is not a sinking fund, as I say. Life goes on.
>
> However, it does highlight debt service and debt reduction. It may help with debt disclosure, and it may make Canadians more aware of where their money is being applied and the need for servicing and disclosure. Is it too simple to say that it highlights but it does not change anything substantive?

The minister glowed at that point. He said:

> That probably says it better than I ever could have. I wish I had said it that way because that is entirely accurate. People said that this—

presumably the GST—

> — would be a cash cow. They said, "You guys will make a lot of money from this, and we will not see it or know about it." This, of course, makes the entire new sales tax system totally transparent for the Canadian public.

Honourable senators, the truth of the matter is that the purpose of the bill is to make the GST tax system opaque to the Canadian public. That is the purpose of the bill as revealed in the meeting of May 13. I asked Mr. McDermid, the minister, if there was any difference between the effect of the new sales tax, the GST, and the effect of the old sales tax, the manufacturing sales tax, on the deficit and thus on the debt. He said no.

So why the bill?

Mr. McDermid's reply was that the sales tax now has become visible.

Because it —

being the sales tax—

> — became visible, and because people wanted to see where this tax was going, they made it very clear that they would not object to this tax as much if they could see what the tax was being used for, especially if it was being used to reduce the deficit. That is why the government was motivated to do this.

At that point, I said:

> So you are saying that the purpose of this arrangement is to overcome the objection to what you call a divisive tax, but it really is not to reduce the deficit any more than the tax it replaced.

The minister replied:

> The difference now is we are making this extremely transparent so that people can see where it is going, and it is audited by the Auditor General.

So there we have it. The establishment of this new account into which the proceeds from the GST will go will have no effect upon the reduction of the deficit and thus the debt. The only purpose of this account is to suggest to the people that the GST goes to reduce the deficit, whereas the previous sales tax did not. That, of course, is untrue.

It is, as I say, a humbug bill. In the words of Senator Eyton, it will have no substantive effect. He said:

> This bill is accounting, presentation, and disclosure, but it is not substantive by itself.

Honourable senators, attempts have been made to set up sinking funds in other jurisdictions. I turned up a couple of examples. The first example was in Great Britain after the famous Bubble. At that time, Sir Robert Walpole established a "Sinking Fund".

> The principle of the fund was quite simple—perhaps too simple. An Act of Parliament, introduced by the skilful Lowndes, provided that any surpluses arising from the revenues alotted to service these debts were to be reserved "for discharging the Principal and Interest of such National Debts and Incumbrances as were incurred before the five and twentieth day of December 1716." But with the same complaisance with which it yielded Votes of Credit, the House of Commons permitted Walpole to divert the growing produce of the Sinking Fund to the relief of ordinary expenditure, rather than raise new taxes.

Another example comes from late in the 18th century, when William Pitt played around with the sinking fund. Again, I quote:

> Pitt is also incautiously mocked for having maladministered the Sinking Fund, creating an artificial surplus during the war by borrowing large sums at high interest to purchase stock carrying low interest. As a result the Sinking Fund cost more than it redeemed. But this misses the point. Even in peacetime, the Sinking Fund was an absurd and masochistic ritual; it was simply a little more absurd in war. But, as a proof of public virtue, the Sinking Fund was of incalculable psychological value. For a government to tie its own hands and yield up, unresisting, any surplus for the redemption of old debt was a gesture of self-sacrifice quite novel in eighteenth-century finance.
>
> In this it was characteristic of Pitt. Public virtue was his strong suit. In 1784, for example, he brushed aside the attractive sinecure Clerkship of the Pells to which he was entitled, worth £3,000 per annum. The gesture may not have been wholly artless. Like Pope's nymph, the sprightly Sylvia, who > trips along the Green,
>
>
> She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen.
>
> Pitt did not expect to go unnoticed. And he was right. He was warmly applauded, and a grateful nation eventually paid his substantial debts.

"Substantial debts" refers, of course, to his personal debts.

• (1730)

> A little humbug notwithstanding, Pitt did make some important contributions to English public finance.

These quotations are from Henry Roseveare's book, The Treasury

Here again in Bill C-21 we have humbug. This bill, as Senator Eyton said, is of no substantive importance. It is intended, not to make our financial transactions more transparent, but to make them somewhat opaque.

Senator Molgat: If I recall correctly, it was the honourable Senator Simard who introduced this bill, was it not?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: If there are no further interventions, on his behalf, I move third reading of the bill.

Senator Molgat: I am just sorry Senator Simard was not here to hear our colleague Senator Stewart explain what the bill is all about. It goes without saying that we will not be supporting this bill.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Molgat: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

SPENDING CONTROL ACT

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-56, respecting the control of government expenditures.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I will take a little bit longer on this one.

This is a bill for a statute to be entitled "An Act respecting the control of government expenditures". I want to begin by asking honourable senators to read clause 3(5) of the bill. It provides:

> The Minister may present a budget for a controlled fiscal year that proposes program spending for any particular controlled fiscal year that exceeds the spending limit for the particular year if, at the same time, the Minister announces proposed amendments to this Act to increase that spending limit and, in that event, the proposed program spending for the particular year may exceed the spending limit for the particular year if it does not exceed the spending limit for the particular year as it would be if the proposed amendments were in effect.

The purpose of clause 3(5) is to allow a Minister of Finance to bring in his budget with an expenditure forecast higher than the spending limit to be established for that year by this bill. In other words, to set aside the spending limit for a forthcoming year the Minister of Finance need only announce proposed amendments to this act. There is no requirement that those amendments be enacted. Indeed, there is no requirement that those amendments be introduced and read a first time. All the clause requires is that the minister announce proposed amendments.

In the committee on National Finance on June 3, the minister, the honourable John McDermid, was asked what provision the bill makes for a situation where the Minister of Finance announces proposed amendments and where, for one reason or another, those amendments are not enacted. He agreed to provide an answer later.

The following day, June 4, 1992, Mr. Peter DeVries, Director, Fiscal Policy Division, Department of Finance, wrote to the clerk of the committee as follows:

> 1. Section 3(5) specifies that in the event that controlled program spending for a particular year, exceeds the spending limit set out in Bill C-56 for that year, the Minister of Finance may propose an amendment to the spending limit for that year, at or before the time of the budget.
>
> Once Parliament had approved the amendment to the spending limit, which could occur after the budget was presented, the spending limit for the year in question would be officially changed.
>
> This provision in Bill C-56 allows the Minister of Finance to table a budget in Parliament, in advance of Parliamentary approval for the amendment to Bill C-56, otherwise the Minister of Finance would be in violation of Section 3 (1).

Mr. DeVries went on to draw attention to clause 11. He says:

> Section 11 implies that unless Parliament has explicitly deemed that spending in another act is exempt from the spending limits in Bill C-55, such spending must be accommodated within the spending limits set out in Bill C-56.

[Senator Stewart.]

There we have the government's response. By enacting Bill C-56 as now drafted, this Parliament seeks to restrict those successor parliaments. And I submit, honourable senators, that the success of the government in this attempt is questionable.

Let us suppose that Bill C-56 has been enacted. Let us also suppose that next winter the Minister of Finance, in his budget, announces proposed amendments to the act respecting the control of government expenditure. Thereby the minister, under clause 3(5) gains permission to propose program spending in excess of the spending limits prescribed by Bill C-56 for fiscal 1993-94.

Subsequently the Estimates will be presented and voted.After that a bill to appropriate the amounts of money sought in those Estimates will be enacted. In that situation, that Appropriation Act will be inconsistent with the provisions of Bill C-56. The question we must ask ourselves is this: in that situation, where there is a conflict between the provisions of the act eventuating from Bill C-56 and the 1993-94 Appropriation Act,which act will prevail—the one made in 1992, which we are now talking about, or the Appropriation Act made in 1993?

● (1740)

It is a principle of the Constitution that no Parliament can bind its successor. Otherwise, the supremacy of succeeding parliaments, acting within the legislative jurisdiction of Parliament as prescribed in the Constitution, would be limited.

On this point, let me quote British authority. It is always less complex with British sources because the Parliament at Westminsteris not limited by a written Constitution. I am going to quote from Constitutional Law, by two eminent authorities, E.C.S. Wade, Downing Professor of the Laws of England in the University of Cambridge, and G. Godfrey Phillips, Sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. I am quoting from the Fifth Edition at page 39:

> That Parliament can pass any law whatsoever and that no one Parliament can be bound by an Act of its predecessors nor bind its successors may be illustrated by both His Majesty's Declaration Act, 1936 (this changed the succession to the Throne which had been secured by the Act of Settlement), and by the statutes which have from time to time fixed or prolonged the duration of Parliament's own life.

A few pages later the authors say:

> No Parliament can bind its successors. Otherwise succeeding Parliaments would not be sovereign or supreme. This rule is illustrated by Vauxhall Estates v. Liverpool Corporation, [1932] 1 K.B. 733, where it was held that provisions contained in a later act, (Housing Act, 1925, s. 46, which related to compensation for land compulsorily acquired), repealed by implication the provisions of an earlier Act, (Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, s. 7(i)) which attempted to invalidate subsequent legislation so far as it might be inconsistent.

In other words, a later act of Parliament that is clearly inconsistent with an earlier act overrides the earlier act.

In dealing with the project that the government has set itself, we should remember that what is to be avoided is an apparent conflict of statutes—in this case, an apparent conflict between an act respecting the control of government expenditures, on the one hand, and an Appropriation Act relative to a year for which there is a limit on spending. That can be avoided by adopting the approach the government itself used in clause 3(5), where the Minister of Finance is to be prevented from presenting a budget for a year that exceeded the limit for that year unless he announced proposed amendments to the act eventuating from Bill C-56.

The government's purpose can be achieved by stopping the progress of any appropriation bill in conflict with Bill C-56. In that way, an apparent conflict of statutes will be avoided, an apparent conflict that, I suggest, always will bring forward the argument that the later act—in this case the Appropriation Act—is not invalidated by reason of inconsistency with Bill C-56.

I remind honourable senators of what we were told on behalf of the government. Let me read it again.

> Section 11 implies that unless Parliament has explicitly deemed that spending in another act is exempt from the spending limits in Bill C-55, such spending must be accommodated within the spending limits set out in Bill C-56.

I emphasize the phrase ". . . that unless Parliament has explicitly deemed that spending . . . is exempt . . ." But what can be more explicit than where Parliament makes an act that in its terms exceeds the limit? Here, we are not talking about general language; we are talking about precise figures.

It cannot be argued that appropriation acts are not precise and explicit as to the total amount appropriated. For example, in 1992-93 the total sought in the Estimates is $48,902,383,552. The act will be precise. One does not have to engage in speculation about the amount. The figure is exact.

Let us look ahead to the forthcoming fiscal year, 19933-94. The spending limit that Bill C-56 will establish for that fiscal year is $104,100,000,000. As we know, that total will comprise most of the statutory expenditures—there are some exceptions—and also the amount to be sought in the Main Estimates and any Supplementary Estimates. There is nothing whatsoever in Bill C-56 that will prevent the enactment in 1993-94 of Appropriation Acts that, when added to the included statutory expenditures, will appropriate amounts in excess of the limit established by this bill, namely $104,100,000,000. Those Appropriation Acts will override the provisions of Bill C-56. Those acts will be later acts. Moreover, in their explicit terms, they go beyond the limit set in Bill C-56. There would appear to be no question as to the legality of those Appropriation Acts.

As I said, what must be done, if the government wants to accomplish the purpose it says it wishes to accomplish, is to prevent appropriation acts—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform the honourable senator that his time is up unless he has unanimous approval.

Senator Stewart: I propose to move an amendment immediately, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is there agreement, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Stewart: What has to be done if the government is to achieve its purpose is to prevent an appropriation bill, authorizing expenditures beyond the limits prescribed in Bill C-56, from becoming an act.

Consequently, I should like to propose the following amendment to Bill C-56.

● (1750)

I move, seconded by Senator Adams:

> That Bill C-56 be not now read the third time but that it be amended in Clause 3, on page 5, by adding immediately after line 15 the following:
>
> Where the Minister has presented a budget for a controlled fiscal year that exceeds the spending limit for that year, the second reading of a bill for granting money to Her Majesty for the Public Service of Canada for that year, other than an interim supply bill, may not be moved until the amendments proposed pursuant to Subsection (5) have been enacted.

Let me explain: An interim supply bill—designed to get the new fiscal year started, that is during the months of April, May and June—would be exempt. Before any other bill appropriating money for a fiscal year in which the limit would be exceeded could go beyond the second reading stage, the amendments of which the Minister of Finance, pursuant to clause 3(5), would have given notice must have been enacted. In other words, an act to change Bill C-56 would have to be enacted before any appropriation bill, other than the interim supply bill, could be advanced to second reading. If the government is serious, this amendment will be carried.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Senator Stewart: So this bill, too, is humbug!

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore:

Please call in the senators.

Is there agreement on the length of the bell?

Senator Kelly: Could we have a 30-minute bell?

The Senate adjourned to the call of the bell.

• (1800)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Let the doors to the chamber be locked.

Motion in amendment of Senator Stewart negatived on the following division:

YEAS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Adams
Bonnell
Corbin
De Bané
Fairbairn
Frith
Graham
Hastings
Hébert
Lawson
LeBlanc (Beauséjour)
Lefebvre
Lewis
MacEachen
Molgat
Neiman
Olson
Petten
Riel
Robichaud
Stanbury
Stewart
Stollery
Thériault—24

NAYS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Atkins
Beaudoin
Berntson
Bolduc
Buchanan
Chaput-Rolland
Comeau
DeWare
Di Nino
Doyle
Eyton
Forrestall
Grimard
Johnson
Kelleher
Kelly
Kinsella
Lynch-Staunton
Macdonald (Cape Breton)
MacDonald (Halifax)
Macquarrie
Murray
Nurgitz
Oliver
Phillips
Robertson
Ross
Rossiter
Simard
Spivak
Teed
Tremblay—32

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald, that this bill be read the third time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, pursuant to Rule 67(6), I declare that a motion to adjourn the Senate is deemed to have been moved and adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 11, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m, the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, although the Leader of the Opposition, my colleague Senator Frith, is absent today for a very good reason —he went to Vancouver to attend the funeral of his good friend Senator van Roggen, I would like to continue his excellent tradition of reminding the Leader of the Government that the clock moves on, and that if the government of which Senator Murray is a member has any respect for democracy, Canadians will have the pleasure of voting in 163 days.

However, if the present government is "cowardly and contemptious of democracy", to quote Senator Murray, and I will not try to translate these few words in French because I think some of their impact would be lost, then Canadians will have to wait 549 days.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF ACT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, on June 2 of this year the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs approved Bill C-77, to amend the National Defence Act. During the course of the proceedings, while the committee agreed to proceed with the bill as quickly as possible, for reasons set out in its report, the committee did agree that I would write to the Associate Minister of National Defence urging her to cause a review to be made of the whole National Defence Act, inasmuch as it had not been reviewed for many years.

As a result, I undertook to write to the Honourable Mary Collins, Associate Defence Minister, and a letter was sent yesterday. It reads as follows:

> Dear Minister,
>
> As you will be aware, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which I Chair, reported Bill C-77, An Act to amend the National Defence Act, back to the Senate without amendment on June 2, 1992. Bill C-77 dealt only with revisions to court martial procedures, designed to bring the National Defence Act into compliance with recent Supreme Court of Canada rulings in this area.
>
> However, various members of the committee raised other issues relating to the National Defence Act, inquiring as to whether amendments in these areas had been considered for inclusion in Bill C-77 or in future legislation. In particular, the Committee was concerned that the death penalty is still applicable for certain offences committed by a member of the armed forces.
>
> We were assured that you had given an undertaking in the House of Commons that the National Defence Act would be reviewed with a view to considering what other amendments might be made.
>
> The Committee has asked that I urge you, in the strongest terms, to give priority in this review to the abolition of capital punishment as a potential penalty for breach of any offences under the Act or regulations. As Senator Hastings noted during our hearings, it has been 16 years since the death penalty was abolished in Canada, and even longer since major revisions were made to the National Defence Act, so that a review might be said to be overdue.
>
> Thank you for your attention to this matter and I look forward with pleasure to having my Committee cooperate with you in the speedy passage of such an amendment.
>
> Yours sincerely,
>
> Nathan Nurgitz, Q.C.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to thank honourable Senator Nurgitz for his statement today and his courtesy in sending me a copy of the letter which I received this morning. I had raised the matter on second reading of Bill C-77 and I am pleased to see that he has taken action.

Apart from the question of the death penalty, I believe there are a number of other items in the National Defence Act that also need to be brought up to date. I trust that that will be done at the same time.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

48th ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I think it is appropriate, even though a few days late, that we reflect for a few moments on an historic event, the 48th anniversary of D-Day, the landing of the Allied forces on the beaches of Normandy.

June 6, 1944, marked the launching of the most important battle in the history of modern warfare. It was important because that invasion led to the defeat of Hitler and his Axis power.

By the time D-Day arrived in 1944, a nation of only 11 million souls had produced the third largest combined fighting unit in the Allied forces. Many thousands of young Canadians, mostly 18 to 21 years of age, answered the call of their country for one reason and one reason only, to defeat an enemy that threatened peace in the world.

For almost half a century since then we have paid tribute each year to those many young volunteers who paid the ultimate price. During those years, Canadians have heard many versions of the reality of that horrible war from the multitude of historians who wrote about the well-armed, disciplined, determined and highly-trained Canadian soldiers under the leadership of skilled, solid and experienced officers who led us to victory by bringing to bear the versatility of air power, combined with the dogged effectiveness of naval support and the mobile thrust of armour, infantry and artillery.

Yet, honourable senators, for some reason or other today we are suddenly confronted with another version of our country's contribution to the preservation of peace which raises doubt in the minds of those who lost loved ones, and who mourn the loss of those of our youth who paid with their lives and thereby were denied the opportunity to participate in a country that has been an example of steady growth and prosperity over the past half century. We must challenge that negative thinking.

As for those who have been chosen as leaders of our vast regions of Canada and who jealously guard their individual and sometimes selfish interests in creating a nation united for the good of all our people, I hope that they will stop and think of how they earned that right: Through the sacrifice of those young Canadian soldiers who fought and died for their country, which those leaders sometimes easily forget.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

THE ESTIMATES, 1992-93

NATIONAL FINANCE TWELTH REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCES COMMITTEE ON MAIN ESTIMATES PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its twelfth report concerning its examination of the expenditures proposed by the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31 March, 1993. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this House.

[Senator Marshall.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 1678.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Bolduc, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-84, to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday June 15, 1992.

[Translation]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 15, 1992.

● (1410)

[English]

BANKRUPTCY ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 15, 1992.

[Translation]

CUSTOMS ACT

CUSTOMS TARIFF

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act.

Bill read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 15, 1992.

[English]

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS BILL, 1992

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-45, to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 15, 1992.

[Translation]

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-59, an Act to amend the National Parks Act.

Bill read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 15, 1992.

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-75, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 15, 1992.

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we proceed with the next item on the agenda, I think congratulations are in order for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Lynch-Staunton. He indicated some time ago that he would do what he could to ensure that we get the bills with a little more time to spare, and not next Thursday or Friday, for instance, just before the Senate intends to adjourn.

He was as good as his word, and I appreciate that.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Another Conservative who kept his word!

Senator Molgat: The only one I know!

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: The exception that proves the rule!

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

EIGHTY-SEVENTH CONFERENCE, YAOUNDÉ, CAMEROON—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Monday next, June 15, 1992, I will draw the attention of the Senate to the 87th Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, held in Yaoundé, Cameroon, from April 6 to 11, 1992.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 503 residents of British Columbia who object to the goods and service tax.

Most of these petitions are from Kamloops.

I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 200 residents of New Brunswick who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Fredericton and Moncton.

We have here a total of 703 Canadians who condemn the goods and services tax as being regressive and unfair, while 200 in this group object more specifically to the application of the GST to books and periodicals.

You appreciate that, Senator Chaput-Rolland! The senator just gave me a big smile!

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

STATUS OF PETROLEUM INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Leader of the Government respecting this government's energy policy, or gas and oil program, if it has one. I hold in my hand the 1991 annual report of the Canadian Petroleum Association. On the very first page the Chairman, Mr. L.B. Gordon reports:

> . . . the haemorrhaging within the industry has been terribly severe: last year the upstream's net losses were certainly in the hundreds of millions of dollars—our second loss ever . . . The industry's unacceptable financial performance has led inevitably to down-sizing. The number of lay-offs from producing companies has topped 10,000 over the last two years.

In the service and drilling sector, there has been an additional 50,000 to 70,000 jobs lost in approximately three years.

Has the government any plans to assist the energy sector, which, in the words of Mr. Gordon, is "haemorrhaging" and which in 1992 will be experiencing its lowest drilling levels in 20 to 25 years, including all the period that my honourable friend has mentioned when the National Energy Program was in effect?

● (1420)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I know, as does the Honourable Senator Olson, that the petroleum industry world-wide has been undergoing a major restructuring and rationalization for the past two or three years, and a similar process has been taking place in Canada. Given the concern that the honourable senator has expressed, and with which I agree, it is much to be regretted that he and his colleagues could not bring themselves to support the changes in the foreign investment policy for the Canadian oil and gas industry announced a few weeks ago by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Epp.

[Senator Hébert.]

Senator Olson: In Question Period last week, the Leader of the Government said this in reply to Senator Perrault:

> . . . Canada has had net investment inflows for the first time since the imposition of my friend's—

That is Senator Perrault's, I guess.

> — national energy policy.

One thing is absolutely certain, and that is that there was no net inflow of capital investment into the energy sector. Perhaps the Leader of the Government wants to include the $2 billion that the Ford Motor Company is spending on building a new plant for a new model of vehicle. Why in the name of anything that has any common sense attached to it he would want to attach that to the national energy policy is beyond me. His statement is so ludicrous and ridiculous that it is inaccurate. It has nothing to do with the national energy policy at all.

The serious side of this matter is that we are down to the lowest level of drilling activity in the field in about 25 years. I ask the minister if he has any plans to do anything about that. Never mind what the opposition may or may not support. The people out there are interested in what this government intends to do about the situation. The opposition's policies, good as they may be, quite frankly, will not be implemented until there is an election and we get back into office.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the reason I mentioned the national energy policy is that it was responsible for causing a net outflow of investment from Canada for quite a number of years.

Senator Olson: That is a matter of opinion; that is not a fact.

Senator Murray: I agree that Canada does need development capital. To reinforce what the honourable senator has said about investment and expenditures on exploration, I am told that they are expected to decrease by 14 per cent in 1992, while spending on drilling is expected to decrease by 17 per cent. The Canadian companies and their associations repeatedly came to the government, to Mr. Epp, to Mr. Wilson and others, to impress upon us the difficulties that these companies were having in sourcing new investment.

Why, then, does my honourable friend not support the policy announced by Mr. Epp at the end of March in which we abandoned the oil and gas acquisitions policy, which did not allow the sale of Canadian-controlled oil and gas assets valued in excess of $5 million? Why does he not support that measure? That is the kind of practical measure that the industry has asked for. We have responded positively. He ought to have a word with some of the more nationalistic members of his own party.

● (1430)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, what the Leader of the Government is saying is complete trash. He is saying that the government will not bring in what it believes will improve the economic activity through national energy policy unless the opposition approves it. When did this start? The government has enough of a majority in both houses to bring in whatever policy it believes can be useful in increasing the activity in that sector.

Why does the leader constantly ask, "Why don't you support it?" Whether or not we support it does not make any difference; we are in the opposition now with a minority. The honourable senator ought to get that message through his head and into his mind. Apparently the new policy of the government is that, every time we ask a question about the mismanagement and failings of this government, the first thing they do is ask, "What would you do?", as if it matters.

This government is in office and it has the responsibility to govern. How can it expect us to take such questions as answers to our questions? I want to know what the government is doing. The people in the industry and the people who have lost their jobs — about 70,000 or 80,000 of them—want to know what the government is doing. They are not particularly interested in opposition policies, because they know they will not be put in place anyway.

Hibernia and other such projects are pretty important to other parts of Canada's energy sector.

Senator Doody: And the Lower Churchill.

Senator Simard: You are having a very good week, senator.

Senator Murray: Senator Olson had asked what the government intended to do, and I told him that the government had responded positively to the representations made by the industry. The announcement was made by Mr. Epp at the end of March. The legislation will be before the House of Commons and the Senate. That is a positive step. I am calling on him to use his undoubted influence with colleagues here and in the other place to ensure approval and swift passage of these legislative amendments, which are very important as the industry has told us.

Senator Olson: Tell us what they are.

Senator Murray: They are facing global competition for capital. It is simply not appropriate to have investment barriers and serious restrictions on foreign investment.

The honourable senator wants to know what they are. We will raise the review threshold for oil and gas from $5 million to $150 million for U.S. investors under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. We are doing away with the policy which will not allow the sale of Canadian controlled oil and gas assets valued in excess of $5 million unless the companies are in financial difficulty. The honourable senator knows or recalls that, I am sure. We are responding positively to the representations that have been made to us by the industry.

Senator Doody: Don't be negative now.

Senator Olson: What the leader has just described really amounts to a distressed and forced selling by Canadian companies of Canadian assets in the gas and oil sector.

Senator Murray: So you are opposed to it.

Senator Olson: No, but the consequences of what the honourable senator is advocating ought to be brought to their attention.

Senator Murray: You are against it.

Senator Olson: I am against anything where a government would stand by and let an industry go down the drain. That is what is happening to the gas and oil industry. What the honourable senator has just described is a forced and distressed selling of Canadian assets owned by Canadian companies to foreign investment, as if that will in the long term cure the situation.

I want to know what you intend to do in this respect for Canadian companies, not what you intend to do for foreign companies. We have seen dozens and dozens of Canadian companies going broke in that sector because of the mismanagement of the economy, to the extent that the haemorrhaging has now reached absolutely unacceptable proportions. What does the government intend to do about it? Does it simply intend to make it easier for foreign companies to come in and buy up Canadian assets.

Senator Simard: You have asked your question; sit down.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it now appears that we are going to rehash the debate that took place here and elsewhere on the infamous national energy policy that caused so much damage to the western economy. I have to remind the honourable senator, and his friends Lloyd Axworthy and Maude Barlow, that Canadians are owners of their energy resources and will continue to own them regardless of who may own the companies producing the resource. Canadians will continue to benefit from their ownership of energy resources from the collection of royalties and taxes, which apply equally to all energy producers regardless of their apparent nationality.

We continue to have control over energy resource development and exploitation through the federal-provincial regulatory agencies. The fact of the matter is that Canadians themselves have not been willing or prepared to come forward with sufficient new equity investment to fund the needed new development. The Canadian companies, as I have said twice before this afternoon, have come to us repeatedly to tell us about their problems in sourcing new investment. I am very disappointed to learn, as I have just learned, that Senator Olson, who seems to be aligning himself with the Maude Barlow-Lloyd Axworthy faction of the Liberal Party, is opposed to these constructive measures announced at the end of March by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Senator Doody: Senator Olson is going to the far left.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have one last question. The government does not have a policy except to make it easier for foreign investment to buy up Canadian investment in Canadian oil and gas assets at depressed prices.

Senator Murray: You are opposed.

Senator Olson: I was interested in whether this government had any policy to increase activity based on market access of Canadian oil and gas in such a way that it would be helpful to the people who are working in that field. I am sorry, but I guess I have to report that I did not get an answer to that question.

Senator Doody: It will all be in the mail, though.

WESTERN SAHARA

IMPLEMENTATION OF PEACE PLAN—REQUEST FOR UPDATE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, the events in what was formerly Yugoslavia have obscured events elsewhere. I wonder if the Leader of the Government could bring us up to date on the situation in the Western Sahara?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thought I had some notes from my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the peacekeeping operation in Western Sahara, but my notes are not up to date. I have notes as of April 28. I will try to bring them up to date in the next day or so.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

CANADIAN TERRITORIAL WATERS—STATUS OF FRENCH CLAIMS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, would the minister make a statement, either today or at another early sitting, about the decision with regard to French claims in Canadian territorial waters and within Canada's economic zone? Would he, in that statement, describe the decision and provide us with an analysis of the implications of the decision?

• (1440)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can only help my honourable friend to this extent by repeating what was said yesterday by my colleague Mr. Crosbie, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, as set out in a news release yesterday. He said:

> The Court awarded France very little of the area that it had claimed . . . France had claimed an area, outside the 12-mile territorial sea, of 13,703 square nautical miles, but was awarded only 2,537 square nautical miles. A portion of this is in the deep waters of the Laurentian Channel, which contains virtually no fisheries resources.

Mr. Crosbie goes on:

> Elimination of the large disputed zone means that management of the groundfish resources in subdivision 3Ps is now under Canadian control . . . France's claim had encompassed virtually all of St. Pierre Bank, but the area awarded to France appears to contain very limited amounts of groundfish, but more scallop resources.

[Senator Murray.]

The communiqué from the government goes on to quote Mr. Crosbie as saying that his officials are undertaking a comprehensive analysis of the decision with the fishing industry and that preliminary results were to have been made public at a news conference this afternoon in St. John's.

The news release goes on to state:

> To ensure an orderly implementation of the ruling, Canada and France have agreed that fishing vessels will be given 45 days to adjust to the new boundary. Canada's Department of Fisheries and Oceans is notifying the Canadian fishing industry of the geographical coordinates of the new boundary, which will be precisely set out in an Order-in-Council.
>
> The Government is also assessing the implications of the ruling on Canada's oil and gas interests. A drilling moratorium, agreed to by both countries, has been in effect over the disputed area since 1967.

Senator Stewart: When the assessments to which the minister has referred have progressed to a point at which a report would be useful, would the minister make that report available to this house?

Senator Murray: Yes, I will undertake to do that.

THE CONSTITUTION

STATUS OF CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR UPDATE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, would the minister bring us up to date with respect to what is happening at the constitutional conference? It has been getting a great deal of TV and radio news coverage. Does he have any further information for the Senate?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators, I do not. I expect that the Right Honourable Mr. Clark, President of the Privy Council, will be making a statement shortly.

Senator Molgat: Would the minister indicate to us at this time what definition he places on the word "shortly." Does it mean within the next hour, sometime today or sometime tomorrow?

Senator Murray: When last I enquired, the participants were having lunch. I had the clear impression that not long after lunch Mr. Clark would be making a statement.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, does that mean that the statement will be made right after lunch, and that thereafter there will not be any further discussions?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know exactly what the statement will say.

JUSTICE

SOCIAL UNREST—PROPOSED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH BIG CITY MAYORS AND FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, shortly after the shocking events occurred in Toronto in early May, I asked some questions in the Senate regarding the Prime Minister meeting with officials of big cities. Since then, I have asked questions on two occasions in the same vein. In reply to my questions, the Deputy Leader of the Government said on May 21 that the Prime Minister had received the invitation and, "The invitation will be given early consideration."

We are now well into June, and the events are a month behind us. While memories are short at times, and events that are of extreme seriousness on a certain day fade as time goes on, I think these events have shocked Canadians. This was not something that we expected. The events in Los Angeles were shocking enough, but for similar events to take place in our own backyard is much worse.

We are facing a serious problem in our large cities. Can the minister indicate when the Prime Minister will undertake to meet with these people?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I really do not have anything to add to the reply that the Deputy Leader of the Government gave on May 21. When there is something new to report, I will be glad to bring it in.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN DURUM WHEAT—DECLINE IN SALES TO ITALY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my next question is one to which I do not expect an answer today. However, I would ask that the minister seek an answer to it, because it is an important question for Canada in its export area, and in particular as it relates to western Canadians.

There was a recent report from the University of Guelph which stated that the sales to Italy of Canadian durum wheat had very substantially decreased. A decade ago, Canadian durum accounted for 55 per cent of Italy's imports of that commodity. Canada's share at present has fallen to 15 per cent.

Meanwhile, American durum sales to Italy have grown from 7 per cent of Canadian sales in 1985 to 130 per cent in 1990. There is a definite and serious shift involved here.

Some explanation has been given to the effect that this shift is related to the increased production by the European Community, and with the fact that the European Community has had higher import levies. However, that would not account for increased American sales versus Canadian sales. As far as I know, both countries are treated equally.

The explanation given by others is that Canada has not kept up to date in its grading. In fact, they point the finger and say that the Canadian durum grading system cannot satisfy the sophisticated information needs of an advanced processing industry.

Can the minister find out exactly what is the situation? Grading comes under government responsibility. This shift in sales is a serious one, particularly if the Americans, in the meantime, are increasing their sales.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would be glad to do so.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

REVENUE CANADA—REMISSION OF COLLECTED TAXES

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I have a serious question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. A couple of days ago, reference was made in a newspaper to the fact that Revenue Canada does not know how many tax cheaters there are, and that Revenue Canada suspects many people do not realize they must file a GST return every three months.

I am one who has supported this tax measure from coast to coast, which measure replaced the federal sales tax. I am one who believes that this tax, as all taxes, must be fair and equitable, and easy to collect and manage. In the last few months the Minister of National Revenue has confirmed to the world that, in order to facilitate matters, changes have been made to the administration, as well as to the number of times tax returns are required to be filed by various categories of taxpayers. Some taxpayers must file just once a year, while others must file quarterly or monthly.

As one who has had experience as a chartered accountant, and has also been a member of a provincial government, I have been able to observe over the years that there are many people who do not pay taxes. Worse, there are merchants who collect taxes from good taxpayers but do not remit them.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us, now or in the next few days, what measures the government will take to ensure that taxes that are collected from taxpayers are remitted to the government? Second, are there any other measures that the minister can tell us about that would help us facilitate tax collection and ensure compliance with the law?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be glad to obtain a report on that matter from my colleague the Minister of National Revenue Mr. Jelinek.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—FURTHER DECREASE IN PRIME LENDING RATE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, its being Thursday, before Question Period ends I want to answer a question that Senator Olson has not had an opportunity to ask today. I want to advise him and the Senate that the bank rate today went down from 6.23 per cent to 6.08 per cent, a space of 15 basis points. I know that he will join me in expressing his entire satisfaction with the continuing decrease in the bank rate and in interest rates as the progress in defeating inflation and creating conditions for renewed sustained economic growth continues to be realized in this country.

Senator Olson: Will you give a commitment to keep it down?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I want to thank the minister for his statement. Frequently, when we ask questions, we find that we get very evasive answers. Now we have a new program by which we get answers to questions we do not ask. That is certainly a step forward.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INTERCESSION IN LAMONT-SPENCER CASE

Hon. L. Norbet Thériault: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question that has nothing to do with the economy or interest rates, either high or low. My question has to do with the Lamont-Spencer case in Brazil.

Officials from the Department of Justice have appeared before a committee in the other place in order to answer questions on this matter. I have been doing a lot of reading on this case, and like many others, New Brunswickers especially, I am concerned about the Spencer family's trouble. I do not know the Lamont family, but the Spencers in Moncton are a well-known family.

I am not satisfied, as a Canadian, that these two Canadians have been fairly treated. Whatever they may have been involved in—and I am not suggesting they were or were not involved—they are pleading innocent. However, even assuming they had been involved in a crime, had it been in Canada, under the Canadian justice system the case would never have warranted a 28-year sentence.

These two people have now been in jail for over two years, under, from what am I told, very extreme circumstances. I am pleading with the Leader of the Government in the Senate to talk with the Minister of External Affairs, who, as opposed to the Minister of Justice, seems to be the leading minister in this case, to please once again revisit this file.

Along with many other Canadians, especially New Brunswickers, I believe that the minister has made a wrong decision. I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to ask the minister to revisit the file and see if she will not change her mind.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been involved in this matter because of the suggestion that she should ask a foreign country to expel these two Canadian citizens. I think the point is moot anyway, because it is my understanding that the government of that country would not do so in any event.

[Senator Murray.]

All I can undertake to do is bring in a statement on the Canadian government's position on this matter—not the position of one minister or another, but our position as the government —and table it in the Senate.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, that is not what I am asking. I have seen the statement. I know what the government position is. But along with a lot of other Canadians, including lawyers and experts in the field, I believe that the government has taken the wrong position. I do not believe that the Government of Brazil has refused to expel those people. I am told, as a matter of fact, that they would be quite anxious to comply with any request from the Canadian government to have those people sent back to Canada. As a matter of fact, I understand that the suggestion was made, but for some reason refused. I can understand that there might be some repercussions, if it meant the involvement of External Affairs, but I am sure there has to be some reason.

On behalf of the people of Canada, and especially the people of New Brunswick, who think that the decision is wrong, I am asking you to ask the lead minister in this case to revisit the file and see if she will not change her position or if the government will change its position.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has stated his own position on the matter and he has asked me to agree with it. That I am not in a position to do, because I have not made a study of the issue, frankly.

However, I will be glad to draw his representations to the attention of my colleague. If there are any comments she wishes to make, I will be glad to transmit them to the Senate. Meanwhile, if the honourable senator wishes to engage in a debate on the merits of the matter, I shall obtain enough information to do that at the appropriate time.

Senator Thériault: But I am asking you to—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according to rule 24, Question Period is over. Will you entertain the last supplementary from Senator Thériault?

Senator Thériault: No, they are great rules. I abide by those rules.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FARM PRODUCTS AGENCIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fourth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry

(Bill C-54, An Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act and other Acts in consequence thereof—with certain amendments), presented in the Senate on 10th June, 1992.

Hon. Eric Berntson, for Hon. Efstathios William Barootes, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, moved the adoption of the fourth report of the Committee.

He said: Honourable senators, I would be happy to make a few comments to explain the three amendments that were dealt with in committee and the order of their disposition.

The first amendment, which I will naturally call amendment No. 1, was brought forward to provide for check-offs for Wheat Board grains that were not included in the original legislation. They were not included in the original legislation, I am told, because the Wheat Board itself was looking at the possibility of doing it internally with respect to its own authority. Since it was too late to include these grains in the original legislation, the Wheat Board came to the conclusion that they would prefer to have the Wheat Board designated area and the grains under the Wheat Board authority included in this legislation.

Honourable senators, this amendment was supported not only by the Canadian Wheat Board, but by the prairie pools, the Alberta Barley Commission, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Western Grains Research Foundation.

The amendment simply deals with the portion of section 39 that served to exclude the Wheat Board. This amendment, honourable senators, enjoyed the unanimous support of the committee.

The second amendment was technical in nature. It was simply to correct an oversight in clause 45 of the bill. The problem was that clause 45, which sets out the offences and punishment under Part III of the act, makes reference to paragraphs 7 (1) (h) and (i). However, these paragraphs refer only to marketing agencies, not promotion-research agencies, and the amendment corrects this oversight. That amendment, likewise, I understand, enjoyed the unanimous support of the committee.

The third amendment to be dealt with was one that would have required levies on imports to be collected by Customs and Excise at the border. Various promotion and research boards have been established in the United States and some of them include check-offs on imports that are collected by the U.S. customs service on a cost-recovery basis. Some examples of that are beef, pork and honey.

Canadian producer organizations naturally want a level playing field with the U.S. and have therefore suggested that Canadian customs officials collect check-offs on imports. However, there are significant policy concerns with this approach, such as the use of customs officials and the Consolidated Revenue Fund for what is essentially private purposes. The precedent that this would set for other industry groups, the strain on limited resources at Customs and Excise, which I am told is already pressed to satisfy its mandate as a federal tax collector, and the potential for check-offs collected by customs to be perceived as taxes rather than levies, cause some concern.

As a result, Bill C-54 neither compels nor authorizes the use of customs officials for the collection of import check-offs. However, clause 46 does provide that promotion-research agencies may authorize persons to access customs information under section 108 of the Customs Act. This is in addition to other provisions of the bill that are relevant to the imposition, collection and enforcement of check-offs on imports.

For example, promotion-research agencies may require that buyers of farm products deduct check-offs from payments to producers and remit check-offs to the agencies. Given the authority to access customs information, it may well be more cost effective for agencies to collect levies than for customs to do it. The reason for that is that customs would be collecting on individual transactions at the border, which could be a costly process. In contrast, a promotion-research agency could use customs information to set up a periodic billing system for importers.

Alternatively, a check-off system can probably be set up to automatically include some or all imports without any special effort. For example, a check-off on all cattle entering slaughter plants would effectively levy all imported cattle.

This being said, it is also worth noting that customs has existing authority to enter into administrative or service contracts with promotion-research agencies for the collection of import check-offs on a cost-recovery basis.

Amendments to Bill C-54 that would permit promotion-research agencies to enter into agreements with the Crown for the collection of check-offs were introduced both in the House of Commons and in the Senate. These amendments were defeated since they would not add to the existing legal authority of the Crown but could potentially mislead by appearing to do so. The majority of the committee was persuaded that the third amendment should not be approved. As a result, it was defeated. That is the explanation of why it was defeated.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to make a few brief comments. Today I guarantee you that I will be brief.

I want to compliment the chairman of the committee, Senator Barootes, as well Senator Rossiter, Senator Berntson and several others for trying very sincerely to find a solution to several of the problems Senator Berntson has just mentioned.

I was particularly interested in an amendment being made to clause 12 on page 9 which deals with certain farm products which come under the Canadian Wheat Board, such as wheat and barley.

Although that clause stipulates that all farm products could be eligible to set up an agency for research and promotion, it excepted grains that come under the Canadian Wheat Board such as barley and wheat. The Alberta Barley Commission, the group which appeared before us most recently, wanted access to this legislation in order to continue with some promotion work they had been doing. I expect there are groups in other provinces which want the same access. In any event, that amendment is now being proposed to the Senate and I hope honourable senators are prepared to support it.

The second amendment, as Senator Berntson has just mentioned, is really technical in nature and will improve the bill.

The third amendment relates to customs and excise officers at the border collecting the levy and remitting it to the producer organization, be it beef, sheep or horticultural products. This one is a little more difficult to deal with. I accept Senator Berntson's explanation completely. However, when the committee made inquiries to ascertain whether customs officials or the Department of National Revenue already has the authority to enter into an agreement with a farm products agency, we were given different answers. I would assume that the government feels it already has the authority to enter into such an agreement. If that is true, then we do not need an amendment. However, after conducting some research, we did discover that the two or three acts which could contain that authority, simply do not contain it. Some people are of the view that, since it has never been provided for in any statutory provision, it ought to be.

I will not argue about that now because we were told that the Department of Agriculture and the Department of National Revenue are working sincerely and diligently to find a way to provide the agencies that might be set up under this act with the information to enable them to do their own billing, or to have the billing done for them. If further amendments to the act are required when that is worked out, they will come back and ask for that authority. I am satisfied that there is a sincere effort being made to find the most acceptable method of solving this problem.

I was quite surprised when the Canadian Beef Council appeared before us and said that they do not need the customs officers to collect the tax for them, but that they do have to get information from them so that they know who to bill and for how much. Although there has been discussion about collecting one-fifth of one per cent of the value, I am not sure that will be the number when the actual collection is made. Whatever figure is chosen, the Canadian Beef Council representatives had neither the information concerning the name of the companies bringing the beef in nor the amount. That may be one way of doing it.

● (1510)

There was also some indication that there may be some horticultural products where the amounts would be so small and diversified it might be useful to have the customs officer at the border collect the charges right there. That may be another solution.

I am told that the Department of Agriculture—and I know in the past that this was true—has some officers who are either seconded to or working with Canada Customs and Excise at the border to do certain things the Department of Agriculture is required to do for the protection of our plants and animals in this country. Perhaps an agreement could be worked out between them to expedite collection for certain agencies.

In any event, the committee, with the assistance of the support staff, conducted an excellent review of the bill. The amendments we propose will improve it. I sincerely hope a number of farm product agencies will benefit from the passage of this legislation.

Motion agreed and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Eric Berntson: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact that there is complete agreement on both sides —that is, my colleague, Senator Olson, and the deputy chairman of the committee are in agreement—we are prepared to grant leave.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

CONFLICT OF INTERESTS

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Joint Committee on Conflict of Interests (subject-matter of Bill C-43, An Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of office of Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interests Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts), tabled in the Senate on 10th June, 1992.—(Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton).

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this order stands in my name. The report was tabled only yesterday, and I am not prepared to speak on it at this time. However, if someone else is prepared to do so, I am willing to yield. Otherwise, I would suggest that the order stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

SENATE REFORM

MOTION TO APPROVE THE PRINCIPLE OF AN ELECTED SENATE CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the motion of the Honourable Senator Molgat, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert:

That the Senate of Canada agrees with the principle that the Senate be reformed, by making it an elected body with sufficient membership and power to effectively represent the people of Canada in all regions of our land.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the motion, the Honourable Senator Nurgitz in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we are now in Committee of the Whole. Senator Doyle, please.

Senator Doyle: Honourable senators, at a time of outrageous demand and impossible challenges, it is surely a small sin to borrow a phrase and twist it just a bit to fit the facts. The fact, surely, is this: The Senate of Canada is at risk of sinking into the black hole of media oblivion. "Oblivion", perhaps, is too all-encompassing a word to describe the darkness in which our chamber has been submerged during most of the last half century.

We—you and I—know that the media have permitted certain occasional flashes of blinding light to shine upon us—flashes intended to cleanse us with the balm of truth. Stage a name- calling fight at the Speaker's chair; a hunger strike in the lobby; squander a dollar on travel, and suddenly the Senate address is remembered by those who cloak themselves in the saffron robes of the parliamentary fourth estate.

They were flashing their lights again last week. Said the top of the page headline in the Globe and Mail: "Senate lobby to have major facelift." The deck below the headline read: "Granite, mahogany cosmetic job carries $125,000.00 'bargain' price.

• (1520)

Please note that the word "bargain" before "price" is in quotes, in case you might be stupid enough to believe that "bargain" is intended to mean "bargain". As my son might say: "Wink, wink".

This latest dispatch about Senate waste begins thus and so, and I quote:

> The appointed Senate may be headed for extinction, but that has not stopped members of the upper house from spiffing up their surroundings.

The news of this cataclysmic development had been disclosed a month before at a meeting of the Internal Economy Committee to which the media had been invited. But leave us not quibble; the fourteen paragraphs that followed made a cute little story and contained this memorable quotation from the Government Whip, William Kelly. "The price," said Mr. Kelly, "is marvellous."

Honourable senators, those among you who, for reasons of love or hate, keep an eye on the media will be well aware that when you open a newspaper, the right-hand page is considered to be the prime page. That story of our spendthrift ways at the Victoria Building was at the top of the right-hand page.

Over on the page at the left and occupying only a few inches more space was another report that mentioned the Senate. This was under the headline: "Unity Deal Must Resolve All Issues, Clark Tells MPs." Down in paragraph six, the upper chamber is mentioned, and I quote:

> The two most difficult issues are Senate reform and Quebec's demand for a veto over changes in the Senate. The Senate is the crucial item for the West as the veto is for Quebec.

In the sixteen paragraphs that follow, there is much about the Senate, but nary a word about what senators might think, suggest or timidly offer as solutions to the great national problems buzzing over their bed of pain. Not even a word from Senator Kelly about the price of reform. Score: three senators quoted in the lobby exposé; none in the debate on reform.

It is, honourable senators, as I said earlier, a situation that has existed for fifty years and more in the name of economy —when few newspapers and no broadcasters had any representatives in the Parliamentary Press Gallery—under the stress of wartime manpower shortages—when the Canadian Press kept one correspondent to provide more than 100 newspapers with all they needed to know about the upper house—into the fifties, when even the CP left our Chamber, up to the present when we have to show veteran reporters how to find their way to the Senate gallery for parliamentary openings.

Had it been universally acknowledged that we are rundown bagmen or hangers-on up to no good, it would have been necessary for the press to drive us out of our stout little sinecure. No one seemed up to this expenditure of energy. Instead, it became the convenient wisdom to find relevance only in our irrelevance. Because the Senate was not elected, it and all who entered it were of no importance. The Ottawa Citizen, the Senate's hometown newspaper, even launched a campaign of watching and besetting against our colleague, Senator Wilbert Keon, on the grounds that the famous doctor was too good a man to waste his time in this tomb of the unknown hacks.

Thus have the media found time and space to deal, and I quote them, "with the esthetic of elevator doors" in the Senate's Victoria Building while ignoring what has been happening within the Senate itself in a feisty debate labelled "Senate Reform".

On this very subject, the media have done a fair job of defining the argument at the dominion and provincial levels. This is what they told us Joe Clark said on June 3rd:

> We have not yet settled the basic questions of the basis on which the Senate is chosen, or its powers. But a great deal is agreed. Senators would be directly elected. A system of proportional representation would be defined by Parliament to ensure that the Senate would fully reflect the diversity of Canada. The new Senate would ratify federal appointments or reject them. It would have a 30-day suspensive veto over supply bills. There would be guaranteed representation for Aboriginal Canadians. On issues of French language or culture, a double-majority rule would apply . . . In many areas, exact legal text has been agreed upon, word by word, line by line.

It is assumed, of course, that Joe Clark has followed the Senate debate and has been aware of its thrust; or, at the very least, that one of its his minions has scanned Debates of the Senate and given him the appropriate elbow from time to appropriate time. We are aware that he has read the Beaudoin-Dobbie Report, and is aware, as are senators on both sides of this Chamber —aware and appreciative of the work of our colleague who contributed to that historic document.

But the Senate contemplation of its own navel has gone much further and dealt more creatively and more constructively with what our bicameral system could gain from intelligent reform. And, what is far more important, what Canada could lose if the key reformers are opportunistic, if they act in unthinking haste or prevail in ignorance of the way in which Senate functions have been directed and refined in the last 125 years.

The question that Senate Molgat, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, put before us last winter deals with a matter which Unity Minister Clark says is already settled; that is, should the Senate be elected? In the present political climate, who would disagree? The day of Senate appointment is done. As Gildas Molgat said, "To be elected is the only way in which the Senate will have political validity." Senator Frith said, "If we are not elected, I do not think we will have, in the eyes of the Canadian public, the legitimacy that we require." I nodded agreement.

But that is not consensus, nor is it at all certain that a majority of the senators on this side of the Chamber will endorse that particular change if they remain unconvinced of merit in the still-to-be-determined answers to those other basic questions.

● (1530)

Senator Paul David, away back in February, before any "legal text" had been agreed upon, made one of the most challenging arguments heard in the debate. He said: "In our parliamentary system, the Senate is not an isolated institution. It seems crucial to me to better define its role, its mandate and its powers before deciding that it be elected in a system that perhaps would not be suitable for it."

Senator Bolduc, in a speech that gave great attention to the historic differences in the exercise of Senate powers in Canada and the United States, came to a conclusion that was implicit in this question: How can we design a system for Canada in which the Senate is elected, yet the majority view of the House of Commons prevails, not only for money bills but for any bills?"

[Senator Doyle.]

Honourable senators will recognize that there can be simplistic answers to Senator Bolduc's rhetoric. We hear things such as: So diminish the Senate's area of responsibilities that it can be given little powers that are absolute; put a time limit on powers to delay that can be built into the planning of all government bills; so weaken the processes of election that the Senate becomes an Italian-style house of one-cause advocates that would never prevail over the party-driven groupings in the Commons. A dozen solutions could be trundled in, each one supported by a claque convinced that its scheme would fertilize all the flowers in the garden of democracy.

Senator Bolduc cuts to another question: "If governments tend to give pressure groups privileges at the expense of the silent majority, how can the Senate counter this tendency and get the upper hand on these interest groups which gain strength with every victory? How can this current be diverted when it is conceded at the start that the Senate should represent regional views while the lower house, by its make-up, is supposed to favour centralism?"

Should the Senate be elected? Senator Phillips, participating in what he called "the feeding frenzy of the constitutional discussion," offered this: "Let us consider that the elected Senate is the type envisioned by Senator Molgat. They have been elected independently of political parties. They have no allegiance to Canada as a complete country. They concentrate on the narrow aspects and requirements of their regions." Senator Phillips wants to know, however, what might be expected from an elected Senate "if only the Premier of Alberta speaks for Alberta."

Let us hear from Senator Olson: "I believe, having been both in the Commons and here, that the Senate should not govern Canada. That is the job of the elected members." Senator Olson is an old boy. Senator Keon is as new as we can get. He says: "An elected Senate could cause some serious problems in governance . . . Could we use some medium for selecting (senators) and remove it from the traditional way of having people appointed by successive Prime Ministers?"

Another new man, Senator Di Nino, who has been meeting for months with members of our caucus interested in reform, says: "Unless the Senate is reformed to such a degree that it becomes more effective, then we have to wonder what the purpose of continuing the Senate would be."

Senator Grimard looked about him and saw "senators who are well qualified—former premiers and ministers, farmers, businessmen, professionals. I favour an appointed senator over an elected one," he said. "I realize that, rightly or wrongly, most people do not like the Senate in its present form and since I am against an elected Senate, I must say what I think frankly. For all these reasons, regretfully, I am for abolishing the Senate."

Abolition is about the only reform that was not put on the table by Senator Lowell Murray. The Government Leader in the Senate said: "We ought to put the entire parliamentary system up for discussion in the debate, and rather than considering the reform of one chamber and the grafting of an American institution onto the Canadian system, whether we ought not to reconsider the whole system while we are at it. Given the nature of the country, whether we ought to consider having a separation of powers as between the executive and the legislature as there is in the United States."

Why such a wide horizon? Senator Kinsella pinned it down: He said: "I would like to have the argument clearly articulated that this new system will be as effective as the present system has been for 125 years in protecting freedom and democracy." Senator Bolduc again: "Without drastic reform of the whole parliamentary system, an elected Senate would create more problems than it would solve."

The range of targets for reform widened as the senators were asked to consider a chamber where they themselves would chose Speaker, Clerk and Gentleman Usher; where they would have a work schedule that would provide for examination of the parliamentary mysteries of regulations; where they could develop a brake on the bureaurocracy; where they could take on a far greater share of the exceedingly costly work left to royal commissions; where they might participate in second guessing key appointments made by the executive.

● (1540)

I have taken all this time to remind honourable senators — and remind Joe Clark's minions—of the dimensions of the net that has been thrown in this remarkable Committee of the Whole, and to say something to my friends in what some people still call the Fourth Estate of Parliament.

I have read no stories in the newspapers about what I have just been talking about. I have heard nothing on radio and drawn a blank from the tube where this entire debate on the future of the Senate is concerned. Now, I admit to eccentric habits as a reader, listener and viewer, so I asked my colleagues on this side who participated in the debate what they read, heard or saw. Not a thing, and not even the senator who hurried out to send same-day copy of his speech to the press centre.

There is nothing that we can do about that, honourable senators, beyond this lamentation that the space devoted to the granite and mahogany lobby of the Victoria Building was not saved for some account of the Senate's concerns.

That examination goes on, as do the multilateral negotiations on our fate. Each day I deal with the fear that the future of this place is valued only as a bargaining chip. It is disheartening to think that the Senate, where until this month men like George van Roggen, Arthur Tremblay and Duff Roblin have laboured so hard, is of such little value.

Better the institution be abolished than consumed in a compromise.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I want to thank Honourable Senator Doyle for his very interesting discourse. I will read it carefully when I receive the Debates of the Senate and I may have further comments at that time.

Because of what is happening in the constitutional conference, it was my intention as well to speak to this motion today, but, before I do so, I wish to say I found it particularly interesting that Senator Doyle, as a former editor of the Globe and Mail, had such comments to make with regard to the media. I have to agree with him.

It is interesting that in the comments made by the media about the lobby of the Victoria Building not once did they say that the idea did not originate with the Senate. The idea for this originated with the Department of Public Works. It was not the senators who made that suggestion.

While I am on the subject of media treatment, it also struck me as very interesting that, when this debate was launched last February, 13 senators participated in the first day of the debate, yet the only reference to the debate by the media was to a facetious comment by one of our colleagues about Elvis Presley having appeared in New Brunswick. That is what the press covered; but nary a word about the Senate itself discussing its future and where it stood in the whole Canadian spectrum.

My first comment must be one of disappointment at what is going on at the constitutional conference. I am very disappointed as a westerner. Throughout the whole discussion, we have been told there must be compromise and there must be understanding and there must be preparedness to work for the best of Canada. In general, the people who have been at those conferences—in certain cases, premiers, and other cases, ministers—have honestly been trying to do that. There has been a great deal of compromise. We have to recognize that compromise is a two-way street. It seems to me the compromises so far have been largely to satisfy the central provinces, and, in large part, Quebec.

Please understand my position in this regard. It is certainly not an anti-Quebec position. I sympathize. As a Francophone, possibly I understand their position and their fears somewhat better.

Nevertheless, there has been a fair degree of compromise on such things as the separate status of Quebec, the distinct society. My honourable friends will know that that is not something universally acceptable in other parts of Canada. However, I think we have moved along on that.

We come now to an item of vital concern to the West—the Triple-E Senate. The West has been speaking about this constantly. Now we bog down. We find that, yesterday, the minister, Mr. Benoît Bouchard from the province of Quebec, withdrew from the discussions. Westerners will look upon that and say, "Well, come on now. Compromise must go both ways. It is not a one-way street."

You have to understand, and I suppose I am repeating what I have said before, how important this issue is to the West. The West, frankly, constantly feels that it is dominated by Ontario and Quebec. Those are the facts of life in western Canada. That is the perception. When you look at the composition of the House of Commons, quite obviously that is it. Ontario has 100 seats, Quebec 75, my province 14, Saskatchewan 14. Our members come here and they are dominated in caucus. That is a fact of life in Canada. We have to be prepared to find some way of solving it.

We also have to recognize that Canadian diversity is with us. There will be constant tensions between our regions by virtue of their history, their make-up, their commercial interests and their trade. They have different interests. Somehow we have to find a mechanism to minimize those differences. I do not think the mechanism for doing that is federal-provincial conferences. On the contrary, those conferences increase the differences.

What can a provincial premier do, when he is on television at a federal-provincial conference, except take an absolute, hard, position for his province. If he does not do that, he is not representing his people. His job as a provincial premier is to do that. Federal-provincial conferences by their very nature will continue to raise conflicts between provinces and the federal government. They cannot do otherwise.

We have to find another mechanism in Canada to reduce those tensions, to change the situation from being a fight of province against province, or province against Ottawa. We can do that by moving it here, to the centre. The fight will remain, the discussions will continue, but it will be a fight between people who are here as federal representatives representing their province. That is why the West is so interested in having a Senate.

● (1550)

I remain convinced that the only way that the Senate will have legitimacy in the eyes of the public is if it is elected. I repeat: It is not perfection, but at least from a public standpoint it will give us political legitimacy.

What about the other two Es? I have the feeling that right now there is a tendency to insist on equality, and that we will end up, perhaps, by having equality, but we will have no power. In my view, that would be a sham. Equality by itself will not solve the problems. If this body is to be able to do its job, what we need is sufficient power to do that job. If it does not have that power, then frankly, it is a sham.

I tend to agree with Senator Grimard. If that is to be the way it is to be, then let us abolish the Senate, unless it is to be a meaningful body. We will simply be kidding the troops in saying, "Well, we have reformed the Senate and there it is."

Quite obviously, we cannot have a Senate that will be able to prevent completely the government from governing, and the House of Commons, properly elected on a population basis, from having its final say, but its final say with some conditions. It is at this point that I say it is not enough simply to give a six month veto. If all we are to have is a six month veto, after which the House of Commons passes a bill the second time, as is presently the case with respect to constitutional affairs, then that is not enough.

[Senator Molgat.]

The reason it is not enough is that the bureaucrats will simply build six months into all their plans. Whenever they prepare any kind of legislation, they will say, "We have to be aware that it might not get through until such a date, at which time the House of Commons will put it through." We must remember that in our system a government with a majority in the House of Commons is a dictatorial government, and will pass whatever it wants to pass.

I do not blame my honourable friends opposite. I have sat on that side, and I have been through it. We have had to vote very frequently like sheep. You have been forced to do that several times during this session. I do not blame you. That is the nature of the system. But we have to change that system if it is to be meaningful to Canadians.

Senator Simard: How much power?

Senator Molgat: Let us say a six month suspensive veto and then a deadlock-breaking mechanism. It is not enough simply to return the bill to the House of Commons and say, "Now you can pass it." At that point we have to build in some kind of a deadlock- breaking mechanism.

There are many ways in which we can look at that proposition. We can say that if it goes back to the House of Commons, it will require a two-thirds majority or a three-quarters majority in the House of Commons. A method I prefer is one in which the two houses vote together.

There is also something that I suggested some time ago. I know it goes against the grain in the parliamentary system, but I remind honourable senators that it exists elsewhere. It presently exists in the House of Commons for the election of the Speaker. They hold a secret ballot for the election of the Speaker. When it comes to crucial items in Portugal, for example, there are secret ballots held in its Parliament.

This is not a system that is inconceivable. It could be used when there is a real deadlock between the two houses. Let's face it, those deadlocks are not that frequent. For that kind of deadlock to occur, it has to be about a matter of major importance. I do not think you would see an elected group of senators frivolously going through that kind of an exercise simply to stymie the House of Commons. It would have to be on substantial matters because we would be very much subject to public pressure and opinion if we were elected members. We could have the mechanism of a secret ballot in conjunction with the meeting of the two houses. I throw these suggestions out.

There are many other possibilities. I simply point out that if the Senate's mandate is to be merely a deadline of six months and that is the end of it, the system will not work. We will not be able to do the job for our regions.

You people in Ontario and Quebec will not suffer; not a bit. You will keep on dominating things as you have for years. Let me tell you, the rest of the country will remain extremely unhappy. The conflicts will continue. They will probably become aggravated. Let us find a way of reducing those conflicts, of making this house a body that truly represents the regions, not one that can stifle government, but one that can see to it that there is reasonable regional pressure with enough power to make the government sit up, take notice and conceivably change some of its legislation. I can see many cases in which we could come to an understanding and where changes could be made.

Honourable senators, that concludes my comments for now. I will read carefully what Senator Doyle had to say, after which I may have more to add.

Senator Doody: Would Senator Molgat permit a question?

Senator Molgat: Certainly.

Senator Doody: I have listened with great interest to all these various theories of Eastern, Western and Central balancing, and so on, and the domination. It seems to me that unless you change the party system, you will change nothing. In my years in public life, I cannot remember a time when Ontario and Quebec voted together as a unit on anything. They have always voted along party lines, so unless you change the party lines, you will be changing nothing. There is no point in having an equal number of senators from Alberta and from every other province unless you can devise some way of having them all vote like automatons at the click of the whip from Edmonton or St. John's or wherever. Can you explain that to me? It is at that point that I lose these arguments.

Senator Molgat: Senator Doody, I agree with you. That is the problem in the House of Commons right now. The party system prevents proper regional representation.

It would not be easy to extablish such an alternate system in this chamber either, but I go back to my earlier comments. We would have to try every mechanism possible to ensure that senators are not as bound to the party system as they presently are.

There are mechanisms, such as ensuring that they are not elected at the same time as are the members of the House of Commons. There can be very strict rules on expenditures which would enable independents to run without having to have the aid of some political party. I agree with you; we must explore every avenue to find a system that would give senators their independence.

Let's face facts now: We are appointed here. We are independent and individual -- no one can do anything to us. Yet, what happens here when we vote? We vote along party lines. It is not working out with an appointed system.

Senator Doody: How do you expect it to work in a freely elected system?

Senator Molgat: By all the mechanisms put in place to reduce the influence of parties on the system. I think we can find ways. They will not be perfect, but it cannot be any worse than it is now. I have pleaded with some of you across the way to vote with us at times on issues where I know you agree with us, yet because of party lines, you do not.

Senator Sylvain: Senator Molgat, would you answer another question, please, on the same topic?

Senator Molgat: Yes.

Senator Sylvain: If one has to run for election, one normally does not do that with one's own funds. One goes to a party to get the funds. How, then, do you separate party influence from the people who provide the funds?

Senator Molgat: That is why I say we would have to have very strict rules on expenditure. I think something that we could consider is having election expenses paid for by the state. After all, what is it that we do when we come into government? It is not for our personal gain. We are here to do a job. We are here to represent people, to make government work. Would it be so very wrong to have government pay election expenses? Party influence would be removed. Admittedly, there would have to be some limitations as to how you become a candidate and all the rest of it, but it is not an impossible mechanism.

Senator Sylvain: If the government is to pay election expenses, it has to pay them, presumably, for anyone who wants to run.

Senator Molgat: Yes.

Senator Sylvain: So if 30 people want to run in one area, then the government would have to pay 30 times the election costs for that area. I do not think that would make much sense.

• (1600)

Senator Molgat: There could be very definite limitations, such as having to obtain a certain number of signatures in order to run. Controls could be put on it. It is not an impossibility. But I repeat to you, the present system is not working. It is simply not working.

Senator Doody: There is no point in replacing it with another one that will not work.

Senator Molgat: Frankly, Canadians do not accept that we are a legitimate body. So either we make some changes or we fail to do the job.

[Translation]

Le sénateur Bolduc: Honourable senators, I have a question for the deputy leader of the opposition in the Senate.

Don't you think that in the kind of government we have, that is government by Cabinet, the party is the essence?

Le senator Molgat: I agree with you, Senator Bolduc, and I admire the party system. We could not function without it.

The House of Commons represents the people, but there could be another chamber to which the Cabinet would not be accountable. Cannot a chamber which cannot bring down the government be of another sort, have a regional spirit?. This is the situation here, and we cannot change that. We must find a way to preserve the regional spirit in this house, at the centre, and not transfer it to provinces which are often at odds.

So let us have a different kind of house with a minimum of partisan influence. I know that will not disappear. I have no illusions about that. We have to minimize it and insist that we will not attend our parties' caucuses. We must insist on holding regional caucuses. Mechanisms exist to do so.

As things are now, frankly, the system does not work. I am sure that you have voted for things you did not like. That must change. Senator Simard sided with us on one issue and I admired him for doing so.

You know, saying these things seems like a criticism. It is not. It is just a statement of fact. We must change the system because Canadians will not let it go on this way.

The Senate will be abolished. However, I am convinced a Senate is justified in a country like ours. There is a reason for having a Senate, because Canada is a federation with big differences between the provinces.

Senator Simard: I have a question for Senator Molgat.

I think that at the beginning of your statement, you said what compromises were necessary and that probably Westerners, like people in the other regions that have historically felt outweighed by the political clout of Ontario and Quebec in Confederation— I think that overtures were made and accepted.

I would like to ask Senator Molgat, having seen and read the reports in recent months and especially in the last week, whether he can tell us if he believes that Senate reform is the only outstanding issue.

I believe that even if Quebec is ready for a proposal from English Canada, as Mr. Bourassa has said and others have repeated, and even if the Senate issue still has to be resolved, the distinct society, the division of powers or the spending power and the aboriginal question, to name only these, still have to be settled. No agreement has yet been reached. Do you share my assessment?

I think that much more than the Senate issue is still outstanding.

I ask Senator Molgat, for one, if that is what he observed, to continue in his province and elsewhere to have western provincial representatives and others revisit this question in order to come up with a solution that would be acceptable to Quebec and other partners, like Ontario, with respect to the distribution of powers and the distinct society. As far as I am concerned, it is still up in the air.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I may be mistaken, but I have the impression that great progress has been made on the distinct society and that in general things are moving forward. I thought that it would be acceptable. I must tell you that things will be very difficult if the West's position on the Senat is completely unacceptable.

As far as the West is concerned, I am convinced a compromise is possible on the Triple-E issue. Elected and effective, fine, but a compromise might be reached on the equality issue.

[Senator Molgat.]

For instance, if the four Western provinces had the same weight as Ontario and Quebec together, and the same would apply to the Maritime provinces, I think a compromise could be reached.

I don't think strict equality isn't essential. I think it is negotiable. I think there is sufficient room for a compromise.

Senator Simard: Senator Molgat is far more optimistic in his assessment of the situation than other Canadians who have heard and read the statements made in the past few days by Messrs. Getty, Filmon and Wells.

I would be delighted if his version of the facts were closer to the truth than mine.

Senator Molgat: Now that, Senator Simard, is exactly the kind of thing I find so depressing.

The first ministers of those provinces always have to keep their electorate in mind. Sometimes they have to take positions in public which may not be what they themselves would prefer. But an agreement can be reached in a set of proposals where there are items that we like, others that we like a lot less, and others we don't like at all. However, when these people are put in front of a microphone, they often have to take that kind of position.

I am still convinced that an agreement is possible, but both sides must be willing to compromise.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I received word a few minutes ago that the constitutional talks had broken off. I suppose most senators already know that. Apparently, at that stage, no decision had been reached on Senate reform. The last discussions were on a proposal by Saskatchewan for Senate reform. The essence of that proposal was that, while all provinces would have the same number of senators, the more populous ones would have more votes than the others.

I had heard earlier today that that was the proposal.Some senators would have one vote; some would have more votes, with the numbers of their votes applying differently to different situations. One point they tried to make is that, when voting on matters involving the natural resource of the province, it would be equal representation: one senator, one vote.

Senator Doody: And some would be more equal than others!

Senator Olson: In that situation they would be completely equal, but on other matters like equalization payments, and who is going to pay them, then some Senators would be more equal than others.

I am further advised that the conference participants are presently meeting to discuss what happens next. That to me is extremely important, and I made a few comments about that yesterday. I hope that the government will not simply cobble together some of the items that are on the table, such as "distinct society".

Senator Simard: What would you do?

Senator Olson: I would be very careful.

Senator Simard: You killed Meech Lake. You did the job on Quebec in 1981 and 1982. What would you do now?

Senator Olson: One of the problems we have in the Senate is that Senator Simard has the bad habit of asserting as facts things that are not true. I am not sure they are even his opinion. Facts and opinions are not necessarily the same thing.

These are the facts, if you are interested: in 1981 and 1982, the federal government did not—as the Prime Minister of today continues to assert from time to time—leave Quebec out. Quebec was there and was invited to participate all through the process. They did not sign it, I agree.

Senator Simard: Canadians know what happened in 1981 and 1982.

Senator Olson: I guess it is pretty clear to most of us who can remember that far back that the leader of a separatist party is not going to sign an agreement that will strengthen the Confederation of Canada. That does not take a lot of intelligence to understand.

• (1610)

Senator Simard: Where were you at the time of the National Energy Program? You were there. What was the weight of western Canada at the time?

Senator Olson: Which time?

Senator Simard: When the National Energy Program was designed, you, sir, and your colleagues from western Canada, like trained seals, voted for it, supported it and bragged about it. It cost your province all kinds of revenue and led to greater condemnation by the West of central Canada. Where were you?

Senator Olson: Senator Simard is doing exactly what he typically does in this chamber, over and over again. He gets up and makes a great loud assertion about believing his own propaganda.

Senator Simard: There have been other occasions since.

Senator Olson: That is unfortunate. I really did not want to get into a shouting match with Senator Simard because he obviously does not understand what went on in those days.

Senator Simard: I understand—

Senator Olson: I do not particularly care whether he does. I wonder if I could finish my little speech. I just wanted to make a little speech.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: What are we to do now? Conference participants are presently meeting and discussing that situation. The federal government, as I understand it, is obliged to make a package proposal to Quebec some time soon so that the government of that province can decide whether they want to accept it or call a plebiscite for October.

Senator Simard: There is just so much garbage we can take.

Senator Olson: Everyone knows that that is what will happen. I just want to make sure that the government understands that it can accommodate only one part of the country if it follows that route. As Senator Molgat has pointed out very clearly, there are some other parts of the country that believe they have a legitimate right to have their needs considered when the package to be offered to Quebec is put together. I do not know whether that will take place as a result of a first ministers' meeting. It may well be. However, there no longer seems to be much enthusiasm on the part of the leaders of this government to have a first ministers' meeting on that particular subject.

Senator Simard: So you can criticize the 10 men or 11 persons in the group.

Senator Olson: Canadians do not want a repeat of what happened at Meech Lake, where 11 or so men and their advisors sat in a closed room until early in the morning, and then came out and said, "Here it is". I heard the Leader of the Government in this chamber say that that agreement was a seamless web, that nothing about it could be changed. I think they learned their lesson from that. I am not so much afraid of that anymore.

I want to bring these comments to a close. I hope that the government understands, from the Meech Lake experience and what has happened in the last five weeks or so of conferences, that there is a Canada from the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic Coast, and that every part of it needs to be taken into account.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall I report progress?

Senator Simard: Mr. Chairman, Senator Olson's last intervention leads me to ask him a question. He warns the government against calling a first ministers' conference, yet he hopes that something will take place in the next few weeks or months. He has dragged all those red herrings and has reported the legitimate concerns of western Canada. I think there would be unanimous consent to give Senator Olson another five or ten minutes, if need be.

The Chairman: No.

Senator Simard: Let me finish the question. You have only heard a part of my preamble. Senator Olson is obviously very much interested, as we should all be, in the constitutional talks led by Mr. Clark. What does he suggest that the government and all those representatives of Canadians do to resolve this? It is all very well to advance warnings and cautions, but what would you do?

Senator Olson: That is the standard answer of the Minister of Finance, the Leader of the Government and everyone else. In response to every criticism that we make of what the government does they say, "What would you do?" I would like to give a full and complete answer to Senator Simard's question.

As a matter of fact I have it ready, but I do not intend to impose it on the house at this time.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall I report progress and request leave to sit again?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred the motion of Honourable Senator Molgat with respect to an elected Senate, reports having made some progress and requests leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I move that the committee be given authority to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

THE SENATE

RESEARCH FUND—STUDY COMPLETED—DOCUMENT TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Arthur Tremblay rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, June 3, 1992:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to a study carried out with the help of research funds that the Senate makes available to its members.

He said: Honourable senators, the notice I gave more than a week ago said I would call the attention of the Senate to a study carried out with the help of research funds which the Senate makes available to all its members.

The intensity of the debate which just occurred on Senate reform in Committee of the Whole makes me feel that there is a great gap between the last subject and the one I want to deal with now.

On the other hand, I feel that with each day that goes by, the rule forbidding any sitting of the Senate unless there is quorum is more likely to apply: quorum is unsure and in definite danger.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Only when an hon. honourable senator raises the question.

Senator Tremblay: On that point, maybe I will not make a proposal which my deputy leader would gladly accept. However, with your permission, I will propose to table the document which I was about to read almost entirely, that is the text

[Senator Olson.]

I have prepared to explain how I used the research funds that the Senate made available to me and to present the general theme of the study conducted thanks to that fund, that is a review, or the compiling of a file, on what I call the Meech "case", from the beginning to a relatively recent date. The document I prepared describes the main points of that study.

If you prefer, and with your permission, I could table that document if you deem it read and agree to include it in our record. It could be the most elegant way of dealing with the present situation.

If you do not agree with that proposal, I will postpone until tomorrow or another day the presentation of that text, but I am in a very peculiar situation since as days go by the crucial dates are getting closer and closer.

I see no great difference in your knowing what is in that document through reading the debates or through hearing a verbal presentation of it, but I would ask you, however, to get to know the content of that document. With the permission of the Senate, that is what I would like to propose to solve both our problems, mine because I want to make sure you are aware of what that document contains and yours, since you could feel ill at ease because of the impending adjournment.

Senator Molgat: I understand very well what Senator Tremblay just said. I wonder if this does not present a problem in terms of the Rules. This issue was raised in the past: Can we, like the members of the American Congress, show up and say that we want to table a speech without ever making that speech? I believe that in the past we have assumed that nothing says this is not a rule that we should accept.

If it is not accepted as a speech that you were going to make, maybe you could say that you are tabling a report. Otherwise, there might be a problem in terms of the Rules.

Senator Tremblay: I believe that we could consider the issue from that angle, that is a kind of report.

Senator Molgat: Senator Tremblay, I wonder if there is a solution, namely that you reserve your right to present that speech orally and that we ask for a ruling from the Clerks regarding whether you can make that speech by tabling the report.

If this can be done without abusing the Rules, I am totally in agreement. I would like to see your report and I think it is important for all senators to see that document. However, we must be careful with the Rules.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Is there not a Rule which says that if there is unanimous consent among the senators present, we can do just about anything, including tabling Senator Tremblay's report and put it on record?

Senator Molgat: With the approval of the House, we can do whatever we want. However, we might be setting a precedent that could prove troublesome in the future.

[English]

The Hon. C. William Doody: With unanimity it does not matter. It is not a precedent that takes unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Senator Molgat: If that is the case, I do not object to that procedure.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I believe senator Molgat is right. According to our Rules, we cannot do it but, as he suggests, maybe the Clerks could find a way so that this report could be tabled with the unanimous consent of the Chamber, whether today or tomorrow morning, if you agree.

A senator's report cannot be tabled without the unanimous consent of the Chamber, as you know.

If you are in a position to give your agreement right now, this is fine with me.

[English]

If that is all right?

• (1620)

Hon. John B. Stewart: May I ask honourable senators if it would be possible for Senator Tremblay to ask leave of the Senate to lay the document he has in his hands on the table of the Senate? It would then be available to all senators and anyone else who may want to see it.

Senator Tremblay: It would then be part of the debates.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is important that it be reprinted in The Debates of the Senate and not just tabled.

Senator Molgat: Yes, that is what we are requesting.

Senator Simard: It has to be appended to the Debates of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of document see Appendix "B", p. 1682.)

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this Inquiry is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until Friday, June 12, 1992, at 9 a.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See page 1660)

THE ESTIMATES, 1992-93

TWELFTH REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Thursday, June 11, 1992

The Standing Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which were referred the expenditures proposed by the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31 March 1993, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of 27 February 1992, examined the said Estimates and herewith presents its interim report.

Your Committee has held eight meetings on the Estimates so far. Witnesses have included: the President of the Treasury Board and officials of the Treasury Board Secretariat; Professor Kenneth Kernaghan of Brock University; and officials of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Federal Business Development Bank, the Department of Finance, the Department of Agriculture, the Office of the Auditor General, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, and the Privy Council Office.

Part I of the Estimates describes the government's expenditure plan, including the Expenditure Control Plan that was discussed by the Minister of Finance in his Budget of February 25, 1992. Part II, the Main Estimates, is a summary of proposed expenditures by department, agency and program. It includes several tables. The first is a General Summary of the estimates by department and agency, with 1991-92 Main Estimates amounts included for comparison. Next is budgetary main estimates by standard object of expenditure. The first nine standard objects constitute the operating expenditures of the department or agency: personnel; transportation and communications; information; professional and special services; rentals; purchased repair and maintenance; utilities, materials and supplies; and two capital expenditure items -- land and buildings, and machinery and equipment. Objects 10, 11 and 12 are respectively transfer payments, public debt charges, and other subsidies and payments. Object 13, revenues credited to the vote, is subtracted from the sum of Objects 1 to 12 to yield total net expenditures.

The proposed schedule to the Appropriation Bill lists the wording and amounts of each vote that Parliament is being asked to approve. It is followed by a list of the statutory items that are to be spent under previous authorities and are included in the Main Estimates for information only. The remainder of Part II consists of activity descriptions and tables of votes, expenditures by activity and sub-activity, and transfer payments, organized under each department and agency.

In 1992-93, for the first time, Part II does not contain a table of authorized person-years (PYs) by department. This is because person-year controls are being removed by the Treasury Board along with the introduction of operating budgets as part of the implementation of Public Service 2000. When used as a control, PY allocations establish limits on the volume of labour inputs a department may utilize. In effect, the Treasury Board exercises dual controls over most departments through the impositions of both person-year and financial limits. The withdrawal of Treasury Board PY controls is designed to focus the attention of departmental managers on the "bottom line" of overall costs and the provision of service to the public.

In 1991-92, the Treasury Board imposed person-year limits on 82 of the 118 departments, agencies and Crown corporations appearing in the Main Estimates. In 1992-93, PY controls are being discontinued for 13 departments and agencies, accounting for 27,707 PYs, that were selected as pilots for the implementation of Operating Budgets. The Treasury Board is retaining control, for a final fiscal year, over person-year authorities for 69 departments and agencies, accounting for 203,940 person-years. Operating budgets are to be implemented for all departments and agencies in 1993-94, at which time all remaining person-year controls will disappear.

According to Chapter 5, in 1993-94 and future years, departments and agencies will continue to report, in Part III of the Estimates, the details of forecast and actual utilization of both their financial and human resources. They will be accountable to Parliament for the cost effectiveness of their programs and the mix of resources they choose to deliver these programs under the Operating Budget regime. As well, the Treasury Board will continue to control the number of senior executives in each department and agency.

Each department and departmental corporation is required to prepare a Part III document under the supervision of the Office of the Comptroller General. Part IIIs provide additional details on programs, indicating in particular the results expected for the funds being requested from Parliament. A section on program effectiveness provides departments and agencies with their only opportunity to convey information to Parliament on the results of recent internal audits, program evaluations and more general program and policy reviews. While some departments provide candid, useful information on evaluation findings, the material in other program effectiveness sections tends to be quite superficial and self-serving.

Returning to the information in Part II, the 29 consolidated specified purpose accounts include the Unemployment Insurance Account and other accounts covering such diverse areas as Canadian ownership, Western grain stabilization and other agricultural payments, and insurance for fishing vessels and against ship-source oil pollution. A complete list of the accounts appears in Table 5.6 of Volume I of the Public Accounts of Canada, 1991. These accounts have been established in cases where enabling legislation requires that revenues be earmarked and that related payments and expenditures be charged against such revenues. The expenditures are not allocated to specific departments; instead, they appear in Part II at the end of the General Summary table as additional statutory expenditures, as well as in the standard object of expenditure table and in various tables in Part I. Expenditures for the consolidated specified purpose accounts amount to $19.934 billion, an increase of 10.0 per cent over the $18.124 billion for 1991-92. The increase is due largely to an increase of $1.6 billion in the provision for Unemployment Insurance benefits, reflecting the anticipated impact of the continuing recession on unemployment levels.

Including the consolidated specified purpose accounts and the non-budgetary items (loans, investments and advances), total proposed spending in the Main Estimates for 1992-93 amounts to $161.000 billion. Compared to 1991-92 Main Estimates expenditures of $157.903 billion, this represents an increase of 2.0 per cent. This growth calculation, like others for specific departments, agencies and programs, does not reflect the actual level of spending forecast for 1991-92. This forecast includes funds approved in the Supplementary Estimates, as well as over $5 billion of lapses and other items that actually reduced forecast 1991-92 expenditures below the amount in the 1991-92 Main Estimates (for further explanation, see the Committee's Eighth Report on Supplementary Estimates (C), 1991-92, dated March 25, 1992).

Table 2.1 in Part I of the estimates reconciles the budgetary portion of the Main Estimates with projected total budgetary expenditures in the government's fiscal plan. Budgetary Main Estimates are $160.517 billion, higher by 1.9 per cent than the $157.529 billion in the 1991-92 Main Estimates. The 1992-93 amount consists of $111.761 billion in statutory expenditures and $48.756 billion in annual appropriations to be voted by Parliament.

These components are respectively 1.1 and 3.7 per cent higher than the corresponding amounts in last year's Main Estimates.

Negative adjustments totalling $2.854 billion do not appear in the estimates but are disaggregated in Table 2.2 and explained in the adjacent text. Cuts to departmental communications and non-salary operating budgets, and rescheduling Green Plan initiatives, will save $334 million. $1.491 billion will be saved from changes in federal pension plans. Bill C-55, currently being reviewed by the House of Commons, proposes to place these pension plans on a fully funded basis, similar to those in the private sector. If passed, this bill will reduce budgetary expenditures in 1992-93 by $1.0 billion. A further $491 million is expected to be saved from the amortization of surpluses in the Superannuation account due to revised actuarial assumptions.

The proposed replacement of universal Family Allowances by new, more targeted Child Benefits programs will save $750 million in 1992-93. The Main Estimates include $279 million for contributions to countries benefiting from multilateral debt reduction initiatives. This amount has already been recorded as an expense in previous years and is therefore being subtracted from 1992-93 budgetary expenditures.

Returning to Table 2.1 in Part I, an additional $3.187 billion has been allocated to reserves for 1992-93 supplementary estimates. $1.250 billion is expected to lapse at the end of 1992-93. When the various positive and negative adjustments are applied to the budgetary Main Estimates, budgetary expenditures, also known as the fiscal framework, are expected to total $159.600 billion. This amount is only 0.4 per cent larger than the $159.000 billion fiscal framework that was projected in the 1991 Budget and the 1991-92 Main Estimates. However, as explained in the Committee's report on Supplementary Estimates (C), 1991-92, the freeze on discretionary expenditures for the last two months of 1991-92, along with other reductions and lapses, will reduce forecast budgetary expenditures for 1991-92 to $155.500 billion. The projected 1992-93 budgetary expenditures of $159.600 billion are 2.6 per cent larger than last year's forecast, and this is the source of the 2.6 percentage change that appears in Table 2.1.

Program expenditures are defined as that portion of total budgetary expenditures that is not required for interest payments on the public debt. Table 2.3 in Part I compares budgetary expenditures, public debt payments and program expenditures for the three fiscal years 1990-91 (actual), 1991-92 (forecast) and 1992-93 (Main Estimates). The 2.6 per cent increase in total budgetary expenditures consists of a 4.7 per cent increase in program expenditures (down from last year's increase of 6.1 per cent) and a reduction in public debt payments of 3.1 per cent, resulting from current and expected low interest rates.

The Budget of February 25, 1992 announced "streamlining" measures that involve the abolition, consolidation or privatization of 46 agencies. However, these measures are not reflected in the 1992-93 Main Estimates, and no projections of the associated cost reductions are presented for 1992-93 or future years. Your Committee held one meeting to review the proposed merger of the Canada Council, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC) and the international cultural and academic relations programs of the Department of External Affairs and International Trade. Dr. Paule Leduc, President of SSHRC, and other SSHRC officials appeared as witnesses to defend the estimates of SSHRC and respond to questions on the amalgamation. Dr. Leduc is President-designate of the proposed new agency and also co-chair of a transition committee to present recommendations to the Minister of Communications on the specific details of the merger. A sub-committee of this committee is preparing draft legislation to give effect to the merger.

The 1992-93 Main Estimates of the Department of Agriculture are $2.863 billion, an increase of $974.7 million or 51.6 per cent over the Main Estimates of 1991-92. Of this total, $1.799 billion is to be voted and $1.064 billion is statutory expenditures. However, as stated in the Committee's report on Supplementary Estimates (C), 1991-92, the forecast actual 1991-92 expenditures of the department are $4.373 billion, thanks to increases totalling $2.485 billion in the 1991-92 supplementary estimates. The 1992-93 Main Estimates are therefore $1.510 billion or 34.5 per cent lower than actual expenditures in 1991-92. It is appropriate to question whether the amount in this year's Main Estimates is a reliable predictor of total expenditures for the Department of Agriculture in 1992-93 or whether substantial additional resources are likely to be requested through supplementary estimates later in the fiscal year. Controlled person-years in the department total 11,445, a net increase of 112 over last year's Main Estimates.

The major component of the increased expenditures is $1.268 billion, much of it statutory, for initiatives under the Farm Income Protection Act, including crop insurance, revenue insurance, the Gross Revenue Insurance Program (GRIP) and the Net Income Stabilization Account (NISA). Resources to implement these programs were included in the 1991-92 supplementary estimates. The additional expenditures are partially offset by the reduction measures in the 1991 and 1992 Budgets and by the termination of certain programs, including the Cash Flow Enhancement Program for the 1990-91 crop year, assistance to the tobacco sector, and (for a saving of $235 million) the replacement of the Western Grain Stabilization Act by the new Farm Income Protection Act programs.

The Deputy Minister and other officials of the Department of Agriculture appeared before your Committee to defend these estimates. Officials of the Office of the Auditor General appeared at the same meeting to review the accounting and program evaluation practices of the department, which were criticized by the Auditor General in Chapter 10 of his 1991 Report.

Your Committee has completed its study of Public Service reform and the Public Service 2000 initiative and plans to present its report shortly. The Committee also reviewed the use by the Department of Finance of Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act. This section permits the government to borrow in the financial markets at terms less than six months after the borrowing authority granted by Parliament has been used up. The Governor in Council provides the authority for such borrowing and the government therefore need not return to Parliament to seek additional borrowing authority, even though Parliament may be sitting at the time. Your Committee may discuss the use of Section 47 in greater detail in a future interim report on the 1992-93 Estimates.

Respectfully submitted,

ROCH BOLDUC
The Deputy Chairman

APPENDIX "B"

(See page 1677)

THE SENATE

RESEARCH FUNDS

Honourable senators,

At the end of the day on April 30, 1987, the public was astonished when after a long and arduous process, Canada's eleven First Ministers signed the statement of principles that would be followed, one month later, by the "1987 Constitutional Accord".

That evening, I truly believed that the objective Prime Minister Mulroney had set himself during the 1984 election campaign was now within his grasp. The Prime Minister was well on his way to persuading Premier Bourassa and, through him, the Quebec National Assembly, to give his consent to the new Canadian Constitution and to persuading the Premiers of the other provinces to accept the five demands submitted by Premier Bourassa as the conditions under which Quebec would return to the "Canadian family" and leave its constitutional isolation, which dated back to the patriation of the Constitution in 1981-82.

In the weeks that followed, however, even before the final agreement was signed the initial euphoria was squelched by none other than the former Prime Minister of Canada.

He was not alone in his dissent. Many of the witnesses appearing before the Parliamentary Commission of the National Assembly appointed by Premier Bourassa to examine the proposals were also critical and sometimes quite radical in their criticism, but for entirely different reasons.

These skirmishes did not prevent Prime Minister Mulroney and his counterparts from continuing the task they had set themselves, a task it was not easy to bring to fruition. Transforming a statement of principles into an agreement duly drafted in the requisite legal terms is a slow and arduous process. At a meeting that started on June 3 and did not finish until the early hours of June 4, the eleven First Ministers managed to agree on the text of the agreement to be signed.

Although significant and necessary, the actual signing was only the first stage of the process established since 1982, when we became masters of our own Constitution and its amending process. The next and crucial stage was the formal ratification of the draft by the Parliament of Canada and by all provincial legislatures.

The First Ministers who signed the agreement assumed that this stage, the only decisive one, would be reached before December 1988. Such is the obvious intent of the following clause of the Accord which deals with "constitutional conferences":

> "50.(1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988."

Not later than December 1988, a first constitutional conference on Senate reform would have been held, since this was to be the first item on the agenda. If Meech had been ratified within the timeframe set by the parties in June 1987 ...

Of course, we know it was not.

On June 23, 1987, the Quebec National Assembly adopted the requisite resolution. The remaining legislatures now had three years to adopt similar resolutions. By June 22, 1990, two legislative assemblies still refused to give their consent. As a result, the Accord was no longer valid. This was inevitable because of the provisions of the Constitution Act, 1982. Even a new round of signatures obtained at the last minute from all first ministers, including those who were newly elected, and the last-ditch efforts of Mr. Mulroney were not enough to ward off this disaster.

Honourable senators,

In the circumstances, I was constantly involved, to varying degrees, in events that over the years became part of the Meech Lake Affair, which designates a dramatic chapter in our constitutional history.

Not surprisingly, I felt the need and even an obligation to keep a detailed record of these events as they occurred.

I was able to do so thanks to funding made available in recent years by the Senate to its members, who, as a result are able to hire research assistants. The work carried out with their help resulted in a rather substantial document.

Instead of providing a summary, even a very brief one, I would prefer to identify the various periods that were significant in the history of Meech Lake.

The first period started in the fall of 1979, when the Quebec government published its White Paper on sovereignty association and tabled the referendum question in the National Assembly. It ended in December 1982, with the last exchange of letters between the Premier of Quebec and the Prime Minister of Canada. Both parties basically confirmed positions taken the year before, in the weeks following the conference in November 1981. [This is illustrated by the two following extracts from this correspondence.

> Mr. Lévesque: "--I must tell you that the Canada Bill is still no less fundamentally illegitimate and therefore unacceptable to Quebec, to the Government of Quebec and, I am convinced, to the great majority of Quebecers. It will be impossible for any government worthy of that name in Quebec to accept such a drastic and unilateral reduction of the powers of our National Assembly and to have imposed on it an amending formula that gives it no real protection for the future."

Mr. Trudeau: "As for the right to opt out (in the amending formula), you know that this principle has already been enshrined in the Constitution by guaranteeing reasonable compensation in fields related to education and culture--Nevertheless, I must tell you quite frankly at the outset that I think extending this principle to other fields is neither necessary nor desirable. Going further would encourage the progressive balkanization of the country and thus compromise its future."]

It then appeared evident that communication between the two would be cut off indefinitely. Furthermore, in late 1982, Quebec was no longer adding to Mr. Trudeau's concerns. Rather, it was the aboriginal issue, the only question for which he had put in the new Constitution the requirement to hold a first ministers' conference in the year after it was proclaimed.

With the election of a new federal government, the second period began as constitutional dialogue with Quebec resumed. Prime Minister Mulroney has the considerable and undoubted merit of taking the initiative for it and laying the foundation right in the 1984 election campaign.

As soon as Parliament opened in early November, the Speech from the Throne reaffirmed the solemn commitment that had been made in the speech in Sept-Iles and restated on other occasions:

> Ultimately such a new consensus must be reflected in the fundamental law of our land, for it is obvious that the constitutional agreement is incomplete so long as Quebec is not part of an accord. While their principal obligations are to achieve economic renewal, my ministers will work to create the conditions that will make possible the achievement of this essential accord. In this work, the cooperation of all partners in Confederation will be necessary.
>
> (Speech from the Throne, Debates of the House of Commons, November 5, 1984, p. 6)

Aware that there was a real opening, an opportunity not to be missed, Premier Lévesque soon took the step that he called the "beau risque" (risk worth taking). He explained it thus in the Quebec government's proposals for a constitutional agreement that his secretary general, Louis Bernard, personally gave the Prime Minister of Canada on May 17, 1985.

> "The Government of Quebec, which had already asked for the file to be opened, saw in these commitments an act of good faith that could lead to resumed dialogue with the hope of correcting the past and opening up the future. Since then, it has undertaken to define its attitudes and its demands and it has worked diligently at it."

That said, the Quebec government defined the context in which it saw these proposals.

> "It will be noted that these proposals fit into the federal framework of the present Constitution. They seek to improve it so that Quebecers can, if they so decide, find in it the most favourable conditions possible for their development. Needless to say, they in no way alter Quebecers' inalienable right to decide democratically on their own constitutional future--
>
> In addition to reparation for the wrongs done to Quebec in 1981, we will seek, in reopening this issue, as has been the case for nearly twenty years, constitutional structures that are as well adapted as possible to the changing reality of Quebec and Canada--
>
> Nevertheless, it is of the utmost importance to make it clearly understood that, whatever government is in place, Quebec's essential concern today as in the past is the distinct character of the Quebec people and the legitimacy of the legal and institutional instruments that flow from it."

We know the events that led to this proposed new agreement not having the desired outcome. A few weeks later, around the middle of June, Mr. Lévesque resigned as leader of the Parti Québécois and triggered the process to find his successor. Pierre-Marc Johnson became Premier of Quebec, but held that position for only a few months before deciding that a general election had to be called, since the government had already been in office for almost its full five-year term.

When he was called to form the new government in December 1985, Premier Bourassa in turn resumed the constitutional dialogue. He did so on the basis of five conditions that he had made a key plank of his election platform. The discussions begun in 1986 finally led to the Constitutional Accord of 1987.

The events of the next three years, leading to the failure of June 1990, make up the last period we studied of the Meech affair.

Until that point, for the first two periods, our paper presents the information in the form of conversations between an interviewer, Jean-Pierre Gaboury, then a professor at the University of Ottawa, and an interviewee, myself. Researchers, in particular Robert Robert, gathered and organized an appropriate series of documents to contribute to the dialogue and make up for any gaps in a necessarily fallible memory.

A completely different approach was required for the last period, since the material to be compiled would only begin to answer the questions that must be raised to report the events.

For example, who were responsible for the failure of Meech? Why did Meech fail?

Of course, all the blame could be put on the political protagonists and their motives. Obviously, it would really be too simplistic to stop at that.

Seldom if ever do politicians, be they backbenchers or prime ministers, take a line of conduct that is unrelated to the attitudes of their constituents. Politicians do not act alone. The policies they set, the decisions they make and the behaviour they adopt are most often the result of some outside reality that influences them and governs their conduct. Their plans and ultimately their own political future depend on changing public opinion.

This phenomenon that we have rightly or wrongly taken as a postulate accounts for the kind of material we have compiled and our treatment of it. From this standpoint, we thought that the perceptions and attitudes of individuals and groups who spoke out on Meech during the three years that it was being voted on were the primary source of answers to the questions we had to raise.

Where can one find such material? We considered the positions on Meech reported in the press to be a primary source that is significant and can be handled objectively.

This is not the only media source that we could have drawn on. Radio and television may be closer to public opinion and have more influence on it. We found dealing with those media an insurmountable difficulty, although others may not; we did not have the means to do it properly.

The written press, fragmentary though it is, was the only media source we used. We found more than three thousand references to positions on Meech taken by over four hundred supporters or opponents in nearly thirty daily newspapers or magazines published inside and outside Quebec, in the summer of 1987, right after Meech was signed, and the winter of 1990, in the months before the accord was, as it were, subjected to "intensive care" with the tabling of the McKenna proposals and the creation of the Charest Committee.

A second source, opinion polls, especially those done by Gallup, helped us situate the observations made from the press in the broader framework of public attitudes to Meech.

The work ends with the observations and analyses that we try to make from these two sources of information.

Honourable senators,

When I began to prepare a file on the Meech affair quite a while ago, I had no doubt at all that I would finish long before the fateful date of June 18, 1992. Such certainty is always rash. It definitely was in this case. Most of the chapters that we planned to write have now been written, but what remains to be done is unfortunately considerable. The final text is probably several months away. Nevertheless, I do intend to apply myself with all the required effort to carrying out the task that is still incomplete.

If you are interested and you give permission to the appropriate authorities, I will gladly submit our complete report on the Meech affair to you. We never know, but it looks like next fall, this report may help you in the thinking you will have to do then.

END

THE SENATE

Friday, June 12, 1992

The Senate met at 9 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I cannot let my partner proceed without the clock, so I want to remind honourable senators that the clock is still ticking. If the government of which Senator Murray is a member respects democracy, Canadians will cast their ballots within 162 days; if, in Senator Murray's words, however, the present government is cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, then the day of reckoning will be 548 days from now.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, June 15, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

I might say that we have a number of first readings again today, so that next week the Order Paper will be unusually heavy. On Monday I hope to be able to give a suggested schedule of sittings for the entire week; more than likely that will include at least one evening sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

ENERGY EFFICIENCY ACT

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-41, An Act respecting the energy efficiency of energy-using products and the use of alternative energy sources.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading next Tuesday, June 16, 1992.

[English]

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Records Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, June 16, 1992.

[Translation]

STATUS OF ARTIST ACT

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-7, An Act respecting the status of the artist and professional relations between artists and producers in Canada.

Bill read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on next Tuesday, June 16, 1992.

[English]

OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION AND CONSERVATIONACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-58, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, June 16, 1992.

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ADVISORY GROUP ON DEFENCE INFRASTRUCTURE —STATUS OF REPORT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In its 1991 defence policy the government announced the establishment of an advisory group on the closing of bases. The task of the advisory group was to indicate the best way to consolidate all the relevant factors concerning this matter in one comprehensive position. It also identified five specific areas for the group to consider.

In its conclusion the policy paper stated that the minister's advisory group on defence infrastructure would begin its work immediately and present its report to the minister in May 1992. Can the minister tell us whether the report has been presented to the minister? If so, will it be published and when may we expect it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must confess that I have not seen the report. My clear impression is that it has been submitted to the minister and that it has been released.

Senator Molgat: I am in the same position as the minister, honourable senators. I have not seen it either, if it has been released.

Senator Murray: Among other places, I believe I saw a report in the media to the effect that one of the findings was that National Defence had been required over the years to carry too great a burden of the policy priorities of other departments, including regional disparity and questions of that kind, and consequently the Department of National Defence had not been able always to act according to its own priorities—that is to say, defence priorities.

In any case, my clear impression is that the report has been submitted. I have seen comment on it in the media. I will attempt to obtain a copy for my friend.

JUSTICE

REPORT ON RACE RELATIONS IN ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, Stephen Lewis recently produced a report on discrimination, or race relations, in Ontario. Can the honourable minister tell us whether the government is prepared to take any action concerning that matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the report of Mr. Lewis has been submitted to the government of Ontario. As I recall, he has suggested a rather wide-ranging inquiry into race relations in the province of Ontario. I am sure we have obtained a copy of the report and that the departments of the federal government most directly interested are studying it. I am not aware, however, that that report calls upon the federal government to take any particular action.

This problem is a matter of continuing concern to us, as is evidenced by the statements made and the policies announced by, among others, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Citizenship and Multiculturalism.

Senator Bosa: While the report was made to the province of Ontario, there is an area of responsibility that lies with the federal government. The Equity Employment Act, for example, entails selecting people for positions in order to reflect the population of Canada. Surely that is one means by which the Canadian government can do something about this situation.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would argue, and I am sure the Prime Minister could demonstrate, that we have made very considerable progress in that regard during our first and second mandates as the government of Canada. I do not have the statistics in front of me, but I would be glad to provide the honourable senator with some examples by way of illustration. Some of them are in this very chamber.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

AN ACT TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS WITH RESPECT TO PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino moved second reading of Bill C-78, An Act to amend certain Acts with respect to persons with disabilities.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise and speak on this bill. It is one in which I have expressed an interest in the past. I believe that the kinds of things we legislate in this country for people who are disabled put us at the forefront in relation to other countries in these matters. Bill C-78 will continue to deal with the issues of persons with disabilities in a way which will show leadership around the world.

On May 5, 1992, the Honourable Robert de Cotret, Secretary of State and the minister responsible for the status of disabled persons, tabled in the House of Commons Bill C-78, an act to amend certain acts with respect to person with disabilities. This was a notable occasion in Canadian Parliamentary history. It represents the first time ever that Parliament was called upon to consider a bill that focuses exclusively on the concerns of the 3.3 million Canadians with disabilities.

Through Bill C-78, the government is proposing to amend six federal statutes to remove barriers to the full and equal participation of people who have disabilities. No longer can we allow our laws to limit participation and deny our society the maximum contribution of every person.

The bill includes measures that will improve the lives of persons with disabilities in a number of priority areas: better access to the electoral process, improved access to Canada's national transportation system, equal access to citizenship, testifying in criminal courts, and access to government records and personal information in alternative formats.

Increasingly, people with disabilities in every community have been seeking and winning the right to be treated as equals. Much progress has been made in removing barriers to enable persons with disabilities to participate more fully in the community. Nevertheless, a great deal more remains to be done.

That is why, in September, 1991, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney launched the national strategy for the integration of persons with disabilities. This five-year strategy involving a financial commitment of $158 million addresses such issues as access to employment, training, housing, transportation, communication, public sensitivity, and community participation. A comprehensive review of federal legislation was identified as an important element of the national strategy. The provisions of Bill C-78 and other measures announced by the government are a result of the legislative review. They represent a further step forward to the full social and economic integration of persons with disabilities whose talents, abilities, skills, and energies represent a tremendous potential which our country cannot afford to ignore.

Bill C-78 is an important step toward ensuring that all of our laws reflect the needs, interests, aspirations, and rights of all Canadians. Citizenship is the key to participation. Bill C-78 proposes to amend the Citizenship Act to ensure that all Canadians have equal access to citizenship. The amendments would remove the word "disability" from the interpretation section of the act and a more descriptive and appropriate wording would be inserted where the term now appears.

Honourable colleagues, society must treat all persons in a similar way, if doing so does not place people at some disadvantage. In the acquisition of citizenship, people with a mental disability can, like other people, meet the residence requirements. Accordingly, it is proposed that the current ministerial provisions to waive residence requirements for persons with a mental disability be deleted from the act, thus resulting in equal treatment for these Canadians.

The most fundamental of all democratic rights, the right to vote, is sometimes restricted by factors such as polling stations or problems in receiving the kind of assistance required to mark a ballot. Moreover, the freedom to run for public office is sometimes limited for persons with disabilities. As an example, candidates with disabilities who may need the services of a full-time attendant ought not to be disadvantaged as a result of the additional costs incurred. The suggested changes to the Canada Elections Act would ensure that people with disabilities can participate fully in the electoral process.

Proposed amendments include: a requirement that polling stations and returning offices provide level access; the use of mobile polling stations to bring the vote to individuals residing in institutions; specific educational programs to help groups, such as people with disabilities, to better understand the electoral process; and, another very important one, clarification of the definition of personal expenses to include additional costs incurred by candidates with disabilities.

Travelling without barriers is one of the most central concerns of people with disabilities. Without accessible transportation, full participation in Canadian life is not possible. For this reason, Bill C-78 proposes to amend the National Transportation Act to directly acknowledge, for the first time, the importance of accessible transportation. The proposed amendment to the declaratory clause of the act would ensure that our national transportation system meets the needs of travellers with disabilities. As well, it would emphasize that access to transportation is fundamentall for all Canadians.

• (0920)

I must add, honourable senators, that as part of a statutory review of the National Transportation Act, a review commission was set up to study all aspects of the act and to make recommendations for further changes as required. This commission will also consider the remaining transportation recommendations proposed by the Canadian Disability Rights Council.

Like all citizens, persons with disabilities need to have full access to the justice system. Through proposed amendments to the Criminal Code, Bill C-78 would allow a complainant with a mental or physical disability to give testimony, in respect of certain sexual offences, from behind a screen or outside the courtroom. The rationale for this proposed amendment is to minimize the traumatic effects that testifying against a person in a position of trust or authority might present for some people with a disability.

At the same time, the Minister of Justice is committed to a review of all other proposals put forward by the Canadian Disability Rights Council. To be examined are such areas as protection of disabled persons from sexual abuse by those in positions of trust or authority; allowing disabled persons, who can, to communicate evidence without swearing an oath or promising to tell the truth; and admitting the out-of-court statement of disabled persons in spite of the rule against hearsay. In fact, this review has begun as part of a larger parliamentary review of Bill C-15 and a report is expected to be tabled in the House of Commons by the end of 1992.

Honourable senators, the availability of information contributes to an individual's ability to participate. For persons with disabilities, having access to information in an alternative format is critical. The purpose of the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act is to ensure Canadian citizens, permanent residents, and persons present in Canada the right of access to personal information and records held by government institutions. The policies and guidelines governing the administration of the acts, as currently worded, do not directly address the needs of persons with sensory disabilities and their ability to exercise their rights under the acts.

Accordingly, Bill C-78 proposes to amend the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act to establish the circumstances under which access to information covered by the acts will be provided in formats such as braille, large print and audio cassette. The amendments apply to people with a sensory disability. The proposed amendments would also give persons with disabilities the right to complain to the appropriate commissioner if they have not been given access to a record or to information in an alternative format.

Taken together, these proposed statutory changes in Bill C-78 will significantly improve the lives of Canadians with disabilities. But we recognize that legislation alone is not sufficient to remove the barriers. That is why the government has announced a series of proposals affecting policies, regulations and programs associated with Bill C-78.

Treasury Board is responsible for the approval, declaration and promotion of the government Communications Policy pursuant to the direction of cabinet. The objective of the policy is to ensure the effective management of government communications. "Fair communications practices" is an important concept within the policy. "Fair communications practices" refers to the elimination of sexual stereotyping, the fair and representative depiction of people in relation to race, cultural origin and disability, and the use of special measures to reach disabled persons and other special segments of the public.

Honourable senators, while the policy currently addresses the needs of persons with disabilities, proposed revisions are designed to highlight the needs of persons with sensory disabilities with regard to provision of government information in alternative formats. These revisions are also intended to be consistent with the approach proposed for the amendments to the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act and reflect a similar requirement for institutions to consider conversion to alternative formats. In the Communications Policy, however, the "duty to inform" is the guiding principle.

It is anticipated that the changes to the policy will be presented to Treasury Board very shortly as technical amendments since they complement its original provision. The Treasury Board secretariat will also undertake to promote the profile of the communications policy with respect to the requirement to ensure that federal government communications are sensitive to the needs of disabled persons and protective of their rights.

The broadcast media play an important role in the portrayal of, and attitudes towards, persons with disabilities. The Broadcasting Act of 1991 calls on the Canadian broadcasting industry to provide programming that will be accessible to persons with disabilities. The act indicates that the needs and circumstances of all Canadians should be taken into account by the broadcasting industry through its programming and the employment opportunities arising out of its operations. Broadcasters' actions as they relate to employment equity and closed captioning must reflect this policy objective.

The Broadcasting Act gives the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, the CRTC, the authority to licence all broadcasters and to make rules and regulations regarding the services they provide. As a parallel action related to Bill C-78, the government is currently examining ways in which a policy direction to the CRTC on closed captioning and employment equity could be used.

Earlier this spring, two sets of regulations under the National Transportation Act related to air transportation and personnel training were pre-published in the Canada Gazette. These regulations require air carriers with aircraft of 30 seats or more to provide standardized services to persons with disabilities travelling in Canada. In addition, owners and operators of terminals under federal jurisdiction will be required to provide training to their employees to provide assistance to persons with disabilities while ensuring that the dignity, safety and comfort of such persons is maintained.

One of the objectives of the Immigration Act is "to ensure that any person who seeks admission to Canada . . . is subject to standards of admissions that do not discriminate in a manner inconsistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration will soon introduce amendments to the Immigration Act related to the medical criteria used to screen applicants seeking admission to Canada. These would include, among other things, the concern of the community of the disabled that the act discriminates on the basis of disability. These changes will be developed through continued consultation with that community.

Events have unfolded quickly in the short time since the bill was tabled. On June 2, the Secretary of State appeared before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons to discuss the bill. This was particularly appropriate because of the important role the committee plays in providing a forum for the community of the disabled and other stakeholders to clarify outstanding issues and encourage government action.

On June 4, representatives of the Canadian Disability Rights Council, CDRC, appeared before the same committee to voice the support of the community of the disabled for the measures outlined in Bill C-78.

The bill is the result of a close and effective partnership with that community. Early in the process of legislative review, CDRC was given a mandate from groups representing people with disabilities across Canada to coordinate input to the review. Throughout the review, the Secretary of State and other departments consulted regularly with CDRC in order to identify issues of priority.

Bill C-78 is recognized by the community as a first step or, in the words of Jim Derksen, Chairperson of the Canadian Disability Rights Council, a sod-turning; a commitment to build. Someone has to turn over the ground in order to build. Removing the legislative barriers facing persons with disabilities cannot be done overnight; it is a building process.

As we all know, the process of developing legislation in a parliamentary system is complex. It is significant that in the relatively short period of just eight months a consensus was arrived at for some important amendments and that these are now before us in the Senate. Granted, Bill C-78 does not include the full range of amendments proposed by the CDRC. However, the work undertaken in developing this bill, both by government and the community, has developed opportunities for further reform.

I would ask my honourable colleagues to heed the words of the Secretary of State that the government's work will not stop with Bill C-78. In fact, the bill underscores the government's commitment to further legislative reform.

I urge all honourable senators to support the speedy passage of this bill and the momentum which has been developed in addressing the quality rights of persons with disabilities.

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, would Senator Di Nino permit a question for clarification?

Senator Di Nino: Certainly.

Senator Kinsella: In the latter part of your excellent speech you drew our attention to planned amendments to the Access to Information Act. You advised us that you expected the Minister of Immigration to come forward with amendments to the Immigration Act and that other amendments would be introduced.

Are we to understand that while the 3.3 million Canadians who are specially challenged by various disabilities can see this legislation as an excellent step forward, the legislation does not obviate the necessity of making the desired amendments to the Human Rights Act?

Senator Di Nino: That is a complex question because it does require the need to address a number of issues.

The legislation continues to build on the things that have been done in the past couple of decades by our government, as well as other levels of governments, first, in recognizing the fact that there is a very large number of Canadians who, because of some physical or mental disability, do not have the same opportunity to enjoy the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizenship.

For the first time in history and in a Canadian Parliament, we have been able to put together a set of initiatives which are specifically designed and directed at addressing the needs of the disabled. A number of acts are being changed to reflect the intent of the federal government. Although I have not seen the final results, I understand that a number of changes are being planned and discussed at the present time to the Immigration Act to conform to the intent of this government to ensure that we expand on the need to recognize and address the issues facing those 3.3 million Canadians who are specially challenged in some way. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms is one of the key pieces of legislation which reflects the need for us to be able deal with these issues.

● (0940)

I am not sure that I fully and totally answered your question. The Government of Canada is certainly taking a major step forward with this legislation and with the recognition that words are not enough, that some action has to be taken. I hope that this major step is but the first of many, and that it will lead to a number of changes in the months and years ahead so that we can truly give meaning to the words "full and equal accessibility to all of the services that Canadians deserve."

Hon. Brenda Robertson: Senator Di Nino, there are two groups with which I am concerned. I am particularly concerned about those citizens who are confined to wheelchairs, and the growing number in our seniors population who, as their age increases and as minor disabilities evolve, have difficulty with stairs. Those are my concerns and I will explain how they relate to your bill.

At one time or another, those of us who travel a lot have to use one-level airports. Very few of those airports— only one or two that I have seen—have ramp access to aircraft. Citizens who are confined to wheelchairs are generally hoisted up to the entrance level like a piece of luggage. I find it terribly embarrassing and frustrating whenever I see this happening. Seniors with problems also have difficulty getting in and out of aircraft when there is no ramp.

In your legislation, Senator Di Nino, is there any particular reference to the requirements of airports to provide first-level ramp services? If there is, then is there a time frame within which they must comply? I believe this is an issue that requires attention. I hope it will not be ignored for any period of time.

Senator Di Nino: Let me try to answer your concerns by referring to the comments that I made when referring to the National Transportation Act. Two sets of regulations were prepublished in the Canada Gazette this spring which address two issues: One, aircraft with 30 or more seats are required to provide standardized services to persons with disabilities. That refers to the actual aircraft itself, including the training of personnel, and the ability to properly service those in wheelchairs, principally, although other people with disabilities would also be covered. In addition, we are talking about owners and operators of terminals that come under the federal jurisdiction being required to provide training to their employees on assisting persons with disabilities.

Specifically dealing with ramps, I cannot answer that question. However, I will undertake to look at the details of the legislation and attempt to respond at the next opportunity.

Senator Robertson: Senator Di Nino, I listened carefully when you referred to those regulations earlier in your remarks. I suspect that those regulations do not apply to ramping. I personally believe that ramps have to be considered at the earliest opportunity. I know that it is an expensive approach, but hoisting people around is not satisfactory, as I am sure most Canadian citizens would agree.

On motion of Senator Molgat debate adjourned.

THE ESTIMATES, 1992-1993

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON MAIN ESTIMATES ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twelfth report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Main estimates—1992-93), which was presented in the Senate on June 11, 1992.

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, in moving the adoption of this report, I wish to tell you that your committee has held eight meetings so far to examine various aspects of the 1992-93 Main Estimates. The President of the Treasury Board provided an overview of the expenditures in the Estimates, and he and his officials responded to questions ranging over the spectrum of government departments and agencies. Professor Kenneth Kernaghan of Brock University, who has written extensively on the Public Service and other aspects of Canadian public administration, was the final witness for the committee's study of Public Service reform and the Public Service 2000 initiative.

The committee began its study last fall under its reference to examine the 1991-92 Estimates, and we plan to present our findings and recommendations in a separate report in the near future. We also expect to undertake another major study under the current reference, but the subject has yet to be decided by the committee.

[Translation]

In the budget of February 25, 1992, the government announced that the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council would be merged with the Canada Council and that the new organization thus created would also absorb the international cultural and academic relations programs of the Department of External Affairs and International Trade. The Committee asked Paule Leduc, president of the SSHRC, to defend her council's budget estimates and answer questions about the merger. Dr. Leduc is also the designated president of the new agency resulting from the merger and co-chair of a transition committee that is developing recommendations on the structure of the new agency for the Minister of Communications.

Finally, the Committee is also preparing a bill that hon. senators will have an opportunity to consider later.

[English]

The Deputy Minister and other officials of the Department of Agriculture appeared as witnesses at another meeting. As honourable senators will recall, your committee has reported previously that the expenditure of the department increased by 130 per cent during the 1991-92 fiscal year as a result of major increases in appropriations and statutory payments that were approved in all three sets of Supplementary Estimates. The 1992-93 Main Estimates of the Department of Agriculture are $2.863 million, which is 51.6 per cent higher than the amount approved in the Main Estimates for 1991-92. The report provides further details on the components of this increase.

The Deputy Minister indicated that heavy subsidization of grain prices by the European Community and the United States would continue to affect Canadian grain farmers adversely. However, because the new program structure now in place is designed to be self-sustaining, it should not be necessary for the Department of Agriculture to return to Parliament to request large additional appropriations in the current fiscal year.

Officials of the Office of the Auditor General appeared as witnesses at the same meeting in connection with Chapter 10 of the Auditor General's 1991 report, which was critical of some of the accounting and program evaluation practices of the Department of Agriculture. Your committee feels strongly that that department should evaluate its major spending program on a regular basis and provide full information on the evaluation results to Parliament.

[Translation]

With the help of the requisite witnesses, the Committee also examined the estimates of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Federal Business Development Bank, the Honours Directorate of the Governor General's Office and the Public Debt Program of the Department of Finance. In fact, we were particularly interested in the use made by the Department of Finance of Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act, under which the Governor in Council provides the authority for additional short-term borrowing after the borrowing authority granted by Parliament has been used up. This point may be discussed in a future report.

Our interim report consists mostly of a summary and explanation of the government's general expenditure plans, as described in Parats I and II of the Main Estimates. I would recommend that honourable senators read this report because it contains much useful information presented in a manner that is both clear and concise.

Thank you, honourable senators.

Motion agreed to and report concurred in.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 15, 1992 at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 15, 1992

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the election clock is ticking as follows: The democracy respecters have 159 days before the election, and the contemptuous- of-democracy cowards have 545—both of the foregoing definitions, of course, being Senator Murray's.

"REFERENDA" OR "REFERENDUMS"?

LINGUISTIC CLARIFICATION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on Wednesday last, during debate on Bill C-81, the Leader of the Government made the following statement:

> By the way, speaking of technical flaws, the Deputy Leader of the Government . . . tells me that the word "referenda" is incorrect, that referendum is one of those Latin words that do not take a plural. Indeed, the use of the word "referendums" in the title of the bill is incorrect.

Senator Frith: Now we are going to hear from the Latin scholar.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, I wish to clarify, with or without his leave, my Leader's statement, which is partly incomplete and partly in error—

Hon. Senators: Shame, shame!

Senator Frith: Say it is not so.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: —no doubt because he could not hear my whispering over the rhetorical ruminations of Senator Olson, whose oratory was flowing generously at the time.

Thanks to information provided by the Classics Department of Carleton University and the Translation service of the Senate, I am pleased to submit the following:

> The Latin plural of referendum is referenda.

As for the use of Latin plurals in English, one can read the following in Fowler's Dictionary of Modern English Usage:

> All that can safely be said is that there is a tendency to abandon the Latin plurals, and that, when one is really in doubt which to use, the English form should be given the preference.

[Translation]

As for the French usage, I quote from Maurice Grevisse's work Le Bon Usage:

> Some foreign nouns remain invariable. Others keep the plural of their language of origin, possibly with some variation. Foreign plural forms are easier to accept for nouns that designate only foreign realities. In many cases, we find two usages, and we can consider borrowed plural forms to be a needless luxury and often pedantic.

[English]

So "referendums" et "référendums" it is.

Honourable senators, I trust that this minimum of explanation, which to some, I admit, may be only trivia and minutiae, settles the matter once and for all so that it need not be discussed ad infinitum.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, since the Deputy Leader of the Government has so generously helped me, a classicist, by correcting his leader, would he also tell his leader that one does not say "fora", which he has repeatedly said, thereby offending Grevisse, offending Fowler, and making my teeth grit.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

SCOTIA SYNFUELS PROJECT

THIRD REPORT OF ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the third report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Hays, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT SUSPENSION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

MONDAY, June 15, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

FIFTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-67, An Act to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 14, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CORRECTIONS AND CONDITIONAL RELEASE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

MONDAY, June 15, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SIXTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-36, An Act respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 2, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment. Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this Bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald H. Oliver, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

Monday, June 15, 1992

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-11, An Act to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act, has in obedience to its Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 3, 1992, examined the said Bill and reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DONALD H. OLIVER
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Oliver, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-70, to amend the Criminal Code (jury).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, June 17, 1992.

[Translation]

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES WATERS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-51, an Act respecting water resources in the Northwest Territories.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, June 17, 1992.

[English]

YUKON WATERS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-52, respecting water resources in the Yukon Territory.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next, June 17, 1992.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (sexual assault).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, June 17, 1992.

[English]

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I give notice that at the next sitting of the Senate, I shall move:

> THAT the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, June 16, 1992, and on Wednesday, June 17, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

JUSTICE

ELIMINATION OF RACISM—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I give notice that I will call the attention of the Senate to steps that can be taken for the elimination of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and the setting in place across Canada of a common standard of zero tolerance for racism under any of its ugly guises.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators I have some petitions from New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec, all asking for the repeal of the Goods and Services tax and for an immediate election.

The petitions from New Brunswick are from Anse Bleue, Bas Caraquet, Caraquet, Le Goulet, Maisonnette, Moncton, Paquetville, and Shippigan.

The petitions from Ontario are from Kapuskasing, Timmins, and Val Rita.

The petitions from Quebec are from: Baie Comeau, Bury, Candiac, Danville, Dollard-Des-Ormeaux, Farnham, Henryville, Hudson, Ile Perrot, La Patrie, Lasalle, Laval, Longueuil, Montreal, St. Jérome, St. Sophie, St. Christine, Sabrevois, Sawyerville, Scotstown, and Valleyfield.

As to the number of petitions, there were 17 from Quebec, for a total of 351; four from New Brunswick, for a total of 78 names; and two from Ontario, for a total of 40 names. Total petitions 23; total names, 469.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 195 residents of the province of Ontario who object to the goods and services tax. Most of these petitions are from Downsview, Don Mills, Toronto, Scarborough and Willowdale.

Honourable senators, I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 256 residents of the province of New Brunswick who object to the goods and services tax. Most of these petitions are from Fredericton.

Finally, honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 74 residents of the province of Ontario who object to the goods and services tax. Most of these petitions are from Toronto, Sudbury and Mississauga.

Honourable senators, we have a total of 535 Canadians probably who speak for millions of Canadians who are indignant about this legislation that is so unfair, especially as it applies to books and periodicals.

[English]

MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE AND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF METROPOLITAN MONTREAL

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition from the Montreal Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Montreal, in the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, praying for passage of an act to amalgamate the Montreal Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Montreal.

QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESPONSIBILITY FOR SOCIAL ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS IN URBAN CENTRES—GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government. On June 3, I asked him some questions regarding the withdrawal of federal government support of social welfare to Indians off reserves. I pointed out that this measure had a particularly bad effect on two provinces, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The minister at that time gave me a reply, but he added:

> That is the statement that I will make for today. I can and will bring in a more detailed report within a couple of days.

I wonder if he has that report now, because this matter is creating considerable problems for municipalities in at least the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have that information today. I am awaiting a report from the responsible minister.

Senator Gigantès: There are responsible ministers?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF MILITARY BASES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can he give us a report this week, if possible, on the government's progress with respect to its intention to close some of the 37 military bases in Canada as an expense-cutting measure?

• (2020)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not aware that any decision has been taken in that regard.

Senator Frith: Could you let us know, please?

COPYRIGHT

STATUS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could tell us the timing of forthcoming amendments to the Canadian Copyright Act which have been promised for almost as long as I have been here?

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senator, I shall consult my colleague and report.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

FRANCE—FISHING RIGHTS IN CANADIAN TERRITORIAL WATERS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER ON COURT DECISION — REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INFORMATION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, on Thursday last, in response to a question I had asked, the Leader of the Government in the Senate reported to us certain comments made by the Honourable Mr. Crosbie concerning the decision of the court relating to the claims by France of certain fishing rights in Canadian waters. Can the minister give the Senate any guidance as to when an assessment by the government of the implications of that decision will be available?

Second, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate table copies of the decision of the court, together with any dissent that may have been made to that decision?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in reply to the last question, yes, I will table the decision. There were, as the honourable senator has implied, dissenting opinions registered at the time. Mr. Crosbie has not indicated when a full analysis of that decision will be available, but I shall enquire of him on that matter.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INQUIRY INTO INCIDENT AT SASKATCHEWAN PENITENTIARY

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It pertains to a question I raised in the Senate with respect to an incident at Saskatchewan Penitentiary. I asked the minister to give consideration to a judicial inquiry into that event. The minister's response was to the effect that a coroner's inquest had taken place, and therefore he saw no need for any further investigation.

I remind honourable senators that the coroner's investigation confined itself simply to who dies, how they died and where death occurred. The coroner's inquest did not address itself to recklessness, negligence or bad judgment with respect to that incident.

In our consideration of Bill C-37, we now have the report of the correctional investigator who explained four grave concerns he had with respect to the incident. His report states:

> The Board of Investigation Report into this incident is narrowly focused and inconclusive.

Now we have two reports, honourable senators—the correctional investigator and the coroner's jury—both of which were narrowly focused. Neither of them has addressed the question of negligence or bad judgment in respect to the incident.

I wish to tell the honourable minister that there is an ongoing feeling in the community that the concerns expressed by the John Howard Society must be addressed. There is an additional need that the concerns expressed by the correctional investigator must be addressed. I am asking the government leader if he would bring these concerns to the attention of his colleague, the Solicitor General, and recommend that a judicial inquiry take place where these statements can be made under oath and subjected to cross-examination, and not simply be made in a reckless fashion by those who have the most to gain by non-disclosure.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yes, I will take the honourable senator's question as a representation and convey it to Mr. Lewis.

THE ECONOMY

RECONCILIATION OF ECONOMIC FACTORS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATISTICS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a follow-up question to the minister on a matter to which he promised to provide an answer to us, in response to a series of questions by Senator Olson on June 4. The minister was quoting from his "Good News" black book that he carries around with him. It consists of some rather interesting, one-sided statistics, I might say.

● (2030)

I asked him a question then regarding one statistic that he had quoted concerning the figures about business confidence. He said that it had increased by 16.1 per cent in the first quarter of 1992, in spite of the great increase in bankruptcies. His precise words were:

> I will obtain for the honourable senator a technical statement of exactly what the components of business confidence are and how it is measured.

I wonder if the minister has been able to find that information.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I do not have it tonight, honourable senators, but I will be glad to urge my colleagues to come forward at an early date with that information.

THE CONSTITUTION

BEAUDOIN-DOBBIE REPORT—STATEMENTS OF MINISTERS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Could the Leader of the Government please tell me how his research is progressing on the speeches defending Canada given by Ministers Masse and Bouchard in particular? He promised me that he would do some in-depth research on the matter, and he was sure there were many instances where that had occurred. However, I am still waiting for that information.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not think it is quite accurate or fair to say that I undertook to do any in-depth research on the matter; I do not have time for that.

As I indicated to the honourable senator—

Senator Molgat: But it was so easy to find, you said.

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, there have been many comments made of the kind that my honourable friend would have these ministers make in the course of their weekend interviews and speeches in their own constituencies and elsewhere in Quebec and in the country. Some of these are reported; some of them are not.

Unfortunately, as the honourable senator knows after a long career in public life, it is frequently the good news that is ignored by the media. I expect that this has been all too frequently the case with the comments of my colleagues.

As I indicated to the honourable senator, when I have compiled a sheaf of press clippings and other transcripts that I think would be of interest to him I will be glad to send it to him.

Senator Molgat: Thank you very much.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked on June 1, by Senator Kenny, regarding the forwarding of personal baggage on airlines, and the answer to one asked on June 2, by Senator Grafstein, regarding the acceleration of the job creation process.

TRANSPORT

AIR SAFETY—FORWARDING OF PERSONAL BAGGAGE ON AIRLINES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Colin Kenny on June 1, 1992.)

> A legislated requirement exists in Canada for a passenger baggage match system to be in place on all international flights in order to prevent the transportation of checked baggage belonging to someone who is not on board the aircraft.
>
> The normal low level of threat to Canadian domestic flights does not warrant the imposition of this security measure and the consequent disruption to the travelling public that would result. Additional security measures on domestic flights, including passenger baggage match, are imposed for cause.

EMPLOYMENT

ACCELERATION OF JOB CREATION PROCESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein on June 2, 1992.)

The federal government's economic strategy to bolster recovery was outlined in the February 1992 Budget. That strategy emphasizes private sector activity to stimulate recovery.

The government took action to bolster private sector activity. Both personal and manufacturing taxes were reduced. Home buyers are being allowed to use their RRSPs tax free to buy or build a home. R&D incentives were enriched.

In his Budget speech, Finance Minister Mazankowski acknowledged the importance of adequate infrastructure and noted that the federal government was working with the private sector and the provinces to develop airport infrastructure, to build a fixed link to P.E.I. and to upgrade the National Highway System. These initiatives are proceeding.

History has clearly taught us that advancing capital spending is not the answer to stimulating economic recovery in the short term. The federal government tried it in 1981-1982 and it did not work. The Ontario provincial government tried it in 1991 and it did not work. The lead time of capital projects is too long.

Furthermore, the government firmly believes that it is not possible to spend the country out of the recession. Fiscally irresponsible spending policies of just this sort in the past have left Canada with an excessive debt burden.

Government capital spending plans reported in the 1992-93 Estimates amount to $5.1 billion. Of this amount, $2.8 billion is for defence capital spending. Spending plans for 1993-94 are of the same magnitude.

The government is proceeding with the capital projects that are justified by economic need and fiscal prudency.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INTERNATIONAL HEART HEALTH CONFERENCE

MEETING HELD IN VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. Wilbert J. Keon: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, June 17, 1992, I will call the attention of the Senate to the International Heart Health Conference held on May 28, 1992, in Victoria, Canada.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

AN ACT TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS WITH RESPECT TO PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Di Nino, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson, for the second reading of Bill C-78, An Act to amend certain Acts with respect to persons with disabilities.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate Senator Di Nino for his presentation of the bill at the last sitting of the Senate. I apologize for having to delay my comments until today, but I could not be here last Friday.

Senator Di Nino presented this bill concerning people with disabilities in an accurate way. I say that his presentation was accurate because he made only the most modest claims for this legislation. He described it in his conclusions in the same way as the Canadian Disability Rights Council has done, namely, as a sod-turning—in other words, a very preliminary step toward increasing the equality of people with disabilities in Canada.

Even though he was very modest, public commentators have not been so kind. The Toronto Star, for example, under a headline: "Government turns its back on disabled," described it this way:

> Sweeping changes were called for by the disabled community. Elaborate promises were made by the government but the law itself is a joke. The government failed to deliver. Nobody takes it seriously.

The Ottawa Citizen was not any more kind—in fact, perhaps even less kind. They described it as "pathetic and as a pale and sickly shadow of the draft bill produced by the Canadian Disability Rights Council".

Honourable senators, it is the government's sod-turning on this issue and it is one that is in the right direction and we welcome it. In particular, the section on the Canada Elections Act, which addresses the problems that people with disabilities have both as voters—that is, in access to the polls—and as candidates with special financial obligations have been addressed in this bill.

But the rest of the bill is far from satisfactory. In Canada we do not often find glowing things to say about actions taken in the U.S.A. on social issues. But on this matter the Americans are far ahead of us. In the bill which took effect last January in the U.S.A. there are many superior provisions for people with disabilities, and Canadians, by contrast, will suffer in a number of significant areas.

I do not propose to go over all aspects of this bill, which have been dealt with quite exhaustivly in the other place and which we, in turn, will deal with in committee, but I should like to draw your attention to three aspects of the bill.

The first concerns transportation. As you know, this bill makes only one change to the National Transportation Act, and it is a very general one. It adds the words "access to persons with disabilities" to the preamble of the act as a description of the transportation system.

There is nothing more specific on it than that, although the exchange between Senator Di Nino and Senator Robertson during the last sitting of the Senate indicated that there is a lot of concern about people who travel by air.

But, honourable senators, I should like to join with a member of Parliament in the other place who pointed out that the majority of people, particularly people on low incomes—and most people with disabilities are in that unfortunate situation —do not travel by air, but by bus, and that bus transportation in Canada has managed to escape all the implications of anything that governments—this one or previous ones—have done up to now.

The Canadian Disability Rights Council testified that the bus industry has taken advantage of the problem of jurisdiction over transportation to escape the regulating of access altogether. Yet we all know that buses go between rural communities and big cities and a great many people with disabilities have no option to travel by airplane, even if they should want to do so.

There is a further irony in this legislation. That may be a kind way of describing it. There is a major difficulty with it. We all know that the technology to make buses accessible to people with disabilities has been available for a long time, but Canada lags way behind other countries, and particularly behind the U.S., in creating accessibility to bus transport.

The United States Department of Transportation announced recently that all new intercity buses purchased after 1993 must be fully accessible. Many senators will know, particularly Manitoba senators, that many of those buses for the U.S. market are made in Winnipeg. So in fact the "accessible" buses—if I may describe them that way—are being made in Winnipeg and sold into the U.S. Meanwhile, non-accessible buses are being sold in Canada. Furthermore, there is a fear being expressed in various places that after 1993, the U.S. will dump their no-longer-suitable, inaccessible buses back on to the Canadian market.

● (2040)

Honourable senators, this is an area which one assumes could very easily have been dealt with in this bill. We will certainly be asking witnesses appearing before the committee why that was not dealt with, and what the time frame will be for dealing with that matter. That is an issue of significant importance to people with disabilities, and one that I hope we can deal with.

There is another matter with regard to which we suffer by comparison with the U.S.A. That has to do with access to broadcasts, and especially television, for people who are deaf. There are 260,000 deaf people in Canada and, in addition, 1.5 million people who are hard of hearing. Everyone here has watched American television and seen closed captioning. Indeed, closed captioning is available in this country to assist those who are hard of hearing in gaining access to this very popular medium.

It is possible to have a decoder chip built into television sets which makes closed captioning available to a large segment of the public. We are told that this decoder chip costs the manufacturer about five cents. However, people in Canada who are hard of hearing have to spend between $80 and $200 for a decoder box. In the U.S.A., legislation requires manufacturers to include such chips in television sets. That is not the case in Canada. As in the case of bus transportation and many other issues, this is a matter on which nothing will be done unless there is legislation because of the competitive disadvantage that otherwise exists. It is therefore essential to have the matter of closed captioning legislated under the Broadcasting Act, but no reference to any such matter appears anywhere in this bill.

Let me conclude with one more example: This one is not a comparison to the U.S.A., but it is a very serious matter. It is a matter with which this Chamber has occupied itself time and time again, and no doubt we will continue to do so for many years to come. I am referring to the matter of assault, especially sexual assaults, on people with disabilities.

The Canadian Disability Rights Council testified that disabled people are up to ten times more likely that people without disabilities to be assaulted or sexually assaulted. People with disabilities are extremely vulnerable, but very often the abuser is not charged because of the difficulties experienced by disabled persons in testifying before courts. Therefore, many people who assault the disabled in our society get away with their crimes because the victims are too vulnerable to testify.

This is a matter which should have appeared in amendments to the Criminal Code concerning giving evidence. However, the recommendations made by the Canadian Disability Rights Council on this matter have been ignored. For example, the council recommended an exception to the hearsay rule that would allow a third party, such as an attendant, to give evidence instead of the victim where no other way exists to get the evidence before a court.

In addition, there are means available by which people who are blind or visually impaired can identify accused persons through the use of a voice line-up. Neither of these provisions is made available in this bill. The current Criminal Code simply fails to provide protection for our many vulnerable citizens who are disabled and who are subject to assault.

Honourable senators, there will be many questions asked of the minister when he testifies tomorrow morning before the committee. I suspect there will be considerable pressure on the minister to make improvements to this bill. The bill is a move in the right direction, but it is by no means completely satisfactory. In fact, it is very modest. I am glad that Senator Di Nino felt that way and said so in his speech, because I believe there is a great deal which can be done in this Chamber, even if it is not done in the other place, to improve the lives of the disabled who, of all vulnerable people in Canada, are surely among the most vulnerable.

Not only are there many people with disabilities in Canada today but, unhappily, every day more and more people in all age groups are becoming disabled. It is a matter of grave concern that they have the opportunity and the protection of the law in ways that this bill fails to provide.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, on behalf of Senator Di Nino, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Jack Marshall moved the second reading of Bill C-84, to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise with a sense of relief, satisfaction and cautious optimism to introduce Bill C-84, an act to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowances Act and the Pensions Act and to amend other acts in consequence thereof.

The purpose of the bill is to provide members of the wartime high seas merchant navy with greater recognition and equal access to veterans' benefits. It amends eight acts and contains coming-into-force provisions.

Honourable senators, I was particularly interested, in examining this bill, to compare it with Bill S-5, a private bill which I introduced almost a year ago entitled, "An Act to amend certain statutes of Canada to recognize the wartime service of the veterans of the Canadian Merchant Navy." I was more than pleased to receive a comparison of the two bills made by the the Law Clerk of the Senate, who drafted my legislation with the following comments.

> I have confined my comments to matters that appeared relevant to the Bills you proposed . . . On the whole, Bill C-84 appears to accomplish . . . all . . . that you were trying to achieve. The methodology is different and the Merchant Navy Veterans still have a separate Act apart from the Pensions Act in which their benefits are established. That should not make any difference so long as the government is committed to treating merchant veterans equitably . . . Your objectives seem to have been achieved.

[Senator Marsden.]

I am confident, honourable senators, that this equitable measure will come to pass tonight. The bill which was introduced and debated in the other place last Wednesday, June 10, received speedy passage by members of all parties. It was done in the spirit of cooperation which has become the norm over the years in all committees that deal, or have dealt, with our veterans legislation in both houses of Parliament. I welcome the evidence of cooperation and the kind remarks of some MPs with regard to the contribution that the Senate has made towards achieving the recognition of merchant seaman as reflected in the bill. I feel sure that we will see the same cooperation in this chamber where the fight for recognition began over four years ago.

● (2050)

I wish to commend two members of the subcommittee who were then permanent. I refer to the Deputy Chairman, Senator Lorne Bonnell and Senator Paul David, who unfortunately is not able to be with us this evening. May I also express thanks to Senator Marsden, who was then chair of the parent Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, for her support and the support of all members of that committee, and also to those senators who were good enough to appear from time to time and lend their support. I refer to Senators Barootes, John M. Macdonald, Finlay MacDonald, Molgat, Molson, Muir, Rossiter, and Senators Guay and Sherwood, now retired.

I am sure that all senators will want me to call the attention of the Senate to the presence in the gallery tonight of members of the Canadian Merchant Navy Association, the Merchant Navy Association (Allied Seamen) and the Merchant Navy POW Association, to whom we pay tribute.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, while it is acknowledged that merchant seaman were entitled to some benefits on a comparative level with war veterans allowance recipients under the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, Bill C-84 expands that entitlement without restriction to all three programs under the Department of Veterans Affairs as contained in the Pension Act and in the important Income Support and Health Care Programs.

For example, the controversial six-month rule for entitlement is removed. Until now, merchant seaman required six months' wartime service at sea plus one voyage in dangerous waters to qualify for income support and other important benefits contained in the act. Under the present bill, only one wartime high seas voyage is required. A most important improvement concerns eligibility for disability pensions in clause 4, the new section 9.

Previously, veterans of the Armed Forces have been eligible for a disability pension whether or not they were wounded as a result of hostile enemy action. They were in the service of Canada and so were covered during their service in wartime while on duty. But not so our merchant seamen. In order for them to qualify for a disability pension, their injuries had to occur as a result of direct enemy action.

It was rightfully argued by merchant seaman that this was unjust, that merchant navy veterans were on duty from the time they signed on for a voyage. The enemy action provision will no longer apply to merchant navy veterans. This will allow some 230 additional merchant seaman or their dependents to qualify for disability pensions for the first time without restriction.

A program which is not contained in the bill, but will be introduced as an amendment to the veterans health care regulations, is worthy of mention. I refer to the Veterans Independence Program, a program designed to assist the veteran to remain at home with his spouse and family instead of being confined to a faraway institution until he requires hospitalization. Despite the fact that merchant seaman have fulfilled their requirements for eligibility for this program, they have heretofore been denied entitlement through a restriction that demanded that they be in receipt of a disability pension in order to qualify. This restriction is now removed for merchant seaman. They will be entitled to VIP even with a non-pensionable condition.

I understand that the regulations to authorize such eligibility have been approved by Treasury Board. They go before a special committee of council on Thursday, June 18, for approval and, all being well, will come into effect by July 1.

It is worthwhile spending a few moments in describing this excellent program because it is so ideally suited to veterans as the aging process makes their daily lives more difficult physically. I will place on the record the benefits available and the rates of contribution which, through its provision, will extend eligibility to an estimated additional 1,800 veterans.

I emphasize this, honourable senators, in case you are approached by merchant navy veterans for assistance with regard to their eligibility for this outstanding home care program.

Under the home care program, a veteran can be entitled to a maximum of $6,131 a year, including the maintenance of grounds up to a maximum of $855 a year. They can receive adult residential care and intermediate care to a maximum of $85.90 a day each, ambulatory health care of $713 a year, home adaptations up to a maximum of $3,600 per principal residence, and transportation up to a maximum of $855 a year. These rates are annually subject to changes in the CPI.

Honourable senators, I feel very strongly and am even a little bitter about the fact that there was undeniably a lost opportunity that could have given access to the program to merchant navy veterans, and indeed others who have fulfilled the requirements for entitlement back to 1989. There is, regrettably, no explanation for why merchant seaman had to wait so many years to be recognized for their service. We can only regret, with a deep sense of guilt, that we or our predecessors did not act for so many years, other than with intermittent appeals from time to time by various organizations and parliamentarians, and strong appeals by the merchant seaman themselves.

Not enough can be said about the merits of the Veterans Independence Program and I do not hesitate to commend governments as well as those officials who were responsible for its creation and implementation. That program came into effect in 1981 under the former government and was expanded, improved and extended on a scheduled basis to more and more veterans over the past decade by both governments.

Of all the programs now available to merchant seaman, this will be of the most benefit. An 80-year-old merchant navy veteran with an arthritic wife, both of whom are suffering from heart trouble, said to me, "I hope we will live to see the day when I can qualify for the home care assistance and maintenance to help us with problems we just can't cope with."

Clauses 9, 10 and 11 of the bill relate to resistance fighters who are being removed from the act. This is due to the fact that those who fought with resistance movements in occupied countries during World War II are no longer eligible to apply for War Veterans Allowance or other Canadian veterans benefits as of March 2, 1992. Resistance members who are getting benefits now will not lose them, but as of March 2, 1992, no further applications are being approved. Resistance members who are getting allowances outside Canada will have one year to return to Canada and resume residency. If they fail to do so by midnight, March 2, 1993, they will lose their allowance.

The minister, in his address in the other place on June 10, explained that we are returning the program to its original objective, which was to provide needy wartime armed forces veterans with financial support until they qualify for the old age security and other federal government programs.

Honourable senators, I would like to place on the record a few words about that gallant group of merchant seaman who requested a hearing before the Senate subcommittee in 1987. The evidence they gave through the forum we provided at the Senate subcommittee was highlighted in the committee's report, "It's Almost Too Late " which was tabled in the Senate in January 1991, some 17 months ago. That report caught the attention of Canadians everywhere and brought a wave of support from across the nation, appealing to the government to recognize members of the merchant navy as veterans.

• (2100)

Perhaps I need go no further than to repeat the words of Rear Admiral Leonard W. Murray, Commander-in-Chief,

North West Atlantic, words that focus attention on the contribution of the merchant seaman during the wars in which they fought. He said:

> Make no mistake, the real victors of the Battle of the Atlantic were not the navies or air forces, but the allied merchant seamen.

Time, unfortunately, does not permit me to record all the details of their heroism, the adverse conditions which they endured, their steadfastness against the elements, and their lack of protection from the enemy. However, it should be our duty to record the misconceptions which were allowed to prevail, and which, most likely and regrettably, were a deterrent to their deserving recognition before this day.

The wartime service and post-war treatment of the veterans of the Canadian Merchant Navy was a focal point of your committee's concern. The subcommittee heard from a number of groups of individuals who represent merchant navy veterans and merchant navy prisoners of war. As far as we are aware, our investigation marks the first occasion on which a parliamentary committee had been made aware both of the service and sacrifice of merchant seamen during World War II and of the shabbiness of their treatment in the years following the war. We also became aware of how little we or other Canadians knew of the wartime history of the merchant marine, and in most cases still do not know.

On the basis of their testimony, it is clear that many Canadians, wanting to serve their country during the war, joined the merchant marine rather than one of the fighting services because they had been rejected as too old or too young, or as physically unfit for the latter. It might be interesting to note that a merchant seamen from Nova Scotia told me that he tried to enlist in the military but was turned down because he had flat feet. He then proceeded to walk 20 miles to join the merchant navy.

These wartime volunteers and many veteran mariners served in various capacities, such as firemen, oilers, deck hands, engineers, radio officers and gunnery crew, aboard merchant vessels so equipped even though at the time most were without armed protection from the enemy.

Honourable senators, in responding to charges that merchant navy seamen were unfairly treated after the war, governments have traditionally argued that not only were they civilians but they were much better paid than their military equivalents. That is another misconception. A study presented to the subcommittee challenged the accuracy of this claim and concluded that no merchant navy officer under the rank of captain or chief engineer received as much pay as the Royal Canadian Navy equivalent, and that the 1940 pay rates of merchant seamen were much lower than the Royal Canadian Navy rates until 1944.

Despite their classification as "civilians", strangely enough the enemy made no distinction as to whether or not they were civilians or what colour of clothes they wore when 198 merchant seamen were taken prisoner after their ships were sunk. The hazards of war at sea were replaced by the purgatory of imprisonment ashore. Most spent more than four years in prison camps in German-occupied Europe and in the Far East, where they were imprisoned by the Japanese and incarcerated "under conditions of appalling deprivation and degradation."

Post-war policy towards veterans of the merchant marine was also based on the desire to encourage the expansion of the peacetime merchant marine, and hence to keep in existence the pool of experienced merchant mariners formed during the war years. The Canadian government enacted legislation to reintegrate ex-service personnel. Programs for retraining and education permitted veterans of the armed forces to attend courses in high schools, technical schools and universities. However, veterans of the merchant marine were offered only such educational assistance as would "further their careers at sea", in the words of one witness. This never came to pass.

Before I conclude, honourable senators, I want to mention one of the three recommendations of the Senate subcommittee. Two of our recommendations have been implemented in the legislation; the third is that a Book of Remembrance be prepared and placed in the Peace Tower as a gesture of respect and tribute to those 1,000 merchant seamen who lost their lives. It is unfortunate that there has been no commitment as yet to honour those who paid the supreme sacrifice for their country. Let us hope that before too many more of them have passed on, such a show of remembrance will become a reality.

Honourable senators, Bill C-84 has 22 clauses. I have confined my remarks to the few that are most meaningful to the merchant seamen and which, in my mind, are urgent to the well-being of their future lives. The bill also deals with a rearrangement of sections and parts of the act, with definitions of allied ships, Canadian nationals, foreign voyage, high seas voyage, home trade voyage, term of service, allied veterans, the insurance principle and others.

While the bill was being debated in the other place, members were prepared to pass it with a commitment that the legislation be reviewed in two years. I would amend that extension to one year, because time is passing, there will certainly be a large number of applications, and any unforeseen weaknesses in the bill will be evident in the first few months.

Unfortunately, honourable senators, at this time during each session we are asked to cooperate in passing legislation to meet deadlines, and therefore time does not permit as thorough an examination of the bill as one would like. In this regard, I observe that the clauses of the bill, in the main, deal with definitions as relating to existing merchant mariners and the new class of veterans.

I appeal, then, to the Senate on behalf of those representing the merchant seamen who feel that the main objectives are met. Taking into account the age and the state of health of these gallant men, it is critical that we pass Bill C-84 without delay.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I intend to adjourn this debate in the name of Senator Bonnell, who will present tomorrow. However, before doing so I have been asked by the Merchant Seamen's Veterans Association to say a word of thanks to Senator Marshall for the many years that he has fought for this bill to be presented to Parliament. It is the realization of the hopes and dreams of so many of our merchant seamen. So much of what is here in this bill we owe entirely to the passionate dedication of Senator Marshall and his group.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Neiman: I know that he will keep fighting. The next fight will be for the Book of Remembrance in the Peace Tower. I am sure we will get it soon, because Senator Marshall simply does not stop fighting when the welfare and the well-being of our veterans are at stake.

We thank you, Senator Marshall.

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, without interfering with my colleague's intent to adjourn the debate in the name of our other colleague, and as someone who went to sea for a number of years, perhaps I might be permitted to make a few comments.

• (2110)

My first comment has to do with mistakes I have made in public office and in public life. One such mistake had to do with an action in another chamber in which I stood in support of a bill that had to do with the War Measures Act. That was a wrong thing for me to have done, and I knew it when I did it, and I regret it. Another mistake was more of a lighter-hearted matter. I had always believed that "process" was correct, and that, while my dear colleague Senator Marshall was absolutely right in what he was attempting to do a few months ago, it was nevertheless wrong in "process". As a result, I made another mistake, a very important mistake for me. I upheld the Chair.

With my second comment, permit me to draw your attention to pages 123 and 124 of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide. Let me draw your attention to Jack Marshall. Do you know who he is? Do you really know what this man has done, or the abilities he has brought to bear on veterans' problems over the years? Do you really know why we now have in front of us this piece of legislation? It did not originate here. It came from the other place, but only because of his steadfastness.

Let me read to you from the Guide. Humber-St.George's-St. Barbe. He is a young man—born in 1919. Did you know he was born in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia? Senator John Michael, you will know precisely. His parents were distinguished people in their own right. He married, of course, and has a family. As to his political career—because it is important—he was first elected to the House of Commons in 1968. He was re-elected in 1972 and 1974. He had already resigned from the House of Commons when the then Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau appointed him to this place.

He has been Chairman of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, of Social Affairs, Science and Technology. He has been long involved with Fisheries. He has been involved with every aspect of human life, but none with more ardour, more dedication, more sincerity and more continuing loyalty than that of veterans. I speak as somebody who has sailed. I feel quite free to say to our colleague Senator Marshall how deeply we all feel about his tenacity, his "do not stop until we have achieved that which is right for seamen" approach. Lieutenant-Colonel Marshall, our fellow senator, had a distinguished career in the military, and I will not go into it. It is there. Those of us who know him are aware of his association with the Canadian military.

However, there are those who may be upstairs in the gallery, and those who may be in Vancouver and elsewhere, relatives of those who died and whose families survived without any compensation; there are those who will remember those seamen who took aviation gasoline into Korea and into Vietnam in support of our allies, those seamen who went to the beaches of Normandy, those seamen who went wherever it was required in order to take whatever was required to further the defence of democracy. They will remember, and they will know that we, indeed, let them down. Essentially, until now the attitude of this House of Parliament has been indefensible with respect to these men and women.

I think that I should conclude by saying to Senator Marshall that I regret some of my actions, and by asking members of the Senate to join with a large body of Canadians, young Canadians, seamen and seawomen, who calmly engage in the demands of the sea and are there when needed and never hesitate. I ask honourable senators to join with them in expressing to Senator Marshall a very heartfelt and belated thank you.

Thank you for not criticizing us for having failed you all of these years. Without you, Senator Marshall, the actions of the other place would not have brought forth the legislation we have before us this evening.

On motion of Senator Neiman, for Senator Bonnell, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard moved the second reading of Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, as a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I welcome this opportunity to speak to you about Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. I am also proud of the fact that the pre-study of this bill, by our committee helped improve this legislation.

As you know, Bill C-48 amends the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act by providing for a new process for restructuring deposit-taking institutions in serious financial difficulty. The bill gives the CDIC the authority to arrange and carry out the sale of troubled, federally regulated financial institutions to a healthy institution.

The bill also reinforces the capacity of the CDIC to regulate the kind of information financial institutions may provide to their customers on deposit insurance.

As a result of these changes, members of the public who entrust CDIC institutions with their money will be better informed about the coverage offered by the Corporation.

[English]

Let me review for honourable senators the reasons why the structuring measures in this bill are so important. The substantial potential losses that CDIC may be exposed to in carrying out its responsibilities toward insured depositors of member institutions means that CDIC must be provided with the ability in its statute to control these costs. This control is achieved in Bill C-48 by providing CDIC with the means to act, with the approval of the minister, in a timely manner to put a troubled institution back on a solid footing.

This is the essence of the restructuring process set out in Bill C-48. I believe that the establishment of this process will greatly enhance CDIC's ability to run a cost-effective deposit insurance system.

In its pre-study of this bill, the Senate Banking committee was privileged to hear testimony from witnesses with considerable knowledge of the financial sector.

[Translation]

Mr. Justice Willard Estey drew on his vast legal experience and spoke more specifically as the author of the report on the investigation into the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank failures.

One of the main conclusions of his report was that existing procedures did not give federal authorities the requisite powers to help troubled financial institutions. Bill C-48 will add to the measures the CDIC can take when one of its member institutions experiences serious financial difficulty. Judge Estey concluded that existing procedures and powers for dealing with failing institutions needed to be enhanced even more, but told the committee he supported speedy passage of Bill C-48.

The Senate committee agreed that the bill should be adopted quickly but indicated there was still sufficient time to make a number of technical improvements to the bill before it was adopted. Together with my colleagues, I am very pleased to see that three of your committee's recommendations were adopted by the other place in the form of amendments at the report stage. I would like to take a few minutes to describe these changes.

The Senate committee was concerned that the bill, as presented at the pre-study stage, contained no clear definition of the criteria to be used by the CDIC to determine whether or not it was appropriate to restructure a troubled institution. The committee recommended providing a clear definition of these criteria.

The amendment made at the report stage by the other place clearly indicates that the CDIC must base its decision on the objectives it is set by law.

The second amendment made by the other place, as a result of our committee's report, proposed to make it easier for holders of shares and subordinated debt of a vested company to sell the rights to compensation attached to those shares to others. The changes made in the bill allow the CDIC to hand over shares and debt, upon restructuring, to either their original holders or to the persons who subsequently acquire the rights from the original holders.

Finally, Bill C-48 was amended by the other place to clarify a technical point raised by the Senate committee with respect to the correct interpretation of the term "liabilities" in one specific section of this bill. The amendment fully responds to our concerns.

Since I am on the subject of the pre-study of the bill by the Senate committee, I would like to add that during our discussions, the committee touched on several major matters of principle concerning the CDIC and the deposit insurance system in this country, which we feel should be further investigated. The committee's report goes into some detail about these matters.

I am also pleased to see that the Senate committee will consider these questions later this year, when it proceeds with a wide-ranging study of the CDIC and similar institutions. With my colleagues, I am also very pleased to hear that last week the Minister of Finance announced he would soon ask representatives of financial institutions and other interested parties to take part in a thorough review of the deposit insurance system.

I would now like to continue my comments on the substance of the bill before us today. The purpose of this bill, which is to give the CDIC the capacity to control its cost while contributing to the financial stability of the system, has garnered broadly-based support.

I believe the bill meets this objective by balancing the role of federal authorities with that of the private sector in operating our financial markets.

Bill C-48 also significantly changes the rules for disclosure of information on deposit insurance to customers of financial institutions. These changes may not be spectacular but they will be very useful for depositors. They have also been well received by the financial sector, which has every interest in keeping its customers well informed.

[English]

In closing, the amendments to the CDIC Act contained in Bill C-48 equip CDIC to deal with a continually evolving financial sector. However, as useful as these changes are, we heard calls for further changes to the CDIC Act and to the deposit insurance system generally. The testimony we heard underscored the importance of the major study of deposit insurance which, as I said earlier, the Senate Banking committee will be undertaking over the course of the next few months. I look forward to the consideration by the Senate committee of some of the broader issues raised during the committee's study of Bill C-48.

[Translation]

As a member of the Senate committee that studied this bill, I am satisfied with the amendments made to it and I support the adoption of this legislation. I hope that you will join me now and pass the bill on second reading.

Honourable senators, I thank all the members of on the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee for their diligence and their serious approach throughout our pre-study. The solid experience and vast knowledge of this field that several of our colleagues, including the chairman, Senator Poitras, have were very useful in our work. I thank them and thank you, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

• (2130)

BANKRUPTCY ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. James F. Kelleher moved the second reading of Bill C-22, to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to contribute to the debate on a very urgent matter, the need to reform bankruptcy legislation in Canada. The proposed new Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act provides the first reform of these laws in over 40 years. Honourable senators who have served this chamber longer than I have will be all too familiar with how difficult it has been to reform bankruptcy legislation in Canada. Many senators with us today will recall previous efforts. In fact, this bill represents the seventh time in 16 years that the Government of Canada has tried to bring the regulations into line with modern needs and technology.

The Bankruptcy Act that we seek to amend was passed in 1949. In the meantime, a number of things have changed. First of all, the technology available to speed up proceedings has advanced considerably. Who could have foreseen a day when fax machines would be used to transmit key documents in a bankruptcy proceeding?

Second, the nature of obtaining capital has changed dramatically. The original drafters of Canada's bankruptcy laws could not have predicted a day when most financing would be done through secured loans, which means that often virtually nothing is left over for preferred creditors when a company declares bankruptcy.

Third, inflation has all but eliminated any benefit provided to employees by the original provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. The 1949 legislation allows a maximum of only $500 each for wage claims by employees. Perhaps the most important reason of all for modernizing our bankruptcy laws is to help businesses survive during difficult economic times.

Bankruptcy laws must be part of the solution for companies in dire straits; they should not be part of the problem. I am sure that many senators here in this chamber could relate instances where companies have failed precisely because bankruptcy laws were part of the problem. Bill C-22 reforms the law in two ways that will provide a better opportunity for businesses to survive. It provides flexibility and breathing space for a company to reorganize and it provides supplier rights so that suppliers are not dragged down when one of their major customers declares bankruptcy.

Let me outline these provisions in more detail. Under the current law, a firm in financial trouble can file a notice of stay for protection only from unsecured creditors. Secured creditors can demand payment at any time. They can also appoint a receiver to realize on their security, and this makes reorganization virtually impossible. In the past few years we have seen many instances where, at the first sign that a company is in trouble, a secured creditor will jump in quickly, seize the assets, cut off credit lines and appoint a receiver. The secured creditor is protected but unsecured creditors and employees are out of luck.

Under the new Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act as proposed in Bill C-22, businesses will have a chance to reorganize. The new legislation would establish a 30-day cooling-off period. This would give businesses time to negotiate with all their creditors, both unsecured and secured. At the end of 30 days the firm would have two options: It could present a commercial reorganization plan or it could ask the court for permission to extend the stay for up to an additional five months.

Bill C-22 also introduces new rules governing the conduct of secured creditors and lenders. A lender would not be permitted to seize the assets of a debtor without giving the debtor notice and an opportunity to make a proposal for reorganization.

The second way in which this bill will help companies to survive is by enabling suppliers to retrieve goods that have not been paid for when a company declares bankruptcy. Under our current laws, unpaid suppliers are included among the ordinary creditors. Once the assets of an insolvent firm have been liquidated and secured, and preferred creditors have been paid off, there is often nothing left for ordinary creditors. This spells disaster for many businesses. They depend upon the cash flow.

Once a major customer goes down, many of its suppliers follow into bankruptcy. What happens to the goods for which the supplier has not been paid? Often they are sold at liquidation prices far below their real value, certainly well below the value they would provide to the original supplier if the original supplier could retrieve them. Bill C-22 gives unpaid suppliers the right to reclaim goods from a firm that has declared bankruptcy within 30 days of delivery. For many companies, this provision may well spell the difference between weathering the recession and bankruptcy.

Honourable senators, these are the urgent reasons why this chamber should support Bill C-22 and see that it is passed expeditiously. Any undue delay may well spell the difference between survival and failure for companies that now teeter on the edge of bankruptcy and need time to reorganize.

There are other reasons as well, and I will list them briefly. The bill provides for an efficient, inexpensive means for consumers to renegotiate their obligations as an alternative to consumer bankruptcy. If an individual does declare personal bankruptcy, under this bill he would have access to summary administration, which is an inexpensive and rapid bankruptcy procedure now only available if assets or distribution do not exceed $500. That limit for access to summary administration will be increased to $5,000 through Bill C-22. This will allow many people to avoid an otherwise long and costly process.

Finally, honourable senators, Bill C-22 reduces the Crown priority in bankruptcies. The claims of the Crown will be dealt with in the same vein as the claims of ordinary creditors. Companies will still be required to pay income tax, contributions to the Canadian Pension Plan and unemployment insurance premiums as a high priority; but other debts to the Crown, such as items or services bought from government, will be given a lower priority.

● (2140)

Senators, this is a good bill. It is urgently needed, but I would be the first to acknowledge that Bill C-22 does not do everything that perhaps we would like to see included in a reformed bankruptcy law.

I can see a look of amazement on Senator Frith's face when I admit that, and I hope it is not troubling him too much.

Senator Frith: No. I wondered if you were going to specify the parts that disappoint you.

Senator Kelleher: Yes, I will. I knew you were awaiting this with bated breath.

Senator Frith: That is what peaked my interest, sir; not your repentance or confession.

Senator Kelleher: I knew that is why you stayed in the chamber. This chamber is aware of the debate over the funding of a wage claim payment program. The debate arose in spite of a high degree of cooperation and consensus building among all three major political parties.

The government and the opposition agreed on the desirability of providing a wage claim payment for workers when a company has gone bankrupt. I am certain that no one in this chamber would dispute the importance of such a provision, but a consensus on how to resolve this issue proved elusive. In the end, the government reluctantly decided that it would split the bill and delete the clauses that constituted a wage claim payment program. Recommendations for such a program will be given high priority when the bill comes up for review in three years.

In the search for a fair means of funding wage claim payments, several methods were recommended. Some will warrant further study. I am sure that this chamber will welcome an opportunity to look into some of these proposals in detail at the appropriate time.

But, honourable senators, now is not that time. Now is the time to move quickly to offer hope to companies that face bankruptcy—companies that can be saved if they have a chance to reorganize.

Every day that passes means more companies have edged closer to bankruptcy. Every day that passes means more jobs lost. This is why I would ask that the chamber move expeditiously to pass Bill C-22.

This is not a case of providing a rubber stamp for a piece of legislation. This is a case of acting responsibly in order to see quick passage for measures that I am confident we all support.

Finally, honourable senators, I would emphasize that in the coming months we will have ample time to consider ways in which the bankruptcy laws of Canada might be improved. No one wants to see a situation in which these laws go through another 43-year period before a government succeeds in reforming them. No one wants a repeat of the situation where reform efforts to modernize bankruptcy laws fail six times.

The demands on bankruptcy law will change. Of that, we can be certain. Parliamentarians today have no greater ability to look into the future than their predecessors had in 1949. In the years to come, technology will definitely change. Financing arrangements will likely change, and the dollars of tomorrow may not cover the same expenses as the dollars of today. These are the changes we have seen in the past; the demands on our bankruptcy laws will evolve.

The best we can hope to do is to pass legislation to meet today's urgent demands and to try to provide a certain degree of flexibility for tomorrow's parliamentarians.

Bill C-22 calls for a parliamentary review of the legislation in three years' time, honourable senators. We will have ample opportunity to study how the changes affect the marketplace, to consider ways to fine-tune the law's provisions, and to come up with a way to finance wage claim payments.

Bill C-22 offers flexible, modern rules for bankruptcy in Canada. It provides an opportunity for businesses and individuals to restructure and avoid declaring bankruptcy when it is still possible to reorganize. It provides a balance between the rights of different categories of creditors, on the one hand, and between the rights of creditors and debtors on the other.

Honourable senators, this is a good piece of legislation. It has benefited from detailed and thorough study. It is long overdue. I hope that you will join me in ensuring that this bill receives speedy passage in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I do not pretend to be an expert in bankruptcy legislation. I operated a small business on the verge of bankruptcy a number of years ago, but I never did make it to bankruptcy.

I had the privilege of hearing so-called "experts" at the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce when departmental people were there to give a briefing on this bill. I have been watching and reading about it over the years. I questioned the so-called experts on one aspect mentioned by Senator Kelleher; that is, that the bill does not provide for the protection of employees. It is true that the bill increases the amount of so-called "protection" from $500 to $2,000, but that is not protection. They are not on a preferred creditor basis.

I questioned the experts from the department, and I was not happy with the answers I received. For instance, they said that the government had come to the conclusion that this was not a good time to include protection for employees because of the recession.

I listened on that day to Senator Kelleher and his questioning, and there is no doubt that he understands the whole of the legislation. I do not disagree with the statements he has made as to the need for this legislation and the benefit that is possible with this legislation; however, I cannot help being reminded this evening of the work and time Senator Marshall put in to obtain protection for the merchant seamen. Well, I am seeking protection for all employees of those companies that go bankrupt. They are often left on the street.

While it is true that we are in a time of recession, Senator Murray and government spokespersons tell us that we are on the verge of ending this recession and will soon be in glowing times; the economy will be great. Would this not be the time then, if it is true that we are on the verge of an economic boom, to include in the legislation the protection that employees have been seeking for so long?

Senator Kelleher stated that this legislation is 1949 legislation. It has not been amended since 1949. How long will it be before it is amended again?

I have heard those review provisions. I have been around. I have heard all kinds of statements by the government and by experts. However, there is no time like the present.

I fail to understand why in 1992, with the advances in technology and knowledge, and the advances society has made, it is the poor, the workers, and the employees who must wait to the end. Why can't the employees, as well as the business people, benefit from this legislation? I ask you, colleagues, why can't they?

I hope that in committee—and I presume this bill will go to committee—we can get some answers. Perhaps the minister can tell us what he is prepared to do for the employees. I know that other jurisdictions are looking at this problem, and I hope that the government will look at this problem now and not in three years' time.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

● (2150)

CUSTOMS ACT

CUSTOMS TARIFF

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes moved the second reading of Bill C-74, to amend the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak today on Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act.

The purpose of this bill is to amend legislation administered by Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise, relating to penalty and interest provisions for importers and to postal and courier provisions in the Customs Act, the Custom Tariff and the Excise Tax Act.

First, I should like to deal with the courier and postal issues, then I will discuss the penalty and interest provisions of this proposed legislation.

The measures with regard to postal imports are designed to modify the regulations, which have become an unfortunate incentive for significant amounts of Canadian shopping through foreign mail order houses. The existing regulations have made it advantageous for Canadians to shop by mail through these foreign mail order firms. The current rules also encourage Canadian mail order houses to establish direct marketing operations and offices outside Canada and to sell merchandise back to Canadians. As a result, there has been a significant loss of federal revenue but, more importantly, a detrimental effect on Canadian business and employment. The present rules also provide what is, in effect, a subsidy to those who use the mail to import goods.

The proposed changes would give help to Canadian retailers for a more level playing field by ensuring reasonably equitable duty and tax treatment for domestic and foreign mail order firms. These changes would also achieve equity in a fiscally-responsible manner.

The need for the changes is well borne out by fact. First, Customs and Excise has experienced a 46 per cent increase in the volume of dutiable and taxable parcels over the last two years. Second, Customs estimates that in 1990 Canadian purchases from foreign mail order houses exceeded $900 million. Those sales figures are expected to grow as foreign mail order houses target our Canadian market with aggressive catalogue distribution and media advertising campaigns.

The Canadian direct marketing industry is an important part of our economy. This industry has annual sales in the region of $7.8 billion. The catalogue direct marketing sector accounts for approximately $2.2 billion in sales and it employs an estimated 35,620 people in some 600 firms in Canada.

The proposed amendments dealing with postal and courier imports are crucial to the health of the catalogue direct marketing sector. An independent study done for the Canadian Direct Marketing Association found that Canadian catalogue firms lost $260 million in sales in 1990 and that approximately 4,170 jobs had been lost since 1986. The sector's once healthy growth rate of about 7 per cent annually has stagnated, and since 1986 it rests at just over 3 per cent annually. Comparable growth in the American industry has risen from 8.3 per cent in the period from 1977-85 to 12.4 per cent in 1985-90. Without these changes it is estimated that by 1990 Canada will have lost approximately 7,500 jobs in the direct marketing catalogue sector and an additional $469 million a year in lost sales.

Much of this problem can be attributed to the impact of the existing law. The duty and tax exemptions for parcels valued at $40 or less creates a serious competitive disadvantage for Canadian retailers in competing for Canadian mail order business. On the one hand, our Canadian retailer must charge the GST and the provincial sales tax on their sales when it is mailed to customers within their own province, as well as pay duty on their imports.

Senator Frith: Say that again.

Senator Hastings: Say that GST part again?

Senator Frith: Start with the GST!

Senator Corbin: Repeat that, please!

Senator Barootes: On the other hand, mail imports valued at the same value of $40 or less are not subject to GST or duty. In addition, the federal government cannot and does not collect the provincial tax, except where it is harmonized with the GST on goods. That applies at present only to the province of Quebec.

This means that an Ontario-based firm selling a Canadian-made article for a $40 catalogue price would deliver it to a customer in Canada for $50.36, which includes provincial sales tax, GST, shipping and handling. However, that same company could ship the Canadian-made goods to the United States and deliver it to the same customer in Ontario for $45.36. This is rather unfair competition.

I now want to highlight the changes that the government is putting forward to rectify this anomaly. The exemptions which allow duty- and tax-free entry of postal and courier imports valued at $40.00 or less will be reduced to $20.00. Clause 42 of this bill will amend the Excise Tax Act to effect the changes for GST purposes. Once the bill is approved, amendments to Orders in Council can be made to reduce the amount for duty purposes. This would ensure that a large portion of foreign mail order imports that are subject to the same duties and taxes will be subject to the same duties and taxes as our Canadian goods.

This $20.00 limit, therefore, represents a reasonable balance between the need to place Canadian companies on a more equitable footing and the ability to effectively enforce this lower limit.

● (2200)

Canada Post is being contracted by Canada Customs to take over some specific tasks currently performed by Customs. These tasks include collection of duty, provincial sales tax where harmonized, and the GST. Canada Post would charge a $5 handling fee for this service. This is in line with the government's efforts to help recover costs where appropriate from those who benefit from the service. Moreover, this fee is similar to what is charged in other countries.

Under the proposed legislation there would also be voluntary registration of foreign mail order firms for the collection of GST and duties. These non-resident mail order houses would have the option of selecting and remitting the applicable duties and taxes on all shipments over this $20 exemption limit sent to Canadian destinations.

Clauses 39 and 40 of the proposed legislation would amend the Customs Tariff to increase the gift exemption which allows duty- and tax-free entry for gifts sent to Canadians through the mail or imported personally by non-residents. The exemption will increase from $40 to $60 bringing it in line with other countries. This change is being made in response to numerous recent representations from individual Canadians across this country.

To show how this is comparable with other countries, I have a list of what their exemptions are in comparison to ours. In the United States, the exemption is $50, which is the equivalent of $62 Canadian; in Great Britain, it is £32, which is the equivalent of $65 Canadian; Australia has a $200 exemption, which is the equivalent of $192 Canadian, for gifts imported; France has virtually no limits on such gifts.

I would like now, honourable senators, to turn your attention to the second part of this proposed legislation, which is designed to eliminate the current imbalance that exists in the interest provisions of customs legislation and to introduce penalties for the lack of compliance in certain instances. The proposed amendments which I will outline have no impact on day-to-day operations for the vast numbers of importers who voluntarily comply with customs requirements. Rather, these measures are aimed at those commercial importers who find it financially rewarding to delay filing their accounting documents or paying their fair share of these duties and taxes.

Under the current legislation, Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise is required to pay interest on monies owing to an importer while the reciprocal obligation in many cases is not required of an importer who owes money to the Crown. This creates a disincentive for importers to declare the correct origin, classification and value of their importations, and becomes an incentive to delay paying the amounts owing. The amendments in this legislation are designed to ensure that the importing company meets its obligation to pay duties and taxes in a timely manner.

Although the changes in this respect appear technically complex, the effect is straightforward. For example, clause 7 of this bill would amend the Customs Act to add a new section to provide for the application of interest and penalty charges in the case of late accounting for goods, late payment of duties and taxes, and in the case of subsequent assessments and reassessments. At the same time, the Minister of National Revenue would have the ability to waive these charges and to extend the time frames for their payment. Interest provisions would also be brought into line with commercial practices by charging the refund interest on a compounded daily basis.

I wish to emphasize again that these proposals for interest charges and penalties will have no negative impact on the vast majority of importers who file their documents and pay their duties and taxes within the prescribed time periods. Moreover, when importers have legitimate reasons for being late, allowances will be made by the minister.

Honourable senators, these changes will help to ensure that deliberate or chronic late payers are not rewarded by having what are in effect interest-free loans at the taxpayers' expense. This legislation would remedy that problem.

I want to conclude by saying that the proposed legislation provides effective remedies to a number of imbalances in the current customs legislation. With regard to the existing import penalty and interest provisions, the new rules will eliminate unfairness in the system, enhance voluntary compliance, and help create a level playing field for Canadian importers and Canadian businesses. The changes relating to postal and courier imports will put Canadian mail order firms on a more equal footing with their foreign competitors. In essence, this legislation moves Canada in the direction of a fairer and more just system of doing business.

It is important that this house give serious and urgent consideration to the bill. The government announced last February that it intended to bring into effect the changes to the parcel import system on July 1, 1992. Canada Post is geared and prepared to fulfil their function to collect the duty, the GST, and the handling fee on July 1 of this year. Without passage of this bill before that date, honourable senators, those changes would have to be delayed. Canadian businesses need these changes now. I therefore urge that you give this legislation the priority it deserves for our Canadian businesses and for our Canadian citizens.

On the motion of Senator Thériault, debate adjourned.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS BILL, 1992

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Norman K. Atkins moved the second reading of Bill C-45, to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak tonight on second reading of Bill C-45, to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods. This bill is intended to result in the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act 1992. It is a rewrite of the first Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act which was passed in 1980.

Bill C-45 promotes public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods by establishing standards and procedures in the regulatory framework, a traditional inspection and enforcement program, and authority to require that immediate action take place when required to protect public safety.

● (2210)

Bill C-45 clarifies the nature of the dangerous goods program. It reorients and reaffirms the authority of dangerous goods inspectors to make them more efficient and to define clear limits to this authority. It deals with the selection and use of means of containment, that is, anything used to package dangerous goods for transportation, from cardboard boxes to railway tank cars.

The bill establishes a national program supported by the provinces. It also provides for international harmonization by recognizing international agreements. There are over 27 million shipments of dangerous goods every year in Canada. There are almost 11 million known chemicals with an astronomical number of possible combinations of these. To have a national program dealing with all of these possibilities, which is supported by all participants, and which harmonizes internationally, is no small feat.

The Canadian program, as it supports emergency response, is seen as a model by other countries. For example, Transport Canada operates an emergency information centre called Canutec. It is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Chemists who have been trained in transportation accident response are constantly available to provide information to anyone in Canada dealing with a dangerous goods emergency.

The bill is straightforward in establishing a regulatory program which identifies activities that are prohibited or are to be conducted in specific ways. It provides for the appointment of inspectors to review these activities. It provides for investigation and enforcement that can be directed at individuals, corporations employing these individuals or officers of such corporations.

This bill allows the courts to penalize infractions and enables the courts to order compensation or reparation. It can also require that a person or persons conduct or finance technical research relating to the transportation of dangerous goods.

The title of the bill refers to protecting public safety. That protection is aimed at human life and health, property and the environment. The regulations established under the 1980 version of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act would be continued. These regulations essentially define public safety: an activity conducted in compliance with the regulations is safe; one which is not in compliance is unsafe.

The bill provides the authorities to deal with situations where public safety is threatened. These threats can range from noncompliance to an actual accidental release of goods.

In addition to the traditional procedures of recording the event and later pursuing a penalty in the courts, the bill provides an authority for inspectors to deal immediately with the danger. Inspectors may order that certain activities take place, or cease, as appropriate. Possible actions range from detaining a shipment of dangerous goods until it is brought into compliance to ordering specific procedures to be followed. The bill specifically identifies the people subject to directions or orders.

Extensive consultation has taken place with respect to the bill. The consultation included industry, public interest groups and the provinces. As a result of this consultation, this bill is extremely well researched. After the introduction of the bill in the other place, between first and second readings, a second round of consultations was initiated in the same manner.

The first round of consultation shaped the form and substance of the bill. The second provided the fine-tuning to ensure that the bill is appropriate, reasonable and achieves its goal of promoting public safety. The bill achieves this goal while allowing for a national program which harmonizes federal and provincial procedures with international requirements. This level of uniformity allows Canadian industry to conduct business domestically and internationally without conflict between regulatory programs.

With respect to compliance and enforcement, an excellent working relationship has developed over the past years between the federal and provincial authorities. The provinces enforce the program on highways; the federal government carries out enforcement at highway shipper facilities and with respect to all air, marine and rail activities.

This federal-provincial partnership is extremely valuable and ensures that Canada's transportation of dangerous goods program is a success. This partnership is strengthened by a clause in the bill which provides that the federal government may enter into agreements with provincial governments with respect to administration of the act.

I am very pleased to present this bill today, as it is the result of several years of experience with the existing act and of extensive consultation with potentially affected people. This bill contains safety provisions of an immediate nature and provides the authority necessary for the improvement and maintenance of a Canadian transportation of dangerous goods program that is in harmony with the United States and other countries.

Bill C-45 will serve to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, honourable senators, and I hope it will receive your favourable consideration.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eric Berntson moved the second reading of Bill C-59, to amend the National Parks Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this short bill reflects important partnerships that the government is developing with aboriginal peoples. Divided into two major purposes, the bill first deals with Environment Canada's responsibility for the fulfilment of treaty No. 8 obligations flowing from the Cree band of Fort Chipewyan land claim settlement of 1986. In that settlement, Canada, Alberta and the band agreed that additional entitlements under the treaty would include provisions for some 12,000 acres of land for Indian reserve purposes and $26.6 million compensation.

Environment Canada's specific role in the settlement concerns Wood Buffalo National Park, which straddles the boundary of Alberta and the Northwest Territories. This park, the second largest in the world, overlays the approximately 3 million acre traditional hunting grounds of the Cree. Following the settlement, it was necessary to prepare a complex boundary survey of this area of the park for insertion into the National Parks Act. While I must point out that the area will remain subject to the National Parks Act, this bill confirms the right of the Cree band of Fort Chipewyan to hunting, fishing, trapping and cultural pursuits in their traditional lands within the park.

The bill also excises the small community of Peace Point from within the park boundary to enable its establishment as an Indian reserve. This is being done as part of the claim settlement in recognition of the wish of the Cree of Peace Point for greater control over their own affairs.

The final element of the bill affecting Wood Buffalo is the formal establishment of a Wildlife Advisory Board.

● (2220)

This board, which has been operating informally but effectively for several years, enables the Cree to participate meaningfully in making decisions that directly affect their way of life. It is indicative of the kinds of partnerships which must be established with native peoples to ensure that Canada's wilderness values are enriched, and that the ethics of wilderness protection are shared among all Canadians.

Therefore, in this bill we are formally recognizing the longstanding relationship and affinity of the Cree to lands which, by agreement, remain under the protection of the National Parks Act. Moreover, we are helping to perpetuate a life-style and tradition of caring for the land from which all Canadians can learn.

The second purpose of this bill concerns the setting aside of a national park reserve in the Queen Charlotte Islands of British Columbia, along with the authorization of a unique management agreement with the Council of the Haida Nation.

Honourable senators, on July 11, 1987, the Prime Minister and the Premier of British Columbia signed a Memorandum of Understanding which committed the two governments to negotiate an agreement to set aside a national park and national marine park in the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands. On July 12, 1988, the two governments signed a formal Memorandum of Agreement setting out specific commitments regarding the parks and related initiatives.

The signing of the MOU was the culmination of a 13-year struggle by the Haida and environmentalists, supported by church organizations and others, both nationally and internationally, to protect the area from logging and mining. The Haida first proposed the protection of the South Moresby area known to the Haida as Gwaii Haanas, to the Government of British Columbia in 1974. A decade later, the federal government proposed to British Columbia that a national park, complemented by a provincial park, be created.

Forestry operations and mineral exploration continued while the province considered its options. Then, in 1985, the Haida and their supporters blockaded logging on Lyell Island, leading to the arrest of 72 Haida, including elders, and focusing national and international attention on the situation. Agreement to protect the islands was greeted by Canadians as one of the most important environment accomplishments of the government in its first term.

Honourable senators, setting aside the park reserve will protect internationally significant heritage resources. Because parts of the area were not glaciated during the last Ice Age, unique plants and animals evolved there. Hence the area's common description as the "Canadian Galapagos". The Haida name for the archipelago is Gwaii Haanas which means "Islands of wonder and beauty", which will be the name of the park reserve.

There are presently 1,500 to 2,000 Haida living to the north of the proposed park reserve in their homeland of Haida Gwaii. About the same number live elsewhere in British Columbia, as well as in Alaska and elsewhere in the United States. Gwaii Haanas is an important part of Haida Gwaii, as evidenced by the more than 400 identified archaeological sites and existing cultural remains in the park reserve area. An abandoned village, Ninstints, was designated by UNESCO in 1981 as a world heritage site for its array of totems and other cultural remains. Two other Haida village sites in the vicinity, Tanu and Skedans, have been declared of national historic significance.

Since the beginning of the initiative to set aside the national park reserve, it has been evident that an understanding with the Haida was required. Protection of outstanding natural values of the area is linked with the preservation of their cultural sites and their continued use of the area. In his remarks at the signing of the MOU with the province, the Prime Minister stated:

> South Moresby is more than an ecological treasure. It is also the spiritual heart of "Haida Gwaii", the homeland of the Haida. The Haida community will be involved in a meaningful way in park planning, development and operation.

Consequently, Environment Canada began discussions with the Haida in 1987 regarding a mechanism for cooperative management of the park reserve and a continuation of traditional activities. As a result of these commitments the Haida did not oppose the idea of a national park reserve, which would stop the logging and at the same time not prejudice their position on ownership. It is for this reason that a reserve for a national park will be set aside pending resolution of disputes outstanding over rights, titles to and interest in the area.

Formal negotiations with the Haida on cooperation began in early 1988. Unfortunately, talks were broken off from time to time, given the differing views of the parties on who had sovereignty over the lands. Eventually, however, the parties agreed to set out their different views and to concentrate on those issues where there was agreement: Principally, the protection and conservation of the unique ecology of the area and the continuation of the Haida culture and traditions within it. With that deadlock broken, the negotiations led to a draft agreement in April 1990. The agreement was subsequently ratified by the Haida in the referendum held by the Council of the Haida Nation on May 19, 1990. The principal components of the agreement are as follows:

> A) The agreement will be between the Government of Canada, represented by the Minister of the Environment, and the Council of the Haida Nation, represented by its vice-president.
>
> B) The document contains parallel statements which set out the Haida and the Government of Canada's divergent positions regarding sovereignty, title and ownership to the land included within the national park reserve, as well as the definition, for example the citizenship, of those Haida to whom the agreement will apply.

By way of explanation, honourable senators, under their definition, the Haida Nation includes persons of Haida ancestry living in the United States, whereas Canada maintains that its responsibility under the agreement can be only to those Haida to whom subsection 35(1) of the Constitution act, 1982 applies.

> C) The parties agree that long-term protective measures are essential to safeguard the area and that the highest standards of protection should be applied. The parties also agree to contribute to the continuity of Haida culture.
>
> D) An archipelago management board will be set up to examine all initiatives and undertakings relating to park reserve planning, operation and management. The board will have equal representation by Canada and the Haida, and be co-chaired. The board will operate on a consensus basis.

E) The Haida will continue specified cultural and traditional renewable resource harvesting activities. With few exceptions, for example trees for ceremonial or artistic purposes intended for public display, resource harvesting will be on a non-commercial basis. The National Parks Act, through this bill, will be amended to permit these activities by authorizing the Governor in Council to enact appropriate regulations following review by the archipelago management board in accordance with the consensus decision-making process.

• (2230)

F) There is an explicit statement that the agreement shall not constitute a land claims agreement or treaty within the meaning of Section 35 of the Constitution Act 1982, nor shall it be construed as creating, affirming, recognizing or denying any aboriginal or treaty right. Also, it is stated that "nothing in the agreement shall fetter or limit, or be deemed to fetter or limit, in any manner the rights, jurisdiction, authority, obligations or responsibilities of either party or their representatives, except to the extent of the requirement that all reasonable efforts must have been made to reach consensus . . ."

G) Commitments are made to encourage Haida employment with the Canadian Parks Service and other economic opportunities associated with the National Park reserve.

H) There is a commitment to negotiate a further agreement with the Haida for the National Marine Park reserve before it is established.

Honourable senators, when this agreement was accepted in principle by the Haida nation through their referendum two years ago, cooperation between the Canadian Parks Service and the Haida began on the ground. A contract is in place with the Council of the Haida Nation for the operation of an interim archipelago management board to deal with priority issues until the agreement actually comes into force. However, real authorities are extremely limited in the absence of legislation, and the Haida remain cautious about the nature of formal relations in the absence of a signed agreement.

In conclusion, honourable senators, the proposed amendments to the National Parks Act would: Provide for setting aside lands in the Gwaii Haanas archipelago as a reserve for a national park; enable the Governor in Council to authorize the Minister of the Environment to sign an agreement with the Council of the Haida Nation respecting the management and operation of the park reserve; provide authority required to implement the agreement as it relates to traditional renewable resources harvesting and Haida cultural practices; and, in addition, implement provisions of the 1986 Cree Band of Fort Chipewyan specific land claim which affects Wood Buffalo National Park, by establishing a wildlife advisory board with authority to propose regulations within the band's traditional hunting grounds and excising an existing community from the park for an Indian reserve.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

EXCISE TAX ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella moved the second reading of Bill C-75, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a "good news" piece of legislation.

Senator Frith: A taxing bill is good news?

Senator Kinsella: Because it is really a transportation package. As a humanist, speaking to an issue of this genre was a great learning experience.

Senator Frith: Only a humanist could make a taxing bill good news.

Senator Kinsella: The measures include two fundamental elements. The first is a temporary loss offset program, with a partial rebate of the federal excise tax on diesel and aviation fuel.

Senator Frith: Is that the good news part?

Senator Kinsella: Yes, and the second good news part is an exemption from the withholding tax for the international aircraft leases.

These two measures, honourable senators, were announced as part of a package of measures to benefit Canada's transportation industries. The other measures announced at that time include changes to the capital cost allowance regulations which will increase the rate at which many transportation assets can be written off against taxable income; funding for an institute for research in trucking issues;, and funding for an owner-operators' trucking cooperative which will use bulk purchasing power to help reduce equipment and supply costs of for-hire truck owner-operators.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the government firmly believes that a vigorous transportation industry is important for all Canadians—for consumers and businesses. I am sure that hon. senators will agree.

The measures contained in this bill and the other initiatives announced in December 1991 represent an important commitment of the government to Canada's transportation industry. These initiatives are the result of an examination of the tax system as it applies to this industry, in order to find ways to help the transportation industry face short-term cash requirements.

The excise tax rebate and loss compensation program is an important part of this package of measures for the transportation industry, and it is therefore appropriate to take a few minutes to discuss some details of the program.

The excise tax rebate for the transportation industry is designed to immediately benefit companies with large liquidity requirements by giving a partial rebate of the federal excise tax on diesel and aviation fuel.

The federal excise tax on diesel and aviation fuel is presently 4 cents a litre. This bill will give a rebate of 3 cents a litre on diesel and aviation fuel bought in 1991 and 1992.

Transportation companies that use fuel subject to the federal excise tax of 4 cents a litre are eligible for the tax rebate. However, companies that are exempt from income tax will not be eligible for this rebate.

Companies that choose to receive this rebate will be required to reduce their losses for tax purposes by $10 for every $1 of rebate received. This will target the benefits of the program to the companies that need it most.

Loss carry-forwards would normally be used to reduce taxable income in future years when a company is profitable. Companies that receive the rebate must realize these losses.

The rebate thus gives an immediate cash advantage in exchange for a lowering of the loss carried forward to offset income tax as the situation improves. With lower losses carried forward, companies will pay income tax sooner than if they did not claim the rebate.

Companies can apply for rebates on fuel purchased or imported in 1991, once the bill receives royal assent. Administrative procedures are in place to ensure that the rebates are paid quickly to eligible applicants.

Some other restrictions will apply to the rebates in order to target the benefits properly. No rebate will apply for fuel exempt from excise tax or when a refund or other rebate is payable. Aviation fuel used for international flights and diesel fuel for ships travelling in international waters are exempt from excise tax, for example, and therefore they will not be eligible for this rebate.

● (2240)

[English]

Honourable senators, in order to make it easier for independent owner-operators to access this program, this bill provides an alternative rebate which trucking businesses may elect to claim in place of the standard rebate. Under this simpler option, a rebate of 1.5 cents per litre on excisable fuel may be claimed up to a maximum of $500 annually. It will be significantly simpler as no assessment of the businesses' current or future income tax liabilities will be required.

This Excise Tax Transportation Rebate will give Canadian transportation businesses an important short-term boost — about $120 million in each of the two years. This will help to ensure that we maintain the vibrant transportation sector so essential for Canada's economic well-being.

The other important measure in this bill is the government's proposal to exempt from non-resident withholding tax all payments on cross-border aircraft leases negotiated on an arm's-length basis. The non-resident withholding tax is a tax imposed on most cross-border payments such as interest, rents and royalties, dividends and payments for business services. The statutory rate is 25 per cent, but this is often reduced in bilateral treaties to 10 per cent or 15 per cent.

Currently, the government provides an exemption for aircraft leases where the aircraft is used outside Canada. The industry has told the government that it is difficult to comply with this measure and that it has imposed operational constraints on Canada's airlines. Extending the exemption to all aircraft will simplify the provision and also enable Canadian carriers to access offshore leasing markets to finance new acquisitions. This exemption will apply to all lease payments made after the announcement date of December 6, 1991, for leases entered into after 1990.

The withholding tax exemption will cost the Canadian treasury about $15 million a year. The benefits to Canadian carriers, on the other hand, will be much greater because the current rules limit the ability of Canadian airlines to access foreign leasing markets.

Honourable senators, I hope that the National Finance Committee will have a chance to examine this bill. No doubt we will learn that the bill is welcomed by the transportation sector of the country, and that these two measures will give a timely boost to that industry.

[Translation]

Given the importance of these measures for the transportation industry and the whole Canadian economy, I ask you to support this bill and ensure that it is passed by the Senate as soon as possible.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

CONFLICT OF INTERESTS

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Joint Committee on Conflict of Interests (subject-matter of Bill C-43, An Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of office of Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interests Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts), tabled in the Senate on 10th June, 1992.

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I realize that it is late. However, we are soon coming to the end of June and I would like to speak in some considerable detail on the Senate reform component of the current Canada Round of constitutional negotiations under this order. I will not go on at length this evening, but I would like to start my remarks this evening and then adjourn the debate.

I understand that on this particular order of reference there is no time limit. Thus, I intend to make a full comment on this important part of our constitutional evolution.

It was my privilege to serve on the Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee on the Constitution. As my first comment, I wish to compliment all my parliamentary colleagues who were members of the committee for their diligence and hard work, in particular the co-chair. There are parliamentarians who continue to work at this task. They have my admiration for their perseverance and patience, and I think in particular of Mr. Clark in this context.

I want to draw on the Australian system as a useful example for Canada to build on. I believe that the system has some serious flaws but, nonetheless, it is a good example from which to work because of obvious similarities between our two countries.

There has been a persistent call in recent times from my home province for a reformed Parliament with an elected Senate that will result in a closer and more direct relationship with those we elect to represent us and, as well, address our concern that under the existing system we are not adequately represented in the federal decision-making process.

Most critics of the present structure have dwelt on government decisions that have favoured central Canada and entrenched the perception that a colonial mindset exists on the part of the federal government as reason for change. The reality is that from our point of view these unpopular initiatives are symptoms of a much larger and more serious structural problem within our system of governance.

When considering Senate reform, then, one should not simply point to the feelings of inequity amongst regions but, rather, consider the larger problem of how a reformed Senate could provide greater accountability and more equitable representation in a renewed and more democratic federal system.

The Beaudoin-Dobbie report contains recommendations that move us toward that end. Unfortunately, time constraints prevented the committee from completing its work in this area. My comments tonight are intended to advance the debate toward a workable proposal.

I am in agreement with the view of many Canadians that the problem with our parliamentary system is rooted in the evolution of intense or fierce party discipline and the concentration of power in the Prime Minister and those supporting the senior bureaucracy and ministers who support that office. The influence of those in Parliament must compete with the very senior bureaucracy and the necessarily small number of inner cabinet members who tend to have great influence on the Prime Minister.

[Senator Hays.]

Power is further concentrated since the Prime Minister appoints all ministers, deputy ministers, parliamentary secretaries, and has unparalleled influence in the appointments to the chairs of all but a few parliamentary committees.

Another very important and little discussed cause of the difficulty lies in the method of leadership selection practised by our political parties. Virtually all use the party convention system to elect their leader democratically. This makes the leader independent of the party caucus, the people actually elected by the voters, and results in parliamentarians not having influence over their leader that is typical, for instance, of the British or Australian parliamentary democracies. Please note recent caucus decisions made to change the leader of the British Conservative Party and the Australian Liberal Party.

The caucuses of Canadian parties do not have that kind of influence over their leaders, and if they did, I think their relationship would be much different. The caucus member would have a much more responsive leader.

● (2250)

As this results in an extraordinary concentration of power in the chief executive office of government and in support elements, I submit that this has been a major factor in further limiting Parliament's role by opening the door to rules which make it virtually impossible for parliamentarians to use debate and delay to pursue points about which they have strong views or positions. The consequence is that executive decisions are not tempered by or made with enough regard to those in Parliament. This in turn aggravates the problem, because if the parliamentarians' role is not very meaningful it will tend not to attract or maintain the interests of those elected to serve in that body except as a means of joining the executive. This in turn further consolidates the power of the Prime Minister.

Without the benefit of adequate input from Parliament, decisions are often made that are not sensitive to the representatives of the various regions or special interests of the country. Such initiatives aggravate the sense of powerlessness felt by the electorate, because they do not feel they have an opportunity to genuinely influence the initiative. We have tried to deal with this sense of powerlessness through an increasing decentralization of power to the provinces, but dramatic decentralization, which is one of the approaches proposed in shaping Canada's future together, was generally rejected by those appearing before the committee and in the conferences that were made part of the process, the reason being, in the view of those rejecting it, that this would result in a federal government that would be so unfocused as to create more problems with unity than it might solve.

Attention should be given to federal institutions and the need to make them work for all Canadians. This means a reformed Parliament that will diffuse power and provide an opportunity to make the executive accountable. An elected Senate is a key element in any such reform. The fundamental question that needs to be addressed through parliamentary reform is: What is the most appropriate means of ensuring that the public will is carried out, in terms not only of efficiency but also of accountability. In my view the answer lies in large part in the details of a reformed Senate and the role of that institution in our bicameral system. Under the British system, the earliest example of bicameralism, members of the House of Lords owed their seats to heredity or to appointment by the Sovereign and represented aristocratic elements of society.

The British system forms the basis of the Canadian parliamentary system, as it does of many European states and that of the United States. I recall a witness before the committee talking of Montesquieu, who I gather played a great role in designing or forming the U.S. Constitution. His comment was - - I will never forget it—that Montesquieu understood the British Constitution; the British only had it. His role was to codify it and put it into words. That model forms the basis of ours and most constitutions.

Today, there is no need to represent the interests of the aristocracy, or property class, and there islittle acceptance for the traditional means of Senate appointments. However, the existence of a second chamber is supported by two main arguments: the desire to have within Parliament a revising chamber, or chamber of sober second thought, to help the popularly elected body with legislation and the need to provide a stable balance between the legislature and the executive. In federal states, bicameralism reflects the two-tier structure of the state, and usually an essential aspect of the federal compromise, by providing an institutional voice to small governments and perhaps also to minority groups against the popular majority of the lower house, and as such acting as a political bridge between the component parts of the federation and the central government.

There are several models of bicameral systems that could be used as the basis to restructure the Canadian Senate and Parliament. One that I believe provides a good framework is the parliamentary system that has evolved in Australia. The Australian Senate provides a good framework for Senate reform in Canada for a number of reasons. First, Australia is a federation with a similar inheritance of a British style of parliamentary government. Through various reforms, however, the Australian system has evolved to combine both the British parliamentary and the American congressional styles of government, and in this process has developed a unique system that continues to evolve.

The second reason Australia provides a good example is that it has similar problems with geographical diversity and a population base that is unevenly distributed across regions. By developing a Senate that is elected through a system of proportional representation, Australia has been able to provide better regional and special interest representation. In Australia, the Senate as the upper house of Parliament protects the regional interests of the states that form the commonwealth. The Australian Constitution provides the Senate with virtually the same power to legislate as the House of Representatives, subject only to limitations on the introduction of money bills and through its committee structure which scrutinizes legislation and the decision-making process of the government. It is the house of legislative review and acts as a check on the power of the House of Representatives.

Since the 1960s, the work of the Senate has been significant in two areas. First, it has provided detailed examination of legislation, in part due to the fact that the rules of the Senate do not limit debate on bills. The second important area of Senate activity is the investigation of public interest. In the Senate a range of standing and select committees regularly investigate and debate matters that would be subject to government control and manipulation if studied under the umbrella of the House of Representatives. Due to these activities, the government must work harder to convince senators outside the governing party of the merits of its proposals or it risks defeat. While this process has been viewed as painful by the executive, which unilaterally speaks in the name of public interest, the broadening of debate and the process of negotiated compromise has had an important and invigorating effect on the legislative process. Thus, the opportunity of compromise has enhanced the responsiveness of the parliamentary process at the national level in Australia.

In order to strengthen the Senate as a reviewing house, their Constitution provides that the Senate should have a continuing but rotating membership. Senators are elected for six-year terms, half of them being elected every three years. The six-year term for senators was adapted from the Constitution of the United States and was intended to provide senators with a greater degree of independence from electoral pressures than is possible for members of the House of Representatives, who have to go to the polls every three years.

The only way in which the fixed six-year term of senators may be shortened is by simultaneous dissolution of both Houses of Parliament. This is usually referred to as double dissolution. When a casual vacancy occurs in the Senate through resignation or death of a senator, a new appointment is made by the parliament of the state which that senator represented, or in the case of the territories by the legislative assemblies. Under section 15 of their Constitution, the vacant place should always be filled by a member of the same political party or group as the vacating senator's, unless absolutely impossible.

Senators are elected by the state to statewide constituencies. Each state has 12 senators and each territory has two. Since senators are elected from statewide electoral districts, changes in the state party system are likely to be transmitted to the national level through party contests for the Senate.

One of the characteristics of minor parties and independent representatives in the Senate is that it has not been evenly spread between the states. As a result, Senate representation tends to reflect the political identity of each state. Section 24 of the constitution provides that the number of members of the House of Representatives must be twice the number of senators, or as near that as practical. This provision, usually referred to as the "nexus provision", prevents the House of Representatives from becoming at any time disproportionately large in relation to the Senate.

A system of proportional representation before the election of senators was introduced in 1949. Prior to that, the system of electing senators was the plurality vote—first past the post, until 1919, and preferential voting—the alternative vote, until 1948. In both situations, Senate elections were held at the same time as the elections for the House of Representatives, which tended to encourage voters to make similar partisan choices in both houses. As a result, there was a strong tendency for senators to align themselves for or against the government at the expense of state or regional loyalties. By the 1940s, the Senate was regarded as ineffectual because of its inability to influence the governmental process.

● (2300)

The underlying principle of proportional representation holds that candidates and parties should win seats in proportion to the votes gained. The advantage of the system is that it tends to mirror the partisan diversity of the electorate. For example, if support by the electorate is evenly divided between two parties, elections under proportional representation will produce a similar division in the number of individuals elected.

In addition, proportional representation reduces the barriers for small parties and provides greater opportunity than in the plurality or majority system for minor parties to gain representation in the house. This system will, however, also elect minor parties and independent candidates with less than the established quota because of the transfer of surplus votes from those elected with more than the quota to those without. Most minor party and independent senators have been elected in that way.

Since the introduction of proportional representation, the Senate has become the prime national forum for new parties and single-interest issue groups to seek publicity for their policies. As a result, Australians now realize that they have two opportunities to express their partisan preference at national elections, and an increasing number appear to be voting for one of the major parties in the lower house but for minor parties in the Senate.

The consequence of this differential voting is greater representation of regional diversity. As a result, the Australian Senate provides an effective check on the executive branch of government because it is no longer directly aligned with the House of Representatives, having elections at a different time.

Honourable senators, because it is late and because my remarks are lengthy, I would propose at this time to stop. I would like to go on to the method of voting, a very important subject to comment on, because I have strong feelings about the method of election. Some of the things that I have said you may agree or disagree with, and hopefully I have prompted some questions. In any event, at this particular point, I move adjournment of the debate.

[Senator Hays.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with the agreement of the house, perhaps the request of Senator Hays can be accommodated. I was about to rise and ask the house if it was prepared to allow Senator Hays to continue past the 15-minute time allotment. Since Senator Hays wishes to continue another day, is it the wish of the House to allow him to do that?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROPRIETY AND CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AMENDMENT TO RULES OF THE SENATE—MOTION TO AMEND ADOPTED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Thériault:
>
> That the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders be authorized to consider the propriety and constitutionality of the changes and amendments to the Rules of the Senate, adopted by the Senate on June 18, 1991; and
>
> That the Committee report no later than June 11, 1992.

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, as you know, our colleague Senator Haidasz is in the hospital. It's nothing serious, but he will not be back in the Senate for the some time. Consequently, I move that the committee report on this matter no later than October 13, instead of June 18, 1992.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, you are asking us to amend the motion by Senator Haidasz? We have no objection, but we maintain the position we took when I made my announcement on May 12, in other words, whatever the deadline happens to be, we are still against the motion, and if it ever comes to a vote, we will vote against the motion.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I discussed this matter with Senator Lynch-Staunton, and we agreed. I agreed with what he just said, so we will change the date in the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Some hon. senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-82, to amend the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and the National Housing Act and to amend another Act in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, June 17, 1992.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONTENTS

Monday, June 15, 1992

PAGE

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

General Election
Number of Days Left in Current Term. Senator Frith 1699

"Referenda" or "Referendums"?
Linguistic Clarification. Senator Lynch-Staunton 1699
Senator Gigantès..... 1699

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

Scotia Synfuels Project
Third Report of Energy, The Environment and Natural Resources Committee Tabled. Senator Hays 1699

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Suspension Bill C-67)
Fifteenth Report of Committee Presented. Senator Nurgitz ... 1699

Corrections and Conditional Release Bill (C-36)
Sixteenth Report of Committee Presented. Senator Nurgitz... 1700

Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act (S-11)
Eighth Report of Committee Presented. Senator Oliver 1700

Criminal Code (C-70)
Bill to Amend—Bill Received from Commons and Read First Time 1700

Northwest Territories Waters Bill (C-51)
Bill Received From Commons and Read First Time 1700

Yukon Waters Bill (C-52)
Bill Received from Commons and Read First Time 1701

Criminal Code (C-49)
Bill to Amend—Bill Received from Commons and Read First Time 1701

Energy, The Environment and Natural Resources
Notice of Motion to Authorize Committee to Meet During Sitting of the Senate. Senator Hays 1701

Justice
Elimination of Racism—Notice of Inquiry. Senator Kinsella 1701

Goods and Services Tax
Presentation of Petitions. Senator Frith 1701
Senator Hébert..... 1701

Montreal Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Montreal
Presentation of Petition. Senator Lynch-Staunton 1701

PAGE

QUESTION PERIOD

Indian Affairs
Responsibility for Social Assistance to Indians in Urban Centres—Government Position—Request for Answer. Senator Molgat..... 1702
Senator Murray 1702

National Defence
Closure of Military Bases—Government Policy. Senator Frith 1702
Senator Murray 1702

Copyright
Status of Proposed Legislation. Senator Marsden 1702
Senator Murray 1702

Fisheries and Oceans
France—Fishing Rights in Canadian Territorial Waters—Statement of Minister on Court Decision—Request for Tabling of Information. Senator Stewart 1702
Senator Murray 1702

Penitentiaries
Request for Review of Government Position of Inquiry Into Incident at Saskatchewan Penitentiary. Senator Hastings..... 1702
Senator Murray 1703

The Economy
Reconciliation of Economic Factors—Request for Clarification of Statistics. Senator Molgat..... 1703
Senator Murray 1703

The Constitution
Beaudoin-Dobbie Report—Statements of Ministers—Government Response. Senator Molgat 1703
Senator Murray 1703

Delayed Answers to Oral Questions
Senator Lynch-Staunton 1703

Transport
Air Safety—Forwarding of Personal Baggage on Airlines—Government Position. Question by Senator Kenny. Senator Lynch-Staunton (Delayed answer) 1703

Employment
Acceleration of Job Creation Process—Government Position. Question by Senator Grafstein. Senator Lynch-Staunton (Delayed answer) 1703

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

International Heart Health Conference
Meeting Held in Victoria, British Columbia—Notice of Inquiry. Senator Keon..... 1704

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 16, 1992

The Senate met a 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE DUFF ROBLIN, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Honourable Duff Roblin, whose attendance in this house and whose diligence in the performance of his senatorial duties over the past 14 years is unsurpassed, is today absent from the chamber. None of us is surprised. This is his last day as a senator. Had he attended he would have had to listen to tributes from colleagues on the occasion of his seventy-fifth birthday and his retirement from Parliament. We all knew that if Duff could escape this ordeal he would, and while I was tempted to try to conspire with other honourable senators and ambush him with a day of tributes earlier in the month, I thought better of it. Those of us who have not yet incurred his wrath are loath to risk doing so even at this late date.

A few days ago his caucus colleagues prevailed upon him to come to a dinner in his honour, as did the Right Honourable Joe Clark, who as Leader of the Opposition in 1978 was invited by Prime Minister Trudeau to recommend someone to fill a Manitoba vacancy in the Senate, and who recommended Duff Roblin.

As I have indicated, Senator Roblin's one glaring fault is his modesty. He has nothing to be modest about. There are, I am sure, few among us who have not envied his fluency, marvelled at his grasp of public policy, admired his diligence and respected his principled approach to politics and public life.

It is now 43 years since he was first elected to the Manitoba legislature. Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party for 13 years, premier for almost 10 years, he was one of the leading figures in rebuilding the Conservative Party in western Canada and nationally. When he resigned the premiership in 1967, the Winnipeg Free Press described his administration as "10 years of the most active and aggressive government in Manitoba's history." The Free Press went on to say, "Mr. Roblin has generally out-liberaled his Liberal predecessors in virtually every field of administration", an assessment Duff did not deny, saying simply that on taking office he had found "a staggering backlog of things that had to be done to pull Manitoba up to the level of most of the rest of Canada".

Among other things, Premier Roblin was one of the few anglophone leaders to have acquired an ability to speak French, which he had started to do during the Second World War during his service overseas. He built bridges from Manitoba to Quebec and to French speaking Canadians generally.

As a member of this house since 1978, he has been a proponent of Senate reform; yet his outstanding service as a parliamentarian in this chamber has brought distinction to the unreformed Senate of Canada. He served as Deputy Leader of the Government from 1979 to 1980, as Deputy Leader of the Opposition from 1980 to 1984 and as Leader of the Government from 1984 to 1986.

His interventions in the Senate's debates and in committees, whether on foreign affairs, economic and financial matters or constitutional and parliamentary practice, have been, without exception, stimulating and constructive.

For many us of who were starting out in political activity a generation ago, the young Premier Roblin was a model Progressive Conservative and an exemplary political leader. Now at the end of his parliamentary career he remains an inspiration to us. We thank him for his service to Parliament and, in my own case, for his counsel and his many acts of support and personal consideration.

We count ourselves fortunate as Canadians to have had for more than 40 years the service and the leadership of such a man in the public affairs of our country.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government has indicated, on June 17 a distinguished member of this house, Senator Duff Roblin, will depart from us. No doubt, taking into account the rest of his life up to now, he will depart for some other productive activity, probably in the interests of Canada.

He was a member for 14 years. I cannot remember the exact dates, but I believe he was appointed a matter of months after I was. I must say that for those 14 years I have sat here observing Duff Roblin with almost schizoid disagreement and admiration—disagreement with what he was saying, almost without exception, and admiration for the articulate, poised and professional way he said it, and that, without exception.

He was born in Winnipeg to C.D. and Sophia Roblin, and we know that the senator's political genes can be traced to his grandfather, Sir R.P. Roblin, who was Premier of Manitoba from 1900 to 1915. As the Leader of the Government has said, he was first elected to the Manitoba legislature in 1949. Nine years later, in 1958, he re-established the Roblin Manitoba dynasty when he became premier. He upset the long-established Liberal government of Douglas Campbell and formed the first Conservative administration in more than 40 years.

However, unlike his grandfather, Duff Roblin had very different ideas about the role of government and its relationship to the people. An illustration is that as Premier, Sir Rodmond

P. Roblin, his grandfather, argued against universal suffrage, saying:

> I think too much of woman to have her entangled in the mesh of politics. She would be stooping from the pedestal on which she has sat for centuries.

In the late 1950s and early 1960s, our colleague Duff Roblin, as Premier of Manitoba, worked diligently to ensure that all citizens of his province had equal opportunity to the benefits that society had to offer. The Canadian Encyclopedia, perhaps repeating what the Leader of the Government cited, describes his administration as:

> . . . one of the most active in Manitoba history.

There was activity in public works, education, French language rights in schools, and new hospitals.

In 1965, John Diefenbaker encouraged Duff Roblin to run in that year's general federal election. At first he was warm to the idea, but after much thought I understand he declined. Diefenbaker thought this was a mistake, and later wrote:

> Destiny was knocking on his door; had he not changed his mind, conceivably he would have been Prime Minister of Canada.

In 1967, Senator Roblin did enter the fray federally, resigning as premier in order to contest the federal leadership of the conservative party, albeit unsuccessfully.

Although very active in Manitoba politics, Duff Roblin considered himself a Canadian first. In his own words, and I am quoting from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 12, 1990:

• (1410)

> I always took the position, particularly when I was in public life in Manitoba, that my primary responsibility was to protect and develop the interests of the people of this province. But I always had a rider. I said I'm from Manitoba, but I'm a Canadian first. That's always been my position and I think that's the proper position.

Prime Minister Trudeau summoned Mr. Roblin to the Senate in 1978 and he became Deputy Leader of the Opposition and then Leader of the Government from 1984 to 1986. I remember when I was made Deputy Leader of the Government, he was Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I phoned him in Manitoba and said that I could perhaps use some advice as to this role of deputy leader. He gave me some good advice. He said:

> I think the most important element of the relationship between the deputy leaders is no surprises.

Whether or not I took that advice in all cases, I pass that on for whatever use it might be to Senators Molgat and Lynch-Staunton without further comment.

Even after 1986, Senator Roblin remained very close to the centre of things. He was always a strong supporter of the value of the Senate, although in 1983 he worried about its lack of independence. In a 1983 Ottawa Citizen article, Senator Roblin had the following to say on the usefulness of the Senate.

> Committees produce intelligent reports, he said, and "oceans of respectful good advice," but the upper chamber has become as fully deferential to the prime minister "as the House of Commons and has forgotten how to put its foot down."

I agree with that and that is why, as you may remember, some of us worked so hard after 1984 to change things and to have the Senate put its foot down. I always thought of Senator Roblin as much more of a "P" than a "C"— more of a Progressive than a Conservative. I found myself expecting sometimes, and often wishing, that we could have had more support on this side from Senator Roblin. But we did not because it turned out that while he may have been more of a Progressive than a Conservative in ideology, when it came to a vote he was still a Progressive Conservative party man.

Honourable senators, Senator Roblin has been very active in the Senate participating in committees such as Foreign Affairs, Energy, Environment and Natural Resources, and speaking on a variety of issues such as Senate reform and cultural diversity.

For many years, he and I were, I suppose, among the noticeably few here in favour of an elected Senate, after a trip which we shared to Australia in the early 1980s to examine the Australian system, where there is an elected Senate in a Parliamentary system.

I want to repeat something I have said in another context. I subscribe to the view— and I have found this is reliable—that all senators are distinguished. I have never heard, especially on occasions like this, a senator ever being referred to as undistinguished. But I cannot think of anyone in Canada who would not agree with me that one of our most distinguished Parliamentarians leaves us today—Senator Duff Roblin.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my association with Senator Duff Roblin is somewhat different to that of other members of this chamber.

I have known Duff for many years. Duff was first elected to the Manitoba legislature in 1949, after a brilliant career in the Royal Canadian Air Force during the war. He served in the RCAF from 1940 to 1946 and attained the rank of Wing Commander.

He came into politics at a particularly interesting time. There had been a coalition government in Manitoba for many years. In a number of instances, there had been acclamations in constituencies, something quite different from the political structure that existed in most of Canada.

Duff came in opposed to the coalition. He fought against it. Indeed, the 1953 election was the first election in Manitoba in many years, going back to the 1930s, that was not a coalition election. In that election we ran as party representatives. I happened to run in the 1953 election as a Liberal and was elected. Thus, my immediate contact with Duff was from 1953 on.

In 1954, he became the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. We sat across from each other for the next four years, he in opposition and I on the government side, albeit as a back-bencher.

I have to say that I do not quite agree with the glowing tributes read by my colleague Senator Murray from the Free Press. Those of us on the other side of the chamber had somewhat different views of the Roblin administration than those expressed in the Free Press. That, however, is another story.

Duff continued for the next nine years as the Leader of the Government and the Premier.

It was a rather surprising stroke of fate that many years later we found ourselves in this chamber in exactly the same position again, facing each other in different parties. I found that our relationship in the Senate was somewhat better than the relationship we had back in Manitoba, where I had been the Leader of the Opposition from 1961 to 1968. I might add that it was never an unpleasant relationship. We did have major differences of opinion, of course, and we both expressed them vigorously.

Having said that, there are two issues on which he and I found ourselves in agreement, perhaps because of our background as Manitobans. Senator Frith referred to one of these issues. It concerns our attitude toward Canada.

There is a strong feeling in Manitoba that, while we are proud of our province, we are very much Canadians first. All through the years we have been firm believers in a strong central government. He and I had no differences of opinion in that regard.

The other issue on which we agree concerns the question of an elected Senate. Both he and I believe that it is a necessary reform. Again, perhaps it is because of our background as Manitobans that we believe that the Senate has a better role to play in regional representation. Duff championed the cause of an elected Senate through the years.

I wish him well in his retirement. I particularly want to wish Duff and his wife Mary a long, healthy retirement. We will miss him here. He always gave brilliant speeches.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I want to add a word or two to what has already been said in glowing tribute to our colleague Senator Roblin. I have always observed that for a man who has, since the age of 31 or 32, been engaged in public life he is an extremely private man. That is illustrated today by his not wanting to be here to listen to these tributes.

He has always appeared to me to be a person who was not a prisoner of ideology, but a very practical and principled person. I would agree with the Leader of the Opposition that he was always a great progressive and someone who, as Senator Molgat said, thought first of his country.

Many people in my province of all political stripes believe that the Roblin era, the time when he was the premier of our province, were the great progressive years of Manitoba. I would agree with that. He was a leader. He was my premier. To the extent that a mentor is a counsellor, a guide, he was certainly that to me. I will miss him here. I look forward, of course, to our continued friendship. I wish him and Mary a long, happy and healthy retirement.

[Senator Molgat.]

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, Prince Edward Island is a long way from Manitoba. One might ask why Macquarrie is intervening. It is not just because I heard the word "progressive" underlined three or four times that I, as a Red Tory, should now try to attach myself to Senator Roblin, because I admit that in recent years I have been a good deal redder than was he.

I do have some background here. I spent nine years in Manitoba. I was there when the young man, Duff Roblin—I guess I was young too, although no one said so—rose to prominence. I was impressed by the recent article in the Winnipeg Free Press which described the coalition governments.

When I went to the legislative chamber in Manitoba and watched, I found it so dull compared with what went on in our chamber in Prince Edward Island. Then I realized that when you have a coalition government, there is not much incentive to be disputatious. By God, there was little dissent in the legislature of Manitoba at that time.

Then there rose this young man, who started off as an Independent Conservative, which is a very good way to start. He became the leader, he became the premier, and wrought miracles in Manitoba in relation to those who were not Anglo-Saxon and crowded down to the southern part of Manitoba. As I am sure Senator Molgat will remember, that is where the Conservative strength was.

He reached out to all groups. He learned to speak some Ukrainian and became proficient in French. He literally salvaged two of the great institutions in education in that province. I know whereof I speak. They are United College, from whence I graduated, and Brandon College, where I taught with great pleasure for some years. It was the progressive government of Duff Roblin that salvaged those two fine institutions. There was a time when all that was considered by certain boards about a university was whether its budget balanced, and to hell with what was going on with the students or the professors.

Duff Roblin is a great orator: incisive, crisp and sometimes a bit cryptic, as a matter of fact. He is vast in his knowledge, exhaustive in his interests. He came to Prince Edward Island during that great leadership campaign in 1967. As a committed supporter of Robert Stanfield, and at the same meeting that he addressed in Charlottetown, I said that I wished that this convention of our party was a dual riding like Queen's, where you could vote for two people. My choices would have been Stanfield and Roblin. When he played the bagpipes a little later, I wondered if I were not a little itchy in my persuasion.

Duff Roblin is a great man, a great orator, a great senator. I admire him and I know that there are great things in store for him and, because of him, for Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, the remarks made by those who spoke before me are certainly not to be construed as an obituary but as an honest and sincere tribute to a colleague of ours. He was a colleague of mine from 1960 to 1967 when we were premiers of our respective provinces.

I attended many federal-provincial conferences with Duff Roblin. I attended also many premiers' conferences, which at that time we held in the first or second week in August. On one occasion in 1964 all the premiers were the guests of the Province of Manitoba and, more particularly, the guests of Duff and Mary Roblin. After a long day of hard labour around the discussion table he invited us to see a performance of "Hello Dolly", and we enjoyed it tremendously. A couple of days later he invited us to take a cruise on Lake Winnipeg, going from a port at one end to a port at the other end of the lake. We had to stay overnight because it was a 24-hour trip. It was very pleasant. I still thank Duff and Mary Roblin for their hospitality then.

• (1430)

I remember well the first time I met him. When I was the Leader of the Opposition in New Brunswick in 1959, I had occasion to visit Manitoba and I went to the Legislative Assembly and I introduced myself to him. He was very gracious. Shortly after I had met him and discussed matters of state, or matters concerning the provinces, I met the then Leader of the Opposition in Manitoba, who is now the Honourable Senator Gil Molgat. That was the first time I had met either of these gentlemen, and I was impressed with both of them. I was 32 at the time. The rest is history.

I want to tell Duff Roblin, his wife Mary and his children how proud I was of him, and I want to tell them that Duff Roblin is a great Canadian.

I could report certain things that he said about bilingualism in those days that would certainly be helpful to some people today, if they could hear those words today. He consistently talked about the Métis, because they were of special interest to him. He was an honest, dedicated, sincere, politician, but above all he was a great Canadian, and he still is.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the election clock dates are 158 for the democrats and 544 for the non-democrats.

ULYSSES BY JOYCE

CELEBRATION OF "BLOOM'S DAY"

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps I can note for the Senate record, for those who are interested particularly in the great period of Irish playwrights and authors—

Senator Doody: "Bloom's Day"!

Senator Frith: —and those who think that Ulysses is one of the great works in English literature, that today, June 16, is the day on which all of the events in Ulysses took place in Dublin, and it is known and celebrated, every June 16th around the world, as Bloom's Day, after Mr. and Mrs. Bloom, the book's two main protagonists.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

CANCELLATION OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted, Senator Stanbury reminds me that the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee is scheduled to meet today after the Senate rises. I wish to advise the Senate, however, that we will not be meeting today.

Senator Frith: Out of respect for "Bloom"?

Senator Nurgitz: Out of respect for Bloom or other matters. The witnesses are not available. Consent has been given for the committee to meet tomorrow at 4 o'clock in order to hear two witnesses from four to six. Mr. Harvie Andre, the Minister, will be present after 6 o'clock for the conclusion of the evidence on Bill C-81.

AN ACT TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS WITH RESPECT TO PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Lorna Marsden, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Tuesday, June 16, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-78, An act to amend certain Acts with respect to persons with disabilities, has in obedience to its Order of Reference of Monday, June 15, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

LORNA MARSDEN
Deputy Chair

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Marsden, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-86

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, June 17, 1992, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the subject matter of Bill C-86, An Act to amend the Immigration Act and other acts in consequence thereof in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

PRIVATE BILL

AN ACT TO AMALGAMATE THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE AND THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF METROPOLITAN MONTREAL—FIRST READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), presented Bill S-12, to amalgamate the Montreal Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Montreal.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, I would ask leave for this bill to be read the second time tomorrow and I should like to give a few brief remarks as to the reason why.

The Montreal Board of Trade was incorporated by the Legislative Assembly of the former Province of Canada in 1842 and the Chambre de Commerce du District de Montréal received its federal charter in 1867. Both groups have now decided to merge.

The merger was given unanimous approval by both memberships. The purpose and the advantages I will be happy to outline during second reading.

● (1440)

Some honourable senators may wonder why I am involved with this particular bill. The reason is that I was very actively involved with the Board of Trade of Montreal for a number of years, including serving one term as president.

The reason we would like to have second reading tomorrow is that both the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade would like to make the merger effective July 1, 1992, a date which has not been chosen by chance. To allow this to happen, and with the few days remaining both in this chamber and in the other place as far as our respective sessions are concerned, it would be very difficult to meet that deadline unless leave is given to proceed with second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government spoke to me about this matter. I told him that I would check with my colleagues. I regret to say that I will not be able to grant leave.

I want to make it very clear that our decision has nothing to do with the substance of the bill. The substance, in fact, seems to be very sensible. It is a question of principle, quite frankly. We believe—and I have mentioned this previously on a number of occasions on other bills—that we should follow standard practice. Delays are built into our parliamentary procedure for a reason. Delays permit anyone who has an interest in the question to know that Parliament is about to take some action so that they can be informed and be heard. When we do things with leave and skip the traditional and sensible delays built into the parliamentary system, we could be harming other people who may have objections.

Our decision is based not at all on the question of the objectives; rather, it is based on our belief that standard practice should be followed. If there are any individuals who object to this bill, they ought to have the opportunity to be heard in committee, and Parliament should never be accused of having abused the rights of any individual.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, June 18, 1992.

ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Daniel Hays, pursuant to notice of June 15th, 1992, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, June 16, and on Wednesday, June 17, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I have a motion standing in my name at the end of today's Order Paper requesting that the Standing Senate committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources have power to sit at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon today, June 16, and tomorrow, June 17, 1992. I would ask leave that this motion be brought forward now and considered, since it appears that today's sitting could be quite lengthy.

We have arranged to hear a witness at 3:30 both today and tomorrow. The witness to whom this motion is most relevant is the one who is appearing today, in that it has taken us quite some time to arrange his appearance. I would appreciate, therefore, if the Senate would grant leave to have that item, which is 39 on the Order Paper, moved up so that it can be dealt with at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Senators: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 76 citizens of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Toronto, Oakville and Etobicoke.

I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 408 citizens of British Columbia who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Kamloops and Coquitlam.

So from one end of the country to the other, 484 citizens have clearly expressed their will. They do not accept and will never accept the GST, especially as it applies to books and periodicals.

[English]

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I also have some petitions to present today. I believe, if my count is right, that I have approximately 94 signatures from Indian peoples around Ontario who are opposed to the Goods and Services Tax. These petitions have been gathered under the auspices of the Association of Iroquois & Allied Indians in London, Ontario. The signatures are from around Ontario: London, Thunder Bay, Scarborough, Little Grand Rapids, St. Thomas, Grassy Narrows, etcetera. They are in the appropriate form, and I commend them to you.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question raised on June 15, 1992, by Senator Marsden regarding amendments to the Copyright Act.

COPYRIGHT

STATUS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

(Response to question raised by the Hon. Lorna Marsden on June 15, 1992)

The drafting of the new Copyright legislation is now under way.

This initiative is one of the Minister of Communications' top priorities and the government intends to introduce the next package of revisions as early as possible in 1992. To that end, the Minister of Communications and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have announced the creation of a consultative committee representing both creators and users of copyrighted works. This will ensure effective input as the government proceeds to draft the legislation.

THE SENATE

SPEAKER'S CORRECTION

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before calling Orders of the Day, I wish to correct a statement I made yesterday concerning the time allocation on speeches on the report of the Standing Joint Committee on a Renewed Canada.

I incorrectly advised Senator Hays that his speaking time had expired. I was not advised that the Senate had agreed on March 18 to suspend rule 38(4) with respect to the length of speeches on this report.

I apologize for any inconvenience I may have caused.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CORRECTIONS AND CONDITIONAL RELEASE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino moved the third reading of Bill C-36, respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

AIRPORT TRANSFER (MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS) ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Lowell Murray moved the third reading of Bill S-11, to amend the Airport Transfer (Miscellaneous Matters) Act.

[Translation]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we had some fears about how the Official Languages Act would apply to this bill. We were satisfied with the answers given to us by the Commissioner of Official Languages. Therefore we do not object to passing this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

[English]

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson, for the second reading of Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate Senator Marshall and his veterans affairs committee for their long, hard fight on behalf of the mariners of Canada, a fight which started way back in our report entitled: "It's Almost Too Late", and it was almost too late for many of those merchant seamen.

However, after a few amendments to the bill, I hope it can be passed quickly in order that the merchant seamen can immediately apply for War Veterans Allowance and receive benefits.

The Veterans Affairs sub-committee of the Senate has worked hard for this bill on behalf of merchant seamen and Senator Marshall has applied continuous pressure. The minister certainly deserves congratulations for getting the bill this far, considering that it is a time of restraint and there is a cutting of budgets of veterans and others. However, I believe that the minister acted because of the pressure and the demands from our committee and from Senator Marshall to answer our report: "It's Almost too Late".

Let me advise honourable senators what our report, "It's Almost too Late" asked for. The recommendations are as follows:

1. that at the earliest possible opportunity, the Government of Canada introduce legislation to extend full veterans benefits to all Canadian merchant seamen who served in dangerous waters in Canada's armed conflict;

2. that the War Veterans Allowance Act be amended to define as a veteran all merchant seamen who made at least one trip through dangerous waters;

3. that the Government of Canada prepare and place in the Peace Tower a Book of Remembrance honouring merchant seamen who died of enemy action in Canadian armed conflicts and, further, that suitable monuments to their sacrifices be erected;

4. that the residency requirement of the War Veterans Allowance Act and Part IX of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be amended to permit otherwise qualified veterans to apply for benefits outside Canada;

5. that the Canadian government take immediate steps to negotiate an agreement with the United Kingdom to exempt War Weterans Allowance from British taxes;

6. that the rates of compensation provided for under the Prisoners of War Compensation Act be reviewed with the objective of taking into account the severity of the POW regime forced on veterans by the award of additional compensation for each month deemed extremely severe, and that two additional categories be added at appropriate rates of compensation for those veterans who served 30 months and more as prisoners of war;

7. that for the purposes of establishing entitlement to the Veterans Independence Program, receipt of prisoner-of-war compensation be treated as proof of undiagnosed medical disability;

8. that the Veterans Independence Program immediately be extended to civilians who served in close support of the wartime armed forces, that is, as enumerated in Part XI of the Civilian War Pension and Allowance Act, and that these benefits be comparable to those offered military veterans;

9. that the cuts to the heavy housekeeping component of the Veterans Independence Program be fully restored;

10. that the Veterans Allowance Act be amended:

a. to establish a common age at which both men and women qualify for benefits and that this common age be 55 years of age, and

b. to make eligible for benefits all those Canadian service veterans of World War I and World War II who volunteered for unrestricted active duty, who were assigned to serve within the boundaries of Canada, who served for no less than 365 days, and who are in need;

11. that the Pension Commission give careful consideration to the psychological problems which may arise when the stresses of retiring and aging are combined with those of blindness, and that these problems influence the assessment of applications for exceptional incapacity;

12. that peacetime service personnel pensioned under the Special Duty Pension Order be eligible for Veterans Independence Program benefits.

Many of those recommendations have already been taken into consideration. There are still some to be carried out. I am pleased to note that the first recommendation is here before us in this legislation.

All of us on this side support the legislation for the merchant seamen to receive benefits. Our biggest complaint is that it is almost too late; it should have happened a long time ago. Many seamen will be eligible, and many who are not presently receiving the War Veterans Allowance will now be able to receive it.

It is estimated that during July 1942, the allies lost one ship of 10,000 tonnes or more every ten hours, day and night, for the 31 days of July 1942. It has taken 47 years for those merchant seamen to be recognized and receive what they deserve by way of benefits. They have waited too long. Today, the average age of most of those merchant seamen is 71 years and older. Merchant navy veterans will now be treated equally with those veterans who served in uniform during World War I, World War II and the Korean War.

Most of the merchant navy veterans will receive full veterans' benefits and be eligible for the VIP program, the War Veterans Allowance and other benefits of the war veterans.

I am saddened to say that in this good legislation they threw in a provision which takes away benefits from those who are eligible, deserving and qualified. On page 10 of the bill, under "Resistance Groups", clause 10 reads:

> Subject to this Act but notwithstanding subsections 37(4) and (6), an allowance payable under section 4 or awarded under section 5, on or before March 2, 1992, to or in respect of a person who is a veteran by reason only of service in a resistance group shall continue to be paid during the lifetime of the recipient and shall cease with the payment for the month in which the recipient dies.

The widows of all other veterans, and I hope merchant seamen, can continue to receive the pension or part thereof after the veteran dies. However, when these resistance fighters, who are eligible and receive a pension, die, their widows will get no more help, no more support under this legislation. They will be cut off as of the day their husband dies.

Many of these resistance fighters, about 1700 or so, who have applied for disability pension are being told that as of March 2, 1992, no more applications will be received and regardless of their eligibility they cannot receive a pension. Many of them already had their applications in the works and had completed them, and now they have been told by the department that they must wait for the passage of this bill before their pensions will be received or approved. As a result many of these veteran resistance fighters are no longer eligible for pension under this legislation. They have been disqualified.

It certainly seems unfair that these resistance fighters, who, side by side with our forces during the war, worked on behalf of Canada and England—the British Empire—should be treated in such an unbalanced way, one being allowed to receive the pension because he applied last year and the other, who applied after March 1992, not being allowed to qualify.

I would like the minister to come to our committee to assure us that this discrepancy will be corrected. I do not want to hold up the legislation, because I do not want the merchant seamen to lose their benefits, but I want an assurance from the minister that he will look at this provision and make sure that these resistance fighters get a fair deal, and that resistance fighters who worked side by side will be treated the same way. Just because somebody did not apply in time or could not get his application filled out in time or could not get proof of age in time is no reason for being disqualified. Anyone who has the proper requirements—age, proof of work, proof of resistance—should be qualified regardless of this legislation.

Consequently, I ask that this bill be sent to committee so we can bring the minister in and get some assurance from him that these resistance workers will be treated fairly. I would also, at the same time, ask him why he did not include the Korean veterans who were on the navy ships after the Korean conflict was supposed to have been over. As far as I know they have not signed an armistice yet. It is just an agreement between North and South Korea. Many of our boys who were over there in the war zone are not eligible for a pension, or war veterans allowance, VIP benefits or other benefits, because of a certain cutoff when the agreement was signed.

Honourable senators, there are many things yet to be done. We on the Veterans Affairs Committee cannot stop now, simply because we have managed to push this legislation through. We have to work on behalf of other veterans who still find it "almost too late". With those few remarks I would ask that the bill be referred to committee.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, debate adjourned.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Oliver, for the second reading of Bill C-48, An Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have already had considerable debate on this bill. Senator Kirby, our spokesman on this matter and Deputy Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, spoke on it in detail, as did I at the time.

We have some concerns about this bill based particularly on statements by Mr. Justice Estey; we are not completely satisfied that the bill does in fact correct the things it was meant to correct. Nevertheless, we are prepared to let the bill go to committee and at that time proceed with any further study that will be required. We are not objecting to second reading, although I want to make it clear we are not supporting the bill at this time. It will be passed on division, but we are prepared to let it go to committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Molgat: On division.

Motion agreed and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Sylvain, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelleher, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Atkins, for the second reading of Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Kelleher has pointed out that this bill represents a good attempt to reform the 43-year old Bankruptcy Act. The bill was given first reading in the House of Commons on June 13, 1991. The Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations pre-studied the bill and reported on October 7 of the same year. It was subsequently read the second time and referred back to the same committee, which reported on May 22 with significant amendments but omitting a subject of great importance that I will mention in a few moments.

● (1510)

Bill C-22 is the seventh attempt over the past 16 years to amend the Bankruptcy Act, an act which dates back to 1949.

Honourable senators, the bill proposes reforms in seven key areas: Commercial reorganizations; consumer proposals; consumer bankruptcy; secured creditors and receivers; Crown claims and priorities; protection of unpaid suppliers; and certain technical amendments. Although it proposes reforms in those areas, there is one significant area for which it makes no proposal. However, let us first deal with what it does propose.

[Senator Molgat.]

The first proposal deals with commercial reorganizations. One of the objectives of bankruptcy legislation is, of course, to enable businesses to reorganize their financial affairs so as to avoid bankruptcy.

The Bankruptcy Act allows bankrupt or insolvent businesses to make reorganization proposals to their creditors. Once a proposal is filed, the act imposes a stay of proceedings on actions against the debtor by unsecured creditors. However, the act puts only minimal restraints on secured creditors. Secured creditors take priority in bankruptcies, often leaving little for unsecured creditors, especially when a stay of proceedings is imposed. This creates a situation where we have the creditor who simply has the right to sue, that is, the unsecured creditor, versus the secured creditor, who, of course, has the same right to sue but he also has the right to realize on security, mortgaged or otherwise, transferred as security to him.

Under the bill, an insolvent debtor would file a Notice of Intention to make a reorganization proposal. That would activate a stay of proceedings by all unsecured and secured creditors for 30 days. During this time, the debtor could attempt to formulate a reorganization proposal acceptable to its creditors.

The trustee for the debtor would hold a meeting for all secured and unsecured creditors to vote on the proposal. If a majority in number and 75 per cent in value of all unsecured creditors voting at the meeting approve the proposal, it would be submitted to a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy for approval. Upon approval, the proposal would be binding on all unsecured creditors. However, it would be binding only on those classes of secured creditors who had voted in favour of the proposal with a majority in number and 75 per cent in value of the creditors in each of those classes. Classes of secured creditors who had not voted in favour of the proposal would not be bound by it.

The second area of reform deals with consumer proposals. The Bankruptcy Act allows an insolvent consumer to make a proposal under the act in the same manner as a commercial debtor. Bill C-22 offers some improvements so that consumers will have a better opportunity to negotiate a proposal to restructure their debts rather than declare bankruptcy.

A "consumer debtor", under the bill, would be defined as an "insolvent natural person"—natural in the sense of not being a corporate entity—whose debts, excluding mortgages on principal residences, were less than $75,000; and that amount itself could be changed by regulations.

Upon the filing of a consumer reorganization proposal, actions by unsecured creditors would be stayed until the proposal was fully performed, withdrawn, refused or annulled; and any proposal would have to be completed within three years.

The third proposed reform deals with consumer bankruptcies. The existing legislation provides for summary and ordinary administration in relation to the estates of bankrupt individuals. What we were just talking about was, of course, what we used to call "assignments" or "proposals". Summary administration is the more streamlined and less expensive method of the two. It applies where the assets available for distribution to the unsecured creditors do not exceed $500.

Bill C-22 would expand the eligibility of summary administration to cases where the amount of assets available for distribution to unsecured creditors was less than $5,000, or any other amount which may be prescribed.

The bill would also provide for automatic discharge for first-time individual bankrupts nine months after bankruptcy, which would eliminate the expense of discharge proceedings—and they can be expensive.

The fourth key area relates to secured creditors and receivers. Currently, the Bankruptcy Act does not deal with the conduct of secured creditors and receivers, even though the interests represented by a receiver are often in conflict with those of the debtor and unsecured creditors. The bill proposes a new Part XI of the act which would deal with secured creditors and receivers.

A "receiver" would be defined as a person who takes possession of all or most of the inventory, accounts receivable or the property of an insolvent or bankrupt person or business. Bill C-22 defines the duties of the receiver and is designed to promote disclosure and accountability.

While the act applies only to unsecured creditors, passage of the bill would extend the purview of the act to include secured creditors. A secured creditor who intended to enforce a security on business assets would have to give the debtor ten days' notice of the intention to enforce the security.

The fifth proposal relates to crown claims and priorities. Anyone who has done any work in this field knows that there is always, among others, a characteristic concern about the priority of Crown claims. The Bankruptcy Act gives both federal and provincial government claims preferred ranking over claims of unsecured creditors and often over those of secured creditors. Trusts and liens have largely been used to ensure the government receives outstanding source deductions for items such as income tax and unemployment insurance.

Subject to listed exceptions, such as claims for source deductions, the bill would limit Crown priority and it would, thus, lose its preferred creditor status. Debt owed to the Crown in bankruptcy proceedings would be treated the same as debt owed to all other unsecured creditors except for income tax, contributions to the Canada Pension Plan and unemployment insurance premiums.

I would pause to ask honourable senators to take note of those who will be looked after in the new act, because I have something to say about a very important group who are not.

The sixth proposal deals with unpaid suppliers. The existing legislation provides no special right to suppliers of goods to reclaim those goods in the event of a bankruptcy. Bill C-22 would give unpaid suppliers the right to repossess merchandise delivered to a purchaser who became bankrupt or went into receivership, subject to a number of conditions. If, of course, the creditor had a lien against the goods supplied, that would make them a secured creditor and, therefore, they would not be in the category we are discussing which is unsecured and unpaid suppliers.

The supplier would have to make a written demand for the goods within 30 days after their delivery. The demand would have to be made when the purchaser was bankrupt or in receivership. That seems obvious, but you will remember we dealt with a situation where proposals could be made before the debtor was bankrupt or in receivership.

The goods would have to be in the possession of the purchaser, trustee or the receiver, that is, they could not have been sold to a third party. The goods would have to be identifiable, in the same state as when delivered, and not fully paid for. Where the goods had been partly paid for, a supplier would have a right to repossess a portion of the goods proportional to the amount owing, or to repossess all the goods after repaying the sum previously received. The right to repossess the goods would expire if not exercised within 10 days after the purchaser, trustee or receiver had confirmed the supplier's right of repossession.

The last of the seven proposed reforms deals with technical amendments. Although they are technical in nature, they are important. The proposed technical amendments in this bill will correct deficiencies in the Bankruptcy Act that had been found to exist over years of administration, to improve the administrative efficiency of the bankruptcy process, and to clarify or codify current practice and jurisprudence.

Maximum fine levels for many of the offenses would be increased from $1,000 to $5,000. The court would be empowered to direct that an offender—somebody attempting to fraudulently transfer goods to creditors—perform community service and to order an offender to pay compensation to any person who suffered loss or damage or to the trustee as a result of an offence under the act.

The bill also provides for a comprehensive review of the operation of the act by a parliamentary committee three years after it comes into force, which is another good technical amendment.

Those are the seven "good news" amendments, if I may call them that, proposed to the Bankruptcy Act for which the government and, specifically, the proposers of this bill should be congratulated.

● (1520)

But Bill C-22 runs the risk of not being remembered for those provisions but rather being remembered for what is missing, because Bill C-22 contains no provisions for wage earners. Workers who are unemployed due to bankruptcy and to whom hundreds, even thousands, of dollars are owed in salary are left out. But it is important to say, parenthetically, that usually the claims of wage earners are in the hundreds or low thousands of dollars.

Nevertheless, the timing of Bill C-22 could be considered as good for the government. Not only is the current Bankruptcy Act over 40 years old, but it is our view that the government, through its economic policy, has managed to lengthen and deepen a record-setting recession.

Make no mistake, for thousands of Canadian businesses, this recession is indeed record setting.

When Bill C-22 was introduced in the House of Commons over a year ago, it was already too late for thousands of Canadian individuals and businesses. If not for the government's intransigence and unwillingness to compromise, this legislation might have passed last year before the number of bankruptcies started to spiral out of control.

In 1990, 54,424 Canadian consumers and businesses went bankrupt. In 1991, bankruptcies jumped 39 per cent to almost 76,000. The casualty count for this recession is almost twice as bad as for the recession of 1982, in which about 24,000 businesses went bankrupt. There is no light at the end of the tunnel. In March of this year, bankruptcies jumped to 7,057, 13 per cent more than in March 1991 and 5 per cent more than this past February. Couple that with the highest unemployment rate in seven years at 11 per cent, and this has indeed been a record-setting recession, one in which the number of bankruptcies has increased, and in which the suffering of businesses and workers has increased.

It is often the case with business bankruptcies that the people most in need of protection are the workers. That is because wage earners are, of course, unsecured creditors. They have to stand in line while secured creditors, like banks and others, divide up the assets. Unfortunately, after these secured creditors are through, little money remains to pay the salaries owed to the employees of the bankrupt firm.

When I say something better could have happened, I mean that Bill C-22, originally called the Wage Claim Payment Act and Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, initially proposed that employers pay a special tax to ensure that employees would be paid in the event that a business failed. I recognize that the idea of such a tax is not without controversy.

How did the government expect Canadians to endure their thirty-third tax increase since 1984? That is what it would have been. It is beyond the comprehension of those of us on this side of the chamber. In the midst of a record-setting recession, that naturally attracted opposition.

Then the government expected businesses to trust it not to raise the tax as the number of bankruptcies climbed?

Moreover, this tax was to apply to universities, school boards, hospital associations, and every public corporation in the country, all of which cannot go bankrupt. In other words, these groups would be paying the tax and funding a program to which their employees would never have access.

[Senator Frith.]

The Liberal Party, and even some backbenchers on the government side, I understand, would not stand for such a tax. Alternatives were put forward. It was suggested that, instead of a new tax to fund wage earners' claims, workers who had not been paid due to bankruptcy would be given something called "super priority" in bankruptcy proceedings.

There was unanimous consent in the committee in the other place to give super priority to wage earners. In effect, super priority would place the workers ahead of the banks and other secured creditors in bankruptcy proceedings. Unfortunately, the government said no.

Many felt that the big banks had won at the expense of the unemployed worker. In an effort to break the impasse, there were discussions about using the unemployment insurance system.

There were also discussions about a new tax on the assets being disbursed in a bankruptcy to the big financial institutions, since they currently do not pay any fee to the Superintendent of Bankruptcy. Unfortunately, again, the government said no.

Once again, the feeling was that the big banks and other types of secured creditors had won at the expense of the unemployed worker.

Remember, I listed seven areas where laudable amendments had been made. Instead of persevering to rebalance the act and agreeing that workers have an interest in amendments to an act that is over 40 years old, the government took the easy road and lopped off all provisions dealing with wage earner protection. Why did they not settle down to work out something that would at least recognize the principle of wage earner protection and then put such a principle into practice?

It is unfortunate that, after 43 years, the changes to the Bankruptcy Act proposed by Bill C-22, do not advance the cause of the average worker. It is a missed chance. And, as we see here, these chances do not come by often. It looks like once every 40 years or so. It is unfortunate that in these years of record-setting bankruptcies, there is nothing in this legislation to ensure that thousands of Canadians left unemployed due to bankruptcy can be paid at least what they are owed.

It is unfortunate that, in the face of pressure from those interests who would have to give up some of their protection and priority to benefit the worker, the government refused to consider any alternatives to the employer tax. As I say, I can think of arguments against the employer tax scheme, but there were alternatives that were put forward by the committee in the other place and by the opposition.

If the polls are any indication, Canadians do find the last four years of Conservative government most unfortunate. According to Mr. Gallup, 82 per cent feel that the government is not handling the economy properly.

Such a glaring missed opportunity to have some amendments to benefit the employees of bankrupt firms, such a glaring missed opportunity to soften the consequences of this government's mismanagement of the economy, may be part of the reason for the people's disillusionment with the way the government has managed the economy.

I agree with the principle of the bill, but we will have something to say in committee about its lacunas. Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Kelleher, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

[Translation]

CUSTOMS ACT

CUSTOMS TARIFF

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Barootes, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buchanan, P.C., for the second reading of Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, briefly, I think that this bill is further striking evidence of this government's incompetence.

In principle, no one can oppose this bill, but it should have done better. When it is studied in committee, most committee members could take the opportunity to accept some amendments that I believe should be in this legislation.

[English]

Honourable senators, as stated yesterday by Senator Barootes, Bill C-74 is mainly a technical bill which must be accepted. As I said a moment ago, it is again proof of the incompetence of this government. When this government took over in 1984, one of the first things the Prime Minister did was to go to the United States and, in the midst of the glare of all the publicity possible, announce that Canada was now open for business, as if it had been impossible for Americans or others to do business in Canada up until 1984.

Then the government proceeded with its so-called free trade agreement, again as if there had been no trade between Canada and the United States until 1988 when the so-called free trade agreement was implemented. The fact is that during those years the Prime Minister and every Conservative spokesperson in this country told us that the free trade agreement was the best thing that could ever happen to Canada, and that it would save consumers between $800 and $1,200 a year in lower prices alone.

Senator Murray: Premier McKenna supported it very vigorously, as my friend will recall.

Senator Thériault: Premier McKenna is like everyone else; he is human and he has made a few mistakes.

People were told that eventually, under the free trade agreement, they would be able to cross the border any time they wanted and bring back their goods at a cheaper price, and that it would be heaven on earth in Canada. However, the end result was never mentioned. The end result is the greatest spree of cross-border shopping in the history of this country. This is the situation now.

In the meantime, there was legislation introduced to deal with mail order transactions in Canada and the United States. As Senator Barootes said yesterday, this bill will try to bring a level playing field to mail order shopping. The bill proposes several technical changes to customs legislation and is scheduled to take effect on July 1. The most important aspect of the legislation for the general public has to do with Schedule VII of the Income Tax Act. This section deals with the importation of products through the mail.

Currently, Canadians can purchase goods duty free and GST-free from American mail order firms like L.L. Bean, provided the imports are valued at $40 or less. Bill C-74 would reduce that exemption to $20. The government is essentially saying that it goofed, because in its first term it increased the exemption to $40. The exemption was $25 previously, but this government increased the amount of merchandise that could be brought into Canada tax free by mail order from $25 to $40. I suppose this was another result of the boosting that Canada was open for business, and an indication to the Americans that we would buy everything from them.

As also pointed out by Senator Barootes yesterday, the end result of increasing that exemption to $40 was that an American mail order firm could make the regular profit on a $40 article while a Canadian firm would have to price the same merchandise at $50 because of GST and provincial sales tax. That is the difference.

We know that cross-border shopping has flourished in the last three or four years. If senators and other people in government had any contact with the average Canadian, they would soon find out that three things are driving regular Canadian shoppers to the United States: gasoline, cigarettes and alcohol. People really do not talk about it publicly, but any truckers who live within 30 or 40 miles of the American border anywhere in Canada fills up their 200-gallon tanks across the border. It pays them to go even 50 miles to cross the border and fill up their tank. That is just for gasoline or diesel fuel. Once they are there, of course, they buy other things.

In the Atlantic provinces last winter, people were organizing bus tours from Cape Breton, 300 to 400 miles away from the American border. They could not keep enough buses on the highway to bring Canadians from Cape Breton to shop in the United States. The main reason for such activity is the tax grab now under way by the provincial and federal governments.

The so-called sin taxes on alcohol and cigarettes, plus taxes on gasoline, make it worthwhile for Canadians to shop in the United States. I think it is wrong. I do not care whether it is McKenna, Bob Rae or Mulroney who is responsible, it is just bad government and bad economy to impose that level of taxes on cigarettes, alcohol and gasoline.

I do not encourage people to smoke or drink. That is not the point. The point is that people do smoke and do drink. Generally speaking, smokers today are the less well-to-do people. I know there are a few rich ones in this chamber who still smoke. I suppose that not too many senators on the other side of the house have contact with average, ordinary people, but anyone who talks regularly with average people will tell you: Such people smoke and they will continue to smoke. It is too bad. They should stop. Governments should put a lot more effort into educating people, when they are young and in school, not to smoke. However, all of this has driven people to cross-border shopping.

Now the government brings forward Bill C-74 which it says will help the mail order business. However, the Canadian mail order houses will not really be helped by this piece of legislation, for the simple reason that $20 is still too high. People will order items from the American mail orders houses that cost $20 or less. If they have to make three, four or five mail orders, they will, because of the difference in price. Therefore this bill will not achieve what it sets out to do.

Furthermore, as pointed out by Senator Barootes yesterday, customs will have an agreement with Canada Post to charge $5 for handling parcels. I am sure Senator Barootes knows that the Americans charge Canadians $10. So why are you again talking of a level playing field? With this bill you are not producing a level playing field for the Canadian mail order houses. They are only charging half as much as the Americans charge the Canadian customers. Is it again the great branch plant mentality of the Prime Minister that prevents us from doing things that are right for the Canadian people?

The mail order business has increased tremendously, but it almost stopped increasing in Canada in 1985. However, it is still increasing in the United States at the rate of about 12 per cent a year. The information that I have tells me that most of that increase in the United States comes from Canadians shopping through mail order houses in the United States of America. This will not do the job.

If you really want to do the job instead of talking about doing the job, why would you not accept the amendments that were suggested to you, namely, that this figure of $20.00 should be reduced to $5.00 if you want to get it right; and get agreement to charge $10.00 for the handling of parcels that are bought in the United States and are to be delivered to Canadians, the same charge that the Americans make to Canadians. By doing so, you would have had not simply a piece of legislation that pays lip service to free trade but also an effective piece of legislation.

[Senator Thériault.]

Personally, I think that the whole thing is wrong. I would have hoped that with the free trade agreement it would have been "free trade". If we had received the kind of agreement that we should have received from the Americans, it would have been "free trade".

However, we did not achieve a level playing field and we will not achieve a level playing field with this piece of legislation because it goes only a small way to helping the mail order business in Canada, which has lost over 4,000 jobs in the last few years. It may stop such businesses from going broke, though. I accept this bill, but it is not what it should have been.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Barootes, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS BILL, 1992

SECOND READING

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Atkins, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the second reading of Bill C-45, an Act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate Senator Atkins on his comprehensive explanation of Bill C-45.

As all of you know, those of us from Newfoundland usually like to spin a good story before we come to our point. Today, however, I want to say right off the bat that I support Bill C-45 on the transportation of dangerous goods. I want to say that right away because I also have some serious reflections on the transportation of dangerous goods in Canada, and I do not want any honourable senator to think that those reflections are meant in a partisan way.

My concerns are based on history: Some personal history, some national history and some world history. On a personal level, I think back to the first speech I gave in this place. Everyone's good friend, the honourable Paul Martin, convinced me back in 1969 to introduce Bill C-157, the Pest Control Products Act.

Honourable senators will recall that during the 1960s we made great strides in improving insecticides for the benefit of Canadian farmers. Bill C-157 helped to ensure that the manufacturing, importing and distributing of insecticides was carried out in a safe manner.

Quite frankly, at the time most of us did not know the real dangers that insecticides could pose. We did not know that DDT could cause harm to the genetic makeup of some species of birds. We did not know that there might be natural alternatives to complex chemical sprays. We did not know that while we were saving crops we might be harming human beings. We now know these things and we know that, whenever possible, we must use safe alternatives. It is no longer a question of just transporting pesticides to our farmers in the safest fashion; it is a question of finding products which are safe to begin with.

When reflecting on our recent national history, I recall the terrible train explosion in Mississauga in 1979. Honourable senators will remember that a train of 24 cars carrying chlorine gas derailed in Mississauga. There was a frightening fireball and a cloud of poison gas. Nearly one quarter of a million residents of Mississauga had to be evacuated from their homes for several days.

At the time, none of us thought that such an explosion would ever really occur. We were so pleased that Metropolitan Toronto was becoming a major world centre of commerce, trade and transportation that we did not consider closely enough some of the risks involved.

We now know better. Now we know that when it comes to a question of safety versus dollars, safety must always come first. It is no longer simply a question of finding the cheapest routes for carrying toxic products; it is a question of whether we should ever put the lives of thousands of people at risk just so we can boost the economy.

When I reflect not just on personal experiences and Canadian experiences, I realize that the experiences of our entire planet have given us a new view. For many years, even when we came to appreciate that dangerous products might cause harm to our local communities, most of us did not appreciate that our actions might be threatening the wellbeing of the earth. Most of us did not know about sustainable development or greenhouse gases or depletion of the ozone layer.

But now we do know. We know that an accident involving dangerous chemicals in Canada may affect the environment of the entire world. We know that it is no longer enough just to control environmental dangers. We must strive to eliminate them. That is what the recent Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro was all about.

Honourable senators, as we consider the bill before us, I hope that we will all support the bill. I hope that honourable senators will also think about ways in which we can go beyond the scope of this legislation. While it is certainly worthwhile to improve the methods by which we transport dangerous goods, it would be even more worthwhile if we could find means of reducing the production of dangerous goods.

The purpose of Bill C-45 is to promote the safety of people, property and the environment. I support that goal and I commend the government for the bill. Surely, though, we can go further. Surely as citizens of the most blessed country on earth, we must go further.

Honourable senators, this bill is good. In the future, I hope we can do even better.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Atkins, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transportation and Communications.

● (1550)

ENERGY EFFICIENCY BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Brenda Robertson moved the second reading of Bill C-41, respecting the energy efficiency of energy-using products and the use of alternative energy sources.

She said: Honourable senators, the government's intention to present this legislation was announced in the Green Plan released in December 1990, stating that it would provide for the regulation of minimum energy efficiency levels in energy-using equipment and the labeling of products to convey information on energy use and the collection of statistics on energy use.

Since the August 1989 communiqué of the federal-provincial territorial energy ministers, which called for the development and adoption of national energy efficiency standards for energy-using equipment, the provinces have often remarked on the need for such federal legislation and have asked when this legislation will be forthcoming.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources have had a long-standing agreement that EMR is to take over the statutory authority for the Energuide program. The Energuide program will become an expanded energy labeling program under the Green Plan initiatives.

Statistics collection will permit the proper evaluation of the impact of the energy efficiency and alternative energy initiatives outlined in the Green Plan and the assessment of possible future initiatives.

The act, honourable senators, provides for the establishment of minimum energy efficiency standards for energy-using products, doors and windows; the labeling of energy-using products, doors and windows to convey information on their energy efficiency; and the collection of statistics and information on energy use and alternative energy.

The act will also create offences and penalties and contains enforcement provisions that are comparable to those provided under similar federal statutes, appropriate to the regulatory scheme being created, and consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The act also clarifies the authority of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to enter into agreements with any party—a provincial government or a third party of any sort.

The act makes grants and contributions and otherwise promotes energy efficiency and alternative energy.

This is not a complicated piece of legislation, honourable senators. It was supported in the other place by both sides of the chamber, and when it went to committee, the committee accepted the few amendments that were put forward by the opposition. Following that, it went quickly through the House.

I would urge your support of this important, small piece of legislation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau moved the second reading of Bill C-71, an Act to amend the Criminal Records Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise today to begin debate on second reading of Bill C-71, an Act to amend the Criminal Records Act.

The government recognized there was a need for legislative reform to create a more effective pardons system, to improve service to growing numbers of eligible ex-offenders, to achieve cost savings and to reduce delays in the granting of pardons.

The goal was to find a way to reform the system, while maintaining the important balance between providing relief to an ever-increasing number of applicants, ensuring that the public is protected and creating a more efficient criminal records system.

The present system of granting pardons has been under pressure due to rising numbers of applications and inevitable delays caused by the cumbersome process for review, investigation and decision required for all applications. This has resulted in rising costs and a growing backlog of cases. Overall service to the public has suffered.

[English]

A statistical survey of the system of granting pardons reveals that from 1980 to 1990 pardon applications increased by 261 per cent, from 7,100 annually to over 25,000. In contrast with the increased volume of applications, the processing capacity of the pardon system has remained relatively stable. The National Parole Board and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are able to process about 10,000 cases per year. The average processing time has grown to 18 months. Some people have waited for well over a year for a decision on their application. Resources were unnecessarily used when they should have been concentrated on the most serious cases. There are currently about 20,000 cases in the backlog, and this will grow to 50,000 cases by 1995 unless corrective measures are taken.

The principal changes being proposed will respond to the needs for reform which have been identified by many interested organizations. The public, parliamentarians and criminal justice agencies have all voiced strong support for these amendments.

Under the Criminal Records Act, or the CRA, the bill will give authority to the National Parole Board to grant all pardons for indictable offences. It will also give the NPB authority to issue pardons for lesser offences, that is, summary convictions.

The bill proposes that the RCMP purge all discharges from the criminal record and therefore remove them entirely from the pardon process. Currently, those people granted discharges must apply for a pardon to have their record sealed, even though they have not been convicted.

The bill will allow the government to automatically seal the records of those discharged either one or three years after the discharge, depending on whether the discharge was absolute or conditional, without requiring an application or investigation. This step has been urged by many and will remove approximately 5,000 pardon applications a year from the system. It will also allow resources to be better focused on the more serious cases, while in no way affecting the safety of the public.

• (1600)

Some have suggested that this automatic purging of the record should take place sooner than is being proposed. The government feels it is necessary, however, to retain the information for the period outlined. This will allow the fact of the discharge to be considered by the courts, should the offender choose to re-offend immediately, thereby indicating a continuing criminal lifestyle.

This bill proposes the retention of five years of conviction-free "good conduct" as the requirement for a pardon for serious or indictable offences. The National Parole Board will narrowly interpret "good conduct" to mean that the ex-offender has shown no behaviour of a criminal nature.

Within the National Parole Board, additional guidelines will be developed to identify offences which would normally be the focus of the extensive investigation of "good conduct" before a decision to grant or deny parole. This group of offences would involve personal harm or violence, sexual offences and serious drug offences.

For summary conviction offenders, the government has chosen to increase the waiting period to three years from two;

but to require that the ex-offender be without conviction during this period to indicate a crime-free lifestyle. There will no longer be the requirement that a decision be based on the judgment of "good conduct" in addition to the requirement of a conviction-free period.

By this amendment, the government will remove a further 3,500 applications a year from the necessity of extensive discretionary decision-making and thereby accelerate the process. Once pardoned, if a person should re-offend, the pardon will be automatically revoked if the offence is an indictable one. If the new offence was a summary conviction, the Solicitor General could unseal the record to make it available to the court for sentencing purposes.

The purpose of the Criminal Records Act should be to protect the privacy of those ex-offenders who have proven by their actions that they can live crime-free lives in the community. It must never be used as a shield to confound the courts or diminish the appropriate penalty for a new offence because the court is unaware of the continuing pattern of criminal behaviour. Therefore, the decision to allow for automatic revocation of a pardon in the case of a future conviction for an indictable offence will ensure easier court access to records for the purpose of sentencing any repeat offenders who may have been granted a pardon.

The same principle applies to the provision to maintain a file relating to discharged offenders for a short period of time following their discharge. The one-year wait after an absolute discharge and the three-year wait after a conditional discharge before the record is purged will allow the court to be apprised of the relevant information should the offender continue to contravene the law in the interim.

The bill expresses concerns raised by the police community by improving access to identification information contained in pardon records for the purposes of police investigation.

The act will stipulate that certain types of prohibitions or disqualifications, such as a ban on owning firearms, or the disqualification from driving, will not be lifted despite the granting of a pardon. It is imperative that, if the courts have determined that in the interest of public safety, a person should not be allowed to drive a car or to own a firearm, this prohibition should remain in effect regardless of the granting of a pardon from other offences and for other purposes.

While the amendments will result in a less cumbersome system for all ex-offenders, there is the recognition that more serious offenders should wait the longer period before being pardoned.

In addition, the bill proposes that investigative and discretionary decision-making resources be focused on those cases of a more serious nature. Ex-offenders who are perceived to pose less risk to the public will be dealt with through a less extensive procedure.

This is the type of reasonable approach to criminal justice matters which the public rightly demands.

[Translation]

Some have asked why this bill does not go further. Why does it not expand protection to seal or destroy records held by provincial or local police officials?

Why does it not control the use of criminal history information in the private sector? Why does it not compel American immigration and criminal justice authorities to allow unfettered entry to the U.S. of those Canadians who have received a pardon?

Honourable senators, we recognize that the scope of these amendments is restricted to improving the Criminal Records Act. This Act does not impose restrictions on the use of "records of conviction". Accordingly the amendments cannot intrude in areas of provincial responsibility nor can they provide extra-territorial protection to Canadians.

While these may be valid and appropriate concerns, for now they will remain problems to be dealt with in the future through other more appropriate mechanisms.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I think the changes which are before us follow a proper middle course between various proposals which have been previously discussed.

I believe that the amendments respond effectively to the various problems in the current system.

I would therefore like to move that Bill C-71 be referred to the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

On motion of Senator Lewis, debate adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

STATUS OF THE ARTIST BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Solange Chaput-Rolland moved for second reading of the Bill respecting the status of the artists and professional relations between artists and producers in Canada.

She said: Honourable senators, I am indeed proud to have the privilege of introducing this legislation on the status of the artist.

I think the timing of this bill is excellent. Having been close to the arts community for nearly 30 years, I am very much aware of both its prestige and its problems.

The purpose of this legislation is to establish a regulatory framework for professional relations between artists as independent entrepreneurs and producers who are federally regulated, including broadcasters, like the CBC, the National Arts Centre, the National Film Board and the National Museums.

It is extremely reassuring for many senators who are familiar with the major organizations that represent artists, such as ACTRA, the Union des artistes, the Musicians Guild, and so forth, that these have all indicated their satisfaction with this legislation.

Some people may wonder why artists in this country are entitled to legislation that nurtures and protects them, as it were. This legislation will make us the envy of the world, and we know that people are taking a new look at this question. In fact, the government has been considering the status of artists for quite some time.

For instance, in 1951, the Royal Commission of Inquiry, also known as the Massey Commission, mentioned the problems and isolation of artists. At the time it was said that artists in Canada had a great deal of trouble reaching the public. Recently, a task force on the status of the artist, headed by Gratien Gélinas and a Mr. Paul Simond, also made recommendations in this respect. We must remember that artists make a country's reputation and that it is thanks to them that we are known abroad. I am thinking, for instance, of Margeret Atkinson, who made our country known in the United States.

[English]

I think of Anne Murray and her beautiful songs that have made our country known; of Leonard Cohen and of Anne Hébert, tremendous Quebeckers who have . . .

[Translation]

Her book is recognized as a masterpiece. I think of painters and sculptors. They are the memory of our time and it is through their works that future generations will remember those who came before them. It is not easy being an artist, nor any easier here than elsewhere. It is an immense solitude, but a creative solitude.

[English]

It is because he is a lonely man who creates in the solitude of his house and studio that he needs protection, that he needs to obtain legal stature and social stature in our community. Surely he is no better than any one of us; any other worker, woman or man, who works to earn their living, but because he gives our country some feeling of eternity, he needs to be protected.

Senator Barootes will certainly not contradict me if I say that today Greece is remembered throughout the world more for Aristotle than for Mr. Onassis, and that France and Great Britain are recognized for their great artists. Therefore, we must give to our comedians, actors, actresses, writers, sculptors, painters a kind of protection, a kind of environment in which they will be respected. I think my friend Senator Frith, who knows the world of the theatre very well, knows how fragile it is, how fragile Canadians are because of the environment, and because we are neighbours of the United States, whose influence is so strong, so overwhelming in the area of their culture that sometimes our books and television are not of a second class but of a second look, of a second healing. Therefore any law that gives through the federal institution . . .

[Translation]

A legal status to Canadian artists, both francophones and anglophones. So, if it is already accepted by all those who have a great need for this status, I will not talk indefinitely because we have so much to do. Personally, I have no objection and I know that Quebec, which is always a bit susceptible when it comes to culture, was consulted. I talked to Serge Turgeon, who is the president of the Union des artistes, and he told me that he was in total agreement with the protection provided to our artists with this legislation on their legal and judicial status. Therefore, honourable senators, there is no point to talk any longer.

One small point though: When the Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will review this bill, there is only one aspect that Senator Frith might understand better than me. The bill refers to a the tribunal to which artists will take their grievances. I do not know why, but the word "tribunal" bothers me. I do not see in that expression a limitation of the expression,

[English]

. . . the freedom of expression or speaking or words, but a certain kind of connotation which frightens me a bit. I would like to suggest another word. I talked to Senator Tremblay a few minutes ago about this and he suggested the word . . .

[Translation]

. . . Artist Council, which is something similar to what exists in Quebec and is called the Conseil de presse. I find that this term is not restrictive, even though I do not think that the tribunal will restrict anything. But the word "tribunal" in these days when the courts are consulted for anything and everything, well I would rather use a softer expression such as the Artist Council which, it seems to me, would sound more appropriate and human. Once again, I urge the Senate and all the honourable senators to support this bill. It seems to me that even though our artists have now . . .

[English]

. . . have acquired an international reputation of great prestige. There are many amongst them who still need protection and encouragement; who need to be sheltered by our country.

[Translation]

I know that in the Union des artistes—

[English]

There are thousands of members, and at least 500 who work. At least 500 can live on their work; the rest cannot. It must be the same thing in other unions. So for all the artists of Canada—for which we have every reason to be extremely proud—I am honoured to present this legislation and hope it meets with your approval.

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I intend to examine this bill, its substance as well as almost each of its provisions. I want to have the opportunity to consider the clear comments made by our colleague, Senator Chaput-Rolland, and in particular her suggestion as to how we should name the body. On the face of it, the word "council" sounds a lot better than "tribunal" and it is probably sufficient, but then again maybe it is not. We can look into Le Petit Robert and maybe in "Roget's Thesaurus" to find another word. In the meantime, honourable senators, I want to adjourn the debate and make an intervention.

[English]

OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION AND CONSERVATIONACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody moved the second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Over 10 years ago on February 15 1982, 84 people lost their lives in the search for oil in the Atlantic Ocean off Newfoundland. On that day the Ocean Ranger, one of the most advanced drilling rigs in the world, sank in a matter of hours with no survivors. The enormity of that tragedy will be remembered by Canadians for generations to come. Today I am pleased to be sponsoring legislation which completes the efforts which began immediately following the accident to ensure that Canadians are never again put at such risk.

Within days of the sinking, a royal commission headed by the Honourable G. Alex Hickman was jointly established by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland and Labrador to examine the causes of the accident and to recommend measures to improve the safety of petroleum activity in the Canadian offshore.

At the same time, new standards were established by the government for the command of offshore drilling units, for structural integrity, for ballasting and maintenance of trim, for the availability of survival suits and for life boat requirements. All rigs operating in Canadian waters were immediately returned to port to ensure that they met the new standards.

In the ensuing months all regulations were reviewed, new standards were developed for the structural design of rigs for training, for survival equipment, for evacuation systems emergency procedures, contingency plans, weather forecasting and performance standards for standby vessels and for rescue craft.

When the royal commission made its final report in 1985, over half its recommendations had already been implemented. Since then, all of the remaining recommendations have been acted on. Canadian safety standards for the offshore are now among the most advanced in the world. While most of the Hickman recommendations were addressed by changes to standards and regulations, a small number required a reassessment of the way in which regulatory authority should be exercised, particularly in emergency situations.

• (1620)

To address these recommendations, the government appointed a task force to address regulatory practices in other offshore jurisdictions. The task force concluded that a number of changes should be made to Canada's regulatory system and that these should be embodied in legislation.

Following consideration of the task force's recommendations by the government, intensive consultations were held for several years with interested parties on the substance of the proposed legislation.

To complete the process of reforming Canada's offshore safety regime, the government has therefore tabled amendments to the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, which you now have before you for consideration. The act will be re-entitled the Canada Oil and Gas Operations Act to better reflect the all-encompassing nature of the act.

With respect to the joint offshore oil and gas management regimes which have been established with Newfoundland and with Nova Scotia, consequential amendments will also be made to the East Coast Accord Implementation Acts. Similar amendments will be made by these provinces to their accord legislation.

The Canada Oil and Gas Operations Act is designed to ensure that an integrated approach is taken to the certification and operation of all equipment used in the exploration for and production of offshore oil and gas resources. Offshore exploration and production units are extremely complex pieces of equipment. They must be capable of meeting all of the risks associated with drilling for and producing oil and gas. At the same time, they must also be able to meet the might and fury of the worst ocean storms.

Not only must the equipment meet these dual challenges, so must the people who operate it. That is perhaps the most important lesson we have learned from the Ocean Ranger catastrophe. Offshore safety fundamentally depends upon having the best equipment operated with clear, consistent and comprehensive safety procedures by crews that are thoroughly trained in both the oil and gas and the marine aspects of their work. Bill C-58 contains provisions related to these fundamental aspects of offshore safety. In addressing the fundamentals of equipment, procedures, training, and organization, the bill creates a framework that will enable Canada to maintain a standard of offshore safety as high as any in the world.

For example, Bill C-58 requires all operators of exploration and production equipment to obtain a certificate of fitness from an independent certifying authority in order to conduct petroleum activities. The certifying authority will be responsible for ensuring that the equipment meets all safety standards relating not only to gas and oil activities, but to marine activities as well. The certification process will ensure both a comprehensive and integrated approach is taken to examining the fitness of equipment to work safely in the offshore.

The bill also requires owners and operators to have appropriate operating procedures and trained personnel to carry out offshore petroleum activities safely and to make a formal declaration to this effect. It further requires that at all times one person, the offshore installation manager, be in charge of the entire operation.

To ensure consistency and ongoing improvements in the administration of offshore regulations, the bill provides for the creation of an Oil and Gas Administration Advisory Council with representation from the federal government and appropriate provincial governments, as well as all regulatory authorities with responsibility for the safety of petroleum activities on the frontier lands. It also provides for an Offshore Oil and Gas Training and Standards Advisory Board to be established to encourage the development of uniform requirements for training, qualifications, accreditation standards and course assessments.

In the case of an emergency, where the safety of personnel or equipment could be endangered, Bill C-58 provides the Minister of Energy with the power to suspend temporarily specific sections of other federal acts to ensure that there are clear lines of authority to deal with the emergency situation.

Honourable senators, these are some of the more important measures which have been included in the bill before us. It is the product of extensive consultations, both internationally and within Canada. It is based on the insight and experience of foreign regulators and safety enquiries such as that into the Piper Alpha accident in the North Sea. In Canada, federal departments, provincial and territorial governments, knowledgeable experts, the Offshore Regulatory Boards in both Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, and the oil and gas industry have all been consulted. I can say that, in all important aspects, they have had an opportunity to consider the safety measures contained in the bill and to bring their accumulated wisdom to bear on it.

Honourable senators, I commend this bill to you for your consideration and approval.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about Bill C-58 before it is referred to committee because it is an extremely important bill for the safety of the men and women who will be working on the offshore rigs.

As Senator Doody pointed out, what happened on February 15, 1982, should not be forgotten. Eighty-four people lost their lives when the Ocean Ranger went down in a severe North Atlantic storm. There was not one single survivor. I am pleased to acknowledge that a great deal of work has been done by those concerned with the safety of the personnel involved in operating these rigs since then, and that, indeed, much of their work has already been put into effect as it relates to life boats and other equipment that seemed to be inadequate when that accident occurred. Of course there is more to be done.

Honourable senators, there is another aspect of safety with respect to oil and gas drilling rigs. We must be conscious of the fact that we are dealing with far more than one dangerous situation. Senator Doody has pointed that out the necessity to employ the expertise of mariners who understand what must be done to cope with the marine aspects of offshore drilling, and that this is particularly important in the face of dealing with a storm. It is a job that should be done by people who have not only had formal training, but perhaps it is fair to say that it should be done by those who have lived with that responsibility almost all of their lives. They know how to react in situations where a serious storm comes up, particularly those storms in the North Atlantic that can be as bad as any anywhere in the world.

Drilling for gas or oil, particularly in some of formations that contain extreme hydrostatic gas pressures, is another aspect that must be dealt with. Indeed, sometimes the gasses that come out of those formations, which are 3,000, 4,000 or 5,000 feet below the surface, are highly toxic.

I am speculating, but I feel that some of the comments made by Senator Doody indicate that, if this bill is passed, those employed on these rigs will require a very high level of expertise in dealing with all of these aspects. Unfortunately, that will mean that many of the local people who otherwise could have jobs will be excluded because they lack the necessary safety qualifications.

Honourable senators, I want to make it clear that I am not suggesting that we lower the safety standards. What happened to the Ocean Ranger should teach us once and for all that that should not happen.

However, it seems to me there are two or three very important circumstances that can jeopardize the safety of these rigs, and it may be we need to employ people with a very high degree of expertise in dealing with at least one of them, but perhaps we should have others aboard the rig who have a high expertise in dealing with other situations. I know of an example about 15 miles from my farm in Southern Alberta. Seismic information was gathered and a formation was identified. An oil drilling rig was set up and a well was, innocently, unknowingly, I believe, drilled into a formation with a hydrostatic gas pressure of 3,800 pounds per square inch.

That pressure was so great, honourable senators, that it blew out all the drilling mud that is supposed to control the pressure. Not only that, the velocity of the escaping gas was so great that it blew more than 3000 feet of drill pipe out of the hole. The pipe struck the tower and knocked it down. The drill bit flew out and tore off the control tower so that the drill was completely out of control. Everything was blown away simply because they did not anticipate the amount of pressure they would encounter when they hit that particular formation.

That was about 30 years ago. I know that technology has improved since then. The formulation of the drilling mud has increased in viscosity and weight so that it can withstand greater pressures, while other controls are installed at the top of the wells to help prevent wild wells. That is one thing.

A more frequent occurrence is the drilling of a formation where the composition of the gas is unknown. They usually encounter methane, a dry natural gas; they call it sweet gas. If you breathe that in, I understand that it paralyses your lungs so that you cannot exhale it at all.

Sometimes, as happened within two miles of my place, they drill into a formation and H_2S is released. One whiff of hydrogen sulphide will kill anybody. It is highly toxic.

I am giving you these examples because drilling is very dangerous, if you are not qualified or if you are not able to predict what the next formation will produce. It can be as dangerous on dry land as it is in an ocean storm. Oil and gas drilling requires a great deal of expertise to deal correctly with the kinds of dangers that are involved.

Senator Doody, in referring to people who must be involved in safety regulations, said that:

> They must be capable of meeting all of the risks associated with drilling for and producing oil and gas.

Those are the two things I just mentioned. Heavy-duty equipment is needed to deal with the extremely high pressures found in the various formations. Senator Doody then said:

> They must also be able to meet the might and fury of the worst ocean storms.

Honourable senators, I suggest to you that nearly a lifetime of experience is required to deal with either one of those problems, not necessarily both of them. I would hope, as we consider this bill in committee, that we are careful not to exclude a lot of people from getting a job or working on these rigs at all. Senator Doody mentioned on page 7:

> Offshore safety fundamentally depends on having the best equipment operated with clear consistent safety procedures by crews—and this is important—

> — that are thoroughly trained in both oil and gas and the marine aspects of their work.

Now, I do not say that that is not desirable. Of course, it is. However, if we are not careful with this kind of legislation, many people will be excluded who have acquired expertise in one of those areas but not both. Requiring it to be in both areas will make it prohibitive for some people.

That can be resolved, at least in part, by having some people aboard the drilling vessel who are experienced and trained to deal with ocean storms and the marine aspects of drilling on the offshore. You could have other people aboard who have the necessary high level of expertise and proficiency to deal with the risks involved in drilling a hole into potentially high-pressure areas which contain toxic gases that are extremely dangerous to the crew.

Some good work has been done in the investigatory field both in Canada and in other places. Much knowledge has been gained from experiences in the North Sea.

We must be very conscious of safety requirements because of the extreme dangers involved, if this is not handled by people who know what they are doing. At the same time, I hope Senator Doody will agree that these regulations should not be set up in a way that disqualifies a very large number of the people who live in reasonable proximity to the drilling activity so that they cannot take advantage of the economic activity that is going forward.

I conclude by saying that I have discussed this with my colleagues, and we see no reason not to give the bill second reading today and send it to committee, if that is the wish of the sponsor of the bill. We hope that there will be some witnesses appearing before the committee who can explain in somewhat more practical detail how these regulations will be applied so that we can maintain the kind of safety that both Senator Doody and I have talked about, and also make sure that people will be able to be involved in the work that will be done there.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson, for the second reading of Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, when this item first came up, there were some questions asked on certain aspects of the bill on which answers were not forthcoming. I know that we are unanimous in wanting to see the main thrust of this bill passed as soon as possible, but we also want to be satisfied with the entire bill.

Tomorrow, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, Mr. Merrithew, would be available to come before the Committee of the Whole to answer the questions which were raised earlier. I hope that the answers will be satisfactory and we can then proceed with the bill.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I am very glad to hear that the minister is prepared to appear on this bill. Let me clarify exactly what the difficulty has been: Since we have not had second reading, the committee has not met formally on this bill. As you know, the bill dealing with merchant marine veterans' pensions is fully supported. We are very anxious to have those pensions paid and to have that part of the bill passed. To our great regret, however, the government included in the bill what might be called the poison pill, the section that extensively changes the application procedures for allied war resisters.

We will welcome the minister's presence in Committee of the Whole. However, we will be looking for assurances from the minister that he can put in place a procedure to ensure that those people already in process under the Allied War Resisters Plan, and some of them have been in process for three or more years, will be dealt with fairly. We are not suggesting for a moment that any more should be added to the list, or that those already there are all legitimate war resisters. They may be found not to be. We understand all of that.

Should the minister not be able to give us some assurance, we would want to hear witnesses from the war resisters group on that subject. They are prepared to come, but certainly not tomorrow. We hope that the minister will be able to give assurances tomorrow. We certainly would like to have the bill referred to our committee.

May I just ask when the minister will appear on the bill?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes, our schedule is his schedule. I suggest after Question Period, which usually ends around three o'clock.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill referred to Committee of the Whole.

SCOTIA SYNFUELS PROJECT

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Third Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources (Scotia Synfuels), tabled in the Senate on June 15, 1992.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable Senators, I rise today to voice my full support for the report tabled by my colleague, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, with respect to the Scotia Synfuels project planned for Point Tupper, Nova Scotia. I am delighted that the committee took the time to study this issue and I am very pleased with the outcome of that study, which was originally initiated by Senator McEachen late last year.

This report represents a very thorough examination of the Scotia Synfuels project from its technical merits to financial viability. I am pleased that its conclusions support the establishment of this facility and provide the necessary rationale for federal support.

For those in this chamber who did not participate in the deliberations of the standing committee, the Scotia Synfuels project would involve the co-processing of high-sulphur coal and oil to produce a range of clean petroleum products including naphtha, which is the primary ingredient in gasoline, diesel and heating oil, and heavy petroleum distillates. In addition to these petroleum products, which will find markets throughout Canada and indeed the world, the facility will produce pure sulphur as a by-product.

The project benefits from an array of infrastructure which is already in place. It is rare that an industrial project of this magnitude, requiring the high level of technical inputs that it does, would find a site nearly complete and ready to begin production. This site is the former Gulf Canada refinery in Point Tupper.

If you were to visit Point Tupper today, you would find the roads constructed to the refinery, storage tanks ready to receive finished petroleum products and waste water treatment plants to protect the surrounding environment. And what an environment it is. The wharf opens to the Strait of Canso, which is capable of handling the largest ocean-going vessels on the high seas today.

I would like to take a few moments to review the positive aspects of this project as identified by the Senate committee in its report, and indeed as identified for the past several years by proponents of this project and the people of Nova Scotia. Honourable senators will know that I have spoken many times in this chamber of the desperate economic conditions in Cape Breton. It is an inescapable reality for the people whom I represent.

The commencement of this project will bring significant economic and social benefits to the communities involved. It calls for the creation of 200 jobs at the Point Tupper facility and an additional 350 jobs will be maintained or created in the DEVCO mines in industrial Cape Breton. Developers of the project have indicated that indirect job creation throughout the local economy could reach 2,000. The report notes that these numbers compare favourably with the permanent number of jobs estimated to be created by the Hibernia offshore oil project. Thus, the economic benefits will spread across eastern Nova Scotia.

We have also been told that the project would create an average of 500 construction jobs, reaching a peak of 1,000 during the three-year development phase.

In this context, I would like to relate to honourable senators a recent event in Cape Breton which highlights the need for good news such as this. Several months ago fellow Cape Bretoners, the Committee of Concerned Citizens, published an urgent agenda for economic renewal there. The agenda served up lots of charts and graphs which translated into great physical privation for many families in my part of the world. But physical privation remains secondary. Its authors reminded us of what they called "the starvation of the spirit".

In this regard the Committee of Concerned Citizens spoke of the pain of unemployment, which today is now officially at 22 per cent, double the national average. Unofficially some estimates would double that figure to almost as high as 40 per cent. In their report on the urgent agenda the authors spoke of neighbourhoods in decline and the continued flight of our young people to so-called greener pastures.

● (1650)

Honourable senators, this type of project, the Scotia Synfuels project, addresses this starvation of the spirit in two ways. First, it provides tangible evidence of renewal in the hundreds of jobs which will be created; and, second, psychologically it provides a real lift because of the highly technical nature of the facility and, by extension, the high quality of skills which will be required of its workers.

Many of our skilled young people will find employment at this facility. Specialized knowledge is the key to the new age. One can only speculate about the potential spinoffs of this project if, for example, strategic linkages were to be made with the chemistry, technology and engineering departments at Saint Francis Xavier University, the University College of Cape Breton, or the Technical University of Nova Scotia.

The project has important technical implications for Canada and holds great future potential in the further development of synfuels technology. This is a made-in-Canada technology and the plant at Point Tupper would be the first facility of its kind in North America.

The report states on page four:

> The synfuels technology also represents an improvement over the development of frontier and offshore crude oil, which by comparison entail high finding costs, transportation uncertainties and adverse environmental concerns related to exploration, production and transportation.

Honourable senators, if we do not seize the moment and support this technology and this project, I fear that some years down the road someone in some other place will be selling the technology and the product back to us.

The project has a beneficial regional impact as well. Speakers in this chamber have often referred to the desirability of integrated regional development projects that fuel activity across many sectors and build upon our strengths and add value, through high technology processing, to our raw natural resources. This project encompasses all these attributes.

In the wake of the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro we have all become a little more aware of the environment and the steps which we must take individually and as a society to protect the environment by reducing the effluents that we pump into our air, water and soil. I want to underline and emphasize that the synfuels technology is a cleaner energy-producing technology. The use of co-processed fuels lowers the amount of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions, which, if left unchecked, may, as scientists tell us, result in a runaway greenhouse effect. Lowering such emissions also lessens the severity of acid rain, which has killed so many lakes and streams in Nova Scotia and throughout eastern Canada.

Finally, honourable senators, there are the benefits to federal, provincial and local governments of this increased economic activity. Estimated annual corporate tax revenues to the federal government and the Province of Nova Scotia total $800 million. This figure does not include personal income taxes from employees or the other taxes that will be forthcoming from suppliers to both levels of government.

The total capital cost of this project is $500 million, which will be entirely met through private sector sources. The proponents of the project are not asking for loan guarantees; they are not asking for interest buy-down subsidies. What they are requesting is access to a 30 per cent special investment tax credit and a special excise tax remission on their finished petroleum products. Such tax treatment would be similar in principle to the retail tax relief currently in place for alternative transportation fuels such as propane, natural gas and diesel, along with blends of ethanol and methanol.

The consortium is also requesting a federal contribution of $14.5 million towards detailed process design engineering and a pilot plant test program. I suggest that in today's world of multi-million dollar contracts and other industrial inducements in other parts of the country, this request is not unreasonable.

Honourable senators, the government of Canada has an opportunity to create hundreds of jobs in eastern Nova Scotia; to end the retreat from economic development in our part of the country; to lessen our dependence upon foreign oil supplies; to hasten the development of new fuel sources; to advance Canada as a leader in cleaner energy technologies; and to help fuel a new spirit of initiative and resilience in Nova Scotia, by doing what it can to support this project.

I would ask all honourable senators to do the same and to support this report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

On motion of Senator Corbin, for Senator Hays, debate adjourned.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

500TH ANNIVERSARY OF DISCOVERY OF AMERICA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Bosa, calling the attention of the Senate to the 500th anniversary of the landing of Cristoforo Colombo (Christopher Columbus) in the New World. —(Honourable Senator Di Nino).

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I regret that I did not advise my colleagues that I should like to make a few remarks on this Inquiry, if doing so is appropriate at this time.

Honourable senators, I wish that my colleague, Senator Bosa, whose inquiry this is, were here to hear my remarks. Senator Bosa and I have been friends for a number of years. I will try, as kindly and as gently as I can, to reply to his inquiry of Friday June 5, 1992, concerning the 500th anniversary of Columbus' voyage to the Americas.

• (1700)

I wish to state at the outset that I fully agree with the statement by my old friend when he quoted Professor David Berkison that "Columbus' voyage should be commemorated only for what it was: a courageous venture that established the first real link—for better or for worse—between Europe and America."

There can be no doubt that Christopher Columbus cannot be personally blamed for the strife that was wrought upon the indigenous peoples of the Americas by the fact of his landing upon the shores of this continent more than 500 years ago.

However, we are not merely marking the achievements of one man; we are marking a milestone in history, particularly the history of the Americas. In doing so, we are provided with an opportunity to examine the historical record and the collision of two great civilizations.

The Honourable Peter Bosa has labelled those persons who believe that Columbus' legacy has been more of a curse than a blessing as "detractors". If that is so, you will have to count me and the majority of my people as detractors.

It is not my intention to blame Columbus for the ravages of disease, of racial exploitation and environmental destruction. I would agree with Senator Bosa that to do so would be historical revisionism.

But let us look at the historical facts. There is no question that the explosive fifteenth century maritime expansion resulted from a need to find a direct and possibly shorter route to the spice trades of the Far East. Many of my people have said, "Boy, we are sure glad that Christopher Columbus was not looking for Turkey but was looking for India instead." I suppose if he were looking for Turkey, my people, for 500 years, would have been called "Turkeys".

Although we joke about this question from time to time, of course there are a large number of people in Canada who are from India. They are the real Indians. Our people have been the mistaken ones, and that causes a great deal of confusion.

When we try to deal with this issue, since we speak 56 different languages in the country, and have different dialects within those languages, we can all come up with a word to describe our people. The Inuit have it solved, God bless them. It is wonderful that they are now known as "Inuit" rather than as "Eskimos" who were eaters of raw fish. Nevertheless, it is very difficult for us to find a single word would be, first of all, easy to say and, second, would be meaningful and acceptable to all of us.

In my own dialect, which is the Okanagan dialect, we call ourselves "Skilwh". I do not know how you would even spell it—perhaps S-K-I-L-W-H. That would be pretty close, but who in the heck can say "Skilwh"? It is a difficult word to communicate to people outside of our culture.

[Senator Marchand.]

Be that as is it may, we must try amongst ourselves to find a word that is our own and one that will really depict who we are, rather than calling ourselves "Indians", because as sure as God made little people, we are not Indians—the people from India are Indians! There are many Indians in this country, and this causes a great deal of confusion.

But it is also true that when Christopher Columbus first encountered the original inhabitants of the new world, he remarked that they were "so tractable, so peaceable . . . that I swear . . . there is not in the world a better nation." What became of this attitude, and what became of the people that Columbus spoke of?

In a recent publication called Stolen Continents, Ronald Wright outlines the fact that indigenous people in the Americas had no immunity to the diseases which wracked the old world. He suggests:

> It is now clear that the old world plagues killed at least half the population of the Aztec, Maya and Inca civilizations shortly before their overthrow . . . and the great death raged for more than a century. By 1600, after some 20 waves of pestilence swept through the Americas, less than one tenth of the original population remained. Perhaps ninety million died, the equivalent, in today's terms, to the loss of one billion. It was the greatest mortality in history. To conquered and conqueror alike, it seemed as though God really was on the white man's side.

If that were not enough, the indigenous peoples of the Americas faced displacement and servitude under the colonial empires which entrenched themselves in the Americas.

In Central and South America, it was Conquistadors who crushed the Indian resistance. As the influential Latin commentator Carlos Fuentes notes:

> They exploited Indian labour to a degree that amounted to genocide; the native population of the Caribbean was destroyed and had to be replaced by black slave labour imported from Africa.

While the laws of the Indies of 1542 proclaimed Indians to be the proprietors of the lands of the New World with the settlers holding only temporary concessions to them, Professor Fuentes suggested:

> . . . the violations of this statute are so numerous and evident that any modern auditor can not only spot them but quickly arrive at the conclusion that Latin America was founded on the dizzying contradiction between law and practice which in effect established from the very beginning a divorce between the real country and the legal country.

As former Chief Justice Berger outlines in his new publication A Long and Terrible Shadow:

> In North America, Europeans looked upon the appalling losses among the Indian populations as providential. The depopulation of native lands left large tracts available for colonization, to the satisfaction of many European immigrants.

While the exact loss of life in North America is not known, a group of ethno-historians, led by Henry Dobyns, suggests that the estimated population of North America before the arrival of Columbus was more than 18 million, and there was a post-contact decline of 95 per cent over the next 130 years. Whatever the figures, it is clear that there was a cataclysmic negative impact upon indigenous peoples resulting from the coming together of the old and new worlds.

My colleague, Senator Bosa, suggests that a concern has been raised on the advisability of using the word "discovery". I appreciate the textbook dictionary definition put forward by Robert Hughes and parroted by the honourable senator to the effect that "The discoverer is the person who gets from known A to unknown B, returns to A and goes back to B again."

However, I disagree with his suggestion that this definition settles the controversy. It is not the dictionary definition of "discovery" that is at issue; it is the doctrine of discovery and its implications for the recognition of indigenous rights with which indigenous people take issue.

As Maureen Davies from Carleton University points out:

> The doctrine of discovery, advanced with vigour by the Western European powers whenever it was expedient, was unequivocally rejected . . . in the law of the Indies. To invoke the doctrine . . . it is necessary to demonstrate that the territory in uninhabited: terra nullius. Since clearly the lands in question were already occupied, the doctrine could not be applied. If anyone had "discovered" the lands in question, it would have been the people already there!

However, this doctrine has not been applied to aboriginal or indigenous people. The Supreme Court of the United States in 1823, and later our own Supreme Court, sullied the doctrine of discovery by simply refusing to apply it to indigenous people. Instead of applying the doctrine to recognize the indigenous claims to the land, the courts changed the doctrine.

• (1710)

The Supreme Court of the United States, and later that of Canada, suggested that indigenous peoples' power to dispose of the soil at their own will, to whomsoever they pleased, was denied "by the original fundamental principle that discovery gave exclusive title to those who make it." It is this aspect of discovery which indigenous people take issue with.

Thomas Berger suggests "by this reasoning Marshall held that the natural rights to dispose of their property did not apply to Indians." The Indians had no power to sell their land, except to the federal government. Berger suggests, "The whole edifice was founded on the theory of discovery; no one who thought about it, however, was altogether satisfied with this."

The Honourable Senator Bosa wants to know about the charge of racial exploitation and wonders why Columbus' memory is downgraded by association with later indiscretions. He suggests that Paul Grey is correct when he states:

> The peoples of the new world, the land that Columbus made inevitable, are engaged in another convulsive attempt to re-invent themselves, to conceive a version of the past that will justify the present, and if possible, shape the future.

I do not agree with that. Who among us could offer any explanation of the past that would justify the present? Who would want to? No, senators, we are not attempting to reinvent ourselves. We are attempting to shed new light on the shocking story of the history of the indigenous peoples of the Americas. It is long overdue.

I must say to my honourable colleague that I completely disassociate myself with his suggestion that colonial indiscretions can be justified by the fact that some native Americans may have exploited their own people. I would agree that all atrocities are deplorable, be they of European or North American origin. However, to raise native indiscretions as a defence against the naked aggression of colonial powers is unacceptable.

Honourable senators, as we mark the occasion of the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' voyage to our lands, I ask you to avail yourselves of the opportunity to take a broader focus and to review the history of the treatment of indigenous peoples of the Americas.

Certainly, there is much to celebrate. Of course, Christopher Columbus should be given full and complete respect for his part in the coming together of the new worlds.

We must also reflect on the impact upon indigenous peoples. Only through a review of history can we shed new light on existing pretensions and attempt to deal forthrightly with the legacy of our colonial past.

We in Canada today are very fortunate people—all of us. The history of indigenous peoples within the territory now occupied by Canada is, for the most part, a much happier history than that of those indigenous peoples in the other parts of the Americas. I can say that much.

However, we cannot forget the memory of the Beothuks. The Beothuks were the Indian inhabitants of Newfoundland who were ravaged by disease, hunted down and slaughtered. The last known surviving Beothuk died of tuberculosis in St. John's in June 1829. Honourable senators, I cannot but help mark this milestone of history with a note of sadness. A loss of one people in 500 years is too many.

Our history has not been a happy one. No one person is to blame, of that I am sure of.

However, this anniversary coincides with another milestone in the life of the country, that of constitutional reform. We can and do have the opportunity to change for the better the lives of Canada's aboriginal people. I trust that all honourable senators will agree that now is the time to set in place a constitutional framework that will allow aboriginal Canadians to become equal partners in this great land and thereby ensure that the next 500 year anniversary is one that all peoples can celebrate.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Di Nino, debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROPRIETY AND CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF THE SENATE — ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Thériault:

That the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders be authorized to consider the propriety and the constitutionality of the changes and amendments to the Rules of the Senate, adopted by the Senate on June 18, 1991; and

That the Committee report no later than June 11, 1992.— (Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had been under the impression that the intervention last night by my colleague, Senator Hébert, would have started the renumbering of this particular motion, but it has not.

In view of the fact that Senator Haidasz, who moved the motion, is ill and is unlikely to return before the adjournment, I wonder if we could have this matter stand until September 22 when we are due to reconvene?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators. I do not think we can let the item stand for five or six months. If the honourable senator wishes the matter to be reintroduced, a motion can be moved to that effect.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 17, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

[Translation]

THE HONOURABLE ARTHUR TREMBLAY

TRIBUTES

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, tomorrow, June 18, our colleague the Honourable Arthur Tremblay will celebrate his 75th birthday. We are delighted he reached this milestone in such fine mental and physical fettle. Thirteen years in the Senate have obviously rejuvenated him.

Unfortunately, this happy occasion is marred by the fact that he will now have to retire from this Chamber.

Senator Tremblay was an outstanding parliamentarian. We all know he played a major role as an adviser to the Progressive Conservative Party. His speeches in the Senate have always been models of eloquence. He was actively involved in the business of Parliament as a member of the Joint Committee on the Constitution, from 1980 to 1982; as co-chair of the Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord of 1987; and as chairman of the Senate Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, during the 33rd Parliament, from 1984 to 1988.

His invaluable contribution as a parliamentarian since 1979 commands the respect and appreciation of his peers and fellow citizens. In fact, the past 13 years were the crowning achievement of an already brilliant career in education and public administration.

In the forties, he was a professor with the Teacher's School of Laval University and, in the fifties, a professor with the Faculty of Arts of the same university. After serving as an associate member of a Royal Commission of Inquiry in 1961-1964, he became the first Deputy Minister of the new Quebec Department of Education in 1964, a position he held for five years.

He was president and director general of the Office de planification de développement du Québec from 1969 to 1972, and Deputy Minister for Inter-Governmental Affairs from 1971 to 1977.

For his outstanding contributions to Quebec and Canada, he was made a member of the Royal Society of Canada in 1959. He received the Order of Canada in 1976 and received honourary doctorates from the University of Sherbrooke in 1976, the University of Quebec in 1977 and York University in 1978.

Arthur Tremblay was enjoying a well deserved semi-retirement and had been appointed professor at the École Nationale d'Administration publique, when he was appointed to the Senate by Prime Minister Clark in 1979, thus embarking on a new career.

He brought to the Senate and to the Progressive Conservative Party his immense prestige and credibility, and his competence and experience in federal-provincial relations. His influence as an advisor to political leaders and colleagues, was a decisive factor in the major debates of the past 13 years. In his maiden speech in these precincts, on October 25, 1979, he modestly described his expectations:

> I was being offered the opportunity to serve Quebec and Canada in a more determining and more effective way than I could have otherwise at this time. How could I have, without contradicting in a certain way my previous directions, shirked my duty to be present that such an opportunity demanded?

Describing the political and constitutional situation in 1979, Senator Tremblay continued:

> However, we are all aware that there are considerable differences in the ideas that Quebecers and Canadians in general have about what changes are necessary. The situation has evolved and continues to evolve in Quebec visibly faster than elsewhere in Canada.
>
> Trying to bring harmony and consistency to the rate and direction of these two parallel, not to say divergent, evolving processes is a very difficult task, especially since the time frame is so limited.
>
> Whether we think of the period before or after the referendum—

Of course he was talking about the 1980 referendum.

> —we have little time at our disposal, given the complexity of the plan for renewal that must be developed and the importance of the issue involved.

Since then, as everyone knows, Quebec held a referendum in 1980, the constitutional issue was discussed between 1980 and 1982 and the Constitution was repatriated without Quebec. Finally, there was the Meech Lake Accord. The challenge that Senator Tremblay described in 1979 is even more real today and more urgent than in 1988.

Ten years ago, in an interview with Le Devoir, Senator Tremblay talked about how he saw Canada and federalism:

> Cooperation between the two levels of government is the very essence of federalism. The cultural, linguistic and economic fabric of the country itself make it ungovernable in a unitary, uniform way. The provinces must be considered as constructive forces. If our country is to work, the regional, provincial and federal authorities must cooperate.

For his contribution to the Parliament of Canada and his illustrious career in education and public administration, he won the Edouard Montpetit Medal in 1988, the Order of Quebec in 1991 and his fourth, fifth and sixth honorary doctorates from the University of Waterloo in 1983, Laval University in 1989 and the University of Montreal in 1990. He also earned the respect and admiration of his colleagues in Parliament.

Honourable senators, throughout my career in the Senate and especially in the last six years as a minister, I have had the good fortune to be guided and inspired by Senator Tremblay. In bidding him good bye on behalf of his colleagues on this side, I want to personally convey to him my deepest gratitude for the generous gift of his friendship.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government in the Senate said, tomorrow, June 18, Senator Arthur Tremblay will leave the Senate after serving in this body with diligence and dignity. For nearly 13 years, Senator Tremblay shared with this House his vast knowledge and rich experience.

Senator Tremblay received a very sound education. During my speech, I may often want to repeat some tributes to his distinction and remarkable career. The Leader of the Government mentioned them. It is worth repeating these tributes. He graduated from Laval University and wished to pursue his education at Harvard University and the University of Paris.

Some other institutions have recognized his great scholarship. In particular, he received honorary doctorates from the University of Sherbrooke, the University of Quebec, York University, the University of Waterloo, the University of Montreal and another degree from Laval University.

His career in the public service is no less impressive than his academic career. In 1941, Arthur Tremblay co-founded the Institut d'orientation professionnelle at Laval and several years later, he was named assistant director of the Faculty of Education at Laval University.

With his keen interest in education, Senator Tremblay became vice-president of the Canadian Association of University Teachers in 1954. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, an influential minister in the Lesage Cabinet, made him his executive assistant in 1960. As Senator Murray mentioned, Senator Tremblay then became a member of the Royal Commission of Inquiry on Education in 1961 and Deputy Minister of Education in 1964 (if I am not mistaken, if was the famous Parent Commission). It was just around 1963 or 1964 that he attracted my attention because I was then a member of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission. My colleagues, Professor Scott, Jean-Louis Gagnon, Mr. Lacoste, mentioned what an important member he was of a group of technocrats who took over the administration of the Quebec government. He helped implement the recommendations of the Parent Commission, which made quite a sensation at the time. Its recommendations overthrew a system of education that had existed for two or three centuries in Quebec. Some even say that Senator Tremblay played an important, possibly key, role in reforming Quebec's education system during the Quiet Revolution.

[Senator Murray.]

[English]

Many people recognized Arthur Tremblay's contribution to Quebec and his knowledge of provincial issues. Joe Clark was one such person. In recognition of these characteristics, Mr. Clark had Arthur Tremblay summoned to the Senate in 1979.

Senator Tremblay continued to expand upon his prestigious career while in the Senate. Shortly after his appointment to the Senate, he was appointed to the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada in 1980. He also served, as Senator Murray mentioned, as a member of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, which reported in 1984. That same year he told a Laval University symposium on the reform of federal institutions that Senate reform should come from within. As a starting point he recommended that the Senate elect its own speaker instead of waiting for the Prime Minister to appoint one. I have to resist elaborating on that excellent suggestion. Shall I resist?

Hon. Senators: Yes!

Senator Frith: When Brian Mulroney became Prime Minister, he asked the senator to be a special advisor on constitutional affairs and federal-provincial relations.

Senator Tremblay's constitutional know-how was again employed in 1987 when he was appointed co-chair of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord of 1987, the committee that examined the Meech Lake Accord. This gave Senator Tremblay a chance to spar with another prominent Quebec politician and, many would say, constitutionalist, former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

If I were uncharitable enough to make a comment as to who won that sparring match, I am sure that someone else would be uncharitable enough to say that my judgment is too biased to be trusted in the matter. So I will again resist.

Senator Tremblay's interest in constitutional affairs has persisted to this day. He served on the Beaudoin-Dobbie Commission to the same extent as did I, as an occasional attendant, and he sent in a submission as well. Most recently he has questioned the constitutionality of Bill C-13, the environmental assessment bill.

In addition to his many responsibilities as public servant and senator, Arthur Tremblay is an accomplished author. He has written a number of books and articles. His books include Le Ministère de l'éducation et le Conseil superieur, A Bibliography of Higher Education in Canada, Les Chevauchements des programmes fédéraux et québecois. Articles he has written include "Meech Lake: thoughts and afterthoughts", "Ministère de l'Éducation et le Conseil superieur: antecedents et creation, 1867-1964" and "L'université et l'orientation des jeunes".

Honourable senators, this important Canadian resource is about to be lost to the Senate, but I hope not to his and our country.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérald Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I wish to pay tribute to our friend and colleague, Senator Arthur Tremblay, who is leaving us today.

University professor, deputy minister, senator, author and humanist, Senator Tremblay has become the philosopher and sage of these precincts.

Educated at Laval, Harvard and the Université de Paris, and an academic of great reknown, he was active on several successive levels in this country: at university, in the public service and in the Senate.

He was one of those who were responsible, and I do not use the term loosely, for the Quiet Revolution in Quebec, after playing a major role in education reform in that province.

His prestige as an academic caused the Royal Society of Canada to open its doors to him. A number of universities, as was pointed out by Senator Murray and Senator Frith, bestowed honourary doctorates on our illustrious colleague: Sherbrooke, the Université du Québec, York, Waterloo, Montreal and Laval University. He also had the distinction of receiving the Edouard Montpetit medal.

In 1979, the Right Hon. Joseph Clark appointed him to the Senate. Senator Tremblay was to make a unique contribution to the Upper Chamber of this country. He became an adviser to the Prime Minister on constitutional matters and on federal-provincial relations.

In 1987, he was asked by Prime Minister Mulroney to co-chair the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitutional Accord of 1987. He was to make a lasting mark on this committee, which had focused the attention of the entire country.

Senator Tremblay was an outstanding, distinguished and much sought -after adviser. I remember his appearances before the Pépin-Robarts Commission, where I had the honour to represent Quebec, together with my colleague, Solange Chaput-Rolland, under the chairmanship of Messrs. Pépin and Robarts. Once again he proved his mettle at a crucial moment in our history.

As pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition, he was also one of the advisers to the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, which was to play a vital role in protecting language rights in Canada. More recently, he sent a substantial brief to the Committee on a Renewed Canada, which was carefully considered by all members of this committee.

For senators from Quebec who arrived in the Senate in successive waves, Mr. Tremblay was to a considerable extent, I would say, the conscience of Quebec.

Senator Tremblay, we wish you, and your charming wife who has the privilege of having as one of her ancestors Sir AdolpheBasile Routhier, who wrote the words of the French version of O Canada, the very best.

Hon. Mario Beaulieu: Honourable senators, I cannot let Senator Arthur Tremblay retire without saying farewell and thank you.

When the Right Honourable Joseph Clark appointed him to this place in 1979, he honoured us with one of Quebec's finest minds, a most resourceful man and a highly competent man who not only served Quebec well but Canada as well.

It was a very important move, and a very judicious choice because Senator Tremblay was adding a new dimension to the Senate, as a voice representing Quebec as a whole and we were proud to have him among us.

I first met Senator Tremblay in Quebec City, when I was deputy minister and he, deputy minister of Education. We have worked together on several occasions and both have very happy memories of our collaboration.

I knew him as an honest, disciplined, learned and very knowledgeable person.

I was pleased to have the opportunity of rubbing shoulders with him and benefit from his expertise. We worked within the Conservative Party at rebuilding a program and reorganizing the party.

He is a truly great man. I salute him. I am sad to see him leave. My best wishes to his wife as well. Thank you very much, honourable senators.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Poitras: Honourable senators, I have the honour and the privilege of being a fellow citizen of Senator Arthur Tremblay. I will not pay tribute to the public persona, since a number of senators have already done so. I would like to pay tribute to the man, because a tree is known by its fruits, and in his case, those fruits are many and well known.

I would like to talk to you about the man, about a man who is humble and straightforward, the hallmark of great men.

A man who started a family, a good husband, a good father to his children, and it should come as no surprise that the "fruits" he and his wife produced are excellent. His wife has been the ideal companion in every respect, and I am happy to have this opportunity to say so in her presence today.

To a city like Quebec, a man like Arthur Tremblay is a sign that a community can produce men and women of stature. This is what makes a country great: men and women who are capable of giving throughout their lives. I am sure Senator Tremblay will continue serving his fellow citizens and his country for many years to come.

His training, education, experience and, of course, his judgment have made Senator Tremblay a man much sought after for counsel and advice. For a long time it was Canada's gain, and the senator's alma mater also benefited throughout his career. I am sure his university will continue to enjoy the benefits of his wisdom and that his fellow citizens will consider the senator as a guiding light, an example of how to live their lives.

I know many Quebecers who would be happy to take the same route and do their best to do what he has done.

I therefore wish Senator Tremblay a long life, because we need him and his family needs him even more, and his city as well, and we could all benefit from his experience and knowledge. Finally, I hope we will continue to have the privil,ege of his friendship. Thank you, Arthur.

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I would like to join the other speakers and say that there are two types of situations which occur when someone joins a group or an association. In the first case, it is the person who benefits from the prestige and the honour of being a member of the association, whereas in the second case, it is the institution which benefits from the presence of the new member.

I am convinced that when Senator Tremblay was appointed here, it is the Senate that benefited from his prestige and contribution, and not the reverse.

As several speakers have mentioned, Senator Tremblay was, as well as others which include Senator Bolduc and Senator Castonguay, one of the architects of the guilt revolution in Quebec. Senator Tremblay certainly left his mark, particularly in the field of education.

Now that our colleague is retiring from our institution and is going back to his first love, I wish that he will try to bring about a new reform of education.

When I look at what has happened since 1960 in the Province of Quebec, I realize that there have certainly been some flaws in the field of education. When I see that the new generation can barely read properly, not to mention write, I realize that there is definitely something wrong. When many students do not know the history of their country or of their province, when their knowledge of science and mathematics leaves much to be desired, I cannot help but think that we could certainly use Senator Tremblay's advice and recommendations as to how the education sector should undergo another reform. After all, everybody agrees that the greatest wealth of a country is its young people.

Senator Tremblay, you made a big contribution when you joined our institution. The Senate has benefited from your knowledge as well as from your love for Quebec, a province which you have represented very faithfully in this House.

We wish you the best, honourable senator, and I hope that you will continue to play an important role in our society. Thank you, honourable senators.

Hon. Solange Chaput-Rolland: Honourable senators, there is always a moment of sadness when one of us leaves, but it is also a special moment because all of a sudden senators from both sides of this House agree on the qualities of the person that is leaving. When it is one of yours, we pay tribute to that person, and the same thing happens when it is one of ours. I do not like to see anyone leave, but I wish that there would be more of these special moments in this House.

[Senator Poitras.]

Everybody has waxed eloquently about senator Tremblay's qualities. I see his wife, his staff and his partners up in the gallery. Rather than talk about his great qualities as a constitutionalist, his expertise as an adviser for Quebec, his presence in our province, I would like to emphasize our friendship and thank him for what he has done for a lot of us, including myself since my office was next to his.

Senator Tremblay is the one who showed me where the Senate was, how to behave in that house. I owe him a lot.

Quebec also owes him a lot, not only because of his contribution to education, but perhaps because of the depth of his culture and the accuracy of his words. When there was a problem that would give us difficulties, at least to me because maybe the others could figure it out by themselves, whenever I had problems understanding some aspects of the Constitution or some wording, I would turn to Arthur Tremblay. I would go into his office or he would come into mine and would explain things to me. I owe him a lot regarding the French culture as well as a deeper understanding of the real Quebec, of which he is one of the most prominent figures.

I also want to thank him, as well as his family and staff, for all that he has done here. I wish him a long life and I hope he will drop in time to time. Thank you honourable senators.

[English]

● (1430)

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, when I first came to the Senate in 1984 I knew Arthur Tremblay only by reference—that is, by reading about him in the Quebec press and from listening to him on the radio and the television. It was such a delight in coming here to have almost an instant friend, he was so kind and generous with his time and helped me so much.

Many of us find, upon coming to the Senate, that it is a little difficult for the first couple of years. We have to find our way around. We have to know how to behave ourselves in committees and in the chamber and to do certain things and not do certain other things. Arthur Tremblay was a great help in these areas.

You possess a rare combination, Senator Tremblay—a subtle wit combined with wisdom. Those qualities help so much when one is trying to work through a particular problem. You have a practical combining your wisdom and understanding of the issues. Because of that practical approach, you find the practical answers to problems, and that makes it so much easier to get through the verbiage, and as a result there is a clarity to your answers that rings rather true.

You have been a friend. I join with my colleagues in extending to you and Pauline our appreciation and our affection.

If I have a regret relating to the Senate, I suppose, Arthur, it would be that in 1979, when I was first invited to come to the Senate by the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Joe Clark, I could not accept because of the minority position of our government. Had I been able to come here in 1979, I would have had the pleasure of knowing Arthur Tremblay a little longer. Good luck and good health!

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to pay tribute to Senator Tremblay from the perspective of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, on which we have served together for many years.

Senator Tremblay was a distinguished chairman of that committee. Under his direction the committee dealt with legislation and also produced three reports. The first report was An Analysis of Child and Family Benefits in Canada (1985); the second report was on Child Benefits: Proposal for a Guaranteed Family Supplement, which appeared in 1987, and the third was the Child Care report, 1988.

This committee was an important experience for us all under Senator Tremblay's leadership. Because he insisted on it, the work was always well informed, careful and detailed and painstaking. With great patience, and always with great courtesy and wisdom, he led us to produce excellent reports. Sometimes the work did not go at the speed some of us would have liked. Senator Tremblay will remember those experiences. I was one of those who sometimes wondered whether the work would come out the way it should.

I was relieved, during that period, to read a profile of Senator Tremblay in l'Actualité in which not only his illustrious career was described but also his working methods. His painstaking, careful, wise and excellent work was described, by public servants in Quebec who had worked with him, as being the result of being "Arthurized".

Senator Tremblay, I think you "Arthurized" all the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. We are all much the better for it and very grateful to you. We wish you all the very best in your future.

[Translation]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should not want to let this opportunity pass me by to join in this tribute to our colleague Arthur Tremblay.

I, of course, had known "professor" Arthur Tremblay for a long time, but by repute only. It was not until he was appointed to the Senate that I was introduced to him by one of our old colleagues, as he may recall, namely the honourable senator Maurice Lamontagne. At that time, we used to get together in my office for a drink and to talk about the major issues facing Canada. That is where I met my colleague Arthur.

I must say that, with his usual courtesy, I believe he never referred to me as "his colleague Gildas". He always called me "senator". But we often had chats.

Later, I had a truly interesting experience working with two distinguished senators, Senator Arthur Tremblay and Senator Jean LeMoyne, when I co-chaired the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Senate Reform.

When the time came to draft the report, you can imagine how hard it was, with two experts not only on Canadian and constitutional matters but also on linguistic matters, to produce a report!

Finally, the Committee came to a decision. We asked the two senators, Senator LeMoyne and Senator Tremblay: "Please get together in a hotel room for the weekend and, between the two of you, come to an agreement on this report!" That is exactly what they did.

Let me tell you that the end product was perfect. We did not get one single complaint regarding either the report or the language, French or English. I think it was the first time, or one of the first times, that a Senate report was approved just like that, no questions asked.

Senator Kelly, who had the misfortune of being faced with real linguistic problems as Chairman of the Special Committee on Terrorism, will no doubt recall how important this is when preparing a report.

Senator Tremblay, I personally thank you.

[English]

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, I brashly stand, after listening to such a company of scholars and tribunes, particularly to speak in—may I say it—the other language. I know we will all miss the continuing presence of our colleague. I, in particular, shall miss him. For the seven years that the Doyles have lived in Ottawa, we have had Senator and Mrs. Tremblay as our next door neighbours, and better neighbours one could not have. We arrived at that opinion even without hearing all of the things we have heard this afternoon that, had we known them, might have intimidated us the first time we met in the laundromat.

I have known Senator Tremblay longer than any other member of this chamber. Thirty years ago, the editors of the now defunct Montreal Star became alarmed that the journalists in this country generally, outside of Quebec, had no idea what terrible things were about to happen in the name of maîtres chez-nous, so they sent an invitation to a closed gathering of editors and columnists in Montreal. That gathering lasted for two days and we were subjected to alarms and aspersions from all sorts of celebrities. I remember in particular Eric Kierans, Marcel Parizeau, René Lévesque and Arthur Tremblay, part of a noble company. I might say that those of us from English Canada hurried home to caution our colleagues about what things were afoot in Lower Canada, and to tell them to be prepared and perhaps change their ways.

My publisher was so impressed by all this that he arranged a dinner party for a few of his friends, 30 odd souls like Leslie Frost, Wally McCutcheon and such. We told them what the risks and dangers were. Now this was 30 years ago. I might say that we were hardly through our program when Wally McCutcheon rose up, turned to my publisher and said, "Now listen here", he said, "I know Quebec very well". He said, "I go down their for meetings all the time and I meet the people." And he said, "There is no problem down there." And I hesitated in acknowledging the hospitality that had been shown to us; I hesitated to pass that message on to those who had spoken so eloquently. All I can say now is that it must be a great comfort for Arthur to know that now Ontario is totally enlightened, just as he intended it to be, and Quebec is totally satisfied with the state of affairs.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Thank you, Senator Doyle. He has a particular way of expressing things so well with his humour. So thank you very much, dear neighbour.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, in the past three quarters of an hour, I had a thought that perhaps I should not express. Perhaps Senator Roblin was not altogether wrong in staying away from the ritual adieux in the Senate when a senator retires on reaching the mandatory age.

To be sure, modesty is sorely tested in such a circumstance. So you will understand that I may have been tempted to imitate the one who for a long time was my leader in this House.

On the other hand, I gladly admit (in all modesty, of course) that it is not unpleasant—far from it—to hear oneself talked about as has just been done!

[English]

Not only is it not unpleasant, but it is even reassuring in a certain way to hear people say that what you have tried to accomplish has had an impact on the development of your country and that you have been able, through your actions, to be of use to those you have tried to serve.

[Translation]

There is thus some ambivalence in what I just said.

Usually, in ambivalent situations of this kind or faced with contradictory impulses (forced to look inside oneself, for all practical purposes), I have always felt that it was better not to give in to one's spontaneous intuition but to follow custom and tradition. That is why, although I was tempted, perhaps, I still came this afternoon.

One reason that I came was to thank those who spoke. Senator Murray, I was very touched by what you said! Of course, I do not forget that we are from the same batch of senators, so to speak, since we were appointed to the Senate by Mr. Clark in the same year.

But there is more than that. I will just mention this episode, if we can call it that. I do not forget that when we had to take a position right here in the Senate on the constitutional resolution in 1981, the situation was quite dramatic for Quebecers. At that time, you too said no to that way of proceeding to achieve an objective that everyone agreed with: finally repatriating the Constitution. But the way things were done made it quite difficult for some Quebecers to agree.

Senators from outside could surely understand it much better. Nevertheless, your perception of what was happening in Quebec led you to join us and I really thank you with all my heart.

Senator Frith, I am very grateful to you too for everything you said. You mentioned some occasions when we were able to talk to each other. I think that you went to see Jean Marchand when you were on the Bilingualism Commission. That was one occasion when we saw each other and could talk.

Later, when I came to the Senate, we were in power and you were in opposition. But before long, the tables were turned. The incident I want to mention occurred some time after we were back in opposition, I think. I do not know how it happened, but at some point, we exchanged Latin quotations that I have forgotten. That was at a time when I had not yet fully understood how the party system worked in the Senate, if I may point that out. I was still quite ignorant of how far that might go! Unfortunately, I came to see that it went very far. I will say no more.

With their permission, I will thank all together the other senators who spoke.

To conclude, honourable senators, I will share with you some thoughts that came to mind. I thought of my parents, especially when my educational achievements were mentioned. My parents were of very low estate. My father was a lumberjack.

How they were able to have me, the eldest in a large family, educated in a classical college has always remained a mystery. They must have been willing to make sacrifices to do it. Something my father always said to me was, "Arthur, you will not have to do what I did." My whole academic career began right there. That is what I remembered. I share this memory with you; of course, it stirs deep feelings in me. Thank you, honourable senators.

• (1450)

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

[English]

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am sure no one would want the day to go by without knowing about the clock. For the democrats there are 157 days left, and for the cowardly and contemptuous of democracy there are 543 days left.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare, for Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SEVENTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-8, An Act to regulate the manufacture and importation of motor vehicles and motor vehicle equipment to reduce the risk of death, injury and damage to property and the environment, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, May 7, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with four amendments:

1. That the English version of clause 2 be amended by striking out lines 20 to 22 on page 1.

2. That clause 12 be amended by adding, immediately after line 3 on page 11, the following:

   " (5) A technical standards document is not, prior to its incorporation by reference into a regulation, a statutory instrument for the purposes of the Statutory Instruments Act."

3. That clause 13 be amended by striking out line 15 on page 11 and substituting the following:

   "not a regulation for the purposes"

4. That Schedule I be amended by striking out items 2 and 3 on page 17 and substituting the following:

   "2. Equipment for use in the restraint of children and disabled persons".

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Chairman

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator DeWare, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

MR. BORIS YELTSIN, PRESIDENT OF RUSSIA

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, June 18, I will move:

THAT at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Friday, 19th June, 1992, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings to permit Honourable Senators to attend the Joint Address by Boris Yeltsin, President of Russia, to be delivered in the House of Commons Chamber; and

That the Address of Mr. Yeltsin, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an Appendix to the Debates of the Senate of that day.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1992-93

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-87, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service of Canada for the financial year ending 31st March, 1993.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Friday, June 19, 1992.

[Translation]

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

EIGHTY-SEVENTH CONFERENCE, YAOUNDÉ, CAMEROON—REPORT TABLED

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the eighty-seventh report of the Interparliamentary Conference held in Yaoundé, Cameroon, April 6 to 11, 1992.

● (1500)

[English]

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Senator Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at 4 o'clock in the afternoon tomorrow, Thursday, June 18, 1992, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Hébert, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 75 residents of Ontario who object to the good and services tax. Most of these petitions are from Brampton, Bramalea, Peterborough, Thornhill, Scarborough and Toronto.

Honourable senators, again on behalf of Senator Hébert, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 579 residents of British Columbia who object to the goods and services tax. These petitions are mainly from Vancouver, Logan Lake and Surrey, where a total of 579 residents say they strenuously object to the GST and hope against hope that the present government will lend an ear, however distracted, to their request.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR

AIR INDUSTRY—LABOUR PRACTICES OF NATIONAIR AIR LINE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, some material concerning the labour situation at Nationair was provided for me last week by an employee of Nationair, and I rise in the hope that the Leader of the Government in the Senate may be able either to provide or to obtain some information relating to a labour dispute at Nationair.

Nationair is said to be Canada's third largest airline flying charter flights all over the world. It is alleged that when Nationair's flight attendants tried to form a union, 17 of them were fired, whereupon the Canada Labour Relations Board informed Nationair that such practices are illegal. It is further alleged that when ten flight attendants refused to work beyond an 18 hour day, it is alleged that the company fired them and claimed damages from them.

Apparently these contract talks have lasted over four months, and it is said to be a very bitter dispute. I am sure management has counter-statements that it would wish to make in reply to these allegations.

It is alleged further that Nationair locked out its flight attendants in Toronto and Montreal and hired replacements at a training cost of more that $200,000.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

Are any efforts being extended by the Minister of Labour to try to resolve what appears to be a very bitter dispute in a troubled industry.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must confess that this is the first time this matter has come to my attention. I will ask my colleague Mr. Danis if he has any information on this matter that he can communicate to the Senate.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INTERCESSION IN LAMONT-SPENCER CASE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, following up on a question I asked him on Thursday, June 11, 1992.

Honourable senators, I must say that I was not impressed with the arrogance shown by the Leader of the Government that day in answering my question. He left me with the impression that questions may be asked in the Senate, but one has to be careful how one words them.

My question today, as I said, arises from that question, and it concerns the Lamont-Spencer situation. Although the Leader of the Government in the Senate made me feel that I did not know what I was talking about when I asked the question, since then a committee of the other place has had the chance to question officials of the Department of Justice; members from all parties have come to the conclusion that in fact the Secretary of State for External Affairs should move on the question and should revisit the file, which in fact was the question I put to the minister. I was talking about the possible expulsion by Brazil of the two people concerned.

Part of his reply to my question was:

> I think the point is moot anyway, because it is my understanding that the government of that country would not do so in any event.

That is contrary to the information that was given to the committee by the lawyers representing Spencer and Lamont in Brazil.

Therefore, I ask the Minister again, now that a committee of the other place representing members of all parties has come to that conclusion and is about to present, or has already presented, a motion to the House of Commons asking the Minister to revisit that file and change her mind, will he now take a kinder approach to my question?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no doubt that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will give all due and careful attention to the report of this parliamentary committee.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Comeau, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, for the second reading of Bill C-71, An Act to amend the Criminal Records Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise and speak on second reading of Bill C-71, which deals with amendments to the Criminal Records Act. I want to say at the outset that I agree with the principle of the bill and its objectives. Moreover, I congratulate Honourable Senator Comeau on his excellent explanation of the bill and how it is meant to improve the operation of the Criminal Records Act.

● (1510)

All senators, I am sure, are cognizant of the traditional Royal prerogative of mercy. In addition, there are provisions in the Criminal Code which extend the Royal mercy, by way of pardon, to persons sentenced to imprisonment. Likewise, the code also provides that a person convicted in proceedings by indictment may apply to the Minister of Justice for mercy by way of a new trial or an appeal of conviction.

In addition, we have the Criminal Records Act, which has been in our statutes since 1970, and which provides a further means by which a person convicted of an offence can obtain the exercise of the prerogative of mercy or of pardon from a criminal conviction. This is the act which Bill C-71 intends to amend.

In passing, it should be noted that the bill specifically preserves the Royal prerogative of mercy and the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to pardons.

As Senator Comeau has explained, under the present provisions of the act a person convicted of an offence, in order to avail himself of its terms, had to apply to the Solicitor General who would then refer the application to the National Parole Board. The board, subject to certain time constraints, would institute inquiries to ascertain the behaviour of the applicant since his conviction. After completion of such inquiries, the board would then report to the minister on the result thereof with recommendations as to whether a pardon should be granted or not. If the board was not prepared to recommend a pardon, the applicant would then be given an opportunity to make representations to the board. After all of that took place, the board would then transmit its recommendation to the minister who, in turn, would then refer the matter to the Governor in Council, who may then grant the pardon.

All of this procedure, as Senator Comeau has said, is cumbersome, time-consuming and costly. It involves much paperwork and time of officials and cabinet ministers. The increase in the number of applications has resulted in long delays in dealing with applications and a great backlog of cases, which Senator Comeau has detailed.

Because of this, over the years, there has been considerable criticism of the system. As a result, at long last a move has been made to streamline the procedure.

Under the proposed new scheme, the Parole Board is to be given exclusive jurisdiction to grant, refuse or revoke pardons. This will result in a much speedier and more efficient handling of applications. One very important change that is proposed is to delete the provision of the act that deemed absolute and conditional discharges granted by a criminal court judge to be convictions for the sake of gaining pardons. This was unjust, and its removal will reduce considerably the numbers of applications which were heretofore required.

The details of the proposed changes to the act have been well detailed by Senator Comeau. I feel that they go a long way towards improving the whole pardon system, even if it is so late in coming. As such, I believe the bill deserves our support. Having said that, I feel there are a few comments I should make which may be of interest to senators who will sit on the committee, if and when the bill is so considered.

First, the Criminal Records Act, as I have said, is one of the means by which a person convicted of an offence can obtain the exercise of the prerogative of mercy or of pardon from a criminal conviction. It provides that after stated periods of time, such a person can have his or her record of conviction taken off the slate so that they will henceforth not be under that cloud.

It is to be noted, however, that the act deals only with the question of the granting of pardons. It does not deal with the management of criminal records. As such, the act is misnamed. It should really have been entitled the pardons act, or some such title, making it clear that it deals only with the record of conviction. As such, the name is misleading. Further, neither the act nor the present bill define what is meant by "criminal record", "pardon", or "good conduct" which, from a technical point of view, leaves some questions up in the air.

Whilst a pardon granted under the act has the effect of vacating the conviction, and removes the fact of the conviction from the offender's record so that he or she can say truthfully that they have no criminal conviction, it does nothing to provide for the removal or the closing to public scrutiny of police files or court records of trial. In this respect, it must be remembered that where an offender pleads guilty to, or is found guilty at trial of an offence, this fact will be in the public court record. Then again, court proceedings are given wide publicity by various media. No provisions are made to deal with this aspect. Records remain where they are.

Whilst not defining "pardon", the bill only tries to show what is its effect. You will see from clause 5 of the bill that "pardon" is evidence that the Parole Board is satisfied in the case of indictable offences, or what we might call serious offences, that the offender has been of good conduct and, in the case of all offenders, so pardoned, the conviction should no longer reflect adversely on the offender's character. It does not provide that such conviction shall not adversely affect the person pardoned. It is only a pious hope.

It is to be recognized that by the time the pardon has been granted, the record of conviction has, in many cases, come into many private hands such as the records of insurance companies and bonding houses. No provision is made to eradicate these records.

With respect to the provision that the Parole Board has been satisfied as to the good conduct of an applicant, there is no definition as to what this means. Is it restricted just to the absence on the part of the offender of criminality, or does it intend, and can it be interpreted, to mean just unsocial behaviour? This should probably be made more clear, otherwise there may be complaints as to the basis on which the board renders its decisions in the future.

Another problem that arises concerns the question of correcting the record of convictions that may have been supplied to other countries. Remember, many years may intervene between conviction and pardon. This is a particular problem as it relates to border services with the United States. There is apparently a mutual exchange of such information which may adversely affect cross-border travellers. No mechanism has been provided, as far as I can determine, to require American authorities to delete notations of convictions from their records once a pardon has been granted. Senator Comeau has made reference to this state of affairs and to our inability to force other countries to delete such records, but surely there should be some provision to cover this situation.

Honourable senators, despite the foregoing, in my opinion, the proposed bill is an improvement over the present situation. I support it in principle and trust it will be given further study in committee.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Comeau, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

[Senator Lewis.]

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

On the Order:

The Senate in Committee of the Whole on the Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. John Lynch-Stauton: Honourable senators, I am informed that the minister of Veterans Affairs is here. As agreed, Imove that we go into Committee of the Whole and invite him. with his officials, to discuss Bill C-84 with us.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Bill, the Honourable Senator Gerald R. Ottenheimer in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 21 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Gerald Stairs Merrithew, Minister of Veterans Affairs, was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I think everyone knows the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The honourable Gerald Merrithew is the member of parliament for Saint John, New Brunswick. He is a parliamentarian of very long experience, having served in the New Brunswick legislature for 12 years in three different portfolios. He came to Parliament in 1984, and has served in a number of portfolios here, Minister of State (Mines and Forestry) among them. He has been Minister of Veterans Affairs since 1988.

Without further ado, Mr. Chairman, I invite the minister to make an opening statement and then to take questions from members of the committee concerning this bill.

The Hon. Gerald Stairs Merrithew, Minister of Veterans Affairs: Thank you very much, Senator Murray, Mr. Chairman, honourable senators. I welcome the opportunity to appear before the Senate in Committee of the Whole regarding Bill C-84, which is basically an omnibus bill dealing with two main issues, those being benefits for the merchant mariners and amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act regarding allied resistance fighters.

I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to congratulate our colleague, Senator Jack Marshall, and his Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs for the part they played in giving birth to Bill C-84. Believe me, there is no shortage of people lined up to take credit for that particular government initiative, but Senator Marshall has been very tenacious. He has worked very hard and long to bring these benefits to this very special group of veterans.

I think you have found that the legislation responds to the recommendations put forward by your Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs. In fact, the bill you are considering today, C-84, is both practical and symbolic. It gives our merchant navy veterans the same access to benefits as wartime veterans of the Canadian Armed Forces and also recognizes the importance of the role played by the merchant navy in time of war. That is extremely important.

Up until now, merchant navy veterans enjoyed most of the benefits, but were not regarded as veterans. This bill will make them merchant navy veterans. They take part in our veterans' parades but they are generally not up front with the veterans of and Army, Navy and Air Force. Bill C-84 says, in effect, that the merchant navy was the fourth arm of the service.

Merchant navy veterans have been campaigning for this type of legislation for a long time, essentially since the war. The government wants them to start reaping their long-awaited benefits on July 1. Therefore, as you probably know, the other place voted unanimously for Bill C-84. In fact, all parties were most cooperative in passing it in all stages, including clause-by-clause in Committee of the Whole House, in one sitting day.

I understand, honourable senators, that there has been some concern about the changes affecting the resistance members encompassed in this bill. Let us go back to the start of the War Veterans Allowance Program in 1930. It was passed by Parliament in the thirties, and has been amended several times since then, to help those who had survived World War I and were then down and out financially. Parliament reasoned that those who had spent many months in the wet, slimy, rat-infested trenches were likely to age more quickly than someone who had spent the war by the home fire. With typical black humour, the veterans dubbed it "the burnt out pension". In fact, it is not a pension at all; it is income assistance to needy veterans.

Moving up to today, if these amendments are not approved, the War Veterans Allowance Program will become a program primarily assisting members of the allied resistance groups. Without Bill C-84, resistance members are projected to account for 60 per cent of this program within five years, many of whom would have been far too young to serve in uniform in time of war. In fact, of the approximately 1700 applicants who are in the queue and were cut off by my announcement on March 2, 1992, 85 per cent would have been children too young to serve in uniform in time of war.

In addition, as you know, we have to validate their service. The certificates validating resistance make no distinction between the kinds of resistance or underground service they had in time of war. They could have been a saboteur, they could have carried a rifle or they could have carried water to someone else. It is an extremely time consuming process to verify that. We have no employees in other countries verifying this, so it is an extremely difficult procedure.

Honourable senators, we are paying tax-free benefits to 5,500 people who had no formal military history. Another 1700 are lined up trying to join them. If we accepted them, it would cost $30 million in retroactive payments and an ongoing annual expenditure of around $17 million.

Incidentally, we are the only country in the world to give benefits to allied resistance fighters. I think we have been more than fair in grandfathering the war veterans allowance rights being enjoyed by those initial 5,500 who won their eligibility by an interpretation of the War Veterans Allowance Act by a quasi-judicial body, or indeed by a judicial body, never with the intent of Parliament to give those kinds of benefits to resistance fighters. No Parliament since the inception of this act in 1930 intended for resistance fighters to get these benefits.

Let us remember, honourable senators, that these 5,500 people, a third of whom took their money and went back to their homelands, became eligible not by government intent, but by quasi-judicial interpretation.

Bill C-84 will return the War Veterans Allowance Program to its original intent, that being income assistance to our uniformed military personnel. You should know, honourable senators, that individual veterans and veterans' associations are fully supportive of the steps we are taking with regard to the issue of resistance fighters. I know that you have all been apprised of this by the Royal Canadian Legion, which has written each of you individually to indicate its support for both parts of Bill C-84. The Legion represents, of course, 600,000 veterans in Canada. At their annual meeting, to be held this weekend in Quebec city, they will deal with Resolution No. 16 regarding this issue.

Having said that, I am prepared to answer whatever questions honourable senators may have.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I neglected to identify the officials with Mr. Merrithew. They are Mr. David Nicholson, Assistant Deputy Minister of Veterans Affairs, and Mr. Keith Bell, Director of Income Support from that department.

• (1530)

Senator Marsden: Minister, for our side, we are extremely pleased that the government has at long last brought in a pension provision for the merchant navy veterans. On this side of the house, we have been strong supporters of Senator Marshall's struggle for this pension for merchant marine veterans; indeed, we wish that his bill had been accepted by this house originally. We certainly all voted with him. So you understand that there is absolutely no difficulty or ambivalence or question about the pension for the members of the merchant navy.

Our difficulty arises with clause 6.1, which you have addressed, the war resisters clause. Let me be very precise about where our difficulty lies.

There are many parts of this bill that represent no difficulty at all. We are not opposed to changing the existing situation so that any future claimants might be ineligible. We are not opposed to the residency requirement. Indeed, we are not opposed to most provisions of this bill.

Our difficulty lies with the manner in which those who have applied for war veterans allowance as resisters—and whose applications are still under consideration, either directly or because of an appeal to the War Veterans Appeal Board, and who are awaiting a ruling by that board—will be, by the provisions of this bill, cut off. This bill then becomes, for such cases, a retroactive measure that lacks the principles of justice and fairness we believe are required in the laws of this country.

I wish to reiterate that we are not saying that those claimants should be necessarily eligible for a pension. If 85 per cent are not eligible, which is what you have just said in your remarks, then we agree that the claims should be disallowed.

What we are asking for is due process for those claimants. Some of them may very well be eligible for the allowance because they are truly war resisters. You know, as we all know, that people in such circumstances have played a very key role in the wars this country has fought. Those of us who have had relatives taken prisoner know how important the resistance movements were.

We are also aware of the parliamentary clock. We know that there is not necessarily enough time for an amendment. We are also very aware of the remarks made by Mr. Justice MacKay in the Alberta courts yesterday on a case heard in front of that court. He urged the people bringing the case to make an expedited sitting in front of Associate Chief Justice Jerome to deal with the matter. So we are aware of the fact that, should this bill pass in its current state, there would likely be legal action and appeals up to the Supreme Court.

Our question is this: Can the minister describe a procedure which he could undertake to deal with all the cases which were in the hands of the Department of Veterans Affairs at the time Bill C-84 was introduced to Parliament on June 4, 1992.

Mr. Merrithew: Honourable senators, out of habit, I shall stand in giving my answer to this question.

I wish to point out that the government gave this bill a good deal of consideration. We intended the matter to unfold in this way. The government dealt with this particular issue very deliberately in that it knew this was never the intent. It saw what was happening to a program that was never intended for this group.

However, we have taken certain steps. We called in the RCMP, as everyone is aware. There were a number of applicants — some that were in the queue and some that were already recipients of the benefit —who received their benefit fraudulently.

As I say, we called in the RCMP for the inspection, and that inspection is ongoing. At that time, we also wanted to tighten the system of verification of that service and validation of the certificates required to prove service. That meant drawing in another country. We met with officials from Great Britain. It meant changing the system entirely in that country, or any other country from which the applicant came. So it was a long and time-consuming process. There was no intent to try to slow the process down.

When the government did make a final decision in February of this year, it made a determination to cut off those applicants that were in the queue as of March 2, 1992.

Senator Marsden: Let me be clear, Mr. minister; we are not suggesting that, if there are fraudulent claims, such claims should be recognized, any more than we would under unemployment insurance or any of the myriad of programs that this government operates in the country. We are not suggesting that for a moment. So let us put fraud aside.

We are also aware that this is a difficult and time-consuming procedure. Your officials have made me aware of the difficulties involved, and I am sympathetic to that. However, it is entirely possible that among those 1700 cases there are perfectly legitimate claims being made. We suggest that it is not proper for the government to intervene retroactively.

There are cases in front of the courts—and you know more about them than we do, no doubt, but what we are suggesting is that, inconvenient though it may be, some process to uphold the standard of fairness and justice and due process that this country has is required in this case. It would be helpful to us all if the minister could indicate whether that is possible.

Mr. Merrithew: Honourable senators, the issue here is one of the intent of the legislation. You mentioned that they were perfectly legitimate claims. They might have been at the time. However, the government made a decision that they are no longer legitimate claims. We do not wish to honour resistance service. However, the government was extremely generous in allowing those that entered the system because of an interpretation by a quasi-judicial body to continue to receive benefits as long as they remain in this country or return to this country by March 2, 1993.

The fact of the matter is that there was a deliberate decision made. We wished to discontinue the eligibility of resistance fighters for this particular benefit and return to the original intent of the legislation, and the government did just that.

Senator Marsden: Mr. Minister, there are Canadian citizens who applied for this veterans' allowance two years ago or more, whose documentation has been completed, who applied under a circumstance similar to that under which others were receiving the allowance. It appeared that it was a perfectly proper procedure for such people to apply for such an allowance. As you know, claims have been made that the Department of Veterans Affairs has been stalling so as to prevent access from 1990 forward. There is one clear case, and there are many others.

You raised the question of people living abroad; I am not talking about that. You raised the question of fraudulence; I am not talking about. I am talking about those Canadian citizens who have applied for this allowance under circumstances similar to the circumstances under which others were receiving the allowance.

I want to be absolutely clear: Are you telling us this afternoon that you are prepared at this stage, years after these applicants have applied, to cut them off retroactively? Is that what you are telling us?

Mr. Merrithew: You mentioned that documentation could have been completed. That may very well be. The process by which we make approvals was not completed. Anyone who had approval by March 2, 1992, received the allowance. Those who were in the queue, regardless of the stage at which they applied, were turned down.

That was a deliberate government decision. We were making a change; we were revisiting the original policy and the original intent of the legislation. That was a deliberate decision by the government.

● (1540)

Senator Marsden: In other words, the government is saying that it will not give any consideration to those citizens of this country who were legitimate war resisters and who applied for this allowance. The government has decided that some are eligible and others are not. The only criteria that may differentiate them is the date of March 2, 1992. Is that the case?

Mr. Merrithew: This is the third time that I have tried to repeat this: The government reviewed the matter. We took all the steps that we possibly could to deal with what we saw to be a difficult program to administer, a difficult program to document the kind of service that they had, and a difficult program to deal with fraudulent applications. Therefore the government made a decision to go back to the original intent.

We amended the legislation to tighten down the definition of what kind of service is eligible under the War Veterans Allowance Program. There are many veterans here who know exactly what was intended at that time. We are going back to that. That is the decision that we made. It is fully supported by the veterans of this country and, indeed, by the public.

Senator Marsden: No, it is not fully supported by the veterans of this country. It may be fully supported by the legion, which will perhaps pass its resolution next week. I think you are making a greater claim than can be made, but no doubt many veterans support it.

It must say to the members of the committee that the minister's answer is abundantly clear. The difficulty is that criminal procedures are also very difficult and time-consuming. The principle is the same here, that some people will be treated very unfairly. I find this section of the bill highly unsatisfactory.

Senator Perrault: I support the bill. I think that, on balance, it is worthy of support.

What is the average age of the merchant seamen who will receive this benefit? Do we have any idea of how old they are? How many claimants are expected?

Mr. Merrithew: The average age of our uniformed veterans is 71.1 years of age. We do know that the merchant mariners were, on average, older than our uniformed veterans. However, since they are not all on our roles for any of the various programs, it is very difficult for us to determine that. On average, we would guess that they would be the mid-seventies—75 or thereabouts.

Some 2,000 applicants will benefit from the changes made to the various programs under Bill C-84 that will now bring them in and make them eligible for benefits.

Senator Perrault: This is a philosophical speculation, but why has it taken so long? I am not blaming this government specifically—other governments have listened to appeals and have not acted on them—but what has been the impediment to providing these benefits before now?

Mr. Merrithew: There are people in this chamber who were here throughout, and who dealt with this issue, so I will not try to recreate history or redebate that particular issue. I want to make sure that everyone understands that the merchant mariners of this nation were eligible for almost all of the programs—that is, except long-term care—that our uniformed veterans are eligible for. However, the access by which they would get into these programs was not as wide. There was more restricted access to the programs. Therefore they felt that they were not treated in the same way as were uniformed veterans, but in fact they were.

What caused the problem? The greatest problem after the war was that in this country we had more than a million men and women that we had to demobilize. We had to get them back on "civvy street"; get them retrained; get them back to university and re-establish their credits and all the training schemes we had, for example the Veterans Land Act.

The problem was that our merchant marine, which at that time had grown to a large merchant marine, had every intention of continuing at the end of the war. The people who were in the merchant marine at the end of the war intended to continue with it, and they had jobs. The people and the governments of that particular day said, "Our priority has to be our uniformed veterans." That has happened time and again, over the years. Therefore that was probably one of the fairly good reasons that existed for it at the time.

I will not try to answer for other governments in the intervening years; I can only answer for what this government is doing.

Senator Frith: I want to thank you for making the government's position clear as you have, in some cases, by repeating your information.

I want to be sure about two things: First, that I do understand the government's position; and, second, that you understand ours. I am not as sure about the second as I am about the first.

The government's position is that there is good reason, on the basis of experience, to shut down this program of pensions for resistance fighters. One of the most glaring reasons is that some of the applications are made by people who are of an age that they could not even possibly have been resistance fighters.

The difficulty is that somehow you have interpreted our questions as quarrelling with the objective of the legislation on resistance fighters. It is understood that everyone here supports the merchant navy portions; we are only talking about the resistance fighter side and their pensions.

There has been a program in effect, and people have applied. There has also been an experience of abuse and the government has decided to shut down the program. Is that a fair summary of the situation, and that this is a deliberate decision by the government?

Somehow our questions are being interpreted as if we disagree with shutting down the program, which is not our concern. Our concern is with the process, which establishes a precedent for retroactive legislation. That is my only concern and, I think, Senator Marsden's only concern.

Principles most frequently turn up in cases where their breach is rationalized on the grounds of the specific circumstances of the case. But the situation is still that we had a law in this country that enabled people to make applications for pensions as resistance fighters. The government decided to change that law. Frankly, I am quite persuaded about the good reason fore the change.

The bill itself was introduced on June 4 and it is retroactive to March 2. That does not seem like much. Everyone says, "Well, what do you expect? These people do not have any rights. They are all wrong anyway." Maybe they are. But what is to change that principle? For example, someone has a law suit pending based on a law of the land. They are half-way along in the law suit and suddenly the government—not necessarily your government, but any government—says "That right no longer exists. That right is being removed retroactively."

On the basis of what you have told me, I would not be surprised if you accepted our suggestion, namely, that you simply process the applications that are in the stream now. I doubt that you would hear any complaints from anyone if you disallowed them all in the course of processing. The problem lies with the principle of the retroactivity. I have no difficulty with saying that there will be no more applications accepted, but to retroactively shut off applications—I am not referring to the cause of any particular resistance fighter applying, but just to the principle—is something that I have some difficulty with. You could end up with the same resultby simply saying, "Effective June 2, there will be no more claims accepted. We will process the claims that we have," and then you reject all the claims. You end up with the same result.

You do not, by doing that, breach the principle of retroactivity.

[Senator Frith.]

Mr. Merrithew: I want to mention the dollar figure. There are 1700 of these people, and it involves an enormous amount of money. It is really skewing the whole intent of the program, which is very valuable for our uniformed veterans, our formal military, not only here in Canada but in Great Britain and in other countries, who served in the time of war.

Senator Frith: Disallow them all.

Mr. Merrithew: This decision is effective. There has to be a cut-off date. We chose that date. The government agreed to that date at the time, and we announced it. We cannot go back. How far back? Maybe we should cut everybody off. Maybe we should not have been generous and let those people who have already sneaked in, most of them between 1985 and 1990, into the system. Maybe we should have cut them all off. We had the choice of doing that. We did not do that. We were extremely generous. Those that earned their entitlement because of an interpretation of a definition in the act were allowed to stay. We were very generous. We never intended for those people even to become recipients, as well as the other people who lined up in the system. The fact is that the government made a firm decision and a cut-off date was chosen. The government concurred and we cut off those people in the queue.

Senator Frith: That is the fourth time you have said that, and I guess I did not make myself clear. There is no question that it was a deliberate decision. We are not saying that you did it accidentally or that you did not realize that you had casually sideswiped someone. I know it was a deliberate decision. I understand that. That is what Parliament is here for, to review deliberate decisions. I am not suggesting it was accidental. I am simply raising the fact that the consequence of that decision is retroactivity. It is a breach of the principle that you do not pass a law with retroactive effect, if you can avoid it. I cannot see that it is difficult to understand that a law that is introduced in June 1992 and takes effect in March of that year is retroactive in application. I guess the only answer I want is, "Yes, we did that, we knew it was retroactive and it does not bother us." If it does not bother you, all we can do is propose an amendment. If you will say to me, "We know we did it, we know it was retroactive, we will not change its retroactive application", then we will know that you do not care whether or not the legislation is retroactive.

Mr. Merrithew: Honourable senators, when we made that particular announcement on March 2, we indicated that the program for that particular group would cease as of that date. At the same time we said that the government intended to amend the legislation, and we have done that in the fastest time possible. That is the reason we have this particular piece of legislation before us now. The fact is, the decision was made. Call it retroactive if you will. We announced at that time that the legislation would be amended, and we have done just that.

Senator Frith: You do not see any distinction, minister, between saying that there will be no more applications accepted as of March, 1992, and saying that the program will be shut down and that anyone who made a valid application prior to that date will be excluded? Do you not see the retroactive effect of that? It is retroactive because you have shut off those in the stream: They made applications at a time when they were entitled to do so. If you say, "Yes, I see the distinction and I do not care", then I guess we have it straight.

Mr. Merrithew: As I mentioned, we did not take away any benefits from those who were in the program then. We made the decision—

Senator Frith: There is a difference between being entitled to apply and having an application in.

Mr. Merrithew: Nor did we freeze the applicants at the time. We said, "Effective March 2, 1992, this particular client group will not be eligible for that program." It was for a very good reason. In 1987, only 5 years ago, this particular group took 2 per cent of the applicants and 6 per cent of the dollars. In five years the whole program will be skewed such that they take 60 per cent.

Senator Frith: I am not arguing about that.

Mr. Merrithew: The government has made a firm decision and we are not changing that.

Senator Frith: I take it that the retroactivity does not trouble the government, and I guess I will have to give up at this point.

Senator Bonnell: Mr. Chairman, first I would like to welcome the minister to the chamber and tell him that in this place he need not stand up each time. He can sit back, relax and enjoy himself, because he might be with us here a few years down the road. If you do not get the Constitution straightened out, maybe you will not even have to get elected.

I would like to ask a couple of questions. The first one relates to the merchant seaman. Why are they not called war veterans?

Mr. Merrithew: I will take your advice and sit. We chose to do that purposely. People who served in the armed forces are obviously armed forces veterans. The key word is "veteran". These are merchant navy veterans as opposed to armed forces veterans. It is all semantics. They are veterans; they get the same benefits as the veterans who served in uniform. They are very proud of being merchant navy veterans, they we are not opposed to that name at all.

Senator Bonnell: Was anybody else opposed to that name? If so, is that why you left out the words "war veterans"?

Mr. Merrithew: We spent a long time on this. We gave this particular issue the longest and most thorough policy review since World War II. We consulted with the Merchant Mariners Coalition, the National Council of War Veterans, the Army, Navy and Air Force and the Royal Canadian Legion. We have had literally hundreds of hours of discussions. I do not remember it being brought to my attention that they wanted to be called war veterans. I do not think it should matter. They are proud to be merchant navy veterans. The key to this whole term is the word "veteran". They had never been called veterans before and that is something they take a great deal of pride in.

Senator Bonnell: I congratulate you for bringing this bill before us. I only wish you had done it sooner. Sometimes you cannot persuade all your colleagues to move as fast as you and I would like them to. I have received some calls from a few of these merchant seaman veterans wondering why they were not called war veterans. I suspect it was a deliberate decision. As long as they are qualified and receive all the benefits, I am happy.

Mr. Merrithew: They want the benefits.

Senator Bonnell: They want them by July 1, and, after this bill is passed, they want you to proclaim the act as quickly as possible.

Mr. Merrithew: Honourable senators, I am prepared this afternoon to call the Governor General to come in for Royal Assent, if you will give it third reading. I can therefore take any amendments to the regulations through cabinet tomorrow morning and we will have it by July 1. I am here to cooperate and I am sure you are too.

Senator Frith: Why don't you cooperate? We did all the cooperating.

Mr. Merrithew: I would hope so.

Senator Bonnell: Let me ask a question about the word "service". Did the department spend much time in trying to define the word "service" as distinct from service for war veterans?

Mr. Merrithew: A great deal. We spent a lot of time in the definition of what a merchant navy veteran is. It is an extremely complicated question. We wanted to make sure that we excluded every group that wanted to be excluded—for example, the saltwater fishermen. We included all those who saw service on the high seas, including those who were under fire in dangerous waters. A great deal of time was spent on the exact wording of the definition of a merchant navy veteran. That is not an easy thing to do. Of course that is exactly the thing that causes all the difficulty in the allied resistance, the interpretation of a definition. We wanted to make it as thorough, as careful and as clear as we could. I could go through the interpretation of what is included, but I suspect you would know the issue as well as I.

• (1600)

Senator Bonnell: Well, I do not know it as well as you do, but I do not need you to go through all that detail.

It seems to me that a uniformed veteran comes into service the day he signs up, and he is still in service until he gets back to his homeland and is discharged. On the other hand, it seems that these merchant seamen servicemen have to be on their ships before they go into service, and if they happen to be sunk at sea while they are on their way back home to Canada, they are not in service. Once their ship goes down at sea, they are out of service. It seems it is a very quick shut-off on what service is for a merchant seaman compared to a uniformed veteran.

Mr. Merrithew: There is no question the systems were quite different, one being, of course, controlled by the Department of National Defence and the other by the Department of Transport. The merchant mariners, of course, were in manning pools. Many of them would sit for weeks or months in the manning pool, just being there. Obviously, they are not on duty in terms of the insurance principle for disability pension. What we tried to do was be as fair as possible, so we included "on service" as being while actually on a high-seas voyage or on the way—on call, if you will, or call to duty—on the way to that high-seas voyage, on the ship which would take a high-seas voyage, and on the way home from it. For the insurance purposes under the Pension Act, that is what we call "service" or "duty".

Senator Bonnell: You are telling me now that, if a seaman was coming home by airplane, say from the shores of France where he was rescued, he would still be on service according to this act?

Mr. Merrithew: Yes, by all means. What we want to do is make it broader that simply from the time they set foot on board ship—that is, a ship which is actually doing high-seas service or high-seas duty. Should they have been called by the manning pool to report for service, we want to include the trip from their home to that service, including, of course, from the time they were either hurt or sunk or were signed off until they got home.

We tried to make it as broad as possible in order to help as many of the merchant mariners as we could.

Senator Bonnell: Can you tell me why the government or the department or the minister decided to spoil a beautiful act for the war veterans, the merchant seamen, by bringing the resistance fighters into the same bill? Why did they not come in in two different acts?

Mr. Merrithew: I am not a drafter of legislation; neither am I a lawyer. I take advice, the same as you take advice, senator.

Senator Bonnell: You are a good politician.

Mr. Merrithew: Senator, there are certain bills that come before our house and this house that are called "omnibus bills". They touch on several issues in the one bill. That is a routine thing that happens all the time. We were told that if you wanted to wait—

Senator Frith: We had to the wait for the ringing of the bells for three weeks when it was done on another occasion.

Mr. Merrithew: There were other times when it was done very quickly too, senator. If you wanted to wait, it would have been three additional months, we were told, and since we are losing our merchant mariners at the rate of two or three a day, we took the propitious decision to let it proceed with the two together.

[Senator Bonnell.]

Senator Bonnell: But don't you think, Mr. Minister, it would have been much nicer for these merchant seamen had they had a bill of their own, rather than giving them the feeling, "We are cutting off other people who are putting in veterans applications"? You could have had a nice merchant seamen bill, and you could have stood up in Halifax and waved it, and you could have taken Jack Marshall with you—and you could take me the next time.

You brought in this legislation concerning these resistance fighters at the same time. You could have brought the resistance fighters bill in on March 22; you could have set a date for the cut-off and then proclaimed the bill. That is what you told the people you would do with this bill, and that is what you did. If you had done that, then you could have brought this one in now, before July 1, and have made a nice clean job of both bills. Wouldn't that have been nice?

Mr. Merrithew: Well, the theatrics of it might have been better. Regardless of anything else, Senator Bonnell, there have been lots of people standing in line to take credit for this particular initiative of the government; and whether it is a bill of their own or not, really, in my mind, it does not matter. The important thing to our merchant mariners is that they get the benefits as soon as possible.

I worked my head off trying to get this bill through all stages in the house. I had great cooperation in the House of Commons. I am anticipating the same thing here. We have had the regulations drawn up in advance. I have arranged for cabinet to deal with it, I hope tomorrow, perhaps in a special meeting of cabinet, so that we it can receive Royal Assent, be proclaimed and be in effect on July 1. That just did not come easily. I worked very, very hard, and I did not want anything to delay it.

Senator Bonnell: I agree with you. We congratulate you for that. We want to tell you that you have done a great job, especially at a time of restraint when dollars are hard to find. For that, we are going to give you all the marks you can get. However, in this place, we would like to give some credit to Jack Marshall too, because his work was certainly behind you, prodding you at all times. Therefore, we want to say that, although we want to do whatever we can to get this legislation passed, we think it is just too bad that this ringer is on the side of it, or the end of it, about the resistance fighters. That spoils this otherwise lovely bill.

Mr. Merrithew: I heartily endorse your statement regarding Senator Marshall. He was the first off the mark with the report, "It's Almost Too Late", from the committee on which you served too, sir, and I give you both full marks for that.

Senator Bonnell: He only does what the deputy chairman tells him to do; otherwise he gets in trouble. So far he has been very good.

I have another question which has nothing to do with this bill, but it has to do with these merchant seamen and the Book of Remembrance. Can you tell us where that stands today and whether the Speakers of both Houses agree that it should be in the regular place?

Mr. Merrithew: Of all the issues that have been dealt with in various reports, that is the one that is causing me the most difficulty. It is not the fact I was trying to make these other good things happen for merchant mariners; it is the Book of Remembrance. I have made the statement publicly, and privately to anyone who will listen, that there will be a Book of Remembrance, that it will be in the Peace Tower, and will be of the same quality as the other five books. We want to make sure it is both accurate and artistic. These are not names in a scribbler. It are very important, and it is a work of art that will there be forever.

However, I just find that every time I raise the subject, somebody says, "Well, why aren't you doing the Book of Remembrance?" What I cannot understand is why people cannot take "yes" for an answer.

Senator Bonnell: Let me say this: I would love to take "yes" for an answer, but I have not found out for sure that it is your responsibility. It has been suggested to me that the Speakers of both houses have the responsibility for the Peace Tower and the minister has very little authority. When you say yes, I want to support you and say, "Great," but do you have the permission of the two Speakers?

Mr. Merrithew: Certainly, I have met with the Speaker of the House of Commons, and he fully endorses the project. We are obviously going to have to get people who understand calligraphy and art and history and research to make sure, but we will move it as quickly as we can. I have not, I must admit, met with the Speaker of this particular house. I did meet at least on three occasions with the Speaker of the House of Commons. He fully endorses the initiative.

Senator Bonnell: I want to thank him too. As regards our own Speaker, we have not got that much confidence in him on this side; I am not sure what he is likely do. I hope he will treat us better than he has in the past, because those merchant seamen should be in the Book of Remembrance.

Tell me about the monument. Will there be some words put on the cenotaph in Ottawa concerning the mariners, or will they just be considered as war veterans?

Mr. Merrithew: When I spoke in the House on this particular issue, I indicated that the House standing committee mentioned a monument as well to their service in time of war. There is one already in Halifax, as you know, being a Maritimer.

I can indicate to you that what I said in the House stands, and that is that that monument, which is the only one fully supported by the government of Canada, is dedicated to the memory and the sacrifice of those who fought in all of Canada's wars, to all of the people who fought and died. That includes the merchant mariners.

The Chairman: Senator Stewart.

Senator Stewart: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to ask a question concerning the minister's testimony with regard to the proposed amendment to the War Veterans' Allowance Act, the amendment concerning resistance groups.

● (1610)

The minister told us three or four times that the government made a decision to go back to the original intention of Parliament, that is, the intention of Parliament when the act was made. My question to the minister is this—and I hope he will not think it is facetious—how do you know what was the original intention of Parliament when the act was made?

Mr. Merrithew: It is an academic debate.

Senator Stewart: No, it is not.

Mr. Merrithew: I understand how courts and lawyers may interpret that. However, I do not think anyone would question that the program was set up for veterans of the First World War who had come back and who were in need of financial assistance.

Although I am not a war veteran, I have been around the military a long time. In my time, I have never thought that it could have been for any another purpose than for —

Senator Stewart: How did these others get in?

Mr. Merrithew: Two decisions were taken. One was taken by the predecessor to the Veterans Appeal Board. The other was taken by the Federal Court of Appeal. All they did was interpret a definition in the act, which opened the doors to a group of people for whom it was never intended. It was certainly not intended by this government. Therefore, we closed that particular gap. That was our intention, and we have done just that.

Senator Stewart: You are saying that the present government's understanding of the purpose of the act is the same as that of the Parliament which enacted the original act. My problem is that you have told us that two authoritative bodies disagreed with you. One of them was a court of law. I am not being facetious. If a court of law could go wrong, I really would like to know how you know what was the original intention. What evidence do you have, other than your own intuition?

Mr. Merrithew: When we reviewed this particular program, what we tried to do, senator, was to go back through Hansard. It is something which is easy to trace. In fact, I hired a former Assistant Deputy Minister in the department. He had been there and he knows our programs inside and out. He went back through Hansard to review all of the speeches, of which there were plenty, of course, back to 1930. We feel strongly that no government ever intended resistance groups to be the beneficiaries of this particular program.

Senator Stewart: You are relying on the words of the minister and, perhaps, the Deputy Minister in explaining the bill at that time?

Mr. Merrithew: If it were in the house, obviously it would have had to have been the minister. Other members would have spoken as well.

Senator Stewart: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister. That has been very helpful, as Senator Murray realizes.

Senator Molgat: Mr. Minister, you mentioned that an announcement had been made. When was the announcement made and how was it made?

Mr. Merrithew: It was made, senator, on March 2, 1992, by way of news release. There was some follow-up in the electronic and print media with comments from myself.

Senator Molgat: Would it be possible to obtain a copy of the announcement?

Mr. Merrithew: Yes.

Senator Marsden: Is the minister telling us the announcement was not made in the House?

Mr. Merrithew: To my knowledge, the House was not sitting at that time.

Senator Molgat: Was there any statement in the House in this regard?

Mr. Merrithew: There were questions in the House subsequently. There was no statement in the House at that time.

Senator Marsden: So that the House of Commons did not officially know about this, in fact, until June 4, 1992. Is that right?

Mr. Merrithew: Senator, one thing I do is treat my critics fairly. When I make a major policy change, I brief them. I personally meet with them and brief them on issues such as this. That is one of the reasons why, since the early 1970s and perhaps even prior to that, every piece of legislation from the Department of Veterans Affairs which I have taken through the House through in one day. I treat our critics fairly. They knew exactly what was happening and concurred in what we were doing in terms of that particular interpretation.

Senator Marsden: You are telling us that the members of the House of Commons were not informed of this change. The critics may have been, which is good, but the members of the House of Commons were not informed of this until June 4, 1992. For example, unless they happened to read the press release, they would not have been able to inform their constituents.

Mr. Merrithew: I hate to correct you once again, senator. Copies of the press release of March 2 were delivered to the door of every member of the House of Commons.

Senator Marsden: But they would not know through the House of Commons, then? As we all know, there are hundreds of press releases—dozens every day—so they might well not have had the opportunity to know about this matter until June 4, when it came before the House of Commons.

[Senator Stewart.]

Mr. Merrithew: Senator, there are also lots of announcements made by the government which are not made in the House of Commons.

Senator Marsden: I am asking about this one. It was not? Thank you.

Senator Molgat: Mr. Minister, you just said that a copy of this press release was delivered to every member of the House of Commons. Was it delivered to every senator?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes.

Mr. Merrithew: The answer is yes, senator.

Senator Molgat: I do not quarrel at all with the right of the government to cancel a program. There may be valid reasons for cancelling this one. I am surprised that the Federal Court agreed at one time that resistance groups should be included.

Mr. Merrithew: In the review of an appeal by an applicant, it was recommended that the predecessor to the Veterans Allowance Board look again at the definition of "allied service" and "allied veteran". It was this predecessor board which made the decision which started the rulings allowing benefits to members of resistance groups. That was never the intention of the government at that time. However, these boards are quasi-judicial boards, and not all of them lawyers, but they made a decision which started the flow. It was after that we heard about the difficulty of verifying that service. We also learned of fraudulent applications.

Senator Molgat: Mr. Minister, in a general sense, if a government cancels a program, should the people who have already applied not be considered, and then any new applicants subsequent thereto be cut off? Let us suppose the government made a change to the Old Age Pension. Anyone who is in the system should surely be covered, should they not?

Mr. Merrithew: Any of the resistance fighters who had applied, who had had their service verified and gone through the complete process were processed. Unfortunately, that is a time-consuming job. There was no freeze on the applications at all. It was just that we had to work through the RCMP. We had to work through embassies of other countries, in some of which we have no staff. How can we verify that service? Obviously, this is done through statutory declarations. It is an extremely time-consuming task.

You must remember, senator, that we were doing this in the midst of receiving applications by uniformed members of our Army, Navy and Air Force at the same time. There were literally thousands of these applications coming forward. If they were approved, they were processed and put in pay.

Senator Molgat: As a general principle, minister, would you not agree that if a government program exists legitimately and people make applications to it, and if the government decides to terminate that program, then those who have applied should not be cut off?

Senator Murray: Those who qualify should not be cut off.

Senator Molgat: Agreed. But you do not know if they qualify until you have a look at their application.

Mr. Merrithew: I think Senator Murray said the right thing. Those who qualified were processed and put in pay. However, it was never the intent of my department, nor was it the intent of any previous government, to allow that to happen. We continued to process them as best we could until the government of the day determined that it wished to tighten up the definition in order to ensure that resistance service for allied service people was not put in pay.

Senator Barootes: I welcome you here, Mr. Minister. I have had the privilege of watching your department work and, at times, of cooperating with them. I have found it to be most rewarding for Canada.

I have two questions with regard to this matter of retroactivity, or pseudo-retroactivity. We had a budget in March in which taxes were raised. That budget was not passed until the end of June, yet it is applicable from the first of the year. Would that be the kind of retroactivity to which we have been referring?

Mr. Merrithew: That is the best example I know. Budget decisions are effective from the date they are uttered on the floor of the house, so that is a very good analogy.

Senator Barootes: Thank you. My other question is on the department's interpretation that the War Veterans Allowance Act was not intended to be applied except in the manner that you suggested. However, it has now been extended beyond that because of these two anomalies, if I may use that term, these two judgments. If that is so, and if you have given March 2 as the date of stopping any further eligible people, is there any thought or intention of discontinuing the payment to those 5,000-odd people who are already receiving it, considering the program was not intended to include them?

Mr. Merrithew: That was an important question as I carried this matter through cabinet committee, through cabinet and through the rest of the process by which a bill obtains approval. This was not the easiest piece of legislation I have ever taken through the government process.

I felt very strongly, and took the position very strongly with my colleagues, that these are needy people who legitimately earned their eligibility through an interpretation by a quasi-judicial body; that it was awarded and we should not take it back. We had the choice of taking it back or not taking it back.

I thought the government was extremely generous in allowing those people who legitimately earned the entitlement to War Veterans Allowance to continue to receive it, as well as those who were receiving it abroad, as long as they returned to Canada to receive it here. That position was applauded by veterans' groups and most of the people who are in receipt of that benefit now.

Senator Barootes: You have answered my third question, which was to be: If you are not cancelling that benefit for the 5,000 and some odd people, why not? You have answered that question, and I thank you very much.

Senator Neiman: Mr. Minister, you mentioned earlier that you and your officials had struggled for a long time to ensure that the definition sections were right. I guess I have not struggled long enough, because I need reassurance on just one point. A number of veterans mentioned to us that they did not believe that the waters of the St. Lawrence River, roughly from Montreal eastward, were covered. I have looked at the sections and I cannot divine which section would cover that particular area.

Mr. Merrithew: That is a very difficult question, and there was a great deal of effort spent on trying to define what exactly was covered. The people who will be eligible for merchant navy veteran benefits include anyone of any nationality who served on a Canadian ship in time of war—that could be a British person or an American serving on a Canadian ship; any Canadian who served on an allied ship, and any Canadian who wears the 1939-45 Star, if they were in the merchant navy during the war. The fourth criterion is that the ship was a registered ship. We do not count row boats or fishing vessels as merchant marine. The fifth criterion is that they had signed the Articles of Agreement, and the sixth criterion is that the voyage was on the high seas on an ocean-going ship, which does not include a fishing boat or anything like that.

We then tried to elaborate on that further by defining what "high seas" meant. That means, of course, any voyage to or from any place outside North America, any voyage from one province to another province within Canada and any voyage from a country to a country within North America. Any voyage that came under enemy attack is automatically counted as high seas, even if it were on the upper St. Lawrence River, for example. The definition was painfully worked out with various groups and staff.

Senator Neiman: Let me give you as an example a ship leaving Montreal and proceeding directly to a port in Great Britain. Where is that covered?

Mr. Merrithew: That would be covered. There were 27 or 28 merchant ships sunk in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which included right down to the mouth of the Saguenay River, so that would definitely be defined as high seas.

Senator Neiman: Thank you.

Senator Marsden: I would like to refer to an answer you gave to Senator Molgat a few minutes ago. You referred to a quasi-judicial body on the basis of whose decision people are now in this program. I wonder then how we are to interpret the remarks of Mr. Justice MacKay, made yesterday in the Alberta court, in which he expressed his very deep concern that the government would make law contrary to judicial decision and contrary to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Merrithew: Senator, you are quoting what was said in a court. As that case is under litigation now, I certainly am not at liberty to speak about it and I certainly do not intend to do so at this time.

Senator Marsden: I am not asking you about that case. I am asking you about the judge's comment that this bill makes law contrary to judicial decisions when you have referred repeatedly this afternoon to quasi-judicial bodies. The judge yesterday expressed his deep concern about this legislation and urged further action.

I am not interested in the particulars of that case. I am curious about your depiction of a court as a quasi-judicial body and your inference that one does not really have to worry about their decisions. This was the tenor of your response to Senator Molgat. Surely a court is a judicial body. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Merrithew: Senator, it is the War Veterans Allowance Board that I am referring to as quasi-judicial. I do not know what the judge who made the comment yesterday said, and I have no intention of getting involved in something which is presently before the court.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just one word about that. This is practice with which the honourable senator is familiar. We have had cases of the courts striking down sections of laws passed by Parliament.

• (1630)

We have taken the position that in so doing the intent of Parliament, and certainly of the government, was contradicted and we had to put it right.

In the case of a bill that is now before Parliament, we are proposing to act with the so-called "rape shield law" in order to take account of a decision taken by the Supreme Court of Canada. We have legislated on other occasions to take account of judgments rendered by the courts.

In this case, a quasi-judicial tribunal—the predecessor to the War Veterans Allowance Board—took a decision which we believe needs to be set right by legislation, and likewise the decision taken by the Federal Court on this matter.

In this law, we are clarifying the policy. We are putting the policy straight.

Senator Marsden: Senator Murray, that is quite clear and has been from the beginning. My point was whether or not you would agree that there was a judicial decision in this matter. You have just referred to it, so the answer is, "Yes, there was." So the fact that it was originally a quasi-judicial body is overwhelmed by the fact that the Federal Court made a ruling on this matter.

You would agree then with Mr. Justice MacKay, who, yesterday, said this law is contrary to a judicial decision? This is the point I am attempting to clarify.

Senator Murray: I have not seen the statement that the judge made, but, with great respect, yes, we are asserting the prerogatives of Parliament in a matter of this kind to set the policy straight.

[Senator Merrithew.]

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question for clarification. It follows on from an answer given by the minister to Senator Barootes.

As I heard that exchange, the minister told this committee that, as a consequence of a decision by the Appeal Board, money was paid out to particular persons notwithstanding that it was not the intention of Parliament that those payments should be made. When the minister was asked about the decision of the government to continue those payments, the minister replied that it was done on the basis of the authority of—what was it—generosity? Can he tell us what kinds of payments can be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund on the basis of generosity?

Mr. Merrithew: I am not sure if the honourable senator is being serious or not. It was done on the basis of a ruling of the original War Veterans Allowance Board.

Senator Stewart: We understand that.

Mr. Merrithew: Based on that ruling, a decision was made that this group was eligible. The government disagreed with that decision; however, we honoured it. Until such time as we corrected that omission or clarified that definition in legislation—which is done in Bill C-84—we would honour those who were found eligible and who went through the process.

Senator Stewart: So contrary to your answer, which Senator Barootes found so satisfying, generosity did not enter the picture at all.

Mr. Merrithew: The government of course can give and the government can take away, if it wishes. In this case, we made a deliberate decision to allow those who got their eligibility for resistance work in other countries as part of the allied war effort to keep that. They had become dependent on it. If you call that generous—I think it is rather generous. We did not have to do it, but we chose to do it.

Senator Stewart: Do not put words in my mouth. "Generosity" was your word.

Mr. Merrithew: We were generous by not cutting them off, obviously.

The Chairman: If there are no other questions, on behalf of honourable senators, I will thank the Honourable Minister of Veterans Affairs, for his presence here today.

Senator Frith: Yes, come back again, minister.

The Chairman: We also extend our appreciation to the officials who have accompanied him.

Senator Frith: You did well in defending this indefensible decision.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the committee will now proceed with the clause-by-clause consideration of the bill.

Shall discussion of the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Senator Frith: Clause 6 in the black print?

The Chairman: I shall have to check the print.

Senator Molgat: Are we referring to page 10?

Senator Frith: Yes, the lighter print. There is heavy black print and light black print.

The Chairman: Clause 6 on page 2 starting off "In this part . . ." Shall clause 6 carry?

Senator Frith: Could we hold on for just a minute, Mr. Chairman? I want to know, Mr. Chairman, when you are calling for these causes, you will notice—

The Chairman: Perhaps I should have the bill in front of me as I call them.

Senator Frith: Yes, that is better.

The Chairman: Shall the title be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Senator Frith: Of the bill.

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Senator Frith: It is the usual problem that when you have the bill amending sections of the act, you can get confused by seeing the section of the act that is amended versus the section of the bill; but it is the bill that is before us, so we should be dealing with the—

Senator Molgat: Is there a solution, Mr. Chairman, in going page by page until we reach page 10, which is the clause that concerns us?

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on the first page carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on the second page, if any, carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on page 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses or parts thereof on page 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on page 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on page 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on page 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on page 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on page 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all clauses on page 10 carry?

An Hon. Senator: No.

Senator Molgat: Clause 9 on page 10 we would agree with.

The Chairman: On page 10, shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

An Hon. Senator: No.

Senator Frith: Clause 10 does not carry, does it?

Senator Molgat: Clause 10 does not carry; that is right.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, is it on division? Clause 10 carries on division, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Frith: The record should show "no", and then put it to the vote, and it is on division. That is right.

Senator Molgat: Our position on this is that we think this should be a separate act. We do not believe it should have been included with the mariners section.

The Chairman: So the record will show that clause 10 has carried, on division?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the clauses on page 11 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Molgat: On division.

The Chairman: Shall the clauses on page 12 carry?

Senator Molgat: Up to "Pension Act", on division.

The Chairman: Up to "Pension Act", on division?

Senator Molgat: Right.

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the remainder of the clauses on page 12 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the clauses on page 13 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the clauses on page 14 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the clauses on page 15 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the clauses on page 16 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Senator Frith: On division; reporting that certain clauses carried on division.

• (1640)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-84, to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment and, I have been asked to point out, on division on certain clauses.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, for the reasons mentioned by the Minister of Veterans Affairs when he spoke to the committee, I should like plead with honourable senators to allow this bill to go forward for third reading now. I would ask for leave at this time.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs has told us that if the government is to be able to pay these pensions as of July 1, he must get his regulations through the Governor in Council process tomorrow. Therefore I would ask honourable senators to consider giving leave so that we could have third reading now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): : Honourable senators, I paid attention to what the minister said, and I heard him say that he has a plan for a cabinet meeting to establish these regulations for tomorrow at 8:30 in the morning, or a special meeting if necessary.

[Senator Molgat.]

We do not wish to hold up this legislation, but we do want to make the point that we believe that the sections on resistance fighters were improperly joined as a sort of poison pill to an otherwise excellent bill. We want to propose an amendment to delete those provisions. It is a fairly solid bet that the amendment will not carry, but we wish to make that amendment in order to emphasize our opposition to that part of the bill. Therefore we are quite happy to have this bill brought forward. We will expedite the vote. Bring it forward tomorrow at the top of the Order Paper, if necessary, but we want the opportunity to make an amendment tomorrow at third reading in order to make our position clear.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Before we agree to this measure, could the Leader of the Government tell us: Will the bill also be proclaimed tomorrow? The bill must be proclaimed before it comes into effect.

Senator Murray: I am hoping and expecting that we will give this bill third reading tomorrow. The next step will be to have the regulations approved by the Governor in Council, and then have Royal Assent. I would expect that Royal Assent would take place in this chamber early next week.

Senator Frith: Or tomorrow, if you prefer.

Senator Murray: The problem with tomorrow, honourable senators, is that we have some other business to attend to. We will consider when we will have Royal Assent and we will inform you of that.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): There would be no problem, as far as we are concerned, with proceeding with third reading tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Murray, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. R. James Balfour moved the second reading of Bill C-70, to amend the Criminal Code (jury).

He said: Honourable senators, on January 23, 1992, in a decision in Regina v. Bain, the Supreme Court of Canada struck down subsections 634(1) and (2) of the Criminal Code as violating section 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The majority of the court held that, under those subsections, the disparity between the respective rights of the Crown and the accused created an apprehension of bias. The Crown appeared to have a greater ability than the accused to fashion a favourable jury.

The process of constituting juries for criminal trials is a two-stage one, involving both provincial or territorial and federal jurisdiction. At the first stage, a panel of prospective jurors is formed according to the laws of the province or territory where the accused is to be tried. At the second stage, 12 jurors to try the particular case are selected from the larger panel in accordance with the jury selection procedures sets out in the Criminal Code.

Prior to the Bain decision, the Criminal Code jury selection provisions allowed for the participation of the prosecutor and the accused in the following ways: First, by peremptory challenge of a prospective juror—that is, without giving a reason. The prosecutor was in all cases entitled to peremptorily challenge up to four prospective jurors. The accused was entitled to peremptorily challenge twenty, twelve, or four prospective jurors, depending on the seriousness of the charge against the accused.

Second, by "stand by" or "stand aside" of a prospective juror—that is, a direction to the prospective juror to wait for consideration as a juror until all other members of the panel have been considered. The prosecutor was entitled to stand aside up to 48 prospective jurors. The accused was not entitled to stand aside any prospective jurors.

Third, by "challenge for cause"—that is, on the basis of a reason such as that the juror is biased. Both the prosecutor and the accused have an unlimited number of challenges for cause.

The Supreme Court, in Regina v. Bain, held that the combined effect of the crown's four peremptory challenges and its right to stand aside up to 48 prospective jurors, amounting to more than four times the number of peremptory challenges available to the accused, created the appearance of bias in the jury selection process. The court therefore, and to that extent, declared invalid the Crown's stand aside provisions of the Criminal Code.

The rights of the prosecutor and the accused to challenge a prospective juror for cause are not affected by either the Supreme Court's decision in Regina v. Bain or by Bill C-70.

The court suspended the effect of its judgment for a period of six months in order to permit Parliament to amend the Criminal Code. The court did not provide for the possibility of extension of the transitional period. The declaration of validity, without the enactment of remedial legislation, has the potential to leave the Crown at a distinct disadvantage in the jury selection process. It is important therefore to quickly clarify and establish the rights of the Crown in this regard.

The package of amendments comprising this bill would enhance the appearance of fairness in the jury selection process and would bring it into line with modern reality. The proposed amendments would repeal the right of the Crown to stand a prospective juror by; provide the Crown and the accused with an equal number of peremptory challenges and, where there are multiple accused to be tried together, provide the Crown with a number of challenges equal to the total number available to all the accused; require the crown and the accused to alternate in being the first to indicate whether they challenge or are content with a prospective juror; permit the judge to excuse a prospective juror from jury duty if the juror has, essentially, a conflict of interest or on grounds of personal hardship or any other reasonable cause; permit the judge to stand a prospective juror by on the grounds of personal hardship or for any other reasonable cause; and, finally, repeal the sections of the Criminal Code which provide for juries in the Yukon and Northwest Territories to be composed of six jurors rather than the usual twelve.

The key to the Supreme Court's decision in Regina v. Bain is the concept that the public's confidence in the institution of the jury rests in part on a fair and balanced process for the selection of the jury with neither the Crown nor the accused appearing to be favoured in that process. Justice must not only be done, it must also be seen to be done. This bill is designed to ensure that the jury selection process will be balanced, fair and impartial both in appearance and in reality. I commend this legislation for speedy passage.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

AN ACT TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS WITH RESPECT TO PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino moved the third reading of Bill C-78 to amend certain Acts with respect to persons with disabilities.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, perhaps we could consider orders 8 and 9 together since they touch upon the same subject. Bill C-51 and Bill C-52 are two acts respecting water resources, one in the Northwest Territories and one in the Yukon, and the remarks on both will be exactly the same.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The difficulty is that our people responsible for this bill are presently in committee. I have asked one of my colleagues to check the present situation of that committee.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Senator Cochrane could move second reading and, if necessary, we will adjourn the debate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): It is understood that we will have to adjourn the debate. Are you simply asking that these matters be dealt with by the government spokesman?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes.

Senator Molgat: We have no problem with that, but we may not be able to respond immediately.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that both bills be dealt with together?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES WATERS BILL

YUKON WATERS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Ethel Cochrane moved the second reading of Bill C-51, respecting water resources in the Northwest Territories, and the second reading of Bill C-52, respecting water resources in the Yukon Territory.

She said: Honourable senators, I would like to offer some comments on Bills C-51 and C-52, two important pieces of legislation pertaining to water management in the North.

As you are aware, life in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon has changed significantly over the past few decades and continues to change. This chamber has witnessed the political maturation of the north during the 1970s and 1980s. Territorial governments have assumed increased responsibilities and decision-making authority. One example of that development has been the participation of the governments of the territories in the current round of constitutional negotiations.

Greater emphasis is now focused on economic development north of the 60th parallel. The objective is to diversify the traditional northern economy and provide productive, year-round wage employment for northern residents. At the same time, public awareness of the fragility of the northern environment has lead to strong and legitimate demands from residents of the north, from native associations, and from concerned citizens throughout Canada that preservation of the environment be taken into account in initiatives in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories.

These changing realities are reflected in Bill C-51 and Bill C-52. In fact, they are the very basis for the two bills, which update the existing Northern Inland Waters Act to reflect today's circumstances and to anticipate future developments.

The Northern Inland Waters Act has been in place since 1970. In the decades since then, many groups have expressed concerns and brought weaknesses and problems with the legislation to our attention. That is why, recognizing the political evolution of the north and the fact that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon are two distinct and different territories, the bills before us split the Northern Inland Waters Act into two pieces of legislation.

The first bill, Bill C-51, will apply to the water management system in the Northwest Territories. The second, Bill C-52, will apply in the Yukon. The government recognizes that several years from now it may well be necessary to revise or replace Bill C-51 to accommodate the creation of the new territory of Nunavut. For now, this practical split will allow the water management systems in each of the territories to evolve differently and will facilitate the eventual transfer of responsibility for water management to the territorial governments should that be desired.

Honourable senators, Bill C-51 and Bill C-52 contain essentially the same amendments. The only significant difference is that Bill C-52, the Yukon Waters Act, contains provisions to repeal the Northern Inland Waters Act. This measure is necessary in order for the new legislation to be enacted.

The government recognizes the need to stimulate economic development in the north and supports the efforts of the citizens and governments of the territories to do so. Bill C-51 and Bill C-52 will streamline the process for issuing water-use licenses. This new, faster process will provide an important degree of certainty for industry and other users of water.

These two bills address environmental concerns by adding significant new provisions and strengthening environmental safeguards. They also provide protection for aboriginal people and other traditional users of water, protection that does not exist explicitly in the Northern Inland Waters Act.

These proposed legislative initiatives were developed in a spirit of cooperation.

● (1700)

The bills are based on lengthy and exhaustive consultations with all the stakeholders in northern water management, including industry, environmentalists, aboriginal people, and the territorial governments. In fact, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development established a special committee in the Yukon specifically to review the proposed changes to the Northern Inland Waters Act, as well as changes to lands legislation affecting mining. This committee includes representatives of all the major interests concerned with the Yukon bill, and it has made an essential contribution. A wide range of interests in the Northwest Territories was also widely consulted before the draft bills were tabled in the House of Commons.

However, the consultation process did not end there. The other chamber established a legislative committee to study the bills, and this committee heard from a number of groups and individuals. In response to their representations, the government supported amendments to the legislation before it was given third reading in the other place.

Clearly, honourable senators, the government's commitment to consultation is more than just words—it is being put into action. In this particular case, the end result is two bills generally supported by all interested parties, bills that strike an excellent balance between addressing the needs of industry, the environment, aboriginal groups, and the federal and territorial governments.

I will take a few minutes now to briefly outline the intent of the new legislation and some of the more important changes that have been made to the existing act. In doing that, I want to emphasize that Bills C-51 and C-52 do not establish a completely new system for water management north of 60. Rather, they build on the strengths of the existing system and retain many of its provisions.

For example, they propose that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon water boards be retained. These are the bodies which issue water licences with the approval of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The bills also reflect the need to protect the environment and human life.

The changes that are being proposed to the Northern Inland Waters Act, however, are substantial and meaningful. They correct a number of weaknesses and inconsistencies in the original legislation, and modernize and expand the water management system for the benefit of northerners and all Canadians.

One of the principal objectives of these bills is to streamline the process for licensing water use in the north. Towards that end, the government proposes to establish a two-tiered licensing system for major and minor water users. For major users, the existing licensing system will remain in place, with a few practical changes. These include the possibility of waiving public hearings for licence amendments when water use is not affected. For minor users, a new, speedier process will be established. Among other things, this new process will eliminate the need for public hearings unless the territorial water boards deem these to be in the public interest.

Under the proposed legislation, the water boards will advertise all applications for licences for water use. The boards will be required to give reasons for granting or rejecting licences, and the first-come, first-served principle will be followed. This streamlining will ensure legal certainty and provide a speedier, smoother procedure for issuing water rights. In doing so, it is expected to contribute to economic development and job creation in the north.

The new legislation will also give the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development explicit authority to issue policy direction to the water boards. The minister would also have the authority to delegate his or her responsibilities to the appropriate territorial ministers, should this be appropriate in the future.

Another principal objective of Bills C-51 and C-52 is to provide greater protection to all persons who may be adversely affected by a licensed water use. In particular, all minor users known as "domestic" and "instream" water users will be eligible for compensation should this occur. This is one element of the protection for aboriginal peoples I spoke of earlier, since an aboriginal person who depends on fishing for income or food would likely be considered an instream user and one who could be adversely affected.

The third objective of the proposed amendments is to ensure that water users comply with the terms and conditions of their licences. This will be achieved through the strengthening of the enforcement measures in the current legislation. The end result is that the federal government and the territorial water boards will be able to take a much stronger stance on environmental issues than in the past.

Specifically, the amendments related to the environment provide for the following: First, explicit authority for the water boards to deal with the closure and abandonment of licensed operations; second, stronger licence inspection and enforcement procedures; third, a broadened list of potential offences, as well as stiffer penalties, including maximum fines of $100,000 and the possibility of jail terms; fourth, authority for the water boards to set water quality standards that are even tougher than those set out under the Fisheries Act; and fifth and finally, strengthened and clarified provisions related to security deposits, which under the proposed legislation may be used to guarantee compliance with licence conditions, to remedy violations or to pay court-ordered compensation.

As I mentioned earlier, honourable senators, the legislative committee of the other place has studied these bills and reported back with several amendments that reflected some of the concerns of various interest groups. These changes were incorporated into the bills. They are reflected in the legislation which we are examining today.

The Mining Association of Canada proposed two amendments, one extending the licence appeal period, the other dealing with the return of security deposits when licences are assigned. One amendment deals with forms of security and was sponsored by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The final two amendments to the original draft legislation are related to notifying people who may be affected by licence applications.

I wish to underscore once again the spirit of cooperation which permeated this process. At report stage, amendments were proposed by opposition members to include the transitional provisions in both bills rather than just in Bill C-52. In the interest of providing greater clarity for those who may use this legislation, the government supported the motions.

In closing, honourable senators, I would like to remind my honourable colleagues that Bills C-51 and C-52 have not been drafted to serve the interests of Ottawa. Rather, they were drafted in response to concerns expressed by residents, by governments and by businesses in the north. They are designed to address a number of objectives that are important to northerners.

Those objectives include moving decision-making closer to the people—one of this government's key goals. They include providing for flexibility in how decisions are made, yet they allow strict enforcement of the rules once they are set down. They include ways of ensuring that economic development is sustainable and environmentally responsible, as set out in the government's Green Plan, while producing jobs and economic prosperity in the north and safeguarding the interests of the aboriginal peoples who constitute the most significant proportion of the populations of the territories.

These bills are important, not only to those who live north of 60 but to all Canadians concerned with the quality of life in the north and the northern economy. The wide support that has been given to these bills by the very groups who are affected by them testifies to the degree to which the legislation successfully addresses the people's concerns.

I urge my honourable colleagues to join me in endorsing these important changes to the territorial water use legislation.

By supporting Bills C-51 and C-51, we will ensure that water management practices in the north reflects the needs and realities of today as well as the needs and desires of the residents of the north.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Pat Carney moved the second reading of Bill C-82, to amend the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and the National Housing Act and to amend another Act in consequence thereof.

She said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill C-82, to amend the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and the National Housing Act and to amend another act in consequence thereof.

As honourable senators know, the purpose of this bill is to refine the legislation governing federal housing policy and programs.

The government is putting forward these amendments with three main principles in mind: Public loan insurance under the National Housing Act should promote reasonable, equal access to housing finance, lowest feasible costs, and overall self-sufficiency of the mortgage fund. In both market and social housing programs, CMHC seeks out and takes advantage of opportunities to improve the cost-effectiveness of the programs, the efficiency of their delivery and their ongoing effectiveness.

● (1710)

CMHC should exercise responsibility for its financing activities within a framework and in accordance with standards promoted by the Department of Finance.

Those are the three principles to which I refer.

The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and the National Housing Act contain the legislative authority for CMHC to carry out its mandate of helping to house Canadians. With this mandate in mind, CMHC has, throughout the years, carried out the federal government's commitment to provide Canadians with equal access to suitable, adequate and affordable housing in safe and healthy environments.

The corporation is responsible for promoting the construction of new homes, the repair and renovation of existing ones, and improving the level of housing conditions in general across the country.

CMHC is active in the development of new financial mechanisms to stimulate the private housing market, providing social housing programs for Canadians most in need, and is a prime source of housing expertise. The amendments before us today introduce new financial and administrative measures designed to improve the efficiency of CMHC's business operations. I would like to outline briefly some of the main provisions of the legislation.

Bill C-82 will allow CMHC to assume more direct responsibility and accountability for its financial affairs. It will do this by enabling CMHC to obtain funding from and invest in the capital market. The bill contains a provision to allow CMHC to finance directly social housing projects at lower interest rates. CMHC will look to the lending community as a source of funding to allow for the direct financing of social housing.

Another amendment involves requiring owners of assisted housing projects to accept as a condition of assistance that they will not sell their projects without CMHC approval. The bill also contains provisions which would allow CMHC, depending on its future business needs, to consider the option of delegating some of its mortgage insurance responsibilities to selected, approved lenders, provided that appropriate arrangements are in place for CMHC to monitor and control the delegated functions.

This provision, clause 24, also authorizes the same option for CMHC to delegate mortgage insurance processing to provinces and municipalities. This will be useful where the provinces already administer subsidy commitments for the federal-provincial nonprofit programs. They will be able to handle the loan insurance paperwork as well as the subsidy paperwork.

These amendments also propose allowing CMHC to supply housing related property management and development services to federal government departments and agencies. The bill will increase the existing limit on outstanding loan insurance from the current $60 billion up to $100 billion. The new limit of $100 billion is estimated to be adequate for the next five years. We should hope so.

The bill also contains a number of amendments to consolidate CMHC's borrowing authority. These amendments will give CMHC access to financial markets, modernize the agency's investment authorities and rationalize CMHC's income tax status.

The bill removes the income tax exemption for CMHC's mortgage insurance fund. This is part of a group of administrative reforms that are intended to ensure that Canada Mortgage and Housing will be taxed on the same basis as financial institutions and registered insurance companies. By virtue of clause 53, the changes are effective to January 1, 1991, in order to ensure that the all of the changes in the group come into effect together. The group includes a technical adjustment for large corporations tax under the Income Tax Act.

Other amendments of a purely administrative or housekeeping nature are included in order to provide clarification of various provisions.

I fully support the intentions of the government in presenting these amendments, which will allow the government to improve the cost effectiveness and the administration and delivery of federal housing products and services.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Carney for explaining the bill so fully. We on this side of the house are in complete agreement with the clauses of Bill C-82. Our objections to the bill concern only those parts that have been omitted.

The bill facilitates the role of the federal government in social housing and in other ways. However, it does not redress the emerging problem of insufficient funds for social housing. Moreover, the federal government runs the risk of becoming a slum landlord in a number of cases because of inadequate funding and inadequate services.

We would like to take up those aspects of the bill when, presumably, the minister appears before the committee.

I will not take any more time of the chamber this afternoon, honourable senators.

Senator Frith: Does the bill have anything to do, either by commission or omission, with co-op housing?

Senator Carney: Yes. Co-ops are covered under the social housing aspects.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time, honourable senators?

On motion of Senator Carney, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

EXCISE TAX ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kinsella, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-75, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Kinsella for his explanation of this bill. His efforts to do so appear in the Debates of the Senate of June 15, 1992.

Senator Kinsella described this as a "good news" bill, and we all like to hear good news. Frankly, none of us should expect to see riots of joy in the streets as a result of the measure which is before us.

Senator Kinsella explained the two measures contained in the bill. The first measure, which deals with an exemption from the withholding tax for international aircraft leases and a temporary loss offset program with a partial rebate of federal excise tax on diesel and aviation fuel, is generally deserving of support.

Senator Kinsella stated:

> These two measures, honourable senators, were announced as part of a package of measures to benefit Canada's transportation industries. The other measures announced at that time include changes to the capital cost allowance regulations which will increase the rate at which many transportation assets can be written off against taxable income; funding for an institute for research in trucking issues; and funding for an owner-operators' trucking cooperative which will use bulk purchasing power to help reduce equipment and supply costs of for-hire truck owner-operators.

We intend to support the bill. The words "a level playing field" have been bandied about with great frequency in recent months and years by spokesmen, representatives and apologists of the government, who sing the praises of the free trade agreement in North America. The measure before us is supposed to help level that playing field, to make it possible for the trucking industry and airline companies to compete more effectively.

Honourable senators, regrettably, the bill before us does not constitute the giant confident strides toward equality that we had hoped for. Rather, the steps taken are mincing and hesitant. Although they represent progress, nevertheless, they are, in our view, inadequate.

The transportation industry, without question, needs help. It is one way of stating that 250,000 workers in the trucking industry alone, let alone the thousands in the airline industry, are facing very difficult times.

• (1720)

The trucking industry faces a first class crisis. The Parliament Hill trucker demonstrations we experienced in the last few months were no sham and no play-acting. Those demonstrations told us, with agonizing emphasis, that they faced economic ruin as a result of trying to compete with truckers from the United States—trying to remain economically viable while driving up a very steep economic incline to gain equality with our southern neighbours.

We support Bill C-75, but it falls so short of what could have been and what might have been that we hope the government will listen to some of our recommendations to improve the bill.

The extent of the crisis in trucking is such that hundreds of companies have had to shut down since deregulation took place. They have had to reduce their operations sharply because they have not been able to cope with the process of deregulation which was supposed to usher in a new era of opportunity for the trucking industry across the country. That was the beginning of the crisis.

Soon there were more trucks in Canada than there were cargoes to carry. Then the free trade agreement came along followed by the recession. We then had what was nearly a revolution in consolidation of trucking companies. It was discovered very equickly that no Canadian company could compete against the mega trucking companies in the United States. One factor in the equation is that we have higher taxes in Canada. The taxes on fuel alone put us at an immediate competitive disadvantage with U.S. carriers.

I have a report which was provided by a section of the trucking industry. Just this week I asked them how we are competing with the United States. I would quote from page 6 of a document entitled, "Freight Carriers Association of Canada: Analysis of Canadian Trucking Industry General Freight Carriers," where it says the following:

> Looking last at the shift of traffic between Canadian and U.S. carriers, the impact of this past decade becomes evident. In 1979 the total revenue derived from international traffic was shared almost equally between Canadian and U.S. general freight carriers. A decade later, the revenues have shifted to slightly over two thirds now moving by U.S. carriers. The loss of revenue has seriously impacted on the Canadian general freight carriers, creating in part the over-capacity problem and the higher operating ratios.

The fact is that in recent years we have seen an enormous negative impact on our trucking industry. This crisis situation simply must be addressed.

Yet, confronted with a full-blown transportation crisis, the government has been capable of producing what can only be described as a very timorous program. We have the makings for disaster for the trucking industry if we do not do better than Bill C-75. The demonstrations we saw a year ago outside this chamber also took place in other Canadian cities including Toronto, Windsor, Cornwall and cities in British Columbia. It was a cry for help from the truckers to let us know that they are in trouble and cannot make ends meet, and that they are going to be outdone by their American competitors.

It is alleged that U.S. truckers are actually fuelling up south of the river, taking their cargoes to Montreal and Toronto and that they have enough gas left to return to the border—and we have all heard the stories about buses making their way only to the top of the bridges joining Canada and the U.S. and people coming across with a gerry cans full of gasoline so that the buses can make it over the hump back to the United States where they can fill up with extremely cheap gasoline, most of which comes from Canada. Obviously, there is an overall cost advantage in doing so.

The industry has been crying out for help and we have been responding, not with the help they need but with peanuts.

But one should do more than just criticize the government. This party will support the bill although it falls well short of what could and should have been done on behalf of the trucking industry.

We want to include a provision to permit a shorter period of depreciation of equipment. That was addressed, in part, in the announcement the minister made in the other place last December. Even then, his response fell well short of what is needed.

[Senator Perrault.]

While the trucking industry indicated a need to more rapidly depreciate very expensive equipment, the minister's response was to allow depreciation to be accelerated with respect to purchases of tractors and trucks after December, 1991.

We are critical of the fact that this government has not touched the question of trailers or the rate of depreciation of equipment already owned by many small businesses, in particular those that were already in financial difficulty.

The industry obviously needs great relief from the tax on diesel fuel. I know some government spokesmen say that the federal levy is even less than that which exists in the United States, but combined with provincial and other taxation fuel costs are substantially higher.

From the discussions I have had, I understand that virtually no one in the trucking business will take advantage of the rebate on diesel fuel because it entails a one-to-ten loss under the carry forward provisions of the Income Tax Act. Under the federal tax system, the trucking industry, as is the case with all Canadian businesses, is able to carry forward business losses for a period of up to seven years. If a loss is incurred this year and profit is earned next year, the government proposes to allow next year's profit to be reduced by this year's losses to spread out the tax burden a little more fairly rather than rigidly limiting it to one year at a time.

That is one of the reasons businesses that are profitable on occasion do not pay any tax at all. They may make a profit this year, but have experienced losses the previous year.

The government appears to have required trucking businesses to give up $10 of loss carry forward for every $1 of fuel tax rebate they claimed. In effect, with roughly a 44 per cent or 50 per cent corporate tax, including federal and provincial taxes, the loss carry forward lost to truckers is much greater than the value of the rebate if they return to profitability in a short period of time. It would only be effective for companies holding losses from five, six or seven years earlier which would otherwise expire.

In point of fact, although the government has tried to make it sound like this is a generous provision, it is really of little, if any, use. It provides for a 1.5 cent rebate; up to $500 for small trucking companies. Anything helps, but Canadians will be interested to know that for a large rig that may amount to about 1.5 to 1.75 cents on a tank of fuel. That is how much the government is helping out.

We are told by Senator Kinsella that this is a good news bill. As I said earlier, I do not think the trucking industry is having a riotous celebration.

In the other place some members of the opposition suggested that some changes be made respecting the GST that would assist the truckers. Our suggestion was that the remittance cycle for truckers be extended just a little, from 45 to 70 days, the time taken to provide GST rebates. This would help with the cash flow situation in which these operators find themselves. Again, there is no response from the government. Again the truckers are left on their own to try to deal with the serious problem of maintaining economic viability.

Our party suggested that there be permission for tax deductibility from income of the cost of an operating licence. This is an historic complaint. In 1987, when deregulation of trucking was introduced, trucking companies in Canada had as much as $200 million in the value of trucking licences previously issued. These licences maintained value and could be bought and sold in the marketplace but, with deregulation, the asset value of a licence was immediately reduced to zero. When deregulation came in it offered the hope of much more competition, but there was no adjustment period for existing companies to take into account the increased competition and the loss of an asset which, in many cases, had been quite valuable.

I would quote from remarks by Mr. Manley in the other place when hesaid:

> It is interesting to compare the approach our government took to that which was taken in the United States, where in similar circumstances trucking companies were able to write-off the existing cost of their licences over a two-year period. That gave them an opportunity to make the adjustments that were necessary by sheltering some income in those two years and to make certain adjustments so they could be as competitive as the new competition on the roads.

● (1730)

We suggested last year that efforts be made to improve the federal-provincial co-ordination on policy matters affecting the transportation sector. We have seen no movement on that issue whatsoever.

We asked for improved enforcement and increased penalties for those engaged in illegal cabotage in Canada. There has been no movement on that. Yet there is all sorts of evidence. We have allegations that some U.S. vehicles are picking up cargoes in Canada and taking them to other Canadian points before they move down to the United States.

We urged the federal government to increase its investment in road infrastructure. This is a very important matter because, in talking about these rebates for excise taxes on diesel fuel and so on, we have a very significant source of revenue for the Government of Canada, which it takes directly out of this industry. It is approximately $5 billion in revenue for the Government of Canada. That is a lot of money—and let us remember that there are 250,000 employees in the industry from coast to coast.

One would think that when that much money is being sucked out of the system, the federal government would be looking for ways to reapply those revenues to make it a better system for those trucks to use. One would think it would be going into road infrastructure. Do members know how much is going back in? About 5 per cent.

While there is a major burden on our industry which is endeavouring to compete with the United States, a major burden reducing our competitiveness, in return the federal government offers a pittance, a 5 per cent pittance, to the cost of the infrastructure that is essential to this business. That is not much to celebrate. That is not much occasion for unbounded joy.

When this government talks about its generous treatment of the trucking industry, let us be aware—because it affects all of us, regardless of where we live in Canada and however we vote—that, in fact, we have a full-blown transportation crisis. Yet, the government has been capable of producing only this timorous, halfway and half-hearted bill, a bill which, as I have said, could be so much better if the government would simply listen to some of the constructive ideas coming from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

We will support this bill, but we must look forward to real action by a future government. Perhaps a change in government may be the only hope we have of producing the kind of legislation that will make us truly competitive in the tough, uncompromising trucking market.

In dietary terms, Bill C-75 offers the trucking industry and its 250,000 workers mere peanuts, and almost invisible peanuts at that, when we should be offering them a balanced and nutritious meal of government support and encouragement.

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that, if Senator Kinsella speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading.

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I welcome the observations of the Honourable Senator Perrault. I have, however, one point of clarification relating to the trucking option for the independent operators and the 1.5 cents per litre rebate. That rebate would have no effect on income tax losses. With respect to the carriers, of course, the 3 cents and the carry-forward applies; but, for the independents, that 1.5 cents per litre on the rebate, up to $500 each year—$1,000 for the two years of the program—would not be limited by the loss.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kinsella, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-86

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government), for the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, pursuant to notice of June 16, 1992, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the subject-matter of Bill C-86, An Act to amend the Immigration Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I think there will be considerable agreement that the Bill C -86, which I am proposing be pre-studied, is an important bill. It is complex; it is on a sensitive subject. It tries, as we always do in dealing with immigration matters, to strike that delicate balance between the humanitarian instincts of Canadians and our humanitarian reputation as a nation, on the one hand, and the need to manage an immigration regime in an orderly fashion and as free as possible from abuse.

That is all I will say about Mr. Valcourt's bill, except that it is, I assure honourable senators, the product of very considerable reflection and discussion on the part of the government and by the government with experts in the field in this country and internationally.

I have no doubt that this bill will prove to be a controversial piece of legislation, as every bill touching upon immigration matters has been. It will require careful study. It will attract widespread interest in the country. I have no doubt that there will be many Canadians, individuals and groups, who will want to be heard on this matter and to make representations. Therefore, it seems to me that it is a classic example of a bill that is good to have prestudied by members of this chamber.

I do not think there is very much disagreement that the pre-study technique has been effective in the past, in that it has given us the opportunity to make a positive and timely contribution to the legislative process without resorting to confrontation between the two Houses or between this house and the government.

There are objections in principle to pre-study. Those principled objections are of relatively recent origin, as honourable senators know, because pre-study had become, if not the norm, certainly a frequent and useful practice in this chamber over a long period of time.

The objections, as I say, are on principle of a political and a procedural nature. These objections prevented us, for some time in this house, from having resort to the technique of pre-study, and I believe that the legislative process was the loser during that time.

● (1740)

In more recent times—that is, since the government obtained a majority in this place—we have succeeded in referring a number of bills to committee for pre-study. Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition have registered their objection. They have voted against the motions for pre-study, but they have not attempted in any way to obstruct the process. Indeed, in committee they have cooperated in the process and, in my opinion, the results have been quite satisfactory.

[Senator Murray.]

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, under Senator Poitras' chairmanship, pre-studied four financial bills not long ago: Bills C-4, C-19, C-28 and C-34. That committee also has pre-studied Bill C-48, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. In all cases a useful and constructive contribution was made by that Senate committee not only to those bills and to the legislation but also to the policy process as well. Therefore, Parliament and the public policy process are the winners.

Very recently, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, under Senator Oliver, has been pre-studying Bill C-62, respecting telecommunications. This is another extremely important bill, and the committee has heard many witnesses. I am informed that the committee is just about ready to table quite a comprehensive report on this bill. I can assure honourable senators that the minister, Mr. Beatty, who has testified before the committee in the pre-study process, is very anxious to have their report so that he can take it into consideration as the bill moves through the normal process in the House of Commons.

Therefore, honourable senators, I am making a plea to you to accept my motion to refer Bill C-86, the amendments to the Immigration Act, to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology for pre-study. It is a complex bill that will require a great deal of attention. There will be many people who will want to be heard, and this is a case where many honourable senators will want to make a timely contribution to the policy and legislative process.

I bring this motion forward now in the hope that the standing committee will be able to organize its work in the next little while and will be able to begin the pre-study hearings, if not during the summer then very early in the fall. There is always the possibility — perhaps a strong one—that we will be back here on one or several occasions during the summer. If the committee were ready, they could begin hearing witnesses on one of those occasions. In any event, I should like to have the motion passed so that the committee could organize itself to pre-study Bill C-86 now.

Due to the unfortunate illness of our colleague, Senator David, the Social Affairs committee is at the moment without an active chairman. As we all know, the deputy chairman, Senator Marsden, will be leaving us shortly. The time has come for us to act on this matter. Because Senator David's absence may be somewhat prolonged—and one hopes that is not the case, but on the other hand the recovery process is a long one in these matters—I would propose that the committee meet to elect an acting chairman. I would ask the clerks to arrange for this to be done in the next day or two. We will then be ready to propose the name of an acting chairman.

The main purpose of my intervention now is to commend to you for your favourable consideration this motion for pre-study of amendments to the Immigration Act.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government, in speaking in support of his motion, promised to be brief. I think I can promise to be briefer. We might risk boring honourable senators with the recurring restatement of our differing positions on the pre-study.

The principle of pre-study is the concurrent examination of legislation by the two houses. The constitution provides for consecutive consideration of legislation. We support the Constitution and believe that it is inappropriate for the two houses to study legislation concurrently, unless we consciously alter the system set up in 1867 to have Parliament operate in that consecutive fashion.

Senator Murray, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, argues that this bill is important, complex, complicated and sensitive. No words appear in the constitution stating that "the two houses shall deal with legislation consecutively except when the legislation is important, complicated or sensitive". Who is to decide when a bill is so important, so complicated and so sensitive that the constitutional provisions should be abridged or annulled?

I certainly hope that the government will not ask us, when this bill arrives again in the Senate through the front door, to speed its passage and speed the consecutive consideration of the bill because it has received pre-study—something that we have been asked to do in the past.

Senator Murray says that he thinks that the concurrent, rather than the consecutive study of legislation as provided for in the constitution, has been effective. That is for someone else to judge, but I think it has been effective for the government in the sense that the government feels it can expedite passage of its legislation by getting rid of the nuisance that Parliament is.

It is a nuisance for any government to have to get things through Parliament. It would be much easier if they could simply propose something in cabinet, have it carry in cabinet and have it become law. But that is not the way the system works and that is not the way the system is set up. It is true that such a method is effective in the sense that it tends to abridge, speed up and reduce the nuisance factor of Parliament—that is, from the government's point of view.

● (1750)

Is it timely? It is not timely in the sense that it is being done concurrently. It is not timely in the constitutional sense. What does "timely" mean anyway? I think it also means timely in the sense that it speeds up the process, gets rid of Parliament, and gets things through Parliament more quickly. From whose point of view is it timely, then? From the government's point of view, of course. If Parliament did not exist, that would make things effective, simple, and timely for the government. If that is the case, why do we need Parliament at all?

The reasons for the opposition to this abridgement of the constitutional provisions are not political and not necessarily confrontational. They are constitutional and procedural.

Hon. John Sylvain: May I ask a question?

Senator Frith: Of course.

Senator Sylvain: Does the constitution prohibit concurrent study of a bill?

Senator Frith: Obviously not, or we would not be able to do it.

Senator Sylvain: If a bill is concurrently studied here in the Senate, or at least examined in prestudy here, it does go back to the House and then comes back here. That is looking at it successively.

Senator Frith: I understand the formula.

Senator Sylvain: That is constitutional. What is the objection on the constitutional grounds?

Senator Frith: I understand the formula. We can call it by your name, if you like. The formula is: If it is not prohibited, it must be okay.

You read what I was saying the way you did, and I read that that is the effect of what you are saying. I say, and I think the senator will agree, that the constitution and the traditions of the constitution and the procedures therein provide for consecutive study, and do not prohibit concurrent study. The senator is saying that therefore there is no argument to be made for consecutive study. I am simply saying that is what the constitution provides for.

Senator Sylvain: But the constitution—

Senator Frith: The honourable senator has had a chance to ask his question. He will have his chance to speak to the motion in a moment. I think this exercise smacks a little of a camel-in-the-tent operation. However, I answered the honourable senator's question. He can intervene in the debate.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we are getting close to 6 o'clock. By the rules—

Senator Frith: I was about to sit down.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: By the rules, we need unanimity to continue, and I suggest we continue.

Senator Frith: Very well. I have almost completed my remarks.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the lines are clearly drawn. I can see that neither in this case nor in other cases have I persuaded members opposite of our point of view. I am sure they have not succeeded in persuading me of theirs.

That is our position, and that is why we will vote against this motion for pre-study. Like the Leader of the Government, I incorporate by reference other comments made on other occasions on the same subject.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, just the other day Senator Doyle made an address to the Senate on the way the Senate has been neglected by the media. One searches for an explanation for that neglect. I do not want to say that any one cause is entirely responsible for the effect he deplored. However, I do suggest that one of the causes that over the years has contributed to the reduction of the status of the Senate has been pre-study.

Even though ministers—and thus the House of Commons—may come to accept proposals for amendments put forth by senators prestudying bills, inevitably the Senate is cast, not as a legislative body when that takes place but as a kind of lobby. I understand why Senator Murray thinks that prestudy is good, and I do not mean to say that he is entirely wrong.

Perhaps Senator Murray and his colleagues, as well as ministers, whether of this government or of another government, could accomplish much the same purpose by having bills such as Bill C-86 initiated in the Senate. Provided there is no appropriation clause in a bill, the work on that bill could begin here. Then, after the bill had passed this house, it could go to the House of Commons in what might well be an improved state. That is an alternative that would accomplish Senator Murray's purpose without any of the disadvantages of the prestudy process.

I do not expect Senator Murray to have Bill C-86 withdrawn from the House of Commons and then introduced here, but I wonder if he would not adopt the suggestion to introduce bills here on a trial basis in a few cases in the near future.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition of the Senate may find that from time to time I will agree with him. Unfortunately, this is not one of those instances.

This particular piece of legislation has been described as a very complex one. It deals with a lot of emotional issues as well as factual and legal issues. Senator Stewart chose the word "lobby" to describe one of the responsibilities of the Senate, at least in this particular case. I suggest to you that if he had used the word "investigative" as a role that the Senate can and does play very well from time to time, I think he would have give a better description of the kind of role that the Senate can play through pre-study of a bill, and in particular of a bill of this nature.

I suspect, as my leader has stated, that a large number of people and many organizations will want to participate in the debates on this particular bill. I believe it will be a unique and useful opportunity for them to do so through a pre-study procedure in the Senate where we may be able to influence—and I suspect we will—some of the decisions that will arise out of the deliberations in the House. In effect, honourable senators, it is my opinion that those of us who have a keen interest in the matters that pertain to this bill may wish to make recommendations to the minister on some of the issues contained in the bill that he presented yesterday.

[Senator Frith.]

Honourable senators, looking at the reality of the matter, I, for one, believe that my opportunity to influence some change or amendment to this piece of legislation will be a great deal better through having a pre-study than it would be if we received the bill as a fait accompli from the house in the usual fashion. I support our leader on his motion on this particular issue.

Senator Stewart: May I ask Senator Di Nino a question? Would he not agree that the investigative work which he thinks is highly desirable could have been performed just as well, perhaps better, if this bill had been introduced in the Senate in the first place?

• (1800)

What is added by having a bill given first reading in the House of Commons? If a bill does not contain a clause for the appropriation of money, why not introduce it in Parliament in the Senate? Then, after the investigative work, which Senator Di Nino correctly emphasizes, has been completed, and any amendments the government thinks desirable have been made, the bill could go to the House of Commons. Presumably, it would move more rapidly through that house by reason of the exploratory work that had been done here and by reason of any improvements made to it here.

I think we are almost in agreement. I want Senator Di Nino to confirm that we are.

Senator Di Nino: It is not a question of confirmation. The fact of the matter is the bill has been presented in the House of Commons. It is now in motion. The question of whether it would have been better to introduce it here is a rhetorical one. I am not sure I can truly answer that.

We are dealing with something that is a fait accompli at this time. Let us deal with it.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators —

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to advise honourable senators that, if Senator Murray speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this motion.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not disagree at all with the points made by the Honourable Senator Stewart regarding the desirability of introducing more legislation in the Senate. While there is only one minister of the Crown here at present, there are many people on this side who are more than capable of taking legislation through a parliamentary body. We have people on both sides of the house, and we have committees that have proven their value in examining legislation, in airing all the policy and constitutional and legal considerations that need to be aired.

Senate committees enjoy an excellent reputation among experts, and, indeed, among citizens generally who have had experience in testifying on public issues before a parliamentary committee.

There are two constraints upon us. One was mentioned by the Honourable Senator Stewart and has to do with bills that require a Royal Recommendation. I think the honourable senator will contend that governments have tended to apply rather broadly the convention having to do with Royal Recommendations. I suspect that Bill C-86 needed one, or was believed to need one, and was given one. Thus, there is some question as to whether or not it could originate in this house. That is the first consideration.

The other is of a more political nature. Important legislation of this kind involves a good deal of study, work and leadership on the part of the sponsoring minister, who is almost always a member of the House of Commons, and of other ministers. I think it is fair to say that any minister is somewhat reluctant to let the matter out of his hands so long as he can keep it in his hands and pilot it through the parliamentary process.

On matters of controversy, as this one will be, it is by no means clear to me that there would not be objections on the opposition side of the House of Commons as well if we got into the practice of originating many important bills in this place. However, I can say to the honourable senator, and to all honourable senators, that since the government obtained a majority in this place I have heard rather more often than I used to in meetings with my ministerial colleagues the suggestion that it would be a good idea to introduce this or that bill in the Senate rather than in the House of Commons. There is a growing appreciation of the possibilities there. I hope that we can take advantage of that a bit more frequently than we have done.

Senator Frith: We will try to maintain that tradition.

Senator Murray: With respect to technical pre-study, some time ago members of the other place were considering sending us bills for "pre-study of their subject matter" after first reading and before the matter came for debate on principle. I do not know whether they resolved that question or not, but serious consideration was being given to that possibility on both sides.

In any case, I do not disagree in principle with what the Honourable Senator Stewart is suggesting. I hope we can make greater use of the Senate in that way in the future. Meanwhile, I believe that in respect of this bill, the policy and legislative process would be well served by pre-studying its subject matter in the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Berntson, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare, for the second reading of Bill C-59, an Act to amend the National Parks Act.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I will not take a great deal of time in speaking to Bill C-59. The explanation of this bill as given by Senator Berntson in his speech on second reading a few days ago was most clear. He explained in clear terms that there are two main portions to the bill.

One portion relates to the Treaty No. 8 obligations flowing from the land claim settlement reached in 1986 by the Cree band of Fort Chipewyan. In that settlement, Canada, Alberta and the band agreed that additional entitlements under the treaty would include provisions for some 12,000 acres of land for reserve purposes, and some $26.6 million for compensation. Thus, this is an important item for that band.

The second purpose of the bill is to set aside a national park reserve in the Queen Charlotte Islands of British Columbia. Honourable senators will recall that this was a matter of some controversy a few years ago which resulted in about 72 Haida people ending up in jail. The Haida people whose homeland was being devastated said, "Enough is enough." They stood up to protect their homeland.

As a result of that action, the Government of British Columbia, the Government of Canada and various environmental groups reached an agreement. Thus, Bill C-59 establishes, finally, a park reserve.

I wish to make a couple of points about the park reserve. I have been talking with some of the Haida, many of whom are my old friends. They went to their people with a referendum on this issue and, of course, entering into the agreement was approved by the referendum.

● (1810)

They distributed a paper before the referendum. That paper indicates:

> The mandate of the C.H.N. negotiators has been to come up with a management agreement for Gwaii Haanaas Heritage Site which does not jeopardize Haida Title and Rights in Gwaii Haanaas or any other part of Haida Gwaii. Our position of ownership of Haida Gwaii remains firm. We have not agreed to go under the authority of Canada in any way. This is not a "land claims" agreement.

They say that this is their homeland and so why should they enter into a claim situation on it. They make that point very clearly.

In the agreement they say:

> In its simplest terms this is an interim arrangement pending the eventual settlement of "land claims". The proposal is a cooperative management agreement covering the Gwaii Haanaas land area, and not the waters.

The water area is subject to a further negotiation whereby perhaps there will be a marine park established.

The paper continues:

> The proposed agreement has a mechanism to opt out if we so choose.
>
> The Government of Canada will not be able to do anything without Haida approval.
>
> Gwaii Haanaas has dominated our political agenda for several years now and through it we have gained the respect of the Canadian Governments and the International Community. We are now prepared to take it a step further which will secure and enhance the steps that have been taken over the years. This can be done by meeting Canada at a level equal to their own. This is a giant step from being their "children" or wards of the Government. Only by getting to an equal level can we ever go another step higher. This kind of advancement cannot be put off until a "land claims" settlement, which they may put off as long as they want.

They go on to say:

> Canada has refused to acknowledge that there is a dispute over ownership of Haida Gwaii because once they make that admission, they have to do something towards resolving the dispute. In this agreement, they admit that there is a dispute. This may seem like the obvious and of little importance, however, it is of utmost importance in establishing the order.

They go on:

> One of the most significant features of this agreement is that it recognizes the Constitution of the Haida Nation, which is not the constitution of a society or charitable organization as are most constitutions, but the Constitution of a Nation. This is not something that they wanted to do but we would settle for nothing less. The implications are far reaching while there is little hope of getting it recognized in any other way.
>
> Gwaii Haanaas is our home, and in this agreement we establish our rights to do the things our ancestors have done, including building cabins and even homes, getting food, cedar, trapping, and in regard to any development or activities for tourists they need our consensus approval. Our people will be central to all planning management and operations in Gwaii Haanaas.

Honourable senators, some of the Haida leaders have advised that they want this bill passed. We certainly want to cooperate. This is an interim arrangement and it does provide a good stepping point for them to go on and enter into further arrangements.

It will also provide some employment for their people. It will provide a great tourist area that is rich in many aspects. It is an international heritage site. There are contained in the area some plants that are unique to that area. The area was not glaciated in the last glaciation period, which was some 10,000 years ago. It also contains some animals that are unique to that area. Overall it is a very rich site and this agreement really has some value for those people.

Honourable senators, I would be quite pleased to have the bill referred to committee, where perhaps it could be considered tomorrow. We will give our cooperation to ensure that it receives third reading as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Berntson, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 18, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

OTTAWA

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

June 18, 1992

Mr. Speaker,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 18th day of June, 1992, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

Yours sincerely,

JUDITH A. LAROCQUE
Secretary to the Governor General

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

VETERANS AFFAIRS

THE VALOUR AND THE HORROR—NATURE OF SUB-COMMITTEE HEARINGS INTO NFB FILM

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, several of us received today by fax letters from the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the President of the National Film Board, in which they protest what the Sub-Committee on Veterans Affairs of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology plans to do with reference to this matter.

Not only is this sub-committee engaging in censorship, it will also act in an unprecedented manner, which, in my view, is unjust. It will hear witnesses for the prosecution, not giving the defence a chance to rebut.

Senator Barootes: How do you know that?

Senator Gigantès: Because that is what they said they intended to do.

There are two groups of witnesses, one which is against the series made by the National Film Board which was shown on the CBC. The other group defends that series. The group that defends it has not been invited to attend the committee. That group will be invited to attend in the autumn. There may be a national referendum on September 14. There may be an election afterwards. Therefore the chance to rebut the accusations may not be given to them.

Honourable senators, this will be a kangaroo court. It is improper and unfit for the Senate to do this. I am surprised that Senator Marshall, a man whose wonderful reputation we cherish, will participate in this disheartening affair. The last time this happened, the Senate was ridiculed across the land. It will be even worse in this case.

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Big Ben election clock reads as follows for Thursday June 18, 1992—

Senator Simard: If the Senate is being ridiculed, you are doing your share, Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: If you have a statement, stand up and make it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish that senators would be more courteous of those who have the floor. Senator Frith has the floor.

Senator Phillips: May I ask the Honourable Senator Frith if he will yield to Senator Marshall?

Senator Simard: I am asking you to rule on this, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Simard, this is Senators' Statements.

Senator Simard: He is abusing the rules of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please sit down. During Senators' Statements I think that on both sides of this house there should be courtesy shown to whomever is making a statement.

Senator Simard: Not every day. It is rubbish and foolish.

Senator Gigantès: Are you talking about Senator Charbonneau?

Senator Hastings: Do you mean the Speaker?

Senator Frith: Today, Thursday, June 18, 1992, the democrats, according to Senator Murray's definition, have 156 days left. Those who are cowardly and contemptuous of democracy have 542 days until the election clock chimes.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SELECTION OF WITNESSES TO APPEAR BEFORE SUB-COMMITTEE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, as chairman of the sub-committee I probably should not respond to Senator Gigantès, but I want to tell him that I promised the CBC that I would be impartial, and I will be. Senator Gigantès has every right to rise on this matter, but he is making presumptions that are not correct.

I am not sure that I should take the time to explain this, but the reason we will not be hearing from the CBC is that the four days of meetings originally scheduled have now been reduced to two because of the work of the Senate. The Senate committee itself, that is the total committee, not just the chairman, made the decision. We heard from Mr. McKenna. The CBC got their message out to eight million people in Canada, they say. Joan Pennyfather of the National Film Board, who appeared before a communications committee meeting in the other place, stated that they had reached 1.8 million people with the film. Consequently, we had to condense it to certain witnesses.

The CBC and the NFB have been heard by Canadians across the country. They have spoken their truth and now the people that asked the Senate sub-committee to represent them and help them respond are getting that opportunity. We will also allow historians to appear before the committee—and, incidentally, they are from both sides and there are witnesses from both sides. They will appear on those two days and then we will adjourn until the fall.

The CBC and NFB wanted to appear now and wanted to rebut after each witness was heard. They would place themselves above the Senate. In any event, the committee decided on a certain agenda, and we will carry that out.

Senator Gigantès: Rebutting accusations; putting oneself above the Senate? This is strange.

Senator Simard: Those are orderly procedures and orderly meetings. You do not believe in orderly meetings. You do not care. You want revolutions!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

REFERENDUM BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare, for Honourable Senator Stanbury, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, June 18, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

[Senator Frith.]

EIGHTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-81, An Act to provide for referendums on the Constitution of Canada, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 10, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

RICHARD J. STANBURY
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator DeWare, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

● (1410)

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare, for Honourable Senator Stanbury, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, June 18, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

NINETEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-71, An Act to amend the Criminal Records Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 17, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

RICHARD J. STANBURY
Deputy Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, because there will be Royal Assent this afternoon and the report was brought in without amendment, may we have leave to have third reading now?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): In view of the fact that there is Royal Assent this afternoon, I will agree.

The Hon. The Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Len Marchand, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, June 18, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-59, An Act to amend the National Parks Act, has in obedience to its Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 17, 1992, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

LEN MARCHAND
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. The Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, for the same reasons given with respect to the previous bill, I ask for leave to have third reading now.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We agree under the same conditions, that we support the bill, there have been no objections raised, there are no amendments and Royal Assent is this afternoon.

The Hon. The Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

AN ACT TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS IN RELATION TO PENSIONS

AND TO ENACT THE SPECIAL RETIREMENT ARRANGEMENTS ACT

AND THE PENSION BENEFITS DIVISION ACT

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-55, to amend certain Acts in relation to pensions and to enact the Special Retirement Arrangements Act and the Pension Benefits Division Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday, June 22, 1992.

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

VISIT OF DELEGATION TO UKRAINE—REPORT TABLED

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer: Honourable senators, if I may, I should like to table, in both official languages, the report of our parliamentary delegation to Ukraine, undertaken under the aegis of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association during the period April 28 to May 9, 1992.

I know that, under the rules, in order to speak to this matter I should give notice of an inquiry. It is not my intention to do that. If I had leave, however, I would speak for a couple of minutes in explanation; if that causes problems, obviously I will not do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Ottenheimer: The Canadian parliamentary delegation was headed by Mr. Terry Clifford, Member of Parliament, and included three other members of the House of Commons, Mr. Ray Funk, Mr. Al Horning, and Mr. Brian O'Kurley, and I was very pleased to have the company of Senator Lorne Bonnell as part of the delegation representing the Senate. There were a number of Canadian businessmen present as well.

Certainly, it was a very instructive and interesting visit. As honourable senators are no doubt aware, Canada is held in very high regard in Ukraine, no doubt because of the large number of Canadians of Ukrainian origin. People expect very much of Canada, and certainly it is the hope of those who were over there that those expectations will be fulfilled.

Obviously, the Ukrainian people have enormous problems. Moving from decades of collectivism to a market economy is, I think for many people, an intellectual leap that will take some time to appreciate.

There are many lacunae in their system. For example, near the end of our visit, I learned that they have no criminal law as such. Under the former regime, a criminal act was a political act of noncompliance with the will of the proletariat; the concept of individual responsibility for one's acts outside the political context seems to be something new.

As honourable senators are well aware, there are severe tensions in the entire former Soviet Union and in parts of eastern Europe as well. In Ukraine, the Crimea is obviously an area of tension.

• (1420)

It is my impression, and I hope I am right, that in Ukraine people have resolved to settle these problems in a political process, since they are problems essentially with the Russian republic. I did not notice, and I do not think any members of the delegation noticed, a nationalism or ethnicity factor being exploited. Certainly, that was the appearance, although the differences are quite severe between Ukraine and Russia, especially with respect to Crimea which had been part of Russia since the 17th century, then was transferred to Ukraine in the 1950s by Stalin. This is obviously a focus of quite some controversy.

I thank honourable senators for allowing me to make these few words of explanation, and I am pleased to table the reports.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I wonder if the Senate might give me the same courtesy to say a few words about the report.

Senator Frith: Sure. The travelogues always used to come ahead of the feature film.

Senator Bonnell: Thank you, Mr. Leader of the Opposition, for those lovely words. The travelogue is over; we are now at the feature film.

Let me say that what my colleague Senator Ottenheimer has said about Ukraine is true, and that the report is worth reading in either official language.

I want to tell you of an interesting part of our trip in Crimea. The day before we arrived in Crimea, a vote was held and the people of Crimea voted for independence. They voted that they would be independent from Ukraine, independent from Russia; that they would, in fact, be an independent republic.

Two days after that, they again became members of the Ukraine. Their independent state did not last very long; in fact, just long enough for them, in their independence, to sign an agreement that they wanted to be part of Ukraine, and not a part of Russia.

Another interesting development was that, as we met with the mayors and the municipalities and the Supreme Rada of the Ukraine, they seemed quite interested in twinning with some Canadian city. I took upon myself the job of trying to twin Sevastopol, the capital of Crimea—the place where the Ukraine fleet is docked on the Black Sea; the place where Florence Nightingale became such a heroine during the Crimean War—with the city of Halifax.

Our hosts were quite enthused with the idea because the Ukraine fleet is stationed in the Black Sea at Sevastopol, and the Canadian fleet on the Atlantic coast is stationed in Halifax. They are both tourist cities, they are both ship-building cities, and they are both multi-language cities. Sevastopol is a city of over 100 cultures. Our hosts thought it would be a good thing to be twinned with the city of Halifax, Nova Scotia, in Canada.

After I came back from that trip, I wrote to the mayor of Halifax, suggesting this arrangement to her and sending along the correspondence from Crimea. I am still waiting for a reply from the City of Halifax. Unfortunately, on the day I wrote to her, the mayor suffered a stroke. I suspect she is recovering and that, sometime in the future, she will bring the matter before the full City Council for their consideration.

So, in the end, there may be a possibility of twinning the capital of Crimea and the capital of Nova Scotia, both home ports to great fleets. Before too long, there may even be cruise ships go from Halifax to Sevastopol, through the Mediterranean, down through the Bosphorus and into the Black Sea, and vice versa. In any event, the people of the Crimea are prepared to come to Halifax to sign a legal agreement for the proper twinning of the two cities. It will be interesting to see if such an arrangement comes to pass, all because of our visit to that great state.

May I also say that our friend Senator Ottenheimer acted as leader during that trip. He did an excellent job. He knew all the history of the Crimea, all the history of Russia, the history of their languages, and the history of their churches. Every time we went into a different church, he was able to give us the entire history: who the priest was; who the cardinal was; who was shipped off to the far north, and for how many years. So we had a good interpretation of the Crimea from Senator Ottenheimer. We also had an explanation of it in the Ukrainian language, but, of course, I did not understand that.

• (1430)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Reports from Standing and Special Committees:

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chair of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, June 18, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders, for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its review of the Senate Rules, pursuant to Rule 87 (1) (f) of the Rules of the Senate. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 3,000.00

Respectfully submitted,

THÉRÈSE LAVOIE-ROUX
Chairperson

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

On motion of Senator Lavoie-Roux, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chair of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, June 18, 1992

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its examination of the current conditions and future prospects of Canada's Atlantic commercial inshore fishery, as authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, May 19, 1992. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 1,250.00
Transportation and Communications	200.00
All Other Expenditures	1,150.00
Total	$ 2,600.00

Respectfully submitted,

THÉRÈSE LAVOIE-ROUX
Chairperson

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Lavoie-Roux, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

NOTICE OF MOTION TO CHANGE DATE OF TABLING OF FINAL REPORT

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras: Honourable senators, I give notice that Friday next, June 19, I shall move that notwithstanding the order of reference adopted by the Senate on December 17, 1991, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to table the final report of its special study on the draft regulations ensuing from the new legislation on Canadian financial institutions no later than October 29, 1992.

[English]

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology have power to sit at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion? Motion agreed to.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

THE VALOUR AND THE HORROR—CONTROVERSY OVER NFB FILM—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Monday, June 22, 1992, I will call the attention of the Senate to the scholarly aspects of the controversy over the inquiry by Senator Marshall's sub-committee into the film, The Valour and the horror, prepared by the National Film Board and presented by the CBC.

THE VALOUR AND THE HORROR — CENSORSHIP OF NFB FILM—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I also give notice that on Tuesday, June 23, 1992, I will call the attention of the Senate to the inadvisability of the Senate's playing a censorship role in such matters.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have petitions from New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec. These petitions ask Parliament to repeal the GST and hope for an early election.

The list of cities is as follows: from New Brunswick, Le Goulet; from Ontario, Hawkesbury, L'Orignal, Nepean, Orleans, Ottawa, and Vanier; and from Quebec, Hull.

The summary is as follows: Quebec, 1 petition with 7 names; New Brunswick, 2 petitions with 39 names; Ontario, 16 petitions with 351 names.

Total petitions, 19; total names, 397.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

BANK OF CANADA—RELATION OF RATE TO ECONOMIC ACTIVITY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Did the Bank of Canada rate fall below 6 per cent today as was forecast?

As well, I wish to ask the government leader if he believes that something more than a decline in that bank rate is required to kickstart the economy. In the past, that was sufficient. However, we have a report today that Canadian factories were operating at slightly more than two-thirds of capacity in the first quarter of this year, and that is the lowest level since this government came to office.

The writer of the article, or, indeed, Stats Canada, said that it was a lack of spending by consumers and businesses that was to blame and that it more than offset a slight surge in export-targeted production earlier in the year.

Does the minister realize that simply bringing the rate down, as welcome as that is, is not enough to get this economy going? That has been demonstrated over the past three or four months, and factory output is now at its lowest level since 1984.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am glad to confirm that the bank rate at noon today fell 17 bases points to 5.91 per cent, the lowest is has been since May of 1973.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: I am glad to see the honourable senator smiling. He understands, as an experienced person, the connection between a low rate of inflation, a low bank rate, low interest rates and renewed economic growth, and that, indeed, is what is happening in the Canadian economy.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I understand that, but there is still something missing. I agree that this situation has been going on for months, brought on, of course, by the recession. However, there is something missing because an upturn in the economy, consumer confidence and investor confidence have not been restored.

Is the government not seriously considering making at least the other statement? People are still very apprehensive about borrowing money at these rates, even though the rates are much more satisfactory than they have been, because the government and its agent, the Bank of Canada, have declared that they might use the bank rate to clobber people with higher interest rates if there is any suggestion that inflation might be starting to creep up a little from the very low level it is at today. A further statement of intent is what is needed. Does the government intend to do that, or will it continue to allow Canada to remain mired in this morass of debt?

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the inflation rate in this country, low as it is, offers, in the view of the government, room for further decreases in interest rates.

The honourable senator asks what it will take to get the economy moving. I have to remind him once again that the International Monetary Fund predicts that Canada will have the highest rate of economic growth and the highest rate of employment growth of all the G-7 countries in 1992 and again in 1993.

Senator Frith: All of it inherited from the previous Liberal government, I assume, since you inherited everything else from it.

Senator Murray: This is in the future.

The honourable senator wants some good news. I will give him some good news that came out only today. He raises the question of factory output. I will give him some news which I think will be encouraging, especially to the manufacturing sector. In April, total merchandise exports in real terms were $157.4 billion, the highest total on record. This level of real exports in April represented an increase of 2.1 per cent over March, 1992; 5.9 per cent since December, 1991; and 8.5 per cent over April of 1991, a year earlier.

Senator Olson: I sincerely wonder, honourable senators, when these quasi-illusory replies that the minister gives might stop. They are as I said, because while he did say there was a bit of a surge in some export orders, he did not tell us what Statistics Canada said, namely that the surge was more than offset by further declines in domestic consumption. If you want to be honest and forthcoming about it, instead of deceptive—

Senator Gigantès: You are expecting too much.

Senator Olson: I know, but I sincerely believe it is the job of the opposition to prod the government from time to time to do something right.

Does this government intend to come forth with some answers in which people can have some confidence? For example, the figures came out yesterday. The deficit is $2.5 billion higher than was forecast when the budget for 1991-92 was presented. Indeed, it is $1.5 billion or $1.6 billion higher than even the updated version given by the Minister of Finance only a few weeks ago. This is the kind of misinterpretation of the facts of economic life in the real world that causes consumers and business investors to exhibit that lack of confidence, and stimulate what a lower bank rate ought to, namely, some economic activity. When will you give Canadians confidence that the government will not penalize them if they do take advantage of these lower interest rates?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me put to rest the argument that the honourable senator has made about the budget deficit. The figures for the 1991-92 fiscal year will not all be in until the fall. I can tell the honourable senator that the talk of a $5 billion discrepancy between the forecast and the reality is completely wrong and will be proven wrong.

Senator Olson: I said 2.5.

Senator Murray: Even there, I think my honourable friend will be found to be wrong.

Senator Olson: It is not I who is wrong, it is the people who study these things.

Senator Murray: I am telling the honourable senator that the final figures will not be out before the fall.

The honourable senator does not take as much satisfaction from the export figures as he should. One third of our jobs depend on exports. It is surely good news, especially for those in the manufacturing sector, to find that exports have been increasing at such a satisfactory rate.

Senator Olson: Marginal rate.

Senator Murray: It is not marginal. I just put on the record the figures for the increase in real terms in exports in April. Let me give the honourable senator the figures for exports to the United States: In April, it was $122.3 billion, a record level. The increase in merchandise exports to the United States was 4.7 per cent over the previous month. There has been a 13.2 per cent increase since December, 1991, and a 14.9 per cent increase over April, 1991. In case you were wondering —and I am sorry our friend Senator Perrault is not here—there has been a 16.8 per cent increase in merchandise exports to the U.S. since the implementation of the free trade agreement in January of 1989. That is good news.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECT ON CONSUMER SPENDING

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government please explain how it is that while exports and production are increasing, unemployment has also increased during the periods when those extra things were made? There is a link between high unemployment and lack of consumption, as everyone knows. An unemployed person has less money to spend and people who are afraid of unemployment are not willing to spend. There is also an increase in the number of people on welfare.

The policies of this government have been driving more people into poverty, yet we are only told that we have higher exports.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate the point that the honourable senator has made about this link. There also seems to be some lag between increased economic growth and increased exports, increased investment and increased employment. I have already told the Senate, not only today but on numerous occasions, that the IMF, surely an objective international body, predicts that Canada will lead the G-7 nations not only in economic growth but also in employment growth in 1992 and 1993.

● (1450)

The point is that the fundamentals are in place for a renewed and sustained economic growth.

Senator Gigantès: Would the honourable Leader of the Government look up the figures of the IMF pertaining to last year and the year before and come back to tell us whether or not the IMF has been wrong about Canada? I claim that it has been for the past two years.

Why does the minister think they are faultless oracles and infallible?

Senator Murray: I did not suggest that they were faultless oracles or that they were infallible, either.

I will do better than what the honourable senator asks.

I will obtain the forecasts made by the IMF, the OECD and other such bodies; as well as those of some of the private think-tanks in this country, and those made by the Department of Finance in successive budgets. I believe I can demonstrate to the honourable senator that the government's record as forecaster has been pretty solid.

Senator Gigantès: I would love to see that.

JUSTICE

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—STATUS OF REPORT OF PUBLIC COMPLAINTS COMMISSION

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have a request of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Some three months ago questions were asked in the Senate regarding an unfortunate incident of an Inuk woman who was involved in a rape case. She, in fact was the victim. Because she was reluctant to testify against the accused in the case, she was escorted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police from Vancouver back to Iqaluit under very distressing circumstances.

Shortly after that occurred, as a result of all the publicity in the papers, Commissioner Inkster appeared before a committee of the other place, apologized for what had happened, and told the committee that the officers involved had been disciplined internally. He also said that he was waiting for the report of the RCMP Public Complaints Commission to decide whether or not to take further action.

Can the Leader of the Government obtain information concerning the contents of the report? I am sure it has been finalized at this point in time.

It would also be helpful to know what type of internal discipline these Mounties were subjected for what was, indeed, a most distressing incident.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall ask for a report from the Solicitor General, Mr. Lewis.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

THE VALOUR AND THE HORROR — SELECTION OF WITNESSES TO APPEAR BEFORE SUB-COMMITTEE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: In view of the fact, honourable senators, that any reputable historian will tell you that he disagrees with practically every other reputable historian on any major issue; and in view of the fact that, on the issue Senator Marshall intends to investigate, there are opposing opinions by reputable historians, as well as opposing testimony, would the Leader of the Government intercede with Senator Marshall so that the Senate will not be put in a position of having to make a judgment on the validity of the opinions of different historians and different groups of veterans?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would presume that my honourable friends opposite have members on the sub-committee headed by Senator Marshall. I would also presume that there is a steering committee on which they are represented. I know Senator Marshall has heard what Senator Gigantès has just said.

The sub-committee and its steering committee are the proper places to decide the business of the committee, what witnesses shall be heard and in what order. I am sure the chairman of the sub-committee has heard the senator's remarks and will pay proper attention to the representations made.

Senator Gigantès: Does the Leader of the Government not agree that it is the business of the Senate, and not of one of its sub-committees, to decide whether the action of one of its sub-committees might bring discredit to the Senate by presenting it as a body that tries to impose censorship on the free expression of scholarly disagreements and on the publication of such disagreements by institutions such as the National Film Board, which has a whole array of historians to prove Senator Marshall's historians wrong?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, first, the sub-committee, in this instance is operating under a rather broad mandate given to it by the Senate.

Second, they are responding to representations that have been made to it, by veterans groups especially, throughout the country on this matter.

I hope the honourable senator will not prejudge the work of the committee. Senator Marshall is a fair-minded man. I have confidence in him and in the members of that committee.

I also hope that representatives of Senator Gigantès party will participate fully in the work of the sub-committee and make their representations there.

Finally, in any case, the committee will make a report will be presented in this place and debated. The Senate, including my honourable friend, can then judge whether the report and its recommendations, if any, are well-founded.

[Senator Murray.]

I am content to leave it at that, as I am with the work of committees generally.

Senator Gigantès: Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate have us believe that he does not care about the impression that will be created around the country because only one side will be heard and not the other at these sittings—which may not continue in the fall for all we know? The Senate will give the impression not only of being a censor but of being a kangaroo court that hears only one set of witnesses.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I really cannot add anything to what I have already said. If the honourable senator has a problem with what is happening in the committee, then he should, either personally or through one of his colleagues, bring that problem to the attention of the steering committee and, indeed, of the subcommittee and try to remedy the situation.

I would also remind the honourable senator that our rules permit him to ask questions of the chairman of the committee on matters relating to the business of the committee. I think his questions would be more appropriately directed to Senator Marshall than to me.

Senator Gigantès: The honourable Leader of the Government is the leader of the majority in this place. The committee is composed of a Tory majority. That majority has, presumably, taken a decision to hold hearings that will almost certainly give the impression that, first, we are engaging in censorship and, second, that we are loading the dice against one side. It is your side, sir, and you are the leader of the majority in the Senate which controls the sub-committee and its steering committee.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, frankly, I am not party to the decisions of the committee. I invite Senator Marshall to answer the question.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, Senator Gigantès says that an impression will be left. The CBC has left an impression with eight million people. It has been heard.

We senators who represent minorities are responding to what amounts to a massive request to take up this matter. It is our job to do so, and if we were to do more of that, then there would be no talk about the demise of this place.

Senator Gigantès: The chairman of the sub-committee knows that the National Film Board series shown by CBC praises the Canadian fighting man. It shows that, as individuals and collectively, he was ready to serve heroically and to die for our country. It criticizes some decisions of mainly foreign leaders—not Canadians—who put Canadian fighting men in impossible situations.

This is not historically unprecedented. There was "Butcher" Haig. People have made such mistakes, including generals, in every war.

Senator Doody: Question!

Senator Gigantès: Why is the sub-committee objecting to people saying that generals have led Canadian fighting men to the slaughter as a result of mistakes at the generals' level?

Senator Marshall: The senator is trying to debate the whole issue now in the Senate. If he wants to come to the committee, he is welcome; if he wants to appear at the committee hearings, all he has to do is write a letter; and if he wants to say anything, let him ask to become a witness and we will answer him in the proper way.

Senator Gigantès: Is Honourable Senator Marshall trying to say that we are not allowed to express our opinions here, that we can only talk of the subjects of his choosing in his sub-committee?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We are in Question Period.

Senator Gigantès: This is a question. I have asked him a question. I am asking him the questions because the Leader of the Government said he should answer them. Just answer one.

Senator Marshall: I did not get the text of your question. Will you ask it again?

Senator Gigantès: The question, sir, was: Are you suggesting that I am not allowed to ask questions on any subject I like in the Senate, but that I have to go before your sub-committee, by writing a letter and getting permission from your sub-committee to be a witness there? I do not want to be a witness. I want you to talk about it now.

Senator Marshall: I am surprised at Senator Gigantès. He just finished giving notice of two inquiries on this matter, which he will debate in the Senate on Monday and Tuesday, and now he is asking me to debate it again.

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

Senator Marshall: Go through the proper procedures. You have your inquiry in, but you want three kicks at the cat now.

Senator Gigantès: I will have six of them, because I will use my three minute periods tomorrow, Monday and Tuesday.

Senator Marshall: That is your right.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

UNEMPLOYMENT IN OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have in my hand a detailed list of all the lay-offs that have taken place in the various oil and gas companies in Alberta in the last two years. Just for the oil companies alone, including the large companies, but not the very small ones, approximately 11,961 stated that downsizing of the jobs had occurred in these oil companies—and this list does not include the drilling companies or the service companies, which would amount to four or five times as many. If you add that all up, the downsizing in the oil and gas sector in terms of loss of jobs represents approximately 65,000 or 70,000 lost jobs in the last couple of years.

Can the government give those people who are unemployed and reaching the end of their unemployment insurance benefits some comfort that the government is seriously considering some changes that will reverse this disastrous situation?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we had this discussion some days ago.

Senator Olson: We did not get any answers, though.

Senator Murray: Those very companies came to us and asked us to make a change in the rules regarding foreign investment in the oil fields. They asked us to remove some of the remaining barriers to foreign investment in the Canadian oil industry.

We have responded positively to that request. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has announced that legislation will be brought in to effect those changes.

Once again I ask the honourable senator for a firm commitment that he will support those positive measures to be brought in by this government.

Senator Olson: The Leader gave that answer before. However, one of the largest foreign investments in Canadian oil in Canada was when Amoco purchased the assets and liabilities of Dome Canada limited. Amoco has already announced that it will lay off 900 workers. They go on further to state that their goal is to have 1,500 fewer employees by 1993.

Therefore, this solution, namely to use a depressed situation to sell off the Canadian equity in the Canadian oil business, is not very satisfactory to the people who are watching the situation. Is that all the comfort that the Canadian government can give, namely, that we will use this depression in the gas and oil business to sell off the assets that Canadian companies previously held in the oil and gas leases?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the persistent and repeated representations of the industry to this government are to the effect that they need more and better access to equity capital. That is their statement. We have responded positively to those representations.

I hope the honourable senator will support our action in that regard. If he has other ideas as to policy initiatives that the government might take, we would be glad to consider them.

Senator Olson: I do not support the sell-off of Canadian oil and gas assets such as the honourable senator has indicated. The result of that, by the figures that are available to us now, indicate that there is no increase in the activity by the people who have lost their jobs in the last two years.

I will have to report that all this government will do is raise the minimum to $150 million and let all these companies do what Amoco is doing; in spite of the promises that Amoco made that they would invest an additional $5 billion in the Canadian oil and gas sector, they just simply have not done it.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if Senator Olson seriously intends to oppose these measures that have been announced by Mr. Epp, I would suggest he put a bag over his head when he passes through Calgary on his way to Medicine Hat.

Senator Olson: I talk to the people who are watching what is unfolding. If there is anyone who needs a bag over his head, it is any Conservative going through Calgary recently.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked on June 2 by Senator Bosa, regarding the effect of free trade on the rate of unemployment. I have the answer to another question asked on June 4 by Senator Molgat, regarding the business confidence index.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT ON RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

(Response to question raised by Hon. Peter Bosa on June 2, 1992)

The following analysis of the Canadian economy clearly indicate that the FTA is not responsible for job losses during the current recession.

Following are the comments of Kip Beckman, Senior Research Associate of the Conference Board of Canada, writing in the summer 1991 issue of The Canadian Business Review:

"A closer examination of the economic record since the FTA's inception indicates that free trade critics are confusing the facts. They are blaming then FTA for job losses that are attributable to a variety of other economic circumstances, such as the recession. There is also evidence that the FTA, rather than hurting the economy, may have actually offset some of the damage that the recession has done to the Canadian economy to date".

"The average tariff rate on dutiable imports from the United States will decline by about 1 percent per year. This implies that tariffs on U.S. goods have declined by only 2 percent during the first two years the agreement has been in effect. It is therefore difficult to argue that price advantages gained by U.S. imports due to tariff reductions to date are responsible for significant job losses".

An analysis made in the July 1991 commentary of the C.D. Howe Institute stated the following:

"... it is overly simplistic—and ultimately incorrect—to blame most or even a large proportion of the recent job losses in the Canadian economy on the FTA."

In his analysis of the third year of the FTA, Gordon Ritchie of Strategico Inc. made the following comments:

"The direct economic impact of the Canada-USA Free Trade Agreement, or FTA, has been small but positive, very much as expected, with measurable increases in business investment, trade and output and decreases in prices."

The Royal Bank of Canada in a 1991 study made the following analysis which was similar to the conclusion reached by the University of Toronto:

"The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement (FTA) has not been a major contributor to the current difficulties being experienced by some industries in Canada. ... In fact, the Agreement may even have moderated the impact of the recession through higher levels of investment."

It should be noted that the number of manufacturing job losses has been growing over the last two and a half decades. As a percentage of the workforce, manufacturing employment has been in decline since the mid-1960's. This trend is in no way unique to Canada.

The FTA is not responsible for the Canadian job losses that concern all of us. The FTA has, however, shielded Canada from what might have been an even deeper recession, and indeed, as Wood Gundy suggested in a recent report, the FTA is accentuating industrial rationalization, which combined with the appreciation of the Canadian dollar, "will trigger startling productivity improvements over the next two years."

The FTA has been of great benefit to Canada. Canadian exports have increased by 5% since the FTA came into force. There has also been a reversal of Canada's investment picture from a net outflow of $2.5 billion in 1988 to a net inflow of $2.1 billion in 1991. Finally, through the FTA's dispute-settlement provisions, the Canadian position has been upheld in important cases such as pork, red raspberries and, most recently, non-mortgage interest/rules of origin.

On June 10, 1992, a package of information entitled the "Trade year in review" was distributed to members of the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. Included in this material was the Free Trade Agreement situation report for 1991. This package is currently being mailed to all senators.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR RECONCILIATION OF ECONOMIC INDICATORS

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gildas L. Molgat on June 4, 1992)

The survey of business attitudes and investment spending, or Business Confidence Index, has been prepared by the Conference Board of Canada on a quarterly basis since 1977.

The Index is based on a confidential survey of chief executive officers of about 400 Canadian business organizations. The particular firms surveyed are chosen to reflect the relative importance of different industries in total investment spending in Canada.

[Senator Murray.]

The index value in every quarter is determined by the number of positive responses to the following three questions (and then indexed to 1977 = 100):

— Over the next six months do you expect the financial situation of your firm to improve?

— Would you say the present is a good time to undertake expenditures to expand your plant or add to the stock of your machinery and equipment?

— Is your current level of operations close to, at, or above capacity?

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

PENSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy leader of the Government): I move third reading of Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall that the bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators to adopt the motion?

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I want to bring to your attention the fact that we had the minister with us here yesterday. He gave us a great explanation of why the bill was brought in the way it was.

Senator Stewart: It was a dismal performance.

Senator Bonnell: He also explained why the resistance group was added and why the government made the deliberate decision to cut them off retroactively. That is a government decision that they are prepared to stand by.

Senator Doody: Vote against it!

Senator Bonnell: We on this side of the house think he spoiled a lovely bill on behalf of the mariners by placing this issue in the same bill. It was a kind of poison pill that went along with that lovely bill we have all been seeking for several years. Apparently the government did this intentionally.

Why didn't the minister bring in a separate bill on March 22, when he apparently told those members of the resistance that they were to be cut off the list and need not apply any more because they would not be considered, and that the present applications were all to be cut off the list and were not to be processed? Why did he leave it until now, the last few days of the session this summer, to bring in this issue, tagging it on to this that we want so badly on behalf of the mariners? I guess it was an intentional decision by the government. Of course, he has to carry out the will of the government.

● (1510)

I would like to suggest, honourable senators, before we pass this bill on third reading, that we consider the possibility of amending the bill by deleting the section headed "resistance groups" beginning on page 10 and ending at page 12. If necessary, that section could form part of a separate bill, rather than have it spoil this beautiful bill that we have for mariners.

The Hon. The Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, that Bill C-84 be read the third time now.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, seconded by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn:

> That Bill C-84 be amended by deleting the section headed "resistance groups" beginning at page 10 and ending on page 12.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say, "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say, "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Senator Molgat: On division.

Motion in amendment negatived, on division.

The Hon. The Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT SUSPENSION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William C. Doody: Honourable senators, I move the third reading of Bill C-67.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I spoke to this bill at second reading and I speak again at third reading because of the evidence that we received in committee.

You may remember that this is the bill to which the other place gave a total of twenty minutes for first, second and third readings, debate, committee consideration and passage. This bill seeks to delay the redistribution of seats in the other place for a period of up to 22 months. This redistribution, senators will remember, is required by the constitution to reconcile electoral boundaries with the results of the most recent decennial census. Senators will also remember that I raised questions as to the bill's constitutional legality, and also as to the justification for the bill in a policy sense. I will start with the constitutional issue. When I spoke at second reading, my expectation was that this bill was probably within the bounds of parliamentary jurisdiction. Still, I was anxious to have some expert analysis carried out for the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee so that any concern could be relieved. I did feel that the lack of attention that had been given to the bill in the other place and the obviously important implications of the bill put the Senate in a position where it was obliged to give this bill careful consideration. In committee, we were fortunate in having as witnesses Mr. Graham Eglington, a well-known constitutional expert and former counsel to what is now known as the Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations, and the Senate's Assistant Law Clerk, Mr. Mark Audcent, who prepared an opinion and left us with some of his associated notes on the bill. Both Mr. Audcent and Mr. Eglington were helpful in explaining the constitutional implications of Bill C-67 for the committee. As I understand it, the leaders of each of the parties in the other place have agreed that a suspension of boundary readjustment is needed to enable the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Electoral Reform and Party Financing, which we know as the Lortie Commission, to be considered and, if necessary, implemented.

As honourable Senators will know, the Lortie Commission's report, which was handed down in February, has made a number of recommendations, including proposals to amend the constitution, that would, if fulfilled, greatly affect redistribution. Thus, the purported motivation for the government in drafting this bill was the savings of time and expense to complete a process that would eventually be re-initiated when and if the Lortie recommendations were passed.

Our witnesses at committee expressed concerns about how the government explained the bill's purpose, and one of our witnesses questioned not only the explanation of the motivation, but the motivation itself. Mr. Audcent said:

> . . . the bill is a little bald on its face in that the reason for passing Bill C-67 is not shown on its face. [The committee] needed the evidence of the witnesses to advise you of the information regarding the Lortie Commission and the fact that you wish to take into consideration the recommendations of the Lortie Commission.

Graham Eglington agreed, and went much further. Eglington said that the arguments put forward by the government in favour of Bill C-67:

[Senator Stanbury.]

> . . . are not based on the life and death struggle of the country . . . nor on the divisiveness of electoral rearrangements in the current constitutional climate, not even on the imminence of improvements to the redistribution parcel of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Instead, as Eglington said:

> what is offered is simply that a royal commission has reported with recommendations that when studied further by a parliamentary committee might lead the government of the day to bring legislation into this parliament, or the next, which might affect either what is now provided for in section 51 of the Constitution or in the general statute law governing electoral redistribution.

Surely, honourable senators, there is no serious motivation in the premise for Bill C-67 demonstrated here, and thus, no justification for Bill C-67.

The assumption is that the Lortie recommendations, or at least some of them, will gain the favour of the government and be introduced under the rubric of electoral reform. The question is: how long would this take to implement—if they did decide that they are worthy of implementation and if they can agree on the specifics? Could it come into effect prior to the completion of the current process already initiated? That is not at all clear. We all know the inconsistent history of Royal Commission Recommendations with governments. Electoral reform could still take several years.

● (1520)

Even now the press has noted the problem. In an article by Stewart MacLeod in the Winnipeg Free Press on June 15 entitled: "Electoral reform light growing dim", Mr. MacLeod stated:

> Electoral reform in Canada has always presented difficulties for parliamentarians. For one thing, changes in the best interests of a governing party are not necessarily in the best interests of the opposition parties.
>
> In fact, they're probably not. And even among opposition parties, there are sharply differing views between the big and the small, the regional and the national.

I think the basic assumption behind Bill C-67, which is that the current process would be wasted because we will start another system soon, is highly questionable.

In his address, Senator Murray made the assertion that there is an ultimate deadline provided in the bill—one year unless an election is called in the interim; then 180 days after the writs are returned—because the process would automatically come back into force if there is no reform. Senator Murray described the bill as providing "a simple deferral", and consequently not being incompatible with the constitution. However, the constitution provides that after the completion of each decennial census, electoral boundaries "shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides."

The pertinent question here is: What does this clause mean? What does "after the completion" demand? Furthermore, to what extent is postponement allowed before it becomes de facto termination? When is a deferral no longer a deferral? When is a deferral an abuse of the spirit of the constitution? If the House of Commons were so disposed to introduce another suspension at the end of the period provided for in Bill C-67, would that then be too long to be in accord with the provisions of the constitution?

Senator Murray further down-played the time period in saying that it will only be one year unless there is an election. It is virtually certain that there will be an election during that time. It is also not unreasonable to suggest that there may be two elections during that time—given the apparent proclivity to minority governments we face.

During committee hearings, however, Mr. Eglington stressed the importance of the time period. Although he concluded that the time limit provided for in this bill is strictly legally acceptable, he better defined the provisions of the constitution and helped draw the line between Parliament's right to act and the citizen's right guaranteed by the process. Mr. Eglington said:

> I have come to the view that so far as the Constitution Act now stands, there is indeed a time limit on the carrying out of the readjustment work. The combination of the recurring nature of the decennial censuses embodied in the words "each decennial census" and the enshrining of proportionate representation principle . . . suggests some limit to the delay that can be forced upon the procedure.

He went even further in saying that he believes that the court would likely "declare [this limit] and possibly . . . enforce it". Moreover, Mr. Eglington said that an amendment to the constitution in 1943 used to suspend the readjustment process points out that "parliament was in some way limited in its ability to halt the machinery of readjustment indefinitely once the census was completed. There was a time frame Parliament could not touch." In other words, the phrase in the constitution providing for readjustment "on completion" of each decennial census did in fact provide a limit and that the 1974 suspension, which was mentioned by Senator Murray previously, proved and "reinforced" the "inexorability of the process of readjustment once the census results have come in . . ."

No one would say that "on completion" means instantly, but as Mr. Eglington pointed out, the process is intended by the constitution to begin and to be inexorable in nature. Mr. Eglington concluded that the delay provided for in this bill is not significant in terms of destroying the decennial readjustment cycle, but that there is a point at which a court would decide that such was the case. This point is important, honourable senators, so that future governments will be aware of the limits they face, and aware of the seriousness of the undertaking.

No one is suggesting that section 51 puts the matter beyond the authority of the Parliament of Canada. However, Senator Murray did tell honourable senators in this place that the government had no intention of amending the constitution with this bill. Nevertheless, one of our constitutional experts suggested that in fact this does have the weight of a constitutional amendment, and the another did not discount that possibility. Mr. Eglington said: "Section 51 [of the constitution] could be amended expressly or by necessary intendment." In the case of the present bill the intent is to override whatever timetabling requirements section 51 might, on its true construction, provide. Mr. Audcent went one step further, characterizing Bill C-67 as constitutional in nature because of the intimate relationship with section 51 of the Constitution.

Since Confederation, and particularly in the last 50 years, the statutory system has developed with a dual thrust toward regularization of timing of boundary realignments and the general transference of responsibility for the process to an external body.

Specifically, as Professor R.K. Carty suggests, the chief objective of the constitution and all relevant legislation "has been to remove from self-interested partisans the onus of initiating readjustments."

It goes without saying that the intention is not only to remove partisans from the decision to initiate, but also to delay readjustments. The point is to take the control for timing out of the hands of parliamentarians—so that they are predictable and not conducted at the pleasure of the government.

What Bill C-67 proposes, then, is to suspend the statutory time limits in place for the process of re-drawing these boundaries; essentially leaving ridings as they exist now for as much as two years longer than would otherwise be the case. Of course, the primary problem with this is that it already takes a long time to go through this process. The last census, conducted in 1981 and tabled in 1982, did not have its expression in the democratic chamber of our government until the 1988 election. In other words, the electoral boundaries were already based on information seven years out of date as a result of the lengthy process. Bill C-67 threatens to repeat or increase this period of time in a nation in which the population is constantly growing and shifting.

With that in mind, honourable senators, consider some of the divergence between the principle and the reality that already exist. Elections Canada has calculated that, on the basis of the 1986 interim census—already six years old—at least 25 ridings then exceeded the permissible population variances of 25 percent as defined in the statute's rules. A case in point is the riding of York North near my home in Toronto. York North now has over 233,000 people, while there are other ridings with one-tenth that population. Certainly this derogates from the principle intended by the Constitution and the statute. Bill C-67 will exacerbate the problem that we already face and further abuse the principle of proportionate representation protected by the constitution.

Since this bill was prompted by the Lortie report, I thought I should read over portions of this report again to look for any recommendation by Lortie that there be a delay in boundary readjustment. I came upon the following statement, which, while it does not add to the rationale for the suspension, it does help make the argument against it. The report states:

> Equality and efficacy of the vote are fundamental objectives of an electoral democracy that aspires to the quality of representation that Canadians deem necessary for effective and legitimate representative governance.
>
> Relative equality in the number of voters in each constituency in a province is required not only to preserve the constitutional right that each vote be of equal value, but also because large variations in the size of constituencies tend to produce a legislature at significant variance with the distribution of the popular vote. Such occurrences undermine the legitimacy of Parliament and of the government.

Honourable senators, the concern for regular revisions of the electoral map stems from a basic commitment to fairness and to equity. Even though the fairness of boundary adjustment may not be simple or completely equitable, it is the system defined by the Constitution and delineated in statute and, as such, should be respected.

Again, Graham Eglinton's testimony before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was instructive. He said:

> It is clear that a regularly adjusted representation . . ..is a root principle of our present parliamentary democracy. The integrity and independence of the system employed is clearly also very important. [Also] important for most people is the distribution and redistribution of electorates within a province and the fairness of the redistribution.
>
> There may be doubts as to whether mere population is the right basis for redistributing electorates . . . and there may be debate about allowable variances . . . but regular, systematic, fair and independent redistribution is regarded as the democratic norm. Given that, any interference with the regular cycle of readjustment and consequent redistribution is not to be enterprised upon lightly, wantonly or unadvisedly.

Honourable senators, my point to you today is just that: Bill C-67 is an attempt, albeit likely unintentional, to enterprise upon and to interfere with a root principle of our parliamentary democracy, lightly, wantonly, and unadvisedly. The justification offered, namely, the eventual implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission , is administrative convenience, pure and simple.

The reality is that this bill is asking us to accept a derogation from our system of democracy because there is a chance—and only a chance —of saving some money. Therefore, although this bill is within the constitutional purview of Parliament to amend, and the bill's proposed period of suspension appears to be constitutional, there are certain questions of constitutional propriety. In other words, although the strict question of whether it is or is not within the competence of the Parliament of Canada is answered in the affirmative, the question of constitutional propriety is left unresolved, and the merit of the bill from a policy perspective is answered in the negative, so much so that the bill is unjustifiable.

[Senator Stanbury.]

The bill has serious implications but has not had serious consideration by its sponsors and does not enjoy any serious foundation or justification. As a result, I am far from convinced that this is the appropriate way to govern this country or the appropriate signal to be sending to Canadians; Canadians who, after all, are seeking more influence in the decision-making process in this country. What would people say if they knew that their system of representation was about to be subverted by their representatives for the sake of a convenience that may never appear?

To conclude, honourable senators, I should repeat a question posed by Mr. Graham Eglinton before the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee:

> How proper is it to interfere with the established rhythm of a basic part of our democratic and federal under-pinnings, not because specific proposals are now to be brought forward but because proposals unknown might be brought forward and might be carried by both houses?
>
> There is always a danger that administrative convenience becomes the highest law of the state and that the compliance of both houses in carrying whatever measures some government might choose to introduce is taken for granted.

I hope honourable senators will agree that this kind of misuse of the legislative process is one of the legitimate concerns of the Senate. Even though all parties in the other place accepted the bill as convenient for them, surely the Senate does not have to let itself be co-opted into approving a bill that, when looked at closely, does not meet the test of public interest. Bill C-67 has the effect of an amendment to the Constitution, but it has been carelessly entered into without a thought as to its implications. And for what purpose? Administrative convenience.

The Senate still has a duty to uphold the integrity of the Constitution and the rights of Canadians that are guaranteed therein. This bill seriously affects our citizens' rights to democratic representation. It is flawed from the perspective of constitutional propriety, and it is doubly flawed from a policy perspective. It would be most unfortunate for our democratic process if this bill were to become law. I therefore recommend that we vote to defeat this legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

STATUS OF THE ARTIST BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Chaput-Rolland, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the second reading of Bill C-7, An Act respecting the status of the artist and professional relations between artists and producers in Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, to use a particular expression from the artistic field, I have been between engagements for a few moments, at the invitation of the Deputy Leader of the Senate.

The short title of Bill C-7 is simply, "The status of the artist". There is a definition of the term "artist" in the legislation. I guess we all believe that we know what is meant by "artist" even without it, but had such legislation come before a Parliament, say, in the seventeenth century, the legislators would have had a much different notion of who was an artist. This bill, in fact, would have made very little sense to a Parliament of the seventeenth century.

The word "art" is derived from the Latin "ars" or, in the plural, "artes", meaning the skill or knowledge used to produce something. Prior to the eighteenth century, art referred not only to painting and sculpting but to any useful activity, be it agriculture, architecture, medicine or shoe-making. Although art has now taken a much different meaning, its traditions remain apparent in the word "artisan", which describes a skilled worker or mechanic.

Today when we talk of the arts, we are usually referring to the fine arts: painting, sculpture, literature, architecture, music and dance. There are also the liberal arts which, in the university context, describe the traditional disciplines of grammar, logic, rhetoric, arithmetic, geometry, music, and astronomy.

It is important to realize that the term "art" as used today, in the sense of the fine arts, had its genesis only during the Renaissance when, for the first time, artists were recognized and gained individual fame for their work. Therefore by recognizing the status of artists by way of this bill, we are not exactly in the forefront.

● (1540)

Until the time of the Renaissance, going back even to the days of Ancient Greece, painters and sculptors were little more than skilled toilers. They were slaves, and labourers of the lower classes engaged in shoemaking, painting, metal work and sculpting. Art, as thought of today, was reserved for displays of superior mental ability as seen in the pursuit of rhetoric and logic. It is no accident that Plato, Aristotle or even Thomas Aquinas had no contemporaries such as, for example, Michelangelo or Rembrandt. There were no artists of that status and of that category contemporary to Plato, Aristotle or Thomas Aquinas.

Art in the sense of aesthetics arose in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; during the Renaissance. It was then that the belief arose that the fine arts had a special quality, a beauty that separated them from the other arts. A new class of wealthy merchants, bankers and aristocrats began collecting things of beauty. They began competing with one another to see who could acquire and display the most beautiful paintings, fine books and even theatrical performances.

Senator Barootes: The popes were patrons of the arts.

Senator Frith: Yes, the popes were great patrons of the arts. Thank you, senator.

Artists were hired to create or compose works of art. It was during this period that the phenomenon of "patron of the arts"—anticipated by Senator Barootes—first arose. Wealthy monarchs and merchants encouraged and supported individual artists and artistic organizations in the pursuit of art.

I have begun my intervention in this way to emphasize that the notion of what is meant by the term "artist"—found in the title of this bill—has changed dramatically over the centuries, and also to point out that since the rise in prominence of the artist, the political class or ruling class has played a major role in supporting and promoting the arts.

To understand this legislation, one must appreciate what is meant by the term "artist" as it is used in this bill. Apart from the definitions, I offer you some references and quotes, honourable senators, about the word "artist".

Henri Bergson relates the artist to freedom.

> We are free when our actions emanate from our total personality, when they express it, when they resemble it in the indefinable way a work of art sometimes does the artist.

Edward Gordon Craig:

> That is what the title of artist means: one who perceives more than his fellows, and who records more than he has seen.

Joseph Conrad:

> But the artist appeals to that part of our being which is not dependent on wisdom; to that in us which is a gift and not an acquisition—and, therefore, more permanently enduring. He speaks to our capacity for delight and wonder, to the sense of mystery surrounding our lives: to our sense of pity, and beauty, and pain.

Thomas Sterns Eliot:

> The progress of an artist is continual self-sacrifice, a continual extinction of personality.

Abraham Harold Maslow:

> A musician must make music, an artist must paint, a poet must write, if he is to be ultimately at peace with himself. What a man can be, he must be.

Artists are not notoriously wealthy. Senator Chaput-Rolland pointed that out.

Anaïs Nin, I am sure ironically, said:

> Poverty is the great reality. That is why the artist seeks it.

Some of us accept, and might even underline, the fact that, after all, the choice of the way of an artist is the choice of the artist himself.

John O'Hara said:

> An artist is his own fault.

Honourable senators, turning to the bill, clause 5 provides that "artist means an independent contractor described in paragraph 6(2)(b)." Turning to that paragraph 6(2)(b), we find a very lengthy definition. It describes "authors of artistic, dramatic, literary or musical works"; directors of audiovisual works; performers, singers, reciters, directors or actors "in a musical, literary or dramatic work, or in a circus, variety, mime or puppet show." Finally, there is the catch-all paragraph that covers individuals who,

> . . . contribute to the creation of any production in the performing arts, music, dance and variety entertainment, film, radio and television, video, sound-recording, dubbing or the recording of commercials, arts and crafts or visual arts, and fall within a professional category prescribed by regulation.

This is quite a list of individuals, even taking into account the removal from the original bill, for some reason, of the reference to choreographers.

I began by saying that all of us believe we know what is meant by the term "artist". I cannot imagine, however, that most of us would have come to mind dubbers of television commercials when speaking of the artistic community; but neither would we think of cobblers and stone masons. The fact of the matter is that technology has pushed outward the parameters of artistic endeavours, and Bill C-7 takes this into account.

It is important to remember that this legislation does not confer the status or title of "artist" on anyone. It simply provides that independent contractors engaged in certain activities and who are determined to be professionals are covered by the act. The main tangible advantage of being covered is the right to form associations for collective bargaining purposes, even though the members are not employees. By virtue of clause 9(2), such associations will be exempt from prosecution under the Competition Act. But I am delving into detail now when what I want to do is examine this legislation in a more general way.

Again I emphasize that when Bill C-7 speaks of artists, it is not limited to artists in the traditional pursuits of painting, sculpture and classical theatre. Virtually every activity in the cultural community is capable of finding a place in this legislation. I salute the legislation for that fact.

The second aspect I want to examine is the role of government in the cultural community. As I mentioned, when art, as we now understand it, gained prominence during the Renaissance, it was supported and its development encouraged by the ruling political class of the day.

[Senator Frith.]

In 1989, the House of Commons Subcommittee on the Status of the Artist examined the relationships existing between the artist, society and government. In its report of November 1989, the first topic discussed was "The Role of the Federal Government." I qoute from page 1:8:

> A confident, mature society has an obligation to nurture its identity. It also has a responsibility to support its artists who play a large part in cultivating and reflecting that identity.

The committee's first recommendation was:

> Recognizing the important role that artists play in the development of our Canadian identity, culture and economy, and the unique conditions of work affecting them, that the federal government improve the socio-economic condition of Canadian artists by adapting legislation and programs to the real circumstances of artists, thereby enabling them to assume their full role and contribution in society.

Bill C-7 provides us with the legislation called for in the report. We must recognize that while it is an important step, the programs called for by the subcommittee are still wanting.

When artists become commercial they lose a little bit of their artistic creativity and those at the edges constantly struggle with funding. Senator Solonge Chaput-Rolland mentioned yesterday how only a small portion of the members of the artistic community can live off their artistic endeavors. In 1990, members of ACTRA, the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists, earned from their work as performers and writers an average of $8,540. Professional artists are among the lowest paid workers in society. In 1988, self-employed artists earned approximately $16,000.

It is important to have legislation such as Bill C-7, which recognizes the unique and important role of artists in society. But it is just as important for Canadians, through their governments, to support the arts materially. During the Renaissance, artists relied on the patronage of their sponsors. In Europe today governments are very active patrons of the arts. We should demand no less of our governments.

Some may have heard a report on the CBC earlier this week about the amount of money the Italian government is providing for a partial repair of damage to the walls around the city of Urbino. Many will know that in a certain period in Italian history Urbino was an important cultural centre. In fact, there are many portraits of the Duke of Urbino, who was a great patron of the arts. The report on the CBC mentioned the stunning range and number of churches, memorials, public sculptures and art galleries that depend on the Italian government. The total cost for the repair of this one wall is going to be approximately $15 million. They are going to take one-tenth of their total budget to partially repair it.

I mention this only to say that those of us who enjoy the cultural ambience of many of these cities in Europe, who comment to each other about the feeling one has of being surrounded by generations and centuries of creative, artistic and beautiful works of art, know that these things cost money. We are taking a first step in that direction here.

I believe that, as we come to the closing years of the twentieth century, government has a much larger role than merely protecting its national borders from external enemies and protecting its citizens from criminals. The basic object of government must be to make life as rich and enjoyable as possible for its citizens. Government has, however, tended to focus almost exclusively on the economic wellbeing of the population. Art is considered a frill. Cultural matters are considered a frill, something that can be looked after when all economic problems have been solved. But, just as individuals have hearts and souls that must be nurtured, so does the community at large and so does a country. As a country, we rank among the very richest in the world in economic terms, but what have we accomplished as a nation, if Canada's cultural heart is not strong enough to sustain the whole?

I believe that it is safe to say that the belief that art is some sort of frill, something secondary, tertiary or even further away from the important things of life, is the common belief that has, over the years, tended to inhibit progress in art in Canada and thereby the enrichment of our culture.

Not too long ago, for purposes other than this, I was reading a piece called The Birth of Tragedy by Nietzsche, which is from The Spirit of Music.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Were you reading it in the original?

Senator Frith: I was not reading it in the original, no.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Oh, it is very, very good.

Senator Frith: I was reading it from the Modern Library giant, The Philosphy of Nietzsche. I was reading it, not really for the purpose of going back to the philosophy of Nietzsche but because of a work of music that a friend was considering composing based on this.

Nietzsche was alternatively friendly and not so friendly to Wagner. The Wagner family had taken him in as a young man, but their correspondence was not always happy; in this case, however, he writes a foreword to Wagner about this piece. He says that some people might think that he is taking too seriously this whole question of art. He says:

> Perhaps, however, this same class of readers will be shocked at seeing an esthetic problem taken so seriously, especially if they see in art nothing but a merry diversion, an easily dispensed-with tinkling accompaniment to the "seriousness of existence": as if no one had any idea of the meaning of the opposition implied. These earnest ones may be informed of my conviction that art is the highest task and the proper metaphysical activity of this life . . .

It is because art is much more than a mere frill that some of us grow concerned whenever we hear, in the ongoing constitutional discussions, proposals to transfer to the provinces all jurisdiction over culture. I recently read that even some members of the artistic community in Quebec are balking at this proposal, fearful that funding from the provincial government could not match what is now available from the federal and provincial governments combined.

● (1600)

Quite apart from this question of funding, it seems to me that the abdication by the federal government of any role in the culture of our country can result in nothing but spiritual impoverishment. Unfortunately, there are no statistics available on the cultural poverty level as opposed to the economic poverty level.

On the subject of responsibility, I read an interesting article by Senator Chaput-Rolland in a publication entitled, "The Network". She wrote:

> It would be completely wrong, in my view, to allow the government of Quebec to assume responsibility for culture in all of its manifestations. The supporters of Quebec sovereignty would like Radio Canada, the Canada Council, the National Film Board, the CRTC and even the Museums Association to come under the control of Quebec. As long as Canada remains a country, lacking in national unity but assured of its continued existence, it is essential that the Canadian government maintain its cultural initiatives, but without encroaching upon constitutional areas of provincial jurisdictions.

Further on in the same article she stated:

> While it seems imperative to me that Quebec remain the "master" of its culture within its own territory, it seems equally vital that Quebec accept the Canadian government's participation in all the cultural tools which still bind this country together from sea to sea.

Of course, I agree. Not only must the federal government retain jurisdiction, it must not be hesitant in exercising it.

Honourable senators, as I have said, Bill C-7 is a good start insofar as it recognizes the special role played by the artistic community in every part of the country. It is an important landmark, not just because of its provisions, but because the country, the community, society and the legislative institutions in society are recognizing the "status of the artist".

That is an important and historic statement by the people of this country. Of course, that recognition must be matched by a commitment from the government, as I believe this is, to support with adequate fundings the health of that community, not only for the sake of the artistic community but, I believe, for the sake of the country.

Honourable senators, I enthusiastically support the passage of this important piece of legislation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time, honourable senators?

On motion of Senator Chaput-Rolland, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare moved second reading of Bill C-49, to amend the Criminal Code (sexual assault).

She said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to move second reading of Bill C-49, an act to amend the Criminal Code (sexual assault).

This bill has been the subject of a great deal of media attention and interest. Some of that interest may simply be a function of the subject matter of the bill. Sexual norms and aberrations over the centuries have provided a great scope for merriment and ample fuel for controversy.

At the same time, one must recognize and greatly respect the genuine concerns which have been raised in the press and elsewhere about the bill's potential to have a detrimental impact on ordinary sexual behaviour. However, I am convinced that every one of those concerns is fully answered by a proper understanding of the bill, as amended in the House of Commons, and an appreciation of Bill C-49's inherent fairness, balance and common sense.

Bill C-49 is not an attempt to redefine sexual behaviour, or to reform the sexual relationships of ordinary Canadians —I should add "thank God", I suppose. With its roots firmly planted in society's accepted sexual values, it reaches flexibly to guide the judiciary in its task of assessing an infinite variety of situations.

Bill C-49 is a direct response to the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Regina v. Seayboyer and Regina v. Gayme which struck down section 276 of the Criminal Code, commonly referred to as the "rape shield" provision. The Supreme Court held that section 276 overshot the mark in protecting complainants. Section 276 had the potential to exclude evidence relevant to the defence and was therefore a violation of sections 7 and 11(d) of the Charter.

I would emphasize that the Supreme Court of Canada's decision acknowledged and, in fact, supported the underlying philosophy and purpose of the rape shield provision. However, the court found the old rape shield provision to be inadequate in its balancing of the complainant's interests and the accused's right to present a full answer and defence.

Bill C-49's amendments have adjusted the balance to properly protect the accused's right to present a full answer and defence, while also reflecting the underlying rape shield philosophy as recognized and respected by the Supreme Court of Canada.

In a nutshell, Bill C-49 deals with three key issues regarding sexual assault. They are the admissibility of evidence of a complainant's sexual history; the notion of "consent" to sexual activity; and the defence of honest belief and consent.

Bill C-49 also includes the unique feature of a preamble to highlight the importance of the philosophy and purpose of the amendments. The preamble will not become part of the Criminal Code itself, but will remain on record in the statute books as an outline of Parliament's intention and purpose. That record will be invaluable to the courts not only in the task of interpreting and applying the amendments, but also in the event of a challenge to the amendments under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In the preamble, the government expresses its grave concern about the incidence of sexual violence and abuse in our society and, in particular, about the prevalence of sexual assault of women and children.

We recognize that sexual assault is unlike any other crime. The trauma of sexual assault and the fear of becoming a sexual assault victim have an immeasurable and pervasive impact on daily life. The preamble expresses our conviction that sexual assault must be reported to the police and our laws must encourage this.

The preamble also addresses the driving issue behind this bill which is the admissibility of evidence of the complainant's sexual history. As the Supreme Court recognized in the Seaboyer and Gayme cases, such evidence is rarely relevant to the issues to be decided in the trial, and has a strong tendency to sidetrack the search for the truth. However, there will be situations where such evidence is essential to the accused's defence and must be admitted. The provisions of the bill will ensure that the issue of admissibility is carefully scrutinized on a case-by-case basis.

In the body of the bill itself, this careful balancing process, relating to the admissibility of evidence of the complainant's previous sexual activity, informs the following amendments: A general provision stating that evidence that the complainant has engaged in sexual activity with any person is not admissible to support the inference that the complainant was more likely to have consented or is less worthy of belief; a new test for admissibility providing that evidence of sexual activity of the complainant with any person is not admissible unless it is specific, relevant to an issue to be proved, and its probative value is not substantially outweighed by the danger of prejudice to the proper administration of justice; a series of factors to be considered by the judge to assist in the determination of admissibility; and detailed procedural provisions and protections for the complainant's privacy, including the following requirements:

The hearing, to determine whether the evidence will be admissible, must be held in camera. The complainant will not be a compellable witness at that hearing, although he or she may testify if he or she so wishes. There is to be a ban on publication of the contents of the application to adduce sexual history evidence, the evidence and representations at the hearing into admissibility, and the judge's reasons ruling such evidence not to be admissible. If the judge rules that evidence to be admissible, the judge would have a discretion to order that his or her reasons may be published. These protections are essential in order to protect victims from embarrassment, to preserve their privacy and dignity and to encourage their cooperation in prosecutions.

● (1610)

A great deal of attention has been focused on the provisions of Bill C-49 dealing with the definition of consent and the defence of honest belief in consent. With respect to consent, it is important to remember that consent is the feature which distinguishes acceptable sexual behaviour from sexual assault. The offence of sexual assault is by definition without the consent of the complainant. As in every criminal trial, the crown in a sexual assault trial must prove beyond a reasonable doubt each element of the offence, including the complainant's lack of consent.

Bill C-49 will provide for the first time a statutory definition of consent for the purpose of sexual assault offences. In addition, it will set out certain situations where, as matter of law, there is no consent. Bill C-49's definition of consent and its exclusions from consent simply express common sense and uncontrovertible propositions about acceptable human sexual behaviour. Consent is defined as the voluntary agreement of the complainant to engage in the sexual activity in question. The provision, 273.1, also states that:

(2) No consent is obtained . . . where

(a) the agreement

— to engage in the sexual activity in question—is given by someone other than the complainant;

(b) the complainant is incapable of consenting to the activity;

(c) the accused induces the complainant to engage in the activity by abusing a position of trust, power or authority;

(d) the complainant expresses, by words or conduct, a lack of agreement to engage in the activity;

This has been called the "no means no" provision.

(e) the complainant . . . expresses, by words or conduct, a lack of agreement to continue in the activity.

These provisions give specific recognition in the Criminal Code to the fact that, in certain circumstances, there can be no genuine consent. Bill C-49 also expressly states that the list of situations in which no consent is obtained is not exhaustive. There will be other situations in which the law will find consent not to exist.

Bill C-49 also addresses the defence of mistaken belief in consent. Note that the defence of mistake of fact arises only when the complainant in fact did not consent. Under the current law, the accused may offer the defence that, despite the complainant's lack of consent, the accused at the time honestly but mistakenly believed the complainant to have consented. The accused's mistaken belief need not have been reasonable in order for the accused to be acquitted.

This common law principle has been widely criticized and the proposed amendments would clarify the defence by disallowing it where the accused's mistaken belief arises from the accused's self-induced intoxication, or where the accused's belief arose from the accused's recklessness or wilful blindness. These provisions would simply put into the Criminal Code the prevailing common law.

The amendments would also place a restriction on the defence of mistaken belief in consent as it has evolved in the common law. Under Bill C-49, the defence of mistaken belief in consent will not be allowed unless the accused took reasonable steps, in the circumstances known to the accused at the time, to ascertain that the complainant was consenting.

The "reasonable steps" provision strikes the appropriate balance, not only punishing behaviour which society considers to be morally offensive but also allowing the genuine mistaken and morally innocent accused to go free on criminal liability.

What will constitute reasonable steps will vary from case to case. The legal concept expressed in the word "reasonable" is well known and will adapt itself to each individual situation. The amendment adds the phrase "in the circumstances known to the accused at the time" to further ensure that the sufficiency of the accused's inquiry as to consent is tested according to the facts as the accused knew or thought them to be. The accused is not required to act on the basis of information or knowledge that he or she did not have.

Furthermore, the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt remains with the Crown, as on every other issue. If there is any doubt as to whether the accused who relies on a defence of mistaken belief in consent took "all reasonable steps in the circumstances known to the accused at the time," that doubt will resolve in favour of the accused.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I ask that you join me in supporting Bill C-49 as expressing and reflecting Parliament's commitment to a sexual assault law which respects the rights of all people, whether victim, accused or an ordinary member of society. I suggest to you that Bill C-49's articulation of the crucial and delicate balance of these various rights is a truly historic achievement.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, as Senator DeWare has just pointed out, Bill C-49 deals with three fundamental issues regarding the criminal offence of sexual assault and their applicable procedures. They are the definition of consent, the defence of honest but mistaken belief in consent, and the admissibility of evidence concerning the past sexual history of the complainant.

In doing so, Bill C-49 has sought to preserve a fundamental principle of the criminal justice system, namely, the right of the accused to have access to a legitimate and full defence. At the same time it has sought to address the obstacles faced by victims of sexual assault in the criminal justice system.

In other words, Bill C-49 represents an attempt to balance the interests of the accused in a fair trial with the interests of the victim not to be placed under unfair scrutiny. It also addresses the flaws which the Supreme Court of Canada found to be objectionable in the previous rape shield provisions of the Criminal Code.

Needless to say, there has been a great deal of interest in this bill from the time it was tabled in the other place by the Minister of Justice. Many witnesses were called by the legislative committee studying the bill and various serious objections were made to certain provisions in the original bill.

The Minister of Justice introduced some amendments at the committee stage in the other place that met some of the most serious objections of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, but apparently some individuals and groups are still not entirely satisfied with Bill C-49, even as it is amended today.

Some of the more controversial provisions were—and still are—the definition of consent on the part of the victim; the elements of honest but mistaken belief on the part of the accused that such consent was obtained; and the extent of publication of details regarding the trial.

Since we have very little time left before this session is supposed to adjourn, I should like to reserve any further comments until after the bill has received second reading and has been considered by the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee. There we hope to obtain an up-to-date appraisal of the amended version from at least a few interested parties.

As far as I am concerned, the bill represents a vast improvement over the present state of the law, but it would be preferable to receive reassurance that it does not appear to be liable to further serious Charter challenges as it is presently drawn.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator DeWare, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

• (1620)

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Balfour, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the second reading of Bill C-70, to amend the Criminal Code (jury).

[Senator Neiman.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in Bill C-70 we are being asked to speedily pass a piece of Criminal Code reform legislation in order to fill a legislative void left as a result of a Supreme Court decision. This is not a totally unusual experience. Certainly, it is not the first time that a government—and this government—has been prodded into action by the Supreme Court.

The most recent example occurred in May 1991, when the Supreme Court handed down its decision in the Swain case. The court found that a central provision of the Criminal Code dealing with persons found not guilty by reason of insanity was contrary to the Charter rights of fundamental justice and freedom from arbitrary detention.

The court prescribed a period of temporary validity of six months, which ended on November 2, 1991. Bill C-30, the bill designed to rectify that situation, was not introduced in the Senate until November 26, 1991, well past the deadline. Fortunately, the court extended the deadline to February 1992. Bill C-30 finally received Royal Assent on December 13, 1991.

Bill C-49, which we have just referred to committee, is another bill designed to fill a legislative gap left by a Supreme Court ruling. In August 1991, the Supreme Court handed down its decision in the Seaboyer and Gayme cases, which struck down the so-called "rape shield" provisions of the Criminal Code. These were the sections that dealt with the use of previous sexual history in sexual assault cases.

Bill C-49, the government's legislative response to that decision, was introduced in the other place only four months later, on December 12, 1991. It has taken another six months to get that bill to the Senate.

Today, we are being asked, once again, to pass legislation before an existing law becomes null and void.

The background to this bill, as outlined also by Senator Balfour, whom I compliment for his presentation to us, is the January 23, 1992, ruling of the Supreme Court in the Regina v. Bain case. The court ruled that certain provisions of the Criminal Code governing the jury selection process infringed on an accused person's Charter rights to the presumption of innocence and to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal. In the jury selection process, the court concluded that the Crown had an unfair advantage. The court gave Parliament six months to enact legislation to fill the void left by its decision.

That six-month period is up on July 23, a little over one month from now.

The Supreme Court ruling was not the first call for a more equitable jury selection process. In 1982, approximately 10 years ago, the Law Reform Commission of Canada, an agency whose valuable studies and reports we will no longer have the benefit of since it was axed in the most recent budget, produced a report entitled "The Jury." Ten years ago that report called for reforms similar to those contained in this bill. The Law Reform Commission of Canada is to disappear under the Government's recent budget. Perhaps it is a natural Conservative—maybe congenital—dislike for the word "reform". In any event, this government and the previous government did not implement the Law Reform Commission's report, but Bill C-49 and Bill C-70 are doing so.

Actually, I was wrong when I said that nothing had come from the Law Reform Commission's report, because there was Bill C-19, a criminal law reform package which had included provisions for the jury selection process, but it went nowhere after its introduction in the other place on February 7, 1984.

This government did not have to wait for the Supreme Court to rule the provisions unconstitutional. It could have adopted long ago the recommendations found in the Law Reform Commission's report, but that was not done.

As we all know, the right to be tried by an independent and impartial jury is guaranteed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In order to ensure this right is not abrogated, we have certain laws set out in the Criminal Code which determine the selection of a jury.

To understand this legislation, one must understand the jury selection process. When an accused chooses to be tried by a judge and jury, a panel of 15 or 20 jurors is assembled by the Sheriff. They sit out in the body of the court. The members of the panel are then chosen by drawing names from a box that the Clerk of the Court usually has in front of him in his position just beneath the judge. As each potential juror comes forward, the accused, through his or her lawyer, either accepts the person as a juror, or challenges his or her ability to provide an independent and impartial hearing. As Senator Balfour pointed out, that is called "challenging", and in that case challenging for cause—in other words, for a reason. That reason has to be demonstrated. The accused can challenge any number of potential jurors for cause on grounds specified in the Criminal Code. In other words, when there is a challenge for cause, it is based on certain reasons set out in the Criminal Code for establishing that cause to have that juror disqualified.

The accused can also challenge a potential juror peremptorily, that is, without any reason at all. However, the number of peremptory challenges the accused is entitled to is limited; it ranges from four to 20, depending on the severity of the offence.

When the accused indicates acceptance of a person as a juror, it becomes the Crown's turn to determine that person's acceptability. It then has its turn to do the same thing as the accused has done. The Crown can challenge any number of potential jurors for cause, but it is entitled to only four peremptory challenges, regardless of the severity of the offence.

The Crown, however, has an additional tool over and above those of the accused. The Crown has the right to "stand aside" a potential juror, or, as it is referred to in Bill C-70, the right to "stand by".

I and Senator Balfour probably always remember it as "stand aside". I can also remember "stand down" being used sometimes. I must say that the new expression "stand by" is a little more accurate, or more meaningful and communicative, than either "stand aside" or "stand down", because, in effect, the person who is "stood aside" more accurately "stands by".

The "stand aside" allows the Crown to postpone the consideration of a person as a prospective juror. When a prospective juror is stood aside, he or she goes to a separate place in the courtroom while the next person's acceptability as a juror is determined. The Crown may direct up to 48 jurors to stand aside. Those stood aside will only be considered again if a full jury cannot be selected from the panel of potential jurors. At this point those people would be recalled for consideration. This ability to "stand aside" up to 48 potential jurors gives the Crown a significant advantage in the jury selection process because, as I recall it, the accused has no such right.

Bill C-70 does something about this. It addresses three imbalances in the jury selection process.

1. Under the present system, the accused is the first to examine each prospective juror in determining that person's acceptability as an independent and an impartial juror. Bill C-70 would require the accused to declare whether the first juror was challenged for cause or peremptorily, or accepted. For the remaining jurors, the Crown and the accused would be called upon alternately to examine each juror. Senator Balfour referred to this in his intervention yesterday.

2. The next imbalance the bill deals with is that created by peremptory challenges. Currently the accused is entitled to 12, 20 or 14 peremptory challenges depending upon the nature of the charge or the maximum penalty available; however, the Crown is entitled to only 4 such challenges.

Bill C-70 would put the Crown and the accused on equal footing by providing for an equal number of peremptory challenges to both sides. Where the accused was charged with treason or murder, they could each challenge 20 jurors. Where the charge carried a possible prison term of more than five years, the Crown and the accused could each challenge 12 jurors. In any other case, it would be 4 jurors.

3. The final imbalance is the one found to be in violation of the Charter by the Supreme Court. It deals with the "stand by" or "stand aside" of prospective jurors, a right which only the Crown has. Bill C-70 would eliminate this provision, thus prohibiting either party from standing by any jurors. Since only the Crown can now ask potential jurors to stand aside, its elimination will benefit an accused who chooses trial by judge and jury.

Honourable senators, this bill received speedy passage in the other place. It was supported by all parties at second reading, in committee, and at third reading. We on this side will certainly not be refusing support of Bill C-70 at this time.

One concern expressed in the House of Commons was that the bill does not deal with the issue of representation on juries. In our multicultural society, the question is whether we should be concerned with representation of various segments of that society on jurors. I believe we should be concerned with the result, but I have some concern about the suggestion that the representation should be guaranteed systematically.

Personally, and I say "personally", I think it should not. It is another form of, it seems to me, what is called "corporatism". It is reflected, for example, in some legislative institutions including, I believe, the Senate in Ireland, and has been proposed for our Senate. It is the practice of guaranteeing seats for certain groups. It reflects the rise of group rights in our and other societies. Often these group rights are expected to override individual rights. Therefore, I have some doubts as to whether it is a good idea to guarantee representation by groups in any institution.

That is an easier position to take now than it used to be because, for many years, someone in my position and others in the Senate could certainly be accurately characterized as members of a majority. But Canada no longer consists of a majority with some minorities: It consists of a group of minorities.

There would also be the difficulty that attends the administration of any such principle. It can be done if it is felt that the social and political objective merits it. But, as it might be applied to the selection of juries, I can see it causing some difficulties. However, that area could be examined by our committee, if not now, on another occasion.

Honourable senators, those are my preliminary reactions to that principle, so it may be that I could be convinced that I am overlooking its desirability and the ease with which it could be implemented.

In any event, I would not expect The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to examine such an important principle before reporting on this bill, but it might consider studying the principle at some later time because it is, I believe, one that will be before us for implementation in various ways as a part of the increased popularity of the enforcement of group rights.

With those closing musings, honourable senators, I recommend that this bill be now read a second time and referred to committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Balfour, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

ENERGY EFFICIENCY BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Robertson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the second reading of Bill C-41, An Act respecting the energy efficiency of energy-using products and the use of alternative energy sources.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, Bill C-41 was spoken to by Senator Robertson who outlined the general provisions contained in it.

The bill fulfils a federal government commitment to the provinces made in meetings between federal and provincial ministers in 1989 and 1990 to establish energy efficiency standards that would be consistent across the country. Both Ontario and British Columbia have enacted energy efficiency legislation while Nova Scotia and Quebec are in the process of developing similar regulations.

The bill will eventually cover all products whose energy use is sufficiently great to justify their regulation. Some products, such as automobiles, are covered by separate legislation.

The bill represents a change of policy for the government. Federal funding of energy conservation and renewable energy activities has dwindled from about $500 million in 1984 to a mere $30 million in 1990-1991.

In 1984, the Conservative government eliminated the National Research Council's energy division. This division conducted research into alternative forms of energy sources such as solar, wind and fusion power. Programs to assist people to insulate their homes, to inform consumers about the energy efficiency of home appliances, and to advise industries on how to reduce energy consumption, were all terminated.

Between 1985 and 1987, the National Conservation and Alternative Energy Initiative spent an average of $150 million per year. This program replaced the program that preceded it. That resulted in an average yearly budget of $400 million. The solar energy development program, originally established in 1985, was ended in 1988. The program had been successful in reducing the cost of solar technology by 25 per cent in the industrial and commercial sectors and by as much as 60 per cent for residential hot water systems.

Of a total budget of $1.951 billion in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in 1987, 5.4 per cent went towards research and development expenditures for energy efficiency and renewable research. In 1991-92, that department's total budget fell to $970 million, while research and development expenditures for energy efficiency and renewable research deteriorated to 3.6 per cent of the total budget.

• (1640)

Canada's National Action Strategy on global warming, announced November 1990, found that the lack of improvement in energy use per capita and energy use per gross domestic product unit was directly attributable to the abandonment of energy efficiency programs in the mid-to-late 1980s.

Honourable senators, I could go on with respect to the details of the bill. However, let me generalize at this time by stating that this bill is a step forward. I welcome this step forward on the part of the government. I am critical of the government's abandonment of energy efficiency through spending on R&D, which is not simply spending, but rather investing in more efficient ways of using energy that I think are extremely important. In fact the Minister of the Environment, appearing before the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources yesterday, having just returned from the Rio UNCED Conference, was talking about the importance of developed countries like Canada having the technology to export to developing countries. That particular trade dynamic is something that Canada must rely on to continue to have the economic activity it needs to maintain its standard of living. Well, those past failures from 1985 through to the present and the continuing failure now, in terms of spending on R&D for energy efficiency, do not match that kind of concern on the part of the Minister of the Environment.

In any event, this legislation provides a necessary incentive and a necessary way of measuring our improvement in terms of energy efficiency. I support the bill and would recommend that it receive second reading at this time and be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Robertson, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

MR. BORIS YELTSIN

PRESIDENT OF RUSSIA

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, pursuant to notice of June 17, 1992:

> That at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Friday, 19th June, 1992, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings to permit Honourable Senators to attend the Joint Address by Boris Yeltsin, President of Russia, to be delivered in the House of Commons Chamber; and
>
> That the Address of Mr. Yeltsin, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an Appendix to the Debates of the Senate of that day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Seventeenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill S-8, An Act to regulate the manufacture and importation of motor vehicles and motor vehicle equipment to reduce the risk of death, injury and damage to property and the environment—with certain amendments), presented in the Senate on 17th June, 1992.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe that our colleague, Senator Graham, who was on the committee, wishes to say a few words on this report. However, he is attending a committee at the moment.

Order Stands.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 136(8), I interrupt the proceedings. The Senate will now adjourn during pleasure to await the arrival of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

> An Act relating to the accounting of certain payments for the servicing and reduction of the debt of Canada (Bill C-21, Chapter 18, 1992)
>
> An Act respecting the control of government expenditures (Bill C-56, Chapter 19, 1992)
>
> An Act respecting corrections and the conditional release and detention of offenders and to establish the office of Correctional Investigator (Bill C-36, Chapter 20, 1992)
>
> An Act to amend certain Acts with respect to persons with disabilities (Bill C-78, Chapter 21, 1992)
>
> An Act to amend the Criminal Records Act and other Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-71, Chapter 22, 1992)
>
> An Act to amend the National Parks Act (Bill C-59, Chapter 23, 1992)
>
> An Act to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-84, Chapter 24, 1992)

An Act to suspend the operation of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Bill C-67, Chapter 25, 1992)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of his Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

THE GOVERNMENT

RECORD OF GOVERNANCE—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Inquiry:

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Monday next, June 22, 1992, I will call the attention of the Senate to the disastrous record of the Conservative Government.

NATIONAL FINANCE

THE "BIG LIE"—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Monday next, June 22, 1992, I will also call the attention of the Senate to this government's "Big Lie"—that is in quotes, of course, otherwise it would be unparliamentary—about the federal deficit.

Those are two nasty gauntlets. I wanted to give everyone due opportunity to change their plans, had they not intended to be here on Monday.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON A RENEWED CANADA

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the report of the Special Joint Committee on a Renewed Canada, dated 28th February, 1992 (Sessional Paper 343-416A).

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I will be happy to stand down when Senator Lynch-Staunton returns. If your honour would signal me when that occurs, I will be pleased to do that.

My speech is rather lengthy because I am trying to put a lot of detail regarding Senate reform before the Senate. I will now continue with my remarks. If there are questions or if people feel that my remarks prompt some remark in return, please feel free to interrupt me.

I was about to deal with the method of election of Australian senators. Just to remind honourable senators, I was using the Australian system as a good starting point for consideration for Canadian Senate reform, and I was describing the single transferable vote, which is the system used in Australia that asks voters to rank candidates in order of preference.

This ranking of preference can be done in two ways: By adopting the order or orders of preferences registered with the Australian Electoral Commission by a particular group of candidates or an individual incumbent senator at polling booths, or by indicating preferences individually. Under the first system, the voter simply puts a "1" in the box for the chosen group or individual incumbent senator and the Electoral Commission allocates the preferences accordingly. In the second system the voter must place the preferred rank number next to each of the names of the selected candidates.

In order for the system of transferable votes to work correctly, voters are required to rank a minimum number of candidates based on the number of vacant seats in the constituency, plus one. For example, if there were five vacant seats, the voter would be required to rank in order of preference six candidates. If the voter chooses to rank more than that, they can do so. However, distinguishing preferences much beyond seven to ten candidates becomes very difficult. To keep a ballot as voter friendly as possible, I suggest that the simple requirement of voting in order of preference for the number of vacancies plus one is the best approach. I also observe that voting is compulsory in Australia, something that is not likely to occur in Canada.

The position of the party's name on the ballot is selected randomly by the Australian Electoral Commission, whereas the positioning of names of candidates is determined by the party.

Honourable senators, I see that Senator Lynch-Staunton is here. I will stand down so that the preceding order can be dealt with.

I will take a cue from a wise senator opposite. I will move adjournment of the debate while this other matter is being dealt with, and I will ask the Senate's permission to proceed after the preceding order has been dealt with.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Hays, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

AN ACT TO AMALGAMATE THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE AND THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF METROPOLITAN MONTREAL—SECOND READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton moved the second reading of Bill S-12, An Act to amalgamate the Montreal Board of Trade Act and The Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Montreal.

He said: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Hays for his courtesy and apologize for having had to leave the chamber, but unfortunately I had misplaced my notes.

I am very pleased to introduce this bill at second reading, as for many years I was actively involved with the Montreal

Board of Trade, including one term, 1985-1986, as its president. Relations with the Chambre de commerce du district de Montréal, even before then, were so close that more often than not it appeared as if both entities were acting as one.

The merger of the two organizations, which this bill will confirm, is the logical result of many years of close collaboration. It is also a significant revelation of what Montreal is really about—not a community torn part by linguistic divisions, but one building on the unique advantages of its cultural diversity.

The decision to merge was not taken lightly. It was preceded by serious and careful reflection. The principal reason for the decision being supported so enthusiastically—in fact not one voice has been raised against it—is that great care was taken to reflect in the merged organization a spirit which creates a body incorporating the best of both predecessors.

[Translation]

The main purpose is to ensure that regardless of the organization someone belongs to, they will fit in easily after the merger. This was confirmed on March 23 at special meetings held separately by the Board and the Chamber, during which the proposed merger was unanimously approved.

[English]

Both la Chambre de commerce and the Board of Trade have contributed greatly to the economic and social development of Montreal, Quebec and Canada over many years. People close to both groups have taken leadership positions in other community groups and in public life. The merger seeks to honour and respect this rich heritage while developing programs and services in line with the needs of business and the community in general today and tomorrow.

● (1700)

I am particularly pleased to confirm that the new organization will function in both of Canada's official languages. No more eloquent statement could be made about the attitude and approach of the Montreal business community today, a vivid recognition that the linguistic duality of Canada is one of its competitive strengths and a unique richness. Members expect their business association to fully reflect this in its day-to-day operations and services. It is certainly an example for others to follow. It also is important to note that this was not a marriage of necessity. Both organizations were doing quite well from the standpoint of membership and finances.

On the other hand, there was a growing realization that, as the years passed, the original differences between the two groups were disappearing—in fact, that they had disappeared. Indeed, the Chambre de Commerce was established over 100 years ago as a breakaway group from the Board of Trade, a reflection of the tensions of the times. What better statement of the evolution of the Montreal community than this, the merger of its two main business groups.

Honourable senators, the chambre and the board have designated July 1 as a day when the merger will be confirmed. The date was not chosen at random, but rather to stress the significance of this historic event—two major organizations working separately toward the same goals for over a century now, deciding to become one where both of Canada's official languages are recognized.

Immediately after the merger was approved in March, the drafting of the bill began. Its introduction was expected long before this week but, despite the best efforts of all involved, the final drafting took much, much longer than expected.

As a result, meeting the July 1 date depends on the understanding of colleagues and of the other place.

I am extremely conscious of the reticence of senators to give a private bill preferential treatment. Our rules are, quite rightly, more strict regarding private bills than public ones, otherwise the first could be introduced with little if any publicity, despite any prejudice they might contain, while the latter are always under close scrutiny.

Bill S-12, honourable senators, commends itself to quick passage. Its intent has been widely publicized for months, and is supported without dissent.

[Translation]

Its purpose is to bring together in one body the best of the business community in the Montreal area. Can we think of a better time to confirm such a merger? Montreal's economy is in a perilous situation. Unemployment is higher than the Canadian average. The region is suffering from anxieties due to the constitutional debate. Unfortunately, the perception, which is far from reality, still persists that Montreal is tearing itself apart and that the game has already been lost. I assure you that such is not the case.

[English]

The bill before you is ample testimony to this.

Honourable senators, not only do I commend this bill, I ask that you recognize that what is involved is much more than the merger of two impersonal groups: It is an act of faith in Quebec and in Canada, an act which I trust you will endorse enthusiastically by giving it quick passage.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise to speak to this bill, but I cannot rival Senator Lynch-Staunton's pleasure in presenting this bill. The only reason I cannot is because I do not share his history with this organization.

I am pleased to support this bill. I have had many informative—indeed, moving representations—about the attention so many loyal citizens of the great City of Montreal, where I was born and raised until my teens, have given to this worthy objective. Those efforts of so many have been eloquently—indeed, poetically—summarized by the Deputy Leader of the Government in his closing remarks.

I thank and congratulate all the citizens of Montreal and members of these two organizations for what they have been able to bring about, obviously, not without a good deal of difficulty and, at times, Herculean efforts, as I have been told.

On the procedural side, we are faced with certain difficulties in trying to help this bill meet its objectives as quickly as possible. Those difficulties, as honourable senators know, are found in the rules that deal with private bills. As senator Lynch-Staunton has correctly pointed out, the Rules of the Senate, with clear intention create certain difficulties, for private bills. These were not put in place for capricious or arbitrary reasons, but they do apply only to purely private bills. I refer to "private bills" in the sense that they are not for the benefit of the entire country, but deal with specific problems of individual persons or groups of persons.

It is understandable that Parliament in such cases would say to its citizens, "If you want us to deal with your particular problem, then we must be very sure that we afford enough time to those who are interested, and who might be opposed to it, to give their views so that we can assess them in deciding whether we will pass this private remedy."

That is why the rules, starting at rule 106, provide for notices to be published in the Gazette, and declarations of compliance with such advertisements to be filed with the clerk. Indeed, rule 109 goes so far as to provide that certain steps be taken before there can be any suspension of these rules that deliberately set up these difficulties.

Rule 109 states:

> A motion for the suspension of the rules upon any petition for a private bill shall not be in order, unless such suspension has been recommended by the Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders.

At first sight it would appear that, as a body, we cannot assist this bill to reach its objective of July 1. The reasons for that objective have been explained articulately and clearly by the Deputy Leader of the Government. We cannot assist the applicants unless we have a recommendation from the Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders.

However, I have been advised that the interpretation, I think a reasonable one of the rule, is that it deals only with a motion for suspension of the rules upon the petition for a private bill. I think we should accept that interpretation for the reasons made clear by the Deputy Leader of the Government and, I hope, by myself. What is then required is a recommendation concerning the steps to be taken regarding the petition leading up to the proceedings on the bill itself.

I am informed that all the steps outlined in rule 109 have been fulfilled. In fact, there is a certificate from the Examiner of Petitions that they have been complied with.

I am going to some lengths to point out that I am not—and I don't believe the Deputy Leader of the Government is either—recommending that we should make a special case for this applicant that might come to haunt us on other occasions. Therefore, we can be satisfied that we will not be haunted by appearing to ignore rule 109, because on that interpretation we are not ignoring rule 109.

[Senator Frith.]

As we try to help these two organizations to attain their objective in this bill, we will be faced with rule 116, which states:

> A private bill originating in the Senate, of which notice is required to be given, shall not be considered by a committee until after one week from the date of referral to such committee . . .

I propose that we give this bill second reading and refer it to the committee. We will then be faced by rule 116, which provides that the committee could not deal with the bill for one week. Of course, there is a good reason for that, namely, giving people an opportunity to come and make objections.

But Senator Lynch-Staunton has discovered some precedents for our dispensing with that one week requirement. Without that dispensation it is clear that there would be no hope of passing this bill by July 1.

Is there a good reason to so dispense? I believe there is. Senator Lynch-Staunton has put on the record that all the advertising has been done and that the whole project has been a matter of common knowledge for some time. I have been informed by others who have spoken to me from the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce that the matter has been of great public knowledge and celebration in Montreal.

If we refer the bill to committee, the committee can assure itself about that and can include in its report that it is satisfied that the week's delay would not have made any difference. I hope that there is evidence before the committee that will persuade it to include such observations in its report to us.

I have only one other point to make. When the committee examines the bill, there are two technical questions that it may find of interest. This may be a perfectly normal provision that I have not noticed in other similar bills, but I hope that our parliamentary counsel will explain Clause 9(3), which provides that:

> No act of the amalgamated corporation, including a transfer of property to or by the corporation, is invalid by reason only that the act or transfer is contrary to its objects or to a provision of this Act or to a provision of the Canada Corporations Act applicable to the corporation.

I can remember cases in my practice when I would have loved to have a clause like that when answering a requisition on title. Even though a corporation was acquiring property, for example, outside its objects, if an act of Parliament said that such an objection was invalid, such a provision would have been very helpful.

This may now be a normal provision, but I nevertheless hope that the committee will get some opinion on it.

My only other observation of a technical nature concerns clause 11, which applies a number of provisions of the Canada

Corporations Act. Perhaps the committee will obtain an explanation of the import of those sections.

So, honourable senators, based on those three points—the merits of the bill; the fact that we can find justifiable reasons to waive our rules on the subject; and the suggestion as to what the committee could do to reassure us when we come to third reading—I recommend that we give this bill second reading now and send it to committee. The committee can then begin the work that we are speaking of and perhaps help this worthy cause achieve its objective of existence by July 1 next.

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I wonder whether or not Senator Lynch-Staunton or Senator Frith would turn their attention to rule 119. As both of you have familiarity with the rule before us, rule 119 provides that:

> Any person whose interests may be affected by a private bill:
>
> (a) may appear before the committee to which the bill has been referred . . .

The intention here is to refer the bill to committee. Are there, to your knowledge, persons whose interests may be affected, but who would, one might reasonably expect, be fully cognizant of the bill so that their right, under that rule, to appear before the said committee would not be obviated?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, without having referred directly to rule 119, that was what I was referring to when I said that I had hoped that the committee would confirm what both Senator Lynch-Staunton and I have been told, namely, that all the advertisements have been done and the matter has been a matter of public knowledge and celebration in the City of Montreal. I hope the committee will indicate in its report that it had inquired into this. From three or four different sources Senator Lynch-Staunton and I have been told that this has been discussed very broadly in Montreal since March. Am I correct, Senator Lynch-Staunton?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That is correct.

Senator Frith: That does not mean that the committee should not—and I am obliged to Senator Kinsella for raising it—directly raise its problems with that section. It should ask the witnesses to furnish the information formally for the record that has been furnished to Senator Lynch-Staunton and myself. I am sure that they will have no difficulty in doing so, but we can let the committee settle that.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I do not wish to speak to the substance of the bill but I would like to point out to Senator Lynch-Staunton that the quality of the French version of this bill leaves a great deal to be desired.

There are errors in grammatical agreement, many typographical mistakes, missing titles, in short, many things that I noted in my copy. I will be pleased to give it to him so that he can have a head start when the committee studies it.

I think that someone did not do a proper job of revising the French text. It is not up to the standard that should be met for presentation in this House.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I thank Senator Corbin for pointing out these deficiencies. Unfortunately, they occur too often—even worse, more often than not, in one language only.

[English]

I can reassure Senator Kinsella—and I think this will be confirmed when the committee hears the witnesses—that those who are directly concerned with the merger are the existing members of both groups, and they have given it their wholehearted support. However, there are senior officials of both the Chamber and the Board who are ready to come before the committee; and they can elaborate more on that at that time.

I want to thank Senator Frith for his approach to this request. I know that he is not completely enthusiastic in the stand that he has taken. He has taken it because he understands the intention of the project. I am particularly aware that he has done so with some difficulty because he is a man with a fine legal mind and he believes, quite rightly, that legal texts should be followed as closely as possible because they are there for a certain purpose, and if we deviate from them too often, then we mock the purpose of those texts.

● (1720)

On behalf of both organizations, I am pleased to express appreciation for his and his colleagues' acceptance of accelerating this bill so that it can receive third reading here tomorrow and go to the House of Commons for passage before the adjournment.

The Hon. The Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

SUSPENSION OF RULE 116

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), I move, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition:

> That Rule 116 of The Rules of the Senate be suspended in relation to Bill S-12, an Act to amalgamate the Montreal Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Montreal.

This is to allow the committee to consider the bill immediately rather than wait for a week, now that the bill is referred to committee.

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable Senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON A RENEWED CANADA

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT—DEBATE CONTINUED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

> Resuming from earlier this day the debate on the consideration of the report of the Special Joint Committee on a Renewed Canada, dated 28th February, 1992 (Sessional Paper 343-416A)

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I was explaining the single transferable vote in the Australian context. In order for candidates to be elected to the Senate, they must obtain a certain quota of the votes. The quota is determined by a formula which is the number of formal votes or valid votes cast in a state plus one, divided by the number of Senate vacancies plus one. To use numbers in the example, if there were 140,000 voters and six vacant seats to be filled, 140,000 plus one would be divided by the six vacant seats plus one, namely seven, to achieve a quota of 20,001 as being the number of votes necessary for a candidate to be elected. When they receive that amount, they are declared elected. If they have more votes than they need, then the ones over the quota are passed on to the voter's second choice.

These transferred votes do not count as one full vote; only a fraction of the vote. If they are passed on again, then the fraction is smaller. If a candidate does not get a quota straight away, then they depend on getting the fraction votes so that all votes will add up to the quota needed.

Once all surplus votes are distributed, if all seats are not filled but not enough people have reached the quota to fill them, then the candidate in last place is eliminated and the second, third, et cetera preferences from that person's votes are counted, but only as a fraction of one full vote.

The advantages of this system of proportional representation is that it makes sure that you get representatives for your state in the proportions that all the voters together wanted them. If a majority of voters identified someone as third best, that is where they will place in the outcome of the election.

Proportional representation has not only modified the pattern of partisan influence in the Senate, but also the endorsement of candidates. Since 1949, positions in the Senate have become more sought after because of their security of tenure, increased visibility and the prestige of the Senate. As a result, the competition for party endorsement has increased and the calibre of candidates has become much higher.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

In Australia, parties can endorse one candidate for each vacant position. The party executive puts forward a list of candidates to represent the party in an election. This list does not go through a nomination procedure. In both situations, the criticism is that the party tends, to a great degree, to put forward the names of party faithful and members of its executive.

In the case of the House of Representatives, the process is somewhat more democratic because the candidate list is scrutinized through the candidate nomination procedure, much as is done in Canada. However, the names of people who stand for election are put forward by the party. That is a difference.

In the case of the Senate, the list stands without active participation from party members. This is a weakness in the Australian system that should not be duplicated.

For the major parties in Australia, the choice of candidates for national elections is the prerogative of the state machine. In Australia, the state and national organizations are not separate. Thus, the Senate has become an avenue for some of the most skilled individuals in the state branches of these parties to make a transition from party activist to the parliament at the national level.

The Senate is a repository of politicians from the major parties who have the ability to speak with authority on the attitudes of the state branch of their party to issues being discussed both in their party and on the floor of the Senate. By this example, we can see that loyalty to party is not, in itself, inconsistent with a system that is sensitive to regional issues and perspectives.

The registration of political parties is an essential element in the Australian system designed to provide public funding for political parties and an enforceable system of disclosure of campaign expenditures by parties and candidates, and of contributions of money and services to political parties. Legislation provides for funding of candidates at federal elections who obtain at least 4 percent of the votes, but the funding must not be greater than the registered expenditure in connection with the election. For candidates for the House of Representatives, the law provides for the payment of 60 cents for each vote recorded in their favour. For Senate candidates, the payment is 45 cents a vote when the election is held separately from that of the House of Representatives, and 30 cents a vote when held simultaneously with an election of the House of Representatives. The legislation provides for indexation of these amounts to account for inflation.

As I stated the other day, Senate elections are for six-year terms. They have elections for half of the senators every three years and the House of Representatives is elected every three years. It has become a practice for the House of Representative elections to occur at the same time as the Senate elections, even though they are governed in the same way as ours are by a vote of confidence in the House of Representatives. It is because of the choice of the Prime Minister to have them coincident with the Senate elections that they often occur at that time.

I would like to talk about some problems with the Australian system. The prominent role of the party in the selection of Senate candidates has tended to entrench party discipline and partisanship. In effect, party executives decide who will be senators by approving candidates and by deciding the order in which their names will appear on the party list and the election ballot. The top two names are virtually assured victory in the government or opposition party in the house. As a result, the Australian experience illustrates an Upper House which almost automatically divides on party lines, and follows the lead of the party in the Lower House or the leader of the party.

The participation of single-issue interest groups has resulted in complex election ballots whereby if a voter wants to rank candidates according to their preference rather than that of a particular party, they may find themselves ranking a large number of candidates.

Another weakness is the use of the 'Single Transferable Vote' method of proportional representation which involves lengthy tabulation of results that can take up to three weeks to determine winners. Despite the disadvantages, this method reduces the barriers for small parties and provides for a broader range of representation in the legislature.

Having given a brief description of the Australia Senate, necessarily incomplete due to time, I would like to talk now about a reformed Canadian Senate.

The redesign of Canada's Senate is a complex task that requires, above all, a clear view of what we want the institution to achieve. Throughout the Beaudoin-Dobbie proceedings, the committee heard from many groups who felt a reformed Senate should represent cultural and linguistic minorities; reflect Canada's diversity; provide specific representation to women, aboriginal and ethnic groups; represent regional interests; and counter balance the representation by population expressed in the House of Commons. While it is laudable to support these positions, I believe that, by trying to accomplish too much in one Chamber, we run the danger of creating an institution that is too rigid and too restrictive, that it will be unable to evolve over time with the changing fabric of the country and will, in fact, put limitations on the representation of these interest groups.

It is my view that the main goal of a reformed Senate should be to provide an opportunity for greater regional and provincial expression and to challenge the monopoly of executive control of the legislative process. This can best be accomplished by providing a second chamber where all regional and provincial interests are represented equally or weighted more to the outer regions than is currently the case.

Further representation of special interests should be accomplished through electoral reform that will result in more participation by women, aboriginal, and ethnic minorities. There will be a natural progression of these groups into the Senate once the electorate has the opportunity to express themselves in an election.

To use greater representation for women as an example, on the type of ballot used by Australia as modified—which, in my opinion should eliminate the party list but should have those who are nominated by the parties listed, with a requirement that the voter only vote in preference for the number of vacancies plus one, which is not too difficult— it would be possible, for instance, for a voter to select, in the ballot, women only or aboriginals only through the parties. That, in conjunction with the system of proportional representation, should assure greater representation for that group within the system. That is an example of how it would work.

Senator Frith: Can that not be done in Australia now?

Senator Hays: It can be done there now, but, as I understand it, the first, option, that is the single mark on the ballot, is being used more, and that goes to the party list, which I have criticized because the party list is established by the party and, in the case of the Senate, established without reference to the general membership of the party.

Senator Frith: Surely if there were 90 people on the ballot, you would have to mark them all.

Senator Hays: Although it was the case at one time, having checked, I find that it is no longer so. If you elect to vote for the people on the ballot, you are obliged only to rank them by the number of vacancies plus one, which I think is a good idea because ranking all of them would result in many spoiled ballots. It would not work here, not only because we do not have compulsory ballot, but because it would be too complicated and result in too many spoiled ballots.

Most Canadians will agree that the current system of appointing Senators is anomalous to a modern democracy. Of the numerous studies done on Senate reform, most have advocated reform based on the concept of an elected Senate. I support the direct election of Senators as this will ensure a Senate that is accountable to the people in the most acceptable democratic tradition. As a method of election, many proposals call for some form of proportional representation. However, most are unclear as to the specific system they would use. The proportional representation model used in most Western European countries uses some form of a "party list" system. Such models entrench the role of the party executive in determining a prospective candidate's placement and position on the list of candidates and therefore the likelihood of the candidate being elected. As the intention of Senate reform is, to some considerable degree, to counterbalance the influence of the political parties, the Prime Minister and the executive, I am not in favour of such a system.

In the Beaudoin-Dobbie report, the committee proposes that the provinces be divided into districts that would elect three or four senators through a system that combines both proportional representation and 'first-past-the-post'. I do not agree with this method of election. Electing senators on a sub-provincial basis would weaken the powers of the Senate to act as a house of provincial and regional representation at the national level because of the tendency of senators to represent the interests of their constituency over the interests of the province or region. Constituency interests are vital to the democratic system, but these interests are best represented by Members of the Legislative Assembly at the provincial level and by Members of Parliament at the federal level. Therefore, implementing proportional representation with sub-provincial constituencies defeats the purpose of Senate reform and would tend to split the senators according to special interests and, in effect, unnecessarily duplicate the role of MPs or MLAs.

I propose that senators be elected on a province-wide basis through a proportional representation system such as the 'single transferable vote' method used in Australia. While the Beaudoin-Dobbie report indicates that, in theory, the Australian system reduces the focus on the party affiliation and concentrates the attention of voters on candidates, it also points out the wide use of "How to vote" cards tend to encourage voters to vote for the party slate which further entrenches the party's influence.

In reforming the Canadian Senate, I believe that, by eliminating the 'party option' on the election ballot and by encouraging individuals to rank candidates according to their preferences, we are more likely to encourage the election of representatives of parties or interest groups that might find it difficult to mount successful campaigns in the plurality-based elections for the House of Commons.

While this system is more complicated than either "plurality" or "party list" methods, I believe it would give the electorate a greater degree of involvement and identification with their elected representatives.

The effectiveness of the Senate, as I have said, will depend largely on the degree of its political independence from the executive branch of government. The option of tying Senate elections to House of Commons elections or provincial elections will weaken this independence. Furthermore, because a reformed Senate should not be a confidence body, the timing of its elections should not be triggered by a confidence motion in the House of Commons; nor should it depend on a decision of the Prime Minister to call an election.

Establishing fixed dates for Senate elections will diminish the role of the Prime Minister in determining the agenda of elected senators by removing the temptation to promote an election date which best suits the executives' political agenda. The Senate, therefore, should have a separate election date at fixed intervals, as recommended by the Beaudoin-Dobbie report.

The expense of a separate date for Senate elections is outweighed by the advantage of minimizing the influence of the executive. As I said earlier, we might find the elections taking place at the same time anyway.

Senators should be elected for a fixed term of six years with one-half of the Senate standing for election every three years. A term of six years will allow for continuity in legislative review and help to encourage highly qualified candidates to leave the private sector for public life. An election every three years for one-half of the members of the Senate will ensure that the Canadian public has an opportunity to voice its concerns more frequently. This proposal would provide for more continuity than that proposed in the Beaudoin-Dobbie report which advocates that all Senators be elected every six years.

[Senator Hays.]

With respect to the first election after a reformed Senate is implemented, a lottery process could determine which senators would be up for election after the first three years.

Since an appropriate means to retire the current members of the Senate would have to be found, the reformed Senate should be set in place one or two years after the date of the next federal election to allow the next Parliament to finalize the all-important details of the method of election and laws relating to election expenses. If this is an issue in the next federal election, it is guaranteed that debate on these crucial matters will take place in the most appropriate forum and involve the whole of the electorate.

Determining and agreeing on the powers of the Senate is one of the most difficult issues to resolve. If the fundamental objective of Senate reform is to ensure better regional representation and to provide a more effective check on the executive, it is clear that the elected Senate must have "real powers".

In Australia and the United States, the Senate is a powerful regional influence in the political process. Although this can lead to conflict, disagreements between the houses raise the profile of issues and make the government more responsive. As a result, the legislative process becomes one of negotiation and compromise among various interests. A reformed Senate must therefore have sufficient powers to bring about the incentive to develop policy that suits the interests of the country at large.

The Beaudoin-Dobbie report recommends a Senate with relatively strong but overly circumscribed powers.

● (1740)

As a general rule, it is suggested that in order for a measure to become law, the approval of the Senate and the House of Commons should continue to be required except on matters relating to supply and appropriation. The report also recommends that in the case of deadlock on normal bills, the House should be able to override the Senate.

The Liberal party, in the minority in that report, did not accept this position. It said that the Senate's veto in that case should be absolute.

If the fundamental objective of Senate reform is to provide a more effective control over the executive, the provision of an override will undermine the effectiveness of the Senate, particularly if the override is, as one of the Beaudoin-Dobbie options suggested, a simply majority.

Thus, the Liberal party proposed that the Senate be provided with an absolute veto on all bills except for appropriation and budget bills, for which a suspensive veto of 30 and 180 days respectively would apply, after which period the appropriation or budget bill could be passed in the House by a simple majority.

In addition, to reinforce its independence from the Prime Minister and his or her executive, there should be no appointments to the cabinet from the Senate, and, of course, the provision in the Constitution that enabled the Prime Minister to select a Speaker for the Upper House should be replaced with a provision for an elected Speaker selected from the Senate at large.

On the position taken in the Beaudoin-Dobbie report, I agree that there should be a double majority requirement in the Senate on cultural and linguistic issues, and if aboriginal representation is guaranteed in the Senate, the application of a double majority rule on matters affecting aboriginal language and culture should be considered.

Furthermore, the Senate should have an absolute veto on constitutional issues. Appointments to the Supreme Court and various Crown corporations should require Senate approval, and the Senate should continue its role of providing in-depth inquiries into issues of national importance. Many of these duplicate recommendations in the Beaudoin-Dobbie report.

Many proposals have recommended the redistribution of seats in the Senate in a way which would provide greater representation for the Atlantic and Western regions of Canada. There are also a number of proposals to increase the representation using the provinces rather than, or in addition to, the regions as the rationale for redistribution.

Proponents of the latter fall into two basic categories: Those who argue that if the Senate is to represent the provinces, then all provinces must be regarded as equals, and therefore equal representation should be afforded; and those who argue that, because of great disparity between the populations of the provinces, there should be a greater representation provided for the outer provinces of Canada, but not on an equal basis.

In the Beaudoin-Dobbie report, the committee recommends two options for the redistribution of seats which I view as unacceptable. In both situations, they provide for too many senators and are not sufficiently weighted to the outer provinces. In addition, there is no provision for changing representation as the population of the provinces change.

I also do not support the position of the Romanow proposal which provides for an equal number of seats for each province, but allocates more votes to some senators than others based on the provinces they represent or the issue being voted on. In my view, this is just semantics, simply a way of disguising the problem and making a system that is more complicated and more opaque.

The choice most preferred in Alberta, of course, is equal representation from each province. Representation in the Senate based largely on population is rejected in my province because the larger provinces would overwhelmingly out-represent the smaller provinces.

Since representation by population is not the role or objective of the Senate but rather that of the House of Commons, it is also argued that a Senate with equal numbers from each province would be the preferred solution. I appreciate the difficulty with that. I point out within my own party, though, that it is the view of the Liberal party's northern and western caucus.

In any event, it is important to discuss a fall-back position. I believe that I should discuss the least that must be done to, in my view, satisfy the objectives for a reformed Senate.

An improvement on the distribution is the position put forward by Liberal members of the Beaudoin-Dobbie committee who recommended that seats in the Senate be redistributed on the basis of provincial or territorial representation, and weighted according to the populations of the provinces or territories, using some kind of categories. This may seem a bit frivolous, but we could have extra-small, small, medium, large and extra-large provinces. We would need some way of defining them. This would provide for a distribution and, in the Liberal proposal in the Beaudoin-Dobbie report, the numbers total 100, made up of 1 from each of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, 9 from each of British Columbia and Alberta, 18 from Ontario and Quebec, 4 from Prince Edward Island, and 8 from all other provinces.

An improvement on this suggestion would further reduce the number of categories to four, providing for a distribution of 94 senators made up of 1 from the Yukon, 1 from the Northwest Territories and 8 from all other provinces, with the exception of Ontario and Quebec with 16 each, and 4 from Prince Edward Island. One might add another one for the second part of the Northwest Territories when that transpires, which would bring the total to 95. Limiting the size of the Senate to 96, 95, or 94 would raise the profile of the senators and would reduce the possibility of the Senate becoming a duplication of the House of Commons.

While accepting that an equal Senate would have the advantage of being easier to implement, the redistribution of seats would require some form of constitutionalizing definitions and the means of seat allocation. Furthermore, such a system of redistribution would also have to allow for a province to increase or decrease its level of representation in the Senate as its proportion of the Canadian population increased or decreased. For example, based on current demographic trends, British Columbia's level of representation in the Senate may have to be adjusted upwards in the near term.

With respect to the issue of aboriginal representation, the nature of any guaranteed aboriginal representation in the Senate will ultimately be determined by the status of aboriginal self-government within Canada. Assuring that the inherent right to self-government is recognized in the Constitution, First Nations will negotiate the powers and terms of self-government with the federal and provincial governments. If First Nations become a recognized third order of government within Canada, the question of representation in both the Senate and the House of Commons will ultimately be addressed on a trilateral government-to-government basis. Guaranteed aboriginal representation in the Senate, therefore, should not be viewed primarily as an attempt to address the inadequate representation of an ethnic minority but as a recognition of the historical and legal position of the First Nations within Canada. It is this rationale which differentiates the position of aboriginal peoples from the position of ethnic minorities and women on the question of under-representation in the political process.

Regardless of the current progress on the issue of aboriginal self-government, it would be a positive step at this time to support guaranteed seats for our aboriginal people in the Senate, recognizing that it may be a temporary or transitional arrangement until the status of aboriginal self-government is finally determined. If aboriginal representation is guaranteed in the Senate, the application of a double-majority rule on matters affecting aboriginal language and culture, as stated earlier, should be considered.

Senate reform is crucial to solving the problems of regional discontent. The current situation is unpalatable to the regions. What we hope to do is create a structure that will lead to a more democratic and representative system.

However, I acknowledge that there are significant obstacles to Senate reform. Traditionally, provinces have been the principal representatives of regional interests due to decentralization and executive federalism. The redistribution of powers which will result from Senate reform will also affect the existing relationship between the federal and provincial executives by introducing, in effect, another representative body. Thus, provincial premiers will have to accept a diminished role as the spokespersons for provincial and regional interests, something that I appreciate presents an impediment to Senate reform.

The larger provinces, Quebec and Ontario, will lose some of the power they presently possess in the Senate. Quebec, in particular, may view the shift of power in a negative way unless it is accorded some special protection in another form. Thus, it is important that a requirement for a double majority in the Senate be established that is sensitive to that concern.

Unless Canada's national institutions are strengthened, there is a risk that regional alienation will cause the nation to become less unified and possibly break up.

● (1750)

Canadians will cease to identify with their national institutions and the country will become increasingly fragmented. To this end it is crucial that Senate reform constitute only part of overall parliamentary reform. Reforms in the House of Commons must be enacted to ensure that the electorate's deep dissatisfaction with the current system of representation is fully addressed.

Furthermore, there is the distinct possibility that the Senate alone will render those MPs who are not part of the executive even more irrelevant than is currently the case and deepen the electorate's dissatisfaction with the level of representation these MPs and the political system as a whole provide for the great majority of Canadians. In my view, however, the more likely result is that the House of Commons will undergo change to ensure its meaningful role in the legislative process.

[Senator Hays.]

A country as large and diverse as Canada needs strong national institutions that provide legitimate and effective forums to represent the interests of people, provinces, and regions. Senate reform is the principal step in this process.

As I stand before you, there is a need to change the democratic reality of Canada by reallocating power among the executive parliamentary branches of government. We will be well-served only if we take the time to consider, first and foremost, the interests of the country and openly discuss the best way to bring about reform.

As I understand the current proposals for Senate reform through the media, I must say that I have grave concerns. I have already expressed disappointment in the idea that the Senate composition issue be resolved by having the same number of senators from each province, but with a weighted voting power depending on which province they are from and whether or not the vote is to apply to an issue dealing with natural resources.

This tends to tell me that what is happening is that people are responding to the symptoms of the problem rather than to its root causes. In the end, the only way we will have a responsive system in place to deal with the feeling of powerlessness, which is so rampant among the people of my province, is to address the structural change. We must do that in the best possible way so that it will lead to the democratic result that we want, that is, a more responsive elected body.

As I said a couple of times through the course of my remarks, it may well be that there is some considerable disagreement with the positions that I have taken. I accept that. However, I believe that we must, as soon as possible, move on to a detailed discussion of this issue. If we finesse the Senate reform issue through one of the methods being talked about now—even the Alberta position which states that the Senate should have equal but great powers on matters of provincial jurisdiction, lesser powers on matters of concurrent jurisdiction, and virtually no powers on matters of federal jurisdiction—then, as a citizen of Alberta, taking myself out of the parliamentary sphere, if there is no genuine attempt to deal with the issue, there will be immense dissatisfaction among those people who have formed into movements at this particular time in my province and in my region. I point out that it will be recognized immediately if it is not genuine.

I brought forward this very long speech using the Australian Senate as a model. It is a good starting point, albeit with flaws, that we can build on and use as a framework. I believe that this is the approach we should take, but that we must debate it fully. I regret that, at this particular point in time, we still seem to be talking about the symptoms of the problem as opposed to the problem itself.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Honourable Senator Hays.

He has not mentioned if there is a mediation committee to deal with difficulties between the lower house and the Senate in Australia. Does a committee of that type exist? If difficulties between the two houses arise, how are they resolved?

Senator Hays: I cannot answer Senator Riel's question with authority since I have not looked into the matter.

However, I can confirm that the Senate has, essentially, an absolute veto, or concurrent jurisdiction, with the House of Representatives. I am guessing when I say this, but I assume there would be conferencing provisions in their system since it is modelled after the American system. As there are conferencing provisions in our own system, which are not used, there are conferencing provisions in the U.S. system.

I am not aware, however, of any procedures for joint meetings.

Senator Riel: I have a second question for the honourable senator. He recommends that, as is the case in Australia, the 12 candidates who receive the most votes should be elected. In that way, it would resemble a provincial election.

I do not know much how money would be involved in such an election. However, I know that in the United States when two senators are elected in New York or California, for example, the amount of money involved is extraordinary. If the same were done provincially, it would cost, perhaps, as much as a provincial general election.

Senator Hays: Senator Riel raises a most important issue, that is, what the election expenses environment will be for a Senate election. The American experience is not one we would want to duplicate wherein the cost of running for office is extraordinarily high. Because of the election expenses laws which are in place in that country, contributions to incumbent members are encouraged to the point that one of the candidates for the Democratic nomination was saying that the governing party in the United States is not the Republican Party or the Democratic Party but the incumbent party.

If we look at the funding of parties in the United States, we see that 70 per cent of political contributions go to incumbents, while 30 per cent goes to those challenging them. There is a 95-per-cent-plus return rate of incumbents. That is a distortion of democracy, one which we would not want to duplicate in Canada.

I believe that the election expenses environment is crucial, which is why I suggest that, if we are to reform our election expenses laws, then we should debate the issue thoroughly across the country. I cannot imagine a better place for it to come up than in the next federal election.

Senator Riel: Senator Hays, in a state-wide or province-wide election, it would be extremely difficult to have a local man or woman elected if it were proposed that six candidates be elected from each province. At this moment we do not have one farmer from the Province of Quebec in this place. The man from St-Jean Baptiste de Rouville, or any other place, has no choice.

We believe we should give them a place, and that it would be more valid to have a local representative than to have a selection recommended by the party bosses. Would the honourable senator agree with that?

Senator Hays: I do not know what kind of a representative group the party system alone would bring forward. However, I have to agree that, in a province-wide election, in many provinces there are certain components of the population that would encounter difficulty in having one of their number represent them in the Senate. Agriculture is one such component. With 2.5 per cent of our population on the land, the honourable senator makes a good point.

I have given thought to this issue. I am not sure of the history in the United States or Australia—and they are very different systems—with respect to minority groups, that is, groups that are not urban professionals, being elected to public office. I am afraid that, in my model, that is a problem we would have to accept.

The fact of the matter is that, if 98 per cent of the people live in cities, and they all choose to live in the City of Vancouver, then having someone responsible to represent that province is something we will have to accept.

I do not have a good answer or solution to the problem. It is the hard answer, and that is the way it is.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, under Rule 13, I must advise the Senate that it is six o'clock. Is there unanimous agreement not to see the clock?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PROPRIETY AND CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF THE SENATE— ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Thériault:
>
> That the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders be authorized to consider the propriety and the constitutionality of the changes and amendments to the Rules of the Senate, adopted by the Senate on June 18, 1991; and
>
> That the Committee report no later than October 13, 1992.— (Honourable Senator Hébert).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we are approaching the fateful number on this motion. We are now at number 14. I should like to reserve the right to speak on it at a later date. In view of the marvellous progress and understanding we have had today, I wonder whether Senator Lynch-Staunton would reconsider my proposal of the other day of allowing this matter to stand until September, when we meet again, presumably on the 22nd?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will certainly reconsider the matter, as I have seen major reconsiderations taking place this afternoon. It will be on the basis, of course, that it is not to be considered a precedent but is being done under unusual circumstances, namely, that the senator who originally moved the motion unfortunately cannot be with us.

Senator Molgat: I wish to thank my colleague very much for his understanding.

Order stands.

GLOBE '92 CONFERENCE

Hon. Pat Carney rose pursuant to notice of March 24, 1992:

> That she will call the attention of the Senate to the Globe '92 Conference held in Vancouver, B.C., from 16th to 20th March, 1992.

She said: Honourable senators, I wish to table the report of the proceedings of Globe '92. You will recall that, under the rules of the Senate, I was to do this earlier but there were problems with the French translation.

I appreciate the cooperation of senators in allowing me to speak at this time. It is an honour and privilege to table a copy of the Agenda for Action for Business and the Environment, which is a summary of Globe '92. This was an international conference and trade fair held in March in Vancouver, and attended by over 12,000 delegates from 74 countries. It was the second in a series of bi-annual conferences bringing together businesses, entrepreneurs and organizations who see economic opportunities for business as the world moves to an economy based on sustainable development.

My colleague from the other place, the honourable John Fraser, presented this agenda for action to an assembly of world business leaders at a conference organized by the International Chamber of Commerce on May 27 in Rio de Janeiro. On numerous occasions during the conference, speakers and business representatives repeated the theme that environmental protection is not necessarily incompatible with economic development. Common goals were obvious among the 400 speakers at the conference, and the 457 exhibitors defined practical, long-term solutions to global environmental problems and, in the process, identified related business opportunities and responsibilities.

Honourable senators, I do not intend to take much more time. I will simply say that the agenda for action takes a global look at our environmental situation and then reviews the instruments available for effecting change. These are policy and legislation, economics and finance, technology and research, communications, education and training. All these are tools available to both the public and the private sector for use on behalf of the environment.

No one expects environment problems to be rectified or sustainable development to be implemented in a short-term period with no effect on populations throughout the world, but the idealism of our youth is heartening. They tend to be ahead of us on this issue. World leaders at this time cannot put off difficult decisions or actions to a later generation. We must act now in partnership with all Canadians, and the agenda for action clearly lays out the routes open to us.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

THE ECONOMY

MISMANAGEMENT OF MONETARY POLICY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. H.A. Olson rose pursuant to notice of May 12, 1992:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Government's mismanagement of the economy and particularly monetary policy.

He said: Honourable senators, I only want to say enough on this inquiry to enable it to be considered debated and moved to the proper category, so that the numbering will start over at one. I wish to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Senator Olson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 19, 1992

The Senate met at 9 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I know my honourable friends would not want tradition to drop at this point—even though Senator Simard is not here—so, in the absence of my colleague Senator Frith, I wish to advise the Leader of the Government that the clock is still ticking. If the government of which Senator Murray is a member respects democracy, Canadians will cast their ballots within 155 days. Time is moving on.

Senator Doody: You would be more convincing if only you were not smiling!

Senator Molgat: If, in the words of Senator Murray, the present government is cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, the day of reckoning remains 541 days away.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

FRIDAY, June 19, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

EIGHTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-48, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 16, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Poitras, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

FRIDAY, June 19, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

NINETEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 16, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Poitras, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CUSTOMS ACT

CUSTOMS TARIFF

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

FRIDAY, June 19, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTIETH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 16, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Poitras, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

EXCISE TAX ACT

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean-Marie Poitras, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

FRIDAY, June 19, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 17, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JEAN-MARIE POITRAS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Poitras, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[English]

PRIVATE BILL

AN ACT TO AMALGAMATE THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE AND THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF METROPOLITAN MONTREAL—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare, for Honourable Richard J. Stanbury, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

FRIDAY, June 19, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTIETH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-12, An Act to amalgamate The Montreal Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Montreal, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 18, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

RICHARD J. STANBURY
Deputy Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before moving third reading I wish to repeat what I said at the committee meeting this morning. On behalf of the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce, I want to express their appreciation to Mr. du Plessis, Q.C., Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, and his associates, and to Mr. James W. Ryan, Q.C., their special advisor, for the manner in which they prepared and drafted the bill. It was much more complicated than originally foreseen and they worked under extraordinary pressure to meet a deadline. That deadline has been respected, and all involved are most appreciative of their work.

I would also like to thank all colleagues for their understanding of the purpose of this bill, particularly colleagues opposite and their leader, Senator Frith, whose views on the use and misuse of rules are well known. I am not suggesting that we misused the rules in this case, but we certainly took advantage of whatever flexibility we could find, both in the rules regarding private bills and in the rules in general.

I also want to thank Senator DeWare and Senator Stanbury for convening the committee so quickly and for their strong support, and that of their fellow members, of this bill. It is of great significance, not only to Montreal, but to Quebec and to the rest of country, because it is a model we hope will be emulated elsewhere.

For all these reasons, I express my thanks to all involved. Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, you know my long-standing views on the question of giving leave. It is not a matter of wanting, personally, to be obstreperous by any means. It is just that on this side we believe that the rules, having been made for very specific reasons, ought to be followed. If I refused to give leave during the previous stages of this bill, it was not, as I am sure my honourable colleague knows, because I found fault with the objects of the bill. If fact, I wholeheartedly support the objects of the bill.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I suggest this was long overdue because it is incredible that there would be two boards of trade, one French-speaking and the other English-speaking, in the second largest city in Canada. So, I can appreciate this.

Nevertheless, I am in the position of having to decide whether or not to grant leave for this bill to be read for the third time today.

[English]

Having duly considered the matter, I would like to tell Senator Lynch-Staunton that part of the delay was in order to be able to offer him a birthday present this morning. In that spirit, I will grant leave and he will have, as his birthday present, his bill, which I know he holds in high regard personally. So I will grant leave and wish him a very happy birthday.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(b), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sylvain, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella, Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Friday, June 19, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-82, An Act to amend the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and the National Housing Act and to amend another Act in consequence thereof, has in obedience to its Order of Reference of Wednesday, June 17, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NOEL A. KINSELLA
Acting Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CONTRAVENTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-46, respecting contraventions of federal enactments.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, June 23, 1991.

• (0915)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 2, 1992-93

SECOND READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): moved second reading of Bill C-87, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1993.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill before you today, Appropriation Bill No. 2, 1992-93, provides for the release of the balance of the Main Estimates 1992-93 amounting to some $34.9 billion dollars.

The Main Estimates were tabled in the Senate on February 27, 1992 and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance the same day. These Estimates were discussed in committee with the President of Treasury Board on April 8, and with his officials on May 6. The committee's report was tabled by its Deputy Chairman and is dated June 11.

The Main Estimates tabled to date amounting to some $141.1 billion provide for $48.9 billion of voted authority, of which $48.8 billion is budgetary and $.1 billion is non-budgetary; and $92.2 billion of statutory expenditures, of which $91.8 billion is budgetary and $400 million is non-budgetary.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the Deputy Leader of the Government has pointed out, the Estimates have been thoroughly studied in committee and have also been discussed here in the chamber.

I checked with the Chairman of the National Finance committee to ensure that there were no changes at this point that he could foresee, or further comments that he wished to make.

He has assured me that everything is in order, and as far as he is concerned, we should proceed and pass the bill.

• (0920)

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

REFERENDUM BILL

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DIVISION DEFERRED

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move the third reading of Bill C-81, An Act to provide for referendums on the Constitution of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have the opportunity to comment this morning on Bill C-81, the government's referendum bill.

We in the Liberal party are in favour of giving the people of Canada the opportunity to vote on constitutional proposals. We want a referendum, either following a federal-provincial agreement or package or if the federal government fails to conclude a deal at all and is forced to proceed alone.

In my view and that of my party, it seems only appropriate and fair that after so many months and years of discussion—and all of the effort that went into the Meech Lake Accord, the Spicer Commission, the various federal-provincial legislative committees that roamed the land, the federally-sponsored conferences, and the enormous amount of media comment and coverage—that Canadians should finally have the chance to vote on the proposals which somehow—we hope—will result from that long and arduous procedure. It seems to me to be the natural progression of events.

Of course, our preference on this side would be to have an election to provide a new government with a fresh start and a fresh mandate to negotiate towards a referendum, but this bill is introduced during today's negotiations and today's deadlines and must be judged within that context.

Honourable senators, if Canadians were feeling disaffected with the process, and particularly the discussions behind closed doors of recent weeks, as they are, can you imagine how they would feel if they were not to have the opportunity to vote after all of this time and activity on this question? Surely a referendum on the issue would address, in part, that question of alienation. In my view, it would go a long way towards making every Canadian a part of the process. As a matter of fact, it would also make every Canadian a part of the national will to get on with other issues that face them starkly in their daily lives.

[Senator Molgat.]

The leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, first proposed the idea of a national referendum in his presentation to Quebec's Belanger-Campeau Committee in the fall of 1990 and again in April of last year in the Liberal party's nine-point guideline for constitutional change. We are all naturally pleased that the President of the Privy Council, the Right Honourable Joe Clark, and the government, after dismissing the idea of a national referendum only a few months ago, have come almost full circle in presenting this legislation to Parliament.

I say "almost" because, although we are supporting the principle of this bill, it is far from perfect, and we do not understand why the government has decided to leave it in this imperfect state. In fact when one reads the bill and considers all that has been said in the past few years on the issue of constitutional change and referenda, one has to wonder if the government itself really knows where it is going with this legislation.

The comments of the Honourable Harvie Andre, the government leader in the House of Commons, are filled with conditional phrases and so, honourable senators, is the bill. As all of us know, if this bill is passed it does not mean there will be a referendum on constitutional proposals. This legislation will only enable the Government of Canada to proceed with a referendum in the event that, in their wisdom, they feel that the people of Canada should be consulted, or if federal negotiations with the provinces fail. Even then it is not mandatory. The bill contains no formula or other method of determining when, or if, such a referendum will take place, and in our view that is one of its more serious flaws.

We believe that the people of Canada must be consulted, and we presented an amendment to that effect in the House of Commons which was denied by the government, and this legislation is flawed as a result. At the very least, with this bill the federal government would be equipped to proceed with a referendum. Without it, they have no legislative capacity to do so. However, I believe, and my colleagues believe, that it is not too late to make improvements.

Others have spoken about the inadequacies of the legislation with regard to spending, contribution limits and expenses, broadcasting rules, and the need for the opposition parties in the House of Commons to play a major role in the formation of the question. I would hope that senators could have a hand in it, too. We want to ensure that the process is fair and that a referendum be made a requirement for constitutional change. I agree with all of those arguments, but the specific improvement that I would like to propose to honourable senators today has to do with the question of regional majorities in the results of a referendum vote.

The legislation as it now stands makes no provision for regional majorities. I and my colleagues believe that this is a serious omission which should be corrected. By regional majorities, honourable senators, I mean quite simply that a proposal to amend our Constitution should receive not only an overall Canada-wide majority in a referendum but also a majority within each of the four regions, Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, and the West, including the northern territories.

At the meeting of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs committee on Wednesday night, and recently in appearances before the House of Commons legislative committee, various reasons were put forward by Mr. Andre and others as to why this legislation should not have a requirement for regional majorities. I have to say I listened carefully the other night, but I remain unconvinced. For one thing, Mr. Andre suggests that since it is the premiers and provincial legislatures plus the federal government and Parliament who ultimately make the decisions on constitutional amendments, governments would be constrained in making their final deals by a national referendum that provides for regional majorities.

That line of reasoning suggests to me that the people's views might just get in the way of those various governments. However, is it not the purpose of holding a referendum to let the people of Canada have their say and, more importantly, to have what they say finally influence the law of the land. That is why we are debating this matter here today, and it is difficult for me to accept Mr. Andre's rationale of a totally unbinding referendum process. What is the point of a referendum which would be so flexible as to have no binding influence whatsoever on constitutional change? If we are told beforehand that our votes may mean nothing, why vote? If Canadians were to understand that their votes may not really have an effect in terms of resolving these constitutional issues, how could we hope to entice them to make the effort to go to the polls? In what frame of mind will they be if they do go to the polls, and what will that do to exacerbate the already distressing level of cynicism about politics which exists in every corner of this country today?

Another argument against including regional majorities in the legislation had to do with the question of how the votes are counted. The process would be administered by the chief electoral officer, who has made it very clear that he will, as he does in federal elections and by-elections, count the votes poll by poll.

It was suggested that it was somehow unacceptable to report a referendum on a national basis with a regional breakdown. Surely it is just a simple matter of arithmetic to add up those votes by riding, by province, by region, and nationally. In my mind, there can be no reasonable objection to this provision based on how the chief electoral officer counts those votes.

In this country, we have had two national referenda—or referendums; with all the debate in this Chamber in recent days, I am very confused about the proper term.

Senator Murray: I use referenda, too. That is my choice.

Senator Fairbairn: Thank you. Referenda is my preference.

We have had two national referenda, one on September 29, 1898 on prohibition, and one on April 27, 1942 on conscription during the Second World War.

In the prohibition case, no action was taken by the government following the vote. However, in the other case, as we all know, action was eventually taken and conscription was brought in against the wishes of a majority of Quebecers, and those feelings still remain strong in some circles today.

Although the latter was not a constitutional question, I raise it to illustrate a point. I believe there has developed in this country a view that if a majority of people in one region of Canada are opposed to a particular constitutional proposal, it should not proceed. I believe that without the provision for regional majorities in the legislation before us, the legitimacy of any result of a referendum vote would be seriously called into question by Canadians.

Let us say, hypothetically, that we have a national referendum on a compromise on Senate reform and a national majority approves the package. The majority of the Canadian people live, as we all know, in Ontario and Quebec. Let us say that in those two provinces, the majority favour the deal, but a majority of western Canadians oppose it. That is not a far-fetched hypothesis. The result could be that central Canada would have the ability to influence a critical constitutional change in spite of strongly held opposition in the outer regions of this country.

Senator Murray: The actual project of Senate reform would have to be approved by their provincial legislatures as well as Parliament. What my friend is suggesting is that the results of a national referendum of that kind might influence us in the government and Parliament. Perhaps they might, but at the end of the day, those provincial legislatures and what my friend calls the outer regions would still have to give their approval, or a sufficient number of them, in order to ratify the amendment.

Senator Fairbairn: I understand that perfectly, and that is in fact our current amending formula. However, when we talk of referenda, I think we must make a distinction between the governments and legislatures and the people. The referendum is a vote of the people of Canada. The argument here is that the people of Canada, by majority in their regions, must have the ability in a referendum, if it is to be a credible referendum, to have an influence on this Parliament and on the legislatures across the land.

Senator Frith: The legislatures were elected on a basis other than the question of the referendum. They have their role.

Senator Fairbairn: That is right. We are talking about two entirely different divisions. Very definitely, their deciding role on a constitutional amendment is clear. As we are suggesting, in this bill the people of Canada should also have a role through voting on a referendum.

Senator Murray: Why regional majorities? We do not have regional legislatures, we have provincial legislatures.

Senator Frith: All the more reason. That is a great argument. Thank you.

Senator Fairbairn: Exactly. All the more reason to have a regional majority, and maybe if the Leader of the Government will think about that for a minute, he might even prefer a regional majority in some cases.

At any rate, given the hypothesis that I was arguing in the case of the Senate issue, I believe that, if such a result of a majority in Ontario and Quebec versus an opposing majority in the outer regions were to come about, it would be extremely damaging in reality in terms of our national unity. In the hypothetical case that I just mentioned, it is the West that would be left out through that simple majority rule in the current legislation.

But how would the federal government respond to the results of a referendum on a question on which there was a majority in favour in the West, Ontario and Atlantic Canada, but not a majority in the Province of Quebec?

We, as Liberals, do not consider the proposal for a referendum as a means of doing an "end run" around the people in the Province of Quebec, or in any other region of Canada for that matter. We do not see it as a tool to pressure or divide premiers, or citizens, or regions.

Honourable senators, the other night Mr. Andre and I had a conversation about this issue in the committee. I simply want to refer to a couple of his remarks. He made it quite clear, for starters, that he is not a fan of referenda. He said:

> I hope we do not have a referendum. The fact of the matter is, a referendum would be a terrible thing. The fact of the matter is, a referendum is a dangerous thing to use.

We carried on our conversation. I suggested to him that, admittedly, the referendum is a very delicately balanced tool. I further suggested that to use it and then disregard the views of an important part of the country, wherever that part may be, would be a very dangerous and divisive act for any government to contemplate. Mr. Andre responded by saying:

> You are absolutely right. It would be very dangerous and very divisive. Any government would take that into account.

He went on to say:

> However, should any government decide to hold a referendum, they would clearly have to indicate the purpose, intent and how the results would be viewed to make it valid. Any gaps, regionally, provincially and so on, would profoundly affect the ability or the utility of the results.

Honourable senators, I would take the words of Mr. Andre as a very persuasive reason to have in this bill the provision for regional majorities. It is for that reason that I propose the following amendment. I move:

[Senator Murray.]

> That Bill C-81 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended on page 13 by adding immediately after line four the following:
>
> 12.(1) The Senate or the House of Commons shall not adopt any resolution during the life of the 34th Parliament authorizing the Governor in Council to issue a proclamation in order to amend the Constitution of Canada where the amendment would directly or indirectly be contrary to the opinion expressed in a referendum, by a majority of voters:
>
> (a) in Canada;
>
> (b) in the aggregate, in the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland;
>
> (c) in the province of Ontario;
>
> (d) in the province of Quebec; or
>
> (e) in the aggregate, in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Balfour, that Bill C-81 be read the third time.

In amendment, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat:

> That Bill C-81 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended on page 13 by adding immediately after line four the following:
>
> 12.(1) The Senate or the House of Commons—

Senator Marchand: Dispense!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I address the amendment proposed by our colleague Senator Fairbairn, let me say in response to her remarks at the outset of her intervention that it is obvious that the essential difference between the government and our friends opposite involves the circumstances under which a referendum should be held.

Our friends opposite are of the view that, whatever the circumstances, a referendum is a good thing; that it is the preferred way to consult the people of Canada; and that the government should be obliged by the law to hold a referendum on the constitutional issues before ratification—that is, to hold a national referendum in every province on the constitutional issues that are now being discussed between the federal government and the provinces.

Our view is that this is a precautionary measure only. As I pointed out when I opened the debate on second reading, a number of provinces are obliged to hold referenda, on any constitutional amendment that is brought forward, before the legislation is ratified. There are circumstances, and I will not bother to enumerate them, in which a referendum would be necessary or would be desirable either nationally or in one or more of the provinces.

However, the fact of the matter is that a referendum may not be necessary and may not even be desirable. It is one thing for a government, whether provincial or federal, to put forward a package of constitutional amendments and then find that these are opposed in all or part of the country. The remedy in that case lies with the electors at provincial and federal elections. If a government is defeated because of its constitutional position, so be it. That is not the end of the world, nor is it not the end of the country.

I put to it honourable senators that a referendum on a package of constitutional amendments, a referendum that addresses itself to the future existence of the country, is quite a dramatic step. There is not much that the government or Parliament or the legislatures or the country can do for an encore if we, on a national basis, put forward a referendum indicating that it is now or never, or that the fate of the country hangs in the balance. There is not much we can do for an encore if such a referendum loses. So it is a step to be embarked upon—as Senator Forsey used to say, in quoting the Anglican Church marriage service—not in any frivolous or hasty manner, but after the gravest consideration. I am paraphrasing the Anglican marriage service, of which I am not intimately familiar.

• (0950)

Having said that, I should also point out that Senator Fairbairn's desire to insist on a referendum in all of the country rather than perhaps part of it is not acceptable to the government. We want to keep all options open. We think it may be necessary and desirable to have a referendum in only part of the country.

In that respect, I may remind her that this provision in Bill C-81 is taken directly—and I suspect word for word—from a measure that she will be familiar with, and that is the referendum bill brought in by the Trudeau government in 1978, but not passed by Parliament at that time. That bill had a provision that would have enabled us to hold referenda either nationally or in a given province or provinces.

Honourable senators, it is the amendment proposed by Senator Fairbairn to which I wish to address myself briefly. I want to say very seriously that I believe that putting in a requirement for regional majorities in a bill of this kind would increase the chances of any referendum so conducted losing. The proposal by Senator Fairbairn for a reference to regional majorities in effect resurrects the Victoria amending formula of 1971 and applies it to a consultative referendum.

Let me say at the outset that I liked the Victoria amending formula of 1971. I liked the Victoria agreement of 1971. I rejoiced when it was arrived at. I thought mistakenly—not for the first time and, as it turned out, not for the last—that the Victoria agreement provided, finally, a means of stabilizing the constitutional situation in the country and reinforcing national unity. For reasons not necessary to recite here today, it was not to be.

The Victoria agreement and the Victoria amending formula have been overtaken by events. Not only did Quebec, in the final analysis, refuse to continue with it, in the Alberta provincial election of 1971, Mr. Lougheed, then the Leader of the Opposition, campaigned vigorously against the Victoria amending formula. He and Alberta, to name but one province, have been opposed to it in principle ever since. They believe that the idea of regional majorities contradicts a principle that is very dear to them, and that is the so-called "equality of the provinces". That opinion is held most strongly in Alberta, but it is echoed in Manitoba and Saskatchewan today, and most emphatically by the present premier and government of Newfoundland.

Indeed, during the 1980 to 1982 process, Premier Lougheed and colleagues from Western Canada fought very hard for this principle of the so-called "equality of the provinces". They fought very hard against an amending formula involving regional majorities, and they won out. They achieved a general amending formula providing for the approval of 7 provinces with at least 50 per cent of the population. They achieved, in the amending formula of 1982, the right of any province to opt out of any loss of its legislative jurisdiction to the federal Parliament. They achieved unanimity—that is, a veto for every province—on certain types of amendments relating to national institutions.

So the Victoria formula—the idea of regional majorities—is an idea whose time has come and, speaking personally, unfortunately has gone. It is no longer on the table. It has been overtaken by events, and I say that to resurrect it now, even for the purposes of a consultative referendum, is not a good idea. It would burden any referendum that might be held, perhaps even to the extent of causing that referendum to be lost because of the opposition that we know exists—at least in Alberta and some other parts of Western Canada and Newfoundland—to this idea of regional majorities.

In parentheses, I might say, in the absence of our friend and colleague Senator Carney, that when Senator Fairbairn suggests regional majorities based on four regions, she will run into very stiff argument from the province of British Columbia, not only from its one Tory senator but from others, including the government of that province who consider their province to be a region. There are almost 3 million people now in British Columbia, and they regard themselves as a region. While they are not opposed to the idea of regional majorities, they would insist that they be considered a region in any such formula.

Finally, in making the point that we should not be obliged to hold a referendum, while one may be necessary or desirable in all or part of the country, I must repeat again the point that referenda are not part of our amending formula. Mr. Trudeau put forward the idea of a referendum as a formal part of the amending formula in the 1980-82 process, but he thought better of it and withdrew it eventually. This was done after due consideration by the federal government and the provinces.

So while there may be some value in a referendum, and while we think it is only prudent and reasonable to equip ourselves with the power to call one if necessary, we are not prepared to bind ourselves to it; still less are we prepared to burden any such referendum by resurrecting a regional-majorities formula which has been overtaken by events and could only make a referendum campaign more difficult. It would introduce elements to the campaign that I know, and I think a number of others know, are divisive.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say about this amendment. I understand there may be other amendments proposed by our friends opposite today or on the next day, and we look forward to discussing those.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government a question following his analysis of the inappropriateness of legally or constitutionally establishing regional majorities.

Would he not agree that, politically, quite apart from what the Constitution or the law says, a national referendum on any subject that was defeated in any particular section of the country—for example, Quebec, Ontario or the Atlantic—would in itself impose that result upon any government or Parliament? The politics of the country, in a sense, support very strongly the argument that might be made constitutionally and which might be rejected for the reasons that the minister has stated.

• (1000)

Senator Murray: I think we both understand the political realities in the country. However, I would not want to try in advance to quantify the situation in such a way as to say what we, as a federal government, should do, if there were a small regional majority in, say, the western region as defined by Senator Fairbairn, but two provinces had voted against the referendum. I would not want to make that decision now in a vacuum. I have an idea what the provincial governments of those provinces might do. I think they would be disinclined to proceed with an amendment that had been opposed by a majority of their voters. There is political reality and I accept that, but part of the political reality is the opposition, which I have described, to the idea of regional majorities; the opposition, especially in Alberta and Manitoba, Saskatchewan to a lesser extent, and Newfoundland emphatically, to the idea of regional majority even in a consultative referendum.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Would the obverse of what the Leader of the Government has just said also apply in his view? In other words, if one or two provinces produce a majority for an amendment and the premier does not like it—I am not asking the honourable senator to name a premier—might that influence the premier to change his stand?

Senator Murray: I think it would influence the premier or premiers to change their stand, if they were satisfied that the referendum had been conducted properly, that there had been a fair turn out and so forth. I hope it would have some influence on the premier and government of the province, yes, under those circumstances.

[Senator Murray.]

[Translation]

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I have a question, and it is directed to Senator Fairbairn who moved an amendment.

If the government decides to hold a referendum in all or some of provinces, the issue of double or quadruple majorities becomes totally irrelevant because, assuming the referendum were held in some provinces and not in others, there would be a contradiction in our referendum legislation if it were to prescribe a double or quadruple majority.

I agree the decision is a political one. However, the bill before us today has taken what I would call the flexibility option, in that the referendum could be either truly national or it could be held only in certain provinces. And in the latter case, how can you prescribe a double or quadruple majority?

My second point concerns the wording of the proposed amendment. According to the constitutional amending formula of 1982, the government and the Parliament of Canada have the right to propose an amendment. This is done in the form of a motion in the Senate and the House of Commons.

If I understood Senator Fairbairn's proposal correctly, the bill would say that no motion for an amendment would be introduced unless supported by a majority in four regions. Isn't this a way to indirectly amend the amending formula? At the present time, the Parliament of Canada may at any time adopt a motion in the Senate and the House of Commons to amend the Constitution. There are no conditions

One can always stipulate certain conditions in a statute, but this will not change the Canadian Constitution. According to the Constitution, both Houses have the right to introduce a motion to amend. I think we have a problem here.

[English]

You cannot amend the amending procedure by a simple statute. If you want to restrict the right of the Senate and the House of Commons to initiate an amendment, you cannot do it by a simple statute or by an amendment to a statute. You have to amend the formula of amendment itself. Therefore, I would like to know whether or not the purpose of your amendment is to restrict the right of initiative of the federal houses in the amending procedure.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, on the first question, in which the honourable senator referred to the bill and its ability to allow for referenda in more than one province, nationally or in one province, those matters were raised as well at the committee the other night.

Senator Beaudoin: I was there.

Senator Fairbairn: Yes, I know. I think there is a great uncertainty in the minds of senators on this side of the house—and nothing that Mr. Andre said relieved that uncertainty—as to how you realistically play around with one referendum in one province and another referendum in another province. He did indicate, on the one hand, that if we were thinking of a referendum in provinces where they are obliged to have one, like British Columbia, Alberta and, I believe, Newfoundland—

Senator Beaudoin: Or perhaps Quebec.

Senator Fairbairn: Whichever province was alluded to, he indicated that the way in which it would be done is that the question would be the same as the question in the other provinces.

With respect to the other one, where he appeared to be referring perhaps to Newfoundland, was when he was talking about a province asking "mischievous" questions. He said then the federal government ought to have the ability to ask what it considered to be a proper question which, of course, in the mind of the province might be a mischievous question.

In that sense, I think the belief of people on this side is that a national referendum should be a national referendum and not tested out in bits and pieces in individual provinces, although I will concede that a province that is obliged to have such a referendum and shares the national question is a different case altogether.

On the question of trying to amend the Constitution indirectly through this proposition, that cannot be the case. The Constitution is clear; the amending formula is clear. What is being proposed—and the government has said this over and over again—in the case of a referendum is that this is a consultative process.

We are not suggesting that we go beyond the referendum bill as it exists. We are saying that within that bill there should be some provision whereby, if in the process of that consultation the results are severely divided, this should have an impact on the federal government in deciding whether or not to go ahead with proposing an amendment under the amending formula of the Constitution. There is no question of trying, indirectly, to produce a constitutional amendment.

Senator Beaudoin: I would like to be clear on this. Nothing would prevent a province or the federal authority from having a consultative referendum on the future of Canada. We all agree that it is purely consultative. As a result of a referendum, the federal authority will interpret the will of Canadians all across this country. That is the first step, if ever we have a referendum.

The second step is obviously the amending procedure. If the House of Commons and the Senate are proposing and adopting a resolution to have an amendment to the Constitution of this country, we just follow the rules of the Constitution Act of 1982. Those rules are mandatory. We have no choice but to follow the formula of amendment. Major amendments have to be adopted either under the general 7/50 rule or the unanimity rule for the right of veto, or in relation to the Supreme Court. We are bound by that obligation.

So the two processes are quite different. One is consultative and mainly political, the other one is legal and constitutional. To say in a statute that the government shall not take the initiative of amending the Constitution by adopting a resolution in both houses depending on the results of a referendum, is not binding on the government because, under the Constitution, Parliament has the power to go ahead. Saying in a statute that it does not have that power does not change the Constitution of the country as it has been since 1982.

I understand your point of view, but the choice is purely a question of politics. In other words, nothing would preclude the Prime Minister of Canada from declaring solemnly in the House of Commons the way in which he intends to interpret a referendum that is purely consultative. However, the fact is that, even if a referendum is of the utmost importance, and even if we have to be very prudent, to change the Constitution of Canada we will always have to follow the Constitution Act of 1982. That is all I have to say on the proposed amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, that this bill be read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat:

> That Bill C-81 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended on page 13 by adding immediately after line 4 the following:
>
> 12.1 The Senate or the House of Commons shall not adopt any resolution during the life of the 34th Parliament authorizing the Governor in Council to issue a proclamation in order to amend the Constitution of Canada where the amendment would directly or indirectly be contrary to the opinion expressed, in a referendum, by a majority of voters
>
> (a) in Canada;
>
> (b) in the aggregate, in the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland;
>
> (c) in the province of Ontario;
>
> (d) in the province of Quebec; or
>
> (e) in the aggregate, the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion say, "yea".

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion say, "nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

Senator Molgat: I propose that the vote be deferred.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Would 5.30 p.m. on Monday be a satisfactory time?

Senator Molgat: We may have a small problem with that. There will be further amendments moved. I think, according to the Rules of the Senate, the vote must take place at the next sitting of the Senate at 5.30. However, it might be more sensible to vote on all the amendments consecutively, and I cannot guarantee that they will all be dealt with by 5.30 on Monday. I suppose we can agree to the time of 5.30 on Monday and if, by unanimous consent, at that time we to defer further, we could do so.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes. Another alternative is to defer the vote till 9 o'clock in the evening, since we will be reconvening at 8 o'clock.

Senator Molgat: Under the Rules of the Senate, I think we can only do that by unanimous consent, but it is agreeable to me to defer the vote until 9 o'clock on Monday evening.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: How long should the bell ring?

Senator Molgat: Perhaps half an hour would suffice.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: So we will interrupt the proceedings at 8.30 and vote at 9 o'clock.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that unanimously agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We will meet at 8 o'clock, ring the bell at 8.30, and vote at 9 o'clock.

• (1020)

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twenty-seventh report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (budget—Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries), presented in the Senate on June 18, 1992.

Hon. Eileen Rossiter: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the seventeenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill S-8, An Act to regulate the manufacture and importation of motor vehicles and motor vehicle equipment to reduce the risk of death, injury and damage to property and the environment—with certain amendments), presented in the Senate on June 17, 1992.

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this bill originated in the Senate, and, with leave of the Senate, I ask that the bill be read the third time now. I do so in order that it may return to the House of Commons in time for it to be disposed of there before the summer recess.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, under the circumstances, and reluctantly, I agree to grant leave.

The Hon. The Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions.

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be granted leave to meet on Monday at 4 p.m., even though the Senate may then be sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

MR. BORIS YELTSIN PRESIDENT OF RUSSIA

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before the motion to adjourn is put, I wish to remind you that in just a few moments Mr. Boris Yeltsin will be addressing the members of both houses.

(For text of speech, see Issue No. 86.)

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 22, 1992, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 22, 1992

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NUMBER OF DAYS LEFT IN CURRENT TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Murray's democrats have, as of Monday, June 22, 1992, 152 days until election day. His government, however, if cowardly and contemptuous of democracy, has 538 days.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATUS OF THE ARTIST BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Noel A. Kinsella, Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Monday, June 22, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

NINTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-7, An Act respecting the status of the artist and professional relations between artists and producers in Canada, has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Thursday, June 18, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NOEL A. KINSELLA
Acting Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Chaput-Rolland, bill placed on Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 508 citizens of British Columbia who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Kamloops, Victoria and Brentwood Bay.

I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 551 citizens of British Columbia who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Kamloops.

I also have the honour to present petitions signed by 558 citizens of British Columbia who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Kamloops.

I have the honour to present petitions signed by 75 citizens of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Toronto and Thornhill.

I have the honour to present petitions signed by 75 citizens of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Toronto, Mississauga and Scarborough.

Finally, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 75 citizens of New Brunswick who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Saint John. This makes a total of 1,842 petitioners.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SENATE REFORM

MINISTER'S STATEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. A heading in the Financial Post of June 16 reads "Jelinek on the Senate: Who cares?" The report goes on to say:

The debate over Senate reform is too silly to hold up a new constitutional deal because no one cares about the upper house anyway, Revenue Minister Otto Jelinek said yesterday.

Senator Perrault: Shocking.

Senator Molgat: We all know that the press takes liberties at times with headlines and with statements, but this is a quotation so I assume it is safe to depend on it.

"I can't believe that this country is potentially on the verge of breaking up because of the Senate," Jelinek told a meeting of chartered accountants. "Who cares?"

Senator Simard: He said he was speaking for himself.

Senator Molgat: I was under the impression that the Prime Minister did care, that the Senate did care, and that a good number of provincial premiers do care.

My question is this: Is Mr. Jelinek speaking for the government when he makes those statements?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have not had an opportunity to examine the transcript, if one is available, of Mr. Jelinek's remarks. A quick, superficial reading of the press report would indicate to me, however, that he is taking up, in more colourful language, a theme that has been expressed by a number of the participants in the negotiations within the last little while.

Senator Perrault: He is an unguided missile; that is what he is.

Senator Murray: The theme is that it would be bizarre, to put it mildly, if one of the most favoured nations on earth were to come to the verge of division or collapse because of a disagreement over one of the Houses of its Parliament.

Senator Frith: What he needs is a new writer—like you, for example.

Senator Molgat: No one wants to see the country split up over any issue—and there are a number of them; but this is one issue in which, in particular, the western part of the country has a very definite interest. It has expressed its concern about Senate reform from the very beginning of the discussions on constitutional reform. This issue is not something new.

Is it fitting for a cabinet minister—

Senator Simard: He said he was speaking for himself!

Senator Molgat: —to deal with an issue of major importance to a vast section of the country in such a trivial way?

Senator Perrault: They should fire him out of the cabinet.

Senator Murray: I appreciate the concern in Western Canada, particularly in Alberta, concerning Senate reform. However, as I pointed out in the course of debate a week or so ago, the Senate reform issue is new when compared to other items on the table, including the relationship of Quebec to the rest of the country and the claims of the aboriginal peoples.

As I pointed out, Senate reform was not on the western agenda during the 1980-82 round; it was not on the western agenda at all. A number of other things were on the western agenda, and the western provinces succeeded in the 1982 round in achieving their objectives.

They included the amending formula, the natural resources amendment and the notwithstanding clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and so forth. So the Senate reform item, while it is not new, is relatively new. Having said that, I think the honourable senator would find that even in Alberta, where the proponents of a Triple-E Senate are the strongest, the people would not be willing to see the country break up over that issue.

Senator Molgat: The issue is not the country breaking up over the matter; the issue is that this cabinet minister is saying that nobody cares. If that is the attitude of the government, let me tell the honourable senator that the view that has been voiced by western Canadians for many years is that it is the same old traditional problem: that the people in this part of the country—we call them eastern Canadians out west, but I think my maritime friends call them central Canadians—are simply not listening to what is going on in the rest of the country.

Senator Perrault: Nobody cares about awkward Ottawa!

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers to oral questions. One was asked on June 3 by Senator Molgat, regarding the responsibility for social assistance to Indians in urban centres; another was asked on June 11 by Honourable Senator Simard, regarding the goods and services tax; Senator Bosa asked one on June 12, regarding the report on race relations in Ontario; another was asked on June 15 by Senator Hastings, regarding the incident at the Saskatchewan Penitentiary; and on June 18 a question was put by Senator Gigantès regarding the effect of unemployment on consumer spending.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESPONSIBILITY FOR SOCIAL ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS IN URBAN CENTRES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gildas L. Molgat on June 3, 1992)

Under the Constitution Act, 1867, provinces are assigned exclusive legislative authority over social service matters.

All provinces accept responsibility for providing social services to off-reserve Indians. However, some provinces (particularly in the West) do not accept financial responsibility until twelve months after an Indian has moved off the reserve and expect the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (DIAND) to pay 100 percent of these costs. In Manitoba, residency (for social assistance purposes) is established by being self-supporting for 12 months.

With the introduction of universal social assistance in the 1960s, reluctance in some provinces to provide services on reserves placed DIAND in the position of having to provide basic welfare services on reserve. On-reserve social assistance benefits continue to be funded by DIAND.

In the early 1970s, with increased migration to urban areas, DIAND began to reimburse the Province of Manitoba and municipalities for off-reserve social assistance provided to Indian people, in order to avoid individuals in need being caught in a jurisdictional dispute over who pays.

By 1989, administrative arrangements had been formalized between the Province and DIAND for off-reserve services. This enabled DIAND to reimburse the Province and municipalities 100 percent of their costs for social assistance benefits provided to Indian people.

As of April 1991, DIAND had to cease paying Manitoba for off-reserve child and family services ($4.2 million per year), because such arrangements were found to be illegal under the Canadian Assistance Plan (CAP) legislation.

In March 1991, Minister Siddon informed provincial Minister Gilleshammer of a federal Cabinet decision to end DIAND payments for off-reserve social services. Minister Siddon indicated that the federal government expected provincial governments to provide the same social services to Indian people residing off-reserve as available to other residents of the province.

At the time, Minister Siddon reassured the Province and Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs that the federal government accepted financial responsibility for social services to Indians living on-reserve.

On February 18, 1992, as a follow-up to communication between DIAND and Manitoba at the Deputy and Ministerial level, the department's Regional Director General served written notice of the termination of the administrative arrangement for off-reserve social assistance effective March 31, 1992.

Throughout discussions, Manitoba did not accept the federal action, indicating that the federal government has a special financial responsibility for social assistance and social services to Indians, regardless of where they live by virtue of the Constitution, the Indian Act, and the Crown's treaties with First Nations.

Legal precedent supporting the federal position has been established in the area of child welfare where the issue of jurisdiction is similar. A number of court decisions have indicated that, where the federal Parliament has not substantially legislated in the area, provincial legislation of general application is applicable.

Manitoba's initial reaction to Cabinet's decision was to advise its municipalities to continue to bill DIAND for off-reserve costs of social assistance. However, on May 25, 1992, the provincial government reversed that earlier decision and announced it would reimburse municipalities for these costs on a without prejudice basis until the matter was resolved.

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

Negotiations on off-reserve services: National overview

In Alberta, negotiations have resulted in an agreement which was signed in December 1991.

In Saskatchewan, the provincial and federal governments have entered into discussions regarding a range of social services to Indians.

In British Columbia, the federal government has called for formal negotiations to begin regarding the financing of a full range of social services on and off-reserve. Discussions on the matter are expected to resume in the near future.

In Nova Scotia, federal and provincial officials are close to recommending the final wording of an agreement.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

REVENUE CANADA—REMISSION OF COLLECTED TAXES

(Response to question raised by Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard on June 11, 1992)

The concerns with respect to the perceived non-compliance is somewhat unfounded since it appears that the recently released non-compliance rates are being misinterpreted.

It should be noted that as many as forty per cent of the GST returns outstanding are actually from businesses that will be filing credit or zero balance returns. In addition the vast majority of returns outstanding represent relatively insignificant amounts of tax owing.

The actual percentage of registrants who have neglected to remit tax that they have collected is less than 6 per cent.

Non-compliance rates (failure to file and/or pay) in other sales tax jurisdictions have been found to be as high as 20 to 25 per cent.

It is the experience of the Department of National Revenue that the vast majority of registrants willingly comply with the law when made aware of their obligation to do so.

The department of Revenue has sophisticated and comprehensive programs to detect instances of non-compliance, initiate action to ensure adherence with filing and paying responsibilities and encourage continued compliance with these obligations.

Some of the measures included in these programs include:

- A multi-phased Collections Program which includes the computer issuance of letters and notices, direct telephone contact and/or personal contact by experienced collections officers;

- depending on the compliance history of the registrant and the severity of the delinquency, the registrant may be subject to immediate collection action to the full extent of the law;

- non-compliance with the Excise Tax Act will result in penalty and interest charges;

- in addition, the Excise Tax Act empowers officers of the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, with legal collection tools such as garnishment and seizure and sale of assets which are used, when necessary, to ensure compliance with the law;

- an audit program which selects returns for verification to ensure that returns have been properly prepared by the registrants and all the tax collected by the registrants has been declared and remitted to Revenue Canada;

- a Special Investigations Program which involves in depth analysis and investigative techniques designed to detect, prosecute, and penalize instances of covert action with respect to the collection, reporting and remittance of GST.

- penalty provisions are included in the Excise Tax Act for application in instances where appropriate to deter future instances of non-compliance.

With respect to the Goods and Services Tax, the Department of National Revenue has been administering the tax for a period of less than 18 months.

However, the department is confident that the legislative tools and administrative provisions contained within the Excise Tax Act are sufficient to ensure the proper administration of the Goods and Services Tax.

JUSTICE

REPORT ON RACE RELATIONS IN ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Peter Bosa on June 12, 1992)

The federal government has undertaken several measures to fully implement the objectives of the Employment Equity Act. The Treasury Board President Gilles Loiselle, recently announced that the federal government will convert employment equity regulations for its employees into law. He also said regulations already in place make the federal government a stricter adherent to employment equity than any employer in Canada. The government is also preparing an answer to the Report of the Special Committee on the Review of the Employment Equity Act, A matter of fairness. This answer should be ready this fall. It is expected to bring more concrete solutions to the enforcement of the legislation.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INQUIRY INTO INCIDENT AT SASKATCHEWAN PENITENTIARY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Earl A. Hastings on June 15, 1992)

The government does not support the request for a judicial inquiry into the serious incident which occurred at Saskatchewan Penitentiary. This position is supported by the information brought forward by the Coroner's inquest into the two deaths and the internal inquiry by the Correctional Service of Canada (CSC) into the hostage taking.

The Solicitor General's previously-stated position was based on more information than that which was brought out at the Coroner's inquest. While the findings of the Coroner's inquest were in fact reviewed, the position was also supported by the results of CSC's internal investigation into the hostage taking. CSC's investigation was particularly thorough and objective, and the investigating team included a former Assistant Commissioner of the R.C.M.P.

At this time, the Correctional Investigator does have a few outstanding concerns in relation to the hostage taking. He is in the process of resolving these with the Commissioner of Corrections. If the Correctional Investigator is not satisfied with the Commissioner's response to these issues, he has the authority to take them to the Solicitor General to seek their resolution.

It is the government's position that the concerns put forward have been addressed by the appropriate authorities and that internal mechanism such as the Office of the Correctional Investigator are working to ensure that unresolved matters are dealt with appropriately. Given this factor and the lack of any new information, the government is not prepared to request a judicial inquiry into the incident.

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECT ON CONSUMER SPENDING

(Response to question raised by Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès on June 18, 1992)

The tables below give an overview of the historical accuracy of the OECD and IMF Gross Domestic Product projections as well as the actual GDP yearly results.

Both the OECD and the IMF underestimated the strength of the expansion period (1986 to 1988), but overestimated growth as the economy slowed and fell into recession (1989 to 1991).

OCDE Forecast	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Mid 1985	3.3
mid 1986	3.8	3.3
mid 1987	—	2.5	2.8
mid 1988	—	—	4.0	3.3
mid 1989	—	—	—	3.3	2.3
mid 1990	—	—	—	—	2.0	2.6
mid 1991	—	—	—	—	—	-1,0	3.1
mid 1992	—	—	—	—	—		2,4	4.3
Actual	3,3	4.2	4.7	2.5	0.5	-1.5	—	—

IMF Forecast	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Spring 1985	2.6
Spring 1986	3.3	3.3
Spring 1987	—	2.0	3.0
Spring 1988	—	—	3.4	3.1
Spring 1989	—	—	—	2.9	2.5
Spring 1990	—	—	—	1.6	3.1
Spring 1991	—	—	—	—	-1,1	3.6
Spring 1992	—	—	—	—	—		2.3	4.9
Actual	3,3	4.2	4.7	2.5	0.5	-1.5	—	—

Forecast Accuracy — Real GDP Growth

Year	Actual	Finance Department	Consensus*
1985	4.8	3.1	3.3
1986	3.3	3.7	3.6
1987	4.2	2.8	2.4
1988	4.7	2.8	2.6
1989	2.5	3.0	2.9
1990	0.5	1.3	1.1
1991	-1.5	-1.0	-0.7

(*) Consists of an average from 14 private sector forecasts

The accuracy of the Department of Finance's economic forecasts

(average of seven one-year ahead forecasts, 1985-1991)

	Average Finance Projection	Actual Average
Real GDP growth	2.2	2.6

[Senator Lynch-Staunton.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS BILL, 1992

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Reports from Standing or Special Committees

Hon. Donald H. Oliver, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

MONDAY, June 22, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-45, an Act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 16, 1992, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

DONALD H. OLIVER
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Oliver bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-62, RESPECTING TELECOMMICATIONS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

NINTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the study of the subject matter of Bill C-62, An Act respecting telecommunications, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of March 25, 1992, examined the said bill and now reports the same with certain recommendations.

Respectfully submitted,

DONALD H. OLIVER
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Oliver report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION AND CONSERVATIONACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Dan Hays, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

MONDAY, June 22, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee to which was referred the Bill C-58, An Act to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 16, 1992, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL HAYS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Hays, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ENERGY EFFICIENCY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Dan Hays, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

MONDAY, June 22, 1992

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee to which was referred the Bill C-41, An Act respecting the energy efficiency of energy-using products and the use of alternative energy sources, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 18, 1992, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL HAYS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Hays, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

REFERENDUM BILL

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE CONTINUED—DIVISION DEFERRED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, for the third reading of Bill C-81, An Act to provide for referendums on the Constitution of Canada.

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat, that Bill C-81, be not now read a third time but that it be amended on page 13 by adding immediately after line 4 the following:

12.1 "The Senate or the House of Commons shall not adopt any resolution during the life of the 34th Parliament authorizing the Governor in Council to issue a proclamation in order to amend the Constitution of Canada where the amendment would directly or indirectly be contrary to the opinion expressed, in a referendum, by a majority of voters

(a) in Canada;

(b) in the aggregate, in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland;

(c) in the Province of Ontario;

(d) in the Province of Quebec; or

(e) in the aggregate, the Provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory." —

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in this chamber we often see legislation that has its beginnings rooted in a good idea. Bill C-81 is one such example. In fact, Bill C-81 has as its foundation not just a good idea but an important principle, namely, the right of Canadians to decide for themselves whether their government's decision on a matter of vital national importance is the correct one.

Unfortunately, as is often the case with this government, when the legislative language is examined little remains of the principle, and, to make matters worse, hostility meets any attempt to bring the legislation into closer conformity with the principle espoused. That is precisely what we are facing with respect to Bill C-81.

The apparent principle underlying the legislation is sound. Canadians should be given the opportunity to determine whether their government is proposing the right solution to the problem of how their country should be governed.

Canadians have watched, year, after year, after year, after year, their top elected representatives engaged in bewildering talks, conferences, meetings and negotiations. But, of course, the stakes are very high. The dish that will eventually be served could either nourish our country or slowly poison it. To continue the metaphor, for years the political chefs have toiled in the kitchen and soon Canadians will be invited to taste and pronounce on their creation. Bill C-81 enables them to be asked for that pronouncement.

● (1420)

On Friday last, Senator Fairbairn explained why the Liberal Party believes that there must be a binding national referendum with provisions for regional majorities, before any agreement among politicians is enshrined into our Constitution. She accurately characterized the reasoning behind the government's refusal to make any such commitment as reluctance to let the people's views get in the way of whatever the government decides it wants to do. Although Bill C-81 provides the framework for a national referendum, it is structured in such a way that force-feeding on a regional or even a national scale is possible.

To return to the earlier metaphor, the government is retaining the option of dragging Canadians to the unity feast if it appears that they may not dine voluntarily or, in the word of the Prime Minister, "enthusiastically". For, although Bill C-81 provides that a referendum may be held, it need not be held; and, if it is held, it will not be binding. What we get then is a glorified, or slightly glorified, national public opinion poll, or perhaps not even that. It could be a very localized opinion poll, because there is nothing to prevent the federal government from holding a referendum in only one region of the country, or for that matter, in one province.

In the Senate committee, as reported at page A-29, the Honourable Harvie Andre admitted that "this act makes it possible." He went on to say that "the probability of that is very, very low" but "when you are doing enabling legislation you should have the flexibility." In his remarks on Friday, Senator Murray also spoke of a referendum "either nationally or in one or more provinces." He said it might be "desirable to have a referendum in only one part of the country." That is quite a concoction we are asked to swallow.

Senator Fairbairn's amendment is designed to bring the legislation closer to the principle of the right of a nation's citizens to participate, through a referendum, in a decision that will have a profound impact on the country. It calls for a binding, national referendum, with regional majorities, before any resolution to amend the Constitution could be adopted by either House of Parliament.

What was the government's response? Well, here it is from Senator Murray. He said:

> It is one thing for a government—whether provincial or federal—to put forward a package of constitutional amendments and to find that these are opposed in all or part of the country. The remedy in that case lies with the electors at provincial and federal elections. If a government is defeated because of its constitutional position, so be it. That is not the end of the world, nor is it the end of the country."

[Senator Frith.]

What does that mean? A constitutional package is unveiled and it is opposed by the citizens. Senator Murray says it could be opposed "in all or any part of the country." What would be done then? It would be enshrined anyway? Enshrine the package in our Constitution over the objections of the people of Canada and leave it for reversal by the people at the next election?

Senator Murray: That's why our friends in 1982 provided for a three-year delay.

Senator Frith: Yes, quite. There is something about that too, which I am sure will come into the debate. Just how it relates to what we are talking about here, I am not clear, but I am sure it will be made clear. It will be made clear that the people are—at the next election, I guess—to reverse a constitutional amendment enshrined in spite of their vote against that amendment during a national referendum.

Of course, constitutionally, an amendment cannot be "unenshrined"—if there is such a word—by an election. However, even if it could be by implementing a decision at an election, is that a justification for telling the people that they are being asked for their opinion, but that their opinion will not necessarily be taken into account, and that, if it is rejected directly and replaced by something that they did not vote in favour of, they will have to swallow it and try to throw it up again at the next election?

Senator Murray himself acknowledged that ". . . a referendum that addresses itself to the future existence of the country, is quite a dramatic step." Yes, that would be dramatic, as opposed to forcing an unwelcome package down the throats of Canadians while arguing that their only remedy is their vote at the next election.

Honourable senators, Senator Murray's response on behalf of the government makes it very clear, it seems to me, that this legislation which provides for referendums, to use his preferred word—

Senator Murray: No, I said "referenda".

Senator Frith: You like "referenda". Referendums or referenda—

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Do I have to intervene again?

Senator Frith: I forgot that there had been some research done and that the front bench on the opposite side had developed a Latin purity that I respect. Therefore, I will change and I will say "referenda", although I think it is an alternative. The legislation that provides for referenda is not designed to elicit the support or views of the citizenry. It is a club to be wielded over the heads of recalcitrant premiers, or, which is even worse, to be manipulated as a tactical weapon in the next election.

Senator Simard: Don't say that.

Senator Frith: Not only will I say it; I will say it again: to be manipulated as a tactical weapon in the next election.

If a premier, a single individual, balks at accepting the package, the federal government can go over his head and call a referendum in that province. However, if that premier supports the package, but the population of his province overwhelmingly opposes it, in the hundreds of thousands or even millions, there may be no referendum. The no vote of a single premier will be overridden by a referendum, but the no votes of millions of citizens can be ignored. Is that not a perversion of the principles underlying referenda?

Senator Murray's response to calls for regional majorities seemed equally disingenuous. He argued that certain provinces "believe that the idea of regional majorities contradicts a principle that is very dear to them, and that is the so-called equality of the provinces."

But where is the logic, or even the relevance, in this response?

Senator Fairbairn's amendment would require the approval of the majority of the population in each of the four regions of the country before any constitutional change could be enshrined.

• (1430)

Senator Murray responded that certain provinces do not want to be lumped together in a region. His solution is to treat all provinces equally, in the sense that they will all be ignored—equally. Needless to say, this is not a particularly persuasive argument, but it is entirely consistent with the manipulative devices that the government, in my opinion, has grafted on to this bill.

When I spoke to this bill at second reading I restricted my remarks to the question of spending controls. I had intended today to do no more than revisit that topic, but I found the government's response to Senator Fairbairn's amendment so revealing that I could not let it pass. However, I want to return briefly to the issue of spending controls now, certainly in a much more abridged form than I had planned originally at this stage.

When I previously examined the question of spending controls, it was in the context of the Lortie Report and the evidence presented to the House of Commons committee examining Bill C-81. Since then, our own Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has had an opportunity to elicit expert opinion on the legislation. It is to that evidence which I wish to draw the attention of honourable senators.

As I previously explained, Bill C-81 purports to establish a regime of spending limits through the creation of registered referendum committees. Unfortunately, there is no limit to the number of committees that may be formed. There is no limit in how many electoral districts a committee may register. The only limitation is that a committee may spend no more than 56.4 cents for each name appearing on the voters' list, on the district in which that committee is registered.

In the 1988 general election there were approximately 17 million registered voters. If a committee registered in every electoral district, its spending would be limited to 56.4 cents for each of those 17 million voters, or approximately $9.5 million. That is for just one committee.

When Louis Massicotte from the Department of Political Science, University of Montreal appeared before our committee examining Bill C-81, he said:

[Translation]

—and I quote:

> The provisions concerning registration of referendum committees would clearly lead to a free-for-all. If the number of committees is not limited, imposing a spending ceiling on each committee (as the House Committee decided, I believe) is meaningless, as Harvie Andre honestly admitted in the other place in the debate on second reading."

I quote:

> Monday, June 15, 1992, page F(2)-9.

[English]

The amendments we will be proposing today on spending controls are designed to end this charade. Our preference would be two umbrella committees, as was the case in Quebec during the referendum there. We have been told that the government's legal advisors have concluded that such a restriction would be a violation of the Charter. But, as Professor Massicotte observed, "It would not be the first time that a legal opinion, which is nothing less but nothing more than a very educated guess, would be contradicted subsequently by the courts." As examples, he recalled the advice the Quebec government received before proceeding with Bill 101, and the advice the federal government received in 1978 from its experts on Bill C-60, the constitutional reform package. In both instances the expert advice was found wanting. But that was all it was—advice, opinion.

Anyone who has been in a law library has seen the millions and millions of pages of reported decisions. Opinions were given on all those cases. If we assume that there were only two opinions given to the clients in each case, we see that half of them turned out to be wrong. It seems to me that that is particularly true here, when one is dealing with the present Constitution and the application of the Charter of Rights. Because of section 1, no one can really predict what the court will say as to what is permissible in a free and democratic society.

Senator Murray: Have you read the five or six outside legal opinions?

Senator Frith: Yes, I have.

Senator Murray: What do you think of them?

Senator Frith: I have found every one of them persuasive on the application of the section, but no more persuasive than is any such opinion these days on the application of section 1.

It is that simple. I read the opinions as definitely driving the question of section 1. I thought they were good on that question, but because this elastic question—which is not a matter of strict precedent—is left to the court, it seems to me that the opinion of the court should be obtained. As you will recall, that is what I asked for last time.

In my remarks at second reading, I observed that with Bill C-81 it is money which will talk. Professor Massicotte testified, as reported at page J-2—and I am sorry to say, honourable senators, I have not the printed form but what are colloquially referred to as the blues:

> The central issue which is raised by a Charter decision on the issue that we are discussing is the fact that freedom of expression has been equated, by some legal reasoning, with freedom to spend. As the old American dictum says, "Money talks." That is the prevailing reasoning and I suppose that we must abide by it. However, I have some reservations about that reasoning because it seems to me that, logically, it may lead exactly to the opposite. If one option allows unlimited spending, it may finally drown its opposition in a sea of money, and the other side will not be able to be heard.

If the government remains adamant in its refusal to accept any amendments—as it usually does to any of its many seamless webs of folly, in order to provide for two umbrella groups, there are other changes, second best changes, which will nevertheless be an improvement over the free-for-all invited by Bill C-81.

As I mentioned earlier, with an upper limit of 56.4 cents per registered voter, a single registered referendum committee will be able to spend almost $10 million, if it registers in every district. This number has been chosen because it is the amount to which individual candidates are now limited during an election. However, in an election we are usually talking about three or four leading candidates in each riding, limited in spending to that single riding. With Bill C-81, we will have the potential for numerous committees in each riding and committees operating in more than one riding.

What is the rationale for grafting on to referendum legislation a spending limit designed for individual candidates in individual counties or ridings? I do not believe there is even a specious one. We are, therefore, proposing that this figure of 56.4 cents be reduced to 25 cents. Even this, as I have explained, is only a "second best" measure.

● (1440)

Bill C-81 provides that an individual or group can spend up to $5,000 on "referendum expenses" without any controls. How many Canadians have $5,000 to spend? We will be recommending that individual contributions be limited to $1,000. The threshold for a referendum committee would be $1,000 and not $5,000. This will help put all Canadians on a more equal footing.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Murray: I think that number was from the 1978 bill as well, wasn't it?

Senator Frith: I don't know. Which one, the $5,000?

Senator Di Nino: In 1978 dollars.

Senator Frith: I tell you, in my opinion, it was as wrong then as it is today. In fact, if we used the inflationary item, it would be more wrong. However, taking into account in particular this intervention that we have heard from the other side, I do not hold out much hope that any of our amendments will be acceptable to the government.

Senator Murray: We accepted quite a few in the other place from the opposition.

Senator Frith: Yes. They were all negotiated, I believe.

As I explained at the start of my remarks, Bill C-81 is based on a good idea which, unfortunately, has been misshaped almost beyond recognition during the process of hammering it into legislative language, not just because of the difficulty inherent in that process but as well, it seems to me, because of an attempt to exploit the occasion for purposes other than those of obtaining the opinion of the people on a constitutional amendment. I expect our attempts at improvement will be rejected because the government is no longer interested, in my opinion, in the principle it espouses. The principle is here for public consumption only. Perhaps the government will relent before it puts some of these manipulative possibilities into practice. I hope so.

Nevertheless, we will support this bill because it will give Canadians—if the government musters the courage to ask them—the opportunity to determine the future course of their country. Bill C-81 proposes a flawed opportunity, but it is better than no opportunity at all.

Hon. P. Michael Pitfield: Honourable senators, having spent 25 years labouring in the vineyards of the Constitution, I have remained silent on this subject these last four years in order to ensure that the government does not feel in any way obstructed in its efforts to solve the constitutional problems the collapse of the Meech Lake adventure dropped upon us. The time is coming when we all must again get involved, whether we like it or not, but my intervention today is simply so that my vote on the bill before us will not be misunderstood.

